What do we mean by commercial safety? We mean a man in business to be in a solvent condition. If he is insolvent, he is not safe. If a man has obligations to meet and he can meet them either by a check which would be honored at the bank, or otherwise, he is safe. If he has obligations which he can not meet by a check that will be honored at the bank, he is unsafe, and no firm will send out goods to him unless they send what is known as a proforma invoice, the prices being totaled and the invoice sent to the purchaser, and the cash must be handed over before the goods are delivered. In other instances, the purchaser is asked to supply references, so that his financial standing may be ascertained before the goods are dispatched. From the references the firm ascertain whether you are safe.

The same thing is done in everyday life amongst vast numbers of persons in similar positions to ourselves. On the hire purchase system you can get almost anything you require without paying cash for it, but unless the man can satisfy himself that you are safe, you can not induce him to part with the goods. So with your condition in life as regards employment, your method of living, the way you pay your bills; you must bear such a character as to warrant the bestowal of favors upon you. A man is not safe if he can not pay his debts—that is the commercial aspect of the word salvation.

PHYSICAL SAFETY.

What do we understand by physical safety? We ask ourselves, Is it safe to do certain things? We will not enter into detail, but generally. When is a man safe physically? A man is safe physically so long as he is either consciously or unconsciously conforming to the laws by which his physical being is governed, and his enjoyment of life is in obedience to these laws without any variation or disobedience on either one side or the other. If a man (hear it) will undertake either consciously or unconsciously, either intelligently or ignorantly, to violate the laws governing this physical life, he must inevitably be made to suffer the consequences of his disobedience. A man is safe physically when he is conforming to nature's law and doing those things by which sound health is assured.

RELIGIOUS SAFETY.

What does the word convey religiously? Some people have and do believe that salvation is when a man has escaped hell. Suppose for a minute this to be correct; do you really think that you have got all the richness out of that word salvation?—escape from punishment? Some go further and say that a man is saved when not only he has escaped punishment, but when he has received a reward. In other words, the evangelical definition of the term salvation is either in escaping punishment, or receiving bribes for his services. Are such individuals measuring in the right and fullest way the possibilities of that word salvation? If you see what salvation is, by the grace of God you can understand the object of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the condescension of the love of God, and the great sacrificial service of our Lord Jesus. I admit that in salvation is involved escape from punishment, but I must give this statement also: that I do not believe that escape from punishment is absolutely all there is to that side of the question.

I believe that to avoid punishment it is also necessary that I shall become obedient to the laws of my being instead of being disobedient thereto. If I am persistent in violating the highest laws of my conscience, I can not be saved, no matter what God may do. The fact that I persist in my perversity makes salvation impossible. It makes no difference what bribe you may give to a man to make him good, you do not make him good, you simply pay him for his services, and he will only do what you consider good so long as you keep up your payments. Such an individual will sell you as soon as some one else comes along who can frighten him more, or who can pay him a higher price than you can pay him. In all probability they would not put it so roughly as I am doing it, but I am discussing the principle—the essential truth—and not the poetry. There is the situation, and I hope you will think it out for yourselves.

A man is not safe because you can keep him so by threatening with a prison or a hell; not because you can keep him straight with a promise of an old age pension, or a crown of glory in heaven. Such men are not safe. When, then, is a man safe? A man is safe when he loves the thing that God loves and hates the thing that God hates. No man is safe if he loves that which God hates, and hates the thing which God loves. The safe man is the man who voluntarily will persist in doing all the time the thing that pleases God because he loves to do it. The man is unsafe who will persist in doing the thing that God disapproves. We had a splendid lesson this morning, (1 Corinthians, 13) and I am afraid I shall have to use a little bit of it to-night.

Salvation is a question that not only deals with facts, but results. I remember when I was at school I used to hate arithmetic, and I would have given anything to find out how to get correct answers to my sums. I did not particularly mind how I got the right answers, so long as I could get my sums marked right. I was often good at guessing. I remember, too, on one occasion the teacher found me out, and he said to me, "The answer is right, but how did you get it?" I had got it, but it was an accident, a curiosity, or, to use a sporting word, it was a "fluke." I had no science to it; I did not know how I had arrived at the correct answer. Now a lot of people in their religious experience are like that: they do not know how—the why and the wherefore of a spiritual experience.

I was traveling by train yesterday and in my carriage was a little girl with her mother who would persist in asking her mother, Why? and I must admit that it fairly got on my nerves. All the way she was asking, "Why, mamma?" to everything her mother said. But on reflection I really think there is something in it after all, and we can learn a lesson from this inquisitive little girl. I believe that Christians of our country, of the world, and we today would be infinitely stronger if we could always be ready to give a reason for the hope that is within us.

Now let me tell you why. In the language of the little girl, I believe that as regards salvation we shall have to discuss something more than results. It is not sufficient for me to say that a man must love the thing that God loves and hate the thing that God hates—that would be mechanical premises. We are moral beings and at the back of all our reasoning and underlying all our logic there must be moral insight, moral judgment, and moral fidelity. Now, why? This morning we had the lesson—let me recall it to your minds—Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, though I have the eloquence of heaven, and have not love, I am become a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy and the knowledge to understand all mysteries, and have not love, I am nothing; and though I give all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned and have not love, it is useless. Can you see where we are coming to? You may have all the mechanical implements upon which a saved experience ought to be established, and yet be bankrupt in the dynamic, or the motive power; and salvation in such circumstances is absolutely impossible. It must be a love of the thing that God loves, besides having the thing. There must be the moral force of affection behind it, and the hatred of the thing God hates, so that salvation or the want of it, is in the one case moral order and in the other case moral disorder; or, to bring it more plainly home to you, the safe man is the man who is regulating his life expressly in harmony with the revealed word of God, and the unsafe man is the man who is not regulating his life thereto. To be safe, I must love the thing that God loves. If I do not do this, I am unsafe, no matter what my label may be, what my pedigree may be, or what my social standing may be. The moral quality of my position is inward. The power and authority of my statement is within, and not without. Salvation, therefore, involves intelligence. No man can be safe if he does not know what God loves.

Then, you say, what about the ignorant and the imbecile? There is a provision for the ignorant and the like for the statement is recorded, "They that know no law shall be judged without law." What their end will be God knows, I make no pretense to know.

Some object to logic in religion. They have no wish for reason in religion and are willing to sacrifice their reason to retain their "faith." But a "faith in God" which ignores reason is neither complimentary to God nor of benefit to the one exercised thereby. Reason is a gift of God, and every gift should be treated with the same reverence and respect. God does not wish you to hold your faith at the expense of your reason, though he does not want you to lose your faith because of your reason; but if there is anything in your faith that can not be approved by reason, that faith needs careful revision. Faith, as reasonless faith, must degenerate into fanaticism. But we need to be sure that our reasoning faculty, as the power of balance in our emotions, is properly adjusted in knowledge. The first thing for me to find out is not in the first instance, what is wrong with my faith; but to find out what is wrong with my reason. Educate the reason. God having made provision for the ignorant, we leave the result with him, and concern ourselves with the provisions his grace has made for us who live in the light, full of grace and truth, and, to borrow the Old Testament's language, "the revealed thing is ours and our children's for ever, but the secret thing is the Lord our God's."

A man to be safe must love the thing that God loves. How can I love the thing that God loves unless I know what he does love? And again, How can I hate the thing which God hates unless I know what God does hate? Can you see the reason why God sent Jesus into the world? The glory of our Lord lies in this sublime truth, that he has given to us so clearly and so positively and so correctly a catalogue of the virtues that God approves and of the vices that God disapproves, that every man that will undertake to develop in his own life and conduct in harmony with the virtues of Jesus Christ is sure of salvation. No one can gainsay it, no one can question it, and no one can deny it. The incarnation therefore has got a higher value. It is not a delusion of the Christian church, it is one of the most scientific doctrines that has ever yet been given to us. The incarnation is the very doctrine upon which all our scientific movements are based, the enshrining of the highest spiritual and moral qualities in terms of human experience—the focusing of the immensity of the infinite God in man. In the incarnation, God gathers up all his regal glory and concentrates it in the person of the man Christ Jesus, and what you see in the life and conduct of Jesus Christ is the realest expression of what God himself loves and what God himself hates. So that to be safe, a man must first know positively the thing that God does love and approve, and the thing that God does hate and disapprove. No man can be safe without it. It is not a case of intellectual descent, it is not a case of superiority in the sense that we understand these terms. It is not a case of pedigree, for this man Christ Jesus receiveth sinners, and the immeasurable power of the saving grace of the Master is evidenced in that he descended into the lowest state of earth's sin and misery, and by grace and truth elevated such to amazing heights, where they could sit in heavenly places with Christ Jesus. Surely the condescending love of God is the theme worthy of an angel's wonder. It does not matter where we commence, it is where we finish; it is not pedigree; but destiny, that is the great objective in the salvation of the Lord. Upon the weakest often depends much. The strength of a chain depends upon its weakest link, and if you can find a case that Jesus can not reach, you have overthrown all the claims of Christianity. You can not find an individual in which Jesus Christ can not by the all-giving of his powerful love discover the jewel of immortality, no matter how weak and sinful he may be. The finding of the jewels is done in earth's darkest and most unlikely places, for it is there that the power of Christ performs its miracles of love. That was where Paul was found, and it is to this man that the question is put: What must I do to be saved? Mark you, "the chiefest of sinners," one that was found down sin's deepest strata. Paul was not a fashionable preacher. He is, it is true, very fashionable to-day, but he is dead. That is the time when nearly all get wreaths and bouquets to their memory. So Paul was not always respectable; he was thrown out of some cities; he was considered a rowdy itinerant preacher, worse than a Salvation Army band—for the Apostle Paul caused nothing but a row wherever he went. He was the chiefest of sinners. Paul said it, and I am not slandering him, for in bearing testimony he says, "I was the chiefest of sinners and yet the grace of God saved me." Now, hear it, to that man the question is put, "What must I do to be saved?" Don't you think Paul could answer from experience? and what is more, you have to bear in mind that I have not given you any scriptural quotations; my definition is based upon the statement of the Apostle Paul, and in order to make that secure let me give you one or two from memory. You will find my first in the fifth of Hebrews: "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." Some question whether Paul wrote the epistle to the Hebrews, but there is no evidence that it was written by anybody else. However, in the first chapter of his letter to the Romans let me quote you again, and of this letter there is no doubt but that it was the Apostle Paul's workmanship. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation."

I will quote you from Doctor Waymouth's modern English translation: "And therein is revealed from heaven the righteousness of God, and therein is revealed the wrath of God against unrighteousness." There is the moral value of the gospel of Jesus Christ—a man is safe when he obeys Jesus Christ. What does Jesus stand for?—the incarnation of the glory of God. The glory of God is the righteousness or character of God. The righteousness which God approves of is revealed in the gospel; the unrighteousness which God disapproves of is revealed outside the gospel. So the thing which God loves is in the gospel of Jesus and the thing which God hates is without the gospel. What must I do to be saved? Must is a verb of the imperative mood, which enjoins upon us commands. What must I do to be saved? "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." There is no question about it, for the Apostle Paul himself is a standing monument of the divine grace of God. I was the chiefest of sinners and yet the grace of God saved me; and the chiefest of sinners became the author of the classic chapter on the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, and the author of the foundation of all our hope in so far as the gospel of Jesus Christ is concerned, who is the author of eternal salvation to those that obey him, and the righteousness which God loves is revealed in the gospel, as well as the thing which God hates. When am I safe? When I love—not when I am forced either by threat of punishment or affected by the offer of a bribe—because I do not love then: I am simply playing the coward, trying to dodge the legitimate result of my doings. Whatsoever a man sows that shall he reap. There is coming a day said the Apostle Paul when God will judge the world by that man Jesus Christ and reward every man according to his work. You can not dodge it. You can no more dodge meeting your destiny than you can reaping the harvest, and whatsoever you sow that shall you reap. When is a man safe? I am safe when I—I is the shortest word in our vocabulary, but it means the biggest in the dictionary—I, what is I? I, the ego, the inner conscience, and the individual which persists, despite all changes. I is the inner conscience of the individual which, despite all environments and contradistinction to everything and to everybody else, persists. It is me, the self-evidences in the tremendous terms "I can"—"I will." When "I love" the strongest power in the possession of "me" is exercised. Therefore, when I love the thing which God loves, my strongest power is at work, and so long as I do this I am safe. As long as I dislike the thing which God loves I am unsafe.

The first thing to be done is to find out what God wants you to do, what God would like you to do, what he loves you to do. God is not comfortable, he is not happy or at ease if he is surrounded by a people who loves the thing that he hates. If God were to translate the whole of London to heaven, it would be the same old London, it would have the London spirit in it, and it is the London spirit that has made the London environment. If he were to translate us all in some marvelous way to what I will call heaven, it would be just Enfield, a suburb of London in the County of Middlesex, and what would you be doing? You would be doing just the same as you are doing in Enfield to-day. But if you can start here in Enfield to love the thing which God loves, you will put the Devil out of existence. With what result? It would then be Enfield, Middlesex, England,—Heaven. Yes; a man is in heaven when he is at ease with God. A man is never in heaven as long as he is not at ease with God. Whether you put a man in the seventh heaven or in paradise, that is always a hell, if in an environment where he is not at ease. Religion may be all right as theory, as an amusement, or as a hobby, but I want you to really understand what the saved experience is; and if I say nothing more to you, if you can understand this, it is a message of God to you.

You are saved, brother and sister, when you are loving the thing which God loves as he wants you to love, and hating the thing which God hates. Believe Jesus and you have the effect, and you have the cause—"Salvation." The cause is believing; the effect is harmony with God. Heaven? There is no heaven where there is a disbelief of Jesus Christ, and I do not say that from the old theological terms, but I say it from scientific and experimental reasons. Renan, the great French agnostic, says, "The highest conscience of God that has ever dwelt in the bosom of humanity is that of Jesus," or as John Stuart Mill, another agnostic puts it, "There is no better translation from the abstract to the concrete than to so love that Jesus of Nazareth can approve of my life." If a man pleases Jesus he is sure to be safe; if a man does not love Jesus, to say the least about it, he can not be safe. There is no man that has ever lived this life as good as Jesus, and if you will not have him as the divine man, whom can we have? He is a crowning glory of humanity, he is the noblest and best. Yes; he is "the Lily of the Valley, the Bright and Morning Star; the Fairest of Ten Thousand to my soul."

Many people object to baptism. The question is, Is that the thing which God loves? You doubt it? Is that the thing Jesus did? If Jesus did it, God loved it—therefore I must love it. Did Jesus approve of baptism? If he did, God loved it. What must I do to be saved? Love the thing which God loves. Then baptism I must love. So in regard to faith and repentance.

Men and women willing to do this are neither popular nor fashionable—but they are the people of the Mission, the sinners, and the haughty ones stand at an elevated state and look down upon them and patronize them. An honest man hates to be patronized. Do justice to man and he will not need charity, for "though I give my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love it profits me nothing." And what is more, it is an insult both to God and man. This is where Jesus stands so preeminently: the greatest, the noblest, and the best man ever known: he is the veritable expression of the glory of God. What must I do to be saved? Believe Jesus Christ. Belief is a practical expression of the virtues and attributes of almighty God, and if we have a love for those things that God loves we shall certainly get them; for you have always got what you wanted. I am not exaggerating, for every man gets what he wants, no matter what the cost may be; and if he has not got it, it is because he really did not want it

Prayer is desired; it includes longing and wishing, and what a man desires he works for, he strives for, and he obtains answer to his prayer, for to that desire God responds. If you want salvation, desire to have the same character that Jesus had, and as God lives you are safe. Miss that and salvation is an impossibility.

May God help us therefore to believe Jesus and be saved with all our household, is my prayer.

"NAUVOO EXPOSITOR."

The article contained in the Christian Advocate for August 29, 1912, entitled "A martyred newspaper," which you hand me for review, is a peculiar document.

The author of the article, Orien W. Fifer, D. D., of Des Moines, Iowa, evidently reposes great confidence in the publishers of the Expositor, as the whole tenor of the article shows, expressly stating: "There is much evidence to show that these men who published the ill-fated Expositor were men of strength and worth, and that they rendered the civilization of Mississippi Valley an inestimable service for good in the publication of a martyr newspaper."

Mr. Fifer of course expects his readers to give full credit to what "these men of strength and worth" state. If we do, though it might reflect seriously upon the moral character of a few men, yet it would effectually establish the truth of what the world calls Mormonism, and the divine calling of Joseph Smith. Is Mr. Fifer prepared for this? Here is what "these men of strength and worth" say as quoted from the same paper which Mr. Fifer so warmly commends: "As for our acquaintance with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints we know no man or set of men can be more thoroughly acquainted with its rise, its organization, and its history, than we have every reason to believe we are. We all verily believe, and many of us know of a surety, that the religion of the Latter Day Saints, as originally taught by Joseph Smith, which is contained in the Old and New Testaments, Book of Covenants, and Book of Mormon, is verily true; and that the pure principles set forth in those books are the immutable and eternal principles of heaven, and speaks a language which, when spoken in truth and virtue, sinks deep into the heart of every honest man. Its precepts are invigorating, and in every sense of the word, tend to dignify and ennoble man's conception of God and his attributes. It speaks a language which is heard amidst the roar of artillery, as well as in the silence of midnight; it speaks a language understood by the incarcerated spirit, as well as he who is unfettered and free; yet to those who will not see, it is dark, mysterious, and secret as the grave." If a devotee of "Mormonism," so called, were to quote this strong statement from the Expositor in support of his position, Mr. Fifer would consistently insist that said devotee should be bound by the testimony of the witnesses especially if he should affirm that said witnesses were "men of strength and worth." We insist therefore that the same rule of evidence be applied to Mr. Fifer, and that he be recorded as a convert to "the religion of the Latter Day Saints, as originally taught by Joseph Smith, which is contained in the Old and New Testaments, Book of Covenants, and Book of Mormon."

Mr. Fifer not only displays ignorance of "Mormon history" but a lamentable ignorance of the well-known position that a president and vice president of the United States shall not be residents of the same State when he states that Nauvoo in 1844 "boasted of a candidate for the presidency, and a candidate for the vice presidency."

The facts of the case, as fully attested by the records are, that on the 18th of May, 1844, some of the parties who subsequently published the Expositor were expelled from the church on account of evidence previously had before a municipal court of Nauvoo, clearly disclosing conspiracy to take the life of Joseph Smith. These conspirators with others, some of whom had been expelled in the April previous, founded a church and prepared to publish as the organ of the church "The Expositor." The first and only issue was dated June 7, 1844.

On June 10 the city council declared it a nuisance and ordered the mayor, Joseph Smith, to abate it. The mayor issued an order to the marshal, John P. Green, who with a posse demolished the plant. On June 14, the mayor made a detailed account of the whole transaction to Governor Thomas Ford, and stated that if the governor had any doubts of the legality of the transaction he and all concerned would appear before any legal tribunal, at the state capital, and submit to an investigation, and that he need not go to the trouble or expense to issue a writ, as they would respond upon the receipt of his expressed wish. Governor Ford never expressed a wish for further investigation, but the accused had a lengthy examination before Esquire Daniel H. Wells, not a member of the church, and were acquitted.

The Mormons never tried the case of the Expositor, as asserted by Mr. Fifer, and if Governor Ford ever asserted what Mr. Fifer said he did, he was himself culpable for not ordering an investigation when the matter was placed before him.

Mr. Fifer states: "It is also true that one branch of the Mormon Church preserves cleanness of practice and teaching concerning polygamy by reason of the one issue of the Expositor." This statement is wholly unwarranted. Those who preserve "cleanness of practice and teaching concerning polygamy" are not influenced in any sense, directly or remotely, by the Expositor. Their attitude is the result of their understanding of the teachings of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and what they accept as the revelations of God to the church. The Book of Mormon says: "Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that these people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none; for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."—Jacob 2: 34, 35, 36.

A revelation given through Joseph Smith in February, 1831, presents the following as the word of the Lord: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

It is absolutely and inexcusably absurd to say that the people who accept the above as the word of the Lord "preserve cleanness of practice and teaching by reason of the one issue of the Expositor."

There are several other statements of Mr. Fifer that are absolutely false and grossly inaccurate but I will not follow him further.

"The International Exhibition of Canada."

These lines are penned on "Departure Day" of the great exhibition, when railroad, steamboat, and a score of other methods of transportation are hurrying homeward to all parts of the civilized world the two million dollars worth of unique, varied, and valuable exhibits which have attracted many hundred thousands of delighted and enthusiastic visitors to Toronto from almost every land and country in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America; and that which but a few short years ago could only have been alluded to as an "Intercolonial Exhibition" is now admittedly worthy of the proud title of the "International Exhibition of Canada!" A program of the truly inspiring music of the Scots Guards Band, and the well-trained band called the "Besses o' th' Barn," from Lancashire, England, which performed so magnificently at the great exhibition, is herewith inclosed; and as the noble and inspiring strains of Spohr, Wagner, and Beethoven's music floated across the beautiful and spacious grounds even to the very border of Lake Ontario, thronged with the gay and well-dressed thousands from Europe, Canada, and the United States, I could not help thinking, Oh, what an opportunity to have sold or distributed from some booth or tent thousands of tracts, booklets, HERALDS, and other church publications to that vast, eager, attentive, and appreciative throng!

Your many readers will, I am sure, be much gratified to learn that Bishop R. C. Evans's able and gospel-breathing Book of Sermons has already,—according to a prophetic statement made many months ago by Sister Ada Hamilton, of Toronto Branch, made its way into lands and countries where at that time nothing was less likely than that the book should reach to those distant parts of the world.

In an interesting recapitulation made publicly in the bishop's absence by the branch president, Elder McLean, your correspondent learned that that valued volume of sermons is now being read in England, Ireland, and Scotland; Wales, Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway; Australia, the Island of Tahiti; and in nearly every State of the United States; also in almost every province of the Dominion of Canada. In addition to this fact, Elder McLean stated, if I remember aright, that no less than two thousand five hundred of the books are now being read; and that every minister of the varying denominations in and around Toronto has been presented with a copy of the volume free. A voluntary gift has likewise been made, consisting of twenty-five books of the sermons, to school-teachers in the Philippine Islands; and free grants of a book each have been made to many of the city libraries as well.

It is but just and fair to add that the Toronto Saints have given their energies to this work to such purpose that Elder McLean had to make out a list, or lists, containing the names and residences of many of our people, together with the name of the public school, or library, or minister, that each brother or sister was willing to attend to in his own particular vicinity: thus, while each particular church minister was provided for, there was order in the distribution, with but little or no overlapping in either time or means. An epitome of the experiences met with by some of our brethren while engaged in the good work of distributing Bishop Evans's "Sermons" would prove both lively and interesting reading. One brother, for instance, related that the first minister on whom he called promptly threw the volume of sermons into the gutter, from which it was rescued with almost equal promptitude by a passer-by and taken home to study; thus exemplifying and forcibly illustrating the bible saying, that "one soweth and another reapeth." Heaven alone knows and eternity alone will reveal the harvest of fruit garnered at the great day by this "bread cast beside all waters," which shall be "found after many days!"

Many leading newspapers and editors have, I learn, received gratis a copy of this widely-circulated volume; and thus, though it may be silently in this case, the "gospel of the kingdom" is being preached unto all nations—"and then shall the end come," as the Master has said. Of one thing the brethren and sisters of the household of faith may well rest assured; and that is, that our esteemed bishop feels himself amply repaid by the hundreds of letters which he has, as he himself assured us, received from many writers giving thanks and congratulations for the good work done and the invaluable purposes accomplished.

Thus to the eternal Giver of every good, and the great Arbitrator of all destinies, be ascribed, as is most justly due, all honor, all praise, all worship, all love, and all dominion, for ever and for ever.

The mighty instrument of the printing press has been throbbing and roaring and palpitating at the great heart of humanity for lo these many years, and as yet we are but at the very threshold of its boundless possibilities, and of its fathomless capabilities. In fact, we are literally afar off from any adequate conception of the power for good or ill of this mighty engine as we are from any adequate conception of the transcendent, dazzling blaze of light in yon vast cluster of stars in Hercules, or the meaning of the intense darkness and midnight blackness of that vast black space in the brilliant southern constellation of Sagittarius (the archer)!

When we are able to answer the great Almighty's memorable question to Job, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the earth, and when the morning stars sang together?" then, and then only, shall we be able to adequately estimate the truly colossal and stupendous power of the press; and to say when its mighty influence began, and where it shall end; for though conceived in the womb of time, its fruition flashes forth unto the very uttermost confines of eternity. Its feet may be of miry clay, and it standeth upon the earth, but surely its head reacheth unto the very uttermost of the stars of heaven!

ALWAYS WITH SECTIONALISM!

There was a time when a local patriotism or provincialism was esteemed, in general, more than national patriotism. However, the growth of a national sentiment among all the peoples of the earth has brought into disfavor such smaller sectional feelings. Provincialism is almost dead.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Thus far we have progressed. But the line of advancement extends before us. Next, in order that we may cement more firmly in one the various peoples of the world, we must smother the hydra-headed monster of an aggressive national patriotism which thrusts itself upon our attention in bristling, antagonistic manner in every quarter of the globe. National feeling, with its divisional and disintegrating tendencies, must also die.

In the past public sentiment has lauded the man whose national patriotism led him to sacrifice his life in defense of his country; but Jesus died for the world: and he shall come to reign over all the kingdoms of the world in the great era of peace. In this we get a clew to the divine ideal of patriotism, to which the better elements of the age are reaching out, as witnessed in their avowal of the brotherhood of man, in their efforts for the preservation of the peace of the world, and in their attempts to further bind together the nations through a more perfect political organization, which shall reach its consummation in a world state. This means that local and national patriotism must flee before the coming of a world patriotism.

Such is the general tendency of the times; but here and there we note evidences of the old-time sectional views and feelings. One recent incident of this nature is probably of special interest to our people, and especially to Sunday school workers. Read the following news clipping:

DROP "INTERNATIONAL" SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

Canadian Presbyterians and Methodists are preparing to throw out the International Sunday school lessons. It is declared to be too Americanized, with its illustrations invariably drawn from United States history, with much glorification of George Washington and similar personages. This was stated to The Toronto World yesterday by a gentleman well qualified to speak, as one of the impelling reasons for the federation of the Presbyterian and Methodist Sunday school boards.

In dealing with the "International" lesson the boards will not wait for the federation to receive its formal ratification, but the two executives will get together and adopt plans for a national Canadian Sunday school lesson to be prepared jointly and issued in the Presbyterian and Methodist publications for use in their Sunday schools throughout the Dominion.

It is expected that the Presbyterians will unite in the "National" Sunday school convention to be held.—London Free Press.

Even the most casual reader will discover in the above news item evidence of the existence of "national" feelings on either side of the international boundary. However, it appears to us that it would be but natural for the editors of the "International Lessons," being Americans, unconsciously to draw too partially from American sentiment and history, forgetting that their work should be international in its scope.

There may be a lesson from this for our own

Sunday school workers; for we have thought at times that some of our American coworkers forget that our general Sunday school is also an "international" one, and that our lessons should contain no trace of any particular national sentiment. But in our case this slight tendency has reached no very serious proportions and we believe "a word to the wise is sufficient" to safeguard us against such a contingency.

ARE THE INDIANS OF HEBREW ORIGIN?

William Penn gave the clew to many subsequent biblical scholars in declaring that he had found in the American Indians the lost tribes of Israel. The superficial resemblance between the two peoples was so striking that he was led to say: "When I look at their children I imagine myself in the Jewish quarter of London." The Reverend J. Wesley Annas says in Zion's Herald (Boston) that as late as 1889 a well informed representative of the Moskoki tribe, when questioned concerning the legends of his people, replied: "They are all in the Old Testament. Read them there, without the trouble of taking them down from our people." Corroborative of this is the statement of Doctor W. W. Warren in his history of the Ojibway Nation that in response to parts of the Bible which he translated for this people they said: "The book must be true, for our ancestors have told us the same stories for generations." The theory here presented is not new, the "Jewish Encyclopedia" giving the substance of it without pronouncing upon its credibility. The writer meets the objection to the theory based on the great distance between the habitations of the two peoples by citing the books of Esdras:

"They affirm that after the captivity the Hebrews resolved to separate themselves from the heathen and to seek a spot where they might religiously observe the law, for the violation of which they had been so severely punished. Accordingly he reports them to have migrated to a country which was uninhabited, and so far distant that they journeyed for a year and a half, or even more.

"This theory is further supported by the writings of the famous Manasseh Ben Israel, who tells us that America and Asia, now separated by Bering Strait, were formerly one continent, and that during this early period these Hebrews penetrated to America by land.

"Adding to these statements the fact that the Indian legends all affirm that their ancestors came into the country from the northwest, and we seem to have three connecting links in the chain of evidence."

Still more conclusive proof is found in a comparative study of the language, religion, customs, and traditions of the two peoples. Such resemblances as these are noted:

"Like the Hebrews, the Indians, when first visited by the Europeans, were a very religious people, yet they had entirely escaped the idolatry which was so common to almost all ancient peoples. They acknowledged but one God—the Great Spirit—and the name by which he was known was 'Ale,' the old Hebrew name for God.

"In their dances they were heard to say distinctly, 'Halleluah,' or praise to Jah—the very word which was used by the Hebrews themselves.

"They kept annual festivals, which resembled those of the Mosiac ritual. They performed morning and evening sacrifices, and offered of their first fruits to God. They practiced the rite of circumcision, and celebrated a feast like that of Tabernacles. They had 'cities of refuge,' to which even a murderer might flee and be safe.

"The Indians reckoned time in the same manner as the Hebrews, and their year began at the same season. The same superstitions seem to have marked their burial places, and the same creeds were the rule of their lives, both as to the present and the future.

"The Indians, as well as the ancient Hebrews, lived in tribes ruled by a chief, and their forms of government were almost identical. The clan system of the Indians has preserved a clew to some of the mysterious rites of the early Hebrews. What is now known about the clan system of the Iroquois explains what was formerly mystical about the tribes of Israel.

"Each tribe had a totem, usually some animal, such as a deer, a bear, or a panther. So, also, had the Israelites such a totem, and this explains why in the blessing of Jacob upon his sons, Judah is surnamed a lion, Dan a serpent, Benjamin a wolf, and Joseph a bough."—Literary Digest, September 21, 1912.

New Book Notes.

On The Century Company's fall list is Russian Wonder Tales, a collection of Russian folk-tales edited, and with a foreword, by Post Wheeler, formerly secretary of the American embassy at Saint Petersburg. The book will have twelve full-page illustrations in color by the famous French artist, Bilibin.

Frances Little's new book, The Lady and Sada San, is a sequel to her first great success, The Lady of the Decoration, and is written, as the first book was, in the form of letters to "Mate."

The New Industrial Day has been chosen for the title of the Honorable William C. Redfield's new book, which The Century Company has in hand for fall issue. The author, a member of Congress from Brooklyn, New York, is himself a manufacturer and widely known as an expert on the scientific development of our industries, and his book is intended for the men who employ other men.

THE YOUNG MAN.—NUMBER 1.

*"A kingdom can be given and taken away, but not fatherhood."
The boys of the present are the fathers of the future.*

I have often considered one text from the Old Scriptures as very comforting to the parents of young men during a certain period of life. If the parent can but read in faith believing, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," especially will they cling to the latter part of it, "when he is old," for conditions seem to indicate that at some time he may depart from that early training. True enough, some children do not return to the training given, but come instead into higher and nobler estates than their parents conceived, but these exceptions are rare.

Pathetic is the struggle when parents seek to do a work of reformation and refining with the young man that, to them, appears suddenly in the home. Years have they lived with this soul, years that should have been years of formation, and undoubtedly were, but, they may have shirked their part of it, the one leaving to the other what should be the work of both. Maybe they did not agree on the method to be employed, and father said, "Very well; try it." "I don't believe in that way of doing and shall have nothing to do with it," and mother, well, she thought like this: "I will not bear this thing. His blood shall not be upon my head," or she weakly tried to do something wholly impossible, that is, to round out, finish, alone what nature demands shall be the work of two.

If the earlier years have been used with care and wisdom, a parent's real work is practically finished when a boy comes into manhood. Henceforth they have only to enjoy the friendship, even chum-ship of this new being. They have established themselves on such foundations of serenity and good fellowship that the young man knows that counsel, advice, experiences of their own youth, are his to draw from if he will but half seek them. He is the wonderful product of generations of heredity, environment, tradition, hopes, and ambitions; and the immediate one from a union of the love and constant anxiety and prayer and actual work of two. Heir to characteristics and elemental forces in which he had no choice, he is here by pleasure of his parents. They were indebted to his future and could only pay that debt by bringing him into manhood's estate equipped for its duties. They owe to him more charity, more consideration than any other man and woman on the earth. Coming now into seemingly new found freedom, meeting new forces, the boy soul revels in it, for after all there are no lines between the boyhood and manhood. Men are only "Boys grown stronger,

Wider, longer,
Grayer, balder,
Never 'aulder.'"

He may have been held under close discipline. If by force of love and respect, the restrictive influences are unchanged, but he feels an exaggerated sense of bigness and greatness. He is his own. He attaches magnificent importance to the attainment of his majority, so much importance that he may overlook the fact that father also had a "season of majority splendor"; father seems sometimes to have forgotten it, too, and really it is very good for fathers to cherish the art of remembering.

And where is there a more grievous error than the one of perpetually nagging? Some women (and a few men) always nag. They can not be content if a man is within hearing unless they are telling him what to do and what not to do. I have known men who could not write or read where the wife or mother knew about it. One young man of my acquaintance actually had to remain at the schoolhouse or in the town library to study his lessons, although he had a good room at home. The mother always found something to bother with, and he was a faithful boy to help in even the most menial household tasks. It was "Floyd, do stop rocking"; "Floyd, you must be marring the paint"; "Floyd, don't lean on that stand; it squeaks so"; "Floyd, come right down and clean this mud off the porch. You got it on there, and I have told and told you about it"; "Floyd, the pigeons are in the yard eating the little chickens' feed; do come drive them away"; "Floyd, open the hall window, and don't step off the rug, and be sure not to touch the glass or sash, and put the blind up exactly to the edge of the lower sash"; "Floyd, come right down here and clean up those ashes you spilled on the walk."

Why, the man had to go elsewhere to be rid of her voice. If he sat up to study she nagged because he wiggled the chair; if he lay down she nagged because his toes marred the floor; if he whistled it made her nervous; if he was quiet she felt spooky; and he was a young man and she a strong, healthy woman.

One day friends called to see Floyd. They waited in the parlor, dark and cool, while his mother called him. He came in, tall and warm and glad, shook hands, then walked over and pushed up the shade. From a room beyond his mother came tearing, "For goodness' sake—that sun will just ruin my lace curtains. Seems like you would know better." Down came the shade. The boy moved to an inviting looking chair near an open shade. His mother passed the door and called in an impossible mother voice: "Floyd!" Why, it had vinegar beaten and forgotten for sharpness. The boy looked at the window shade. "No sun here; mother." "No! but you are leaning your sweaty shoulders against my best tidy. I nearly worked my eyes out on that thing and here in two minutes you spoil it all." "Too bad," he said, "I'll move, mother!" and he went over by the door, talking to his friends as he went. Two moments later an exasperated voice trembled: "Floyd! Do pick up your feet when you walk. Look at that rug." The boy walked over and carefully fixed the rug crooked! His mother saw it as she was crossing the dining room. She fluttered in and straightened it with elaborate care and started out, but stopped in sheer horror—"Floyd! isn't there another chair in the house that will hold you!" The boy stood up and looked down at something on the back of the chair, a dainty tan jacket with its lace collar and lapels all mussed by his broad, busy back and restless arms. "I didn't notice it, mother." "No! It's so seldom I have a nice thing and then it has to be mussed up by some one this way. I thought it would surely be safe in here," and the angry martyr sailed out of the room. In just about five minutes her complaining voice sounded: "Floyd, please do come empty the potato peelings. It makes me nervous to see them here," and Floyd went, but came back with his hat and said, "Let's go for a walk!" As he was sauntering along half a block away his mother called: "Floyd, do hurry back and mow this lawn."

This is not all fiction. Nothing but the name. Why do young men not find home good enough for them? I remember once in the Sunday school I was teaching in the primary room. In conducting the review the question was asked, "What will spoil the very nicest home?" Of course the answer should have been "quarreling," but dear little Forest, now sleeping in sunny Rose Hill, had solved the problem most successfully, and he said, in his straight, direct way: "Picking." I could have hugged the child.

A celebrated author writes of this same principle: "It seems almost an invariable rule that mothers should make mistakes when they wish to act for the welfare of their sons." "How infinitely valuable," say their children, "would I have found a mother who could have kept quiet, who would have been patient with me, who would have given me rest, keeping the outer world at a distance from me, with kindly soothing hands. Oh, would that I had a mother on whose breast I could have laid my head, to be quiet and dream."

Ah, those dreams! What boy has not had them? If only parents could give the best of life, energy, time, and thought to the growing boy, and then leave him without asking thanks or gratitude, they would enjoy the young man product of all this as a splendid friend and companion; but no, they too often "make work hard" and "play joyless" whenever they are near, and so the young man learns to exclude them from his plans, long before he is a young man, and he goes out into the world and chooses his "spiritual parents," or goes fatherless and motherless.

Surely this field of parenthood is a field "on which man must sow a hundred fold in order to harvest ten fold in the souls of children."

This writer from whom I am constantly tempted to quote tells so many things in a deep and significant way, yet I can not, without some reservation, recommend Ellen Key's Century of the Child. Perhaps each one of us does that with any author. Some time read her book that way. It is delightfully earnest and plain. The little scenes from our real life demonstrate the facts given us by this and other writers. Indeed, it is from the great book of life that parents get the most effective lessons for the boys. These boys who give you a great surprise some day by announcing their intention of voting for Senator B——. Senator B——! Yes. The boy is a voter; as such he counts for just as much as his father, and in most States far more than his mother, and he is going to vote for a man whose political party is a menace to "life and happiness" in the traditions of the family. He is in untried fields with untamed desires and boundless energy, and trust in mankind that is almost limitless.

Especially do young men feel this an important event when greedy politicians, watching the school census for many years, come genially up to meet them, or coming from the rear, slap them familiarly on the shoulder and call them high and inspiring names of endearment, "old man" and "son," and many known so well to those wolves after the firstlings of the flock. How shall a young man be prepared for such men's overtures, if the home people neglect to prepare him? The young men of to-day are following, into a new political vortex, leaders not always of the party traditional in their family, for the bonds of party politics are being everlastingly shattered. Few men, old to political games, know exactly where to place their feet that the undertow of corruption may not be tugging at them. How then shall the young man find a rock? I am strong in the conviction that our boys must have political guidance and learn, not the game of politics, but the science of government and its necessity; heartfelt, soul-deepening, honor-giving principles, and be taught, not party, but the text of the latter day political faith: "Seek to put good and wise men in office." This needs not only the broad, wide, sweeping, prospective view of the father, but the sympathetic, charitable, introspective, intuitive assistance of a mother. Much of the rapacious and corrupt legislation in politics is fed and fostered by ignorant voters. Why pray, "God give us men for times like these," and let the man producing element in our homes go undeveloped? And as a boy develops his own political tastes and preferment you learn to respect him for his independence and spirit although the principles he advocates may be under a despised party name. So, parents, learn religious tolerance and wait for the time when the faith of the fathers will come forth on new heights from a world of new environ and experience. Soon as a young man is a voter he is treated according to Paul's injunction, "as a brother," but in the church he does not always feel that the folly of "having been young recently" is forgotten.

"A young man is a man for a' that and a' that." Ellen Key, in her work on education, tells of a bright little child of ten years who remarked upon hearing the anecdote of George Washington and the hatchet: "It is no trouble telling the truth when one has such a kind father"; thus revealing a point in that old story not often made prominent, viz, the kindness of the parent,—a point that one should never forget.

"All things work together for good to them," etc., and a few moments of lost sleep by the parent, a whispered talk with the boy in the deserted parlor or his own bedroom, may change the whole course of his moral life. "I recall," said a mother to me, "the most wonderful whispered conversations held in my boy's bedroom in the still hours of the night, when the rest of the household slumbered. I heard him come in, stumble over the footstool; heard his subdued 'Ouch!' as he crept to the warm corner and rubbed his shin, and pulled off his shoes. I listened to every hushed movement. I heard him slip up the stairs into his room—then directly a whispered call floated across the hall, 'Mother,' and I gathered a kimono and slipping to the door whispered back, 'Hello, son.' 'Want to tell you something, mother.' And I sped into his room and curled up on the foot of his bed with a blanket around me. I listened and talked. It was the psychological moment, to-morrow in the light of day he would feel silly telling such things; to-night they were great. And they were great—how great only the man who goes down because he does not understand them can tell. I would stake my chances in eternity against the woman who could not meet the whispered call of 'mother' in the midnight hour."

Nor is she the only one whose testimony comes to me. I knew a man with many sons and daughters. They were exemplary children, too; but once Edgar, a boy in high school, went away on Sunday evening (an unusual thing) with a wagon load of young people for a ride. Contrary to the promise made his mother, at nine o'clock, the bedtime hour for generations, he was still out. The mother conjured up unwarranted suspicions and recollected every past offense. She smote his memory on every side with angry will. It was midnight when she finally went to his room and found him peacefully sleeping by the side of John. She awakened him and plied him with questions; rank, bare, two-edged questions; and sleepy and half-dazed the boy listened and shut his lips tight. The mother slept none and the son but little. The next morning the gentle-voiced father met the lad with his milk buckets coming from the corral. "Well, son, how was the ride—pretty dusty?"

A smile crossed the pale, set face. "Fine, dad! Thanks! Prayers were just over when I came up to the door, so I went on up to bed."

"All right, son. Glad you got in early!"

And at breakfast sleepy-headed John said: "I guess mother called you good and early. I heard her in there long before daylight. Guess she thought you retired early, you could rise early. Sort of a case of 'healthy, wealthy, and wise.'" And the poor mother was ashamed!

Poor mother!

Much stress is laid on confidence. Get the confidence of the young, they say, and like everything else it has a price. Are parents willing to pay it? You know how the years of adolescence increase the secretive element, but some time, to some one, the man heart should open and will if caught when the tide is full. To some one it tells its story, and the soul that can meet it and hear and sanctify that confidence to the man's good, shall be rich in eternity. Just as we lost hours of rest caring for baby ailments and meeting the demands of infancy, so we may occasionally lay aside our own comfort to minister to the child grown tall. We can not tell how it all will end. We must do our best.

My Laddie.

You have to grow up, my laddie, and wander away from me—
Up and down through the field and town and over the calling sea;

The fun-tangled curls that you wear to-day
Will change into hair that is shot with gray;
So laugh you, my laddie, and sing and play
Or ever you go from me.

Your wonderful ways, my laddie, your confident, trusting smile,
Must change and fade as your way is made against all the greed and guile;
So live while you may in your make-believe
With all the fancies you dream and weave,
The day will be here when for them you'll grieve;
'Twill seem but a little while.

You haven't a care, my laddie, the world is a wondrous place,
With play and song the whole day long, and nothing is mean and base;

So keep it as long as your heart beats light,
And view every dawn as a marvel sight.
The day will be here when your toil will write
Its story upon your face.

You've got to grow up, my laddie, and wander away from me—
Up and down through the field and the town, and out on the tossing sea;

But now you are little, and life is good,
So wring out its rapture as well you should;
So laugh you, my laddie—I wish I could

The day that you go from me!—Chicago Post.

Requests for Prayer.

A sister residing in one of the Central States desires the earnest prayers of the Saints, that if it is the Lord's will she may get back quite a sum of money that she invested and thought it a safe venture, but since has found out differently. The Lord knows all the circumstances of the case.

Sister R. M. King, Biloxi, Mississippi, asks that the Saints pray for them and their family, for they are passing through a very severe trial and feel that without God's help they can do nothing. They desire peace and happiness.

Prayers are asked for N. J. Randall, Columbus, Kansas, who is unable to work because of poor health.

During the prayer services there was a reign of peace, with the manifestations of the gifts; tongues and the interpretation, prophecy, the recital of visions and dreams; and through the thoughtfulness and the kindness of Sister Sadie Rodmall, of Independence, Missouri, a stenographer, we are able to include the following:

PROPHECY.

"Hearken unto me, oh ye my people, saith the Lord! Hearken unto me! I am watching over you; and behold my Spirit will be given unto you, to your joy and comfort, and so you shall be enabled to overcome the evils of this life; those things which are trials unto you, you will be able to overcome them, and be prepared to enjoy that which I have promised unto my people. Therefore, the Spirit saith unto you, oh, ye my people! Be faithful, for I am watching over you. Yea, my Spirit is hovering over you for your joy and good and comfort, if you will be faithful and diligent, walking in the ways of truth and right before me. I will bless you, and the time is near at hand when my people shall arise in greater power, the power of my Spirit, than they have heretofore enjoyed. I am watching over my people; Zion shall be redeemed, and my people shall be blessed, saith the Lord your God."

Given by the Spirit through Elder Hugh N. Snively, Stewartsville, Missouri, August 25, 1912.

And on August 27, he spoke in the gift of tongues, and gave the interpretation as follows:

"Hearken unto me, oh ye my people, saith the Lord your God! Inasmuch as ye are faithful, humble, meek and diligent in keeping my law, as I have given it unto you, behold I am your Lord and your God, and I will stand by you. By my power, I will enable you to accomplish the work which I have sent into the world. Yea, I say unto you, oh ye my people, if ye are faithful before me, I will open the windows of heaven and pour out such blessings upon you as you shall not be able to contain; yea, in fulfillment of my word which I have given unto you, I will bless you. And unto you, my servants, I say unto you, be ye faithful, even you who are aged, for I will be with you in your labor for the upbuilding of my work, for the establishing of my righteousness upon the earth. Yea, I will reward you for all your labors and you shall be accepted in the day when I come to make up my jewels. And unto you, my handmaidens: I will bless you; I will reward your services. Be ardent in praise, adoration, and in the way of testimony for those by whom you may be surrounded. Yea, I have watched over you and have stood by you all along the journey of life, and I will be with you and strengthen you and help you to accomplish the work which I have sent into the world."

PROPHECY.

"God is well pleased at your example and with nearly all those that have gathered together. There are some who profess my name and are not living up to the light that they themselves have. But when my people shall live up to the law that they have received and profess before the world, all the blessings that I have promised in the past shall be realized by my people now. The blind shall have their eyes opened; the deaf shall have their ears unstopped; the lame shall leap for joy; and those that languish upon the sick bed shall be raised up, to the glory of God, and to the joy of their friends, and to the surprise of their neighbors. Yea, verily, saith the Spirit, the time has come for my Saints to apply the laws that I have given, to equip themselves at all times before me, and my work shall go forth with such power and glory, to the convincing of a good many souls; and those whom you have thought had little concern in this work shall be compelled to confess and obey the commandments that I have given. You shall enjoy such blessings in the future as you have not enjoyed hitherto. Therefore, be faithful, oh ye my people! Be ye faithful, be ye very faithful; be diligent in prayer; be conservative in your conversation; seek diligently to understand the commandments that I have given and the history of my people, and walk before the world as those who are imitating the labor of my Son, Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, and it shall be well with you. Thus saith the Spirit in Jesus' name. Amen."

Given by the Spirit through Robert M. Elvin, at Stewartsville, Missouri, August 30, 1912.

At the last prayer service of the reunion, held at 8 a.m., September 1, the Spirit, through Elder A. W. Head, spoke to the Saints in

PROPHECY.

"I say unto you by the Spirit of the living God, oh, ye my people, be faithful and humble, put away pride from among you; seek the Lord in mighty prayer, and fast and pray that peace may rest upon you, for I say unto you there are trials before you, for my people. Yea, and inasmuch as you will call unto me as I have asked in times past, I, the Lord, your God, will not forget you. Yea, I will stand by you inasmuch as you will keep my commandments. And I say unto you, Bring in your tithes and offerings, that those who are laying aside and have been faithful in the work, the aged, may be supported and may be cared for as long as they are here in this tabernacle of clay. And I say unto you, Bring in your tithes and offerings that my work may increase. Yea, I say unto you, The time is near when my Son, even my Son Jesus Christ, will come, and inasmuch as you are faithful in keeping my commandments, I will stand by you in times of trial, when evils shall come upon you; for I say unto you, Sickness will invade your household, and inasmuch as you will have trust and confidence in the promises I have made unto you, I, the Lord, your God, through my servants, when called upon, will heal your sick. Yea, and the time is not far hence when the lame will be made to walk under the hands of my servants; yea, and the deaf shall hear. Be faithful, be faithful in keeping my commandments; for I, the Lord, your God, am watching over you. Yea, it has been pleasing unto me that my people have gathered here upon this ground, and I say unto you that I have poured out my Spirit upon you, and the angels have watched over you; and as the time is drawing near when you will separate, trial will come upon you, and Satan will try to thwart my work. And I say unto you, Be faithful when you separate, and go forth and I will be with you, and my joy will be with you, and my peace shall go before you, and the time will be when many of you will be gathered here again. Be faithful in keeping my commandments; bringing in your tithes and offerings to my storehouse, and inasmuch as you do this you will prosper both in basket and in store, and I, the Lord, your God, will provide for those that are in need. Thus saith the Spirit unto you."

There were several prophecies given that were not taken by the shorthand reporter, and many beautiful testimonies borne that would have made interesting reading for the Saints, and some of which were evidence of the truthfulness of the restoration of the gospel, with the gifts and blessings following the believer.

It is quite possible that which the Father in his loving kindness bestowed may prove an incentive to some to carry into practice the instruction of Paul: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" This crucial spiritual inventory possibly through the grace of God may qualify some to abide the high standard set by the Captain of our salvation: "And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." There can be no place for selfishness, or covetousness, when the rule practiced by the Master shall be the measure of our lives.

Committee on administering to the sick were: A. W. Head, W. P. Pickering, and H. N. Snively. The health of those in camp was unusually good, and the help of God was received to a marked degree by them that called on the Lord in his appointed ordinance.

The superintendents of the Sunday school work were: S. H. Simmons and W. H. Worden. There were held six sessions of Sunday school, and earnest labor was done, and a deep interest was manifested in all the sessions.

There were many others who were active in their labors in all the services, but I failed to obtain their names, and therefore can not give personal mention; however, the recording angel was upon duty, and no labor of love or act of kindness escaped his watchful notice.

Thursday, August 29, was Children's Day, and the largest attendance of any day of the reunion. All were joyous and happy, the camp and the surrounding woods rang with the gladness of cheerful youth, and the aged withheld not their approval; the entire afternoon was devoted to an entertainment, and from the tot to the gray-haired all contributed to make the occasion a success and a royal good time.

During the reunion six were added to the fold by baptism.

August 30 was held the business session of the reunion. And it was unanimously voted to hold another reunion upon these grounds in 1913, and the following committee was duly elected: Benjamin J. Dice, Temmie H. Hinderks, Andrew Saint Lewis, John E. Hovenga, David E. Powell, John Piepergerdes, and S. J. Hines.

One service was lost on account of a severe rain and wind-storm.

Respectfully submitted on behalf of the press committee.

A Testimony Concerning Tobacco.

Reading the leaves from the life of Elder H. N. Snively, concerning tobacco, and the reproof received by him, by which he quit its use, recalls to mind an incident which it might be well to relate, as a testimony to the readers of the HERALD. It was somewhere in 1884, as nearly as I can recollect. I was making a moderate use of tobacco, and, at the time, I thought I enjoyed it. But one day while about my work my mind became a blank to its surroundings, and the following dialogue took place, and the words were as strongly impressed upon my mind as though they had been spoken audibly; between my mind and an overshadowing mind, which seemed to be separate and distinct from my own.

"You are a Latter Day Saint?"

"Yes, sir; I am."

"Do you believe that God speaks to his people now, the same as anciently?"

"I do."

"Do you believe that the revelations in Doctrine and Covenants were given by him?"

"I do."

"Do you believe he gave the Word of Wisdom?"

"I do."

"Do you not suppose he knew what he was talking about when he gave it?"

"Most certainly I do."

"Then why don't you keep it?"

This was enough. And while I felt no strong emotional feelings on my part, or made no demonstration, by which others could notice this manifestation, it has had its influence with me from that time to the present as to the use of tobacco. And I have borne testimony of this both in public and in private, and I trust that it has had its influence for good among others.

Marriage---Who Shall Officiate?

"According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies. Therefore we believe that all marriages in this Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting or feast, prepared for that purpose, and that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder or priest, not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married of being married by other authority. We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church if it be their determination to do so, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving and at the solemnization the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right and the woman on the left, shall be addressed by the person officiating as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit, and if there be no legal objection, he shall say, calling each by their names, You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition, that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other and from all others during your lives, and when they have answered, Yes, he shall pronounce them husband and wife in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country vested in him," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 111.

The Lord has in his word plainly indicated the conditions upon which his blessings may be obtained by his Saints, and it may be seriously asked, that while the Lord has not spoken by commandment or restraint as regards the mode of the marriage ceremony, yet can the Holy Spirit's guidance and blessing be granted to the persons concerned otherwise than by official church administration? Surely the most ornate form of service from a worldly standpoint performed by an alien church to please our friends can not be soul-satisfying to those who desire "heaven's benediction" through prayer at a most important time in their earthly career, when standing on the threshold of a new life just opening out before them. How many times when ministering before the Lord in the blessing of children and anointing the sick for the blessings of life and health has that peculiar magnetic influence of the Holy Spirit testified to the truth of those ordinances, though rejected by the wisdom of the world!

These are just a few thoughts that have been impressed upon the mind of the writer and are here expressed with a sincere desire that we may all secure "the blessings of peace" in the way appointed by infinite wisdom.

Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska Reunion.

This association held its first reunion at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in Walnut Grove, from August 23 to September 1, 1912. Four districts joined in the services: namely, Gallands Grove, Pottawattamie, and Fremont in Iowa, and Northern Nebraska. A cooperative boarding tent was in charge of Brother J. M. Baker, while Sisters W. T. Lowe and M. A. Peterson were chief cooks. Ten meal tickets for only $1.50; single meals, 20 cents. Children were served with ten meals for one dollar; single tickets, fifteen cents. The committee were fortunate in securing the services of Brother J. L. Parker to operate the confectionery stand, and under the rustling management of Brethren Baker and Parker the boarding tent and stand proved a blessing to the reunion in a social and financial way.

There were about eighty tents in the camp, and all filled with happy families. The meetings were of a high order, intellectually and spiritually.

Elder J. W. Wight, assisted by the presidents of the four districts represented in the gathering, was elected to preside, with power to complete the organization and designate the time, character, and order of the meetings. Two business sessions were held; twenty-one preaching services; five normal training sessions, including one program; one Graceland College entertainment, and nine prayer and testimony meetings. During the first social service the voice of the Spirit through the interpretation of tongues cheered the hearts of all with the assurance that angels of the Lord would guard and bless the camp during the gathering, which blessing was realized, to the great joy and satisfaction of the Saints. Several of the elders pronounced the reunion the most peaceful one they ever attended. In one of the social services eighty took part in less than seventy-five minutes. Ten were baptized and confirmed the last Sunday.

The normal institute work, in charge of Brother J. A. Gunsolley, proved an interesting and instructive feature of the reunion. And the music committee, consisting of Brethren James Pearsall, T. A. Hougas, Paul N. Craig, and Sister Estelle Harding, had their part of the work well in hand, to the satisfaction of lovers of music.

On September 4, a majority of the standing reunion committee, in company with Elder J. W. Wight, met with the Commercial Club in their office at Missouri Valley, Iowa, and completed arrangements to hold our next reunion at the City Park in Missouri Valley, August 22 to 31, 1913. The reunion committee received the generous offer of one hundred and eighty-five dollars, besides the free use of the city park, buildings, etc. The mayor furnished the secretary with an analysis of the water from the six deep wells which supply the city, the analysis showing an excellent quality of water. The committee anticipates having a very large reunion in 1913.

C. J. HUNT, Secretary.

Reunion at San Antonio.

The conference and reunion which was to begin at San Antonio August 23, has now become a part of the history of the Southwestern Texas District. We feel that it has been such a success as has not been experienced heretofore in this district.

The great success is doubtless due in a large measure to our having Brethren J. F. Curtis and Ammon White with us, not only through the ten days of conference and reunion, but also through a week's meeting begun on the same ground the night after the reunion closed. By this means, the time was sufficient to reap a goodly harvest. There were seventeen baptized in all: one the first Sunday, eight the second, and eight the third. Besides these there are a number of others deeply interested and we feel they will shortly enter. The work is now being continued in another part of San Antonio by missionary Glauud R. Kuykendall and Brother D. S. Palmer, who are conducting a tent meeting.

Brother J. F. Curtis has gone with Brother John Harp to visit and preach to the Bandera and Medina City branches, while Brother White has left for Mobile, Alabama. These brethren have been very busy during their stay here, especially Brother White, who besides preaching almost every day, has been discharging the duties of the patriarchal office. We are all glad indeed to have the presence and assistance of these brethren, and although we feel loath to see them leave us, we pray God's blessings upon their labor, which has brought so much happiness to us all. Our district is promised a great future and we all feel encouraged to go forward with redoubled energy.

Besides the brethren above mentioned and the local force, we had with us Brother W. H. Mannering and Brother Cady, both of whom have been laboring in Eastern Texas. Both have returned to their field of labor.

Your brother in the gospel hope,

CARL F. WHEELER, District Secretary.

SAYERS, TEXAS, September 11, 1912.

News from Missions

Alberta.

My last communication to your columns was written from Yonkers, Saskatchewan, some weeks ago. Perhaps a few words regarding the Lord's work in this northwest country will be read with interest by some of the readers of your valuable paper. J. W. Peterson and the writer visited the Iowa Branch, sixteen miles southeast of Saskatoon. Brother J. A. Beckman, president of the branch, and the Saints there, gave us a kind reception, and we truly enjoyed our sojourn with them. Most of the Saints here are nicely situated and are blessed with good farms, houses, and barns. I am glad to be able to report that they are also actively engaged in the Lord's work. It is called the Iowa Branch because all of the Saints are from said State.

Our next stop was at Disley, Saskatchewan, where we attended the Sunday school and Religio conventions and the district conference, beginning July 19, and closing the 21st. There was quite a gathering here of ministers and Saints, and all seemed to enjoy themselves immensely. There were present of the general ministry: J. W. Wight, E. E. Long, J. W. Peterson, J. L. Mortimer, Fred Gregory, J. C. Crabb, Birch Whiting, Daniel Macgregor and wife, T. J. Jordan, Elders Dodson, Beckley, Beckman, D. C. Smith, and many others of the Aaronic priesthood were in attendance. From this point Brethren Wight, Long, and Jordan went south and the writer wended his way to the city of Winnipeg. The rest of the brethren scattered to various parts of the mission.

As the train passed through Regina we viewed the havoc wrought by the recent tornado, which killed over thirty people and did millions of dollars worth of damage. The people in this part of Canada were consoling themselves with the thought that they were beyond the reach of cyclones, and that those violent and terrific storms were only found within the limits of the United States. However, many of the people found out to their great sorrow and suffering that cyclones and tornadoes can cross boundary lines made by men without consulting inspectors or custom officers. It is strange that so many supposedly Christian people do not realize that we are living in perilous times and that God has decreed that in these last days that he will preach to the inhabitants of the earth through lightning, thunder, earthquakes, tornadoes, and by pestilence and plague. It is evident by what has happened during the last few months that he also speaks by cloudburst, floods, earthquakes, and storms, and verifying his decrees in these last days. Still the great masses of the people do not realize or recognize the signs of the times. It is said a hint to the wise is sufficient, but judging from the way that people are comporting themselves nowadays, but few are wise. It seems that wickedness and iniquity are on the increase and the great majority of the people are lovers of pleasure more than God. When it comes to having faith in God and his promises, I mean the faith that the Apostle Jude said the saints should contend for, but few possess it, and it is surprising to see so little of it manifested by those calling themselves Saints. If we all possessed the faith that Abraham exercised before God, of whom it is written, "He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in the faith, giving glory to God; being fully persuaded that what he had promised, he was able also to perform."—Romans 4: 20, 21. But I find that many of us stagger nowadays at paying tithing, consecration, the Order of Enoch, the church physician, Sanitarium, some of the revelations concerning the redemption of Zion, and many other things. "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink." Yes, a faith that will enable us to be like Abraham in that we are fully persuaded that what God has promised, he will bring to pass, providing that we are obedient and comply with the conditions under which these promises were made.

My stay in Winnipeg was very enjoyable, indeed. I was domiciled at the home of Brother and Sister Wilson, whose kindness we will not soon forget. Brother Seaton is president of the branch and has able assistants in the branch officers. The branch is in fair condition spiritually, but there is still room for improvement. I am of the opinion that good will be accomplished in this city, provided the resident Saints and the missionaries sent to labor there work harmoniously together. City work can not be a success unless a systematic effort is put forth to place church literature within the reach of the public, and the holding of cottage meetings through the week, and street preaching when the weather permits. Our people, as a general rule, are scattered in all parts of the city, and if the Saints thus situated would invite some of their immediate neighbors into their homes once a week and have a missionary to talk to them, which he would be willing and glad to do if he is a hustler and interested in the salvation of men. By pursuing this course, preaching on streets and distributing tracts, he can work up an audience for Sunday services. But the missionary who goes into a city with a view to only preach on Sunday, and waits for the Saints to gather a crowd for him, is a poor city preacher and will not be a success; the sooner he is taken out of the city, the better for both him and the church. On the other hand the Saints should consider that it requires money to pay street car fare, and other expenses incidental to city work; and that the minister must be present ble in general appearance. That means respectable clothing, or he will not be attractive to the people and hence will not have proper influence with them. He should also be provided with a suitable place to stay, where he could put in some hours every day, studying and writing. It should not be expected by the Saints that he be on the move continuously and have no time to gain knowledge by study. Neither should it be left entirely to the family who happened to be blessed with a spare room to both board and room the preacher. This burden should be equally divided by the membership. The general ministry in charge are often requested to assign a minister to labor in a certain city or town, but I am very sorry to say, that the burden of providing is often left to one or two families, and also the expenses that must be met.

On August 2, 3, and 4, we attended a reunion at the Vanscoy Branch which was a success in all respects. Brethren J. Beckman, J. C. Crabb, and the writer supplied the preaching. A good and peaceful spirit prevailed throughout all the meetings. On the 7th I had the pleasure of leading nine precious souls into the clear waters of Pike Lake. The day was beautiful and the sun shone down upon us as we immersed them. Five of those baptized were adults, and four were children. Brother Birch Whiting officiated at the water's edge and with the confirmation.

I made my home with our aged Brother and Sister William Nunn, who are well known to the traveling ministry of the church in Minnesota, where they lived for many years. Brother Nunn related many incidents of past experiences, for instance, fishing in some of the large lakes in Minnesota in the company of Joseph and Alexander Smith. Brother I. N. Roberts and many others of the leading ministry of the church were talked of in tenderness. It makes a person feel good to have their brethren spoken well of in place of being found fault with and criticized. Some of the Saints seem to take delight in referring to the weakness of their brethren but have little to say about their good qualities. This branch is in splendid condition, and the Saints were very cheerful, notwithstanding most of them had their grain destroyed by hailstorms.

I visited on my way here, the Artland and Michigan branches, and perfected the organization at both places. We had some very fine meetings and some of the brethren were ordained to different offices in both branches. Brethren William Cornish and Levitt, presidents of these respective branches, are faithful men and the great majority of the Saints are striving to do their duties. I also visited the Innisfree Branch. There are but few members here. All seem to be living in peace with each other. Brother William Roy is president. His cousin has been confined to bed for some weeks, to whom I administered.

I spent about a week visiting the Edmonton Branch. Brother J. N. Baldwin is president and his officers are actively engaged, doing all in their power to keep the work alive in this city. Brother Crabb is located there at present and will remain there for some time. Brother Crabb is an old experienced minister, and we have every reason to believe that under his administration the branch there will thrive in the near future. Brother and Sister W. J. Nuckles with whom the missionaries stay in that city make the brethren feel at home with their kind treatment. We surely appreciated their hospitality. I desire to mention in this connection the kindness of Brother Levitt, wife, and family. The ministry who visit this home are made to feel that they are welcome. Surely the Lord will bless all those who are so mindful of his servants. At Saskatoon we are welcomed at the home of Mr. Doer, and his wife who is a member of the church. No Latter Day Saint could be more mindful of the wants of the ministry than these two. No one would know but what he was a true Latter Day Saint by his acts. He believes the doctrine and we shall be glad to learn that he has identified himself with the church by obedience to the gospel. Brother Beckman and family also rank among those whose kindness and hospitality are not forgotten by the Lord's servants. In fact the Saints of the West here are all liberal and considerate of those dependent upon their bounties.

The 7th and 8th and 9th inst. I spent with the Millet Branch. Young Brother Benham is president of the branch and is a very faithful brother. His two brothers are active workers, both in Sunday school and church. It is very gratifying to meet young men who are willing to sacrifice the pleasures of the world in the interests of the church and their own souls' salvation. I am sorry to say that some of the Saints here are living far below their privileges. They seem to pay more attention to worldly things than to the things of the kingdom and thus are the means of keeping many on the outside from uniting with the church. The two Sisters Campbell, Sister Roupe, Brother Shaw and wife, and some young sisters are striving to keep the camp fire blazing. Stayed one night and day with Mr. Roupe and wife. It ought to be Brother Roupe; he believes the doctrine and is an able defender of the same. We find all the church works and papers in his home. In this respect he is ahead of many Saints, as numbers of families I visit do not take the church papers. I sincerely trust that he will soon identify himself with the church and not allow the unworthy conduct of the Saints to keep him out any longer.

Quite a number of brethren in the States have been writing, asking information regarding the homesteads in this country. My advice to such is for them to come and see the country for themselves and not depend on any man's say so. At present there are fair prospects for an excellent crop in this country. Every country has its advantages and disadvantages and people differ in their view of things. What would seem all right to one person would displease another. They grow wonderful crops of potatoes, turnips, beets, cabbage, peas, and the golden grain. However, hailstones kill considerable grain and then again the early frosts do lots of damage in places. There has been considerable rain and cloudy weather here during the past three months, but the weather is fairly good at present with the exception of an occasional frost. But when it comes to mosquitoes they had a full supply for two or three months. My, but they are a pest, and are hard on the poor dumb brutes. There are times in the country when you have to wear mosquito netting on your head. It is written that Saul killed his thousands and David his tens of thousands. Well, I fear I have excelled that record in the last few months, but perhaps the reader can guess what it was I killed; ha! ha! Brother Crabb says that if the Lord created the mosquito for a pest that he surely made a success of it. And so say I.

I regret that there are a few, however, they are but few Saints here, who seem to manifest a considerable degree of national prejudice against Americans and the ministry especially. I presume there are some in the States who display the same feeling toward other nationalities. In my opinion persons who entertain such feeling of spirit can not be in possession of the Spirit of Christ, for he is no respecter of persons, and to be Christlike we must be like him. Hence it is that I am greatly surprised to learn that people who entertain such contemptible feelings can make themselves believe they are Latter Day Saints. They are surely not in harmony with the Apostle Paul, who wrote, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—Galatians 3: 27, 28.

I arrived in this city on the 10th. Calgary is a very beautiful city, said to have a population of about seventy thousand. The streets are very nicely laid out, with avenues running east and west and streets north and south all of which go by numbers, and it is to the credit of the officials of the city the streets are kept clean.

We have about eighteen Saints here and on last evening I organized them into a branch and ordained Brother Charles H. Coles to office of priest. Having no elder here, he was elected president; Brother Cecil Smith, secretary; and Sister Burr, treasurer. Other officers will be installed in due time. The people here are at a disadvantage in having no public place to hold meetings, on account of the rents being so high. In the meantime they will meet in private houses. We anticipate placing an elder here to labor during the winter months. They also have a Sunday school in operation. If the members will live in peace and harmony and attend to their duties, it will only be a question of time until others will be added to their number.

I have been making my home with Brother G. L. McLeod and wife and they surely have made my sojourn with them pleasant. Brethren in the future visiting the city will find a kind reception at the home of Brother Herbert and Cecil Smith, at 1833 West Eighteenth Street. Brother and Sister Coles will be glad to feed any of the brethren but can not room them. Brother McLeod, wife, mother, and sister always have an open door. I am leaving for Moose Jaw, Regina, and other points. Love to all.

In gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

CALGARY, ALBERTA, September 17, 1912.

Honolulu, Hawaii.

Perhaps a few words from the Islands would be welcomed by some who are watching the growth of the work in this far-away mission. My work has been pleasant in many respects. The experiences one meets with from day to day in laboring in a city of so many different nationalities, serve as an education to a missionary, and help him to develop intellectually and spiritually.

Last December, when the United States cruiser California broke the cord and opened the way to Pearl Harbor, Brother G. J. Waller secured invitations for Brother and Sister McConley, Sister Barrett, and myself to accompany him on one of the ships that followed the California through the long, narrow channel to the harbor and dry-dock. This will be the largest and best dry-dock in the United States when it is completed. We had a very pleasant trip.

The work is progressing slowly but firmly. Since Brother G. J. Waller returned from the States there have been some additions to the priesthood. Our deacon, Brother John Mahuka, was ordained to the office of teacher, Elder G. J. Waller officiating, assisted by Elder J. B. Barrett. This gives another efficient officer to assist in the teachers' work. We hope he will prove his worth by diligent, successful work. Another young brother, Charles Lee, was ordained to the office of priest by Elder J. B. Barrett, assisted by Elder G. J. Waller. Brother Lee has been in the church but a few months, yet God has seen fit to call him into his work, in which he will be a great help if he remains faithful. There are others we hope to see called and ordained ere long, so that the branch will have a full corps of live, working officers, which is so essential to the growth of every branch of the church.

Brother and Sister McConley are at present on the other side of the island, where it is cooler than here; and if prospects are favorable for missionary work, I may join them soon.

In November of last year Brother McConley and I commenced holding Sunday school and preaching services at Watertown, a small village about two miles from Pearl Harbor. The attendance for a few Sundays was very good, but soon nearly all stopped coming, and we were almost ready to quit but we did not. Sometimes only four or five children came, and one Sunday when there were only five at Sunday school we decided to have Sunday school only, and then take the early train back to Honolulu, but when we told them there would be no preaching to-day they said, "Please have preaching, for we like to hear you talk. We will all stay and be real still." So we told the gospel story to the five little native girls, and they sat there pleased and delighted, not one of them going home or getting sleepy, although I preached more than forty minutes. Some of the older people are quite interested now. Last Sunday a fine young native man, who has assisted us some, asked to be baptized. We hope his wife will do the same before long, with others who are investigating the work.

How many times I have been made to rejoice when I have seen God's promises verified to his children when they obey his commandments and live near to him. Well do I remember the day when my brother, Edward W. Barrett, and I were baptized by our grandfather, Elder J. P. Dillon, in Brother Joseph Smith's pond, and the promises made to me when confirmed under the hands of Elders Nephi Snively, Samuel Ackerly, and Alexander H. Smith. Brother Snively, speaking under the influence of the Spirit of God, said that if I proved faithful to my covenant the time would come when God would call me into his work, and I would carry the message of the gospel to foreign lands and many, many souls would rejoice because of the work that I would do among them. Last November when I was ordained an elder under the hands of Elders G. J. Waller and M. A. McConley, again came the promise through Brother Waller that if I proved faithful to my trust my sheaves would be many. So, dear Saints, I wish to do my work in a manner that will please him and secure a reward for me in his celestial kingdom.

Reunion Notice.

Florida district reunion will be held at the Alafloa church, near Dixonville, nine miles south of Brewton, Alabama, beginning 10 a. m., October 19, closing October 27, 1912. We are making a special effort to be prepared at this reunion to conduct it more on reunion principles than they have been conducted heretofore in the Southeast. Therefore all are requested to come prepared to camp on the reunion ground. There will be a boarding tent conducted to accommodate those who can not care for themselves in the way of meals, but we advise where it is possible, come prepared to care for yourselves. The price of meals at this boarding tent will be 10 and 15 cents. We have tried to secure tents for rent, but have failed to get them. We can buy you a good, well-made tent 10 by 12 feet, 10-ounce duck, 3½-foot wall, for about $7.50, and will have it on the ground for you at this price, but will buy for only those who order them through the undersigned not later than October 6. Don't delay your order, for we will have to place our order by this time to get them in time for the reunion. Those coming by rail to Milton will please notify J. H. Barnes, of Botts, Florida. Those coming by way of Pollard, Alabama, notify J. D. McArthur, Berrydale, Florida. Those coming to Brewton, please notify T. J. Barnes, Dixonville, Alabama, who will meet you and conduct you to the reunion ground. We expect Brethren Ammon White, of the patriarchs, and F. M. Smith, of the Presidency, besides the missionary force here, as the speakers. We hope that all the Saints will make the necessary sacrifice to attend this reunion, as we feel that you will be rewarded spiritually for so doing. We shall be glad to hear from all who expect to attend at just as early a date as possible. E. N. McCall, secretary of reunion.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT FOR NORTHWESTERN NEBRASKA AND BLACK HILLS DISTRICT.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Nebraska and Black Hills District: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Brother Bert E. Hart, former agent of the Northwestern Nebraska and Black Hills District, and the recommendation of Counselor G. H. Hilliard and vote of Saints in reunion at Gering, Nebraska, Brother Charles W. Prettyman, of Comstock, Nebraska, has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We hope and trust that the Saints within and for the territory of this district will assist Brother Prettyman in his work and that the financial situation may be built up and the work prosper.

Please remember the address, Elder C. W. Prettyman, Comstock, Nebraska. Trust the Lord may bless each helper and every true worker.

Hastily in the truth,
 E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 25, 1912.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District; Greeting; Dear Saints: I have occasion to make another appeal to you in behalf of this department of the church. In reading this appeal I trust that all will dwell upon it and ask this question, Does this mean me? We will not attempt to overwhelm an objection to this part of the work by an array of scripture. I am persuaded that most of us are familiar with what the Lord has said upon this question. I am also impressed with the thought that it is due to the lack of proper consideration on our part. Let me refer you to what the Lord said to the church in Kirtland in 1831, "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning." I have this to say: Some have done well, and have attested their faith in the work as being what it asserts to be. My brethren and sisters, let us rally to the standard, not only by might, but by mite. Too many look with indifference upon the small offering, but "let us lay by each week that which the Lord hath prospered us." Our responsibilities and our blessings are mutual. Have we faith in our God? Do we value this work at par, or have we discounted it? Oh, no; we can not afford to lose that reward that comes only through obedience. Let me add your name to my list. It is found at 3618 Evanston Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Your fellow servant,
 WILLIAM JOHNSON.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Florida District; Greeting: That the Bishop's work may be conducted in a more systematic way, and the law of tithing may be taught and brought before everyone, thus giving all a fair opportunity to obey the financial teaching of the church, thus laying up for themselves treasures where they will not canker, doubly so, for the church needs the funds that accrue from our paying our tithes and offerings in carrying the gospel to the nations of the earth, and in taking care of the poor, and in other ways furthering the interest of the gospel work, we have concluded to appoint a subagent or helper in each branch of the district. Following out this plan, we have appointed the following to represent the bishop's agent in their respective branches: Fairview Branch, James Cooper; Open Head Branch, S. D. Allen; Cold Water Branch, James H. Barnes; Santa Rosa Branch, W. A. West; Alafloza Branch, T. J. Barnes. We will arrange with these brethren to give a temporary receipt, forward the funds to me immediately, upon receipt of which I will mail you a receipt. We trust that these brethren will be able to assist greatly in securing a more unanimous discharge of duty, as required in the temporal law.

We would be very glad to see more of the Saints begin to pay some amount regularly, even though it may be small; we believe that by paying a certain amount each month or so, you will soon pay off your tithing dues. Many work for a monthly salary and it seems that this plan should appeal strongly to you.

We feel that the Florida District is not doing its duty along this line, and for this reason we make this plea and offer the above plan; so let us not brush this by lightly and plan to do something some time, but let us begin right now.

We have inventory blanks and will arrange to help anyone to make out his inventory, which is also a duty under the law, and one of the first things too, in beginning the paying of tithing.

We have a few tithing payers in our district who are paying tithes regularly each month, and we wish to thank you for the strong support that you have been to us, and also all who have helped in any way, and we trust that others will fall in line ere long.

Each part of the law must be obeyed. Could we be saved without being baptized? Then can we be saved without paying our tithes, when he has commanded us strictly to pay them? We can't see how.

We hope to see our brethren and sisters do their duty, that they may be welcomed in, and told that their work has been well done.

In bonds,

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 9, 1912

NUMBER 41

Editorial

A PLEASANT PIECE OF GENEALOGY.

We give below what will be a pleasant piece of reading for the readers of the HERALD, it being the larger part of a letter written President Joseph Smith by a grandson of Sister Catherine Salisbury, who was the last surviving sister of Joseph Smith the Seer. We do not offer this to the readers of the HERALD as an especial token of family pride, for the reason that we believe rather the closing portion of Washington Irving's comment with regard to hereditary family title, rather than all the heraldic blazonry that asserts in the crests of the families of the past might reveal. Innate worth is a better test of character qualification than titles that may have attached to individuals on account of political place or history.

Dear Cousin: I have been tracing back the Smith-Mack-Salisbury history and have joined the Sons of the American Revolution. I think we all should belong as it shows our patriotism as a family.

Your ancestors, Samuel and Asael Smith, were both captains of Massachusetts companies in the Revolution; marched at the alarm of April 19, 1775, and helped fortify Dorchester Heights in 1776. One of them was a member of a Provincial Congress, chairman of a "Tea Committee," chairman of the Massachusetts Committee of Safety, etc. Solomon Mack was in both the Colonial War and the Revolution.

I have sent to Massachusetts and elsewhere and collected data for a family history and genealogy, which I expect to publish when ready.

We have the "Five Colonial Families": Treman, Mack, Dey, Bvard, and Ayers, which contains genealogy and history of the Mack family down to 1901, and gives history and genealogy of the Smith family. There is a full page picture of you and also one of your father and Uncle Hyrum, and one of Joseph F. They have me down as president of Graceland College. It gives good write ups of yours and your father's careers, and names of all descendants down to 1901. I presume the Herald Office has the two volumes unless they are burned.

If anyone there wishes to join the Daughters or Sons of the American Revolution, or the Colonial Dames, I will fill out the blanks for them if they wish and after one set of each is made out they can copy the data and supply other members.

"The Five Colonial Families" was published by Ebenezer Mack Treman and Professor Murray E. Poole; press of the Ithaca Democrat, Ithaca, New York, and probably can not be obtained now. I think you should write to the Ithaca Democrat or to Professor Poole.

The Macks were Mc-something in Scotland, but left off the rest to escape religious persecution, history says. Their crest was a boar's head erased. There is some speculation in "Five Colonial Families" as to what the rest of the name was.

The history is inspiring as it shows our ancestors were always progressive, both in civil and religious affairs, and were among leading respectable people in their time.

Washington Irving says in his Life of Washington, vol. 1, p. 26, in speaking of the Washington family: "We have shown that, for many generations, and through a variety of eventful scenes, it has maintained an equality of fortune and respectability, and whenever brought to the test has acquitted itself with honor and loyalty. Hereditary rank may be an illusion, but hereditary virtue gives a patent of innate nobleness beyond all the blazonry of the Herald's College."

Yours truly,

HERBERT S. SALISBURY.

THE SAINTS AS VOTERS.

"Let no man think that he is ruler, but let God rule him that judgeth, according to the counsel of his own will; or, in other words, him that counseleth or sitteth upon the judgment seat. Let no man break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. . . . Behold, here is wisdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 58:5.

We have quoted this at the opening of our article as a guide for the thoughts we desire to present to the voters of the church who read the HERALD; and we do not refer to the votes which we may as church members cast in church meetings, but to those which will be cast next November for the purpose of the state and national choice of officials.

There is in this a direct injunction to the Saints to observe the laws of the land, and for the purposes of this article we assume that the term "laws of the land" includes the rules and regulations governing the citizens of the Republic in the exercise of the elective franchise prescribed by the several States. It is not our purpose to enter into the discussion of the various functions of the department of state, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. We assume that the readers of the HERALD already understand why elections are held, and the rules and regulations prescribed to aid the citizen in casting his vote, and the purposes and men for which and whom the votes are to be cast.

One point in this quotation is clear with regard to the duty of the Saints in their treatment of those who are placed upon the judgment seat. No man should assume in and of himself that he is ruler and he should have due respect to him who is chosen or appointed to act in the capacity of judge.

In connection with this quotation used, and what we have stated in regard to it, we add:

And now, verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justifieth you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these cometh of evil. I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed; and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these cometh of evil."—Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2.

We think it safe to gather from this quotation that the Lord in the declaration of his will concerning the conduct of the Saints has intended to signify his approval of the existent laws of the Government, and especially to signify his approval of the Constitution of the United States under which the state and national laws are made. More especially is this thought correct when viewed in the light of the statement that God had raised up wise men and endowed them with wisdom, for the very purpose of writing and establishing that Constitution. It is further clear that the laws of the land referred to are those which have been declared by the highest judges appointed under the Government as the judicial body to take into consideration matter appertaining to law, and determine whether such matters are or are not in accordance with the Constitution, and declarative of human rights, and applicable to all men. It is further declared to be the duty of those in the church upon whom the laws of the several States where they are living have conferred the right to exercise the elective franchise to seek diligently for "honest men," "for good men and wise men," and support and sustain such in office. This duty of the Saint begins for them at once in the local affairs of the township in which they live, the county and State of which they are citizens, and a still greater scope of duty to those national matters to which they may be made parties by virtue of their being citizens of the Republic. And with equal truth, these duties which attach to citizens of the Republic necessarily attach to those of the church who may reside in kingdoms or dominions other than the Republic.

But what we are writing is intended by us to apply more specifically to the Saints who are citizens of the United States; for it is at the polls of the respective States of the Republic in the election to be held November 5 of the present year that county, state, and national officers are to be chosen, supposedly by the free and untrammelled exercise of the will of the voters. It has been suggested by some fortunately not of the Reorganized Church, that the statement, "I, the Lord God, maketh you free," found in the quotation made by us above, gives license to the individual to decide for himself whether existing laws are constitutional or otherwise; but the words, "And the law also maketh you free," define with sufficient clearness that the freedom referred to would be that which was within the province of the law of the land, of which it is distinctly stated in the first quotation at the head of this article, that no man was at liberty to break the laws of the land; and certainly it is not reasonable to suppose that he who gave so strict a specific commandment not to break the law of the land should have given a law either before or after that commandment that would permit, to say nothing of justifying, a disregard of the existent laws under the Constitution, as defined by the judicial tribunals instituted of God by the hands of wise men for the governmental purposes of the great Republic.

A specific statement in the Declaration of Independence affirms that men are created equal, endowed with certain rights which are unalienable, and that for the purpose of serving the interests of those for whom governments are instituted laws are enacted, "deriving their powers from the consent of the governed." It is further provided in that instrument that existing laws by which the rights and privileges of the governed are secured should not be exchanged except for the gravest and most strenuous consideration. These provisions laid down by those wise men ordained in the wisdom of God, as we are warranted in believing by the revelations to the church, have served as a part of the great bulwark of safety in the representative government of the people, as expressed at stated periods, under conditions which warrant the just expectation among the people that those things which have obtained under the administration of these principles are to be held sacred and that they are wisely conserved under the judicious administration of honest and wise men, chosen from among the people. The principle had in view is very singularly like the one announced at Sinai when the leading minds of the people and the great people themselves said, "Upon us be visited the curses pronounced in this law, upon us and our children unto the latest generation if we keep not its provisions." These may not be the exact words which were uttered by the multitude at the foot of the mountain, but they clearly state the spirit and sentiment by which the sacredness of the law was publicly recognized.

The evident intention of the Lord in giving the commandment to the Saints to observe the laws themselves, and to seek to sustain and uphold honest and wise men for the different offices necessary to the successful administration of law, was that the rights and privileges of citizenship in a great republic could be assured unto all alike, and none be made to suffer by reason of corrupt and evil administrators. We doubt if there has been a period in the history of the Nation since the organization of the thirteen colonies into a Confederation of States when there was greater need of careful consideration and calm judgment in the administration of political affairs than that through which we are now passing. And we are quite assured that there has been no period since we became identified with the movement of the reorganization of the church in which the commandment couched in the quotations which we have made, has been more applicable or more needed than now.

There are two propositions; one in reference to the sentiments and principles involved in the various claims made by the several parties associated in representative affiliation with reference to public administration of affairs, and the other in regard to the men who are to be the leading figures in carrying into execution the departments of operation in the same administration of public affairs.

It is not only necessary that the voters among the Saints should exercise care as to the principles which they propose to support, but it is even more necessary, as we view the field, that the men who are to be regarded as chief standard bearers should pass under the same close scrutiny as should the principles which they may stand for. These men should not only be "sayers" but "doers of the word." Without essaying to point out in this article either of the platforms or their respective standard bearers, we believe it to be essential that those of us who will go to the polls on the 5th of next November for the purpose of depositing the ballot which will express our final opinion as to which platform and which party representatives we shall prefer to administer in the county, state, and national affairs of the Government, shall do so with the direct conviction that that choice is not only the safest and best for our interests as a church and also our interests as individual citizens of the various States and Territories in which we live and in the affairs of which we are integral as well as individual participators in the lawmaking powers of the people under a representative form of government.

We should at once be satisfied that the men and the measures thus presented by our vote come within the clear provision of the specific commandments given unto us through the voice of revelation. It is within our province to advise our brethren who are interested in the issues of the day and who are expecting to give expression to their opinions at the fall election, and who possibly between now and the date upon which we go to the polls will be reading what may be written by the clamoring politicians and also what may be publicly stated from the forum by the ardent supporters of the different platforms and the different leading minds of the various political parties, that it is not only expedient but it is also very prudent and very wise that in argument among ourselves and our neighbors in regard to the issues and the men, we do not in the heat of discussion say or do that which may hurt or injure the spiritual fellowship which as brethren we hold in the prayer and testimony meeting and at the sacramental service, as well as in the everyday discharge of our several duties as officers and men in the cause of Him who is better than any earthly potentate, whose principality and kingdom will survive when all these fleeting shows of human government shall have passed into the oblivion which awaits all things human and transitory. We can not afford to charge each other with dishonesty of opinion, nor can we afford to belittle the judgment of the brother or sister who may hold to a different platform and a different political exponent of political affairs than our own.

We should be willing to admit that while we may as individuals earnestly hold and strenuously believe that we are right in our political judgment, our brother or our sister is equally entitled to earnestly hold and strenuously advocate his own convictions of political rights.

It may be argued that one may be right and the other may be wrong; and it may also be that neither is absolutely right and both may be wrong. One may be partially right and so may the other, and it would be unwise for us to break the bond of fellowship in Christ to gratify personal ambition by insisting that our individual political views alone are right and our brother's wrong. It is in this sense that we repeat the closing sentence of the first quotation appearing at the head of this article: "Behold, here is wisdom."

Henry George's striking statement, "I am for principles, not men," in its glittering potentiality, must not blind us to the fact that men also should be chosen for their honesty and wisdom as well as the principles which they may choose to set forth, and demand attention therefor. The platforms of the several parties are confessedly prepared and collated for the purpose of attracting the attention of the voters of the Nation as being expressive of what may best strike the attention of the voters and bind them to the support of the men who have been nominated and who shall be voted for at the election, as being not only qualified but worthy to assist in carrying into effect the respective promises made in those platforms. Hence to us the measures and the men should alike be without reproach.

IS IT RIGHT TO WORK?

Is it right to work? That is a peculiar question. But Jesus said:

Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. . . . Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? . . . Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, oh ye of little faith?—Matthew 6: 25-30.

How shall we square these statements with common sense, with the well-known needs of humanity, with the edenic commandment, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," and with the later statement, "The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer."

Did Jesus mean that all industry should stop?

Did he put a discount on industry and thrift, and a premium on idleness and sloth?

To understand the words of Jesus we must ask ourselves a question that should always be asked when seeking to understand biblical statements: "To whom were these words addressed?" Jesus was not talking to the world at large—to the multitude. He was talking to his disciples—to the ministry, in particular. For it is said, "When he was set, his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth, and taught them."

His ministers were to leave their nets and farms, their tax collecting, and various industries, and forsaking houses and land, wives and children, go out into all the world and preach the gospel. They were literally to take no thought of the morrow. They were to trust God, do their work, forsake business cares, and the God who clothes the lilies and feeds the birds of the air was to care for them. This God has arranged to do in his church in an orderly manner, through the law of tithes, offerings, consecrations, and gifts.

But Jesus was not addressing the world in general. He did not mean that the farmer should sit down in the spring and refuse to sow seed, or neglect to garner the harvest when it was ripe, and then expect God to feed him and his family.

He did not mean that the merchant should close up his shop, the manufacturer his factory, the professional man his practice.

He did not intend that weeds should grow up on all farms and in all orchards, and cloth rot upon all looms, and goods decay in all houses of merchandise, and minerals lie undiscovered in all mines.

That which would be ridiculous and disastrous if given a general application becomes sublime when applied to the ministry.

God wants working men to work. And though this injunction was to the ministry alone, and the commandment to seek first to build up the kingdom was in one sense to them alone, in another sense it is extended to others; and in other scriptures Jesus explains the duty and calling of those not sent out to preach. Men of business who are not of the ministry are not excluded from service; nor are they forbidden to work. They are not to vegetate like the lilies. They are, to the contrary, to get very busy in their particular vocation or calling and consecrate their muscle, brain, and business acumen to the building up of the kingdom. Read the following:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

But before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.—Jacob 2: 23, 24.

This gives us a new conception of the real dignity of labor. Orators who have never guided a plow, nor chopped a tree, sawed a stick of wood, nor pitched a ton of hay, talk nobly about the dignity of labor. But here is a conception of the dignity and worth of labor, a new incentive and motive that the world knows nothing of. It makes all laboring and business men everywhere, who will serve God, co-laborers with him in a consecrated service for the redemption of man.

So that to understand the Sermon on the Mount we must give it the proper application and interpret it in connection with other scriptures.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

BISHOP G. H. HILLIARD DEAD.

By telegram from President Joseph Smith we learn that Bishop George H. Hilliard passed away this morning, Tuesday, October 8, 1912, and we get this sad message to the Saints by stopping our presses after having run some five or six hundred of our last form. Our next issue will give particulars.

If there be no nobility of descent, all the more indispensable is it that there should be nobility of ascent—a character in them that bear rule so fine and high and pure that as men come within the circle of its influence they involuntarily pay homage to that which is the one preeminent distinction, the royalty of virtue.—Bishop Henry C. Potter.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."—PART 35.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

TROUBLE IN MISSOURI.

The friction that arose between the Saints and the citizens of Jackson County, Missouri, resulted in the citizens of the county setting forth the cause, or causes, themselves, and they appear as follows:

We, the undersigned citizens of Jackson County, believing that an important crisis is at hand, as regards our civil society, in consequence of a pretended religious sect of people that have settled and are still settling in our county, styling themselves Mormons, and intending to rid ourselves, peaceably if we can and forcibly if we must, and believing as we do, that the arm of civil law does not afford us a guarantee, or at least not a sufficient one against the evils which are now inflicted upon us, and seem to be increasing by the said religious sect, deem it expedient and of the highest importance to form ourselves into a company for the better and easier accomplishment of our purpose, which we deem almost superfluous to say is justified as well by the law of nature as by the law of self-preservation.

It is more than two years since the first of these fanatics or knaves, (for one or the other they undoubtedly are), made their first appearance among us; and pretending as they did, and now do, to hold personal communion and converse face to face with the most high God, to receive communications and revelations direct from heaven; to heal the sick by the laying on of hands; and in short, to perform all the wonder-working miracles wrought by the inspired apostles and prophets. We believed them deluded fanatics, or weak and designing knaves, and that they and their pretensions would soon pass away; but in this we were deceived.

The arts of a few designing leaders among them have thus far succeeded in holding them together as a society, and since the arrival of the first of them they have daily increased; and if they had been respectable citizens in society, and thus deluded, they would have been entitled to our pity rather than to our contempt and hatred. But from their appearance; from their manners; and from their conduct, since their coming among us, we have every reason to believe that with but a very few exceptions, they were of the very dregs of that society from which they came; lazy, idle and vicious.

This we conceive is not idle assertion, but a fact susceptible of proof. For with these few exceptions above named, they brought into our county little or no property with them, and left less behind them, and we infer that those only yoked themselves to the Mormon car who had nothing earthly or heavenly to lose by the change; and we fear that if some of the leaders among them had paid the forfeit due to crime, instead of being chosen ambassadors of the Most High, they would have been inmates of solitary cells. But their conduct here stamps their characters in their true color. More than a year it has been ascertained that they have been tampering with our slaves, and endeavoring to sow dissension and raise sedition among them. Of this their Mormon leaders were informed, and they said they would deal with any of their members who should again in like case offend. But how spurious are their appearances. In a late number of the Star printed in Independence by the leaders of the sect, there is an article inviting free negroes and mulattoes from other States to become Mormons and move and settle among us. This exhibits them in still more odious colors. It manifests a desire on the part of their society to inflict on our society an injury that they know would be to us entirely unsupportable, and one of the surest means of driving us from the country; for it would require none of the supernatural gifts that they pretend to, to see that the introduction of such a caste among us would corrupt our blacks and instigate them to bloodshed.

They openly blaspheme the most high God and cast contempt on his holy religion by pretending to receive revelations direct from heaven; by pretending to speak in unknown tongues by direct inspiration, and by divine pretensions derogatory of God and religion, and to the utter subversion of human reason.

They declare openly that God has given them this county of land; and that sooner or later they must and will have possession of our lands for an inheritance; and in fine, they have conducted themselves on many other occasions in such a manner that we believe it a duty we owe ourselves, to our wives and children, to the cause of public morals, to remove them from among us as we are not prepared to give up our possessions to them, or to receive into the bosom of our families as fit companions for our wives and daughters the degraded and corrupted free negroes and mulattoes that are now invited to settle among us.

Under such a state of things even our beautiful country would cease to be a desirable residence, and our situation intolerable.

We therefore agree that after timely warning, and upon receiving an adequate compensation for what little property they can not take with them, they refuse to leave us in peace as they found us, we agree to use such means as will be sufficient to remove them; and to that end we pledge to each other our bodily powers, our lives, fortunes, and sacred honor.

We will meet at the courthouse in the town of Independence on Saturday next, 20th inst., to consult of ulterior movements.

July 15, 1833.

—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 312-314.

Here is the sum total of offense as set out by the citizens of Jackson County themselves. The reasons herein assigned sustain our contention of political and religious issues being the cause of "ill feeling and persecution." The statement of these citizens in the above document, that "in a late number of the Star, printed in Independence, appears an article inviting free negroes and mulattoes from other States to become Mormons and move and settle among us," shows they feared the influence of the church upon their slaves. But in the article referred to there is absolutely nothing of an invitation existing. In that article which is now before me, the Saints counseled "prudence," and "to prevent any misunderstanding among the churches abroad respecting free people of color, who may think of coming to the western boundaries of Missouri as members of the church, we quote the following clauses from the laws of Missouri." The foregoing is the opening paragraph of said article, followed by the clauses. After giving sections 4 and 5 of the laws referred to, they say:

Slaves are real estate in this and other States, and wisdom would dictate great care among the branches of the Church of Christ on this subject. So long as we have no special rule in the church as to people of color, let prudence guide; and while they as well as we are in the hands of a merciful God, we say: Shun every appearance of evil.

This, then, is the purport of the article that seemed to fire up the citizens, and in the frenzy which reigned they misunderstood its purport, and interpreted it in the light of an invitation.

We desire Elder Traum to note that the foregoing instrument, drawn up by the citizens of Jackson County, wherein their intentions to drive the Saints from their homes which they had purchased are set forth and the reasons therefor, do not charge the Saints with unconstitutional conduct, and that these "citizens" say: "believing as we do that the arm of civil law does not afford us a guarantee against the evils inflicted," etc. In this they claim they had no legal or constitutional right to expel the Saints, or for their intentions. The "law of nature" that moved them to organize, and go forth to "rid our society" of "the said sect," was the same "law of nature" that stirred up Symonds Ryder and the desperate company headed by him, to persecution, and mobocracy in northern Ohio; the same that impelled the Romans to institute a siege of extermination against that which the ancient historian, in the days of old Nero, called "the great evil" introduced by Christ at Jerusalem. This "evil" introduced by the Son of God incorporated the doctrine of communing with God, and "speaking in other tongues," and "they shall lay hands upon the sick and they shall recover."

In the second statement of the citizens of Jackson County, in a meeting referred to in the first statement, at the courthouse in the town of Independence, Missouri, they state, and be it remembered to their honor:

We do not contend that we have the least right under the Constitution, and laws of the country, to expel by force. But we would indeed be blind if we did not foresee that the first blow that is struck at this moment of deep excitement, must, and will speedily involve every individual in a war bearing ruin, woe, and desolation in its course.

Remember, they were able to "foresee" this war of woe, and "desolation," yet they were intending, and willing to strike this "blow," for which they could furnish no guarantee under the law.

Elder Traum miserably garbles section 100 of Doctrine and Covenants, as also quotations from different sources, to sustain the idea of a "military expedition" under the direction of "Baurak Ale" (Joseph Smith, jr.) to "redeem Zion with power."

To overthrow his objection, and dig out the foundation of his structure, we give quotations from Church History, volume 1, page 442. While Joseph Smith and others were east raising men and means for the western expedition, there was a meeting assembled at Mr. Alvah Beman's, in Livingston County, New York. He explained the object of the expedition as follows:

I stated that the object of the conference was to obtain young men and middle-aged to go and assist in the redemption of Zion, according to the commandment; and for the church to gather up their riches, and send them to purchase lands according to the commandment of the Lord; also to devise means, or obtain money for the relief of the brethren in Kirtland, say two thousand dollars, which sum would deliver the church in Kirtland from debt; and also determine the course which the several companies shall pursue, or, the manner they shall journey when they leave this place.

The purpose was, to gather money and purchase the lands; "according to the commandment of the Lord." At the same time negotiations were pending, down in Missouri, between the "citizens" and the church, for one party or the other to purchase the interests of the other. A proposition was made by a committee of the "citizens," to buy out the Mormons, and this committee said, after making this proposition that, they further propose that the people of Jackson County will sell all their lands, and improvements on public lands in Jackson County to the Mormons,—the valuation to be obtained in the same manner,—the same per cent, in addition to be paid and the time the money is to be paid is the same as above set forth in our propositions to buy, the Mormons to give good security for the payment of the money, and the undersigned will give security that the land will be conveyed to the Mormons.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 495.

The foregoing is but a part of the document of negotiations, covering the ground. It is the part proposing to sell lands to the Saints. It is signed, Samuel C. Owens, Richard Fristoe, and Thomas Hatton, sen. This proposition was presented Monday, June 16, 1834, at the courthouse at Liberty, Missouri. Seven days after this, or on June 23, the committee appointed by the Saints, made the following reply:

We the undersigned committee, having full power and authority to settle and adjust all matters and differences existing between our people or society and the inhabitants of Jackson County, upon honorable and constitutional principles, therefore, if the said inhabitants of Jackson County will not let us return to our lands in peace, we are willing to propose, firstly; that twelve disinterested men, six to be chosen by our people, and six by the inhabitants of Jackson County; and these twelve men shall say what the lands of those men are worth in that county who can not consent to live with us, and they shall receive their money for the same in one year from the time the treaty is made, and none of our people shall enter the county to reside till the money is paid. The said twelve men shall have power also to say what the damages shall be for the injuries we have sustained in the destruction of property and in being driven from our possessions, which amount of damages shall be deducted from the amount for their lands. Our object is peace, and an early answer will be expected.

This proposition was signed by W. W. Phelps, Edward Partridge, Isaac Morley, John Corril, John Whitmer, A. S. Gilbert. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 499.)

We desire to acquaint Elder Traum with these honorable dealings in the matter of negotiation which was at this time in progress. No conquest or imperialistic design in the matter. Simply purchase. Does our critic think that the church in Missouri was expecting an army? Then why make overtures to buy lands, as they did? Of course Joseph went with the company to carry relief, and assist them in the work. He says, Church History, volume 1, page 454,

Having gathered, and prepared clothing, and other necessities to carry to our brethren and sisters who had been robbed, and plundered of nearly all their effects; and having provided for ourselves horses, and wagons, and firearms, and all sorts of munitions of war of the most portable kind for self-defense, as our enemies were thick on every hand, I started with the remainder of the company from Kirtland for Missouri, and on the sixth we arrived, and joined our brethren who had gone before, at New Portage, about fifty miles distance.

We append a statement of P. P. Pratt's. As Traum quotes it, it looks thus:

It was now the first of May, 1834, and our mission had resulted in assembling about two hundred men (one hundred more than the Lord's required minimum) at Kirtland, Ohio, with teams, baggage, provisions, arms, etc., for a march of more than a thousand miles, to carry some supplies to the afflicted and persecuted Saints in Missouri, and to reinforce and strengthen them. . . . This little army was led by President Joseph Smith ("Moses," "nobleman," "Baurak Ale") in person. It commenced its march about the first of May.

But as it stands in Church History, it is as follows:

It was now the first of May, 1834, and our mission had resulted in the assembling of about two hundred men at Kirtland, with teams, baggage, provisions, arms, etc., for a march of one thousand miles, for the purpose of carrying some supplies to the afflicted and persecuted Saints in Missouri, and to reinforce and strengthen them; and, if possible, to influence the Governor of the State to call out sufficient additional force to cooperate in restoring them to their rights. This little army was led by President Joseph Smith in person. It commenced its march about the first of May. Passing through Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, it entered Missouri some time in June.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 456.

The History of the Church, on page 443, says Lyman Wight preached April 13, in Kirtland, on the persecutions in Missouri, and "about seventy volunteered" to go to their relief, and "many donated of their substance." Many like testimonies can be added, but this is sufficient to forever "offset" Traum's basic sandhill, that the revelations, and collateral work of the church was for aggressive purpose, or for forcibly redeeming Zion. The Saints were in accord with the word of God to them, as follows:

Wherefore, I, the Lord, willeth, that you should purchase the lands, that you may have advantage of the world, that you may have claim on the world, that they may not be stirred up unto anger; for Satan putteth it into their hearts to anger against you, and to the shedding of blood; wherefore the land of Zion shall not be obtained but by purchase, or by blood, otherwise there is none inheritance for you. And if by purchase, behold, you are blessed; and if by blood, as you are forbidden to shed blood, lo, your enemies are upon you; and ye shall be scourged from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue, and but few shall stand to receive an inheritance.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 8.

How strange it is that this critic overlooked the above instruction, teaching the very reverse of that which he sets out to prove, and shows the church as obedient in that it prepares to "purchase" the lands. There is no way which we can see that Traum can construe the teaching as a call to arms.

The company, entering Missouri, sent a delegation to Governor Daniel Dunklin, and acquainted him of their purpose there in the State. The following on the point will not be out of place:

Arriving in the Allred settlement, near Salt River, Missouri, where there was a large branch of the church, the camp rested a little, and dispatched Elder Orson Hyde and myself to Jefferson City, to request of his excellency, Governor Daniel Dunklin, a sufficient military force, with orders to reinstate the exiles, and protect them in the possession of their homes in Jackson County.—Autobiography of P. P. Pratt, Church History, vol. 1, p. 471.

The "arms" borne by the company from the East were for "self-defense," as stated. In SAINTS' HERALD for 1887, page 601, in speaking of the advice given by Governor Dunklin to the Saints previously, or June 6, 1834, says:

the Governor notifying them officially, June 6th, 1834, in these words: "Our State Constitution declares that the people's 'right to bear arms, in defense of themselves, and of the State, can not be questioned.' Then it is their constitutional right to arm themselves. Indeed, our military law, makes it the duty of every man not exempted by law, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five to arm himself with a musket, rifle, or some firelock, with a certain quantity of ammunition." Such were the laws of Missouri in those times; and the discipline of the church required the Saints to "obey the laws of the land" and "be subject to the powers that be,"—meaning civil rulers. And in view of this the Saints "armed themselves for military duty and self-defense" (HERALD, 1887, page 601), and those emigrating from the east came "with arms to answer the military law."

It was in view of the terror-inspiring times, caused by proslavery zealots, as well as religious bigots, who gathered their dupes from the scum of society cast upon the shores of the frontier.

Traum manifests a strange disregard for fairness, when referring to section 100 of Doctrine and Covenants. If the publishers of this review care to notice it in comparison with the original reading, all well, but I may surely be excused from calling attention further to such garbling.

FALSE RENDERING.

The Fishing River revelation is also tortured beyond limit, and is falsified both in wording, sense, and punctuation. After disjoining the instruction there given, Traum adds, on page 248, the following:

In a single night do we mark the transformation of Baurak

Ale from a warrior bold to a messenger of peace. Equipped for war twice in excess of the amount the Lord wanted, and yet in the first fair show that he had for a fight he begs off, hoping to gain by deception and stealth what he had purposed to take by force. It was not the Lord's will that he should fight, anyway, and, more than that, he antedated "Marks the Lawyer" by acknowledging that he could not be spared, for the simple reason that the Lord wanted to endow him. And more, in a pusillanimous manner he lays the blame on the church, not the first elders; he is politic enough to cultivate their good graces, while they were so glad to get out of the fight that they will accept any excuse. If the Lord had anything to do with the whole damnable institution, it is a pity that he did not strike dead this arch-blasphemer of the nineteenth century. Baurak Ale is a fraud!

Exactly as you have arranged it, Mr. Traum, but remember, in section 98:2, of Doctrine and Covenants (this you omitted, as usual,) the Saints were informed that because of transgression, "they must needs be chastened, and tried, even as Abraham," and Doctrine and Covenants 102:2, (and this you expunged, as usual,) the Lord instructs that "in consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient that they should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion," and in the fifth paragraph he says, "they were brought thus far for a trial of their faith"; and when you assert, Elder Traum, that the conditions were all complied with, upon which the prophecies were based, and yet "fizzled out," you state that which is false to the records. You have mistaken the character of the Lord's battles, and the manner of fighting them. "In a single night do we mark the transformation of Baurak Ale from a warrior bold to a messenger of peace," says Traum. In this connection I wish to give him a note of instruction: Joseph Smith's teachings, from the beginning, can not be construed as favoring "carnal weapons" in the religious warfare. The great doctrine of bearing wrong instead of inflicting wrong, is the entire spirit of his teachings all the way through. That the gospel was not the shield of his faith, is safely challenged at every juncture, and that God will permit the trial of faith in his people, is a doctrine of both the Old and New Testaments, "that I may prove them whether they walk in my law or no."—Exodus 16:4.

And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no.—Exodus 8:2.

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you as though some strange thing happened unto you.—1 Peter 4:12.

The examples of Jesus Christ shine out in increasing brilliancy, and in his last great trial, as the angry storm cloud enveloped him, when the "Shepherd was about to be smitten, and the sheep scattered," he instructs his weak and weary disciples as follows:

And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. Then he said unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one. For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough.—Luke 22:35-38.

What! Lord, are you so soon to change "from a messenger of peace, to a warrior bold"? Have you not taught and exemplified all of your life to "overcome evil with good"? Have you not advised to "pray for those who spitefully use you," and if "smitten on one cheek, turn the other also"? Do you wish now to dash down the eternal principles of heaven to the ground, and adopt the "sword"? Will you use them? Ah, no; you my disciples are to learn the lesson of your lives. Follow this instance for a moment:

And behold, one of them which were with Jesus, stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest, and smote off his ear. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword, shall perish with the sword. Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?—Matthew 26:51-53.

He had advised to "sell garments," to purchase "swords," and when the time came that seemed auspicious for using them he forbids it, and directs the attention to Him who can fight the "battles" with "legions of angels." Oh, in less than a "single night" shall we mark the transformation of Jesus "from a messenger of peace, to a warrior bold," and back again?

The lesson was to be learned. Shall we say, in the language of Traum, Jesus "was equipped for war, and in the first fair show that he had for fight, he begs off, hoping to gain by deception, and stealth, what he had purposed to take by force"? Such a pusillanimous conception of the divine economy, such a "crude concept" of the things of God entertained by Traum, is indeed pitiable! He omits from Doctrine and Covenants 100, the following:

Verily I say unto you, my friends, Behold I will give unto you a revelation and commandment, that you may know how to act in the discharge of your duties concerning the salvation and redemption of your brethren, who have been scattered on the land of Zion; being driven and smitten by the hands of mine enemies, on whom I will pour out my wrath without measure in mine own time; for I have suffered them thus far, that they might fill up the measure of their iniquities, that their cup might be full; and that those who call themselves after my name might be chastened for a little season with a sore and grievous chastisement, because they did not hearken altogether unto the precepts and commandments which I gave unto them.

This would have too plainly shown the falsehood, that the "conditions were complied with."

He also drops the following from section 100:

But inasmuch as they keep not my commandments, and hearken not to observe all my words, the kingdoms of the world shall prevail against them, for they were set to be a light unto the world, and to be the saviors of men; and inasmuch as they are not the saviors of men, they are as salt that has lost its savor, and is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men.

It reveals the consequences of failing to observe the commandments of God, and the following of these consequences would have hastened his fall completely.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH PARENTS?

By learned college professors, magazine writers, editors of the daily press, preachers in the pulpit, Sunday school officers and teachers, woman's societies of various kinds, social reformers, school-teachers in the public schools, the judge on the bench, and fathers and mothers, the question is being asked, "What shall we do with our boys and girls?"

The Jews made a mistake when they thought the Romans were to blame for all their sorrows and national degradation; Christ laid it at their own door. He said, "In me ye shall find peace; but in the world tribulation." The mob that drove the Saints out of Jackson County in 1833 had no reasons to justify them for the spirit of hatred and revenge that was manifested; but the Lord did not hold the Saints blameless. He said, "I, the Lord, have suffered affliction to come upon them, wherewith they have been afflicted in consequence of their transgressions." The class of people referred to at the beginning of this article, which includes our own people found in their ranks, are making a mistake when they lay the blame at the feet of the young for the excesses, follies, vices, and other sins with which they are charged. What shall we do with parents? is the paramount question that needs answering. When that one is solved the other will be comparatively easy. The criticism that the writer makes of parents is not confined to any one class of people, the learned or the ignorant, the well to do or the poor; the church member falls with the nonbeliever,—all are tainted with the sin. The seed they are scattering is falling on fallow ground, and if it fails to produce a crop of sorrow and remorse it will be because a loving Father has providently interposed his power for some wise purpose.

Paul said one of the great sins of the latter days would be disobedience to parents. The child hears the command, "Children, obey your parents," and sees before them every day living epistles in transgressors of the divine law. They need no magnifying glass to discover these sins; they stand out as bright and clear as the north star that guides the mariner over the trackless ocean; they can not be mistaken; they see the light, though it is darkness, and follow it and do literally and faithfully obey the command, "Children, obey your parents." The example before them burns it into their souls. The example is the command;—the words spoken are meaningless; they are obsolete; they are without force. So the sins of covetousness, selfishness, dishonesty, and all the sins so common in the world are stamped on their hearts and their moral and spiritual life resembles a cancer, instead of a lily pure and white. The seed so generously sown is bearing fruit. We see in the home disobedient children. In the church the spirit of disobedience is so prominent that with a large percentage of the membership there is nothing to distinguish them from the frivolous and unstable of the world; no sacrifice being made that duties might be performed; no deeds of love and kindness that should distinguish the disciple of Christ from all others.

The next step in the evolution of this product of disobedience is to send the boy to some large university where he becomes a "hoodlum," and respect for law, both human and divine, for the property of others, and common decency, is lost sight of. If it would stop here, we might overlook the follies of youth and cover all with the mantle of charity; but it does not. After four years of such a course, graduating with high honors, in "hoodlumism," he enters the business and professional world; the laws of the State are defied, laws that have been enacted for the good of the people are spurned, and with his ill-gotten wealth he seeks to purchase those who have been, like himself, trained in the school of dishonor. He finds boon companions in dishonorable lawyers and corrupt politicians who have been trained in the same school. As a result of such education and training we have constantly before us an army of law-defying moral reprobates whose sense of justice and honor is so far below the American Indian that the only place that he can be properly listed is among the moral lepers of society. Our prisons contain many such, the number that have escaped justice is one hundred fold more than those that have been caught.

RELIGION AND MORALS.

If we had the statistics to show the number of homes in which the moral and religious training of the young is neglected, we would be shocked; and unless our hearts were hardened with our own sins we would feel like weeping because of the follies of many of our people. How many parents talk to their children of their religious duties, and some time during the week seek a quiet hour to study the Sunday school lesson with them? Do not many leave so many little chores for the Sabbath day that they either absent themselves from the house of worship or else they have by such labor put themselves so out of harmony with spiritual things that they take no pleasure in them? Is it not folly in the extreme for parents to expect their children to take an interest in spiritual things when they see before them daily an example that the parents take no interest themselves? It is living the precepts of our holy religion that impresses them on the minds of our children. It is wasting precious time to talk it and not live it. We may think that we can hide our hypocrisy from the world, but we can not engage in a more fruitless task than to attempt such a thing with our children. In some things our children may be dull of comprehension, but in detecting hypocrisy they have no superiors; they can find it as easily as the bee can discover sweetness in the beautiful flower. The true character will show itself as readily as the blush on the fair maiden's cheek. Parents, was it your daughter, with the blush of young maidenhood on her cheeks, only a schoolgirl yet, that was seen walking the streets with a young man last night and visiting the cheap shows? Did you hear them at a late hour step on the front porch? They linger; why? We will not say why. You were very foolish at one time in your life and that knowledge ought to help you protect your innocent child.

Do you sometimes wonder why your daughter lags in her studies and complains about her teacher being cranky, and wants to quit school, and when Sunday morning comes you can not get her out of bed because she complains of being tired? What makes her so tired? The latent forces of life are being aroused; they are crowding her like a hot house plant; her strength should be conserved, not wasted, and you are to blame. You should protect your child; you are stewards over her precious life, and some day you will be held responsible for it. Your good-night kiss and the last words of endearment should linger in her mind to lull her to sleep; none others can claim such a holy privilege. We doubt if the angels would be so impolite. Where does your boy spend his evenings? Is it on the street, and in cheap shows? Can you not make home so attractive and your companionship so desirable that he prefers both to the street and undesirable companions? You ask me if I would deny the young pleasure. No; a thousand times no; but pleasures that destroy morality, spirituality, and impair life's physical forces, and unfit your children for life's great duties, have been misnamed; such should be called sinful pleasures. True pleasure conserves life's great forces and helps develop the latent forces of youth. Is your boy a cigarette fiend, a lover of tobacco in any form? Does he indulge in the reading of cheap and trashy books and papers? Has his life been blighted by the vices that destroy the body, paralyze the brain, and pollute the soul? Has liquor stained his lips? If so, are you free from blame?

EDUCATION.

Many parents neglect the opportunities that our public schools afford for the education of their children, and for trifling causes they are permitted to absent themselves. Boys or girls before the age of twenty are not fitted by experience or knowledge to decide for themselves such an important question, that will affect their entire life. To neglect such an important duty is to sin against the child, the state, and the divine law. When the child feels discouraged and wants to quit, is the time for parents to show their love and wisdom to help them over their difficulties that seem mountain high to their immature minds; and with firmness mingled with the milk of human kindness, hold them steadily in the path of duty. If this is done, parents will see the fruits of their faithfulness in their children's lives; they will be marked by a greater measure of success and usefulness, and the honorable position that they will occupy in society will be ample reward for all the patience and forbearance that they have shown.

COLLEGES.

Parents who send their boys and girls to colleges where infidelity has the ascendancy, and "hoodlumism" is held as an honor among the students and winked at by the faculty, where snobbery and aristocracy separate the students into distinct groups, must not expect their children will escape contamination, and their faith in the lowly Nazarene being shattered. In one of the large universities of the West, when the students issued their "Annual" for the school year, closing June, 1912, it was so suggestive of the vulgar and obscene that the Government would not let it pass through the post office.

WORK.

To work and be engaged in honest labor is to occupy the most honorable position that any person can attain to in this world, and none should despise it. Some parents, and the number is far too many, are careless, thoughtless, and very indifferent to the welfare of their children in regard to the places where they work, whether it is during their school vacation or in selecting an occupation for their future life. Some places of labor where the young have access are so contaminated with immoral atmosphere that if they escape contamination it will partake of the miraculous. In other places the absence of refinement and the higher ideals of life make an environment that will retard the growth of the finer qualities of boys and girls. There are too many of our people like gypsies, constantly on the move, spending their time and money roving around, often isolating themselves from church and Sunday school privileges, and depriving their children of an education; developing in them the same careless habits.

HELPING SOCIETIES.

I would not knowingly do or say a thing that would injure the various helping societies in the church, who are laboring in behalf of the young, or prejudice those not belonging to them against their work. Our heavenly Father recognizes their work and we should do likewise. If we look into some of the causes that brought them into existence it will help us see more clearly where the trouble lies in regard to our children. Changes in agricultural and industrial conditions have brought about great changes in the social relations of the people. In the early part of the nineteenth century the home was the social center; now it is largely in the factory, mill, and societies of various kinds. The young are not at home much, only to eat and sleep. Because of these changed conditions these various helps became necessary to be able to work together for the good of all. I feel safe in saying that the neglect of the home by parents is the greatest force that has brought about conditions that make the demand for such help imperative. Many boys and girls are brought up in idleness; laziness is more prominent than industry, they are permitted to develop habits of slothfulness; to order, system, and obedience they are strangers. The girls are not taught housekeeping and homemaking. The mother does chores while the boy is idling his time away and the father is whittling sticks on the street corner, trying to save his country from political ruin. Some parents call such conduct being good to their children. Such a course is almost criminal in its nature, because it sends boys and girls out into the world unfit for life's great duties. They are a dead weight to the church and a pest to society. Some mothers would render the greater service to their children, the church, and the State if they would remain at home with their children during the period of their life when only the mother can give the proper care. Their help might be very desirable in some society that is discussing the question of home, but her God-appointed mission is in the home, and she will save more children there in the faithful discharge of duty than in any plan that has been devised by human wisdom. Our heavenly Father has a plan to help save our children, the duty of the priest is to "visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties." Is it not a family duty to see that our children are in school, and taught to work? to be clean in person and habits? to shun evil companions and to avoid such public places as are in their nature tending toward the frivolous and immoral? If the parents neglect these duties the priest of the branch has a lawful right to advise and urge the faithful performance of these duties. What would be the result if we would try our heavenly Father's plan, give it special prominence, and let all "helps" occupy a secondary place? There would be less cause for sadness and disappointment with the lives of our children.

I feel quite sure that some parents who read this article will say, "We did all that our knowledge, wisdom, and experience suggested to us to do, and yet our children went wrong and have filled our hearts with sorrow." If you have done so and kept within the law of the Lord, your duty is done, and no unfavorable criticism can justly be made, and under such circumstances you ought to feel no condemnation. Lehi and Sariah tried with diligence and patience to keep their children in the narrow way, and the Lord gave them special help, yet we learn that Laman and Lemuel were such wicked and rebellious sons that many thousands of their descendants are still in darkness because of their sins.

THE REMEDY.

It is right and proper for the reader to expect that after the writer has pointed out the defects he should offer some remedy for the evil. When Israel had wandered from the ways of the Lord and delighted in sin, Jeremiah said, "Ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."—Jeremiah 6: 16.

We need the homely virtues of our parents' and grandparents woven into the activities of our modern life.

The parents and local officers, and the ministry, should get together and seriously consider this very important problem. They should come to a realization and understanding of their respective duties, rights, privileges, and then work together to obtain the end desired. Figuratively speaking, let us stop throwing brick bats at the children, and make the parents, officers, and the ministry the targets for a while, and then, observe results. We may learn that it is the most profitable way to use our time. We ought to make a forward movement in praying, writing, and preaching, that all may come to a realization of their important duties. An earnest, cooperative, and determined effort should be made, and especially in the stakes, to establish places, both agricultural and industrial, where our young people can be free from immoral associations that they are compelled to be in in the world. While we are trying to save the children of parents not of our faith, let us not forget our own. EDWARD RANNIE.

Whatever the sin which holds a man in bondage, the result is the same. But no sin more completely degrades its slaves than drunkenness.—A. E. Dunning.

Blessing of Wakeful Dreams.

"What would we do, in this world of ours,
Were it not for the dreams ahead?
The dreams ahead are what hold us up
Through the strain of a ceaseless fight;
To some 'tis a dream of high estate,
To others a dream of wealth,
To some 'tis a dream of a truce with fate
In a ceaseless search for health.
One sees but a golden shore,
Where the burdened toiler dreams of rest,
Where toil shall be no more.
So, ever it is, in some sweet guise,
Hope hangeth her lantern high;
Oh, the dreams ahead are the golden stars
That help us to live or die."

Age is dreamful. With every added year, after the hair is gray and the infirmities of naturally waning strength creep on, the inclination increases to dream hopefully and longingly of good yet to come. We do not think the old are as likely to dream of wealth for themselves as they are to dream of its bestowal upon their loved ones of younger years. In fact, many of their most ambitious dreams are for those toward whom they yearn with all the holy yearning of parents and grandparents. One of the most pathetic dreams of the aged is that "truce with fate in a ceaseless search for health." How continually the healthy person, calling on an old friend, hears the remark: "Oh, what would I give to look and feel as well as you do!" Said an aged friend to us only yesterday: "Could I but walk across from this chair I am in to that one opposite, how thankful I should be!" But no, the helpless limbs in the relentless grip of rheumatism would not admit of the patient even standing upright for an instant. Yet Hope was lifting her golden lantern; not very high, it is true, yet she was lifting it with some cheer in its rays, because of the remedy said to have done wonders for others, and if for others—the dream had to arise—why not, perhaps, for still another sufferer?

Yet old people are not the only dreamers in this fitful, uncertain world. The verse is not far astray in asserting that the dreams flitting before our mental vision "are what hold us up through the strain of a ceaseless fight." It is a ceaseless fight, this life of ours, with its failures, its successes, its lights and its shadows, its few victories, its many defeats. A blessed thing it is that hope springs, as it were, immortal in nearly every breast as soon as the conscious struggle with life begins. Nor does it end in most cases except with life itself. What if "Hope told a flattering tale" that over and again has proved illusive, ever and for ever she spurs and helps us on, and her inspiring dreams are in very truth "the stars that help us live or die."

This does not shut out or illuminate the power of faith. They strengthen each other, are two of the chief graces of a well perfected character. Faith stimulates hope. Hope peers into regions, a belief in which has had its birth through faith. "What a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" He sees it only in dreams at present; but let us thank God that in dreams we see so much that points to a realization of the heart's fondest desires.

There are many wakeful hours of night when sleep refuses to relieve those who by reason of strength have approached, or perhaps, reached fourscore years. Then it is that "in some sweet guise" it is most helpful and welcome to have Hope hang her lantern high. It was said a moment ago that one of the most pathetic dreams of the old was the bright supposition that vanished health had returned, that lost strength had been restored. Perhaps an equally pathetic phase of advanced years, is the yearning the ardor and the almost weird quest of mind and soul with which the dreams are charged concerning the unseen and the eternal.

Hope casts no uncertain light as to the ultimate goal of a trusting soul, but what about the end of the journey; what about the entrance to those unseen shores; what about that mysterious "future state" that never seemed to present itself as a reality in younger years?

Only one warrantable answer can be given to these unnecessary queries. We do not know. The end of the journey comes as sleep comes. We have seen several persons "drop asleep"—in that last sleep—and it was as natural as the drooping asleep of a tired child at night. Beyond that it is only known that we can not drift beyond the love and care of the eternal God, our refuge. We like to dream over that question asked centuries ago by Milton:

"What if earth be but the shadow of heaven,
And things therein each to the other like,
More than on earth is thought?"

Is it not a warrantable dream, picturing the employments, explorations "going on from glory to glory," midst the many mansions of paradise? Would it not be a charm, a delight, to work with never a worry or pain; to roam through sweet fields dressed in living green with those "loved long since and lost awhile?" Oh, the glory of the reunions of heaven! One could dream and dream of hope's fruition in this direction until it caused pain to cut the sweet dream short and come back to a realization of earth's trammels and realities.

Have patience; it is no mere illusive dream, this picture of eternity's blest lure. We ask again:

"What would we do, in this world of ours,
Were it not for the dreams ahead?"

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit."

Why not, "in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumbering upon the bed?"

Or, in wakeful dreams and visions, when Hope peers with the eye of faith into the unseen and eternal?—Selected.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, September 23, 1912.

Dear Saints: It has been seven years since I obeyed this angel message, and I haven't regretted the step. I had to leave father and mother, for they are Christians and care but little for our faith. Since I was baptized I have tried to do all my hands find to do, and as I pass along down the stream of life I find more and more to do, for the Lord wants no idlers in his ranks, and I want to do all I can. Since I have entered the work I have been blessed with the Spirit at many times and made to speak under the influence of the Spirit. It is my desire to do all I can for the advancement of the cause in which we are engaged. I want your prayers that I may be able to do my duty in this grand and glorious work. I will strive to remember you in my prayers.

Your brother in Christ,
W. H. DRAKE.

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS, September 16, 1912.

Dear Editor: I enjoy reading the letters very much. I am a subscriber to both the HERALD and Ensign, and think every Latter Day Saint ought to at least take one of the church papers. They are a lot of help to me. I am very sorry, but there are people who call themselves Latter Day Saints when there is very little difference, if any, between them and the worldly man. They not only neglect the church papers, but the Bible as well. Many of them have left off family prayer and many other duties are neglected.

Some may say, Brother Spiller, you don't do your duty. No; I do not as I would like to do, but the way I am situated makes it almost impossible, as I live twenty-five miles from the Texas Central Branch, where I hold membership. I am a priest in this branch and know my duty, but I can not visit the members as often as I would like, and when I go I do not have time to visit all of them. I am proud to say there are several faithful Saints at that branch, and I am sure there is some good material among the younger generation. I have just spent a few days with the Saints of that branch. Brother Ammon White is now holding meetings there. I had the pleasure of seeing my brother-in-law, Carl Carson, and five others baptized on Sunday morning.

Dear Saints, let us all try and live in this world that we will not be afraid to meet our God. We do not know just when the Lord will see fit to call us away. The Lord has blessed me and my family very much. We have had lots of sickness, trials, and tribulations, but I count all these things blessings to us for God is going to have a tried and faithful people.

I ask all the Saints to pray for me that I may be faithful until the Lord calls. I am your brother in this great latter day work.

R. L. SPILLER.

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON, September 18, 1912.

Dear Herald: How eagerly I look for your appearing with refreshing food for the inner man, and testimonies of God's covenanted children. I have been in this work one half of my life, and I am now nearing my forty-first birthday, having been baptized by Elder James Caffall March 20, 1892, and I am fully determined to spend all the rest of my life for the advancement of truth as brought to the earth by the angel mentioned in Revelation 14: 6.

We are a small band of Saints here, but we have a hall rented and hold Sunday school and other services, and God is blessing us. I have received many evidences of the truth of this marvelous work. I am home class superintendent of both Religio and Sunday school and have distributed lots of literature and talked the gospel with a great many people and think if the proper effort is made, there are souls to be garnered, and if that effort is not made we may be responsible. I take a market basketful of Ensigns, HERALDS, and Hopes as I start down town, and distribute them from house to house on my way, and I also keep tracts handy for agents, who often appear, and tell them I am agent for something which God gives to us free, and then hand them a tract of What We Believe, or Latter Day Saints; Who Are They? or something suitable to the occasion.

Brothers and sisters, let us try it, and we will be surprised at the amount of advertising we can do.

Yours for the truth,
MRS. C. E. WILLIAMS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 28, 1912.

Editors Herald: The following individuals are still holding membership in the Cleveland Branch, and have been absent from the branch for a long time and all trace of them has been lost: J. W. Pickett, J. C. Welch, N. B. Darr, Louis Darr, Eliza Jane Cowen, Lemuel Burt, Oriel D. Gould, Louis Charles Martin, Anna Catherine Martin. If any who may read this can forward the writer any information in regard to the above, such action will be greatly appreciated.

Very truly yours,
E. A. THOMAS, Secretary.

8017 MELROSE AVENUE.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, August 26, 1912.

Editor Herald: In the interest of God's cause and kingdom, while full of love and rejoicing, I feel impressed to tell you of the goodness and mercy of God which have been shown to us, in this northern part of his moral vineyard. We feel that we are steadily though slowly advancing toward that high mark of perfection that the Master desires of us. Our two-day meeting held June 29 and 30 was a success in every way. The following speakers were present: Elders Arthur Leverton, F. Gregory, J. T. Thompson, and W. D. Ellis. Preaching throughout was very good. All the ministry enjoyed a splendid portion of the Holy Spirit, and even outsiders were made to exclaim: "They speak as men having authority." Since then there have been others added to our number, testifying that though the witness of men is great, the witness of God is greater.

The branch president, Elder Benson Belrose, preaches every Sunday at 7 p. m. to a large and attentive audience. Bible truths are made plain, and we have in the past and hope to witness in the future the fulfillment of God's word: Cast your bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it in future days.

Dear Saints, let us be doers of the celestial law, that we may be numbered with those who have done their work, borne their cross, suffered pain, all for God's cause.

We regret to learn of the death of Reuben White, a friend of the church; he had the plan of redemption preached, but because of persecution and the cares of the world he was prevented from obeying in this life, but if the spirit designed we know it will obey. We trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe the restored gospel.

The following items, copied from one of the town papers, the Advertiser, are offered: "Not for years has there been so large an attendance at a funeral in Owen Sound as that which yesterday, August 8, followed the body of Rube White to its last resting place. The cortege was fully a quarter of a mile long, and in it were men of all ages and from every walk of life, gathered to pay the last tribute to a brilliant athlete and fine fellow. The many beautiful flowers that covered the coffin spoke eloquently of the high regard in which he was held. Rube had many friends, far more than he knew, who knew him as a member of the lacrosse team and admired him for his sportsmanlike and gentlemanly demeanor. A short service was conducted at the home of his parents, Brother and Sister A. S. A. White, and at Greenwood Cemetery, by Elder Benson Belrose, head of the local congregation of Latter Day Saints. The Sunday night following, at the Saints' hall a goodly number assembled to hear the young man's funeral sermon, which was instructive and profitable."

To become valuable in God's service and endure trials and the many temptations which confront us, we solicit an interest in the prayers of God's people.

Your brother in the conflict,

BURNEY GALBRAITH.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1912.

Editor Herald: This morning finds me at the home of Brother and Sister C. C. Foster, preaching of nights to small crowds.

This is not a new opening, but only two Saints here. J. T. Davis and J. T. Riley have preached here. I will continue as long as the interest demands.

We are not long since from Enola, Arkansas, where Elder Barlo Martin, of the Christian faith, and Elder Jesse M. Simmons, of our faith, held a discussion. The propositions were the usual church propositions. There were only three Latter Day Saints there, but quite a number of the Christian people.

In the first proposition, when our church was being tried, the Campbellites created quite a stir among themselves, while Elder Martin fed them on the different tales of Mormonism, such as he could find in different books; even the moderator himself cheered loudly with his feet! but the end was not yet.

Martin said that if Brother Simmons didn't disconnect himself from Utah Mormonism, he was going to use the Utah books; so Brother Simmons read the court findings, which show that the laws of the land gave us the right to the church property and also that we are the ones that remained faithful after the death of Joseph Smith the Prophet until his son, the present president of the church, took his place at the head of the church. He showed that the priesthood remained with those who were faithful during the disorganized condition of the church; hence the necessity of reorganizing the forces already extant. And then, to make the distinction more clear, he showed where Brigham Young and his followers rebaptized and reordained their members and officers.

But notwithstanding the clearness of difference as shown to exist between the Reorganized and Utah Church, Martin continued to use Utah Mormon books, and tried to palm them off on the people as our publications. But as it was his first debate with our people, he did not have as much trash as some of the Christian preachers.

After three days the tide turned and Martin's church was placed upon the dissecting table, and for three long days (to the Christian people) Brother Simmons dealt out deathblows to their human creed, the Baptists and others exercising themselves in extreme jocularly. Once the Baptist preacher said, "Hurrah for the little preacher!" (meaning Brother Simmons). Martin tried hard to set up the church on the day of Pentecost, by biblical authority, but as he could find no scripture to sustain his idea, Brother Simmons came to his aid and informed him he would find the desired information in the Christian System, where Alexander Campbell said that the church was set up on the day of Pentecost, and "as the Christian system is a perfect one, it wisely provides for its own perpetuity."—Christian System, p. 84.

Brother Simmons showed that there was a church before Pentecost; that God set in the church, first, apostles (1 Corinthians 12: 28), and that they were ordained and sent out to preach before Pentecost. (See Mark 3: 13, 14.) And also Christ said (Matthew 18: 17), "Tell it to the church." The church must exist before you can tell it to the church. Also Matthew 23: 13: "But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." So, the church and kingdom being synonymous, we see that it certainly existed before Pentecost.

But granting that he could set up his church on the day of Pentecost, it would amount to nothing, as it is no more like the church of Jesus Christ than an angel is like a monkey. He contended that he had apostles in his church, but that they were dead and gone to heaven; so Brother Simmons told him that he would have the church upside down, as the apostles were the foundation.

The longer the debate lasted the more triumphant shone the truth. At the close of the discussion two young ladies (not members of any church) came forward and pinned ribbons on each side of Brother Simmons's coat, after which one of the Campbellite brothers tied a ribbon around Elder Martin's neck.

We are well satisfied with our part and feel to commend Brother Jesse M. Simmons to the Saints as an able defender of the angel's message.

We were never before more interested in the work than now, and never felt a greater need of more laborers than now. Calls are coming from all parts, to come over and help us, wailing cries, as it were, from the depths of the prison house. The world is rapidly ripening; let us thrust in our sickle and reap before the grain falls to the ground. Whether sunshine or shadow, whether peace or contention, whether few or many accept the truth, let us earnestly contend for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints, until our Father shall say it is enough.

Yours in the battle,

JAMES M. SMITH.

NORTH DEER ISLE, MAINE.

Editors Herald: Some time ago, while alone and pondering over the past and contemplating that day when I shall or must stand before the Judge of all and give an account of my conduct on this sphere of action, and visibly sensing the enormity of my position against present day happenings, this proposition presented itself to me: What can I do that will bring upon me the smile of God's approval? and what can I accomplish in life for the salvation of my fellows from the yoke of error that has hindered and retarded their development?

The thought came to me to write a letter and give my friends the benefit of my observations. The severest affliction of the human race is crude selfishness; that which is of immorality, pride, and ignorance. This kind kindles the fires of prejudice, hatred, and intolerance against its opponents and is not willing to wait for time to vindicate its position. It diligently seeks out all that is bad in the creeds of its opponents. It detests those who are liberal, patient, and optimistic, and are inclined to look on the right side of things, and would subjugate the minds, souls, and bodies of all to its sordid ends. It is this form of sin that has more than any other charred and crisped the souls of mankind. It is from this malady that I have been made to feel that many of the members of the Church of Latter Day Saints suffer.

But let us be lenient with each other and realize that we are in duty bound to unite as we have never done in the past, to educate one another out of our crudeness; and this we can only do by being as zealous in the future in trying to discover something good in one another, as some have been in trying to discover something wrong.

Though the beauty of the face of the sun is sometimes marred by dark spots which are loathsome to astronomers, yet its influence on the earth is more beneficent than all that exerted by the subluminares and all other planets and elements combined. So it is with the other sects and parties who have not yet attained to the knowledge of the fullness of the gospel. They may be more righteous in some respects than we are. Their tolerance, tenderness, and mercy may in instances soar above ours, and therefore our Father in heaven is more pleased with them than he is with us, if we are possessed with bigotry, intolerance, and unholy selfishness. Let us realize that our souls never can expand and grow white and become perfumed with the flowers of love, tolerance, and mercy in his name and by his mercy and by the grace of his words until we put away from us these things and walk forth as free men and women.

DELMONT C. TORREY.

Southern California District.

Twentieth annual convention of this district was held August 10 to 25, 1912, at Convention Park, Hermosa Beach, California. Convention was called to order at 10 a. m., August 10, by President Nathaniel Carmichael; everything was in readiness, tents all up, with occupants' names on them, cafeteria in operation, with good opening attendance, and general good humor prevailing.

There were present of the General Conference missionary force, Elbert A. Smith, of the First Presidency; F. M. Sheehy, missionary in charge; W. H. Kelley, president of the Twelve; Patriarch E. Keeler; Seventies, H. J. Davison, Paul M. Hanson; high priests, T. W. Williams, A. E. Jones, and Evan A. Davis. Daily order of meetings. Prayer meeting 9 a. m., preaching at 11 a. m. and at 7.30 p. m., Sunday school Sunday mornings, and Religio Sunday evenings. Brethren Elbert A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, and W. H. Kelley, together with district presidents, were elected presidency of the conference.

The Sunday school and Religio were each assigned one day for their conventions, and an institute session held by the Sunday school was especially instructive and interesting. One evening was devoted to an enjoyable program by the two societies under the direction of the Sunday school.

The regular annual banquet was tendered to the city councilmen and their ladies, together with representatives of the press and the city schools. Address of welcome was made by Brother William Schade; toasts by Brother Evan A. Davis, "The Latter Day Saints, who are they"; Brother F. M. Sheehy, "Our motives"; Brother Elbert A. Smith, "Our institutions"; Brother Frederick Adam, "Our financial system." Responses were made by Mr. T. H. Hanneman, ex-president of the city council; Mr. James G. Cortelyou; Mrs. Gulliver, representing the Hermosa Beach Review and the Los Angeles Times; Miss Barrett, of the Hermosa Beach News and the Los Angeles Express; Mr. Lisle, of the Los Angeles Examiner; Miss Barrett, assistant principal of the Redodno Beach High School, and Mr. P. B. Guernsey, of the Hermosa Beach city council. All were delivered in a happy spirit of congeniality and friendship, cementing the kindly ties already established and striving for a mutual happiness for and benefit to each other. Brother R. T. Cooper acted as toastmaster. After the banquet all repaired to the large tent, where Brother Paul M. Hanson delivered his interesting and instructive lecture, "A trip through the Holy Land," illustrated by beautiful stereopticon views.

The sudden and unexpected death of Brother E. Keeler cast a feeling of sadness and solemnity over the body, but the sorrow was "not as those who have no hope," for its poignancy was removed by the knowledge of a life well spent and a harvest gathered by the undeviating response to calls of duty and his own oft-repeated statement that he was "ready and only waiting for the summons"; that he was now occupying on borrowed time. His loving and consistent life in this district has endeared him to all who knew him. Sister Keeler seemed to share this view, although with her seriously impaired eyesight it is exceptionally hard for her to face the future; but she exhibited remarkable fortitude and courage and reliance on Him who doeth all things well. The funeral was preached by Brother Elbert A. Smith at the parlors of Bresee Brothers, the good Spirit being manifest through the discourse and prevailing and pervading the assembly to a marked degree. Brother Keeler had presided at the morning prayer service on the day of his departure.

The placid waters of the Pacific were twice disturbed, six souls being inducted into the fold, Brethren Nathaniel Carmichael, T. W. Williams, and Frederick Adam officiating.

A priest's license was issued to R. M. Dungan by authority of the conference on the recommendation of F. M. Sheehy and Elbert A. Smith, he having been ordained several years ago, but all the records having been burned.

Sister Emma Burton was present with her usual good cheer and quota of encouraging testimonies and reminiscences, tending to strengthen the Saints.

The selecting of a name for the reunion grounds was the occasion for keen interest and much friendly rivalry. About seventy-five names had been submitted in response to the advertising in the HERALD and Ensign, some coming all the way from Maine and Florida. The matter was referred to the standing reunion committee of eleven men, to which were added the names of Elbert A. Smith, Holmes J. Davison, and Paul M. Hanson, who selected five names, out of which the conference chose the name of CONVENTION PARK as being the best suited, all things considered, and the prize of the three standard books of the church, in morocco binding, was awarded to Brother R. T. Cooper, who immediately gave the books to the district Religio, to be used as they might deem best, or placed in the public libraries of the district.

The reunion committee were reelected for the ensuing year. Nathaniel Carmichael and A. E. Jones were reelected presidents and R. T. Cooper secretary; Frederick Adam treasurer.

The preaching was principally by the General Conference appointees present as named, was of a high character, and strengthened by a manifest portion of the power of the Spirit, and almost entirely harmonious.

The position of the church as understood and held by her leading men on the great economic questions troubling the world to-day, as well as those of a spiritual character, were clearly and unequivocally set forth, showing that the laws given to and accepted by the church constitute the only method by which the ills and woes of mankind can be relieved and permanently remedied, and their temporal needs provided for, as well as the spiritual man become developed. That no social system or plan of men, without God in it, can fill even the temporal needs of the times, but that the celestial laws touching temporalities, as set forth in the laws of tithing, consecration, and surplus, together with the broader field as opened up through the United Order of Enoch, can and do fill and provide for the temporal needs of our social system, according to the ratio in which the people will live up to and honor those laws.

The fact was also pointed out, in a social, friendly discussion between a number of the brethren, that allegiance to some of the politico-social systems being advocated throughout the world as the means to fill all these needs and supply all these demands of mankind are derogatory to us as Latter Day Saints, as evidenced by the lack of names on the Bishop's books.

In addition to the missionary force, there were discourses by N. Carmichael, A. E. Jones, Frederick Adam, William Schade, George H. Wixom, and R. T. Cooper; also assistance by A. W. Ballard, N. W. Best, Hiram Powell, R. M. Dungan, and various other brethren of the local forces.

R. T. COOPER, Secretary.

Northern California and Nevada Reunion.

I beg space to report the best reunion ever held here, to my knowledge. I do this for the general information looked for by the wideawakes, and to the encouragement of the Saints in the Northern California District, all of whom are very dear to me, as their undershepherd.

The reunion was characterized by a spirit of earnest devotion, and of love and unity—a marked freedom from the foolish and frivolous and pleasure-seeking spirit. This condition invited the spirit of devotion, of deep inward peace. The services were all remarkably well attended and enjoyed, and the fruits and manifestations of the Holy Spirit were marked, and at times marvelous. The last prayer meeting began at nine o'clock Monday morning and was so full of interest that it was continued till the dinner hour.

The statistics of the meeting are: Sermons preached, 17; prayer services, 9; conference sessions, 2; conventions, 3; Ladies' Auxiliary, 1; Sunday school sessions, 2; Religio sessions, 2; institute work, 1; entertainment, 1; organization, 1; making a total of forty meetings in the ten days, each and all being heartily supported.

The spirit of complaint and fault-finding was a stranger who sought admission but was providentially barred out—to the Lord be the praise. We had a hard rain on Friday, and our tabernacle leaked, but all were good-natured and no harm was done. Mr. Hersch, the owner of the opera house in Irvington, kindly tendered the use of the house for the entertainment on Friday night. It was filled with well-entertained spectators who responded with a collection of twenty-seven dollars.

The restaurant department of the work was ably managed by Brother C. W. Hawkins, who with Mrs. Churchill as chief cook, aided by his coterie of willing helpers, gave to the many hearty eaters a service that pleased all. We have spoken to Brother Hawkins about next year. See!

The preachers—oh, yes! We don't wish to forget them, for they played a good part in rendering our reunion such a decided success. F. M. Sheehy, W. H. Kelley, J. D. Stead, H. J. Davison, M. Cannon, and C. A. Parkin were the general appointees present who preached; and of the local force, whom we mention with equal importance, were J. A. Saxe, E. Ingham, W. H. Dawson—the writer preaching the closing sermon Monday night from Ecclesiastes 12: 13.

The San Jose church band visited the meeting and gave life by the music which was and is highly appreciated. The general choir music was excellent. H. J. Davison and others were active leaders in this line. The conference took over the business of the reunion and appointed a committee to arrange for another reunion in 1913, composed of J. A. Saxe, C. A. Parkin, J. H. Driver, C. C. Day, and the writer, leaving to the committee the appointing of time and place of next reunion. The new committee organized by choosing the writer as chairman and J. A. Saxe as secretary; C. A. Parkin treasurer. So look out for another still better reunion in 1913, some time in August, at Irvington, California. To this end we are already at work as a committee.

On the 6th F. M. Sheehy, as minister in charge, effected the organization of a quorum of elders to be known as the Pacific Slope Quorum of Elders. Elder C. W. Hawkins, of San Jose, California, 615 Spencer Avenue, was chosen president, who selected J. A. Saxe, of San Francisco, and E. Ingham, of Oakland, as counselors. There were thirteen elders present.

Four were added by baptism during the reunion, Elders W. H. York and C. W. Deuel officiating. Brother Earl Opsal, of Chico, a coming strength to the church, was ordained to the office of priest.

Jesus Christ; Is He Our Advocate or Adversary?

In Matthew 5: 25 we find these words: "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison."

I have heard it taught that Christ was our adversary, that he was the one to agree with quickly. I do not believe that Christ could be our adversary and our advocate all at the same time. I understand our adversary to be the Devil, or anyone or anything that is against us or the truth.

As I understand this verse, it is along the temporal line. In the twenty-fourth verse it says, Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way: first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.

If we have a misunderstanding or trouble with a brother, we should be first reconciled to our brother. We are not in a fit condition to offer our gifts to the Lord, and hold a grudge against our brother; on the other hand, if we have an account with our fellow man and he wants a settlement, we must agree with him; or in other words, have an understanding with him; make a settlement in some way. It tells us in verse twenty-five, to agree, lest the adversary deliver us to the judge, and the judge deliver us to the officer, and we be cast into prison. I can not see how that can have any connection with Christ. If we were to agree with our adversary in all things we could not be true followers of Christ. Christ does not cast men into prison because they do not agree with him. When we die we will be cast into prison, if we do not agree with him; but not in this life.

1 Peter 5: 8 tells us very plainly who our adversary is. Again in Luke 12: 58 it carries the thought that it has reference to worldly affairs, when we go before the magistrate with our adversary. The Lord does not call us before a magistrate here in this life.

In Proverbs 25: 8, 9, you will find this statement: "Go not forth hastily to strive, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof, when thy neighbor hath put thee to shame. Debate thy cause with thy neighbor himself," etc. We should live before the world so that our neighbors will not have a chance to put us to shame. If we should have a misunderstanding with our neighbor, we should go to him in brotherly love and debate our cause with him, and not rush into court with all our troubles.

Christ is not our adversary, but our advocate. Turn to 1 John 2: 1. We find there that we have an advocate with our Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. He came down here into this cold world that we might have a chance to be saved. He was here in the flesh, and he knows what our trials are in this life. So he will plead our cause with our Father in heaven.

Turn to Romans 8: 34. There you will find that he is pleading our case with the Father. If we will obey his commandments, we must do our part. Christ died that mankind might be saved. So, if we do as he has commanded, then we will receive his help. He will plead our cause with the Father. If he does that he can not be our adversary.

In 1 Timothy 2: 5 we find words that go to prove what I have been writing about.

Hebrews 7: 25 shows that the office work of Christ is after his resurrection. It is to make intercession for all that come to God. But we must come to him in his own way. We have a record of his word in the Bible; let us all search the book and find out for ourselves what his law is, then come to him in his own way.

Reunion at Blue Rapids, Kansas.

The Northeastern Kansas District convened in conference and reunion capacity in Blue Rapids, Kansas, August 30, 1912. Friday, the first day, was occupied in getting settled in camp.

After a prayer service Saturday at 9 a. m., the business of the district was attended to in the usual manner, followed by preaching service at night. A refreshing rain fell during the night, but the Lord's day dawned bright and beautiful, suggestive to us of the more abundant life supplied by the draught that comes from the heavens above, of which draught the world has been invited to drink and live. The work of the day was begun by prayer service at 8 a. m., Sunday school at 9.30 in charge of our efficient field worker and district superintendent, Sister Flo. McNichols, and the officers of the Blue Rapids school. Preaching service at 10.45, sacrament at 2.30, and preaching again at night.

Monday, September 2, after the regular morning prayer service, we convened to organize the reunion. District president, Frank G. Hedrick, in chair. Apostle Peter Anderson and Frank G. Hedrick were chosen to preside. Fred A. Cool secretary and Flo. McNichols chorister. The committees necessary for the running of a reunion were then provided for.

Brother Anderson was the speaker in the following service, giving counsel relative to meetings which was observed with good results. Most all the Saints in attendance camped on the grounds, adding to the pleasantness and benefits of the occasion, and withal the meetings were well supported, especially the morning prayer service.

The afternoon of each day during the week was tendered to the auxiliaries, the work being in charge of Sister Flo. McNichols, field worker and district Sunday school superintendent, and Fred A. Cool, president district Religio.

Thirty minutes each day were devoted to the "Little Hopes" in primary work in charge of Sisters Ruth Lewis and Cecil Bivans.

Brother William Lewis, of the patriarchs, was with us, and thirty-four of the Saints received their blessings under his hands.

Our district missionary force, in the persons of Brethren Walters, Brooner, and Showers, were also there. Most all present bore witness to the presence of God's Spirit in our midst throughout, and the Lord was pleased to manifest himself and extend the arm of power to some who were afflicted.

By vote we decided to hold another reunion at Blue Rapids in 1913, and invite the Northwestern Kansas District to join with us in it.

Sunday, September 8, was the closing day, and at the close of the evening service we sung, "God be with you till we meet again," and the reunion went into the history of the past.

The park at Blue Rapids is an ideal place for reunions, and we trust that if the Lord wills that we meet there again next year, that it will be after a year of better work and a closer walk with the Master, and it will be even a greater feast than that which is just past.

Echoes from Little Sioux District Reunion.

The reunion of 1912, at Magnolia, was very enjoyable to those privileged to attend; the first service being one of prayer and testimony, Friday, September 6. The opening sermon on the same day was by district president, Sidney Pitt, sr. Missionary in charge, J. W. Wight, and the district presidency, Brethren Pitt, Lane, and Kibler, were chosen to preside. Sister J. W. Wight and Brother S. B. Kibler were chosen choristers. A large choir, with renderings of duets and solos by talented young people, was very much enjoyed. The Woman's Auxiliary work, Sunday school, and Religio were ably presented by Sister M. A. Etzenhouser. Brother John F. Garver labored for Graceland during the session devoted to its interests. The church publication interests were cared for by Brother O. W. Parker, of Lamoni. The general bishopric was represented by G. H. Hilliard, the patriarchs by Charles Derry. Prayer service was held each day at 9 a. m., and well improved. Preaching was done by J. W. Wight, Heman C. Smith, J. L. Parker, Frederick A. Smith, S. W. L. Scott, R. C. Evans, Charles Derry, G. H. Hilliard, Sidney Pitt, sr., all of whom were well received. There were some eighty-five tents on the grounds and houses rented for the occasion. Two heavy rains made a change in the attendance. The boarding house served meals under the control of the committee and gave excellent satisfaction.

Brother Charles Derry, at eighty-six years, was active, and attended all services. Brother Donald Maule, hale and hearty at ninety-one years and five months, who has lived for sixty-two years on his present farm, was perhaps the oldest. Two sisters present, Sister Julia Shepherd and Sister Angelina Chase Vredenburg were two of Harrison County's first born; the former in 1848.

The park grounds were ideal in drainage and sod; electric lighting, wood and straw free, and good water. Magnolia was again selected for the 1913 reunion by a large majority. Five were baptized; two collections for the Children's Home resulted in $108.50. The committee extended an invitation to R. C. Evans to return in 1913, which was accepted. Two sisters, Weeks and Huffaker, of Des Moines District, and a goodly number from Gallands Grove District were camped on the grounds. People were present from various States, as far west as Idaho. The Magnolia citizens paid all the expenses of the reunion and had money left. The most numerous family as to relationship present on the grounds at various times was the Gamets, seventy-three of whom were present. A communication of kindly greeting was received from President Joseph Smith and much appreciated. A return message of esteem and confidence was sent him.

Irvington Reunion.

The reunion held at Irvington August 31 to September 9, 1912, has passed into history. The attendance was not as large as that of 1911, but it is admitted by all that we enjoyed the most harmonious and spiritual reunion that was ever held on those sacred grounds. This speaks for itself, and indicates that we are moving on a higher plane than formerly, and our aims are to come up still higher. Our prayer and testimony meetings were especially marked by their zeal and spirituality. Our hearts were made glad and we rejoiced to know that our heavenly Father condescended to recognize his people and assure them that his Spirit was with them. His joyful messages were conveyed to us by or through his handmaiden on four different occasions, and three unknown tongues and interpretations followed; also one beautiful hymn, sung in an unknown tongue by Brother Dagner, with the interpretation following. Words can not express our feelings and gratitude to our heavenly Father for his recognition by those messages of cheer, comfort, and admonition.

The word dispensed by the speakers was "not in word only, but by power, the Holy Ghost, and much assurance," and it was remarked by many that the preaching was of a higher order than usual. Among the higher priesthood present were,

Elders Sheehy, Kelley, Saxe, Deuel, Cannon, Ferris, Erle, Ingham, Yorke, Holt, Davison, Stead, Terry, Anthony, and Hintz.

A pleasing and much appreciated feature of the reunion was the free concert tendered to the Saints by the San Jose brass band; composed, mostly, of boys. San Jose can justly be proud of this band, for it is second to none that I have heard.

The church choir, with the aid of brass and stringed instruments, was a drawing card, and was commended by all lovers of good music.

The Sunday school convention, presided over by district superintendent, Sister M. A. Saxe; Religio, by L. H. Dawson, and the Ladies' Aid auxiliaries of the church all had their turns, in showing how they were advancing in their good works along their respective lines.

During the sessions of ten days, four precious souls were placed beneath the watery grave, and rose to newness of life. Four were ordained, and two little ones blessed.

On Friday evening, September 6, the usual entertainment was held in Maple Hall, tendered by the proprietor, free of charge, on account of the heavy rain which made it impossible to hold it out in the tent. A large audience was in attendance and it was remarked by many, "What a lot of bright, intelligent children these Latter Day Saints have," as they performed their parts, some scarcely able to reach the keys or the pedals of the piano. One bright colored girl, the baby nurse of Brother and Sister Hartsough, stepped upon the platform and performed her part without a blush—the only indication of embarrassment was in her gestures.

I feel that it will be gratifying to the Saints of the Northern California District to know there is a possibility that the reunion will be permanently located at Irvington. The old obstacle that was in the way of making Irvington a permanent place of meeting is in a fair way to be removed. The Chamber of Commerce has taken it up, and is now circulating a petition to raise funds to secure additional ground upon which to pitch tents, and are meeting with very fair success.

As a rule in all programs of whatever character, the best number is awarded a place near the close, and so it was in this case. In the afternoon of the last day Elder J. D. Stead gave a very instructive talk along gospel lines with the aid of five or six large charts, showing clearly that the Mosaic law was not changed, but entirely done away; some features being incorporated in the new. Each chart represented a lecture, but for lack of time each chart was epitomized into one.

The closing sermon by Elder J. M. Terry was certainly deduced under the influence of the Holy Spirit, as he surprised all by his efforts. He held his congregation spellbound from start to finish. After the benediction all united in singing, "God be with you till we meet again," after which there was much shaking of hands and good-byes. All seemed loath to leave the tent. Thus ended one of the best and most spiritual reunions ever held at Irvington.

E. F. ADAMSON, Secretary.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, September 15, 1912.

Reunion at Magnolia.

Our reunion passed in a very happy manner, there being naught to interrupt the peace that flowed so gently to every heart. There was some rain, but it caused little discomfort, and no complaint, and we never missed a session.

Elder J. W. Wight was chosen to preside, and chose the district presidency, Sidney Pitt, sr., Joseph Lane, and S. B. Kibler, to assist.

The good people of Magnolia fairly outdid themselves in their efforts to care for the Saints. The visiting ministry were J. W. Wight, Heman C. Smith, R. C. Evans, S. W. L. Scott, and F. A. Smith, while Brother John F. Garver represented Graceland, and the auxiliary work was in charge of Sister M. A. Etzenhouser. All acquitted themselves well.

While the gifts of tongues and prophecy were not in evidence, yet the gifts of healing, knowledge, wisdom, and discernment were, and many comforting and encouraging testimonies were borne, all showing that the Saints are under renewed obligations to the Master for continued mercies. The Little Sioux reunion of 1912 will long be remembered by those who were privileged to be present. It was decided by a very large majority to hold our reunion in 1913 on the same grounds.

The work in the district is in good condition in nearly all the branches, but a general awakening is needed. There is some complaint about what is thought to be extravagance on the part of some few, as shown by the Bishop's report, which causes a holding back on the part of some. No doubt this could be easily explained, but it is not in my line.

To those of the priesthood in the district who have lost or never received licenses, kindly send your names to Brother James D. Stuart, secretary of the district, Magnolia, Iowa, and you will receive licenses. Please state office, when and by whom ordained.

Our district conference will be held at Biglers Grove, October 5 and 6. We hope to have a full report from all the priesthood as well as from all the branches. Saints of Little Sioux District, the Lord expects much of you, so please come. All come to conference, and may the Master be with you, bless, strengthen, and comfort you, and may you have a time never to be forgotten, is the prayer of your brother.

SIDNEY PITT, Sr., President.

PERSIA, IOWA, September 19, 1912.

Eastern Colorado District Reunion.

The Eastern Colorado district reunion was held south of Wray, Colorado, on what is known as Horse Creek. Mr. Stearnes offered the Saints the use of a large pasture for the purpose of holding reunion; also furnished pasture free of charge for all horses, which was gladly accepted by the Saints. The Saints of Wray made a very commendable effort in arranging for the reunion. They furnished not only eatables, but paid all expenses of the reunion.

A. E. Tabor, John W. Rushton, and F. A. Russell were the committee in charge; Sister Gertrude Bullard and F. A. Russell were in charge of the music; Arthur Parson and Walter Willey acted as sergeants-at-arms; L. G. Holloway, secretary; R. S. Salyards had charge of the auxiliary work. The attendance was excellent, considering the scattered condition of the Saints in the eastern part of the district. I am sorry to say, however, that very few were in attendance from the central and western parts of the district.

The preaching was done by John W. Rushton, O. B. Thomas, R. S. Salyards, F. A. Russell, H. E. Winegar, and L. G. Holloway. Several of the local brethren assisted in the meetings.

Besides the regular daily preaching and prayer services, the afternoons were devoted to normal and institute work; also services were held in the interest of the Order of Enoch, social purity work, and Graceland College.

Three were baptized during the reunion and a good spirit prevailed throughout. The general consensus of opinion was that the reunion had been a success, and that another one would be provided for next year.

There were Saints in attendance from Burlington, Vernon, Yuma, Holyoke, Fox, Denver, and from Eustis, Nebraska, besides those living in the vicinity of Wray. Some outside the church also camped on the grounds.

L. G. HOLLOWAY, Secretary.

Southern Nebraska Reunion.

Having been invited to attend the reunion of the Southern Nebraska District held at Nebraska City, August 17 to 23, I thought it would only be manifesting to a degree my appreciation of kindness shown me and of blessings received while there, to pen a few lines to our church papers.

I can say truly that I don't think I ever attended a reunion when I enjoyed more of the blessing of the Holy Spirit and witnessed such unanimity of action and feeling of true saint-like love. There was not a large attendance of Saints from abroad, and the forepart of the reunion was broken into with very heavy rains, which made the grounds disagreeably damp.

The grounds were ideal, for the reunion was held in the beautiful Morton Park, and those having the park in charge donated its use to the committee, free of charge. This is a good showing for our Saints at that place, as we never had been permitted before to use those beautiful grounds. It was said by the authorities of the branch at that place, that there were a great many more outsiders in attendance at the services this year than at any previous reunion held at Nebraska City.

The prayer and testimony meetings were exceptionally spiritual. Brother Joshua Carlile said that in the line of his work he never had enjoyed such great spiritual power. A number of blessings were given. Altogether, I feel that my stay with the Saints in reunion at Nebraska City has added to my stature spiritually, and the same will go down in the history of my experiences as one of the bright events of my life.

I trust that I shall ever so walk in life as to merit the confidence of such dear Saints as I find in this State, as well as elsewhere.

May the Lord abundantly bless Israel, I pray.

Your sister in Christ,

LENA MADISON.

News from Missions

England.

As we are having quite a warm time in the outdoor campaign throughout the Manchester District, I feel sure that the Saints who once labored here would be pleased to hear news from the old home. There is on every hand a great demand for laborers, and we can not find one quarter of the laborers required for the harvesting.

We started the campaign under the direction of the one and only fisherman, G. W. Leggott, our district president, and have been called to man the boat under all sorts of conditions, use every kind of bait and hook to catch our fish, and then fry according to the highest code laid down. Brother J. W. Rushton knows what kind of fish is netted by his old friend George.

Brother Chandler is holding out valiantly at Wigan and is having rough times but doing a vast amount of good. Brother Weate is busy at Denton against great odds, as well as supervising Sunday school and Religio work in the district. Brethren James Schofield and W. R. Armstrong are laboring hard and long with a handful of faithful Saints in carrying the glad tidings of great joy to a sin-stained world.

The clergy, theater, picture palace, the press, and the anti-Mormon societies are banded together in trying to down the restored gospel, and the fight is fearfully hard and heavy, because it falls to a mere handful to carry on the work. It appears strange to the writer, how men can take up a cool, indifferent spirit after once feeling the pulsating influence of the Spirit of the Master, and stand by and do nothing but criticize that which is being done.

We started a series of open air meetings in the five branches within easy reach from the center of the city, but interest goes down because we have not brethren to carry on a regular meeting week after week in each branch locality.

Brethren Chandler, Armstrong, and the Brethren Spargo, with the writer, had a rough time in Wigan, engineered by the anti-Mormon society of Liverpool, assisted by some of the clergy. We asked for an opportunity to ask questions, as they kept promising to invite them when they finished the lecture, but instead of giving us the liberty, they abused us, the church, and all connected with it, and called upon the crowd to down us. Brother Chandler and I appealed to the crowd in the spirit of fair play to give us the chance to make our defense before they passed sentence of death. We got the people to listen to the mean, low treatment meted out by the anti-Mormon society to Brother Chandler, and then we offered to pay the expenses of a public debate, but could not get them to sign propositions. At the night service we had an extra dose of insult and abuse, but not the shadow of a chance to defend ourselves; but a minister called upon the crowd to murder every Mormon they came across.

The following week we held forth with great freedom and made very many friends to the latter day work, and only for the awful stigma that is on the name of the church I am sure many would embrace it. If only the membership of the district, which stands at over four hundred, would work, what a marvelous amount could be done! The outlook for the work is brighter than ever, and all that is required is a little courage to break down the spirit of misunderstanding that exists, and the work will succeed.

The writer has had many trying experiences as an outside speaker, but up to the present I have escaped with a whole skin. I have been threatened many times and even cursed on the streets, but I am only more determined to go ahead and do what I can to spread the good tidings to the children of men. May the time speedily come when the laborers required will find their way into the vineyard of the Lord.

The sad news has just come to hand of Brother Robert Willard Smith passing to his reward in the prime of manhood. The brother is well known and respected as a good sample of a Latter Day Saint, and is one whom we will miss very much. May the comforting influence of the Spirit rest with his dear young wife, and their relatives, who are suffering from the severance of the dear ties that bound them together. Ever praying and working for the redemption of Zion.

Wisdom of a Great Painter.

We always like to know what a great man has said about his work, and how he feels about other things that are of interest to everyone. Fortunately, Meissonier left a record of many of his feelings and opinions, published as his "Conversations." Of all the painters, Rembrandt was his favorite.

Among his sayings were the following:

"Let well enough alone' is the motto of the lazy."

"The man who leaves good work behind adds to the inheritance of the human race."

"The master is an artist whose works never recall those of some other artist."

"I would have drawing made the basis of education in all schools. It is the universal language."

"No artist would ever paint if he knew he was never to show his work, if he felt no human eye would ever rest upon it."

"I never sign a picture until my whole soul is satisfied with my work."

"To will is to do' has been my motto. I have always willed. Oh! how I regret the lost time that can never be made up. As I grow older, I work harder than ever."—From Charles L. Barstow's "Famous Pictures" (Meissonier) in October St. Nicholas.

A very successful all day service was held at O'Fallon, Illinois, September 1, all attendants bringing their lunch baskets and enjoying a spiritual feast as well.

On August 25 two of our Sunday school scholars were baptized by Brother T. J. Elliott. They were Marie Swartz and Luella Watkins; and since last report four sweet little babes were blessed. Mr. and Sister Schaffer's little boy was given the name of Philip; Mr. and Sister Graham's babe named Russell Thomas, and little Grace Marian and William Harold, children of Brother Joseph E. Swift and wife. Sister Graham was formerly Daisy Thomas, and Sister Schaffer was Isabel Parker. Brother and Sister W. R. Cowlishaw are the happy parents of a fine baby boy. May these little buds of promise honor the Master's cause with righteous lives.

On the evening of September 10, Brother S. A. Burgess pronounced the words which joined in holy matrimony Sister Sybilia Burgess and Brother Gomer L. Evans.

Our Sunday school and Religio are still alive. Now that vacations are over we expect a better attendance. Interest is manifest in the normal classes of both auxiliaries.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—District conference convened at Irvington, California, September 2, 1912, at 10 a. m. F. M. Sheehy, minister in charge, presided, J. M. Terry, district president, and William H. Sanitarium Nurse Graduation.

TUESDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 1.

The exercises were held in the nurses' classroom on the second floor of the Sanitarium. The meeting opened by a statement of its purpose, after which prayer was offered by Elder G. E. Harrington, who at the solicitation of the head nurse, Miss Weise, took charge. Following the prayer a violin duet by Miss Maud Guinand, and Mr. Orland Nace, was rendered and enjoyed by all present. Afterwards Bishop E. L. Kelley made an address upon the value to society of the achievement in the science of nursing by Miss Cockerton. This was followed by a quartet in which Doctor Frank Criley, Mr. Roy Morgan, Mrs. Myra Brackenbury, and Miss Emma Criley participated; then Elder J. W. Rushton delivered an address on the beautiful service of nursing, giving a brief historical sketch of the beginning of scientific nursing, emphasizing its value. Another song was rendered by the quartet before mentioned, a few remarks by Sister Mary Weise; prayer by Bishop E. L. Kelley, followed by congratulations to Miss Ina Cockerton, the first graduated nurse of the institution. Orangeade was served by the nurses, and exchange of thought in social good feeling closed the evening's entertainment.

Remarkable Tests for Admission to College.

The first step toward true reform will be the abandonment of the certification plan of admitting to college. This plan, as it works out under our system, makes college matriculation at once too easy and too difficult. It is too easy for those who are drawn up, cog by cog, through twelve years of school attendance marked by the performance of no really difficult intellectual feats but only an infinity of "small jobs." It is too difficult for those who, though abundantly able and eager, have the misfortune to be obliged to walk part way instead of holding their seats in the educational car.

By substituting for the present plan an examination whose object, like that of the new Harvard examination, is not alone to test the candidate's acquirements in a minimum number of prerequisite studies, but especially to find out the quality of his mind, we would correct both these evils at one stroke. Such an examination should be mainly but not wholly oral; it should be conducted by a committee of say three persons who vary sufficiently in their points of view to make the test a fair one. This committee should secure in advance as complete a description of the candidate as possible from the school he has been attending, or from other sources. Should this prove favorable on all points—his moral character, intellectual habits, the studies he has pursued and the degree of proficiency attained in them—a very short examination would suffice. More doubtful cases would require correspondingly minuter treatment, until, with the man who should present himself an entire stranger, with meager credentials, the process would become very searching.—From "Who should go to college and why," by Joseph Schafer, in the American Review of Reviews for October.

The heart has its memory like the mind,
 And in it are enshrined
 The precious keepsakes, into which are wrought
 The giver's loving thought.—Henry W. Longfellow.

A Psychological Study of Religion.

The origin, function, and future of religion is the real subject of A Psychological Study of Religion, by James H. Leuba, professor of psychology in Bryn Mawr. Professor Leuba has written a great many articles upon the psychology of religion, and this book in which he sums up his previous thought giving a systematic presentation of the nature of religion as a type of human behavior, of the origin and development of magic and religion, of the relation of religion to mythology, metaphysics, morality, and psychology, should find many eager readers. The work is divided into four parts, considering respectively the nature of religion, the origin of magic and of religion, religion in its relation to morality, mythology, metaphysics, and psychology, and the latest forms and the future of religion. Under these the following main heads are taken up: Religion as a type of rational behavior, constructive criticisms of current conceptions of religion, the mental requirements of the appearance of magic and religion, the origin of the idea of impersonal powers, the several origins of the ideas of unseen personal beings, the making of gods and the essential characteristics of a divinity, the emotions in religious life, the origin of magical and religious practices, corollaries regarding the respective nature of magic and religion in their relations to each other, morality and religion, mythology and religion, metaphysics and religion, theology and psychology, the latest forms of religion and the future of religion.

A Study of Jesus' Life.

The Historical and The Legendary Jesus—these are the two main parts into which Doctor Gilbert, who is well known as the author of a number of religious books, particularly The Interpretation of the Bible and The Student's Life of Paul, divides his discussion in his new book, Jesus. Under The Historical Jesus are considered Jesus' origin and birth, Jesus' entrance on a public career, what Jesus thought of himself, the ideal of Jesus for his people, and the public career of Jesus. Under The Legendary Jesus one chapter is devoted to legends of the birth and infancy of Jesus, one to legends of Jesus' public ministry, and one to the legend of a material resurrection.

American City Government.

Professor Charles A. Beard's American City Government; A Survey of Newer Tendencies, which The Century Company will issue in October, aims to cover, in fairly-balanced fashion, the whole field of city government, but lays chief emphasis on the city's social functions: budget making, municipal ownership, children's courts, tenement house reforms, the social center movement, etc.

In vain we call old notions fudge,
And lend our conscience to our dealing
The ten commandments will not budge;
And stealing will continue stealing.
—James Russell Lowell.

Let Me Show You Wyoming!

You may have questioned some of the statements you have heard about the wonderful crop yields obtained by Wyoming farmers—particularly those in the Big Horn Basin, but if you will visit that country and talk with some of the farmers from Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri who have settled there, you will readily understand why they feel so optimistic.

A former Iowa man recently wrote me as follows:

"I believe there is no better location in the West than just where I am, and I heartily advise my friends to look over the fine irrigated land that is open to entry on the Shell Creek Tract, if they are interested in acquiring a home in a progressive, rapidly-developing locality. I have planted an apple orchard on part of my land and shall enlarge it considerably this next spring; during this past season I received returns that were more than satisfactory from quite an area which I truck farmed, in spite of the fact that this was the first year the land had been cultivated."

What this man has done is not at all unusual. There is no good reason why you can't do it too, provided you get your place picked out before all the good land is taken up.

In order to make it easy for you to look the basin over without too much expense, the Burlington Route will run special Homeseekers' Excursions from Omaha on October 15th and November 5th. Can't you go with me and see for yourself just what the opportunities are in this section?

Just write me on what day you can go—a postal will do, and I will send you our folder and tell you just how and where to meet me in Omaha. D. Clem Deaver, Immigration Agent, Burlington Route, Room 338 Q Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

VOLUME 59

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 16, 1912

NUMBER 42

Editorial

BISHOP GEORGE H. HILLIARD.

Was born at Senecaville, Guernsey County, Ohio, November 7, 1838, and departed this life October 8, 1912, age 73 years, 11 months, and 1 day. He became a member of the Reorganized Church in Wayne County, Illinois, in the twenty-ninth year of his age, Elder Mark Forscutt officiating. Shortly after his baptism into the church he was ordained to the office of elder and became an active worker from that time. In a few years he was ordained to the office of seventy, and later, April 14, 1891, during the General Conference at Kirtland, Ohio, was called and ordained to the office of counselor to the Presiding Bishop of the church, Elders Mark H. Forscutt, Alexander H. Smith, and E. L. Kelley officiating in his ordination.

Bishop Hilliard entered upon his work as counselor in the Bishop's office at once and gave his earnest, able, and faithful help in the same for 21 years, 5 months, 24 days, or until the time of his death.

July 25, 1858, George H. Hilliard was married to Miss Elizabeth Green, Jeffersonville, Illinois, and to this union were born twelve children, nine sons and three daughters, nine of whom survive the parents, namely: Mrs. Mary Francis Williams, Huron, Indiana; Doctor T. J. Hilliard, Fairfield, Illinois; Mrs. Sarah B. Miller, Jeffersonville, Illinois; Joseph M. Hilliard, Kansas City, Missouri; Doctor D. A. Hilliard, Jeffersonville, Illinois; Charles A. Hilliard, Omaha, Illinois; Frank B. Hilliard, Loraine, Ohio; Mrs. Clara M. Dickey, Lamoni, Iowa; James A. Hilliard, Independence, Missouri.

The wife and mother passed over on the other side May 13, 1881, at Jeffersonville, Illinois. November, 1883, he was married to Mrs. Rebecca O'Brien, Jeffersonville, Illinois, who departed this life April, 1906. Later Bishop Hilliard was married to Miss Frances Williamson, Independence, Missouri, who with his children are specially called to mourn his departure. His residence has been Independence, Missouri, for the past fourteen years.

Bishop Hilliard in his life work has been one of the active, earnest men of the world; energetic in his home and business life, and energetic in his church and spiritual duties.

In his early life he did not have the opportunities for training and development that so many young men at the present time have offered to them, but through industry and labor in the field and workshop, as well as at his desk as a minister, he made himself efficient and helpful, so that his life was a life of usefulness and worth to those among whom he lived and wrought, and in a good degree to the world. It was the type of life that reflected good in his earnest efforts, while in the world, and which brought good to all who had occasion to gather therefrom during his life, and which is deserving of a great reward upon the other side.

Funeral services at three o'clock p. m., from the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, under the supervision of the stake presidency, President Fred M. Smith in immediate charge, and E. L. Kelley preaching the sermon. The remains were laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery. One of the largest congregations ever assembled on a week day attended the services.

THE GENERAL CHOIR MOVEMENT.

One of the most pleasing features of the last General Conference was the happy and well-rendered music by our various soloists and large choruses; in fact, it has been conceded by many to be the most inspirational endeavor yet attempted along musical lines, and it showed real work by the committee to arrange for the genuine treat that regularly greeted our hearing, and no doubt, all feel amply repaid for their part of the program by the interest displayed in the various performances. There is too much to write concerning the subject in hand to personally mention those who made this part of the General Conference program a study, but their concentrated, as well as consecrated effort is worth more than a passing mention.

I will not dwell at length upon the influence of music at this time, but its power as a working factor in the church has long since been recognized, and the thought of a general organized effort, promoting this cause to a higher plane of action would make many rejoice who have felt that their one talent lay along the lines of musical endeavor. While we were aware that many were interested, surprise was manifested in the numbers that responded to President F. M. Smith's invitation to discuss measures looking to some kind of cooperation which would result in the formation of large choruses for General Conference work, and wider cooperation among those interested and engaged in musical work. The meeting was interesting from every standpoint, much enthusiasm was displayed, and all felt that good would result therefrom. The writer was appointed as general director for the conference year, and it is his duty to arrange for the massing of the conference chorus, soloists, etc., also outlining the program for study by local and district choirs, or individuals who have a knowledge and ability in music that may possibly be isolated, and who desire to take part in the chorus work.

By special arrangement with the Theodore Preser Music Publishers, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the anthems selected for general as well as conference use are being made up in book form containing seventeen anthems of tried worth, appropriately bound. They are now on the press and will be ready in ten days or less. This special edition is limited to two hundred and fifty copies, and if the demand is great enough we will arrange for a second edition. Let us know your needs at your earliest convenience, and whenever possible kindly include remittance with your order. All money orders or checks made payable to the undersigned.

I will endeavor to answer through the columns of the HERALD, questions of general interest pertaining to this movement which may be directed to me. Items of news concerning district choir movements, their leaders and soloists, will be gratefully received. We are also pleased to announce that Sister Bertha Anderson, of the Independence choir, has accepted the responsibility of assistant chorister.

Let us awake, my talented brothers and sisters, to our great and wonderful possibilities along these lines. We want at least two hundred and fifty willing singers for our first attempt at the Lamoni conference in 1913. Let us make the songs of Zion ring with good cheer, that the sorrowing will rejoice and the burdened will be refreshed, and that all who hear or participate when home again will remember again and again the wonderful occasions when the glad singers of Zion, in mighty chorus, paid homage to their God and King. In those happy days to come we will more fully appreciate that expression of the Psalmist, "Oh, sing unto the Lord a new song; sing unto the Lord, all the earth." Let us remember this and go happily to our work.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

FROM INDIA.—We recently received a request from B. C. H. Mission, Bahraich, U. P., India, as follows: "We are missionaries in a lonely and neglected part of north India. The good papers we get are few and far between, and we wondered if it would be possible for you to send us your paper. It would be appreciated very, very much.

"Yours in His service,

"W. K. NORTON."

The HERALD will be sent to them.

Few things matter more to us than the entry of choice ideas into our outlooks. Let the "practical" man condemn them if he will; those minute and delicate powers give the tinge to our thoughts, the bias to our theories, that determine our whole attitude towards life and shape the destiny of nations.—George Bourne.

Cultivation to the mind is as necessary as food to the body.—Cicero.

Hymns and Poems Selected and Original

Life.

It is not all of life, to live,
To eat, and toil, and sleep,
Or strive for gold, or human lore,
Or earthly fame to seek.

But this is life, to die to self,
And seek your brother's gain
If he's in need, and you can help Alleviate his pain.

Except a corn of wheat shall fall
Into the ground and die;
It must abide alone, withal,
And fruitlessly stand by.

But if it die, it bringeth forth
By a power not its own,
Abundantly of precious fruit,
It can't abide alone.

For he that loveth his own life
Shall lose it, said the Lord,
But he that loseth it, for Christ,
Eternal life is his reward.

Upon love's living altar, then,
May each one of us bring
Our sacrifice, for fellow men,
As an offering to our King.

Our inmost soul with love will burn
Like unto his, who gave His life upon the cruel tree,
The race of man to save.

THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

That the writer might help others to a better understanding of the purposes and what the "order" is doing in its lawfully appointed mission, is the purpose of this article. Being one of its charter members, and knowing of its work and purposes, it is a pleasant task to try and tell of its efforts for good. Part of this communication will be in the form of questions and answers, because in that way some of the things that are misunderstood may be made clearer.

Question. Where is the law authorizing such an organization?

Answer. In Doctrine and Covenants, sections 77, 81, 101, and 128, and by act of the General Conference passed in April, 1909, in harmony with the instructions given in section 128: 9.

Question. When and by whom was it organized?

Answer. The preliminary meeting was held in October, 1909, and the final one to complete the organization, January 12, 1910. The persons who took part were Ellis Short, I. N. White, W. H. Garrett, M. H. Bond, W. E. LaRue, G. E. Harrington, H. R. Mills, Joseph Smith, Roderick May, A. H. Parsons, David T. Reese, G. H. Hilliard, D. J. Krahl, W. R. Dexter, F. M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, J. T. Curtis, J. Mather, W. E. Messenger, W. B. Kelley, Edward Rannie. Among that number we find three of the Presidency, one apostle, three bishops, four bishops' counselors, three of the Independence Stake presidency, several elders, and a number of professional and business men of Independence.

Question. What is the purpose of the "order"?

Answer. The following taken from the Articles of Association will best answer the question: "The United Order of Enoch is a helping and benevolent association, organized for the benefit of the poor and needy, dispensing its charities by furnishing equal opportunities to the needy, upright, and industrious in a financial, educational, and social way, with those who are more fortunate, and the supplying of stewardships and homes or inheritances to the worthy who may lack."

ARTICLE 3, OBJECT IN OUTLINE.

"The purpose of this corporation shall be to aid and assist the worthy needy and poor in obtaining employment and homes, help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in times of need, promote temperance, morality, and equality, and provide against the evils of selfishness, covetousness, anarchy, and crime of every description, and thus conserve, to a degree, the good of the community, and the good of the State, by a voluntary cooperation in the use, application, and distribution of wealth, for the objects named, of those who may be members of the association, and who shall contribute for the purpose, and of the means which is gained by the association in its legitimate work and business, and also the application of that which may be voluntarily contributed or consecrated for these benevolent purposes by those who do not hold membership in the organization."

Question. Why can not the church do the same kind of business that the "order" purposes to do?

Answer. The law of Missouri and other States will not permit the church to own any more real estate than is needful for its legitimate church work, or to engage in the business of buying and selling real estate. The law of Missouri is more rigid than that of some other States.

Question. Do you think those laws were made purposely to annoy Latter Day Saints?

Answer. No; I do not. The laws came because of the great wrongs done to the common people by the churches during the Reformation and subsequent thereto. The possession of great wealth by the churches gave them great power and it was used to oppress the poor. The founders of the Government, inspired by God (see Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10) made it a basic principle of our laws that the churches should be deprived of such power, and of any interference in the administration of the civil law.

Question. What authority has the church over the order?

Answer. None, directly; the law of Missouri will not permit of it; its power and authority is indirectly exercised.

Question. How does the church exercise indirect control over the order?

Answer. It authorized those that the law points out as the proper ones to organize, to do so, and the General Conference received their report. The law of the order provides for an annual report to be made to the church. (See Articles of Association, 8-E.)

Question. In what way may the church have influence over the order?

Answer. By every member of the church, who is not a minor, joining the order.

Question. How may persons become members of the order?

Answer. After they have complied with the law of Christ, both spiritual and temporal, they will be admitted upon their application. In the Articles of Association we have the following that governs in the matter: "Article 7. Membership in the order requires as a prerequisite a full compliance with the law of Christ, both to duties known as spiritual, and those referred to under the law as temporal; that is, the precepts and ordinances of the gospel having been fulfilled through acceptance and obedience to the same as set out in the Holy Scriptures, also, the following specific duties set forth in the law of equality, to wit:

"A. To render a just and true account of the condition and business of his or her stewardship annually, setting forth the amount, or value, with the loss or gain of the same for the period named, together with a faithful estimate of the necessities, and the amount required for repairs of stewardship, or the enlarging or extension of the same when proper, for the succeeding year.

"B. Stated or annual settlements as provided under the law by turning into the treasury or storehouse any surplus or talents remaining after a due fulfillment of the law as before set forth.

"C. In case of a lack or shortage, after a faithful and attested performance of duty in his or her stewardship for a time, or a year, such steward to receive from said treasury or storehouse, such a proper and just supply as the law directs according to 'his needs and wants, inasmuch as his wants are just.'

"D. That in all labor and association each and everyone shall seek the interest or good of his neighbor, 'Doing all things to the glory of God.'

"E. In case of withdrawal, or transgression and expulsion, such person or persons shall retain that which has been set apart or deeded to him or her or them for a home or inheritance, but shall have no further claim upon the common treasury and shall not be entitled to any withdrawal benefits or interests in the common fund or storehouse, whatever."

Question. Can persons not members of the church become members of the order?

Answer. Yes; after they have fully complied with the law of Christ as set forth in the Holy Scriptures.

Question. Do the present members of the order fully comply with the provisions set forth under "Membership"?

Answer. Yes; and no. We have complied with it to the extent possible under the present development of the church. We can not fully comply with what is provided for in paragraphs A, B, C, in the article on membership, because the church has not yet assigned stewardships or allotted inheritances.

Question. When will the church assign stewardships and allot inheritances?

Answer. When there is a sufficient number in the church who have attained to that degree of spirituality, and righteousness, and are living within the limits of a stake, so that it will be practical to fully carry out the law of Christ.

Question. Who will assign stewardships and allot inheritances?

Answer. The law imposes that duty on the bishopric, and the first presidency, and the high council in an advisory manner. (See Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2; 51: 1; 58: 11; 122: 6.)

Question. What is meant by a person's stewardship?

Answer. It is his business or his occupation; his means of livelihood.

Question. What is meant by inheritance?

Answer. It generally means a person's home. Under some circumstances a family's stewardship and inheritance may be combined, as in the case of a farmer or a fruit grower.

Question. Why should the church be concerned about the temporal affairs of the members?

Answer. Because the law of God makes it a duty to do so (see Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1; 42: 8, 9; 82: 2), and it has ever been so when he had a people on earth. With Moses and the Israelites, the early Christians, and the Nephites, such laws existed, and when lived up to no poor was found among them. The civil law will not permit the church to be engaged in buying and selling real estate, which is necessary to be able to carry out the purposes of the law of the church. And the revelation, (Doctrine and Covenants 128: 7) in which direction was given to organize, says it must be done in harmony with the civil law.

Question. Was the Order of Enoch organized under the civil law?

Answer. Yes; after the Articles of Association were drafted and approved by the members forming the association they were submitted to the court of Jackson County in session in Kansas City, and after hearing the arguments of Bishop E. L. Kelley for them, and by the attorneys of our opponents against them, the court granted a charter and it was afterward approved by the secretary of state for the State of Missouri.

Question. How will the order obtain its money and other property to carry on its work?

Answer. By donations from the Saints and all others who may be interested in so worthy a work, and also by the bishop from the general funds of the church.

Question. How and in what manner will the order help the members of the church?

Answer. The law of the church contemplates that in building up Zion all worthy Saints shall have a home and an honest, honorable way of earning a livelihood; and when the order helps the Saints, who need help, to obtain a stewardship or an inheritance, it is the same as if the church did it, because the order is composed of members of the church and its work will be done under the advice of the bishopric; in fact, they are members of the order. The order will sell to those who can buy, and under the advice and direction of the bishopric give to such as can not buy, such as a widow, a missionary, or to those who because of old age or physical disability are incapacitated.

Question. What advantage has the order over the private individual in purchasing land?

Answer. It can purchase in large tracts and at better prices and sell at a very small margin of profit sufficient to cover the expenses of taxes, improvements, and interest on deferred payments. The prices will be such as are legitimate in honorable business and not speculative ones, and the fear of foreclosure will not hang as a nightmare over the purchaser, and no undue advantage will be taken because of misfortune and financial reverses.

Question. Will you give an example of what has been done?

Answer. In 1910 the order purchased 80 acres in the south part of Independence. It is a beautiful location for homes. The northwest corner is about three blocks from the South Side Church, about fourteen blocks south of the courthouse square, and two blocks west of the street car line that runs through the business part of Independence. There are about three hundred lots, the greater number being fifty by one hundred and thirty-eight feet; some a half acre, and some one or more acres. About three acres are reserved for a park, on which is a fair sized grove of trees. Also several lots are reserved for a church building, and an offer is made to the city to select a site for a public school, and at the northeast corner a tract for the erection of factories at a very small cost, either by lease or sale. At the time of writing this paper about fifty lots have been sold and a few cottages erected. This land cost the order twenty-four thousand dollars, and if purchased this year at the same price as adjoining property farther out it would have cost fifty-six thousand dollars. The order has spent several thousand dollars in improvements, in grading streets and for taxes and interest on deferred payments. For building lots the prices are $150, $200, $225, and a few for $275, and the larger tracts for less rate, but with a higher cost per lot, because they are larger, being suitable for gardening, poultry, and fruit.

Question. Does the order intend to buy other than city property?

Answer. Yes; as soon as it is financially able it will buy land suitable for general farming and for the more special lines of fruit growing, poultry, and gardening.

Question. Does the order help only its members?

Answer. It helps any worthy member of the church who needs help. It does not look upon the poor as paupers, but as brethren and sisters of the household of faith who need that kind of help that will help them to help themselves work out their own temporal salvation. We are seeking to remove the barriers that separate the people on account of wealth and social position by helping to remove covetousness and selfishness from among them, and lifting the less fortunate up to a condition where poverty will not be a menace to their spiritual and moral development.

Question. Is there any opportunity for the well-to-do to rob the poor and enrich themselves?

Answer. Not unless the majority of its members become so corrupt, immoral, and dishonest as to be unworthy to be members of the church, or to associate with respectable people. Each member has a vote in the business meetings, and the wealth of the member or the amount of money given to the order by any individual does not give him any special privileges over the others. All money or property belonging to the order is held "in common," it can only be given to those who have need, and that will be determined by the board of directors. If it fails to perform its duties the State of Missouri can intervene and annul its charter, on the proper presentation of the matter before a proper court of the county and State.

Question. If the order should be dissolved by its members of the State of Missouri what would become of the property?

Answer. It would be sold and the money turned over to the bishop of the church to be distributed to the poor according to the law of the church. (See Articles of Association, article 10.)

Question. Why did the order make provision for dissolution? was it anticipating failure?

Answer. There is no law that compels an individual or corporation to remain in business, and when a corporation is dissolved voluntarily or by action of the State the law provides an orderly method for it to be done and for the disposition of the property. We have no fear concerning the success of the order; we tried to honor God's law and the law of the State, and the work was done by those who have shown in the past their love for God's work. They have been so far honored in the past that the heavens have spoken calling them to positions of honor and responsibility; and believing that the Lord could trust them, we feel that we can.

Question. Why does not the order buy land in some locality where it can be bought cheaper?

Answer. The revelations to the church make Independence and Jackson County the initial point for the building up of Zion, the extension to a larger area to come with the spiritual and numerical growth of the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1; 98: 4 and 9; 122: 6.) We feel more sure of success to buy high priced land and obey God's commands than to buy cheap land and disobey him. The Lord told the church where to buy the land, and that command is still in force, no command ever having been given to abrogate it. Our people failed in 1833 because of disobedience (Doctrine and Covenants 98:3; 102:2; 127:7), and were driven out. The Lord has told us to return and build up the "waste places of Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 98:4). We do not expect to do this great work through human wisdom; our effort shall be to be faithful to our trust, and the Lord will help as he has promised (Doctrine and Covenants 100:3).

Question. Will you suggest what a member of the church can do to help the order?

Answer. Pay your tithes and offerings, special consecrations, and surplus to the church, and then make a special effort, a sacrifice, to pay something to the order. Many of our missionaries have no homes. They have spent the best part of their lives in the service of the church. Buy a lot and tell the order to give it to a worthy and needy missionary. He is not a pauper. He is your brother. While he worked in the great missionary field and sacrificed the pleasures of home and his opportunity to make money, you were accumulating wealth. Share your prosperity with him; and while you are blessing him your heart shall be made glad in the joy of giving, and God's Spirit will bear testimony with your spirit that you have pleased your heavenly Father. Jesus said, "I do always those things that please my heavenly Father." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one toward another." When our love does not extend beyond our own family we have not been fully converted to the Christ and the way he would have us live.

Question. I have thought that my duty was done when I paid my tithing and helped the missionary when he came to my home. Was I right?

Answer. You have thought wrong, and have not read God's word correctly. As long as you have power and opportunity, and money to spare to help in the Lord's work, your task is not done; you are only "a steward over your own property," and the Lord will hold you responsible for it in time and eternity. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42:9; 72:1.) The Lord does not want what you need in your family and business. He does not want your help because he is so poor that he can not get along without it; he knows that wealth that you should give him is polluting your soul and destroying it like a cancer does the body; and if we can not be trusted to make good use of earthly things, our Father in heaven will not trust us with spiritual things. (See Luke 16:11; Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.)

Question. Why should those outside of the stakes be concerned about the building up of Zion?

Answer. The Lord has said, "He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his works shall follow him; and also a reward in the world to come."— Doctrine and Covenants 68:13. You may receive a command some day to go to Zion; others have (Doctrine and Covenants 72:5); or you may find it necessary to "flee to Zion for safety" (Doctrine and Covenants 45:13). The children of the Saints driven out of Jackson County in 1833 have been returning to build up the "waste places of Zion" in fulfillment of God's promises (Doctrine and Covenants 98:4), and it is the duty and ought to be a pleasure for those remote and in the regions round about to help in so glorious and worthy a work. There is no resting place until the work is done. Those among our people who have in the past, and who continue at present, to seek to increase their wealth by speculating in mining stock and other doubtful investments, would do well to invest in Zion either for themselves or for the church, that the work that has been intrusted to all might be accomplished. They would realize that the spiritual and temporal blessings promised because of obedience would be theirs to enjoy.

Question. How is the order going to prevent the Saints from speculating on their homes?

Answer. The contract and deed will contain a provision that if the owner wants to sell it prior to 1930 he must first make a tender of it to the order at an increase of six per cent per annum, on the cost price, and payment of all the improvements, and should the order refuse to buy it they are at liberty to sell it to others.

Question. Why is it that so many of the Saints are indifferent to the work of the order?

Answer. Many are ignorant of its purposes, and as a result lack interest. Some have been incorrectly informed of the nature of its work. In some cases the order has been misrepresented. Some will not work with others unless they have their own way, and if they can not have their way they refuse to work at all. Others say the order is trying to do too much, and a few say it does not enough. Everyone who does not want to help finds an excuse that may seem all right to him. If it is acceptable to God will be a question that he will answer in the future. It is possible that an evil power that has ever been an enemy of God's work whispers soft and low, and, like with a silken cord, leads some unconsciously to frame excuses that will be to their own condemnation.

The following are the names of the present board of directors: E. L. Kelley, R. Bullard, Ellis Short, B. J. Scott, M. H. Siegfried, G. E. Harrington, D. J. Krahl, A. H. Parsons, W. R. Dexter, J. T. Curtis, W. B. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard. These men are not up to the tricks of trade in high finance; they are not running a board of trade gambling house, or looking for victims to rob of their wealth. Some of them now, as for many years in the past, are rendering faithful service to the church; and some are in the business world and have the confidence and good will of their brethren. We should all be interested in the order because it is part of God's divine plan to accomplish the building up of Zion. It will help those who need help; it will not rob the poor to make the rich richer. The words of one of the First Presidency, and associate editor of the HERALD, who was present at the preliminary meeting of the organization, are a fitting close to this article:

"Herewith we reproduce the text of the Articles of Association of the United Order of Enoch. The document was read before a meeting of the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, the presidency and the bishopric of the Independence Stake, and others of the church who were present, at a meeting held in Independence, Missouri, October 26, at 10 a. m. The meeting again convened at 3 p. m., at which time the articles were signed by the persons named in the document. Directors were elected, and those directors proceeded to elect their officers. The names of the directors and officers appear in the body of the document. Those present fully sensed the importance of the step being taken and felt that the favor of God was with them in the meetings, according to the promise made in the revelation given at the late General Conference.—E. A. S."

The writer of this article is solely responsible for it; no person or society having solicited him to write it. If the reader thinks that my reasonings and conclusions are incorrect in whole or in part, let him write the general Bishop of the church for further light, and should the Bishop of the church or the order believe that I have not properly stated the law or the purpose of the order, then I ask for a public correction, so that it may be read as widely as this article.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

NO HOSTILITY TO MISSOURIANS.

To still further show that Joseph and the church meant no hostility to the Missourians, and that nothing more than peaceable, honorable settlement by "purchase" was intended, we present the following from the History of the Church; the sheriff of Clay County, Missouri, visited the camp of the Saints June 22, 1834, just after the delegation visited Governor Dunklin, and he made the statement appended:

Being a citizen of Clay County, and knowing that there is considerable excitement amongst the people thereof; and also knowing that different reports are arriving almost hourly: and being requested by the Honorable J. F. Ryland, to meet the Mormons under arms, and obtain from the leaders thereof the correctness of the various reports in circulation—the true intent and meaning of their present movements, and their views generally regarding the difficulties existing between them and Jackson County—I did, in company with other gentlemen, call upon the said leaders of the Mormons, at their camp in Clay County; and now give to the people of Clay County their written statement, containing the substance of what passed between us. (Signed)

CORNELIUS GILLIUM.

PROPOSITIONS, &C., OF THE "MORMONS."

Being called upon by the above named gentlemen, at our camp, in Clay County, to ascertain from the leaders of our men, our intentions, views, and designs, in approaching this county in the manner that we have: we therefore, the more cheerfully comply with their request, because we are called upon by gentlemen of good feelings, and who are disposed for peace and an amicable adjustment of the difficulties existing between us and the people of Jackson County. The reports of our intentions are various, and have gone abroad in a light calculated to arouse the feelings of almost every man. For instance, one report is, that we intend to demolish the printing office in Liberty; another report is, that we intend crossing the Missouri River on Sunday next, and falling upon women and children, and slaying them; another is, that our men were employed to perform this expedition, being taken from manufacturing establishments in the East that had closed business; also, that we carried a flag bearing "PEACE" on one side and "WAR AND BLOOD" on the other; and various others too numerous to mention. All of which, a plain declaration of our intentions, from under our own hands, will show are not correct. In the first place, it is not our intention to commit hostilities against any man or set of men. It is not our intention to injure any man's person or property, except in defending ourselves. Our flag has been exhibited to the above gentlemen, who will be able to describe it. Our men were not taken from any manufacturing establishment. It is our intention to go back upon our lands in Jackson County, by order of the Executive of the State, if possible. We have brought our arms with us for the purpose of self-defense, as it is well known to almost every man of the State that we have every reason to put ourselves in an attitude of defense, considering the abuse we have suffered in Jackson County. We are anxious for a settlement of the difficulties existing between us, upon honorable and constitutional principles. We are willing for twelve disinterested men, six to be chosen by each party, and these men shall say what the possessions of those men are worth who can not live with us in the county; and they shall have their money in one year; and none of the Mormons shall enter that county to reside until the money is paid. The damages that we have sustained in consequence of being driven away, shall also be left to the above twelve men. Or they may all live in the county, if they choose, and we will never molest them if they will let us alone and permit us to enjoy our rights. We want to live in peace with all men, and equal rights is all we ask. We wish to become permanent citizens of this State, and wish to bear our proportion in support of the Government, and to be protected by its laws. If the above proposals are complied with, we are willing to give security on our part; and we shall want the same of the people of Jackson County for the performance of this agreement. We do not wish to settle down in a body, except where we can purchase the lands with money: for to take possession by conquest or the shedding of blood, is entirely foreign to our feelings. The shedding of blood we shall not be guilty of, until all just and honorable means among men prove insufficient to restore peace.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 473-475.

The above is signed, Joseph Smith, jr., F. G. Williams, Lyman Wight, Roger Orton, Orson Hyde, J. S. Carter. Just see how much humiliation Traum and his fellows would have been saved from, had he returned from his investigation, with the facts in hand!

TRAUM ON BLAIR.

Taking a forward step, and passing from the Missouri episode, Traum attacks the evidences of the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith as used by Elder Blair, in Joseph the Seer. But he strikes a very soft pedal, in referring to the strong bulwark built up by Elder Blair on the subject. The reason is, no doubt, that he must make a feint at all hazards as he rapidly traverses the ground. The first criticism of any note is found on page 255, quoting Elder Blair's reference to Doctrine and Covenants 4: 3, he himself gives evidence of the ease with which copyists can add to, and make mistakes even in transcribing printed matter, for Traum adds the word not, in the phrase, "and their testimony shall also go forth unto the condemnation of this generation, if they harden (not) their hearts against them. The word not is added by Traum. Elder Blair's statement is as follows:

In May, 1829, he predicted that the church he was about to found and organize, would become "a great and marvelous work among the children of men."—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 1. Such is its history already, though it has but fairly begun its work. In March of the same year he predicted the coming of the cholera "scourge"; and that it would continue its ravages among the nations, from time to time, till the earth became "empty."—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 3. The first case cholera in Western Europe occurred in 1831; in Great Britain in 1832; and in North America, in the summer of the same year; though it had existed in some parts of Asia for many years before this. The most eminent physicians pronounce it a "dreadful scourge," and state that its "essential character, and true origin are yet entirely unknown."—Joseph the Seer, p. 178, Plano edition.

Elder Traum says that the phrase "desolating scourge," is "not in the revelation at all," as it appears in the Book of Commandments, from one end to the other." On page 256 he thus expatiates:

This is that famous section which we know was "doctored" to make way for Joseph's larger pretensions, for, having been told in the first instance that he should "pretend to no other gift," he very adroitly manipulated the "revised version" to read "until my purpose is fulfilled in this." And common sense would argue that if he were capable of changing the revelation of heaven to mean something entirely different from what it originally said, it would not be difficult to vindicate his "marvelous and wonderful mission" as a prophet by the same means, especially as he was so sure to have at least one fulfillment to his many predictions. This is answer number two.

Elder Traum should remember, that he offers no proof that Joseph Smith changed the revelations, and had he "returned from the investigation of Mormonism," laden with facts, he would have known that which we have offered in another part of this review, that the Book of Commandments was faulty by means of typographical and transcriptive errors, and by means of the destruction of the printing press by the mob, in Missouri, resulting in the issue being incomplete, unfinished, and scattered in the streets. Also that "comparisons" were had with "original copies, and the needed corrections made." That the Book of Commandments was never adopted by any quorum, or quorums of the church, nor by the church, nor any leading man, or men of the church. But the Doctrine and Covenants, as we now have it, was adopted by the church, and a part of the committee who compared with the original copies of revelations, and gave the needed correction, was Oliver Cowdery, a member of both the first and second committees. We present the following items from church records, and submit the affair:

"The Assembly being duly organized, and after transacting certain business of the church, proceeded to appoint a committee to arrange the items of doctrine of Jesus Christ, for the government of the Church of Latter Day Saints, which church was organized and commenced its rise on the 6th of April, 1830. These items are to be taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations which have been given to said church up to this date, or shall be until such arrangement is made."

Oliver Cowdery was one of the committee appointed in May, 1832, whose duty was to "review and prepare" the revelations, etc.; he was one of the clerks at the meeting of September 24, 1834, and was one of the committee then appointed to "arrange the items of doctrine," etc., from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations then given, and those that might be given during the time that the committee were doing their work. See Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, no. 11, also Times and Seasons, vol. 5, no. 16, p. 625.

Those who are disturbing themselves and others treat of the Book of Commandments of 1833, as if it were of a more sacred and infallible character than the Doctrine and Covenants of 1835. That the men engaged in the work of preparing the matter and publishing both books did not think so is clear. In the eighth number of the Messenger and Advocate, for May, 1835, Oliver Cowdery himself being the editor, there appears the following editorial in regard to the then forthcoming book:

"These lectures [Lectures on Faith—Ed.] are being compiled and arranged with other documents of instruction and regulation for the church, titled 'Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Latter Day Saints,' &c. It may be well, for the information of the churches abroad, to say, that this book will contain the important revelations on doctrine and church government now extant, and will, we trust, give them a perfect understanding of the doctrine believed by this society. Such a work has long been called for, and if we are prospered a few weeks, shall have this volume ready for distribution. A full detail of its contents will be given hereafter."

In the reprint of the Evening and Morning Star, published at Kirtland, Ohio, and of which Oliver Cowdery was editor, in the first number of volume two, page 196, prefacing an extract from the Book of Mormon, the editor says:

"We have again inserted the articles and covenants according to our promise in a previous number, for the benefit of our brethren abroad who have not the first number of the first volume. As there were some errors which got into them by transcribing, we have since obtained the original copy and made the necessary corrections."

No one could know whether there were errors in the first publication of the Commandments better than Oliver Cowdery who was a member of both the first and the second committees on their preparation and compilation.

In the Prospectus for the second volume of the Evening and Morning Star it is stated in reference to the revelations and commandments as given in the Star before:

"It is also proper for us to say, that in the first fourteen numbers, in the revelations, are many errors, typographical, and others, occasioned by transcribing manuscript; but as we shall have access to originals, we shall endeavor to make proper corrections."

On August 17, 1835, two years after the destruction of the press, at Independence, and one after the appointment of the compiling committee of which we have given the names, the church met at Kirtland, to hear and act upon the report of the committee.

John Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery, and W. W. Phelps, all of the members of the first committee were present, Oliver Cowdery and Sidney Rigdon presiding, W. W. Phelps and John Whitmer, acting as presidents of the High Council.

After the assembly was organized and had met after the noon recess, the committee, through Oliver Cowdery made their report, and the compilation of Articles of Faith, revelations and commandments, under the title of the "Book of Doctrine and Covenants" was introduced for consideration, acceptance or rejection.

Joseph Smith and F. G. Williams were absent, and Sidney Rigdon for the committee stated the manner in which it was proposed to "obtain the voice of the assembly for or against said book."

W. W. Phelps, the man who printed the Book of Commandments in 1833, at Independence, was the first one to testify that the book was true; John Whitmer, one of the first committee, was the second one that testified that the book was true; thus verifying the action of the last appointed committee in making the corrections, which so much has been said about. The book as an entirety, and as presented to the assembly by Oliver Cowdery, on the part of the committee, was then properly voted upon and unanimously adopted and ordered printed. The articles on Marriage and Governments, were then presented and also adopted by the unanimous vote of the assembly, and also ordered to be printed in the Book of Covenants.

It will be noticed that Joseph Smith and F. G. Williams, two of the last committee on preparation and compilation were not present, but all of the first committee were; and all had a first and prominent part in setting the completed compilation, with the corrections made in the unfinished Book of Commandments of 1833 in it, before the people; Oliver Cowdery presenting it, W. W. Phelps and John Whitmer both testifying that it was true.—SAINTS' HERALD, January 23, 1892.

"DESOLATING SCOURGE."

Of Joseph prophesying the visitation of this "desolating scourge," our critic says, page 256, "It was not a difficult matter for the prophet to enhance his reputation as a prophet, by prophesying something which history, 'that faithful chronicler,' had already declared had come to pass."

Not so fast, Elder Traum, there have been seven visitations of cholera on the Eastern and Western Continents, since 1830, two of which were confined to the Eastern Continent, and five ravishing both the East and West. The first one confined to Asia, gave the "boy" at Palmyra, New York, no ground on which to base the prophecy. We doubt his ever knowing it, as it started from India, and went eastward around the coast to Japan, and then westward through Persia into Arabia, on one hand, and northward to the confines of Russia on the other. But how did he know of the terrible outbursts in 1842, 1848, 1865, 1871, 1873? These dates we copy from charts published by the Chicago Tribune, and the routes taken by the "scourge" in its death traffic from land to land, and "from time to time," we omit because of length. But the pathway of the dreadful epidemic is the usual commercial lines. Again we ask, How did Joseph know of these visitations, "since," Traum says, "The change was affected in the revelation," and which have come since Joseph Smith's departure from earth life? I suppose that Jesus Christ did not "enhance his reputation as a prophet," by prophesying "wars and earthquakes and commotions," which history, "that faithful chronicler," had already declared had come to pass. Who couldn't make objection, and criticize on such grounds, and what prophet of God will it not strike? Such as Traum adopts, and his followers indorse, is indeed very superficial.

WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Elder Traum proceeds to attack the prophecy on the rebellion in true Hun and Vandal style. The revelation reads:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place: for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States, and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations.

And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war.

And it shall come to pass also, that the remnants who are left of the land will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation; and thus, with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn; and with famine, and plague, and earthquakes, and the thunder of heaven, and the fierce and vivid lightning also, shall the inhabitants of the earth be made to feel the wrath, and indignation, and chastening hand of an Almighty God, until the consumption decreed hath made a full end of all nations; that the cry of the Saints, and of the blood of the Saints, shall cease to come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, from the earth, to be avenged of their enemies.

Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved, until the day of the Lord come; for behold it cometh quickly, saith the Lord. Amen.

Concerning this prophecy Elder Traum writes as follows:

Blair claims for this prophecy a date as early as 1851, when it was published in the Pearl of Great Price in Liverpool, England. He says also that John Hyde used it in a work published in 1857, citing the events in it to show that Joseph was a false prophet. Blair then specifies the particulars in which the prophecy was fulfilled. With this prophecy the author we are following closes his case until he comes to the question of the marvelous work that was done by his prophet in the founding of the church. Of the revelation itself there is claimed a date as early as Christmas, 1832.

We now have two questions to ask. First, why was not this revelation published in 1833 in the Book of Commandments? and, second, was there any occasion for this revelation to have been spoken in the precise form that was given it in 1832? Taking these in reverse order, we glean the following:

The presidential election of 1832 was conducted in the midst of an excitement, and in that election South Carolina cast her eleven votes for candidates of her own. Already opposed to a high tariff, she was further incensed by the increase of tariff in 1832. South Carolina, believing in the doctrine of state sovereignty, felt that she could secede or stay in the Union as she saw fit. She loved the Union, but she also believed in her own sovereignty, hence called a convention late in 1832 to declare the tariff law null and void. The President, although opposed to the tariff law, had sworn to uphold it and intended to enforce the law at all hazards. South Carolina then "suspended" her nullification act, until after the adjournment of Congress. In 1833 there was enacted a "compromise tariff," under which, until 1842, duties should be gradually diminished. This afforded the occasion for Smith to make his prophecy that the war should begin in South Carolina. And this answers the other question concerning the nonpublication of the revelation in 1833 or in 1835; the storm cloud had passed away, and Smith was afraid to risk his prophetship on the revelation. He meant that war should begin in 1832, or near that time, not being able to see how South Carolina could back down from her position, especially when there was a President as determined as was that State. Instead, then, of it being a prophecy of the rebellion, it was a prophecy of war right then.

Yes, the revelation published by Hyde is in full accord with the prophecies of Joseph, given earlier. One given in January, 1831, gives intimation, as we read in Doctrine and Covenants 38:6, thus:

Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own land. I tell you these things because of your prayers; wherefore, treasure up wisdom in your bosoms, lest the wickedness of men reveal these things unto you, by their wickedness, in a manner that shall speak in your ears, with a voice louder than that which shall shake the earth; but if ye are prepared, ye shall not fear.

The people in that early day were educated to the belief that the millennium was soon to be ushered in through the joint effort of the "press and missionary work," so far as "Columbia the gem of the ocean" was concerned. The Disciples especially were enthusiastic in this belief, see Hayden's History, pp. 184, 185, in northern Ohio. If wars were imminent, the old country, foreign lands, were the fomenting elements, and passing through changes from the old to the new, the battles of republicanism were to be fought out on eastern soil. Joseph bids them come nearer home ere God spoke with "a voice that would shake the earth."

The second prophetic statement was given March 7, 1831, and recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 45:11, as follows:

Ye hear of wars in foreign lands, but, behold, I say unto you, They are nigh, even at your doors, and not many years hence ye shall hear of wars in your own lands.

"Foreign lands" echoing the dreadful war fiend, did not erect a barrier to its encroachment in "your own land." In 1843 the same thought is repeated, and John Hyde, jr., who attacked the church in a work issued in 1857, records the prophecy as one militating against the prophetic character of Joseph Smith. He actually thought he had a case against Joseph, and would cite the prophecy as a signal failure. The statement of April 6, 1843, reads in Hyde's work:

I prophesy in the name of the Lord God, that the commencement of the difficulties which will cause much bloodshed, previous to the coming of the Son of Man, will be in South Carolina (it probably may arise through the slave question); this a voice declared to me, while I was praying earnestly on the subject, December 25, 1832.

In 1833 Joseph wrote to N. E. Seaton, editor of a newspaper in Rochester, New York, under date of January 4, 1833:

And now I am prepared to say by the authority of Jesus Christ, that not many years shall pass away, before the United States shall present such a scene of bloodshed as has not a parallel in the history of our nation; pestilence, hail, famine, and earthquakes will sweep the wicked of this generation from off the face of the land, to open and prepare the way for the return of the lost tribes of Israel from the north country. The people of the Lord, those who have complied with the requisitions of the new covenant, have already commenced gathering together to Zion, which is in the State of Missouri; therefore I declare unto you the warning which the Lord has commanded me to declare unto this generation, remembering that the eyes of my Maker are upon me, and that to him I am accountable for every word I say, wishing nothing worse to my fellow men than their eternal salvation; therefore "fear God and give glory to him for the hour of his judgment is come."—Repent ye, repent ye, and embrace the everlasting covenant, and flee to Zion before the overflowing scourge overtake you, for there are those now living upon the earth whose eyes shall not be closed in death until they see all these things, which I have spoken, fulfilled. Remember these things; call upon the Lord while he is near, and seek him while he may be found, is the exhortation of your unworthy servant,
JOSEPH SMITH, Jr.

—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 707.

This fixes the responsibility, we believe, for the revelation touching the rebellion.

All must admit that at the time these statements were made and put in print, war had not occurred, the revelation in question bearing date of December 25, 1832. That "the presidential election of 1832 was conducted in the midst of excitement," as Traum says, we are prepared to admit, but not one half so much so, as other presidential elections since. Traum must remember "the alarm bell of secession did not toll until thirty years later." Edward S. Ellis, A. M., in the History of Our Country, vol. 3, p. 746. He should remember that the nullification ordinance was not the disunion convention. The tariff of 1828 and 1832 agreed in the matter that no duties on imports were to be paid within the State after February 1, 1832. The ordinance of nullification contained the provision that "no appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States against its own validity should be permitted," and our critic is doubtless aware of the historic fact that General Jackson's proclamation, with Henry Clay's "compromise," caused South Carolina to abandon the Ordinance of Nullification in 1833, and the Encyclopedia Universal, by Johnson, says "the heresy of nullification slept until 1860." It was during this sweet, peaceful, "sleeping" time of the "ordinance," that existing probabilities, were against, not in favor of the fulfillment of this prophecy, for the prophecy was first given in 1832, not after "1833, and until 1842" as Traum says. And to say that Smith "meant that war should begin" at that date, "1832," as this critic asserts, is to falsify the reading of the prophecy itself. The letter to Seaton says, "Not many years shall pass away before the United States shall present," etc. The prophecy before us says, "Concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina." He then predicts that "war will be poured out on all nations beginning at that place." He then prophetically assigns the reason for "war beginning at that place," not "the tariff," but something affecting South Carolina's interest in chattelhood, i. e., "slavery." At the time the prophecy was given, no doubt Joseph Smith was exercised in mind in common with other people, over the attitude of South Carolina claiming the right to nullify the act of Congress, and to withdraw from the Union, but other men, called great, arrived at opposite conclusions from those Mr. Smith put forth, and the "storm cloud" was much closer to them. As proof, I could mention Henry Ward Beecher, who preached in the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago, Illinois, July 24, 1883, and whose sermon was published and read in the papers the day following, and this is, in part, what he said: "About thirty years ago I delivered a peace address in which I prophesied that there would be no more wars among Christian Nations; that the differences between countries would be arbitrated; but since then, five of the most terrific wars on record have occurred, and I have quit prophesying. The European nations are armed to the teeth. The spirit of war was never so rife as now."

"Thirty years" from the time he delivered the above words would take him to 1853, just seven years previous to the dreadful conflict, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina. How came this giant, statesmanlike mind, only seven years before the war, to arrive at such an opposite conclusion as he prophesied in that peace address, to the conclusion Joseph formed, and prophesied thirty years before the war, if no inspiration was involved? Just which man prophesied truly we leave Elder Traum and his coterie to determine. They must have concluded to admit that it was fulfilled, for they treat it as a "guess." But it wasn't. It was a clear, unequivocal prophecy.

The final move which involved South Carolina in rebellion occurred twenty-eight years after the prophecy was given, and is historically recorded as follows:

On October 25, 1860, a meeting of the prominent political leaders of the State, including its members of Congress, was held at the house of Ex-Governor Hammond, and it was unanimously resolved that South Carolina should at once secede from the Union in the event of Mr. Lincoln's election. Governor Gist called the legislature together in extra session by proclamation on November 5, the day after the presidential election, ostensibly to choose electors, but really as his message shows, to take measures for immediate secession. The legislature ordered an election for a convention and appointed December 17, 1860, as the opening day. It met on that day at Columbia, but adjourned to Charleston, and on December 25, 1860, passed the ordinance of secession by a unanimous vote of 169 yeas.—Johnson's Universal Encyclopedia, art. Secession.

All the leading features of the revelation were fulfilled subsequent to this act, and scoffs and jeers will not affect it. The wisdom and craft on the part of the southern leaders was manifest in choosing the interval between the November election of 1860, and the inauguration of President Lincoln, as the opportune moment for the dissolution. The move of South Carolina was contagious. Disunion spread like insanity among the southern people. By February 1, six other States gave themselves wholly to the cause of dissolution, and the statement of the revelation that "the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States," was an accomplished fact. The inevitable end came, the triumph of right over wrong, of justice over injustice, and the rebellion fell in utter wreck with a resounding crash heard by all nations. The great cause of the Union, with spotless robe, shining face, and majestic form, came forth to meet and receive the surrender of her gallant though unfortunate foe. From murky battlefield, and cloud, from the stifling pens of slavery, the dark spirit of secession and slavery emerged in garments stained with blood, her brow in gloom, and the lust and pride of empire glittering in her eyes, and prostrating herself in that majestic presence, capitulated, herself the guilty cause of that irrepressible conflict.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE GOSPEL IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

(No. 1 of Canadian Writers' Series.)

NOTE.—This is the first of a series of articles by Canadian writers on a variety of subjects that especially concern Canada and Canadians. Elder McMullen is a pioneer in the work in British Columbia and is still a diligent worker in the capacity of president of Vancouver Branch. Articles to follow this will be by such writers as Mrs. Charlotte Pearson, Saint Thomas, Ontario, on "Church leaders from Canada"; Mrs. Floralice Miller, Dunnville, Ontario, on "Religion among the Canadian Indians"; P. H. Philippin, London, Ontario, answering the question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" These will be followed by a dozen or more other interesting articles.—R. J. F.

Address communications for this department to R. J. Farthing, Box 191, Lamoni, Iowa.

About the year 1894, a Latter Day Saint, with his family, left Des Moines, Iowa, having been directed to go to the Pacific coast, and especially to Vancouver, and to take a boat which he had seen in vision sometime before, which would land him in a coal mining town on Vancouver Island. By the efforts of this family the work was started in British Columbia.

From the time they landed in Nanaimo the family gathered around the table every Sunday and had their Sunday school; and while our brother worked in the coalpit and out of it he was warning his neighbors; but their hearts seemed as hard as the coal they were digging.

Finally, after persistent writing to those in authority, Elder Daniel Macgregor was appointed to labor in British Columbia; and in July, 1899, he arrived in Vancouver, thence to Nanaimo. He held one meeting, but conditions did not warrant his staying there.

Leaving Nanaimo, he found his way to Chilliwack, without money or friends, except one, Alex McMullen, of Arthur, Ontario. They at once found a schoolhouse and preached the first gospel sermon in the mighty Fraser Valley. The first sermon aroused the ire of the Christian Adventists, who, fearing for their craft, sent for their great general by the name of Hunt, of Mormon-eating fame, and, as the Irishman would say, the fight commenced. For seven nights it raged, but he could not stand the fierce attacks of the clan Macgregor. When the smoke had cleared away and the water had become clear, four or five of his best soldiers enlisted with the Latter Day Saint regulars. During that summer and fall, about thirty were baptized, and upon the arrival of R. C. Evans in British Columbia a branch was organized; with Henry Stady as presiding elder, Alex McMullen priest, and John Stady teacher. This was the first branch of Latter Day Saints in British Columbia.

From this branch some moved to Vancouver, among whom were the writer and his wife, and later Elder Magregor and wife. We labored as best we could with a large tent, on almost every prominent corner in the city, also in New Westminster, with but little results. There we found J. S. Rainey and wife, also Sister Rainey's father and mother and the rest of the family lived at Sunburry, some few miles away. With these and Vancouver Saints and a few baptized, a branch was organized. J. S. Rainey was elected president; A. McMullen, priest.

The next summer Alex was ordained an elder. He and Brother Dan labored together, covering a good deal of territory. They met with much opposition and finally gave up and returned to the East.

About the next year we were transferred from the Canada Mission to the Pacific Slope Mission, since which time we have had the following workers: T. J. Bell, J. W. Roberts, G. Thorburn, J. Davis, J. D. Stead, Plumb, and William Johnson the pioneer Saint of British Columbia. We have had visits from President Joseph Smith, F. A. Smith, and G. T. Griffiths.

By the efforts of Brethren Johnson and G. T. Griffiths, a few noble Saints were raised up in Nanaimo and a branch organized, since disorganized by the removal to Seattle of Elder Johnson, who is now president of the district.

Upon the death of J. S. Rainey, I was elected president of New Westminster Branch, having prior to his death been called to the eldership, and I am at present ably assisted by Brother Samuel Pope, he looking after the work in New Westminster, and your humble servant laboring in Vancouver.

In Vancouver we have a nice hall at 2422 Scott Street. We have been assisted very much the last two years by Elder Ammon White, who sojourned with us about eight months, also by Brother J. A. Kettlewell, of Longwood Branch, Ontario, and Sister Mabel Clark, who have helped us in many ways.

At present we are distributing one thousand bills each Sunday morning, and the pioneer elder, Daniel Macgregor, tells them the good old story. He also preaches at New Westminster every Sunday evening; and at Chilliwack, his old battle ground, five nights of the week. Chilliwack is eighty miles away, but he has baptized some there already. There are some very near the kingdom here also. Much more could be told regarding the work here, but time forbids.

Ever praying for the spread of the gospel in all the world, I am your coworker in gospel bonds,

ISAAC S. McMULLEN.

A Step Toward Church Union.

Church union, in the sense that it is generally understood, may be still far distant, but practical churchmen are not waiting for the final consummation to take some of the first steps. A striking example of this has been worked out at Montreal and, very rightly, has been regarded as an advance towards that greater measure of unity which seems bound to come in Canada.

Until this year there have been four theological colleges located just on the border of McGill University grounds in Montreal. Each of them had a separate building, a complete staff of teachers, and conducted its affairs quite as if the others did not exist.

During the year, however, clear-sighted men from each of these colleges came together and decided that there was a waste of labor that did no credit to the churches and that only served to emphasize denominational differences. The proposal was made that the staffs of the four colleges—Anglican, Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational—be consolidated as far as teaching was concerned and that the classes for the different professors be likewise consolidated. This has been done and each of the separate colleges now has available a staff of between fifty and sixty teachers. These teachers, in turn, have fewer subjects to teach, so that they are able to specialize and to do more hand-to-hand work among the men under their charge. The consolidation, without affecting in any way the really distinctive character of the church teaching, will not fail to give a broader tone to the whole instruction and result in a wider feeling of unity among the men themselves.

And, after all, perhaps no more important result will come than the new feeling that these men will take into their work after graduation. If college professors can thus agree on doctrinal points, there is little likelihood of the church memberships having very serious differences.—Editorial in London Free Press.

Dear Herald: It gives me pleasure to see the young men of the church coming forward as we note in the late issue of the HERALD. It is surely a pleasure to the retiring ones to see the church going into the hands of able young men like I. A. Smith and Brother Burgess.

I have a sister-in-law living in Spokane, Washington, who says she would be glad to mingle with the Saints. She is not acquainted with the work. Will not some of the Saints there give her a saintly call? Take a Cheweny and Medical Lake car and get off at Wrietmire station; go south to the first new house.

We have a nice little branch here, with room to be nicer. We organized a Religio some time ago, with the writer as president. The question was asked him, Who baptized John the Baptist? The answer was, Jesus. Note closely the language: "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to be baptized of him (first demand for baptism), then John said, I have need to be baptized of thee" (second demand for baptism). This was done in the water before the whole congregation. Note how precise John was as to who should baptize him: "I have need to be baptized of thee." John had not been baptized as yet, and there was no one to do it but Jesus. Do you think Jesus ran off and would not do it? Then tell the people that except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God? Do any of you elders believe you could refuse to baptize a proper candidate for baptism? If you could not, how do you think Jesus could? When and where did Jesus ever refuse to administer to any coming to him properly? Was poor John fooled in him? Did not John have the spirit of discernment, and this not weakened by the fact that "after this I baptized Oliver, then he baptized me, for we were so commanded"?

I hope this will be of some benefit.

Earnestly contending for the faith,

Dear Readers: Possibly a word from these parts will not be amiss. As for the Sunday school work, it is on the onward and upward list, and at the present I am holding forth in the branch, known as the O'Fallon Branch, recently organized, where less than two years ago a Sunday school was organized, and at present has an enrollment of about seventy-five.

It was here on September 1, that a field day was enjoyed by a happy crowd of Sunday school workers, who held the regular session at 10 a. m., after which Brother T. J. Elliott delivered an interesting discourse. He being the assistant superintendent of the district, seemed alive to the duties devolving upon him. After the sermon a bounteous feast was spread under the trees in the yard and all partook with satisfaction, after which, at 2.30, the preaching service was in charge of Brother Elliott, and as a rally day song was composed by the writer, it was rendered as a trio by Brethren Wilds, Elliott, and myself, after which the writer was the speaker, when again supper was spread, after which a spiritual prayer meeting was enjoyed, and so the day closed with God's recognition.

Dots and Dashes from Southern Missouri.

We wish to inform your many readers that we are still pushing the battle to the front. The month of September was a busy one for the work in southern Missouri. The writer held an eight session debate with the "Missionary Baptist Church of Jesus Christ," beginning September 1, and lasting four days, two sessions per day. Three propositions were discussed, number 1, Book of Mormon, and Joseph Smith. Number 2, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Number 3, "Missionary Baptist Church of Jesus Christ." Say, that sounds the least bit new, doesn't it? This debate was held near Ellington Missouri, a new place for our work. Brother R. H. Counts was the first one of our elders to open the work there. Like many other new openings, the religious element had thought it a small thing to "put the Mormons out of business." Elation was high over a supposed "victory." It was said that, "The Saints would not get through with the first proposition." But we just waded in with our gloves off, and made out to stay with them the full four days. And on my closing speech of the debate I took ten minutes of my time in extending an invitation to all that were convinced, and converted to the great angel message of these last days, that I had been defending through that debate, to come and give me their hand for baptism. And say, Mr. Editor, I only got seven fine men and women for the waters of regeneration. "Hallelujah."

There were many little things of interest which came up during the debate. Stale criticisms were the only "stock in trade" of our opponent. He flew to the statement in the Book of Mormon where it said that Christ was born at Jerusalem. He tried to make it read "in" instead of "at." But when I made him read it just as it was, and then drew Webster on him and read, "at," "near to; in; by; on; with; towards," I seemed to get the people to see that it was Reverend Howard that was wrong, and the book right. When he got in the lead on his proposition, he was "going to show how the Baptist had come all the way down from Christ." But I gave him a reminder, that when he started out of that canyon for Jerusalem, with his church, I would show him a rocky road of travel, and that before that proposition ended that I would show to that people that the Baptist Church looked no more like the church of Jesus Christ described in the New Testament than a chicken roost looked like the portals of glory.

At the close of the debate one Baptist lady fell into a spell and said to her husband, "Oh, Bill, the Mormons has got the victory, and gone with it, and I never can stand it, and I am not going to try to stand it; I will wade blood to my neck."

Brother Counts and I had to sing them down a time or two before the sessions would begin, as they would get so loud with their spitting fire and smoke at "the Mormons." This was a great effort for our work in this new place, and has been the means of getting the restored gospel before many who otherwise would not have heard it. We left many warm friends there; and some that were warm, but not so friendly. From there we made our way to Ironton, Missouri, where Brother Albert Richardson had billed us for a meeting. Brother Counts went to Mill Springs, Missouri, where he is to hold a meeting.

I opened up the work in Pilot Knob, Missouri, with a ten-day meeting. Pilot Knob is one mile from Ironton, Missouri, and is where the Blue and the Gray fought a bloody battle in the sixties. At the close of my efforts here I got four names for baptism, and right close to "Fort Davidson," right on the battle grounds, in a bright little stream of water, I led those four dear souls through the waters of regeneration. One brother whose wife was a Catholic gave us an interesting time, when Brother John gave her to know that he was ready for the waters of baptism at the hands of that Latter Day Saint elder. Brother John had to start for the water without any "hat." Couldn't find it. And say, it so turned out, that the lady gave me to understand, more fully, what it meant for one to cross the line of the Catholic religion. Think of one demanding of their companion to stay out of all other churches, "as long as I live, unless you can join mine."

The Utah elders had given this town quite a little stay, but when I got there and gave the people to know that Utah Mormons had no lawful right to claim that they were "true Latter Day Saints," and when I gave the difference between the two churches it all seemed to be plain to the people. This is a fine new opening for the restored gospel. Brother Counts writes me that he has baptized two more at Mill Springs, and more are near the water. Brother George Edwards writes me from McComb, Missouri, "Baptized two more, and others almost persuaded." Brother J. F. Cunningham, Thayer, Missouri, "Baptized two dear souls here last Sunday and am wanting to get out in the field."

I suppose that I must have overworked myself a little the last month, as I had a hard chill yesterday. I only made and preached thirty-eight speeches and sermons, baptized eleven, opened two new places, and did other work connected with my office.

"Big red apples" are selling here now for ten cents per bushel.

Kirtland Reunion.

The joint reunion of the Pittsburg, West Virginia, Kirtland, and Ohio districts convened at Kirtland, Ohio, August 15 to 25, 1912. Apostle R. C. Russell, R. Baldwin, J. C. McConaughy, S. Brown, and N. L. Booker were chosen to preside. The prayer services were unusually good. The gifts of the Spirit were made manifest at almost every meeting. The preaching services were very edifying and interesting. Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, Ontario, was present and gave us some excellent sermons.

Summer school work was conducted by Brother Charles Fry, and kindergarten work by Sister Griffiths.

The reunion was not so largely attended as on previous years, but I believe that all present were edified and built up spiritually, and went away feeling that it is truly good to meet in the house of the Lord.

It was unanimously decided to hold another reunion next year. Time and place for such was left with the committee, which consists of C. Ed. Miller, J. A. Becker, N. L. Booker, Gard Kirkendall, R. Baldwin, L. F. P. Curry, J. C. McConaughy, and the missionary in charge.

FRANCES C. BOOKER, Secretary of Reunion.

The Gospel Makes Men Free.

The divine Master declared, "The truth shall make you free." Freedom is the central chord of the gospel, for without it life would not be worth the living.

It is the acceptance of truth, and the applying of it to the acts of life that brightens the intellect, quickens the perception, and liberates the soul; yea more, it purifies the heart, stimulates the thoughts, modifies the temper, makes serene the life, uplifts and ennoble the character of man, and thus fits him for the duties of life, enables him to transmute the base metals of selfish, slavish lust into the unalloyed gold of pure love and true service.

Freedom! What is it? Let us not mistake the term. Some have thought that freedom meant the right to indulge in selfish gratification, to use the things of this world for selfish purposes, or to do that which seemed to momentarily satisfy the carnal mind; all of which has a tendency to captivate and enslave.

Freedom in the mind of the writer implies the right use of everything, the bringing of one's self into harmonious relationship with the overruling powers of the universe, the acquiring of a proper understanding, a willingness to get right, proceed right, and remain right all the time; the cultivating of a properly poised life, and the imbibing of that confidence, love, and serenity that will remove every doubt, dispel every fear, and transform the soul from a state of fear, discord, doubt, and sin, to one of happiness, tranquility, harmony, courage, assurance, liberty, and love. "Fear hath torment," says the beloved disciple, and it is true—for as long as fears predominate in the thoughts and lives of men, so long will they remain in bondage, so long will they be enslaved to the bestial passions of the flesh, and so long will they be captivated by the powers of wealth and popularity.

Freedom can and will only come to the individual who is willing and ready to meet life manfully, who is willing to accept truth wherever it may be found, and to for ever abandon preconceived ideas, notions, or traditions, and place his feet squarely and firmly upon the rock of truth, thus looking the whole world in the face, possessing no doubt, because truth can never falter or change; knowing no fear, because there is nothing to avoid or shun; because truth "maketh manifest" and "whatsoever maketh manifest is light and truth." Therefore, if one walk in the light he need entertain no fear, because his vision is clear, his step certain, and his course is easily discerned,—he is free because his life is harmonious; there are no discordant notes in it, he is not biased in mind, but is fully developed mentally, morally, socially, and spiritually; he can see the good in all, and attracts to himself all that is good in others, and never ceases to draw from the infinite source that ever-flowing stream of "perfect love" which the beloved disciple declares "casteth out all fear," and when fear is dispelled freedom is enthroned, but when fears are entertained bondage ensues.

When love actuates and predominates the thoughts, peace is the inevitable result, and where peace reigns freedom is enthroned, the soul is liberated and set free by the sloughing off of the old man, with his doubts and fears, and the putting on of the new man (Christ) which is renewed daily in power and in love by the workings of his Spirit in us, which is the power by which freedom and fullness of life are given unto the children of men.

Our freedom, then, consists in bringing ourselves into that condition of at-one-ment with God,—in learning what the truth is, and by living and abiding in it.

To the degree then that I accept truth, will I receive freedom; and to the degree that I hold to my idols, be they whatsoever they may, I am brought into bondage, and to that degree am I cutting off the avenues of life, for life can only come to those who are willing to receive; therefore, to be able to enter upon the possibilities of real life one must of necessity become conscious of the fact that apart from the divine life there can be no freedom, and if, therefore, we have entered into the infinite, by the accepting of the whole truth, so that the divine may enter into us, we will be able to know the real meaning and possibilities of life, being made free by the operation of the divine life manifesting itself in and through us, to the glory of our God and the blessing of our fellow men.

"If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." The Son can only make us free when we are willing to make ourselves free, i. e., when we are willing to part company with our idols, and think on the things that will make us free; when we are ready to give up our selfish longings and look on the good of our fellow men; when we are willing to use the means within our reach and develop thereby; when we are ready to heed the voice of inspiration, "to study all good books"; then and not until then can we be made free to enjoy the complete life and contentment of a Saint of God.

Hopefully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Kirtland Reunion.

As the Kirtland reunion is now a matter of history, and I have failed to see a mention of it in the church papers, I thought a few lines from some source relative to it might not be amiss.

The attendance was not so large as last year, which may be accounted for in this way; the committee thought last year we would give the people at least two years in which to visit the historic spot and view the Temple of the Lord and worship within its sacred walls. A great many availed themselves of the opportunity last year and those who could not, apparently made every effort to come this year, and most of them succeeded, as well as some who were there last year and returned this time.

As Kirtland is almost in one corner of the four districts represented by the reunion, we have as a committee almost come to the conclusion that a more central place will be sought next year.

I have during my mission labors visited quite a number of good reunions, but I make no mistake nor cast reflection on any of the past when I say that for spirituality this one exceeded any of the others. We were several times spoken to in the auricular manifestations of the Spirit, and at no time was there a rebuke offered, but from what we could glean from the various gifts the Lord recognized in his people an honest endeavor to be humble and full of love. Personal reference was made to several in the gifts, and they were instructed what to do and encouraged for what they had already accomplished. A Mr. Householder, the leader of a large choir in one of the popular churches of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, who came to visit us for a couple of days last year, took his vacation this summer so he could attend the entire reunion, and doing so he offered his services freely, which it is needless to say were gladly accepted and very much appreciated by all. The Lord, recognizing his integrity, spoke very encouraging words to him, which would lead us to infer that he is like one of old, "very near the kingdom." He testifies that though he has often sung the hymn called "The Temple of God," yet he never in any other building felt the peculiar, pleasing sensation thrill his being that he has experienced while singing it in the Kirtland Temple.

The only specially invited guest from a distance was Bishop R. C. Evans, accompanied by Sister Evans. They enjoyed themselves quite like at home, though they were on foreign soil, and even R. C., who has in the past attended so many reunions in a great many parts of the world, was not backward in stating that it was the best he ever attended, speaking of the spiritual conditions. Many were made glad when they heard our venerable patriarch, John H. Lake, speak in an unknown tongue to Bishop Evans, and listened to the interpretation by Sister Hattie Griffiths in her dispassionate manner. The following were the words as given to me by one present:

"Verily, verily, thus saith the Spirit unto you, my servant Richard C. Evans, I have heard thy prayers and seen thy tears. Be thou of good cheer, for I will be with thee in the future as I have been with thee in the past. Behold, thou hast accomplished a great work in the past, and there is much more to be performed by thee in the future, in the building up of my kingdom. Thy brethren have criticized thy work which I the Lord hath called thee to do, for behold thou hast been called to do a peculiar work, yea, that which is not plain unto men, hence thou hast been misunderstood; but if thou shalt strive to perform the work which I, the Lord, will from time to time require at thy hands, thou shalt rejoice and be exceeding glad, for thou art called a son of God."

One of the most pathetic scenes, and one which caused tears to well up in the eyes of many, was at the afternoon service at which Bishop Evans was the speaker and his "father in the gospel," Patriarch Lake, had charge. At the close of the speaker's discourse Brother Lake took R. C. by the hand, calling him his "boy Richard," and said about as follows: "I realize that, by the inevitable course of nature, this may be the last time I will have the privilege of having charge of a service of which my boy Richard will be the speaker, and I want to say in the presence of this congregation, the holy angels, and the God of heaven, that, though slight differences may have arisen in the past in which we did not see just eye to eye, yet that has all been banished, and thank God we are as good friends as ever before, and the evil power that sought to divide us has been thwarted in his designs." He then drew Richard to his bosom and they affectionately kissed each other.

The young in particular seemed to benefit by the reunion in general, and it would do any person good to hear the many lovely prayers and testimonies offered by them. The Spirit spoke very encouragingly to them upon several occasions.

While I can not attempt to mention the work done by the many individual workers and the excellent sermons delivered, yet I think I would fail in one of the chief objects to be accomplished by the writing of this article if I were to pass by without special mention of the good accomplished by the representative of the publishing houses of the church—Elder John F. Garver, of Lamoni, Iowa.

While he was always ready to do sales business for the publications; yet he did not burden the people, and when it came to his lecture on the college he was all that those sending him on that special mission could ask, for he took up the advantages as well as the disadvantages and weighed them fairly in the balance, and in the opinion of the writer, the college lost no friends.

But chief of all his accomplishments was his lecture on social purity. It seemed to be the very thing that was up to that time lacking in our course of varied discourses, and when he had concluded his lecture, I am satisfied, there was not a man or woman in the Temple but felt to a greater degree than ever his or her responsibility to both God and humanity, and had covenanted within their soul to be more careful of their demeanor toward the opposite sex.

I believe it would be well to have such lectures at all such gatherings, as well as more frequently in the home branches.

While the reunion was not perhaps as great a financial success as some might have wished, yet the dining hall in charge of committeemen Elders Becker and Booker, spared no pains to satisfy the most epicurean at the small fee charged, and certainly did themselves credit. The tents and cots were carefully looked after by the ever hustling C. Ed. Miller, which was a guarantee all was well.

Brother Charles Fry and Sister Griffiths ably conducted the summer school, while Elders Baldwin and Russell saw that the people got to and from the reunion.

Respectfully,

R. C. RUSSELL.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Abbie A. Horton, October 8, Independence, Missouri: "The Saints are called to mourn the the departure of our dearly beloved brother in the gospel, Elder G. H. Hilliard. He passed away Tuesday morning, about nine o'clock and our hearts are made sad with the realization of a great loss to us who have been ministered to by so noble, loving, and godly a character who was ever ready with kind word and generous deed toward those with whom he has been associated in church affiliation."

Brother Ben F. Parks, San Francisco, writes that he has brought four into the fold this year and has a number on the threshold.

News from Missions

Jerusalem, Palestine.

On the 29th of last month we had our first picnic of the Sunday school and the Religio Society of the Jerusalem Branch joined together at Solomon's Pools, about three miles south of Bethlehem, on the road to Hebron. It was enjoyed very much by all, fourteen children, from one to seventy-nine years of age. Half of the party rode on donkeys and the other half in a large carriage. We passed on the road to Bethlehem the beautifully located Convent of Elias and the Tomb of Rachael, which the Jews especially regard with reverence.

We of the donkey party, after having sent our little driver home, made all sorts of efforts to bring our long-eared friends into more speed. Our dear Brother Jenkins was a funny sight, with face backward, laboring upon his donkey, which was altogether very lazy and taking good (or bad) advantage of the fact that the regular driver, whose voice would have been sufficient to stir his lagging feet, was absent. But we failed altogether, and reached our destination in a disarranged order of battle only an hour or so later than our more favored carriage party, who, having gathered some thorns, the only material to be found around, were already beginning to warm the previously prepared meal. Unlike Europe or America, where you may easily find some nice green meadow or shadowing grove, we had to sit down upon the natural rock and so have some shade, near the wall of a large ruined building which it is said one Sultan Soliman erected for military purposes.

The hot Palestinian sun going on his way, we were obliged, after having enjoyed a nicely served dinner, to march around the great building with the whole caravan, donkeys, saddles, and cooking utensils, with the purpose of finding some shade; but, not like the Israelite of old, to have the high walls fall down, because in such a way we would have robbed ourselves of that which we were seeking for. After indulging in some fun we visited the three Pools of Solomon and found some of our boys had just taken a bath in one of them, not knowing that, as a native afterward informed us, there are many poisonous snakes in it, which not long ago killed a man seeking the same pleasure. As our boys escaped from this great danger without harm I was reminded of the accident of the Apostle Paul in Melita, when he also was not injured in any way by the viper. If we are in the spirit of obedience, we have the promise that no poison unknowingly or accidentally taken will do us any harm.

Afterwards we descended with the nearly eighty-year-old Sister Brown upon dark steps to the well from which all the inhabitants of Jerusalem are having pure spring water, which is mostly appreciated in a country where such water very seldom is to be found. After having taken a good cold supper we left the picnic place, and, coming to Bethlehem, visited the Church of the Birth of Christ and saw the place where, it is said, the manger stood in which our Savior was laid, and which is marked by a big silver star upon a fine polished plate of stone with the inscription: "Of the Virgin Mary Jesus Christ was born." It is a strange thing that Turkish soldiers have to take care of the place because of the bitter animosities exhibited between the so-called Christian denominations, notwithstanding the holy environment.

On the return journey the donkeys made better time. On reaching Jerusalem we were met at the Jaffa Gate by the regular driver, and his voice put life into our donkeys, so we came home from there in a splendid gallop. We were all happy to have spent a pleasant last time with a dear family who will leave us very soon, Sister Carr, having come only three years ago to the Holy Land from California and having been baptized into the church with two of her children and her husband whom she lost some weeks ago, after a long and painful sickness, will depart from us for Independence, with her three children. She will be missed in our little branch very much. Circumstances not allowing her to remain in the Holy City as she would desire, we wish her a very hearty godspeed, a safe voyage over the great deep, and a friendly welcome to her children in the city of Zion.

Your brother in the truth,

They have had rough times in Wigan, Lancashire, during the recent months. The Anti-Mormon people have visited the above-named town. They came from Liverpool and are out to tear down both the Utah body and ours. They appear to be working in conjunction with a theatrical company which represents apostate Mormonism on the stage. However, Elder W. H. Chandler, of Warrington, has worked manfully against them, and he has been supported by the Wigan Saints and occasional help from Manchester.

A fortnight ago we had outdoor services there in the afternoon and evening. At the latter service Elder Chandler addressed them lengthily and had question time at the close. We then essayed to leave for the station, when through the contemptible conduct of an Adventist, an uproar was created, which resulted in two of our brethren, Elder William Spargo, our branch president, and Brother Entwistle, being assaulted.

The matter is receiving the attention of the chief constable of Wigan.

The work still goes on. Outdoor work is being prosecuted in other places under the direction of Elder G. W. Leggott.

Gospel love to all,

W. R. ARMSTRONG.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, September 18, 1912.

Ohio.

Since the weather has turned too cool for tent work I have been summing up our summer's work, and trying to ascertain causes of success and reasons for failure. I have learned some lessons this summer which I expect to follow in the future, and I have made some mistakes which I expect to profit by.

About the time I entered the field last spring I heard a cry, "Come over and help me," from one who needed help at once—one who does not know defeat, R. C. Russell. He had gone into a little village near Wellston, Ohio, expecting to hold a series of meetings in a schoolhouse which was promised him in the winter, but as the old story goes, the house was refused him, and for a while it seemed that it was defeat that time. My wife and I, who have been operating a tent in this district for three seasons, were then at Hamden, a short distance away, getting ready to start a series of tent meetings there.

Brother Russell came over with such an urgent plea that we consented to move the tent to the country and try it there, though to me it seemed an unwise thing to do. We found an ideal camping ground in a grove three miles from Wellston, in a thickly settled community, and begun the battle, and battle it was, as we were in a stronghold of the United Brethren Church and the Christian Order people. It was here that the old lady, Christian Order, gave birth to the child, Independent Christian, or at least that division which claims Mr. Lot Wills as its founder.

The battle begun and continued; the crowd came and increased until our tent would not accommodate the people, so an old veteran in the gospel, Brother A. W. Kriebel, came to our rescue and provided a number of seats for the outside, and in this way we could seat about two hundred and fifty people, possibly more. The seats were well filled at almost every service.

We continued there for ten weeks and the last night the crowd was as large as the average of any week. We would have stayed there longer had we not been members of the reunion committee and duty called us to Kirtland to make arrangements for the reunion which begun August 15 and continued ten days.

We left the tent standing while we were away, for the Saints to use. After reunion we returned and held meetings for a while. The result of the efforts at this place is that thirty of the best people there were baptized, and as many more are very much interested, and I believe will accept the gospel. They now have in operation a branch with full set of officers, a Sunday school with an attendance of fifty or sixty, a Religio with about forty-five members. All the officers of branch, Sunday school, and Religio are of the new members, with but one exception.

The Sunday school is presided over by Brother Fred Shelton, a young man with a promising future, who if he makes a mistake or a blunder is more determined to try again. The Religio president is a babe in the gospel, but is a fine character and will make good if he continues as he has started out.

The Saints at this place are expecting to build a church this fall, as it is getting too cool to use the tent much longer.

I shall recommend tent work first, last, and all the time, and also suggest that a missionary take his wife along if possible. She will be a great help in many ways. I can not begin to tell how much benefit a woman is in camp. One must try it before knowing.

Sister Booker was quite a help to us in furnishing music and singing, which are very essential in tent work. She also conducted a summer school in the tent part of the time, and we are sorry she did not carry it out more extensively. She had sixty-seven children enrolled. We expect to try it again next summer if we are in tent work. So we learned a few things this summer which we hope to keep in memory. One of the things that we learned is, when we go into a place and get an interest to stay with it and work it out if it takes all year to do it. We want to remember the motto of the postage stamp, "Stick to it till you get there."

Bishop J. A. Becker, Elder J. W. Metcalf, my wife and I opened up here in a new place last week. Held meeting in a hall four nights, but as the old story goes, the doors were closed against us, so we are occupying in a private home. Have quite a number who attend every night and all seem very much interested.

It is more interesting to me to have a good interest manifested in my meetings than to have bodily comfort and bugless beds and Saints to wait on me and care for my every little need. My prayer is that God will give me souls for hire and not nice beds and Saints for servants.

N. L. BOOKER.

CREOLA, OHIO.

Iowa.

The ministerial work this conference year has in many respects been very pleasant, yet we have been made painfully aware that prejudice, indifference, and all manner of iniquity abounds, and its effects are plainly seen in the church in that the love of many has become cold.

Only the few are willing to take time to attend services, no matter how pleasant and convenient the place for service is made, or however ably the truth is presented. One of the very pleasant features of the tent services at Boone was that the Saints had at quite an expense had the tent lighted with electricity. The Saints as a rule seconded the efforts of Brother Turpen and myself there in every way that we could ask. Eight were received by baptism, and the membership of the branch was otherwise enlarged by letters of removal and certificates of baptism, until should all the members there attend the little chapel would be too limited in capacity. However, if the Saints there are faithful and united it will not be long till a new chapel will be erected, it being much needed now.

The reunion at Colo, Iowa, was certainly a success in many ways; in fact from nearly every point of view. The few Saints living there made every sacrifice that it seemed possible for anyone to make. God was present, but by the Spirit we were given to know that we could have enjoyed more bountifully of the heavenly gifts had a greater degree of thoughtfulness and devotion been exercised.

The Saints at Perry are occupying their little chapel, and but for an indebtedness on it they would be indeed happy in its occupancy. Anyone wishing to increase their happiness can do so by sending me what they desire to give. Especially is this made to the Saints of the Des Moines District, yet we would be thankful to receive from others. I was called to that place last Tuesday to preach a funeral sermon at the request of the relatives of William H. Isenhardt, one of the honorable men of the earth, who had died the Sunday previous of paralysis. His wife and family are Saints indeed, and he never discouraged them in their faith.

The tent work at Rhodes conducted by Brethren Turpen and Reiste resulted in awakening an interest on the part of some, but the enjoyment of the service was somewhat marred by sickness in the homes of Brethren C. M. Richeson and Charles Nirk, but at the last account the sick were improving.

Brother Turpen was called home on account of the illness of his wife. Brother Reiste was expected at Sandyville last Sunday, where there are a few Saints who are making a noble effort to keep the ensign of gospel liberty floating.

I spent near two weeks at Vandalia, where some interest was awakened last year by Brother E. A. Davis. This interest has been kept alive by the services of the local brethren at Runnells, whose efforts are highly commendable. While none were baptized at this place, yet some are believing, and are rejoicing in the added light that has come to them.

The need of ministerial help in the city of Des Moines is having most of my time and attention at the present. The Spirit of God is more fully manifest among the Saints, and with commendable unity are the officials of the branch ministering, and God is blessing them. A few are being added to our numbers every few weeks, as a result of seed sown previously.

The third annual Home Coming Day exercises will be held here on the 13th, when we are anticipating the pleasure of hearing the Church Historian.

It is with pleasure that I can inform the Saints, so many of whom know of the severe and continued illness of my companion, that in many respects she is better, and we have cause for hoping that with proper care she will be in better health than for years. I feel very grateful for the interest and prayers that have been extended by many of the Saints for her welfare and recovery, and the patience they have shown me while I have tried to labor under these adverse conditions.

Conditions throughout the district are more favorable to spiritual growth, and the elimination of evil from the church.

The strike among some of the teamsters, and activity among the unions in this city are bringing serious problems to be met by the Saints. Those who desire to be free in the gospel; and under bondage to no man or organization, are almost compelled to do as some man or men say, or have the source of their livelihood taken away. Threats are indulged in to that effect. How much we can see the need of a place to which to flee for safety, and how few are satisfactorily interesting themselves in preparing such a place. The desire to do gospel work is frustrated by selfishness, or by being under obligations to carry out some agreement entered into in these worldly institutions. Pure religion is not exemplified. While the visiting of the sick and the needy may be done, yet it is not done to freely assist such ones in many instances. Some of the visiting of the needy is for the purpose of making a dollar rather than to give one; and it is to some extent the same when in visiting the sick and help is rendered, it is for the purpose of remuneration rather than to render unselfish aid. I wonder sometimes how the growth of unselfishness can be secured amidst such selfish surroundings. Dear Saints, let us do good to all, but especially to the household of faith, and not forget that we are "one body," where if one member suffer all the members suffer.

The variegated appearance of the foliage as it appears from my window plainly indicates that winter is near, so the conditions of society as plainly tell us that the time when no man can work is here, but the results of our work will be rendered to each.

With hope I labor on, seeking to finish the work given me to do.

J. F. MINTUN.

DES MOINES, IOWA, October 3, 1912.

Missouri.

While I was only gone three months from home, laboring in the interest of the cause I love, I was glad to return to our humble home and enjoy the pleasant surroundings and take a needed rest. By request of the missionary in charge, Brother Peter Anderson, I attended the Southern Illinois reunion, held near Cisne, the account of which has been reported in your columns. I visited the Saint Louis Branch, held six meetings, and did other work. In consultation with Brother Russell Archibald, president of the branch and district, it was decided to do some labor in all the branches, but I was not able to do so, for the lack of time, as I was expected to attend the Southern Illinois, Stewartsville, Missouri, and Blue Rapids, Kansas, reunions.

I preached in Cheltenham, Oak Hill, Alton, Lansdowne, O'Fallon, Troy, and Belleville branches, which are in the Saint Louis District. I found the work in good hands, and there is a bright prospect for the same. I was informed that about two hundred have been baptized in the last twelve months in that district. One feature that is very commendable, the local brethren are moving out into new fields, and are doing a good work, and I am pleased to see so many strong, active laborers in the district. There are also a large number of young men that are a credit to the church, from whom we shall hear good results in the near future. May wisdom, unity, peace, and push continue, and the harvest will be great.

To those branches that we failed to call upon, I wish to say, that possibly I shall be able to do so ere the conference year closes, and renew our labors in some of the branches already visited, if thought advisable by those in charge.

By request of Brother Curtis, missionary in charge, I called on the Saints at Taylorville, in Central Illinois District; preached six times; several have been added by baptism through the labors of Brethren Curtis and Paxton. The branch and district is in charge of Brother Frank Izatt, a safe man. I would like to have complied with the suggestion of Brother Izatt and called on the Saints in that district, but the time to meet with the reunion was at hand. In my labors at Taylorville, as well as in the Saint Louis District, I had good liberty in presenting the word, and in the conferring of blessings. This was my first visit to those parts and here, as well as in other fields, an experience that can only be had in the full sense in gospel work was enjoyed, namely, although nearly all were comparative strangers to me, I felt as though I had known them all my life, and with the poet I could say, "Blest be the tie that binds, our hearts in Christian love."

Report of the Southern Illinois and Stewartsville reunions has appeared in your columns, and possibly that of the Blue Rapids will later on, as a press committee was appointed. I will say, however, that the Blue Rapids reunion was very fortunate in having Sister Flo McNichols, president of the home department of the General Sunday School Association. She had charge of the Sunday school and Religio work, and was also chosen chorister; the singing was excellent. At all the services she was prompt and faithful. Surely, the Sunday school and Religio are doing a good work and should be encouraged. They are the nursery from which valuable material is taken to build up the work.

While at the Blue Rapids reunion, September 2, my daughter Ruth met with a painful little accident. A crochet hook went through one of her fingers, right near the knuckle; it stuck out on either side about three inches. But she is now, September 25, able to take up her stenographic work, and those that have not received their copies of the patriarchal blessings will understand one reason for the delay. However, all will have them within thirty days.

I believe it will not be out of place to say a word relative to the work and expense of the stenographer. All understand that a certain line of patriarchal work requires a competent stenographer. Experience of some of the patriarchs is that all are not competent to take down what is given, notwithstanding the stenographer may be considered an expert in business affairs. It has not been satisfactory to depend upon persons who are not accustomed to church work. Several have expressed dissatisfaction with the copies because some items of importance were omitted. One of the patriarchs gave twenty blessings that the stenographer was unable to produce correct copies of, so the work had to be done again, and a competent stenographer secured. There are four copies to each blessing; first the shorthand; then three copies on the typewriter; two carbons and the original. The original is given to the person, one of the carbons is sent to the presiding patriarch, which is placed in the vault at the Herald Office; one copy is retained by the patriarch. There are, on an average, three sheets of paper, the top sheet and the cover, also envelope and neat little brass fasteners to each original copy, and six sheets to the carbon copies, so to each blessing there are nine or ten sheets, cover, envelope, and fasteners. This will give an idea of the work and also the expense of stationery. This expense, with the traveling and personal, is supposed to be met by voluntary donations, by those receiving copies from the stenographer; the stenographer has no set price for her services. The reason for this is that all may feel that they can have their blessings free, when not able to help bear the expenses, trusting that those that can afford will make up what may be lacking. The service of the patriarch is free; his expense is supposed to be met the same as the missionary, but quite often he has to ask the stenographer to help bear his expenses, which does injustice to the stenographer. To my knowledge, the stenographer has refused to accept any donations from the worthy poor, which is commendable. After nearly three years of willing, faithful service, my stenographer will have to decline her further service for she can not make ends meet and trust to donations. I regret that circumstances are such that I can not urge her to continue. I wish that satisfactory arrangements could be made to retain her, for my work will be crippled without a stenographer.

CAMERON, MISSOURI, September 25, 1912.

Missouri.

It has been some time since I have asked for a little space in your columns, but I have not been asleep nor idle all of the time. This conference year so far I have been laboring in the branches, and among the scattered Saints of the district.

On the first day of September, we closed another one of our good reunions at Rich Hill. Five were baptized.

Brethren Macrae and Higdon took the district tent from there to Star, south of Butler, and held meetings over one Sunday, then Brother Macrae had to go home on account of sickness of his wife, so I joined Brother Higdon and we held over two Sundays, with fair crowds. Three were baptized. There are about thirty-six Saints there, and we have arranged for the organization of a branch as soon as Brother Curtis can get there. They have a live Sunday school there.

I came here last Thursday, and have preached three times to the Saints and a goodly number of nonmembers, and Sunday, the 29th of September, at 3 p. m., at the home of Elder W. E. Reynolds, near Coal Hill Chapel, I united in marriage Brother Joseph H. Davidson, and Sister Mabel I. Reynolds (the only child of W. E. and Jennie Reynolds). There were ninety invited relatives and friends present, and there were fifty-one beautiful and useful presents. This young couple are earnest workers in all departments of church work, and the Coal Hill Branch will miss them, but the Rich Hill Branch will have their help, as they will be at their home in Horton, Missouri, after Thursday, October 3, where Brother Davidson will hold forth as village blacksmith. Brother and Sister Davidson expect to attend Sunday services at Rich Hill, though it will cost one dollar each round trip.

We are having fine weather here, and I am pleased to say that the work in the district is gradually advancing. Thursday I go to Lewis Station, where there is a bunch of Saints, and some earnest workers. They too have a good Sunday school. From Lewis I go home to help Sister Moler prepare for winter, then off to district conference at Mapleton, Kansas, October 19, 20.

Hopefully in the race,

JAMES MOLER.

ELDORADO SPRINGS, MISSOURI, October 1, 1912.

Washington.

August 9 to 18 I was at Centralia, Washington, enjoying the reunion of the Portland and Seattle and British Columbia districts. The attendance was fair, and a spirit of good will and brotherly love prevailed. A few of the children of the Saints were baptized.

Including the Sunday school and Religio assemblies, there were about thirty-five meetings held, and withal there was that degree of satisfaction that a vote prevailed to hold another reunion next year.

Of the missionary force William Johnson, G. W. Thorburn, P. W. Premo, P. T. Plumb, and the writer were present; S. P. Cox, William Chapman, of the local elders, and several young men holding the office of priest, also assisted in the work. There was present a band of noble young people, from whose work in the church I predict good reports will be heard from time to time.

The interest seemed to justify further effort to get the latter day work before the people of Centralia, so Brother G. W. Thorburn and the writer remained and held meetings for a week following the reunion, closing on the night of August 25, with about the largest crowd of the two weeks' meetings. Some, we feel sure, were benefited.

Monday, the 26th, I went to Seattle and remained over night, and on the next day, in company with Brethren Johnson and Thorburn, I went to Burlington, and in the evening commenced a ten-night debate with Elder S. G. ShROUT, a representative of "The International Bible Student's Association," or Millennial Dawn people. I affirmed the harmony, in organization, doctrine, and practice, of the church with the Bible; he affirmed the same for the above-named "association." No objection was made by Mr. ShROUT to any officer in the church except the apostle. This he would not have; all other officers, including "prophets," were left uncriticized.

On the first night he very boldly attacked my position on Mark 16:15, 16. He said all scholars were agreed that the sixteenth chapter of Mark, from verse nine to the close, was spurious. He spelled it out, s-p-u-r-i-o-u-s; then asked, "What does that spell?" and one of his brethren answered, "Spurious." Then with quite a flourish of words he announced that that was "settled," and that I would never be able to meet it.

In my next speech (the first speech on the succeeding night), I think I convinced most of the audience, if not all of them, that if Mark 16 was spurious, and the doctrine of spiritual gifts was therefore untrue, then 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4; James 5; and a number of other passages were spurious too, for the same doctrine of signs following believers is taught in these passages, showing that it was genuine apostolic teaching, whoever was the author of Mark's sixteenth chapter. I also read a note inserted after the eighth verse of this chapter in the translation by Reverend G. R. Noyes, as follows: "The remaining twelve verses, according to Tischendorf and others, made originally no part of Mark's gospel. As the passage was added very early, however, since it is referred to by Irenæus in the latter part of the second century, it is here given as an appendix." If Irenæus "referred" to it in the latter part of the second century, it must have been in existence at that early date, and this was about one hundred and fifty years earlier than the oldest manuscript now known. The omission of the latter part of Mark's gospel by these old manuscripts does not prove that it was spurious, as the reference to it by Irenæus shows that it was contained in some other manuscript to which he had access, but now lost to the world.

Again; Irenæus was a disciple of Polycarp, and Polycarp was a disciple of Saint John the apostle. Thus, if Irenæus did not associate with the apostle, he was only one generation removed, and so was in as good if not better position to decide as to what was or was not spurious scripture than any who are removed by at least eighteen centuries.

So far as the debate was concerned, it was now "settled" as Mr. Shroud had never a word more to say about it.

My opponent's main effort was to convince his hearers that man is wholly mortal, repeatedly claiming that "all the damnable heresies since the world began" are traceable to a belief in the doctrine that man is possessed of immortality."

When asked to explain how it was that the Sadducees, who did not believe in immortality, were equally condemned with the Pharisees, as "hypocrites" (Matthew 16:1, 3); also as a "wicked and adulterous generation," and why the Lord warned his disciples to "beware of the doctrine of the . . . Sadducees," as well as of the Pharisees (verse 12), if all the heresies originated with the believers in immortality, my opponent was "as a sheep before her shearers,"—dumb. He opened not his mouth.

Mr. Shout is gentlemanly and fair in debate. No mud slinging was indulged in, nor was there a discourteous reference to Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, or the church.

The discussion was earnest, but there was the best of feeling between the speakers, and so far as I could judge, among the people also.

The Millennial Dawn people are like the Saints in one respect; that is, they are unpopular; so the attendance was not large. This was partly due to the fact that the ministers of the town, following the custom of our federal judges, issued an "injunction," restraining their members from attending the debate. A few, however, disobeyed the injunction and heard the discussion.

As to results? We are hopeful. The great day of awards must make final revelations.

In fond anticipation,

T. C. KELLEY.

ELLENSBURG, WASHINGTON, September 28, 1912.

Illinois.

In May I left home for my field, which is the Saint Louis District, and upon my arrival found much to do. On the 24th of June commenced an effort in the new tent at Saint Charles, Missouri, continuing until July 27, when, on the following night, I began a series of sermons at Belleville, Illinois.

Three were baptized at Saint Charles, and all seemed to enjoy the services. Continued at Belleville until September 19, when I closed with ten more added to the fold. However, we met with considerable opposition from the Free Methodists and Baptists, but of course you can hardly blame them, as I baptized twelve or fifteen of their number in the last year, while others are near the kingdom at present. Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine strange things?

My services at Belleville were practically due to an effort made by the Baptist minister in their church, in which he exposed Mormonism in the old familiar way, by scouring the country like a buzzard and picking up all the rot he could find, depositing it for his nestlings to feed upon. But happily some refused, including his worthy deacon and wife, to be fed on such. About two weeks later we pitched the tent within three blocks of his church and opened fire, and though different means were employed to get us to move, none were successful, so we stayed about six weeks and succeeded in baptizing about eight of their number, including the above-named deacon and his wife; and as we confirmed him we indeed felt that he was one who had detected in our voice the voice of the Good Shepherd.

Closing our effort the district conference convened at Belleville, the 21st and 22d of September, at which over four hundred Saints gathered and enjoyed a spiritual feast. After this I came to Booster, a mining neighborhood a short distance from Belleville, where I am holding forth to fair crowds and good interest, and will continue here a week longer at least. This is where Brother Sawley opened the work two years ago, and a branch is now organized with thirty-three members.

It was here the Sunday school rally was held on September 1, at which a joyful crowd of Sunday school workers gathered. After Sunday school at 10 o'clock a. m., Brother T. J. Elliott, assistant district superintendent, delivered an interesting and instructive sermon on Sunday school work, after which a bounteous feast of good things was spread, and all partook, when at 2.30 o'clock the writer was the speaker. The services were in charge of Brother Elliott. A trio composed by the writer was sung by Brethren Elliott, Wilds, and self.

Ever hopeful for Zion's final triumph, I am,

Your brother and coworker in Christ,

J. A. DOWKER.

James McConnaughy and Samuel Brown were elected to represent the district at the next General Conference, and were given power to cast the majority and minority vote. The conference adjourned to meet next with the Mount Zion Branch at Goose Creek. The conference was pronounced by all to have been the most peaceable and elevating in its character of any held for years, and all expressed having enjoyed and received great help by reason of having attended. The Spirit was manifested in our presence, and the Spirit speaking through Brother Brown spoke words of comfort and cheer to Sister Florence Williams and Brother Harry Johnson, and called Brother Boyed E. The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the West Virginia District; Greeting: Having been appointed to act as bishop's agent for the West Virginia District, I take this means of acquainting you with my address and calling your attention to the needs of our district in carrying on the work of the Lord. You will find recorded in the seventeenth chapter of Exodus an account of a battle between the Israelites and the Amalekites, and so long as Moses held up his rod the army of Israel prevailed; but Moses' arm became tired, and he was then assisted by Aaron and Hur, and so long as they held up the arm of Moses the Lord was with Joshua and his forces. So it is with us; if we expect the blessings of God to rest upon us and sustain us, we as Saints of the most high God must uphold his work by contributing of our means as the Lord has blessed us, and we believe this to be a good time of the year to look around and take stock of how the Lord has blessed the earth with the abundance of fruits, products, etc. Shall we turn over to the Lord his share, or shall we rob God by withholding from him that which he requires at our hands? The Lord has said to us as his Saints, "This is a day of sacrifice, and the tithing of my people." Notice that he says "my people," no other. Then if we are truly his people, we will sacrifice that his work may roll on until it shall fill the measure of which it was prophesied, that it should fill the whole earth. Unlike any other church in the land to-day, that draw their support from those outside of the church. The Lord calls upon his people to try him and see if he will not pour out a blessing upon them that they can not contain. There are a great many Saints in our district whose names are not on the bishop's books, and there are some whose names are on that have not contributed anything for years. Why is this? Have we become tired of service in the army of the Lord? We can not think this, because we know by our own experience that "the Lord is good, and kind are all his ways," and there is no investment that will pay as great returns as an investment to the building up of the kingdom of God.

Have we forgotten that when we shall stand before God to be judged, that the books will be opened, and out of the things therein written shall we be judged? Therefore, if your name is not upon the books, you should seek to get it there as soon as possible. Dear Saints, while we are laying our plans, let us not forget God, for we can not afford to do so; for we have his word that a mother may forget her child but God will never forsake his children.

Therefore I would say in conclusion, Let us fear God and JAMES J. JOHNSON, Secretary of Quorum.

Born.

STEELE.—In Sacramento, California, September 1, 1912, to Elizabeth Eunice and George P. Steele, a son. He is a grandson of Augusta M. and James William Steele, of Independence, Missouri.

Died.

GRIFFITHS.—Brother Evan Griffiths was born November 10, 1887, at Huntsville, Missouri; died October 2, 1912, from injuries received in a mine. He was baptized December 25, 1898, at Higbee, Missouri, by R. M. Elvin. The funeral sermon was preached by J. W. Paxton; assisted by Frank Izatt. The floral offerings were beautiful and the church would not hold all those who attended. The Religio, Sunday school, and the Taylorville Branch keenly feel the loss of our dear brother.

VANCE.—Maria Mosely Vance was born in Mercer County, Illinois, December 23, 1850; died October 3, 1912, at Joy, Illinois. She was married to Joshua Vance September 30, 1868 to which union four children were born, one daughter having preceded her to the better land in infancy. She united with the church May 12, 1872, and was always a consistent member. She was a great sufferer, but endured her many afflictions patiently, and was ready and glad to go to the rest prepared for God's people. Funeral was held in the Methodist Episcopal church in Joy, Illinois. O. E. Sade officiated and Reverend George D. Adamson assisted.

RUST.—Rachel M. Ward was born June 27, 1843, at Gladstone, Illinois; united in marriage with Jacob L. Rust September 3, 1861; to this union were born nine children, three of them having preceded their mother in death. She united with the church and was a faithful Saint. She was a great sufferer from cancer, but bore patiently. Services were held from the United Presbyterian church in Gladstone, Illinois; O. E. Sade officiating, assisted by Reverend French.

WHALLEY.—Brother William Whalley was born July 8, 1838, at Tarleton, Lancaster, England; died September 19, 1912; united with the church at Little Compton, May 25, 1884, ordained to the office of deacon March 24, 1886. He was highly respected where he lived, and was ever a loyal member of the church, laboring in his official capacity until incapacitated by the sickness preceding his death. He was ready and willing to go. A faithful wife and four grown-up daughters survive. Funeral services at the Little Compton chapel, in charge of H. O. Smith; sermon by H. W. Howlett; interment at Oak Grove Cemetery, Fall River, Massachusetts.

CLOTHIER.—Sister Agnes Helen Clothier was gathered home on Sunday, September 29, 1912, from the Merritt Hospital in Oakland, California, at the age of 79 years, 10 months, 17 days. She was a sister of Elder Gordon E. Deuel, of historic note. She was baptized at Nauvoo in early childhood by the Prophet, and was received on that baptism into the Reorganization by the Oakland Branch. She leaves three children as chief mourners. The services were simple, yet solemn and appropriate. Elder E. J. Clark made the prayer and the sermon was by Elder J. M. Terry.

HOVERSON.—Andrew H. Hoverson was born May 17, 1881. For a number of years he worked for Chittenden & Eastman, manufacturers of furniture. A member of the firm informed us that he was one of their best men. He united with the church in his boyhood days and so far as I have learned lived an upright, godly life. His spirit took its flight to a brighter and better sphere Friday morning, September 27, 1912. He leaves behind to mourn, but not without hope, his wife Alvena, two daughters, Neona Ruth, aged 5, and Pearl Elsie aged 3. Also his mother and three brothers, his father having died August, 1881, less than four months after the birth of his youngest son, Andrew, whose remains lie before me in this casket.

SMITH.—Effie Reynolds Smith, died September 28, 1912, at her home near Woodbine, Iowa. She was born May 12, 1884; was baptized in 1902 by Elder Fred A. Fry; married to Elder C. R. Smith April 24, 1908. Her life was one of truth and devotion to duty. The Trip to California Under Special Care

"You feel like sorting out and tying together the memories of this trip and keeping them separate from all other trips." A woman recently said this after a pleasant experience on a Burlington Route "Personally Conducted" excursion party to California. She traveled alone, but met many agreeable people on the car, which was in charge of a special conductor. This good-natured official was a well-informed, courteous man who went all the way through with the party, looking after everyone's comfort and attending to all the little details of the trip. Thus a woman or child in one of these parties can travel with perfect safety and freedom from care.

If you would like to know more about the Burlington's comfortable, popular and inexpensive personally-conducted excursions to California, through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake City, please write me a postal and I'll be glad to send you copy of our illustrated folder, describing the trip in detail, the scenery, the choice of routes, telling all about how to join one of these parties and containing one of the best maps of California ever published. AT THE PLOW.

No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.—Jesus.

The Master, desiring to admonish quitters, made use of a very striking illustration. Almost anyone who has followed a plow, or watched others plow, can understand its significance.

The farmer, as he prepares to strike his initial furrow, erects or selects some landmark at the further side of the field, usually a pole or staff bearing some sort of a flag or ensign. He keeps his eyes steadily upon this landmark and drives directly toward it, and thus he secures a straight furrow.

CROOKED FURROWS.

But if he begins to look back over his shoulder every few seconds, and perhaps repent that he ever started, his furrow will be crooked. And if the first furrow is crooked all succeeding ones will be crooked. And these crooked furrows sometimes may be seen even after the grain is sown and has grown up. Sometimes they can be discerned even after the harvest. The only way to obliterate them is to do the work all over and do it right.

Thus with the crooked furrows that we make in life. Unless they are corrected, and our "first works" are done over again, they will be seen all our lives and may even appear after the harvest, on the other side of the resurrection, as a monument to the folly of those who have attempted to follow Jesus while looking back at the world.

In passing, we might note that in order to strike a true furrow the farmer must select a stable and reliable landmark. We have heard of one who tried to strike his furrow by an old white horse that was feeding on the further side of the field. But the horse did not stand still. He kept moving, and the result may be imagined. The world is full of crooked furrows made by those who are following changeable and uncertain guides—following the world with its fickle and passing fashions that change with every changing moon, or following human guides with their whims and notions. We have but to scan the history of the church during the "dark and cloudy day" to see the results of following the erratic wanderings of irresponsible or corrupt leaders. But our God has set up an ensign, fixed, and unchangeable, by which we can shape our course.

KEEP OUT! DO NOT TRESPASS!

What did Jesus mean by the term "looking back"? Evidently we are not forbidden to look back over our past experiences, for sometimes that can be done with profit. The poet has said:

The joys we share to-day, when they have flown
Into the past upon their shining wings,
Are not from out our power wholly gone,

But shall refresh us like deep hidden springs.—D. H. Smith.

But there are those who make the mistake of trying to live in the past to the exclusion of activity and blessing in the present. It is impossible for us to reconstruct the past. The writer looks back to his boyhood days and sometimes wishes that he might live one of them over again. But it can not be. We may sing,

"Backward, turn backward, oh Time in thy flight, Make me a boy again, just for to-night," until we are gray-haired, but time will not turn backward a single moment. Even if we could become young again, past scenes are for ever closed. The writer lived as a boy out on the free prairies. He could take his pony and ride all day over the virgin sod, out of sight of human habitation. But now the prairies are all broken up. Men have fenced them off into fields, and if he goes back to those old haunts he sees everywhere signs, "Keep out! No trespassing allowed."

As a boy, the good Lord unrolled before him the beautiful, flower-bedecked plains, and said, "Come in!" But now men have partitioned that fair domain, and fenced it, and put up their notices, "Keep out!"

Before everyone born into the world God opens the bright avenues of youth, and says, "Come in!" But when we reach manhood's estate and try to wander back again, we come to an impassable barrier, where it is written, "Keep out."

It is an impressive thought that we can not actually reconstruct and live over a single day of the past.

We can not reenact a single event just as it occurred. The past is for ever closed, except to the spirit-like excursions of memory. We must live to-day, and use to-day. We are journeying toward the future, not toward the past.

THE HAPPY SAINTS ARE THE BUSY SAINTS.

So we feel that those Saints are in error who lament the present and talk all the time about the good times they used to have fifty years ago, or twenty years ago, or perhaps only five years ago. They say that they do not have as good times as they used to have. They do not have such spiritual prayer meetings. They do not have such good sermons, nor such wonderful blessings. What is the trouble? Others are having a good time now! Others are having spiritual meetings! Others are enjoying the preaching services! God is blessing others with healing and many marvelous manifestations! What is the trouble?

Those people who are having a good time in the church now are at work now. Those people who are not having a good time are, as a rule, not at work. They used to be active. And in those days they had their good times. What is the moral? Get busy! If we would be happy we must be active. If we will not be active we must pay the penalty and be miserable. It is a clear proposition. Why hesitate about the choice? Get to work and press forward. Live now. Do not live in the past. God is willing to bless now. Meet him half way.

SUGGESTION AND AUTOSUGGESTION.

Some people are victims of suggestion or auto-suggestion. Human nature is ever ready to respond to suggestion. Half way up the mountainside you come upon a man who is toiling upward, with a pack upon his back. He is doing well, and will reach the summit, if no one interferes with him. You look him over dubiously, and say, "My dear sir, you are about all in. Your face is flushed as though you might be threatened with apoplexy. Your heart is pounding—are you not afraid of heart failure? You will never reach the summit. It is a long, hard climb, and not worth while."

Sure enough, he does have heart failure. He looks at the summit, and it appears to be away up in the clouds. He sits down on his pack and holds his head in his hands for a while, then gets up and starts down hill—down and out. What did it? Your suggestion.

It is that way in the church, with some people, they are either discouraging others or being discouraged by others.

Why not reverse. Try this plan. You meet this man toiling up the mountain, and you say, "Well, you are getting along all right. Take it by short stages, within your strength, and you will make it all right. Others have reached the summit, who were no stronger than you, and you can do what others have done." And he goes on with renewed courage. That is the divine plan in gospel life as well:

Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; and make straight paths for your feet lest that which is lame be turned out of the way.—Hebrews 12: 12.

Autosuggestion is simply a suggestion originating in one's own mind. Suppose you are the one who is climbing the mountain. You are getting along very well, until you begin to grumble, and say, "I am sorry that I ever started. I am not cut out for hill climbing. I feel awfully tired. I am sure I will never, never reach the summit."

And you do not reach the summit.

But if you keep a stout heart, and say, "Others have been over worse roads than this. I can make it all right. I will go by short stages. One step at a time does the work. Presently I shall reach the summit"; if you do this, the chances are that you will get through all right, especially if you have a strong friend along to help you.

In spiritual work, Jesus has promised to be such a friend. He has said that he will never leave or forsake us. Paul catches the import of that promise, and declares: "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

PAUL'S POLICY.

So Paul resolved that he would not sigh and lament. He would not try to live in the past. He would not look back. He tells us:

This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 4: 13, 14.

How much better this is than the policy that is sometimes pursued. When Moses came down out of Midian, he found the Israelites slaves. They were scourged to their heavy toil all day long, and so poorly fed that they had not vitality enough to resist. He led them out of bondage and struck a course toward the promised land. But they were scarcely out of sight of Egypt before they began to lament and look back. They reproached Moses for having brought them out into the desert to die, and said: "We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic."

At the very time when they should have looked forward, they were looking backward. Do we as Latter Day Saints ever make that mistake? God has set us free under the gospel law, under the rule, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Do we press forward in the redemption of Zion? or do we pause and lament?

This was what Jesus had in mind. He was speaking about those who start out to serve him, put their hand to the plow, as he expressed it, and soon repent of their choice, or become discouraged, and begin to look back. Such, he says, are not worthy of the kingdom of God. Let us not make this mistake. Let us take fresh courage and press on, our eyes upon the standard, and then our furrows will be straight and our work acceptable.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

NEWSPAPER NOTICE.—We have received copies of the Burlington (Iowa) Daily Gazette containing favorable notice of the efforts of Brother O. R. Miller at that place. The brother has also been successful in getting a number of columns in these issues. This is good publicity.

Brother Joseph Arber had a lengthy statement in a late issue of the Peoria (Illinois) Journal, in which he set out the claims of the Reorganization in an able manner.

Brother Richard Baldwin's work in Cleveland during the summer was well received and noticed by Cleveland papers, as shown by copies and clippings sent to our office.

The Public Press, New Albany, Indiana, for October 1, contains a splendid editorial concerning the Reorganized Church, its history, work, etc. This comes from the field in which Brother John Zahnd is so active, along with others, and gives evidence of good work.

HUNT-SPRINGER.—Bishop C. J. Hunt has issued an open letter to Reverend G. L. Springer, pastor of the Evangelical Church, Harlan, Iowa, in which Brother Hunt analyzes the methods of Reverend Springer's attack on the Reorganized Church, and challenges him to debate a series of five propositions submitted, at Harlan. We await developments with interest.

I'd Rather Be---

I'd rather be a Could Be,
If I can not be an Are;
For a Could Be is a May Be,
With a chance of touching Par.

I'd rather be a Has Been
Than a Might Have Been by far;
For a Might Be is a Hasn't Been,
But a Has was once an Are.

Also an Are is Is and Am,
A Was was all of these;
So I'd rather be a Has Been
Than a Hasn't, if you please.

Nothing is in Vain.

Nothing is in vain—
Not a flower blooms to die
'Neath the shade or open sky,
But is found by some lone eye;
It will bloom again;
For the thoughts of God shall be Lasting as eternity.

Not a sweet-voiced bird
Lives and sings and flies away
But some heart is gladdened; nay,
Not the music of a day
Passes all unheard,
Still there is an ear that hears
All the music of the years.

Not a kindly deed
That a loving hand has wrought,
Not a soul-born word, to naught
By the cankering years is brought;
Not a truthful creed
In forgetfulness long lies,
It must grow where falsehood dies.

—Columbian.

Be Strong.

Be strong to hope, O Heart!
Though the day is bright,
The stars can only shine
In the dark night.
Be strong, O Heart of mine,
Look towards the light!

Be strong to bear, O Heart!
Nothing is vain;
Strive not, for life is care,
And God sends pain;
Heaven is above, and there
Rest will remain.

Be strong to love, O Heart!
Love knows not wrong;
Didst thou love—creatures even,
Life were not long;
Didst thou love God in heaven,
Thou wouldst be strong!

—Adelaide A. Proctor.

Improve the Time.

Be wise to-day; to-morrow's sun
In brilliant splendor may arise,
And find thee with thy work undone,
With lifeless, cold, unseeing eyes;
Neglect no duty in the way,
Be wise to-day! Be wise to-day!

Be true to-day; the crooked mind
A labyrinth of mischief makes;
When lost therein, 'tis hard to find
The path of rectitude, when wakes
The outraged sleeper, Conscience. Nay,
Be true to-day. Be true to-day!

Be kind to-day; the flying years
Shall bear dear ones to homes above;
For late may be to-morrow's tears,
To-morrow's tardy words of love;
The moments pass so swift away,
Be kind to-day! Be kind to-day!

ABOUT THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE.

Just a little sketch of the temple and some phases of the work of the attendant.

The building has often been described, and possibly some exaggeration indulged in regarding its dedication and preservation. But there are some remarkable things about the old structure. Naturally, because of its sturdy construction, the building should stand a couple of centuries after its erection; but so should have the Nauvoo Temple, and where is it? In returning from General Conference in the spring, I stopped at Nauvoo, and took in the "sights." Where that $1,000,000 structure once stood, now there is a vineyard, not one stone in the place where the builders originally laid it; so some protection may have been over the Kirtland edifice, but the Lord has not protected it from natural decay. I believe it has been ordained that it shall go the way of all the earth; it shall change and decay and eventually pass away; but I believe the Lord has decreed it shall not, by the violent, unhallowed hand of man for ever perish from the earth. Thousands of dollars have been spent in repairing the building at various times. After the exodus of the Saints from Kirtland, the temple practically stood open, apparently protected by no one, and so it became the prey of the relic hunter. The pulpits were pillaged, the communion tables rent from their places and broken up, much ornamental woodwork pried off and carried away, and the seats on the second floor torn up and thrown in the basement, so there would be more room for the unhallowed dancer of the town!

Vulcan has skillfully and repeatedly forged his bolts of destructive light, and with unerring aim, hurled them at the temple's tower, where they have crushed and rent asunder the towering timber, but He who stilled the wild winds and waves seems to have commanded heaven's artillery, "Thus far shalt thou go and no further," so to-day the pinnacle of the temple still points as the finger of God to the heavens.

One time, so a tradition informs us, man, in his bigotry and sinfulness, in the dead of night, forced a fiery fagot into the temple's sacred side, but the angels of God, who never sleep, aroused a sleeper, and the torch was plucked from the wound and the wound healed. So on Kirtland's verdant hill stand these sacred, sturdy, stately walls, magnificent monuments of the skill, sacrifice, and devotion of a people of the past, whose bodies have crumbled to dust, but whose pioneer efforts have borne abundant fruit, and to-day the gospel is firmly established in the hearts and minds of tens of thousands.

"P. E. M." on the apron of first tier, which apron can be raised and is the communion table. These letters signify "Presiding Elder of the Melchisedec Priesthood." Next tier, "M. H. P.," Melchisedec High Priest. "P. M. H.," Presiding Melchisedec High Priest. "M. P. C.," Melchisedec Priest Council. The next the last tier, marked "P. M. H.," is where the Presidency sat, and it was on the breast-work of this pulpit where Christ appeared, also Elijah. As Christ stood there, he uttered this prophecy, "The fame of this house shall spread to foreign lands." No such prediction was ever made of the Nauvoo edifice, and it was of a much more imposing appearance. This temple had to stand to fulfill that prediction! The visitors to the building are requested to register their names and where they are from, before they are escorted through the structure. There are six of these books here in the register room, dating from 1866 to the present time. These six books are six witnesses to the unqualified truthfulness of that Christ prophecy, for many lands have sent visitors to see the temple, and post cards of various parts of the building are sent everywhere by visitors. The first name on the oldest register, of 1866, was that of our Joseph Smith, but some one has cut it out; is so stated on the fly leaf of the register. The next name is that of the late W. W. Blair, counselor to President Joseph Smith. Elijah Banta, I believe a member of the Bishopric while living, follows. The work of the Reorganization has been to build up the waste places of Zion, so six years after the Reorganization began its heaven ordained work, the leaders of the church manifested their interest in the neglected old house of the Lord by visiting it, and to-day it has been largely restored to its original plan, and is carefully guarded.

Some interesting notes have been made by visitors, in the registers. Here is one: "June 14, 1878. Horace Benton, graduated from the Western Reserve Teachers' Seminary, taught by Dr. A. D. Lord, in this temple, 1845."

As the late President James A. Garfield's home was at Mentor, three miles from Kirtland, of course his name is in one of the registers. A lady member of the Utah Church was here a few days ago to visit the building. She said her grandfather, who was a fine cabinet maker, did most of the work on the pulpits. He would do the carving at night and during the winter months. She was entirely ignorant of the claims of the Reorganization, and I had an interesting conversation with her, before a number of other visitors. She emphatically stated that she did not believe in polygamy! Many Utah elders are visitors. Last October, the Tabernacle choir, two hundred strong, on their way to New York, were visitors. The Deseret News, official organ of the Utah Church, had about a column and a half in description of the visit. As a result of the courteous treatment we gave them, here are a few quotations from the News. "Impressive visit to Kirtland. Reorganized Church gives a kindly welcome. When Evan Stephens raised his baton and the members of the choir joined in singing the grand old hymn (We Thank Thee, oh God, for a Prophet,) many were overcome with emotion, and tears flowed freely. At the time of the arrival of the visitors, from Utah, services were being conducted by the Reorganized Church, which is now in possession of the building and grounds, but the service was temporarily suspended to permit the visitors to enter and take seats in the temple. Elder C. E. Miller, presiding elder of the Kirtland District, was in the pulpit, and he took occasion to welcome the Utah visitors. He told some of the history of the building. . . . When asked if he objected to them singing, replied, 'We would object if you didn't sing.' The temple is in a fair state of preservation, and is maintained by the Josephite Church. The people are very choice of the building, and seem to revere the spot where Joseph Smith proclaimed many of the most remarkable doctrines of modern times. Elder Miller said that while there were points upon which the Reorganization differed from the Utah Church, yet he said, there were many points upon which they are united, and he preferred to dwell upon these points."

Here are a few extracts from the Cleveland Leader regarding the choir's visit. "Mormons revisit scenes of defeat. Two hundred members of big choir spend afternoon at Kirtland; dissenting branch of sect give up edifice for day to Smith's followers. Reverend C. E. Miller, the present pastor, gave an address of welcome, in which he said he preferred to dwell on the points of union rather than those of difference between the branches of the church. Then he gave them permission to sing." When the temple was completed, rules were adopted to govern those who were in it and those having charge of it. Provision was then made to conduct visitors through the building. One of the rules was that no one should be permitted to enter the pulpits except those holding the priesthood. I have tape across the entrances to the pulpits, and almost invariably the Utah elders wish to enter the sacred desks, and ask why they can not, and when I reply that only those holding the priesthood are permitted according to the original rules adopted, it has a peculiar effect on some of them!

The Bishop had three coats of paint applied to the outside woodwork last fall; it should be painted inside also, which I suppose will be done when the church is able.

Mr. Rockefeller has been here I believe the tenth time this season. Mr. Dooley said to Mr. Hennesy:

"Hennesy, what would you do if you had Rockefeller's money? Mr. Hennesy replied, "I would start a little laundry." But Mr. Rockefeller has anticipated Mr. Hennesy, as he does not believe in tainted money and invariably makes an offering of a new dollar bill! All the money he carries is apparently just from the mint. C. EDWARD MILLER.

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO, September 16, 1912.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 37.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

NO ANALOGY.

Questioning the genuineness of the revelation, Mr. Traum says, pages 259, 260:

The Josephites doubt the genuineness of the revelation on polygamy because of the lapse of time between its being issued and when it was publicly announced. How is it that they can strain at the gnat and swallow the camel?

Why, bless you! We see no parallel in the two cases at all. The one a revelation containing the expressed sentiments of Joseph, and uttered at intervals over his signature, and the other, a purported authorization of the establishment of an institution of "polygamy, utterly at variance with his teachings, and repugnant to the law which was given through him for the conduct of the church. Reasons are cogent for the suspensions we have, of the authenticity of the polygamous document, and the genuineness of the prophecy foreshadowing the rebellion.

WAR PROPHECY.

Continuing at the bottom of page 260, Traum philosophizes thus:

Taking the prophecy as descriptive of the Civil War, it did, as a matter of fact, begin in South Carolina, but it required neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet to forecast such a contingency. That the South should be arrayed against the North was inevitable from the community of interests. That the South should solicit aid from England was in the nature of things to be expected, for the South furnished the raw material for English mills. But that war was poured out on all nations; that the Saints should stand in holy places and not be moved; that God should make a full end of all nations; that Great Britain should call upon other nations to defend her; that slaves should rise up against their masters—have neither circumstantially nor particularly come about.

The "prophets and sons of prophets" were directly opposite of the "contingency." Political sagacity looked the other way. They prophesied "peace," while the inspiration of God pictured the horizon aglow with consuming wrath.

"The community of interest" between the North and South yet exist, and from that simple consideration no one is now prophesying conflict. The brigadier generals in the Confederate Army made fortunes as lawyers in northern cities. The rivers of the South now turn the mills of New England capitalists. The old lions of war,—Forts Sumter, Moultrie, Pickens, and Hamilton, now sleep on their iron paws. Instead of raising money to keep enemies out of New York harbor, raising it among the southern people to erect Bartholdi's "Liberty enlightening the world," on Bedloe's Island. "The community of interest," now, affords no one the grounds to prophesy a conflict.

Elder Traum concedes the effort of the Southern Confederacy to obtain recognition of "Great Britain," "the acknowledgment of the Confederacy as legal" through the commissioners which the leaders of the South appointed,—"William L. Yancy, and afterward Mason and Slidell."—History of Civil War, page 198. This prophecy plainly foretells, and the critic could not deny this without throwing himself back upon his schoolmates as a perverter of facts. He continues: "But that war was poured out on all nations"; the prophecy does not intimate that at the time Traum wrote his book that war "was poured out on all nations," but the prophecy says: "the days will come that war will be poured out on all nations beginning at that place," from that time forward war would be a visitor to all nations. Elder Traum failed to open his common-school books, and history when penning this line. "In 1862 to 1864, France and Mexico were at war." "Prussia and Denmark engaged in the Schleswig-Holstein War 1863." In 1864, Austria joined Prussia in that war, and "Austria was compelled to withdraw (1866) from the Confederation." In 1870; 1871, war between France and Germany. War was concluded between Abyssinia and Egypt, 1876. Guatemala and San Salvador, 1875, 1876. In 1877, civil war in Morocco, Russian-Turkish War 1878, English-Afghan War 1877-1879. War between Chili and Bolivia, 1878 to 1880. Civil war in Spain, 1878 to 1880. In 1866 war between Spain and Chili in South America. Revolution in Uruguay in 1868, followed by another in 1875. War between Brazil and Paraguay in 1862, followed by another in 1868. The Spanish-American War in 1898,—the Cuban invasion and "Filipino" conquest. The destruction of the Boer Republic in South Africa, by the English Army, the Russo-Japanese conflict, the latter three within Elder Traum's memory, with the terrible battles now, 1911, on in Mexico, and many more which we will not pause to transcribe. We glean the foregoing from our common school history, public press, and the History of the World, by Lardner, LL. D., 1885. More than vindicated are the terms of the prophecy, and war continues to be "poured out" in the very face of prophecies to the contrary on the part of our critics. The sentiments of the times are against prophecies of continued war, yet Joseph Smith prophesied in 1831, "I the Lord . . . willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 6.

Political seers and church statesmen have prophesied just the reverse of this. In 1889 Doctor Thomas, of Chicago, prophesied as follows: "The sixteenth century saw the greatest artists, the seventeenth the greatest writers; the eighteenth the greatest reasoners, the nineteenth has given, and will give great seers and prophets; but in the twentieth century wars will be dead; the gallows dead; men will be one to another; the life of the Spirit will reign; you shall be my brother, and, God my Father." See Inter-Ocean, 1889. Elder Traum is aware that Prince Albert's peace conference and exposition in London, when that world-metropolis was illuminated for the purpose, just after the Crimean War, was the crystallization of the world's peace sentiments, and was followed in a few years by the crushing of Denmark, by the slaughter at Sadowa, and by the Franco-German War, wherein all records of quick destruction were surpassed, and the Hague conference itself was shortly followed by the wanton destruction of the Boer Republic, and the Russo-Japanese conflict was brought on through the aggression of the almost boundless empire whose czar had called the peacemakers together; yet over against the official cry of "peace, peace, peace," twice, or thrice, on the part of the International Parliamentary Peace Union, the revelations of this so-called "ignorant man" go marching on to fulfillment. Traum continues: "that the Saints should stand in holy places, and not be moved." It does not so read. "Wherefore stand ye in holy places, and be not moved until the day of the Lord come"; is the proper reading. It is a command, and entreaty, wherefore, for this reason, or in view of all the trouble in the foregoing, be firm in the faith, is the sense of the statement, and whether the Saints obeyed, or disobeyed the command, affects not the prophecy. In 1 Thessalonians 4: 18, after the notable prophecy of Saint Paul on the second coming of Christ, and the translation and resurrection of Saints, he entreats them, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Whether they did so, or not, does not affect the prophecy nor its fulfillment.

Traum continues: "that God should make a full end of all nations"; the prophecy does not read that way. "And thus with sword and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn; and with famine, and plague, and earthquakes, and the thunder of heaven, and the fierce and vivid lightnings also, shall the inhabitants of the earth be made to feel the wrath, and indignation, and chastening hand of an Almighty God, UNTIL the consumption decreed hath made a full end of all nations," is the proper reading. A continued manifestation of these divine judgments is contemplated until the "consuming" process makes a full end of the nations. The prophecy of Isaiah with reference to the establishment of the latter day work,—the Lord performing his "strange act" says:

For the Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong; for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.—Isaiah 28: 21, 22.

Traum's criticism sweeps Isaiah's prophecy off the map, for the decreed "consumption" has not yet made an end; that is, has not "particularly come about." Traum persists in misrepresenting, thus: "that Great Britain should call upon other nations to defend her." The prophecy does not read that way. "The Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations in order to defend themselves against other nations," is the proper reading. Traum has it, "that Great Britain should call upon other nations to defend her." In the first place, Great Britain is not "they." Traum must look at his grammar. The rule governing says, "A pronoun must agree with its antecedent in gender, number, and case." The antecedent of they can not be Great Britain. He changes themselves to her. But the Southern States did call upon other nations. We have cited the historic statement, that "Yancy, Mason, and Slidell were sent by the Southern Confederacy to foreign nations, and we can now cite the following:

At the end of the first year of the war the Confederate States had been recognized by the leading governments of Europe as a belligerent power. This continued unchanged to the close. Mr. Mason became our representative in London, Mr. Slidell in Paris, Mr. Rost in Spain, and Mr. Mann in Belgium. They performed with energy and skill the positions, but were unsuccessful in obtaining our recognition as an independent power. . . .—The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government, by Jefferson Davis, p. 367.

The prophecy does not warrant the conclusion that "war poured out on all nations beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina," shall flow out of the war with the States, or be the direct results of that affair; but that the terrible conflicts of war would not terminate with this civil war.

Traum breathes out as follows: "that slaves should rise up against their masters." The revelation does not read that way. "And it shall come to pass after many days slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled, and disciplined for war," is the correct reading. But he continues, "have neither circumstantially, nor particularly come about. Now, had he added "that I know of," would it not have been a chain of gold, as an ornament around his theory, instead of a noose which will strangle him, and his theory, metaphorically speaking?

Slaves did "rise up against their masters." They were "marshaled and disciplined for war." Lardner's History of the World, page 641, says: "Before the close of the year, (1863) serious inroads had been made into Confederate territory. Over fifty thousand negroes had enlisted in Union armies, and behaved well." "Fifty thousand" negroes had joined the Union armies, against their Confederate masters, before the war was half concluded.

Booker T. Washington says: "When the long and memorable struggle came between union and separation, when the negro knew that victory of the Union army meant freedom, and defeat his continued enslavement, although enlisting by thousands, as opportunity presented itself, to fight in honorable combat for the cause of the Union and liberty, yet when the suggestion came to burn, or massacre, he chose the better part."—The Future of the American Negro, by Booker T. Washington, p. 129.

Other evidence could be cited, but this lets Mr. Traum down and out, in relation to the summarized points. I must, however, say, that his attack is like a parenthesis; it may be read in a low tone of voice, or altogether omitted without injuring the sense.

Elder Traum says of the word remnant, page 261:

As to the word remnants, no one knows what that means; but allowing that it means "the Lamanites," the Indians, there was no change in Indian habits and methods of warfare.

The document doesn't say anything concerning the "change in Indian habits and methods of warfare." It says, "the remnants who are left of the land shall marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation." Elder Traum has been a very partial student of his country's history, if he has not seen the accomplishment of this feature of the prophecy in the savage outbreaks of the American Indian. So long embittered against the Government on account of mistreatment by officers, that they scarcely remained true to the conferences and treaties made with them. But as Traum attacks Elder Blair's argument by omitting his evidence, here is what he said:

And "the remnants who are left of the land, [the Indians], will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation." This is precisely what has been done. The Indians did "marshal themselves" against the whites as early as in August, 1862, and they have been waging war against them from time to time until the present. The massacre in Minnesota, which took place August, 1862, was a terribly cruel and heart-rending affair. Two thousand persons were barbarously slaughtered in a few hours. Nameless outrages were perpetrated; and the losses sustained, pecuniarily, by the Government and by individuals, amounted to over $25,000,000. A writer has graphically said:

"From the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers on the rockbound coast of New England, in the winter of 1620, until their descendants had passed the center of the continent, and reached the lovely plains of Minnesota, no exhibition of Indian character had so afflicted and appalled the soul of humanity, as the fearful and deliberate massacre perpetrated by them in August, 1862. . . . The blow fell like a storm of thunderbolts from the clear, bright heavens. The storm of fierce, savage murder, in its most horrid and frightful forms, rolled on. Day passed and night came, until the sad catalogue reached the fearful number of two thousand human victims, from the gray-haired sire to the helpless infant of a day, who lay mangled and dead on the ensanguined field. . . . In two days the whole work of murder was done, with here and there exceptional cases in different settlements. And, during these two days, a population of thirty thousand, scattered over some eight counties, on the western borders of the State, on foot, on horseback, with teams of oxen and horses, under the momentum of the panic thus created, were rushing wildly and frantically over the prairies to places of safety."—Indian Massacres.

The Indians "marshaled themselves" as foreshown in the prophecy,—no whites having a hand in that matter. The bad treatment which they had received from the whites—the Indian agents and traders in particular—had much to do in causing these outrages,—it made them "exceeding angry,"—yet, as said before, the whites had nothing to do in marshaling them, or directing them in their sanguinary work.

These Indian wars are costly as well as cruel; and hence, in more ways than one, are they "a sore vexation" to our tax-burdened nation. It has been reported that for every Indian captured and killed during some of the Indian wars since 1862, it has cost the whites the lives of nine white men, and $5,000,000 in money. This may be a slight exaggeration, yet it is probably not far from the truth. The enormous expense, with the loss of human life, and the various perplexities connected with these wars, and the whole Indian question, are sources of "sore vexation" to the whites, and from which there are no prospects of speedy and permanent relief.—Joseph the Seer, pp. 183, 184, Plano edition.

Elder Traum is mute concerning that part of the prophecy which says, "that the cry of the Saints, and the blood of the Saints, shall cease to come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." He knows where that was delivered, the blood of the Saints had not been shed, and he also knows that it was fulfilled in the cruel massacre of Haun's Mill, and Carthage, Illinois, when the blood of innocent men, women, yea, and little, prattling babes, cried from the earth to the Lord of Sabaoth, and Jesus says: "And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?"—Luke 18:7. When justice can be found nowhere else, who is the court of last resort?

A DAMAGING STATEMENT.

Elder Traum, quoting Elder Blair's statement touching Brigham Young's foreseen leadership of the church says:

It requires just a little stretching of the imagination to think of a prophecy in the subjunctive mood. The "if" in that so-called "prophecy" forbids calling it a prophecy, and even "if" it were justly entitled to such recognition, we can find Mormon authority for believing that Brigham Young was the one power that enabled Mormonism to survive those perilous days following Nauvoo.

If Elder Traum condemns prophecy because of the subjunctive mode, or "if" being attached then away goes the great volume of prophecies in the Bible. Isn't he sweeping in his moral deductions? The Antis stand with him here also. Let him try Moses' prophecy in the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus with this mighty tester. He will find nine "ifs" in that chapter. In the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy Israel's temporal doom is sealed by two "ifs." If thou shalt hearken diligently, etc., "I will set thee on high, above all nations. If not, thou shalt be the tail and not the head." Isaiah and Jeremiah and replete with the sign of the subjunctive. In the New Testament it is met with frequently in the prophecies. Jesus says: "If I depart, I will send him (the Comforter) unto you."—John 16:7. Again, "If ye love me, keep my commandments, and I will pray the Father and he shall give you another comforter," etc., 14, 15, 16. Again, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself."—Verse 3. Of these blessings he says: "And now have I told you before it come to pass, that when it come to pass, ye might believe."—Verse 29. Does the "if" forbid calling these statements prophecies? Hard pushed, indeed, for criticisms.

RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

On pages 261, 262, Traum soliloquizes thus:

"He also," says Blair, "by the Book of Mormon and direct revelation, proclaimed that soon after that book came forth the Lord would speedily prepare the way among the nations for the restoration of Israel and Judah to their lands," which has not been recorded by history, "that faithful chronicler," unless by the same kind of Mormon proof it can be shown that the "unspeakable Turk" is of Israel or Judah, for the Turk still holds Canaan.

"Joseph predicted," continues Blair, "that his seed, his posterity, would be called to fill his office, and plead the cause of injured innocence," and, using Joseph's words, says: "While water runs and grass grows; while virtue is lovely and vice hateful, and while a stone points the sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was, I, or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence until Missouri makes atonement for all her sins—or sinks disgraced," etc. This et cetera in the "revelation" reads "degraded and damned to hell, 'where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.'" The words of "my posterity" are italicized by Blair as if he were conscious that "I" had not done his part to fulfill this dire prophecy, and he fails to show where "my posterity" has plead the cause of injured innocence on Missouri soil. Surely "my posterity" has done nothing from the year 1844 to 1860, and there is no record where this son of the eloquent prophet has ever beseeched either the Federal Government or the State of Missouri in the interests of "injured innocence." Until this is done, or Missouri is "degraded and damned to hell," "the faithful chronicler" will not attest the glowing success of the would-be prophet. And yet this prophecy is as true as any that the "prophet" ever uttered. The silence of "my posterity," and the survival of Missouri as a State, which to date has escaped the terrible end threatened by this vindictive prophet, unite in pronouncing the prophecy an empty boast, and the prophet a fraud.

The reckless—shall I say it? “gall” displayed in these feints, is remarkable. Please indulge me, and I will tell the readers who Traum, and his fellow invaders, remind me of:

I once heard of a man who by ways that were devious and by tricks that were vain became indebted to almost every person in the community and then made an assignment, with no visible assets to discharge his obligations. His outraged and incensed creditors met and in their anger and desperation determined to cut up his body and parcel it out among themselves as a punishment and in part payment of his debts. At this juncture a man stepped forward and said, “Gentlemen, as his largest creditor, I demand his gall.”

Our friendly critic surely owes a large apology for the courage he manifests, and the independent mind exhibited in bracing himself against facts so patent and well authenticated. “History, that faithful chronicler of events,” does record the fact of Israel's returning to the land of their fathers, and in so doing bears incontestable witness to the truth of the Book of Mormon, translated by Joseph the Seer. The following from the Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, Dispatch, and from a correspondent, appearing in that journal, is confirmatory of progress in the Holy Land:

JERUSALEM, July 12, 1889.

Thirty thousand out of the forty thousand people in Jerusalem are Jews. The Turkish Government, which has for ages prohibited them from living longer than three weeks at a time in the Holy Land, is, under the influence of foreign governments, relaxing its restrictions; and at present the Jews are coming here by the hundred. They are engaging in business, and they now control a great part of the trade of Jerusalem. Some of them feel that the day when the prophecy of the Bible that they shall again inhabit their land shall be fulfilled is at hand; and one curious tribe from southern Arabia claims to have received a revelation that they must leave their desert country and come back to Palestine. These Jews have lived in Yemen Arabia for the past 2,500 years. They are of the tribe of Gad, and they left Palestine 700 years before Christ was born. They are bringing with them many valuable documents which prove their origin, and are engaging in agriculture near Jerusalem. The persecution of the Jews in Russia and Austria is driving many of them here, and there are also large numbers of Polish and Spanish Jews in Jerusalem. The time of Jews remaining in Palestine has been extended, and the restrictions upon their residence in Jerusalem have been practically removed. A half century ago there were only 32 Jewish families in all Jerusalem, and the number in all Palestine was only 3,000. Now there are nearly 50,000 in the Holy Land, and three fourths of the population of Jerusalem is made up of them.

“The young man” of Zechariah 2:1-4 was commissioned by the angel to announce, “Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns (plural) without walls for the multitude of men, and cattle therein.” So it is noted that the Spanish Jew, and Polish Jew, and other nationalities of the Jews, dwell in different parts of the city, thus constituting Jerusalem a city of towns, “without walls.”

An act of the British Parliament in 1830, for the emancipation of Israel from Gentile restrictions, favoring their redemption from social ostracism and political proscription, was the first ray of light darting above their horizon since they signed the death warrant of their Messiah. When the earth quaked, and the sun was veiled in darkness, their nation shaken to its center, and the constellation of their political existence was hurled from the firmament, they have had to their lips the cup of the wrath of God poured out without mixture until the beginning of the end in 1830, when the Book of Mormon made its appearance, announcing the preparation among the nations for their redemption. Since that time, almost the entire collection of settled governments of the earth, have recognized the citizenship of the Jew. In 1851, the homesickness of the Jew began to turn him toward the father land, as the following shows:

The late projects of two eminent European Jews, Rothschild and Sir Moses Montefiore, the first to purchase Jerusalem and its environs, as a refuge and home to all Jews, wishing to return to a land consecrated by a thousand sacred associations; and the other to secure by a sort of lease, the possession of several towns and villages, held sacred by the Jews, for the purpose of colonizing there the children of Israel, may indicate one means by which Israel may be reinstated into more than his original civil privileges. Sir Moses is at this time on a mission to Saint Petersburg, to negotiate with the great Autocrat of the North, that the Jews of Russia, against whom a barbarous edict had been issued, should be permitted peaceably to emigrate. Sir Moses writes that “he has been graciously received by the Emperor,” who has favored his wishes to visit his brethren of the dispersion in Russia, and consented to the emigration of ten thousand to Palestine, or some other settlement which Sir Moses may fix upon. The British Government recently appointed a consular agent to be stationed at Jerusalem, with instructions that he should, to the utmost of his power, afford protection to the Jews. The Emperor of Austria has recently issued two ordinances in favor of the Israelites, conferring on them unwonted privileges.—Hand of God in History, Hollis Read, M. A., pp. 335, 336.

THE BEST BOOKS AND HOW TO STUDY THEM.

There are many advantages to be gained by the proper reading and study of good books. The person who does not read has not learned to think properly of things past nor of things at a distance from him.

In order to get a clear understanding of just what the writer or author is writing about, it is necessary that the reader should have a clear head, a sympathetic heart, and a lively fancy. His mind should no longer be absorbed with things immediately surrounding him. He pictures before him the scenes of the writer.

WHAT SHALL WE READ?

Answer, one or two of the standard works in each department of literature; after that choose the books that best suit your bent of mind. In so doing you may know something of many things. By knowing the best standard writers much time and study will be saved. In English literature, study Shakespeare, Bacon, Milton, Gibbons, Burns, Scott, Carlyle, and Emerson. If you haven't time to read and study all, read at least one of these authors. Study his works well. Confine your attention to that which best suits your capacity. Choose books that are interesting, those that make you to think; those that fit you for everyday duties; that cause you to act as well as to think.

History teaches high examples for your imitation. A good poem will refine and elevate your taste and fill your mind with beautiful forms. A good book may make you more cheerful, sympathetic, and more appreciative of what is beautiful and what is good and noble to follow.

HOW SHOULD WE READ BOOKS?

Learn something about the author; locate him. Read the preface. Take a comprehensive view of the table of contents, as it maps out your route of travel. Give your whole attention to what you read; it represents the author's best thoughts. Follow him closely, understand him clearly, enter into all his feelings. Some can understand a book best by hearing it read aloud. Be sure to note the most important thoughts as you read. Keep a notebook and write down your most important thoughts. If you own the book you may make notes with a pencil on the margin.

Nearly all great scholars have been note takers. Write out in your own language what you have learned. Save your best thoughts before they leave you. Writing your thoughts will help fix them on your memory. Talking over what you read also will help you to remember what you have read. Apply the results of your reading to everyday duties. Imitate the author's manner of thinking. Apply the qualifications that were required to gain success. This is the reward of studiously reading good books.

Skimming over gossipy literature without some method in view is like sifting dust heaps for pearls.

THE READER.

Mankind has a desire to know what others are doing. If they can not see they like to imagine what others are doing. They want a narrative or story. History and biography should satisfy, but they do not always do so. History treats too much of great political events and biography of great geniuses, and not enough about the common people, and what they are doing. How interesting is the story of the prodigal son.

Books to please the children must be very simple and also wonderful. The good people very good, the bad very bad; later all their books must contain an adventure; later they must be more devotional and talk of beauty, love, and deliverance.

Some love the detective story because of its activities and excitements. Some now begin to feel that the real world is stranger than fiction, and begin the study of man, or human character. How noble is God's creature. In this we learn not only our duty to God, but to ourselves and to others. Here the Holy Scriptures are our highest authority.

We may read histories, biographies, and about everyday people, like ourselves, tempted as we are who may be models or warnings to us. The youth wants to read a moving picture story of this bustling, work-a-day world, with its interesting scenes and incidents, a variety of characters, all playing their appropriate parts. He studies their motives, also the results. He observes vice and virtue, like wheat and tares growing side by side, also selfishness and benevolence and their rewards. Sooner or later he will become acquainted with the dark side of wrong doings, and those who deceive.

The tired laborer often reads for recreation, which should not only rest but educate, and nerve us up for the duties of life. Think how much happiness one good book may give to mankind. A good writer in love with his subject will picture his characters so plainly they will put one in memory of similar persons.

Humor is a good tonic and will also be used in good books occasionally. If we would teach, we must also please.

History gives us the motives, actions, and manners of men of other ages. It deals with the most striking and lifelike characters of great men, along with a few ordinary mortals. The true historian passes along among the dry bones and makes them live. You do not soon forget their activities.

Read only the best histories. The human mind is not a bag to be filled with knowledge.

Nothing is better for the imaginary minds of the young boys and girls than to read the life descriptions and deeds of our noble men and women. Read the thrilling incidents in history and the striking characters in biography. If the teacher would only explain the plan of the book and then graphically, vividly, and even dramatically describe the principal characters to our boys and girls, they would no longer feed on thistles (novels). If boys and girls are allowed to become idle they soon become morbid and read trashy books that lead to unreal thinking and to scandalous deeds. Parents should see that their children have a variety of suitable books and magazines.

Keep busy, have something always to do. There is no one in the world but what can find some kind of work that they can learn to do.

BIOGRAPHY.

If a boy was compelled to live entirely alone, without any chance of education, he would soon become as wild as a monkey in the woods. From infancy we are surrounded with kind friends whom we see and hear and from whom we learn things that will be of practical use to us in after life. We should not only inherit the wisdom of our ancestors, but also the accumulated wisdom of the whole human race. This to a very great extent may be done by studying the biographies of great men, the representative men; yet some people go astray, like a flock of sheep, by following the wrong leader. How can we distinguish between true and false greatness? Success does not always mean greatness. Napoleon was a sham, yet he ruled nations.

Noise is often mistaken for greatness, especially in political meetings, and the daily newspaper prolongs the sound from day to day. Such a man has a ready tongue and an unspeakable belief in himself; this constitutes his whole stock in trade. He attends to everything except his own business; he imagine his mouth to be the head of public opinion. Angels weep.

REAL GREATNESS.

What is real greatness? A great man is a large man,—large in soul. He is one who can go forth among men and unite them to himself by that wonderful power called sympathy. It is sympathy that makes a man great. A small man has no sympathy. His soul seems confined within himself. The great person is one who not only studies the needs of self but studies the whole universe and loves and sympathizes with all of God's creation.

By means of reading and observation he places himself in the circumstances of other human beings. He sympathizes with the people of the present in all countries as well as with those of the past in all ages. He feels for the lower animals, and studies and understands plants and the wonderful things of creation. He tries to be in sympathy with his Maker and strives to know and appreciate the wonderful laws by which he rules the world. This living, active sympathy is the very essence of greatness. He does unto others as he would that they should do for him. He is like the good Samaritan; he loves his neighbor as himself. The small man is not so; he can only think of himself.

THE GREATEST OF MEN.

About two thousand years ago there appeared at Jerusalem the greatest of men. He was the chief corner stone, the bright and morning star, the chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. He was a poor man, born of an obscure woman, in an obscure village. He traveled about the country, and had no place to lay his head. He did not seek earthly power or pomp, yet he was the greatest of men. He was full and running over with living, active sympathy; sympathy that filled his heart for all mankind. His voice spake as never man spake before. His whole being was given up for the benefit of others. His love was like the sunshine, that warmed all alike. He sympathized with all classes, rich and poor, saint and sinner,—neither did he forget the little children, but said, "Let the little children come unto me." He drew lessons from the fields, from animals, birds, flowers, stones, lilies, mountains, and people. He communed whole nights with his heavenly Father, that his divine will might be carried out.

Sympathy is the cause of success in every great achievement. The speaker who is in sympathy with his hearers makes a success in speaking. The same can be said of every other worker, but when one is not in sympathy with others, but little is accomplished.

Martin Luther was conscious that he was speaking not only for himself, but for all Christendom when he spoke to Catholic priests at the Diet of Worms. This divine sympathy may not be fully developed in every individual, but if it is only developed in a strong, healthy manner in only one direction it still has a claim to the title of greatness. Great men have this sympathy for all mankind and have lighted up the dark vista of the past. They shine like the fixed stars that have gathered the light of their generation and sent it forth to cheer and guide us on our way.

When biography treats of such a man of large sympathy, who felt and worked for his fellow creatures, we should be benefited by the study of such a life.

How shall we study their biographies? Man is a sealed book, and may remain so until some severe test comes to his character. We should live by him; associate with him; notice his dress, appearance, and habits; listen to all his sayings; place ourselves in his circumstances; look at things from his point of view; visit the places he has lived; make inquiries; peruse his writings; read his books; take into account the influences which surrounded him.

What do we gain by the study of biography? The study of the lives of great men will cure us all of littleness and conceit,—selfishness. When we study the lives of great men we will cease to think much about ourselves and will act more naturally. The study of biography leads us to imitate the grandest models of the human race. We all belong to the family of imitators and we imitate each other from the cradle to the grave. If we read of a great man our first impulse is to imitate him. In the study of the biographies of great men we get the accumulated wisdom of the past, a knowledge of history. Incidents in history are strung like pearls on the golden thread of their lives. If you want a good account of the old Greeks and Romans, read Plutarch's Lives of those great men. If you would know about Scotland, read the lives of Wallace and Bruce. If you would know the truth about the true church and kingdom of God restored in these last days, read the lives of Joseph Smith the Prophet, and of his son, the President of the church. Also the lives of those associated with them in this marvelous work and a wonder. The study of the biography of such men, if properly made, should increase our faith in God's providence.

When we see how degraded, selfish, sensual, and sometimes devilish, many of our fellow creatures are, our faith in God's providence is apt to be shaken. We become discouraged and see but little progress in the human race. One remedy for this despair is the contemplation of the great men whose memory lives in biography. These men are not gods to be worshiped, but are more or less like what he wishes us to be in truthfulness, sympathy, long-suffering, and goodness. Read the lives of Socrates, Saint Paul, John Howard, David Livingston, and such men, and we will find that this world is not God-forsaken after all. They shine out like planets that receive their light from the sun, and when it is night all around, and the sun remains unseen, they reflect his light and shed down comfort, hope, faith, assurance, and guidance upon the dim and dangerous paths of groping humanity.

It is plain that if mankind thus acted and suffered during all these generations, they hoped some benefit, some ease, some well being for themselves and their descendants; that if they supported law and order, it was to secure fair play for all.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

“Occasionally one comes across a first-rate receipt for living—one that never fails, no matter under what condition it is tried. Here is one that can be recommended: ‘Have enough strength to be sweet, and enough sweetness to be strong, and too much of both to be queer.’”

Although all the world ranged themselves in one line to tell “This is wrong,” be your own faithful vassal and the ambassador of God—throw down the glove and answer, “This is right.”—Robert Louis Stevenson.

May God give us grace and faith and courage and ambition always to be ready to pass on and up to higher kinds of life, to new kingdoms of heaven as he shall open them to us for ever.—Phillips Brooks.

If the young man is not a replica of father or mother, let us be thankful that we have at least given to the world a new personality. At the best a boy is better than his father, but some of them are not so good. Then their shortcomings must be borne as gracefully as possible, and the old hearts keep true to love for the young and untamed ones, without grudge or bitterness.

Do you suppose the woman listening, listening in the still nighttime for the step of her boy is ignorant always of the mistakes he is making, because she does not publish her son's guilt from the housetop? Nay; she hopes on and loves for ever—if she is a faithful representative of her sex—she may even know intuitively when he lies to her (and God help her if she does), but will she not love at any cost the boy she carried for months near her own heart, and spent weary years rearing?—not to this—no; always a mother has an ideal; for sleepless nights and toilsome days it is like a constant, burning star.

Oh, the dear, dear boys that are so bad that the neighbors pity the parents for loving them and keeping them in the home. Pray tell me where else may the bad boy go and expect to find charity and loving forbearance? Unless he go where hearts are baser than his own, he must be unhouseed if he leave his home. There was a man whose burning words of love to his children are repeated to this day in Christian homes with admiration and delight, and he was an atheist. He told his children to go where they would; sink as low and be as vile as they might; though sin and wickedness and folly may have done its worst, they could still find a place in his heart, a share in his house and bread. Yet he was not a Christian. I know men who have been as true as this to their wayward sons and daughters. No key was ever turned on them; open house and loving heart. Do you remember the story of Flora Campbell in that little volume of Ian Mac-laren's, known in every home, Beside the Bonny Brier Bush? Go read it, you severe but loving souls. There may be Flora Campbells near you sometime; let not love for them come too late. My heart just leaps when she says to the good woman's friend:

"It ees a peety you hef not the Gaelic; it ees the best of all languages for loving. There are fifty words for darling, and my father would be calling me every one that night I came home."

And the prayer of the father when he found himself facing a very ill daughter:

"Take her not until she has seen that I love her. . . Give me time to do her kindness for the past when I oppressed her. . . Oh turn away thy judgment on my hardness and let not the child suffer for her father's sins."

How many, like this hard old Scotchman, could melt toward the wayward enough to plead forgiveness for hardness in his conduct?

How the girl-woman loved his loving, and how his love ran over his heart onto all God's creatures; not alone his own wayward girls, but the willful and wayward of all parents. And before you lay down Ian Maclare's little book, read the story of the student and mark you the intimacy between this young man and his mother. Sitting with his face to the Valley of Death, his heart afire with ambition and love, this young man learned many things. One day the village comforter (?) came to console the student's calm, steady mother, and her fears were all of the traditional sort. How grandly the mother defended the Lord, and yet she went to the young man in pity that he must hear this woman's fearsome harangue. And the sick man smiled. How he had enjoyed his mother's defense of the "Maister." Then he told her how he had learned long ago, when a small boy, to trust in the Lord; had learned it one night from her, his mother. As she stood by him and soothed his childish fears, with sane, sweet reasoning, and on it was built a faith that never faltered even when he folded his "scholar's silken hood," closed his beloved books, smiled into his mother's eyes, and went down into the shadow.

Oh, read it, mothers and boys and fathers. I like that story; and you will, too. And don't forget the love names. There are enough to go round and girls like father to call them such sweet things as just seem to fit. Boys like it, too; on the sly.

There is another problem for all; that is the apparent self-righteousness of parents. The man or woman of unviolated goodness. A dear, sweet-faced mother came to me one day: "I am puzzled. I don't know how to tell it, either. You see it's this way. When I was a girl I never could tell mother anything. It was not because she was not kind and good; oh, no; she was so good it seemed she was shocked at such little things. They seemed so awful to her. It seemed as if mother had never done a foolish thing or met some of the things that we girls heard and saw, and we never could tell her these things. Now I don't want my boys and my girl to think that I am not good and pure-minded, but I want them to feel free to tell me things that bother them or that please the fancy of their fun-loving souls. I wonder if I might not tell them some of the things we did when young that were mistakes, but will make them feel as though they were licensed to do those things because I did, in my ignorance? Oh, I did nothing sinful; just frivolous and daring and silly things that all the young folks did. Oh, I do want to do right."

She was such a dear woman; her chastity unmarred, her sense of life's responsibilities so keen and fine. We concluded we would tell our children of some of our jolly times, and from our own mistakes draw for them lessons in propriety and cultured pleasures; and afterwards my children grew and I learned that no one can live close to their young people without some exchange of confidence, and the nature of the confidences change as the years grow into the home and make men of our boys, and if confidence is not established by that time it is a sad, sad pity. Ah, how sad! Now I do not think it necessary to lay bare all one's life; but forget not some of the things that will be good to tell. One authority says this is a hard problem, and advises us to wait until they seek advice and confidence, but to have such a position built up that our young people can come for these things. Oh, the tact we need, and how can a young man love and seek the company of a parent who meets him with sternness always, with the tables of the law between them, even the shadow of the pillar of fire, although he reveres both, can bring him so close as a little while on the shores of a certain sea where a carpenter walked with fishermen and boiled for them fish while he waited for them. Ah, if he loved men into good works for thousands of years, shall parents fail with the young men given to them?

Let me tell a little story of some high school boys—"near men"—I call them:

In a western town, recently a neighbor put her head up close to the window where Mrs. Turner sat sewing, and said: "Do you know where our boys are? Up at that miserable barber shop. Mrs. Green just told me she saw them there."

"That seems queer," replied the other; "my boys know the place, of all others, is forbidden. They stayed to work up the gymnasium work and I—"

"Yes; and when you once let up on boys they will run into something mean. I've got work waiting for Ted and I need him."

Mrs. Turner had folded her work and was unpinning her apron. "I'll go and see; will you come, too, Mrs. Porter?"

"I go to that shop? No; indeed. Why there's a regular gambling den in there, and those men loafing around there talk too vile for anything; even about women passing. My husband told me about it. No; I'll not go; it's no fit place for a woman to stop."

"Well, if it's not fit for a woman it's a poor place for boys, and I abhor loafing," and Mrs. Turner took her handbag and started for town. As she turned into the main business street she saw a group of young men entering "The Emporium," a men's furnishing house. She recognized the tall form of her son, Fred, and she, too, went in. As she moved toward the counter she met the younger boy's eyes. She smiled at him. Both boys were moving toward the door. She called, "Don't you want to wait, boys, and walk home with me?" The boys looked confused, but waited while she made a small purchase. As they turned into the home street Fred began, "Mother, Professor Snow told us to meet him at the barber shop, and we would settle about lockers and things for the gym; and we waited awfully long. I know you hate loafing and I felt ashamed there. Some men talked filthy while we stood there. Mrs. Green told you we were there, didn't she? Glad you found us in the Emporium. We had to go there to see Ferd Peters about the room rent, so we could fix the tax." And so the lad rattled on, and the other boy said, "What made you think of dad's overcoat buttons to-day?" and they all laughed a little. The next day the professor had a note from Mrs. Turner, inviting him to use her library (which meant the one spare room in her house) for any meeting he might want to have with the boys at the high school. The professor came at once to visit the Turners and apologized for leading the boys to such questionable quarters. Mrs. Turner had tried to be tactful, but—the boys knew their mother, and yet appreciated her consideration of their feelings.

Sometimes a young man's loafing habits will lead him from a truly careful, clean life, to low and trifling walks and ways.

If possible, habits of thrift and a love for active employment should be instilled and stimulated and always leveled straight at the loafing habit. Mrs. Turner was a busy woman and her boys were busy. But would you do as she did? Boys hate anything like a spy, but the law laid lovingly down in that home was, "No street loafing here." Boys certainly should not be spied on, but parents are entitled to know where they spend their time; and if they do know, they will not be quite so uneasy about the young man when he begins against all former rule and habit to come home at late hours. One man was counseled to turn his key on the boy; a young man who remained out late. The rule of the house was: "No key turned here on absentees," and it never was changed. Bolts and bars can not keep a boy good and honorable and trusting.

Standing face to face with the situation, and trying to adjust our well-settled lives to this splendid being here in our home, a wave of tenderness or regret sweeps over us. He swings easily out of the groove of his life habit. He is irritated by rules and regulations. He has learned that law and order are splendid requirements, but sometimes the old spirit of love for the untried possesses him. He is like the little child who feels that if he keeps all rules inviolate for a length of time, then he may be entitled to all the joys of naughtiness for a while. He says, if I am good for a whole week in heaven, may I go to hell Saturday evening and play with the bad little boys? In other words, it often happens that a young boy suddenly veers from an exemplary life, and in the language of another, "has his fling," and tears or prayers or scowls or pleadings do not avail. Parents and friends must bear patiently and prayerfully what is almost a crucifixion of the hopes and plans of a lifetime, until they return. I know of one good man whose whole family gave up faith, but the one sister—she saved him by her trust in him.

You know the weakness that holds us in the face of death, and the fate of our boys seems, sometimes, more appalling than death. It is the erring and wayward who need us most; but they will not admit it, and we do not know the road to their hearts. Yet we must stay always with them. I do not think it is always possible to instill into a child love or hatred for the ideals that you have and the things that you despise, but I do think that the chances are in your favor and it is your duty to keep lofty ideals, live towards them, and in serene and steadfast spirit spurn the low and ignoble. I could not compromise my ideals, nor would it be necessary to do it in order to be tolerant and gentle. Not always is the parent right, and when talking to his young man son, nobody is fooled when sometimes everybody but the parent is still. "A man's a man for a' that and a' that."

I heard a woman lament that her brother's boys were reading books criticizing Christian belief and faith. "It is ruinous," she cried. "Men of mature years have lost the way reading the scientific works on infidelity." But the father said, "Let them read. I'm loaded; when the time comes we will try the other side of the question. I'm talking with them. I went that way alone, but now I am going with my boys and show them the way while they are here where I can show them. I'm glad they are looking up these things."

In one home the children had reached maturity and were all people of strong personality. The father fretted at the frequent differences of opinion. But the mother said, "There is no great calamity awaiting us. We are just a family of grown-ups in the childhood nest. We will get tolerant of each other's opinions soon. We will learn to treat the hobbies and ideals of each as we would those of a guest, and make of little sharp sayings just little jokes."

But it is hard to feel that the boy to whom you have always given the menial little talks, and treated with condescension, is a man, and to him as another man you show respect. You don't have to do it, in a sense, and yet your own manhood dictates that you do have to do it. Of course the young man who has received unstinted courtesy in the home and has seen it daily in his elders must in necessity absorb some of it, if nothing more. If father treats mother and the girls with courteous gallantry, the young man of the home ought to fulfill expectations and do likewise.

While we are expecting our young man to meet these demands of ours, and lamenting in our souls all his so-called failures, we, too, are being "weighed in the balance." A young man wrote to his friends a laughable account of his first effort to serve a fowl at his own table. The "beast" was supposedly dead, but it utterly refused to be carved, lying on the platter. To his mother the young benedict wrote: "Mother, why didn't you make me learn to carve?" She had heard that cry before when simple advice had been unheeded, and the boy had met the consequences. "Why didn't you make me do it?" Why, indeed, must we insist upon our own judgment ruling so much of the lives of our boys? Why, but to escape this very cry, prompted by more serious damages to the life of the boy? While we hesitate to insist on the performance of unpleasant duties because of the few hours of disagreement between the boy and ourselves, we are cowards. Of course I believe in giving reasons for the insistence; but many parents fail in getting obedience from children because they do not use their own will in the telling. The child, if highly sensitized, feels any laxity or impotency of will in a parent. So I say, if you ask a child to do a thing, you must ask in faith, believing that he is going to do it. Put enough of yourself into it to beget the confidence that you know what you want and why.

I have heard parents say, "Now you go right straight into the house," when it really sounded like they expected them to stay out. You must have faith in the young. One young girl said, "Mother, I did what you told me to do, but I could not see why you wanted me to do it until afterward." "Why didn't you ask me? You had opportunity." "Oh, I thought you thought I knew enough about it, so I waited to ask."

If a young man in the home could share father's business burdens, what a help it would be to him when he became a householder. To know the value of buying with understanding, when to buy coal and wood to best advantage; what kinds were best, and how to look after taxes and see to the painting, plumbing, gardening, and lawn. To watch the chimney and look after the cellar and cow and horse, or help scrub and wash and sweep, and meet the issues of daily life that fret and wear the young provider into an old man.

The young girl must learn housekeeping at father's expense, and mother's strength of endurance. She must sew and clean and cook like mother does, but the young man about to be married knows nothing of his share in the proposed partnership, and the young girl—she must learn all about the intimacies and mysteries of the new social relation awaiting her and this young man whose father "never could talk to the kid about such things." Isn't it strange, this shyness between father and son on a subject which men as a rule feel no timidity in discussing with brother men? How many fathers talk long and deeply and earnestly with the young man son on these matters? There are some I know and there have been young men favored with mothers to whom they could come with vital questions at such times. Mothers with whom they were so intimate that they had long talks on relations that she made to them hallowed and sacred, and those talks were sacred memories. How often these matters are subjects for coarse jokes and brutal ridicule by their elders; so how can a respectable young man expose his ignorance or innocence to such a possible vulgarity? Oh, the shame of it, that men of our fatherhood are so low! The never-ending shame of it!

True, there are books, excellent books; but what number of books can take the place of a living oracle in the form of a pure-minded, loving father? A well-known author blames much of the marital unhappiness to the fact that many men enter the marriage relation with no other knowledge but that gained from the practices of immoral characters. If this is true, the remedy lies almost entirely with parents, and it is a great responsibility.

We once read in the HERALD a splendid letter from a father to a son who was about to be married. I wondered then why more of these letters, written lovingly to the individual, might not in some way be made to reach the unloved masses. I know a young father whose boy tells many a happy story about the games and trips and discoveries of "papa and me; yes, sir; we!" The father never knew a father's companionship. His boy has all he can give. He goes with the boy and then he says: "Son, I must work; come with me." It is not enough to get the boy's confidence; he must feel that he has yours. Then the young man of the family will not seem so much of a stranger. In fact, if father and son are really intimate and chummy, there will be two young men in the family, and if they are far apart mother must be the chum, for if she isn't the young man in the house will be a stranger.

Yes; intimacy is one of my hobbies. At least, I believe in its efficacy between parents and child. The young man needs our encouragement in noble and inspiring dreams. He needs to feel his power in the work of life; that he is a personage in this great conflict for social uplift. He needs praise and honor whenever due, and he needs it from his elders. What if he has self-conceit? the world will spoil that; encourage the good in him.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON, September 27, 1912.

Editor Herald: I have taken the HERALD for about twenty years, and it has always been a welcome visitor at my house. I have lived a little over three years in Everett, and it was about six months before I could find any Saints here. I finally found Sister Milligan, after which we found them one by one until there were six of us, when we organized our mite society. We have striven hard to get means to help pay tent expenses when the tent was at Everett.

In July, 1911, Brother William Johnson came over from Seattle and organized our Sunday school. Later Brother Plumb came and preached a few sermons, and two blessed souls were baptized. Now we have a nice little school. This summer, in June, Brethren George Thorburn and P. T. Plumb were here with the tent, and we had some grand sermons, and the Spirit of the Master was with us.

On September 8 Brother William Johnson made us another welcome visit, and preached two lovely sermons; he organized our Religio, and we all feel to rejoice in the gospel of these latter days.

I have been a member of the church for about twenty years and the way seems brighter every day. I see the necessity of living closer to the law and realize the responsibility that rests upon us. Many times I feel my weakness, but God's grace has been sufficient when I have humbled myself and allowed the Holy Spirit to lead.

I ever pray for the time when we will be gathered home, and Zion prospered.

Your sister,

MRS. E. O. BURNETT.

2109 CEDAR STREET.

KNOX, INDIANA, September 6, 1912.

Dear Herald: We have enjoyed great blessings since the conference in June. Brother C. F. Ellis has been doing a great work with the aid of the good Spirit, at this place. He and Brother J. W. McKnight came from conference to Knox. Brother McKnight was with us only a few days, then went to Grand Rapids. Brother Ellis has been with us (until last Friday) since the conference. One week ago to-day, August 30, we took our Sunday school scholars to Bass Lake for a picnic. Brother Ellis was at Ora, but joined us at the lake. A brother and sister from near Brems, a little town five miles west of Knox, who have heard the gospel at different times but did not decide to join in until after having heard Brother Ellis a week, came prepared to be baptized. They were baptized about two o'clock in the afternoon, and confirmed immediately after. Baptism and confirmation were both lovely, and we were made to feel the influence of the Spirit. The names of the brother and sister were Sammy and Effie Chance.

When Brother Ellis first came to Knox he was with us two weeks; in that time we learned much concerning the work, and our duties as Saints, and felt the Comforter was indeed with us. Brother Reed, of Hibbard, was with us one night, and after meeting, while talking with Brother Ellis, told him of one Sister Shoemaker who lived at Ora. He said he believed he could get an opening there and that he was sure the sister would give him a home. In a day or two Brother Ellis went to Brother Reed's, and after staying all night with him, the two went to Ora. The sister did give Brother Ellis a home, and he was able to get the use of the Christian church in which to hold services the same day. Then he, not wishing to lose any time, went about from house to house and announced meeting for that night. The result was eight people the first night, and about fifty the next. From then there were fifty or more at each service. Many seemed to be interested, and the Spirit was with him in great power. After laboring four weeks he was rewarded by having three names given him for baptism. The three were Emma Bennett, her daughter-in-law, Jessie Bennett, and her granddaughter, Gladys Bennett, aged twelve. The date of the baptism was July 14. A number of the Saints of Knox were present and rejoiced to see the pretty sight—the three generations—as they stepped into the waters. I never knew a song to sound more beautiful than when we sang, "Trying to walk in the steps of the Savior." Grandma Bennett reminds us a great deal of Grandma Corless, of Coldwater, Michigan. Sister Jessie was a member of the Christian Church eight years, and testifies of never having been as well satisfied as at the present time.

After talking another week, Brother Ellis baptized another, Sister Eva Smith, on July 21. A number of the Saints and friends from Knox were present. We remained for the evening service, bringing Brother Ellis home with us. After talking one week here he baptized Florence Peterson and Irene Humphrey, two of our faithful Sunday school and Religio scholars. The two had long been interested, and we were glad when we learned they had at last accepted the gospel in its truthfulness and purity. I feel that the sermons preached that week were the means of their acceptance when they did.

On Monday Brother Ellis went to Burkett and tried to get an opening, but failed. He preached on the street that night and returned to Knox the next day. Brother McKnight came, and they talked to the Saints the remainder of the week. We received much good advice and counsel, which has since been a help to us. We felt that week that the Comforter was indeed with us, and so we felt all the time, but we felt it more then.

The next week Brother McKnight went to preach in a grove four miles west of town, and Brother Ellis went to preach in a schoolhouse four miles east of town. Brother McKnight found but little interest where he went, and not being in very good health, returned home to Galien. Brother Ellis had a good interest and would have liked to have stayed longer, but as it was a very busy time, he thought best not to stay. He returned to Ora, and on August 18 baptized a middle-aged couple, Isaiah and Alice Overmyer.

We feel that all who have been baptized will make strong, steady members. I had a dream some time before conference, in which I saw Brother Ellis baptizing eighteen new members, and while I could not see it all, it was plainly impressed on my mind that there were eighteen. It was also shown to me that the time was not far off when I should see that dream come true. As ten have since taken up their crosses and others are taking a great interest, I realize that the time can not be far distant for the fulfillment of the dream.

I feel that I can never do enough or be thankful enough for the mercy and love that the Father bestowed upon me when he led me from the crooked path into the straight and narrow way that leads to life. Dear readers, I can truly testify to the truthfulness of this work, and can say that I know it is of God. For many times have I felt and seen the workings of the Spirit. I would ask the Saints to pray for me that I might ever be faithful to the covenant I made at the water's edge. Also that I might have strength to overcome and shun every appearance of evil. Remember our branch, that we may grow both in strength and in numbers.

As ever a sister who desires to see the work move ever onward.

PEARL MALOTT.

PARIS, TEXAS, October 6, 1912.

Editor Herald: I am a little girl fourteen years old. I was baptized about two months ago along with Sister Virga and Brother Hilliard, by Brother E. A. Erwin. I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. I know I am right and want the Saints to know it. I have had many testimonies, one a dream which I will relate: I dreamed that we were sitting in the house reading the HERALD, when I heard a house clicking, and I looked out of the window and saw an awful smoke coming. The world seemed to be coming to an end. Papa knelt down and prayed, and said he knew what it was, but the people of the world didn't. I laid down on a pallet and said if I knew I was right I wouldn't mind dying. A bright star came and stood over my head; then I knew I was right. When I looked again the smoke was all gone.

Pray for me.

Your sister,

LILLIE M. COX.

LANSING, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: Most of us in the Capital City Branch are getting along quite well, with two or three exceptions. Sister Lon Larkin, Sister Brand's little babe, and myself, are not feeling very well, but I am getting better under the medical direction of Sister Miller. She has done me more good than any doctor.

The work is doing quite well, but I can see where, if we had more time, we could visit more among the Saints and sometimes answer the requests of others who attend our meetings; but we are unable to do very much along this line. We see many opportunities to work around here, but it seems that we are tied down with worldly or temporal cares. It makes us think that the harvest is great but the laborers few. We were made to realize that we were not forgotten, and the work we are trying to do is appreciated by the Saints here. On last Wednesday evening we were surprised to have about two hundred and fifty of the Saints come in and spend the evening. We all had a good time singing hymns and visiting. There seemed to beam from their faces that pleasure that is manifested in the children of God. After they had apparently had a good time, Brother S. A. Barss, with a few well-chosen words, presented wife and me with a beautiful gift, a nice purse, besides sugar, flour, and groceries of nearly all kinds that are needed in the home. It made us feel keenly that the Savior's statement is true: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

We are trying to keep the banner open to the breeze, so the world can know we are still standing for the restored gospel. Brethren Barss, Morrow, Smith, and others, are here, and doing what they can, but, like myself, they are hampered from doing very much to assist on account of temporal work. I often feel there is manifest here a much better spirit of unity of love than we have had for a long time; at least it is so on my part. I am trying to build up the work as well as I can.

We have our meetings regularly on Sunday; the order of services is Sunday school at 10.30, preaching at 11.45, except the first Sunday in the month, when we have sacrament, preaching at 7.30. We have Religio on Tuesday evening, prayer meeting on Thursday evening, choir meeting on Friday evening. We have a busy week. The Sunday school is doing well; it is superintended by our worthy priest, Albert Barss. The Religio has our deacon, Brother R. E. Smith, at the helm, and his work is well appreciated, for at the election of officers he was chosen to succeed himself as president.

I don't think our church lawsuit will be tried this fall. Our lawyers forgot to have the case put on the calendar. I suppose it will not be tried at this term of court. When the end will come I do not know. For some reason it drags along in spite of all we can do. Why the lawyers could think of all the other cases but ours is a queer thing, but it leaves us powerless to do anything to relieve the situation. Our lawyer said we could go on with the case if the opponents were willing. I understand they said they were not ready, so we will have to wait, that is all.

While there are many things to hamper the work now, as in the days of Paul, still, I feel to thank God for his great blessings, and when I see the fulfillment of his word, I believe it confirms me in the angel's message. There are many strikes and confusion of all kinds in the world; almost every paper brings more and more of it. The labor troubles, the mine disasters, storms, tempest, and the flames of devouring fire, all go to speak to me that the great judgments of the Lord are upon us. Dear Saints and readers, let us lift up our heads and rejoice, for God's words are having their fulfillment. Words will not express my thankfulness to the different branches who have so kindly given us a helping hand in this extreme time of need, for it has been a great help to us. May God greatly multiply your blessings. I am still in the ranks of the army of the Lord.

Your brother,

Editors Herald: The news of the death of Brother George H. Hilliard came as a sudden shock to all, although it was known that he had been in ill health for several months. In his death we are called to mourn the loss of a noble man and an active and earnest worker in the cause of Christ. Although this great soldier of the church has laid off his mantle of activity in this life, the earnest and unselfish work that he did still lives, and his forceful pleading to the people to do their full duty toward God comes to us to-day with added emphasis since his voice is now silent. He has traveled extensively in this country, and from ocean to ocean his voice has been heard in earnest pleading to the Saints to do that which was asked of them by the Master, to assist in the upbuilding of his work and carrying his truth to the world. He was a faithful, conscientious and consistent believer in God and his promises, and of all those who had the privilege of knowing him, not one can doubt but that he has gone to reap a greater reward and engage in a broader activity. Would it not be well, now that his lips are silent, for us to think deeply upon the wise counsel that he gave in his stirring pleadings to us while in life and give of our substance to the storehouse of the Lord for the carrying forward of the work, that much righteousness might be made manifest in the hearts of the children of men, and the Saints prepared to accomplish the work intrusted to them?

Our brother will be remembered for his noble, Christian life, for his wise counsel, for his earnest pleading for truth, and for his wonderful faith in the promises of the Lord. Though his voice is now still, his forceful pleadings of former years come with added emphasis, prompting the Saints to remember the church with their substance in this the hour of its need. Who will profit by the lesson of his life and the teaching of his lips?

In bonds of truth,

E. A. BLAKESLEE.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, October 5, 1912.

Editors Herald: We have a desire to "let our light shine" not only where we are privileged to work in the Master's cause, but to let those of the covenant hear of the work being done at the Wyatt Park Mission, 2904½ Pattee Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri. This mission was organized two years ago this month, and the Lord has blessed us wonderfully since that time in the efforts being put forth in this part of his vineyard. We have a Sunday school of which we are justly proud, having something like thirty-seven or thirty-eight enrollment, and on one or two occasions as high as forty-four attendance. The school consists of children of our own faith, but who did not attend regularly before the mission was organized, and a few outsiders who did not attend any Sunday school before the mission was established; and we feel more and more, as the days go by, the great opportunities that are before us for a large school in this neighborhood. Also a grand opportunity for the spreading of the gospel, as have been demonstrated from the attendance we have had from time to time. Brother C. Archibald is in charge of the mission, also superintendent of the Sunday school, having served us well in both capacities.

We were privileged to hold a two-day meeting September 28, 29 in charge of Brethren C. Householder and D. E. Powell. Much good was accomplished, all being well repaid for the effort put forth, and our meeting together under such favorable circumstances. All services were held at the mission except the sacrament, of which we partake at the First Branch the first Sunday in each month. Tuesday evening we hold a teachers' and officers' meeting, to study the lesson for the coming Sunday. Before this session we have song services. We enjoy these meetings very much. Thursday evening we have our prayer and testimony meeting, also Sunday evening at 6.30 we hold a prayer meeting. All these meetings are well attended. Friday evening the Religio Society meets. This society has just been organized, and from the attendance of the meetings since its organization and the interest displayed, the outlook is very encouraging indeed. New members are taken in every meeting night.

It would take up quite a lot of space to tell of all the many blessings we are enjoying in this mission. All connected with the mission have but one object in view, and that is to do good, live exemplary lives, live in harmony with our brothers and sisters, do all we can for one another; in other words, each one striving to "let our light so shine" that our neighbors and friends may know and see that we as a people are good to be associated with.

Dear Saints, pray that we may still continue steadfast and true to our covenant, and that we may be able to accomplish much more good in this part of the Master's vineyard than we have done in the past. We are always glad to have the missionaries and Saints visit us. We will see that they are taken care of and sent on their way rejoicing.

Ever praying for the upbuilding of the church and the spreading of the gospel, I beg to remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

R. L. HENRY.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, October 9, 1912.

Editor Herald: The rising of the sun on October 5 caused joy to enter the hearts of the Marlette Saints; for it was the occasion of our church opening and two-day meeting. It was the time which had been looked forward to for over a year, which had caused them to make much sacrifice while they labored diligently to erect it, either working on the building itself, or for the money to help it on. Brother James Mead, the branch president, has worked early and late, seeing that things were kept advancing properly. We must also mention Brethren Westover, Fostoria, and others, all of whom have worked earnestly.

Did the sisters do anything? Have you ever seen the time when they did not? Yes; by word and deed they helped wonderfully. The church is twenty-seven by forty feet, of very neat design, with a basement, which may be used for a Sunday school department.

All the sessions of the two-day meeting were profitable. During the prayer services several remarkable cases of healing and divine assistance were narrated. The blessings of God were seen in the cases of one or two individuals, even during the meetings.

The Religio session, which is getting to be a regular thing at all of our two-day meetings, was good. Sister Goldie E. Grant gave a fine talk along general lines. Also Brethren Otto Fetting, James Mead, H. Harriman, and C. Burtch gave excellent pointers. Brother Kenneth Green, who had charge, is proving a diligent worker.

Preaching was done by J. J. Bailey and William Grice, on "signs of the times." If signs are of any use they would indicate a good interest in this discourse; Otto Fetting, "The law of temporal things," was a practical talk, which awakened the minds of many along this line; H. E. C. Muir, "The thief on the cross." He got him to paradise.

Valley Center had a fine representation there, as well as did the Cashers, Rush Lakers, Otter Lakers, and others. But no fish were to be seen this time in Marlette, in spite of all the money and water.

HONOR, MICHIGAN, September 18, 1912.

Dear Saints: Mrs. Williams, a neighbor of ours, was in very poor health all last winter, and in April got so weak she could hardly walk across the room without fainting. She had a very bad cough, and could not sleep at night, and her digestion was very bad. She was actually starving to death, could eat but very little, and could not keep that down. She knew nothing about Latter Day Saints, and had never heard a sermon, but during the winter we called for Elder W. D. Ellis to come and administer to me and she wished to be administered to. She felt better and her cough was stopped for two weeks. Elder Ellis preached while there, and oh, how many times that winter and spring she would say, I wish one of your elders would come. Her husband was away from home at work, and in March her baby, two years old, was taken sick, had a high fever, and scarcely noticed anything, when one night Mrs. Williams had a dream or vision. She thought we had a prayer meeting, and we all took part, she with us, and seemed to make the child the burden of our prayer; and in the morning the child was better and the next day was down playing.

But Mrs. Williams continued to get weaker, and on the 18th of May was confined. Her babe weighed five and one quarter pounds. The doctor had them put it on the bottle, but gave them no hopes for Mrs. Williams's life. He said she had no blood, and she would probably grow weaker and weaker and pass away in a few days. Said he had never had a case like hers get well, and he is an old physician.

The babe was born on the 18th and the 22d about noon her girls came running down to our house with a note from the nurse for us to come up as she could live but a little while. When we got there she could not speak aloud and looked like a corpse. About four o'clock she asked Brother Dunshee to pray for her. He said afterwards he just felt like it was praying for the dead. But we knelt in prayer and in a short time after we could see quite an improvement; could hear her talk in the other room.

She had been asking for an elder, but we had no way of getting one. But she insisted so much that Brother Dunshee started out to try to phone and find one. He spent over a day trying to get one, and at last got a promise of word being taken to Elder Peter Price, and he would probably get there the 24th. The Lord heard and answered our prayers and she had so much faith that you could see her getting better. Brother Price tried to get there, but could not find the way, so had to go back home after driving his team half a day.

About five o'clock on the 24th she took a sinking spell. She bade her husband good-bye and told him she could not stay; God wanted her. But how her heart clung to her little ones. She has seven children. "Oh," she said, "I hate to leave my little ones." She was now very low, but made it known she wanted Brother Dunshee to pray for her again. Her breath was almost gone. But our heavenly Father heard and answered prayer in her behalf, and her life was still spared. On Saturday night her mother and brother came, not expecting to find her alive, but on Sunday Elder Price came and administered, and when the doctor came he was surprised at the change, but still gave no hopes for her. I had sent her request in to the HERALD, and Elder Davis saw it, and I think it was Tuesday he came and went up and administered. He administered five times.

The doctor now said she could not get out of bed under six or eight weeks, and must not do any work all summer if she lived. But in five weeks she was up and rode four or five miles to be baptized, and has been doing a good share of her work all summer. To God be all the praise. The doctor says he did all he could, but he says it was not him that raised her up.

September 1 her two girls, fifteen and thirteen years old, were baptized. I write this to encourage other Saints, for I know God does hear and answer prayer.

Editors Herald: If the members of the church are interested in buying curiosities found in the Cliff and Mesa dwellings, I have for sale for the first time curiosities that can not be found that will call the attention of the world to the subject if only seen.

One of the curiosities is an idol, the image of a man, ten inches high. It stands erect, as if addressing a people in its presence on some subject that takes great effect on its own spirit and body. While its mouth is open, its visage looks strange, as if life did truly exist. It has one arm and is a great curiosity.

My First Year at Graceland.

While reading over the many interesting columns of this welcome paper, I have frequently thought I would write a few lines, although I have felt unworthy to do so.

As I feel more than grateful for what Graceland has done for me, and desiring to ever remain a "booster," I decided to write upon this subject. Only by personal experience can I do justice to what I am going to say in these few lines. As we all understand the ways of this world to-day are of a very uncalm nature, and God in his wisdom saw the effects the world has upon his people, therefore he saw it was necessary that a place of preparation should be established, for the benefit of his people;—therefore, to my knowledge, that's why Graceland College was erected.

We young people, who have not had the privilege of being associated with the youth of the church, all of our lives, know what the associates of the world are like. If we have not had the opportunity to know the beauty and grandeur there are in the associations of the youth of the church, we can not realize, to any extent, what we are missing. Before I was blessed with the opportunity of attending Graceland, while I did not patronize shows, I did not consider them as being very harmful. Neither did I consider the folly of public roller skating or dancing, etc., so earnestly. But after becoming acquainted with the faculty and a number of the pure and noble characters, and by learning their ways, I can truthfully say that the "bright side" of life showed up brighter than ever before in my mind.

When I recall the many happy evenings we spent in college prayer meetings, my heart yearns to return and mingle with their voices. I can not express my thoughts in words, as to the strength I gained by attending Graceland.

While an education along temporal lines is grand, yet life holds much more for us, if we seek an education along spiritual lines also. My prayer is, "Long may Graceland live, and blessed may be her sacred walls."

And now to the youth of the church, as one of our "boosters" has written it, I will also write the statement:

"Then, dear friends, when you consider
Some good school, where you may eat
Luscious fruit from wisdom's garden,
Come to Graceland, she's a peach."

Sister Edna J. Cochran, Vanleave, Mississippi: "A few days ago I received a card from a brother in Alpena, Michigan, requesting the names of the branch secretaries in the district. Unfortunately the brother's name was covered with a postmark, so that I am unable to make it out. I should like to furnish him with the list of names, so I am sending you the names, and if you think best you will please publish them for his benefit, or you might request the brother to send me his address again." News from Missions

Ohio.

I attended the reunion held at the old historical spot, Kirtland. It passed off in a very pleasant way, and was a spiritual feast to many, and one to be remembered as one of the best reunions held in this part of the mission, for its spirituality. The gifts of the gospel were poured out in divers ways. There seems to be a sacredness about the old house of the Lord. Seventy-eight years has it stood the storm and tempest, and it looks good for several centuries yet, for it is in a good state of preservation; yet it is wonderful how it has been preserved to this present. There are many people come to visit it during the year, especially during the summer season. They come from all parts of the United States, and all manner of questions are asked by the visitor. It gives the one in charge a good opportunity to tell our story, also to show the difference between us and the Salt Lakers. They are a class of people you can not get out to preaching in a hall or church. They are mostly pleasure seekers, and are quite wealthy; some of them very liberal with their means; others are not so much. John D. Rockefeller is a frequent visitor, and brings an auto load with him every time.

I have wondered in passing through it of how the curtains were fixed. I can not see through it. It surely is a wonderful structure. The Saints must have labored very hard to accomplish what they did; to erect a building of that kind.

After the reunion I went to Clarksburg, West Virginia, to attend the district conference. There was a good attendance from over the district, and the business of the conference passed off very pleasantly. There seemed to be a peaceful feeling throughout the entire session. Several remarked about it. Brother James McConnaughy was elected president; Brother F. L. Shinn, secretary and bishop's agent. Brother B. Beall, who had served the district for twenty years, wished to be released, and had served in a very good way. I trust Brother F. L. Shinn will bring the district up to the standard in common with other districts, and West Virginia will be able to sustain several missionaries. They can do it if they take hold of it, and success will be theirs to enjoy. The preaching was done by Brethren McConnaughy, Craig, and myself.

So bidding good-bye to the many friends whom I had become acquainted with during my sojourn for three years in the Virginias, I came to Shinnston, West Virginia, held several meetings there, then came to Wheeling, making my stay at the home of Brother and Sister Tary, held two meetings there, not many attending. But the meetings held were of a spiritual character, good being done. There are some young men of promise there and will eventually do a work for the Master, in the own due time of the Lord, if faithful.

From there I came to New Philadelphia, Ohio, making my abode at the home of Brother and Sister James Carlisle. Brother Carlisle was born in good old Scotland. He is president of the branch, and he does it in a workmanlike manner. The branch is in good condition. The Saints are very attentive to the meetings, their Sunday school is one among the best. One thing they lacked of having it perfect, and that was they did not have the Hopes. I took the liberty to explain the good the Hopes were to a Sunday school, and they gave me their order for three dozen; so I wrote the Herald Office to send them at once. So within the week the Hopes were there. Who says the Herald Publishing House can not do business in a hurry? The Sunday school is in charge of Brother Dennis Benbow, a young man of twenty-one summers, and who is full of energy with his work. All said and done, the branch is in a good, healthy condition.

From there I came to Canton by request, and when I got there my man had left the city and his whereabouts no one knew; so not having the address of any others I came on to Akron, and in a few days the Canton paper came out with a news item concerning the departure of the Saints' leader which was very detrimental to the progress of our work. We can only trust for better in the future. It was a hard blow on the Saints of Canton. The only way is to live it down.

I commenced to hold a series of meetings in this place, Akron. Held meetings including two Sundays, and during the week, with good interest, and enjoyed a goodly degree of the Spirit of the Master in the dispensing of the word, and was kindly cared for by the Saints and friends. Brother Manchester is the president of the branch, and the Saints made no mistake when they elected him. He is a man that tries to do his duty and helps others to do theirs. He is assisted by Brethren McCoy, Neville, Roades, Romic, and Harts; a good staff of workers. It would not be fair not to make mention of the sisters who have done a great work in helping carry on the work in this place. From what I hear the sisters' aid have paid off the burden of the debt in quilting, making suppers, and a host of other things that they have done. It is well said by the Master, it was not good for man to be alone, and the brethren of this place know it. It is about three years since they commenced to get a lot on which to build a church, and they have a church on it thirty by fifty feet, of gothic roof, with about ten foot walls, with a basement under it, with a kitchen, two toilets, a baptismal font, and a large room which they use for a dining room and quilting; also a furnace in a room by itself. It is lighted with gas. The cost, as near as I can learn, is about $2,200.00. It is a very neat building, and is a credit to the Saints of Akron. The work is onward in this part of the vineyard.

During my stay I was kindly cared for at the home of Brother and Sister Manchester, and I feel grateful for their kindness; also that of all the Saints. From here I go to Toledo, to do what I can to build up the Master's kingdom, which is of great interest to all Latter Day Saints.

Still laboring for the upbuilding of Zion's cause, I am your brother and colaborer for the redemption,

News from the land of the sunny south has been rather meager, so we mention a few items. Throughout the past year our missionaries have been working to the best advantage; Brethren A. C. Barmore and W. J. Haworth (after his return from America) doing duty in our capital city, Sydney, holding missions and doing much to advance the church interests, in conjunction with the Balmain and Leichhardt branches. The former branch has been presided over by Elder A. Seaberg, who ranks among the converts of the early seventies, but who has now stepped aside to allow younger blood, in the person of Elder A. J. Corbett, to take over the responsibility; while the Leichhardt Branch has also another of our young men at its head, viz, Elder W. H. Broadway. These two branches have a membership of about two hundred and fifty, the majority being spiritually alive and working for Zion's redemption.

About one hundred miles north by train will land one in Newcastle, the Coalopolis of the State, and here we have three branches: West Wallsend, Wallsend, and Hamilton. The first named branch is only young and has a membership of ten in its record. Missionary B. H. Longfield is helping the little band to shine forth, tracting, visiting, and inviting all to come to Christ. Priest C. McIntyre is president, and with Teacher H. Ley, has kept the branch together.

The Wallsend Branch is the eldest branch of this district, and has a membership of eighty-five. It is presided over by Elder E. J. Haworth. Bishop Lewis hold membership here and assists as requested. The Hamilton Branch was organized in 1886 with nine members, and now has an enrollment of one hundred and twenty-two, officiated by young men: Elder Nat Williams, who not long ago attained his majority, has for his assistants Priest E. A. Davis, Teacher J. H. Williams, and Deacon James Dickson. Still going north sixty miles, we reach Bulladellah, where we find another branch with a rising membership of seventy. The members of this branch are well known for their hospitality. President W. Maybury and his band make the elders very welcome and rally around for street services whenever opportunity presents itself.

The next place of call is Tuncurry, with a membership of one hundred and sixteen, among whom we have the well-known Wright family, J. R. Taylor, and our worthy district recorder, C. S. McLaren.

Going still further north we visit Laurieton, where Priest H. Bird cares for the welfare of twenty-six members. High Priest J. Jones occasionally visits this little branch and his services are gratefully acknowledged.

The last branch we visit is at Argents Hill, presided over by Elder G. T. Mallard, and here again our young folk are in evidence and make the gospel hymns resound. As a whole the district is on the upward trend. Elder E. F. Roberts has been through the whole district and has done much good labor.

The auxiliary work is well cared for; nine Sunday schools and one home class with an enrollment of four hundred and fifty-five pupils, and prospects of new schools being organized in the future. The Religio work has its share in the development of the spiritual life of the young. Our district conference convenes at Balmain, Sydney, in October, and we are looking forward to a spiritual refreshing.

Trusting that the work may be prospered and Zion shortly redeemed.

"THE BOY."

POKALBIN ROAD, HAMILTON WEST, NEW SOUTH WALES.

Southern Nebraska.

The time of our conference was set for September 21, at Wilber. The weather was fine and the Saints were all feeling well, and the good Spirit was with us from the start. The indications were that a good conference was at hand and the indications came true. Brother White, the branch president, was on hand to welcome the visiting Saints with his kind, genial way. Brother Porter was there also, ready to greet all with a smile of welcome. This was the beginning of a very useful conference.

Sister Wyckoff and Sister Andrews were there to take charge of the Sunday school and Religio work. The Sunday school lessons were very instructive and all seemed to be anxious to take part. At the close a district association of the Religio was formed, with Brother Guy Munsell as president. There are four local organizations in the district, and we believe the work will be well cared for under the supervision of Brother Munsell. Brother H. A. Higgins, and Sister Blanch Andrews of Lincoln. Our conference sessions were very peaceful and harmony flamed in every heart. The preaching was done by H. A. Higgins, Brother Rannie, and Guy Munsell. These brethren, under the power of the Holy Spirit, gave us a feast of the best quality. The Saints were well paid for the sacrifice made, for the Holy Spirit spoke peace to all.

This conference goes down in the history of the district as one of the best ever held in Southern Nebraska District. Our next conference will be held in Nebraska City, in January, 1913.

WM. SELF, District President.

New York.

Perhaps a word from this part of the vineyard may be of interest to your many readers, as this district includes the place of the beginning of this great latter day work. Palmyra, Manchester, and other points of great interest to the Latter Day Saints, and still farther south, just over the line into Pennsylvania, such places as Great Bend, Susquehanna, etc.—how it makes the heart of a child of God beat with emotion and gratitude to stand upon what to us is ancient soil, trodden by those who suffered the cruel persecutions of those opposing the truth and God's plan for the redemption of man. One's soul is made sad to meet the conditions that are to be found in many places, through the State, where the gospel has been preached in years ago. The people care not for a renewal of the work, and tell us they are satisfied with what they have. Their very countenances show that they have rejected the counsel of God, and they glory in making the following statement, while offering their prayers, "O God, no man or men need argue with us regarding thee; for we know thee"; while the very actions that follow prove the very opposite. Those who labor here need the prayers of God's people.

Our summer campaign is at an end, and the missionary force are gathering to Buffalo for the district conference, to be held October 12, 13. It is expected there will be present Elder U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, Elder Alma Booker, Elder Samuel Tomlinson, Elder R. Etzenhouser. A good time is expected, and all are invited to attend who can find it convenient from the standpoint of distance.

Yours in the conflict,

A. E. STONE.

News from Branches

Cleveland, Ohio.

Perhaps a few words from Cleveland might encourage some who might be feeling discouraged in this the greatest work on earth, the gospel work of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We have been very fortunate in having the able assistance of Brother R. Baldwin during the summer months, and hope to have much more good from his labors during the balance of the conference year. The work here is in a very good condition, and our park services and street preaching, in charge of Brother Baldwin, have been well attended, and not a few are very much interested. We are unable to see any direct result of the work, so far as the membership being increased is concerned, but we are absolutely positive that none of the efforts along this line have been wasted. Brother Baldwin has had very large and attentive audiences, and has been favorably considered by the press at times, but perhaps Brother Baldwin will write more concerning this phase of the work later.

Our membership here is increasing rapidly. During the last year has risen to 125 from 108. The majority of these have been enrolled during the last six months. We trust this growth will be continued.

Several improvements have been made on the church building, such as electric light, new furnace, and heating system, laying of the basement in cement, and many general repairs, so that we have much indeed to encourage us, and we look forward to the future with an assurance and determination to do more for the Master than we have in the past. Brother Topping has made an able and energetic president, and the harmony and general condition of the priesthood has enabled him to do many things for the good of the branch. All the branch officers are to be congratulated upon the willing spirit they have manifested and work performed.

Although the regular church services have not been as largely attended, on account of scattered conditions of the Saints, as we would like, there have been some very spiritual meetings, and some very nice experiences.

The Herald is a welcome visitor to our home, and is very much enjoyed because it strengthens and encourages us very much indeed.

Looking forward to the future with a firm determination and desire to work in this glorious cause,

I am your humble servant,

E. A. THOMAS.

Hunt informed the conference that it has been "moved and supported that the Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska Reunion Association extend a cordial invitation to the districts which comprise said territory; namely, Northern and Southern districts in Nebraska, Little Sioux, Gallands Grove, Pottawattamie, and Fremont districts in Iowa, and that all of the said districts named above that have not already joined said reunion association, we ask of them to do so and meet with us in reunion in 1913 to be held at Missouri Valley, Iowa." It was moved that as a district we unite with the Northern Nebraska and Gallands Grove districts in holding a reunion at Missouri Valley in the year 1913. Elder J. A. Hansen was appointed committeeman to represent Pottawattamie District in said reunion. The priests of the Aaronic order were called together and organized as the Pottawattamie and Fremont Quorum of Priests; they choosing J. P. Chrestensen as president, and on his nomination D. E. Butler and C. C. Larson counselors; A. C. Riley was chosen as clerk, and the organization ratified by the conference. At prayer meeting Sunday morning James P. Chrestensen was ordained by J. W. Wight, Joshua Carlile, and N. V. Sheldon; D. E. Butler first counselor by N. V. Sheldon, J. W. Wight, and Joshua Carlile; C. C. Larson second counselor by Joshua Carlile, N. V. Sheldon, and J. W. Wight. Sermons were by N. V. Sheldon, J. W. Wight, on Sunday morning and afternoon. Adjourned to meet at Council Bluffs on the first Saturday in February, 1913, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

LITTLE SIOUX.—The business session convened at 10.45 a. m., October 5, Brethren J. W. Wight and Sidney Pitt, sr., in charge, services being held in the Saints' chapel at Biglers Grove. The district clerk was made clerk of the conference. The minutes of last conference were read and stood approved. President Pitt had visited nearly all the branches in the district and found no reason for discouragement; spiritual advancement had been made, but there was much need for labor by the local officers, especially in visiting with the membership. Reports were received from seven of the twelve branches, showing but a small part of the labors performed. These reported 164 sermons, assisted 393 times, services attended 997, baptized 2, confirmed 4, 1 ordained, sick calls 204, children blessed 6, marriages solemnized 2. All branches held regular services and all but one branch maintained both Religio and Sunday school. Statistical reports showed a total membership in the district of 2,022, a gain of 25 during the quarter. A gain of 21 by baptism, 12 by letter, 2 by correction of records; lost 6 by letter, 1 by expulsion, and 3 by death; gain over loss, 25; 6 marriages. No changes in branch officers during the quarter. Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrando, reported: Cash on hand June 1, $221.15; received since in tithes and offerings, $1,133.37; total cash, $1,354.52; paid for aid and to elders' families, $393.98; remitted Bishop Kelley, $600; balance cash on hand October 1, $180.27. The spiritual condition of the branches in the district, as reported by branch officers, were good with one exception. A communication was received from the consolidated reunions inviting attendance at the 1913 reunion and affiliation with them. It was resolved, that whereas, the district conference is not authorized to act for the Little Sioux district reunion, and for the further reason that said reunion has already voted in favor of holding a district reunion in 1913, at Magnolia, we can not act on the request. As individuals, however, we extend our moral support and urge attendance on all that can go. Moorhead invited the conference to meet with them and the invitation was unanimously accepted; the first Saturday and Sunday in February was appointed as the time. The district secretary was ordered to visit each branch, for the purpose of getting corrected records, and the branches visited to bear the expense. The speakers at the conference were J. W. Wight, Sidney Pitt, sr., and J. L. Parker. All services were harmonious and the Spirit was present in a marked degree in all the services. James D. Stuart, district clerk.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Northwestern Nebraska and Black Hills District: Having been appointed bishop's agent in and for said territory, I appeal to all the Saints in this mission to come up to the help of the Lord with your tithes and offerings, that the work of the Lord may not be hindered, and that you may not be found out of harmony with the laws of God at the coming of Christ. For "verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day of tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)." See Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

The voice of the Lord to his people is to "come up higher." That means to put on the whole armor of God and keep all his commandments. Please read Luke 11: 42, and Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1, 2; also 2 John 9, and take timely warning, and thus become the children of God in very deed. Please send money by bank draft.

As ever your in the one faith,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Portland District: As bishop's agent I appeal to you again through the columns of the HERALD to send in your tithing if you can possibly spare some. Don't wait till all your personal needs are provided for. Remember we have good, true men who are sacrificing their home comforts to better the condition of their fellow men by preaching the gospel to them. While they are making this sacrifice, are we doing our duty? The Lord has said we should be laborers together for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. Now if our brethren who have sufficient talent to go out and represent our Lord and Master, say good-bye to wife and little ones for months and years on condition that the church pay the family a small consideration, which in many instances is not over one third of what the father could earn, are willing to do this, we ought to be willing to work together to make a little sacrifice and pay tithing, as God's work requires this of all. Then we will be able to send the needy their portion in time to relieve them of unnecessary worry. I just received a letter from a sister

Died.

SMITH.—Robert Willetts Smith died at his home, 83 Queens Road, Harpurhey, Manchester, England, Sept. 15, 1912, in his thirty ninth year, after a long and painful illness, borne with Christian fortitude and patience. All that could be done for him was done, by a loving and dutiful wife, and kind relatives and friends. He was born April 27, 1873, at Stafford, England; baptized November 4, 1897, at Manchester, by Henry Greenwood, confirmed by Joseph Dewsnup, sr., T. Mills, and W. H. Greenwood; ordained a priest April 30, 1905, by John Bailey and E. Nixon. In his beautiful life all the Christian graces were made manifest, and he died the death of the righteous—his end was peace.

MCPEEK.—Near Pawnee, Missouri, September 26, 1912, Sister Sarah J. McPeek. She was born in Noble County, Ohio, October 18, 1846; married Price McPeek November, 1865. To this union six children were born, four sons and two daughters. She was baptized by C. Scott, June 18, 1874, in the Southern Indiana District. Funeral sermon preached by T. J. Bell, at Lone Rock, assisted by C. H. Jones. The attendance was evidence that she had many friends who will miss her help in times of sickness and her many deeds of kindness. Interment in the Lone Rock cemetery.

LEASK.—At Emo, Ontario, August 30, 1912, Sister Jane Leask. Born at Dundee, Scotland, October 1, 1852. United in marriage to Magnus Leask, who came to this country while they were both young people. The people of Emo were shocked to learn of her sudden death. She had many friends who loved and admired her for her loving qualities. She and her husband were among the early settlers in Rainy River, and have toiled faithfully and raised a large family. She was baptized June 7, 1903, by George Hampshire. She was a faithful and devoted wife and left a husband and family and friends to mourn.

REEDER.—Elder Jesse Reeder, sr., passed away in Pensacola, Florida. He supposed he was a hundred years old. He was confined to his bed one week when he passed away on November 11, 1911. He was a good Latter Day Saint. He left five daughters and one son to mourn.

BERGSTROM.—Emil A., was born in Litchfield, Minnesota, December 21, 1833; died at Burlington, Washington, September 29, 1912, aged 29 years, 10 months, 8 days, from the shock resulting from the amputation of the left limb, the operation caused from an injury. Funeral sermon by Parley Plumb; interment in the cemetery at Burlington, Washington.

Conversation.

The commonest errors which degrade the art of conversation are talking too little and talking too much. And talking too much is a more serious error than talking too little. Mary Greer Conklin, who is about to publish Conversation; What to Say and How to Say It, through the Funk & Wagnalls Company, has some very interesting things to say about talking in general. "Many," she says, "talk as heedlessly as if the swift exercise of the organs of speech were the great end and aim of life. The fire-plug of their utterance drawn, they inundate everybody 'round them. The person who talks all the time loses the mental stimulus which comes from an exchange of ideas with his fellows. To show manifest appreciation of what others say is more a criterion of good conversation than to talk well oneself. For one person in any society who wishes to listen to us, there are three who prefer that we should listen to them." There is much interesting material in Miss Conklin's new book.

Our tears are round to remind us that God loves the whole world.

Got Your Homestead Yet?

Everybody entitled to a homestead wants one, of course, but until the recent law was passed, a homesteader was required to live continuously on the land for five years before the Government would turn it over to him to be his very own. Now it is altogether different, and irrigated farms in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming and Yellowstone Valley of Montana, Mondell 320-acre free homesteads in Wyoming and 640-acre unirrigated free Kinkaid homesteads in Nebraska, can be taken up on a new and liberal plan. You can prove up and get title in three years' time, and will be permitted to leave your homestead five months each year, so that you can go home and earn money with which to buy stock and get your homestead farm going. This is very important and opens up a splendid opportunity to men, young and old, to get well fixed.

Write me what kind of land you are interested in, and I will write you all about the new law and the lands that the Government will grant you.

You can buy a railroad ticket from Omaha to Thermopolis and return for $32.50—proportionate rates from other points, on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, good for 25 days. You can see the 640-acre homesteads in Nebraska, the Mondell lands in Wyoming, the Yellowstone Valley lands at Huntley and Billings, Montana, the irrigated lands in the Big Horn Basin and spend a few days at Thermopolis, where the benefits to be derived from the waters of the Hot Springs are wonderful. Think what a grand trip this would be!

Perhaps you could arrange to go with me on one of the above excursions, or know some one who would like to go.

I have no land for sale—the Burlington merely employs me to give information and assist anyone interested in this wonderful country, without charge. Let me know from what point you will start and on what date you wish to go. I will send you information about the lands and tell you just how and where to meet me in Omaha. D. Clem Deaver, Immigration Agent, Burlington Route, 336 Q Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE HIGH PRIESTHOOD A SEER.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:42.

We have received a letter from a brother in Connecticut who desires to know about the action of the late General Conference in sustaining President Joseph Smith as a prophet, seer, and revelator, and asking if it is absolutely necessary that one shall have the Urim and Thummim in order to be a seer.

Joseph Smith the Martyr is quoted as saying:

"He [Moroni] also said that the fullness of the everlasting gospel was contained in it, as delivered by the Savior to the ancient inhabitants. Also that there were two stones in silver bows, and these stones fastened to a breastplate constituted what is called the Urim and Thummim, deposited with the plates, and the possession and use of these stones was what constituted seers in ancient or former times, and that God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 13.

We frankly admit that one might draw the conclusion from this statement that one must absolutely be in possession of the Urim and Thummim at all times in order to be a seer, and that no one not in such possession could properly be called a seer. A very elaborate argument might be built up on such a construction of the language. In fact this is the sole evidence that might be used to support such a theory, as there is not a particle of evidence in either of the three standard books to sustain such a position, while there are passages that are squarely opposed to it.

It is our privilege to seek to harmonize statements that are supposed to be authoritative or scriptural, rather than to seek to discover conflict. Where it can consistently be done it is much better to place a construction on any such particular statement that will harmonize it with other similar statements; rather than by a rigid and tenacious interpretation of the text to bring it into conflict with such other statements. For instance, it will be noted that Joseph Smith says of these stones, that, "God had prepared them for the purpose of translating the book." A rigid adherence to the language used might lead us to argue that the only purpose of the Urim and Thummim in all the ages of eternity was merely to translate the Book of Mormon. And we might go on to argue that for that reason Joseph Smith was the only man who had ever used them, and the only one that could ever be called a seer. But we would collide with scriptural facts if we were to pursue such a course, so we wisely choose another that avoids such conflict.

It will be noted that this is a historical statement. It was not given as a revelation to the church, or as a law. Joseph Smith did not give the exact language of the angel. He merely gave a free rendition of the ideas that the angel advanced. It may be admitted that possibly in some particulars he was unfortunate in his choice of words to express those ideas. We do not think, however, that there is any serious obstacle in the way of an understanding.

While it is said that the possession and use of the Urim and Thummim in ages past constituted one a seer, it is not said that no one could be constituted a seer in any other way. Graduation from a homeopathic school of medicine, and possession of a license constitutes one a physician, we might say; but that does not say that a man must graduate from a homeopathic school in order to be a physician.

The evident intent of the language of Joseph Smith is that in ancient times the man who had and used these stones was called a seer; but it does not follow that there were not seers who did not have and use them.

Of the Urim and Thummim we read in the Book of Mormon:

"And whosoever is commanded to look in them, the same is called seer."—Book of Mosiah 5:74, Authorized Version.

"And whosoever has these things, is called seer, after the manner of old times."—Book of Mosiah 12:21, Authorized Version.

Here we learn that those who had these things were called seers. But to suppose that it would be impossible for one to be a seer and not have them would be to deny later revelations.

In January, 1841, the Lord said to Joseph Smith: "I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and a prophet."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 39.

Joseph Smith had long before that surrendered the Urim and Thummim to the angel's care, yet he was a seer, if we trust God's word.

At the same time the Lord said to Hyrum Smith: "I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph."—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29.

Here Hyrum Smith was designated as a seer, and there is no evidence that he ever at any time had or used the Urim and Thummim. And here were to be two seers on earth at the same time, a thing which some have thought impossible.

Our construction placed upon the historical statement made by Joseph Smith does not conflict with these statements found in a revelation from God that has been accepted by the church as a law unto the church; but the theory that we must have the Urim and Thummim to be a seer is in hopeless conflict.

Furthermore, we read: "And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 42.

From this we judge that the late General Conference did not go far wrong when it sustained the present president of the high priesthood as a prophet, seer, and revelator. All of these functions center in that office. Some of them may be exercised all of the time, while others may be exercised only as occasion may require. But the right and ability to perform the functions of a president, prophet, seer, and revelator are there all of the time, and will be used as God may direct and occasion require. That, at least, is our conclusion from our personal understanding of the law of God as he has expressed it and as the church has adopted it.

The only logical evasion of that conclusion is made by those who, like David Whitmer, reject the revelations of Joseph Smith after a certain date, and do not consider themselves bound by the later revelations that we have quoted. We are not prepared to take such a position, and for very good reasons refrain from so doing.

The action of the late General Conference was as follows: "A substitute was moved, to sustain President Joseph Smith as prophet, seer, and revelator to the church."—Minutes of the General Conference, p. 1632.

This was in harmony with the action taken over fifty years ago at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860, of which the record says:

"On motion of Isaac Sheen it was 'resolved, That Brother Joseph Smith be chosen prophet, seer, and revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ, and the successor of his father.'"—Church History, vol. 3, p. 250.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

STOCKTON "RECORD."—Brother H. J. Davison recently got the following communication in the Stockton Daily Evening Record, Stockton, California, which may be of interest, especially so because of the very frank statement by the Record editor at the close of the letter.

TWO JOSEPH SMITHS AND TWO LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Editor Record: When the illustrious poet sprung the query, "What's in a name?" it is quite evident that he did not have in mind the fact that at the present time there exist two churches holding views on many vital points entirely opposed to each other, yet bearing names quite similar, and presided over by men whose names are almost identical.

Neither did he sense the feelings of those who are from time to time placed in an unenviable light by a misunderstanding sometimes caused by a slight mistake made by publishers.

An instance of this kind occurred recently which affects a number of citizens of Stockton.

In the late issue of the Record reference was made to President Joseph Smith, of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, and his attitude toward one of the candidates for the office of President of the United States.

This reference made may not misrepresent the church nor Mr. Smith, if it is understood to mean Joseph F. Smith, of Salt Lake City; but if it is understood to mean Joseph Smith (minus the F.) who presides over the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, whose headquarters are in Lamoni, Iowa—a branch organization of which worship in a church on Sutter Street, between Clay and Jackson—then it does most seriously misrepresent both him and the body. For it is a fact that the whole church, including Mr. Smith, is strenuously opposed to ecclesiastical dominance of any kind, especially in matters of political import.

There is absolutely no condition existing in this church that will permit any officer or quorum of officers to exercise any official influence over the members relating to their choice in civic and national elections. In fact, the church officers are never thought of in connection with such matters.

It would seem that under these conditions it would be no more than right and due to the members of this church that attention should be called to the above-mentioned distinction between the two churches.

Joseph F. Smith, of Salt Lake, may get revelations to influence his church to vote a certain way, Joseph Smith, of the Reorganized Church, never.

H. J. DAVISON, Pastor.

[The article in the Record referred to Joseph F. Smith, of Salt Lake City, and not to Joseph Smith, of Independence, Missouri, nor to the "Josephite" Church. The Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church is a fine old gentleman and a citizen highly respected by all classes of people.—EDITOR RECORD.]

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 38.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

Since 1886, the gathering of Israel has assumed colossal proportions. But previous to the year 1886, as early as 1878, societies were organized among the nations for colonizing Palestine with its scattered children. The Alliance Israelitish Universelle, of Paris, was presented by the Turkish Government, with six hundred and seventeen acres of land, near Jaffa, on the road to Jerusalem. The same year (1878), several Jews of Jerusalem purchased 767 acres from Selim Kassar, an Arab of Jaffa. In 1887, Baron de Rothschild bought some of the vacated land. In 1903 the population of Jerusalem consisted of 29,000 Jews. In 1904 the Jewish colonization society, of London, headed by Baron de Rothschild, had sent 27 colonies to Palestine distributed as follows:

In the land of Judah, 9 colonies occupy 9,254 acres.

In Samaria, 8 colonies occupy 16,129 acres.

Upper Galilee, 8 colonies occupy 19,047 acres.

Trans-Jordan—Damascus, different societies own, and control 16,507 acres.—Jewish Encyclopedia, vol. 1, p. 246.

This work was prepared by four hundred Jewish scholars, and specialists. Dated 1904. This authority continues:

Some of the colonists grow wheat, others culture silkworms. Another industry to which they give attention is floriculture. This began with the planting of the geranium, and led to the building by Baron de Rothschild of a perfume distillery. The population of this one settlement, Rish le Zion, was 802 persons in 1898.

Of the Jewish settlements in and around Jerusalem, the encyclopedia referred to says:

It was impossible to find room for all in the old Jewish quarters, between the traditional Zion and the temple mount. New portions were built up north and west of the city by building societies. In 1891, there were 18 such societies owning 400 houses in front of Jaffa and Damascus gates, and 15 houses on the Mount of Olives. Other societies were founded to enable Jews to acquire landed property.—Ibid., p. 142.

The edition of 1900 says under article Jerusalem:

Up to 1837, the population of Jews in the holy city was very small, but since the persecution in Russia it has increased—from 3,000 in 1837 to 29,000 in 1903.

We could transcribe evidence, now before us, for days in vindicating the prophecy, but why humiliate the Anti-Mormon Society more? Ah! The Book of Mormon mildly moves in the advance. The burden of its prophecies antedate the facts. Israel swarms with modern civilization in the Holy Land. The "lifting up of the ensign" after the dispersion of Judah A. D. 65 to 70, is followed by their return "from the ends of the earth." The dismal days of "blindness" and bondage are rapidly receding before the matchless splendor of the light arising since 1830. Israel has journeyed on through more than eighteen hundred years while their "house was desolated." But they now view the "star of Jacob." They are coming, amid tears and blood and death, and have preserved a distinct nationality. Empires have come and gone, but they remain distinct. They have spoken all languages, sojourned in all climes as exiles, but now they lead governments, control orders for wealth (money and collaterals) miraculous in quantity, and almighty in power, backed by law! Of the preparations as early as 1851, twenty-one years after the Book of Mormon had delivered the prophecy to the English speaking world, Hollis Read, M. A., recorded the following:

We may, then, well credit the preacher in a Jewish synagogue in London, who recently said: "We are happily emerging from the darkness into which persecutions of unparalleled intensity and duration, had banished us. Our domestic, social, and political life is assuming a brightness, which we feel assured will become more and more cheering." Or, Lord Ashley, who in a late meeting of the Jews' Society in London, said: "At no time has the horizon been so bright for the Jewish people. At no time prophecy so near its fulfillment. A year ago no imagination was lively enough to conceive one tenth of what we have heard this day." The late Prussian ambassador at the court of Rome, declared that "throughout the vast dominions of Germany and Poland, there is a general movement of inquiry, and a longing expectation abroad, that something will take place to restore them to the land of their fathers." Reverend T. Grimshaw says: "A vast number of Jews are preparing to emigrate from Germany and Poland to settle in Palestine; while throughout the whole of Europe and Asia, a general expectation is raised among them that the time of their deliverance is drawing near. Throughout Italy, the same uneasiness and expectation may be observed."—Hand of God in History, pp. 341, 342.

Will Elder Traum deny that the same God who planted this "longing expectation" to be "restored to the land of their fathers," in the bosom of the Jew, did not inspire the prophecy in the Book of Mormon and its translation, pointing to the time when these expectations should be realized? Since that time, his objections must yield to the logic of events—the force of logic, and the logic of force. The restoration of rains in their season, the more than 145,000 Israelites in Canaan, who till the soil, and whose commercial power is so keenly felt over the globe; the Hebrews who have returned from among the Gentiles, and now cultivate the arts of peace and industry; who grow millions of vines among the peaceful hills of Palestine, and who deal only with Egypt, Great Britain, the German Empire, France, and the United States, must for ever stand as sword points at the gateway of the arsenal, carving the trival criticisms into an innocuous desuetude! Subjoining two quotations from the Bible on this point, we leave it:

And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be plucked up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.—Amos 9: 14, 15.

Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil. And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker-worm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army which I sent among you. And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you: and my people shall never be ashamed.—Joel 2: 21-26.

Yet Traum says the restoration predicted in the Book of Mormon "has not been recorded by history." We leave him to "tussle" with the ironclad facts, as he "runs up" against both Bible and history in the following from the pen of Frank G. Carpenter, entitled "How the Israelites are to-day retaking the Holy City," published in the Omaha Bee, October 30, 1910, also in the Kansas City Journal of the same date. In part the article is as follows:

JERUSALEM.—(Special Correspondence of The Bee).—The Jews are rapidly coming into their own. This holy city now contains more than 60,000 of them, and they form over two thirds of its whole population. By the new constitution of Turkey they have acquired the right to own land in Palestine, and they can come and go as they please. This has not been the case until now. Jewish immigration has been prohibited, and such Jews as bought real estate have had to purchase and hold it under other names. This was so not only here, but all over the country. But, notwithstanding they acquired land, and I am told that some of the best farming properties of the plains of Sharon are in their lands, and that they own the most valuable business sites of Jerusalem. The new constitution gives them other advantages, and it is probable that they will rapidly increase in number and wealth.

The Jews of Palestine are not like those of America. They have a costume of their own, and come from so many different localities that it is not always possible to tell who they are. Among them are Persians, Spaniards, Russians, Bohemians, Poles, and Germans. There are many Algerians and Moors, and I have seen some from Abyssinia and Egypt.

They speak forty different languages, and there are many whom the others can not understand. In the main there are just three different classes. First is the Ashkenazim, made up of Jews from Russia, Poland, Austria, and Germany. These people are much like the lower class Jews of America, and their common language is Yiddish. The second class is of the Sephardim. They are Spanish Jews, descendants of those who came here centuries ago. These Jews speak a mixture of Spanish and Jewish. The third class is the eastern Jews, made up of Israelites from Syria, Persia, Arabia, and central Asia. They speak Arabic and look much like Moslems.

As to the American Jews, they are comparatively few, and it is seldom that you meet one that has been born in America. Those who claim to be such are chiefly natives, who have gone to the United States to get their naturalization papers, and then return here to live. Many of the latter are frauds, and our consul believes that some of them have bought their naturalization papers, and have never been out of the country. American citizenship is a valuable badge of protection in the lands of the sultan; and for this reason naturalization papers have been sold by returned Jews who have again left this country.

As far as I can learn the American Israelite does not stand high among his fellows of Jerusalem. The most of the Jews here pride themselves on their piety. They think themselves above the Jew who has suffered long contamination by mixing with foreigners and they especially despise the American. Meeting one on the street they may slap him on the stomach and sneeringly ask how much pork he ate when he was in the United States. In this I refer to the fanatics, who are composed more especially of the Spaniards and the members of the Ashkenazim. These people have inner circles of religious aristocrats, some of whom are supposed to have magic powers of healing. Among them are many men of education and culture, men who know the Bible from beginning to end, and who speak several languages.—Saints' Herald, November 16, 1910.

This is evidence in Hebrew itself, but it seems that Elder Traum, with all of his lore can not "translate." Well, Deity is not contingent on the ability of Elder Traum, or his fellows, in the success of his purposes. These purposes go right on, mocking the impotence of man.

THE CALHOUN INCIDENT.

On page 162, Traum continues his criticisms by attacking Elder Blair's quotation from Joseph's letter to John C. Calhoun, Joseph the Seer, revised edition, page 195, thus:

"He also," says Blair, "by the Book of Mormon and direct revelation, proclaimed that soon after that book came forth the Lord would speedily prepare the way among the nations for the restoration of Israel and Judah to their lands," which has not been recorded by history, "that faithful chronicler," unless by the same kind of Mormon proof it can be shown that the "unspeakable Turk" is of Israel or Judah, for the Turk still holds Canaan.

"Joseph predicted," continues Blair, "that his seed, his posterity, would be called to fill his office, and plead the cause of injured innocence," and, using Joseph's words, says: "While water runs and grass grows; while virtue is lovely and vice hateful, and while a stone points the sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was, I, or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence until Missouri makes atonement for all her sins—or sinks disgraced," etc. This et cetera in the "revelation" reads "degraded and damned to hell, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." The words of "my posterity" are italicized by Blair as if he were conscious that "I" had not done his part to fulfill this dire prophecy, and he fails to show where "my posterity" has plead the cause of injured innocence on Missouri soil. Surely "my posterity" has done nothing from the year 1844 to 1860, and there is no record where this son of the eloquent prophet has ever beseeched either the Federal Government or the State of Missouri in the interests of this cause of "injured innocence." Until this is done, or Missouri is "degraded and damned to hell," "the faithful chronicler" will not attest the glowing success of the would-be prophet. And yet this prophecy is as true as any that the "prophet" ever uttered. The silence of "my posterity," and the survival of Missouri as a State, which to date has escaped the terrible end threatened by this vindictive prophet, unite in pronouncing the prophecy an empty boast, and the prophet a fraud.

In order to a correct understanding of this, it is necessary to call his attention to the facts in the case which he fails to do (as usual).

It was understood that Calhoun was aspiring to the office of President of the United States. Joseph had, previous to this, conversed with him on the topic of the persecutions and robbery the Saints had undergone, in a visit to Washington, and after his return, and during the question of candidacy, Joseph writes him to know what his rule of action would be relative to the Saints who had been plundered, and robbed of their rights and property in Missouri. Mr. Calhoun wrote as follows:

Candor compels me to repeat, what I said to you at Washington; that according to my views the case does not come within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, which is one of limited and specific powers.

Responding to this, Joseph replied, in part:

If the general Government has no power to reinstate expelled citizens to their rights, there is a monstrous hypocrite fed and fostered from the hard earnings of the people! A real "bull beggar" upheld by sycophants; and, although you may wink to the priests to stigmatize; wheedle the drunkards to swear, and raise the hue and cry of impostor false prophet, . . . yet remember, if the Latter Day Saints are not restored to all their rights, and paid for all their losses, according to the known rules of justice and judgment, reciprocity and common honesty among men, that God will come out of his hiding place and vex this nation with a sore vexation—yea, the consuming wrath of an offended God shall smoke through the Nation, with as much distress and woe, as independence has blazed through with pleasure and delight. Where is the strength of government? Where is the patriotism of a Washington, a Warren, an Adams? and where is a spark from the watch fire of '76, by which one candle might be lit, that would glimmer upon the confines of democracy? Well may it be said that one man is not a State; nor one State the Nation. In the days of General Jackson, when France refused the first instalment for spoiliations, there was power, force, honor enough to resent injustice and insult, and the money came: and shall Missouri, filled with negro drivers, and white men stealers, go "unwhipped of justice," for ten fold greater sins than France? No! verily no! While I have powers of body and mind; while water runs and grass grows; while virtue is lovely, and vice hateful; and while a stone points out a sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was; I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence, until Missouri makes atonement for all her sins—or sinks disgraced, degraded and damned to hell—"where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."
—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 395.

The Government did not reinstate the Saints who had been expelled, and can Elder Traum be blinded to the fact that in a few years after this, "distress and woe," marched through the land, as independence had blazed through with pleasure and delight"? Any schoolboy knows how our national life oscillated like the pendulum of a clock in dangerous uncertainty, and during the fratricidal struggle, Missouri was a battle ground, and partaker of the distress and woe predicted, and since that time the physical elements in "storm, cyclone and tornado, have visited it with distress," and as for the "disgrace," of Missouri, the border hostilities developed such lawlessness, such bands of desperadoes, that some of the very counties in which the Saints had been wronged were scenes of slaughter, havoc, and ruin. Here are a few quotations that show the spirit of lawlessness and mobocracy reigning in the localities where the Saints were causelessly maltreated. This as late as 1854. "Citizens" are the ones. Robinson's "Kansas Conflict" quotes from the Platte (Missouri) Argus:

Citizens of the West, of the South, and Illinois! Stake out your claims [in Kansas], and woe be to the Abolitionist or Mormon who shall intrude upon it, or within reach of your long and true rifles, or within point-blank shot of your revolvers.

At a meeting held at Independence, Missouri, the citizens expressed their sentiment as follows:

That we, the South, be permitted peaceably to possess Kansas, while the North, on the same privilege, be permitted to possess Nebraska Territory.—Page 77.

Thus citizens of a town in Missouri are dictating by whom foreign territories should be settled. The same spirit, and the same town had a few years previously dictated to the Saints after a similar fashion, and enforced their will by firing the public mind with slanderous stories, and following that with violence, rapine, and murder. But listen to one or two more which "disgrace" Missouri.

On the day of the election [November, 1854] and before, they [of the border counties in Missouri] invaded Kansas like an army of occupation for the purpose of voting and voting only. They were residents of Missouri, and did not pretend to be bona fide residents of Kansas, or intend to become such. This army was recruited and paid as mercenaries to trample down the rights of the people of Kansas and pollute their ballot boxes. On the other hand, no Free-State men were recruited except to become bona fide settlers, and they received no pay whatever.—Page 96.

Such conduct upon the part of the "residents of Missouri," of course, is denounced as fit for intolerant persecutors and fanatical mobocrats, but just a few years before the Saints were robbed of their rights by the residents of Missouri. But what occurred next year, 1855? This:

At length came election day, the 30th of March, and with it an invading horde from Missouri. They came with great ostentation, with arms of every description, including cannon. They were detailed to every district in sufficient force to secure every member of the Legislature should their votes be counted. They paid little attention to formality, and less to legality. So open, unblushing, and overwhelming was the demonstration, that it defeated itself. It required no search for testimony to prove its illegality in a contest, as the invaders brought the proof with them and proclaimed it to all the world. This was very satisfactory to the Free-State men, and most of them looked on without effort to prevent the illegal voting, except in a formal way by entering protest before the judges of election.—Pages 103, 104.

A people guilty of the foregoing evils were capable of mobbing the Saints without just cause, a few years before. Of this election the Independence (Missouri) Messenger came out in notes of exultation over such villainy in these words:

On the 30th ult., [March,] the second political battle between Slavery and Abolitionism was fought, and Abolitionism driven to the bush. The victory of the Pro-Slavery party was complete, and it is to be hoped that the question is now settled for ever in that Territory.—Page 113.

Does not Elder Traum concede that a people so lost to justice and equal rights, to the most common instincts of manhood and honorable citizenship, were cruel enough to mob and traduce Christian men, and women, who had the inalienable right to choose both their politics and religion? But once more we quote "resolutions" of the citizens at Parkville, Missouri, in May, 1855:

Resolved, 1. That the Parkville Industrial Luminary [a paper that criticized the unlawful doings of Missourians in Kansas] is a nuisance which has been endured too long, and should now be abated.

Just what the mob said when they destroyed the Star:

2. That the editors, to wit, G. S. Parks and W. J. Patterson, are traitors to the State and country in which they live, and should be dealt with as such.

The Missouri mobbers hurled this charge at Joseph Smith and others, a few years before.

3. That we meet here again this day three weeks, and if we find G. S. Parks and W. J. Patterson in this town then, or at any subsequent time, we will throw them into the Missouri River, and if they go to Kansas to reside, we pledge our honor as men to follow and hang them wherever we can take them.

4. That at the suggestion of our Parkville friends, we will attend to some other Free-Soilers not far off.

5. That we will suffer no person belonging to the Northern Methodist Church to preach in Platte County after this date, under penalty of tar and feathers for the first offense, and hemp rope for the second.

6. That we earnestly call upon our sister counties throughout the State to rise in their might and clean themselves of Free-Soilism.

A popular writer said in 1892, when contrasting the unlawful deeds of 1833, 1839, with those of border ruffianism in Missouri, 1853-55:

History here repeats itself. These wretched beginnings had their fruitage speedily in deeds of violence, for there soon followed outrage upon outrage till much of that portion of Kansas bordering upon Missouri was plunged into the horrors of a war that stands a burning disgrace to the United States and a withering reproach upon the civilization of the nineteenth century. And had it not been that back of the Free-Soilers of Kansas there were the Constitution and laws of our Nation, the sentiment of all the free States of our Union and that also of the civilized world, the war would have been prolonged on her borders. But as it was, Missouri mobocracy was in the end forced to the wall. But this was not the end of it, for when the war of the Rebellion like a pitiless storm swept down on our Nation, a large proportion of that same element in the border counties which had been so active in mobbing the Latter Day Saints in Missouri and Free-State men and women in Kansas, rallied to the standard of those whose hands were raised in violence against the laws and life of our Nation and continued in the strife till heaven gave them captive to those who fought in defense of liberty and equal rights for all mankind.

By reference to the History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties, Missouri, published in 1888, it will be seen that "citizens" had to flee from their homes, and suffer the destruction of their property in some of the same localities from whence the Saints had been driven before, and this under a "general order" from General Ewing, dated, "Headquarters, District of the Border, Kansas City, Missouri, August 25, 1863." Under this "Order number 11," "all persons living in Cass, Jackson, and Bates counties, Missouri, and a part of Vernon," with few exceptions, were "ordered to remove from their present places of residence, within fifteen days from the date thereof." This order carried with it the wilderness of complications into which those localities had plunged themselves. On February 28, 1839, the Democratic Association of Quincy, Illinois, adopted the following resolutions touching the point of Missouri "disgrace."

Resolved, That we regard the rights of conscience as natural and inalienable, and the most sacred guaranteed by the Constitution of our free Government.

Resolved, That we regard the acts of all mobs as flagrant violations of the law, and those who compose them, individually responsible, both to the laws of God or man for every depredation committed upon the property, rights, or life of any citizen.

Resolved, That the inhabitants upon the Western Frontier of the State of Missouri in their late persecutions of the class of people denominated Mormons, have violated the sacred rights of conscience, and every law of justice and humanity.

Resolved, That the Governor of Missouri in refusing protection to this class of people when pressed upon by an heartless mob, and turning upon them a band of unprincipled militia, with orders encouraging their extermination, has brought a lasting disgrace upon the State over which he presides.—Persecution of the Saints, pp. 190, 191.

Nor did it end with that association. The Western Messenger, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1840 spoke out in no uncertain tones, like this:

Reader! Let not the word Mormon repel you! Think not that you have no interest in the cruelties perpetrated on this poor people! Read, we pray you, the history of this persecuted community; examine the detailed facts of these atrocities; reflect upon the hallowed principles and usages trampled under foot by ruffians; bring before your mind the violations of all law, human and divine, of all right, natural and civil, of all ties of society and humanity, of all duties of justice, honor, honesty, and mercy, committed by so-called freemen and Christians—and then speak out, speak out for prostrate law, for liberty disgraced, for outraged man, for heaven insulted;

"Loud as a summer's thunderbolt shall waken
A people's voice."

We speak strongly, for we feel strongly; and we wish to attract attention to a tragedy of almost unequaled horror, which has been unblushingly enacted in a State of this Union. Its history should be trumpeted abroad until the indignant rebuke of the whole land compels the authors, abettors and tolerators of these wrongs, to make the small return now in their power, for their aggravated injustice. Life can not be restored to the murdered, nor health to the broken down in body and soul, nor peace to the bereaved; but the spoils on which robbers are now fattening, can be repaid; the loss of the destitute can be made up; the captive can be freed, and, until by legislative acts she makes redress—Missouri is disgraced!

The cause for which the Saints suffered and plead in that day has been and is now plead by Joseph Smith, present President, with his associates of the Reorganization. That cause has been plead until the Reorganization is now honored by the heads of States and nations. And even in Missouri, "the waste places" are being rebuilt, and thousands of Latter Day Saints are there, and by upright lives are honoring and being honored, as they represent that cause.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

A BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF LOOMIS T. SCOVIL.

BY J. F. MINTUN.

The subject of this sketch, Mr. Loomis T. Scovil, was born in Madison County, New York, August 18, 1821, near the time of the great religious excitement which affected the central part of New York, and spread over much of the eastern part of the United States.

Just previous to the time of his birth, Joseph Smith and his father's family had been moved by the religious wave, and a vision had been received by Joseph Smith as a result of it. His interest in religious matters had led him to conclude that all churches could not be right because of the differences that existed between them, and he concluded that God knew best which one was right, and it was that one he desired to unite with. Because he was instructed by the personality that appeared to him to unite with none of the existing church organizations, the whole religious world became affected, and the part of the State of New York where Mr. Scovil's parents lived was particularly affected, by reason of its close proximity to the place where the vision was received. His father's family were among the first to receive the heavenly message that was delivered in the restoration of what was termed primitive gospel truth, and became members of the church organized under the command of God soon after its organization; but just what year they were baptized is not known.

The circumstances of his father's family were such that it was necessary that all who were able should be employed. He continued to labor at home and attend school till he was about sixteen years of age, when he engaged as a teamster with a man who was going to Cleveland, Ohio, the man who employed him promising to see that he returned to his home after making the trip in safety. The man proved untrue to his agreement with the boy and his parents. The boy concluded not to return home but to go west, and stopped on his way at Kirtland, Ohio, where resided some of the Saints, and, boy-like, climbed to the top of the temple, then completed at that place, the memory of which he oftentimes recalled in his conversation with and before his family.

He continued his journey westward on foot, most of the time alone, through western Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and on to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, a distance of about one thousand two hundred miles, his route leading him through a dense forest for about four hundred miles. When he found no other place to stop for the night, he built a camp fire and refreshed himself on fruit and game that he could secure near by.

After he arrived at Fort Leavenworth he engaged himself as a teamster to the Government for the sum of fifteen dollars per month and rations. The Kickapoo Indians had a reservation not far from the fort, and when he was not otherwise employed he visited with them and studied their habits and language, and became quite conversant with both. Of this experience the writer has heard him converse quite often in western Iowa, where he lived neighbor to my father's family. He took great delight in after years in making use of their language when conversing with his friends, and relating his experiences while in their camp. They showed him great friendship, and oftentimes invited him to share their hospitality. At one time he accepted their invitation to share their hospitality, and the squaw that was preparing the meal sought to show her neatness by cleaning off some dirt that had in some way gotten on the knife she was using by wiping the knife on her moccasin. He relates that at one time while in camp with them he was taken very sick, the Indians caring for him and doctoring him till he was well before they would permit him to return to his stopping place.

He remained at Fort Leavenworth for about three years, and from that place journeyed to Nauvoo, Illinois, stopping for a short time at Far West, Missouri. Soon after arriving at Nauvoo he was baptized, having become interested in the gospel some time previous to this, but being young he procrastinated the day of obedience till by experience he was constrained to obey without further delay.

About the same time, or shortly after his baptism, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Cole. They remained at this place till the exodus of the church after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He journeyed as far as Council Bluffs, then Kanessville, and while he was urged to join the handcart brigade, yet he had in some way become apprised that polygamy was being secretly practiced, and he refused to go further with this people; but he still retained his faith in the gospel, knowing that it condemned this evil and those who practiced it, with every other evil that was associated with it. He waited to be associated with those who remained faithful to the principles of righteousness contained in the gospel as previously advocated by the church during the lifetime of Joseph Smith.

Instead of going further west or returning to the East he moved with his family to Harrison County, near Magnolia, in Raglan Township, where he engaged in farming. He had been there but a short time when Elder Edmund C. Briggs came through there proclaiming the reorganization of the church and calling Israel out of darkness and confusion, and in 1862 he was rebaptized by Elder Briggs and rejoiced in his association with God's people again, and remained a devoted member, although at times he was isolated from the Saints. In 1868 he removed with his family to Woodbury County, near Sargent's Bluffs, where he spent the remaining days of his earthly career, which was closed by death from old age, April 10, 1910.

He was the father of eleven children, ten of whom are still living, one having died some years past from the effects of disease contracted while in the army. His companion preceded him to the spirit realm October 9, 1886, he making his home with some of the children from that time.

He was a man of a very cheerful temperament, and of strong physical vitality. He continued to follow his profession, farming, till about two years before his death. He could work for others more successfully than for himself, often saying, as the writer has heard him say several times, "I can work for anybody else better than for 'Lum' Scovil." I never knew him to complain or to become very much irritated, and when others would become irritated in his presence he would seek to quiet them by a jesting remark.

On account of the reproach that the iniquity introduced by Brigham Young and his associates who went to Utah brought upon the name of the church, which caused the faith to be misunderstood and evilly talked about, only one of his children have as yet accepted the gospel, although I know of none but what are friendly to their father's belief. When his family were young and they were living near where there was a local organization of the church there was not so much of an effort made to interest the young of the Saints in church work as there has been of later years, as the writer remembers to his own loss; and living in the same neighborhood and under the same influences can say that there was but little in a spiritual way to draw the young to the service of God.

Our brother was ordained a teacher during his early experiences in the Reorganization, but on account of his absence from branch privileges after 1868, and clerks of branches not being very careful to keep a record of items at that time, and those ordaining not being so careful about giving the items of ordination to the clerks of branches as they should, the items of this ordination are not available for use in this article.

While our brother has not left a record as brilliant as some, yet his record is one which will cause no blush of shame to come to the cheeks of any who may peruse it. He was faithful to his covenant with God, refusing to be led into evil even by those who professed good, and had previously taught it, remaining faithful to the wife of his youth, a peace-maker among his neighbors and brothers and sisters in the church, an honored citizen of the United States, his patriotism shown in having given one of his sons in defense of his country and to the preservation of her liberty. He was one whose company the young enjoyed; he delighted in entertaining them. His influence has been for good to the world and the church.

NOTES ON SCATTERED SUBJECTS.

NO REAL CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

Reverend Doctor Manning, field secretary for home missions, in his report to Methodist general board of mission at Brantford, Ontario, on October 6, speaks of young men who resign from the ministry or refuse to enter it for financial reasons, in this language:

"The secret of so many resignations from the ministry seems to us to lie in the spiritual life of the individual or in a mistake in having chosen the ministry as a life work. Men called to be prophets and realizing in their hearts that they have a commission from God to stand in the place of power and preach the gospel are not driven from the ministry on account of inadequate financial support. At the same time it is a reproach to our wealthy church to allow any of her ministers to suffer the embarrassment which an insufficient income occasions."

MORMON TEMPLE IN ALBERTA.

Considerable interest has been aroused by the announcement of Joseph F. Smith at a recent conference that the Mormon Church would build a temple in Alberta, Canada, probably in or near Raymond. It is intended that the temple shall be used for endowment and other ceremonies.

MEN AND BRETHREN, WHAT SHALL WE DO?

(No. 2 of Canadian Writers' Series.)

NOTE.—The author of this article is a member of the London, Canada, Branch and is a priest. During the past three years he has been secretary of London District. He is an earnest worker and intensely interested in the welfare and progress of the restored gospel, as the sentiments of this article will show. Brother Philippin was born of Swiss and French parentage and spent his early life in London, England, where he spoke French at home and English at school. He crossed the briny to Nova Scotia as a young man and there heard and accepted the gospel. Later he moved to Ontario.

“MEN AND BRETHREN, WHAT SHALL WE DO?”

This question, recorded in Acts 2:37, was undoubtedly prompted by the powerful preaching of Peter, the apostle, on the day of Pentecost, in the early days of the Christian church. The people asking the question at that time were outside the kingdom and had at best little if any more than a three-year privilege of hearing the gospel and witnessing some of the wonderful things which made up the everyday experience of the children of the kingdom. The question was consistent and pertinent, and received prompt and intelligent attention. The answer was clear and decisive—easy to be understood; and so far as we have any record, was implicitly obeyed by at least three thousand souls.

To-day this question is still being asked, but the circumstances are entirely different. The people asking this question to-day are within the kingdom (humanly speaking, at all events). They have had something like a lifelong privilege of hearing the gospel and of witnessing the wonderful things which are the inheritance of the Saints. They have enjoyed the privilege of reading and studying for themselves the word of the Lord to them at first hand, to say nothing of all the law we have remaining, which God deemed it wise to give in all the dispensations of the gospel since the fall of Adam; and a vast amount of the published teaching and experience of the ministry since the founding of the church eighty years or more ago.

Our first thought, then, was that there is not—there should not be—a single Latter Day Saint alive who could consistently ask this question with reference to our everyday walk and conversation—since the promises of God to his people are so many and so gracious that all that is required of us is to do the best we can—manifest a disposition to be willing and obedient, and such inspiration and guidance as is needful shall be given.

The question, then, from such a viewpoint, seems to be inconsistent, and is pertinent in the extreme. In effect it is the same as asking, Shall we obey the word of the Lord? or, Shall we ignore it? The writer, having on one occasion cornered a Saint on a certain point of law up to which they were not living, was told, “Oh, that is only a commandment”; clearly revealing the thought in that mind that there were commandments that were not imperative—that were of no value, and hence were held in contempt—whereas anybody can turn to any one of the standard books of the church and discover with very little effort that men must live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; that all the commandments must be kept, because every word of God is pure and shall be answered upon our heads in the great judgment day.

If there is a people on God's earth who ought to honor and obey the word of the Lord, it is the people who teach and who profess to believe that the God of heaven still speaks, still reveals his secrets, his mind and will to his people as he did in biblical times; and if there is a people on the face of the earth upon whom God's heaviest wrath and displeasure is bound to fall, we may well believe it will be on that people who know full well what they ought to do; aye, what they must do, in order to obtain salvation; yet who, nevertheless, are eternally asking the question, “Men and brethren, what shall we do?” If “we” have not yet determined what the law of God requires from each one of us, let us go to the books, let us fast and pray, let us listen to the ministry until we know what our duties are, then go forward with full purpose of heart to obey in the face of all adversity and opposition.

Ah, hold a minute, says one; the books are a unit on teaching, so far as my reading goes, but the ministry are not by any means of one heart and mind on the great questions facing us as a people; for instance, Elder Number One preaches concerning the gathering that Independence, Missouri, is the gathering place, and that great event must begin there and extend territorially as the wisdom of the Spirit of God shall direct; while Elder Number Two comes along and knocks out this idea like this: “Oh, yes; I've heard of that little Independence proposition about the gathering place; but they can't work that on me. Why, the whole world is the gathering place—the land of Zion—and Zion is the pure in heart, and let me tell you that the British Mission would be in better shape (self-supporting) to-day, if the converts were allowed to remain in their own country, build there their houses of worship, etc., instead of being shipped off to the United States as soon as they join the church, under the idea that Independence is the gathering place.”

Here you see is teaching diametrically opposed to teaching; both teachers holding office in the same priesthood, and sent by the same authority. But this is not our only difficulty; there is the law of tithing; Elder Number One teaches that we must pay one tenth of all we possess; we must give the Lord one tenth interest in our affairs and pay one tenth of every dollar we earn.

Elder Number Two comes along and says, “Oh, no; that is a mistake; one tenth of all you earn is not yours to give so long as rent and taxes, butchers', bakers', grocers', and others' bills are calling for payment. God allows you your reasonable, frugal living expenses, and then asks of you one tenth of all that which is left."

Then there are the gifts; one elder presents the facts as they read in the Scriptures, that the gifts are the common property of the believers; God does not bestow them upon a favored few, but on the believers severally as he will—"ministry and laity shared alike."

Elder Number Two teaches that the gifts belong exclusively, with a possible exception now and again, to the priesthood.

There is also considerable difficulty about the principle of baptism; Elder Number One teaches that Jesus died for our sins and not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world; he tasted death for every man; and without blood is no remission of sins. Elder Number Two in stentorian tones, teaches emphatically that "Jesus did not die for our sins; neither yours nor mine; because they were not committed yet. He died for the sin of Adam, the so-called original sin, not the sins of the world but the sin of the world; but provision is made in the gospel for the remission of our sins."

We suppose that the idea with which we have been confronted, that that ordinance of baptism would be an empty and useless, not to say meaningless and silly ordinance from any other viewpoint, had origin in such teaching.

With regard to the spirit in man, the writer was once informed by one holding the Melchisedec priesthood that God was not the creator of our spirits, but that he simply organized them, and that he could not destroy them if he wanted to. The statement was further made that this was the teaching of the church on that point.

The teaching of the President of the church is: "We do not know. The Holy Spirit seemed to state so far as this world is concerned that all things that were created materially were first created spiritually. The creation as given in Genesis was of this material world, and that it was organized out of material already existing and the word create is understood to be equivalent to the word organize. Whence came the breath of life which God breathed into the nostrils according to the record we do not know, but have been inclined to believe that it was coexistent with God; as the principal of life must always have existed and Christ by whom all things were made is the Lord of life and glory. From what knowledge we have upon the matter, we must repeat that we can not answer this question." See SAINTS' HERALD, September 14, 1910.

From the foregoing it is quite clear that there is more or less contrariety of teaching among the ministry, and there is not the least doubt in our mind that the unprogressive, slow-to-respond attitude of the people to the demands of the law are due to a large extent to the divers interpretations placed upon it. Converts who have been prevailed upon to donate to the missionaries in their fields to help unravel financial tangles of the struggling wife and little ones at home have met that lady dressed in silks and fine linens, and the teaching of the Doctrine and Covenants touching the plain garments of our own make is thereby made of none effect.

Much more could be written in connection with the above. Frequently the thought has come to us while listening to some of our preachers, It would not be amiss if the congregation should determine to paint in large letters on the inside front wall: "Practice what you preach," as an admonition to the preacher, to offset the many scriptures written up in the back wall for the government of the laity.

"Men and brethren, what shall we do?" In the light of the foregoing, this question retains both consistency and pertinence, for we believe verily that a large percentage of the membership are really at a loss to know "whom" and "what" to believe. A right education seems to be the one thing needful in order to bring about unity of understanding of the laws of God. The priesthood are all called from the ranks of the laity. If all teaching were identical, all learning upon the part of those taught would be identical also—that is to say, if everybody were taught that God calls for one tenth of our increase annually as tithing, no one would be taught that he asks a tenth of every dollar we earn. If every member of the priesthood would teach and preach Independence, Missouri, as the place of the gathering to begin with, no one would learn that the gathering place is anywhere else or everywhere in the world where there happens to be a few converts living.

And so we might go enlarging all along the lines referred to, which could not but illustrate the necessity of a right and proper education, as well in the spiritual as in the temporal affairs of life. One would think that everybody with ordinary intelligence could perceive at once the truthfulness and consistency of such an argument. But what are the facts? Education is receiving about the same amount of knocks from the eldership and the membership as baptism, tithing, the gathering, or any other question before us, and why so? Because Elder Number One preaches and teaches that education is a necessary and splendid thing to possess, and that the man of God, the Saint—anyone in fact—is much better qualified to correspond with his or her environment and to fill his or her mission in life with a good education than he or she can without, as was the case with Moses, Paul, Luke, or any of the early apostles.

And Elder Number Two upsets the whole thing by teaching and preaching that education would knock all Latter Day Saintism out of him and out of every Saint in the branch. Inspiration; that's the thing for him and the Saints.

In conclusion, we desire to suggest as the best answer we can find to the question before us: Let us importune God to establish the school of the prophets, where we have reason to hope the truth will be learned by all who are privileged to enter there, and whence no one shall be permitted to go as a teacher of men who does not possess the essential qualifications which will enable him to work in harmony with God in every detail and particular of the law he has given for the salvation of the people.

To Kirtland Reunion, and Home Again.

Again we are on the way to Kirtland the Beautiful. Once more we are looking forward with pleasure to renewing old friendships and making possible new ones, also to the spiritual benefits we hope to receive in communing with the Lord's own people.

For many years I have had a desire to see the place that is dear to the heart of every true Saint. I used to long to see the solemn old temple I heard so much about. The cover design on Autumn Leaves several years ago, was a view of the temple taken at a point northwest of it. That picture captured my fancy, and from that time I resolved that if it could be made possible, I would see it from that exact spot. One year ago my desire was gratified, and I saw the only building on earth that the Lord himself had designed and built.

My first sensation on beholding it was one of distinct disappointment. I thought the Master Builder had made a mistake and built his house on the east side of the street. To my mind nothing could be more inappropriate. You see I was completely turned around, as we say when we don't know east from west, or north from south. I thought we came into Kirtland from the south in coming from Willoughby, and the temple of my dreams did not look at all like the real one. Fancy the morning sun shining in the back windows of that building. I discovered my mistake in the afternoon, when I noticed the sun setting. No need to say I was glad, and I offered a prayer that I might see it right, and behold, the next morning the temple had seemingly moved over on the other side, and the hotel to the east side. All was now as it should be, and I could enjoy it much better. Did I hear some one say, "How foolish to think the situation could make any difference in the beauty of a building"? Well, it makes a difference to me anyway, and Kirtland is far more beautiful to me than it would be if it was situated as I thought at first.

To-day, August 17, sees Sister Ida Burtch, of Saint Thomas, and myself, on the steamer, City of Detroit, bound for Cleveland. I thought when we came off the ferry at the foot of Woodward Avenue, Detroit, and were directed to go three blocks south to get the steamer, that it would be very easy to get there, but we found that water front streets are sometimes only lanes. That one was a lane, anyway, and so blocked with trucks and autos that we could scarcely get through. The newsboys knew it, too, for no sooner had we struck the first blockade than three or four bare-footed, dirty-faced little fellows rushed up and yelled, "Carry suitcase, lady," and were so insistent that Sister Burtch yielded up her possessions to one. It was well she did, or we two lone females might have become bewildered in the turns we had to make to get through. At last, to our relief, we reached the ticket office, and finally the boat. After waiting nearly an hour for the signal to start, we were off for Cleveland, and then to Kirtland.

The steamer is crowded with excursionists going to Cleveland for the week end, but unless there are Saints aboard, there are none of them who will get as much enjoyment out of the trip as we, because there are none who are going to as good a place as we are.

We are now passing Boblow Island, one of Detroit's pleasure resorts. It was very lovely until an immense cloud of smoke just now nearly smothered it, and made one feel as if the poor little island must be gasping for breath.

I am amusing myself looking around at the many passengers and I discover that after all there are a good many people who are homelier than myself, and a few who are rather nicer looking; with fewer still who are really beautiful. But probably the ugly ones look better to their friends who are accustomed to seeing them. You know half the beauty of our friends consists of the nice things we know about them.

The time seems long when one has so little to do, and when one is anxious for fear it will be dark when we get to Willoughby, and no conveyance to take us to Kirtland. But I am borrowing trouble, as usual, and of course it will be all right, even if we have to walk over. The road is becoming familiar to me.

All was right when we arrived at Willoughby. Instead of a bus, they sent an auto after us, and that was one better. We had nearly all kinds of rides to-day: steam cars, steamboats, trolley cars, and automobiles. It only needs an airship and a wheelbarrow to complete the list.

MONDAY, AUGUST 19.

Sunday, the 18th, was one glad day of pleasure in the enjoyment of the Spirit. The holy influence of the Master was felt from the very beginning of the service to the end of it. Some disturbing influence was felt, but it was overcome. Our honored patriarch, Brother J. H. Lake, sang in tongues, exhorting against undue criticism, and Brother Ernest Wilson sang the interpretation. It also came to Sister G. T. Griffiths, who bore testimony to the correct interpretation. There were several prophecies and revelations, and just at the close, Brother R. C. Evans spoke in tongues and gave the interpretation. It was grand and soul inspiring; the Lord calling on his Saints to magnify their calling, and giving promise of great blessings if the Saints were faithful in discharging the work each one is called to do. There were blessings to be given to this place and people on conditions. The Lord's promises are nearly always conditional; we must do our part, or in the very nature of things, the blessings can not come. Many prayers were offered, rich in earnest petition, that the Saints might be strengthened to do their part, and that this place might find favor in God's sight, and eventually become a gathering place for his people. They themselves can make the answer come, as the Lord told them.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 20.

Kirtland is looking lovely to-day. Brother Lake asked me this morning if I liked it as well as ever. I answered, "Of course I do; why the very wind blows the leaves of those trees out there as if it loved them better than it does the other trees." He looked at me, smiling a bit, as much as to say, "Well, you are an enthusiast, anyway." But it isn't that. Every Saint that has been here can tell you that it is because the power of the Lord is brooding over the place; and makes it seem holier than other places are.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 25.

All the week we have had grand meetings, both prayer and testimony, and other services. Sometimes the testimony meetings lasting nearly all the forenoon. It was voted so, as they were very enjoyable and inspiring, and as some one said, they were a veritable sunburst of light and peace. Others saying that they were the best meetings held in the temple for many years, which is saying a great deal. The preaching services have been excellent, too, though some were very lengthy. I beg pardon for the criticism, as they were good, very good, even though they were well stretched out.

Sister Griffiths' work with the little ones deserves mention. She deprived herself of other meetings that would have been a pleasure to her, in order that the children might have their share of enjoyment and instruction, and she did the work well in teaching and amusing them. The pretty little hats that the girls made, give promise of expert milliners in the future. Others made mats and dollies, showing considerable ingenuity for little tots and were a credit to both pupils and teacher.

In a few hours we must start for home, and we hope to take with us such sweet memories of the time and place as will enable us to more successfully fight self and sin in the future, and also give inspiration and strength to our intelligence.

Again we are on the steamer, but this time it is the City of Buffalo, bound for Buffalo. We are going by Niagara Falls, Sister Burtch to visit a sister, and I to visit husband and son who are working there. Brother and Sister Evans have taken a berth, as I understand Brother Evans is loath to part with the good things he had for dinner at Kirtland to-day. He thinks fish can get along with ordinary food. One o'clock, and a fearful thunderstorm is raging. The lightning is flashing and the thunder is rolling, with the rain coming down in torrents, but the big steamer goes on her way in no way disturbed by the commotion. Nearly everyone is asleep, feeling confident there are no icebergs to collide with, as in the case of the Titanic.

NIAGARA FALLS, Monday, September 2.

My husband and I had a pleasant experience this afternoon, in meeting a number of Kirtland Saints, as we were walking down River Road, in Victoria Park. I could hardly believe my eyes when I saw Brother N. L. Booker walk into one of the various summer houses that are along the drive. In a few seconds Sister Booker was there, too, with Brother C. Ed. Miller, wife, and daughter Vera; also Bishop J. A. Becker and wife. We spent a pleasant hour or two in their society, and then we had to part, as they had to make haste to get to Buffalo to get the boat to go home.

By the way, there is going to be a steamer run from Port Stanley to Cleveland next summer; the State of Ohio, belonging to the Cleveland and Buffalo Navigation Company. If that be true, there are a great many Saints in Ontario who will avail themselves of the opportunity to see the place whose history is so closely interwoven with that of the early days of the church.

To-morrow I start for home, and I shall be glad to see the old town again. After all, there is no place like home; the place where the greater part of one's life has been spent, and where one's relatives and friends live. That is what will make Zion such a gladsome home; all our loved ones will be there with us. Lord, hasten the glad hour.

MORMONS DEFY PRIESTHOOD.

SALT LAKE UTAH, October 19.—A serious division in the Mormon Church is in evidence as the result of the effort on the part of the priesthood to carry this and surrounding States for President Taft. The open declaration of President Joseph F. Smith in favor of his reelection and the insistence of others in the hierarchy that this is the command of God has stirred many of the younger generation of Mormons to the point of open revolt. They are insisting that they have a right to support either Governor Wilson or Colonel Roosevelt, and that the priesthood should keep its place.

It was the belief of most of the leading men of this State—Mormon and Gentile—up to a few weeks ago, that the church and state issue would never again be raised in Utah. When the church leaders in the late nineties asserted their power so strongly against churchmen who disagreed with their political policy, many Mormons were alienated. Then, too, the church agitation has retarded the growth of Utah. The fact that all the surrounding States, even despised Nevada, have shown a much greater progress has been a blow to the pride of the people as well as a reason for resentment on the part of business men. After the showing made by the last Federal census business leaders—Mormon and Gentile—got together to boom the State and received assurance from high Mormon authorities that the church would keep in the background in temporal affairs.

President Smith, however, has always been fanatical in his conduct of the affairs of the church, and when he saw that the Bull Moose and Democratic parties threatened to defeat Taft in this State he came out with his indorsement. At first it was declared by high Mormons and the church organ that he had merely expressed his personal views and that the Mormon people were free to do as they pleased. It was soon found, however, that members of the priesthood were taking their cue from their leader and were secretly pressing upon the Mormon voters—particularly the women—their duty to obey the counsel of their leader.

This secret campaign led to an outbreak at the recent General Conference of the church in this city. B. H. Roberts, who had once been severely disciplined because of his demands for political freedom, again came to the front as an insurgent. He is the best of the Mormon orators, and in a stirring address in the big tabernacle his eloquent plea for personal liberty among the people in all civil and political matters made a great sensation. His effort awoke all the fanaticism of the Mormon leaders, and they threw off the restraint they had imposed on themselves for years and proclaimed their right to dictate in all matters.

Charles W. Penrose, third in authority in the church, as second counselor to President Smith, emphatically voiced the attitude of the priesthood.

"This basic principle of the Church of Jesus Christ must always be kept in view, and will remain while the church remains, that is the doctrine of present revelation," he said. "This church is in communion, in communication, with the powers on high, and the Lord has established his church upon a foundation so that the people may not be led astray by error, by false doctrine, by the notions and opinions of men, whether they be good men or bad men; but has so organized the church that we can all look to the head of the church for the word of the Lord by way of commandment, and the church has been so organized that in every department of it the people may receive instruction in conformity to that which the Lord reveals.

"We must listen to authority, for without it we would drift into outer darkness and anarchy, and lose the rightful freedom we have. I draw your attention to this because I believe, as President Smith declared in the opening speech in this conference, that we are living in perilous times; that the time has come when our attention should be drawn to these things that we may know our duty, and that we may perform it manfully. I thank God that we have a watchman on the towers of Zion inspired of the Lord, filled with the spirit of his predecessors in office, clothed upon with the right and the power and the authority to speak to us in the name of the Lord.

"It is the duty of those who stand to regulate, to preside, to direct all things, to be stern for the truth and to stand by it, and sometimes, as the Prophet Joseph said in one of the revelations given to him, that the power of the priesthood should be exercised in kindness with love unfeigned, by persuasion, by teaching, by enlightenment, and yet sometimes to rebuke with sharpness when it was necessary, so that those who failed or were drawn aside might repent and return unto the Lord. And I regret in my soul that any of my brethren should go out before the people and lift up their voices apparently for the sole purpose of exposing the faults and, as they think, sometimes the iniquities of men who are in office and in authority."

Hyrum G. Smith, the patriarch of the church, echoed these sentiments: "I fervently hope the people will take to heart the instructions of our prophet," he said. "I would urge this obedience particularly on the younger generation. Follow not the example of those who are not of us, but in humility and prayer come to the holy priesthood for advice in all things."

Other leaders, one after another, took the same tone, and President Smith concluded with an assertion of his power. He did not touch politics again, but spoke of immorality, card playing, and the fashions of women's dress, ending thus:

"These things are not only my counsel but are the counsel of God through me."

Many young Mormons have refused to be swayed from their allegiance to the Bull Moose and Democratic parties, and there are open threats that, with the national campaign out of the way, the church will be challenged in politics by a combination of Gentiles and Mormon insurgents of all parties.—New York Times.

The Prayer Union.

Dear Home Column: The time has been long since this writer's name has appeared on this page, but there are many of you who still, perhaps, have some recollection of Eleanor, who years ago used to greet you with the memory texts for the month for the Prayer Union. I do not know whether or not the Union still exists, but I know that the things for which we used to meet to pray are still dear to every reader of the Home Column, myself included.

Whether we may attribute the results to our mutual prayers and the lessons outlined in scripture on the various subjects, I feel that looking back to those days, there is a deeper understanding of our spiritual responsibilities in the homes of the Saints, in the church, and to society in general.

One of the inspiring thoughts in originating the Prayer Union was that one can not pray for anything in faith without learning the duty of doing to bring about the realization of the things for which we prayed.

Now most of us who used to meet week by week to pray for our own and the families of each other, or for the church and its ministers and members, the missions and missionaries, the Sunday schools and other church work in which so many are now interested, see around us our children's children, for whom we grandmothers are just as anxious as we were for our own, and there are sick and afflicted ones now as then. I am led to these thoughts by reading a request in one of the church papers for the prayers of the Saints, especially the Prayer Union. I wondered if there are still any faithful ones who continue to observe the weekly hour of prayer in the Prayer Union. If so, I wish they would let us know it through the Home Column.

As of old, your sister in bonds,

ELEANOR.

Good Literature.

Parents should know the kind of books their children are reading. One of the greatest blessings that can come to a child is the reading of good books. Nothing can make for culture and character like this. Nothing can work more harm to the nature of children than the reading of worthless books.

Thomas Carlyle says: "Books are like men's souls, divided into sheep and goats."

W. N. Ferris says: "Tell me the books you read, and I will tell you who you are."

Parents should know how necessary it is that the children read only good books; how important it is that they early make the friendship of those great men who have put down carefully and in an interesting manner their thoughts on life, its mysteries and its glorious possibilities.

Books are like people. There are good and bad. This is told very plainly in The Great Stone Face. It says, "Sometimes these thoughts are crystalized into a beautiful poem, sometimes wrought out in a fascinating novel." Parents should see to it that their boys and girls learn to love to read of a beautiful life. How many men and women there are whose lives have been lovely, whose actions have been inspired by the thrill of great convictions, and who have been actuated by patriotic motives! How many there are whose biographies have been beacon lights for succeeding generations! Such as the life of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and others I could cite to you.

The children must be led in some way to approach with love the great, kind souls who will speak to them tenderly and strongly out of the pages of books. In this way, more than in any other, I believe the children will be brought to realize themselves. What end of education is more important than this? Making the true, the beautiful, and the good of literature a part of the lives of children is true education, is it not? The child's mind is very easily impressed. Isn't it better for it to be at home reading some good book than to be around town where it will come in contact with older people whose characters have already been marred? When the curtain is drawn at night the place for the child is under the parent's eye. According to statistics the majority of crimes are committed by people under twenty-five years of age. Then who is to blame for this? If the parents would be more strict with their children, some day those same children would say, "Father and mother, I feel very grateful toward you for having been so strict with me when I was a child." Wouldn't that be better than having your son serving a penalty in the state's prison or some similar institution?

A criminal is not made in one day. We form our habits daily. Horace Mann says: "Habit is a cable; we weave a thread of it each day, and it becomes so strong we can not break it." Keep the child where he belongs and you will not be making criminals.

Locke says: "Education begins the gentleman, but reading, good company, and reflection must finish him."

The father, by spending the small sum necessary for the purchase of good books, and enjoying them with his boys and girls during the winter evenings, will find perhaps much in them that will meet his needs as well as the children's. Any of you would be glad to sit down and visit with such men as Longfellow and Whittier. Then why not read their thoughts?

The great end of the common school system is something more than to teach children to read. It should, if it is to accomplish its full mission, also impart to them a love of reading. A man or woman whom a whole childhood spent in the common schools has been made able to stumble through a newspaper, or to labor through a few trashy books, is scarcely better off than one who can not read at all.

If you step into a home where they read no papers, where they read no books, what will you find? I will leave this for you to answer.

Every child should have something to read. Children will read, there is no doubt about that. It only remains for us to direct their reading so as to reach and secure what is good and avoid all that is bad. Little children require little stories, larger children require larger stories, and the supply only answers the demand. At present there are many good magazines published for young people.

The habits which a child forms between the ages of ten and twenty are the ones which he is likely to have in after life. Then, boys and girls, why not lay our foundations as securely as possible? Isn't it the parent's duty to aid and assist in the laying of this foundation?

We are placed here upon this earth, not because we chose to come, but here we are. Around us is strewn the material from which we may build our characters. Our daily actions are the materials with which we are building. Those who are older can see what care we should take in selecting that which is good and leaving that which is bad. We don't want our structures full of flaws and weaknesses, that which will never stand the test of our great Creator. We should put no acts into our lives of which we would be ashamed.

You should now see the great necessity in selecting your reading. Read all you can that is good, and avoid everything that is bad.

BURLINGTON, COLORADO, October 18, 1912.

Editors Herald: I noticed in the last issue of the HERALD that a brother said he thought Jesus baptized John the Baptist. Now I can not agree altogether with him, and to enlighten some and for the benefit of all, I submit the following: "Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel of repentance and of baptism and the remission of sins, and the law of carnal commandments, which the Lord, in his wrath, caused to continue with the house of Aaron, among the children of Israel until John, whom God raised up, being filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb: for he was baptized while he was yet in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God at the time he was eight days old unto this power."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.

When Jesus demanded baptism at the hand of John, John forbade him, and said, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" It was because John thought he was not worthy to baptize the Son of God, which is the reason why he said, "I have need to be baptized of thee." He could not have been speaking of the baptism of water, because he had been baptized in his childhood, and he was a man when Jesus came to him to be baptized. He could not have been speaking of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, for he (John) was filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb. Christ could not have baptized him in his childhood, for John did not know Christ until he came and demanded baptism. (John 1: 30-33.)

I hope this will help some to understand, and that it will be taken in the spirit in which it is given; in the spirit of brotherly love and kindness.

I am still in the conflict and hope to fight the battle to the end. My field address is 819 Ellsworth Avenue, Denver, Colorado.

Yours for the truth,

H. E. WINEGAR.

U. B. OLIVER.

WEST PLAINS, MISSOURI, October 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: I pen a few lines, not as a missionary, but as a member of the Reorganized Church. I feel like a little letter from us at this time will be interesting to many. We joined the church in February, 1907, in Monroe, Utah. Wife and I were baptized by Brother A. M. Chase. We were excommunicated from the Mormon Church the same day. I had previously denounced the Mormon Church as a fraud and apostate for their false teachings and miserable hypocrisy. We are now in the land of Zion, as you will see by this letter, and have bought forty acres of land at eight hundred dollars. There are about twenty-five acres cleared and ready for cultivation. It is a big job to clear this land, but the wood will pay for that, as it sells at about four dollars and fifty cents per cord at town, which is four miles away. This is a fine climate and almost anything will grow here; in fact, one could gather wild fruit and nuts enough for home use. Work is more plentiful than in Utah, and wages are about the same. Hardware and dry goods are cheaper. Anyone can buy land for twenty dollars an acre within four miles of town, which is the county seat, with more doing than all Utah south of Provo at the same time.

I don't mean to tell anyone they can make a good living without work; you can not do that without you have some capital. As to church privileges and our local conditions, the Saints are scattered and seem to be as far apart spiritually as brethren and sisters can get. Some are cultivating the wrong spirit. We ought to get together and get to work on a meetinghouse, centrally located, so as to make it as easy as possible for all to meet. This would give us a better understanding of the gospel of peace and good will, and help each other to learn to talk of the gospel story, the history of the church; even talking politics is better than to assail the characters of individuals. Personally, I don't want to hear complaints against my brothers and sisters. These matters should be handled according to the law.

Now, my brethren, in or near West Plains, let us overlook the faults of others and try to help each other overcome. Remember our Savior's advice: He that is without sin let him cast the first stone. And do to others as you would have others do unto you.

Your friend and brother in the gospel of peace,

EDWARD NAZER.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, October 10, 1912.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated ones. We have a little church about two and one half miles from here, but I have no way to go, as my babies are so small I can not very well walk, but once in a great while I get to go with some one else. I am sure I appreciate being with the Saints. I have been somewhat wayward this summer, but down deep in my heart I have had a longing for the love and care of my dear Savior, and God has been causing me to study and think and read of the gospel until I saw where I am and where I was and I fell on my knees and began to pray and have been praying ever since. Dear Saints, I have learned that it is much harder to hear God after you backslide than it is to live in prayer. I thank my dear Savior, for he has blessed me more than I ever felt before. I feel like I can live for him as I should, if he will help me; I am going to try with all my might.

How I wish an elder would come here and hold a meeting. I haven't heard a sermon for over a year, and have nothing but the Bible for a guide, but I am glad I have the Bible. We must endure to the end. Let us pray and love with one prayer and one love, and not get downhearted and quit trying, for Satan is going to do his best to overcome us, for his time is limited. God has blessed me in many ways. I was healed once after the doctors had given me up. I have had dreams, and when my first babe was one week old I had a vision. I was not asleep. I knew everything that was going on and was thinking of good and bad Saints, and the first thing that I remember is that the old demon was standing on my right side and seemed to be laughing and swearing at me. The tears came into my eyes and I turned my head away from him. On the left side of my bed I saw what seemed to be an angel, and he was weeping. I spoke to the angel in my vision and asked him if he had a message for me. He said, "Thou art my child and I will take care of thee." He then left my bedside and walked over to the cot where my little babe was lying and kissed her and vanished. This was a very comforting message to me in time of sorrow. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be a light to the dying world. I feel that God has a work for me to do and I am ready and willing to work if he wants me. My prayers are for the Saints and the sinners, and for God's work.

Your sister in bonds,

MRS. WILLIAM OHLER.

SOUTH BOARDMAN, MICHIGAN, October 14, 1912.

Dear Herald: I will try and tell you that we are still in the work trying to do good to our fellow men, and the Lord blesses us in our weak efforts.

On the 9th we had one of the best prayer meetings I ever attended. It lasted for three and a half hours. All present were made to rejoice in God for his kindness to us. All offered prayer, and some two or three times during the meeting the gift of tongues was given, wherein instruction to us was given.

I am glad to be numbered with a people where the Lord can tell us his will, and I know that there are many more blessings for us if we will but place ourselves in a condition to receive them; but we too often follow after the world a little. For example, I have heard Saints say they could not see any harm in the young going to the dance hall to see them dance if they themselves did not dance; but the same party would hold up their hands in horror if their boy or girl was to go into a saloon, while some of the same element you find in the saloon you will find in the dance hall, and they will lead the young from the path of virtue and truth.

God has said, Come out of the world, and be ye separate. Did he mean what he said, or did he mean just mingle with them a little? or in other words, place your right arm around God, and with the left hand say, Come on, Satan; I am young and must have some fun. Do you think God will smile when he has said we must serve him and him alone. Dear Saints, as a servant of Christ I will say, Shun the very appearance of evil; and I know if we do the will of God with all our mind and might he will bless us with more blessings and better ones than this world can afford. I will be glad when we throw away our so-called foolish fun and trust the Lord.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may live to enjoy the Spirit and be some little good in the vineyard of the Lord, and I will try in my weak way to help you.

Yours in the one faith,

WILLARD E. GREEN.

MOUNTAINVILLE, MAINE, October 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: It gives me strength to read the letters from the Saints who are far away and to know they are trying hard to live Christian lives. I am trying to do this and overcome Satan and his works. I feel very weak at times, and dark clouds assail me, but I go to God in prayer and he gives me strength to overcome them.

I remember the text used last Sunday evening by our Elder Moody Eaton. It was, Who are we serving, God or mammon? If we are serving God we will have no desire to cause our brother or sister hard feelings, but if we are serving man then we are not of God. We can not serve God and mammon together. We must try to overcome Satan and his works, that we may love each other more; for if we can not love our brethren whom we can see, how can we love Christ whom we have not seen? I thank God to-day for his many blessings, and that I have strength day by day, and health so I can care for my little ones.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be the means of bringing them into the fold. My desire is to live each day so that when my life work is done I may have a home where there is no more sorrow. I want to gain a step each day and will pray that God will bless you.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. W. A. SMALL.

SOLDIER, IOWA, October 20, 1912.

Editors Herald: We are still trying to hold the gospel banner aloft and are striving in our weak way to get the gospel before the people. We have Sunday school most every Sunday, and have a fair attendance.

Brother W. A. Smith was here for about four weeks this fall. Was tossed about from place to place, but nevertheless he was permitted to lead six precious souls down into the watery grave and left a few more very near the door. I hear through others that they are reading the church books and investigating, so I think it will not be long before they will see the necessity of obeying.

We were only permitted to attend a part of the Magnolia reunion this fall, as Sister Ruby was taken down very suddenly with an acute attack of appendicitis. The doctor said an abscess was forming, so we had her administered to right away and she has completely recovered now without an operation, which surely would have been necessary had the Lord not heard and answered our prayers.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that we may ever be found doing what is required of us, and to God be the praise. I am,

Your sister in the faith,

MISS EDNA AMUNDSON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 18, 1912.

Editors Herald: Will you please make the following corrections in my article in HERALD of the 16th inst., entitled "The Order of Enoch."

On page 997, first column, where I state that the order paid $24,000 for the land that they had purchased, it was an error; it should have been $30,000. I was in my mission field when I wrote the article and I wrote as I remembered, but when I returned home and had access to the books of the treasurer, I learned my mistake.

On page 997, second column, the following question is asked, "If the order should be dissolved by its members of the State of Missouri, what would become of the property?" Where the word of occurs it should be or, and read as follows, "dissolved by its members or the State of Missouri."

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

709 SOUTH FULLER AVENUE.

WEISER, IDAHO, September 19, 1912.

Dear Herald: I receive so many good things from your pages and am so thankful for the influence that accompanies the reading that often I am caused to rejoice in my heart to think that I live when God in his wisdom sees fit to talk and communicate by his Spirit to us weak, erring creatures, and especially do I rejoice when we receive instruction by the Spirit telling us how we may live so we may better please our Father in heaven; but when I stop and meditate upon what has already been given, and how slow some of us are in doing his wishes, it seems it is no use to give us more; and how true it is as was given to Brother Luff by the Spirit May 31, 1906, "Once I have spoken. Yea, twice have I declared that the set time to favor Zion has come; but my army is yet not very great, and their weapons many of them are yet carnal." Twice he has spoken and yet their weapons many of them are carnal.

Oh! why is it? I believe it is because we do not realize the necessity of strict compliance with God's word, just the same as our children do not realize the necessity of obedience to our commands; but we punish them in different ways to make them obedient, and our Father will do so to us, and is doing the same by us.

We tell our little ones how much better it would be if they would only obey us without the punishment. Why can not we apply that to ourselves? Repeatedly has the Spirit said, Come out of the world! or words to that effect. "Cease to take pleasures in the world." Oh, why will we just go on so heedlessly? If it were not true that as a people we were taking on too much of the ways of the world, the Spirit would not say these things to us; for the Spirit doesn't speak except along lines that are necessary for instruction, that the people of God may be reminded of their duty and turn from the error of their ways. We feed the temporal body as a rule three times a day, but many times we seem to forget that we have another body to feed that is far more important. When we lay down this physical body, and the spiritual body returns to God who gave it, will it be a poor, little, dwarfed, pale, sickly body? I fear many will do that very thing, and then we will try to justify ourselves and say, "Oh, I can not fast, for I get so hungry and weak," or, "I want to have a little pleasure in this life. I get so tired of just going to church, Sunday school, Religio, and prayer meeting. I must have something to make me forget the cares and disappointments of life." Dear ones, if we would only get really and truly interested in the gospel, we would get far greater satisfaction than we are able to get from the world, for it will give us strength to face the cares and disappointments we meet.

Many say, "I can not keep the Word of Wisdom, for I have used tobacco so long that I just can not quit using it." Others will say anyone can quit tobacco if they will get right in and try and use a little will power. Another will say, "I must have meat in the summer, for then I have to work hard and I must have something to give me strength"; another will say, "I have no trouble doing without tobacco or meat, but I get the headache and I must have a little tea to keep away those awful headaches." Then there is a class that thinks it is awful to use any of those things we have mentioned, and think they keep the Word of Wisdom all right. If we mention fruit out of season, then they put up the same line of argument as the others do, and say a little jelly and preserves are good for winter, as they are heat producing, and what would we have to eat in winter-if we did not put up fruit in the summer for winter? Now, what would these same people say if they had in winter only what they put up in summer, and were deprived of the nice vegetables that God in his wisdom has prepared so they can be kept in their natural state? and not only vegetables, but we have different kinds of fruit that can be kept in their natural condition all winter and until fruit comes again in the early summer. Another argues that if you put them in glass jars so they will not decay that it is not eating fruit out of season. Pray tell me what it means by saying "every fruit in the season thereof." Does it mean for us not to try to keep the peach or strawberry as we do the apple? We all know that we could not do that, without God telling us. Now when would fruit be out of season, if peaches and strawberries are not out of season in midwinter, even if they are sealed in glass jars? Does the sealing of the fruit change the season? Just ask yourself that question. One sister said not long ago, "What else could it mean? but I never thought of the fruit question. I always thought about tea, coffee, meats, and tobacco." You notice they always use self-justification, and the argument is always on the other fellow.

We are told to seek first the kingdom of God and all else will be added unto us. I had always prayed to God to give me light on this question, and about eight months ago Brother John Davis was preaching upon the Word of Wisdom, and when he came to "every fruit in the season thereof," I felt the Spirit in my very being, and the question was asked, "When is fruit out of season if it isn't summer fruit canned and saved until winter?" How would you have answered that question if you had been in my place, and the question been asked of you? You all see how I answered it. Since that time I have been trying to keep that part of the Word of Wisdom, as well as the other, yet I have done it in weakness and have yielded to the appetite sometimes, for I dearly love all kinds of fruit. But by the help of God I hope to so closely keep that which is pleasing in my Master's sight that some time he may see fit to bestow upon me that part of the promise that reads, "shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge; even hidden treasures"; and that the destroying angel shall pass them by, as the children of Israel, and not slay them. God promises his children so much.

Some say, "Well, that isn't a command." I know it isn't; but God says it is pleasing in his sight if we will keep it, and it seems to me that there isn't a command in the Doctrine and Covenants that has so grand a promise in this life for obedience as has the Word of Wisdom; and then, do we always have to be actually commanded in order for us to obey?

The Scripture says, "He that knoweth his Father's will and doeth it not will be beaten with many stripes." If you notice the language, it speaks of "will," not commandments. I do not think it is right to be contentious over such things, but Christ told Peter that when he was converted to strengthen his brethren; that is what I desire to do. I was converted to this latter day work after a hard fight with myself, and as I grasp one principle after another I try to pass it on, that others may enjoy it as I do.

Now that the fruit season is on, and many a weary wife, mother, or sister is worn out over the fruit, I hope that the Spirit of God may accompany this letter, and that it may bring rest to many a weary soul. Let us strive to so live that when we find something we do not understand, the Holy Spirit will lead and open our minds, that we may be able to understand all truth. That is what the Holy Ghost will do for us if we will only permit it to do so.

I pray the time will come when our hearts and lives will be pure before God, and that perfect love may abound, that we may love our brothers and sisters as we should. May God's blessing be with all that are striving to come up higher.

MRS. E. L. MADDEN.

RADVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN, October 11, 1912.

Dear Herald: I have made an effort before to contribute to your columns, but it was never sent out of my possession, yet I feel that I should make another effort to say and show that I appreciate your weekly visit at our home. I can truthfully say that many a time when I have been lonely and discouraged, living out in this western country, that the HERALD has been a source of comfort; and when extremely discouraged there seemed always an article, letter, or words of some nature that was contributed for me. Just three weeks ago, I was thinking if I could only see and hear some of the gifts made manifest, and wondered why they did not occur here in our branch, and why they did not seem to occur in other branches as I had heard spoken of. I asked myself the question, "Am I living as I should, and am I worthy of having the Lord use me as an instrument to bring about such blessings, or to receive them through some one else?" I finally came to the conclusion that I was living the best I knew how under my circumstances, and I only wished some one would be kind enough to tell me wherein I was not doing just as I should; for it seems to me that one can see another's faults quicker than they can see their own, and I would be glad for some one to tell me mine. I would certainly try to overcome what others thought was proving detrimental to me or would prove to be a stumbling block to anyone else. So to change my line of thought, I picked up the last HERALD, and to my surprise it contained all those prophecies given to friends I had known since childhood, and also given by some I had know fully as long. It seemed as if I was there and could even detect the tone of the words expressed, for I had been used to their manner of expression. It was certainly a spiritual feast, and I read it over again, and shed tears of rejoicing, and I felt to thank the Lord for the dear, good HERALD.

To-day while trying to count my blessings I especially thought of one in which my prayers were surely answered hastily. Just Thursday morning of this week, on hearing of Brother Griffiths being in our branch, I felt discouraged, for it seemed as though we would not be able to attend the meeting as appointed for that night, and it was the only night he could be with our branch. It had rained and snowed nearly all one night and that morning still looked stormy, and at the very darkest time of the moon, and with meeting some six or seven miles away, and very poor roads, it seemed everything was against us. Passing through very severe trials this year, and having poor church privileges to what some of the Saints have, I felt almost on the verge of giving up in despair. I felt to kneel and ask the Lord for strength to not yield, and that the way might be opened for us to attend the service. A few minutes after, the brother and our branch president, Brother Williams, rapped at the door, and I soon felt differently, and it seemed God's Holy Spirit was present right along, even after they left. That night we made the effort to go with a ten-month-old baby, and our boy, some eight years old. It was dark before we left, and it seemed sometimes as though we would tip over, but I am thankful we made the effort, and we were amply repaid, for it seemed as though the brother knew just along what lines we needed instruction. He put everything so plainly before us, by using a chart showing the different offenses the Saints of to-day commit against God every day, also against the church and against our brethren and sisters quite often. I could plainly see wherein I did not always do as I should, and I had no time to think of anyone else's faults, mine were so numerous. Words can not express how thankful I was that we had the privilege of hearing such grand instruction. I went forth from that meeting with a more determined effort to live a different life, and to see my words were never idle words, and that whatever did pass my lips would be of some benefit to some one. Some of the little commands God has given may seem of little worth, but if we carelessly neglect keeping them they may culminate in something greater; yes, even to cause us to lose our reward of eternal life. We can not be watchful enough of our conversation, and actions, even among Saints, as well as in the world.

It seems to me that those Saints blessed with such good privileges and having such brethren as can place the gospel plan before them and tell them how they should live their everyday life; that they ought to be nearly perfect.

Our president, Brother Williams, is getting along in years, and has struggled and is struggling under great difficulties in life; and when I think of him, I am ashamed to speak of my being discouraged, for he is meeting trials and disappointments, and yet of a Sunday he is ready to speak to us a few words of instruction to help encourage us. It seems almost like the young should give encouragement to him, and should never get so easily discouraged. I believe that I am safe in saying that to Brother Williams the instruction given by Brother Griffiths proved a spiritual feast, and that it will encourage him to continue to preside over our little branch; and I hope that we as Saints will work accordingly, that we will not bring reproach upon the branch or the church, and will so lighten his burden and so live that he can point to us as a brother or sister, as being faithful in the discharge of our duties along every line of the work.

I am a sister in gospel bonds,

IDA MAE BERGERSEN.

LINEVILLE, IOWA, October 18, 1912.

Editors Herald: I have spent many happy hours reading the HERALD. The letters from the brothers and sisters are very strengthening; just like a visit from some dear friend. My health has improved some, but I still suffer untold misery at times; yet I can say, God's will be done, not mine. I would like to have the prayers of the Saints, that if it is God's will I may be restored to health.

Your sister in Christ,

MARY MOORE.

Dedication at South Tryon.

At eleven o'clock a. m., on September 29, 1912, the Saints met at the church for the purpose of dedicating our house to God. There were a goodly number present; some not of our faith, yet who seemed to enjoy the occasion very much.

Brother C. W. Prettyman offered the dedicatory prayer. Brother Butterworth, of Iowa, preached the sermon. Both were very impressive and edifying. Brother Prettyman had shared all our trials and joys, hard labor not excepted, in building our church, and the Saints were glad that he was permitted to be with us on this occasion. All were pleased to meet Brother Butterworth, and a good many availed themselves of the privilege of getting their blessings. He was very busy all the time he was here, which left him very tired.

Sister Richard, of North Platte, and a young Brother Ballou were with us; also Brother Tibbles came, I think, fifty or more miles by team to be with us. All were blessed together, which made us truly think it was good to be a Saint in latter days.

Central Illinois.

I came to this district last May. I believe this has been one of the busiest years of my ministerial experience, as well as one of the most successful, all things considered. I have labored in Taylorville, Pana, Beardstown, Springfield, Snicarte, and Stonington. Much good has resulted in most of the above places. My first meeting was held in Beardstown; five were baptized there. Then I went to Taylorville, where Brother J. F. Curtis and myself held quite a good meeting, in which twenty precious souls were baptized into the fold of Christ. Later I baptized three more there. In all I have baptized twenty-five myself, which makes about forty baptisms since May for the Central Illinois District. I feel that the work has been moving along nicely.

At present I am associated with our new missionary, Brother R. L. Fulk, who has just recently taken to the field. He has been doing excellent work and will be a good worker in the church if he thus continues. Our district conference convened last Saturday and Sunday with the Pana Branch. A good, spiritual time was had, and all seemed to feel a renewed determination to press onward and upward.

I must not forget to mention that many of the Saints strongly feel the necessity of complying with the financial law as well as the other features of the work. While there are some, perhaps, who can not part with enough of their substance seemingly to square themselves with the Lord, and thereby obtain the promised blessings, there are others who feel it just as necessary to pay tithing as it is to be baptized for the remission of sins. It seems just as apparent to me that the Lord is certainly blessing his children for their willingness along that line to comply with the full law.

Ever praying for the success of the work everywhere, I remain still in the conflict,

J. W. PAXTON.

Since last writing my experience has been varied with some un-missionary work and partial sickness, but we are on the job at present, and whether profitably engaged or not, whether working just like some one else or not, we are working. We are aware that we are in a place that's different, and under different conditions, than many. We are not responsible for all the conditions, but are dealing with them as they exist, and we think we know what they are, or are beginning to, after two dull years. We are trying to make it more interesting, however, for ourselves and the "Mormons," or more strictly speaking, the "Brighamites"; for I do not think Mormon is typed in the dominant people and church here very accurately, but do think Brigham Young was very successful in stamping the people who accepted of his leadership, with his ideas, or those that originated with his brain and personality.

His humanity is accepted, with reference to temples, gathering to these valleys, improvements made, etc., as divinity. Did not Nebuchadnezzar, a heathen autocrat, build great Babylon, and, in the hour of his exaltation, fall? It seems that a great many people are, with one consent, willing worshipers of the image which Brigham Young set up August 29, 1852. Not like that which Nebuchadnezzar set up in the plain of Dura, and required all to bow down unto, but a god nevertheless, "whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol." (Doctrine and Covenants Section 1.)

To wean the worshipers from this idol, or separate them from their choice convictions, is beyond the power of man at least, and almost beyond the power of truth, and the true God. The Lord said of ancient conditions, "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the people love to have it so." When people love to have it so, wrong, untrue, what can be done? So many want it that way; know it's so, that Joseph Smith was in polygamy, and how do they know it's so? Because some one told them so: that some one a particeps criminis. There is a superabundance of this kind of testimony. One man whom I conversed with knew that Joseph Smith was in polygamy; could take me to a living witness. I went with him to see the lady, eighty-two years of age, a polygamous wife herself, married into this relation in 1845, by Orson Hyde. Those who brought about the interview wanted her to remember that it was a little farther back, in the lifetime of the Prophet. She could not accommodate them. She was rather young, fifteen years old, to be married in 1845. She could not put it further back, because it was not. They wanted her to remember that endowments were given in the temple at Nauvoo, before the death of the Prophet. She held to it that there were none given to her knowledge until after his death. She testified that Emma Smith was a grand and noble woman. Her most definite reason, or particular knowledge that Joseph Smith was in polygamy, was derived from the Partridge girls, who told her so.

She could not say that she was told of it before his death; did not know whether it was before his death or after. She spoke of her father marrying wives, after the death of Joseph Smith, and I asked if polygamy was taught before his death, publicly or privately. Here answer was, "No, there was nothing known of it before his death, to my knowledge."

She did not know of any children by the wives of Joseph Smith, or those who claimed to be his wives. I do not give the interview, entire, but so far as I have given it, it is correct, and the lady, Mrs. Marilla Daniels, so stated, after I had read it over as I took it down. I have been cited to other witnesses, whose testimony is no stronger in favor of the divinity of polygamy than is that of Mrs. Daniels. It is assumed here, of course, that to trace the practice back to Joseph Smith, is to certify or insure its divinity as a principle. Brigham Young did better [worse],—traced it to Adam (God) coming into the Garden of Eden with one of his wives, and helping to make and organize the world. So Brigham Young wanted the people to have nothing to do with any other God than this polygamous God. The principle, if not Adam, seems to be still worshiped, an idol enshrined in many hearts, and the temples of Utah are devoted to its worship, so far as is practicable; marriages, if not plural, being for time and eternity, in force after the resurrection, when "they shall pass by the angels and the gods which are set there to their exaltation and glory in all things, as it hath been sealed upon their heads, which glory shall be a fullness and a continuation of the seeds for ever and ever." (Utah Doctrine and Covenants.) "How is the gold become dim! How is the most fine gold changed!"—Lamentations 4: 1. When all is considered in connection with the so-called revelation on the eternity of the marriage covenant, including the plurality of wives, what a transition from the doctrine and practice of the church, organized and established agreeable to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God," April 6, 1830, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, jr.! Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1, Lamoni edition; 20: 1, Utah edition. Again, "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away" (or apostatize). Yes; I am an apostate, if to turn away from such as is advertised here, is apostasy. I read a large canvas sign to-day, of a recent event, which is illustrative. The sign is:

"ROUSING MISSIONARY BALL

"Orpheus Orchestra

"Given under the direction of the Fourth Ward Missionary Committee; admission, 35 cents per couple; 10 cents for extra lady. To begin in this hall Friday night, September 6."

I am forcing my acquaintance and doctrine upon as many of these good people (good, many of them in many ways, but not good according to the perfect standard, which we should all recognize and endeavor to conform to) as is possible, by street preaching, by house to house visitation, tracting, etc. In company with my wife, I am enabled to meet many in their homes when I could not otherwise, so have arranged for less housekeeping and more missionary work. Where under different arrangements I could not profitably put in all of my time, I am now happy in being busy, and time the most precious asset. I never disliked street work in the East, but it has been a hard job to nerve myself to it in Provo; not many in any one place on the long main street any night but Saturday night, and though we get some crowds that night, there is usually much confusion. We are in the fight though, and the timidity is worn off in reference to this kind of work, and the frost has not yet frozen us out or stopped us.

We cheerfully accord the palm to Brother A. M. Chase, however, for handling the "differences" on the street, especially the questioners. The conditions are much better for audiences and this kind of work in Salt Lake City than here. Our choir is conspicuous by its absence.

I will say in conclusion, that I am not so much in love with Utah that I am unwilling that another should take my place after next General Conference, nor so much disgusted and discouraged that I have a disposition to quit prematurely. Having adjusted myself to the conditions, I propose to fight it through, whether it shall be a winning or a losing fight. I have the best of feelings towards those who differ from us here, however they regard us and our contention for principle. May the Lord bless them and help them to see the truth as it is in Christ and the restored gospel, is my prayer; and I would ask the prayers of all Saints in their behalf. "The fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much."

Truly yours,

M. F. GOWELL.

PROVO, UTAH, 210 West Fourth South Street, October 16.

We are still alive out here and occasionally getting the work before the people in a way that attracts the attention of those who are looking for the truth. The weather was so inclement during the October conference of the Mormon Church here that our street services were hindered somewhat, but we have fine weather again now, and are not idle.

We have a sad event to chronicle in this letter, the death of Brother Leonard Condit, of Malta, Idaho, in this city, October 8, 1912. We were born in the same county in Iowa, and our earliest recollection is of the time when our families lived at Pleasant Grove, near Little Sioux, on opposite ends of a forty-acre tract of land, both being engaged in the lumber mill business. The father of this brother, Silas W. Condit, with my father, Amos S. Chase, were among the first settlers of Harrison County, Iowa, and it is claimed that Leonard Condit was the first male white child born in that county. Both, with their families, were among the early members of the Reorganization, identified with the Little Sioux Branch. These men, as elders of the Latter Day Saint Church, came from Nauvoo to Kanesville on their way to a place of rest in the West, as they were told by the leaders, but both saw good reasons for severing their connection with the body of people led by Brigham Young, and when the message of the Reorganization reached them they were ready to obey the call. [See obituary in another column.]

We went to Idaho last Friday and returned yesterday to this point in time for our midweek prayer meeting; and, though that event is not so largely attended as we would wish, there being from ten to twenty in attendance usually, there is one element in it that makes us enjoy it very much, and that is that young and old, usually all, take part in the service, either in prayer or testimony, and often in both, as well as the service of song.

Ever praying for the day of Zion's redemption, and working to that same end, I am, sincerely,

A. M. CHASE.

FIRST BRANCH.

"My times are in thy hand: my God, I wish them there; my life, my friends, my soul, I leave entirely to thy care."

This expresses at once our implicit faith and confidence in God, and the tenderest possible feeling we have toward our loved ones here in this city, on whom the hand of affliction rests—oh! so heavily.

We were moved to call a special prayer meeting on last Monday evening in behalf of Sister Edna Fairbanks, who is sorely afflicted with typhoid fever. The condition she is in is the result of a call to duty, and surely her sacrifice will be rewarded. Deeds of this character stand out in as bold relief as the diamond studded stars in the firmament; they are indeed sweet incense before His throne. Our sister has been very, very low, but at this writing we are pleased to report that she is gaining ground.

We also deeply regret to announce that our beloved brother, David Dowker, our missionary, has been very sick during the past week. The writer called on him to-night and takes great pleasure in stating that he has improved considerably. David told us that his mother, who is staying with him, was also very sick last night. His father is also visiting with him.

There was still another case of affliction in the person of little Alma Keown, son of Brother and Sister Charles Keown.

Notwithstanding the numerous severe cases we have had recently, no losses have resulted; thanks to our heavenly Father. The prayers of all are earnestly solicited in behalf of our sick members, that our heavenly Father may continue to bless them.

We had our usual Sunday school session in the school building, and the meeting was well attended. Following this session we held our regular service, which was in charge of our pastor. The speaker was Brother Joshua Hackett, and he used for his text, "Have faith in God."

At 3.30 p. m. quite an interesting proposition was discussed at the South Side Church. We organized the Good Samaritan League, its object being to provide a sick benefit for its members amounting to $7.00 per week, and contributing toward the support of urgent cases of poverty. The dues are twenty-five cents per month. We expect to obtain a membership of one hundred of our local people.

In reference to our church, we might state that the work is progressing very favorably, and we feel quite sure of being able to have a good Thanksgiving supper there. Yum! yum!

The Religio continues to hold its cottage meetings with good effect.

Our pastor, Brother James Keir, is actively pushing the visiting work, from which we expect very good results.

As I am the branch historian, I thought it my duty to let the readers of the HERALD have a little news of Scranton. The writer has been at this place eight years next November, and the work has grown much in that time. We then met in Tinley's Hall and held one meeting and Sunday school. We then used one Quarterly, senior grade. We now have seven classes and use forty senior, several intermediate, and one second primary.

The school at present is in a fair condition, considering the circumstances, as we meet in a tent, and this season we had a full supply of rain. On one fatal Lord's day the tent blew down and it was a queer sight to see the elders, priests, and members working with their might to get the tent up again. We have had good meetings in the tent and the Lord has been with us.

Daily vacation bible school started in the tent on July 15, 1912, under the supervision of Elder T. U. Thomas, principal; Sister Alice Morris, leader of the girls; Sister Margaret Lewis in charge of the kindergarten; Brother A. D. Angus, registrar; with the following staff of noble teachers: Sisters Wesson, Lot Bishop, Lilly Bishop, Frank Evans, William Evans, Lewis, Watkins, Hawkins, James, Tassie, Myers, and Mrs. Jones. The meetings of the school continued until August 13, when we held our commencement exercises. There were three hundred and nineteen children enrolled. The commencement exercises were a great success. The work of the children, displayed in a tent, really looked nice. There were baskets, hammocks, and fancy work. On the program there were singing, reciting, and short talks by the principal and registrar. The tent was crowded, and the writer is pleased to say that our church has the honor of holding the first vacation bible school at Scranton. We presume others will follow next summer.

While Brother Thomas was principal of the said vacation school in turn with Brother Angus and preaching in the evenings, there were some who became interested, and on August 11 there were three baptized by Elder Thomas at Lake Lencon. This is a beautiful lake used by the public for bathing.

On August 22 the Sunday school held their picnic at Naug Aug Park. A large number were in attendance. The children were regaled with ice cream and lemonade, and there were various races, and suitable presents were given to the boys and girls. All enjoyed themselves. The writer is superintendent of the school, assisted by David James.

At the picnic I met Brother Lentell, who is laboring as a missionary. He preached in the gospel tent, and his sermons were inspiring and spiritual. Long may he live to preach Christ's glorious gospel.

On Sunday, September 29, if all is well, the water will be troubled again at the park. A lady who lives close by our home is to be baptized, and I believe she will make a real good Latter Day Saint.

On the day of the picnic Brother Thomas baptized one young man, one of the converts of the Green Ridge Sunday school. We have a Sunday school there, about two miles from Scranton. Brother Lentell is laboring there this week. We hope good will ensue. They have a pleasant hall and if all will work together many honest will likely be reached.

We have a building committee chosen and intend to raise a house to the glory of God, as the hall we now meet in is too small.

The Saints here are making a sacrifice of one day's work per month towards the new church (and missionary.) The committee collected about one hundred dollars last week. In behalf of the committee, I ask anyone who feels to give a donation towards our building fund to remit the same to Mrs. Alice Morris, 32 Archibald Street, West Scranton, Pennsylvania. We will feel grateful for any help given, and hope to commence to build in a few weeks.

Brother Thomas, the missionary, is branch president, and we hope all will rally around the banner of King Immanuel and do their parts by prayer, faith, and works.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

L. BISHOP.

Stratford Branch asked for the next conference, which was granted, and the time set for second Saturday and Sunday in October, 1913. Delegates to the General Conference elected as follows: J. McKenzie, F. A. Smith, R. C. Evans, J. Shields, William Davis, G. C. Tomlinson, G. Henley, R. C. Longhurst, William Fligg, J. L. Burger, J. Judkins. Motion prevailed that Sister Vanleave be required to give an account of the money she had collected on the tent. The motion of June, 1912, regarding the purchase of tent for Saints in Mobile was rescinded and the tent committee of this district was authorized to confer with the tent committee of the Alabama District with a view to purchasing a tent for use in both districts, and was given power to act. Michigan Priests.

There will be a meeting of the Ninth Quorum of Priests at Flint, Michigan, November 9, 1912, at which we invite all the brethren holding the office to be present. There are about twenty-four names on our record, and we need twenty-four more to make a full quorum. To this end we invite every priest in the district to unite with us. We feel sure that all are anxious for the success of the quorum, and therefore look for the hearty cooperation of all. There are some very important business items to be taken up at this meeting. We hope you will make an effort to be present. We also trust at this meeting that plans may be formulated and work arranged for that will make it interesting and profitable. Brethren, let us determine to make the Ninth Quorum of Priests a live institution in church work. Ray D. Bennett, secretary-treasurer, 723 Mount Elliott Avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

Died.

BOGUE.—Kressie Addien, born August 21, 1890; baptized August, 1901; died October 2, 1912, at the home of her parents, Joseph and Jennie Bogue, near Decatur City, Decatur County, Iowa, leaving parents, three sisters, and three brothers, and many other relatives to mourn. Funeral at the home October 3, Elder A. S. Cochran in charge, sermon by Eli Hayer. Buried at Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni, Iowa. Prayer at the grave by Columbus Scott.

THOMAS.—William M. Thomas was born at Malad, Idaho, June 30, 1868; was married to Levina Daniels in December, 1900. To this union were born four children, one boy and three girls. About three years ago he was hurt in an accident, his wagon breaking through a cement bridge which he was graveling, and he with the team and wagon were precipitated into the creek below. This injured his back, and from this came his malady, diabetes, from which he died October 17, 1912. Two brothers and three sisters survive him. The funeral was held at the Malad Opera House, the Woodmen of Malad acting as pall bearers, and John Vanderwood and A. M. Chase each speaking, while the Chase family, assisted by Pearle Wardle, furnished the music. He died in the hope of the gospel.

STOWELL.—Myrtle Ellen, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Stowell, of Flasher, North Dakota, was born September 22, 1912, and died October 6, 1912. A blood vessel bursted, and inflammation of the bowels caused her death. Reverend Farr, of the Congregational Church, offered prayer, and a hymn was sung at the cemetery. She is missed by those that mourn, but we hope to meet her in a more perfect condition, where parting shall be no more.

SEELEY.—Sister Dora Coffman was born near Magnolia, Iowa, July 5, 1869; united with the Reorganized Church October 12, 1884. Married to Henry Ballantyne June 7, 1890. To this union five children were born, four boys and one girl. On August 20, 1904, her first husband died. She was married to N. A. Seeley January 16, 1906. One little boy was born to bless their home. She was a true Saint of God. She died October 19, 1912, leaving a husband and eight children, six boys and two girls, three brothers, one sister, and many friends. Funeral in charge of Elder J. W. Wight, sermon by Elder W. A. Smith, in the Moorhead church, Moorhead, Iowa.

SHOTTON.—Sister Leah Shotton, wife of Brother John Shotton, was born at Fayette, Pennsylvania, March 15, 1872, and died October 17, 1912, following an operation for a cancer. She was baptized by J. F. McDowell February 22, 1900. She is survived by her husband and six small children. The funeral sermon was preached by J. W. Paxton, assisted by Frank Izatt. The Saints in this district keenly feel the loss of our dear sister. We feel she has as Paul said, "fought a good fight, finished her course, kept the faith, and has gone to receive her crown of righteousness."

CONDIT.—Brother Leonard Condit, said to be the first white child born in Harrison County, Iowa, died at Salt Lake City, October 8, 1912. Was married in 1869 to Mary C. Hawley. In 1882 moved to Idaho, where he remained until 1910, where on account of his health he went to the coast. He served as county commissioner of Cassia County, Idaho, being elected the last time without making a campaign, and was elected by a large majority. A large funeral was held at Malta. He leaves wife and seven children, Leon, Herbert, James, Arthur, and Pearl, all married, and Irene and Fred at home. Sermon by Elder A. M. Chase.

HOUGAS.—Daniel Hougas was born December 20, 1839, near Mission, LaSalle County, Illinois. He was left an orphan at a very early age; was married to Mary E. McClenahan, who survives him, October 17, 1857. To them have been born two sons and two daughters: Almon D., who died in 1886; Thomas A., of Henderson, Iowa; Blanche I. Andrews, of Lincoln, Nebraska; and Bertha E. Pitt, of Independence, Missouri. He was baptized on May 29, 1868, and on the same day was ordained an elder and elected president of the Farm Creek Branch, which position he held for about thirty-five years, when advancing years and absence from the branch made it necessary that he be released from the responsibility. Daniel Hougas was a charter member of the First Quorum of Elders of the Reorganized Church, and remained a member to his death. He died at Henderson, Iowa, Monday afternoon, October 7, 1912, at the age of 72 years, 9 months, and 17 days. Funeral sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith, at Farm Creek church, October 9, 1912.

GRIM.—At Canton, Illinois, September 28, 1912, Sister Elizabeth A. Grim. She was born at Salt Lake City, Utah, March 1, 1858; married to Ephraim W. Grim in 1870, by whom she was the mother of five children, three of whom survive her. She was baptized at Canton, Illinois, June 24, 1877, and was ever after a faithful member of the church. Funeral sermon at the residence, Canton, Illinois, September 30, 1912, by Elder Heman C. Smith. Brother Grim has lost a noble wife, and the Canton Branch one of its staunchest members.

DAVIS.—Mary Davis passed away October 12, 1912, from her home in Oakland, California, at the ripe age of 82 years, 6 months, 14 days. She was born in Wales, where she was baptized in 1844 and was received on her original baptism by the Oakland Branch. She came to America in 1854, and to California in 1863. She was firm in the faith of the angel message. She leaves one brother, one sister, eight children, eleven grandchildren, and thirteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the house, and her remains were taken to Forest Hill, Placer County, for interment, where rests her husband who preceded her eleven years. Sermon by Elder J. M. Terry to a large gathering of friends and relatives.

The resurrection hope is a glorious hope. It has brought eternal life, robbed death of its sting and the grave of its victory. Hallelujah! Jesus lives and we shall never die.—
D. F. Richter.

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

- (1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.
- (2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.
- (3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.
- (4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

Got Your Homestead Yet?

Everybody entitled to a homestead wants one, of course, but until the recent law was passed, a homesteader was required to live continuously on the land for five years before the Government would turn it over to him to be his very own. Now it is altogether different, and irrigated farms in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming and Yellowstone Valley of Montana, Mondell 320-acre free homesteads in Wyoming and 640-acre unirrigated free Kinkaid homesteads in Nebraska, can be taken up on a new and liberal plan. You can prove up and get title in three years' time, and will be permitted to leave your homestead five months each year, so that you can go home and earn money with which to buy stock and get your homestead farm going. This is very important and opens up a splendid opportunity to men, young and old, to get well fixed.

Write me what kind of land you are interested in, and I will write you all about the new law and the lands that the Government will grant you.

You can buy a railroad ticket from Omaha to Thermopolis and return for $32.50—proportionate rates from other points, on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, good for 25 days. You can see the 640-acre homesteads in Nebraska, the Mondell lands in Wyoming, the Yellowstone Valley lands at Huntley and Billings, Montana, the irrigated lands in the Big Horn Basin and spend a few days at Thermopolis, where the benefits to be derived from the waters of the Hot Springs are wonderful. Think what a grand trip this would be!

Perhaps you could arrange to go with me on one of the above excursions, or know some one who would like to go.

I have no land for sale—the Burlington merely employs me to give information and assist anyone interested in this wonderful country, without charge. Let me know from what point you will start and on what date you wish to go. I will send you information about the lands and tell you just how and where to meet me in Omaha. D. Clem Deaver, Immigration Agent, Burlington Route, 336 Q Building, Omaha, Nebraska.

THE GATHERING.—PART I.

CONSIDERED HISTORICALLY.

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!—The words of Jesus.

The gathering is a subject that has been ignored by modern theology. We know not where one would go to hear a sermon on the subject excepting from a Latter Day Saint pulpit, or read an editorial dealing with it excepting in a Latter Day Saint publication.

Yet the gathering together of God's people out of the world into communities in which they might cooperate with each other and serve God and receive his blessing was a prominent part of divine theology, and God's efforts along that line appear very prominently in biblical history.

The gathering is written large from Genesis to Revelation.

Strange that it should be so ignored.

ENOCH GATHERED THE PEOPLE.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was a man who walked and talked with God. In the King James version of the Bible the record of his life is given very briefly in the fifth chapter of Genesis. Yet enough is written to show that he was a great man and arrived at such a degree of perfection that God took him to himself.

Jewish traditions indicate that the Inspired Version of the Bible is justified in giving considerable attention to Enoch. In A Dictionary of the Bible, published by Charles Scribners' Sons, edited by James Hastings, M. A., D. D., volume 1, R. M. Boyd has this to say: "In Jewish tradition many fabulous legends gathered around Enoch. He was represented as the inventor of letters, arithmetic, and astronomy, and as the first author. A book containing his visions and prophecies was said to have been preserved by Noah in the ark, and handed down through successive generations."

In the Inspired Version (Genesis 7) a more extended account is given, from which we learn that

Enoch gathered the people of God and built a city that was called the "City of holiness, even Zion." And we read the significant statement that the people were of one heart and of one mind and dwelt in righteousness, and there were no poor among them. God took this people from the earth; but the promise was made to Enoch that in the last days God would cause righteousness and truth to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out the elect from the four quarters of the earth to a place prepared for them, even Zion, a New Jerusalem, and that this people shall receive Enoch and his people, and the two shall rejoice together on the earth during a thousand years. Truly may we who know this record sing:

"Glorious things are sung of Zion, Enoch's city seen of old, Where the righteous, being perfect, walked with God in streets of gold."

UNDER NOAH, ABRAHAM, AND MOSES.

After the great flood which swept the wicked from the earth, there was a period of time when "the whole earth was of one language, and of one speech" (Genesis 11:1); but after the dispersion at the Tower of Babel the Lord confounded the language of the people, "and from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of all the land." But the time is coming, the Lord says, when "I will turn unto the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." (Zephaniah 3:9.) In that day he says, "From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliant, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering." (Ibid., 3:10.) The priesthood in that day will be found on this side of the rivers of Ethiopia, among the descendants of the dispersed of Israel, of whose dispersion we shall presently read.

In due time the Lord again began the work of gathering. He selected Abraham and his posterity to be a covenant people, not because he wished to be partial and make them his favorites, but that through them he might work and bless all nations, as he expressly stated. He promised to give Abraham a choice land, the land of Canaan. But before the promise was fulfilled the children of Abraham were for a long time in captivity, in Egypt, for a period of four hundred and thirty years (Exodus 12: 41), and became a very numerous people. God finally set his hand to deliver his people through his servant Moses, to whom he said: "I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey."—Exodus 3: 8.

The story of the exodus and the finally successful advent into the promised land is well known to bible students. God in this case was acting upon a well-defined policy of assembling his followers as much as was possible in one locality, where they could be independent of other peoples, and free to help each other and serve their God according to his law, and receive his blessings according to the promises.

The greatest periods of Israelitish history followed,—the glorious periods of divinely appointed and inspired judges, kings, prophets, and priests, and of material and spiritual, religious and literary development. But there were also times of disunion and disobedience, wickedness and apostasy.

Such is the universal history of God's people—ebb and flow, gathering and scattering, until the final victory shall be won and permanency obtain. Shalmanezar carried away the ten tribes; and later Nebuchadnezzar descended upon Jerusalem and carried the Jews captive into Babylon, leaving their city in ruins.

AFTER THE CAPTIVITY.

For a time it must have appeared to the skeptical that God had forgotten his purpose or failed to secure its accomplishment. But not so. At the end of approximately seventy years he moved upon Cyrus, king of Persia, who in the meantime had overthrown Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom, and this proclamation gladdened the eyes of the people:

Thus saith Cyrus, king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem.—Ezra 1: 2, 3.

Then began the return of the men of Judah and Benjamin to Jerusalem, under Zerubbabel and Nehemiah, and somewhat later, Ezra; and in course of time under these leaders the temple was again erected, and the city walls rebuilt, and the city restored. And chiefly through the inspired leadership of Ezra, a great religious revival was brought about with a higher ideal of morality and justice.

This condition was not to last, however. For before the coming of Jesus another relapse took place. And after the rejection of the Savior the Jews were again scattered. But God has affirmed his intention concerning them to again gather them from the four corners of the earth and to assemble again the outcasts of Israel. That gathering is now, in fact, in a sense, in progress, for many thousands of Jews have returned to Jerusalem during the past half century.

JESUS TEACHES THE GATHERING.

When Jesus came he reaffirmed the old principle of gathering, and declared: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."—Matthew 23: 37, 38.

The apostles and followers of Jesus responded to the call that the nation had rejected, and began to assemble themselves and get together "with one accord in one place," and "all that believed were together, and had all things common." (See Acts 2:1; 2: 44.) This was the flow of the tide, and the church in Jerusalem gave the world a concrete example of unity, piety, faith, practical Christianity, temporal equality, and social and economic justice, that is a beacon light to humanity, inviting men to consider that which was and again shall be.

The ebb came presently: "And at that time there was great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles."—Acts 8: 1.

IN THESE LAST DAYS.

With the restoration of the gospel in these last days, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, and the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the principle of gathering was again asserted. In a revelation given in January, 1831, the Saints were told: "And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I give unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law; and there you shall be endowed with power from on high."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7.

Accordingly the Saints began without delay to assemble at Kirtland, and in due time a temple was erected and the law was given, and Jesus appeared in the temple, and many wonderful things occurred. But this was not to be the permanent place of gathering.

In a revelation given in July, 1831, Missouri was designated as the place of gathering, the land of promise, with Independence as the center place and the city wheré the temple should be built, the city of Zion.

Accordingly on August 2, 1831, this land was formally dedicated and consecrated as the gathering place of the Saints. This was a reaffirmation of the old principle of gathering, practiced by Enoch, carried forward under Moses and Joshua, Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Jesus, and the apostles, and which will reach a happy culmination when the returning hosts of Enoch shall be greeted by the redeemed Saints in the New Jerusalem that is to be built up on earth in the last days.

The church has been criticized because it has held to and practiced this principle; but had it not done so it would not have been the church of Jesus Christ, and would have been out of harmony with God's plan of operation in all the ages past.

History repeats itself. The gathering in Missouri was not to be fully accomplished without delay and vicissitude. In 1833 began persecutions, resulting from mutual misunderstanding, that included the destruction of the publishing house of the church by a mob of citizens, the tarring and feathering of certain leading church members, the imprisonment of others, the murder of men, women, and little children, and the expulsion of the church from Independence and later from the State of Missouri—a dark and bloody chapter which we will not scan afresh.

THE RETURN.

For many years thereafter it again appeared to the skeptical that the plans of God had been frustrated. But he had said: "Let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

This promise was not forgotten. Those who attended the late General Conference in Independence were impressed with the fact that it is being fulfilled, as they saw the multitudes assembling on the Sabbath day, as well as on other days, and heard their songs of rejoicing welling up toward heaven. Truly those who remained and were faithful are gathering back, they and their children, with songs of joy.

By their lives the church people have made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in Missouri, where formerly it was abhorred. The Reorganized Church has done this. Here where at one time the Saints were given fifteen minutes in which to close up their business and get out of town, they were welcomed and honored. Two members of the First Presidency, one member of the Presiding Bishopric, four members of the Twelve, and many other leading church members dwell in peace and are honored and trusted. Certain of them are members of the city council, others have been chosen to other positions of trust and honor.

A little incident that occurred during the conference illustrated the changed sentiment. We refer to the invitation sent in to the conference on a certain day by the Commercial Club, inviting the conference to adjourn and in a body attend the services on merchants' day, when the governor of Missouri was to be the chief speaker.

From our brief historical examination it is evident that during long periods of the world's history the gathering has had an important place in God's policy. There was a place of gathering with the people of Enoch in the "city of holiness" for a period of 365 years. There was a recognized place of gathering from Abraham until Christ, a period of something less than two thousand years. Jesus taught the gathering: and the members of the apostolic church made old Jerusalem their gathering place for a period of time variously stated at from three to six years. And finally the recognized place of gathering for the people of God, in this age, since 1831, has been Independence, Missouri, with other localities in "the regions round about."

In our next number we will consider the basic reasonableness of the principle, from a scientific, religious, and philosophic standpoint, together with its doctrinal values.

A NEW BOOK FOR OUR BOYS.

It is none too soon to begin thinking about Christmas and what shall I give my boy? We have just issued from our publishing house a neatly bound volume—the ninth in our Birth Offering Series—entitled, His First Venture and the Sequel. This attractive and beautifully illustrated volume is from the pen of our talented young sister, Estella Wight, managing editor of Zion's Hope, and is in every respect a volume worthy a place in your home library. It can not fail to interest your boy and hold his attention from the first page to the last. And best of all, while doing this, it will impart to him lessons of that wisdom which comes from the observing eye and the sympathetic heart. The writer had brothers of her own, whom she loved tenderly. They passed on before to that better (and we fully believe) more active life. But her loss only intensifies her deep interest in the brothers of other girls. She fully realizes they need all the love, all the watchcare and help which can be given them that they may escape the many, many allurements which entice, and the pitfalls dug for the feet of unsuspecting youth. The father or mother who selects this book as a Christmas gift for their boy will make no mistake, and the Sunday school library can not afford to be without a copy. Order number 246a, cloth, 50 cents.

The Better Way.

I had sought for many pleasures in the whirling scenes of life,
From the hurry and the scurry of the city's awful strife;
From the glitter and the glory of the broad and splendid way;
From the night's cool, starlit glitter, to the bright and shining day.

I had searched in all the highways, all the byways, in the dark,
I had felt the flame of passion kindled from the glowing spark,
But the sweet was tinged with bitter, and an ache was left behind;

Now I walk the streets with gladness, and above the city's roar

I can hear a voice of sweetness and behold an open door,
Leading into fields of virtue, sweet and pure, and love divine,
Shedding forth its quiet graces helping me to love my kind.
For, I heard the voice of Jesus, clear and true, with high ideals,

And unto my better nature, sending forth its high appeals.
Then I yielded, God I thank thee, that I yielded unto thee,
And I've found the key of pleasure, and a glorious light I see.

G. WELLINGTON ROBLEY.

Fame.

Alas! what boots it with incessant care
To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade,
And strictly meditate the thankless muse?
Were it not better done, as others use,
To sport with amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Nexaera's hair?
Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
(That last infirmity of noble mind)
To scorn delights and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the praise," Phoebus replied, and touched my trembling ears;
Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glittering foil
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumor lies,
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
As he pronounces lastly on each deed.
"Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."

—Milton "Lycidas."

The Fading.

Do not look at the fading flowers.
They are turned away, are dropped on the stem,
And they would not be found of the glittering Hours—
The beauty-mad, merciless, searching Hours
That all things stricken pursue and condemn!
Do not look at the fading flowers—
They would that you pass—that you look not at them.
Do not look at the fading flowers.
I have looked, as a child, and have wept,
Seeing at morn the frail fallen showers
Of the deep-petaled rose—the pale drifted showers
Of Yesterday's rose that had failed while I slept.
And I looked no more at the fading flowers,
But past their dim death-beds softly I stepped.
Do not look at the fading flowers.

They are shut to the dew, they are blind to the sun:
They have their day (as we have ours),
And their long night after (as we have ours);
They had our love, our pity would shun.
Do not look at the fading flowers,

Lest you see that their fate and yours is but one.

—Edith M. Thomas, in Harper's Weekly.

Heart of Autumn.

I leave these woods to Autumn's ancient flame:
The beryl-hearted lake; its bending frame
Of willowed, rush-bound shore; the shadowed road
Where yesterday the crimson sumac glowed;
Dull goldenrod aswing beyond the wall
Where thrills the lone cicada's haunting call;
Far hills that lean against unclouded skies,
Whence drop low winds to wander languidwise;
Leaf-latticed lanes where once you stood apart:
This do I leave, but—I have kept your heart.

—Gardner Weeks Wood, in Harper's Weekly.

The Paradox of Time.

Time goes, you say? Ah, no!
Alas! Time stays, we go;
Or else were this not so,
What need to chain the hours,
For youth were always ours?
Time goes, you say?—ah, no!

Ours is the eye's deceit,
Of men whose flying feet
Lead through some landscape low;
We pass, and think we see,
The earth's fixed surface flee—
Alas! Time stays—we go!

Once, in the days of old
Your locks were curling gold,
And mine had shamed the crow,
Now in the self-same stage
We've reached the silver age;
Time goes, you say?—ah, no!

Once, when my voice was strong,
I filled the woods with song
To praise your "rose" and "snow";
My bird that sang is dead;
Where are your roses fled?
Alas! Time stays!—we go!

See in what traversed ways
What backward Fate delays
The hopes we used to know;
Where are our old desires?—
Ah, where these vanished fires?—
Time goes, you say?—ah, no!

How far, how far, O Sweet!
The pass behind our feet
Lies in the even-glow!
Now, on the forward way,
Let us fold hands and pray;
Alas! Time stays—we go!—Austin Dobson.

ARE YOU A CHRISTIAN?

Are you? Am I? There are many requirements that to be a Christian we must observe, but we will examine just three of these. A Christian must WORSHIP GOD, must HAVE FAITH IN GOD, and must SERVE GOD.

None of these essentials to the life of a Christian is an honor personally to the humble, loving Christ. He came not seeking his own but stood only for God and humanity, and so must we if we would be a follower of the Meek and Lowly. We must be strong for the Father and his world; so let us examine these requirements, each in its turn. First we must

WORSHIP GOD.

I believe if this one command were taken alone that we each and all who read this could truthfully say, "Yes; I am a Christian," for I think we all do worship God, and that we love to do so. We know the great and mighty being that he is; that he holds our destinies in his hands; that he created us; that he is omnipotent, omnipresent, and omniscient; so we worship him continually. We build houses in which we meet together to speak of his goodness and mercy, and to sing his praises. So I believe we do all of us keep the first of these requirements pretty faithfully.

Next, we must

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

This is not so easy. Suppose you are lying on a bed of affliction, with God on one side and a physician on the other; suppose the "mills of the gods grind slowly" in your case, and the physician offers prompt action; suppose your friends are all calling you several different kinds of a fool if you do not let the physician do his work; that your temperament is peculiarly active, and inaction is very hard for you to bear; that you are in pain, and the Lord is probably giving you a lesson in patience. Have you faith sufficient to trust him then? Try it next time, see how happy you are when your faith holds out; but it is hard.

We are led to believe that the good will be rewarded for their deeds and when we do some act of kindness we expect the reward to follow right on the heels of the deed; but instead our faith and patience are put to the test, and it may be that the one we were kind to has returned us evil for good. Can we have faith at a time like this to believe that God will reward the good in us? Can we trust on and do right, even if the bread cast on the waters is long in returning? Yes; it is harder to have faith in, than to praise God; but to be a true Christian we must do this and we must also and keep his commandments. You see this is a fourth requirement—keep his commandments—but we will not dwell on that; I only wanted to get the two untangled. You have gotten it mixed with serving God until you imagine they are both the same, when there is really a vast difference between them.

Suppose a clerk was told by her master that she must wear a black dress and white apron, must keep herself clean and her language pure; and suppose she keeps all these commandments, but does none of her master's work. I wonder how long she would keep her place! Not long you will say; and neither will we hold our job as a Christian unless we serve our Master (do his work), no matter how clean and pure we keep ourselves. We must fall in line with Christ and SERVE.

The young man who wanted to know what he must do to have eternal life was told to keep the commandments; but he said, "I have kept them from my youth." "Then," says Christ, "sell what thou hast and give to the poor." In other words, "serve humanity." Ah, that is the hard part. It is easy to keep the commandments; but rather than serve he goes away sorrowing.

To serve God we must help with his one great plan, which is the salvation of the race. This plan was organized before the foundation of the world, and while he was planning how he would save man from the fall our Saviour offered his first prayer for humanity. "Father, send me, and I will save whosoever will, and the glory be thine for ever." More of Christ's meekness. How I love this splendid brother of mine! I love his meekness: "the glory be thine." His forbearance: "If any hear my word and believe it not, I judge him not. I came not to judge the world but to save the world." Note the oneness between this Father and Son. "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." So to be a follower of Christ we must try to rescue and seek and save, and when any will not believe we must not get together and judge or slander them, for our Master came not for that, and "the servant is not greater than his lord."

I love his kindness: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw men unto me." Do we want to lift all men? "I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." Wouldn't we rather talk repentance to the righteous? They understand us better.

And now let us see if one so lowly and kind can also be firm with his followers.

Listen! "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and be trodden under foot of men." Do you think he really means all that? Of course, being as we think, his disciples, we enjoy the term "salt of the earth"; but he tells us if we lose our power to save we are good only to be trodden under the feet of those we are sent to save. It seems that if we go to sleep on our job we are sent to a lower level than those who know nothing about the job. It sounds like that about "he that knoweth these sayings of mine and doeth them not shall be beaten with many stripes, while he that knoweth them not and doeth them not will be beaten with few stripes."

Now about this "salt of the earth" he says, "But if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted?" There is another thought. What of the earth if we fail. Must it go unsalted, unsaved? or is God still able to supply the deficiency, as he was able in Christ's time to "raise up seed unto Abraham"? Yes; we may be sure our Master means every word he says, and for every one of us who is not in the field there is one there that we know not of.

So, Saints, let us work and lift and save, and when we have done our best, if we find that we have failed to accomplish what we undertook, let us not be ashamed that we tried. "It is better to have tried and failed than never to have tried at all." Our Master did not succeed at all times, but see how he worked and where he worked! Always in the midst of the crowd that needed the words he had to say, no matter about the dangers. He did not expect the lost to seek and find him, although he exhorted them to do so. Men did not seek salvation then, even as they do not seek it now. So Christ himself did the seeking, as well as the ministering.

We have not all the same duties to perform. The preacher, if diligent and very courageous, can do the greatest work that is given to man, that of bringing souls into the kingdom of God, while the young mother is doing the greatest work that can be done by a woman. Hers is a partnership with God to help carry on the work of his creation. Paul speaks of a work peculiar to widows, and hints at something that could be better done by unmarried men, so we can each find a niche that we will fit if we try.

Let us be his "salt of the earth," his "light of the world." So much has been written about this light that we think we understand the application perfectly.

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal till the whole was leavened." And in speaking of leaven, Christ remembers a great danger in the Christian's life; and right here he puts in a warning: "Beware the leaven of the Pharisees." The Pharisees were a religious sect that called themselves neighbors, having considerable of good in their belief, but instead of shedding their light they proudly held themselves aloof from those they might benefit; so their enemies and Jesus called them Pharisees, a Roman word meaning separatists. They looked at the publican from afar off and thanked God they were so much more righteous than he.

"The leaven of the Pharisees" was like leaven a woman would take and put in a dish and set on a high shelf to keep it from contact with the coarser meal. So let us beware of the leaven of the Pharisee; but let us rather be like the good leaven of the kingdom of God. Let us get into the meal and work.

CHILDREN'S HOME.

We are very much encouraged by the result of our late appeal in behalf of the home. Since that time we have received about enough for current expenses, and were it not for the indebtedness incurred before, we would be feeling easy. We discovered from the last financial report of Bishop E. L. Kelley that our liabilities at the time the present board took control were much greater than we supposed.

The spirit of willingness revealed through the many letters we have received gives us hope that we will soon be clear, and in a condition to stay so. The following are extracts from some of the letters received, and are here produced with the hope that others seeing the splendid spirit manifested may follow the example and find it wise to put the home in a position to do its worthy work.

"Your appeal for the Children's Home in the last HERALD was read at the close of our afternoon meeting here yesterday. We received several small donations, which will be sent soon. And I would say, as president of the Kirtland District of the Woman's Auxiliary, I am writing to each of our locals in the district to get to work at once and obtain more regular payers into the Children's Home Fund. They may not have seen the appeal in the HERALD so I will call their attention to it and I assure you that for one I shall do all that I can to raise some money. The thought of you not having enough money to keep the dear, homeless children almost cut my heart in two, and if I could get it or had the means it should never lack. I shall try to stir things up in this district, although we have been working in that line all the time, but we shall try harder now. We have been at work the last week making six comforters, the profits of which were to go to the Children's Home. I expect to go in our district in a short time and I am going to try hard to get regular subscribers to the Children's Home.

"MARY E. GEORGE, Kirtland, Ohio."

"Elder Heman C. Smith: After reading your notice in last week's HERALD, I decided to write Bishop Kelley to send the treasurer of the Children's Home trustees one hundred dollars for me and in my name as my contribution to the fund, for which you are asking help. It is money due me which up to date I had not asked him for.

"SARAH ASKIN, Lyons, Wisconsin."

"I have a little free-will offering for the orphans' home, post office order for $2 which you will find inclosed. It is small, like the widow's mite. I hope I may be able to send more after a while. I saw your name as secretary of the orphans' home and thought I would send this to you.

"MRS. C. E. CARPENDER, Lorain, Ohio.

"Brother Smith: I have written this by dictation of my mother, who is eighty-four years old and sick.

"KITIE MINKLER."

"Have taken liberty to invite 'a hustler' in each branch to invite others to their aid to first make a personal appeal to each member able to assist. Second, to invite outsiders charitably disposed to donate. Third, to have supper, social, or what they choose in public way for Children's Home, to close canvass by Thanksgiving night, send same to me to be forwarded you, and I shall be disappointed if our district does not yield a month's support, if all work. I write to advise you, if for any reason not agreeable to plans of home trustees, and also suggest if each district could simultaneously work this out, it would put the home on "Easy Street," until such time as endowment, legacies, and larger donations would give perpetual fund.

"ALMA M. FYRANDO, Magnolia, Iowa."

"I saw in the HERALD a request for help for the Children's Home. It stated that they could not keep up expenses. I can not assist very much, but will try to send $1.00 every month for a year. Sorry I can not do more.

"ANNA E. FITTEN, Trinidad, Colorado."

"Inclosed please find a money order for one dollar for the Children's Home. We will try to send as much each month after the first of the year; at present we are trying to get our tithing paid up, and we have very little to give otherwise, as we are among the poor and have to pay rent, but hope to be more able to pay to other things after the first of the new year. Please just say from a brother and sister in making report in the papers, as we think it enough if our Father knows we gave this.

"_____, Los Angeles, California."

These are but a few examples of the response from the warm-hearted and generous Saints and friends. We feel much encouraged. It is a real pleasure to work with and for such a people in such a worthy cause. We hope many others will be inspired to act on the foregoing suggestions.

Hopefully,

HEMAN C. SMITH,

And the softer the road the harder it is to travel.

WHO CAN BE SAVED?

I think it will be those who obey the gospel, and no others. I am not a Universalist, as you will see. I shall gather proof from the Bible and the Book of Mormon, principally. We read in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit.

We are admonished three times in this section that the law already given is to be the guide to govern the church in preaching and in spiritual matters. In Matthew 1:21, we read:

And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins.

He is to save his people; who are his people? Those who accept him and enter through the door and become his by reason of obedience to his principles. Others are not his people, and can not be called his, for he says in John 3: 5: "Except a man be born of the water and the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God." Then, if we are his people it is because we have accepted his terms and entered into his life by principles of his doctrine. Galatians 3: 26, 27, reads: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ." Then faith is the moving principle that leads us to enter into Christ. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. Then we can see this is the way we become the children of God or Christ. When we are his children, or have put on Christ, we are his people. Not all the wicked are his people, but those who obey him and his law, observe his doctrine and instructions,—those are his people. He came to save his people from their sins, not in them. Salvation is obedience to law, and forgiveness of sin. "Not everyone that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter in, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 7: 21.

We are told: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me."—John 12: 32. That does not signify that all will be saved, but all will come to him to be judged when the time comes. In John 12: 46, he says, "I am come a light in the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." They should not; that is, they do not have to for the light has come and they can have it if they want it. To illustrate: Here are two rooms; one in darkness, and the other in light; I can have my choice, stay in the dark, or accept the invitation of the host and step into the room where is the light. I should not be in the dark, for I have the privilege to step into the light if I will. I should step into the light, but do not have to. So Christ brought light, so men should not walk in darkness, but they would not accept the light, so they can not make any claim to salvation; no, indeed. This is the stone which was set at naught by the builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. (Acts 4: 11, 12.) There is no other way to be saved except by the way Jesus marked out. We read in John 3: 16, 17: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." God sent not his Son into the world that he might condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. Should—might;—that is, he has placed within reach of man the means of salvation, which, if we will accept, will save those that should or might be saved in they accept the terms. In John 5: 40 he says they will not come to him that they might have life. They would not come to him, so he could save them. They might have had life if they had obeyed him; and so may you and I, or reject and be damned.

We read in Galatians 3: 26, 27, "For we are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." That is one of the means whereby we can become his people, so he will save us from our sins.

Again, in verse 27, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." We are not his people until then. Romans 6: 3: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" This is the means by which we can become his people. John 3: 5, "Except ye are born of the water and of the Spirit ye can not (positively can not) enter into the kingdom of God." In order to be saved, we must enter into the kingdom of God and become a member of his body and walk in the light as he is in the light. (1 John 1: 6.) We must obey the plan in this life. We believe all that had not the opportunity will have some time; then if they do not accept, eternal damnation will be theirs. Those who have had the opportunity here to obey the gospel will not have it there. To those who have not had that opportunity, we believe the gospel will be preached on the other side. The time will come when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess, but that does not necessarily mean they will be saved. I believe all will be liberated from the prison; all rewarded for all good works and placed in a sphere that God has provided for them, where they will enjoy life, but are not saved.

I know there are three glories, but there is only one for the saved ones. The other two will have to stay in prison until they pay the last mite, then be liberated.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 6, 7, of the second glory and the celestial glory. In the second they can not have the fullness of the Father, so they are not saved; and the third glory all kinds of people come forth. It says these all shall bow the knee and every tongue confess; but where God and Christ dwell they can not come, worlds without end. Who will say they are saved? We dare not say so. To be saved we must be where God and Christ are. We may all be saved from the Adamic sin by a common salvation; common to all by reason of the atonement of Christ, but not saved from personal sins and to be with God. We read in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 5, "Therefore he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory." It must be a kingdom of darkness, so they did not receive the light that they might be saved.

You can plainly see that all can not be saved—only those who come to the light and walk in the light to the end; all others must pay the penalty of a broken law. They might have been saved; they should have been if they would, but they would not. Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, and few there be that find it. We must conclude the great majority will be lost and not saved, but will be made happy in the sphere where God puts them and confess they are worthy. They have all that they have earned and are entitled to; so to place them with those who had obeyed the gospel and come up through much tribulation would not make them happy, but in torment.

We will give you some quotations from the Book of Mormon, large edition, page 65, verse 40:

And in fine, woe unto all those who die in their sins, for they shall return to God and behold his face and remain in their sins.

Yea, they are grasped with death and hell, and death and hell and the Devil, and all that have been seized therewith, must stand before the throne of God and be judged according to their work, from whence they must go into the place prepared for them, even a lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment.

Hence we can plainly see that all are not saved; that is only a mistaken idea of men. Again, page 113, verse 13,

And according to the powers of justice, for justice can not be denied, ye must go away into that lake of fire and brimstone whose flames are unquenchable and whose smoke ascendeth up for ever and ever, which lake of fire and brimstone is endless torment.

Surely they are not saved; if they are I do not want to be saved. Verse 79 says, "Thus has God commanded." Page 131, verse 28, says there is none other salvation save this which hath been spoken of, neither are there any conditions whereby man can be saved except the conditions which I have mentioned. Page 132, verse 5, ought to be plain enough for any common mind to understand. We will cite you to other passages and let those who wish to read them do so. We ought not to flatter ourselves that we will be saved any way, whether we obey the gospel or not, for that is sure to bring disappointment and loss in the world to come. May God bless us all and help us to come to a right understanding at last. All can be saved who make the start, and all others if they will. The platform is broad. For all who will come there is room and to spare.

The words of Abinadi come in in good place here:

Now it came to pass that after Abinadi had spoken these words, he stretched forth his hand and said, The time shall come when all shall see the salvation of the Lord; when every nation, kindred, tongue and people shall see eye to eye, and shall confess before God that his judgments are just, and then shall the wicked be cast out and they shall have cause to howl and weep and wail and gnash their teeth. —Page 153, verse 56.

Please read the entire verse. This shows that the wicked are lost and weep and bewail their condition and so acknowledge God's judgments to be just. They realize that it is just what they have lived for, and so will it be in all time to come, of people who will live in sin, all their days and slight the proffered mercies of God and serve the wrong master.

We read that whomsoever we yield ourselves servants to obey, his servants we are. Then we must look to the one we have served for our reward. We can not work for one man and expect reward from another; neither can we serve Satan and then look to God for our reward. No; we can not. We will find at that time not every one that says, Lord, Lord, shall enter in, but he that doeth the will of the Father. Many will say this but will not be able to enter in. The ones that have served God are the only ones; the others will have to look to the one they have served for their reward. Do not let the thought enter the mind that all will be saved, for if the Bible and the Book of Mormon are true, they can not. The term saved in the Bible and the Book of Mormon in a biblical sense means to have all our sins forgiven by reason of our obedience to his law, and in the end to enter into the highest place God has for man. All others are not saved. While they are released from prison and blessed for all their good works they are not saved. That is what nearly all people believe; if they are saved they will dwell with God, and surely that is right if the Bible is true. If we call being loosed from prison and the bands of death, salvation, all will be saved, but that is not salvation. They have paid the debt in full, but because it is paid in full, it is not necessary that I am saved from it. My sins have not been forgiven. Jesus came to save his people from their sins, not in them.

Again, the words of Amulek are fitting here. Page 207, verse 71,

And he shall come into the world to redeem his people and he shall take upon him the transgressions of those that believe on his name. And these are they that shall have eternal life and salvation, and salvation cometh to none else; therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made except it be the loosing of the bands of death, for behold the day cometh that all shall rise from the dead and stand before God and be judged according to their works.

Surely those are not saved. Again, pages 263 and 264, verses 204 to 209, "Ye can not say when ye are brought to that awful crisis, I will repent, that I will turn to my God. Nay, ye can not say this, for that same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in the eternal world." Please read the two following verses.

Then this being true, if our spirits are rebellious in this life and we die in that condition we will be rebellious in the prison house and we can not be saved. I think this is plain. This universal salvation has hurt and hindered the cause of Christ. Many people say that if that is true that all will be saved, only not in so high a salvation, they will take a lesser one and have a good time here; hence have no disposition to obey the gospel; many of the members hold the same ideas. The three glories do not indicate any such idea, for we see all classes come forth in those glories. Read the vision in Doctrine and Covenants 85:5. We read of a place where there is no glory. Who are they? Surely they are not saved. It says there is no glory, and glory is light. Let us rather believe that he will loose all from hell and reward them for all their good works and give them some of those mansions prepared from the foundation of the world. Surely they are for some one. (Christ has gone to prepare a place for his people.) The wicked have a place where they will enjoy more than they are worthy of. They would not be happy if saved or placed in company with those that have made the fight (they themselves causing so much of the tribulation and making it so hard for those who tried) and come up through so much tribulation; it would be torment to them. God has provided something better for them and will place them where they will be satisfied and happy in all time to come. That looks reasonable to me.

Some say God is not just if he does not save all. He would if all would obey him. It would not be just to save them in their rebellion and while sinners. He has never made any promise to a soul to save them, only on condition of the gospel. All can if they will. Disobedience will damn the soul.

On page 275, verse 44, we find this:

And then shall it come to pass, that the spirits of the wicked, yea, who are evil; for behold, they have no part nor portion of the Spirit of the Lord: for behold they choose evil works, rather than good: therefore the spirit of the Devil did enter into them, and take possession of their house; and these shall be cast out into the outer darkness: there shall be weeping, and wailing and gnashing of teeth; and this because of their iniquity; being held captive by the will of the Devil.

This all goes to show us that the majority of the human race is not saved, but have to suffer for their sins. Only those who have availed themselves of the opportunity and obeyed the gospel will be saved. Straight is the gate and narrow the way and few there be that find it. It will be few indeed in comparison to the great numbers of the race.

On page 276, verse 63, we are told that if the desires of their hearts were good they would be restored unto that which is good, and if their works were evil, to inherit the kingdom of the Devil, for he had desired them to do evil all the day long; even so shall he have his reward of evil when the night cometh. Read the entire verse.

On page 279, verse 97 it says that none but the truly penitent are saved. Page 363, verse 56, because of their iniquities they are cast out of his presence. Verse 57, "And woe unto him to whom he shall say this, for it shall be unto him that will do iniquity and he can not be saved; therefore for this cause, that men might be saved, hath repentance been declared," that they might have the chance to repent and enter into the gospel and reap the benefits, which are eternal life if obeyed and lived up to. In verse 61 we are told that those who have done evil shall have everlasting damnation, and thus it is. Read the entire page, 394. The 24th verse says, "And whoso believeth not in me and is not baptized shall be damned." This seems plain to my mind that not all but the few are saved. Some say, That is too narrow; I believe in a broad platform, and that is too narrow. I, too believe in a broad platform, and that is the one God established. It is the broadest of all. It will admit and save every soul if they will comply with the requirements, and in no other way. Christ or God has not said they would save one soul that did not want to be saved. He gave man his agency; now he can act for himself. He will have to answer to the record he has made. Everyone will have to stand or fall for himself; upon the merits or demerits of his own works. God has set good and evil before us, and the consequences of sin, the benefits of obedience to his principles or his platform which is the doctrine of Jesus Christ and commandments of God. He has not made any promise of salvation in any other way in this world or the world to come. Some one says we must be liberal. Yes; but we can not be liberal with that which does not belong to us. With my own money I can give to whom I please, but if others trust me with money I have not the right to use it as I please. I may have the power, but no legal right to do so, but will be held accountable for it if I do not use it in the way directed. The same with the things of God. He trusts us with some things and holds us to account for them. He instructs us and expects us to heed the instructions. If we tell the people they can be saved in some other way we will have to answer to God. If we tell them God is going to save all, and by so doing encourage rebellion to God's law (for that is what we will do) we will reap everlasting condemnation and banishment from God and Christ for ever and ever.

We have reason to believe all those poor souls who have not had the opportunity in this life will have it in the life to come, or after death; and those who hear and obey shall be judged according to those who obey in this life. So God shows himself to be just. Through his justice, his liberality, his kindness and love, every soul can be saved if they will. It is left with us; will we do our part or not? Will we obey or disobey? Will we become as a little child, meek and submissive to the will of the Father, or will we persist in our own course and pursue it to the end, and then appear before God and confess that his judgments are just and that we deserve eternal banishment from him?

I hope these few lines may cause some to pause and think before it is too late. May God bless us all with a right mind, that we may move forward to victory, is my humble prayer. C. E. HAND.

PRESIDING.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This article was written by Elder John Smith, president of the Lamoni Stake, on request of Elder G. E. Harrington, president of the Independence Stake. It was read before the priesthood of the Independence Stake, and later before the priesthood of the Kansas City Branch. By vote it was referred to the SAINTS' HERALD for publication, and we are pleased to give it space.

1. What is it to preside?

To have charge of the affairs of an organization; to be the representative head of that organization; to be a worker or servant for the organization.

2. Over a district?

To have charge of the spiritual interests of the district, subject to the action of the body.

3. Over a branch?

To have charge of the spiritual interests of the branch, subject to the action of the body.

4. Over a prayer meeting or religious service?

To have charge of said meeting, and carry it on in an orderly and respectable manner, with a view to the spiritual benefit of those present.

5. Over a business meeting?

Book of Rules, pages 10, 11: "As presiding officer, it is his duty: To open the sitting at the time to which the assembly was adjourned, the taking the chair and calling the members to order. To announce the business before the assembly in the order in which it is to be acted upon. To receive and submit in the proper manner all motions and propositions presented by the members. To put to vote all questions which are regularly moved, or necessarily arise in the course of the proceedings, and to announce the results. To restrain the members, when engaged in debate, within the rules of order. To enforce on all occasions the observance of order and decorum among the members. To receive and announce all messages and other communications for the assembly. To authenticate all the acts, orders, and proceedings of the assembly by his signature when necessary. To inform the assembly in reference to any point of order or practice, when necessary, or when referred to for that purpose. To name the members who are to serve on committees, when directed to do so in any particular case, or when it is made a part of his general duty by rule; and, in general, to represent and stand for the assembly, to declare its will, and in all things implicitly obey its commands."

6. Who can preside?

Anyone having proper authority; in the service of the church, preference belongs to those holding the priesthood.

7. By what authority?

Doctrine and Covenants 104:31: "There must needs be presiding elders, to preside over those who are of the office of an elder; and also priests, to preside over those who are of the office of a priest; and also teachers to preside over those who are of the office of a teacher, in like manner; and also the deacons; wherefore from deacon to teacher, and from teacher to priest, and from priest to elder, severally as they are appointed, according to the covenants and commandments of the church; then comes the high priesthood, which is the greatest of all; wherefore, it must needs be that one be appointed, of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood; and he shall be called president of the high priesthood of the church, or in other words, the presiding high priest over the high priesthood of the church." The above gives presiding rights in their proper place, by call, selection, and ordination.

8. Is it necessary to be ordained?

That would depend on the nature and character of the meeting, and its object and purpose, also conditions. If it related to regular services of the church, ordination would be necessary, in most cases.

9. Where can a person preside if not elected, and who may he be?

A person may not be elected to preside, and yet if an ordained person, he may preside over a prayer meeting, or a preaching service, or a sacrament meeting, or a business meeting, by invitation of the proper officer, or by vote of those present at the meeting. This includes church officers from the president of the high priesthood down to the president of a deacon's quorum.

10. What is the jurisdiction of a branch president or presidency?

Over the membership of the church within the limits of boundary of the branch.

11. Does he lose his presidency when asking others to preside?

No; if anything should occur in a meeting when another presided by his invitation, that needed his attention and action, it would be proper for him to advise what should be done.

12. To what extent is he relieved of responsibility?

He has only partial responsibility, during the time of that meeting, unless something occurs as stated in number 11.

13. Must he preside over all meetings?

He may, but he should not do so personally. He should invite others, so they may get experience in such duties, following the advice of the Lord, "teach one another words of wisdom" (Doctrine and Covenants 85:36). Experience is necessary for success, and is a great help to anyone, together with the help of the Spirit of the Lord.

14. What are his rights in connection with auxiliary societies?

He should not interfere with them. If he has time he should be a worker among them, if his church duties will permit; he should give encouragement and support to the societies, but a person who is ordained to the priesthood should first give attention to those duties, because we have both young men and young women in the church who are fully capable of looking after these societies, and such persons should be sought out and given a chance for experience.

15. What relation does he sustain to other officers in a branch?

He should do all he can to have them magnify their calling, by giving them something to do that will help to develop their talent. If they are members of the branch they come under his jurisdiction. He should also set an example in official life by recognizing the rights of all, whether in the higher or lesser priesthood; remembering what the Lord said to the church, Doctrine and Covenants 4:1: "faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work." He is the principal officer of that branch and still amenable to those above him for his conduct, acts, decisions, and advice.

16. What is the jurisdiction of a district president or stake president, and his associates?

He and his associates preside over the membership within the boundaries of the district or stake.

17. Can he preside over a branch meeting if not invited by branch authorities?

He may, under some conditions.

18. When may he do so?

If a branch is in disorder and the branch president should refuse to call a meeting, he may call one, or if there is no disorder and he desires a special meeting in a branch he should arrange with the branch officers for such. He may preside by invitation of the proper branch officers.

19. What relation is there between himself and other officers in a district?

The same in this as mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 120:4 to 6: "In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices; nevertheless, the traveling, presiding councils of the church being made by the law, their calling and the voice of the church the directing, regulating, and advising authorities of the church, and representing it abroad, should when present in either district or branch be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such, their counsel and advice be sought and respected when given; and in cases of conflict, or extremity, their decision should be listened to and regarded, subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law. He that heareth him that is sent heareth the Lord who sent him, if he be called of God and be sent by the voice of the church. In these matters there is no conflict in the law."

20. What should govern those who preside?

The law and rules of the church. The Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants 122:10: "The Scriptures and the church articles and covenants, with the rules adopted by the church, shall govern in procedure."

21. The actions of the body?

Should be in harmony with the advice of the Lord, and not otherwise, if we want his blessing on the work done.

22. The law of the church?

Yes; the Lord says it "shall govern."

23. The Rules of Order?

Yes; the Lord says, "the rules adopted."

24. Or opinions of himself or others?

Opinions can be appealed from. It is better to learn if there is any law or rule that would fit the case.

25. In the absence of any rules should his decision stand?

Subject to appeal, Doctrine and Covenants 120:4: "Subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law." If in a business meeting see Rules of Order and Debate, page 46, paragraph 76: "Decision by the chair." "When a question of order is raised, as it may be by any one member, it is not stated by the chair, and decided by the assembly, like other questions; but is decided in the first instance by the presiding officer without any previous debate or discussion by the assembly." (Page 47.)

"If the decision of the presiding officer be not satisfactory, any member may object to it, and have the question decided by the assembly. This is called appealing from the decision of the chair."

"The question is then stated by the presiding officer, on the appeal, namely: Shall the decision of the chair stand as the decision of the assembly? and it is thereupon debated by the assembly in the same manner as any other question, except that the presiding officer is allowed to take part in the debate, which, on ordinary occasions he is prohibited from doing."

26. How should a presiding officer conduct himself in a business meeting?

Rules of Order and Debate, page 9: "The president should so be seated in the assembly over which he presides that he can see every member, and be seen by every member who is expected to take part in the deliberations," (page 10) and also "be able to see every part of the room in which the assembly is held." He should keep the attention of the assembly upon the business before it; and to do this more fully he should himself set the example and be dignified, orderly, and attentive to every speaker.

27. Should he listen attentively to what is being said?

Yes; see last line in answer to number 26.

28. Must he engage in debate or express his opinion upon all the subjects, or any?

Rules of Order and Debate, page 58: "It is a general rule in all deliberative assemblies that the presiding officer shall not participate in the debate, or in other proceedings, in any other capacity than as such officer. He is only allowed, therefore, to state matters of fact within his knowledge; and to inform the assembly on points of order or on the proper course of proceeding, when called upon for that purpose, or when he finds it necessary to do so."

29. When may he speak to a question?

Rules of Order and Debate: "On appeals from the chairman's decision on questions of order, he is permitted to address the assembly in debate."

30. Should he be acquainted with the Rules of Order?

Yes; Rules of Order and Debate, page 10: "He should see and hear and know everything going on pertaining to the subject under consideration."

31. When has he a right to vote?

Rules of Order and Debate, page 74, paragraph 115: "If the members are equally divided, the presiding officer may, if he please, give the casting vote; or, if he choose, he may refrain from voting. In the latter case, the motion does not prevail, and the decision is in the negative."

32. May he suggest anything to a meeting?

Yes; Rules of Order and Debate, page 11: "To inform the assembly in reference to any point of order or practice, when necessary, or when referred to for that purpose."

33. Ought he to know what is before the assembly?

Yes; Rules of Order and Debate, page 10: "He should keep the subject presented for consideration clearly and constantly in view."

34. Is his decision final on any question?

Yes; unless appealed from in the proper manner.

35. Can he order anyone out of the church?

Rules of Order and Debate, page 7: "In all cases when an assembly is convened the place of meeting is in possession of the assembly, and while rightfully used for its purposes, is under its control and subject to its will; and hence no one has a right to be present against its consent; and should any refuse to withdraw when notified, or when requested to do so, or should they conduct themselves in a disorderly or improper manner, the assembly has the right to enforce its order, and remove them by force if necessary."

36. If so, under what circumstances?

If the person or persons who were requested to withdraw declined to do so, this would make the "circumstances" "necessary to remove them by force," and it is the duty of the presiding officer to see that the orders of the assembly are carried out. Rules of Order and Debate, page 11: "To enforce on all occasions the observance of order and decorum among the members."

37. Recognition of higher authority. If the president of the church, missionary in charge, or district president comes into a branch, are presidents of branches required by law to yield up their positions of presiding to either or any of such officers?

That depends on existing conditions. Doctrine and Covenants 120:7: "In matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them, the traveling councils taking cognizance of those only in which the law and usages of the church are involved, and the general interests of the church are concerned. Where cases of difficulty are of long standing, the council may require local authorities to adjust them; and in case of failure to do so, may regulate them as required by their office and duty; and this that the work and church may not be put to shame and the preaching of the word be hindered." Doctrine and Covenants 122:7: "leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected in the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible." Paragraph 8: "If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the Presidency of the Church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will these officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored." Doctrine and Covenants 123:23: "As a traveling, presiding council your quorum has the active supervision and presidency, under the First Presidency, over the entire field of ministerial labor, and control over districts, branches, and the ministry as a whole and as church organizations, and not as local presiding officers in these several organizations; holding special local presidency where no organization has been perfected; in a similar way as the First Presidency presides over the whole church, differing in this, that the First Presidency is necessarily local, while your province is not localized."

38. When may a lay member preside?

When none of the priesthood are available, or when necessity requires.

39. If so, in what manner, and under what circumstances?

I have known of prayer meetings when the one who should have been in charge did not appear, and there were none that held the priesthood present.

Rules of Order and Debate, page 103, paragraph 165: Branch business meeting: "Six or more members present at any regular meeting shall constitute a quorum, provided one of them is a branch officer."

40. What action is necessary to have such one preside?

By some one making a motion and same being seconded, and the mover calling for a vote, to put the one named in charge of that meeting for the time being, and then proceed to open the meeting in the usual way, by singing and prayer. I have heard prayers that I was satisfied reached the throne of mercy, when there was no priesthood near, and when Saints come together for prayer and testimony, and there is no officer present, do not postpone such meeting unless for good and sufficient cause you have been forbidden to hold it by a proper officer.

INTERESTING HISTORICAL ITEM.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Captain Brown, the subject of the following news item, is one of the old residents of Southern Iowa, has served two sessions as State Senator in the General Assembly, and at its last encampment was elected Department Commander by the Iowa Grand Army of the Republic. While commonly called "Captain" or "Senator," Mr. Brown was brevetted major at the close of the war for gallantry and distinguished service.—I. A. S.

Captain J. D. Brown, of Leon, Iowa, was escorted over the route taken by General Price through this city and on to Bryam's Ford in October, 1864, by an automobile party organized yesterday by the Reverend Frederick M. Smith, whose guests he and Mrs. Brown were. After lunching at noon at the home of President Joseph Smith, the party set out about 3 o'clock in three machines.

Although forty-eight years lacking ten days, have passed since the day when Captain Brown passed through this city, and the circumstances of that eventful day were not favorable to close observation, Captain Brown was able to locate with great particularity nearly every important stage of the big running battle, in which Price was opposed by one Federal army in front, and followed and harassed by another in the rear.

Captain Brown was in command of a company in the Third Iowa Cavalry, and temporarily in command of two or three other companies. It was his command which captured a Confederate battery of four six-pound guns on the "Temple Lot."

"We came up this street," Captain Brown said, pointing toward North River Boulevard. "The battery was just south of that little church," meaning the Hedrickite church on the Temple Lot. "They were protecting Price's rear. We were ordered to take them. We charged with sabers and took them after sharp, quick fighting. Two of them were still loaded when we got them."

A member of the party recalled the fact that a stone wall ran east and west along the south side of Walnut Street, and that all that part of town south of the Temple Lot, now thickly built upon, was then a big open meadow without a house upon it.

The party drove on to Norwood. "Here is where we spent that night," Captain Brown said. "We didn't go into camp in the regular way, but just lay in line around camp fires which we made of the rail fences. The weather was fine, just like it is now, but quite chilly at night." That was on October 22.

On the following day Price's army and the pursuing Federals pushed on toward Bryam's Ford over the Blue River, just north of Swope Park. In like manner the automobile party yesterday followed the old road as closely as possible to the ford, but a quarter of a mile this side they had to abandon their machines and walk the rest of the way on foot. Arriving at the ford they found it impossible to cross, so Captain Brown contented himself with pointing out a house just west of the creek, near which he was shot in the thicket and lay there two days and nights.

"Rescuing parties came out from Kansas City," Captain Brown said. "I was found by a young woman named Hetty Rogers. She caused me to be taken to a hospital, where I soon recovered and then rejoined my command. But I wish I knew where she lives and could see her once more."

Captain Brown and his wife are on their way home from Los Angeles, California, where he attended a national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. They spent last night at the home of the Reverend Frederick M. Smith, on South Crysler Avenue, and departed to-day for their home.—The Jackson Examiner, Independence, Missouri, October 18, 1912.

JEWISH COLONISTS REDEEM PALESTINE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, October 2.—There are now over one hundred thousand colonizing Jews in Palestine, and according to a writer in the Osmanischer Lloyd they are rapidly redeeming the country. Of these fifty or sixty thousand are in Jerusalem alone, and despite the "red passport" with which foreign Jews must provide themselves, and which limits their stay in Palestine to three months, their establishment of stores in the city and their purchase of farms in the surrounding country goes on. In other words, these foreign Jews furnish the capital and the executive ability in making the native Jews of Palestine self-supporting, and in many cases wealthy, while insuring to themselves the basis of comfortable fortunes.

What this influx of Jewish capital and brains has meant to Palestine may be gathered from the figures presented by the Osmanischer Lloyd. The colonists now own forty villages and about forty thousand hectares (one hundred thousand acres) of land, seventy-five per cent of which are under cultivation, viz, 8,600 hectares (21,000 acres) in Judea, (15 colonies;) 6,000 (15,000 acres) in Samaria, (8 colonies;) 16,200 (40,000 acres) in Galilee, (16 colonies,) and 200 (500 acres) in the Trans-Jordan country, (1 colony). The most important of these settlements, which were founded between 1878 and 1902, are Pethach-Tikweh (1,500 colonists,) Rishon le Zion (1,000 colonists) in Judea, Zikhron-Jacob (1,000 colonists) in Samaria, and Rosh-Pinah (800 colonists) in Galilee.

The education of the Jewish population of Palestine is mainly in the hands of the French "Alliance Israelite Universelle" with 15 schools, 70 teachers, and 2,200 pupils, and of the German Jewish "Hilfsverein" of Berlin, with 22 schools, 150 teachers, and 3,000 pupils. Six schools in which the Talmud and Torah are taught through the medium of Hebrew are controlled by the "Free Union for the Interest of Orthodox Jewry" of Frankfort-on-Main. Two girls' schools are managed by the Anglo-Jewish Association of London and the "Khoweweh-Zion" Association of Odessa, while certain important private schools, e. g., the Theodor Herzl Memorial High School at Jaffa, the "Bezalel" Arts and Crafts School at Jerusalem, and the German Jewish Union's Polytechnic School now building at Haifa, also deserve mention.

According to the obviously well-informed correspondent of the Osmanischer Lloyd, the following Zionist organizations are now at work in Palestine:

(1) The Jewish Colonial Bank of London with its offshoot, the Anglo-Palestine Company, which has branches in Beirut, Haifa, Hebron, Jaffa, Jerusalem, and Safed. This institution is principally engaged in making loans at very low rates of interest to Jewish agriculturists and traders. (2) The managing board of the "Jewish National Fund," which has planted extensive olive orchards and purchased land which is not resold but divided into allotments and leased to settlers or otherwise exploited for the benefit of the fund. (3) The Palestine Land Development Company, which has acquired large properties on the shores of the Sea of Galilee. (4) The Erez Israel Colonization Company of Cologne. (5) The Berlin Jewish Women's Federation of Cologne, which is employed in building workmen's houses.—New York Times.

SAW THE LIGHT.

The late Senator W. B. Heyburn, of Idaho, is reported as having made the following statement to his brother a few minutes before his death:

"Elwood, I have had a great revelation. I understand it all now. The man who stands up and tells you and me that the things we believe concerning the present and future life are not true is a fool. My father and yours, Elwood, took us by the hands and taught us these things.

"Standing on the threshold of eternity, he taught us concerning the life that now is and that which is to come, and we shall not be deceived. There can be no mistake. When a man stands up and addresses his God he knows what he is talking about.

"I have lived my life as best I could within human limitations. I am worn out in the service of a great cause."

IS SMOKING INJURIOUS?

This question often agitates the minds of anxious mothers, wives, and others who would fain have their loved ones forego the pleasures of the weed because of the impression that it menaces health and life, an idea which is fostered by certain would-be reformers. The most recent example of the latter is a correspondent who has addressed to The Sun a diatribe against tobacco smoking, concluding that tobacco is a most pernicious poison to the human race. This otherwise pious and gentle crusader has done some good service in limiting the smoking nuisance, but he has made himself obnoxious to lovers of the weed by causing the arrest of men lighting cigars and cigarettes in the railroad stations and other places where it is forbidden by law. In one instance his zeal led him to so rebuke the men guests of an equal suffrage public dinner that these gentlemen actually yielded up their fragrant post-prandial cigars. Lovers of the weed have dubbed him the pious but pestiferous PEASE.

That smoking is not injurious to health if practiced in moderation is the common experience. Physicians of ability tell us that nicotine is an active poison; when taken internally it so relaxes the system that before the days of anæsthetics it was used in dislocations and strangulated hernia for that purpose. That it has not produced serious results even in these large quantities indicates that it is not a very dangerous poison. That nicotine is absorbed during the act of smoking is proved by the nausea it produces in the novice. That the human system easily becomes immune to this action of nicotine and that the latter becomes harmless is a matter of daily observation.

The case is parallel with tea and coffee. Although thein and caffen are less dangerous poisons than nicotine they are doubtless indulged in by PEASE himself. They are regarded with the same suspicion by many dyspeptics and other unhappy individuals. A physician of half a century's experience has said that though not a smoker himself he has rarely had occasion to interdict smoking and that he has never seen a death attributable to smoking, and only two cases in which life was actually endangered, one of these being an idiosyncrasy. In fact he regards smoking as a boon to the excitable neurasthenic, for whom it "knits up the raveled sleeve of care." Moderation is the keynote to the joys of the weed, as to all other good things in life. Overindulgence in "the pie like mother makes" has sent many a vigorous man to bed. Indeed, the victims of immoderate eating and drinking are legion when compared with those of tobacco. And yet, eating being so universal a practice and habit, no one dares to characterize it as dangerous.

It may be remarked that while physiologists concur almost unanimously in the view that even the moderate use of alcohol damages the human body, a London Lancet laboratory committee of physicians has recently reported that in smoking only an infinitesimal quantity of nicotine is absorbed. It may be of interest to note that while a cigarette yielded only 6-100 per cent of nicotine a pipe gave 37 to 53 per cent, because in the former the combustion of the tobacco was more complete and in the latter it is burned as in a retort. Cigarette smoking, however, is more irritating to the throat. The cigar is the least injurious form of smoking. The British cigar contains twice as much nicotine as a Havana cigar, and the latter liberates less than half the quantity for the absorption of the former, showing the unerring accuracy of popular judgment.

Death from alcohol is quite frequent, death from food (acute indigestion) is often reported; a death from tobacco has not to our knowledge been authentically recorded. Doctors very properly forbid smoking in certain cases; so do they forbid sugar, potatoes or other food, even water sometimes. Manifestly this fact does not, as is too often assumed, demonstrate their poisonous character.

A neurologist who is often mentioned in the press wrote that if alcohol were suddenly withdrawn from the human race the race's efficiency would be imperiled. The absurdity of this idea became evident when the symposium of experts gathered by a contemporary failed even to dignify it with mention, except one who defended the reverse of this proposition and demonstrated the utter fallacy of regarding alcohol as a food or useful sustainer of energy. Incorrect as this idea is regarding alcohol it would apply correctly to tobacco, for in these strenuous days of wear and tear and nerve tension the weed has become indispensable as a veritable nerve restorer. Like all sedatives, when used judiciously and in moderation it is a boon, when used in excess it becomes a bane.—New York Sun.

Milton in his blindness, when past fifty, completed "Paradise Lost."

He built a house, time laid it in the dust;
 He wrote a book, its title now forgot;
 He ruled a city, but its name is not
 On any tablet graven, or where rust
 Can gather from disuse, or marble bust.
 He took a child from out the wretched cot,
 Who on the State dishonor might have brought,
 And reared him to the Christian's hope and trust.
 The boy, to manhood grown, became a light
 To many souls, and preached for human need
 The wondrous love of the Omnipotent.
 The work has multiplied like the stars at night,
 When darkness deepens; every noble deed
 Lasts longer than a granite monument.

TAMMS, ILLINOIS, October 26, 1912.

Saints' Herald: I will say that I am still in the conflict for this latter day work and expect to remain loyal to it so long as the Lord sees fit to keep me on this earth; for I know of a surety that this work is of the Lord, as it has been made known to me, and I will never deny it.

There is a great work for each one of us to do, whether we are preachers or not. We can do a great work by distributing tracts and other literature; for instance, not long ago I was talking to a man not of our faith and he asked me of the Book of Mormon and its teachings. I told him I had one and would lend it to him if he would read it. He gladly took it and now he says he is ready to uphold the book whenever it is attacked. This man's name is B. L. Oglesby, at Mount Vernon, Illinois. I will say that I believe this man thought the Book of Mormon contained secret doctrine of our church, but he is convinced differently now.

At present my wife's father is with me, and he was once very prejudiced against the Book of Mormon, but I read some of it to him and tried to explain the purpose of the book. Now he is willing to read it himself, so I told him I would make him a present of mine. So you see, dear Saints, that through a little effort on our part we can do some good.

Another thing we should not neglect is the paying of our tithing. If we have no more than fifty cents to pay, it will help forward this work some, and just look at the calls for laborers in the field! but we have not got the money to fill all these calls.

I am not where I can attend church, at present, and haven't been for several years, but my whole heart and soul are in this work. Many times I am attacked on account of my religion, but it does me good, for it gives me a chance to tell the people the true gospel story. If any elder is passing this way he is welcome to stop with me as long as he wishes, and if I can get a place to preach in, I will do so.

I remain your brother,

B. F. GRACE.

NEVADA, MISSOURI, October 29, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: Please allow me a little space to call attention to an item in the HERALD of October 23, which I think is misleading. In the minutes of the stake conference held at Holden September 14 and 15, it is there stated that "James Moler and Alexander McCallum were dropped from membership of the stake high council because of inability to serve." Mr. Webster, in defining the word inability, says: "1. Want of sufficient physical power or strength. 3. Want of moral power, etc. 4. Want of intellectual strength or force, inability to comprehend a mathematical demonstration. 5. Want of knowledge or skill, as an inability to read or write."

Now if Brother Moler is in that condition he certainly should be called in and his missionary appointment canceled. When the stake was organized I had a missionary appointment away from the Independence Stake; but I was chosen and ordained to the office of high councilor in the stake, and each year since, except one, have been appointed out of the stake, and that one I only served about four months in the stake, and was then transferred to the Clinton District. And to all who desire to know I wish to say that physically I am able to do as much missionary work as I was fifteen or twenty years ago, and I really do not think that I am mentally unbalanced, and I am willing that the members of the eleven branches and the many scattered Saints of the Clinton District, over which I preside, and over which I have presided for the past eleven years (except three), speak in regard to my moral standing; and I really believe that I am in the faith of the great latter day work. Howbeit, I am pleased to be released from the responsible position; especially on account of being out of the stake the most of the time, and can meet with the council only occasionally.

A year or two ago I wrote the president of the stake that if they would assume the responsibility I would resign, but received no reply, and I think it would have sounded much better if it had said that Brother Moler was released on account of being in the mission field and could meet with the council only occasionally, and not because of "inability to serve."

As to Brother McCallum, I do not know anything in regard to his location or condition, but folks should be careful how they make statements, especially those that are to go into print and be read by thousands who do not know the conditions. Hopefully in the race, and wishing that things be called by their right names, I am in gospel bonds,

JAMES MOLER.

A Vision: Seen by Elder H. N. Snively.

(This account was written in response to a suggestion by C. I. Carpenter.)

As you requested me to write you a few lines relative to the vision or dream I had of the personality of God, I will endeavor to do so, but I will state some of the reasons why I think this was shown me. This of which I am writing occurred several years ago. I had been reading in the Bible, John 14: 7-9: "If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. . . . He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how saith thou then, Show us the Father?" Also in the Book of Mormon, page 505, small edition, where it gives an account of the brother of Jared cutting out sixteen small stones from the rock and carrying them to the top of the mountain, that the Lord might touch them with his finger, that they might give light in their vessels. After pleading with the Lord for this purpose, the Lord stretched forth his hand and touched the stones with his finger, and as the veil had been taken from the eyes of the brother of Jared, he was permitted to see the finger and hand of God. When he did this he fell to the earth before the Lord, overcome with fear. After an account of the exceeding faith of the brother of Jared, the record tells us that the Lord showed himself to him. Because of this and because he had received such a knowledge of the Lord he was told that he was redeemed from the fall and was brought back into his presence; then the Lord said: "Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people. Behold, I am Jesus Christ. I am the Father and the Son."

The last two declarations made to the brother of Jared, together with that made by Christ to Philip, as recorded by John, seemed to exercise my mind very much, so on retiring to bed one night I had the following dream or vision:

I saw a personage whom I was made to understand was God, the eternal Father. This personage had the most perfect body in form I had ever seen—no human body is so nearly perfect in form as this one appeared to me. He didn't seem to have a body of flesh, as we apply the word to our flesh, but a body of power and glory. I was permitted to look within the veil and behold him. His body was transparent, so I could see it quite distinctly; there was a veil or something which was removed from his body or my eyes so that I was enabled to see and understand that it was the personage of God; with this the vision closed.

As to the having of any doubt as to the personality of God and of Jesus Christ, I have none. I think I can say I know that God is, and that Jesus Christ is the Son—two distinct personages. Though when Jesus was here he represented in the one body both the Father and the Son, we must remember that he was God manifest in the flesh, and that he did nothing of himself; neither did God do anything of himself in the beginning of the creation of the world, and all things that have been created, it has been through the word of his power, which was his only begotten Son. So he, being chosen of God, became a copartner or coworker with God, and where he went he represented both himself and the Father. He became the Son through compliance with the demand of the law of justice, and took upon him a tabernacle of flesh; thereby became subject to the law of death, by which he brought to pass the resurrection of the dead.

Just before Christ was put to death, he prayed to the Father, "I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do: and now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."—John 17: 4, 5.

After his resurrection and ascension to the Father I believe he received that glorified condition which he had prayed for, which he had left with his Father while he was here in the flesh. After his resurrection he said to his disciples: "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth." (Matthew 28: 17.) He had paid the last debt, (death) and now received power in heaven and in earth equal with God.

In Hebrews 1: 2, 3, we read: "Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person." In the Book of Mormon, page 506, small edition, we read: "Seest thou that ye are created after mine own image? Yea, even all men were created in the beginning, after mine own image. Behold this body which ye now behold, is the body of my spirit; and man have I created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear unto thee to be in the spirit, will I appear unto my people in the flesh."

The above is plain doctrine, so plain that anyone may understand it. God is a personage of spirit, power, and glory, and Jesus Christ is the express image of the Father. If we are faithful "our vile body will be fashioned like unto his glorious body."

"I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness."

Extracts from Letters.

Brother H. J. Davison, 317 East Lafayette Street, Stockton, California: "The Stockton Branch is struggling along by the persistence of a few faithful ones, and the outlook seems hopeful to those who have expressed themselves. Two worthy additions by baptism have been made of late, and some special features of the Religio and Sunday school are in evidence."

Choosing a College.

"It is my belief, after visiting more than five hundred institutions in North America," says Clayton Sedgwick Cooper in his new book, Why Go to College, "that the quality of instruction in any one of these institutions of the first grade does not vary sufficiently to render the choice of a college on the ground of educational advantages a matter of great moment. The values which the small college losses from inferior equipment are usually offset by the more direct access of the student to the personality of the teacher, and often by closer friendships with fellow students."

"What a man selects when he gets to college—his studies, his teachers, and his friends—will prove far more vital to him than the institution he happens to choose."

News from Missions

Idaho.

Because we have not been saying much about what is being done in this part of the field, it might appear that we are resting on our oars; but not so. We have had the pleasure of speaking for a nice little crowd every evening for the past three weeks, excepting one evening, at a school-house about six miles from the above-mentioned place. A good interest was shown, and I feel that good has been done.

We baptized eight precious souls Sunday, the 20th, in the cold spring water of the middle fork of the Weiser River. The water was very cold, but the candidates stood it well. The writer felt pretty chilly when he was doing the work, but felt so good to see the precious souls take the step and make covenant with their heavenly Father to serve him, that the disagreeable part was entirely out of mind. There were two adults, three young ladies, and three little boys. It adds quite a bit to the little band that is here, now twenty-three in number.

There is no one here holding the priesthood, but we are in hopes some one will be raised up before long to look after them more closely. They have a nice Sunday school and a nice lot of young folks to attend. Last Sunday there were forty-one present, which speaks well for a sparsely settled country like this, when people do not have much time for divine things. I feel that the Saints have been strengthened by our preaching and visiting with them and I am very much in hopes the evil power will not get in among them and destroy the bright prospects they have here.

We feel that the work in this district (Eastern Idaho) is moving along nicely with the force we have, but we are very short of men to represent the work. There are more openings than we can fill and we sometimes feel like we would like to be two or three persons, so we could occupy in the different places. Sister Madden is with me looking after Sunday school and Religio work; she also attends to the singing, which is a great help, and her presence is a great help towards getting the women folks out to meeting. When she is with me we are invited to homes and get to talk the gospel to people that I question would give me an opportunity if I were alone. She also musters up courage once in a while to address the people along the lines of "social purity," care of the children in the home, and the need of the auxiliary work, which has been well received.

Just how long our stay here will be we are undecided. The interest here seems to demand our attention and the urgent calls make us feel as though we ought to go to other places where the isolated Saints are hungry for some preaching and encouragement. So we are somewhat undecided just what is best, but we are poor hands to leave an interest to go elsewhere. We are truly enjoying our work and the Saints have been so kind to us that we haven't words to express our gratitude for the kindness that has been shown us. Not only the Saints are kind to us, but others treat us well.

It seems to me that the opportunities offered in this part of the vineyard would be a great inducement for some of our young men to push out to the work. There are Saints in this section that have not heard a sermon for years and would be very glad to furnish means for traveling expenses and house them while preaching. Generally, we have a very free-hearted people here, and very nearly all of the schoolhouses are open to preach in. They are glad to have the elder's wife with him, and if she can handle music a little and look after the auxiliary work she will have plenty to do.

My home address is Vale, Oregon.

NEW MADDEN.

Maine.

The last time I troubled your columns I was in, or near, New London, Connecticut. I held a number of services there, also preaching in the Quaker church at "Quaker Town," where twenty years ago they turned me out of the church building for preaching the gospel. They have not prospered, and there are left only a few people, divided and subdivided among themselves.

Sunday, September 1, found me in New Bedford, Massachusetts. We had a nice sacrament meeting and the writer preached in the evening. I attended the prayer meeting in Providence on Wednesday night and business session on Thursday evening. Saw Brother Greene and received some instructions. Then went to Brockton and preached for the Saints in their nice hall morning and evening. I was made welcome at Brother Ernest White's, who is an earnest young man and desires to do the right thing.

I had promised to go to Wareham as soon as I had an opportunity, so went the next day, but found Sister Sears away and ascertained later that the people I wished to meet were all away picking cranberries. I called on Brother and Sister Edwards, at Onset, and was made to feel at home. September 14 I was at the home of John Rodgers, at Attleboro; next day preached for the people in the morning service and then went to West Mansfield and spoke for Brother Charles Coombs, who holds forth in the old church (good old church), and then returned and preached in Attleboro at night.

I left the next day for Boston and found a home with our general district president, Brother Calvin Rich. Met with the Saints in prayer service, and left for Maine next day.

On arriving at Brunswick I was informed that the home folks had tried to get me by phone, but had left no message. Next morning I was called to the phone and informed that my little boy had died the night before. Clouds and sunshine make up the sum of our lives. One more anchor to hold our interest on the other side. He was a dear little soul and we all loved him.

I preached in Providence morning and evening on the 29th, attended the Rhode Island State Sunday School Convention, during the week, and received much good. Our district conference at Somerville was a good spiritual one, and the attendance was large. We have a noble band of young men coming to the front in Massachusetts, and they are being trained by spiritual as well as by intellectual forces.

Brother H. O. Smith invited the writer to take a trip with him to visit the points of interest at Lexington, Concord, etc. It would make the letter too long if I should try to describe the trip.

October 9 found me at Waterville, Maine. Brother Mitchell came for me and took me to Brother Philbrick's house, where I was made to feel at home. While there I preached seven times. The prejudice is hard to overcome here, but some seem to be interested.

3.47 a. m.—On the train bound for Washburn in Aroostook County, Maine. I never did like to get up very early in the morning, but sometimes it is necessary. Two hours' wait at a junction does not improve one's feelings, but at last we are off again, and at 3 p. m. we are at Washburn. Well, I find the same conditions here that I have found in different parts of Maine where I have been. There is quite a difference in the attitude of the people now than there was a few years ago—ten years ago—then in the winter when roads were good, one could depend on a good congregation most of the time in the country districts, but now, well, there is the Grange, innocent enough in itself, but when the Grange meeting is over the same people have a dance. Of course it is not under the patronage of the Grange, but it is the same people, on the same night. Then, when you want to appoint a service and ask what nights would be the most suitable, the answer is usually: "Let us see: Monday night there is a dance at —; Tuesday at Y— three miles away; Wednesday at W—, and Friday night we all go to the moving pictures. You might have a meeting on Thursday night, but I don't believe anybody would come out." Here in Washburn we have things a little more convenient. We have moving pictures every night, and a dance in the same place about as often as necessary and perhaps a little oftener. As far as my observation goes, I think the country districts are worse, according to their population, than the cities. While all this is true there is more need than ever of preaching and living the truth. I sometimes think it would be a good thing to carry a moving picture outfit along and show a few pictures before the sermon and a few pictures after the sermon, but lock the door while the discourse was being presented. Now that I have said that, I feel better. You don't have to print it if you don't want to.

Yours as ever,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

WASHBURN, MAINE, October 30, 1912,

Arizona.

Telegrams from Brother Chase and others announcing the sad intelligence of the death of my brother Leonard were received by my sister last week, who immediately telephoned me at Douglas. I reached Bisbee on the first train, and six hours later found me aboard train again in hopes of reaching Malta, Idaho, in time for the funeral. But delayed trains and an increasing sense of wrong stopped me, and I am now here anxiously awaiting further information.

We are unable to show a record of great work done this year. Brother James Kelley, of Naco, has been quietly wielding an influence for good, but is unable as yet to push out into the work as he would. We baptized two at Thatcher in August, and excitement reached such a pitch there that they signed up for a ten-night discussion of two hours each. One half hour of it was held on the street before nearly two hundred people, who witnessed the arrangements, but next day I posted notice that "Bishop Tyler forbids the debate," meetings continued on the street.

We have assisted the noble band of Saints at Bisbee as we could, but have felt that with a valiant trio of officers, and two elders at hand to help as needed, my place was more especially in new fields. But there has been but little call elsewhere, except in the Gila Valley, where the excitement mentioned was aroused. Street efforts led to the opposition, and though the marshal volunteered the information that we would be protected, when we called for elbow room and fair play, no officer was within hearing. Relief came though, when Mr. Robinson demanded I be given room and championed their cause.

Following their failure, we continued our effort as we felt was needed, and promised to try and return later. At Douglas we had the Mormon church once, and aroused some excitement. At present we are making a kind of systematic canvass of Phoenix, leaving Ensigns and other literature one day and calling for them the next, talking and leaving other literature as allowed.

Sister Sturges, the sole supporter of the work here, gladly does what she can, and while we are practically barred from the streets or other means of public effort, we choose the remaining door that is open.

I have tried other means of reaching scattered Saints and friends of Arizona to seek their cooperation, and will now appeal to your columns. We are desirous of all the help possible in all ways legitimate, for the spread of the glorious news intrusted to us. If we can help you at different points, write us. If we can not, let us receive your cooperation in other ways. Your tithes and offerings forwarded to our address, box 1774, Bisbee, Arizona, would be duly receipted for, and would enroll you as helpers in the cause in Arizona, both in the sight of men, and of God.

A few of the Saints have come forward with their offerings, and we have been able to meet the demands of the two families placed to our charge so far this year. Now if a few who have not done anything will contribute their mite, we will be able to present a creditable record for Arizona along temporal lines.

Will you do so? Do we appreciate being called into so great a light? Let us show it by coming forward with our support for the cause.

Let us hear from all lovers of the truth.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA, October 16, 1912.

Northeastern Illinois.

With feelings of gratitude to our heavenly Father for his many blessings we pen these few lines. When the appointments were read at the close of General Conference last April, the writer's name was listed Northeastern Illinois District. Well, the thought came like this: That is a hard field. I came to this conclusion from the reports of former missionaries who had labored there. But now, after nearly six months are past, I must say it has proven a much better field than I ever expected. In fact, I have no special fault to find, but, as I have ever found, it takes work and faith to accomplish anything in this work.

At the June conference I was chosen district president against my wishes, so that quite a share of my time has been spent in district work. I have not yet been able to reach all the branches, but I must say I find that we have lots of the very best of Saints in this district. The outsiders are not much different from other fields. Some have been misinformed and so are not ready to hear. But there are others who are willing and ready to hear.

I often find myself, however, thinking of old Wisconsin and the years of pleasant labor, for the most part, I spent there. I wish to say to one and all of the Saints of Wisconsin that you are remembered, and in prayer I often feel to ask God's blessing on you, and especially some who came into the church in my last labors there. I often wish I could write letters to many of you, but that is out of the question, so I will take this means of letting you all know that you are ever remembered, and your good desired.

I just arrived here from the Mission Branch. Here at Wilmington I have joined my colaborer, J. A. Brunson, who with his wife has a nice interest here in a schoolhouse some twelve miles out in the country, where quite a few of the members of the branch live.

At Mission Branch I spent eight days holding night meetings in the Saints' church. My story there was a pleasant one, and will long be remembered by all the acts of kindness shown. The Saints there do not forget that the missionary needs not only food and shelter, but clothing as well. There have quite a number of Saints moved away from this branch, and still we found when they all got out that we had a goodly number. We were impressed that there are young men there who if faithful in the study of God's word will be called to his work, and thus the places of some who sooner or later must lay the armor down will be filled. Elder Thomas Hougas has long acted as president, and his faithfulness is known to all. Priest Nathan Teal has also acted long as priest, but his health is failing. Brother W. E. Williamson, teacher, and Elias Hayer, deacon, are younger men, and thus do not feel the weight of service so much.

We can report that the Plano Branch is doing well, with

E. M. Wildermuth president and assisted by younger, energetic men as associate officers. Their church is receiving a general repairing inside, with a furnace which was much needed.

Sandwich Branch has passed through several dark days since their church was burned some ten years ago, but brighter days we believe we can see for them, as there is a prospect of renting a German church, so they may have a church home soon. There is also a prospect that this church will soon be for sale. Brother Henry Williams is presiding priest and Brother George Howard associate priest. Brother Williams is a missionary and so the bulk of the work must fall on Brother George, but he is able to do the work. Brethren F. M. Cooper, Joseph Blakeley, C. H. Burr, and L. O. Wildermuth have agreed to assist with the preaching at Sandwich.

Belvidere Branch, while not large, is doing well. Brother William Pinkerton serves as president, and there are other associate officers.

The Dekalb Branch is still very few in number, but still Brother John Cooper and the few maintain Sunday school. We hope to see the work there improve in the near future. Will better understand conditions here at Wilmington after a few days. Brother Earl D. Rogers is presiding priest and an able young man. The Chicago branches I have not yet visited, but we hear good reports of active work being done there by the local brethren and also by Brother Dowker as city missionary. I expect to return to Wisconsin to vote for the man, "that when in danger knows no fear, in darkness feels no doubt," Theodore Roosevelt.

With a prayer to God that while I may not choose aright that God may overrule for the good of our nation.

Your brother and servant,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

The spiritual nature of all of the meetings will long remain in the minds of the Saints, with the earnest desire to heed the instructions and to put into practice the advice and counsel given in them. The cheering assurance of our Father and the associations of those of like precious faith, will help to tide us over many a trying ordeal which we may pass through. Capital City drew the vote of the conference for our next gathering, to be held in June, 1913, at the call of the district president. With the hearty handshake, and the quiver of the lip and the deep sigh at parting, closed one of the best conferences it has been our lot to attend. W. P. Buckley, district secretary and treasurer.

To the Saints in general, and especially of Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas: We wish to publicly announce that we have opened a public reading room in the church parlors at Central. The hours are from 2 until 9.30 p. m., each day. Church periodicals and books are on the tables for use—good magazines, books, etc., are in abundance. This will be a good place for Saints and friends to spend spare moments. Saints having to wait for trains several hours while passing through the city can take an Independence Avenue car at the depot, get off at Lydia Avenue, and you are within one block of the church—a good place while you are waiting. A welcome to all. J. A. TANNER, Pastor of Central Church.

KANSAS, CITY, MISSOURI.

To Whom It May Concern: At the regular branch business meeting of the Lincoln Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Wednesday evening, October 9, 1912, the branch received the report of a court of elders appointed to hear the evidence in the case of James A. Smith on charges of unchristianlike conduct brought against Brother Smith by Elder Edward Rannie. The branch unanimously sustained the findings of the court and the brother was cut off from the church.

Correction.

Bro. A. N. Hoxie writes that an error crept into his recent communication relative to the choir movement. It should have stated that his assistant is Sister Audentia Anderson—not Sister Bertha Anderson as stated. He inadvertently omitted to mention the price of the collection of anthems. It is to be one dollar, which appears to be a reasonable charge in view of its high class.

Request for Prayer.

Sister Nettie Voyce, Saint Louis, Missouri, has been a sufferer from gall stones and various other afflictions for years, and desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be healed.

Died.

WOODS.—The grim reaper has again claimed one of earth's noble Saints. Brother Joseph Woods, of Hornings Mills, Ontario, passed away on October 21, 1912. Born August 7, 1837, in the city of New York; came to Canada in 1855 and was baptized July 10, 1887, by R. C. Evans; ordained a priest March 18, 1888, by Elders J. A. McIntosh and John Wilson. He leaves three sons: Charles, Robert, and Richard, all of Hornings Mills, Ontario. The funeral was a very large one. Elder M. L. Snell was in charge; sermon by G. C. Tomlinson.

BROOKS.—The four-month daughter of Brother and Sister Worthy Brooks died October 21, 1912. The funeral sermon was preached by J. W. Paxton, assisted by Frank Izatt. The Saints of Taylorville extend their sympathy to the parents.

MCARDLE.—Brother W. P. McArdle died September 9, aged 69 years. Born at Stratford, Canada, February 10, 1843; united with the Latter Day Saints at San Diego, California, in 1897, baptized by Brother Griffiths.

MCARDLE.—Sister May McArdle, died June 26, 1911, aged 24 years. Born at Cheboygan, Michigan; baptized at San Diego, California, in 1897, by Brother Griffiths.

ANWAY.—Erastus W. Anway died at Summit, Oklahoma, October 8, at 11.30 a. m., of abscess of the kidneys, at the age of 74 years, 11 months, and 1 day. He was married in 1866 to Mary A. Scott, who survives him, and by whom there were born to him nine children, five of whom are living. He was baptized in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1885, and remained a devoted member till his decease, always desirous of telling the angel's message to others, and by his life sought to influence others aright. He was a man of clean habits and pure motives. The body was brought to Rhodes, Iowa, where lives his son Frank, and at his home the funeral service was held. The sermon was preached by Elder J. F. Mintun, assisted by Elder S. M. Reiste. His body was laid to rest in the Rhodes cemetery.

CODDINGTON.—Brother Joseph Louis Coddington died at Port Hope, Michigan. He was born at Saint Katherine, Ontario, August 27, 1830. In 1859 he came to the township of Canadoc. April 25, 1860, he married Rachel M. Wellman; she, with two children, William G., of McGregor, and Mrs. Calvin Ledsworth, of Port Hope, and several grandchildren, survive. He was a member of the church. He had been on a visit, and died about fifteen minutes after his return. Buried from the Reform church, the Methodist Episcopal choir rendering excellent service. Sermon by Thomas Rawson; interment in Lakeside Cemetery.

Let us kneel!
 God's own voice is in that peal,
 And this spot is holy ground.
 Lord forgive us! What are we,
 That our eyes this glory see,
 That our ears have heard the sound!
 —John Greenleaf Whittier.

Defenders of the Farm.

It is not only as destroyers of insect pests that the birds help us, but as industrious fighters against weeds as well. A million weeds would spring up in a single acre if nature had not devised certain agents to check them, and the most efficient agent is found in seed-eating birds.

Doctor Judd, of the Biological Survey, conveys some idea of what one kind of bird can do when he says that the tree sparrow destroys each year in the State of Iowa alone about 1,750,000 pounds, or 875 tons of weed seed during its winter sojourn. If these seeds had developed into plants the expense to the farmer in getting rid of them by the hoe and the cultivator would be almost prohibitive.—From the Home Nature Study Department of the October Home Progress Magazine.

THE GATHERING.—PART II.

CONSIDERED FROM PHILOSOPHIC, AND RELIGIOUS, AND SCIENTIFIC, STANDPOINTS.

Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.—The words of Jesus.

In our last number we considered the subject of gathering from the historical standpoint. We observed that recognized points of gathering existed under Enoch, the seventh from Adam, for a period of three hundred and sixty-five years; from Abraham to Christ, nearly two thousand years; at Jerusalem, in the apostolic church, for a short time, until the scattering took place; and in Zion on the American Continent, from 1831 until the present time.

THE FORCE OF COHESION.

We now come to another phase of the question. We do not believe that the people are required to gather merely to satisfy the demands of a great God. In this, as in all things, God is in harmony with reason and natural law. We might perhaps be safe in saying that the gathering has a scientific principle at the base of it. One of the strong forces of nature, recognized but not explained by science, is that of cohesion—sometimes called attraction or affinity.

The power of cohesion holds together the atoms that form a steel block so that they can not be broken apart under the blows of a trip hammer—yes, cohesion holds together the atoms that form the trip hammer.

Cohesion holds together the atoms that form the cables that defy the great force of gravitation and suspend Brooklyn Bridge.

Cohesion operates in all liquids and solids. But only among atoms that are of a kindred nature. Atoms of wood and iron, for instance, can not cohere—they may be made to adhere but never cohere.

Carrying this natural, scientific principle over into the spiritual realm, we have the great religious principle that has bound the people of God together as kindred spirits in all ages, a force eulogized in the old hymn:

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

This was the force that bound the atoms of the Christian church so that they could not be broken asunder under the trip hammer of Roman persecution. But it is a force that operates only on atoms of like nature. So that the church and the world can have no fellowship. One may be of the world and merely adhering to the church. In that case he is not really a living part of the living church of Christ. A man is either of the church or of the world.

THE STRENGTH OF UNION.

If we unravel the strands of a steel cable and spread them abroad we can easily break them one by one. But when they are closely twisted and compacted we can not break them, neither as the units nor collectively.

When the Saints are scattered abroad and isolated, obliged to face the world and the flesh and the Devil alone, they are easily broken, unless God gives them extraordinary strength. But when gathered in Zion and firmly united in bonds of fellowship and love and mutual support they can not be broken. In that way the army of the Lord is to become very great and very terrible.

But we must remember that the cable is strong only when the strands are so closely twisted and enmeshed that they are practically one.

And Zion will be strong only when the Saints are so thoroughly united that they are one.

If we are not one we are not his. If we are not one we shall be broken.

The peculiar characteristic of the people of Enoch most emphatically mentioned in the Inspired Version of the Bible was that of unity; they "were of one heart and one mind." For that reason the Lord dwelt with them. They were strong. And the nations stood in awe of them.

The gathered state makes possible cooperation—a principle the true power and worth of which neither the world nor the Saints have begun to realize. A principle that is dangerous when not rightly used and understood, as our senior editor has told us; but one that when rightly used and in harmony with the Holy Spirit and the written word, makes the Saints collectively the light of the world.

AN AVENUE OF ESCAPE FROM CALAMITY.

Jesus and the prophets have told us that great calamities are to come upon the earth in the last days. These are to be signs of the coming of the Son of God. Wars and rumors of wars, pestilences and famines and earthquakes, and disasters on sea and land are to characterize the last act of the great drama of human existence before the ushering in of the millennium.

Now gleams the sword, now rolls the drum;
Insistent shrills the martial fife;
Wars and rumors of wars must come,—
Disaster, sickness, storm, and strife.

These things are to be sent upon the wicked. Are the righteous to escape? No, not if we were to seek our answer in modern, orthodox theology. But the theology of Jesus has a different answer.

Jesus said:

Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.—Luke 21: 36.

The Lord has told us:

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. . . . And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13, 14.

Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour. Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles, flee unto Zion. And let them who be of Judah, flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house.—Doctrine and Covenants 108: 4.

From this it appears that places of refuge are to be prepared. For those among the Gentiles in Zion, the location of which, on this continent, has already been indicated in these articles, as pointed out in the divine revelation. The gathering of the people will serve the purpose of taking them from the reach of these calamities, and also preparing them for the coming of their Lord when he shall come to his temple. Zion is to be the place of safety. God's appointed place.

WORDS OF CAUTION.

Perhaps every presentation of the subject of gathering should be tempered with a word of caution. Twice the Lord has admonished us that our gathering shall not be in haste. The time for haste has not yet come. He has told us that those who gather should have all things prepared before them. Those who go to Independence or Lamoni should not do so without first making preparation. They should have some defined, well grounded idea as to where they are to live and how they are to live. They should counsel with the presiding bishopric or the stake bishopric, as the case may be, or with both.

They should be sure that they are not needed badly where they are at present, in some local branch that may be crippled if they remove. It is not necessary yet to sacrifice the work in outlying districts in the interests of the gathering. If an occasion arises for a hasty gathering, to escape imminent calamity, at the cost of whatsoever sacrifice, the Lord is able to tell us of it through his servant the prophet. In the meantime let no wild rumors disturb us.

Another thing: Those who go to Independence or Lamoni, need not suppose that they will find congregations of perfect men and women. On the contrary they will find men and women like themselves. If they can not bear trials, and will become discouraged and fall away when they see some one in Zion who is doing wrong, it is better for them to stay where they are. But if they are of the temper to bear with the faults of others, as they wish their heavenly Father to bear with their faults, they will find an imperfect people who are struggling toward a much higher plane of righteous living; and by assisting them in this struggle, they themselves will inevitably rise. But never forget that the old proviso still obtains: "There must needs be offenses."

THE ORGANIC BASIS FOR ADMINISTRATION IN A GATHERED STATE.

In the beginning of this article we stated that the Latter Day Saints are practically the only religious people who are teaching the principles of gathering. Indeed they are the only ones who have the organic church structure that will make possible administration in a gathered state.

The organization of the church certainly shows divine wisdom. We of course think at once of the fact that God has set in the church apostles, prophets, evangelists, and so on. We realize that he has organized it for missionary work. But do we sense the fact that its organization is much more complete than that?

Within a very few years of the inception of the work the church was completely organized to perform legislative, executive, judicial and financial functions. The legislative function centers in the General Conference and the General Assembly. The executive function centers in the First Presidency and other general church officers. The financial affairs are administered by the bishopric. The judicial function is performed by the high council and the lower courts, such as stake high councils, bishops' courts, and elders' courts.

Furthermore, to make the organic structure equal to the demands of the gathered state, the Lord has provided for organizations of men engaged in various industries (see Doctrine and Covenants 128, and other sections). These industrial associations, co-operating with the bishopric, may shape the industrial and financial affairs of the people.

So that in all things, both religious and temporal, the Lord has provided an adequate organic basis on which to operate in a gathered state—all this, as he has said, that his people "might be independent above all other people." ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE DEIFICATION OF HUMANITY.

*"Glory to Man in the highest,
For Man in the Master of Things."*

The sentiment of the two lines quoted strikes hard upon the sensibilities of the reverent. But this is not a reverent age.

They serve to close a little pamphlet on "Direct Action," published by the anarchist press (The Mother Earth Publishing Association, New York City). You know what "direct action" is. The McNamaras practiced "direct action" on the Times Building.

The words are ascribed to Swinburne, and no doubt embody the thought of men who are supposed to be much more respectable than anarchists.

Brigham Young tried to put Adam in the place of God, saying that he is our God and the only god with whom we have to do. He also announced the idea that men may become gods by progression and exaltation; that as God is now we shall be, at some dim, distant time in the future.

But this goes a step beyond Brigham Young, and says that man, with all his weaknesses and sins, is a god right now, and the only deity, and highest intelligence in the universe:

*"Glory to Man in the Highest,
For he is Master of Things."*

THE OLD POET AND THE MODERN POET.

Now of course it goes without saying that this kind of teaching is squarely in conflict with the old divine edict. Opposed to the notion of the modern poet, carried away by a little transient human glory, is the sentiment of the inspired ancient poet:

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man,
And maketh flesh his arm,
Whose heart departeth from the Lord.
Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord,
And whose hope the Lord is.

One speaks forth the spirit of the old religious age. The other embodies the blatant spirit of this age of materialism. The old way is the best way.

Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.—Jeremiah 6: 16.

In the days of Grecian mythology, when there were almost as many gods as a man could count in a day, one of the old cynics of those times said: "It is easier to find a god in Athens than it is to find a man." Of course he meant a real man, and perhaps his statement was true.

A modern cynic, speaking of our modern man, says that he is "self-made, and worships his creator." Perhaps that statement also is true.

Business men, and others, solely interested in the development of material things by human effort, under human administration, give no thought at all to God. He does not enter into their consideration. They recognize no law-giving power higher than organized society. They obey no law other than man-made law, and too often do not fully obey that.

Added to these are all classes of infidels and free thinkers who have frankly ruled out of existence, (in their own minds) and recognize no intelligence higher than human intelligence.

MASKED ATHEISM.

Then there are those whose teachings are more masked. Their reasonings are more obscure and devious, but they arrive at the same ultimate conclusion. We refer to men of that growing school of thought who affirm that there are no fixed standards of right and wrong; that the consensus of human opinion makes a thing right or wrong; that there is no higher power that has authority to say that a thing is right or wrong. In line with this thought came Professor Eliot's announcement some years ago that the religion of the future will not be a religion of authority; that it will be such a religion as may meet the general approval of men, not resting on revelation or divine commandment.

Under such a "religious democracy" man might add to, take from, remodel, or make his religion over entirely new. He would be in fact his own lawgiver, revelator, and God,—"Glory to Man in the highest."

It all comes to the same thing in the end,—whether frankly infidel, professedly Christian, admittedly anarchistic, or avowedly law-abiding,—God in abeyance, man in ascendancy. It is the old boast of the French revolutionists in a different form: "Having dethroned the king of France, we will now dethrone the King of heaven."

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST.

We as a people fully realize the futility of such a boast. Human wisdom at this very hour is face to face with problems that confuse the nations and cause consternation in the hearts of thoughtful men. Whether the way out leads through reformation or revolution no one knows. Whether it leads to higher achievement or to racial chaos is a debated question. There never was a time in all history when there was greater need for men to confess the supremacy of God and obey all his laws; yet this age says: "Away with God! We will solve our own problems and make our own laws."

God alone has the solution to our world problems of to-day. Man is not the master of things. He has never learned to rule himself and shape his own destiny.

God has said that as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are his ways higher than man's ways. With all due respect to the notable achievements of man in material things, we still indorse that sentiment, and with the angels sing: "Glory to GOD in the highest."

MAN'S WEAKNESS; GOD'S INFINITUDE.

Man boasts, in the language of Tennyson, that he is the heir of all the ages. And so he is. But we inherit things evil as well as things good. From the days of Adam until to-day each individual has dropped his little pebble of sin into the waters, and to-day society feels the accumulated shock.

But God's heritage is all good. He is light and in him there is no darkness at all. He is love and in him there is no bitterness and malice.

IN THE REALM OF ART.

When we enter the field of man's proudest endeavor and contrast his achievements with the works of God we learn a salutary lesson concerning man's weakness and limitations and God's infinitude and power.

In the realm of art we admire the achievements of the great masters. But after all, when man has spread his pigments upon canvas, the picture, though glowing with the semblance of life, is frozen and dead. The grasses do not ripple in the breeze; the waves do not break upon the beach. But God's great landscapes are full of life, motion, and change. From morning until night and from season to season their wonderful transformations are a perpetual delight.

When the human artist has finished his canvas, decay immediately sets in. Though it may not be observed at once, the colors begin to fade, the canvas begins to rot. But God's great landscapes renew themselves from generation to generation, for ever and for ever.

Man may work for years upon a block of marble, fashioning it with wonderful skill, until when completed it is absolutely perfect in line and proportion, more perfect perhaps than the average human form of this age; but there his work ends. And where his work ends God's greatest work began. For, having completed the perfect form of man, he "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

WONDERFUL INVENTIONS.

We talk about wonderful inventions. They are wonderful, too. But it is said that nearly every mechanical principle that we use is borrowed from nature. For instance, the ball and socket joint is found in the human shoulder; the lens of the telescope exists in the human eye. The despised mosquito has a set of drills and pumps. On my desk there lies a stone picked up on the seashore. It is drilled straight through with a perfectly round hole a quarter of an inch across. Some insignificant worm drilled that hole. And worms drilled holes through solid rocks before man began to drill tunnels. The bee made his perfect cell before man studied geometry. God was the first inventor:

We have great machines that "almost seem to think." But they do not think, and each of them must be presided over by human intelligence. If the man who made the machine is great, how much greater the God who made the man who made the machine. No machine, however complex and wonderful, can for a moment compare as an invention with the human body, with its great citadel of thought and reason in the brain.

SCIENCE.

We have achieved some remarkable victories of science over superstition. The study of science is a search for truth, and as such is a noble calling, and should be a consecrated calling, combining faith and study. But it has not been consecrated. And many great demonstrated truths are mingled with masses of theory. The history of the past leads us to suspect that another generation may witness the exposure of the fallacy of some things that we hold to be absolute scientific truths.

Then there is so much that can not be fathomed! What gave the planets their initial impulse? What force first started their great bulk in motion with such a mighty thrust that they still fly on with undiminished speed? We do not know. To express it crudely, we can not tell whether it was a push or a pull. Science may theorize on this, as on the origin of life itself, but the innermost secrets of these great acts in the opening drama of existence are known to God, and man can never learn them, excepting as God reveals them to him.

THE TRIUMPHS OF MEDICINE.

We hear a great deal about the triumphs of medicine. Many of these triumphs are fictitious, though some are real. There is much said about the permanent stamping out of disease; yet men still suffer and die, and will continue to do so. It is true that some diseases seem to have lost their virulence. Smallpox, for instance, has lost its terror to a large extent. And it is said that this is due to vaccination and quarantine. But a large and intelligent school of physicians replies that vaccination poisons the blood and causes more disease than it prevents. Others deny the whole germ theory. We do not know,—when one physician makes an affirmation another denies it, so that the truth is hard to come at.

But one fact is patent. While some diseases have become less virulent, others come with new terrors, and still others, like cancer, are on the increase.

During the present summer southern California was almost paralyzed with fear due to an epidemic of infantile paralysis. It is true that an attempt was made later to discredit previous statements and make it appear that no epidemic has existed. This effort was evidently in the interest of tourist travel. Men will sacrifice public health in the interest of a harvest of dollars. The president of the board of health of San Bernardino, however, told the writer that such an epidemic actually existed, and that seventy-five per cent of the little victims were left dead or crippled for life.

A more dreadful disease could hardly be imagined. And the physicians know no more than the unborn child what causes it. They have absolutely nothing in the way of drugs or medicines to suggest as a cure or remedy, or even an alleviation.

Overlooking all the gruesome mistakes of the past, when fever patients were strapped to beds and denied life-giving cold water, and all the ghastly mistakes that are still made in the name of science, and giving physicians due credit for all the good that they have done and all the pain they have alleviated, it is still too soon to boast of victory won over the powers of disease.

God is still the great physician. Those doctors who succeed, and bless humanity, recognize that nature heals. It is not the medicine that heals. Medicine and therapeutic measures aid nature—that is all. What is back of nature? God. Through his normal processes of sleep, nutrition, and the upbuilding of wasted tissues, he is all the time healing men, every hour and every day. This is no less marvelous than the miracles that he wrought through Jesus Christ, demonstrating his power, only we think less about it. But it is God's work.

And when the set time comes and we actually approach death, as all must do, how powerless is human wisdom and skill. When President McKinley lay dying, when Queen Victoria lay dying, when the Emperor of Japan lay dying, had there been skill in the world to save them money would have been forthcoming as a ransom for any one of them. But it could not be. Humanity must hang its head in the presence of death.

With God are the issues of life, and of death, as one said very truly many centuries ago. Jesus himself conquered death, and was given the keys of death and the grave. Here perhaps more than elsewhere is revealed the difference between man and God, as regards power.

THE LESSON.

In the wasted and perverted degenerate, his manhood burned out by the fires of evil living, we see man at his lowest. In those great men, such as Lincoln and Gladstone, we see man at his highest

(so far as the world are concerned). The lowest are just a little higher than the Devil himself; the highest are a little lower than the angels. But when we run the scale of humanity, from the lowest to the highest, we do not find anywhere a man who is more than a very imperfect and partial representation of deity. Lincoln, though filled with power and integrity, as we see his caught in that mighty struggle of which he was the storm center, and all but overthrown, is somewhat pathetic. At best he was not a god, but only an instrument in the hands of God, or one who cooperated with God. And the same is true of the best men of all ages and nations.

And that is man's province—to cooperate with God. He can not be a god; but he can be a friend of God. We hold that the highest development of man will be found in recognition of and obedience to God.

That is the lesson. We can still afford to trust God to administer the affairs of man. We can still be thankful that there is a great God to rule the universe, and that it is our privilege to learn of him and keep his commandments. As the wise man said:

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

"Glory to GOD in the highest."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BISHOP EVANS' AT PRINCESS THEATER.—We are pleased to note that Brother R. C. Evans is again holding forth in a most effective manner at the Princess Theater, in Toronto. We append a recent dispatch from that city:

"TORONTO, ONTARIO, November 3, 1912.

"Editors Saints' Herald: Bishop Evans commenced his ninth session in Princess Theater to-night; house packed; hundreds turned away; excellent sermon; splendid attention; prospects never better. Sixty-one in choir; eight in orchestra; thirty-five ushers; questions answered by bishop captivated the audience. Brother Evans in fine form; Saints giving him splendid support. "A. F. McLEAN."

Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to one's sphere;
'Tis the brook's motion,
Clear without strife;
Fleeting to ocean,
After its life.
'Tis loving and serving
The highest and best;
'Tis onward, unswerving,
And this is true rest.

CHARACTER BUILDING.

A sermon preached at San Bernardino, California, October 27, 1912, by George H. Wixom, priest. Written by Bessie Bemis.

My subject this morning is, "Character building and the perfect standard." Permit me to draw your attention to Ephesians 4: 13, where you will find these words: "A perfect man unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

No man can do well; no man can be worthy of success; no man can go forward with energy, confidence, and faith, who is devoid of virtue or of character. Hence, the development of character is paramount when we consider the possibilities of final success. It is the immediate force by which may be realized the highest development.

The way that character is brought into being is by habits which are formed by repeated action; and actions are attempts to realize our inward thought. This is in harmony with the scripture which says: "For as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Proverbs 23: 7. That is to say, if your heart is filled with love, unselfishness, tenderness, and purity, that is the kind of man you will be; you will unconsciously reflect these virtues in your life. That is what Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, was trying to impress upon the mind of the ministry of his time when he said: "Ye are our epistle, written in our hearts, known and read of all men."—2 Corinthians 3: 2.

As in the founding and establishing of the great United States Republic, you have an expression of government that was in the minds of Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Adams, and all that galaxy of brilliant statesmen who took the leading part in that great achievement, so in the Church of Jesus Christ you have the crystallization of Christ's ideas of service to the glory of God and the uplift of the race.

With these thoughts before us, we can realize that much will inevitably depend upon the character we ourselves shall produce, and that in making the start in life it is quite necessary that we obtain correct ideas of character and those things that make for virtue, if we would hope to reach the highest development. So we find that character is the outcome of thoughts, forming themselves into actions, and actions becoming habits; the sum total of our thoughts, actions, and habits make the character by which shall be determined the personality of an individual.

Pure thoughts; how necessary! Thought is the real foundation for the building of character. We are told in Matthew 5: 8, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." If our hearts are pure, our lives will be in harmony therewith, and we shall attain to heights where we can behold divinity in all God's universe. As we come in contact with men who are the highest type of God's creation, we can detect the spark of divinity which God in his love has planted there. When we look upon the weaknesses or mistakes of our brother or sister, our eyes will fill with tears, our hearts with tenderness, and our voice with kindness; and our greatest pleasure will be in doing good.

We are told by the Apostle Paul, 2 Timothy 1: 7: "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." If this is the heritage of those who are the pure in heart, we are therefore warranted in the conclusion that this class of people will be normal, and the greatest happiness will come to them as a result of sweet thoughts, kind words, and pure actions. They will look out upon nature, and see God reflected in the beauty and grandeur of his handiwork. God will be appreciated, not only as a Master Builder, but a Master Painter, the beautiful waterfall, the mountain scene, all filled with life and beauty that is beyond the power of man to imitate.

THE PERFECT STANDARD.

In building a character, the principle is the same as in building a house. We must have a standard of measurement. If the plans and specifications call for a building seventy-five feet high, according to the standard one-foot measure, and the builder would supply all his workmen with so-called one-foot rules, which in fact were only eleven inches in length, the building would never reach the height required in the plan designed by the architect. I remember an incident of this kind. An old acquaintance of mine desired to build a barn. After securing the services of a supposed competent workman, he agreed to pay the standard wages paid for that class of labor. It so happened that this carpenter had in his possession two steel squares; one was an old one and lacked two inches of being the proper length. By accident he picked up the wrong measure, and in measuring the timbers for the rafters, he made a mistake of several inches, which he did not detect at the time. He proceeded to cut the timbers for the proper length, and after cutting all the rafters, he found that they were cut too short. My friend arrived and found out a mistake had been made. Besides refusing to pay the man for his work, he forced him to take the lumber that he had spoiled.

The Lord was quite particular in regard to things of this kind, so he gave the Israelites a law which reads as follows: "Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have."—Deuteronomy 25: 14, 15.

If the Lord is so particular in regard to temporal things, how much more necessary it is to have a perfect and just measure when it comes to building a character for eternity. A standard of weight or value becomes important as the value of the thing measured increases. If I am buying land in the city at ten thousand dollars per front foot, I will demand that the foot rule with which it is measured shall be accurate. If I am buying grapes at eight dollars per ton, a few pounds one way or another does not matter; but if I am buying gold dust, I want the scales to be accurate.

In matters which affect the eternal welfare of men, it becomes all important that we have an exact, unvarying standard to determine what is right and what is wrong, both in belief and in conduct. Our text gives us the true measure for human conduct: "A perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." I want to ask you all a question right here: How many present here this morning have adopted the true standard? "The measure of the fullness of Christ," as the measure of his life? We do not ask, Who has attained the fullness of Christ? but, Who has actually adopted this perfect and true measure or standard?

We usually have our own gauge or standard to measure up to. We often judge by public opinion. If a community says a certain thing is wrong or bad, though it may be the burning truth of heaven and approved of God, yet men will avoid it, and look upon those who accept it, with suspicion and contempt. The trouble is, the true measure is forgotten, and human standards are substituted, all of which come far short of the perfect one.

A church member will measure himself and his neighbor by his particular creed. If he conforms to it, all is satisfactory, and if his neighbor differs from him, the neighbor of course is wrong. The creeds are not all alike. Some are long; some are short; some, in fact all, may have some good things in them; but the great trouble is, they eliminate too much truth. Therefore, with such a standard it is impossible to reach to the stature and fullness of Christ.

The moral man measures himself by the lives of the church members who are only in the process of development, and he says to himself: "I believe I am living as good a life as that member; therefore I am all right." He is like the man who beheld the partly finished house, and supposing it was all completed, remarked: "I can build a house as well, without any plans or specifications or even a rule. I won't have to make any special effort, either." He proceeded to build a house. After it was finished, at best it was only the half-finished building, an evidence of failure and a waste of time and money. Because he was using an imperfect standard, he was unable to finish his work. He had not noticed that the half-finished building he took for a pattern had in the meantime been completed, according to the plans as drawn out by the architect. Just so with the Christian. He has his mind centered on the perfect measure. As he grows, he develops a character that finally will become perfect like the pattern, while those who take the weak, partly developed Christian character as their measure will never reach the highest point of development. Jesus tells us in Luke 14: 29, "After he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him."

Jesus himself used the standard which had been determined when he was with God in the beginning. That standard is set forth in the gospel which he came to teach. See Romans 2: 16, which reads as follows: "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." The character of Jesus was a shining example of the strict application of the rule of measurement as set forth in the gospel. He used no false measure, and as a result, the final product was perfect. The Apostle Paul could sense the importance of using the perfect and just measure. He calls attention to a command given to Moses: "See," saith he, "that thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee in the mount."

The wise Master Builder, when the plan was drawn up, provided that in the church of Christ should be found the Spirit of God, which would be with the church to strengthen, guide, and inspire all along the way. One of the duties of the Holy Spirit that was promised the Saints was to reveal the mind and will of God to his children. As a church, we claim that promise which was made by Jesus to his disciples when he said: "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."—John 15: 26. Also the promise made by the Apostle Peter, while speaking under the power of the Holy Ghost: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2: 38, 39.

Now, I want to ask the question, Does the modern orthodox Christian church measure up to this standard? Do they enjoy the presence of the Holy Spirit as it was promised to all believers in Christ? We are told that they do, and that the Spirit of God is with them; that they have the Holy Ghost, the abiding Comforter. I am interested, and I ask: "Do the fruits, the gifts, the signs, follow you, just as they did the early Christians?" The reply is made, "Do you refer to the gifts of tongues, healing, prophecy, miracles?" And I answer, "Yes," to which they reply: "You do not understand the Scriptures, for there are to be no prophets now. These miraculous gifts are all done away; they are no longer needed. We have outgrown these things."

Now, we are all aware that wood and coal are very high in price in this country. If a dealer should advertise first-class coal for eight dollars per ton, we would put in an order at once for enough to supply us for the winter. After a load is delivered, we undertake to build a fire in the evening, to keep the house comfortable and warm. We would try to get this coal to burn, but to no avail. What would you think about it? You would at once ring up the dealer and tell him that his coal was no good, and that it was of no service to you. How different in spiritual things! When the early Christian received the Holy Ghost, we are told in the Scriptures that they spake with new tongues; miracles were wrought; the sick were healed. See Acts 8: 13-19; 6: 11; also Acts 3: 7.

What has brought about the change? If the modern churches have the Holy Ghost with them, where are the results to show it? Are you satisfied with the claim,—with no results?

In the early Christian church, God spoke to the saints when they needed instruction and enlightenment. See Revelation 2: 7, 11, 17, which read as follows: "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches," etc.

How things have changed! But we ask the question, "Has God changed?" On this question he answers: "I am the Lord, I change not."—Malachi 3: 6. Then it must be man who is changed, and who has forgotten the perfect standard which God has given that we might keep the mark of our high calling ever before us.

When one of the modern churches was confronted with a problem as to what day to keep as a Sabbath day, the question could not be settled satisfactorily to all, hence the church split on that question. Another church was confronted with the question as to whether it was proper to use musical instruments in the church service. Not being able to settle it, the church divided. Thus the slavery question. One church was divided. There was no voice heard among them saying, "He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

When the church I represent was confronted with these questions, an appeal was made to our loving Father in heaven, and he answered the prayers of his Saints. The voice of inspiration was heard once more, and the church moved forward with unity and power.

We do not claim perfection for the Saints of Christ's church, but we claim perfection for our measure and standard. The Saints now are like the saints in Paul's day. Hear what he has to say on this point: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect, but I follow after,—forgetting those things which are behind; and reaching forth unto those things which are before. I press towards the mark for the prize."—Philippians 3: 12-14.

We have a beautiful example of God's method of dealing with his children, in his endeavor to encourage us to stand up on our feet as men and develop the talents that he has so lovingly bestowed upon us. We refer to Deuteronomy 32: 11: "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings." And so the Lord makes our surroundings unpleasant for us at times in order to cause us to move out and test our strength, like the young eagle. It tries to fly, but its wings are not yet strong, so it soon tires and starts to fall; but the mother bird catches it on her great strong wings and lifts it tenderly back into safety. In order for us to develop and grow, we must exercise that we might be strong.

In our church work, it is natural to lean on others. When we are confronted with a task that looks hard to perform, we are anxious to throw the responsibility onto others, because of our lack of confidence and experience. I call to mind a dream I once had, which I believe was given me of the Lord to show me that I should lean on the strong arm of the Master instead of the arm of flesh. I fell asleep one night and thought I was attending a lecture. It was in a large building, and the room was crowded with people. It seemed the lecturer had been denouncing the Latter Day Saints and the Church of Christ with the most bitter language. At the close of the meeting, he invited any representative of the Latter Day Saints who might be present to defend their cause. I looked around to see if any of our elders were there to respond. As I seemed to be the only member present, I arose and started to go onto the platform. I remember saying to myself as I looked over that vast throng: "Oh! how I wish that some elder were here to defend our work." I reached the rostrum; just as I started to speak, I awoke. At that time, I made a resolve that I would make an honest endeavor, with the help of my Savior, to prepare myself to defend this latter day work whenever and wherever the occasion demands.

In conclusion, let me ask you, What will be your standard, or measure? Will you be content with your development if you compare favorably with those of your associates? Or will you always keep in mind the measure which is perfect and just? While we are earnestly engaged in building a character for eternity, I trust that we shall prove to be wise builders like the one referred to by Jesus, in Matthew 7: 24: "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house on a rock."

May God help us to develop in character that we shall reflect Christ in all we do or say; that we shall be unselfish, kind, and loving, in thought, word, and deed, is my prayer.

I thank you for the attention and support you have given me this morning.

EVOLUTION.

Truly, of theories there seems to be no end. Strangeness of theories seems to have been lost, except the strangeness of the human mind in its strange tenacity to cling to useless and unreasonable theory.

The claim that all animate life—existence—originated in the lowest possible form, and developed by very slow processes, "according to certain forces" until the highest possible forms were attained, is a guess of some. But this is only a guess,—a mental dream. What was at the origin of things? Who, among scientists, noted life in its beginnings? Who saw it take its lowest forms? Not science. It was not there; could not be. Intelligence has to exist to recognize scientific operation. Intelligence discovers scientific principles, and may apply some, does apply some, to life's uses; but science has no tale or theory to tell as to the first great cause of things, or their origin. It was not there; does not pretend to have been. After learning to apply to human use electricity, it is unable to tell what it is, or its origin, or the how of its origin. How, then, can it assuredly tell us the origin of life, light, and form, certainly? Outside of revelation from certain fountains of superior intelligence than man, who can certify to us the truth? Who can testify, knowingly, positively, that the human race, in form and origin, was other than what we see them to be now? Why not the so-called natural science of evolution bear man up to the greater forms of mental and physical conditions of greatness? Why need it stop where it has? Has it designed us (man) to stop just where we are as its decreed arena? Why not lift man on and up to cherubim?

But science knocks not at the door of ultimates. What has it to say of man in future worlds? Nothing. Science alone ventures no prophecies as to man's condition beyond the vale of death's mysteries. None. But mind, in lower conditions and relations, does, by revelation, reach up to higher mental ideas and learns of higher conditions and achievement. But this is not done only by what intelligence recognizes as revelation received from the superior mind. That is demonstrable to man and is known truth.

How utterly strange that anyone who thinks consistently with science should conclude longer with Darwin, or the late Professor Foster, or Martin. Note further what the great Apostle Paul said of our days (See 1 Timothy 3: 16; 6: 20, 21; 2 Timothy 3: 4; Matthew 23: 16, 19.)

Professor Foster, of Northwestern University, Chicago, has sent the following broadcast, of late:

We must wean ourselves from the habit of picturing the God of the universe as the Bible God of the book of Genesis. The word god is a symbol, having symbolic validity only.

We may not see in Jesus an absolutely perfect model. May not one deny that Jesus lived and be well pleasing unto God?

The doctrine of the fall is blasphemous against God and man. We are not fallen angels, but developed animals.

Religion belongs to the higher achievements of the soul, which has the capacity to develop religion from within and not to receive it as a donation from without. The soul is competent without God.

Modern technique, under the influence of the family, the school and society, must take the place of regeneration and sanctification.

In our new world all prophecy must be relegated to the clairvoyant, the astrologer, the card reader and, perhaps to the spiritualist.

The only prayer we have a moral right to pray is precisely the prayer which after all we ourselves must answer.

The church is a burglar, an intruder, practicing squatter sovereignty in territories where she has no constitutional right.

The clerical derives an advantage from religion and forges weapons out of it to keep men in bondage.

To require assent to the thoughts and commandments of sacred scripture, is to lead into sin. The Bible is the dried and petrified remains of religion.

The bible of humanity is greater and richer than the Bible of the Christian.

(See "Ten fundamentals of Christianity," in The Functions of Religion, by Professor Foster; also Lectures of Professor Alfred W. Martin on the Evolutionism of Darwin, and Darwin's Doctrine of Religious Belief. Professor Martin is associate leader of New York Ethical Culture Society.)

In a recent lecture in Chicago, Professor Martin stated that "Darwin did an inestimable service when he gave mankind an encouraging, inspiring conception of their origin, in place of the utterly discouraging one that had been held for centuries. I would rather be ashamed of my ancestors than have my ancestors ashamed of me; nay more, I would honor them and win my own self-respect by improving on their quality."

Still ringing the changes on the old, imaginative, unscientific, unproved fulminations of the modern so-called guessing scientists,—"science so called." None of them ever read even of any idea of creation that has gone past the statement in the Book of Genesis: "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind; and it was so." And we may add, in truth, It is so. Principles never change. Scientific principles never have changed. Each class of living creatures now bring forth, by the law of reproduction, after bringing forth after their own kind; and what is once demonstrably scientific, is

ETERNALLY SCIENTIFIC.

Scientific principles change? How? Where? When? Which? Be uncertain? Fail sometimes?

All this blare about evolution then, and ceasing to be evolution now, is wind. "Kinds" began by creation, as the Book of Genesis states: "And God made the beasts of the earth after his kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind! And God saw that it was good." Everything reproduces its kind, and is not some other kind. This is science now, and if science now, it always science, and monkey never brought forth man, does not now, and never will till scientific principles do change! If principles change, substitute, or cease—go out of existence—are they scientific? When did the fixed principles of creating everything to reproduce after its kind and undeviatingly as declared in Genesis, destroy, subvert, and nullify the so-called but undemonstrable principles of natural evolution, that are said to bring forth everything; "kind" or no "kind"?

It is not very "inspiring and encouraging" to us to be told that the science of the origin of man and things evolute or evolve man from another specie and kind or lower animal than himself, but now the scientific principles have changed to a definiteness that nullifies those of evolution, and that in fact science is an uncertain quantity. Evolution has been outgrown, and now things are subject to the law of reproduction. Science is nullifying itself—changing.

The operations of a world creation is now a demonstration, a supernatural demonstration, for science does not contradict Genesis, but all natural law testifies to it, and all is confusion, and disease when we get out of harmony with natural, scientific law. Scientific law elevates and presumes in all intelligent realms. This demonstrates that natural law as now existing, is based on eternal, unchangeable principles. And as principles are eternal, evolution is a mere theory, originating with man only, and like other mere human theories, as intelligence increases, will cease to be believed by men.

Principles do not evolve of themselves. Laws do not exact themselves. If so, which of them? When? Where? Principles are, may be discovered, may be used, are used. But who systematized them in physics, astronomy, mathematics? Who ordained them in governments, human and divine? Who is it that now tries to rule the great Creator and creation and his Book of Genesis out of intelligent existence at this late day? Those who, now, in the face of creation and its law of reproduction, where nothing is evolved any higher or different from "its kind," are forced to admit evolution untrue, or that scientific principles change?

INTELLIGENCE UNCREATED.

Worlds exist. Governments exist. Things are. Created things are. Principles and laws are, and they preserve and govern. All these imply intelligence. Their system and order and perpetuity imply intelligence. Governments, laws, principles, and order do not evolve, save in the sense that the human mind develops. And in this, as experience demonstrates, the undeveloped mind is dependent on the developed mind, the preendowed mind. Institutes of learning are, for this great reason, instituted among men. Intelligence preexisting, is in those schools placed in the receptive, undeveloped minds of children. Nothing existing that displays intelligence exists independently of the all-wise Creator and Designer. The watch, the motor, the engine, and all machinery, are the results of the operation of intelligence. The clouds, planets, and the circuits thereof, all imply intelligence, with all worlds moving in their courses.

In the light of these observations, the statement following seems quite self-evident:

And again, verily I say unto you, That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willet to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still. All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions. All beings who abide not in those conditions, are not justified; for intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence; wisdom receiveth wisdom; truth embraceth truth; virtue loveth virtue; light cleaveth unto light; mercy hath compassion on mercy and claimeth her own; justice continueth its course, and claimeth its own; judgment goeth before the face of him who sitteth upon the throne, and governeth and executeth all things; he comprehendeth all things, and all things are before him; and he is above all things, and in all things, and is through all things, and is round about all things: and all things are by him, and of him; even God, for ever and ever. And again, verily I say unto you, He hath given a law unto all things by which they move in their times, and their seasons; and their courses are fixed; (italics mine) even the courses of the heavens, and the earth; which comprehend the earth and all the planets; and they give light to each other in their times, and in their seasons, in their minutes, in their hours, in their days, in their weeks, in their months, in their years: all these are one year with God, but not with man. The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God. Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? Behold, all these are kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, He hath seen him: nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not; nevertheless, the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God; being quickened in him, and by him. Then shall ye know that ye have seen me, that I am, and that I am the true light that is in you, and that you are in me, otherwise ye could not abound.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8-12.

The universe of created worlds and all intelligence therein; governed by law and preserved by law in the experience of intelligent man. The recognition of law, being governed and preserved by law, is not an evolution from the mineral, the vegetable, the animal kingdoms, nor from the uncivilized man. The teachings of Jesus Christ are not an evolution from natural law, nor the law of Moses, nor Mohammedanism. It was anterior to both. And nature, natural law, as found in man's nature, rebels against it. For instance see the statements of the authors whom we have hereinbefore quoted. The earthly governmental law, is designed to preserve man only in our mortal sphere, as between man and man.

The language we have quoted from Doctrine and Covenants 85 is that given through a young man, Joseph Smith, when only twenty-seven years of age,—in 1832,—and is as high above the sentiments of Professor Foster or Mr. Martin as divine inspiration is above the thoughts of unskilled man. They lead the mind out to behold the works of an infinite intelligence in the creation of worlds, their government and preservation, the maintenance of their system, and all designed for the existence and development and exaltation of divine and human intelligences now and in ceaseless ages to come, while they are vaguely wondering whether man came back from the blank and absolute absence of life and light and intelligence, by protoplasm, through a monkey, to a man! And while denying what we now know in science by creation and the unexceptionable law of reproduction and creation, all based on principles unchangeable.

AS TO THE FALL OF MAN.

We see them falling all around us day by day, from the loveliness, sinlessness, and purity of the virgin babe, to the conditions of murderers, thieves, suicides, and reprobates. Why deny the fall of man when we see him sink from righteousness, civilization, and purity? And their position but breaking down, if possible, the only stay to even an endurable life here. Responsibility to law, man, and God is not an emanation from the monkey, by evolution. The opposite of these is man's inheritance, if from the monkey.

In the light of all the human family knows about evolution, the converting of a monkey into man would be a greater miracle than his creation by the Infinite One. Man's natural tendency is continually downward from the ideal found in Christ's doctrine. This the world bears witness undeniably to.

THEORY OF ENVIRONMENT.

Evolution by environment in the natural world is contradicted by Moses and his works. His rise from a slave's environment and such abject slavery as Egypt developed, never evolved Moses. Why did not the environment there evolve Israel into Moses men? Why not have made them all leaders in science, government, and law, such as Moses was? He rose to the ability now unquestioned in the face of and in spite of ever opposing environment. Environment there depressed and degraded Israel, but defying its depressing, degrading opposition thereto, he came the other way. He not only did that, but he pulled all Israel out of its meshes with the influence of a nation—Egypt and their king opposed to him and Israel.

Environment in this world has generally opposed the upward, morally and spiritually.

Where was Abraham Lincoln as to environment when the light of the world burst first on his vision? How did he evolve from his then environment? In the then Kentucky and southern Indiana (the writer's native State)? Like Moses, Mr. Lincoln fought and gained a signal victory over what environment offered to do for him. Its scientific principles, so-called, offered naught but opposition to his chosen course. He broke the scientific fetters and came out free where galling scientific fetters of poverty and ignorance said no.

ENVIRONMENT OF CHRIST.

Jesus Christ was born in the midst of a people, the Jews, limited—save when in bondage—to a land not to exceed six hundred miles square; an agricultural people almost exclusively. From the nature of their law, they did not impart from their neighbor nations laws, customs, or teachers, a code of laws locally applied. Their teachers, lawyers, economists, and religions, were of themselves. By their law they were forbidden to follow the customs of neighbor people lest they lower, degrade, and corrupt themselves. The Christ of Nazareth was out of this land only once, when a babe, in Egypt. He grew to manhood almost entirely in the little town of Nazareth, in Galilee. Worked in a carpenter's shop during his more developed childhood, youth and manhood, till thirty years of age. His schooling was mainly from lessons gleaned from the law of Moses. He did not go abroad to consult the schools and oracles of the nations of other and diverse civilizations, like many scholars have done, and added nothing additional or new to the world after doing so. Yet, through this young Nazarene came in his age a system of religious law, than which none other is so reasonable; so full of real spiritual light; so full of actual results and promise. The only system based on clear principles demonstrable in human nature when applied. His is a system of religion and ethics that when men take it at its own terms is suited to the absolute solution of their regeneration. It changes man's purpose, turns him from a path, a course, which pursued callouses men's lives and souls in sin, to a course of life that elevates them to tender-heartedness and reverence to the all-wise Creator; to a life of refraining from sin and degradation and savagery to civilization, purity, the love of all that is good and upright. A life of reverence to God, and the Christ, a life of doing good to all men and not evil. That system if loved, lived, and applied, eliminates lying, drunkenness, profanity, adultery, murder, and every other evil that corrupts, degrades, and disrupts society. All who doubt this should try it faithfully and see. But unregenerate society says no. We, the environment of society's nature, man's nature rebels against it. See?

The law that Jesus promulgated was not derived from his environment. It is a law which if faithfully applied, rises above the environment that permeates man. "If I grow to its development," says man, "I can see I will be responsible to God, Christ, and my fellow man to keep, observe, and do it, at my moral, religious, future peril. And while I will gain the honor, respect, approbation of the eternal Creator, his Son, and his children, I will as truly lose the approbation and respect of the corrupt part of the world. I can see by man's past experiences, my own, by the nature of that law applied to my life, that this is undeniably true."

Here comes the heredity and environment again that surrounded the Christ, when this law was being revealed by the Christ nineteen hundred years ago.

Nothing found in his heredity or environment ever evolved this gospel system. This world never, in all the countless ages, of itself evolved the law Christ gave to the world. The world never gave what it refuses to receive; or that which it refuses to comprehend.

GOVERNMENT.

Intelligence in dealing with its kind, governs, but does not dominate or tyrannize. It may terrorize, point out the results of transgression of law, but does not in governing intelligence, coerce the will. Intelligence sometimes coerces brutishness, where attempted brutishness is not susceptible to enlightened intelligence. But enlightened intelligence submits to law willingly because it sees it is for the best interests of the government and all concerned. Where this is the case love and respect lead in the observance of law and government. Brute force dominates and forces submission; this is all animal nature has to impart, offer, or evolve; for it can not give what it has not.

The possibilities of enlightened government are, in fact, created in the faculties or organization of the human mind. In all grades of animal creation, and even in uncivilized tribes, no government develops as that which comes to civilized man from higher sources than himself. No government, such as those carried to Africa, ever originated with Africa's native tribes. The highest forms of government have originated where the principles of the gospel (not human creed) prevailed most untrammelled, but not where what is called church government has been allowed to dominate political, that is, civil, human government. Just law, strictly observed, intelligently and strictly executed, builds, evolves, "preserves," and maintains government. Free education in scientific, economic, civil justice, and righteousness, with the utmost toleration within "bounds and conditions," reason, intelligence, has always been demonstrated to give the results desired. When men train to do contrary to justice, mercy, and right, chaos, tyranny, partiality, inequality, and disorganization rise and dominate.

This experience of the human race demonstrates that the inferior and less developed mind is dependent on the higher developed mind. It must lead in the prices of development.

The experience of the human race in intelligent government utterly refutes the so-called theory of natural evolution. Intelligence and government are derived from sources above, where it may dwell and govern, and not below.

Isaiah, the prophet, when looking along down the ages of our time, saw this controversy, and exclaimed:

Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?—Isaiah 29: 16.

Surely Isaiah did not inherit the power from the monkey to foretell so long ago that which is here declared would come to pass and have it fulfilled by Professors Darwin and Spencer.

How could our Savior have derived from his surroundings or the law the sentiment: "Resist not evil"? The very highest the law could suggest was, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." The law did not prohibit a man of one religion from feeling hard or being intolerant toward a religion differing from it. But the gospel says, "Resist not evil." "If a man smite thee on one cheek, turn the other also," religiously considered. "Love your enemies"; "pray for those who despitefully use you"; but nature, unregenerated by the gospel, says the man who prays for his enemies is a "hypocrite." See speech of Robert G. Ingersoll. He being an unregenerated man, in the gospel sense, did not know what a man wrought on by the gospel, word, authority, and the Holy Ghost combined, might be able to do, and not be a hypocrite. Hypocrisy is an evolution from the environment and heredity below, and not from the higher source.

The Bible, or humanity alone, might teach—does teach hypocrisy, lying, and graft.

Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, idolatry, lasciviousness, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do these things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

But notice the converse of these:

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law.

We know, however, that the two classes of works here contrasted by Paul "are contrary the one to the other," and their roots do not spring from the seed sown, but from opposite sources. How came the apostle to know of these opposites if natural evolution be true? (See Galatians 5: 17-24.) If it were true he could only know of these degrading works of the flesh by experience alone. The fruits of the flesh are the result of unregenerated nature.

INTELLIGENCE IMPLIES PERSONALITY.

We do not use the word personality in a figurative or symbolic sense, but literally. Intelligence does things; it creates, forms, and fashions scientific objects, as machinery of all kinds, and governments all show design, as the watch, engine, automobile, and man. But intelligence in the abstract, unconnected with personality, is not manifest, is unknown. Mind is the sum of all personal attributes. Attributes do not exist independently of that personality to which they belong. No evading this conclusion in fact. Intelligence has its source, and that source is the mind. Mind is not floating around in space like the air or electricity. The source of intelligence leads back to mind, and mind is from a personal being. Without personal being there is no intelligence. From this basis it is impossible to deny the existence of a personal God. Symbols may represent, or to a degree illustrate, being—personal existence, but without the literal thing, fact, event, or person represented, the symbol, or figure, could not be. Imagination can not reveal anything not existing. It may add imaginative features to things that really exist, as a beast with two or seven heads, but imagination never revealed a beast with one head till the actual beast existed and was seen. No imagination ever created or revealed God. No false god could exist without the true God, any more than son without father, or counterfeit money without the genuine. Each genuinely existing thing was made or created according to scientific principles. No question that can be raised, or imagined, relative to the all-wise Creator, the Infinite One, a personal source of infinite intelligence, can shake this position without denying the operations and results of the operations of intelligence, and that would be to deny its existence. Can anyone look at a watch and note its purpose, which is to measure time, and deny the personality exercising the intelligence designing and creating it? Who can consider the sun in the heavens and ponder his office work of measuring time, giving light, heat, and attraction, of exercising the principles, centripetal and centrifugal forces, which hold the earth and other orbs in their orbits, and gives us times and seasons, and without which life and living creatures could not exist, and then deny that infinite intelligence does not demonstrate beyond a legitimate reason, that that intelligence does emanate from a personal being? Who stored the infinite treasures of intelligence in those worlds around and above us, that is gathered by man from there? These treasures of intelligence come from without the mind of man, to him.

There is, then, a definitely powerful, knowing, wise, just, truthful, merciful, all-loving intelligent God and Creator. How rapidly will the human-shaped islanders mentally absorb the ideas of a creator; responsibility to him; of a moral life; a future life; a future happy state of existence; when communicated to him by the mind previously endowed? Leave him without these ideas, and from no cause will they evolve from below him.

"The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God."

A LITTLE LAY SERMON.

An impressive exhibition of courageous service was given space in the daily press last week—not as much space, of course, as that occupied by the Roosevelt incident, for that mysterious standard of measurement known as "news value" magnifies and minimizes the same elemental quality according to the circumstances under which it is displayed and especially according to the person who displays it. While Colonel Roosevelt was lying wounded in Mercy Hospital in Chicago there was lying dead in Gary, Indiana, another man—one who is entitled to a niche in the immortal pantheon of heroism if any man ever was. He was only a "newsboy," but he performed the act of sacrifice which cost him his own life. He was only a cripple, but no stalwart soldier on the battlefield ever did a braver deed. He said when he sacrificed his crippled and useless limb to save the life of a little girl that he had no one to care whether he lived or died, but ten of thousands of people "care," and his funeral is to be the obsequies of a hero. He said just before he died that he "guessed he was some good—after all," and he died like the real hero he was. Over the poor misshapen and mutilated body no towering shaft of marble, bronze, or granite may rise. Kings and queens and the great ones of earth will not send messages of sympathy and condolence. Wreaths bearing illustrious names will not be laid upon his coffin. A nation's tears will not water the spot beneath which he sleeps. Eloquent orations will not be pronounced from a thousand pulpits and platforms in his memory.

But he will live in the tears of the little circle that bounded the story of his sacrifice and marked the confines of his heroism—the heroism that has received the divine tribute—"Greater love hath no man than this, that he gave his life for his friend." This modest hero, who "guessed he was some good—after all," gave his life, not to save a friend, but one he did not know. He was one who "lived in a house by the side of the road and was a friend of man." He saw a human being in need of what he could give and he gave it, even though it was all he had to give—the uttermost. That is life's real heroism and William Rugh, the crippled "newsboy," deserves to have his name carved high on the highest columns that bear the stories of the world's heroic deeds.

There are many things which the great of earth can do that the lowly of earth can not. But when the great verities are faced, when men are stripped of all the artificial trappings of social insignia, when all the strata of social status are reduced to the one great level of the common plane, when all stand revealed in the universal integument of humanity, when none can tell from the differentiating distinctions of the world's markings which is the prince and which the peasant, the lowest share the same glories of opportunity as the highest. The same high noblesse oblige rests upon all, and no matter how high or how low, how rich or poor, men are judged before that stern, supreme tribunal of human deeds by the same unyielding law—the mandate of the universal manhood, that is no respecter of persons.

The world does not always stop to reflect on the ethics of the deeds it applauds. It looks instinctively to one class to uphold the traditions attaching to that class, and from another it expects little or nothing. William Rugh belonged to the latter. A crippled newsboy has often proved himself just as brave as the most gallant warrior whose breast is agleam with medals, but somehow or other the world looks to the warrior to perform the noblest deeds. William Rugh was probably the last one to whom the world would have turned at a time when it needed a real hero. He belonged to the "barnyard brood" of the race, among which the eaglets are supposed to be few but are really more numerous than the world realizes. For it is sternly true that the great majority of the people who inhabit the earth belong to the barnyard rather than the eyrie. Most of them live the humdrum, modest, plodding life of every day, feeding and otherwise ministering to the world, fulfilling the small destiny of the multitudinously indispensable. The world's armies are composed chiefly of privates and the shoulder straps belong to the few, but many of the generals come from the ranks, and, analogously, though the race could not get along in the droning times of peace without the barnyard broods, it does not look after eagles among them, yet oftener finds them there.

In some such way did William Rugh, as does every lowly hero, prove that though his social habitat and status was the barnyard, he had the eagle heart and the eagle soul, that manifest themselves in the crisis, large or small, which thrill the whole world or thrill only the little patches that are called cities, states, or nations. The saving fact is that, although the hard laws of social and economic environment condemn the vast majority to the barnyard, yet every human life may grow the eagle wings that will raise it to the hero height. A great many of the barnyard stay there all their lives because they wait for the great opportunities. But to all come chances, even though the humblest, to spread the wings of service that is often the very essence of heroism. The lowly soul that hugs and loves the earth and never tries to rise is the lowliest of all, for it is content to belong to the barnyard brood for ever, and never feels the pricking of the uplifting wings. The real hero is he who builds his eyrie in the barnyard if need be, but is the eaglet notwithstanding.—Kansas City Journal.

A PRIMER OF THE BALKAN WAR.

What nations are at war in the Balkans?

The free kingdoms of Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro, and Greece have formed a coalition against Turkey and their combined armies are now in the field warring with the Turkish army. In addition to those four nations the Christians of Albania, a Turkish province, are in revolt against Turkey and many of her fighting men have joined the allied armies of the four Christian states. Albania lies upon the eastern shore of the Adriatic Sea, with Greece on the south, Serbia on the northeast, and Montenegro on the northwest. One half the population of Albania are Mohammedans; the other half are Christians, equally divided between the Greek and Latin churches. These latter have never been conquered by the Turks. They are the political anarchists of the Balkans. They live in mountain fastnesses and are wonderful fighting men. A large part of the population of Macedonia are also Christians and many of these have joined the allied armies against their masters, the Turks.

What is the numerical strength of the two armies in the field?

Turkey in Europe has a war strength of 831,000 men and 762 large guns. Her navy consists of two battleships, three cruisers and forty-five destroyers and other ships. In addition Turkey in Europe has reserves she can call upon which would raise her army to one million men. She has also her great Asiatic province to draw from. The strength of the combined armies of the allies that are fighting Turkey is 685,000 men, 848 guns, four battleships, three cruisers, and forty-six destroyers and gunboats. These are divided as follows: Greece, 100,000 men and 152 guns; Bulgaria, 325,000 men and 372 guns; Servia, 230,000 men and 264 guns; Montenegro, 30,000 men and sixty guns. The navy of the allied Balkan states is all Grecian except ten gunboats owned by Bulgaria. In addition to these forces of the regular army of the allies must be taken into account the Christians of Turkey who will join with them in numbers that are not known.

If the magnitude of a war is to be determined by the number of men in the field and by the fury of its fighting, the present Balkan conflict must be counted a big war.

The five nations engaged in hostilities are small and neither rich nor powerful as European nations go. Nevertheless, they have put more men in the field than were ever engaged in any preceding European war, not even excepting the Franco-Prussian War. In point of numbers engaged the Adrianople campaign alone dwarfs by comparison most of the Napoleonic campaigns. If the reports of the battle of Kirk-Kilisseh are at all accurate, the Turkish losses in killed and wounded and prisoners were greater in their total than either Napoleon or Wellington had men at the Battle of Waterloo.

The world long looked forward to this struggle in the "cockpit of Europe" as to a thing inevitable. Yet the popular belief was that when it came it would prove a little war, which might have big consequences. As compared with what would follow should any of the greater nations become involved, the present combat may indeed be entitled to the appellation of a little war, but measured by the standard of the past it looms up to great proportions.

Why are they fighting?

For centuries the conflict has waged in the Balkans on account of creed, race, and political antagonism. The flame of war has flashed forth or subsided as the Turk has struggled to preserve his European empire, or as his would-be despoilers have been held in check by the great powers.

Each of the four states was once a part of the great Ottoman Empire that reached almost to the gates of Vienna. Through their own insistent struggles and finally through the intervention of the powers, they obtained their independence, but the boundary lines that were drawn to form these states were made by diplomacy and the expediency of statecraft and in no case did they include all the people that belonged to the different nationalities.

The great break-up of the Turkish possessions began in 1864 at the treaty of San Stefano, which reduced Turkey in Europe to Albania, Eperus, Thessaly, and the Southern Thrace and created the large Bulgarian principality.

But the great powers feared that Bulgaria would be a Russian dependency and by the later treaty of Berlin Bulgaria was reduced in size, large tracts were returned to Turkey and the complete independence of Servia, Roumania and Montenegro were recognized. The independence of Greece, won in 1829, was recognized by the treaty of Berlin.

In 1880 the powers forced the Turks to give Dulcigno to Montenegro and the Turks got Plava and Gusinye.

In 1886 Bulgaria and East Rumelia were united.

In 1897, following the Greco-Turkish War, Crete and a part of Thessaly were given to Turkey and four years ago Austria, taking advantage of the revolution in Turkey, annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The present war grows out of the broken promises of the Young Turks who four years ago deposed Sultan Abdul Hamid and established a constitution and a parliament. They promised great reforms in treatment of Christians, freedom of religious worship, good roads, and schools. But instead they legislated for the Turks alone and embittered the Greeks, Armenians, Bulgarians, and Albanians. They allowed Turkish troops to play havoc with the crops of Christians in Macedonia, and two hundred Christians were beaten on the soles of the feet and tied to trees in the scorching sun for three days. They disqualified Greeks and Bulgarians and officially created a fund by taxation of all to encourage converts to Islam from Christianity. They promised to separate religion from politics but passed a law punishing Moslems for breaking the feast of Ramagan. They boycotted Greek commerce, disarmed the Albanians, proscribed the teaching of any language but Turkish in the schools, suppressed educational associations and confiscated printing presses.

The present Balkan trouble began last August when Turks massacred 186 Bulgarian Christians in North Macedonia. Turkey was then at war with Italy and the Balkan states decided it would be a good time to attack their hereditary enemy and Montenegro declared war.

King Ferdinand of Montenegro in his proclamation declaring war on Turkey said the conflict was for the succor of the Christian population of Macedonia from under the heel of Moslem—a holy war for humanity—and the other states that have joined in it have said the same thing and all have asked the great powers to let them fight it out.

What interest have the great powers in the war?

Russia and Austria have conflicting policies toward the war.

Russia would like to see a permanent confederation of the Balkan states so that sometime, when the confederation had driven Turkey from Europe, she might have free access to the ports in the southeast. The paw of the "bear which walks like a man" is extended in the direction of Constantinople, and Russian statesmen would like nothing better than to hear the orthodox mass intoned in the ancient church, now the mosque of Saint Sophia.

There is that old, possibly mythical, will of Peter the Great which, according to legend or authentic history, bids his descendants not to sleep in peace until the Russian might sit enthroned by the Dardanelles.

Austria would preserve Turkey as it is so as the conflict goes on she could absorb more and more territory to the south just as she absorbed Bosnia and Herzegovina. For centuries the ambition of Austria has been to have a triune empire consisting of a confederation of the Magyar, German, and Slav states.

France and England encourage Russia in her policies toward Turkey and the Balkans because the success of these policies would weaken Germany.

Germany supports Austria, and Italy has officially endorsed Austria.

How long will the war last and what will be the probable results of it?

Europe hopes that finance and weather will end the war before the first of the year. The Balkan states have been scouring the financial centers of Europe for a loan with which to prosecute the war, and it is reported that they have been unsuccessful.

If Turkey is to win this war she will probably do so within a few weeks, and in that event it is not likely that other European powers will be drawn into it.

If the Balkan states are to win it their demands will be the division of Macedonia between them. They have notified the powers that they will listen to no pleas for peace except on the basis of a division of all of European Turkey except Constantinople and a small district around it that will be left to the Turks.

Bulgaria's dream is for an extension of her borders to the south that would embrace the great bulk of the Bulgar speaking people of Macedonia and would give her a port on the Ægean Sea.

Greece would annex Crete and many of the islands of the Ægean and would extend her territory on her northern border up perhaps to Saloniki.

The ambition of Servia and Montenegro is for a union between them and the annexation of Novi Bazar. This would give Servia an outlet to the Montenegrin seaports.

But it is doubtful if these states will realize their ambitions, even if they do win the war, as Austria-Hungary and Germany are not likely to look with favor upon the establishment of a great Bulgarian state, linked by ties of blood and religion to Russia. Neither would Austria-Hungaria wish to see a strong south Slav state arise south of the Danube.

Russia is already strengthening her defenses on the German frontier and concentrating soldiers there.

Is it possible that this will result in a great Mohammedan Jihad or holy war against the Christian nations of the world?

In this war centuries of hate are let loose on each side. The Balkan Christians all dream of the day when Constantinople, the capital which bears the name of the first Christian emperor, and which was once the capital of a Christian world-empire, shall be wrested from the Turk and shall again be a Christian city.

What is perhaps the greatest church in the world is now a Moslem mosque, the Church of Saint Sophia in Constantinople. It is the visible center of the Moslem faith in the world, and in that church is a furled and frayed and faded flag, the Arabic characters with which its emerald silk is embroidered dimmed by the suns and rains of nearly thirteen centuries. That tattered banner is the most significant and sinister emblem in the world; it is a religious symbol and a threat in one. It is the green flag of the prophet Mohammed, and by unfurling it the commander of the faithful would signal to the scattered millions of his fanatic followers to break loose the holy war.

It is this fear of a holy war of all Islam which has given pause to Europe when thoughts of taking vengeance for Christians massacred in Asia Minor and European Turkey were in the air.

It was this which nullified the efforts of Gladstone thundering in English mass meetings against the "great assassin."

If Turkey falls, and with it a large part of the temporal authority of the sultan, spiritual head of Mohammedanism, he may call upon the Moslems of the world to take up arms against their Christian rulers. There are 177 million Moslems in the world. Russia has hordes of Mussulman subjects. Great Britain has 57 millions of them in India and they are already in a state of unrest. Afghanistan is already urging the holy war. The 37 million Moslems of Africa have threatened British rule in Egypt in the past and the flames of religious hatred might cause the pot to boil over, bringing on another Indian mutiny and war in Egypt.

Even the United States, which has several million Moslem subjects in the Philippines, might feel the tidal wave of trouble which would sweep around the world.

While the temporal power of the sultan has waned, his religious authority has increased and he commands the religious allegiance of Mohammedans in all parts of the world—Kansas City Star, November 3, 1912.

THE NECESSITY OF RELIGION.

Gentlemen, it is not because I would prevent religious instruction, but because I would prevent the union of church and state, that I oppose this bill. So far from wishing to proscribe religious instruction, I maintain that it is more essential at this day than ever. The more a man grows the more he ought to believe. As he draws nearer to God, the better ought he to recognize God's existence. It is the wretched tendency of our times to base all calculations, all efforts on this life only—to crowd everything into this narrow span. In limiting man's end and aim to this terrestrial and material existence, we aggravate all his miseries by the terrible negation at its close. We add to the burdens of the unfortunate the insupportable weight of a hopeless hereafter. God's law of suffering we convert, by our unbelief, into hell's law of despair. Hence these deplorable social convulsions.

That I am one of those who desire—I will not say sincerely merely, but with inexpressible ardor, and by all possible means—to ameliorate the material conditions of the suffering classes in this life, no one in this assembly will doubt. But the first and greatest of ameliorations is to impart hope. How do our finite miseries dwindle in the presence of an infinite hope! Our first duty, then, whether we be clergymen or laymen, bishops or legislators, priests or writers, is not merely to direct all our social energies to the abatement of physical misery, but, at the same time, to lift every drooping head towards heaven—to fix attention and the faith of every human soul on that ulterior life, where justice shall preside, where justice shall be awarded! Let us proclaim it aloud to all: No one shall unjustly or needlessly suffer! Death is restitution. The law of the material world is gravitation; of the moral world, equity. At the end of all, reappears God. Let us not forget—let us everywhere teach—there would be no dignity in life, it would not be worth the holding, if in death we wholly perish. All that lightens labor and sanctifies toil—all that renders man brave, good, wise, patient, benevolent, just, humble and, at the same time, worthy of intelligence, worthy of liberty—is to have perpetually before him the vision of a better world darting its rays of celestial splendor through the dark shadows of this present life.

For myself, since chance will have it that words of such gravity should at this time fall from lips of such little authority, let me be permitted here to say, and to proclaim from the elevation of this tribune, that I believe, that I most profoundly and reverently believe, in that better world. It is to me more real, more substantial, more positive in its effects, than this evanescence which we cling to and call life. It is unceasingly before my eyes. I believe in it with all the strength of my convictions; and, after many struggles and much study and experience, it is the supreme certainty of my reason, as it is the supreme consolation of my soul!

I desire, therefore, most sincerely, strenuously and fervently that there should be religious instruction; but let it be the instruction of the gospel, and not of a party; let it be sincere, not hypocritical; let it have heaven, not earth, for its end.—Victor Hugo.

THE LAW OF SUCCESS IN LIFE.

When thou dost clearly see the path, thou canst not wander from it. Out of the lightnings of the mind come forth the thunder shocks of action. See thy act in thy mind's clear vision, and 'tis already done. In hours of strength prepare for hours of weakness, and thou shalt never fail. Forelive the thing thou darest. Fight thy battle in the high arena of thy mind, and when thou comest to the arena's bloody sands thy victory is already won. In silence prepare thy battle shout. Steadfastly sitting in thy lone retreat, act thou thy coming part. In silence let thy speech be framed. In the still chamber of the mind let all thy acts conceive, and none shall fail of sturdy life. If thou dost fear temptation's power, alone in silence meet thy foe and slay him with thy thought. With sword thrusts of brave words let out his life; and when thou meetest him upon the sands, naught but a shadow faceth thee. Trust not thy soul to conflict unprepared. Go armed with predetermined thoughts, with will strained, like the bowstring, ere the strife begins. Sharpen thy arrows in the forge of thought. Let each be pointed with a willful word, and they shall reach the tempter's throbbing heart.—Solon Lauer.

Therefore, since the world has still Much good, but much less good than 'ill,
 And while the sun and moon endure,
 Luck's a chance, but trouble's sure,
 I'd face it as a wise man would,
 And train for ill, and not for good.

THE NEW HOME.

Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field; and afterwards build thine house.—Proverbs 24-27.

There is so much that could be said on the subject of setting up "the new home," it is difficult to select that which will be the most profitable, and condense it in a short paper, but a few certain features can be touched upon in a general way. First,

THE MORAL AND SPIRITUAL ATTITUDE.

It should be the ambition of every youth and maiden to some day be a home builder and a home maker. No doubt it is, for what normal girl has not had her dreams of the "house of hearts"? and what youth with a spark of love for home has not built his "castle in the air," with the certainty that one day he would put a real foundation under it? So we conclude that from these early years home dwells, in aspiration at least, in all human hearts.

Whatever has contributed to the success or downfall of a nation, is traced directly to the character of the homes of that nation. John Barton Payne, a former judge of Cook County, Illinois, in his article on "Civic ideals in the home," says, "The golden age of Greece—an age whose cheering influence is felt to this day—was that period when men and women mutually understood the duties to home, to the child, to the state, to the arts and sciences. It was the age when the responsibilities of women were practically coequal with those of men, and when the interests of home and state were practically one, according to the lights of those distant days. But when Greece became sordid, when the women reduced themselves to gossips and the men were corrupt in the halls of public affairs, Greece fell, and a star was blotted out of the heavens of progressive civilization. The arts and sciences alone can not develop the best and purest civilization. The influence of homes endowed with purity and intelligence must be upon them, or they become bricks without straw. The history of the progress of all moral and physical culture bears witness to it. Show me the nation whose homes are decaying and I will show you thrones that are tottering.

If the weal or woe of nations depends upon the character of our homes, how largely does the welfare of families. We can not, do not, live to ourselves alone—the world is the better or otherwise for our being in it. The happiness of a well-organized home is reflected in the lives of all men and women who come in contact with its inmates, and it is in such homes that there lie the greatest possibilities for the development of true men and true women to take up the work of life. How then shall we build that we may build well and enduringly?

We must first recognize that the getting of a house does not always guarantee the possession of a home, and that a house is built for the home, not the home for the house, and further, that the home exists for the family, not the family for the home. In rearing any enduring structure we must get down to a bedrock bottom, whereon the foundation may be securely laid. Sound morals, based on religious principles, and a unity of belief in those religious principles by husband and wife, is the bedrock bottom on which to lay the foundation of a home, for religious principles "is a family anchorage not on shifting sands." With religion as a basis two will not marry without love, because they will know that God demands deep and abiding love in a married pair: love that will not grow cold or weary. A hasty fancy will often prove a passion, fleeting as nightshade blooms, leaving only seed of discontent. Having discussed the moral and spiritual attitude of the wedded pair to the home, let us look at the

TEMPORAL SIDE OF HOME MAKING.

Luke, one of the writers of the gospel, said, "for which of you intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost whether he have sufficient to finish it?" A young man and woman contemplating the setting up of a new home may ask, How much capital is needed. Capital is not necessarily confined to dollars and cents. The salary or income of the husband may be termed as part of the capital stock of this partnership but is largely augmented by the good health of the wife, her excellent household management, thrift, ambition and economy; all of these are capital, and without them the income of the husband, though ample, may be wasted or poorly invested with consequent poor returns.

From James J. Hill, of the Great Northern Railway system, in his article on "The material essentials of home making," we quote: "That young people should be kept from marriage because they are poor, I do not believe. If they have health, faith in each other, and capacity for useful, mutual work, marriage will prove an advancement to them and not a millstone. But it is eminently proper before this marriage takes place, while it is being prepared for, that the older folk should strongly impress upon both the girl and the young man, the value of early gaining a certain amount of material possessions. It may be said this couple should be taught the worth of soon owning and operating at least one acre of land upon which stand house and barn owned by themselves and over which no cloud of heavy, interest-bearing debt hangs. An acre of land given to proper production with proper intelligence behind the work can earn a thousand dollars a year and more."

Not all care to go "back to the soil" for a livelihood, but Mr. Hill's thought is that the girl and boy should early be taught that through owning something and making that something—say, the one acre—produce, they, later, through a home, help not only themselves but the entire community in which they live. A modest competence and comfortable assurance of sufficient for future demands can only be had by hard work, improving small opportunities, avoiding debt, and using careful economy. The wisdom of the world can not formulate more than this towards securing for present needs and provision for old age.

HOSPITALITY.

Since the home is not an end in itself but a means to an end, and that end is the development of good citizenship and Christian character, it would seem that hospitality lends largely to that broader view of home life, and is not of the indifferent things which we can do or not do as we like, but it is clearly enjoined upon us. We owe its exercise to our friends. "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers"; "Use hospitality without grudging," is biblical injunction. We have biblical example as well, in Abraham, Rebecca, Lot, Samuel, Jethro, etc. Hospitality should be according to what we have and not according to what we have not. Modern hospitality has assumed various forms. Julia McNair Wright, in her work entitled, The Complete Home, writes lengthily upon the ostentatious hospitality, the spasmodic hospitality, the nervous hospitality, common sense hospitality, excessive, and lastly, elegant hospitality. Ours should be that which is easy, ready, brotherly, sisterly, and offered in quiet simplicity which carries out the spirit of the gospel.

FAMILY UNITY.

Into the married life and new home is brought some important duties of both husband and wife. One of these is personal companionship—which means a union of interests,—a growth into each other's heart and life. The average husband is only too glad to find that his wife is interested in his affairs and will explain to her the principles and conduct of his business if she will only concentrate her attention upon said explanations. It is a wonderful encouragement and help to a man when he is certain of finding some one in the home with whom he can take counsel and talk matters over intelligently. It is not a true home where members of the household come and go as they please and have no common interest in each other. That which is the prosperity of one should be the prosperity of all; and the misfortune of one is the misfortune of all.

One social means of establishing and maintaining family unity is home festivals, such as the keeping of the wedding anniversary, the birthdays of near relatives, celebrating holidays with kinfolk, back to the old homestead where grandfather and grandmother began their family life. All these are ties that bind the family in those bonds of love that naught on earth can sever.

What then is so important as the right building of our earthly homes in all spiritual and practical ways? What subject so fraught with great consequences as the hearthstone? If we have ideals, let them be in this direction.

In the hands of our schoolgirls and young women are the homes of the future. It is for them to determine that out of the love-lit center the husband shall go, not with lagging step and downward look of disappointment, but full of the sweet courage and hopes that spring from the noblest human aspirations.

Editors Herald: We have just moved here and I am taking this plan to find if there are any Saints here, their addresses, and if they have meeting any place. I am anxious to go to our own church once more, and have our children hear the doctrine. It has been several years since I have seen a Latter Day Saint. If I can find out where they live I will call on them, or if they see this I wish they would call on me.

I am as ever in the one faith,

TRIBUNE, KANSAS, October 20, 1912.

Editors Herald: I take pleasure in writing a few words to the HERALD. I have been very sick with typhoid fever, and for a time was not expected to live. I am now getting along very nicely, and honestly believe the good Lord brought me through. It looks like the time was very near when the Saints would be gathered back to Zion.

This is my first letter to the HERALD. I hope the Saints will pray for me that some day I may be gathered back to Zion. I am only eighteen years of age, and it looks as though the Lord has some use for me. I pray that the Lord will bless his Saints as he sees fit. I want to so harmonize with God that he will bless me and give me strength to endure to the end. I remain your brother in the faith,

News from Missions

Ohio.

I will pen a few lines from the Ohio District to let you know that we are still alive in the work. We are finding plenty to do. The trouble is there are not enough missionaries in this district to fill the calls that we get for preaching. We have just come to this place to put forth an effort.

On the 23d of September we effected a new opening at McDermott, Ohio, and in company with Brother and Sister N. L. Booker, we continued the effort until October 5, when the writer went to Crabtree, Ohio, where the Saints have had a church building under construction for the last three years, and it looked as though some had given up all hope of ever seeing it completed, as no work had been done on it for a long time. Bishop Becker was at that place the same time that I was, and we both gave the Saints a boost to go ahead on the church work and complete it.

The writer stayed with them and picked up the saw and hammer and went to work, and on the 14th I gave notice to Brethren R. C. Russell and J. A. Becker that we would have the church ready for dedication on the 20th. As R. C. Russell could not be there he gave me notice that the bishop and I could proceed with the dedication. Accordingly I wrote Brother Becker and he arrived on the 19th. On the 20th he preached the dedicatory sermon, the writer offering prayer. A large gathering was in attendance. Many baskets were brought, filled with good things and we certainly did justice to it all. We had three sermons, the bishop discoursing in the forenoon on the financial law, and in the afternoon dedicating the church, and the writer spoke in the evening to a large and attentive audience.

They have a very nice and comfortable building now in which to hold forth, and I hope they will make good use of it for the Master's cause.

With our strength and energy we shall help to bring about the redemption.

J. W. METCALF.

IRONTON, OHIO, October 3, 1912.

Jerusalem, Palestine.

Since I last wrote to your columns many radical changes have taken place in the Jerusalem Branch. Death has again entered among us and has claimed one whom we hoped would have a long life and prove useful to the work in this land; but we reverentially bow to the will of Him who doeth all things well. Brother Carr, after a severe illness, passed to the great beyond July 29. Having recovered somewhat from the first attack, he rode over with Brother Daher and myself to the Brook Cherith, on the 23d of last April, to witness the baptism of Brother Daher. Soon after this his donkey was stolen and he was obliged to walk to the different parts of the city to attend to his work. This proved too much for him, and he relapsed. After his death, several friends, e. g., Mr. Herman Past, Mr. and Mrs. Clark, Mr. Heck, American vice and deputy consul in charge, united to help Sister Carr to return with her family to the States. Through the kindness of these people, they were able to leave Jerusalem for Independence, Missouri, on September 9.

Thus the branch has lost, during the short period of its existence, five members; two by death, and three by removal. In a branch so small, this is a big item. Against this loss we have gained three by baptism. One I have already mentioned, the other two were baptized in the Jordan River, on July 6. At this time of the year the hotels at Jericho are closed; so Brother Solomon Njeim went to the patriarch of the Greek Church here and obtained permission for us to stay at the Greek convent near the Dead Sea, on the outgoing trip, and in another near the river on our return. So, having hired a carriage, Brother Roos, Sister Solomon Njeim, Sister Lulu Njeim, Sister Jenkins, and myself, left Jerusalem on the afternoon of the 5th, so we would reach the Jordan Valley after sunset to avoid the oppressive heat. Experience afterward taught us the wisdom of this; for as we were "going down to Jericho," it seemed as if we were going into a furnace heated seven times. We could hardly breathe. And it seems to me that in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah this region was not as hot as it is now; else Lot would not have chosen it as his home.

As the hotels at Jericho were closed, we turned off the Jericho road to the right and drove over the sandy plain toward the Dead Sea; probably over the same path that Lot and his company took when he "journeyed east" from Bethel, "and pitched his tent toward Sodom." Arriving at the convent at a little after eight o'clock, we were ushered into an upper room, and soon after sat down to a good supper. The western horizon presented a most beautiful sight. The color of the sandy peaks of the Judean mountains seemed to blend so nicely with the ruddy glow of the sky, which continued for quite a long time after the sun had disappeared behind Mizpeh and Gibeon. Shortly after supper we retired, but the night was altogether too hot for rest. We could not sleep.

Early the next morning we continued our journey to the northern shore of the Dead Sea, which we reached in about an hour. Here we took a little rest. Extended before us like a sheet of glass, excepting for a few ripples near the shore, lay the still waters of the Dead Sea, the mountains of Judea on the right, and those of Moab on the left, dipping into its bosom. Nature seemed robed in somber beauty.

Leaving the shore of the salt sea, we drove on to the Jordan, and finally reaching its banks, were ushered into an inclosure in which stood an improvised hut. It was the rendezvous of monks and others from the convents. There were two boats on the river, moored to the trees on its banks. We were told that there was a place higher up where baptism could be performed, and two of the men offered to row us to the place for four francs (seventy-five cents). Having agreed on the price, we were soon on the river, and after a while came to the appointed spot. We opened the service by singing,

"Behold the Lamb of God
In his divine array,
Go down into the flood,
His Father to obey.
In Jordan's stream to be baptized,
Though by a carnal world despised," etc.

The service over, we entered the boat again and were soon back in the inclosure, where we enjoyed our breakfast at a little after nine a. m. Old Sol had appeared above the mountains of Moab and Gilead some time before, and now his burning rays were making it altogether too uncomfortable for us. While on the river we had been protected from the scorching heat, sometimes by the towering cliff on the Moabite side, and at other times by the overhanging trees along its banks. There was none of the somber aspect along the river. It is a narrow strip of living verdure, delightful to behold.

After breakfasting we hastened away to another Greek convent, which was not very far distant, to escape the sweltering heat. It did not take long to reach there. We were admitted into another upper room, where we felt much more comfortable. We rested here until about 2.30 in the afternoon. We should not have started so soon, but the driver wanted to rest and feed his horses at Riha (or Jericho) before taking the Jordan hills. There was quite a strong breeze; but it was almost burning hot. Some of our company wished there were no breeze; nevertheless it was our salvation. We took a long rest at Jericho; but were too glad to keep under cover to go out sight-seeing. Though the village bears the name of Jericho, it is likely the site of ancient Gilgal, if we may accept the testimony of Josephus, and I do not see why we should not. He says: "So the Hebrews went on farther, [from the Jordan River] fifty furlongs, and pitched their camp at the distance of ten furlongs from Jericho."—Antiquities, book 5, chapter 1, paragraph 4. Modern Jericho is about this distance from both ancient Jericho and that of the time of our Savior. It is also a little over six miles from the river, so that if Josephus is correct, Gilgal must have been on or near the site of modern Jericho.

Late in the evening we left Jericho and were soon climbing the brow of the steep hill on the south of, and overlooking the Valley of Achor, where Achan was stoned to death after the futile attempt of the detachment sent from Gilgal to take Ai. The road follows the valley for some distance and then strikes out to the left, winding around one hill and then another, until it finally takes a comparatively straight course to the top of the hill, on which, about twenty years ago, the Khan Hadrur, or as we call it the "Samaritan Inn," was built. This is about half way between Jerusalem and Jericho, and a dreary place it is! Fit abode for thieves and robbers. The government has now placed soldiers on a high peak commanding a good view of the road for several miles, so that to-day the road to Jericho is not quite as dangerous as in years gone by.

We stopped an hour at the khan and had supper. At about nine p. m. we resumed our journey. It was now dark, but ere long the moon appeared, and the journey through the wilderness was made a little more pleasant. At midnight we were home again, and being tired, hastened to rest, heartily concurring with the sentiment, "There is no place like home."

On Sunday afternoon we had sacrament; being the first Sunday in the month. Sister Salime Njeim and Brother Frederick L. Roos were confirmed. The Spirit was present, and we all rejoiced. Brother and Sister Solomon Njeim's daughter Olinda had also applied for baptism; but on account of some religious agitation at her school, Brother Solomon deemed it best not to have her baptized, lest they would turn her out of school. There are many here whose attention has been drawn to the work, and who in all probability would be glad to obey. But there is no religious liberty. The principle, "They can neither buy nor sell except they have the mark of the beast," though a little modified, is carried into effect. The people are more or less dependent on the missions for their daily bread, and instead of their rendering the missionary financial aid, he has to help them; and they expect it, too.

On the 8th of last January we organized a Sunday school here. Sister Lulu Njeim was elected superintendent, and was reelected at the last semiannual business meeting. Both she and her sister, Olinda, are promising young sisters.

October 6 Brother Solomon Njeim was ordained to the office of teacher. He has offered a few remarks in Arabic at the beginning of the services once or twice since. I think he is the first Arab brother in this country who has held an office in the church. He has been blind now for several years, owing to a cataract in the eyes. Has tried several remedies, but, seemingly, to little or no effect.

We are trying to start a good library here, and we shall be thankful to any of the Saints who may be able to help us along this line. We are fairly well supplied with Hymnals and Zion's Praises. We need copies of Book of Mormon in English and German. We also need to have the Voice of Warning and a few other tracts translated into Arabic. But just now we are financially handicapped.

It seems the Turkish Government is hard pressed. People are being forced into the army from all parts of the empire. Several companies left Jerusalem last week for Haifa, overland, because they could not embark for Constantinople from Jaffa. They could go by train from Haifa. It is said that the "bear" is trying to get his paw on the Dardenelles. Perhaps it sounds less daring to say Dardenelles than Constantinople. The "lion" has gently put his paw on Egypt, and regards with a covetous eye both Palestine and the Dardenelles. However, if Russia is the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel, it is likely she will possess herself of Constantinople. Be that as it may, conditions here are getting serious, and even the Mohammedan natives are wishing Great Britain would take possession. I was talking yesterday to one of the business men of the city; he said he did not know what day he would have to go. "Oh," he continued, "the way things are going here now is sickening; one's business is actually being destroyed. I wish Great Britain would step in here and take hold." This man was a native, and though a man of business, he voiced the sentiments of even the fellaheen. The government has not even a semblance of an equitable system of taxation. For instance, if a fellah (peasant, or tiller of the soil and carrier of heavy burdens, etc.) has a fruit tree in his garden, the collector goes around, and after examining the tree, he says, "You have to pay so much on this," the fellah has no alternative. He pays the sum named. But when he sells his fruit he finds that the price obtained does not nearly cover the tax; so the fellah concludes he can make more out of the tree by selling it for firewood than he can from its fruit. Thus the land is devastated of its trees.

We have not had any rain yet this fall. Indeed, it has been quite hot. To-day, however, it is a little cooler, and we may have rain now at any time.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and the spread of the gospel among the nations of the earth, as ever,

Your brother in Christ,

REES JENKINS.

Died.

KLEMM.—Brother Reinhart Friedrich Klemm died at McLoud, Oklahoma, October 29, 1912. He was born May 2, 1856, at Frieberg, county of Sachsen, Germany. Came to America in 1879; married to Augusta Pauline Gersler, December 25, 1887. Ten children were born to them—four sons, six daughters. Three sons and three daughters survive him also his wife. He united with the church in 1896 under the ministry of R. M. Maloney and has continued faithful unto the end. A large gathering of his neighbors were at the bier with tokens of respect and kindness, giving evidence of the place and esteem our brother held in the hearts of his fellow men. Funeral sermon by J. E. Yates.

STEVENSON.—Estella Margaret Stevenson, youngest daughter of Thomas and Agnes Stevenson, born March 7, 1887, in Rock Creek Township, Hancock County, Illinois; died October 25, 1912, at the old home place where her residence has always been. On March 7, 1908, she was married to Guilford A. Head. To them were born a daughter, Kathryn Agnes, and a baby boy who died in infancy. Stella was a good, kind girl, a wife and mother who cherished high ideals of a home. She will be greatly missed. All respected her for her amiable and cheerful disposition. She leaves husband and little daughter four years old; her father, and only sister, Florence, beside many other relatives, and a host of friends to mourn.

How many think they've won success who merely didn't fail! How many people think they're good because they've done no crime;

How many who're untempted think their virtue is sublime— And that they'll land in heaven because they didn't land in jail!

The Trip to California Under Special Care

"You feel like sorting out and tying together the memories of this trip and keeping them separate from all other trips." A woman recently said this after a pleasant experience on a Burlington Route "Personally Conducted" excursion party to California. She traveled alone, but met many agreeable people on the car, which was in charge of a special conductor. This good-natured official was a well-informed, courteous man who went all the way through with the party, looking after everyone's comfort and attending to all the little details of the trip. Thus a woman or child in one of these parties can travel with perfect safety and freedom from care. If you would like to know more about the Burlington's comfortable, popular and inexpensive personally-conducted excursions to California, through scenic Colorado and Salt Lake City, please write me a postal and I'll be glad to send you copy of our illustrated folder, describing the trip in detail, the scenery, the choice of routes, telling all about how to join one of these parties and containing one of the best maps of California ever published.

NUMBER 47

Editorial

LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY.

IDEALS THAT CAN BE REALIZED ONLY IN CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots; and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. . . . And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious.—Isaiah 11.

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there is no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.—Isaiah 9.

The great watchwords of the French Revolution were, "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity." But after the long and bloody struggle was over, the people had only partially achieved their ideals. They were only partially free; and equality and fraternity were still principles to dream about. And that has been the history of every effort of humanity to achieve these great ideals.

On this subject a certain historian says: "The conception of equality by a Frenchman of to-day falls very short of the doctrine as professed in the early days of the great revolution. . . . Fraternity has long ceased to have any meaning. . . . Personal liberty is by no means sacred, and freedom of speech only exists at the pleasure of the state authorities."—The French People, by Hassall, 1901, p. 370.

They came far short of realizing the full promise of their great slogan: "Liberty, equality, fraternity." They secured political liberty, with reservations. Equality exists only among groups of persons of the same class, as it always did. Fraternity is limited to cliques and clans, as it is everywhere in the world.

There is no kingdom or republic or nation of any description on the earth where these principles are fully developed. There never can be one under merely human administration. No man-made system can ever realize these ideals. They must be realized in the kingdom of heaven on earth, under divine direction, and will have their complete development when Christ reigns in person. The church, under the leadership of the great Prince of Peace, is on the right road to their achievement. All others are pursuing a policy that must come a long way short of complete success.

Freedom.—Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He stated a fact. Without complete knowledge of truth, absolute freedom is impossible. Freedom to-day among all worldly people is only relative. Political freedom may prevail for a time in a nation where many, perhaps a majority of the people are not free in other senses. They may be slaves to evil habits, and adverse environments and conditions, not to mention ignorance, superstition, prejudice, and atheism. They may boast with the Jews, who mocked Jesus, and declared they had never been in bondage to any man, but the boast is a hollow sham.

Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He also said that his Spirit would guide into all truth, and that the world could not receive or know that Spirit. How futile then, for anyone who believes Jesus, to expect complete freedom to obtain among any nation or class of worldly men and women, who do not have the Spirit and do not know God or care to know him.

The logic of this statement is unavoidable. Men shall know the truth, and the truth shall make them free. The Holy Spirit shall be the guide into all truth. The world can not receive or know the Holy Spirit, as a permanent guide. Or to reverse the statement: The world can not receive the Holy Spirit (so long as God's plan is rejected). Without the Spirit absolute truth can not be discovered. Without truth men can not be absolutely free. Freedom must remain relative and quantitative.

Equality and Fraternity.—God says, "You must be equal in temporal things." He was talking to the church, not to the world, for equality can not obtain in the world. He said, "You must be one, or you are not mine." He was talking to his own people, not to the world, for the world can not be one. Jesus prayed that his disciples might be one, and added in that connection, "I pray not for the world." He knew that fraternity could not obtain in the world.

In the world there are all kinds of people. There are some good, pure, honest, industrious, frugal, law-abiding men and women. Mingled with them are vile, dishonest, lazy, intemperate, extravagant, God-defying men and women in abundance. Can these people be equal? Can these people be brothers? Has light fellowship with darkness? Shall purity strike hands with corruption and say, "We are one! We are brothers!" Can the believer be yoked with the blasphemous agnostic?

Yet that is the task that confronts any nation, any community, and system that attempts to realize liberty, equality, and fraternity outside of gospel administration, without recognizing Jesus as their leader and commander, and the revelations of God as their law, and the Holy Spirit as their Guide.

Let not the Saints be troubled. The church is on the right road. There is no other road that leads to the ideal of humanity.

It is the old trail, by way of the cross to the crown. The multitudes do not go that way; but it leads to that divinely established kingdom foreshadowed in the scriptural reading at the beginning of this editorial, in which Jesus shall reign as Lawgiver, and perfect justice and equity shall prevail.

"Do not fear to follow, where God leads the way."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE TOLL THAT THE WORLD TAKES FROM ZION.

TWO CLASSES; TO WHICH DO YOU BELONG?

The Saints love to sing about the joys that will be ours, "when we gather home to Zion." But just at present Zion seems to be a testing place for those who gather. And we know not how long that will continue to be the rule. Zion is a sort of melting pot where God refines the gold that is in us—if we have any in our characters.

Those who gather to Zion, or the stakes of Zion, will find there two classes of people: Those who are overcoming the world, and those who are being overcome by the world. If they join the latter class what will it profit them to go to Zion? If they join the former class they may perchance have an uphill road of sacrifice for a time, and may become discouraged and dissatisfied by reason of the conduct of some who are permitting the world to overcome them. It seems to be the rule that those who move to Independence or Lamoni, or other places in the regions round about, pass through their period of trial.

Some endure and become useful and happy members of the community; others become dissatisfied, and either move away, or remain to complain and find fault.

We have watched with concern the moral and spiritual decline of those who are permitting the world to overcome. By degrees they drift into worldliness. They come to spend all of their surplus money, that should go to help redeem Zion, for luxuries, or for fancied necessities that others do without very well. They permit theaters, card parties, joy rides, and the social whirl to absorb all of their spare time and energy, and to sap their spirituality to its exhaustion. We have watched this decline in individuals with deep concern, and have wished to God that there were some way to stop this insidious undermining of the church.

But we have reached the conclusion that it is inevitable. This is the toll that the world takes from the church, and no doubt will continue to take for some time to come. These are the weak, the unstable, the indifferent, those who do not care to overcome. They "go out from us because they are not of us." God will stand by the man who makes a fight, and desires to win; but not by the man who does not care.

So, while we must do all that can be done to reclaim the worthy, we must not become discouraged because we see the world collecting its toll. This has been the experience of the church in all ages. Jesus had that experience: "From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." Jesus embodied his observation in the parable of the sower: "The care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful."

The hope of Zion is in the other class. For there is a class of Saints in Zion who are becoming more spiritual, humble, diligent, and consecrated. They are overcoming the world. The Lord is blessing them in many ways. We believe that this class can be found in any of the stakes or branches of Zion. We should join forces with this class. We should help them. We do not need to look all of the time at the other class and become pessimistic and sour. The man who does that, paradoxical though it may seem, is joining the class that he abhors,—that is, he is permitting the world to overcome him in that way. One who becomes thoroughly soured and "cranky" from observing the faults of others is of little further use in Zion. He has not the spirit that will redeem Zion. Without charity we can do nothing, is an old and a wise philosophy.

You who contemplate gathering to Zion should decide before you go which class you will join. Have you backbone enough to stand up and make a fight for righteousness? Or are you looking for the downy beds of ease?

If you prefer to join this class that is being overcome by the world, why go to Zion at all? You can enjoy the world where you are just as well as in Zion. And if you stay where you are you will not be in the way of the builders. We may as well face the matter with a candid eye. If, however, you choose to join the class that is overcoming the world, then go on and work, and enjoy the work. The example of others need not discourage you.

The class that is overcoming the world will finally compose the redeemed kingdom of God on earth, in which liberty, equality, and brotherhood will prevail. Those elements that will not fuse in such an organization will be burned out or cast out. This selective process is the point of superiority that Zion has over the world. In the world the effort is made to fuse all classes, good and bad, into a brotherhood. It can not be done. But in due time all things that offend and injure will be plucked out of Zion, by One wiser and greater than man.

The principle of regeneration will change the weakest and most degraded into fit subjects for the kingdom, if they are willing to have it so. Those who choose to resist this process, by virtue of their free agency, may do so, but must submit to being removed from the body with which they are not willing to blend, and to the laws of which they will not submit.

The cause of Zion is onward. The hope of Zion is in those who are faithful and obedient, the spiritually minded, those who are overcoming the world. Do not hesitate to join with this class and give your unreserved efforts to the support of the work. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY.

The Senior Editor takes pleasure in acknowledging having been permitted to enjoy a particularly pleasing reception at his home, 1214 West Short Street, where on the afternoon and evening of November 6, just past, he was privileged to meet and shake hands with some nine hundred of the members of the church, accompanied by several friends of the members of the church.

The Editor took considerable thought upon the matter and finally decided to ask the stake authorities to give notice that he would be pleased to meet the Saints who might choose to call between the hours of five and eight in the afternoon for the purpose of giving a passing greeting upon that occasion, and these brethren, the authorities of the branch and stake, had charge of the reception.

During the day, including occasional callers and the members of his own family, there were counted in the line that passed something like nine hundred persons, ranging from small children to veteran heads of families.

We take this occasion of expressing our thanks that we were permitted to greet so many under such circumstances; and to those abroad the Editor extends his hand of fellowship, hoping that should other birthdays be accounted us in the future, we may be able still to retain the confidence and trust of the Saints everywhere. Our prayer has been and shall be for wisdom and direction of our thoughts and our efforts in the ways we should go, that we may still be of what service our strength will permit, during the time we may be permitted to serve.

We trust that we shall still have confidence in God and in those whom he has chosen to carry on the work, both of the church and of the State. We shall pray for the success of the honest in heart everywhere.

EASILY CLASSIFIED.

R. B. Neal's "Sword of Laban" Leaflet number 9 is entitled, "Mother Lucy's" Book. The following are extracts from this leaflet:

We knew of it early in our anti-Mormon fight. Tried; in vain, for years, to get hold of a copy. At last success crowned our efforts. By paying "a good big price," we secured a copy. Here is a copy of the title-page:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

PROGENITORS FOR MANY GENERATIONS.

By

LUCY SMITH,

Mother of the Prophet,

Plano, Illinois.

PUBLISHED BY THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

"Soon after its publication, and after a large number was sold, Brigham Young, under the plea that it was a false history, and would do mischief, ORDERED ITS SUPPRESSION; the Saints were counseled to give them up, either freely, or in exchange for other works of the church, that they might be destroyed. Under this order large numbers were destroyed, few being preserved, some of which fell into the hands of those now with the Reorganization."

The opposition of Brigham Young had the effect, of course, of strengthening the "Josephites" in their determination to preserve and publish the book. By some means a man has to pay from five to ten times the worth, or price, of the book now to get a copy from them. Why is this thus? Why don't they list and advertise the book now with their other publications? They are practically doing what Brigham Young wanted done. They are not consistent. . . .

The "Josephites" are not consistent. Though they republished it, they have no copies advertised for sale, and their leaders demand from five to ten times the cost or published price of the book for a copy when one can be located. We have never been able to locate but two copies. We now have one of those.

Since it is a well-known fact that this book has been on sale by the Herald Publishing House for years, except for an occasional brief period when editions were exhausted, and advertised by catalogue and in the HERALD for years at seventy-five cents per copy, it is a simple proposition to classify R. B. Neal and place him where he belongs. With reasonable beings further notice of R. B. Neal is unnecessary. His mendacity is so apparent that it discredits not only leaflet number 9, but everything he does. It is only for the benefit of those who have not yet "found him out" that we notice him at all.

WORTH NOTING.

The Historical Department of Iowa issues a quarterly magazine called Annals of Iowa. Mr. J. P. Cruikshank has an article in the last issue of this magazine on the subject of "Historic sites to be submerged" when the dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk is completed.

Among other and numerous places mentioned is Nauvoo as follows:

The Mormon occupation of Nauvoo, Illinois, opposite Montrose, from 1840 to 1846, inclusive. This sect was led by Joseph Smith, the prophet, who caused to be erected the Mormon Temple, costing nearly one million dollars. The style of architecture was unique and not classical, but original in design. The prophet was assassinated while in jail at Carthage and his followers were practically expelled from Nauvoo and the temple destroyed in 1846.

In the same block with the old Smith homestead, fronting on the river, at Nauvoo, is the Smith family cemetery. Here lie the remains of the only wife of the prophet, in a brick vault surmounted by a marble slab and almost hidden by shrubbery, vines and weeds. The prophet and his brother Hyrum are also buried here, but the exact spots are only known to the Mormon dignitaries, who have purchased the block embracing the Smith home and the cemetery, and are now actively engaged in raising a fund of twenty thousand dollars for an appropriate monument to mark the holy shrine. None of these Mormon landmarks will be affected by the flood.

To-day.

I know not how or why or when
The curtains dark will part for me,
To pass me through from now to then
To distant shores man may not see.
But this I know, as my days bring
The varied tasks for me to do,
My duty is to work and sing,
And thank God he permits me to.

I may not know just how or why
My lot is cast in humble place;
Nor fully understand why I Am not a leader in life's race.
But this I know and understand:
Each task that's given me to do,
That task I'll do with willing hand,
And thank God he permits me to.

I need not know the how or why;
'Tis best I do not know the when,
Else I might falter when the sky
Is dark with doubts and fears of men.
I only need to know my task
Is fitted for my hands to do;
And for the doing strength I'll ask,
And thank God he permits me to.

Teach me just how to live to-day
That I may best serve fellow men.
Let me make smooth a bit of way
My comrades walk—do this, and then
I'll be content in humble lot
At lowly tasks to toil and plod;
Each eve the cares of day forgot—
And leave to-morrow unto God.—Selected.

CHRISTMAS.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Personally we see no harm in observing Christmas Day, if it is observed properly. It may not be the exact day of Christ's birth; but so long as the exact day is not known, this day will do as well as any to observe in remembrance of his advent into the world. The little home gatherings, the little, inexpensive gifts to children, that make them so happy, constitute some of the most tender memories in later years. But as Christmas is observed by many families to-day the whole affair becomes a burden. The expense is enormous, and the amount of labor entailed causes weariness of body and spirit. The matter of giving presents is carried to an absurd extreme; the giving becomes a tribute, that one feels must be paid. So the thoughts presented by the writer of the following article may be timely. How much better for the Saints to cut down this fearful expense and turn the money thus saved to more consecrated purposes. Thousands of dollars are spent by persons who do not wish to spend them, for the purpose of buying useless presents to give to people who do not need them and will not care for them or put them to any practical use. Why not make a change this year?

Now that the season of rejoicing known as Christmas draws near, in the words of the Master I say unto you, "Come now, and let us reason together."

What is Christmas?

Briefly defined, the word Christmas means Christ festival.

Whence came this festival?

Let us glance at history for an answer to this question.

We find that Saint Augustine, the very eminent Christian father, who lived 354 to 430 A. D., in his writings toward the close of his life deemed Christmas of later origin and lesser authority than the festivals of Easter, Ascension, and Whitsuntide, or the fast of Good Friday. When the first efforts were made to fix the period of the year when the advent took place there were—as we learn from Clement of Alexandria,—advocates for the 20th of May, also the 20th and 21st of April. Oriental Christians generally were of the opinion that both the birth and the baptism of Jesus took place on the 6th of January. Julian I, bishop of Rome from A. D. 337 to 352, contended for the 25th of December, a view to which the eastern churches finally agreed.

Now, we see, from the above facts, that there were several dates submitted before a decision was reached, and December 25 was selected largely because it afforded a substitute to the various heathen nations lately become Christian—who had observed a festival of rejoicing that the shortest day of the year had passed; besides spanning over the great interval between Whitsuntide of the one year and Good Friday of the next. This festival being thus designed mainly to satisfy the Christian (heathens), its purity became sullied almost at the first by revelry, which crept into it from the pagan rites they had formerly observed.

From that already written we see that Christmas was not observed till the third century A. D., the church during these centuries not observing this festival.

In no place, so far as I can find, have the Saints received any instruction to meet except for high and holy purposes; to exhort one another, to pray, to fast, to make offerings, and to learn God's will. In Hebrews 10:25 is found an instance in Scripture, and in latter day instruction the following instance is cited: Section 85, paragraph 20, Doctrine and Covenants.

It is quite evident that Christmas is of human origin; surely no divine authority is quoted for its observance.

Are we as Latter Day Saints going to continue to build upon that which comes from man, or upon that which comes from God?

Christ said: "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. . . . And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Now this "rock" can be interpreted in two ways, as I heard in a recent sermon. One is, that the confession that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God," is the rock, the other is that upon that which cometh from God and not from man I will build my church. We are not led astray by either interpretation. If the latter is correct, we as Latter Day Saints should carefully distinguish between man's and God's commands and instructions.

Let us consider our Christmas shopping this season and ask ourselves the questions: Is God pleased with what I am doing? Am I doing right to honor this man-made custom and give to those who need not, while the call has been sent forth that the poor and the helpless in our blessed faith are in dire need of immediate aid, and unless financed by some wealthy Saints, are liable to continue to call upon us for aid? Am I doing right?

Are we receiving and giving valuable gifts when the money that purchased them should have gone to relieve the poor and the needy? Where then is to be our reward?

Paul, speaking to the elders said: "I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Here is an admonition to support the weak, not to give to those who are in a position to support themselves.

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto a man who is an householder which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."

We have now considered the advice given the saints in olden times; let us examine the new, the revelation of our age, for the kingdom of God as we view it contains both old and new revelation.

Turning to Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8 we read: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor," etc.; and again in 52: 4 we are admonished to remember the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted.

Let us therefore take care that whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

Shall we consider the things God has told us to consider, and try and view this matter right? See if Mabel, Ruth, Jack, and Harry are not willing to give their share of this year and successive years' Christmas joys to the orphan when the truth has been preached unto them,—and they should have the truth of the matter, for are we not children of light? Surely we do not want our children to be children of darkness.

The Lord wants us to try him. Let us do his will, and see if at the end of the journey he does not tell us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," "for inasmuch as ye did it unto these my little ones, ye did it unto me."

That we may consider these things, and see if we can not pull ourselves loose from this worldly custom, and do as our conscience directs, as we know we have been commanded, and think more of what Christ will think of us than of what our friends will, because of a few Christmas gifts, is my earnest prayer in His blessed name. PAUL'S GLORY OF INFIRMITY.

And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong."—2 Corinthians 12: 7-10.

It is said everyone has his Gethsemane of suffering. This may be, yet some people seem to take satisfaction in dinning their cares, trials, and ailments into the ears of others, until one is led to think their life is one great morgue of woe. It is their main subject of conversation in public and in private, and their mind seems freighted with this doctrine that occupies their thoughts for they dole it out to everyone that will listen. They have a faculty of analyzing and dissecting their ailments to all who will listen, as though it was a duty they had to do. Their sordid narrative becomes a burden to themselves and to others, and as they talk, and explain, and particularize about their "thorn in the flesh" it pierces deeper and deeper; and thus their infirmity, it seems, has made them a chronic proclaimer against the Providence which gave them this cross to bear.

We would not wish to advocate another extreme and join hands with Mrs. Eddy's system, which we consider neither Christian nor scientific, and endeavor to ignore the possibility of disease altogether. However, there may be some truth in the allegation, the mind is the seat of all ailment, and to cure the mind you cure the disease; but if disease is not real, as they say, so far as the body is concerned—that is, if there is no such thing as disease in matter, then the fallacy of their position is evident in trying to heal it, for the reason it does not exist. "God is all" they have told us. God is good, as all will agree. Then "all" is good, for it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. The Devil then is good, and everything else, including disease, and should be left as they are, and to try and change the routine is to frustrate the perfect plan. In neither of these two extremes will we gain a correct theory to follow.

Paul gloried in his infirmities. His, however, was not a mournful dirge and a lament. He did not hanker for the pitying sympathies of his converts at Corinth, Athens, and Rome. His spirit was one that accepted cheerfully the inevitable, as a token of good esteem bestowed by his Father in heaven. He knew it brought him a more abiding favor and lasting blessing. It made him realize, daily, his own weakness, and the necessity of relying on a Higher Power for his strength. True, he sought the Lord three times to remove the bodily infirmity, because it was an interference to his labors of the ministry; but not until the Lord said unto him, "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness," did he realize it was an asset to his daily life that really made him strong. It was then he was brought to realize that this was one of the sources of his power and success. Without it he surely would have been restricted in his task. At the time he felt weak, and really was the weakest, it was then he was made strong, because of his reliance upon God for strength. Thus the secret of his success was his infirmity—"a thorn in the flesh" which brought him daily to the feet of his Master for divine help and guidance. It is, then, a good thing to know the advantage our adversities and trials are to us, in directing the channels of mercy and grace into our benighted lives.

It is evident, seemingly, those who palaver abroad with the greatest gusto are the ones whose troubles are largely imaginary. Out of a passing miniature perplexity they evolve a dirge of agony. The beautiful and flower-scented landscape with them is no more than a dark jungle of despondency, a little cloud appears that threatens rain. All else are mere trivialities compared with their own troubles. With them no cloud has a silver lining. In fact, they are blinded to all else, for every duty, and every view and angle of life is one of sore trial and tribulation. The recipe for being wretched they have followed implicitly:

"Wouldst thou be wretched? 'Tis an easy way:
Think but of self, and self alone, all day;
Think of thy pain, thy grief, thy loss, thy care,—
All that thou hast to do or feel or bear."

Their little perplexities are always seen through a magnifying lens, and these frets and cares are the absorbing topic of all time. In the home, in the social gatherings, in the marts of business, this old skeleton is always brought out, and we even hear the rattle of the bones when they walk. It is their sword, as well as their buckler, in the prayer meeting, and the main ornament of their rhetoric in every time of need.

Every practitioner of medicine knows that many people suffer from imaginary ills. No doubt they are the most difficult patients to deal with. After reading the patent medicine advertisements in the family story papers, and other cheap literature of the day, one can almost realize the fangs of disease have already fastened themselves in us, and we need an opiate. Perhaps imaginary ailments, after all, are best treated with the bromide of an imaginary remedy. A quiet treatment of persistent suggestion on wholesome lines may accomplish better results where an aperient would fail.

But Saint Paul's affection was not imaginary. It was not the result of a diseased ego. His physical distortion was real—an "infirmity of the flesh" (Galatians 4:13)—"a thorn" which pierced his very life, touching a tender spot. It was an impediment—a disease that interfered and handicapped him physically, in the strenuous work of gospel service.

Have we a solution why he gloried in his infirmities? It might be said he had nothing else to glory in. But no, such an unjust allegation would charge his wonderful and profitable career to the church as inspired by human incentive and not divine. Was he not a great apostle of Jesus Christ? Have any defined the gospel more plainly than he? Have any of ancient or modern times labored more incessantly than he to do his Father's will? Who was more fearless, and stanch and loyal to the risen Christ? What apostle of ancient time, under God, established more churches and did a work of more lasting benefit than he? Asia Minor, Greece, and Rome were his principal fields of activity, and in each country he faced persecution, hardship, privation, and danger. He briefly sums up the leading incidents that were his perils to life and limb, as follows: "Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool)

I am more; in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journey often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness."—2 Corinthians 11:23-27. And after all this there appeared no remorse, no rancor, no spirit of complaint. He gloried in his infirmities, trials, and misfortunes. It is here summed up briefly, with no flourish of trumpets to advertise himself? It is indeed a record to be proud of; one that had been hard to bear, yet those very experiences were the secret of his success, for that was the means that had brought him into the stream of the grace of God and the abundant life. Through it all he had maintained a worthy integrity, and there never was the thought of turning back. "Woe is me," he says, "if I preach not the gospel." He understood a life of service in bold defense, withstanding any trial, tribulation, or "thorn in the flesh," was the means that qualified him for higher and better service. His clearness of vision, and spiritual foresight, is evinced by turning the very things many would complain at into valuable assets that brought him untold favors from his heavenly Father.

How many of us have learned such a practical lesson? How this important lesson of his shames us who are not willing to do the least of Christian duties? His self-denial serves the faithful a grand lesson. He did it with no thought of self; conscious, only, it was pleasing to God. His pride, his glory, after all this, was in his infirmity, and for it he seemed grateful. He rendered a service to God in His way, and for that privilege he was content. He gloried in the fact it was pleasing to God for it to be so.

After all is said, possibly his best reason for so glorying in his infirmities was, "my strength is made perfect in weakness . . . that the power of Christ may rest upon me." The glory of Abraham was in his faith; in Job, the integrity of soul; in Joshua, prowess in war; in Solomon, the wisdom of heaven; in Samson, the superhuman strength of body; but in Paul we see one who gloried in his sufferings, hardships, and privations.

In a worldly sense we see some men glorying in their learning, others in oratory, another in physical strength, and still others in their artistic skill in following their professions. Many glory in their wealth, while others take delight in being wandering tramps. The glory of some is in the revelry of festivity and gayety of elite society, while others only have contentment in being a recluse in the solitudes of the mountain fastness. After all, how fleeting is all this in contrast with the permanency of a Christian character? The apparent wisdom of men of to-day is blighted by the sun of to-morrow. The daring and prowess of the athlete is laid low,—being crushed by a sudden fall; the hand of the artisan is palsied by disease; wealth is too often dissipated upon the altar of lust; and extravagance soon eats the heart away. All this is not enduring. It soon fades as the flower. Like the perfume of the rose, as it is wafted on the autumn breeze, it is scented and gone.

Saint Paul gloried in that of more material value. His hope led him to the shrine of eternal sunshine, endless day, and everlasting happiness. His life was no disappointment; for he realized what he longed for. The grace of God was with him and endowed him richly. This was the one thing that never failed him in all his troublous years, and it will never fail you. From this fountain he drew the waters of life freely, and in this way his daily strength was supplemented by divinity. Indeed the "power of Christ rested upon him." We see the evidence of that power in preaching and kindly ministrations to his fellow man. To him the love of God included the love of man. His aspiration ever seemed to be to do the will of God. And like the beautiful lines of Whittier in "My Prayer" so was he:

"If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee.
Make my mortal dreams come true,
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant;
Let me find in thy employ
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good
Seem thy nature's habitude."

Life contains many sore trials, it is true, and as to the purpose, we do not always see. We confess we do not always see the wisdom of God in permitting afflictions and even death to walk in at our door. Death is no stranger to us, yet we strive to repel its invasion. When its icy hand touches the living who are held by the ties of blood or fraternity, we bow in grief because it has crossed our path. It is but human to express sorrow over the misfortunes of others when death invades, yet no sorrow is so deep seated as that which stalks into our own domicile. The lessons we glean from such bereavement, however, are seldom forgotten, and if followed they will have a most salutary effect.

After all, death is but an instrument used by the hand of Divinity to bring that transition which serves the purpose of his will. More truly should we say, adversity is apprehended as a benefactor and not as a demon. To those who have caught the spiritual vision, death does not really appear to any of us, but is a step from mortal to immortal existence. It is the door that enters to a holier sphere, the precincts of a life beyond.

A mother whose darling babe is stricken with sickness, goes to God in fervent and heart contrition, that its life may be spared. She calls for the elders of the church and they implore in humble entreaty for it to live—the prayer is answered—the child is healed. How grateful she is! What a grand thing to realize God answers our prayers? This mother's faith is commendable. Still another mother lifts up in agony of soul, and speechless mystery, the babe whose prattle has drawn forth an undying mother-love, and in humility of heart, and deep and earnest supplication she has plead for its life. She, too, has called for the elders of the church, but to no avail, for the child is dead. She still trusts God. Which mother, tell me, has shown the grandest faith? the one who sought and received her wish and trusts God, or she who has bowed down in unspeakable sorrow of the stroke of inevitable Providence; has sought and not received; yet amid it all still trusts God?

Like Job of old, we should say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." Like Saint Paul, one may pray and never get relief, yet our fortitude, like his, is ever shown when we ever trust him with unswerving purpose.

Sometimes we think the world is like a great sanitarium, with its incurable ward. The pathos and sorrow of it all is hard to bear. Should we not try and impress the lesson to those suffering ones of God's people who have not been healed through human or divine intervention, "My grace is sufficient for thee"? If we can get them to see it is all for the best in the long run, we would convey an important lesson. "My strength is made perfect in weakness" is God's consoling word to the afflicted; and oh, how this has been verified in the lives of some enfeebled ones! The resplendent glory in strength has shone out in many an invalid life and hopeless cripple. They have realized suffering is only a temporary impediment, but the grace of God is ever abiding. Its visitation comes to us sometimes in the moments of apparent health, at the fountain of gayety, and in the supposed recesses of security, reducing us to a bed of anguish and disease. Whatever be our lot, if suffering excruciating pain be ours to bear, we should remember as the Apostle Paul, it is a precious possession, for it throws us back on the grace of God.

The daily life of the Saint, whether in prosperity or adversity, should be an admiration to those who know us. God's nobility are those who have sensed their duty—have honored their call. This is all, yet it comprehends everything. We realize the benedictions of such lessons daily. Their service having been planned with no selfish thought or motive, they could not fail. The sinking of self behind the altar of service is a way to impel a fond and lasting remembrance. Let us not forfeit or trivialize the great bequests such lives as Saint Paul's have brought to us. With unswerving purpose let us pledge to transmit, undefiled, the sacred benefits they have so nobly given us through trial and sacrifice. The lesson of duty in the face of adversity; in high, unswerving faith, will be a treasure to our posterity. The lowly mounds over all that is earthy of us will not appear as a calamity, but as monuments showing forth such human life yielded up to the infinite decree is a triumph and a benediction. It will be easier for others to do right and to choose wisely in times of stress and supreme moments.

So, like the eminent Paul of old, the benedictions are ours only when we cultivate resignation. Could there possibly be any grace in bearing burdens we do not feel, or in resigning that we do not value?

If rightly met, there is a glory of infirmity that makes for nobility of manhood and womanhood. History is replete in evidence of many of the greatest poets, mightiest statesmen, noblest reformers, and most effective teachers, scientists, artisans, and public benefactors that have stood for the higher truth, have come through the gamut of hardship, trial, and suffering. Demosthenes had his stammering tongue; Moses, his desert of Midian, with its solitude; Nephi, the tyranny of a revengeful kindred; Galileo, the superstition of a bigoted priesthood; Columbus, chains and prison dungeon; Washington, the "Conway Cabal" and Valley Forge; Lincoln, his poverty and cabin fireplace for the study of borrowed books; and when we read the letters of Paul we are impressed with his eloquence and his good reasoning, and these goodly graces were attained by his fortitude and brotherhood of suffering in like manner. Are seamen developed without a voyage? or are competent engineers qualified without a trip over the road? or is true soldiery developed without a battle? No! Neither is the character of sainthood attained without passing through the fetters of human bondage, infirmities of grilling trial and penitence of heart and soul contrition, as did Saint Paul. His hope was strong, his faith secure. He realized here we have no continuing city, but he sought one to come; and like his worthy predecessor Abraham, he sought for that city whose founder and maker is God. While trials came to him here, he bore them manfully and ever remembered the glorious condition of future life was not reached on flowery beds of ease, but through suffering hardship and tribulations; yet he realized, too, these same crucifixions can not come to those upon whose lips our Savior has pressed the kiss of peace. Tears he may have shed, but not the tears of despair. His trials seemed more to soften his heart and make it pliable, as the clay in the hands of the potter. Such lessons did not stagger his faith; and he never let the tyranny of a distorted sense mire to oblivion that bright hope of immortality. The beautiful flower "heartsease" bloomed prolifically all over the garden of the Pauline epistles. With him bright hope beckoned onward, and the cherished evidences of the Spirit of God had begotten in him a certainty of knowledge that was as an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, that had robbed the dart of death of its terror for ever.

To be more personal in our application, permit the question: Wherein do you glory? Your minds possibly revert to your children, your friends, your intellectual endowments, your health, and your earthly possessions. To you God has been merciful and kind, no doubt, in bestowing these gifts upon you; but how much greater is the treasure in heaven? Do your minds not revert to some sorrow, trouble, or infirmity which has worked out for us a more "exceeding and eternal weight of glory"? If so, it is your "thorn in the flesh," and for it you should be thankful, because that may be the very thing you need to qualify you for a grander service. Such things make you strong in spirit, for when we are reduced to an extremity then is God's opportunity. We then have sympathy for others. When adversity comes we then do not grumble or complain; but are continually steadfast. We can be glad of heart and hopeful like Saint Paul in the hour of affliction. The love of God will then fill our hearts and buoy us up and make us joyous and glad in our warfare here below. Our gifts will then be expended for God and man, and our faces will ever be Zionward. The humble entreaty to come up higher will be honored. It is then we will triumph in life and in death, and at last be crowned, and enjoy the bliss in that condition whose glory is unmatched by earth life in the mansions of our Father.

Then let us learn to glory in our infirmities as did Saint Paul, for they bring us nearer and nearer to God. It is true the diamond must be cut before it gives forth its luster, the finest flour is made under the heaviest grinders; the gold is put in the refining furnace to remove its dross; and the rose yields its sweetest perfume after it is crushed. So likewise there is brought from us the highest proficiency in the school of experience and adversity. For:

"When through the deep waters I call thee to go,
The rivers of sorrow shall not thee o'erflow;
For I will be with thee, thy troubles to bless,
And sanctify to thee thy deepest distress.

"When through fiery trials thy pathway shall lie,
My grace, all-sufficient, shall be thy supply;
The flame shall not hurt thee; I only design
Thy dross to consume, and thy gold to refine."

Paul sought no fame, but with its laurels has he been crowned. Such lives have proven the key to all fame in immortality. Can not we then see the benedictions of such lessons, when we have been benefited, and entered in upon the enjoyment of their labors? They have not lived and died in vain, and "On fame's eternal camping ground, their silent tents are spread." So let us be submissive to the Master Rulership that holds the destinies of all in His hands. That we may be taught to say, "Thy will, oh God, be done," and our deaf ears be un-stopped to hear that warning voice that solemnly speaks to us this day, "Be ye also ready." We should be cognizant of the short duration of our earthly existence, and the feeble hold we have on life, for indeed our bodies are frail and our days uncertain. While we can not see the oak in the acorn, or the pine in the scaly mast, yet we know the abiding faith of to-day will never grow dim and will ripen into a glorious reality if we are faithful to our post of duty. We have the promise in the future life there will be no crying over the biers of loved ones; no fathers and mothers to sit with gray heads bowed down in unspeakable sorrow, for the comforting words assure us, "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."

May we be freed from that life of sin and final death, and may there ever be that living expression of righteousness and service that the example of our Lord and others of his faithful be manifest in us, that we, too, may triumph in life and in death, and at last be crowned. May our hands ever be lifted in the strife. Let us through labor and love unlock the door of this our higher destiny. We may win by suffering pain, enduring toil, saintly fortitude, constant trustfulness, diligent application, and self-effacement. The stimulus that ever spurs us to saintly life is the Spirit of God.

Stop! Listen! What sound is that? We hear the answer: "It is the tread of martial feet—the procession of the hosts of God—marching on to victory." What music is that we hear? Ah! It is the old gospel battle hymn—the song of mighty impulse! Listen to the swing of its meter—the swell of the chorus thrills with heavenly inspiration as the army of God's people marches by. The impulse is resistless. We, too, catch the spirit of it. We adorn ourselves with the gospel armament (Ephesians 5: 10-18). We march out with the victorious hosts of heaven, and with the mighty swell our voices are heard in unison singing:

"God is marshaling his army
For the rescue of his truth,
He is calling now to battle,
Both the aged and the youth.
You can hear his mighty summons
In the thunder of his word—
Let us then be valiant soldiers,
In the army of the Lord.

"Let the watchman in the tower
Keep his post with sleepless eye;
Let the private out on picket
Guard against the least surprise;
For the order is for ever,
To be ready at a word;
There must be no sleeping soldiers,
In the army of the Lord.

"'Tis a war that calls for valor,
'Tis a conflict with the world;
There can be no furlough granted;
Never must the flag be furled.
We can never cease the conflict,
Till the summons home be heard;
We have all for life enlisted
In the army of the Lord.

"Let us not be weary, comrades!
Let us faint not by the way!
Though the night be long and dreary,
Soon will dawn millennium's day.
Let us keep the campfires blazing,
Let us sound abroad his word:
There are glorious victories coming
For the army of the Lord."

LIVE TOBACCO QUESTIONS.

There is an old rhyme the truth of which we are disposed to question. This scrap of poetry jingles on somewhat after the tenor of the following opening lines:

Tobacco is a filthy weed;
'Twas the Devil sowed the seed.

We believe that God, through Jesus Christ, should be accredited as the Creator of all things—even tobacco. Read in the Inspired Translation, Genesis 2: 4, "that I the Lord God made the heaven and the earth, and every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew."

Not only did the Lord create or make these plants and herbs, but he gave them to man, as witnesses the following from the Inspired Translation, Genesis 1: 31: "And I, God, said unto man, Behold, I have given you every herb, bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth."

Seeing, then, that the Lord created tobacco and gave it to man among the other herbs, the questions follow; What did he intend that man should do with it? and, Is it right to use, grow, or sell tobacco?

WHAT ARE THE PROPER USES OF TOBACCO?

There are certain proper uses to which tobacco may be put, as shown in Doctrine and Covenants 86. It may be used with benefit to man only for bruises. Man may with "judgment and skill" use it as a medicine for all sick cattle. These are the purposes for which the Lord created tobacco, according to his revealed will as well as according to prominent medical authorities of present times. Its destroying influence has also been made use of in the extermination of small vermin. Notice that there is no use for tobacco under normal and healthy conditions, but only in cases of bruises, sickness, and vermin.

Then why should the abuse of tobacco be so prevalent as it is to-day? We submit a reason in the words of Edmund Burke, the greatest political thinker of his day, from his essay on taste:

Tobacco is the delight of Dutchmen, as it diffuses a torpor and pleasing stupefaction. . . . A man frequently comes to prefer the taste of tobacco to that of sugar, and the flavor of vinegar to that of milk; but this makes no confusion in tastes, whilst he is sensible that the tobacco and vinegar are not sweet, and whilst he knows that habit alone has reconciled his palate to these alien pleasures.

IS IT RIGHT TO GROW TOBACCO?

This question has disturbed many a conscience. It has aroused considerable agitation and discussion in the Methodist Church in Ontario during the past summer. The matter arose in Chatham District but applies even more to Windsor District, where tobacco growing is a very remunerative occupation. It was brought to a head at Cedar Springs through a sermon preached by Reverend Harold Williams. The question was brought up at the Chatham district meeting, and a resolution adopted and passed onto the annual London conference, which concurred in the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That this annual conference place itself on record as disapproving of and uncompromisingly opposed to such industry (tobacco growing), and that we call upon our members to persistent nonparticipation in said industry and to earnest efforts to secure its ultimate and complete cessation.

In commenting upon this action, the London Free Press says: "Since the Methodist Church does not approve of the tobacco smoker, it is the part of consistency to disapprove of the tobacco grower."

But the Methodist Department on Temperance and Moral Reform a few weeks ago discussed the discouragement of tobacco and barley growing in Canada, and though the idea prevailed that there was work to be done in advising the Methodists should not raise tobacco, yet much difference of opinion seems to have arisen in regard to barley. A newspaper report of the proceedings says that Reverend T. Albert Moore, secretary of the department, pointed out that but twenty-five per cent of the barley raised in Canada is used in the preparation of intoxicants; though it is claimed that nine tenths of the barley consumed in the United States is in the form of an intoxicant beverage.

SOLVING TOBACCO PROBLEMS.

Ever since the white man learned the habit from the American aborigine, tobacco has furnished problems for the moralist and the statesman. It has continually and almost universally been a subject of heavy taxation; and these taxes have furnished difficulties in respect to collection. This heavy taxation and the increasing demand for the article have kept up the price and made its cultivation quite profitable. This discovers to us the principal incentive to entering the tobacco growing industry—financial profit.

Adam Smith, in his Wealth of Nations, published in 1776, informs us that:

In Virginia and Maryland the cultivation of tobacco is preferred, as more profitable, to that of corn. Tobacco might be cultivated with advantage through the greater part of Europe; but in almost every part of Europe it has become a principal subject of taxation, and to collect a tax from every different farm in the country where this plant might happen to be cultivated, would be more difficult, it has been supposed, than to levy one upon its importation at the customhouse. The cultivation of tobacco has upon this account been most absurdly prohibited through the greater part of Europe, which necessarily gives a sort of monopoly to the counties where it is allowed; and as Virginia and Maryland produce the greatest quantity of it, they share largely, though with some competitors, in the advantage of this monopoly.

An interesting problem for some of our statisticians would be the determining of what percentage of the tobacco grown is rightly used, accepting the "Word of Wisdom" as the standard of what are the right and the wrong uses. We fear that but a very small percentage would be found to be properly used.

However, we are pleased to note evidences of some progress in other organizations in regard to discouraging the abuse of tobacco. The Methodist Episcopal Church, in their general conference at Minneapolis, on May 8, 1912, adopted a resolution which prohibits the election as an officer of the general conference, which includes secretaries of boards and editors of church papers, of any who use tobacco in any form.

OUR CONCLUSION.

In the light of the above facts, it appears to the writer that the answer to the question regarding the propriety of a Christian growing or selling a product, be it barley or tobacco, is to be determined by the purpose to which it is to be put. If that purpose is in accord with the purpose for which the Lord created the plant, it is right; if not in line with such purpose, a simple, moral conviction that such a misuse is to result should be sufficient to restrain a good man from participation in such industry.

Can we imagine the case of a man growing or selling tobacco for the use of chewers, smokers, and snuffers and at the same time working against his own financial interests by discouraging his friends, neighbors, and fellow citizens from such use?

Is he innocent who supplies rebels with arms and ammunition? Is he justified who furnishes poison to the would-be murderer or suicide while under moral conviction that such poison is intended for the destruction of human life?

Then, is he who grows or sells tobacco for wrong uses guiltless in the eyes of God's law? does he stand pure and spotless before the altar of an enlightened conscience?

Thus we conclude that: It is wrong to use, grow, or sell tobacco for any other than the purposes for which it was created. R. J. FARTHING.

Bishop Evans Again at the Opera House.

The scene at the opening night of the new season at the Princess Theater, King Street, Toronto, was one that will long and abidingly linger on memory's tablets. The night was that of Sunday, November 3, and the steady stream of hundreds turned away, unable to gain admission to that large and lofty building, gave ample evidence of the attractiveness of both subject and speaker, and demonstrated most conclusively the very real and earnest desire of Toronto's four hundred and fifty thousand souls, or at least a great many among them, for the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

It was no less educational than interesting to notice the faces of that vast audience of doubtless three thousand persons. Not a few among them can be recognized as men who have combated the truth of the angel message for many years, in season and out of season. Nothing is more obvious than that many of them at first regard the lecturer as one who is bent upon telling a story in his own words, and in his own way, and that an isolated passage or two of Holy Scripture is going to be "propped up and dressed up and preached up" to support a doctrine or theory that is wholly subversive to the rest of the Bible. But as passage upon passage, proof upon proof is skillfully and ably drawn from all portions of both the Old and New Testaments, the evident and obvious accession of interest in the faces of these very people is both marked and unmistakable; especially as the King James Translation is invariably employed, and that version is quite familiar to a large majority of that vast and intelligent audience, it makes more telling and striking the sledge hammer blows struck by the invulnerable mallet of truth against all manner of "false doctrine, heresy, and schism."

Perfect and sustained silence in a very large audience is as rare as it is remarkable, but it is no fiction to assert that upon Sunday evening last one might almost easily have been able to hear the proverbial pin drop.

Two hymns rendered by the choir (which extended in three long rows entirely across the stage) seemed to meet with a very favorable reception by the audience; while the sweet and inspiring vocal solo by Miss Hazel Hathaway, to the pianoforte accompaniment of Miss Elsie Hill, was both loudly and enthusiastically applauded. The orchestra also, under the charge of our young Brother Sam Clarke, tended to very considerably enlighten and enliven the entire proceedings.

From first to last it was abundantly manifest that both the talented lecturer and also the increasing army of young men and maidens engaged in this holy and all-controlling work by their voices in the choir and by their good work in bill and tract distribution are performing a work in Toronto upon which the sun shall not set, neither in this world nor the world to come.

Our earnest petition is, dear HERALD readers, that the "Sovereign Ruler of the skies; ever gracious; even wise" will graciously acknowledge and mercifully bless these labors for Him and His cause, for "them that honor me will I honor, saith the Lord."

The Gift.

In the arbor covered with fertile grapevines it was dark and cool and blossom-sweet. An hour earlier they had been merely comrades, frankly fond of each other but as frankly independent. Now the full moon and the autumn night and the touch of sensitive hands had worked a miracle. Adrienne still leaned her head against the lattice and sat motionless, as though she were carved from lovely, rose-hued marble, but Rob's dark head was close, his cheek touched her cheek, and his low laugh rang with something more vital than comradeship, something warmer, sweeter, more tense, more thrilling.

In response to that laugh at last Adrienne sighed. "But, Rob, I don't want to marry! All the married people we know are such pokes. They live, move, breathe the atmosphere of commonplace. They say 'we' and 'our,' they talk about the household allowance and the plumbing and how much it costs to commute. . . ."

Rob had stopped laughing. He, too, made a sound as much like a genuine sigh as a normal, healthy, prosperous youth of twenty-three can manage. . . .

Then he forgot how awful it all was, and kissed her; and Adrienne's lips answered him in the one ancient, eloquent, wordless way.

But after a while they came back to that engrossing topic, the deadly prose of married life.

"It's so monotonous." Thus Adrienne.

"It's so beastly conventional." This from Rob.

Adrienne mused. "It's horribly expensive, and it gets you in a rut for the rest of your life, and it's morally unwholesome because it develops egoism, and it's a dangerous example to people who haven't a talent for reading human nature, and it's selfish and stupid and hackneyed and——"

But Rob stopped the verbal deluge with a force and in a manner that took away Adrienne's breath.

"A fellow might suppose you didn't care a hang," he cried reproachfully.

Adrienne made no protestation. She considered that none was necessary. After a little she spoke reminiscently.

"I'm twenty, almost twenty-one. And I've never done it before."

Curiously, Rob understood. "Why haven't you, Adrienne? Was it because you thought it was wrong?"

She considered. "No; I don't think it's wrong. Lots of nice girls do it—and mean it at the time—and the boys generally understand, I think."

"Then why didn't you, dear, until now?"

This time the boy's kiss was exquisitely gentle, as though he were trying to express some chivalric appreciation too subtle for mere words.

"I think," she said slowly, feeling for the right words, "that perhaps it was because above all things I have always wanted to play fair, to be quite honest. You know, since mother died—and I was a little girl then—there haven't been many people with the right to kiss me. Aunts, of course, and old friends of the family, and the two girls I liked best at college. But nobody awfully close, like your mother or sister, or your dad. So I've felt a little as if a kiss were sacred, that it meant real fondness, a thrill deep down."

"And you haven't felt it for any of the fellows?" asked Rob.

The girl blushed; he could see the blush even in the moonlight.

"I've wanted to, once or twice, but I wasn't sure—so I waited, and now I believe I am glad I did."

For the first time Rob kissed her hand. "I'm glad, too—Adrienne. Only if you had, it would still have been all right. I know that."

They were silent for a long time, not touching each other, and yet in some strange way closer linked than they had ever been. Adrienne was remembering her young mother, dead so long ago, wondering whether she knew and understood all this warm flood of safety and happiness which was supporting her child's eager spirit.

And Rob was thinking what a mysterious thing love is, how much it is like religion and reverence and unnamed holy things which he did not understand nor profess to believe, yet which he felt far down in the secret recesses of consciousness.

At last Adrienne drew a long breath, and then smiled at him.

"Rob—it's so wonderful to feel how you really care—to know it is going to last and grow all through our lives. It's not the marriage part that matters; it's the love that makes people marry so they can keep together, like this."

The boy's arm trembled. "But there's more to it, Adrienne." He spoke in a low voice, shyly; his words shook a little.

They were both silent for a moment. Then Adrienne seemed suddenly to have grown older. She took the boy's face in her hands. Her look and gesture had the exquisite, protective quality which is maternal.

"I know it, dear. And I think I understand. I'm not afraid—because it's you. And then I want to take care of you, always." Again silence in the perfumed darkness. About the young figures seemed to float a winged presence, the dim and lovely shape of that "True Romance" of which a modern poet sings.

At length the boy spoke, slowly, half regretfully, as though afraid to frighten away the dear presence.

"Adrienne, I want to tell you something."

The girl turned her dreaming eyes upon him, and for the first time fear altered the sweetness of her mouth. She was, despite her temperament, a girl of the period and a college girl. She had read a great deal, and once or twice she had shuddered at that wisdom which is folly, the wisdom of the average married woman. She knew enough to be afraid.

But the boy was not looking at her. Hardly was he thinking of her. He stared straight out of the doorway upon the wide, rolling lawn, flecked with leaf shadows in the pale radiance of the night.

"Adrienne," he began, "even nowadays men are very different from women. When they are young boys, hardly more than children, in a sense they're out in the world. They hear things talked about, they learn a different code of honor from the code of their sisters and mothers, and they get to taking a lot of things for granted that—well, that aren't so."

Adrienne had an impulse which she forced herself to ignore. She wanted to move away, so that Rob need not so much as touch her dress. There was a pang at her heart; she knew, suddenly, that she was no longer an irresponsible girl, but a woman. And because of this she moved not farther from, but closer to, this boy whom she loved—and who was living that mysterious life, the life of a young man.

Rob went on quietly; "Temptations come early to most boys; temptations you wouldn't dream of, Adrienne. I was only seventeen when I realized that for every decent boy on earth there is a fight on, the fight just to keep decent. It was queer, but the day it came I had a telegram from dad. I was staying with a school chum, in a little manufacturing town out West. We'd been having great larks because his family were away, and we were keeping bachelor hall together like two grown men. And then the wire came—mother was ill—and I went home on the limited, and when I got there she was delirious and the only person she recognized for almost two weeks was not Mildred, nor father, but me."

He shifted his position a little, and now Adrienne was free of the arm which a little while ago she had resented.

"Somehow mother and I got closer and chummier as she was getting strong than we had ever been before. We had long talks, new ones. She seemed to me younger—more like a pal than a chap's mother. One night, out on the lawn in the moonlight, like this, she said something I never forgot. She had been talking about father—what a corking man he is—I knew that—and she told me what a wonderful lover he had been; not just a good husband, guarding the romance of youth under all the apparent prose of marriage. As she talked, she seemed to me rather wonderful, too—for a mother to be able to show such intimate, splendid things to her own son.

And then she said, "Rob, I want to tell you something. The most precious gift a man can bring his wife, when he loves and marries, is not success, not culture, great achievements nor money, but this one great thing—a record as clean as his own! Rob, when a man does this, he crowns his wife;

she is a queen among women. And all her life she wears her invisible crown proudly."

Rob paused for a long, long moment. "After that, Adrienne, the fight really was on. I had always honored dad, now I worshiped him, for I had learned to see him through mother's eyes. But that fall I went to college. And there I got my taste of the real thing—temptation. It made all other things—mothers and ideals and clean, simple prayers—pale into a kind of far-away mist of dreams.

"Before I went back after Christmas my senior year, I had made up my mind. Every man has to live his own life, meet his own fate, I told myself. Dad and I were different, made differently. And I might never marry. I remember when I kissed mother good-bye that time, I had a sense that she was saying good-bye to the boy she knew.

"Dad and I walked to the station together; it was a mile and a half, even by the path, but we didn't want the machine. He had left papers piled a foot high on his desk to be with me. He was doing the biggest and most scientific work he had ever done, and he loved his work, but he said he needed the walk.

"On the way he talked a bit about mother. He said: 'Your mother is the purest, the best, and the bravest woman I have ever known.'

"I said, 'The best ever, dad. But she has never needed courage when she has had you.'

"He didn't say anything for a minute. Then he looked at me hard, and his big chin set in that firm line—I could see that what he was going to tell me hurt him. Finally he came out with it.

"'You and I are alike, Rob. We have the capacity for loving a few people greatly—and, I believe, of recognizing the right woman, when she comes. But we are also obstinate, hot-blooded, passionate. Ordinary warnings avail not an atom! When I married your mother I had the average man's confession to make to her—but she had her dreams, her white ideals—and what I told her nearly broke her heart.'

"I was so stunned that I stood still in the path and stared at him. I told him what mother had said to me—but he was not surprised.

"'She is too loyal to let you know that I ever disappointed her, Rob. But I'm afraid that all her life she herself has missed the feel of that crown on her dear head.'

"When he shook hands before we reached the station he said: 'Each generation should climb a rung higher than the last, my son. If some day you can give your wife the thing I did not give your mother, she and I will not have lived in vain.'

Adrienne breathed a passionate sigh that was almost a sob. "Yet we called marriage prosaic—when it holds pain—and love—like that. Oh, Rob, we were fools!"

"You understand what I mean you to know—Adrienne?"

Then he saw the light in her eyes—he knew that his reward was the purest joy a man may experience. Adrienne raised his hand to her lips, then laid it on her head.—Elizabeth Newport Hepburn, in Everybody's Magazine.

Letter Department

EDMONTON, CANADA, November 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: This finds a few of us trying to get the gospel before the fifty-five thousand people of this city.

To read the editorials in the papers here, and to hear some talk, one would think Edmonton to be the hub of the universe. The fact is, however, that new buildings have been and are going up this year by the hundreds, and you have to get a good distance out in the bush away from the post office to get a lot for less than one thousand dollars.

The work is doing as well as could be expected with the preacher they have at present; yet he is doing the best he can, and what he lacks the Saints can make up for.

J. C. CRABB.

BELLAIR, ILLINOIS, November 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: This month the few Saints living here will build a neat little church which is a very commendable part of the gospel work.

The brethren are striving to get the printed word among those who are anxious to know the truth. I believe in being able to give a reason for the hope that is within us. We should be able to please and worship Him who is the author of the Church of Jesus Christ as established in these last days. I love the Saints here and everywhere, and desire to so live that I may always be found worthy to live with them, in this life and also in the life to come.

Ever praying for the welfare of the Saints,

I remain, your sister,

MRS. R. A. FERGUSON.

JONESPORT, MAINE, November 5, 1912.

Dear Herald: I would thank you to direct the attention of the contributors to the HERALD to the importance of making their references complete. Many quotations would be valuable to the ministry if they knew who the authors were and what the date of the publications are. Such references as "The Chicago Times" do not mean much to the man who is careful in preparing an argument.

Many of our men quote Louis Van Buren on the restoration of the rains in Palestine with efficient regularity, yet when I ask them who Louis Van Buren is, and where I may find that he made such assertions, I find that most of them can not tell who Louis Van Buren was, neither can they give the name or date of the publication containing his statement.

What is true of this is also true of many other excerpts. We want to be able to prove our claims. We can not do it with such references as the "Literary Digest," etc., unless we know what the date of the issue is.

I think you will do a service to investigating minds if you will set our writers right in this matter.

Very respectfully,

J. A. KOEHLER.

MELROSE, NEW MEXICO, November 5, 1912.

Dear Herald: We enjoy your weekly visits immensely and can hardly wait till we get the next number. We are isolated; in fact, I have never heard a Latter Day Saint preach in my life, though I have been a member of the church almost three years. I became acquainted with the latter day work by reading the church books. The gospel seems to grow more interesting and glorious the more one studies about it. We do wish we could do more for the upbuilding of Zion! The time is going so fast, and destruction is coming upon the world!

Our neighbor lady is very much interested in the work.

I am reading the Book of Mormon to her. Can anyone explain why the Book of Mormon says, "And lead us not into temptation" in the Lord's Prayer, instead of giving it as it is in the Inspired Translation? I don't know what reason to give her.

How we would enjoy Sunday school and services! We have the church and books and don't see how we could get along without them.

Your sister in the gospel,
S. M. PETERMAN.

PORTLAND, MAINE, November 4, 1912.

Dear Herald: As a reader of your columns I have been strengthened by the letters of my brothers and sisters, and have been led to meditate on the wide range of God's mercy and his watchcare over his chosen people.

I am an isolated Saint, living in the above-named place, and I mingle with those who are of the world and who uphold "human creeds." My only teacher is the HERALD; however, it is a good one, as it comes with its soul-reviving and inspiring news, and is a feast of spiritual food to those who are deprived of the communion of Saints.

I was baptized only last February, but my faith is strong, and my desire is to press onward and try to do my Master's teachings more fully. I should be pleased to hear from any Saints.

May the blessings of God rest upon all faithful Saints, is my prayer.

41 VESPER STREET.

MRS. BESSIE HASKELL.

STONINGTON, ILLINOIS, November 10, 1912.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a beloved paper to me. It is not my privilege to attend meetings every Sabbath. We came to this place a little over two years ago, from Fayette City, Pennsylvania. Soon after several of our relatives followed, making three families in all, and we have tried to do what little we could to let the people know what we believe and teach.

Brother R. T. Walters was the first to come and preach for us. He came in February of last year. We secured the use of the town hall, but the result of the meetings seemed to be not very good, as very few attended. At that time there were some very exciting meetings being held by the people known as the "Holy Rollers." It seems that anything of this nature,—shouting and such things,—will draw the attention of the people more than the gospel taught in its plainness and purity by our elders, especially in this town.

The next meetings were held in July, 1911, in the district tent; by Brethren R. T. Walters and Edgar Smith, with about the same results: not very many attending; not very encouraging. The song says, "Never be discouraged; trust the Father's word." As Brother U. W. Greene says, we should belong to a try company; if at first we don't succeed, try again, and keep on trying. We hope to do that until the Lord gives us souls for our labor. We have been warned and are trying to warn our neighbors, and while we do not always have smooth sailing, we intend to press onward and upward as soldiers of the cross and followers of the Lamb.

Since coming here two of our number have passed away: Brother and Sister Raisbeck's little daughter, and Brother John Shotton's wife, Leah. Sister Shotton left six little ones.

Brethren J. W. Paxton and L. R. Fulk came and held services nine evenings, beginning on the 22d, in the town hall. There were very few who came, but they listened attentively. I believe some little good was done, for the few seemed to be very much interested, asking several questions. Brother Paxton is a very interesting speaker. Brother Fulk is very young in the work, being baptized only a year ago, and has been in the missionary work only about three months. He will make a good man if faithful.

We all belong to the Taylorville Branch, and attend whenever we can. It is nine miles from here. We have enjoyed the blessing of the Good Spirit many times with the Saints in their prayer meetings. They are a fine lot of people, and many of them are very faithful and zealous in the work. We had the pleasure of meeting Brother Curtis, our missionary in charge; also Brother William Lewis, the patriarch, when they visited Taylorville. We think they are grand men in the work and hope they will call again. We often think of others of the missionaries whom we have met in the East: R. Baldwin, James McConaughy, C. Ed. Miller, J. A. Becker, and others. It would have given us pleasure to have been with them at Kirtland.

We expect Brethren Paxton and Fulk to bring the tent here next summer, if the Lord wills. With a determination to do whatever I can in this good work.

Your brother in Christ,
WILLIAM SHOTTON.

NORWALK, CONNECTICUT, October 14, 1912.

Editors Herald: In the SAINTS' HERALD of October 9, is an editorial under the heading, "The Saints as voters," (the writer does not sign his name to this article, therefore I am left to judge who he may be). I do not wish to criticize, nor enter into a political controversy, for I am no politician; I have no ax to grind; but I do think that politics and the discussion of the same should be left entirely out of the church publications, and every member of the church that is an elector should be left to exercise his right of franchise without a hint of any kind coming from the church organ as to his duty as an elector.

The writer states it is within our province to advise our brethren who are interested in the issues of the day, and who are expecting to give expression to their opinions at the fall election, and who, possibly, between now and the date upon which we go to the polls, will be reading what may be written by the clamoring politicians. Does the writer believe the Saints are too ignorant to understand the principles, and parties; that they can not vote intelligently? The writer also states he believes it to be essential that those of us who will go to the polls on the fifth day of next November for the purpose of depositing our ballots, which will express our final opinion as to which party representatives we shall prefer to administer in the county, state, and national affairs of the Government, shall do so with the direct conviction that that choice is not only the safest and best for our interest as a church, and also our interest as individual citizens of the various States and Territories in which we live, and in the affairs of which we are integral participants in the law-making powers of the people under a representative form of government. Here the writer places the church and its interest above all other; secondarily, the individual; thirdly, the county, state, and national affairs. I fail to see it in that light. The placing of the church interests above all others, that is what got the Utah Church into trouble with the United States Government.

The writer calls our attention to Doctrine and Covenants 95: 2; a portion of the section reads: "I the Lord God maketh you free, therefore you are free indeed, and the law maketh you free, nevertheless, when the wicked rule the people mourn." Here we have a statement that the Lord God maketh us free, and also the law maketh us free. While we yet may be free we mourn because of the burden that is placed upon us and the distress we feel while under this law that maketh us free. We find that we are really in bondage when we as a people have to bow and do the bidding of such interests as Standard Oil, sugar, beef, and numerous other trusts, and find ourselves completely helpless. The freedom that we boast of under this law is a hoax.

He also states that the Lord approved of the existing laws of the Government, and especially to signify his approval of the Constitution of the United States, under which the state and national laws are made. More especially is the thought correct when viewed in the light of the statement that God had raised up wise men and endowed them with wisdom for the very purpose of writing and establishing that Constitution. While that may be true, did God at any time say that Constitution should never be amended by wise men that should be raised up to meet the needs and demands of the times? Did he say at any time that it is immutable, unchangeable, complete of itself, and sufficient for all time and conditions? If so, it is a most wonderful document, this creation of human minds, as it being of earthly origin, it of necessity will be subject to change as the Lord saw fit to give unto the children of Israel line upon line and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, as they had need, so is the Constitution of the United States.

A specific statement in the Declaration of Independence affirms that men are created equal and endowed with certain rights which are inalienable. Who believes that statement when we see the inequality in men and women before us every day? Why did not the Declaration of Independence also say that we are free? It would hardly do, while the black man was held in bondage.

The writer speaks of the safety of the representative government of the people as expressed at stated periods. This form of government may be all right when the people are represented and the will and the desires of the people are expressed by its representatives; but how often are the desires and will of the people defeated by its representatives selling themselves for gold, and betraying the confidence of the people. Where is there any safety in this kind of government? What is causing all the unrest that is manifest around us? Does it not make us think seriously when we see the giant combines springing into existence everywhere, grasping control of all industries? Billionaires are being made before our eyes, while the cost of living is steadily increasing, and the lot of the wage earner is becoming more intolerable all the time.

Mr. Editor, is it not time that the Lord raised up some one mighty and strong, to deliver us from the bondage we have fallen into? Some one to give us a government for the people, and a government by the people?

I state, as I said before, I am no politician; I have no ax to grind; I am neither of Paul, nor of Apollos, but I am one of the many who are suffering under the present condition of affairs in the United States.

HOMER BUTERY.

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT, November 4, 1912.

Editors Herald: I inclose you herewith a leaflet sent me some time ago by R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Kentucky, ring-leader of the Anti-Mormon Association, which I believe contains some statements that are not exactly true.

Speaking of "Mother Lucy's Book" he says the following: "The opposition of Brigham Young had the effect, of course, of strengthening the 'Josephites' in their determination to preserve and publish the book. By some means a man has to pay from five to ten times the worth, or price, of the book now to get a copy from them. Why is it thus? Why don't they advertise the book now with their other publications? They are practically doing what Brigham Young wanted done. . . . The 'Josephites' are not consistent. Though they republished it, they have no copies advertised for sale, and their leaders demand from five to ten times the cost or published price of the book for a copy when one can be located. We have never been able to locate but two copies. We now have one of those."

I have on hand a catalogue of the publications of the Herald Publishing House, and on page 5 appears the following: "Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, by Lucy Smith, number 150, cloth 75c."

The "Reverend R. B. Neal, Evangelist" grew warm under the collar and threatened lawsuits and other dire calamities, when some one insinuated that Ananias had nothing on him, but, unless the above quotations have a meaning entirely different from the way they read, it would appear that the person who did the insinuating might possibly have been correct in his estimate of the reverend gentleman.

Some time ago I purchased from Elder Daniel Macgregor a bunch of ancient works on Mormonism, and among the lot was a copy of the English edition of the book in question, and it might surprise Mr. Neal to know that the sum charged for it was seventy-five cents.

I have another copy of the leaflet, on which after reading it, I typed the following bit of poetry, by Longfellow, I believe, that I thought an appropriate comment on the leaflet in question.

"A naked falsehood and absurd,
As mortal ever told or heard,
Therefore I tell it, or maybe,
Simply because it pleases me."

Northeastern Kansas District Reunion.

The district conference and reunion of Northeastern Kansas was held at Riverside Park, Blue Rapids, Kansas.

Riverside Park proved an ideal place for the reunion; and many were enthused with the idea, "We are going to have a good reunion," from the beginning. The scene on the Blue River was a source of much inspiration and pleasure to many. One candidate went into its waters in baptism. Nearly everyone was on time for the first prayer meeting. Provision was made for everyone on the ground. There was prayer meeting and preaching for the aged; auxiliary work and song service for the youth; primary work for the little folks.

The word preached by the brethren was spiritual food from the Master's table to hungry souls. The auxiliary work was an interesting feature of the reunion. In the presentation of this work by Sister McNichols different subjects had been previously assigned to those who introduced them each afternoon; and was followed by a general discussion.

"Religious pedagogy," by F. G. Hedrick; "Archaeology," by F. A. Cool; Home Department Work was introduced by the writer; Graceland College, by F. G. Hedrick; Book of Mormon normal work, by Sister Ina Bivens; Questions on Doctrine and Covenants, by all the elders, priests, and teachers. They were seated on the rostrum and the "matter was on." Emma Smith had a calling; what was it? What it meant by hot drinks? Are there degrees in celestial law? These and many others were discussed; and while there was a difference of opinion in regard to some of the answers, yet all was done in a spirit of love and unity; and long after the usual time for closing the interest did not seem abating. Sister McNichols introduced some of the primary work used by Sister Stebbins at Pittsburg, Kansas. This gave entertainment for the little folks who were in charge of Sisters Ruth Lewis and Cecil Bivens. The inspiration from the work of this class appealed to many, as our boys and girls of to-day will be our men and women of to-morrow.

True to their name, the Sunshine Band did commendable work.

In harmony with the divine plan, Evangelist William Lewis endeared himself to many in the number of blessings given; also in enlightening the minds of many in the line of his calling. That muffled noise that echoed through the wood so early in the morn, was the call to hot biscuit at the boarding tent, run by Brother and Sister Bivens.

When time came to break up camp on Monday morning it was with the usual degree of joy and sadness that accompany a reunion. We felt that the parting blessing had been given in the hearing of the word, the soul-stirring testimonies, and the admonition of the Lord given through one of the sisters that if the Saints were faithful there would be a great advancement of the work in the district; and a statement was therein made that if faithful there were those present who would see the time that the present camp ground would not hold those who would come to attend the reunion. Our reunions are an important factor in the general improvement of the church. They are a school of instruction. Not all are permitted to attend the General Conference sessions of the church and take an active part in them. But many may attend the district reunions and get in touch with the work through the field-workers. That is what they are for; to conserve the greatest good of the greatest number; and this can be done only in a reunion. Come to the reunion at Blue Rapids next year.

Florida Reunion.

The reunion of the Florida District for 1912 is a thing of the past, but the good influences it has exercised over the minds of all those attending it will never be erased from their minds. It has given us all renewed determination to do more for the Master, and to live more for him, and has also steadied us in our outlook upon life, both temporal and spiritual. Not the least influence for good were the blessings given by Patriarch Ammon White. We understand fifty-three blessings were given during the nine days. The Spirit was manifest to admonish and comfort the Saints in their prayer meetings; and the preaching was good throughout. The attendance was so large on Sundays that the church was unable to accommodate them, although it has a capacity of five hundred. The highest compliments were paid the membership, and the preaching and singing, by people not affiliated with us. This of course gives us a great deal of satisfaction. The preaching was done by Brethren Ammon White, F. M. Slover, L. C. Moore, A. G. Miller, J. W. Dubose, W. A. West, W. M. Hawkins, and C. J. Clark.

The presidents of the reunion were F. M. Slover and C. J. Clark. Sister Helen Jernigan presiding at the organ and Sister C. J. Clark chorister, with Brethren Jeff Jernigan and Mac Barnes as deacons.

It was unanimously agreed to hold another reunion at the same place and in the same month next year. The old reunion committee was retained. It was the first time we had tried serving meals on the grounds, but this feature was as much of a success as the rest of the work done. We intend to enlarge the restaurant next year, as the only complaint we heard was that it was too small to accommodate the crowds.

SECRETARY REUNION.

Why Don't You Make It Known?

In conversation with Elder George L. De Lange, of the Utah Mormon Church, your writer called Mr. De Lange's attention to the statement of Joseph and Hyrum Smith condemning the preaching of "polygamy and other false and corrupt doctrines" quoted by Brother A. H. Parsons in his "Text-Book," and asked him if he had ever seen that in the original. Mr. De Lange answered no, and questioned the veracity of the quotation. On being informed that he could see the original by calling at mission headquarters in Tahiti, he said: "Well, if it be true, why don't your people make it known?"

Mr. De Lange is a man twenty-eight years of age, from the south part of Utah; bright, and fairly well educated. Is it possible that they have not heard that Joseph and many others refuted such charges against them and condemned the doctrine many times? Do they not know that those refutations were printed and published to the world? Oh, that those words were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rocks of Utah for ever! And that they were carved in the walls of the temple in Salt Lake City! That they might be cut in five iron signboards and reared in front of the five houses where Joseph Fielding Smith, President of the Utah Church, now has his five wives living! Then, perhaps, no one could say they did not know that polygamy was condemned by the martyred Prophet.

Peacock-Hall Debate.

I will try to tell a little about the debate held here from October 7 to 12. Brother Peacock, one of our local workers, and an elder, was challenged to debate by Reverend Hall, of the Christian or Campbellite Church. Brother Peacock accepted the challenge, and after consultation with the ministers in charge, on Monday night began the debate, the writer acting as moderator for him.

The opening song was appropriate: "We come with joy the truth to teach you." In the affirmative, Brother Peacock took up the organization of the church and established it by Christ and his personal ministry. He used a chart showing the organization and ancient order of things.

Hall denied this, and said there was no church before Pentecost because they did not receive the Holy Ghost before that time, therefore there was no church. This argument was overcome by showing that John was full of the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb, and that "holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," and quoting other scriptures on the kingdom, such as "The kingdom shall be taken from you and given to another people, bringing forth the fruits thereof"; "If a brother offend thee, tell it to the church." He made the points that if there were no kingdom it could not be taken away; and that if there were no church, one could not tell it to the church.

Hall, with much gusto denied that the Holy Ghost was received before Pentecost and said no man ever received the Holy Ghost but the twelve apostles whom Jesus ordained. He said there was no one in the upper chamber on Pentecost but the twelve apostles. He criticized the chart and said the kingdom had to come with power, and it did not come with power until Pentecost. He tried to prove that if the church was set up in the days of Christ it had infidels and devils in it, and there could not be any church of God. He then took up the book written by D. H. Bays and read from that. He said the church Brother Peacock was representing had too many officers in it. He accused Brother Peacock of having to run all over the Bible to sustain his theory and that there were not ten lawyers in the State who could understand him.

Mr. Hall quoted Isaiah 2: 2-4 and said it was fulfilled on Pentecost because Peter said this was that which was spoken of by the Prophet Joel, saying that in the last days the Lord would pour out his Spirit on all flesh. He tried to make out that that was fulfilled on Pentecost, so the church was set up on Pentecost.

Brother Peacock again spoiled this argument by quoting Matthew 18: 17 and other scriptures. He gave Mr. Hall all he wanted to do. Brother Peacock then took up the prophets to show the coming forth of a book and the restoration of the gospel in the last days, but failed to get Hall away from Pentecost; he stuck right there and said we didn't need prophets and apostles in this day and age. About fifteen minutes before the close of his last speech he tried to bring in the character of Joseph Smith, but we soon got him back into line.

The next night Hall was in the affirmative, and he went back to Isaiah 2: 2-4 for his again; he also read Micah 4: 1, 2, and Daniel 2: 44, and said that Christ was the rock and the church was built on Christ. He got right down to business to prove his little Pentecost theory and said Christ was not preached before Pentecost. Brother Peacock cited him to Luke 10: 17 and tried to get him to explain Isaiah 2: 2-5, but he gave it a good letting alone. Brother Peacock took it up and showed him that one of the bloodiest wars known was fought not long after.

Mr. Hall said that had its fulfillment on the day of Pentecost and that even went down in the pages of history.

Brother Peacock took up the history of the Campbellite Church. Hall resented it and denied Alexander Campbell. He said he started a church but he was no kin to him; that he belonged to a church but it was the church of the living God. He wouldn't allow Brother Peacock to use the Christian System. Brother Peacock said to him: "Give me your books." He then showed that they were published by the same firm as the ones quoted from. The house cheered. We had no chairman, so had to choose one from the congregation, and he decided in our favor, and Hall had to take his medicine. He was handled well by Brother Peacock and the truth was well defended.

Hall challenged Brother Peacock on the Book of Mormon and doctrines of Joseph Smith. He wrote the propositions and handed them to Brother Peacock. Brother Peacock signed them with the date October 14, and asked his opponent if he was ready to sign them, but no; he was not ready to sign them then.

The debate took well with the people, and they all see that there is something more to the work than they thought. I think it did lots of good and that Reverend Hall will not want another debate with our people for a long time.

Yours for the truth,

Church Work in Australia.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is gradually forging ahead. This statement is proved by the work of missionaries in Australia. Brother Frederick Pitt, (patriarch) of America, has baptized twenty-one people since he came to Australia. Two persons, a young man and a young woman, were baptized at the New South Wales conference, October, 1912.

Elders Davis and Robertson, American missionaries, have also, in the three years which they have spent in Australia, baptized a good many people. Brother Davis is now in Western Australia, laboring, there, and patiently waiting for Brother Robertson to join him. From there they will proceed on their journey, via the Holy Land.

We are losing one or two elders who are also bound for America; thus leaving very few to carry on the work. Nevertheless, the church will continue to grow, as it belongs to God.

We would like to have some more missionaries to come over and help us in the work. There are many people interested in this work and who will enter into the church before long, I trust.

Brother Pitt and wife will return to America via the South Sea Islands and Honolulu and will not return with Brethren Davis and Robertson through the Holy Land.

A Card of Thanks to Those Who Sent Me Papers.

I desire to express my sincere thanks to all who sent me church publications for free distribution, in my vicinity, as a result of my request through the HERALD and Ensign.

I have received papers and tracts from so many sources, and from all points of the compass, that a personal acknowledgment is almost an impossibility. And I hope that each Saint who has contributed to this collection of church publications, will feel that he or she has as great a part in the attempt to advertise the great latter day work, as those who have a direct hand in its circulation. And to that end I ask you to accept my heartiest thanks for the interest you have taken in my effort.

What the result may be I know not, but this one thing I know, I desire to sow the seed and assist in watering it, if permitted, and am willing to leave the giving of the increase to Him to whom this part belongs.

I have always considered our church publications were the best religious papers in the world, and I have had three stamps made, and you can see just what each one of the papers you sent will have in addition to the regular original matter. The first stamp reads as follows:

"My pages are freighted with food for the soul,
As taught by the Savior and apostles of old,
Then carefully read me, my teaching's the best,
Appeal to the Bible, for that is the test."

The second is a kindly invitation, to those who may not be interested in the paper, not to destroy it, but to pass it to another who might be. It reads as follows:

"Kindly reader, don't destroy me, for another might enjoy me, so pass me on. . . .
"We meet at 6601 South Honore Street,
11.15 a. m. and 7.45 p. m.

The third stamp is a bid for subscribers. It does seem to me that all who are unprejudiced, and no doubt these papers will fall into the hands of some such, and are looking for the truth, they might become subscribers if they only were asked to do so, and so the following lines are stamped on each paper for that purpose:

"A trial subscription to my pages you'll find,
If you read and digest them, will bring to your mind
The most wonderful things you ever have heard,
And the proof of them all you will find in the Word;
And the spiritual dividends you'll get from the start,
Will enlighten your mind and gladden your heart.
There is no time to lose, so make no delay,
Send in your subscription ere the close of the day."

Trusting, dear Saints, that good may come out of the effort, and that some wanderer may be led to the sheepfold and safely sheltered therein.

News from Branches

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our regular sacrament services have been held since last report and strength and encouragement were received therefrom. The preaching services have been exceptionally instructive and there has been decided improvement in attendance. Regular priesthood meetings have also been held, which no doubt are of great benefit to those having charge of the work.

Opportunities seem to be opening for the presentation of the gospel to those not of the faith of late, as our pastor, Brother Archibald, through Brother George Reeves, who was not ashamed of the gospel among his associates where he is employed, was invited to speak at one of the Christian churches in our city. He was well received, invited to return, and was offered money for his services, which of course he did not accept.

Again, a Mrs. Wells was lecturing at the Young Woman's Christian Association building recently on the menace of Mormonism to society. Some of our sisters being in attendance reported a proper distinction was not made between us and the Utah people; informing Brother Archibald of things that were said. He requested privilege to answer her, but being refused advertised to do so at our own chapel the following Sunday evening, which he very ably did, continuing his subject of our faith and belief the next Sunday.

The lady did not come, but when told by Brother Archibald of the difference in the churches, and that she would be called to account for any more misrepresentations, she said she was not aware of there being any difference.

The Sunday school has started a prayer service for the teachers and officers of the school, also all the young people who can attend, at 8.45 Sunday mornings.

Revival services are to begin November 17, to continue as long as interest permits. Your sister in Christ,

"Resolved, That whereas it has been the custom to provide expense legitimately falling upon the district conference, and whereas the burden of the expense thereby falls upon the branch members already burdened by the expense of entertainment, together with visiting members who have incurred expense by attending the conference; and whereas the branches not entertaining conference and those members not attending are not represented in the burden thereof, therefore be it resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution, that each branch shall pay in to the treasurer of the district a sum of five cents per capita equal to the membership as recorded by its statistical report, the same to be sent at the time of the filing of the reports to the district secretary." May. Districts reporting: Sheffield, Birmingham, Eastern Wales. Evangelical ministers reporting: Joseph R. Greenwood, James Baty. High priests: Thomas Taylor, Henry Greenwood, G. W. Leggott, J. W. Prayer was requested for John Schofield, who was sick; also for time to baptize the son of Elder Norton. At 9 a. m., on Sunday a very spiritual prayer meeting was held. At 10.30 there was a preaching service with Bishop May as speaker. The Saints understood and appreciated the straight talk. He made it especially clear that the Lord had brought our work in the British Isles to the front during the past twelve months; and under the fierce light of criticism in a way that he had never done before. The speaker showed what had been done, was being done, and what might be done if we labored faithfully. It was made clear that the Lord was moving in our favor. Remarks were made on the temporal law. A very spiritual prayer meeting was held at 2.30. The testimonies were soul-stirring and the gifts of tongues, interpretation, and prophecy were present. A baptismal service followed, Ernest Norton being baptized by Bishop May. He was confirmed at the meeting at 6.30 by James Baty and W. R. Armstrong. At the evening service Sister Edwards sang a solo which was appreciated much. The speaker was W. H. Greenwood. The audience was a large one and very attentive. At 10.45 a. m. Monday, the conference resumed its sittings with Brother Greenwood in the chair, assisted by James Baty. Interesting and helpful addresses were given by the chairman, William Ecclestone, Thomas Gould, J. G. Jenkins, and James Baty. At 2.20 the mission president occupied the chair and was assisted by Brother May. Several missionary reports were read, and then the report of the Seventh Quorum of Elders was presented. It had held three meetings during the conference and showed a membership of 54, 39 of whom had reported. Progress had been made during the year. The Sixth Quorum of Priests reported. The officers were not able to attend conference this year. The report of the Manchester District Zion's Religio-Literary Society showed two locals with a membership of sixty and bright prospects. A new local has been organized at Farnsworth since the close of conference. Bishop May's financial report was read. The necessity for making our conference deliberative assemblies being considered, the report of the committee on the jurisdiction of mission conferences was read from page 1616 of General Conference Minutes for 1912. This report was unanimously supported by the assembly. The conference then resolved, That we henceforth recognize the conference of the British Isles Mission as an authoritative and legislative body, as provided for and authorized by General Conference of 1912. By resolution, the "Rules" which had previously governed our mission conference were adopted. The general church officers, the mission president, Bishop R. May, Secretary W. R. Armstrong, Assistant Secretary J. W. Taylor, Local Historian W. R. Armstrong, were sustained by unanimous vote; also the following missionaries: 1. London District, Bishop R. May in charge, with Elders J. A. Judd and J. W. Worth. 2. Manchester District, high priest, G. W. Leggott, in charge, with Elders S. F. Mather, N. J. Weate, W. H. Chandler, and James Schofield. 3. Birmingham District, high priest, J. W. Taylor, in charge, with Elders John Ecclestone, and J. E. Meredith. 4. Sheffield District, Elder Chas. Cousins in charge, with Elders John Holmes, Simon Holmes, Ernest Wragg. 5. Leeds District, T. Taylor in charge. 6. Eastern Wales District, Elder George Cope. 7. Western Wales District, Elder J. G. Jenkins in charge, with Priest James Evans. 8. Belfast, Priest James Adam. Henry Greenwood, James Baty, and W. R. Armstrong will labor under the personal direction of the mission president; James Greenwood will labor in the London and Birmingham districts. A vote of thanks was awarded the catering and locating committees for the excellent manner in which they had attended to the wants of the Saints during conference. The auditors for the ensuing year were announced as follows: J. A. Judd, (one year) J. W. Worth, (two years) and J. E. Meredith, (three years). Resolved, That we express our high appreciation of the manner in which The People, and other papers, have shown the difference between our organization and that of the Utah people, and that the papers in question be suitably written to this effect. This matter was placed in the hands of the secretary and Thomas Taylor. At 7 the report of "The One Thousand Shillings Fund" was presented by Brother May, the financial secretary and treasurer of the mission. The report was accepted and referred to the auditing committee. It was resolved, That the financial secretary and treasurer of the British Isles be the bishop, with power to choose an assistant. By resolution the following brethren were chosen as a committee to scrutinize the literature presented by the Anti-Mormon League and purchase as they may deem advisable: R. May, W. H. Greenwood, W. H. Chandler, Thomas Taylor, and W. R. Armstrong. The mission authorities are to decide where the next annual conference shall be held. A most enjoyable and peaceful conference was had. W. H. First Quorum of Elders.

Agreeably to a former notification, ten of the elders in the Mobile, Alabama, and Florida districts, met at the Alafloza Church, Dixonville, Alabama, to organize into an elders quorum. F. M. Slover, assistant missionary in charge, in the chair. He and Brother Ammon White, patriarch, gave us some instruction regarding the work. We then proceeded to organize by electing W. A. West, of the Florida District, president; he in turn choosing C. J. Clark, of the Florida District, and George O. Sellers, of the Alabama District, as first and second counselors. C. J. Clark was also elected secretary-treasurer. The names of these brethren were recommended to the conferences of their respective districts for ordination to their respective offices of president and counselors. Among other motions, one prevailed requiring that all desiring membership in the quorum must be recommended by two members of said quorum. Another was that we do not accept into our quorum any elder who is known to use tobacco.

Two sessions were held, one on the 25th and one the day following. We then adjourned, subject to the call of the presidency.

The names of those attending and becoming members of the quorum are: W. A. West, W. M. Hawkins, B. L. Jernigan, and C. J. Clark, of the Florida District; Albert G. Miller, and George W. Sherman, of the Mobile District; Albert A. Weaver, George O. Sellers, W. S. McPherson, and James R. Harper, of the Alabama District.

By motion it was agreed that we be called the First Quorum of Elders of the Southeastern Mission.

All felt that great good had been done and that history for the Southeastern Mission had been made. And all expressed themselves as more determined to occupy in the office to which they had been called.

Correction.

Brother A. I. Beebe, Millville, Florida, calls attention to a wrong citation on page 976 of the HERALD, issue of October 9. The credit, Exodus 8: 2, should have been Deuteronomy 8: 2.

Address of Elder W. H. Greenwood,

PRESIDENT OF THE BRITISH ISLES MISSION, AUGUST 2, 1912.

To the Brethren and Saints, Assembled in Conference at Birmingham, August 3, 1912; Greeting: Having been appointed by the General Conference of April, 1912, to the Presidency of the British Isles Mission, I take this means of addressing you.

In the first place, let us thank our heavenly Father for his sparing mercy, in granting unto us the privilege of coming together once again in conference capacity. Let us hope that our gathering together will be blessed to each other.

In order to accomplish this condition it is necessary that each one realize that much depends upon the spirit in which we come together. In times past much complaint has been made that our gatherings were not what they might have been, by reason of the untoward spirit manifest by us to each other. Now in order to improve upon this condition it is necessary that we have more consideration for each other, and endeavor to put into practice the Golden Rule of our Master; that is as we would that our brother should consider us, just so we must consider our brother. Therefore, let past experience be our teacher; let us learn the lesson thus taught, and we shall each go to our several fields feeling encouraged and blessed, determined to put forth renewed effort, by reason of the brotherly love we shall have experienced in company with each other.

The spiritual condition of the mission—the condition of the work throughout the mission, leaves much to be desired. This condition I gather mainly from the various reports that have reached me. Personally, I have only been in touch with the work (officially) for one month, but the districts that I have visited, I am pleased to report, are in a fair spiritual condition, speaking generally. Hereafter I shall advise you in regard to the conditions that do obtain, and the way to improvement will also be presented for your consideration.

I shall not go into detail regarding the spiritual condition of the several branches and districts in the mission, as I prefer to be personally acquainted with the standing of each part, before I could in justice attempt to state its condition.

But I shall state in general terms, this one fact: That there has never been a brighter prospect before the church, since its inception, than we have before us at the present time. The avenues that are opening before us will increase with the wisdom of our good living and simple preaching and teaching of pure gospel principles, which are in essence the religion of Jesus Christ, and the doctrine of our church.

This bright prospect is mainly due to the efforts of our brethren who have secured favor with the newspapers, and thereby have been able to give correct information to the people of our Isles, upon the subject of our standing as a church; and also in making plain to all who would read the difference between the Utah Mormon Church and the Reorganized Church; together with the fact that Joseph Smith, the founder, was in no way responsible for the doctrine of polygamy, but that the authorship of this evil practice is now rightly placed upon the founder of the Utah Mormon Church; namely, Brigham Young.

The fruit of this labor is mainly due, in the first place, to the efforts of Elder W. H. Chandler, Bishop R. May, Elder W. R. Armstrong, and High Priest Thomas Taylor. Elder W. H. Chandler has been in touch with the special commission of the newspaper known as The People for over one year.

Bishop R. May has also been in personal touch with the same agent, with good results. Elder W. R. Armstrong has been effective with the Manchester papers, and also in personal touch with the editors of the same. High Priest Thomas Taylor has been successful in the same direction in several of the Yorkshire newspapers.

The Anti-Mormon Movement.—This organization will also prove a source of usefulness to our work, in making known to the people the true standing of the Reorganization, as you will hear from the report of Elder W. H. Chandler, of Warrington. Much good work has also been accomplished in this direction by the brethren of the Birmingham District in representing our position to this society. Let us therefore be wise, my brethren, and make the present opportunities effective for the Master's cause.

MISSION WORK.

Our Organization.

The General Conference of 1912 has placed at our command a staff of missionaries numbering twenty-six. These brethren are located as follows:

1. London District; Bishop R. May, in charge; Elders J. Judd, J. W. Worth.

2. Manchester District; High Priest G. W. Leggott, in charge; Elders S. F. Mather, N. J. Weate, W. H. Chandler, James Schofield.

3. Birmingham District; High Priest J. W. Taylor, in charge; Elders John Schofield, Joseph Ecclestone, J. E. Meredith.

4. Sheffield District; Elder Charles Cousins, in charge; Elders John Holmes, Simon Holmes, jr., Earnest Wragg.

5. Leeds District; High Priest, Thomas Taylor.

6. Eastern Wales District; Elder George Cope.

7. Western Wales District; Elder J. C. Jenkins, in charge; Elder James Evans.

8. Belfast, Ireland; Priest, Thomas Adams. This appointment I have made personally in accordance with general understanding. The brother will bear his own expenses.

BRITISH ISLES.

9. Evangelical Minister James Baty, sr; High Priest, Henry Greenwood, Elder W. R. Armstrong will labor under my personal direction. Evangelical Minister Joseph Greenwood will labor in the London and Birmingham districts as circumstances may demand. These brethren will labor in the several districts named and will be pleased to assist you in local capacity wherever you may by mutual understanding and consent agree together for such labor.

I may cite an instance of such labor for your information. Elder W. H. Chandler, of Warrington, was appointed to labor in Wigan. This branch had not held a meeting for over four years until he went there. He has labored there just one year and he has reorganized the branch. Meetings have been held every week since his advent. He has baptized eight and revived the membership of that branch, and to-day the interest in Wigan is as great as any other part of the mission. Let us therefore seek to build up the branches all we can; then we can point out to the world the strength and power of our own local organizations.

To the brethren laboring in the foregoing appointments, I advise that they labor in harmony with the authorities of the several branches, districts, and missions, assisting, supplementing, and strengthening the various organizations where they may by mutual arrangement labor; and I further request that the said branches, districts, and missions shall recognize these brethren as the general authorities of the church in all their labors, and this by mutual consent.

REPORTS.

Let me here remind you, brethren, what is expected of you in reporting your labor. You will give a report each quarter. The reports are due July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1, to the brother in charge of your particular field of labor. The brethren in charge will forward to me on the dates named the reports of all the brethren laboring under them, therefore kindly take note of this matter and be prompt in reporting.

BRANCH ORGANIZATION.

Brethren, I exhort you in both branches and districts to put forth every effort for the completion of your branch organizations, so that the work of the church may be carried out in its entirety. What is meant is this; that every branch should have a full complement of officers. Each one should be capable of discharging the duties of his particular office.

1. The elder to preside, organize, and arrange with his officers for the labor of each branch, and see that the law is carried out. In this way every member and officer will be provided with the means of development.

2. The priest to visit and encourage the membership, and pray with them and teach them also to pray, thus deepening their interest in spiritual life.

3. The teacher to watch that no misunderstanding is allowed to exist, but to visit and seek to give a clear understanding to each of the membership of their duty to each other, and the church, encouraging each to love the other, thus overcoming evil and establishing good will and unity of faith and spirit in the body generally.

4. The deacon, to assist the teacher in the discharge of his duty, if needs be. But his duty is to see that the house of the Lord is kept clean and cheerful, for the worship of God, and for the assembling of the Saints. To have all things in order, and welcome the Saints when they shall assemble, having a cheerful word for each. To show strangers to their seats and encourage them to attend each service by kindly attention and welcome.

In this way we shall put our own house in order, and thus show forth the fruits of brotherhood in Christ Jesus.

The kingdom of God must grow from within, and as we shall manifest these fruits of spiritual intercourse, the Church of Christ will appeal to all the honest-hearted men and women who love the truth, and we shall also demonstrate to the world the divinity of our organization in faith, doctrine, and practice, and thus make increase to the body, to the edifying of the membership in the principles of love and truth.

These features of our work I submit to you, my brethren, and testify that they have been given me by the Spirit of the Master. The time for the careful reconstruction of our own duties is now upon us. Let us therefore be diligent in the discharge of the same, each officer standing in his own appointed place, fulfilling all the requirements of his office, to the praise and glory of our Master, and the establishment of the cause we unitedly love.

The sad spiritual condition of our mission will then soon be a thing of the past, and we shall be able to report increase in the church, both spiritually and numerically.

THE ELDERS' QUORUM.

In order to secure the success and greater usefulness of the Seventh Quorum of Elders I herewith advise all missionary appointees to interest themselves in the work of the elders' quorum, and exhort all the elders to attach themselves to the quorum by membership, pointing out the advantage of such organization, thus making complete our church organizations, and fitting the elders for the more proficient discharge of their duties as ministers of Jesus Christ; and I felt it my duty to say, that I have observed with interest the diligent efforts of the president of the quorum, together with its officers, and I am in duty bound to say that they deserve much better support from the elders than they have received.

This organization, my brethren, is for you; its object is to promote your development in spiritual understanding; for the enlargement of your capacity, for your greater usefulness in the Church of Christ. Therefore rally to the call of your brethren.

THE PRIESTS' QUORUM.

In the same respect I would advise, counsel, and encourage all the missionaries and elders to assist in the better establishment of the priests' quorum, by encouraging all the priests throughout the mission to attach themselves to the quorum by membership, assisting them by our experience at all times, and thus encourage and assist them also to greater diligence and usefulness.

In conclusion, let me thank you, brethren, for the support you have given me in taking up this most important work to which the church has called me. My only desire is to assist all I can to carry on the work intrusted unto us, to the best of our ability; and this I shall endeavor to do according to the law, rule, and principle of truth, as revealed unto us in these the last days.

All I ask of you is that you will have confidence in each other, and ask the blessing of God to be with and abide upon the labors of each other, to the establishing of each other in the faith of our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

And now may the spirit of true brotherhood be with us throughout this conference, to the enlargement of each soul that shall take part therein.

Finally, let us pray that the peace of God and the comfort of the Holy Spirit may be with us all, always.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD, Minister in Charge.

Died.

SPRAY.—Henry Spray was born November 8, 1836, Derbyshire, England. He married Sarah Ann Wainright in 1852. Eleven children blessed this union. Five daughters and one son survive him. He and family immigrated to the United States in 1869, locating in Pennsylvania. He located at Lucas, Iowa, in 1876, where he remained up to the time of his death, which came as a result of asthma, November 11, 1912. Buried the 12th at Fry Hill Cemetery. Mr. Spray's first wife died in 1885. Married Mrs. Marie Carter in 1886, who also survives him. E. B. Morgan preached the sermon at the Saints' chapel, assisted by James Talbot. Though not a member he was favorable to our cause.

RAISBECK.—Mabel D. Raisbeck was born April 30, 1909, and died August 16, 1912. The funeral sermon was preached by Frank Izatt, assisted by G. L. Hartsell. Besides her parents she is survived by five brothers and five sisters. The Saints of Taylorville, Illinois, deeply sympathize with those who are bereaved of their loved one.

MANSFIELD.—Mary Mansfield died October 12, 1912, at Jonesport, Maine; born April 29, 1836, at Winterport, Maine. She was married to E. A. Mansfield, August 10, 1860, who remains to mourn a devoted wife. She accepted the angel's message many years ago, baptized by J. C. Foss, and ever an active and zealous worker. Many of the elders will remember her kindly ministrations, as she and her husband always made their home a welcome place for the servants of God. Our sympathies are extended to her bereaved companion, who was always so devoted to her, but we remember that "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," and her reward is sure. Funeral at the home, Tuesday, October 15, conducted by J. A. Koehler and Uriah M. Kelley.

HARTMAN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, November 3, 1912, Eliza E. Hartman, aged 67 years, 8 months, 23 days. Six children survive her, four being present at her death. She and her husband were married in 1862, and were baptized in 1874, by Z. H. Gurley. Brother Hartman died in 1899. Both were faithful in their gospel hope. Funeral sermon by H. A. Stebbins; assisted by A. S. Cochran. Burial at Davis City, Iowa, by the side of her husband.

LANE.—Near Andover, Missouri, November 5, 1912, Brother Oliver S. Lane, aged 54 years, 7 months, and 12 days. He married Mary A. Shakespeare in 1882. Of eight children born, six are still living, two married and four at home. Brother Lane was baptized at Lucas, Iowa, in 1886, by A. N. Bishop, and he lived a worthy life and made an honorable record before all. His body was brought to Lamoni for burial and the sermon was preached by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Columbus Scott.

HOVERSON.—Andrew H. Hoverson was born May 17, 1881. He united with the church in his boyhood days and lived an upright godly life. He died at home, Burlington, Iowa, September 27, 1912. He leaves to mourn, but not without hope, his wife Alvena; two daughters, Naoma Ruth, aged five, and Pearl Elsie, aged three; mother and three brothers. His father died August, 1881, less than four months after the birth of his youngest son, Andrew. The funeral at the Saints' church, Burlington, Sunday, September 29, 2.30 p. m., was attended by many relatives and friends. The church building would not accommodate all. Sermon by O. R. Miller. The branch mourns the loss of a faithful Saint.

THATCHER.—Paul Thatcher was born at Blue Creek, Ohio, September 15, 1858, and died November 3, 1912, at Mermill, Ohio. Funeral sermon preached in the Disciple church to a large concourse of neighbors and friends on the resurrection, by Samuel Brown. He leaves a wife who belongs to the church, nine sons, and one daughter, to mourn. He married Sister Irene Delong April 6, 1878. He was taken with typhoid fever thirteen weeks previous to his decease, and never recovered. He was quite favorable to the work and intended to unite but was not able to do so.

BOYER.—Irene Boyer was born November 5, 1874, in Alleghany County, New York; baptized in 1888, at South Woodman, Michigan, by Brother Elliot; died November 6, 1912, at Toledo, Ohio. She leaves husband and one daughter to mourn. Funeral sermon preached in the Methodist church, by Samuel Brown.

EPPEPLY.—Katherine Epperly was born December 10, 1839, in Pulaski County, Kentucky; died in Joy, Illinois, November 8, 1912. She was united in marriage to John C. Epperly, October 30, 1856; to this union were born seven children, two having preceded her to the heavenly home. She united with the church March 11, 1863, and was a faithful member, ever ready to defend the gospel she loved so well. Funeral services were held from the Saints' church in Millersburg, O. E. Sade officiated, assisted by J. W. Bean. The body was laid to rest in the Oak Ridge Cemetery to await the morn of the first resurrection.

Surprised by Joy.

Surprised by joy—impatient as the wind
 I turned to share the transport—oh! with whom
 But thee, deep buried in the silent tomb,
 That spot which no vicissitude can find?
 Love, faithful love, recalled thee to my mind—
 But how could I forget thee? Through what power,
 Even for the least division of an hour,
 Have I been so beguiled as to be blind
 To my most grievous loss? That thought's return
 Was the worst pang that sorrow ever bore,
 Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn,
 Knowing my heart's best treasure was no more;
 That neither present time, nor years unborn,
 Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.

VOLUME 59

LAMONI, IOWA, NOVEMBER 27, 1912

NUMBER 48

Editorial

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE?

The remarkable result following the fierce political campaign which has agitated the country for the last five or six months gives rise in the minds of the greater portion of the citizens of the Republic a query as to what the harvest is to be, meaning, of course, What is to follow the change of administration?

The late election emphasizes to a great degree the remarkable elasticity of our representative republican form of government. The peculiar and extraordinary trend of public opinion which has placed the Democratic Party in charge of the governmental affairs of the Republic for the ensuing four years, may be traced, without any great effort of divination, to one of two conditions; the one being that of a peculiar unrest, almost everywhere prevalent, caused by the fierce agitation which has been carried on, suggestive that there ought to be a change of political domination, the opportunity being apparently ripe for such a change. The other idea, and one which we strongly favor, is that the candidacy of ex-President Roosevelt and the fight waged by him against the dominant party itself, in that strong and vigorous language of which the Colonel is capable, and what appeared to them as a betrayal of trust in his sudden change of political affiliation and effort to form a new party, created a fear in the minds of a great many Republicans that there was a strong chance that Colonel Roosevelt would be elected President. They, through the influence of that fear, gave their strength to the party which is coming into power on the fourth of March next, preferring that governmental affairs should fall into the hands of the Democrats; preferring that party, with its platform in which, as they view it, there was directness of thought and intention and purpose, rather than it should fall into the hands of aggressive ambition, indefinitely promising much which upon its face promised to the minds of many the establishment of a political utopia which it was felt could not be realized by such a party being put into power.

Now that the issue is decided; whatever may have been the cause, that decision is so clear, and the number of electoral votes must go to the successful candidate for President so great, there is no room for either minority or all of the minorities combined to find any fault or trace any just objection. The President and Vice President and the Cabinet which will be chosen to act with them will have a more than working majority in both houses of Congress, so that the administration of public affairs must be necessarily, wholly, and demonstrably Democratic, using the word to typify the party methods rather than applying it indiscriminately to all the people.

We believe all should acquiesce in the choice that has been made and exert our influence to drop any captious opposition that we might have felt in any respect, and maintain the dignity of citizens by just and fair obedience to the laws of the land. To do this we are commanded.

We feel the assurance that there is no just reason to fear that the affairs of the Government will not be administered by patriotic and unselfish men, who, rising to the exigencies of the offices to which they will be called or appointed, will strive to make the administration a success; that the growth and development of the country may not be broken or its onward progress checked by a departure from right ways of life, on the part of those intrusted with the administration of public affairs.

What the incoming party may do in administration touching the tariff remains to be seen, but we think it quite safe to say that as far as the imposts on foreign importations may affect the consumer, he will not be very seriously affected by the application of the term, "for revenue only," as contrasted with the term, "for protection." We will watch very studiously the development of affairs as they are brought to light by the exigencies of the Government and the efforts that will be made to meet them. It is clear to every thinker, however, that the times and conditions under which the Government now exists, and its relations with foreign powers demands that precaution be exercised by those in charge at Washington. It is to be sincerely hoped by all that the patriotism still existent in both the South and North, the East and the West, will prevail, and that the affairs of the Government may be fairly administered, whoever may be in charge thereof.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S BIRTHDAY.

The eightieth anniversary of the birth of President Joseph Smith was celebrated on Wednesday, November 6, at his home, 1214 West Short Street, him on his way to outer air. This is Dowie's way in disguise, a travesty on common consent; but it is not God's way.

There are still other denominations in which the rule of the people is supreme. No one ever stops to ask what God's will may be. The shepherd has no voice as to where he shall lead the sheep. All is settled by resolution. The congregation rules. Revelation has long ago ceased, is not desired, its possibility is denied. That is man's way; but it is not God's way.

The church is recognized as the kingdom of heaven, so far as that kingdom is represented on earth. Jesus is the king. In time his dominion will become universal.

All the kingdoms of earth began as despotisms. The will of the king was supreme. His whim was law. If he was displeased with certain subjects he had but to order the executioner to chop their heads off, and it was done. For the old motto was, "The king can do no wrong." But as time goes on another element enters in—the will of the people. Constitutions are granted. Parliaments are established. The will of the people and the will of the king must meet.

In his kingdom Jesus has never been a despot. He wants the will of the people to meet his will. Though endowed with all power he has ever recognized the right of choice among men. Education rather than force is his policy. He compels no man to conform to his will or travel his road.

Wherefore, he says: "And all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.

Perhaps we do not realize to what an extent this principle obtains in the church. God himself gives revelation to the church; but he gives the church the privilege to vote whether or not it will be received. This seems strange to some; but the principle is an old one, and in harmony with the ways of God in all ages.

Adam and Eve were given the choice between obedience and disobedience.

President Joseph Smith and wife, with his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, sons-in-law, and daughters-in-law.

At President Smith's left is his wife and at his right his two oldest daughters, Mrs. Emma McCallum and Mrs. Carrie L. Weld, children of his first wife who died in 1869, and at the extreme ends of this row are two of the three sons who are children of his present wife, one not being shown in this picture. Standing back of this row beginning at the right of the picture are Frederick M., Mrs. Lucy Lysinger, Hale W., Mrs. Audentia Anderson, and Israel A., all children of the second wife, who died in 1896.

Independence, Missouri, of which editorial mention was made in our last issue. Herewith we present a half-tone engraving of a picture of President Smith's immediate family, taken on that day.

COMMON CONSENT; THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE AND THE WILL OF THE KING TO MEET.

John Alexander Dowie said: "Who ever heard of the shepherd asking the sheep to take a vote as to where he should lead them? We have never taken a vote in Zion City." That was Dowie's way; but it is not God's way. We have heard of other denominations in which all important matters are determined by the heads of the church. The people are told, "It is proposed to that we do so and so, all in favor show the right hand. No discussion is had. The negative vote is not taken. If one protests, the ushers speed Joshua told the children of Israel: "Choose ye this day whom ye shall serve."—Joshua 24: 15.

God himself said: "I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live."—Deuteronomy 30: 19.

There are a great many men in the church who are called by divine revelation. It is God's will that they should occupy in certain places. But all of them, without exception, must be sustained by the vote of the people, annually, or oftener.

The general officers of the church in all quorums are sustained annually at the General Conference. District and branch as well as stake officers, are sustained or elected by vote of the people at regular conferences or business meetings, annually, or oftener.

Not a man can hold his official position in the church against the will of the people. Not a man attempts to hold it without the will of the people.

This began with the organization of the church, April 6, 1830. Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery had been called to occupy as leading elders in the church. That was God's will. Yet when they met to organize, Joseph Smith says: "We proceeded (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and he organized a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by a unanimous vote."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 77.

All leading doctrines of the church, while resting upon divine authority, and upheld by the Scriptures, also rest upon the common consent of the people. All members have consented to them and subscribed to them by act of baptism and entrance into the church. And the position of the church in the world is such as to make new converts rather careful about the act of entrance. They are inclined to weigh the doctrines carefully and give them whole-hearted allegiance; for membership is usually bought with a price of some sort. So that persecution and opposition and unpopularity are not without benefits to the organization.

All resolutions, acts, orders, etc., governing this church, or parts of it, in the nature of laws or by-laws, originating with men themselves, rest upon the common consent of the people. There is no other way to get them upon the books of branch, district, stake, or general church organization. At any time they may be repealed by a vote of the people taken in accord and with the rules governing such proceedings.

There is absolutely no opportunity for one man or set of men to legislate for the church. God himself does not attempt to do so to the exclusion of human agency, consent, and choice.

This principle of common consent is a safeguard, and when the membership have waived their right to exercise it and have trusted to the rule of a few, disaster has resulted.

Common consent under present conditions must mean the will of the majority. That is in fact the common consent of the church—that the will of the majority shall obtain. When the time comes that we shall all see eye to eye in all things the vote on all questions will be unanimous.

Our safety and integrity as an organization depends upon the general acceptance of this rule. By that we mean that if the minority is in rebellion, anarchy and disorganization will result, to a greater or lesser extent. For instance, when an election of branch officers occurs, there are frequently several who are nominated and favored as candidates for election to some certain office. Only one can be elected. The majority of the votes cast determines who that one shall be. Now if those who are in the minority turn about and oppose this man after he is elected, or absent themselves from the church, or leave the church, anarchy, confusion, and disaster result to the extent of the numbers and influence of the dissenters. That policy, alas, is pursued in some quarters. If pursued generally throughout the church, the church would not last long. It would soon go to pieces. Such conduct is short-sighted, selfish, anti-Christian. It argues greater love for one's own way than for the Church of Jesus Christ.

If God can afford to trust common consent in the church, can we not afford to trust it?

If he permits the man whom he has named as president of the church to go before the church to be sustained by vote every year, can we not afford to permit our favorites to go to vote and abide the results?

He permits his will to be voted on every time he gives a revelation. Can we not afford to submit our wills to vote?

He is not afraid of democracy and common consent in the church; should we be afraid of it?

He recognizes that safety to the church rests in majority rule. A little thought will convince us of the same thing. When men or measures are indorsed by vote of the people, in branch, district, stake, or general church, division should then cease, and all should rally around the men elected and support them, until another time of election comes around.

No man can fully succeed if subjected to opposition, criticism, and misrepresentation, or even passive resistance, by a rebellious minority.

Even a man of mediocre ability may succeed if supported by the prayers, faith, and works of all.

In all things the minority should be given a respectful hearing and careful consideration before a vote is taken. But when the vote is taken, and the will of the majority has been ascertained, that should determine the will of the body and the minority should abide by it. Disregard this rule generally and the church would split into a thousand warring fragments.

IN EXPLANATION.

The undersigned, upon whom is placed the burden of attending to the make-up of the HERALD, and who cheerfully assumes all responsibility rightfully devolving upon him, has had called to his attention two things which appeared in the issue for November 6.

The first is a quotation from Theodore Roosevelt on page 1077, which in printer's parlance is a "filler." This sentiment taken from our only living ex-President takes a slap at Socialism. We freely acknowledge a mistake in using this quotation, because it is our policy, and we feel that it is a correct one, to avoid everything which might give offense to partisans. It is likely true that one may be justified in believing that these various and numerous quotations for use as "fillers" always harmonize with the personal views of those in charge of such work. It is far from our intention to offend our brethren among the Socialists. We therefore admit a lapse of judgment when this quotation was chosen, though we must say that we have no recollection of making the selection.

The other matter was the editorial from the New York Sun on page 1079 on the use of tobacco, which parties say was a defense of its moderate use. Without attempting to controvert the charge or making any argument whatever, we wish to state that our intention in using this extract was to show what views are held by many in regard to the use of tobacco, though we confess our lack of foresight in failing to append a statement to that effect.

Perhaps we should ever keep in mind the wrongful idea held by so many that the editors of the HERALD sanction every theory advanced in its columns. If such an idea were correct the editors would be placed on both sides of every controverted question which has been threshed out by its writers and contributors. The position of the church in regard to the use of tobacco is so well known that we did not suppose any would believe that the HERALD editors or managers concurred in the views advanced by the Sun writer.

However, the article perhaps should not have been reprinted. Maybe nothing should be used in which we can not concur. We certainly would not have used the article in question if we had thought it would have been the cause of offense or the belief that we were thereby submitting in any way the personal views of the editors or of the undersigned.

ANOTHER WITNESS IN THE CASE, ALLEGED PROPHECY UPSET.

In the contention between the Reorganization and the Mormons, an alleged prophecy of Joseph Smith, to the intent that the Almighty had pointed out the Rocky Mountains as a place of refuge for the Saints is often quoted, and Brigham Young is author of a statement to the effect that Joseph and Hyrum started for that asylum, but at the solicitation of William Marks and Emma Smith, they returned to Nauvoo and gave themselves up to the slaughter. The Mormons are wont to make much of these statements, especially among their own people, when we get them to asking questions.

In the light of these facts, the following, taken in connection with the letter written to Emma from "Safety," June 23, 1844, and quoted on the 770th page of the second volume of our Church History, is, to say the least, interesting.

In the letter above referred to he says, "I do not know where I shall go or what I shall do, but shall if possible endeavor to get to the city of Washington." The following is taken from the History of the Mormon Battalion, by D. Tyler, published in 1881.

Under the head of "Introductory," the author says,

Before entering upon the history of the Mormon Battalion, it seems necessary to offer some explanation of the previous condition of the Latter Day Saints; otherwise the reader unacquainted with those facts would scarcely be able to appreciate the situation of the people at the time of the enlistment of the Battalion.

The following sketch, written by President John Taylor, many years since, gives an excellent idea of affairs previous to the exodus of the Saints from Illinois. It is therefore republished here by the kind permission of the author. As stated in the context, it was written at a time when documentary evidence was not available; it has, however, been since revised and compared with authentic data, and may be relied upon as true in every particular.

Under head of "The martyrdom of Joseph Smith," John Taylor writes as follows: After detailing an account of his trip to Carthage and interview with Governor Ford, also the return and the report to the council, composed of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Doctor Richards, Doctor Bernhisel, John Taylor, and one or two others, he tells how he retired to rest at three o'clock in the morning and continues as follows:

"Being very much fatigued, I slept soundly, and was somewhat surprised in the morning by Mrs. Thompson entering my room about seven o'clock, and exclaiming in surprise, 'What, you here! the brethren have crossed the river some time since.'

"'What brethren?' I asked:

"'Brother Joseph, and Hyrum, and Brother Richards,' she answered.

"I immediately arose upon learning that they had crossed the river, and did not intend to go to Carthage. I called together a number of persons in whom I had confidence, and had the type, stereotype plates, and most of the valuable things removed from the printing office, believing that, should the Governor and his force come to Nauvoo, the first thing they would do would be to burn the printing office, for I knew that they would be exasperated if Brother Joseph went away. We had talked these matters over the night before but nothing was decided upon. It was Brother Joseph's opinion that, should we leave for a time, public excitement, which was then so intense, would be allayed; that it would throw on the Governor the responsibility of keeping the peace; that in the event of an outrage, the onus would rest upon the Governor, who was amply prepared with troops, and could command the forces of the State to preserve order; and that the act of his own men would be an overwhelming proof of their seditious designs, not only to the Governor, but to the whole world. He moreover thought that, in the East where he intended to go, public opinion would be set right in relation to these matters, and its expression would partially influence the West, and that, after the first ebullition, things would assume a shape that would justify his return. [Italics mine, A. M. C.]

"I made arrangements for crossing the river, and Brother Elias Smith and Joseph Cain, who were both employed in the printing office with me, assisted all that lay in their power together with Brother Brewer and several hands in the printing office. As we could not find out the exact whereabouts of Joseph and the brethren, I crossed the river in a boat furnished by Brother Cyrus H. Wheelock and Alfred Bell; and after the removal of the things out of the printing office, Joseph Cain brought the account books to me, that we might make arrangements for their adjustment; and Brother Elias Smith, cousin to Brother Joseph, went to obtain money for the journey, and also to find out and report to me the location of the brethren.

"As Cyrus H. Wheelock was an active, enterprising man, and in the event of not finding Brother Joseph I calculated to go to Upper Canada for the time being, and should need a companion, I said to Brother Cyrus H. Wheelock, 'Can you go with me ten or fifteen hundred miles?'

"He answered, 'Yes.'

"'Can you start in half an hour?'

"'Yes.'

"However, I told him that he had better see his family, who lived over the river, and prepare a couple of horses and the necessary equipage for the journey, and that, if we did not find Brother Joseph before, we would start at nightfall.

"I was conducted by Brother Bell to a house that was surrounded by timber on the opposite side of the river. There I spent several hours in a chamber with Brother Joseph Cain, adjusting my accounts; and I made arrangements for the stereotype plates of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, to be forwarded East, thinking to supply the company with subsistence money through the sale of these books in the East.

"My horses were reported ready by Brother Wheelock, and funds on hand by Brother Elias Smith. In about half an hour I should have started, when Brother Elias Smith came to me with word that he had found the brethren; that they had concluded to go to Carthage, and wished me to return to Nauvoo and accompany them. I must confess that I felt a good deal disappointed at this news, but I immediately made preparations to go. Escorted by Brother Elias Smith, I and my party went to the neighborhood of Montrose, where we met with Brother Joseph, Hyrum, Brother Richards and others. Doctor Bernhisel thinks that W. W. Phelps was not with Joseph in the morning, but that he met him, myself, Joseph and Hyrum, W. Richards and Brother Cahoon, in the afternoon, near Montrose, returning to Nauvoo.

"On meeting the brethren I learned that it was not Brother Joseph's desire to return, but that he came back by request of some of the brethren, and that it coincided more with Brother Hyrum's feelings than those of Brother Joseph. In fact, after his return, Brother Hyrum expressed himself as perfectly satisfied with the course taken, and said that he felt much more at ease in his mind than he did before. On our return the calculation was to throw ourselves under the immediate protection of the Governor, and trust to his word and faith for our preservation."—Pp. 29, 30, 31.

Job's wish that "mine enemy had written a book," has had many a fulfillment for us among this people, and their own writings condemn them on every hand. As Brigham Young says, their "Prospective calculations fell through," or we would probably have found them in California instead of here. Without a prophet they had to do the best they could and then prophecy backwards to fit the events, and to give those cooked-up statements prestige with their people, affixed the name of Joseph Smith thereto, but out of their own mouths the judgment comes to their condemnation, and we are almost persuaded, sometimes to apply to Paul's statement concerning the Cretian, as found in his letter to Titus, 1: 10 to 13, to them. "For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision: whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake. One of themselves, even a prophet of their own; said, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. This witness is true. . . and if we want to find the prophet who has thus borne witness concerning this people, we find him in the august personage of Brigham Young, Journal of Discourses, volume 4, pages 77 and 78.

May the Master give them grace to repent of their deception and cease to "pervert the right way of the Lord," and those who have been subverted thereby, discernment to reject the falsehood and to receive the truth is our prayer.

ON PROPHECY.—PART 1.

BY D. S. BAUGHMAN.

Beware of false prophets.—Matthew 7: 15.

Prove all things, hold fast that which is good.—1 Thessalonians 5-21.

In this generation, most men give Matthew 7: 15 the meaning that all prophets that arise are necessarily false, overlooking the fact that if there were no true ones, the warning would be most absurd. In the days when Jesus uttered this warning there were true prophets. In every age when God has had a church upon earth, there have been true prophets therein, but when the people begin to get careless, false ones have always arisen. But God, in his infinite wisdom and mercy, hath given us a sure test whereby we may know the prophets, whether false or true. "And the Lord said unto me, they have well spoken that which they have spoken. I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him."—Deuteronomy 18: 17, 18. The true prophet always speaks God's word. "For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God."—John 3: 34.

If a prophecy declares God will destroy a certain people at a certain time unless they repent, and the prophecy does not come to pass, it is simply because the condition governing the prophecy is carried out by the people, as in the case of Jonah and Nineveh. (See Jonah, 3d chapter.) But on the other hand, he has given us a sure test for a false prophet also.

But the prophet which shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die. And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken? When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him.—Deuteronomy 18: 20-22.

It would seem this ought to satisfy all Bible believers. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20.

The only safe way for men and women to do is to follow Paul's advice, and "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good"; then the law and testimony will satisfy the most exacting. Therefore, if God wills, we wish to examine the claims of Joseph Smith, junior, as a prophet of God by lineal descent, by the name he bears, the prophecies uttered, and the work done by him, if it might be God's good pleasure to give us light unto edification. Tracing the lineal descent from Adam to Jacob, we have twenty-three generations. In Jacob a peculiar condition arises. Jacob being of marriageable age, his father and mother did not wish him to marry, except among his kindred. So Isaac instructed him, and blessed him, and sent him on his journey in quest of a wife. (See Genesis 28: 1-5.) In the balance of the chapter we have God's marvelous manifestation to Jacob, and Jacob's religious vow in return. Then in the next chapter, Genesis 29, we have his meeting with Rachel, Laban's daughter. Jacob loved Rachel, and covenanted with Laban for Rachel, for seven years' service. (See Genesis 29: 18, 19.) Verse 20 records the service, verse 21 completes the service, and Jacob demands his wife. Laban makes a feast, but in the evening places Leah in Jacob's custody, instead of the woman for whom he had served, and he did not know until morning. (Verse 25.) He said to Laban, "What is this thou hast done unto me? Did not I serve with thee for Rachel? Wherefore then hast thou beguiled me?" Laban's reply was, "It must not be so done in our country, to give the younger, before the first born. Fulfill her week, and we will give thee this also for the service which thou shalt serve with me seven other years."—Verses 26, 27. Verse 28 says Jacob served seven years more to get the woman he loved, and Rachel was his first, and only, legal wife, according to the monogamic marriage law of God. The law reads thus:

You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." And when they have answered "Yes," he shall pronounce them husband and wife, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 2.

Jacob did not know which woman he had until next morning, and then he did not have the one he had bought, therefore she could not be his wife. Reuben was the first born of Jacob, but as he was not born of the legal wife, the birthright was not his. Therefore the genealogy is not reckoned from him, but the birthright was Joseph's. (See 1 Chronicles 5: 1, 2.)

To show that God is always like himself, I cite you to two instances. God cast out the bondwoman's son.

In Isaac shall thy seed be called.—Genesis 21: 9-12.

And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth.—Malachi 2: 15.

If you go by the law and the testimony and prove all things, and hold fast that which is good, then Joseph was truly the legitimate first-born son of Jacob. Jacob, in giving his final blessing to his sons, says,

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall. The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; . . . Even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with the blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb: the blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of thy progenitors, unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.—Genesis 49: 22-26.

I wish to call your attention to the fact of Joseph's great fruitfulness. So much so that his branches run over the wall, and where his father's blessings were greater than Abraham's and Isaac's, his progenitors. Those blessings were given to the head of Joseph, and the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren. Also that he was to be wonderfully blessed and sustained, by the mighty God of Jacob.

The Prophet Moses has this to say of Joseph:

Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fullness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh.—Deuteronomy 33: 13-17.

It would seem by this that the Prophet Moses had pronounced upon Joseph all the blessings of Jacob, and enlarged upon them. Making his land to a great extent separate and distinct, except where Jacob had him run over the wall. He gives him power to gather or push the people together; Ephraim and Manasseh, Joseph's two sons, claimed by Jacob, and named among the tribes of Israel, with Ephraim the younger, placed at the head and given the crown blessing. (See Genesis 48: 11-20.) This is in harmony with the statement of the prophet.

For thus saith the Lord; sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coast of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first born.—Jeremiah 31: 7-9.

There will no doubt be objection, by some, to placing Ephraim, the second son, as heir to the birthright of lineal descent. What God has done, we do not seek to excuse. Why? Because he says: "What I have done, I have done, and I excuse not myself." If then God does not excuse himself, surely he has not authorized anyone to make excuses for him, but he has furnished us with precedents. Cain, the first born, was rejected; Abel, the second born, was accepted. Esau, the first born, was rejected; Jacob, the second born, was accepted. Manasseh, the first born, was rejected; Ephraim, the second born, was accepted. Aaron, the first born, was rejected; Moses, the second born, was accepted. Some of these first-born sons were blessed of God, in taking a minor part in the work of God, but the younger took the place occupied by the heir to the birthright. Hence we conclude that God, who knoweth the hearts of all men, has the right to choose the second-born son, to be heir to the birthright of lineal descent, to the crown blessing, or right of presidency.

Coming down from father to son therefore,

Thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers. For ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.—Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3.

The last quotation corroborates that which has gone before, and clinches the lineal descent, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began. In order to understand this question, it will be necessary to trace the migrations of Joseph. In Genesis 49: 22 we are told that Joseph should run over the wall. Verse 26 says the blessings should extend to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills, they should be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren. Deuteronomy 33: 13-17, sets forth his land as very choice, above others, because of its fruitfulness, and the chief things of the ancient mountains, and precious things of the lasting hills; these also rest upon Joseph, and the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. These are specific prophetic blessings, pronounced upon Joseph, and especially upon the direct heir to his birthright as the land of Zion; and this specified land was to be over the wall; or, in other words, over the sea. In the division of inheritances among the children of Israel, one half tribe of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, is located north of Jerusalem, east of the Sea of Chinnereth and the Jordan River. The other half tribe of Manasseh and the tribe of Ephraim are located directly north from Jerusalem, and run from the Jordan on the east, to the sea on the west, giving them a good outlet to run over the wall, or over the sea. The Jewish priesthood was divided into twenty-four courses; each course serving half a month, or fifteen days, thus making the twenty-four courses cover the year of service.

In the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah, the Jews had fallen into such a state of wickedness that God deemed it necessary to send prophets unto them, to warn them to repent or be destroyed. Among these prophets was one named Lehi, of the tribe of Joseph. In denouncing the sins of the Jews, and telling them of the judgments of God that would come upon them unless they repented, Lehi, like Jeremiah, one of his contemporaries, so enraged the Jews that they tried to kill him, and he was compelled to flee for his life, and of course the most natural thing to do would be to return home to his inheritance, but the persecution did not cease there. They followed him and he was forced to flee for his life, and he fled into the wilderness with his family. Men of the tribe of Joseph, ministering before God, to the tribe of Judah, were driven from the house of Judah and fled for their lives,

And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward; for out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of Mount Zion; the zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this.—Isaiah 37: 31, 32.

A flight, an escape, is pictured here, with God directing the flight.

For the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah; the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness; her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea.—Isaiah 16: 8, 9.

O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer; thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer.—Jeremiah 48: 32.

Yes, the principal plants are broken down, they wandered through the wilderness, to Jazer on the seacoast, they have been stretched out. They have gone over the sea or run over the wall. They have started for the promised land. Where, oh! where is it?

The Bible chronology says the first year of the reign of Zedekiah was six hundred years B. C., so the prophet and those that fled with him, left six hundred years B. C., and sailed for the promised land. Let us now take up the record made by these people themselves:

For it came to pass, in the commencement of the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah, (my father Lehi having dwelt at Jerusalem in all his days;) and in that same year there came many prophets, prophesying unto the people that they must repent, or the great city Jerusalem must be destroyed.—1 Nephi 1: 2.

Therefore, I would that ye should know that after the Lord had shown so many marvelous things unto my father Lehi, yea, concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, behold he went forth among the people, and began to prophesy and to declare unto them concerning the things which he had both seen and heard, . . . and when the Jews heard these things, they were angry with him; yea, even as with the prophets of old, whom they had cast out, and stoned, and slain; and they sought his life, that they might take it away.—1 Nephi 1: 8-10.

And it came to pass that the Lord commanded my father, even in a dream, that he should take his family and depart into the wilderness. And he was obedient unto the word of the Lord.—Ibid., 1: 12.

And it came to pass that my father Lehi, also found upon the plates of brass a genealogy of his fathers; wherefore he knew he was a descendant of Joseph; yea, even that Joseph who was the son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt.—Ibid., 1: 47.

And it came to pass that we did pitch our tents by the seashore; and notwithstanding we had suffered many afflictions, and much difficulty, yea, even so much we can not write them all, we were exceedingly rejoiced when we came to the seashore.—Ibid., 5: 18.

The Lord said, inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall be led towards the promised land; and ye shall know that it is by me that ye are led.—Ibid., 5: 21.

And it came to pass after we had all gone down into the ship, and had taken with us our provisions and things which had been commanded us, we did put forth into the sea, and were driven forth before the wind, towards the promised land.—Ibid., 5: 36.

And it came to pass that after we had sailed for the space of many days, we did arrive to the promised land; and we went forth upon the land, and did pitch our tents; and we did call it the promised land.—Ibid., 5: 48.

They have left their native land, they have run over the wall: gone over the sea, and landed on the shore of the promised land; but where are they? Has God blown them across the great deep, with never a trace in his word as to where the promised land was located?

“Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia.”—Isaiah 18: 1. How much is couched in this small verse; the promised land then,—standing at Jerusalem where the prophecy was uttered, and looking beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, we behold it! It is the land of America; the land given by prophetic blessing to Joseph; the promised land. But some may object; well, it suits in geographical location. The land shadowing with wings. There are two horns to this dilemma; take whichever you choose, and still it is America. Geographically the two Americas are in shape like the outspread wings of a great bird; and the emblem of the United States an eagle, stamped on all her coins, shadowing with wings. Yes indeed, glorious emblem of a glorious country! The promised land, the land in which God through the legal heir to the birthright, the presidency of the high priesthood, or that of prophet, seer, and revelator to the church, should set his hand again the second time to recover his people Israel. (See Isaiah 11: 11.)

We could take the record left by these people, (but it would make this too long) and trace their settlement on the South American Continent; their traveling northward through the Isthmus of Panama, the Central American states, Mexico, Texas, Indian Territory, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, to the Great Lakes, where they developed a great copper mine. From thence eastward until you come to the State of New York, where their great civilization of a thousand years' duration ended in a disastrous war, which nearly exterminated them, and where at God's own set time, he would set his hand the second time to recover his people Israel. A thousand years' civilization, beginning 600 years B. C., bible chronology, from the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah.

Yea, even six hundred years from the time my father left Jerusalem, a prophet would the Lord God raise up among the Jews, even a Messiah; in other words, a Savior of the world.—1 Nephi 3: 8.

My father hath been slain in battle, and all my kinsfolks, and I have not friends, nor whither to go; and how long the Lord will suffer that I may live, I know not. Behold, four hundred years have passed away since the coming of our Lord and Savior.—Mormon 4: 1.

Six hundred years before Christ and four hundred years A. D., make one thousand years of civilization. Archæology traces their civilization over the same route as they give themselves. We have located the people on the promised land, we have located the land, we have followed their migrations to the State of New York; and their destruction, because of their wickedness, except a remnant that was left to a nomadic life. "And I seal up these records, after I have spoken a few words by way of exhortation unto you."—Moroni 10: 1. Now we have the records of these people sealed up unto the Lord, in the State of New York, and the remnants of the people left to a nomadic life.

And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hameth, and from the islands of the sea.—Isaiah 11: 11.

And I will strengthen the house of Judah and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and will hear them. And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their hearts shall rejoice as through wine; yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their hearts shall rejoice in the Lord. I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them.—Zechariah 10: 6, 7, 8.

But I had pity for my holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went. Therefore say unto the house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God: I do not do this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for my holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went. And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes, for I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land. . . . and ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.—Ezekiel 36: 21-28.

Is Ephraim my dear son? Is he a pleasant child? For since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still; therefore my bowels are troubled for him; I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord.—Jeremiah 31: 20.

They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them; I will cause them to walk by the rivers of water in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first born.—Ibid., 31: 9.

These scriptures show that God will restore Israel to their own land, and when the work of restoration begins it will be through Ephraim, the legal heir by lineal descent, and as God declares "Ephraim is my first born." When was this work of restoration to begin? Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had a dream. The dream left him; he was troubled about it, but none of his wise men could tell the dream, so he decreed the death of all. But God revealed the matter to a captive Hebrew, Daniel by name. He told the dream, and the interpretation. It set forth five universal kingdoms, and he declares Babylon to be the first, or head of gold; then came a union of the Medes and Persians, the silver kingdom; then the Grecian kingdom, or kingdom of brass; then comes the fourth, or iron kingdom, and this kingdom was to be divided into ten principalities in its latter days. And Daniel says:

In the days of these kings shall the god of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. . . . and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.—Daniel 2: 44, 45.

Then at some time after Daniel's day, God was to do a work of reconstruction, or restoration. In other words, it will be the restoration of the Jews; but the work begins in a very small way, and gradually develops until it fills the whole earth. In Daniel, seventh chapter, he had visions of beasts representing these four kingdoms. After treating of the fourth kingdom, he says:

And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.—Daniel 7: 27, and 14.

Then, it is a fact that God hath declared that the fifth universal kingdom shall be one of his own establishment, and it is to be in the days of these ten kings, or kingdoms, arising in the fourth or Roman kingdom.

I Daniel, was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body, and the visions of my head troubled me, I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things. . . . Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others.—Daniel 7: 15-19.

Thus he said the fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise; and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time.—Ibid., 7: 23-25.

This little horn, power, or king that was diverse from all others, was the ecclesiastical, or papal power, arising within the fourth or Roman kingdom. And this papal power overthrew three kingdoms, and in token of his victory, had three small crowns set upon his crown, and is sometimes called the triple-crowned pope. And he was to wear out the saints of the Most High and they were given into his hands for a time, times, and the dividing of time. (See Daniel 7: 25.) John, the Revelator, saw the same beast. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them. And he was to continue forty and two months. (See Revelation 13: 5-7.) To locate the time when the restoration begins, we must find the interpretation of the terms, time, times, and the dividing of time, and then locate the time when this power overcame the saints. It was decreed, by the God of heaven, that Nebuchadnezzar the king should be driven from his throne until seven times passed over his head. (See Daniel 4: 16, 23, 25, 32.) He was insane seven years and at the end of the days I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me; and I blessed the Most High; and I praised and honored him that liveth for ever and ever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation.—Daniel 4: 34.

As Nebuchadnezzar was insane till seven times passed over his head and these seven times were seven years, so the time would be one year, times would be two years, and the dividing of time would be six months, making in all three and one half years, or as it is in Revelation 13: 5, forty and two months; or as set forth in Revelation 12:14, the same, time, times, and the dividing of time; or Revelation 12: 6, 1260 days; or, thirty days in a month, and forty-two months, is one thousand two hundred and threescore days. What is a prophetic day?

After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and ye shall know my breach of promise.—Numbers 14: 34.

For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days; so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year.—Ezekiel 4: 5, 6.

These scriptures give the clear meaning of the twelve hundred and sixty days, as twelve hundred and sixty years.

The historian Machiavel, himself says expressly: Upon the coming of the Lombards into Italy began the evident and open state of the pope's kingdom. Now this was in 568 A. D. . . . For by an edict which he issued dated December 15, 568 A. D., running ninety days, or to March 15, 569, to unite all men in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians. Such as did not in the term of three months embrace and profess the Catholic faith, were declared to be infamous, and as such excluded from all employment, both civil and military, rendered incapable of leaving anything by will, and their estates confiscated, whether real or personal. Many; however, withstood them, and against such as did, the edict was executed with the utmost rigor. Great numbers were driven from their homes, with their wives and children, stripped and naked. Many were inhumanly massacred by the Catholic peasantry and soldiery that guarded the passes.—The Man of Sin, printed 1812.

The Catholic history says the Holy Court of the Inquisition killed between 175,000 and 200,000 heretics; others say more than 300,000. At least the edict had the desired effect. It utterly destroyed all opposition, they were given into his hand for 1,260 years. Twelve hundred sixty and five hundred sixty-nine make eighteen hundred twenty-nine; the accomplishment of the decree overcame the saints.

The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in scarlet: the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir trees shall be terribly shaken. The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings. He shall recount his worthies, they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defense shall be prepared.—Nahum 2: 3-5.

Nothing could be more plain. It fits the cars exactly, and this was to be in the day of his preparation. The first American train ran in 1827.

We have now located the promised land, and located the State in which the records were sealed up to the Lord, and the year when the restoration was to begin, 1829; and we have found that the man is to be the first-born son of a lineal descendant of Ephraim, the heir to his father's birthright. (See precedents cited of second son.) We can no longer trace by genealogy, so we must see if God has left on record any identification marks, by which we may know the individual when he looms upon our horizon.

Thus saith the Lord God of my fathers unto me, a choice seer will I raise up of the fruit of thy loins, and he shall be esteemed highly among the fruit of thy loins, his brethren; and unto him will I give commandments that he shall do a work for the fruit of thy loins, . . . and that seer will I bless. And they that seek to destroy him, shall be confounded; for this promise I give unto you; for I will remember you from generation to generation; and his name shall be called Joseph, and it shall be after the name of his father; for the thing which the Lord shall bring forth by his hand shall bring my people unto salvation. And the Lord sware unto Joseph that he would preserve his seed for ever.—Genesis 50: 27, 33, 34, Inspired Version.

God here made covenant with Joseph, the son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt; first, that he would preserve his seed for ever; second, that of that seed he would raise up a seer, to whom he would give power to bring forth his word (the word that had been sealed up unto the Lord) and he would give him commandments to do a work for him, or revelations instructing him concerning the work before him, and that which was to come; third, the name of that seer was to be Joseph, and his father's name was to be Joseph, both named after Joseph, son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt; fourth, and the work as established by that seer, should in due time bring his people, the Jews, to salvation, and through them the salvation of the world. A greater work than which was never committed to man. Yea, Joseph truly said, thus saith the Lord unto me: A choice seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins; and his name shall be called after me: and it shall be after the name of his father.—1 Nephi 2: 2, 3.

It would seem from the foregoing that God has left nothing to chance. The only thing to be done is to follow the Master's instructions, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me" "and prove all things, and hold fast that which is good."

The land of promise is America, the vicinity of the restoration is New York, the time of the restoration is 1829; the man, the instrument in God's hand is there, his name is Joseph, his father's name was Joseph, he is of the lineal descent of Joseph, the son of Jacob, who was sold into Egypt. But what was his other name besides Joseph?

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; and all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 4.

Which John I have sent unto you, my servants Joseph Smith, jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained even as Aaron; and also Elijah, unto whom I have committed the keys of the power of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to the fathers, that the whole earth may not be smitten with a curse; and also, with Joseph and Jacob, and Isaac, and Abraham, your fathers; by whom the promises remain.—Doctrine and Covenants 24: 2.

How was the restoration to begin?

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment has come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and sea, and the fountains of water.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

On the 15th day of May, 1829, the angel ordained Joseph Smith to the priesthood, and he was thoroughly instructed in regard to the sealed record, and the restoration of the Jews, to their own land. The angel delivered to him the sealed record, which, by the power of God, he translated from the original tongue. Having made some converts, on April 6, 1830, he organized the church under the title, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Of General Interest

HONORS FOR JOSEPH SMITH.

The eightieth anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, the venerable President of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints Church, was the occasion of a pleasant family reunion, and later a general reception to the church members and the general public, Wednesday afternoon and evening, at his home, 1214 West Short Street.

During this time 850 people called and paid their respects to the aged President. Owing to his feebleness, he sat during the reception, but his son, the Reverend Frederick M. Smith and wife, received the line of visitors as they entered. All of the members of President Smith's family were present. Some of his children live in Lamoni, Iowa.

After the family reunion there was a great throng of Sunday school children and adult members of the church, while many from outside the church testified their friendship by calling and offering congratulations and best wishes.

Joseph Smith was born in Kirtland, Ohio, November 6, 1832. While he was still a child the family moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, where his father, the Joseph Smith who founded the original Mormon Church, was killed in 1846. The son assisted his widowed mother for a number of years in conducting a hotel in that town. He also worked on a farm and as a salesman in a store, and later studied law.

When he was twenty-four years old he decided to undertake the reorganization of the church, as a protest against polygamy, which had been introduced by Brigham Young, and in 1860 he established the Reorganized Church, of which he has been President for more than half a century, and which position he still holds. He left Nauvoo in 1866 and went to Plano, Illinois, to become the editor and manager of the SAINTS' HERALD. Afterwards he spent about fifteen years traveling and preaching the Reorganized faith. Meanwhile the SAINTS' HERALD was moved to Lamoni, Iowa. President Smith located there in 1888 and lived there until five years ago, when he moved to this city. He is still editor-in-chief of the SAINTS' HERALD, of Lamoni, but owing to his age does little of the active work.—Jackson Examiner, Independence, Missouri, November 8, 1912.

WAR'S CRUELITIES.

I need not dwell now on the waste and cruelty of war. These stare us wildly in the face, like lurid meteor lights, as we travel the page of history. We see the desolation and death that pursue its demoniac footsteps. We look upon sacked towns, upon ravaged territories, upon violated homes; we behold all the sweet charities of life changed to wormwood and gall. Our soul is penetrated by the sharp moan of mothers, sisters, and daughters—of fathers, brothers, and sons who, in bitterness of their bereavement, refuse to be comforted. Our eyes rest at last upon one of these fair fields, where Nature, in her abundance, spreads her cloth of gold, spacious and apt for the entertainment of mighty multitudes—or, perhaps, from the curious subtlety of its position, like the carpet in the Arabian tale, seeming to contract so as to be covered by a few only, or to dilate so as to receive an innumerable host. Here, under a bright sun, such as shone at Austerlitz or Buena Vista—amidst the peaceful harmonies of Nature—on the Sabbath of Peace—we behold hands of brothers, children of a common Father, heirs to a common happiness, struggling together in the deadly fight, with the madness of fallen spirits, seeking with murderous weapons the lives of brothers who have never injured them or their kindred. The havoc rages. The ground is soaked with their commingling blood. The air is rent with their commingling cries. Horse and rider are stretched together on the earth. More revolting than the mangled victims, than the gashed limbs, are the lawless passions which sweep, tempest-like, through the fiendish tumult.—Charles Sumner.

QUENCH "HELL FIRE," CRY BIBLE EXPERTS.

Three thousand delegates to the International Bible Students' Convention at Glen Echo, Maryland, lately adopted the resolutions repudiating the hell fire and brimstone theory of eternal punishment. Brigadier General W. P. Hall, retired, led the assault on this ancient teaching. He had to overcome the disinclination of many who no longer believed in a "lake of fire" reserved for sinners but who hesitated formally to repudiate this religious teaching. Brigadier General Hall insisted that laymen were entitled to know where their clergymen stood on this question. These resolutions were adopted:

"We do not find the Bible to teach the doctrine of a literal 'hell fire' or place of fire and brimstone for the punishment of the wicked, but secular history of the formation of the creeds of the Middle Ages reveals the fact that for various reasons, either wisely or unwisely, the doctrine of torment in 'hell fire' was added to the gospel as taught by Jesus and the twelve apostles, necessitating many ridiculous interpretations of the Lord's parables.

"We now unreservedly repudiate as thoroughly unscriptural the teaching of a place, state, or condition of literal 'lake of fire and brimstone' for the torment of the wicked; and further we believe from many personal testimonials that the vast majority of ministers of all Protestant denominations have privately repudiated the 'hell fire' theory,

"We appeal to every minister in the United States to publish in his local newspaper over his own signature a statement declaring whether or not he believes the Bible to teach the doctrine of a literal lake of fire and brimstone and ask every editor to invite the ministers of his constituency to avail themselves of his columns for their statements."

CATHOLIC EDUCATION IN THIS COUNTRY.

Having in an earlier volume examined the principles, origin, and establishment of the Catholic school system in America, the Reverend James A. Burns, C. S. C., Ph. D., in Growth and Development of the Catholic School System in the United States (Benziger Brothers, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago), sketches the history of Catholic education in this country from 1840. The book is entirely void of controversial venom. Doctor Burns's two volumes have, strange to say in view of the importance of their subject, practically a monopoly of their field.

Side by side with a public school system employing nearly 500,000 teachers and giving instruction to close upon 17,000,000 children in the elementary grades and with more than 40,000 teachers and almost a million pupils in high schools, there exists an independent (Catholic) system employing in round numbers 20,000 instructors for a million children, representing millions of dollars worth of property and conducted at a cost stated by a Catholic authority as fifteen millions a year. Public education under the laws of the States is nonsectarian; in Doctor Burns's own words, "Catholic educational movement was not intellectual but religious."

Naturally there has been developed a "school question" turning upon the refusal, except in a few special cases, to permit parochial schools to draw upon the public funds; and the author of the essay under present consideration confesses to a desire to interest non-Catholic readers as well as those of his own faith as a step toward a settlement of this question that may be "satisfactory to both." Without entering into the merits of the controversy, it may be said that Doctor Burns's statement that it is an "injustice" that Catholics are "called upon by their bishops and priests to pay a tax for their own schools besides paying for the public schools" would be met by proponents of the opposite view, not all of whom are non-Catholics, with the argument that the fact that the call comes from their own hierarchy and not from any external governmental agency is fatal to the plea for exemption. On the one hand, has the State a right to say: "We provide schools which are open to your use on our terms; you must pay whether you use them or not"; on the other, have Catholics justification for resentment on these grounds: "In supporting a school system of our own we save you expense, and we should not be taxed for an act of public service"? Even Catholics are divided in their opinion in the premises and where one authority argues that they should receive state compensation for their secular teaching many are glad to pay for their independence from state supervision and for free-handed opportunity in the conduct of the religious instruction which is of the design and essence of the parochial school system. What the one party considers an injustice the other regards as a hardship voluntarily undergone for the sake of an adequate compensating privilege.

Wordy war has been waged, and continues even now that the controversy seems to have reached a comfortable settlement in fact that it can not hope to attain in the perfervid breasts of some theorists; and Doctor Burns has written a readable account of such famous incidents as those embodied in the Poughkeepsie and Faribault (Minnesota) "plans" and certain interesting legal contests like the "Lima school case." In Chapter XI he discusses "The economic side of the school question," the method and cost of support of Catholic schools, teachers' salaries and the saving to the state attendant upon its release from responsibility for the instruction of children who attend the parochial schools.

In 1840 there were at least two hundred parochial schools in the United States. A large part of the heavy influx of immigration in the following decade was Catholic. The need for teachers became pressing and immediate, and the thirteen orders from which the supply had been drawn, severely overtaxed, were reenforced by colonies from France and Germany. These newcomers rapidly extended their organization from coast to coast. Wherever they went schools and academies sprang into being, though often there was no money for separate buildings and class exercises were held in the nave of the church. There were heroes in those days. The curriculum consisted of the three Rs, spelling, grammar, geography, and history, with religious teaching. In girls' schools the sisters gave instruction in needlework and domestic science, then dignified with no such lofty title. A teachers' manual of the time directs:

"Endeavor to instill piety into the hearts of your pupils. Teach them how to pray and show them the example. Once a week oblige each child in the lower grades to recite alone the principal vocal prayers. In the higher grades occasionally examine the pupils in the same manner. Explain the offices of the church, especially the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, on which you should give an instruction once a week. Each day, in every class, let a hymn relating to the mystery or devotion of the time be sung."

Doctor Burns devotes several chapters to description of the teaching orders and of the development of the business of publishing Catholic textbooks; and one to an outline of the legislation in which the councils of the church have defined the rights and duties of Catholic parents with reference to the parochial and public schools and elevated the standards of Catholic instruction. Other chapters deal with the work done among the alien population by Catholic teachers, and there is an outline of school government, of the work among the negroes and Indians, of high schools and colleges; a general review of the tendencies and problems of the day.

Without courting the agonies of typographical criticism, there is one glaring error hard to account for in a Catholic publication: distortion throughout the text of Emmitsburg, Maryland, into Emmittsburg and Emmettsburg; and its entry in the index as "Emmettsburg, Pennsylvania." Would Mother Seton have countenanced such inaccuracy?—New York Sun.

The Adolescent Boy.

TWO PICTURES.

"Late as usual," growled Mr. Hanson, as he looked up from the breakfast table at a slim lad of fifteen, who was entering the room hurriedly.

"It seems to me, Arthur," spoke Mrs. Hanson from the lower end of the table in a fretful voice, "that you might get up in time for breakfast. You really are getting very lazy."

"Doesn't earn his salt," grumbled the father. "I tell you what it is, young man, you will have to do better than this, or you will have to go to work for a living."

With a sullen face the lad seated himself at the table, making no reply to the remarks of his parents.

"Art's getting to be quite a dude," said the elder sister, with a half sneer. "Look at his hair and his necktie! I should think, Art," she continued, "that you would know enough about the fitness of things not to try to wear a light blue tie, with your black eyes and hair and grimy complexion. How much time did you spend at the looking glass this morning?"

"I guess Art put in most of his time counting the hairs in his mustache. They are a little uneven, aren't they, Art?" laughed the elder brother. "It seems to me you have lost one on the right side."

The boy's face flushed angrily, as he heard these words and the laugh which greeted them.

"What is the use of your pitching in," he complained. "It's mean to strike a fellow when he's down." This sentence began in a bass tone and ended in a squeaking tenor, at which the little brother at the lower end of the table piped up: "Say, Art, you might sing duets with yourself and get a high price. They need bass and tenor singers in the choir, and they don't often find one that can sing both at a time."

Arthur threw down his knife and fork and was apparently about to leave the table when his father spoke: "Sit down, boy; don't make a fool of yourself because there is a little harmless pleasantry on your account. Go on and eat your breakfast."

The lad resumed his knife and fork in silence.

As Mr. Hanson was drawing away from the table, Mrs.

Hanson spoke. "Can you give me some money this morning, John?"

"I can't give you any now," replied Mr. Hanson, "but I can send you some from the office, if Arthur will go down town with me before school; but he will have to hustle—I can't wait for any lazy bones! Come on," he exclaimed, taking his hat and leaving the room.

"Go quickly now," said Mrs. Hanson, "you won't have more than time enough to go down and get back by school time."

The boy followed his father, and walked about half a block behind him all the way down the street. As he returned to the house, he was met by his mother on the doorstep, with the urgent appeal, "Hurry up, hurry up, Arthur; it is nearly schooltime. Oh, dear! I never did see a boy such a laggard."

"I am not going to school any more," said Arthur, sullenly.

"Indeed you are!" exclaimed his mother. "You go right along at once, and let me hear no more such nonsense from you. Hurry up, now," she continued, as the boy started towards school with a lagging step, "and mind you have your lessons. If I hear any bad reports from your teachers I shall tell your father, and he won't stand much nonsense, you know."

The noon meal was, in a way, a repetition of the breakfast. Everybody had some sort of a joke to make at Arthur's expense.

"I say, ma," piped up little Tommy, "Art's got a best girl. I see him walking home from school with her every day."

"Oh, ho!" laughed the elder brother, "that is the reason why he is paying so much attention to his ears and finger nails. I say, Art, you had better wash an inch farther under your chin. We can still see just how far you apply the water."

"It is perfect nonsense," exclaimed Mrs. Hanson, "to talk about 'best girls.' A boy that does not take any more care of his personal appearance than Arthur would not be looked at by any girl."

"Well, I will look after him," exclaimed Mr. Hanson, "if he does not pay more attention to business. Don't you forget it, young man!"

At tea time Arthur had a little respite, as there was a guest. He was not introduced to her, however, and was allowed to silently partake of his evening meal until, unfortunately for himself, his interest in the conversation incited him to make a remark. "I think," he began, and continued the expression of his somewhat crude ideas with self-confidence natural to a boy of his years.

"You think!" sneered the father, "Well, you had better have something to think before you attempt to tell it. I tell you, Miss Blake," he said, turning to the guest, "if there is anything you want to know about, just ask Art. He understands just exactly how business should be conducted; what studies a boy ought to take at school; and just how the government of this Nation should be conducted. Oh, I tell you there is nothing like the knowledge which a boy of sixteen possesses."

Arthur's head sank before the sarcasm of his father, but no word was spoken by anyone in his behalf. As the family left the table the suggestion was made that they proceed to the parlor for some music. The steps of all, except Arthur, turned in that direction. He started out-of-doors.

"Come on, Art," called the mother quite genially, "Miss Blake is going to play for us."

"I don't want to hear any of her music," growled the boy, laying his hand upon the knob of the outside door. At the same moment his father's hand was laid, not gently, upon his shoulder. "You come into the parlor and behave yourself. No boy of mine shall ever treat a guest uncivilly, as you have done."

Without a word Arthur followed his father into the parlor, and seated himself in a corner where he sat silently during the music. It was eight o'clock when the little group broke up and Arthur started upstairs.

"Where are you going?" asked his mother.

"To my room," replied the boy.

"Well, you see that you go to bed early," she commanded, "and be up in time for breakfast to-morrow morning."

Making no reply, the boy proceeded upstairs.

A few days before he had asked permission of his mother to take a term of dancing lessons. "Indeed, you shall not!" she exclaimed most decidedly. "No boy of mine shall go to a common dancing school, associating with all the riff-raff of the place. You can just make up your mind to that."

"But mother," pleaded Arthur, "all the nice boys and girls are going."

"I don't care; you shan't go. It will keep you up late at night, and you are bad enough now about getting up late in the morning. So just set your mind to rest. I have said it and I mean it."

Arthur had apparently accepted the decision, but when he went up to his room on the evening in question, it was not to study, nor to go to bed. Hastily changing his dress he climbed out of his window down to the porch, and from there easily slid to the ground. Fifteen minutes later he was one of the merry company at the dancing school. It was not difficult to reach his room by the same route on his return.

All during the winter he attended the dancing school without the knowledge of his parents. Finding it so easy to elude their vigilance, he began to take the same method of meeting the boys at places more questionable than the dancing school; and when, at the age of seventeen, he was arrested with a number of others for some criminal offense, his parents were astounded at the disclosures which followed. They were heartbroken over his misdemeanors, and wondered why a boy of theirs, who had been so carefully brought up and so earnestly prayed over, should have gone wrong.

NUMBER II.

Mr. Meredith looked up from the breakfast table as the door opened and a slender boy of fifteen entered the room.

"Hello!" he exclaimed, genially, "we shall pretty soon have to call you a 'second table boarder,' my boy."

"I know father," replied the lad brightly, "it is too bad of me to be late to breakfast so often; but, really, I don't know what is the matter with me. I am so inclined to oversleep."

The father laughed. "I know just exactly what is the matter. I had just such a fit of sleepiness and laziness when I was about your age. My father found a way to help me. Instead of telling me that I must go to bed earlier, he set the clock in my room ahead a full hour, and said: 'Remember, my son, you go to bed and get up by this clock. Your bedtime is ten o'clock and you get up at seven o'clock.' Of course I could not complain, because I had been accustomed to going to bed and arising at those hours. I knew that it was the wisest thing for me to follow my father's directions in this matter, and I was soon able to make my appearance at the breakfast table on time. What do you think about the plan, Billy?"

The boy smiled as he replied, "I think it a very good one, and I believe I will have a 'grandfather's clock' in my room."

"I say, Billy," spoke up his sister, "I guess you must have forgotten that you were a bronze when you bought that necktie." A warning look from her mother checked the remark, but she continued with an apt turn: "But you have tied it beautifully. I wish you would show me how to tie an Ascot; I can never get that 'throw-this-end-over-your-shoulder' fling."

"All right," said the lad, "I will be glad to show you."

As he spoke his voice broke in the manner common to the adolescent boy, and the little lad at the foot of the table near the mother broke into a giggle. "I say, Billy," he said, "you ought to hire out to Barnum and Bailey as a whole choir in yourself."

Billy's face grew red, but before he could speak the elder brother had come to his assistance. "You had better look out, Harry; your day is coming. I can remember very well," he said, turning to Billy, "how I used to growl and squeak, and you will come out all right."

"Why, of course, he will" spoke up Mr. Meredith. "Billy used to have just as beautiful a soprano voice as you have, Harry. He is going to be a fine tenor one of these days. Tenor voices run in our family."

It was with a grateful look at both his father and brother that Billy continued his meal.

"Can you give me some money this morning?" asked Mrs. Meredith of her husband.

"I am afraid I can not, Sue, unless you can send down to the office for it."

"I will go right down with you," exclaimed Billy cheerfully. "I will have time before school."

"You will if you move briskly," said the mother, "and you know I am very anxious about your record at school this month."

"All right, mother; I will hurry."

As the father and son left the house, the man laid his hand kindly upon the shoulder of the lad, and the two walked down the street together conversing in a brisk and genial manner.

Billy was back with the money in time to prevent any uneasiness on the part of the mother, but as he left for school, he said, somewhat abruptly: "Mother, I wish I could leave school. It seems to me I am big enough to go to work."

"Big enough, to be sure," said the mother, looking up fondly into the face of her big boy, "but are you quite sure that you know enough?"

"No, mother, I am not. I suppose I ought to stay in school a few years yet, but it does seem such poky work."

"I know, dear; but you won't be sorry in the end if you yield cheerfully to the wishes of your father and mother in this respect. You know how proud your father is when your standing in school is up to the mark."

"Yes, I know, mother; and I will try not to make him ashamed of me," said the boy brightly, as he ran down the steps.

At the dinner table the conversation was full of general interest, and Billy's remarks were listened to with the same consideration as those of the other members of the family.

"Say, ma," spoke up little Harry, "Billy's got a best girl. I see him walking home from school with her every day."

"That accounts for his clean ears and finger nails," began Margaret, but again the warning look of her mother checked her, and she continued: "Billy is such a nice looking boy, I am glad to see him taking more care of himself."

"Why, yes," said the mother, "we all knew that Billy would soon begin to have the pride of a young gentleman, and I am better pleased to have him associate with nice girls than with rough boys. But you know, Harry," she said, turning to the smaller lad, "we don't talk about 'best girls' in our family. My children have friends among both the boys and girls, and they leave questions of 'sweethearts' and 'beaux' until they arrive at the age of maturity."

"I can well remember," said Mr. Meredith, "when I was about Billy's age, that the society of good girls was a very great help to me in becoming more gentlemanly. Of course I know that Billy's mother and sister are treated by him with thoughtful consideration, but I think that sometimes a girl outside of the family can do more towards 'licking a cub into shape' than even the best mother or sister."

A look of mutual understanding passed between father and son, and Billy arose from the dinner table feeling himself more of a man.

There was a guest at supper to whom Billy was introduced with the same care and consideration as had been shown the elder son and daughter. During the early part of the meal Billy made no attempt to join in the conversation, but, at length, becoming interested and aroused, he spoke up with all the assurance of the adolescent boy:

"I think . . ." he said, continuing his remarks to express an opinion decidedly opposed to the views which his father had maintained.

No one interrupted him, and at the close of his remarks Mr. Meredith said, genially, "Well, my boy, I am glad you think, even though you do not think along the same lines that I do. The objections that you raise cover so wide a range of thought that it seems to me best for us not to continue the discussion here and now; but some time, when we are both at leisure, we will discuss the subject together, and perhaps will find ourselves more nearly of one mind than we seem to be just now."

The boy had been silenced, but in no unkindly manner and with no hurt to his self-love. In fact, he had an added feeling of self-respect from the fact that his father had treated him as if worthy of consideration, and with a willing mind he accompanied the family to their evening of music in the parlor. He had a little feeling of regret that he had not been permitted by his mother to buy a ticket for a term of dancing lessons, the first one of which was given that evening. When he broached the subject to his mother, she said:

"I suppose you know, Billy, what my feelings are in regard to your going to dancing school."

"Why, yes, mother, but all the boys and girls are going, and it makes one feel so odd to be shut out altogether from the fun of the other young folks."

"I appreciate that," said the mother, "and I could almost wish that I felt different in regard to the matter. I realize that you can not, from the nature of things, take quite the same view of the subject as I do. But I would like to ask you for a year or two longer to yield yourself cheerfully to the wishes of your father and mother in this respect, feeling sure that we are just as anxious for you to have a good time as you are, and also feeling sure that we know better what is a good time than you do. Will you do this, Billy?" she asked, looking into his face with all the assurance that a loving mother could feel.

For a moment the lad paused, and then stretching out his hand said: "Yes, mother; I will. I know that you and father want me to have the best time possible, and I am going to do just as you want me to do, for I am sure that I will be happier at home, feeling that you are happy, than I could be anywhere else, knowing that you were uneasy about me."

Appreciating Billy's obedient spirit, Mr. and Mrs. Meredith took especial pains to have cheerful evenings at home, and soon a number of Billy's companions began to congregate in the Meredith parlor for social entertainment, and Billy found that he had not missed all the fun by missing the dancing school.

It was a proud and happy father and mother that greeted Billy on his graduation from college, and heard him say: "I am thankful I did not leave school when I was fifteen as I wanted to do. I know I shall be worth more to the world because I have a better education."—Doctor Mary Wood-Allen.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, November 16, 1912.

Editors Herald: I wish to express the thankfulness of the Detroit Saints to all those who were at the Flint conference, as well as others, who have so feelingly signified their sympathy to us because of the burning of our church. It has indeed been a source of solace to feel that so many of the Saints have felt the loss with us. It has resulted better than we at first feared, the loss being in the neighborhood of three thousand dollars, fully covered by insurance.

Work is being rapidly pushed in repairing the building, and we expect to be back in the basement November 24, and occupying the main auditorium in a short time.

ARTHUR ALLEN.

UTE, IOWA, October 12, 1912.

Dear Herald: I send greeting to every Saint and reader of your precious pages. "Have faith in God." Four short words, yet how much they mean to the Saints of God. But it is sad to see how little the admonition is heeded. How few of us know what the word faith really means. How many of us have as much faith as Jesus speaks of in Matthew 17: 20? If we have faith as a grain of mustard seed we could remove mountains. We will speak, sing, and preach of our great faith, yet how many of us have faith sufficient to remove mountains? I don't mean to infer that we should (in order to demonstrate our faith) go out and command hills, mountains, and other obstructions to be removed from their places, but in case there is a mountain, real or figurative, in our way which, if not removed, will retard our progress, spiritually or temporally, how many of us have sufficient faith to remove that mountain. I believe it is displeasing to God for us to have less faith, else why would Jesus rebuke his disciples for their unbelief in such terms as used in Matthew 17: 20? It was required that they have faith to remove mountains if need be—faith to believe in his revealed word; faith to believe in his promises; faith to obey his law; faith to come up higher. In order to come up higher we must have and exercise more faith.

There is a mountain, a figurative mountain, in the way of the redemption of Zion. We can not get around it, it is so high. We can not pass over it, neither can we pass through it, consequently it must be removed. That mountain is our unbelief and lack of faith in God and his chosen servants. There are a few in the church who by their consecration and free-will offerings have demonstrated their faith in God, and by so doing, the work of redemption goes on, but the body, the whole church, has demonstrated its lack of faith in God by withholding the financial aid which really belongs to God. This is the mountain which stands in the way of the redemption of Zion. Just think of the nearly seventy thousand who have professed belief in God and this latter day restoration. If each one would exercise the proverbial faith of a grain of mustard seed by believing and doing, the mountain would move out of our way like the dew before the sun; the great ingathering would tax the capacity of the authorized ministry to baptize and confirm them all; Zion would be redeemed; the temple would be built, and we would have a place in which to care for and nurture the babes in the kingdom. God has a right to all this. We are supposed to be instruments in his hands. No one, not even God, can use to advantage a dull or rusty instrument, much less a dead one. If we have faith, let us demonstrate it by our lives and actions.

About two years ago I had a vision. I could scarcely understand it at the time, but I believe I can now. A cloud descended in the room like a thick bank. I could not see through or back of it. A beautiful white hand was extended from the cloud toward me. In the hand was held a dead limb or branch, so dry and dead looking that it seemed it would break if touched. It was a very spraggy branch, with a great number of dried twigs, but not one leaf or sign of fruit on it. I looked on it in wonderment for a time, then a voice spoke audibly to me thus: "You shall be a blessing and bear fruit in many branches."

I looked at the dried, dead branch, and felt somewhat amused and said to myself, "Before there can be very much borne on that particular branch there will have to be a quickening." The vision ended. I was filled with joy to know God had spoken to me, one of the weakest, poorest, and most unworthy of his children, yet sad because of the condition of the branch he had shown me. It was to all appearances dead. It was in God's hand, and this has been a great comfort to me. This church is in God's hand; it belongs to him, and if it were not possible to bear fruit in the many branches he would never have made me that beautiful promise.

I am very poor and weak and unworthy; isolated from all church privileges; hindered on every hand. My only means of communication with the Saints of God is through the church papers. I have only heard two sermons in more than two years. I haven't partaken of the sacrament in all this time. My faith has been tried in many ways, yet I feel strong in the faith and hope once delivered to the Saints. Let each of us exercise more faith in God that Zion may be redeemed; that there may be a spiritual quickening throughout the whole church that fruit may be borne.

SADIE BURCH.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, November 18, 1912.

Editors Herald: The Eastern District of Michigan has again seen one of its most successful conferences, which showed improvement in some points on former ones, and that is as it should be. For should we not be advancing each day? The Saints are now settling down to put into execution the advice and good things learned.

Our energetic and efficient mission president, F. A. Smith, was elected president of the conference. Assisting him in their usually faithful manner were William M. Grice and Otto Fetting. The musical part was presided over by John R. Grice, and Sister Goldie E. Grant. It was pleasing to all to see the fine orchestra at all the meetings. A commendable thing was noticed here, the quality and quantity of the singing was ahead of what we have had in the past. Shall we keep up this record? If we do, it will prove the benefit the Lord intended it should.

While awaiting the credential committee's report (this was a weak point of the conference and convention, in not having the committee until after we were in session), the time was occupied to advantage by brethren from different parts. Each one had a fine bit of news or counsel to give, to the edification of each person present. The splendid work which F. A. Smith reported as being done gave fresh energy and enthusiasm to many.

Our hearts were made to rejoice to welcome those again who have not been seen in long and short periods; among them being Brother Goodenough; and he certainly seemed good enough to his many old friends: R. D. Weaver, who by the way seems so busy tying certain kinds of knots that he appears to have forgotten that one of his own. How about it, R. D.? It certainly did our young people good to have R. D. Davis with us for the first time.

The Flint brethren and sisters certainly are fine looking after a conference and the comfort of the Saints. There were nothing but compliments for the fine meals, etc.

The Michigan Quorum of Elders and the Ninth Quorum of Priests were smart and took advantage of the opportunities afforded for meetings, which are reported to have been excellent and beneficial. By next conference the teachers and deacons will doubtless have awakened to their loss in not doing likewise, and will be busy.

One special feature was a meeting of publicity workers and branch presidents for discussing their work and how to get into the newspapers. It was fair as a starter.

A resolution was presented by J. A. Grant and unanimously adopted, That the General Conference be requested to consider the establishment of a general store, using the mail order system in connection, as provided in Doctrine and Covenants 57:4.

WM. F. SAGE.

1303 THIRD AVENUE. Pres.-Sec. of Publicity Committee.

THURMAN, IOWA, November 11, 1912.

Dear Saints: I send a word of explanation as to my letter in the HERALD announcing that I had some copies of the Autumn Leaves and would be glad to send them to the Saints who had said through the paper that they did not take them. I did send some. I have now planned to send them to one sister who wrote me for them. I will have some more in the future and will try to supply you, and hope that in the meantime you will not be disappointed.

I think every Saint who takes Autumn Leaves should give it to those who are not able to subscribe for it.

Your brother in the faith,

M. B. OLIVER.

KINGFISHER, OKLAHOMA, November 19, 1912.

Editors Herald: The Lamanite mission is coming to the front grandly in the last few weeks. I just baptized five more Indians last Sunday and ten the Sunday before, making twenty-two in the last few days and many more about ready; we have ten more names now for baptism. Another chief was baptized Sunday, making two chiefs and three medicine men, the latter being more influential than the former in religion, as they are the spiritual advisers for the tribe.

After we came to the river for the baptizing last Sunday an old chief who has not yet been baptized but has heard until he is convinced, talked for about fifteen minutes, exhorting them to all join this church. So we have arranged to meet with the large gathering of the tribe at Coyotes Ranch, near Calumet, during their ten days Christmas exercises.

I wish all who can to send us any small presents for them or a small offering, so we can have the Christmas tree, and present them with some small remembrance. Old clothing is an acceptable offering, as the missionaries have given them old clothing, toys, and candies, etc., for many years, and they wanted me to make them a tree. So if anyone has an offering to give we will accept it with gratitude and appreciation.

There are about eight or ten good openings among the Indians now, the demand for preaching among the white people seems too urgent to turn down, and the men are as busy as bees. The writer has now about reached the half hundred mark on baptisms since the General Conference; and the end is not yet.

The good Spirit was with us in power in the confirmation meeting last Sunday; also in the administration to Brother Leonard Tyler, a leading Indian, who has consumption. Saints, pray for him. And when we arrived at the home of Brother Dick Sanders, where the prayer meeting was going on, the power of the Spirit was there, and the house was full of people. Following the prayer service the writer baptized a Sister Lane, and preached that night.

The writer recently was called to Enid to perform the ceremony for Sister Bernice McGeorge and Mr. Hart, a fine young man. This noble couple are to make their home in Enid. The wedding was a beautiful home affair, with many lovely presents, reminding us of a similar event which occurred a few weeks ago at the home of Brother W. M. Downey, near Weatherford, while we were preaching there, when a Mr. Reagan asked the writer to say the happy words which made him and Sister Opal Downey husband and wife. This is another splendid young couple, and may the lives of all these young people be happy and blessed. Busy and happy in the work of the Lord,

Your brother,

HUBERT CASE.

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, November 3, 1912.

Editors Herald: I am still in very poor health. I have had hope that before I die I would get better, but no change for the better has come in my general health. I received a blessing when administered to, of which I wrote some time ago, but no permanent benefit to my health. I do not know what to do. I am failing as time speeds away, and know I can not live very many years unless God is willing to heal me. I have often been administered to and often asked to be prayed for, through the HERALD, and last fall I received help over the affliction caused by the unfaithfulness of a friend, and other things. Now I have repented, and the Book of Covenants tells me that God is bound when we do the things he has said. I have been subject to this condition for twenty-seven years, and more besides the things inherent in my nature and injuries received at the age of four years.

I pray that God will send some elder appointed with the gift to heal and confirm, so that after more than twenty-seven years of afflictions I may have the remainder of my life blessed with a sound mind and with health such as God is able to give. Very earnestly, your brother in the faith,

GEORGE ELSON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 18, 1912.

Editors Herald: I wish to state in behalf of all the Southern Indiana District Saints that I have now permanently located at Independence, Missouri, God being willing.

I have resigned to the Bishop as his agent for that district and he will no doubt soon appoint another to act in my stead. I have also resigned as president of the district and have no doubt the ministers in general charge will appoint another in the near future. I wish to thank the Saints of the district for their many kind words of encouragement in my behalf; also trust God may bless you all in your future endeavors for good.

JOHN ZAHND.

CLIMAX SPRINGS, MISSOURI, October 20, 1912.

Editors Herald: Some of the ministers have to contend with much in order to get the gospel before the people.

Brother Peters arrived here on the 16th inst., and preached in Brother Zigler's house the same evening to a congregation of about fourteen. The neighbors did not wish to come out the second night to hear the truth of the Master, so on the following morning our bold but not discouraged worker for the Master made a trip to our little town, Climax, a distance of one and one half miles, and got the use of the church there. He was careful to invite all of the citizens out to the meetings, which began on the same night. The church is a large one, but old. It would seat about one hundred, and now and then there was a window pane out; about one third of the plaster was off the ceiling, and another third hanging loose. The rest of the building is in bad shape, being badly scratched and scarred by the usage given it by the hands of its occupants. Brother Peters shut out the cold and wind as best he could by putting benches against the windows and in other ways made it quite comfortable for the little crowd of fifteen that soon arrived, about a half dozen of them being sporting and laughing boys. In this the meetings on the 17th and 18th were disturbed, but having filed information against the boys, whose names had been given us, our meeting on the 19th was peaceful.

Brother Peters preached a good and interesting sermon to an audience of about forty-five or fifty, who were old enough to understand the preaching.

This morning Brother Zigler took Brother Peters to Toronto, where he baptized two children for Brother and Sister Zigler and blessed one child. We are quite well satisfied with the results here.

HENRY D.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, November 12, 1912.

Dear Herald: I saw an article in the November 6 issue of the HERALD on page 1079, entitled, "Is smoking injurious?" The article mentioned is very misleading, and will prove a stumblingblock to many young men in the church, as it condones the use of tobacco, saying that, used moderately, it is a boon and that in these days of strenuous wear and tear, and nerve tension, the weed has become indispensable as a veritable nerve restorer. This article was copied from the New York Sun.

I am afraid our editors are getting pretty short of material when they have to copy such an article for the public to read in a church paper. It would look far better to have seen a portion of section 86 of the Doctrine and Covenants, where the Lord God Almighty said in answer to the prayers of his priesthood that tobacco is not good for man, neither for the body nor belly, but is an herb to be used for sick cattle and for bruises; the same to be used with judgment and skill. I prefer to believe that the article mentioned was printed by mistake rather than to believe that any of our people should knowingly print it in our church paper.

We are among the scattered Saints and are trying to live so as to be a credit to the church, but like Paul, when he would do good evil was present. I find it necessary to examine myself often to see if I am really a Saint, or just a say so.

We shall be judged for what we are; not for what we profess to be. With love for all Saints and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Yours in the restored gospel of Jesus Christ,
THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, November 8, 1912.

Editors Herald: Thinking that a few lines from the best country on earth might be of some interest to your many readers, I will say, by way of introduction, that the Saints are generally well, and still trying to overcome the evils of this world by letting their lights shine. By the untiring energy of our good sisters our little church house has been thoroughly renovated, both outside and inside, and we have a nice, clean place in which to worship, and we are not slow in making use of it. Our young Saints are coming to the front and are an example to the older ones. Last Sunday we had the pleasure of hearing our assistant teacher, who is only sixteen years old, wearing knickerbockers, preach on the fulfillment of the ancient prophecies. It was a treat to both old and young. This young brother is a marvel to those who listen to his wisdom. This proves to us what the Lord can do for those who apply themselves and are diligent in seeking after light and wisdom.

I would like to ask the readers of the HERALD what we should understand by the term "redemption of Zion," as we read in Doctrine and Covenants 48 that the Lord gave direction that his people should save and gather up money to buy land for an inheritance, but did not at that time tell the place; but after this there were to be certain men appointed, and to them the place would be revealed. In section 57 we read that the elders had assembled by command of God in the land of Missouri, and in July, 1831, they received a revelation concerning the place. The Lord said, If you will receive wisdom, here it is; behold the place among you which is now called Independence is the central place. Then he goes on to describe the place for the temple. In section 98, paragraph 10, the Lord told his people they already had sufficient money to redeem Zion. We understand when this was given, the Saints had been driven from Zion, or at least the center place. It is my understanding that the time would come when the Saints would gather again at the center place and build up the waste places, but before the Saints ever came to Missouri the Lord gave them to understand that it was the land of promise or Zion, and it must be redeemed.

This certainly gives us to understand that at some time in the history of the world this land that is now called Missouri was in the possession of God's people, and for some reason they lost it. It could not have been the Jaredites, for they had no city of Zion or gathering place. It could not have been the Nephites, for they never did occupy as a nation what is now known as United States territory. This being the case, who did occupy this land and have Zion established? Could it be possible that Enoch and his city were here and because of wickedness around them God took them to himself, and the land of Zion was given over to wicked people, and lost to the righteous people that were left on earth?

We understand that the New Jerusalem that is to come from God out of heaven will come down and the tabernacle of God will be with men and he will dwell with them and he will wipe away all tears from their eyes; that will be the end of all things old. Will some one tell who lost Zion that it must be redeemed, and where it was?

Ohio.

A few lines to let you know what is going on in this part of the vineyard.

For the first time in years I had the privilege of attending the Chatham district conference at my home branch, on October 19 and 20. The conference was quite well represented from the different branches of the district. New ones are joining the church; the older ones are passing to the other shore. I do not think there were present more than two or three who were in attendance at the first conference held at Bayham, in 1878. Brother Joseph had charge at Steveson. Time brings many changes.

The conference passed off very well, all things considered. Spiritually it was good, and the branch did its part well. The young people had charge, and there was plenty to eat; meals being served in a tent, under the supervision of the sisters who saw to the meals. Time and means were not considered, just so that everyone was made to feel at home. As the time for closing came, the time had been so well and enjoyably spent that all seemed loath to part. The preaching was done by Elders J. H. Tyrell, J. Shields, A. Leverton, F. A. Smith, and the writer. One was baptized; several children were blessed, and some administrations given.

On Friday, October 25, Elders R. C. Russell, C. Ed. Miller and myself met with the Saints of Toledo, Ohio, in their hall at 3055 Summit Street, for the purpose of organizing a branch with seventeen charter members. Brother Russell was in charge, Brother Miller acting as secretary. Brother W. S. Hedrick was ordained to the office of elder, Brother Russell acting as spokesman. Brother Hedrick was chosen as presiding elder of the branch. He had been previously called to the office. Brother A. B. Crooker had been called to the office of priest, but his ordination was deferred, pending his letter of removal which came a week later, and by vote of the branch was ordained to the above office and received as presiding priest of the branch. Brother Cairns asked to be released. Brother William Cairns was elected priest. He has been a member of the church for about fifty years; joined the church at Cedar Springs, Ontario, baptized by John Shippy. He has stood true to the work through cloud and sunshine and declared his determination to do so to the end.

Brother Everett Ulrich was ordained a teacher by the writer, being called to that office some time previously. His parents were Saints and there is a bright future for Everett if he proves faithful. Sister A. B. Crooker was chosen secretary and will make a good one. Sister Silas Robertson organist, and Sister Olive Hedrick chorister.

The outlook is quite encouraging for the Toledo Saints; they are full of faith and zeal, and are good workers. In the event they continue as they have started, they will meet with success. Brother A. B. Crooker is superintendent of the Sunday school and it moves along well with from twenty-five to thirty in attendance.

I joined Brother C. Ed. Miller a few days ago at Wapakoneta. He has been holding the fort at the Uniopolis Branch with good interest. He has been using his lantern views on the Book of Mormon lectures and they made it very interesting. The church was filled to its extremity. One has been baptized and more are expected. We expect to be here until November 23, then to Mermill, there being a number of Saints in that place.

Trusting to meet with success in the Master's cause,
SAMUEL BROWN.
WAPAKONETA, OHIO, November 11, 1912.

New Mexico.

I received much comfort from reading your columns. I realize that it is the agency for comforting many of my brethren, the Saints.

By conference appointment I have been assigned to the district of New Mexico. Thus far my labors have been around Tucumcari, Nara Visi, Texline, and some other places. By appointment I was to labor with Brother T. J. Sheppard, but owing to circumstances, I was directed to labor by myself. Perhaps it has been the Lord's will. We prefer to think that.

This is my first year as an appointee of General Conference. I am laboring as a priest. I have been successful in making several openings, but the results are far from being of an encouraging nature, should we judge by baptisms. I baptized two last June but it was a case of reaping where another had labored.

Since laboring by myself I have been strengthened to meet such opposition as was brought against me. Nephi of old said, "For I know that the Lord giveth no commandments unto the children of men save he shall prepare the way for them that they may accomplish the thing which he has commanded them." I can testify to the truth of that statement.

I have undergone hardships and trials that I might accomplish his work. But I am sure that will be the lot of any missionary, so long as the gospel is preached in its purity.

It has been said of New Mexico that it is the land of to-morrow, and the country which God forgot. The former is true. Many bright prospects here in every line of business. But the latter is untrue; the situation is, that the people have forgotten their God. Clayton, where I am now laboring, is of about 1,800 population, four churches; yes, there are saloons. But the worst thing is that those who are posing as Christians are not. Less than sixty is the average attendance to the various churches. Well, I never counted the Catholics; it is the fifth church. The Mexican people keep that up quite well. This is a fair sample of New Mexico. There are a few honest people, as in the ancient city of Sodom.

It would be far more interesting to me if I could arouse an opposition. But the hired leaders are afraid of losing their long coat should they try to defend their positions in an open discussion.

I heard a Baptist preacher in the stand say, "The doctrine of Jesus Christ, no matter how pure it was preached, is powerless to save a soul." Of course he dared not try to support his position, for well he knew that Romans 1:16 would prove to be his stumblingblock. Paul said, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation," etc. I have met with fulfillment of 2 Timothy 3:5 more than once, and since they are wolves in sheep's clothing, they dare not undertake to support their positions, fearing that they might lose that suit of sheep's clothing, and their real nature be revealed. The people are not so much to blame as their false teachers who have lulled them to a spiritual sleep, from which I fear many will not be awakened this side of His glorious coming.

My last attempt was here in Clayton. I wrote articles for the papers. Put out attractive handbills in every house. The place for meetings was at the Christian church. About thirty-five out first, gradually dwindled through five services. I closed the meetings. None would attend.

I have learned that a musical talent is a valuable asset for a missionary; that in order to do good work there should be two together in these western towns, that there is much good accomplished by getting out and visiting, but where there is a lone missionary he is very seldom invited in. He is fortunate if he is able to preach one of those screen door sermon of about one minute's duration. Further, I have learned that indifference is the greatest obstacle to contend with.

But above all other things I have learned this, that the choicest blessings are in store for us. But we must do our part in order to prove the Lord. But that is the difficult part about it. Doing our part.

I am forced to take up the carpenter's hammer and saw, or run a corn binder, or anything that my hands find to do in order that I might make my way, but am only too willing to devote all my time to the gospel work. At times I have been caused to marvel how the Lord will pour out his blessings upon me, and I know he is only too willing to bless those who trust in him.

Florida.

I am now closing an eleven-day meeting here, with a full house. The people are very much interested, and some are close to the kingdom. I have had very good liberty in preaching; sold six copies of the Book of Mormon, three of the Book of Mormon Vindicated, and one paper. This is a new opening. I trust some will follow close behind me here, as I have removed a great deal of prejudice from the minds of the people. I have removed the stigma caused by the Utah Mormon reputation by showing the difference between the two churches.

God has greatly blessed me in my efforts here. I ask the prayers of the Saints to assist me in the good work. I had one Mrs. J. A. Wagner pay me one hundred dollars in tithing—the first she had ever paid.

Nebraska.

The Lord's work in the Northern Nebraska District is improving some, we think. For the last nine years I have had city missions; five of them were spent in Sioux City, Iowa. While there we bought a church property and paid for it, so it was dedicated free of indebtedness in October after our leaving there. The other four years have been spent in Omaha, Nebraska, and during this time we have built a new church on a new location. But it has not all been paid for yet, but prospects seem good for it to be all paid in the near future. I have given considerable of my time in both cities looking after these church propositions, doing all I could for the membership of both branches and districts. This year I have been released from city work, thus having more time to give to the district. I have been hindered on account of the poor health of Sister Baker. She was not in a condition to go with me, except for a short time, while I was engaged in tent work, neither to be left alone. All these years she has helped me in my missionary work, and I am sure no one will miss her untiring labor and help more than myself; for I am now beginning to sense the meaning of the statement that I have often made, that she was the best missionary of the two.

In connection with my son-in-law, J. L. Parker, I have held tent meetings at South Sioux and at Winnebago, in this district. I have visited Columbus, Blair, and Omaha. I find at all these places things that show development and have been encouraged. At our last conference, held at Blair, the Lord surely blessed us by the presence of his Spirit. Many were disappointed by the fact that Brother J. W. Wight was not able to be present with us, on account of failing health. By direction of Brother Wight we organized a quorum of priests. This, together with the business that was done, the preaching of the word, prayer meetings, Sunday school and Religio work, was all to the satisfaction of those present.

In looking over the district the outlook is encouraging. The Omaha Branch, Sunday school, and Religio joined hands in a rally day on Sunday, November 10, with President F. M. Smith present. All that reported say a good time was had.

Our daughter is now located with us, so I will not have to leave my wife alone. To-morrow I expect to go to Decatur, Nebraska, for work, and to other parts of the district as soon as time and opportunity afford.

Sister J. W. Wight is at present doing nicely in recovery from the result of an operation in one of the hospitals in this city. Brother Wight's health has not been good, but we pray God that he will bless both of them, that we may have the blessed privilege of their association and helpful advice.

My home address is 2914 North Twenty-fifth Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

As ever in the conflict for the triumph of all truth,

Convention Minutes.

LONDON.—Convention of London District held at London, Ontario, October 11 and 12, called to order by President James Winegarden, and on motion he was chosen to preside. He chose R. C. Evans and F. A. Smith to assist him. The reports from various officers showed improvement in the district. The officers for the ensuing term are as follows: President, James Winegarden; vice president, T. B. Richardson, secretary, G. C. Tomlinson, jr.; treasurer, A. Blanchard; library commissioner, Louis Bernard; home class superintendent, Miss H. O. Small. The next convention will be held in Stratford, the Friday previous to the district conference, at 10 a. m. A feature of the session was the briskness shown in all business done. In the evening a joint session was held with the Sunday school, when a splendid program was carried out, some of the best talent being present. It was decidedly the best program produced at our convention in years. The success of this excellent convention is due entirely to the Sunday school workers and Religians of London. Elder Henley, formerly superintendent of the district Sunday school association, presided. G. C. Tomlinson, jr., district secretary.

Conference Notices.

The Florida district conference will meet with the Fairview Branch, near Pensacola, Florida, November 30, 1912, at 10 a. m. We are sending report blanks to each of the branches and hope to have a report from each one. The missionaries to these parts are expected to be in attendance, and a good time anticipated. E. N. McCall, district secretary.

Northeastern Nebraska District will convene in conference at Omaha, February 8, 1913, at 9 a. m. J. M. Baker, president.

Convention Notice.

The semiannual convention of the Spokane district Sunday school will be held in the Saints' church, December 13, 1912, at 10 a. m. Election of officers, and a joint program given by the Sunday school and Religio, on Friday evening. Mary M. Buchanan, district secretary.

Notice.

To the Saints of Eastern Michigan: Having recently been reelected president of the district Zion's Religio-Literary Society, I wish to call you aside to consider a few things.

The year just past has been the most successful the district has ever seen for Religio work. We were able to place all the departments on firm basis for the first time in our history. We realize this has been because of the earnest work of each one of you. This year we want to do twice as much as we did the last one, so we have the following for our motto:

"We can do it,
If we will.
We can do it,
And we will."

You are with us we know; so let's put forth a greater effort, and make good.

The appointment is made also at the request of Brother Gould.

We hope and trust that with the assistance of Brother Christy, Brother Gould may by the first of the year receive notice from every member in Minnesota, having performed to the best of their ability the law of Christ relative to temporalities. INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 15, 1912.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Winnipeg District: Greeting: Another year is fast drawing to a close, and has brought with it blessings, bestowed by a beneficent Father, who careth for even the sparrows. In Matthew 7: 21, Jesus said: "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father, who is in heaven." Have you been doing the will of our Father in heaven? or only a part of it? David says: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Then it follows, of a necessity, that by a perfect obedience to a perfect law a perfect condition will be the result; or such action on our part will result in a perfect salvation. As this is the condition we are all trying to attain, let us examine ourselves and see how, or to what extent we are observing this perfect law.

The law of tithes and offerings finds a prominent place in this "perfect law," and is the financial arm of the church. The individual who neglects or refuses to observe this part of the law will bring upon himself or herself punishment commensurate with their diligence in observing or not observing it.

Israel of old was warned to strictly observe this part of the law. See Deuteronomy 11 and 12, also blessing promised if observed, and cursing if not observed, as recorded in Deuteronomy 28.

Abraham was called the "Friend of God"; strictly observed the law of tithing, as recorded in Genesis 14: 20; Hebrews 7: 1, 2; also verse 5, which shows the Levites were to take tithes of the people. The same verse says they had a commandment to do so.

As a people we expect to find favor and acceptance with the Lord insofar as we are willing to keep his commandments and do his will. John 14: 15 says: (Jesus the speaker) "If ye love me keep my commandments." Again: "If a man love me he will keep my sayings." David, in Psalm 103: 17, 18, says: "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them."

These promised favors we desire and seek, but it must not be forgotten that in order to obtain these favors, or that this condition may obtain, we must be ready to do. It is by a faithful performance of duty we obtain a place among the people of God. "And hereby we do know him if we keep his commandments."—1 John 2: 3; for there is the love of God if we keep his commandments. In Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1, the Lord instructed the church in regard to the observing of the temporal law, in the following terse but significant language: "In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing." The law, then, is binding on the church, the body, and should be administered, put in force, fulfilled, as any other, or all others, as relating to the church, the body; and these officers are required to perform this work as a duty. The fact must not be overlooked, that if these officers are charged with the administration of the law, and are to be held responsible for making a proper effort to carry out their part of the work, each and every individual member is under equal obligation to obey and comply with the same. Responsibility for a disregard to comply with it can not be escaped. A full and complete obedience to this law, as any other, is demanded, and a failure to keep must now, as in the past, bring the church under condemnation.

"Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if must needs be by the things which they suffer."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

To obtain the benefits for which any gospel law has been instituted, the administration must be by a voluntary acceptance, or willingness on the part of the one accepting. Christ promised an eternal reward to those who fulfilled the law here, therefore the act must be a voluntary one, and to force a person to give his means would be a violation of the law. The apostle of old says, "As every man purposeth in his heart so let him give, not grudgingly or of necessity. The Lord loves a cheerful giver." Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7 says: "Behold the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind." "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." The Lord says: "He that will not impart his portion to the poor will, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."

May we escape this condition by observing the law because it is right to do so.
WM. I. ARNOLD,
Bishop's Agent, Winnipeg District.

Died.

EDWARDS.—Daniel Rees Edwards, son of Adolphus H. D., and Lettie M. Edwards. Born June 23, 1910, at Steubenville, Ohio; was blessed by John H. Edwards, October, 1910. Died November 11, 1912, aged 2 years and 4 months. The funeral service was held at the home of parents. Sermon by Williams Richards, assisted by James E. Bishop.

"Rose of the garden, blushing and gay,
E'en as we pluck thee, fading away.
Beams of the morning, promise of day,
While we are gazing, fade away."

WOOD.—Little William Albert Wood, son of Brother and Sister Clarence Wood, of Oto, Iowa, and grandson of J. W.

Chatburn. He was born August 19, 1912, at Oto, Iowa. Blessed November 9, by Elder W. A. Smith, and he fell asleep in Jesus November 15. Funeral at the Congregational church, Oto, Iowa, November 17, 1912. A large number of friends were present to try and comfort the loved ones. Sermon by W. A. Smith, of Independence, Missouri. His little spirit now rests in the paradise of God, and the little body is laid away in the Oto Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

WALLACE.—James Wallace died after several weeks of suffering with dropsy, at the home of his daughter, Sister Adella McCambridge, November 16, 1912, in Boone, Iowa. He was born March 5, 1834, in Edinborough, Scotland, coming to Boone in 1872, and at which place he has made his home since. He married Charlotte F. Batts January 6, 1862, who was laid to rest nearly two years previous. He was baptized in 1907, by W. Christy, and remained a devoted Saint. Funeral services at Marion Street Methodist Episcopal church. He was a man well respected. He leaves four children.

CLARK.—William Oglesby Clark was born in Indiana, June 25, 1817, and passed away near Santa Rosa, California, November 7, 1912, at the age of 95 years, 4 months, 12 days. He was baptized in Illinois, in 1835; was called to the eldership and became an earnest missionary. He bought his time from his father by hard labor, to spend for the truth. He served in the Black Hawk War, under Captain Abraham Lincoln. At the breaking up of the church he devoted his life to the temperance cause, for which he traveled extensively. The gospel fire still burned in his bosom, though partially smothered. His father built the first frame house at Fort Dearborn, now Chicago, for whom Clark Street was named. The funeral was held in Santa Rosa; singing by the Christian quartet; sermon by J. M. Terry. His home was at Drytown, California.

BROWN.—Mrs. Mary E. Brown died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bertha Day, near Stockport, Iowa, November 1, 1912. Mrs. Brown was the daughter of Hugh and Ellen Snively, born near Griggsville, Illinois, October 20, 1831. With her parents she went to Indiana, where they resided till 1865. She was married to Emerson Brown, November 17, 1861, at Millersburg, Indiana. He enlisted in the army and served through the Civil War. In 1865 she and her husband came to Montrose, Iowa. There she was converted and united with the Reorganized Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints. About 1872 they located in Farmington, Iowa, and after some years' residence there they moved to Hillsboro, Iowa, and for some time made that their home. Then for a time they lived in Winchester, then moved to Keosauqua, Iowa, where Mr. Brown died January 14, 1909, and where she continued to make her home until she went to live with her daughter, Mrs. Bertha Day about nine months ago. Prior to this her home had been with her sons Aaron and Charles Brown. She was the mother of five children, two of whom died in infancy and three survive: Aaron M. and Charles E. Brown, of Keosauqua, and Mrs. Bertha Day, of Stockport; she also leaves ten grandchildren. Mrs. Brown had for many years been afflicted with heart disease and other ailments that had been to her a source of great suffering, and to some extent involved her mind at times. All was done for her that medical skill and loving care could do, but the course of disease could only be delayed and not stayed or its consequences evaded. On the date before named, in the privacy of her own room and apparently without pain, death came suddenly to her release at the age of 71 years and 11 days. She was a loving and faithful wife, a kind and indulgent mother, an earnest, zealous Christian, and no doubt died in the triumph of faith. Funeral services were conducted at the Methodist church in Winchester, Iowa, in charge of Elder James McKiernan, of Farmington, Iowa, at 10.30 a. m., November 3, 1912. Interment was at the Oak Lawn Cemetery at Keosauqua, at 2.30 p. m., same date.—Keosauqua (Iowa) Republican, November 9, 1912.

ANDERSON.—Jens Anderson born October 28, 1842, in Sweden; baptized April 18, 1867, at Box Elder, Utah, by A. O. Nyborg. Died October 22, 1912, at his home, Omaha, Nebraska. He was ordained an elder May 4, 1868, at Goshen, Utah, by Lars Jensen. His wife and several children remain.

“Youth’s Companion” for 1913.

The Youth’s Companion appeals to every interest of family life, from housekeeping to athletics. Fathers will find the important news of the day as it is, and not as it is rumored to be. The Cycle.

Summer was a garden where the blossoming was gay,
September came and opened out the gate a little way,
And we gazed away off yonder and we saw the golden glint,
It looked like Miss October bringing treasure from the mint.

November grew so reckless that she threw the gold around.
She tossed it high into the sky and strewed it o’er the ground.
That garden is abandoned and the gate stands open wide.
The blossoms are forgotten ’midst the splendor and the pride.

And then the wind comes prowling and the opulence so vast
Is buried ’neath the snowdrift or is scattered on the blast,
And the time of weary waiting when the reckless joy is over
Makes the old world glad to welcome simple blossoming once more.—Washington Evening Star.

The Best Family Newspaper.

One of the modern problems that confront the conscientious homemaker is the wise choice of a daily newspaper. The ideal family paper must be clean, free from vulgarity and sensationalism, yet must offer something of interest to every member of the household, besides printing the latest news of the whole world in reliable and attractive form. A large contract, you will say. Yes, but an increasing number of readers seem to be convinced that The Chicago Record-Herald fairly comes up to the specifications. This great daily has made tremendous strides in the last year or two without lowering its standards one iota.

Business and professional men have long regarded The Record-Herald as the best paper for their own reading, because of its splendid news service and the reliability of its financial, agricultural and market reports. Young men perhaps find its greatest attraction in its excellent sporting department, covering the whole range of the world's sports. Wives and mothers emphatically prefer The Record-Herald on account of its feminine departments—its daily recipes and menus, its daily fashion hints, the People's Institute of Domestic Economy and the many good things in the illustrated Woman's Section in the Sunday paper. Children enjoy, the Zoo-Illogical Snapshots and other clean comic pictures with the bright stories for boys and girls every Sunday. And all the family together can enjoy Arthur M. Evans' home travel articles, Mr. Kiser's humor and verse, Ralph Wilder's cartoons and other daily features outside the news columns.

The Chicago Record-Herald has every right to call itself the best all-around family newspaper in the West.

If You Don't See the Advantage of owning a farm in the Big Horn Basin, it is undoubtedly due to my inability to properly describe the country, crops, climate, etc.

Now here is a proposition for you. The Burlington Route will run Special Homeseekers' Excursions to Powell, Wyoming, on November 19 and December 3. If your fall work is in good shape, why not arrange to go with me on one of these excursions and see these rich lands, irrigated by the Government, where you do not have to pay a profit to anyone? All you have to do is to return to Uncle Sam the actual cost of irrigation during the next 12 years—and that without interest.

There you can see nearly 12,000 acres of alfalfa now in stack. It is a wonderful showing and tells you better than I can, what you could do on a homestead there. Within four miles of Powell you can still secure just as good farms as those now growing these bumper crops.

Get a copy of our illustrated folder from your local agent, or write me and I will tell you how to join one of these parties.

THE POSITION OF THE CHURCH IN REGARD TO THE USE OF TOBACCO.

A selected article appearing in a recent number of the HERALD raises a question as to the attitude of the church toward the use of tobacco, as the article to which we refer was an apology for the moderate use of tobacco, and was of value only as showing the attitude of the world on that question.

It is quite common in the world to meet with those who argue that the moderate use of tobacco is all right, and though such enormous quantities are consumed every year, most men think that they use it very moderately. It is really astonishing to reflect upon the amount that is consumed by "moderate" users. Still, the average old tobacco user, in moments of frankness, will advise the new beginner to leave it entirely alone, and will lament his own inability to quit, which inability is attested by many New Year's resolutions made only to be broken. This is rather singular conduct for sincere users of a good thing,—yet who has not witnessed this phenomenon?

There are those, indeed, who reason that it is all right for them, while it might possibly be had for others. One of our young men was arguing with the pastor of one of the churches in his city. This minister uses both tobacco and liquor, and is said to have gone to his pulpit with a lighted cigar in his mouth,—and why not, if tobacco is a good thing to use? He argued very plausibly that "sin is the violation of law," and challenged anyone to find a law in the Bible forbidding the use of tobacco in moderation. Of course he is safe on those grounds, because tobacco was not in use at all during Bible times, and there was no occasion to give a law regarding it. In fact there is no law there forbidding its excessive use.

But the young brother said to him: "How would you like to see Jesus walking down the street puffing a big black cigar? When he comes to earth again, how would you like to have him come with a stogie in his mouth?" This was putting the matter in a new light, and it took this particular good shepherd some minutes to regain his equanimity and get back to his sophistry.

Another prominent pastor in the same city lectured before a union meeting of the Protestant churches. He is a leading member of the ministerial alliance in the city, and poses as a reformer. He proposed that the clergy unite in a crusade against vice of all kinds, and just clean up the whole city. After he had finished, a young man in the audience said: "I had occasion to go into that man's private study not long ago, and I found him puffing a big black pipe, and spitting away in good shape."

This little incident had thoroughly killed the influence of that minister with that young man, and it will do so with the average thinking man who hears of it. Well did the Lord say to our people:

Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.

This man's example killed the effect of his counsel, at least with those who knew of his example. That will be the result with every minister who preaches one thing and practices another. One reason why the masses have lost confidence in the clergy is because there has been so much of that kind of work.

On one occasion the writer embraced the opportunity to attend several sessions of the superior court of one of our great States. He did so to observe court procedure, thinking that some points might be gained that might be of use in our church courts, which was true. But other things were observed that would hardly harmonize with church work. We observed how practically all of the attorneys, stenographers, the court clerk, the crier, and other court attendants, including the jurymen, smoked cigars or pipes or chewed tobacco up to the very moment of opening court. And at the appointed hour, in came the judge holding in his hand a cigar recently removed from the judicial countenance.

This smoke-laden atmosphere must have been very offensive to the Goddess of Justice,—if she ventured into that court room. If this is typical of higher courts, no doubt it is so of lesser ones, as indeed we have observed it to be.

We could but contrast this vitiated atmosphere with the atmosphere that prevails in our church courts, both superior and lesser. Truly the position of the church on this question of tobacco, is wholesome, sane, and altogether praiseworthy; just as our position on drinking, gambling, and sexual morality is wholesome, sane, and in every way superior to the ideals commonly cherished by the world at large.

The attitude of the church on the question of using tobacco is governed by the law; and the law says:

And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.

From this it will be discovered that from the standpoint of the church, there is absolutely no such thing as a legitimate, moderate use of tobacco, either in smoking or chewing, or as snuff. It is not to be taken internally at all. Its sole uses are as a poultice for external bruises, and for sick cattle, and even when used in such ways, judgment must be used or the results will be bad.

The church itself has gone on record in the following resolutions:

That this body declares that the use of tobacco is expensive, injurious, and filthy, and that it should be discouraged by the ministry.—General Conference Resolution number 217.

Whereas, The Quorum of Twelve deem it wisdom to appoint none as church missionaries who do not honor the Lord in "avoiding the use of tobacco," etc., as enjoined in the revelation of April, 1887, and

Whereas, branch, and especially district presidents, are important church servants, therefore be it

Resolved, That we do respectfully call the attention of all Saints to the propriety of observing the example of the Twelve in appointing such officers, especially where others equally competent are available who do thus honor the Lord.—Resolution number 362.

A SCIENTIST ON MARRIAGE.

MONOGAMY THE SCIENTIFIC AND RATIONAL SYSTEM OF MARRIAGE; POLYGAMY WRONG AND UNNATURAL.

ANIMAL MARRIAGE.—Let us now look very briefly at the facts of animal marriage from this point of view. The phrase, animal marriage, may possibly offend the reader, but is there any reason to be offended at the suggestion that the principle of marriage actually has a warrant older even than mankind? It has lately been pointed out by a distinguished naturalist, Mr. Ernest Thompson Seton, that animals, like men, have long been groping, so to say, for an ideal form of marriage. We now know, as will be shown, that contrary to popular opinion, promiscuity does not prevail amongst the lowest races of men. Equally false is the popular notion that promiscuity prevails amongst most of the lower animals. Promiscuity, it is true, does occur, but so also does strict monogamy, "and promiscuous animals, such as rabbits and voles, while high in the scale of fecundity, are low in the scale of general development." Says Mr. Seton: "It is commonly remarked that while the Mosaic law did not expressly forbid polygamy, it surrounded marriage with so many restrictions that by living up to the spirit of them the Hebrew ultimately was forced into pure monogamy. It is extremely interesting to note that the animals, in their blind groping for an ideal form of union, have gone through the same stages, and have arrived at exactly the same conclusion. Monogamy is their best solution of the marriage question, and is the rule among all the higher and more successful animals."

The moose, Mr. Seton tells us, has several wives in one season, but only one at a time. The hawks practice monogamy lasting for one season, "the male staying with the family, and sharing the care of the young till they are well-grown." The wolves consort for life, but the death of one leaves the other free to mate again. There is a fourth method "in which they pair for life, and, in case of death, the survivor remains disconsolate and alone to the end. This seems absurd. It is the way of the geese." The point especially to be insisted upon as regards animal marriage is its evident service to their race-culture, in accordance with the principle here laid down that marriage is of value because it supports motherhood by fatherhood, and that its different forms are of value in proportion as they do so more or less effectively. We may note also, as a corollary to this, that marriage must be more important in proportion as the young of a species are helpless and in proportion as their helplessness is long continued. The importance of marriage for man, therefore, must necessarily be higher than for any of the lower animals.

HUMAN MARRIAGE.—We must turn now to human marriage, and the principle which we must remember is that of survival-value. We are discussing a natural phenomenon exhibited by living creatures. This is what so few people realize when they speak of marriage. They can not disabuse themselves of the idea that it is a human invention, and especially an ecclesiastical invention. Thus, on one hand, it is supported by persons who base its claims on mystical or dogmatic grounds; whilst, on the other hand, it is attacked by those who are opposed to ecclesiasticism or religion of any kind, and attacked in the name of science—in which, if the fact could only be recognized, is found every possible warrant and sanction, and indeed imperative demand, for this most precious of all institutions. Here we must endeavor to look upon it as an exceedingly ancient fact of life, vastly more ancient than mankind; and judging it and explaining it we must apply Nature's universal criterion, which is that of its survival-value or service to race-culture. Let us then glance very briefly at the actual facts of human marriage—conceived as an institution by which the survival-value of fatherhood is added to that of motherhood.

The pioneer student of marriage from the standpoint of science was Herbert Spencer, who, with great labor, supported the conclusion that monogamy is the highest, best, and latest form of marriage. But in the absence of the great mass of evidence which is now before us, Spencer too readily assumed the truth of the popular notion that promiscuity was the primitive state, and taught that human marriage has developed from this through polygamy towards the ideal of monogamy. The work of Professor Westermarck, however—Spencer's chief follower in this path—has shown, and later writers have abundantly confirmed it, that this primitive promiscuity never existed. There is no nation or race or clan of man now extant, however primitive or barbaric, that has not definite marriage laws; there is no society on earth, however rude, that does not punish the unfaithful wife. Furthermore, polygamy, the only historical rival of monogamy, is now known to have played a quite trivial part in history, not merely compared with monogamy, but as compared with that which it was supposed to have played. Even in countries which we call polygamous to-day, polygamy is the relatively rare exception and monogamy is the rule. On this most important question it is well, however, to quote the words of Professor Westermarck himself:

"The great majority of peoples are, as a rule, monogamous, and the other forms of marriage are usually modified in a monogamous direction." "As to the history of the forms of human marriage, two inferences regarding monogamy and polygyny may be made with absolute certainty; monogamy, always the predominant form of marriage, has been more prevalent at the lowest stages of civilization than at somewhat higher stages; whilst, at a still higher stage, polygyny has again, to a great extent, yielded to monogamy." "We may thus take it for granted that civilization, up to a certain point, is favorable to polygyny; but it is equally certain that in its highest forms it leads to monogamy." "But, though civilization up to a certain point is favorable to polygyny, its higher forms invariably and necessarily lead to monogamy."

It is the principle of survival-value that explains the dominance of monogamy at all stages of human society—with the single exception of continuously and wholly militant societies, in which polygamy obtained in consequence of the great numerical excess of women. It is the fate of the children, in which everything is involved, that has determined the history of human marriage. Furthermore, we may see here one more illustration of the truth that quality is ousting quantity in the course of progress, and that a low birth rate represents a more advanced stage than a high birth rate.

The birth rate under polygamy is undoubtedly high, but polygamy does not make for the survival and health of the children, and the infant mortality is gigantic. As I have said elsewhere, "the form of marriage which does not permit the babies to survive, they do not permit to survive. There is the beginning and the end of the whole matter in a nutshell. It is not a question of the father's taste and fancy, but of what he leaves above ground when the worms are eating him below. . . . No system yet conceived can compare for a moment with monogamy in respect of the one criterion which time and death recognize, the fate of the children."

In a word, the wholly adequate and only possible explanation of the historical fact of the dominance of monogamy is its supreme survival-value. It has competed with every other kind of sex relation and has been selected by natural selection because of its supreme service for race-culture—the most perfect conceivable addition of fatherhood to motherhood.

PLATO AND MOTHERHOOD.—Thus eugenics must repudiate not only the ideas of Mr. Shaw on this subject, but the teaching of Plato, from whom Mr. Shaw's ideas on this particular subject are apparently derived. It is in the fifth book of his Republic that the pioneer eugenicist lays down his ideas for race-culture. He realized, indeed, the importance, after birth, of the nurture of children—"it is of considerable, nay, of the utmost importance to the state, when this is rightly performed or otherwise"; and he refers also to their nurture while very young, "in the period between their generation and their education, which seems to be the most troublesome of all." His method involved a complete community of wives and children amongst the guardians of the State, and on no account were the parents to know their own children nor the children their parents. The best were to be chosen for parents, on the analogy of animal race-culture by man. The children of inferior parents were to be killed. The others were to be conveyed to the common nursery of the city, but every precaution was to be taken that no mother should know her own child. This practice was to be the cardinal point of the Republic and "the cause of the greatest good to the city."

We see here, then, that the very first proposals for race-culture involved the destruction of marriage and the family, and a total denial of the value of the psychical aspects of motherhood and fatherhood alike. Plato's first critic, however, his own great pupil Aristotle, devoted the best part of his work, the Politics, to showing that the suggestions of Plato were not only wrong in themselves, but would not secure his end. Aristotle showed, in the words of Mr. Barker, that "the destruction of the family, and the substitution in its place of one vast clan, would lead but to the destruction of warm feelings, and the substitution of a sentiment which is to them as water is to wine. . . . So with the system of common marriage, as opposed to monogamy. The one encourages at best a poor and shadowy sentiment, while it denies to man the satisfaction of natural instinct and the education of family life; the other is natural and right, both because it is based on those instincts, and because it satisfies the moral nature of man, in giving him objects of permanent yet vivid interest above and beyond himself." The truth of this matter is that the rest may reason and welcome—but we fathers know.—Parenthood and Race Culture, by Caleb Williams Saleeby, M. D., Ch. B., F. Z. R. Edin., pp. 186-192.

The author of the book from which the foregoing is quoted is a physician of world note, member of the Obstetrical Society of Edinburgh, Member of the Royal Institute, and Member of the National League for Physical Education and Improvement.

It will be remembered that some years ago Mr. Ernest Thompson Seton, a naturalist of considerable renown, and author of many popular animal stories, declared that monogamy was the rule among wild animals and birds, at least among those of a higher order of intelligence. Mr. Saleeby confirms his position in regard to that matter. This overthrows the old argument that certain ones used to make when they pointed to the polygamous habits of certain animals and birds. The trouble with their argument was that they went to the barnyard and the pig sty for their examples, and not to the forest. They drew their illustrations from domesticated animals and birds, where nature has been perverted, and not from the fields and woods where the animals are free to order their own matings.

Again, we note that Mr. Saleeby opposes the ideas of some so-called advanced thinkers who profess to look upon marriage as a passing institution doomed to give way to some better arrangement. In it he sees the natural scientific arrangement of forces for the care and preservation of children. No other system will do. It rests not alone upon divine sanction; but upon a profound, natural human need.

For these reasons we believe that the selection will be read with considerable interest and profit.

THE WAY OF THE SPIRIT.

As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, . . . even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all. In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether both shall be alike good.—Ecclesiastes 11: 5, 6.

Mystery of mysteries! Who knoweth the way of the spirit? Skepticism answers, "None know: it is all imagination." Infidelity denies the existence of spirit, other than, perhaps, the intellectual intelligence of man. This intellectual capacity, condition, or component part of man sometimes called spirit, must, for all that such infidelity has to offer, finally be subject to disorganization and oblivion, and cease to exist.

Some who flatter themselves as being freethinkers, that is to say, independent of commonly accepted theory or principle, preferring to blaze out a course of their own, have practically taken the position of refusing to believe anything which is not demonstrated to the physical senses. Such a man, having never seen a spirit—no such being having reflected its shape upon his brain through the splendid office of a keen optical nerve, he concludes that there is no such thing as a spirit. He never heard a spirit's footfall or the real rustle of a robe which could be attributed to a spiritual being. His alert auditory nerve, which has never failed in his waking hours to detect the slightest sound, offers no testimony in evidence that a spirit has ever been near him; therefore he is doubly sure that all this talk about spirit is a mere traditional humbug.

By physical contact with a natural body, he has never located a spirit, and so his sense of touch, by its lack of positive information in the matter, supports our skeptical friend with its negative testimony, and the man says, With these three reliable witnesses all testifying that they have not found a spirit, surely there is none.

Two other valiant witnesses of the mortal and carnal group may now arise to contribute their brilliant bubbles to the shining array of feathery evidence already afloat before our skeptic's dazzled eyes. The first of the remaining witnesses, Mr. Glossopharyngeals says: With all my powers for appreciation of choice viands, and my keen taste to determine the sweet or bitter, I have never tasted a morsel that could be called spirit; and then the olfactory witness stands ready to conclude the evidence by stating that no change of aroma in his experience could possibly be attributed to such a presence. And so, upon such evidence, some freethinkers conclude there is no spirit, and that the belief in a real Holy Spirit or Holy Ghost, and a real evil spirit, or spirits of devils, is mere traditional superstition.

Let us see; none of these five witnesses can verify the existence of an idea until it is given expression in some of the special departments in which these five senses work. An idea may be given form upon the printed page; the eye is then ready to verify its existence. An idea may be thrown into a vocal vehicle and the mind of others is then apprised of its existence by means of the ear; though it existed before. A thought or idea may take form in a created article, as a watch, a house, an instrument, etc., and thus betray its existence to the touch, the sight, the hearing, or the physical senses. If the thought that designed the watch had not been given expression, the physical senses of those who have seen a watch would not have been informed that such a thing ever existed; but that would not be sufficient evidence to prove that it had not.

The thought that designed a tree, with all its unfathomable wonders of living green, decorated it with a fruit that appeals to every physical sense, formed a world on which the tree could grow, and a man to enjoy the tree and its kindred, thus merely gave expression to its original self in the doing of these things; and as darkness could not be dispelled without light, and motion could not be without something to move, so thought could not originate without a thinker—a spirit; and the first great Spirit Intelligence is called God. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth."—John 4: 24.

That statement does not imply, however, that God does not possess a body also.

The hands of man have produced marvels of art, sculpture, and every conceivable manner of fine and splendid workmanship; but while the hands of civilized races have been thus employed, barbarous races, with hands fashioned after the same mold, with bodies just as able, have been content to dwell in holes and caves, but little removed in homes or habits from the beasts. Why this difference? Was it in physical capacity? No. Was it in dimensions of brain tissue or in ounces of gray matter encased in a cranium and poised on upright shoulders? If so, then some pumpkin-headed man-eater of the jungles had every point of advantage; and if ponderous head structure be the chief quality for pondering well, then we have the preposterous conclusion that an elephant is entitled to the laurels.

What, then, marks the great difference in men? It is the spirit which resides within.

In all of our associations with men, the fact is prominent that there are qualities of personality called character which our five senses could not verify, but which are nevertheless real. "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32: 8.

IDENTITY OF SPIRIT.

Some who admit that there is such a thing as spirit, while grappling with the mighty mystery, lose sight of the fact that each and every spirit has an individual identity of its own. Especially when thinking of the good spirit or evil spirit, of the Holy Ghost or wicked ghost, the thought fails to grasp the idea of real personal identity, and the imagination pictures a vague and meaningless something which, like the magnetic operation of the compass, may influence for good or evil anywhere, — a power which is spread out everywhere and located nowhere.

Some theory which has even been called science, has set forth that when our bodies meet the change commonly called death, that the spirit (our spirits) will then pass out and become a part of a great general element in much the same manner as a drop of water would become a part of the ocean; losing its identity in the one great mass. If such were true, it would be useless for a soul to seek to acquire good qualities or eradicate bad ones; for having no identity in that future realm, there could be no reward or punishment meted out. The spirit of each person here has a marked personal identity and must ever retain it.

In evidence to the point that a spirit may be near us, or pass about among us, yet be unobserved, witness the last moments of a life. Intellectual consciousness may assert itself one moment, and in the next there is no visible response from that person to indicate in any way that a spark of life exists, or that consciousness, intellectuality, or reason has ever had place there. The person is dead; the spirit has passed from the body and left it dead; but what about that spiritual, intellectual, passionate soul, with its wonderful attributes of love, of power of thought, and even creative ability? No eye beheld its departure; no ear detected its parting tread; but the unbroken silence proclaims that the man, the real man, the spirit part, has moved out and left the house subject to disorganization.

Now comes the thought: if a spirit can exist after the dissolution of the body, why not before also? Exactly, and upon the basis that they could and did, and that there were variations, grades of activities in the preexistent spirit world, is to be found the only equitable solution to the question as to why the spirit of one man is born in a fair body with great advantages of surroundings, and with noble parents; while the spirit of another is born in a black body, having base parentage and a miserable jungle for an inheritance.

The possibility of sin having been committed in a preexistent state is conceded in the question which the disciples asked Christ about a man's sins causing him to be born blind. (John 9: 2.)

Then we read of Lucifer instituting a rebellion against God (Isaiah 14), and falling from grace as a result. He was one of the sons of God—sons of the morning; and in his rebellion drew away one third of the other spirit beings—"stars of heaven" (Revelation 12) with him. Then Jude tells us in the sixth verse that the angels (spirits) "which kept not their first estate," are reserved unto chains of darkness. Peter also tells us of "the angels that sinned" (2 Peter 2: 4). Then in evidence that men are given place in this life according to their previous spiritual station, we read in Jeremiah 1 that the Lord knew Jeremiah before his body was formed according to the natural law of birth, and that He ordained him before he was born.

It was surely the Lord's knowledge of the former dependable character of the individual spirit of Jeremiah that caused the Lord to select him as a "prophet to the nations," and to ordain him. A "similar thought is couched in the language of the New Testament Scriptures: "There was a man sent from God whose name was John."—John 6.

With this reasonable and scriptural idea then, that a spirit is an individual being, that may exist with or without a body of flesh, the Lord's question to Job is quite significant: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundation of the earth . . . when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?"

Reader, who were those sons of God, who with Job before the world's creation were shouting for joy? It is quite evident that you were one of them. The fact that you have been permitted to occupy a body in this state of probation is evidence that you were upon the right side of the conflict in that first great rebellion among spirits in heaven, for the rebels were not permitted to take bodies here, only as they (the evil spirits) may crowd in and occupy with us now. As many as seven rebels, evil spirits, or devils, entered into Mary Magdalene, and they who now carry on their war campaign under their commander and leader, the "Prince of this world" (John 14: 30; 12: 31); are still seeking to occupy bodies, but only for the purpose of destruction. Their name is "Legion," for they are many, as they admitted when driven into the swine.

Christ said that he himself lived before Abraham, and in John 17: 5, he asks the Father for the glory which he had with the Father before the world was. It is quite reasonable, then, that those rebellious spirits would have all been acquainted with Jesus Christ. So in Matthew 8 we read that the devils cried out, saying, "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before our time?"

Who will dare to question whether these rebellious spirits are not even better acquainted with us than we ourselves are. In Acts 8: 38 it is stated of Christ that "in his humiliation his judgment was taken away"; and we shall here make bold to state that in our humiliation (incidental to the confining of an immortal spirit within a fleshly body through nature's birth process) our memory of the former estate was taken away. This is not an obliteration of memory of the splendid past, however, but merely a temporary suspension of our powers of recollection, for a wise purpose which shall be revealed in due time. In Christ's humiliation it is quite evident that all of his judgment was not taken away; even so there may be some instances among men where memory's plying searchlight has flashed a beam across the chasm of the past and caught at least a glimmer for one brief instant of forms on that distant shore.

Who has not had, in material-bound hours of wakefulness or in the spirit-realm of sleep, such experiences, where memory grapples with her guards and wins a point or two, only to have them quickly retaken? So we may not yet know all the "Way of the Spirit," but much concerning the spirit we may know, and should know, in order to be safe from the encroachments of the evil battalions, and thoroughly equipped unto every good work.

We should know that the term evil spirit in the singular may refer in general to the great body of evil personages or spirit beings who are spoken of in other places as "spirits of devils," in the plural. Ignorance of what or whom an enemy may be is a dangerous armor to wear. A thorough knowledge of all the facts concerning the location and identity of an enemy is of more value to a general than a carload of guns trained upon the enemy's decoys.

The world has failed to locate the Devil and has been shooting at his tracks for over four thousand years.

We should know that opposite this great host of evil spirits there is a powerful board of commissioners under the direct commission of heaven itself, whose business is to fortify the entrenchments of the righteous, scout the enemy's camp, foretell important maneuvers, comfort the discouraged soldiers, and "guide into all truth"—success. The splendid commission being one in purpose with God and Christ has been spoken of in the singular in the same manner as Christ stated of himself, saying: "I and my Father are one"; and yet they are two individuals. And so we read of the Holy Spirit, the Holy Ghost, and that "when He, the Spirit of truth is come," etc., as one, and in Hebrews 1: 14, speaking of good angels or spirits of the holy order, Paul says, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"—note the plural here signifying a veritable holy host of spirit beings under divine commission to foretell future events, to reveal things of the Father, to act as comforters, and to guide into all truth. Having then, such competent and holy allies, let us all be valiant soldiers, and not forfeit, at this late hour, our preexistent standing, which was gained in the early morning of creation when the sons of God enlisted with a shout for the conflict of a day; when

A morning dawned in eternity,
Of a day run now so near to eve;
A day not measured as man counts time,
For months and years its hours weave.
Deep in the bosom of eternity,
The throng of throngs together trod;
Joyfully gracing the beautiful streets
Of the capital city of God.

Hark! the lusty shouts ascending,
Bursting from that mighty host,
Angels' songs in music blending,
As joy wells to its uttermost,—
Sons of God! stars of the morning!
But why this burst of plaudit grand?
'Tis the news of earth's creation,
Yet to be, by God's own hand.

Earth, for home and habitation!
Trumpets, notes of praise employ,
Morning stars then sing together,
And the sons of God shout for joy.
But hark, again! This time a clamor;
Must mutiny mar the happy scene?
Whence this thrust, this breach of trust
Which mingles discord, joys between?

From out his place of trust and honor,
Rebellious Lucifer so bold,
Usurps a place beyond his merit,
Seeking to grasp, to seize, and hold.
The prestige of his own great station,
And power acquired at duty's post,
With all his dashing, bold assertion,
Captures full one third the host.

War's proclaimed and captains chosen,
Volunteers join each their choice;
Clamor then supplants the music,
And battle din the joyful voice.
Still rages the conflict, unabated,—
Old earth, long since the battlefield,—
Though victory's song be long belated,
The one third clan now soon must yield.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

"The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Repent ye and believe the gospel." These are the words of Him who came among men as the chief representative of the kingdom of heaven, and to occupy the highest honor, position, and responsibility it had to offer on the earth; of whom it was said before his birth, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1:33. Thus we find reference made to the kingdom of Christ, and from the same reference we learn that it is bestowed as a gift upon him, by one who is not only able to make the gift, but fully able to sustain and uphold it as well, and that he who made the gift, occupied at the time and still occupies a throne in a higher and more exalted sphere than the throne of David could ever be in its future glory, as we find in the following words, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, as I have overcome and am to sit down with my Father in his throne."—Revelation 3:21.

We also observe, then, a federation of kingly governments, bound together by one federal law, administered by one high over all, the kingdom of heaven, sometimes, in holy writ, called the kingdom of God. The great kingdom, with its federation of kingdoms,—kingdoms that are set in order by its authority, working in harmony with it, and directed by it in all their affairs, is a real, tangible government, having all the requirements and qualities of any kingly government now in existence on the earth; exercising legal power and authority for the protection of its citizens and interests. It is also a recognizable fact, that in the earth, at least, there are other governments whose affairs are not directed by the kingdom of heaven, and are not in federation with, nor an integral part of it; nevertheless, they are recognized by the kingdom of heaven as governments, and their rights respected, while they are thus permitted to exist.

Now the requirements of a kingly government are: First, the king; second, the territory, dominion, or realm; third, the law; fourth, the form of government; fifth, officers under the king as provided for in the law; sixth, the citizens who have a part in the law and receive all the rights and responsibilities granted by it; and seventh, all other people who are affected by it though not enjoying the rights of citizenship.

Among the earthly kingdoms, we will take, for example, the kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The king who now occupies the throne is George V. Wherever the British kingdom holds dominion, King George has chief authority, his signature seals the laws that govern, and all their dominions are bound by one federal law, to the authority of King George V, ministered through the authority of those authorized by him. Thus the officer of the law, in all the dominions of England, will raise his hand and say, "In the name of King George I command peace"; or, putting his hand on you, will say, "In the name of King George I arrest you," or whatever the occasion may require of him in the discharge of his duties. The English government, with George V at its head, recognizes and respects other governments, sends its ministers among them, treats them with respect and makes demands of them, when occasion requires, for the protection of its citizens and interests; and sometimes, when occasion requires, it enforces its demands in open conflict,—war.

While the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland may be considered the highest type of kingly government to-day, it is not a perfect government. Its king has not sufficient wisdom to make it perfect. He is not capable of producing a perfect law, for he is subject to the forces and powers unseen and unknown to him. The kingdom of heaven has all the requirements and qualifications of a kingdom that are possessed by the British Kingdom, and in addition to this, it is a perfect kingdom, from the fact that its laws are perfect since they have come from a perfect king. He can create worlds and appoint them their places in space, and create life upon them to enjoy them, and therein is manifest his glory, the life and enjoyment of those who come into life as the result of his creative power.

Thus we observe, first, the king, even God, whose throne, majesty, wisdom, and power is exalted over, in, and through all things. He rules through the principles of love, justice, and mercy. These attributes are perfect in him. By love he binds and holds in that sacred bond to himself, all that is good and true. Through the justice that is in him, he wins and will win the respect and admiration of all. Through his mercy he will win the respect and love of even those who are called his enemies.

We observe, second; the territory, dominion, or realm of the kingdom of heaven. If it is possible for man in this mortal sphere to measure the full expanse of the universe, then it is possible for him to give the measurement of the territory occupied by the kingdom of heaven, or kingdom of God. But alas for man! This is an impossibility. Learned astronomers have so declared. In all this vast universe, then, God rules as king of kings. His authority is supreme over all; his throne, where is it? Shall we say that he has none? If so, we would place ourselves in opposition to the words of Jesus, his Son, who came to earth to represent him, and that his glory should fill all things. (Ephesians 4:10.) He said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, as I have to sit with my Father in his throne." Jesus, then, is to occupy a throne. (Revelation 3:21.) "The Lord his God shall give unto him the throne of his father David." (Luke 1:32.) Just as literal as is the throne of David, that Christ is yet to occupy, so real is the throne of the great King of the universe.

Where is it located? "Canst thou bind the sweet influence of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?" is the language of this great King to Job. (Job 38:31.) The Pleiades, a system of planets, as expressed by one learned astronomer some years ago, were said to possess an influence that binds the universe together, around which the great suns and planetary systems revolve in space. Shall we call them the heaven of heavens, since they are the highest of all? "Behold the heaven of heavens can not contain thee," is the language of Solomon, in that prayer made memorable because of its having been recorded as the prayer offered at the dedication of the great temple at Jerusalem. The heaven of heavens could not contain him, neither can London contain King George V when he is in his health and in the full exercise and enjoyment of his kingly power. He can go, when either pleasure or occasion requires, to the remotest portion of the territory ruled by him. He can also visit other governments, should he choose to do so. Has a perfect king less power and right than one who is imperfect? Thus, while the heaven of heavens may be the location of God's throne, he can and does make his presence known to the remotest part of his realm, the universe, and should there be any governments located anywhere within his realms that are not of him and that do not recognize his authority, he can manifest himself to them and give to them terms of peace, and thus present to them by authority of his own appointment the law of his kingdom and the terms of reconciliation, and in his own time overturn and bring them in subjection to his law, the law of righteousness.

We now observe, third, the law of the kingdom of heaven. The only means by which we may become acquainted with the law of the kingdom of God is in the gospel given to us through Jesus Christ his Son, and in all the instruction given to his ministers. He is very precise: "See that thou do all things according to the pattern shown thee, and therein is set forth the principle of love." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, and with all thy might." This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Mark 12:35.) In the language of the great Teacher sent from God: "Justice and mercy are the habitation of his throne." "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever should believe on him might not perish but have everlasting life." (John 3:15.) "A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another," (John 13:34,) "for God is love." (John 4:8.)

We now observe, fourth, the form of government. As pertaining to the earth, it is a kingly government. Christ was chosen and ordained as its king, and in all his kingly authority he is in touch and subjection to the great king who appointed him, seeking only his glory and honor. Thus we have him saying, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me"; "I can of myself do nothing"; "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work"; "My Father gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should teach, and I know his commandment is life everlasting"; "I am the vine, my Father is the husbandman." He did not deny, before Pilate, the fact of being a king, but said, rather confirming the fact, "My kingdom is not of this world." (John 18:36.) And from the fact that the citizens of God's kingdom are not in possession of the earth or any of its governments, the church then is the only government in which Jesus reigns as king, in harmony with his Father's will. The time has not yet come for him and his people to possess the earth, and for this reason he sits with his Father on his throne. Thus we read, "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool," (Psalm 110:1) "whom the heavens must receive until the time of the restitution of all things." (Acts 3:20.)

We now observe, fifth, the officers under the king, as provided for in the law. When God instructed Moses in the organization of Israel, and this organization was a church (Acts 7:38), and they were all obedient to gospel principles before the law was given them (1 Corinthians 10:2), he strictly charged him, "See thou do all things according to the pattern shown thee on the mount." He first designated twelve men (Numbers 1:5) to be princes, or judges, and shortly after he instructed Moses to select seventy men from among the elders, bestowing upon them authority similar to that of the twelve (Numbers 11:16). There were those also of the lesser priesthood, even that of Aaron, when Christ came into his territory, not to take possession, but to do his Father's will, and to set in order his government, that, through his ministers the word of reconciliation might be offered to all people. In the organization of his Government, he selected from among his disciples twelve men, ordained them, and called them apostles, and said to them that they would sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. He did not make this selection until he had first received counsel of his Father. (Luke 6:12, 13; John 17:12.) He bestowed upon them certain power and authority in their ministerial work; afterward he sent forth seventy men, bestowing upon them ministerial power and authority similar to that of the twelve. Then, we find there were elders, teachers, deacons, and officers of other appointment. Thus we read, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." (1 Corinthians 12: 28.) "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some pastors, and teachers." (Ephesians 4: 11.) There is sufficient in ecclesiastical history to satisfy the mind of the writer, at least, that in the organization of the church in these primitive times, that there was first the general organization; that there was in this organization a first presidency composed of the first president and two counselors, and a college of elders connected with them, which would constitute a standing high council; second, the apostolic quorum forming a traveling high council; third, the seventies whose mission was similar to that of the twelve and under whose appointment they labored; there were elders, and ministers of lesser order as priests, teachers, and deacons, and there were also patriarchs or evangelical ministers; there were also local organizations, they being stake organizations, similar to the general but local in their character and subject to the general; also district and branch organizations.

We now observe, sixth, the citizens, as the world had become alienated from God and his government, —all who arrive at the age in which they become accountable unto God, must be reconciled to him by a new birth (John 3: 5; Galatians 3: 27), and in this the word of reconciliation is revealed. (John 12: 49.)

We briefly observe, seventh, all who are affected by it, but do not become citizens. This, briefly stated, refers to all the human family who do not render obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ. (John 12: 32; Philippians 2: 10.)

The kingdom of heaven, the church of Jesus Christ, did not continue among men. The governments of the earth, first persecuted the saints of the most high God, and then establishing perverted forms of worship, drove the church into the wilderness and set up churches of their own, in imitation of Christ's church. God then removed from the earth the abundance and gifts of his Holy Spirit, and thus the church of Jesus Christ ceased to exist among men.

But this condition was not always to remain. There had been a time allotted to the governments of the world (Daniel 2), and at the close of that period the kingdom of heaven would again be restored to earth, not at first in its full power of possession, but as a church with its ministry legally authorized to make known to all people the terms of peace as revealed in the gospel, that all alike may have the opportunity of becoming citizens of God's kingdom. And in due time Christ will come and take possession of his throne and exercise his kingly power over all the earth and all people will become subject to him, for he must reign till he shall put all enemies under his feet, and the last enemy, death, shall be destroyed. (1 Corinthians 15: 25, 26.) Then he shall deliver up the kingdom into the hands of his Father, the great king of the universe.

Can the kingdom of heaven exist among the governments of the world? Yes; God requires of his people that they shall be at peace with all people, and this is really what all good governments require of their citizens. It is not pleasing to the United States Government that any of its citizens should go onto British soil and disregard the established order, even to the breaking of British law. Such citizens would be held responsible to the laws transgressed and answerable to the laws of the United States for their conduct abroad. The same thing is reversed with British citizens on American soil. Thus God requires of his people that they shall respect the governments of the world, and be at peace with all men, neither are they deprived of citizenship in these governments, but are instructed so to live and use their influence as to uphold all that is good and right among them until he comes whose right it is to reign. God does require of his people that they shall be loyal to his law, which is demonstrated by keeping the first great commandment and also the second, which is like unto it, and against the fruits of which it is written, there is no law (Galatians 5: 22), and again it is given as the word of the Lord, "If ye keep my commandments, ye have no need to break the law of the land."

Soon our king will come. Who will be prepared to meet him? What holy joy will swell the hearts of those who will be prepared! Oh, how sacred will be the pleasure to look into the loving face of that glorious king, to clasp those loving hands that were pierced on Calvary's cross, to redeem the world to himself. What holy joy to stand in his presence, to reign with him, to be brought with joy into the presence and association of his Father, the great king of the universe, and be permitted to look into his face, beaming full of love, and with the holy joy of a child say, "I want to be a citizen of the kingdom of God."

If you are not a citizen, do you not think it worth your while to heed the message, obey the word of reconciliation, and live the gospel of Jesus Christ? That we may all behold that day with holy joy, is the earnest desire of the writer.

We can sometimes love what we do not understand, but it is impossible to completely understand what we do not love.—Jameson.

If you carry music in your heart you will be a constant joy to those who make the pilgrimage with you.

HYMNS AND SONGS.

The Bible says, "Praise God with the timbrel and the harp, and sing praises unto the Lord." In later revelations God has said, "Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gift of music and song."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6. Surely music must be a good gift; one having a tendency to elevate both the musician and the listeners, or God would not have instructed his Saints to cultivate it. To be sure, it depends upon the kind of music whether it is elevating or not. There is the good and the bad in music as well as in everything else.

The compositions of some of the old masters, one will find inspiring and elevating. In listening to them, one feels he would like to do many great and noble things. What could be grander than songs written by inspiration? We have several such among our church songs. When these are sung, and the right feeling exists among the singers, the Spirit is often felt.

When frivolous songs and dance hall music is what appeals to one it can not elevate or help, but will have a degrading influence. This style of music does not appeal to a real lover of music.

In nearly every place of amusement the chief attraction is music. If music of this kind has so much power to attract, surely the pure and good would have great influence.

The good influence of sacred music is illustrated in the song, "The sinner and the song." The sinner is experiencing a severe struggle in his mind—a struggle between right and wrong. While passing a church he hears "Jesus lover of my soul" being sung, and it recalls to his memory the time when he served the Lord. The tempter realizes he is in danger of losing a follower and uses his most persuasive arguments to keep him, but the memories of truths brought to his mind by the song conquer, and he quits serving the tempter. One never knows how often the hearing of good music may help some one to mend his ways.

Many Saints are too timid to do active church work, but will help in the song service, and that encourages them. Many people go to church just to hear the music. It seems to me every member who has any ability for music at all should do all in his power to make the music a success, for those coming to hear the music are bound to hear some truths as presented by the preacher, and in that way may become interested. Then would it not be wise to heed the latter day revelations, and cultivate the gift of music and song as much as possible?

If you are going to build up a good character you will have to let Jesus Christ into your heart.

RENDER UNTO CAESAR.

As there is much astir in the political world at present, and as we have many good articles that have come out in the columns of the HERALD of late, if permitted, I would like to state my views of the controversy. As has been stated by more competent pens than mine, as Latter Day Saints, we can not afford to disregard anything in which there is good; whether it be political reform, moral reform, or religious reform. Yet I believe that we should be thinkers. I believe that God wishes us to weigh our every act in the balance of reason, and give a cause for our actions.

Now there are many new moves afoot in the political world at present, all promising to better the conditions of mankind. As to which is best is the question with the people. We might take the various platforms and compare them, and in so doing find much good in all of them, probably more in some than in others, but in being fair we must admit they all have some good in them.

I presume the supporters of each party think they have the solution to the problem. But let us stop and consider the past. For thousands of years mankind has had the privilege of self-government. Have they succeeded in instituting at any time a form of government which was satisfactory to all people? No; we must answer, and at best all reforms or improvements have only been but a temporary relief to the situation in question. No doubt all, or at least many of the supporters of the parties or institutions of the past also believed they had a solution to the problem or problems in question, but time told only too well of their failure and inability to cope with the great problems in question.

Now, Saints, do you believe that man will ever be able to bring about ideal circumstances through his own mode of government? No; you all answer. Then why waste the best of our energies upon those things which we know can never bring the conditions which we hope for and need; and perhaps allow that which will answer every wish and desire of humanity to go wanting?

Saints, I write this because I have by personal observation noted (while I believe in the good intentions of all Saints); that seemingly some have overlooked the greater and centered their gaze and efforts on the smaller; or in other words, in their desire to help man through systems of politics, have neglected in a measure their duties to God and to the church, his kingdom.

We know, or should know as no other people, that there is no permanent salvation for the human race outside of the gospel or the kingdom of God. I believe we should vote politically to the best interests of the people as a whole, but let us not lose sight of our duty to God, the church, and ourselves in so doing. We must admit there is only one thing that can and will pay us for this life work, and that is salvation through Christ Jesus; the ultimate triumph of good over evil. So let us learn to do first our duty to God, and in so doing we will do humanity the greatest service possible for man to do for his fellows. Let us render unto Caesar the things which are his, and unto God the things which are his; or, in other words, to God the things which are his, and to the world the things which are theirs.

Not forgetting that we are instructed to first build up the kingdom of God and establish its righteousness, and all else will be added unto us, let us bend our energies and contribute our means to the support and upbuilding of the greatest, grandest work to which God has ever called mankind, and as we began in faith, go on in faith to perfection, doubting not God's ability, and the fulfillment of his promises. Let us glory in our knowledge of the truth.

DISCOURAGEMENT AND WORRY OVER PAST MISTAKES.

It is related that once Satan, the ruler of Hades, determined upon a clearance sale of all of his implements of attack upon mankind. The lesser imps who attended the sale noticed that the weapon labeled "Discouragement" was marked with the highest price.

Upon requesting his satanic Majesty as to the reason for this, he replied, "I prize Discouragement the most highly of all, because so few people recognize the implement as belonging to me, that I can use it as the opening wedge for all the other evils."

Discouragement is one of the greatest foes of mankind, because it causes one to lose heart and cease his efforts to overcome evil. Discouragement frequently breeds self-condemnation, and when this team begins to pull one down, the descent is rapid. The only remedy is to keep on trying, and a helpful lesson may be gained from Paul's experience. In his letter to the Philippians he encourages them to fight on, "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

From this declaration of Paul, it is evident that he refused to be intimidated by self-condemnation over past mistakes. He tells them that he is forgetting those things which are behind. The acceptance of this advice will remove the chief ally of discouragement and enable one to press forward as Paul did.

All that is expected of mortals is to do the very best they can at all times. If in this effort an occasional stumble is made, it avails nothing to stop and lament. The thing to do is to learn a lesson from the mistake and to go onward, keeping one's eye for ever on the goal of perfection. We read in the Scripture of the tragic end of one who yielded to discouragement, in the case of Saul, who sought for knowledge from an evil source, from which time his descent was rapid.

Another fruitful cause for discouragement is the mistaken belief that perfection is beyond the grasp of mortals, and that consequently there is not much use trying to overcome evil. The admonition of the Master disproves this view. In his instructions to his disciples he told them, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." It must be admitted by all Christians that Jesus would not have told his disciples to do that which is impossible.

As evidence that it is never too late to begin the effort to be perfect, the first verse of the seventeenth chapter of Genesis testifies, "And when Abram was ninety years old and nine the Lord appeared to Abram and said unto him, I am the Almighty God, walk before me and be thou perfect." This then is the goal of human endeavor, to be perfect—to express at all times the divine nature.

It is not difficult to make the start. One may begin this moment to express a little more love, patience, kindness, consideration, and helpfulness to those with whom he comes in contact. Right here let it be said that this improved expression must be extended to all, friends and foes, strangers and acquaintances. All are children of the one Father and only petty mortal considerations seem to separate their real interests.

This constant effort to express the divine character, to all, coupled with alertness and determination to waste no time over discouragement and self-condemnation, will open the way to the possession of that perfection which confers happiness. Said the Psalmist, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

THE WORD OF WISDOM.

A word of wisdom for the benefit of the council of high priests, assembled in Kirtland, and church; and also, the Saints in Zion. To be sent greeting, not by commandment or constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom; showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all saints in the last days. Given for a principle, with promise; adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all saints, who are or can be called Saints.

Following this prelude, or introduction, to section 86 of Doctrine and Covenants, we quote a part of paragraph 1.

Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, in consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation.

I also call attention to the following language found in paragraph 3; after enumerating the various fruits and grains and their uses, he concludes thus:

And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them.

I have quoted so much of this paragraph in order to bring out the salient points which I wish to present to the readers of the SAINTS' HERALD for their serious consideration.

Latter Day Saints, above all others, ought to most earnestly seek to know the will of God, and having learned it, most diligently set themselves to the doing of that word, most certainly God's revelation of his will in this demands as careful consideration and compliance as any of his commands.

Many Saints seek to excuse themselves for their nonobservance of that word of wisdom, on the grounds that the language of the preface, some of which I have taken the liberty to italicise, leaves it optional with them whether they observe it in whole, or in part.

Such Saints (?) may not intend to pose as wiser than the One who gave us that word, yet that is just the attitude they place themselves in before those who might be disposed to pick flaws with, or in their faith and practice. It is true, I grant, that the language seems to indicate that anyone who chooses to in any degree ignore this same word of wisdom can not be held amenable to church discipline, or trial, and may maintain a nominal standing and membership on the church records, and before their fellows and the world, and yet be counted of God as unfaithful to their baptismal covenant: they are most certainly failing to comply with his plainly expressed will. You may think that I am putting this too strongly. But while we may conduct ourselves that while we may not render ourselves subjects for church discipline, we may incur our heavenly Father's displeasure for disregarding his clearly expressed will.

We are plainly told in this section that it is given to show forth the order and will of God, in (or for) the temporal salvation of all Saints, hence all are under obligation to the great Lifegiver to shape their lives by its provisions. There are none so weak, none so strong, that they can not comply with and be benefited by obedience to each and every feature of this plain statement of God's will.

Even if we do not violate any specific commandment, yet if we disregard any expression of his will, though it be on the temporal plane, we are trans-gressors of his law, and must give account in the day of reckoning, unless we repent and mend our ways, while it is called to-day. Wherein we are not complying with God's will, we are doing that which is not his will. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin," is just as true to-day as when first uttered.

Now when God says this or that is not good, and we continue the use of that which is thus condemned, we are in effect saying that we know better, or are improving God's word of wisdom; and, to say the least, must suffer loss. If we neglect, or fail to do his will, we can not expect to receive the reward promised the doer.

It is written that the willing and obedient shall eat of the good of the land; also, "When ye do that which I say, then I am bound, but when ye do not what I say ye have no promise."

It needs not a specific statement of the penalty in this temporal life to make binding on us any expression of God's will; for he requires of us only that which is best for us, and we can not expect to please, only as we willingly and gladly comply with his will. There is another point of danger, to which I wish to call attention, and that is those who neglect or refuse compliance with any part of God's revealed will, render themselves weak and break down their defenses against the forces of evil. The breach in the wall can only be repaired by an earnest compliance with the divine will.⁵ Don't try to repair it with untempered mortar.

Is not an expression of God's will on any point just as binding as a positive "thou shalt," or "thou shalt not"? Who of God's people would wish to place themselves on record as being among those who choose to occupy a position of positive danger of becoming overthrown and enslaved by the enemy of all righteousness, to one of positive safety and assured security? Are not the riches of eternity an inducement for compliance with all of God's will in all things? For we are given to understand that this "word of wisdom" is adapted to the capacity of the weakest of all Saints; so that all are without excuse. Strength is most emphatically promised to "all Saints who remember to keep, and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandment," and to none other is the promise made, of immunity from the plagues and destruction soon to come upon the world and its disobedient inhabitants. Neither will it avail us to lull ourselves into a false security, by thinking that these things may, or will not, come in our day; to do this would be to place ourselves among those of old who said, the "Lord delayeth his coming."

The injunction is for us as for them, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." We are placed here to do our best, that when we pass over we may get the best. But if we are careless or neglectful we must suffer loss.

Nor let us forget that in conserving our highest good we are ministering to the pleasure of our heavenly Father, his Son, and the heavenly host, some of whom we may yet greet as our forefathers, and mothers in the flesh.

One more quotation and I close. Going back to the second paragraph of the section under consideration, we may read: "And again, verily I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man; every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof. . . . Yea, flesh also, of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless . . . it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold, or famine."

Does it not then behoove all Saints to so acquaint themselves with the word of wisdom, as well as the commandments and counsel of God, whether given to them individually or collectively, that they may be ready to meet the Savior when he comes, and hear the "Well done"?

We can not be too urgent in this matter of preparation, for the Master has said that he will hasten the work in his time.

NEW BAPTIST BIBLE GETS RID OF WHALE.

PHILADELPHIA, November 18.—Doctor C. Kingsley Rowland, secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society, is the opinion that the new "improved Bible," recently issued by the society, eventually will rid pulpit prayer of the sixteenth century diction.

To a layman going through the Bible it would appear that many of the changes are of no importance, but the entire translation is designed to simplify the text as much as possible.

One radical change is the elimination of the story of Jonah and the whale. The whale, in the latest Bible, has disappeared, and in its place is a "great fish."

"The scholars who have prepared the translation for the Baptist Bible," said Doctor Rowland, "have aimed, so far as it was consistent with a strict interpretation of the thought, to eliminate obsolete Elizabethan words and to replace them with those in general use.

"The substitution of the monosyllables love and lead for the archaic forms loveth and leadeth marks but one instance where the English of King James has given way to that in current use.

"It is my belief that the new edition eventually will eliminate antiquated language from modern pulpit supplication. Prayer always has been modeled after biblical expression of thought, and a change in the former I believe will be followed by a change in the latter."

In the effort to give the new edition greater lucidity of expression not even the ten commandments have escaped unscathed. "Lord thy God" is replaced with "Jehovah thy God."

The commandment defining man's duty to God has undergone still more startling alterations. In the old King James' Version this commandment reads in part:

"Visiting the iniquity of fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me."

The new version places the sins of the fathers upon sons, apparently eliminating the daughters from all consideration. This part of the commandment in the new version reads:

"Visiting the iniquity of fathers upon the sons unto the third generation and upon the fourth generation of them that hate me."

It also will be noticed that the article the is eliminated before the word fathers and sons, and this applies throughout the entire new translation.

In the new version, in the sixteenth chapter of Luke, the word hell is replaced by the word underworld.

Another innovation is an attempt to make clear the manner of Christ's baptism by John. Wherever the word baptize is used its equivalent from the Baptist standpoint—immerse—is set beside it in parentheses.

Even the Lord's Prayer is changed. The new version reads:

"Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. And bring us not into temptation but deliver us from the evil one."—New York Press, November 19, 1912.

SCIENTIFIC CHURCH WORK.

One of the important events of the religious life of North America this year is the publication of the reports of Men and Religion Congress. These documents, which are issued as seven sizable books, are really epochal. They mark the putting of all church work on a scientific basis.

New books upon religion are constantly streaming from the press. These are different, for they do not represent any one man's opinion. Through them flow the currents of present day thought upon religious essentials. The leaders in all departments of Christian activity express their ripest views in these pages. Probably no library of literature ever commanded such a varied and imposing array of men. The production of these volumes is important enough to warrant all the expenditure of money made by the men who have supported the Men and Religion Movement.

SWEEPING A WIDE HORIZON.

Until he sees it in black and white, as here, the average man scarcely realizes how greatly the conception of the Church and her mission has altered within recent years. The very titles of the seven volumes show the inclusion of topics for which one looks in vain in the earlier literature of religion. The subjects treated are "Social service," "Bible study," "Evangelism," "Christian unity," "Missions," "Boys' work," "The rural church," and "The church and the press." Months before the assembling of the Men and Religion Congress these themes were assigned to special commissions for investigation and report. These commissions comprise distinguished names—usually the most distinguished in the separate fields.

IN A TIME OF CRISIS.

These books show a clear realization that the Christian church confronts an emergency. As the report on evangelism declares: "The church is face to face with one of the most serious situations in her life . . . The situation is this: We are not disciplining our land at a rate sufficiently rapid to guarantee a Christian nation to future generations. . . This is not a hallucination of short-sighted pessimism; it is the calm deduction from facts and figures, in a candid recognition of which lies one of the greatest hopes of amelioration. Let us once fairly face the situation and see if the smug self-satisfaction which has been our curse all too long will not give way to a new and a mighty and enduring Pentecost, to give Jesus Christ his rightful place in the life of this Nation and of the world.

"What shall we say when the twenty-one million of Protestant church members made a net gain last year of less than four hundred and fifty thousand souls? What shall we say when one of the very largest denominations made last year a net gain of only one half of one per cent? What shall we say when all the evangelical churches made a net gain last year of only one and four fifths of one per cent, while the population of our land increased at a rate of more than two per cent, and we have been facing the same experience for practically a decade of years?

"The Protestant and Catholic churches combined last year added to the rolls of church membership only 631,400 individuals, while the United States Commissioner of Immigration shows in his annual report that during the same time there came into this land a foreign population of 1,149,000 souls. . . What shall we say, for instance, when 3,000 churches of one denomination failed last year to add a single unit to their church membership by confession of faith in Jesus Christ?"

THE NEW SOCIAL SERVICE IDEA.

That conceptions of the church's mission are radically changing is clearest in the notable volume upon social service. This book is really a compendium of the latest utterances upon the theme that is dominating the thought of Christendom. In literary finish, in breadth of vision, in fearlessness of utterance, and in opportuneness, this is probably the greatest of the seven volumes. The principles of social service are dealt with clearly and philosophically. But the theme is run out to its most practical details. The question of labor unions, of immigrants, of the new science of eugenics, and of public health, are but types of the practical nature of the chapters.

Such facts as that the annual income resources of nearly half the families of the country are below six hundred dollars, and of nearly one fourth below five hundred dollars are placed in apposition to the conclusion of experts that eight hundred and twenty-five dollars a year is a necessary income to allow a family of five in New York City to maintain a fairly proper standard of living, and that six hundred dollars is probably too low a minimum for the large majority of the smaller cities of the North, East, and West. The extreme low limit for the minimum living wage of a family of five in American cities, exclusive of the South, is set at six hundred and fifty dollars, yet there are in the United States at least five million industrial workmen who are earning six hundred dollars or less a year, and of these more than two million receive less than five hundred per annum.

RECOGNIZING THE PRESS.

There are other books in print upon social service and the other themes treated in these reports, but in the case of the church and the press the present document is unique. There has never before been a sane and sympathetic study made of the relations, existing and possible, between the newspaper and the forces of religion. A body of practical newspaper men, with George W. Coleman, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America, at their head, write this volume on the basis of answers to more than a thousand questionnaires which they had sent out to editors, to ministers, and to laymen in all parts of the land.

WITH THE WORLD OUTLOOK.

One of the smallest of the reports is that devoted to evangelism. It clearly shows the state of transition and uncertainty which the cause of evangelistic effort is experiencing at the present time. While the production of missionary literature has been a characteristic of the past decade, and the volumes of the Edinburgh Missionary Conference Report have put this theme on some such scientific foundation as the present reports do for all church work, yet there has been no one volume that has gathered up the whole body of fact and methods and appeal. The present report is the best statement of the missionary case at present available in print.

THE RURAL CHURCH AND BOYS' WORK.

Seventeen hundred rural churches in the State of Illinois have been abandoned within the past twenty years. In the same time 550 have died in Missouri. This startling statement, which seems like a confession of defeat, is recorded in the really notable volume on the rural church. While social agitators have been concerned over the problem of the city, there has gradually arisen an even greater religious problem in the country. Now the denominations have been studying it with great thoroughness. From the plight of the farmer's wife and of the playless, ungraded school up to the nonresident minister—most country pastors do not live where they preach—and to the agricultural college, the theme is investigated. No one of the documents in this extraordinary series contains more to arrest the attention of church leaders than this thoroughgoing statement of the rural church question.—New York Sun.

INDIANS, NATION'S WARDS, DECIMATED BY DISEASE; BLAME LAID TO CONGRESS.

There are 296,320 Indian wards of the Nation.

They own property and funds aggregating $678,564,253, out of which, in a large measure, the Government is reimbursed for its Indian expenditures.

Under lax government supervision 30.72 a thousand is the astounding death rate among them from tuberculosis.

Trachoma, a blinding, malignant disease of the eyes, is widely prevalent.

For one tribe of 1,725, ninety-eight per cent of whom are tainted with tuberculosis, there was until recently one physician at $1,200 a year.

Indian lands, sale of which is the chief source of revenue, are frequently exploited.

Appropriation asked last year for sanitary work among the tribes was $90,000.

Appropriation to be asked of next Congress to combat terrible condition of Nation's neglected wards will be $500,000.

HERALD BUREAU,

No. 1502 H STREET, N. W.,

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday.

That Congress, which acts as the guardian of 296,320 Indians, whose wealth is estimated at the astounding sum of $678,564,253, has so lamentably failed in its duty that many of the Indian tribes are not even protected from the most ordinary diseases will be indicated in the forthcoming annual report and recommendations of the Office of Indian Affairs.

It will be shown, for instance, that 1,725 Crow Indians in Montana, are worth more than $9,000,000 in lands and cash in the United States Treasury; that ninety-eight per cent of the membership of this tribe is tainted with tuberculosis, and yet until recently but one physician was provided for this reservation. He received a salary of $1,200 a year.

TO DEMAND RELIEF FROM CONGRESS.

This is the instance cited editorially by the Herald. While it is a flagrant case, it is by no means the only one of its kind. Officials of the Indian Office told a Herald reporter to-day that something should be done by Congress to change this condition. Instead of the $90,000 estimate for sanitary work among the Indians sent to Congress last year, the Indian Office will ask for $500,000 when Congress reconvenes next December. Perhaps Congress will grant it. If it follows its usual course it will not.

The Indians themselves, their attorneys, and their disinterested friends have complained of these horrible conditions for many years. They have watched Congress tamper with the tariff and enact a lot of legislation which a good many persons believe would be much better unenacted, and have seen what the Indians demanded as their rights turned down.

Consideration of Indian appropriation bills in the House and Senate has come to be a farce. A handful of members sit around and everybody yawns. Nobody takes any interest, except occasionally when a chance comes along to exploit some Indian lands.

In every department of the federal control of the Indian problem it is declared there has been one form or another of grossest neglect of duty, exhibitions of ignorance without number and a carelessness which in the conduct of big business would be designated as criminal.

TUBERCULOSIS RAVAGES TRIBES.

Tuberculosis and trachoma, a terrible disease of the eyes which leads to blindness, are rampant among the tribes of the West, the Northwest, and the Southwest. The Navajo Reservation, in Arizona, with a population of 10,000, furnished a tuberculosis death rate alone for 1911 of 450, or, according to the accepted system of figuring death percentages, of 45 per 1,000 of inhabitants. The Pine Ridge Reservation, in South Dakota, showed a death rate of 45.91 per 1,000 of population.

Minor Reservation, where the number of Indians was far less, showed rates as high as 100 per 1,000 for last year. The death rate from tuberculosis for the whole Indian population of the United States, of whom there are 296,320 under the supervision of the Government, was 30.72 per 1,000 for a general average.

PREVALENCE OF TRACHOMA.

The trachoma statistics, while less alarming, show that this highly malignant, blinding malady is prevalent throughout the Indian tribes of the whole West, particularly the more northern of the tribes.

Heretofore, up indeed until within the last three years, the supervision of the health of the Indians of the United States has been in the hands of laymen.

Within the Indian Office no provision had been made, until within the last three years, for the supervision of the sanitary work of the office in the field by a medical man. To-day Doctor J. A. Murphy, a competent, earnest, and thoroughgoing surgeon, has the supervision of the whole work of the United States. With sadly incomplete force and small appropriation he is doing what he can to get a sanitary corps in working order. Doctor Murphy's headquarters are at Denver.

INDIFFERENCE OF CONGRESS.

These conditions have arisen with the apparent knowledge of Congress. For years the Indian bill has been the one which both in the House and in the Senate received the least attention from the average member of either branch of Congress.

The fact that the Indian bill was up has been the occasion for a greater amount of absenteeism than for any other measure discussed in Congress. The Indian Committee, particularly in the House, has not been regarded as a desirable assignment except for the members who have reservations in their districts or large Indian constituencies.

Of the 296,320 Indians under the supervision of the Government above mentioned the actual interested membership in Congress is less than a tenth of the lower body and less than a third of the Senate.

INDIANS' OWN MONEY PAYS FOR NEGLECT.

These Indians own property and funds to the total of $678,564,253.

These funds and properties, in large measure administered by the Government and for the Indians, furnish a basis for appropriation for the benefit of the wards of the Nation, from which expenditures are in large measure reimbursible. The sale of Indian lands is one of the chief sources of revenue.

The Indian Office last year sought of Congress an appropriation of $350,000 for surveys needed in order to give a chance for the sale of these very lands. Congress appropriated $75,000 less than was asked, and in one instance, notably the appropriation for the survey of the Fort Belknap Reservation, cut off from the appropriation $30,000, at an expense of more than twenty times that amount to the Indians, who were prohibited from taking advantage of a chance for a sale at huge profits.

The income of the Indians of the United States from their lands and properties for the last fiscal year was $24,150,693.15. This is the total, but it indicates to bureau officials that the Indians have the income necessary to the maintenance of healthful living conditions.

The coming Congress has some figures to digest, according to the Indian Office officials, and some unpleasant reading in the next annual report, which will come from the Government Printing Office this month.—New York Herald, November 5, 1912.

Letter Department

JOURDANTON, TEXAS, November 10, 1912.

Dear Herald: We enjoy your weekly visits very much, as you are all the preacher we have, except when we are permitted to meet with the Saints at San Antonio. My last visit to that place was in August, during the district reunion. I enjoyed the services very much, more especially the prayer services, which were very spiritual, and lengthy, generally holding in session about two hours, and we were only a handful present.

I had to return home before the close of the services, but after I left the Lord spoke to his children several times through Brethren J. F. Curtis and Ammon White.

Several were added to the kingdom during the reunion. Brother D. S. Palmer baptized one the first Sunday; Brother Curtis eight the second, and Brother White eight the third, at which time the reunion closed, and Brother Curtis advised the removal of the tabernacle to another place in the city, and the meeting continued by Brother Glaud R. Kuykendall, assisted by one of the local brethren. Brother Glaud led four more precious souls into the water the following Sunday, making a grand total of twenty-one, in a little over three weeks. Since that time he has baptized six more; three residing in San Antonio, and three at Senior, where he has had a regular appointment since the first of June. There are others who have spoken for baptism at the same place and still others near the kingdom. Brother John Harp is also doing missionary work in this district. I have not heard how many he has baptized. So you see the work is moving forward in this district. The Saints are very hopeful and all seem to be striving more diligently than ever before to push on this glorious work.

The prayers of a great many of the Saints were answered by the arrival of Brother White. Some had prayed and fasted for several months that they might be permitted to receive their patriarchal blessings. Brother White, so far as I know, is the first patriarch to visit this part of the Lord's vineyard. I for one am very thankful that the Lord heard and answered our prayer, as my blessing is certainly a help and comfort to me. I would advise all Saints who have the opportunity to receive their blessings not to neglect it.

I noticed a letter in the HERALD from a sister in which she spoke of Saints thinking they were keeping the Word of Wisdom who ate canned fruit, vegetables, etc. What are the Saints in the Southwest, where they do not irrigate, going to do, if they neither eat meat nor canned fruits and vegetables? The summers are long and dry, there are two or three months in which everything is dry and parched. Vegetables that are shipped in are high; the poor Saint would bankrupt himself should he try to furnish his table in that way. I am sure I want to keep the Word of Wisdom, and so far as tea, coffee, meat, and tobacco are concerned, my conscience is clear, as I have adhered to that part all my life. I was born in this latter day work and my parents knew their duty to their children and did not neglect it, for which I am truly thankful; however, I do use canned fruits and vegetables to some extent. The body must be sustained some way. I have thought it less harmful than meat. Personally I would like to see this subject taken up by Bishop Kelley, one of the Presidency, or anyone who has studied the subject in all its phases.

This work is dearer to me than life. I am striving to make my life worthy the name I bear, and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in my own behalf, and that of my family; especially that the Lord will hasten the day when my companion shall be convinced of the truth of this gospel and accept it in its purity.

Your sister in Christ Jesus,
PEARL KUYKENDALL RICHARDSON.

Of Interest to the Missionary Force.

We are using a book of notes which are the result of years of labor in this field, and as several of the brethren have asked us to issue a number of these books so that others may have the advantage of our research, and in such form that they may be used as a pocket reference book, we have decided to get out a limited number of sets of these notes, using the Multigraph, and putting them in shape for use in the I—P Student's Notebook.

These notes will be printed on good bond paper, about 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ by 6 inches, and indexes made of the subjects, and all paged and perforated ready to put in the books. Should it be wanted, we can send them not perforated, if some other system or notebook is used by the brethren.

This being issued in loose leaves will permit one to add to or take from his book to suit the necessities of his field.

Now, brethren, we are aware that "The making of many books is a weariness to the flesh," but we are doing this to supply the demand here, and if you wish one of these books, or more properly speaking, fillers for these notebooks, let us know. The expense for the paper and work will be fifty cents each. If you desire us to send the covers with the fillers, we will do so at the best rates we may be able to. That will be determined later.

A. M. CHASE.

Out in the Pine Woods.

Although twenty miles from any branch we, myself and family, are still alive and in the faith that was once delivered to the Saints. God is blessing us much of late, even more than ever, for which we are thankful.

On reading the church papers I find that it is the general feeling of the church that God is seeking to pour out more blessings upon his people than ever before. It is worthy of our consideration. It seems that the time has come for the Saints to arouse themselves to duty, and live according to the requirements of God's will.

I am a priest and am battling away for the truth. There are more calls than I can fill, but God has blessed me with liberty in presenting the gospel to the people. I have had some encounters with the leading ministers of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Holiness Church. The people seem to think the only way to battle against the work is by boycotting us, but they have not made a success at that so far.

If Brother Alma Booker reads this I wish he would write me. I have greater desire than ever to do more to advance the latter day work, seeing the harvest is so great and the laborers so few.

I have been down in Florida preaching and expect to go back to conference the first of the month. If the Lord is willing and things work in favor of it, we intend to make our home near Pensacola.

May God bless his servants with his power that his work may prosper is the prayer of your weak brother. Pray for me that I may have his-Spirit with me in my labors.

News from Missions

Salt Lake City, Utah.

We are still in the conflict here, and meeting the issue as we are able to do so. We had a very interesting street service last Sunday, but the cold weather has interfered with that phase of our work of late, and we will be obliged to turn our forces to other channels until another spring opens up.

There was a prospect for a public discussion here, but it looks now as though that was gone, as we have not heard from our man since he took the propositions (of his own dictation, as he objected to ours as covering too much ground,) to sign and return to us, saying he might see us that night. Nearly a month has passed and he has not materialized. If he does not come up soon, we will give you the particulars for the papers.

Sincerely yours,

A. M. CHASE.

Western Oklahoma District.

Appointed to this district for this conference year, I have been laboring most of the time in company with Brother Alva Christensen, who is a congenial companion and an efficient representative of the latter day work. The good Spirit of the Master has been with us in our work. The gospel has been more readily received in some places than others. The calls have been numerous and the laborers few. We concluded that we could accomplish more by separating; so, in answer to an urgent request from Brother J. L. Sawyer to Brother J. F. Curtis, I came here November 2. It is a country place and the Methodists have a church here. Brother Sawyer having obtained consent of the directors, I preached on Sunday, at 11, after union Sunday school, which is held in this church. We announced preaching for all week, except Sunday evening, that being the night when the Methodists meet. After services, which consisted largely of a display of theological knowledge, and not the gospel, we spoke to him about the use of the building. He, of course, objected as usual. I asked him on what grounds. He said we preached the Book of Mormon and Joe Smith. I asked him if he ever read the Book of Mormon and if he could state one point of doctrine in it he didn't believe. He said he had read it, but of course did not attempt to point out any objectionable doctrine; because, as I told him, if he believed the Bible he would have to believe the Book of Mormon, because they teach the same gospel. He finally said if we would agree not to say anything about the Book of Mormon or Joseph Smith, and would agree not to build up a congregation in this vicinity, he would give his consent for us to preach in the church. From the proposition it seems he was afraid his craft was in danger, and from the results I presume it was.

We told him we were not out compromising with people, especially Methodist preachers, and as to building up a congregation there, that was just what we came for, as we had the gospel to preach to the people, and if anyone became converted to it, to be sure we would baptize them. We further told him if we could not be at liberty to preach the gospel as we understood it, we would not occupy in the church.

There is a schoolhouse about one and a half miles from the church. Brother Sawyer obtained permission from the school board for preaching there. I asked the preacher if he would announce meetings for us. He seemed very indignant and said: "You can't announce anything." Most of the people were still in the room, and Brother Sawyer called out, "There will be preaching in the schoolhouse all week."

We held forth there for two weeks and over the third Sunday, and as a result we baptized eight last Sunday.

We had all the Methodist members part of the time, and even their deacon could not stay away. Many of their own people were in sympathy with us, and rebuked the preacher for the way he treated us.

Three of the persons taken in were Methodists taken in on six months probation (suspicion), two of which were the son and daughter-in-law of their leading Methodist and church director, who is himself near the kingdom.

The last night we preached on the Book of Mormon to a full house. There were about seventy-five there, a number standing. While the Methodists tried to hold services, the number of their congregation was about thirteen. We closed with a good interest and feeling, and there were many urgent requests for our return, and but little opposition remains. There are a number who believe our work, and who, we believe, will obey ere long.

Brother Sawyer and his sister and wife are the only Saints who were there and they are not afraid to let their lights shine. I believe there will be a good branch built up there soon. We not only had the good will of the people but they did not forget to provide for our financial needs. Sister Mary Gregg, from Warrensburg, is there teaching school, and was a great help to us in the song services. She is a niece of Brother Sawyer.

May the Lord continue to bless his servants with greater power in presenting the angel message.

I go from here to Helena, where they are anxiously waiting for Brother Christensen, who has been called to assist Brother Hubert Case in the work among the Lamanites, a number of whom have been baptized of late.

My home address is Mapleton, Kansas.

Your humble servant in the gospel work,
J. EVERETTE HUGHES.

BYRON, OKLAHOMA.

Missouri.

As this is my first year in the mission work, it will not be surprising to you that I became badly discouraged the first four months. Nova Scotia was my conference appointment, but, through either faults of my own or conditions with which I was surrounded, I was unable to succeed there. After four months I returned to my home at Independence. On my way I spent four days with the Saints in Chicago, whose sociability and kind treatment I shall never forget. Brother D. E. Dowker is an active young missionary there. He piloted me about the city and we had a good time.

Oh, how my heart rejoices when I realize the interest that some of your young people are taking in the work. While in Chicago I met two Graceland College girls, Sister Wickes and Sister Fike. They are teaching in a conservatory of music there. I noticed that these young folks were taking an active part in the Sunday school and Religio there. When I realize their ability to climb higher in worldly and social planes and saw their loyalty to our work, I believe that Graceland had assisted in bringing them to the spiritual plane which causes them to be loyal to the gospel message. I felt like saying, God bless our Graceland College.

I was so badly discouraged with myself that I had no desire to preach at all. One day my father told me that Brother

E. L. Kelley wanted to talk with me. Brother Kelley sympathized with me and encouraged me to go out again. I also had a talk with Brother Frank Curtis, who encouraged me and said he would give me permission to labor in the Clinton District in Missouri.

Accordingly, I came here October 22 and have been laboring with Brother Amos Higdon, whom I have found a very congenial companion. The Lord has poured out of his Spirit on us and blessed us wonderfully at times.

I am beginning to have liberty again in preaching and feel much encouraged, but it has been a struggle for me, and is now. So far, Brother Higdon and the Saints have encouraged me much; nevertheless, I realize there is a great hill to climb yet.

We are now having meetings in a schoolhouse with good attendance and interest.

As ever your brother in Christ,

OLIVER D. SHIRK.

COLLINS, MISSOURI, November 12, 1912.

South Dakota.

Knowing that your readers enjoy reading news from the various fields of ministerial labor, I thought to speak somewhat of conditions in South Dakota.

Elder J. W. Smith and myself were assigned to this State and the Central Nebraska District and have kept together a considerable part of the time thus far, yet have accomplished very little, apparently, towards the evangelization of the State.

We have held meetings in the vicinity of Springfield, Avon, Wagner, Burkmere, Seim, and Hecla, with a few meetings in the town of Huron. At Burkmere Brother Smith baptized three, the children of Saints. We have tried to visit Saints where we could reach them without too great expense, and give them such cheer as we could.

Some of our time has been spent in the region where there was an entire loss of crops last year and a partial loss this year. In those places discouragement has settled upon the people so that they do not seem to have courage to go to meeting. In other places, where the crops are abundant, many have no time to go to meeting because of caring for the crops.

Prejudice and priestcraft are obstacles to be met and reckoned with, in this field as in others. I suppose, too, that the measure of success must be charged in the final reckoning, to the measure of ability, faith, diligence, and earnestness manifested by the laborer.

We have some reason to believe that the Master has acknowledged our efforts, and we are still desirous to magnify our office.

In the Central Nebraska District we have visited singly and together Bonesteel, Norfolk, Clearwater, Inman, Stuart, Page, Long Pine, Meadville, and Marbank.

We are desirous to have scattered Saints communicate with us with regard to opportunity for preaching.

In gospel bonds,

Autumn---a dirge.

The autumn is old;
The sear leaves are flying;
He hath gathered up gold,
And now he is dying:
Old age, begin sighing!

The vintage is ripe;
The harvest is heaping;
But some that have sowed
Have no riches for reaping—
Poor wretch, fall a-weeping!

The year's in the wane;
There is nothing adorning;
The night has no eve,
And the day has no morning;
Cold winter gives warning.

The rivers run chill;
The red sun is sinking;
And I am grown old,
And life is fast shrinking;
Here's enow for sad thinking!
—Thomas Hood.

The Flower of Liberty.

What flower is this that greets the morn,
Its hues from heaven so freshly born?
With burning stars and flaming band
It kindles all the sunset land;
Oh, tell us what its name may be—
Is this the flower of liberty?
It is the banner of the free,
The starry Flower of Liberty!

In savage Nature's far abode
Its tender seed our fathers sowed;
The storm winds rocked its swelling bud,
Its opening leaves are streaked with blood,
Till, lo! earth's tyrants shook to see
The full-blown Flower of Liberty!
Then hail the banner of the free,
The starry Flower of Liberty!

Behold its streaming rays unite,
One mingled flood of braided light—
The red that fires the Southern rose,
With spotless white from Northern snows,
And, spangled o'er with azure, see
The sister stars of Liberty.
Then hail the banner of the free,
The starry Flower of Liberty!

The blades of heroes fence it round
Where'er it springs in holy ground;
From tower and dome its glories spread;
It waves where lonely sentries tread,
It makes the land as-ocean free,
And plants an empire on the sea!
Then hail the banner of the free,
The starry Flower of Liberty!

Thy sacred leaves, fair Freedom's flower,
Shall ever float on dome and tower,
To all their heavenly colors true,
In blackening frost or crimson dew—
And God love us as we love thee,
Thrice holy Flower of Liberty!

Then hail the banner of the free,
The starry Flower of Liberty!

Solitude.

There is a pleasure in the pathless woods;
There is a rapture on the lonely shore;
There is society where none intrudes,
By the deep sea and music in its roar,
I love not man the less, but Nature more.
From these our interviews, in which I steal
From all I may be, or have been before,
To mingle with the universe and feel
What I can ne'er express, yet can not all conceal.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain,
Man marks the earth with ruin; his control
Stops with the shore; upon the watery plain
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
Without a grave, unknelled, uncoffined and unknown.
—Byron, "Childe Harold."

Request for Prayer.

Mrs. Alex. Mellon, Tidioute, Oklahoma, writes as follows: "I have been requested to ask for the prayers of the Saints in behalf of Mrs. Nellie Brannon, that if it is God's will she may have a lump removed from her neck. She has been to different doctors but they do not seem to know what the trouble is, and their medicine does not seem to help her. She is not a member of the church but says she has more faith in the prayers of the Saints than she has in the doctors. Let us pray that the Lord will bless her and that her faith may increase in this latter day work until she may accept of the same."

one of the most wonderful testimonies regarding the healing power of the gospel. He had been deaf for forty years and was healed by the prayer of faith, and for twenty-five years walked in the light of God, faithfully bearing witness of the saving power of God. For the last two years of his life he was unable to get about unless assisted. He leaves wife, five sons, and one daughter. He died from natural causes and his end was very peaceful. Sermon by G. W. Leggott.

DUTTON.—Ormond N. Dutton was born June 2, 1841, in Hartford, Windsor County, Vermont; died at his home five miles north of Janesville, Wisconsin, November 20, 1912. He was baptized August 5, 1866, by Samuel Powers, ordained an elder May 29, 1870, by Samuel Powers and C. H. Jones. He married Miss Ellen F. Burnham, May 25, 1864. Three sons and three daughters were born to this union. All survive him but John, who passed to the other shore some years ago. He enlisted for the Civil War, in the Twenty-second Regiment, Company E, where he contracted asthma, from which he was a great sufferer all these years. He was strong in the faith of the latter day work, and always bore a strong testimony of the same in his life. He was loved and respected by all. Our sympathies are extended to his bereaved companion, who was always devoted to him, but we remember that "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." His reward is sure. Funeral at the home, November 22. A very large gathering of friends and relatives listened to the sermon by W. A. McDowell. The singing was good.

BARSTOW.—David C. L. Barstow, son of Brother and Sister George Barstow, died at Saint Vincent's Hospital in Cleveland, Ohio, November 23, 1912, as the result of an accidental gun shot wound inflicted on November 22. He was born at Carbon Hill, Ohio, January 5, 1893; blessed by Elders Moler,

To this union were born six sons and four daughters. Two of these sons, William and Ancil, preceded their father in death a number of years ago. Of the four living sons, two, Wellington and Clarence, reside at Kimball and carry on a mercantile business. The other two, Norman and George, reside at Detroit, Michigan. The daughters are all living. Pearl, now Mrs. J. W. Cairns, of Campbellford, Ontario; Martha, widow of the late Wallace Boyington, is nurse in the Detroit Hospital; Lottie, now Mrs. J. S. His illness lasted over a year, and his continued severe suffering was borne with Christian fortitude. He retained consciousness to the last moment and passed away peacefully on the 11th at his late home. At one o'clock, Thursday, November 14, the remains were taken to the Latter Day Saints' church, of which Mr. Kimball was a member. An All-around Newspaper.

It is generally conceded that The Chicago Record-Herald is preeminently the great family newspaper of the Central West. What has given it this favored position in the home? The explanation will be found, not in any single feature, but in the all-around excellence of all its departments, so that it appeals alike to men and women, young and old, gay and serious—the whole family.

The superior news gathering facilities and high-class literary features of The Record-Herald have been the main factors in its wonderful success. Besides the full service of the Associated Press, it receives the foreign cable service of the New York World and Herald. It has its own leased wires to

New York and Washington—also special correspondents in all the large cities of the East.

The Chicago Record-Herald has its own special correspondents in every town of the Central West, who report all important news by telegraph. Complete and reliable market reports and financial news can always be found in its columns, with all other news of the business world. Its sporting department also is of the best.

But man and woman can not live by news alone. The true distinction of The Chicago Record-Herald comes with what it gives over and above the news—in such features as S. E. Kiser's daily column of humor, George Fitch's witty essays, Arthur M. Evans' travel articles, Ralph Wilder's clever cartoons, besides serial stories by noted authors, etc. Its criticisms of the drama, music and books are unsurpassed by any in the country. Choicest of all these extra features is the Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald, a real magazine, full of good stories and pictures by the best living authors and artists—a feast of entertainment for the whole family. The Chicago Record-Herald has earned its preeminence by solid all-around excellence.

Book love, my friends, is your pass to the greatest, the purest, and the most perfect pleasure that God has prepared for his creatures. It lasts when all other pleasures fade. It will support you when all other recreations are gone. It will last you until your death. It will make your hours pleasant to you as long as you live.—Anthony Trollope.

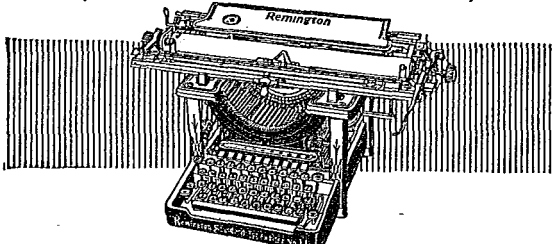

How safely we lay bare the poverty of human ignorance to books without feeling any shame. They are masters who instruct us without rod or ferrule, without angry words, without clothes or money. If you come to them they are not asleep; if you ask and inquire of them they do not withdraw themselves; they do not chide you if you make mistakes; they do not laugh at you if you are ignorant.—Richard De Bury.

Landmarks of Typewriter Progress

Such are all the recent developments of the Remington

Among these developments are:

- The Built-in Decimal Tabulator*—which makes the decimal tabulating mechanism an integral part of the typewriter.
- The Tabulator Set Key*—which eliminates all hand setting of the tabulator stops.
- The Column Selector*—which determines, by the stroke of a single key, the exact point on each line where the writing is to begin.
- The Adding and Subtracting Remington* (Wahl Mechanism)—which combines in one typewriter, and in one operation, the functions of the writing machine and the adding machine.

Every one of these new developments is an evidence of the perpetual leadership of the Remington Typewriter. Illustrated booklet descriptive of all recent Remington improvements, sent on request

Texas This Winter —Why Not?

Many folks are just commencing to "get wise" to the attractions of a trip to Texas.

Texas lands? Oh, yes, fortunes have been made and are being made in city property down there. If you have never been in that country, don't you really owe yourself a Texas outing? This winter, for instance—why not?

The rates are attractive. The climate is fine, the hotels are good; that's a lot to see, and you may run across a good way to make some money—others have.

Anyhow, come in and let's talk it over. If I haven't literature describing the particular section that interests you, I can get it, if it's printed.

JOYOUS NEWS.

"Oh, 'tis joyous, 'tis reviving to our hearts to hear each day; Glorious news from far arriving, how the gospel wins its way, Those enlightening who in death and darkness lay."

Letters which we have been receiving for a number of weeks past have kept the words of the hymn from which we have made the quotation ringing in our minds daily.

A brother writing from the South in a letter received a short time ago, referring to his labor mentions incidentally that he has been privileged to baptize seventy-four since entering the field this last spring—a very good record indeed, and it was in a comparatively new place. He writes joyously and we join with him in the good news from afar. Also from the South, though not quite so far away, a letter indicates that Brethren Hubert Case and Henry Sparling have been meeting with some success in preaching among the Indians of Oklahoma, the brother incidentally mentioning that Brother Case had baptized sixteen of the Indians, of whom one of them was quite an influential man among them. This is a substantial result obtained from the careful, persistent effort made by the brethren among the Lamanites. We commend them for their courage and zeal, and give the encouraging news that others may enjoy it.

Brother R. C. Evans, writing from Toronto before the opening of the Princess Theater, which at the time of his writing was said to occur on November 3, mentioned among other items worthy of note that while his records of baptism might not be so large as at some other period, still his records showed that he had baptized some sixty-nine, if we remember the number which he stated. His services in the Princess, under the auspices of the officials and membership of the Toronto Branch, began on Sunday, November 3. The opening seemed to be auspicious; the house was filled and all could not obtain room. We have heard from others that the effort to date has been quite effective.

Brother J. F. Curtis, in his last quarterly report concerning which he came and talked with us personally, showed that there had been baptized in the field over which he and Brother Peter Anderson are in charge, an aggregate of 274 persons, being an average of between four and one half and five baptisms to each missionary at work in the field. This does not cover the number of baptisms performed in the different local efforts carried on by local ministers.

From two points in the Northwest we learn by letter that two new branches were organized; one with about fifty members, thirty-five of which number were the result of baptisms in the locality where the branch was organized, it being a new place, the other with sixty-one members, fifty-five of which were new baptisms. These branches were organized, proper men chosen, and the branches left to do their own work. This shows incidentally the work that is going on, and we think will give encouragement to those who are working in the field.

Last April Brother T. W. Chatburn returned home to attend the General Conference, but he left work unfinished in Scammon, Kansas, and he felt it his duty to return and assist them in building a church. This he succeeded in doing and an excellent building was finished by the Saints, the larger part of the work being done by the brethren of the locality. We may mention incidentally, to the credit of this brother, that in his labor in what is known as the Spring River District within the last year and a half he has succeeded in securing the finishing of certain buildings in the district that were left partially unfinished and has also secured sufficient means in the localities to pay off the indebtedness against buildings and secure deeds of the property running to the Bishop, in some instances these had been standing for years and needed but application of the energy which Brother Chatburn seems to have been able to give, to bring to pass the desired result.

We may mention in this connection that we hear favorable reports from Brother Rees Jenkins, at Jerusalem, and of late a little from a point in the West indicates that two or three parties seemingly fairly educated in their mother tongue have been making inquiry of one of our brethren and he is teaching them from the Church History and the Book of Mormon. They are of the Armenian race, have not well progressed in the English language yet. One among them, a young lady, seems to be the brightest and to have the best command of the English language, and with her assistance, the brother referred to is in hopes that he may give these inquiring minds that which may assist them in making a search for the way of life.

AN EXPERIMENT, AND WHAT CAME OF IT. TOGETHER WITH A DISSERTATION ON LECTURES ON "MORMONISM."

During 1913 the SAINTS' HERALD will run a series of articles under the general head of "Methods and tactics." Watch for that series. But that is not what we started to write about.

We have cherished a theory that it would be good "tactics," in some instances, at least, to get in touch with a prospective lecturer on "Mormonism," before his lecture, and if possible secure a pledge from him to make an honorable distinction between our people and the Utah people, rather than to wait until the close of the lecture and then try to get a hearing. Most men would choose to be corrected privately, before committing themselves, rather than publicly, after having taken a position.

Periodically in every town of any importance, and in some of no importance, some lecturer comes along and announces a lecture on "Mormonism,"—or perhaps it is one of the local clergy that fires up and thinks it is time to "do something religious," so starts out to lift Latter Day Saint scalps.

The writer has attended many such lectures. Most of the elders have had the same experience. This is the usual course: The story begins with the character of the parents of Joseph Smith. Then he is taken up in his turn. The most awful and ridiculous lies are told about the Smith family. Then follows the old Spalding Romance story; and so the lecturer meanders on until finally he reaches the modern evils of Utah Mormonism. No distinction is made between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church; between the true and the false; the innocent and the guilty.

The writer has listened to these harangues until sick, and disgusted, and humiliated. And at one time resolved never to attend another. For our experience has been that when we have demanded a right to be heard at the close of the lecture that right has been denied.

Ten or twelve years ago the writer attended a lecture by the noted Doctor Iliff, in one of the leading churches of San Bernardino. It was the same old story. At the close, we got the floor and elicited a grudging acknowledgment that there were two churches bearing the name of Latter Day Saint; but when we asked the further privilege to correct some glaring untruths that had been told regarding Joseph Smith's work, those good, pious church members began to cry, "Sit down; put him out," etc. The writer was younger and more inexperienced at the time, and probably did not put up the best kind of a fight. At least he did not last long, when the choir began to sing.

From there we went to Santa Ana, and found another lecture of a similar sort on the ecclesiastical program. In this instance we decided to permit Brother A. Carmichael, now manager of the Herald Publishing House, to try his hand at the business of correcting errors. So at the close of the lecture Brother Carmichael arose and requested privilege to make a few brief remarks. The little, near-sighted, five-foot pastor looked at him over his spectacles and said, "We have only one lecture advertised for to-night. The choir will sing." So away went the organ, and away went the choir, leaving Brother Carmichael in the air.

The lone elder in the pew is at a disadvantage when he confronts the lecturer in the pulpit. The latter has control of the house, and usually the support of the congregation, who are blinded by prejudice; and the elder must sit down or be put out.

We have never been present at such an attack upon us where one of the elders was permitted to reply or make any self-defense. We have never personally known of an instance where our elders were willingly granted that privilege. We did hear of one case where one of the brethren who has a voice that can be heard a long distance succeeded in being heard, because he could make more noise than the choir.

Some one has said that the pulpit is "a coward's castle," and we have seen the force of that statement on such occasions. There is no fairness or sense of the square deal in such men. To strike and hide, to bite and run, is their policy. Words have not been invented adequate to convey our contempt for such methods. We might address such a man as the old southern gentleman did a correspondent: "Sir, I being a gentleman, and my stenographer being a lady, I can not tell you what I think of you; but you, being neither, can imagine what I would like to say."

An opportunity presented itself not long ago for us to test our theory, and in this case it worked well; though in another instance it might not work at all; and it would be necessary to adopt other "tactics."

The Protestant churches of San Bernardino recently united their forces for a "home mission" week. And to start the thing right, the ministerial alliance announced a lecture on "Mormonism," by the Reverend Mr. Lee, pastor of the Methodist Church, South.

In company with Brother Boren, priest of the San Bernardino Branch, we called on Mr. Lee on the afternoon before his lecture, and found him busy in his study formulating his discourse. We introduced ourselves, and told him that we were interested in his subject, and would like to have him outline that which he intended to present, and that we would tell him later why we made such a request.

We were fortunate in this instance, for Mr. Lee, so far as we could determine, was a very fair and gentlemanly individual. This was refreshing, and we appreciated his courteous treatment. A cynic has said that there are "Men, and women, and preachers." The sting of this is in the implication that preachers are neither men nor women; that physically they are not men, and morally they are not women; that God did not make them women, and they have failed to acquire full manhood. When we have watched the silly professional smiles and smirks, the affectation of deep feeling where none existed, and listened to the sanctimonious ministerial whines and cadences, and noted the arts and wiles and mannerisms of some of the clergy, we have thought, "Truly, there are men, and women, and preachers. God made men, and he made women; but here is a thing that is neither man nor woman."

But of course this is not by any means true of all sectarian ministers. There are numbers of very fine and manly men in their ranks. There are preachers and preachers. Mr. Lee evidently was both a preacher and a man. His mistake, however, was in permitting himself to be advertised to lecture on a subject which he had never given thorough study.

In answer to our inquiry, he replied that he proposed first to show that Joseph Smith and his family were lazy, ignorant, superstitious, dishonest, drunken impostors. He then produced a little pamphlet, published by the Reverend Mr. Nutting, and read us numerous affidavits supposed to have been made by old neighbors of Joseph Smith, taken from Howe's exposé, in which the most sickening and untrue allegations were made against the character of Joseph Smith. He then passed to polygamy, political interference, and commercialism, as manifested in Utah to-day.

At this juncture, we informed him further as to our identity, and our connection with the Reorganized Church. We endeavored to give him a brief history of the church, a clear knowledge of the distinction between our people and the Utah people, and set forth the character of Joseph Smith in its true light. He listened very attentively, and asked many questions; and finally pledged himself to make the distinction. He also said that he appreciated our coming to him with a statement of our position, so that he could get an understanding of it before his lecture.

From here we went to the public library, and for purposes of our own secured a history of John Wesley. As though Providence had favored our plan, we had scarcely secured the book and glanced through its pages before Mr. Lee appeared in the library in search of some matter relative to his subject, or at least we presumed that such was the occasion of his visit. We approached him again, in this way:

"Mr. Lee, after you read those statements made by former neighbors of Mr. Smith, the thought occurred to us that a similar collection of damaging stories might be made regarding John Wesley, the great founder of your own church. For instance, here in this book we read that his old neighbors told all sorts of stories about him, that he was a would-be suicide, and even related how he had been arrested and fined for selling gin. They mobbed him, abused his followers shamefully, and in fact treated him much as Joseph Smith's old neighbors treated him."

This seemed to present the matter in a light that was new to our listener. He looked a little startled, and said, "I never heard of that gin story. Let's see that."

So we turned to the page and let him read:

The strangest suspicions and calumnies were circulated; and men will believe any calumnies, however preposterously absurd, against those of whom they are disposed to think ill. He had hanged himself and been cut down just in time;—he had been fined for selling gin, etc.—Life of Wesley, by Southey, p. 272.

Yes, John Wesley's old neighbors regarded him as a convicted gin peddler, and a would-be suicide.

"Now, Mr. Lee," we said, "we admire John Wesley, and have not looked these things up because we think that they are true, but to show you how unreliable such testimony is, when it has its origin in religious bigotry. John Wesley's neighbors lied about him, and Joseph Smith's neighbors lied about him; the testimony is just as true in one instance as in the other."

We attended the lecture, intent upon noting results. True to his promise, Mr. Lee introduced his remarks by telling of our visit, and made a clear, straightforward statement of the attitude of the Reorganized Church on the questions of polygamy and political interference.

He then gave a fairly accurate account of the conversion of Joseph Smith, his prayer in the woods, and his own account of the vision. He resented the statement made by Joseph Smith that the Lord told him that the creeds of the churches were all wrong, and that he should join none of them. This was natural, considering his viewpoint, though, to us, the message of Joseph Smith was quite correct. The subsequent revision of popular creeds, shows that they were wrong at the time. Jesus says, "If you are not one you are not mine." There were the various denominations pulling each other around by the hair of the head (we speak figuratively), and quite evidently they were not one.

The speaker then passed directly to the question of conditions in Utah at the present time, with which we had no concern, more than any other religious people. All the mass of stuff that is usually framed up and dumped upon an unsuspecting public was omitted. Those old stories that religious enemies trumped up about Joseph Smith, just as they did about John Wesley, were omitted, as they should have been, and should be from every such lecture.

So we felt that the experiment had worked fairly well, at least. We had secured from a resident pastor and member of the ministerial alliance, a statement of our true attitude, before a union meeting of the various Protestant churches of the city. Such a statement probably had more weight than any similar statement that we might have attempted to make at the close of the lecture. And it was true! It is a Christian act to put a lecturer on "Mormonism" in the way of telling the truth.

HERALD OFFICE SUBSCRIPTION AGENCY.

The Business Manager has established a general subscription agency for all magazines. There is doubtless much business among the Saints in this line which can be handled by the Herald Office. It is not the intention of the Business Manager to discourage in any way the use of our church literature, but as a matter of fact, and properly so, the Saints are a reading people and look to many sources for their edification and enjoyment. Why can not this business be diverted to the Herald Office? A postcard inquiry to the Herald Office will forthwith be answered, giving the rate for any of our numerous monthly magazines and other periodicals. It would be well for Saints in writing for the new catalogue to make inquiry also in regard to the magazines they expect to take during the coming year. Turn to the back cover page of this HERALD for clubbing rates of all kinds.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Z. H. GURLEY DEAD.—Word has been received at the Herald Office that Z. H. Gurley, one-time member of the church and an apostle, died on November 22, at Canton, Missouri. See General Interest Department.

"THE EVENING STANDARD," OGDEN, UTAH.—This paper very kindly gave space in its issue of the 27th ult. to a communication from Elder J. E. Vanderwood in which he shows that the message of the Reorganized Church is one of good will, and asking the cooperation of all who are interested in the uplifting of the human race.

ORDER OF ENOCH HOUSE.—We invite attention to a statement in this issue concerning the United Order of Enoch House at Independence. A brother writes that many Saints who visit Independence are not aware of the existence of this place, "to our loss and their own disappointment."

A Song for Christmas.

Chant me a rhyme of Christmas—
Sing me a jovial song,—
And though it is filled with laughter,
Let it be pure and strong.

Sing of the hearts brimmed over
With the story of the day—
Of the echo of childish voices
That will not die away.

Of the blare of the tasseled bugle,
And the timeless clatter and beat
Of the drum that throbs to muster
Squadrons of scampering feet.

But, oh, let your voice fall fainter,
Till, blent with a minor tone,
You temper your song with the beauty
Of the pity Christ hath shown.

And sing one verse for the voiceless;
And yet, ere the song be done,
A verse for the ears that hear not,
And a verse for the sightless one.

For though it be time for singing
A merry Christmas glee,
Let a low, sweet voice of pathos
Run through the melody.

BELIEF AND UNBELIEF.

Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.—Hebrews 3: 12.

The great Teacher said, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation." It is not enough to "watch," nor is it enough to "pray"; but the love of God for us, and his great wisdom, are made manifest in the complete statement, "Watch and pray."

To believe the truth, sincerely and intelligently, always takes us nearer to God. To refuse to believe any portion of truth, whether it be historical, prophetic, or doctrinal, removes us farther away from God, directly or indirectly. Evidently, then, God requires us to believe all truth, as fast as we become acquainted with it, and reject all error as rapidly as we find out what it is. What a responsibility! and how careful we should be!

Experience and observation teach that the most effectual preventive of and antidote for the sin mentioned in the quotation at the head of this article, is charity, which the apostle says, "believeth all things" (all things which are true, of course,) and which the Book of Mormon says "is the pure love of Christ." This will enable us, in due time, to believe the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Why? Because the love of God and "the Spirit of truth" are inseparable companions. Where either one dwells, there the other is always to be found; and as the Master said of this Spirit, "He will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come." This Spirit takes of the things of the Father and Son and shows them unto us. (See John 15: 13-15.)

A brilliant mind, which is quick to perceive, is a good thing; a liberal or classical education is an efficient means in the accomplishment of good; but there is absolutely no substitute for the love of God and the Spirit of truth. Whoever ignores these rich provisions of the Father's love will, in a greater or less degree, wander into the mazes of darkness and sin. "Let no man think of himself more highly than he ought to think," should be a constant reminder to us all. The fact that God has made provision for our safety and welfare, is tantamount to saying that he saw it to be necessary and important. How, then, can we ignore or reject these provisions of divine wisdom and love and, at the same time, escape condemnation and loss?

Truth, as found recorded in the sacred books of the church, usually requires more credulity to reject it, than it does true faith to receive it. The great trouble with many people is, they believe what they feel inclined to believe, and refuse to believe what they do not feel inclined to believe, with but little regard for evidence for or against.

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.

Some two months ago a brother, in a personal letter, makes the following statement:

There is a phase of infidelity creeping into the church in the most subtle way. I refer to the immaculate conception of Christ.

This reminds us of a conversation which took place between two young men of the church, within the last year, the doubting one being the son of one of the prominent and leading elders of the church. I give it, in substance, as reported to me by the brother who undertook to defend what is written. We will call one A, and the other B.

A. "I contend that the 'immaculate conception' is merely a dogma, not only contrary to reason and the established order of nature and nature's God, but a dogma that can readily be understood to be merely a human expression, emanating from the overzealous hands into which the early manuscripts of the Bible had fallen. In fact, I regard it as an interpolation from pagan or superstitious sources, such as is contained in the Apocrypha to the New Testament, for example."

B. "But we [meaning the church] have a translation, or version, of the Scriptures that was not subject to such interference, and the 'immaculate conception' is plainly and unmistakably taught therein."

A. "Our Inspired Translation was not completed during the life of Joseph the Martyr, and it was subject to completion, revision, or alteration by the hands of those to whom it passed."

At this juncture "B" found himself unable to meet the story, and, therefore, the conversation ended.

TESTIMONY OF THE BOOKS.

All true Latter Day Saints are believers in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants. They are bound by the testimony of these three books. What, therefore, do the books say on this point?

King James' Version.—Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost. Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins.—Matthew 1: 18-21.

If we reject Matthew's account of the conception by the Holy Ghost, we must also reject the name given for the prospective Savior, together with the great work he was to do, namely, to "save his people from their sins"; for all this, according to Matthew, was told Joseph in the same dream. Thus, we see that it is not merely the rejection of one historical statement of the New Testament, but upon the same or similar ground, throwing discredit upon a large portion of the sacred history.

And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women; and when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.—Luke 1: 26-33.

These same accounts of these extraordinary events, as given in the Inspired Version, are found in Matthew 2: 1-4; Luke 1: 26-33. The wording is almost identical, and the harmony of the two versions, on this point, is complete. However, we call attention to Matthew's introductory words—just four words—which are not found in the common version. I will indicate these words by putting them in italics. "Now, as it is written, the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise." From these words we properly draw the conclusion that when Matthew wrote his biography of Christ, a record of these wonderful events had already been made, to which Matthew had access, and from which he most probably made up his record, in part, if not altogether. The plain inference is, at least, that he made his record agree with what had been written. When we learn that Matthew wrote his book about A. D. 39 or 42, this consideration becomes important to us.

I also give a little additional testimony as found in the Inspired Translation:

Then said Mary unto the angel; How can this be? and the angel answered and said unto her, Of the Holy Ghost, and the power of the Highest. Therefore also, that holy child that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.—Luke 1: 34, 35.

Having shown the complete agreement between the two versions of the Bible, we now make a few observations on

THE WITNESSES AND THEIR TESTIMONY.

1. Matthew and Luke were both men of intelligence and ability, as their writings plainly show.

2. Their work, also, shows them to have been men of sterling integrity. No evidence of fraud or deception. So far as we know, they were true, faithful men in all their gospel work.

3. As we have already seen, Matthew wrote at an early date, and yet he mentions a record of the conception and birth of Jesus Christ, which had already been written.

4. Luke made his record some seventeen or twenty years later. The style of their narratives is different. We notice, too, that Matthew records what the angel said to Joseph, while Luke furnishes us with what he said to Mary. All this is against the supposition of fraud and gives us a still better opportunity to test the correctness of their testimony. There is no evidence of collusion.

5. Luke was an unusually intelligent and able writer and, according to his own statement, had an excellent opportunity to test the correctness of what he wrote, before he made his record. This is what he says:

Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye witnesses, and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.—Luke 1: 1-4.

6. In the light of the foregoing observations on the recorded testimony of Matthew and Luke, what will we do with it? Are we justified in rejecting it? If so, upon what grounds?

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS, AND THE BOOK OF MORMON.

So far as the Doctrine and Covenants is concerned, the claim made by Matthew and Luke is virtually conceded, and there is not so much as a hint in opposition thereto.

But what of the Book of Mormon, the Lord's witness on the Western Continent? One of the leading purposes in the coming forth of this book was, and is, to confirm the testimony contained in the Bible, God's witness on the Eastern Continent. Does it do it? Yes; positively and grandly.

Alma, speakingly prophetically of the first coming of Jesus Christ, says:

And, behold, he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers, she being a virgin, a precious and chosen vessel, who shall be overshadowed, and conceive by the power of the Holy Ghost, and bring forth a son, yea, even the Son of God.—Alma 5: 18, 19, Authorized Edition.

The vision of Nephi, one of the leading prophets of Book of Mormon times, is in striking harmony with the words of Alma:

And it came to pass that I saw the heavens open; and an angel came down and stood before me; and he said unto me, Nephi, what beholdest thou? And I said unto him, A virgin, most beautiful above all other virgins. And he said unto me, Knowest thou the condescension of God? And I said, I know that he loveth his children; nevertheless I do not know the meaning of all things. And he said unto me, Behold, the virgin whom thou seest is the mother of the Son of God, after the manner of the flesh. And it came to pass that I beheld that she was carried away in the Spirit; and after she had been carried away in the Spirit for the space of a time, the angel spake unto me, saying, Look! and I looked and beheld the virgin again, bearing a child in her arms. And the angel said unto me, Behold the Lamb of God, yea, even the Son of the Eternal Father!—1 Nephi 3: 54-62.

This settles the question so far as scripture testimony is concerned. To deny it is to open the way to deny a large portion of the New Testament history; while to believe it is to be in complete harmony with all the sacred books of the church.

THE INSPIRED TRANSLATION.

Is it true that Joseph the Seer never completed his translation or revision of the Bible? Our answer is, It is not true, and it is as unreasonable and indefensible as it is untrue. The story is a bad one with a bad origin. It came from Utah, and has no valid grounds of support. As the writer sees it, it is a miserable makeshift, intended as an excuse for the rejection of light and truth.

Joseph Smith commenced his work of revision in June, 1830, and completed it on July 2, 1833, at which time the following letter was written to "the brethren" in Zion, by Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams:

We are exceedingly fatigued owing to a great press of business. We this day finished the translation of the Scriptures, [italics mine] for which we returned gratitude to our heavenly Father, and sat immediately down to answer your letters. . . . Having finished the translation of the Bible, a few hours since, and needing some recreation, we know of no way we can spend our time more to divine acceptance, than endeavoring to build up his Zion, in these last days, as we are not willing to idle any time away, which can be spent to useful purposes. (See Journal of History, vol. 1, pp. 121, 122; also preface to the Inspired Version, pars. 1, 2, 3.)

In the Church History, volume 1, page 278, we have the following statement, made by Joseph Smith:

I completed the translation and receiving of the New Testament, on the second of February, 1833, and sealed it up, no more to be opened till it arrived in Zion.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 723.

From the above statements we are easily and properly led to the following conclusions:

First, that the New Testament was revised first, which is referred to simply as the "New Testament," which revision was "completed" on February 2, 1833.

Second, that the revision of the Old Testament, referred to as "the Scriptures," and "the Bible," was not "finished" till five months later, that is, on July 2, 1833.

Third, that Joseph Smith had no thought of a second revision. We challenge the proof to be found in any of his writings, made by him before his death.

This ungainly child was born at a much later date, at a different place, and of different parentage.

At the death of Joseph Smith in June, 1844, the manuscripts were left in the hands of his widow, Mrs. Emma Smith, who retained them until the spring of 1866, when she delivered them into the hands of William Marks, Israel L. Rogers, and William W. Blair, a committee appointed by the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, for that year, to procure them for publication. This committee delivered them into the hands of the committee of publication, consisting of Joseph Smith, Israel L. Rogers, and Ebenezer Robinson.

The committee of publication had the plates stereotyped, the book published, and placed on sale in 1867.—Journal of History, vol. 1, pp. 122, 123.

The Preface to the Inspired Translation also says the following:

And were, by them [the first committee], delivered to the Committee of Publication, consisting of Joseph Smith, Israel L. Rogers, and Ebenezer Robinson, and are now presented as they came into our hands. [The italics are mine.]

This ought to satisfy every reasonable being, who believes in the restored gospel, that so far as the revision intrusted to Joseph Smith was concerned, it was finished on July 2, 1833. And, further, that the Reorganized Church, as the true successor to the original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, fell heir to the manuscript, and in an orderly and proper way published the same and placed it in the hands of the people.

In February, 1831, the Lord made the following promissory and prophetic statements to Joseph Smith and others:

Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, [italics mine] and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them, until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15.

The first promise to which we call attention is, "And my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed," and the second, "And they shall be preserved in safety." Have these promises failed? or have they been fulfilled? If they have failed, it must be because Joseph Smith and his coworkers were unfaithful; for, if faithful, they would not and could not fail. But they did not fail, thank God; for as already shown, Joseph Smith said, "I completed the translation and receiving of the New Testament, on the second of February, 1833," etc. And Joseph Smith and others said, "We this day finished the translation of the Scriptures," etc.; that is, on July 2, 1833.

In this connection, we permit the Brighamite Church to officially announce its unenviable position, as found in a letter written to C. J. Hunt:

Office of the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

P. O. Box B.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, June 28, 1898.

MR. C. J. HUNT, Deloit, Iowa.

Dear Sir: I am directed by President Woodruff to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of June 18, and to say that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints does not use the revision of the Scriptures made by the Prophet Joseph Smith for the reason that he never completed the work. It was his intention to have gone all through the Bible again and make further corrections, but he did not have the opportunity of doing so. Consequently it is deemed an injustice both to the dead prophet and to the reader to place this unfinished work in the hands of the public. Though we may rest assured that the changes that he has made are correct, we have no assurance that he would not have made many other corrections in his second revision.

Very respectfully,

GEO. REYNOLDS, Secretary.

—Journal of History, vol. 1, p. 224.

Mr. Reynolds makes some large assertions, but where is the proof? But even if true, so far as our position on the conception and birth of Christ is concerned, it does not affect it in the least, for he admits that the changes made by Joseph Smith in his revision of the Bible "are correct."

Those who accept this official statement, made for the Utah Church, must believe the following:

First, that the promises mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15, have signally failed.

Second, that when Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams stated, on July 2, 1833, that they had "finished the translation of the Bible a few hours since," they willfully told that which was not true.

Third, that when George Reynolds announced the position of the Utah Church, he told that which is true.

Fourth, that the two committees chosen by the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, consisting of Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair, William Marks, Israel L. Rogers, and Ebenezer Robinson, were either densely ignorant of Joseph Smith's purpose to revise again before publication, or, if not ignorant of this, they were knaves and deceivers!

This, and much more that might be said, shows how much one is often required to believe in order to believe not the truth.

DOES SCIENCE STAND IN THE WAY?

If there is any demonstrated truth of science which can properly prevent us from accepting the testimony of Matthew and Luke on the conception and birth of Jesus Christ, let it be brought to the light. We do not believe there is any scientific proof which renders the story impossible, or even improbable, in the light of the whole truth, religious, and scientific.

I herewith submit the teaching of Huxley on miracles. Huxley was a classical scholar, an eminent scientist and author.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY ON MIRACLES.

I am unaware of anything that has a right to the title of "impossibility" except a contradiction in terms. There are impossibilities logical, but none natural. "A round square," "a present past," "two parallel lines that intersect," are impossibilities, because the ideas denoted by the predicates, round, present, intersect, are contradictory of the ideas denoted by the subjects, square, past, parallel. But walking on water, or turning water into wine, or procreation without male intervention, or raising the dead, are plainly not "impossibilities" in this sense. In the affirmation that a man walked upon the water the idea of the subject is not contradictory of that in the predicate. Naturalists are familiar with insects which walk on water, and imagination has no more difficulty in putting a man in place of the insect than it has in giving a man some of the attributes of a bird and making an angel of him; or in ascribing to him the ascensive tendencies of a balloon, as the "leviatianists" do.

Undoubtedly, there are very strong physical and biological arguments for thinking it extremely improbable that a man could be supported on the surface of water as the insect is; or that his organization could be compatible with the possession and use of wings; or that he could rise through the air without mechanical aid. . . . But it is sufficiently obvious, not only that we are at the beginning of our knowledge of nature, instead of having arrived at the end of it, but that the limitations of our faculties are such that we can never be in a position to set bounds to the possibilities of nature. The same considerations apply to the other examples of supposed miraculous events. The change of water into wine undoubtedly implies a contradiction, and is assuredly "impossible," if we are permitted to assume that the "elementary bodies" of the chemists are now and for ever immutable. Not only, however, is a negative proposition of this kind incapable of proof, but modern chemistry is inclining towards the contrary doctrine. And if carbon can be got out of hydrogen or oxygen, the conversion of water into wine comes within range of scientific possibility—it becomes a mere question of molecular arrangement. As for virgin procreation, it is not only clearly imaginable, but modern biology recognizes it as an every-day occurrence among some of the groups of animals. So with the restoration to life after death.—Agnostic Journal, November, 1891.

When the word miracle is properly defined, as it now is by some Christian authors, (who have a right to define it) there is absolutely nothing in Professor Huxley's authoritative comment on miracles, which militates against the credibility of the New Testament history on miracles.

CONCLUDING THOUGHTS.

The Spirit of God, which is the Holy Ghost, is the direct agent through which God exercises his creative power. When "the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep . . . the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." (See Genesis 1: 1-3.)

In Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8, we have the following, which is very plain:

For by the power of my Spirit, created I them; yea, all things both spiritual and temporal: firstly spiritual, secondly temporal, which is the beginning of my work; and again, firstly temporal, and secondly spiritual, which is the last of my work; speaking unto you that you may naturally understand, but unto myself my works have no end, neither beginning; but it is given unto you that you may understand, because ye have asked it of me and are agreed.

In the same paragraph it is said, "Whatsoever I have created by the word of my power, which is the power of my Spirit."

In view of these statements, what is there in the testimony of Matthew and Luke, concerning the "immaculate conception" that is inconsistent or incredible?

It is not only important that we should know our own powers of body and mind for the accomplishment of good, but it is important that we should also know our many and great limitations. In this connection I close with the words of the inimitable Will M. Maupin, as found in the Commoner for November 8, 1912:

HIS LIMITATIONS.

Man is a pretty wise animal. He has solved many problems, and as a result he is mightily puffed up. But he has his limitations. He can figure out to the fraction of a second when a certain planet will cross the path of another planet—

But he has not yet learned why birds migrate, nor how they fly.

He can put a lot of wheels and wire together and generate a force he calls electricity, and with it he can perform wonders—

But he doesn't know what electricity is, nor why it is.

He can generate power at a given point, convey it hundreds of miles over a slender wire, and with it light a metropolis—

But he has never been able to discover how a lightning bug or a glow worm generates light without heat.

He can build towering buildings, huge cathedrals, giant ships, and immense bridges across broad and turbulent streams—

But he can not make an egg, nor explain why the inside of a watermelon is red, the outside green, and the seeds black.

He can navigate the ocean and is beginning to navigate the air—

But he can not stay the ocean's tides nor divert the currents of the air.

Just about the time he gets puffed up so big over his conquests of nature that he is just about to explode with a loud report, old Mother Nature smiles and hands him a jolt that knocks all the wind out of him. He's pretty big, to be sure, but compared with what he has done what he hasn't done is as a grain of sand to the bulk of the universe.

Is there any better way to be strong among men than to surrender to God?

OPPORTUNITY.

Paper read at Zion's Hope Improvement Class, Priestley Road, Birmingham, England, by Brother A. E. Jackson, October 24, 1912.

What is opportunity? It is a fit or convenient occasion, favorable for some purpose.

It makes no difference whatever as to what that purpose may be, if one neglects to put it into effect at a favorable time it may never be obtained.

I have often heard it said that it is fatal to miss opportunities, culpable to refuse them, and criminal to abuse them.

Now, we all know that persons who make a habit of thinking for themselves and of their future, would never let slip an opportunity which would benefit them spiritually or materially, although I am afraid the order should be reversed, as in most instances the possible material benefits are considered first.

I must say that these Thursday evening classes of ours are a grand opportunity for bringing the Saints together and forming them into a closer relationship as brothers and sisters to each other, and as children of the Father, who is always at hand and ready to place opportunities in the path of those who make proper use of them.

There are many people (no doubt many of us here to-night might be included) who have had a chance or chances to succeed, but have not grasped them at the moment, and perhaps it will be years, maybe a lifetime before such another opportunity comes along. There is no doubt in my mind that many folks abuse the opportunities they have, and one of the greatest abuses I can think of is when one "feels his feet," so to speak, and is apt to look down upon the less fortunate and think to himself what a smart man he is. We should not allow that insidious evil, "conceit," to get the upper hand, and I can tell you, at times, it is a hard fight to keep it under. I have often been told that I am conceited; perhaps I am. I make no excuse for myself, but I can honestly say that since I have been connected with this Church of Christ I have not found it such a difficult matter to realize that a greater power than the human one is behind all these things, and that really and truly, on strict examination, we should be very poor and insignificant mortals were it not for the power of Christ.

Well, then, it behooves us, when these opportunities come our way, to thank God for placing them there, for you may be sure he has been and is watching your every action, and your worthiness has not escaped his notice, and usually these things are put before you at a time when you least expect them, and in a very unostentatious manner.

It is true that sometimes the apparently unworthy get hold of opportunities which never cross the path of a man who would appreciate and make proper use of them, but who is to judge a man? God never really gives up hope of bringing back the stray ones, sooner or later, and be a man ever so weak and wayward, he is given no end of chances to improve and get back again to that sphere from whence it was never intended he should wander.

When that favorable occasion comes round, then, it is our privilege to take the advantage it offers, and if we are wise, to lose no time over it. It may seem inconvenient at the time to start in on something else, and perhaps a totally different thing to which one has been accustomed, although the new idea may look to be much more prosperous, but still, we can not go ahead and work out our ideas and plans without considering anything else, for if we do, we are bound to be disappointed. In other words, we can not afford to be independent, and this bears out my previous complaint that we are too prone to rely upon ourselves, and not take into consideration that we should be, comparatively speaking, nonentities without a higher gift. A man may have plenty of ability, but if he lacks the power to apply it in the right direction he may as well be devoid of that ability and place himself in the ranks of those whose attainments are considerably lower than his own, owing to their own environment.

It appears to me that all of us are dependent upon the rest of us. Take for instance the farmers: how many of them have the skill to make the things which they require for use in the fields and among the crops! and so it is all the way through, in almost every trade, calling, or profession that was ever thought of. So again it behooves us to work together; and when that grand opportunity comes to one, for all others who are interested in that individual, to assist him to the best of his ability.

There are grand opportunities for us all in this work. Just look at the scope for ability of the right sort, and with each one of us pulling together in the same direction, there is no reason why we should not eventually become a power to be reckoned with in the gospel work.

It has often struck me as strange that we get so few of our brothers and sisters at these meetings, and I really think if they took the opportunity to come one Thursday night they would make the opportunity to come again as often as possible.

Next, Thursday, as you all know, is our prayer and testimony meeting, and in my opinion it is a grand opportunity to acquaint ourself with the work—and even if one has not the courage to bear a testimony, it is a good thing to sit and listen to the others. These are the opportunities we should cultivate, as they all have in view the one object, and that is, of strengthening the unity of the church.

A good many of us are waiting for something to turn up, waiting for a chance, but just think where the world would have been to-day if the generation before us had thought the same way. And that reminds me of an incident that has appeared in the papers quite recently, and it is a thing that thousands of people will have read and admired. The opportunity came in the way of a gentleman in London of negotiating a loan with China for several millions of pounds, and he took it, in the face of the strongest possible opposition from almost every European power; and best of all, against the edict of our own Government, who had openly avowed to beat him if possible: this shows a strength of character which is very pleasing to see, and a gift of embracing a suitable opportunity when it comes along.

I only give this as an instance of what can be done by a fixed determination to never let slip a chance when you have it.

It is a mistaken notion (and I think has been exploded many times) that opportunity only knocks once in a lifetime at any man's door, and if it is not accepted, goes away, never to return. It does return, if we want it, and that time after time; and one good way of getting it to return is to get in its way and stick to it, resolving never to give up until absolutely forced by circumstances to do so; and you will be a very great exception if you don't have it from one way or another. It does not always come from one direction, but in many ways, and in various shapes and forms.

I had the opportunity of joining this church. It was never suggested to me by anyone, but I knew, somehow, just as well as if I had been told, that it was the right thing to do, that I should never regret it, and that it was without doubt the only true rendering of the word. So I complied with Christ's commandment, and I have blessed the day that it was pointed out to me. The last few years have really been a source of wonder to me, and almost everything has turned out to my benefit.

I have no doubt I have missed a few opportunities, but I am getting wiser every day, and am always on the lookout for them now. I hope you will excuse these few personalities, but it seems necessary to mention them to illustrate a little what I am talking about.

Thanking you for your indulgence, I pray that God may bless every effort that is put forth by any and every one of us.

PRESIDENT H. SMITH.

SECRETARY SISTER L. WALTON.

What we want is a fuller harmonious development of our humanity, a free play of thought upon our routine notions, spontaneity of consciousness, sweetness and light; and these are just what culture generates and fosters.—Matthew Arnold.

THE HABIT OF NOT FEELING WELL.

Of late, there seems to be a natural trend of thought, as regards to physical ills; their causes, effects, values, cures, etc., and in conforming to that particular direction, the writer (as a means to an end) makes a point-blank, frank, and open confession, that he, like some, yea, many people, simply contracted a habit of not feeling well.

I would arise in the morning expecting to have a headache, and morning after morning would complain of headache, until it simply became a habit. If I really had stopped to consider whether my head ached or not, it may be that I would be more than likely to find I had no headache at all. But I had simply got used to saying, "I've got a headache," so I kept on saying it morning after morning, headache or no headache. Instead of sleeping in a well-ventilated room, and getting out in the brisk of the morning, and taking in some deep breaths of that good, God-given, life-giving air, I would just settle down to whining about a headache, and I kept this up till it became chronic.

And so I found it with many other little ailments, often inciting me to call for the elders, and when my faith was a little lacking, I would call a doctor, if I had the necessary currency, or a good credit, otherwise a pill, a powder, or a spoonful of some ill-tasting liquid, with the hope of alleviating my fanciful ailment. Why? Because I had gotten in the habit of having something the matter with me, and I wouldn't give it up for anything. My friends had all learned just what this particular ailment was, and knew what to inquire about, and no doubt many of them knew just about what answer they would get. But as I stop and think, I can see that really many times this petty ailment gave its owner no trouble whatever. I oftentimes would never think of it, unless I was asked about it, or had a chance to talk about it.

After a while my ear came in contact with a bug—if you will excuse the phrase, and I made a discovery, that that pet ailment was only a myth, and existed only in the mind of the person who had adopted it. So, with this glimmer of light, it might be well for me to watch myself for a few days and see if I did not complain a great many times when there was really little or nothing the matter with me; and especially, I would watch myself when a friend would greet me with a "How are you this morning," that I would be careful not to commence saying that I had a wretchedly bad cold, or I didn't sleep well last night, and "I'm feeling just miserable," and so on and so forth.

The glimmer increased its brilliancy. I began to see it was just a habit; a sort of second-nature trying to grow within me. But upon further self-examination, I found I didn't feel nearly as bad as my imaginings would incite my tongue to emphasize, for as soon as I had gotten through with my usual complaint I would rattle away talking about something else and become totally unmindful of any ache or ailment of any sort. The truth is, I really hadn't anything to complain of. It is just a habit, and a very bad habit, of always saying there is something the matter.

So we should watch ourselves, and if we find we have this habit, commence at once to break it. Say we are feeling well, just fine, and then draw in three or four long, deep breaths and say it again. I am not a Professor Ozone, nor am I advocating Christian Science, for the latter in my estimation is neither Christian nor scientific. But I do say this, that many times, if there is any little pain or ache lurking around, it will flee away in the face of your persistently denying its existence, and you will find yourself truly and wholly free from any ailment whatever.

So, beloved Saints, let us try and escape that fancy, and try the habit of saying we are well, and see if it is not a more pleasant and more wholesome habit than the habit of complaining about every little indisposition or temporary bad feeling.

May God help us to "walk in the light as he is in the light," that "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son" may cleanse "us from all sin." Such is the heartfelt wish of your brother in Christ,

ELMER KAYE PATTERSON.

THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH HOUSE.

To many of the HERALD readers it is not known that The United Order of Enoch has a house in Independence, near the Stone Church, for the care of travelers.

The United Order of Enoch House was opened to the public March 1, 1911, and since that time has cared for several hundred Saints, and others who have visited the central stake, temporarily, on pleasure or on business.

It is under the care and management of Brother and Sister Charles A. and Amy T. Gurwell, who receive no salary; but Sister Gurwell, who gives her whole time and labor to the work, is to receive her living, while Brother Gurwell receives his board only, with the use of one small bedroom and closet for their private apartments.

The house is located at 102 North River Boulevard, adjoining the church property, and is modern in arrangement, with hot water heat, and electric lights. The rates are $1.25 per day for transients, and $5 and $6 per week for regular boarders, with specially reduced rates for the traveling ministry and those sent there at the expense of the church.

No one is ever sent empty from the door, nor turned away at night, though they have no money. The headquarters of the order is here, and one large room is occupied as an office, where the trustees—twelve in number—meet. It is the aim of those in charge to divest the place of a hotel atmosphere as much as possible, and conduct it more as a home for the wayfarer. Family devotion is conducted in the parlor every morning, at which all are expected to be present; but nothing is compulsory, save orderly conduct.

Up to the present time this place has been self-sustaining only, and that at great personal sacrifice on the part of Sister Gurwell who now has two helpers. There are three floors, with twelve rooms, three halls, two bathrooms, and a large office and basement, to care for; Saints who have occasion to visit Independence will find a welcome at this place, and by patronizing it will be aiding the United Order of Enoch as well as advancing their own personal interests and comfort.

WE ARE SMITTEN BEFORE AI. WHO STOLE THE WEDGE?

And the men of Ai smote of them about thirty and six men: for they chased them from before the gate even unto Shebarim, and smote them in the going down: wherefore the hearts of the people melted, and became as water. And Joshua rent his clothes, and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the Lord until eventide, he and the elders of Israel, and put dust upon their heads. . . . Israel hath sinned, and they have also transgressed my covenant which I commanded them; for they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have stolen, and dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuff. Therefore the children of Israel could not stand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, because they were accursed: . . . Up, sanctify the people, and say, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, for thus saith the Lord God of Israel, There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel. . . . In the morning therefore ye shall be brought according to your tribes; and it shall be, that the tribe which the Lord taketh shall come according to the families thereof, and the family which the Lord shall take shall come by households; and the household which the Lord shall take shall come man by man. And it shall be, that he that is taken with the accursed thing shall be burnt with fire, . . . because he has transgressed the covenant of the Lord and because he hath wrought folly in Israel." —Joshua 7: 5-15.

ACHAN THE GUILTY MAN.

"And Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of Zebdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was taken."

CAUGHT WITH THE WEDGE IN HIS STUFF.

"And Achan answered Joshua, and said, Indeed I have sinned . . . and thus and thus have I done:

When I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them, and, behold, they are hid in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver is hid under it."

Thus reads a brief sketch of Israel's ancient history. Moral: Covetousness or theft by one or a few of Israel, brings evil results upon the body at large.

Brother Achan stole the wedge and three thousand men were repulsed as a result of it, before their enemies at Ai.

A LATER EVENT.

Out of a church membership of between sixty and seventy thousand souls (modern Israel) an army of about three hundred missionaries were sent up to contend with the enemies at present day Ai.

And behold the bishop, who is also spiritually called Joshua, said unto the three hundred missionaries, Go forth! Go forth and give battle to these uncircumcised Philistines who oppose the armies of the Lord. Then spake the three hundred and said, Behold we have none inheritance by which to sustain our families in our absence, and we fear lest while we should give our attention to the battle, that our wives and our little ones should famish for sustenance, or that they be found sore in need for housing and for garments with which to clothe themselves.

Then spake forth the bishop and said, Behold is it not written in the law that all the people shall contribute of the means with which the Lord hath blessed them, even for this very purpose? Go, therefore, doubting nothing, for the people also are in accord. And with many like words did he also exhort the people, and they said with one voice, Go up, and be it even as the law hath said; and we will contribute of our goods according to our several ability, that there be no lack. And so in fine, it came about that the three hundred men, with much assurance concerning the welfare of their wives and children, did go forth; and the year was (according to our reckoning) about A. D. 1912, and all the people said, Go forth.

Accordingly they did go forth, according to all that they had purposed in their hearts, so did they. And many of the people did remember their obligations which they had made, and did compute with exactness their offerings according to the law; but some began to be neglectful of this thing, and to look with covetous eyes upon the Babylonish garments and the shekels of silver which had become subject to their command. And the wives of the men who had gone forth to do battle, sent letters from their hand unto the bishop saying, Behold our need for victual and garmenting presseth sore upon us, and lo, saith these several mothers, We have not been able to secure aught from the Lord's storehouse for our relief, and beside this the price of every needful thing is much higher in all the realm than heretofore; and as for us, we are at a loss to know which way to turn, for woe is our portion; yet we dare not lament lest we be rebuked as complaining; but we truly certify you, to-wit that our distresses are as a canker to our souls, and to this burden are we committed; and for the lack of the plainest needful things are we straitened all the day long.

Then the bishop, who is also called Joshua, arose and said, We have not wherewith to meet this and can not tell when we will have, and he fell all along upon the earth and the elders also and put dust on their heads.

And the word went forth: We are smitten at Ai by the loss of about thirty and six; behold the accursed thing is hidden in some man's stuff.

Sanctify the people, let the search be made tribe by tribe, family by family, household by household, man by man.

SEARCH FOR THE WEDGE OF GOLD.

Another Achan is taken—Achan the son of Covet, the son of Pride, son of Me-first, of the tribe of Self, was found to have certain doubtful shekels in hiding among his stuff; and many of his kinsmen also had done likewise.

And Achan answered and said, Who shall be accused of stealing aught? True, I have laid up in store against such time as I myself may need; and that my children may inherit after me. True, there is a bar of gold in my tent from the spoils, and the silver shekels are hidden beneath, but I have gathered them with mine own hands: who then hath stolen?

Then answered Joshua and said, Thou art the man; did not the Lord straitly command saying: I require thy tithes and thine offerings, that there may be enough and to spare in mine house? Hast thou considered at all the wives and the children of the men who go up to Ai? Will a man rob God, yet ye have robbed me, all this Achan tribe. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse.

Will a man of Israel knowingly retain any accursed thing among his goods and thus hinder the progress of the body of which he is a member?

Some will lift up their eyes from the depths of torment over their mismanagement of this shekel question.

Can the Lord's blessing be upon the tent that covers a stolen wedge of gold? And behold the cry still goes forth in all the land: Let those who are at fault in this matter cast their gains at the feet of the bishop, who is also called Joshua, and let them make full confession, that wrath against us may be turned aside. Let them even confess saying: Inclosed, O Bishop, please find $—— which is wedge money (or silver shekels) hitherto concealed in my tent. I also certify, O Bishop, that this is a just and true reckoning of all my possessions according to the law, and upon the possessions which I now retain. I may ask a blessing with a clear conscience.

And if the above confession of concealing wedge money smites too greatly against the conscience, let the confessor merely say: "Having, O Bishop, the unfortunate case of brother Ananias and sister Sapphira in mind, I inclose $——, then sign the name Achan, and this will be an ample protection against an underestimate of the amount, as well as a comprehensive confession, without unnecessary strain upon a coincidence which may be delicate along certain lines, and feeble for lack of exercise.

Behold, we still stand before Ai to renew the battle, and if you who read this will stay our hands, DO IT NOW, and we shall thank God and take courage and charge again.

Yours at the front,

ONE OF THE THREE HUNDRED.

By name James Elmer; who is also called Yates.

DEATH OF Z. H. GURLEY.

The following clipping from a Canton, Missouri, paper, (name not shown), gives a brief resumé of the life and death of Z. H. Gurley, who was once prominently connected with the Reorganized Church, and, was a member of the Quorum of Twelve. He will be remembered by the veterans:

"In the passing of Mr. Gurley, Canton has lost a most estimable citizen and the cause of Christianity one of its most earnest advocates and followers. Ever modest and unassuming, few fully realize the true worth and ability of this noble man. Like the humble flower along life's pathway, he did not seek for worldly honors, though during his career he was called to fill many responsible positions of public life.

"Courteous and dignified in his intercourse with his fellow men, he was a companion to be desired, for his advice and counsel always freely given to those in need, was helpful and valuable. In life, an inspiration to all who knew him; in death, brave and thoughtful of those around him. A true aristocrat whose life was one of noble aims, of honor and worth, sincere devotion to home and family, his influence will live, although the soul has fled to its immortal home. The bereaved family have the deepest sympathy of many friends, near and far; but our loss is his eternal gain.

"The funeral was held at the Christian church Sunday afternoon and a large gathering of friends assembled to pay their last respects to the dead and sympathy to the family. The pastor, Elder Youtz, conducted the service, and a very eloquent eulogy and sermon pronounced by Doctor Pickworth, chaplain of the Iowa Reformatory, at Anamosa, Iowa, a former intimate friend of Mr. Gurley.

"The beautiful casket was almost hidden beneath the profusion of lovely flowers.

"The following beautiful tribute to her father was composed by Evelyn Gurley Kane and engraved on the silver plate of the casket:

"A great and noble life passed on Awaits the requiem of coming years.

"A male quartet rendered several appropriate songs, which were favorites of the deceased during his life.

"After the impressive service, the body was tenderly borne to beautiful Forest Grove Cemetery, to rest until the great resurrection morn.

"ZENAS HOVEY GURLEY

was born February 24, 1842, in Hancock County, Illinois, and died November 22, 1912. Aged 70 years, 8 months, and 28 days.

"He was the son of the Reverend Zenas H. Gurley, who was a cousin of Reverend Phineas Densmore Gurley, at one time chaplain of the United States Senate.

"Mr. Gurley moved to Iowa in the fall of 1870, and in the spring of 1872 he married Miss Grace Robinson, of Pleasanton, Decatur County, Iowa. To this union ten children were born, of whom seven survive.

"The gifts and personal influence of Mr. Gurley fitted him peculiarly for public life. He was a representative in the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth General Assemblies of Iowa, and also at a special session called by the governor. Three years of his life were spent in Washington and Utah investigating social conditions. Later he appeared before a Congressional committee in National Congress to furnish information thus obtained, upon the application of Utah to be admitted as a State. In 1898 he was appointed deputy warden of the Iowa State Institution at Anamosa. In all this work he acquitted himself faithfully and with honor, securing the confidence and good will of those he served. He resigned his position at Anamosa in 1904, and since then has made his home in Canton. In 1910, united with the Christian Church. He was also a Master Mason.

"His last illness was of few weeks' duration but of much suffering, which was borne with cultivated Christian gentleness and patience. When the inevitable faced him his one aim seems to have been to spare others unnecessary toil and to quiet their anxiety. He now rests from his labors and his works do follow him.

"In this world of sun and shade
Where Life and Death are equal kings,
All must be brave enough to meet,
What all before have met.

"The buds and blossoms fall with ripened fruit,
And bosomed in one grave by Mother Earth,
Time ends for all.

"But in that Land beyond the unknown seas
Where waters murmur of Eternal Life
We know our Dead are gone.

"The two sons, Zenas R., a prominent attorney of Armour, South Dakota, and Gladstone, of Denver, were unavoidably deprived of attending the funeral of their father. All of his daughters were present, viz:

"Mrs. Evelyn Gurley Kane, of Washington, District of Columbia, the noted dramatic reader; Mrs. Angeline M. Clay, superintendent of State Industrial Home for Girls, Chillicothe; Mrs. J. E. McNutt, of Quincy, accompanied by her husband and daughter Marjorie; Miss Zelma H. Gurley, teacher of history in Chillicothe high school, and Miss Grace W., of Canton."

THE "EXPONENT" FOR JANUARY, 1913.

There is a special communication from the General Superintendent about "Grading of schools"; while the editor writes on "The aim" attached to lesson work, and gives some observations on "Why we should grade." There is also a special notice to Sunday school superintendents.

The Teachers' Department contains valuable helps for the teachers of Sunday school lessons for January, February, and March, from each of the five editors of senior, intermediate, junior, primary, and beginner grades of The Gospel Quarterly. Some of these helps are illustrated. All mothers should read them.

The Normal Department.—Everybody would do well to read the excellent matter from the superintendent of the teacher training department of the Sunday school and Religio. Better teachers mean very much to the church.

The Library Department is ably conducted by the secretary of the Latter Day Saints' Library Commission. This issue, he gives a valuable list of good books for children of various age.

The Home Department is one in which every member of the church is interested. You haven't all of the church news until you have perused this; real missionary news. And there is something to wake up the sleepy or careless church member.

In the Correspondence Department you have more news,—church news, too, for the Sunday school has been defined by General Conference as a "department of church work and care." There is a good word from England, and letters from various parts of the United States. Besides all this, articles on the art of questioning, and other timely and interesting topics.

The Exponent has been enlarged to include the "Teachers' Department" without increase of cost to the reader. Every other teachers' quarterly that we know of costs from seventy-five cents to one dollar per year.

Price of Exponent, fifty cents per year in advance, for single copies. Club rates: Four to six copies to one address, forty cents each per year; seven or more copies to one address, thirty-five cents each per year.

The order for Sunday school supplies is not complete, until there is included a club order for Exponents, for the officers and teachers. The teacher must have it in order to make a success of teaching graded lessons. Read the January Exponent and you will understand.

G. J. WALLER FOR GOVERNOR.

Editors Herald: The following is from the editorial columns of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, November 6, 1912, published at Honolulu, Hawaii. Brother G. J. Waller, for many years a leading business man, well known as a public-spirited citizen and an energetic representative of the church, has been prominent in political circles in the Territory. He was the territorial member of the National Democratic Committee, and attended the Baltimore convention which nominated President-elect Wilson.

The items may be of interest to your readers, as showing the standing of Brother Waller among the people of Hawaii, also as indicating that his active work as an elder of the church has not militated against his popularity, but rather has contributed to his usefulness as a public man.

Brother Waller, if appointed, would make an excellent governor of the Territory. His appointment would result in an administration in which the sentiment of himself and coworkers, as stated in another column of the Advertiser, would be realized; viz: "We shall not be able to bring about the millennium, but at least we are going to do something for the people."

R. S. SALYARDS.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 1, 1912.

G. J. WALLER FOR GOVERNOR.

A democratic President means a democratic governor of Hawaii, sooner or later, and a democratic administration of territorial affairs. This being the case, Hawaii is fortunate in having as one most prominently mentioned in connection with the governorship a man of the character, training and business ability of Gilbert J. Waller. We understand that the leading Democrats of the Territory are back of Mr. Waller's avowed candidacy, while his appointment should be, and undoubtedly would be, pleasing to the business interests of the Territory. If Governor Frear is not to be allowed to serve out another full term at the Capitol, and it is hard to see how he could under the circumstances, The Advertiser would gladly welcome Mr. Waller as his successor. We believe he would serve not only with credit to his party but with credit and benefit to the Territory at large.

RECORD BREAKING CROWD.

The crowd in front of the Advertiser building during the time the returns were coming in, was the largest ever seen on any election day in Honolulu. It packed the street from curb to curb and extended to Bethel and across Fort Streets. It was a good-natured assembly and its sympathy was evidently with the winners.

The cartoons of local political celebrities, when thrown on the screen, were greeted with laughter and applause in most instances, but when the portrait of Gilbert J. Waller, labeled "Our Next Governor," appeared on the sheet, there was a wild burst of cheering, indicating that as far as the people are concerned Waller can have it, if he wants it.

The Prayer Union.

THE PRAYER UNION SUBJECTS FOR EACH THURSDAY.

"First Thursday. The church, its ministers and membership. That righteousness, love and zeal in the work, and spread of the gospel, may increase and to this end the Saints with one heart and mind bring their tithes and offerings into the Lord's storehouse. That God will continue to reveal his mind to his servants in the direction of the affairs of the church.

"Second Thursday. Our families. Prayer for the members of our families by name, and for the families of each other and those of the ministry. For the youth of the church in general.

"Third Thursday. Missions and Sunday school work, and the church publications. Also for the poor, the sick, and afflicted.

"Fourth Thursday. Zion, our country, its welfare and prosperity, and its speedy purification by the reception of the truth. That the scattered remnants be gathered in, and the kingdom of Christ be established.

"Fifth Thursday. The gathering of Israel to their land, and the restoration to them of the pure gospel in its fullness, and its acceptance by them to their everlasting peace.

"Note.—This last to be omitted when there are less than five Thursdays in a month; so that each month begins with the subject first on the list. Let no particular hour be appointed, but the entire day; so that each may take that portion of time best suited to her circumstances.

"The scripture readings will be given for each subject for every month."

Dear Sisters: I feel moved to have the monthly program of the Prayer Union republished, and for your encouragement give a review of the events that have taken place since its beginning about the year 1885.

The first week in each month was set apart for the church, the burden of the prayers being for the spread of the gospel, and that to this end the Saints might realize their duty in tithing. As Sister Burton remarks in a late letter, "What a great change in this respect from what it was then!"

We might say, too, what a change there has been among the heads of families in the church for the moral and spiritual instruction of their children, realizing their responsibility both for their own and for all the children in the church.

For the condition of missions at that time I refer you to the Doctrine and Covenants, section 118, where the Lord says: "Ye can not now prosecute missions in many foreign lands, nor is it expedient that the elders of the first quorums be sent out of the land of America until the work of the reorganization of my church be more fully established, and a greater unity of understanding between them be obtained."

This was given in 1882, and I think it was this condition in the church which inspired the prayers offered by the Union.

Then in 1887, two years after the Union began, the following was given: "Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may."

Was it simply our prayers brought this about? or was it not the fact that the Saints, through prayer and the scripture reading on the subject, were learning to understand their duty and the necessity of paying their tithing? When this was done it opened the door for mission work.

Next let us glance back to what the church publications were in 1885, the HERALD, and Zion's Hope which was but little more than a leaflet, and some doctrinal tracts comprised about all there was then. Now note the change in the Hope that has been steadily growing until it now compares favorably with any other child's paper published, surpassing many. Read over a catalogue of church publications with the church histories and various other books of interest for old and young, among them our highly prized Autumn Leaves, and last but not least the Journal of History. Did not the prayers offered arouse solicitude for the success of that for which we prayed, leading to the better support of the publishing department? For neither prayer alone nor faith alone accomplishes anything; but faith, prayer, and works do wonders.

When the Union began our Sunday schools were among the poorest of the land. Some of the branches had none at all. The schools had no quarterlies, no libraries, and few teachers were qualified for their work. Again we say, What a change! Since then there has come the Association, embracing at this writing something more than five hundred and fifty schools, with its own paper, The Sunday School Exponent.

The young of the church have also the Zion's Religious Literary Society, which is doing much in making them acquainted with the three books and their doctrines, as well as bringing out whatever of literary talent there may be among them. The church is justly proud of her auxiliary societies, including that which embraces those of the sisters.

The prayer of faith can not only heal the sick, but it can move mountains when we are interested in seeing and helping it move. I suppose that is what is meant by putting our shoulders to the wheel. We know our own limitations, however, hence our prayers.

The fourth, and the fifth week, when there was a fifth, were for the remnants or Indians, and for the restoration of the gospel to Israel in their own land. I think we are beginning to see both of these fulfilled. The Indians are accepting the gospel and we now have a mission at Jerusalem. This last is needing books and tracts in the various tongues spoken there. Let us see now if our prayers will be effectual in this need also. It has been promised that "all Israel shall be saved, as it is written there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn ungodliness away from Jacob."

In faith and prayer,

ELEANOR.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, November 15, 1912.

Editors Herald: I write to announce the death of our little native boy, Turatahi, on October 24. He began ailing three days before we landed in Papeete, in July, and never fully recovered afterward. Later, he was stricken with typhoid fever, which terminated in brain fever. He lingered from Sunday until Thursday, we thinking that every moment would be his last, when his parents arrived from Rairoa, an island about two hundred miles north of here. He died in about five hours after they arrived.

We had become very much attached to him, and miss him greatly. He was a week and a half past five years when he died.

Your brother in Christ.

C. H. LAKE.

SHABBONA, MICHIGAN, November 22, 1912.

Dear Herald Readers: The members of the Cass River Branch are all active at present. Our meetings are good and the members are striving to do their duty. We now have our branch organized with one elder, two priests, one teacher, and one deacon.

At our late conference, Brother Ervin Harriman was ordained an elder, and is active in his office. We pray that God will give him strength at all times. He is president of our branch, and is a good presiding officer. He lives some distance from the church, but attends the Sunday school and social services and talks for us, then in the evening one of the priests or the deacon divide the time, so we have preaching services every Sunday night. We also have prayer services on Wednesday evenings and Religio on Fridays. Our time is pretty well taken up.

This is truly a marvelous work and a wonder, and one for which we should all be very thankful. We should appreciate the fact that God is willing to reveal himself again in these the latter days. As Thanksgiving Day draws near we find we have much to be thankful for, and the greatest is the restoration of the gospel and the desire that God has planted within us to obey the same. We know there is joy and peace and contentment in serving our heavenly Master that the world can not give. When we look back to the past and remember when we were strangers to the cause of Christ, and how our heavenly Father protected us from harm and danger and brought us to the light of the glorious gospel, we truly are thankful and earnestly desire that we might set that example before the world that might be worthy of imitation, so the world will be compelled to acknowledge that the gospel has made better men and women of us, and that there is a reality to it all.

My mind goes out in sympathy to some of the young elders, and I appreciate what they have had to endure in the sore trials of their experiences. I think of our Brother R. D. Weaver, who has had hard trials, but bless the name of the Lord for strength and assistance that he gave the young brother, so now he is a shining light. I pray that he may ever be faithful. May we all strive to live so that when our work is ended we may hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done," is the prayer of

Your brother,

Editors Herald: I would like to know if there are any Saints in Port Arthur, Texas. If so, please mail me their addresses, as my daughter and son-in-law have recently moved there.

SISTER ELIZABETH MILLER.

VALENTINE, NEBRASKA, December 3, 1912.

Editors Herald: Will say that I spend many pleasant hours reading church publications, as I am one of the isolated ones; only hear the gospel preached when I go many miles to hear it. I have Evans's book of sermons, which is surely food for the hungry. I want to send the HERALD notice of the death of my son-in-law, George Corbin.

JULIA C. SHEPARD.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, November 26, 1912.

Dear Herald: A number of my friends at Jonesport, Maine, asked that I write a letter for publication in the HERALD, when I had been here for about a year or so. Thinking it about time, I will grant their request.

I left my old home at Jonesport, Maine, the latter part of September, 1911, coming to Kirtland, where I have resided since. This is a fine country. While the winters are extremely cold, the summers are delightful. The climate is more desirable than in the East.

Kirtland is a beautiful place; it is often called "Kirtland, the beautiful," by those who have had the privilege of visiting this historical spot. In summer it is most lovely; the carefully laid off grounds and beautiful shade trees render it one of the "playgrounds of the world."

The temple, a magnificent historical structure, though erected eighty-two years ago, having passed through tests of circumstances of past years, when the Saints were so severely persecuted and afflicted, yet stands to-day in splendid repair, as the only building upon earth built by divine command, and a witness of the restoration of the gospel in its purity and fullness.

The temple is one of the many attractions that draw hundreds of sightseers here each year, from all parts of the world. There is a hallowed influence felt here, not experienced elsewhere. All true Saints of God who come feel to remain, and say it is with many regrets that they depart. This is another witness that historical Kirtland is a holy place, and that Israel's God will purge it, one day, of all that is impure and that molests or makes afraid, and the faithful shall possess it and dwell therein.

I like the country, have improved in health, and have gained much spiritual strength as well.

The reunion held here in August of this year was a great spiritual feast, not only to me, but to all who attended. I enjoyed the reunion much. I had not been so very well for a while before the reunion, and feared I would not be able to attend, but thanks be given my heavenly Father, who gave me strength to get out to the meetings. I attended most all, and my heart was made to rejoice many times because of the Lord remembering his people and speaking unto them, admonishing them to come up higher and promising greater blessing if Israel would be faithful.

I have been terribly afflicted physically for a number of years and my body tortured with pain, which seems at times unbearable, yet the Lord has often blessed me.

The gospel is dear to me; through it I have a hope that reaches within the veil; if it were not for this hope we would sink in despair in the hour of trial and affliction. Yet our suffering is only of time, and shall, one sweet day, be abolished. Then, if faithful, our rest will be glorious in the paradise of God.

It is my desire to live my remaining days in the service of the Lord and be faithful, that I may be counted worthy of eternal life, and be permitted to enter through the gates into the city.

Your sister in Christ,

MARY E. LAMSON.

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, November 24, 1912.

Dear Herald: In the HERALD for November 6, 1912, on page 1071 is an article, "Who can be saved?" by a brother who sets forth the idea that only "those who obey the gospel, and no others" can be saved; or, as I understand him, only those who obey the law of a celestial kingdom will be saved. The "majority of the human race is not saved,"—will not be.

On the contrary, I believe only those "who know God's power," are "overcome," and "deny the truth," will not be saved—they only will not be saved. I gather the above from the following quotation:

"And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him; who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment; to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

To me it seems evident from this that some will be saved besides those who reach the celestial glory.

Yours for the truth,

LEONARD S. RHODES.

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI, November 21, 1912.

Editors Herald: I write to let the many readers of the HERALD know that I am still in the faith, and by the help of God, I will hold out faithfully to the end, by watching and praying; so when the Master comes I can meet him with joy.

I have read the HERALD for more than twenty years and can not get along without it.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. MARY HAWKINS.

JOY, FLORIDA, November 23, 1912.

Dear Herald: I will only tell you of some of the things that have happened. We have been having some preaching here by Brother J. W. Dubose. He aroused some interest. None have obeyed as yet, but I think they will if we can have another missionary some time soon, before they forget what they have heard.

Brother Dubose worked as faithfully here as anyone could. He tried to show them the gospel. Some were interested enough to buy some copies of the Book of Mormon and other books and tracts. This is a new place and there are only ten Saints here. We are not doing much, as we are so weak in the faith. It is about twelve miles to a branch, which is too far to be of much good to us.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may hold out faithfully to the end and not lose what we have of the gospel, for I believe it is the true work.

LEE POWELL.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, November 26, 1912.

Editors Herald: I will write of an experience, or an answer to prayer had on July 21, 1911. My sister, who lives near Calhoun, Missouri, wrote me a letter stating they had a dreadful drouth in that part of the country. They had had scarcely any rain from April 1, 1911, till July 21, 1911. The fruit was all drying and falling from the trees; the creek was nearly dried up; crops, grass, and gardens were all drying up, and those who had feed were feeding it to their stock. She stated that she felt impressed by the Spirit to write to me, to ask me to pray to the Lord to send rain.

When I received the letter and read it, I felt the Spirit in the reading. I prayed earnestly for the Lord to send them a good rain in the near future in the State of Missouri, and throughout all the country. I wrote to my sister, telling her I knew the Lord would send the rain, but before she received the letter, the rain came and soaked the ground and filled the creek half bank full. It was on the 26th that I prayed and on the 28th the rain came. I read of hard rains throughout the country at the same time. The Ohio River was raised at that time so the boatmen could float their fleets and boats and go on with their work.

I know the Lord heard and answered prayer, and sent the rain. The sister who wrote, Mrs. N. J. Rolston, also knew the rain was sent in answer to prayer.

Experiences like this strengthen our faith and confidence in the good Father, who hears the prayers of his children when they come to him in faith believing.

Extract from Letter.

Bishop Evans writes from Toronto on December 2 as follows: "The Princess Theater meetings are still packed; baptized two men Sunday, one a Roman Catholic; fifty-six baptized this year and more coming most every week till time for conference, when we close."

News from Missions

Ogden, Utah.

Upon this day set apart by the Nation for a day of thanksgiving and praise, we desire to express ourselves as being appreciative of the many blessings that have been granted us,—it is with solemnity that we look to the Author of life this day and offer the feeble tribute of thanksgiving, recognizing as we do that all we are, or ever expect to be in the way of good, is as a result of his divine grace, and that after all our comforts have been supplied, and throughout the Nation a bounteous crop has been harvested, it becomes us to offer unto him the best we have to offer—a life of thanksgiving.

Personally the Christ life is very beautiful, and as I view the past, and begin to count my many blessings, and see what God hath done for me in the last decade, I can not help but admire him the more, and while returning to him praise and thanksgiving for all his benefits, I feel to further consecrate my life to the service of humanity, those who are less fortunate than I am, that by the assistance given them glory may be accorded him who has dealt so mercifully and bountifully with his unworthy servant.

My faith in God and in his goodness is unwavering: during the last ten years of service I have learned to trust him,—he has been to me an ever present helper in every time of need, and a strong tower in the hour of adversity; he has enabled me to bless others because he has been so wonderfully kind, in that he has not failed me, but has ever given more than I deserved.

As a result of his goodness, my life has been drawn towards him, my hope in his promises is strengthened, my knowledge and understanding of his truth are augmented day by day, and ability is gradually given me to know how to reach and deal with humanity, and draw out the best in them, and enable them to see in a measure the glory of Christ Jesus our Lord.

I would not be doing my whole duty if I did not say that apart from him there would be no life, for he is the center of my hope and my aspiration, and the possibility of becoming like unto the stainless Christ in loving service is, to say the least, an incentive to work; it creates a desire within one for the beautiful, the pure, and the true. Every time my vision is turned towards him my thoughts are directed upward, and every time his method and manner of service is employed the soul is made better; and seeing him as I do, as the All in All, the author and the finisher of our life-character, I desire to give expression to his matchless love.

And while we are revering God for his graces, a degree of thanks is due our fellow man; and I desire to here express appreciation and thanksgiving to our Willing Helpers, (Ladies' Aid), of Ogden, for their untiring effort and loving service in providing for us a temporary abiding place, wherein with wife and children we are comfortably located, the good sisters can do things, they have the grace of knowing how, for they have not only provided a place for us, but are ever ready to distribute freely the blessings of good cheer, as well as the more substantial things when needed. For example, while the "preacher" was away from home during the afternoon yesterday, in pursuit of duty, the good sisters came to call on his devoted wife and brought her everything that was needed to provide a delicious and wholesome dinner for Thanksgiving; and, best of all, it came in a time when most needed; a time when the pocketbook was empty, and the pantry scantily supplied with victuals. May he who sees the sparrow's fall, and hears the widow's cry, return unto them ten fold for their loving service, in peace, blessings, and assurance of divine acceptance.

We are optimistic, and hope to see yet a brighter day for the gospel work in the city of Ogden. To this end we will labor, and to this end will we invoke the divine light and wisdom.

Gratefully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Illinois.

Inclosed is a clipping, and the paper I read at the meeting indicated by the clipping. Through the courtesy of the chairman of the Ministerial Association of Dekalb County, Illinois, J. L. Cooper and I were invited to be present and take part in the discussion of Mormonism, which was the theme arranged for the occasion. Reverend Doctor Eldridge led off with a paper on "The origin of Mormonism." It was a rehash of the meanest things that prejudiced writers had penned against the church in its early history. Reverend Doctor Horn's paper was of a similar kind. We were kindly given precedence in the discussion by the association, doubtless on the ground that we were attacked. Reverend Doctor Stockwell, of Sycamore, Illinois, said that the illumination of Mormonism from a Latter Day Saint viewpoint had been a revelation to him. They tendered us a vote of thanks, not only for the illumination of the subject from our viewpoint, but for the kindly, Christian manner and spirit they said we had shown during the discussion. We certainly felt as deeply our appreciation of the unstinted kindness, fairness, and urbane treatment the association accorded to us.

In such assemblies there must always be little incidents that amuse as well as instruct. Reverend Doctor Eldridge suggested that, perhaps, my paper I had read had the orthodox idea of future retribution overdrawn. Reverend Ashworth said, "It is so written in your creeds." Eldridge is a Baptist and Ashworth a Universalist.

Illinois, under a weak executive, once treated the Saints very unfairly; it would seem rather paradoxical now if the preachers of our great State over here would lead the rest of the world in their kindness and toleration toward our brand of Latter Day Saintism. Our brand is all right, as seen in contradistinction to Utah Mormonism.

In gospel bonds,

Conference Minutes.

FREMONT.—District conference met in business session at Thurman, Iowa, October 26, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. T. A. Hougas and J. W. Wight were chosen to preside over the conference. Mamie Page was chosen chorister, with power to choose assistants. The order of meeting, appointing of speakers, and time for adjournment was left in the hands of the presiding officers. Branches reporting were: Hamburg, 64; Henderson, 84; Thurman, 204; Tabor, 64; Shenandoah, 117; Riverton, 50; Bartlett, 40; showing a net gain of twelve for the quarter. Ministerial reports were received: High Priest T. A. Hougas. Elders W. E. Haden, James Comstock, C. M. Roberts, N. L. Mortimore, Frank Becksted, M. W. Gaylord, J. C. Moore. Priests L. C. Donaldson, James Claiborn, John Huston, James Vinnerd, J. E. Claiborn, J. R. Wight, C. W. Forney. Teachers R. E. Pratt, D. M. Ettleman, Deacon S. S. Clark. The time and place for holding next conference was left in the hands of the district president. Question: Has a priest the right to act as branch president, when there is an elder in the branch? Answered by J. W. Wight: Yes; they have the right, but do not think it is wisdom to do so where there is an elder in good standing. Report of committee of investigation in Keystone Branch was presented and read: "The committee appointed to investigate conditions pertaining to the Keystone Branch report that they have conferred with the president and members of the branch and believe that the best interest of the work will be conserved by disorganizing said branch. We therefore recommend that the branch be disorganized and that the members thereof be given letters of removal to the branches nearest to them." Signed by W. E. Haden, for the committee. The president and secretary of the district were then authorized, by vote, to grant letters of removal to members of that branch. Bishop's agent, Lorena Leeka, reported: From January 1, 1912, receipts to date, $1,372.90; expenditures, $1,346; balance on hand, $26.90. The recommendation for the ordination of John Huston to the office of an elder was approved and the ordination ordered provided for. The recommendation for the ordination of J. E. Claiborn to the office of an elder was discussed, and the question asked, Is an elder called of God; and if so, through what source is he called of God? Answered by J. W. Wight, by reference to Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14. By vote the ordination was deferred until next conference. The following resolution was offered; "Resolved, That we believe the best interests of the work will be furthered by holding annual reunions within our own territory, and continuing the Southwestern Iowa Reunion Association; and, whereas, the Southern Nebraska District desire to become a part of the Southwestern Iowa Reunion Association, and, whereas, said district have already made preparations for a reunion in 1913, resolved further, That we favor dispensing with our reunion for 1913, and joining with the Saints of Nebraska City for 1913." This resolution was adopted. Preaching at 7.30 by J. W. Wight. Prayer service Sunday morning at 8.30. At this service John Huston was ordained to the office of elder by J. W. Wight and T. A. Hougas. Sunday school at 9.45, in charge of local superintendent, C. W. Forney. Preaching at 11, 2.30 and 7.30 by J. W. Wight. C. W. Forney, secretary.

R. W. FARRELL.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, 29 Jaques Street.

Died.

ASHCRAFT.—William Ray Ashcraft, born March 3, 1912; passed from earth life November 29, 1912. He leaves father, mother, and two brothers to mourn. Funeral sermon by J. C. Foss, at the parents' residence in Independence, Missouri.

BRAFFETT.—Elizabeth Braffett, late of North Platte, Nebraska, but for two weeks at Liberty Home, born May 15, 1855, at Farmington Utah, baptized October 21, 1886, at North Platte, Nebraska, by R. C. B. Elvin, and confirmed by the same. She came to Liberty Home November 14, and on Thanksgiving Day walked in to attend the service, and when only a block from the church, was paralyzed. She was taken to the home of R. M. Elvin, where she passed away at 1 p. m. Funeral service at Liberty Home, November 29, in charge of John Smith, sermon by Robert M. Elvin, from the text: "He giveth his beloved rest." Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

VICKREY.—Elder Franklin Vickrey was born at Lancaster, South Carolina, September 25, 1823; became a member of the church in 1867; baptized at Butler Springs, Alabama, by E. W. Cato, and confirmed by E. W. Cato and W. J. Booker; ordained an elder in 1868, by T. H. Waddell; departed this life May 29, 1912, at the age of 88 years, 8 months, 4 days. He leaves six sons and three daughters. Funeral services in the Saints' church at Steadham, Alabama, by F. M. Slover, November 24, 1912. Brother Vickrey enjoyed excellent health during his long stay on earth, and was cheerful and happy, although he had to bear some persecution for the gospel's sake. We feel that his rest is sweet.

CORBIN.—George A. Corbin was born at Fruitland, Iowa, September 15, 1869; died October 27, 1912; was baptized by D. M. Rudd at Hay Springs, Nebraska, in 1896; married to Hattie Shepard January 26, 1897; funeral at the Methodist church by Methodist minister.

BAILEY.—Velma Alberta, daughter of Bert and Gertie Bailey, died October 30, 1912, at the home of her parents, near Eldorado Springs, Missouri; stricken with cerebro-spinal fever. In spite of the best of medical attention she died after an illness of four days. She was administered to several times with the blessing of relief granted for some time, but it seemed to be the Father's will that she should pass. Service was held at the home of her grandparents, Brother and Sister Budd, sermon by W. E. Reynolds, assisted by Abner Lloyd. Burial in the city cemetery, by the side of her little brother who had preceded her two years ago last June, who had reached to within two days of the same age and was stricken with the same disease. The parents and one brother mourn their double loss, and trust the Father, knowing he doeth all things well and will assist them to live so they will be worthy of meeting their loved ones in the world to come.

Secret of a Newspaper's Power.

An independent and ably edited newspaper that commands a great circulation is probably the most potent influence for good in the United States to-day.

The power for the better things in public affairs and policies, for instance, wielded by such a newspaper as The Chicago Record-Herald can scarcely be exaggerated, and much of that strength comes in the case of this leading Chicago daily from the fact that it is absolutely independent, fearless and fair. It is not the mouthpiece of any interest except that of the public. Here is the true secret of the power of the press. No newspaper has very much real power over men and events unless it is known to be standing steadfastly and sanely for the public good—for the welfare of the community and Nation—for public honesty and a square deal, whatever happens.

The Chicago Record-Herald champions the cause of the good, the clean, the beneficial in every matter of city, state or national moment. It is the knowledge on the part of its readers that it cares not whom it hits or what enemies it makes, so long as it is battling for the public good, which gives to The Record-Herald most of the wide influence it wields. This public-spirited editorial policy also permeates its news and critical columns. The most complete and impartial reports of the doings of both great political parties to be found anywhere, year in and year out, will be found in The Chicago Record-Herald.

A Genuine Service.

"I believe," says an old subscriber, "that every time The Youth's Companion enters a home it does that home a genuine service." That describes the purpose of the publishers exactly. The paper is not filled with mischievous or idle thoughts to fill an idle hour. It provides healthy pastime, recreation that builds up. It is to the minds of eager and impressionable young people what sound athletics are to their bodies.

At a cost of less than four cents a week The Youth's Companion opens the door to a company of the most distinguished men and women in America and Europe. Whether they are revealing the latest discoveries in science, or describing great industrial achievements, or telling of their wanderings in strange corners of the world, or feeding the imagination with rare stories, they are giving Companion readers the best of themselves.

Seven serials at least will be published by The Companion in 1913, and nearly 200 other complete stories, in addition to some 50 special contributions, and a treasure-box of sketches, anecdotes, expert advice as to athletic sports, ideas for handy devices around the house, and so forth—long hours of companionship with the wise, the adventurous and the entertaining. Announcement for 1913 will be sent with sample copies of the paper to, any address on request.

Every new subscriber who sends $2 for the fifty-two weekly issues of 1913 will receive as a gift The Companion Window Transparency and Calendar for 1913, the most exquisite novelty ever offered to Companion readers; also, all the issues of The Companion for the remaining weeks of 1912, free.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE SUBSCRIPTION AGENCY

We have started a general subscription agency in connection with the Herald Publishing House.

We kindly ask the Saints and friends everywhere to send us their subscriptions for any paper.

We earnestly desire to get our publishing house out of debt. You can aid us and it will not cost you a cent. Every subscription you send us means a few cents made by the Herald Publishing House. Somebody makes this profit when you subscribe for a paper or magazine, or when you purchase a book.

We want you to get in the habit of giving all these orders to your own publishing house. This is where we can cooperate, and the profits made go to every one of us. It will help us to meet our obligations. And don't forget that these obligations of the Herald Publishing House are ours,—the whole church.

No matter what your profession or business is, we can supply you with your needed reading. Just send us your remittance, give the name of your journal, or magazine, or book, with address of the publishers, if you have it, and we will take care of the rest.

All inquiries cheerfully answered.

Don't forget that all subscription orders must be accompanied with the cash.

VOLUME 59

LAMONI, IOWA, DECEMBER 18, 1912

NUMBER 51

Editorial

"THE STEPS OF A GOOD MAN ARE ORDERED BY THE LORD."

If this statement is susceptible of proof it will be only in the sense that the good man measures his steps by the precepts and teachings of the Lord. We can not conclude that the Lord leads the good man as a mother leads her child learning to walk, supporting it and encouraging it. If we are to judge from the walk and conversation of some men refusing to be good, we must conclude either that the Lord is careless in his leading or directing, or the good man leans so heavily upon the hand of the Lord as to cause Him some trouble in keeping balance. We conclude therefore that the saying is exemplified in its completeness where the individual is conversant with the sayings of the Lord and governs himself accordingly.

By letter we learn that Elder Levi Graybill, a long time resident of western Iowa, is dead. This called to our mind that Brother Graybill was reputed to be the oldest living member of the church known to the Reorganization. He was born somewhere about 1815, and joined the church at an early day, in the lifetime of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. He has always been a staunch defender of the faith, an upright man, and one who as far as we know, from those who surrounded him, had always tried to walk in wisdom's ways as a man. We had hoped that Brother Graybill would receive strength to lengthen his days until he should pass the century mark; but it was not to be.

The items of an obituary character will appear elsewhere in the HERALD in due time. There are still a few men living who are passing up towards the ninetieth birthday; among them Brother Charles Derry, of Woodbine, Iowa; Brother William Gibson, of San Bernardino, California; now in his ninety-sixth year; Brother Lewis Gaulter, of Lamoni, Iowa, also in his ninety-sixth year. There may be others, but we do not remember their names. The other day, while engaged in our daily occupation, there floated in upon us Brother Delaney Flanders, who will be eighty-one in February, while we follow him on November 6, the same-year the same age. He was strong in his walk, bright in his conversation, sees and hears well, and his hair is still brown, his conversation is cheery, and we were pleased to meet him.

We learn by letter from Elder R. S. Salyards that Elder Zenos H. Gurley, jr., who was at one time a member of the church and an elder belonging to the Quorum of Twelve, has passed over to the other side, at his home at or near Canton, in the northeast corner of the State of Missouri.

It is with regret that we hear of the death of Elder Gurley. His father, Zenos H. Gurley, sr., was a Seventy in the days of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who associated with Josiah Ells was appointed to meet in discussion at Quincy, Illinois, in the winter or spring of 1839 the celebrated Doctor Newman, at that time one of the greatest religious celebrities of the American pulpit. It is needless for us to state that the reverend doctor met defeat at the hands of these two then comparatively young men in a discussion of the issue joined in the agreement.

Elder Gurley, jr., became a member of the church in his early manhood and was ordained by call and vote to the office of elder and subsequently placed in the Quorum of Twelve by the voice of revelation. He was a man of pleasant demeanor, of poetic temperament, quite well versed in history, and an able exponent and defender of the faith as he understood it. He wrought excellently for a number of years, when for reasons which he deemed good, he with his mother, Margaret Gurley, his brother, Edwin Gurley, and family, and Elder Jason W. Briggs, withdrew from the church, which withdrawal separated him from the church, both as an active minister and as a member. His mother subsequently returned and renewed her allegiance to the faith, but neither he nor his brother, Edwin, so far as we know, ever acknowledged any desire to do so.

We understand that Elder Gurley leaves two sons and two daughters; one son named for himself, and another after Gladstone, England's grand old man, prime minister under Queen Victoria. We understand that these young men are young men of prominence and are doing well in their chosen professions.

It has been urged by some that the withdrawal of these parties under the circumstances was contrary to church rule. This we do not present with any idea of palliating any wrong the church may have done, if the action was irregular, for it must be conceded by all that as men are largely the arbiters of their own hereafter, they must choose their own confession of faith and abide the consequences thereof.

From personal acquaintance we knew Brother Gurley to be a good, companionable man, an able advocate of what he thought to be the truth, and that there was always in the family from first to last an especial sense of high honor that made them courageous in defense of what they believed to be true and honest in their dealing with their fellow men. And we certainly feel willing to grant this credit to those who may have been with us and have left us under similar circumstances. Credit to whom credit is due, should be the motto of every man who holds himself to be honest in his profession of belief.

Obituary items taken from a Canton, Missouri, paper were published in our General Interest columns last week.

CHANGE OF SENTIMENT.

We lay before the readers of the HERALD a clipping from the Kansas City Journal, for Wednesday, November 6, 1912. We do this as it will call to the mind of the Saints, particularly the eldership, the prophetic statement concerning the rising of Missouri from the condition of semibarbarism in which it seemed plunged by reason of persecution of a large number of its inhabitants and their being deprived of the liberty which they were entitled to. We are much pleased to note this evidence of the improved condition of public opinion in Clay County, and also to emphasize what is said in this splendid notice appearing in the Journal, the falling away of prejudice and the coming to the front of the bright realization that the Flag represents a united country over which a division may have passed, but the scars of the conflict are disappearing by the passage of time and the idea spread by the citizens that should ever prevail among the inhabitants of a common country.

WAR AND LIBERTY.

The tenacity with which sentiment clings to the past is aptly illustrated in the astounding statement that for the first time since the Civil War the Stars and Stripes floated over the Clay County courthouse at Liberty this week. The last United States Flag to fly over the edifice, it is stated, was that placed there by the Union troops in the war, when the Confederate flag was taken down. The other day, under the auspices of the United Confederate Veterans the national banner was "raised" with elaborate ceremonies, and so far as Clay County and Liberty are concerned the war may be regarded as an officially closed incident.

Fifty years after the great civil struggle may seem to most people a rather late date for the Flag of a supposedly united country to fly from the flagstaff of a county courthouse. The delay in this official acceptance of the verdict of the contest is not, of course, to be construed as any evidence of a refusal to accept heretofore the result of the Civil War. It does not mean that the good people of Clay County and of Liberty are so violently devoted to the cause of the long dead Confederacy as to be unable to endure the spectacle of the American Flag flying from their courthouse. It does not mean that they have considered themselves all these years beyond the pale of American citizenship, or that they would have failed in any of the duties of unity and patriotism if subjected to the test. It does not mean that the Flag that has been so tardily raised above the heads of the community has not been regarded in good faith and loyalty as the standard of a Nation no longer divided.

But all the same and nevertheless and notwithstanding, it is gratifying to know that the technicalities have been satisfactorily settled, all lingering objections to the Flag finally removed and the starry banner, raised by once hostile hands, to float henceforth and for ever over the citadel of the citizenship and justice of Clay County and Liberty. There may even be found some old-fashioned enough to believe that such action should have been taken much earlier. But let everybody in the neighborhood sing "The Star Spangled Banner" and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee"—including the people of a community that bears such splendid names as "Liberty" and that great American and patriot, Henry Clay.

SAINTS' HERALD ANNOUNCEMENT FOR 1913.

"When larger, better 'Heralds' we are reading."

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

One of the special features of the SAINTS' HERALD for 1913 will be a thorough discussion of the important subject, "Duties of Officers."

Paul says: "Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." When all the members of the body are healthy, efficient, and in place, the body can perform its work. If certain members are diseased, inefficient, or out of their place, the result is painful and disastrous. Therefore God has said that every man should learn his own place and keep it; learn his own duty and do it.

The editorial department will lead out on this subject with four editorials by Elbert A. Smith: 1. "The duties of the presiding elder." 2. "The duties of the priest." 3. "The duties of the teacher." 4. "The duties of the deacon."

In order that these subjects may be viewed from various angles, and wisdom be gleaned from the experience of the experienced, these will be followed by original articles as follows:

"The duty of the priest," John Smith, president Lamoni Stake.

"Practical work in the priest's office," by R. T. Cooper, Los Angeles, and George Wixom, of San Bernardino, California.

"The duty of the teacher," by George E. Harrington, president of the Independence Stake.

"Suggestions to teachers," by Charles Fry, author of the very able series of 1912, on "Dealing with the erring."

"The duty of the deacon," reprinted from the editorial by President Joseph Smith, 1871.

"Suggestions to deacons," by Herbert L. Barto and Charles F. Church, both of the Lamoni congregation, and of long experience in the work of the deacon.

THE PASTOR AND HIS FLOCK.

A symposium on "the branch president," will deal with the relationship of the presiding elder to his people, as a pastor, and his relationship to the other branch officers under his presidency. To this we have invited the following brethren to contribute:

Fred Adam, of Los Angeles; Russell Archibald, of Saint Louis; Myron H. Bond, of Independence; Vinton M. Goodrich, of Saint Joseph; George E. Harrington, of Independence, Missouri; George P. Lambert, of Rock Creek, Illinois; George S. Lincoln, of San Francisco; W. A. McDowell, of Bristol, Illinois; R. S. Salyards, of Lamoni; Walter W. Smith, of Philadelphia; and John M. Terry, of Oakland.

These, with possibly one or two exceptions, are high priests, and all are experienced and successful ministers. Their actual experience as pastors fits them to deal with this important subject.

GENERAL OFFICERS.

These articles will be followed by articles on the duties of General Officers:

"The apostle," by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths.

"The seventy," by James McKiernan, of the Seven Presidents of Seventy.

"The high priest," by J. A. Tanner, president of High Priests' Quorum.

"The bishop," by Bishop Joseph Roberts and Bishop Richard Bullard.

"The patriarch," by Patriarch Joseph R. Lambert.

METHODS AND TACTICS.

The old Jerusalem gospel never changes. But methods of presenting it must vary to an extent from generation to generation, as well as in different localities. Different men and different situations must be approached differently. Each age has its peculiar spirit. Paul recognized the value of "tactics," and always approached a situation at the right angle, and mastered it. He was all things to all men that he might win some to Christ.

There is always a right way and a wrong way to do a thing. Paul, master missionary, recognized the value of "good methods," and exhorted the ministry to become workmen that need not be ashamed.

In our series on "Methods and Tactics," for the year 1913, we have assigned the following topics to competent writers:

"The summer vacation bible school as an aid in making converts."

"How can the church, through branch and district officers, keep in touch with Religio and Sunday school work?"

"Advertising as carried on in Canada."

"The value of tent work."

"To what extent may notes be used in preaching?"

"Debates: Are they profitable? When should we encourage them? What form of proposition should be drafted? Who are qualified to debate? General suggestions."

"Reports; necessity of reporting to those in charge; suggestions."

"New openings: Their value. In making them should we present the Book of Mormon at the start? Should we deny polygamy before we are accused of it? Are we pushing the work of making new openings as we should? General suggestions."

"Tracting; value, methods, etc."

"Securing publicity for our work."

"Getting into the newspapers."

"How to conduct a prayer meeting."

"How to conduct a business meeting."

"Utilizing anniversaries and special days in branch and district work."

"The 'Rota Plan' as undertaken in Great Britain."

"How can we reach the people?"

"Plan of distributing speakers for Sunday in the Independence Stake."

"Revivals; are they profitable? Methods, etc."

THE WORK OF JOSEPH SMITH.

While undue importance must not be attached to Joseph Smith, as a man, yet his work and life were closely connected with the rise of the church in these last days and the restoration of the gospel. God chose him to be the chief instrument in that work. For that choice we make no apology.

We have solicited articles to form a series or a Magazine Number on the subject of the work of Joseph Smith the Martyr, as follows:

"Joseph Smith; his character," by W. J. Haworth.

"Joseph Smith; his prophecies," by F. M. Cooper.

"Joseph Smith; his influence on modern religious thought," by Mark H. Siegfried.

"Joseph Smith; his reaffirmation of the eternal verities," by Charles Crumley.

"Character sketches of Joseph Smith," by various authors and students of phrenology and character.

"Joseph Smith; his attitude toward property and its distribution and uses," by Joseph Roberts.

This series will be introduced by an editorial from the pen of Elbert A. Smith, on "The first visions of Joseph Smith, and the great big ideas that grew out of them and took shape in his church work."

MAGAZINE NUMBERS.

The Magazine Numbers of the HERALD add variety and interest to the volume for the year. These are richly illustrated and printed on good paper, and are well filled with excellent articles.

The latest of these, devoted to "Our Church Courts" was of such educational value that many of our readers considered it alone worth the subscription price for the year.

Two or more of these Magazine Numbers are issued each year. The next one will probably be devoted to "Joseph's land," with a leading editorial on "America in prophecy."

REGULAR FEATURES.

The regular features of the SAINTS' HERALD must not be forgotten. It is the official organ of the church, founded in 1860. It contains spiritual editorials devoted to live topics; no dry as dust dissertations that weary the flesh and make people tired of religion.

Each number contains letters from Saints the world over. There are also original articles of great merit. And the "News from Missions" department brings you in touch with the work in various parts of the world—Canada, Australia, England, Germany, the South Sea Islands, the United States, all are represented here.

"SAINTS' HERALD" A FAIR AND FEARLESS ORGAN.

The editors of the HERALD endeavor to be just and fearless in their treatment of men and principles. They have been criticized for admitting articles on both sides of certain questions. But they hold that an intelligent opinion can not be reached when only one side has been heard. Saints should be intelligent. The editors are confident that the exact truth will harm no one.

Yet they realize, too, that some topics are not profitable or proper subjects for discussion in a religious publication. And though disposed to allow a great deal of latitude they endeavor to draw the inevitable line where it should justly fall. And they have stood for affirmative argument and have excluded controversy and personality.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

THE SAINTS' HERALD does not confine itself to the discussion of theological questions. Religion can not be intelligently discussed to-day apart from social and economic questions. Religion must be interpreted in man's relation to his fellow man, as well to his God.

Consequently the editors endeavor to take a survey of social and economic tendencies and conditions; and to promote social and economic and industrial justice and equality in Zion, along gospel lines; for the editors have the utmost confidence that in the gospel is found the solution of present day problems. The practical application of the teachings of Jesus to present human needs is that for which the HERALD stands.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.

Every Latter Day Saint should be a reader of the SAINTS' HERALD. Subscribe now and secure the entire volume for 1913.

The subscription price is only $1.50 per year. Considering the cost of production and the quality of paper this is exceedingly cheap. Yet we do not say, How cheap, but, How good!

THE SAINTS' HERALD is published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It stands for the restored gospel in all its power, both spiritual and temporal, and for the integrity of the home and the purity of personal character.

"A pleasant outing in Australia," by Elder E. F. Robertson, illustrated with original photos of Australian scenery.

"The log of the pikers," by the Judge. Being "the only true and authentic history of a three weeks' canoe trip." The story of an outing on the beautiful and historic Delaware River. Illustrated with beautiful views from this famous river.

"Reminiscences of Egypt," by Sister F. G. Pitt, with illustrations of the pyramids and the Sphinx.

STRAIGHT TALKS TO THE AVERAGE YOUNG MAN.

The average young man has in him a finer nature that responds to every appeal of the good and noble and pure. He may conceal this better nature,—even deny it,—but it is there.

The first page of every number of Autumn Leaves during 1913 will bear a "Straight talk to the average young man," by the editor of Autumn Leaves, Elbert A. Smith.

Here are some of the topics: "The square peg in the round hole"; "Difficulties in the way of faith"; "The folly of pig-headedness"; "Building the home"; "Answering the Devil's advertisements"; "The two John Barclays"; "Three keys to power"; "Getting an education"; "Those finer emotions."

These are not long, dry sermons. They are pointed, one-page appeals to the better nature of men, young men,—and older ones, too, if they will read them.

FROM THE APOSTLES.

In days of old the apostles addressed themselves to the young people of the church. Paul gave timely and loving counsel to his younger brother Timothy. Peter admonished "those who are younger."

The apostles of to-day have no less keen an interest in the welfare of the young—those who tomorrow must solve the problems of Zion. During the year 1913 each number of Autumn Leaves will contain a direct appeal to the young from some member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles. Those contributing are: William H. Kelley, John W. Wight, Gomer T. Griffiths, J. F. Curtis, Peter Anderson, C. A. Butterworth, U. W. Greene, R. C. Russell, F. M. Sheehy, John W. Rushton, Frederick A. Smith, I. N. White.

GETTING A START IN LIFE.

If you were a young man, member of the church, just starting out in life, with a capital of good health and fifty or one hundred dollars in cash, where would you go and what would you do to get a start? What habits would you cultivate? How would you conduct yourself?

These questions will be answered in Autumn Leaves for the benefit of our young men, by Bishop Ellis Short, Elder W. R. Pickering, Judge A. B. Kirkendall, and Elder G. J. Waller. All experienced business men.

SPECIAL ARTICLES.

Here are a few of the special articles listed for the year:

"Government," in three articles, "Monarchy," "Democracy," "Theocracy," by Elder S. A. Burgess. Brother Burgess is well known to the church as an all-around student, and writer of ability.

"The religion of the American Indian," by Elder H. A. Stebbins, author of Book of Mormon Lectures. This will be illustrated with photos of Indians at worship, secured from the Bureau of Ethnology, Smithsonian Institute.

"Among the Indians of New Mexico," by R. B. Brown, employed by the Department of the Interior, United States Indian Service.

"Patriotism of the Smith family and their progenitors," by Herbert S. Salisbury, former president of Graceland College, and grandson of Catherine Salisbury, sister of Joseph Smith the Martyr. This author has been to great trouble and research to trace the Smith and Salisbury families during those early days of American history.

"They that overcome." Short stories of obstacles overcome. Written by Professor R. V. Hopkins, of Graceland College.

"Education," by Professor J. A. Gunsolley, president of Graceland College.

"The fool." From an address before The Cumnock School of Expression, Los Angeles, by Elder R. T. Cooper. A rational examination of the text, "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God."

FROM THE OLD FAMILY ALBUM.

It is proposed to run in each issue for the year some one old picture of especial interest because of its connection with church history. These pictures alone will be worth the price of the magazine.

The first of these to appear will be, "The birth-place of President Joseph Smith," Kirtland, Ohio.

THE USUAL FEATURES.

Besides the special articles named, there will be the usual features that have made Autumn Leaves so popular. There will be interesting stories, biographies, autobiographies, poems, articles, essays, editorials, and a great variety of illustrations.

The great range of topics treated upon in Autumn Leaves gives the magazine spice and variety. We are not confined to one line of subjects.

THE DEPARTMENTS.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society is represented in the Arena Department, edited by Elbert A. Smith and Estella Wight. All Religio workers should be subscribers to Autumn Leaves and at work in its interests.

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service is represented in a regular department edited by Sister Callie B. Stebbins. This department is of interest to social workers and home builders.

Autumn Leaves is published monthly for the youth of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The subscription price is only one dollar per year. Send all orders to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE WHOLE LAW OF MOSES ABOLISHED.

SABBATARIAN THEORIES REVIEWED.

Query.—When Paul likens the two covenants to the two women of Abraham, and the bondwoman as the covenant from Sinai, (the ten commandments being that covenant,) and the judgments and statutes as necessary appendages, he commands to cast out the bondwoman and her son. Did he really mean only the appendages?

Generally speaking, there are two schools of thought respecting the law to be "abolished and nailed to the cross." One thinking that it was what they wrongly call, "The ceremonial law," and the others, that it meant the whole law, and especially the decalogue. We propose to show that it was the ten commandments; and the judgments and statutes of necessity, because they were dependent upon the ten.

It does not follow, however, that a second contract, or covenant, may not contain more or less of the first. Everyone should know that any one specification of a contract, broken, annuls the others.

Two covenants are referred to in the Bible; one, the covenant made to the children of Israel, the other, the new and everlasting covenant. "Everlasting," from the fact that it was, at least, in force, both before and after the other. It is sometimes called "the everlasting gospel," for the same reason. Some of its specifications, in a modified form, were incorporated in the other. Especially that part which regulated the carnal nature of man. The Mosaic Law was called a carnal law, not from the fact that it was itself carnal, for God never gave a carnal law, but because it regulated carnal affairs.

THE CARNAL LAW.

That we may understand, the Lord himself calls it, "The law of carnal commandments which the Lord caused to continue with the house of Aaron, among the children of Israel till John."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:4.

In the Inspired Translation, or rather the "inspired correction," we are informed:

"The law was after a carnal commandment, to the administration of death: but the gospel was after the power of an endless life, through Jesus Christ the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father."—John 1:17, 18.

Here is a very clear distinction between the law and the gospel. One, the law of death; the other, the law of life.

The law given through Moses is recognized as one law. There are no "moral" and "ceremonial" divisions in it. In Exodus 34:1, 2, Inspired Translation, the Lord calls the writing on the two second tables, "the law." In the second verse he says: "It shall be after the law of a carnal commandment." We are therefore justified in supposing the ten commandments to be the law, and they what was referred to generally by New Testament writers as, "the law," or "the law of Moses."

Evidently this is the law of dead works that Paul desired the Jews to repent of, when he wrote: "Not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works."—Hebrews 6:1; also Romans 7:5, and Hebrews 9:14.

NO DIVISION IN THE LAW.

The custom of Sabbatarians when dividing the law of Moses into the "moral" and "ceremonial" laws, is clearly without warrant in the Holy Scriptures. Never at any time was it referred to by any bible writer in those terms. Not one ecclesiastical historian, either ancient or modern, makes such division. It is only thus separated now by those who wish to perpetuate the fourth commandment or some other part of the decalogue. There was a division of the Old Testament referred to by the Savior and others as "the law and the prophets." But that very expression seals the unity of the law. Even the Pharisees made no such division. (See Luke 16:16.)

If one person can divide the law into two parts, another can divide it into four, another into ten, or even a hundred; rejecting that part which does not appeal to them as now binding. In the opinion of most of the elders, no one has any such right. The agreement of the elders on this or any other matter, is, of course, not sufficient of itself, to establish the truth of any matter, but the inspiration of the whole eldership is more safe than that part of the church not authorized to decide upon points of doctrine.

Our position in the religious world makes us careful to examine the first premise. Conclusions, however sound, reached from a false premise, fall with it as a matter of fact. The false premise in this case is the unauthorized division of the law of Moses.

NEITHER COVENANT DIVIDED.

One has just as much right to divide the new covenant as the old. One is reminded of the "sectarian" effort to separate the baptism of John and of Jesus, so that John's, requiring much water, would not necessarily be Christian baptism. Witness their effort to separate the promise of salvation, mentioned in the last of Mark, from the signs that were to follow the believer; so that the promise of salvation might be expected, but not the promise of the signs; That bishops and pastors are to be retained as officers in the church, but prophets and apostles excluded; that knowledge, wisdom, and faith are to be realized as gifts of the Holy Spirit, but healings, prophecies, and tongues are not.

The inconsistency is the more apparent with those who would separate the law, for the purpose of perpetuating the decalogue, and then reject a tenth part of it, the seventh day sabbath.

THE ARK OF THE COVENANT.

That the ten commandments were the principal thing annulled by the gospel of Christ, is plainly taught in the Scriptures under various parables and allegories, as well as plainly stated in exact terms.

Many texts refer to the ark of the covenant, because the covenant was placed in it. What was that covenant? Let the Bible answer.

"And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments, and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."—Deuteronomy 4: 13; Exodus 34: 28.

It is important to remember this, so that when we quote from later writers we will understand, when they speak of the first covenant, they mean the ten commandments.

The judgments, (Exodus 21: 1,) and the statutes, (2 Kings 17: 15,) were not the covenant proper.

Whatever conclusion may be arrived at, as to the difference between the first and second tables of stone; the second was placed in the ark, and constitutes the first covenant. (See also Deuteronomy 10: 2, Inspired Translation. That was the covenant that was "faulty," and the one that was to "vanish away,"—so completely, that it was not to be "remembered or come into mind.")

And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind, neither shall they remember it, neither shall they visit it; neither shall that be done any more.—Jeremiah 3: 16.

Those who try to prevent this prophecy being fulfilled, are simply working against God.

For if the first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second.—Hebrews 8: 7.

In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.—Hebrews 8: 13.

The ten commandments therefore were that old covenant that was to vanish away, but Christ was the mediator of the new and everlasting covenant, which is now revealed for the last time.

And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant.—Hebrews 13: 20.

Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant.—Hebrews 13: 20, Inspired Translation.

Those who argue for the perfection of the first tables given to Moses, will hardly think that Paul had reference to them as the faulty and decaying covenant. The decalogue as it appeared on the last tables of stone was the law to vanish away, and as per consequence, the appendages also.

SPIRITUAL POLYGYNY.

Paul likens the ten commandment covenant, and the gospel of Jesus Christ, unto the two women of Abraham; and commanded to cast out the bondwoman and her son.

But when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son . . . to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. . . . For it is written, that Abraham had two sons; the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman . . . for these are the two covenants. . . . What saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son.—Galatians 4: 4, 5, 22, 24, 30.

Having shown absolutely, that the decalogue was the first covenant, and the judgments and statutes only appendages, what therefore is the thing to be cast out? Will our opponent say the appendages will suffice? Do they think to remove the appendix only? Those that pursue such a course, are really living with both the old woman and the new. Veritable spiritual polygyny.

THE TWO SONS.

Having noticed the two covenants and the two women, we proceed to notice next, the allegory of the two sons.

Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. . . . Nevertheless what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free.—Galatians 4: 28, 30, 31.

Will we cast out this heir of bondage, or will we only perform an operation for appendicitis?

THE TWO PLANETS.

When John the Revelator saw, in vision, the church with the moon under her feet, and clothed with the sun (Revelation 12: 1), it is generally understood that the light of the two planets represents the two laws, and that of Moses under her feet. We have shown the decalogue to be that law. When compared with the gospel it is as the light of the moon when compared with the sun. The law was only a borrowed light, as the light of the moon is understood to be only reflected from the sun. What light there was in it was borrowed from the everlasting covenant, which was always to be in the world, but not always on the Eastern Continent; and perhaps not on the western; and sometimes in word only; void of power and authority. Moses' law was not the true light.

THE TWO TESTAMENTS.

Paul, writing to the Hebrew saints, says of Christ:

Who also made us able ministers of the new testament: not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones was glorious. . . . How shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious?—2 Corinthians 3: 6-8.

There is no escaping the conclusion that the law "written and engraven in stones," i. e., the ten commandments, was the letter that killeth. Of it Paul says further: "For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious."—Verse 11.

This letter, then, was the glory that was done away, and not the so-called ceremonial law. An operation for appendicitis will not do.

THE TWO MEDIATORS.

"Death," is written of the law of Moses, in nearly every place where it is mentioned in the New Testament; while "life," is always spoken of in connection with the gospel.

Moses, who was ordained by the hand of angels to be a mediator of this first covenant, (the law). Now this mediator was not a mediator of the new covenant, who is Christ. . . . Now Christ is the mediator of life.—Galatians 3: 19, 20, I. T.

This establishes the fact that the law was the first covenant, and the gospel was the new covenant, and the one of life. Simply to perform an operation on the old law, and remove the appendages, will not save it. It must go. It was a covenant of death. Christ is our mediator and not Moses.

THE TWO TABERNACLES.

In the ninth chapter of Hebrews Paul writes:

But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. . . . How much more shall the blood of Christ, . . . purge your conscience from dead works.—Hebrews 9: 11, 14.

The ark of the covenant, which contained the ten commandments, was in the holy of holies in the tabernacle, but Christ entered a more holy tabernacle. The old was not holy enough, even when surrounded with all the splendor of the temple. In doing so he purged their conscience from the dead works of the law. The holy of holies in the temple was rejected, so far as it pertained to an earthly house, which he passed by, and entered "into heaven itself, there to appear for us."—Hebrews 9: 24.

We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle.—Hebrews 13: 10.

THE TWO SANCTUARIES.

The first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary.—Hebrews 9: 1.

By comparison we conclude there was a sanctuary which was not a worldly sanctuary—in the world but not of the world, (for the sacrifice was slain without the gate). On this, the great sacrifice was offered once for all. If the old covenant was in force and the ten commandments the law of life, why was not Jesus offered in the temple, seeing the temple was the house of the Lord and Zacharias an acceptable priest? Simply because that old covenant had been annulled, together with its sacrifices.

THE TWO SACRIFICES.

For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?—Hebrews 9: 13, 14.

The sacrifice administered according to the law of Moses could only purify the flesh, according to the above text, but the sacrifice that Christ offered, and based on "better promises," could purify the "conscience."

THE TWO ESPOUSALS.

Wherefore, my brethren, ye are also become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God.—Hebrews 7: 4.

We have shown so often that the "law" means the ten commandments, and more especially when used by Saint Paul, that it is unnecessary to show that the law of Moses was that by which God was married unto them, but that law was annulled by Christ and we are his, espoused through obedience to the gospel.

THE TWO HOLIES.

The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing. . . . For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.—Hebrews 9: 8, 24.

The holy of holies in the earthly tabernacle was made especially for this covenant, the ten commandments; yet Christ disregarded that covenant, and established a new one under which all true followers of Christ draw nigh unto God. In what condition, then, do we place ourselves when we try to perpetuate that old covenant?

Simply to disregard the judgments and statutes is not sufficient, we are dead to the whole law and not to the appendages only. We must cast out the bondwoman and not the appendages only.

THE TWO MINISTRATIONS.

But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance: which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. . . . For if that which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.—2 Corinthians 4: 7-11.

The ministration written on stones, the decalogue, could only bring a lesser glory. Why should we try to perpetuate it?

There is no hint in this text of a "ceremonial law," but a plain reference to the one written on stones, and yet Paul says it was done away. Will we believe him?

THE OLD MAN AND THE NEW.

Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross.—Ephesians 2: 15, 16.

If this mention of the law be interpreted in harmony with the rest that Paul has written on this subject, we discover that it was that old law which was abolished, and not merely the appendages to it. Observe, it does not say the law of ordinances.

The ten commandments constituted the law, but sometimes when the judgments and statutes as appendages to it were mentioned in connection with it, either stated or understood, they were called the law. But when the ten are not thus mentioned, the appendages are scarcely if ever called the law. Both were abolished, and this the church has taught for years. After thirty-one years of experience in the church, I never heard any other thought presented except in one of our auxiliaries. We are of the opinion that the parent body is the safest to follow.

THE TWO REST DAYS.

Not being under the old covenant, we are not required to keep the old Sabbath. "For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his."

God finished his work on the seventh day; Christ finished his on the first.

"Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fail after the same example of unbelief."—Hebrews 4: 11.

The seventh verse shows that he limited a certain day, and Paul says he was speaking of the seventh day. It belonged to a limited covenant and the limited Sabbath went with it. "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held."—Romans 7: 6. He does not say we are only dead to the judgments and statutes, but to the law itself. Some may argue that Paul here meant the "ceremonial law." We answer: He did not mean that, for he did not say it. If there are two parts of a law, a greater and a lesser, as some think, it is safest to make a reference apply to the main part, rather than the lesser, when neither part is especially pointed out. However, as we have seen, no such division is made anywhere else, and we can not admit it here.

We think the whole woman was dead, and an operation for appendicitis (the ceremonial law) can not revive her.

THE LAW OF DEATH AND THE PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY.

Under this heading we propose to notice the many expressions referring to these two laws and prove that the "law of death" means the ten commandments, and the other, the gospel of Jesus Christ.

(a) The law and the gospel:

A very clear distinction is made between these two laws in Saint James 2: 10-12. Incidentally he shows that the ten commandments is the law, and by implication, that they were the law of bondage:

For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty.

By implication, the law that contained the two precepts on adultery and murder is not a law of liberty. Why, then, should it be perpetuated? James here refers to the so-called moral law, and not to the so-called ceremonial law. If they transgressed one point they were guilty of all under the law of Moses, but not so under the law of liberty.

(b) Law of the flesh and that of the Spirit:

It is very proper that Paul should refer to the carnal law as a law pertaining to the flesh, and the gospel as the law pertaining to the Spirit.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who speak not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.—Romans 8: 1, 2.

In harmony with all we have quoted before, and a careful study of the first five chapters of Romans, we conclude, that Paul here referred to the ten commandment law as the one of "sin and death." He nowhere hints at a ceremonial law.

(c) Law and grace:

According to Holman's Comprehensive Concordance, the word grace, does not appear in the writings of Moses. His law, therefore, could hardly be called a "law of grace." But the first comparison John makes between Moses and Christ, he says: "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came through Jesus Christ."—Saint John 1: 17. Of this matter Paul says: "Ye are not under the law, but under grace."—Romans 6: 14. Reading on to the seventh verse of the next chapter, in fact, all through the Roman letter, we find Paul was speaking of the ten commandments as the law that we are not under. Why, then, teach that we are under that law? Are we not working against God by such a course?

Paul does not say that we are not under some of the principles contained in that law, for the gospel contained all the good there was in the law, and a very great deal more.

(d) Law and hope:

Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace. For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith.—Galatians 5: 4, 5.

Paul seemed to think that one had fallen from grace if he thought to be justified by the law. Some may think the law here referred to the law of circumcision, but by a careful reading it will be seen that the whole law, with its judgments and statutes, is referred to, and circumcision as one of the latter. The law of the flesh, i. e., Moses' law, versus the law of Christ, was a favorite theme with Paul, and in this chapter he proceeds to show the superiority of the fruits of Christ's law.

(e) Law of faith and the law of works:

In the Galatian letter Paul refers to the law of Moses as the "law of works," and the gospel, as "the law of faith." In this sense he uses 2 Thessalonians 1: 11; Romans 3: 27, 28, and Ephesians 2: 9. He inquires: "This only would I learn of you, Receive ye the Spirit by the works of the law or the hearing of faith?"—Galatians 3: 2. (See also verse 5.) The nineteenth verse of this chapter shows that Paul had in mind the decalogue when he says: "The works of the law." He did not have reference to a ceremonial law. "Wherefore then, the law was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made in the law given to Moses, who was ordained by the hand of angels to be a mediator of this first covenant, (the law)."—Verse 19. That settles that point beyond contradiction. The covenant was the ten commandments. The decalogue was the added law. Added because the gospel had been transgressed. (See Deuteronomy 4: 13; Hebrews 4: 2.) We are not under the old law of works,—the ten commandments, but under the law of faith,—the gospel of Jesus Christ.

(f) The law of life and the law of death:

"For the law of the Spirit of life hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Romans 8: 2. What is this law of sin and death? Is it the "moral" or the "ceremonial" law?

The law of "an endless life" was revealed through Christ. (John 1: 17,) and that one, not revealed through him, was doubtless the other. In verse thirteen of this same eighth of Romans, Paul shows that he has reference to the deeds of the body that was regulated by the carnal law. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.)

The carnal law is shown to be the ten commandments. The gospel calls us to obey a higher and better code.

(g) The added law:

We have already answered our opponents, in part, on this point, but in order to make it more plain and positive, we will now show that it was not the so-called ceremonial, which was added to the "moral," but it was the first covenant itself, which was added as a religious code, because the children of Israel would not observe the higher law of the gospel. Speaking of the children of Israel as they were coming up out of Egypt Paul says:

For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.—Hebrews 4: 2.

This proves that they had the gospel at the first, but had no faith in it; then God "added," because of transgression . . . the first covenant (the law) Galatians 3: 19, Inspired Translation. The word till in this text proves that the first covenant, the ten commandment covenant, is absolutely not now binding. But instead we now have the "new and yet everlasting covenant," as our rule of faith. (Luke 16: 16, Inspired Translation.)

(h) The law of Moses was not enforced by the apostles:

Certain men that went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised and keep the law, to whom we gave no such commandment.—Acts 15: 24.

In this verse there is a distinction made between the law and circumcision. The same distinction is made in the fifth verse, and again in Galatians 3: 16-19. The "apostles and elders," of the primitive church did not therefore enforce either the law of circumcision (known long before Moses) or the law of Moses given four hundred and thirty years afterward.

(i) The weak law:

For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did: by the which we draw nigh unto God.—Hebrews 7: 18, 19.

What was this weak law? Was it the law of tithing mentioned so often in this chapter? Do Latter Day Saints believe tithing is the weak law that makes nothing perfect? Certainly not. Then what was the weak law? Was it circumcision, or any of the appendages of the real law? We think not.

The sixteenth verse makes the matter plain: "Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." We have seen that the second tables of stone given to Moses, was "the law after a carnal commandment." (Saint John 1: 18.) That was the law that Paul called the weak law. It was not weakened by the appendicitis. An operation for that affliction could not save her. She was bound to die. Her course was run.

(j) The imperfect law:

For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by which we draw nigh unto God.—Hebrews 7: 19.

If the law made nothing perfect, it is not that law by which we "go on unto perfection." Paul says the latter was the doctrine of Christ, which is but another term for the gospel of Christ. (Hebrews 6: 1.)

(k) The faulty law:

For if the first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been found for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah.—Hebrews 8: 7, 8.

When the Lord finds fault with that old covenant, why should we try to perpetuate it, or would it be better to doctor it by removing its appendix?

(l) The law of bondage:

So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free. Stand fast therefore in the liberty where-with Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.—Galatians 4: 31; 5: 1.

This statement of Paul follows his allegory of the two women of Abraham. The bondwoman representing the ten commandments, which Paul here calls a "yoke of bondage." Here as elsewhere we can not conscientiously think Paul referred to the "ceremonial law."

(m) The yoke:

Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the necks of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?—Acts 15: 10.

This was the language of Saint Paul before the general conference (verse 6), and which drew forth the decision of James (verse 19), with respect to the law of Moses and its appendages. The old law was a yoke which they could not bear. The yoke of Christ is easy, and his burden light. (Matthew 11: 30.)

(n) The law taken away:

He taketh away the first that he may establish the second.—Hebrews 10: 9.

This may have been spoken, perhaps, of sacrifices, as well as of the covenant (verses 8, 16). The former was of no force without the latter. Taking away the law annuls all that pertains to it.

(o) The law abolished:

But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away; . . . and not as Moses, which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished. But their minds were blinded; for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart.—2 Corinthians 3: 7, 13-15.

(p) The law annulled:

For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect.—Hebrews 7: 18, 19.

The law being annulled, we are fighting against God to try to perpetuate the ten commandment covenant.

(q) The law blotted out:

Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross.—Colossians 2: 14.

The expression: "handwriting of ordinances," in this text, and a similar one in Ephesians 2: 15, is perhaps the "bone of contention," of this whole subject. The word ordinances, it is claimed, can not apply to the ten commandments. Why not? An ordinance, (as used in the Bible) is simply a law; and may, and does apply more properly to the constitution than to its appendages. One text is relied on to prove that an "ordinance" could not apply to the covenant proper. "The first covenant had also ordinances of divine service." (Hebrews 9: 1.) The margin says, ceremonies. This word ordinances is therefore a doubtful translation. In 1 Corinthians 11: 2 the margin renders it traditions.

The eighteenth chapter of Leviticus deals exclusively with adultery, fornication, and their kin; and in the last verse the Lord says: "Therefore shall ye keep mine ordinances that ye commit none of these abominable customs." The seventh commandment is therefore an ordinance, and our friends are mistaken, when they say: The word ordinance can not apply to the ten commandments.

Again, in the fifty-eighth of Isaiah, the Lord speaking of an ordinance, calls their attention among other things, to the Sabbath which they had profaned. The fourth commandment is also an ordinance.

Paul speaking of the ordinance of God, Romans 13: 2, mentions adultery, murder, theft, false witness, and covetousness, in that connection.

Instead of "ordinances," not applying to the ten commandments, that is just where it does apply.

The very expression, "handwriting of ordinances," refers to the tables written by the Lord and delivered to Moses. Therefore when the Lord "blotted out the handwriting of ordinances and nailed it to his cross," it was the handwriting of God written on the two tables of stone. This also agrees with all other expressions concerning the law of Moses being not now binding.

(r) The end of the law:

For Christ is the end of the law . . . to every one that believeth.—Romans 10: 4.

Every expression in this chapter concerning a kind of secondary righteousness, applies to the first covenant, the ten commandments. So that the so-called "moral" law was the one that was ended or fulfilled in Christ.

Having noticed the inferiority of the ten commandments when compared with the gospel, let us reverse the matter and notice the superiority of the gospel when compared with the law, and see by which we are adopted, justified, and saved. Not wishing to occupy too much space, we will give references rather than quotations.

(s) Salvation through the gospel. (Mark 16: 16.)

(t) Righteousness revealed in the gospel. (Romans 1: 17.)

(u) Justification through Christ. (Acts 13: 39.)

(v) Saved by the law of faith. (Galatians 3: 24; 2: 16; Romans 3: 20, 28.)

(w) Adopted by Christ's law. (Galatians 4: 4, 5.)

(x) Liberty in the teachings of Christ. (John 8: 31, 32; James 2: 12.)

SPECIAL OBJECTIONS.

It is urged by some that the Lord always referred to the ten commandments as the law of God, but to the judgments and statutes as the law of Moses. Two texts are sufficient to overthrow that theory.

Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments.—Malachi 4: 4.

Here is a law other than the judgments and statutes which, given at Horeb, could only mean the ten commandments; and it is called, "the law of Moses."

The priests, the Levites, the porters, the singers, the Nethinims, and all they that had separated themselves from the people of the lands unto the law of God.—Nehemiah 10: 28.

There is no mention made in the ten commandments of any of these classes, and no law given therein regulating their conduct, therefore the judgments and statutes were sometimes called the "law of God."

That the terms may sometimes be synonymous, appears from Luke 2: 22, 24.

And when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord; . . . and to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord.

"Law of Moses," and "law of the Lord," refer to the same thing. Generally speaking, and especially in the writings of Paul, the expressions: "the law," or "the law of Moses," allude to the ten commandments.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS RESTORED.

The very severest objection many see in accepting the abolishment of the ten commandments, is, that they are still in force and have been especially restored in these latter days, and are found recorded in the Doctrine and Covenants. If they had not been abolished they could not well be restored. The statement is not true, however, that they have been restored. We challenge the proof that the fourth commandment has been restored. As we said before, one specification of a contract broken annuls all the rest. Our opponents are here in a trap that they can not by any means extricate themselves from. God himself annulled that fourth commandment and all the church has broken it weekly. That annuls the whole contract.

Had it not been for the transgression of his people, God would not have restored any of the ten commandments, for he who lives the gospel of Christ lives far above the law of Moses, for:

One loving the Lord with all his heart, could have no other gods before him, neither would they take his name in vain, and especially if they be led by the Spirit of God.

Children properly taught under the gospel, would properly respect and honor their parents.

One, while loving his enemies, and praying for them, that would despitely use him, could not commit murder.

One refusing to look on a woman to lust after her would not commit adultery.

One seeking his neighbor's good rather than his own, and doing unto others as he would have them do unto him, could not steal.

One being in possession of the Spirit of truth, and being perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect, could not lie. In fact this one commandment of Jesus, with respect to being perfect, is better than all that Moses gave.

One esteeming his neighbor as himself would not steal from him; and more especially if the love of God was in his heart.

Thus we see the superiority of the gospel over the law of Moses, but being slow to hear, and having little faith in the higher law, God has done with us much as he did with those in ancient times, by adding some of the ten commandments. He has a right to insert in the new covenant what he chooses, but that does not revive the old contract. That old contract is annulled. Being weak and faulty, it must of necessity die, but if God has seen fit to resurrect a part of it, and make it conform to the spiritual law, it illustrates to us the true idea of our resurrection.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE PEN.

Ever since the sublime voice of the majestic archangel of the covenant rang out, clarion-like, "What thou seest, write in a book," mankind has found relief from an overcharged soul and an overburdened heart, writing. It is probably no exaggeration to say that as many minds have been relieved by writing as souls have been relieved by tears.

It was said of the eloquent and gifted authoress, Charlotte Bolinbroke, (I think) that she was wont to affirm in her little circle of intimate friends that she never felt so well as when well-dressed, and never wrote so well as when attired in all her best clothes.

On the imperishable pages of time and flashing replica-like refractions upon the shores of eternity, are the names of myriads of men and women whom the world "knoweth not" because it seeth them not, but whose pens have lifted more human souls up, up, into the higher light of blazing infinity than ever the voices of all the silver-tongued orators of all time put together; for he who speaks viva voce simply addresses an audience limited by the four walls of a college, lecture room, science hall, auditorium, or a church of one denomination or another. He who speaks by the pen speaks to an audience limited only by man's ability to read, and by human capacity to understand. Nay, I even dare go further than I dared to go six months since, for during that recent and brief period of time I have been shown that even our spoken words in Immanuel's name and in Jehovah's service are far, very far, from being as ephemeral as we think, or as evanescent as we suppose. I had retired to rest one Sabbath night, exhausted by what I sadly considered a futile and fruitless attempt to introduce the eternal verities of the true gospel into a Bible class of men in this city (Toronto); small indeed, but representing almost every shade of religious thought and opinion except the Latter Day Saints. My earnest call seemed to me to have fallen upon deaf ears, like the good seed mentioned in Matthew's gospel, that fell among thorny ground and rocks. I sank into a troubled slumber, saying, or at least thinking to myself, "All lost! All futile!"

Suddenly, in the silence of the night, and in the fathomless mysteries of dreamland, a messenger appeared at my bedside and showed to my discouraged soul a small but most beautifully engraved tablet, bearing letters either of gold or of highly burnished copper, arranged in beautifully regular lines and columns, a quantity of raised printing or lettering, exactly similar to what printers call a stereo, or stereotype.

Upon inquiry of my visitor what it was that was thus beautifully engraven upon the tablet, my surprise and relief can better be imagined than described when I was told that it was a copy of my own address given on that afternoon at the Bible class, and which I had thought so little worthy of second thought or serious consideration.

My studies in astronomy have prepared me for the reign of absolute law and order in the realms of eternity, and in the solemn ushering in of the great millennium; but I must confess to such a complete ignorance of detail that I am wholly at a loss to say whether the preachers of the gospel shall precede in order the writers thereof, but of one thing I am absolutely certain; and that is that both the preachers thereof, and the writers thereof shall reign together with "joy unspeakable and full of glory," and that many an otherwise lost soul shall then be introduced to the man or woman whose pen (though peradventure obscure and unknown) has indited words which, under God, hath saved that soul from death, his eyes from tears, and his feet from falling.

Go on; dear writers, for the Lord, for if my humble and, as I thought, despised effort for the truth upon that Sabbath afternoon was thought worthy to be electrotyped by order of the unseen Director of the universe, what about some of the soul-stirring sermons, epistles, and articles that I have read in the HERALD'S pages when it was a very little HERALD indeed, but which has now grown, until, thank God, it is a HERALD indeed whose influence neither floods nor flames could destroy, and whose power for time and eternity no cyclone could obliterate!

When all the preachers have preached, and all the writers have written, the burning words of proverbial fire and spirit-inspired eloquence that man's eyes can rest upon or man's heart imagine, it will all fall far short of what has been vividly portrayed in the following lines from a religious magazine published in London, England, over forty-five years ago:

"Could I with ink the ocean fill,
Were every blade of grass a quill;
Were the whole world of parchment made;
And every man a scribe by trade;
To write the love of God above
Would drain the ocean dry;
Nor would the scroll contain the whole,
Though outstretched from sea to sky."

Lying beside me on the table as I pen these lines is the last copy of the Journal of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, and open before me at my elbow lies a full-page photograph, taken at the Yerkes Observatory, of the great nebula of Orion. When I reflect upon the truly astounding fact that a tiny space on this photograph, no larger than a pin's head, represents a stupendous expanse of no less than three thousand, nine hundred and sixty millions of miles in diameter, and consequently not less than twelve thousand, three hundred and seventy-four millions of miles in circumference; and that such an infinitesimal pin's point in space represents the whole of the solar system, and is utterly lost in oblivion and invisible beside the glowing and glaring glories of this stupendous nebula, I am simply, as the poet writes, "Amazed beyond compare, and lost in wonder, love, and praise."

And to reflect that this graphic picture that lies before me (not like the small photograph of a man, woman, or child, or of a house, or church, or college, at a distance of only three yards) is a photograph of a mighty scene that is so far distant in the infinitudes of space as to require no less than fifteen figures to express the number of miles distant, namely, 569,000,000,000,000; if I had no other assurance of the absolute veracity of the Prophet Joseph Smith's evangel than the description he has given of the mighty advances of science in the latter days, that one thing would stamp his words with the insignia of truth, and his revelations with the hallmark of veracity for all time and through all eternity. And can we not see a "deeper depth" and a hidden "deep which couched beneath" the mighty patriarch's words when he says, "Lo those are parts of his ways; but the thunder of his power who can understand?" (Job 26: 14.)

Great is the Lord and greatly to be praised, and his understanding is unsearchable; yet doth he stoop to behold the children of men, whose days are as an hand breadth, who passeth away as a shadow, and whose years are as a tale that is told.

NUMBERS OF LAMANITES COMING.

But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose. Zion shall flourish upon the hills, and rejoice upon the mountains, and shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5.

The word of the Lord to the Seer, given in July, 1829, concerning the Lamanites, is also given in section 2, as follows:

Nevertheless, my work shall go forth, for, inasmuch as the knowledge of a Savior has come unto the world, through the testimony of the Jews, even so shall the knowledge of a Savior come unto my people, and to the Nephites, and the Jacobites, and the Josephites, and the Zoramites, through the testimony of their fathers; and this testimony shall come to the knowledge of the Lamanites, . . . who dwindled in unbelief because of the iniquity of their fathers, whom the Lord has suffered to destroy their brethren the Nephites, because of their iniquities and their abominations; and for this very purpose are these plates preserved which contain these records, . . . that the Lamanites might come to the knowledge of their fathers, and that they might know the promises of the Lord, and that they may believe the gospel and rely on the merits of Jesus Christ, and be glorified through faith in his name, and that through their repentance they might be saved.

These things are now being fulfilled. For a number of years the red man has been pushing his way into scholarly and national places of trust and honor. Who shall say there is no "blossoming as the rose" even in those achievements?

Using the "rose" parable, surely there is a fragrant "blossoming" for Laman, where we have Indian overseers of departments of agriculture, Indian superintendents of government schools, Indian congressmen, senators, etc. And though last, yet mentionable, an Oklahoma Sac and Fox Indian leading the world as an athletic champion.

And now they are coming to the ancient gospel standard. Uncle Sam's inspiration to educate and qualify the red man has not been in vain. Have we who know the prophecies of old concerning this matter, not great reason to rejoice? Can our faith in God wane with such forespoken events standing before us?

What a dramatic working out of a definite plan which fashions the destiny of nations and assures us of the ultimate fulfillment of all that the prophets have spoken! However, it is very easy for some of the most important and epoch-marking events to glide by in such a commonplace way that their value as "living currents of prophecy" in the great ocean of time is scarcely realized. It is a curious fact that accumulated years bring out the bold relief of important occurrences more clearly to the vision than the broad daylight of the immediate present.

All things human, being more or less carnal, incline us to an underestimate of the degree of the divine which is really in the persons and events within our commonplace circle of life. But through the flight of years, the human and carnal sinks toward its oblivion, and lo!—the divinely wrought solè purpose, or event stands out like a splendid monument. Then the wonder is, that such persons or events could have passed the dial of time, not only unappreciated by those nearest by, but actually scorned and spat upon.

Some despised the Gentiles as "dogs" and not worthy that decent folk should sit at meat with them, much less preach the gospel in their midst. But God chose them, and elevated them, and scattered and abased their self-righteous critics, the Jews. It was a great event when a few missionaries were first sent to the Gentiles, but it took the world several hundred years to find out the import of it.

Iniquity made the Indians a "dark and loathsome people," but the gospel is to save sinners, and the Lord knows how to seek them out, and he said he would do it. It is a great event that the Lamanites are beginning to return to the Lord; but as the movement is not led by the blare of trumpets, many will not discern the inspirational leading until time shall testify of it years hence.

It is in answer to prayers from lips long since silent in the dust, in fulfillment of prophecy which ages of time have challenged, and as the immediate result of the patient labors of Elder Hubert Case and others, that we are witnessing an ingathering of the Cheyennes.

Brother Case baptized a number recently, ten more last Sunday, and we expect more to follow next Sunday. It was a thrilling and impressive scene to view from the water's edge the "tepees," or "wigwams," so suggestive of Indian wars and savage rebellion against God and man. But now, in solemn contrast, these people of the wild were reverently grouped at the waters to be "baptized into Christ."

The message of mutual brotherhood, and of "Peace on earth, good will to man," has reached them! One by one, and amid occasional weeping, when deepest feeling moved their hearts, they were led into the watery burial while we sang:

"Hear the blessed Redeemer call you,
Listen to his gracious voice;
Dread no ills that can befall you,
While you make his way your choice.

"Follow Christ, let each believer
Be baptized in Jesus' name;
He himself in Jordan's river
Was immersed beneath the stream."

From the water we gathered under canvas for the confirmation, the Spirit bearing witness of the Lord's blessing upon the work performed.

The writer has found a certain chart, put out by Brother J. T. Curtis, of 602 West D Avenue, Independence, Missouri, to be a splendid help in presenting the gospel to the Indians.

(To secure "The Two Way" chart correspond with Brother Curtis. It is a good one.)

I may also mention that we are willing to send Indian curio articles to those who may desire, such as moccasins and small articles of bead work, upon receipt of sufficient to purchase and post same. Communications in that matter should be addressed to Mrs. J. E. Yates, at address given below.

Concluding this epistle, let us note the Lord's promise to those in former ages concerning their prayers, as found in section 3 of Doctrine and Covenants:

And I said unto them, that it should be granted unto them according to their faith in their prayers; yea, and this was their faith, that my gospel which I gave unto them, that they might preach in their days, might come unto their brethren, the Lamanites, and also, all that had become Lamanites, because of their dissensions.

May the Lord help us all to do our part in carrying a blessing to Laman, that we in turn may be blessed by laboring with the Lord as instruments for the accomplishment of his purposes in the earth.

"With health, everything is a source of pleasure; without it, nothing else, whatever it may be, is enjoyable; even the other personal blessings—a great mind, a happy temperament—are degraded and dwarfed for want of it. It follows from all this that the greatest of follies is to sacrifice health for any other kind of happiness, whatever it may be, for gain, advancement, learning or fame, let alone, then, for fleeting sensual pleasures. Of General Interest

G. J. WALLER FOR GOVERNOR OF HAWAII.

Editors Herald: The following items, in addition to those published in your last issue, may be of interest. The first is from the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, Honolulu, November 16; the other from a Honolulu paper unknown to the undersigned:

A statement has appeared in print to the effect that there would be opposition at Washington to the candidacy of G. J. Waller "on account of his prominence in the Mormon Church." It is decidedly unfair to Mr. Waller that this statement is allowed to appear. He is not a prominent member of the Mormon Church, nor any other kind of a member. He is, on the other hand, a prominent member of the church which is most opposed to Mormonism, as that term is generally understood, a church that took a leading part in the campaign to unseat Senator Smoot of Utah, the Mormon apostle. The position of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," of which Mr. Waller is the local leader, is well known at Washington and is such that membership in it is not considered a bar to any position.—Advertiser.

With a Democrat having been elected to the presidency, it is a foregone conclusion that the next governor of Hawaii will be of the democratic faith. The field of probabilities is extremely limited. Two men, we know, are willing to accept the office if it is tendered them. Gilbert J. Waller, the Democratic National Committeeman for Hawaii, has already signified his willingness to accept if the position is offered him. And L. L. McCandless, late democratic candidate for the delegateship, who pressed Kuhio so hard and lost by but a narrow margin, is in a receptive mood.

Mr. Waller is a good man. His record is absolutely clean; he is a man of intelligence, education, and ability. If any criticism may be made of him, it is that he lacks forcefulness and decisiveness. He is not as ruthless as some think a governor should be. Whether he is up in his knowledge of the important problems that will confront the next governor of Hawaii, or not, we do not know. We do feel that if appointed, he would do his best for all the people, not merely for a small clique of rich men.

JERUSALEM AND THE WAR.

Visitors to Jerusalem this Christmas are likely to miss many of the picturesque human features of the Holy City. No Russians, Greeks, Armenians, Bulgarians, Montenegrins will be there; for the war will have swallowed the pilgrims. At Bethlehem on Christmas Eve the Greek monks will perform their services, tremblingly, alone, on January 6, the Festival of the Baptism of Jesus, there will be no thousand Christians in their death shrouds on the banks of the Jordan, and the common halls of the monasteries and of the great hostleries of the Russian settlement will be empty. The tall Montenegrin guides of the Orthodox Palestine Society will be either in cells hidden from the Moslem populace or will have hied them, long since, to Greece. Even the Mohammedans will be fewer in Jerusalem, there will be fewer Arabs with trains of camels and mules descending the long, dark roadways; fewer khaki-clad Syrians and Turks keeping order at the sacred edifices. There will be no hawkers of prayer beads, pictures, and thorn crowns; for there will be no purchasers. The native Jews will groan over the absence of money; they will go to the ancient wall and pray, and beat their heads against it. The owners of orange orchards will tear their hair, and the unpurchased stock of date merchants will grow a year older and dirtier. The eastern beggars, all sores and ulcers, will not flock this year from their desert villages to Jerusalem, but will whine more plaintively where they are and rend their rags to look uglier, and hope for an end of the war. The Sepulcher will have the silence and gloom which is its due; it will marvel at the stillness which has supplanted the yelling and clamor of the Christians and the Moslems round about.

The Russians foresaw the situation long ago, and a notice was posted in the Consulate at Jerusalem that the Government of Russia would issue no more passports to pilgrims journeying to the Holy Land until the war was over. From Russia alone ten to fifteen thousand pilgrims journey to Jerusalem every year, and never a Russian boat arrives at Jaffa but it brings its complement of sheepskin-hatted peasant men and shawl-wrapped peasant women. If the Russians are fifteen thousand, the Greeks, Bulgarians, and Montenegrins, coreligionists of the Russians, number as many, and twice as many in the year. But all those who ordinarily would be kneeling before the shrine are now kneeling behind rocks, and those who thumbed prayer books are thumbing triggers; their eyes do not look dreamily to God, but piercingly to find the foe; they have sombreros on their heads; their packs are gone; there are muskets on their shoulders. I speak, of course, of the pilgrims from the Balkans; the Russian peasants are not carrying muskets yet, though they must be wild to do so—against the Turk.

I remember when we came into sight of the dome of Saint Sophia at Constantinople an old gray-bearded pilgrim took off his hat and cried out: "Oh, grant we may sing to God in thee one day, and that Tsargrad may be ours." That was no less than a historical sentiment, a memory of the ardor of many wars, the very breath in the nostrils of a Christian-fighting Turk.

"Can you tell me," said an old pilgrim to me at Jerusalem this year, "will the Last Judgment take place in the Valley of Jehoshaphat or by the Dead Sea? It is an important question, because if what the Greek monks say is true, the time is not very far distant, and I should like to know to which place I shall have to go. I should like to have a good look at it beforehand."

I said I thought the great sunken basin of the Dead Sea more likely, but showing some curiosity as to the reason for the monkish prediction, I caused the old pilgrim to explain.

"This year," said he, "Tsargrad falls. There is an ancient prophecy that in the year when Annunciation falls on the same day as Easter the war of the end of the world will commence. Tsargrad will fall, Armageddon will be fought, Christ fighting on one side and Antichrist on the other. Then will come the last judgment and the end of the world." What a sensation it will cause in Russia and in Greece if this prophecy comes true. None are so astonished at an apparent miracle are those who urgently declare that they believe in miracles.

Constantinople may easily fall, and the whole balance of Christian and Moslem be upset in the Near East. One thing is certain about the Moslem, he is an inexorable foe; his revenge is lasting, his lust to kill is something essential in the least drop of his blood. If he is humiliated politically in war, he will be ever ready to work out his vengeance personally in murder and massacre. Turkey beaten will be more unpleasant for the Christians than Turkey master; the pilgrims in Jerusalem will need much more protection than has been given them in the past, the caravans to Nazareth and Jordan will have to be guarded by Christian soldiers, no stragglers allowed, and the tourist must be sure of his revolver. It is very probable that Russia will have her own troops to guard her own people. She may also insist on the national character of her church and its shrines in the Holy Land, and break away from the Greeks, whose ecclesiastical practices are not favored by the heads of the Russian Church.

Constantinople is, of course, the great historical capital of eastern Christianity—it is the eastern Rome. It is unlikely that the Slavs will give it up to the powers if they once capture it. If they capture it, and hold it, and beat down the mosques, and restore Saint Sophia, then the Orthodox Greek Church will swiftly assert itself as the greatest church of the world by the power of its armies and the splendor of its belief. Mount Athos will become trebly famous, and it may quite possibly happen that the victorious armies will operate upon Syria and make a Christian colony of Jerusalem.

They could hold it as a colony, for the Syrian aborigines have no love for the Turks.

When the war broke out no one dreamed of Slav success or an interruption of the status quo in the Near East, and the imagination was only stirred by the prospect of the clash of arms. But now that the Balkan confederates are carrying all before them, a fascinating problem presents itself—what will be the complexion of the Near East when the war is over?

Jerusalem will perhaps be still devoid of people next Easter, or will the Bulgarians, Servians, Greeks, and Montenegrins be there in hordes, flushed with victory, rapturous with glory-giving, flooding the Sepulcher with tears of joy? Will the sight of their enemies triumphant overcome the commercial greed of the Mohammedan hawkers or be too much for the proud knife-brandishing Arabs? If so, the ancient, grimy floor of the "Life-giving Tomb" may once more run with blood. Or perhaps when the mob is waiting for the bursting forth of the sacred fire at the Sepulcher, the soldiers that keep order will be Greek and Russian, and not Turkish.

Whatever happens, I fancy there will be little difference in the outward aspect of the city once the war is over and the pilgrims have returned.—Stephen Graham, in Collier's Weekly, December 7, 1912.

"Incomparably the Best."

The holiday season is upon us. It brings its joys and its anxieties. It ought not to bring anxieties, but it does. It is not altogether a season of rejoicing.

The system of extravagant present giving is the chief cause of gloom, perplexities, and headaches. But since we can not overturn a system in a day, the wisest thing to do is to conform to it within reasonable limits. This can be done at nominal expense, and after all, it is the motive, the thought, the good will, that the recipient of a present appreciates, if he or she be a right-minded person, far more than the value of the present itself. And if he or she be a sordid one, would neither be worthy of your good will, nor your gift.

In your selection of presents I wish in all seriousness to invite your attention to SAINTS' HERALD—a year's subscription to THE SAINTS' HERALD—as the best present, incomparably the best present, that one dollar and a half can buy. I care not where you look for your bargain.

You may search the earth, or let your imagination soar to other planets or descend to regions below, and still you will not find anything for one dollar and a half that would give to a brother, a sister, or a friend the hours of pleasure, of profit, or real happiness, which one would get from a year's subscription. Senator Voorhees on Immortality.

(The accompanying argument for immortality was written by the late Senator Daniel W. Voorhees, and was sent to Doctor Stephen A. Northrup, of Kansas City, Kansas, as a contribution to his book, "A Cloud of Witnesses," a compilation of the testimony of the greatest men of the last three centuries in favor of the deity of Christ and the inspiration of the Scriptures.)

"Shall this mortal put on immortality; shall we meet again to part no more?" The philosophy of ancient paganism and the scientific thought of modern unbelief have alike tried, and tried in vain, to wrench apart the iron jaws of death and extort an answer from the dumb and silent mystery of the tomb. Not a gleam of light, not a ray of hope, not even the dim twinkling of a distant star comes from the great and intellectual school of materialism.

There can indeed be but one answer to this tremendous question, so vital, so personal to all. The advent of the Messiah, the inhabitant of two worlds coming from the realms of eternity to the realms of time, returning whence he came, triumphing over death and robbing the grave of its victory, furnishes absolute proof beyond denial or discussion that an immortal world exists and in immortal life. He who walked the waters and bade the winds be still, alone of all the manifestations of power this earth has ever known can banish the secret dread, the inward horror of falling into naught.

Plato reasoned well, but the immortality of the soul, which was to him merely a pleasing hope, a dim uncertainty, becomes a proven, fixed reality by the coming of the Messiah; by the opening of the King's highway between the two worlds, the visible and the invisible. In his divinity he came and he went; he passed from one world to the other both ways; the route he proclaimed remains linking time and eternity together and affording to the human soul its only safe assurance that he will live hereafter. In view of that divinity, therefore, we listen without wonder or doubt to his grand conclusions of the whole matter, to his only lofty anthem and promise of eternal life:

"I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

And who is he that would gainsay this psalm of victory for the human soul in its hope of immortality? Who is he that would silence its strains of peace? Who is he that would rob the parting soul of its music, the beloved faces that have gone before, making welcome from the sky? Who is he that would draw the black curtains of annihilation around the dying bed and bolt and bar the portals of the tomb with cold despair? Who is he that would force entrance into the chamber of death to blight and destroy that sublime faith which alone can pluck from the heart a rotted sorrow and dry the tears of anguish which come as a comforter in every trial, which wreathes with smiles the dying face, even in the bright morning of life, in its noonday prime and as the sun of old age is going down. Far more merciful would it be to put poison in the wells and fountains of burning deserts where perishing travelers stoop to drink.

If life is to end here, a mere span on the dial plate of time, a fleeting shadow that abideth not; if life here is but the insect existence of a single summer season, then indeed may the peasant and the philosopher and all classes between them make intense and prolonged inquiry whether such a life is worth the living, whether any intelligent being with free choice would enter upon its brief, unsatisfying scenes, knowing their inevitable termination to be in the black darkness of a sunless, starless, incomprehensible nihilism; in a waveless, motionless, frozen, dead sea of annihilation.

But away with this vision of gloom, this dream of horror, this nightmare of the soul. The Christian faith neither darkens nor discredits the destiny of the human race; its mission is one of hope, promise and happiness in all pathways of life. To all the children of men of every faith it comes in blessings; to the blind agnostic, who is proud of his blindness, to the groping unbeliever, who boasts of his darkness, and even to the eloquent scoffer, with his bitter tongue, as well as to the faithful followers of the cross—to one and to all it comes with messages of truth, love, mercy and everlasting life in the name of the divine Master.

Yes, There is Efficacy in Prayer.

In the geography of the soul there are three places of power—the Mount of Prayer, the Desert of Meditation, the Island of Vision. The Mount of Prayer stands forth gloriously. It has a recognized position on the continent of history. There have been cities without walls, without books, without colleges, without hospitals, without markets, but there has never been a city without a house of prayer. A nation of atheists has never existed. The poet, the philosopher and the historian are united in their recognition of the fact of prayer in human experience. Tennyson sings:

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day;
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within their brain;
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friends?
For so the whole round earth in every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

Poetry is the music of language, song is the music of sound, perfect blending is the music of color, eloquence is the music of logic, a sigh is the plaintive music of sorrow. Prayer, desire, aspiration, adoration—these are the music, the ascending music of the soul's incense—the atmosphere of the spirit encircling the throne of the Infinite. The eye was made for beauty, the ear was made for melody, the hand was made for utility, the mind was made for knowledge, the heart was made for love and the soul was made for God.

Great men pray. Poor men pray. Bad men pray. All men pray. The atheist in the railroad smashup exclaimed: "My God! what is this?" In that moment he forgot that he was a professed agnostic. The instincts of the soul always come to the surface. Faith will out. Aspiration is automatic. Men can not help praying. Man is a praying creature. This universal spirit of aspiration and habit of prayer is set forth beautifully by James Montgomery:

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear;
The upward glancing of an eye
When none but God is near.

Prayer is not peculiar to any age. Pericles, the first citizen of Athens, before he delivered an oration, would pray to the gods. Caesar consulted the oracle. Luther prayed his way through mountains of difficulties. There is a tradition about Valley Forge, that the first American was a man of prayer. Lincoln turned the key in the lock and said to Bishop Simpson: "Pray for me." Gladstone indulged in silent prayer just before his great parliamentary efforts. The prayers of Knox are felt in Scotland to-day. These men were not fools. The world has crowned them as "great."—Reverend J. L. Gordon, in the Advance.

The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed:
It blesses him that gives and him that takes.
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown,
His scepter shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings:
But mercy is above his sceptered sway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons iustice.—Shakespeare.

PREPARATION FOR PARENTHOOD.

FOREWORD.

Next to the instinct of the preservation of life itself is the instinct of propagation of the species through the controlling medium of the sexual sense. This is true of all living creatures. However, with the human race, while the same law holds true in the same relation, there are many features to be considered, because of the intellectuality, which has been added to the otherwise physical being. Less the power of intellectual discernment and reasoning, the animal uses only instinct as a guide for the preservation and increase of its kind. So, with the addition of intellectual ability, man should be, as was obviously intended by the Creator, the better able to protect life, propagate, and advise the offspring.

PARENTHOOD IS SACRED. Throughout all nature we find evidences of this fact. Look upon the delicate plant taking deeper root, spreading its branches upward and firmly, that the leaves may reach the sunshine and air—all of which, combined, are the effort of the parent plant to bring forth its healthy, beautiful, and fragrant flowers, to be followed soon by the fruit, which, in turn, contains the seeds, which, if properly lodged and nourished, will bring forth more plants and flowers and fruit. Look upon the mating of the birds—how they twitter, carol, and call in true love-making; later, gayly singing as the nest is built; then the watchfulness of both during the hatching; the happy coming of the ungainly young, whose large, noisy throats must be frequently stuffed with fat worms, brought from the hunt; and, finally, the lessons in flying, until some day, when wings are strong, the half-grown bird fails to return. Yes, this is nature. We see it every day, week, month, and year. Is it possible that we, the most wonderful creatures of all, endowed as we are, can be negligent in learning of and teaching to our young the essentials of the proper preparation for so great a function as parenthood? I ask, again, is it possible?

Let us consider this subject of preparation in the closest aspect. It is an old subject—old as the hills. But, even in the face of this fact, we all are aware that there is much to teach and learn. False modesty is a thing of the past. Modern thought holds sway, and we welcome it. The press and pulpit, the physician and layman have taken it unto themselves until much has been written and said in such a way that untold good has resulted. This statement can be proven by observing the effect in the methods used by the cultured youth of to-day in choosing their lifemates, who, as the case may be, shall be the father or mother of their children. And we should give the youth and maiden such thorough training in the principles of parenthood that they may be better able to discern in themselves, as well as in the other, the good or bad points.

To thus bring a youth to the proper realization of the relative importance of these essentials it is necessary to begin early. Every girl thinks of the day when she will encircle with loving arms her very own cuddling baby and draw it tenderly to her breast, the while her heart thrilling with mother love. As a maiden this is about as far as she ever gets. With the boy it is seldom that he gives his coming fatherhood a thought. A girl is never given the opportunity to forget that she is other than a woman. A boy is privileged to think he can be anything he chooses all the time. Consequently, undue modesty keeps the essentials a secret in the one case, while freedom in the other brings havoc, chaos, and ruin; not to one out to both.

The only remedy is education.

Education is, must be, and can be accomplished systematically and scientifically. Nor is it a difficult problem in the present day.

INHERITANCE.

Not all children are born free from physical taints or blemishes, yet there has long been the belief that more points are inherited than is really the case. It is quite generally conceded that from the moment of the fusing of the chromatic bodies the new life is begun and is then and thereafter a distinct entity. All things actually inherited must have been included before this fusion, while all things acquired must, of necessity, follow it. Consequently, environment plays a very important role as a usual thing, not only after birth, but also during the embryonic period. If parents could be made to understand the importance of the prenatal stage, as well as the postnatal, there would be great things accomplished. As a matter of fact, both stages are sadly neglected, except in isolated cases. For instance, it is impossible for there to be inheritance, proper, of infectious diseases. There is no such thing as inherited small-pox, inherited tuberculosis, or hereditary syphilis. For, consider what such inheritances necessitate. All infectious disease, we admit nowadays, is brought about by the growth of pathogenic micro-organisms within the system. It is by the nuclear material of the spermatozoon and of the ovum that the parental properties are conveyed to the offspring; it is the molecular composition of that nuclear material that controls the organism of the developing individual. So, at the most, the disease would be transmitted from parent to offspring by means of the germ cells; it would not be strictly inherited.

It may be urged that this is a refinement of logic; that, for practical purposes, it matters little whether we have to deal with inheritance, or transmission through germ cells; that if the father has syphilis and the child is born with the disease, the fact stands evident that syphilis has passed from the elder to the younger generation; and most assuredly infectious diseases do thus pass.

We have now cleared the ground, and it may seem that very little of the nature of disease is left which can be inherited. Of actual disease, it is true, very little is left; of morbid conditions—of departures from the normal (variations), and morbid tendencies (diathesis),—much remains to be said: so much, indeed, that it is difficult to know where to stop; for to discuss these subjects adequately demands a study of the whole theory of inheritance.

If you will bear with me in a brief perusal of established facts and theories I can give you a few interesting points over which you may think and study, and which may serve as a guide in matters pertaining to the preparation for parenthood.

First, in order to think clearly over this matter, it is well to treat apart, as far as possible, two broad groups; namely, the cases in which we have to deal with the inheritance of conditions which have been passed down from earlier generations; and secondly, those cases in which abnormal conditions have manifested themselves first in one or the other parent. It is when discussing these that, to gain a grasp of their meaning and extent, we shall have to inquire into their origin and strive to establish an adequate theory of inheritance. We arrive at the same result by classifying the truly inherited morbid conditions into these classes; (1) species; (2) racial; (3) familial; and (4) individual.

(1) Species. The fixity with which those features which have for the longest period been possessed by a given stock, are the features which are most impressed on that stock, and least easily lost. It is in this broad study of species that the existence of heredity is most emphasized.

(2) Racial. Dealing with races we observe numerous minor anatomical varieties, nor can we in every case comprehend their development. Without going far afield abundant examples may be called to mind.

(3) Familial. Taking alone into consideration the instances of familial inheritance of abnormal conditions they are so numerous that it is impossible within the limits of this lecture to attempt anything approaching a complete record. Roughly, they may be divided into: (a) Gross anomalies; (b) probable anomalies of defect; (c) susceptibility* to specific infection; (d) diathetic; (e) nervous.

Strictly speaking, every property possessed by the individual which is not, or can not be, ascribed to intra-uterine influences and postnatal acquirement, is the individual inheritance. It has reached him through the parental germ-plasm. For practical purposes, however, all of these may for the moment be neglected, and merely those properties taken into consideration which, (1) peculiar to the parents as distinct from the family, reappear in the progeny; or, (2) not observable in either parent or parental stock, can only be ascribed to the interaction of the two parental germ-plasms. We have here, in short, to deal with variation, whether first appearing in the parent or in the offspring, and must of necessity inquire into the factors bringing about individual variation.

This inevitably demands an inquiry as to whether conditions acquired by the parent can be transmitted to the offspring. We approach the crucial point of the whole debate. It may seem that here we approach matters too intricate for solution—matters altogether too deep and removed to require treatment in a lecture of this kind. And yet a little thought will show here also is the crux. If the germ-plasm is fixed, and variation is due simply to amphimixis, then disease in the father should have no effect upon his children, save and except that disease be conveyed by him to the mother and so tell upon the intrauterine nutrition of the fetus; or, more remotely, be conveyed by him to these children after birth. If, on the contrary, parental disease not directly affecting the ovaries or testes can nevertheless, by toxins generated elsewhere and circulating in the blood, deleteriously influence and modify the nuclear material of the ovum or spermatozoon, just as it may modify the other cells of the body and their nuclear material, then, obviously, the molecular constitution of the individual developed from the germ-cell must vary from the normal; or otherwise parental influence is liable to affect the offspring very materially.

I think we have now delved deeply enough into the theories and problems of inheritance to give us a working basis upon which to found such practical points as are necessary in the preparation for parenthood.

News from Branches

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Since last report we have truly enjoyed a spiritual feast, as we have had a two weeks series of meetings which began November 17, through Brethren Lewis and Rushton. Edification and encouragement were received which will not soon be forgotten. The Spirit was present to a marked degree at all services. Large audiences were in attendance, among whom were many strangers. Much prejudice was removed and friends thereby made to the faith. Words can not express the joy our hearts have felt and how thankful we feel that we are numbered with God's people. Brother Rushton also gave a lecture to men only, the evening of December 2, which was very highly spoken of.

That which lent much strength to the services was three prayer services each week preceding the preaching. On Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, from 7 to 8 p. m., the Ladies' Mite Society providing a light lunch for any coming from their places of employment.

Brother Lewis left at the close of the first week's services, to labor in various parts of the district and we are pleased to anticipate an early return, as we expect him to be with us at our district conference which convenes in Saint Louis, December 14 and 15.

Brother Rushton left us this week for his home and loved ones in Independence, Missouri. We were loath to part with them because of the strength received through them, and also the pleasant association, which we trust will soon be renewed.

Our branch business meeting was held December 4, at which time the officers and committees were sustained for the ensuing term. The officers' reports evidenced they have not been idle, and conditions look bright.

A move in the right direction is a prayer service for the young people which has been started by the Sunday school, which convenes at 8.45 every Sunday morning.

The Ladies' Mite Society held a supper and bazaar the evening of December 3. They had a very large attendance and we trust it was a financial success. The proceeds are to be used for winter needs.

We would not overlook the lovely Thanksgiving service we had Thanksgiving afternoon. One hour of devotional service was engaged in, after which Brother Rushton gave a splendid talk.

The Religians are preparing a good program for the near future. We are still alive and interested in the study, so important to us all. Your sister in Christ,

Time is the cradle of hope, but the grave of ambition; the salutary counselor of the wise, but the stern corrector of fools. Wisdom walks before it, Opportunity with it, and Repentance behind it; he that has made it his friend will have little fear from his enemies; but he that has made it his enemy will have little hope from his friends.—Lacon.

In ordinary letter writing, the position for writing the date, the address, the first line of each paragraph, "Yours truly," and addressing the envelopes is reached instantly, the hands of the operator never leaving the keyboard.

Editorial

EDITORIAL COMMENT ON VARIOUS TOPICS.

THE FUTURE OF JERUSALEM AS AFFECTED BY THE BALKAN WAR.

There is considerable speculation as to the effect the present war between Turkey and the Balkan states will have upon the future of Jerusalem.

We have read a very interesting and careful exegesis of Daniel 11, which applies the closing sentence of the chapter to Turkey, wherein it says: "Yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him."

The statement, "And he shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain," is taken to indicate that when the Turk is finally driven from Europe, and must perforce abandon Constantinople, he will retire to Asia, and set up his government in Jerusalem, where he will make his last stand. This exegesis may be worthy of thought, and time will determine its merit.

In the meantime others are speculating along other lines. We note a very interesting study of the situation, by William T. Ellis, in The Outlook, for November 30, 1912, in an article entitled, "After Turkey breaks up—What?" From this article we quote:

Of all the territory in the Turkish Empire, the most precious in the eyes of the greatest number of human beings is that little strip of land lying along the northeastern end of the Mediterranean which we call the "Holy Land." Christendom and Judaism both have a peculiar and eager interest in Palestine. Here are the shrines of these two faiths. The soil of Syria was hallowed by the footsteps of the Man of Galilee, whom the world is to an increasing degree acclaiming as Master. Hungry-hearted Jews throughout the wide dispersion are also turning longingly toward this, their only fatherland.

Now Zionism is more potent than many persons know. It does not employ a press agent for all its operations. It plays a part in the world's diplomacy, through its control of financial channels, that is as potent as it is romantic. A single illustration suffices: Despite all edicts and restrictions and laws of expulsion, the Jews have remained in considerable number in Palestine. They and their friends will clearly be a factor in the settlement of the fate of this part of the Turkish Empire. The common mind of the world wills it so. The Jews themselves are not ready for a Jewish state.

This strip of land must be controlled jointly by the Powers, and made open, under equitable conditions, to Jew, Gentile, and Moslem. Religious liberty must be realized in the land where it had its birth. It should not be necessary for the traveler to take a guard to protect his life from Moslem fanaticism as he enters the Temple area. Palestine is bigger than any nation, and all flags should become one in safeguarding the precious interests of this territory, which yields such sovereignty over the hearts of men.

A GLIMPSE AT "THE HEARTS OF MEN IN OUR OWN LAND."

Many years ago the Lord said, "Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own land."—Doctrine and Covenants 38:6.

Perhaps that statement is applicable to us to-day, as much as it was to our fathers in 1831. Only recently the chief witness in the great trial growing out of the destruction of the Los Angeles Times building by dynamite, and involving many men charged with wholesale dynamiting operations, testified that at the time of the destruction of the Times building a plan was on foot to destroy the whole city of Los Angeles.

Dynamite was to be planted under the water main leading to the city. Following the explosion of this dynamite, and the consequent cutting off of the water supply, three or four picked men were to go through the city firing the larger buildings. A second San Francisco was to be made of Los Angeles. The proud city was to be wiped off the map. It could have been done. No doubt things like that will be done before this generation passes away.

Everything conspires to make such deeds of wholesale and almost instant destruction possible in these the closing scenes of time. Dynamite furnishes a convenient and powerful destructive agent. One man can carry more destructive power in a suit case or grip than was contained in a great battering ram manned by a company of Roman soldiers and directed in ponderous fashion against the walls of the enemy. The automobile and aeroplane give ability to get to a given point and away from that point with almost incredible celerity. Three or four men in an automobile could rush through a city dynamiting right and left and be gone before the guardians of the peace could possibly take any defensive action. Our complicated civilization and industrial life render modern society peculiarly exposed to such attacks,—so many people depend upon common sources of supply for things necessary to their existence. Lastly, the desperate class hatred now growing in the hearts of men fully disposes them to use the awful opportunities that are theirs to strike and destroy.

While you and I were going on about our business, this awful plan to destroy a great city was being formulated, and other deeds as bad, but on a smaller scale, were being actually perpetrated. Possibly it might have been said of us: "Ye know not the hearts of men in your own land."

FARMING ON A GIGANTIC SCALE.

Turning from the problems of war and anarchy, wherein are seen "signs of the times," we discover in modern industrial conditions certain things that are no less typical of the latter days. Below we quote a word picture of farming operations as carried on in California. What a remarkable contrast is presented between this gigantic rooting up of the earth's surface by strange monster machines, day and night, without cessation, and the old picture of the stoop-shouldered, loose-jawed "man with the hoe," laboriously turning his clods:

Caterpillar plows, equipped with searchlights, are working nights as well as days in the San Fernando Valley preparing thirteen thousand acres for sugar beets and other crops. The huge engines with wheels resting on an endless platform which prevents them sinking into the soft earth, drag behind them a series of ten plows which furrow the rich land at an astonishing rate of speed. They work twenty-two hours a day. Two crews are employed.

The American Beet Sugar Company thus is preparing to increase the acreage in sugar beets. Beans, hay and grain also will be grown on the land in alternating crops at intervals.

A weird spectacle is presented at night by the great machines, which resemble prehistoric monsters with huge eyes. The rays of brilliant light glancing off the level expanse of the fertile valley often fall on the surrounding mountains, illuminating oddly the picturesque spots in the hills. Somber peaks, rising stolidly against the skyline, suddenly are brightened with shafts and present unusual aspects unnoticed by day.

As soon as the thirteen thousand acres are plowed, beets will be planted at top speed. As the crews pass from tract to tract, they will be followed by planters. Arrangements for irrigation on an extensive scale are being made. The most scientific system will be followed by the company's experts who have had years of experience in other fields.

An old-fashioned eastern farmer accustomed to plowing small fields with mules would be aghast at the spectacle presented nightly in San Fernando Valley. When day succeeds night, there is no stopping of the engines. The lights are shut off and the work goes on steadily until time comes for the changing of the crews.—Evening Index, December 8, 1912.

AN EXALTED APOLOGIST FOR MOB VIOLENCE.

We note the following news item regarding the distinguished governor of South Carolina; of course we can not vouch for its accuracy, and trust that the purported utterances may be repudiated:

WASHINGTON, December 7.—"Don't care a damn what a few governors say about my actions at Richmond. I am accountable only to the people of South Carolina."

Thus Governor Cole Blease of South Carolina defended his speech before the governors' conference at Richmond, advocating the lynching of negro assailants of white women.

"I want to repeat," he continued, "that so long as I am governor, I will never call the militia to protect a black scoundrel who has insulted a white woman. I won't have good men shot by soldiers who have orders to protect some black brute. I was frequently misquoted in Richmond, but I do say this: if the Constitution of my State stands between me and the safety of our womanhood, then my battle cry will be: 'To hell with the Constitution.' If a negro does anything for which he deserves hanging, I'll be blamed if I will use the militia to interfere. You can also announce I expect to go to the Senate at the first vacancy in my State. I'll win easily."

When the intelligent, educated, and dignified governor of a great State makes such an apology for mob violence as this man is reported to have made, and delivers himself of such an eruption against the Constitution, it is small wonder that the ignorant, brutal, and depraved are ready to resort to those deeds of violence that are a disgrace and a menace to our modern civilization. He but serves notice that all such deeds will be tolerated within his domain.

He chooses to withhold protection from an accused negro on the grounds that he is guilty of an unspeakable crime and is not worthy of protection. In this he begs the question, as all apologists for mob rule must do, and assumes that the man is guilty, merely because he is accused. His guilt can only be determined by lawful trial, and until so found guilty, any man, black or white, is entitled to protection.

It is not alone a matter of protecting a poor, de-graded negro, who may or may not be guilty. It is a matter of protecting law and order and safety and human progress achieved through thousands of years of war and struggle. The governor need not worry about shooting "good men" who are going up against such institutions, for such are never found in a mob. He has no soldiers too good to die in defense of a negro, when it is fully understood that more than the life of a negro is at stake.

The generation that is taught or permitted to murder and lynch and burn negroes without trial is being educated in the school of anarchy and crime and will have small regard for human rights of any nature, whether represented by white or black men, if at any time those rights may appear to stand between the mob and its desires. Do we wish to see such an apologist for mob violence seated in the Senate Chamber to help make the laws that he thus teaches others to violate?

MANHOOD SUFFRAGE IN GREAT BRITAIN.

What may be regarded as the final measure in a historic series of political emancipation bills is now pending in the British Parliament. It is an adult manhood suffrage bill, and it will definitely establish citizenship rather than property as the basis of suffrage. It is a measure of simplification and democratization, dictated by the spirit of the age. The extent of the franchise contemplated by the bill is momentous. Roughly speaking, it will add 3,000,000 voters to the register and they will all come from the poorer and toiling classes.

The chief provisions of the measure are as follows:

1. No person shall be registered or vote for more than one constituency.
2. An elector may be qualified by residence or occupation, and in no other way.
3. The qualifying period of residence or occupation will be six months.
4. Voters removing from one house to another in the same constituency remain qualified in spite of change of address. Voters changing from one constituency to another retain their voting power for the constituency they have left, while qualifying for the constituency into which they have moved.
5. Town clerks of boroughs and clerks to County Councils to be registration officers, and to publish a complete register at least once a year.
6. Revision courts to be abolished, and objections to voters to be heard in the County Courts.
7. University representation to be abolished.
8. Plural voting is to be prevented by penalties. Anyone knowingly seeking to secure a plural vote will be guilty of corrupt practices, and will be liable to a fine of £200, or one year's imprisonment, and be incapacitated from voting for seven years.

At present there are about 500,000 plural voters in the United Kingdom, according to various estimates, and most of these are affiliated with the Tory Party. Plural voting is justifiable only on the principle that the citizen votes not as a man but as a proprietor or owner or representative of certain interests. The conservatives oppose the new franchise bill on this precise ground, pointing out that under "citizenship" principle the financial and commercial center known as "the city" of London would be deprived of all direct representation, since there are no residences in that quarter. The Liberal, Political and Democratic view is that, where men vote as men, every proper interest will be sufficiently protected and represented, and that the question of residence is wholly immaterial except as a basis for simple and honest registration, or the prevention of fraud.

The opposition to this manhood suffrage bill will not seriously hamper its progress. It may be rejected by the Lord, but if the present government retains power for two or more years longer, the bill will become law in spite of the upper chamber, whose veto is only suspensory now, not final. The Asquith government has suffered additional losses at by-elections, and the opposition confidently predicts the early collapse of the government and the return of the conservatives to power. The great national insurance act is still unpopular with some of its less intelligent beneficiaries, and there have occurred local strikes against that feature of it which requires contributions to the insurance fund by the workmen themselves. Other causes have tended to weaken the Asquith government. But the tide may turn, and it may succeed in carrying its important reform measures before dissolving Parliament.

Reverting to the question of suffrage, the possibility of adult womanhood suffrage is just now considered to be remote. The government will maintain a neutral attitude, and a woman suffrage amendment will be proposed and voted on in the Commons. It is not expected to pass, but a moderate "conciliation" woman suffrage bill, enfranchising about one million women, may be re-introduced and put through. It is certain that the tactics of the militant and extreme suffragettes have injured the cause of equal suffrage in Parliament, if not in the country at large.

The foregoing is taken from The Chautauquan, December, 1912. Whatever may be said about the present era, it is quite evident that there is a great struggle going on, both in America and abroad, for the emancipation of man. The ideals of democracy, the rights of man, the dignity of man (as man, stripped of property and lineage), these things are receiving a new and broader interpretation.

While property rights should still be respected, a much-needed emphasis is being placed on human rights. Both in America and in Great Britain the sentiment is growing that men and not dollars or pounds and shillings should vote at the polls, and sit in the legislative halls. Quite in line with this idea is the bill, the details of which are set forth in the above, which gives the right of franchise to a man as a citizen, and not as a property holder. Why one man should have several votes merely because he has inherited an estate or title and his neighbor should have no vote at all merely because his father was poor is a thing that we have never been able to understand. The new rule is more in line with principles laid down in Doctrine and Covenants, and is a step toward equality and justice.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

The translation of hymns into barbaric languages has often given rise to the singing of very humorous and incongruous sentiments.

For instance, the hymn commencing, "Go, labor on. Spend and be spent," was translated into the language of the Congo. It was only after the hymn had been sung far and wide that the missionary translator discovered that he had used the wrong word for "labor," and that the congregations had been made to sing, "Go, blunder on. Spend and be spent."

Nor did this end the troubles of the missionaries. For some reason or other they found the natives averse to singing the closing hymn of the service, "Lord, dismiss us with thy blessing." More exact knowledge of the native idiom confirmed them in the belief that they had inadvertently translated "Lord, dismiss us with thy blessing" into "Lord, kick us out softly, softly."—Tit-Bits, London.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY TO THE POOR.

In all ages and in all lands wherever God has had a people, the welfare of the poor has been made a prominent part of his work, and through human instrumentality their wants and needs have been supplied and their condition in life made more comfortable. One of the sure signs of an apostate church is their neglect of the poor. When John sent messengers to Jesus to find out if he were the Messiah that they were looking for, part of the answer sent back was, "The poor have the gospel preached to them." (Matthew 11: 2-5.) This was one of the evidences of the divinity of his mission. The Jews were neglecting the poor. Jesus said they "devour widows' houses and for a pretense make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive the greater condemnation." (Matthew 23: 14.)

For about two hundred years the Nephites lived according to the gospel law and there were no poor among them, and when they began to drift into apostasy the neglect of the poor and division into classes began to show itself among them.

The New Testament contains much information that the care of the poor was a very prominent part of the work of the Saints of that time; subsequent history abounds in evidence that when the spirit of apostasy had taken a firm hold, the clergy became the special objects for the bestowal of wealth, luxuries, and favors, and at the same time the poor were neglected and were no longer treated as brethren, but as paupers and objects of charity, which carried with it separation and isolation from their more fortunate brethren.

Frank J. Cannon, of Utah, son of George Q. Cannon, of note among the leaders of the dominant church in Utah, wrote extensively of that church and its people and leaders, and among other things, that were a sure indication of their apostasy, was the fact that they turned their poor over to the State to care for, and what the poor received was tithed by the church. There is not the remotest suggestion in the law of Christ that we should turn over our poor to the State to be cared for. Coupled with our duty to care for them, it is a necessary discipline for the development of personal and collective righteousness among us. We will note a few things that the standard books say on the subject:

"The poor is hated, even of his own neighbor: but the rich hath many friends."—Proverbs 14: 20.

"Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is separated from his neighbor."—Proverbs 19: 4.

"If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother."—Deuteronomy 15: 7.

"For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land."—Deuteronomy 15: 11.

"Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates."—Deuteronomy 24: 14.

The first two quotations indicate the unfortunate condition of the poor when they are among those whose hearts have not been touched by that divine power that makes us of "One heart and one mind." The latter ones give us a good view of how the Lord wanted his people to live that had just come out of Egyptian bondage; he wanted them to start right on their career as a nation. The promise was made to them that if they were obedient they would be a blessed people, enjoying all the good things that are needful to make men and women happy and joyous in this life. Among the things in which they were to be obedient was to be thoughtful and considerate of the poor. In Leviticus 19: 10 and 23: 22 the law of the Lord shows its kindly consideration of the poor in providing that in gathering grapes in the vineyard that some must be left for the poor, and in the harvest fields the gleanings and what was in the fence corners must be left by the farmer for the poor. From Acts 6: 1-4; 1 Corinthians 16: 1; and Galatians 2: 10, we glean the information that among the saints in the days of the apostles the care of the poor by the churches was a very important part of their work. The Prophet Nephi saw by vision and the spirit of inspiration what would be the condition of the various churches existing at the time the Book of Mormon would come forth. 2 Nephi 12: 12-15 (Authorized Version).

They are charged with various sins: "Yea, they have all gone out of the way; they have become corrupted," and some of the reasons assigned as the cause are, pride, false teachers, persecuting the meek and robbing the poor. In the eleventh chapter and ninety-first verse the same writer charges them with preaching their own wisdom, they "Grind upon the face of the poor," for the purpose of gain. The Prophet Alma gives an account, Alma 1: 28-45, Authorized Version, of the condition of the church during the second year of his rule as high priest over the church. After telling of some of their trials and afflictions, he tells of some of their blessings and of some things for which they are highly commended. "And they did not wear costly apparel, yet they were neat and comely": and of their kindness to the poor he said, "And they did impart of their substance, every man according to that which he had, to the poor, and needy, and the sick and afflicted."

From Mosiah we have the following: Mosiah 2: 30, 31, Authorized Version, "Perhaps thou shalt say; The man has brought upon himself this misery; therefore, I will stay my hand, and will not give unto him of my food, nor impart unto him of my substance, that he may not suffer, for his punishments are just. But I say unto you, oh man, whosoever doeth this, the same hath great cause to repent, and except he repenteth of that which he hath done, he perisheth for ever, and hath no interest in the kingdom of God."

The above would seem very harsh and appear to give an advantage to the unworthy if it were not in a measure modified by what is found in verses 43 and 44, which read as follows: "I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, and administering to their relief, both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants, and see that all things are done in wisdom and order: for it is not requisite that a man run faster than he has strength."

When the angel messenger brought the glad news of the restoration of the gospel and the authority to organize his church, a year had not passed away until the Lord spoke concerning the poor as follows: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8. In the same year we have the following as part of the instruction to the elders to prepare them for their labor, "And remember in all things, the poor and needy, the sick and afflicted, for he that doeth not these things, the same is not my disciple."—Doctrine and Covenants 52: 9.

For a number of years statesmen, philanthropists, and social reform workers have been urging that we should have national and state laws to give succor to the widow and her children. The church was directed eighty years ago to provide for such needs in the following instruction, "And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."—Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2.

The common rule among mankind is to wait until their attention is called to the needs of the poor and unfortunate before they do anything for them. The Lord's plan is different, which we learn by reading the instruction given to Bishop N. K. Whitney, he was to "travel round about and among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their wants by humbling the rich and the proud."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 23.

In 1834 the Lord said Zion could have been redeemed at that time were it not for the transgressions of his Saints, which gave power to their enemies over them, and the sins he charges them with are as follows, "But are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as-becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 1.

If the quotations above are not sufficiently plain and positive to satisfy the mind of the reader, the following ought to remove all doubts as to the Lord's attitude on the subject, and the seriousness with which he looks at it: "And, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my Saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low: for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; . . . Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2. It seems from that statement that some of the Saints, for that revelation is not to the world, will have so much dross in them that when they pass to the other side they will have to go where it can be burned out. The duty of the church and of individual members toward the poor and needy is very plainly set forth in the three books that we have quoted from, they ought to be the end of controversy, because they contain the law which is to govern us in those matters.

With equal positiveness and clearness does the law point out the duty of the poor toward the church, which must not be lost sight of. If they fail to render a faithful and cheerful obedience to the law which applies to them, they not only lose the respect and good will of those who have ministered to their needs in time of distress, but have wronged the church that has befriended them in their time of misfortune, and whose treasury has been supplied at a great sacrifice. The Lord is long-suffering and merciful toward the sinner, but he can not withhold justice from those who would knowingly wrong his church and the people who have dealt kindly with them.

In anticipation of what man would do, judging from his past experience with him, the Lord in the latter day revelations pointed out the duties of those among the poor, who might be tempted to depart from the path of duty, as well as the rich or more fortunate ones who would be guilty of committing sin by withholding what belonged to our heavenly Father, over which he had made us stewards:

"Thou shalt not be idle, for he that is idle shall not eat the bread, nor wear the garments of the laborer."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.

"Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands."—Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5.

"Now I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

"And the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his way."—Doctrine and Covenants 75: 5.

For the purpose of analysis we will divide the poor into four classes, and perhaps we can find that some of those classes can be subdivided. First: the unfortunate ones, whose condition is largely the result of circumstances over which they have no control. The widow with a family of dependent children,—money will only partially supply her wants. She needs the association of kind and sympathetic friends; she needs the advice and cooperation of the officers of the church, to assist in business matters, to take an interest in the education of her children. Her condition gives an opportunity for carrying out the law of Christ, which says, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction."—James 1: 27. The cripple is handicapped in his struggle to earn a livelihood; his opportunity to labor is limited to a few occupations, and the compensation is often less than will provide for himself, and sometimes dependent ones.

In old age, and sometimes in the prime of life, because of sickness, the struggle to obtain the necessities of life is a very hard one. If we will closely observe, we will find, in every community, men and women of sterling worth who have the respect and confidence of all who know them, that have had a hard struggle to fight life's battles; the burdens are heavy to bear and they are in no way responsible for their condition. They need a helping hand, and in such a way that they will feel that it is the expression of hearts that love them, and not stereotyped charity.

The second, and very numerous class, are those who are careless, shiftless, indolent, who have not been trained in habits of industry, economy, and cleanliness, and among the men they like to stand on street corners, idling their time away, while the weeds grow in the garden and the wife takes in washing. When work is easily had they are sick, or must go visiting; when it is hard to be found, they are looking for it. They belong to that class that are called, "Ne'er do wells," or what we had in the South before the war, "Common white trash." They had a true representative in a brother that I heard of in Independence, who went to the Ozark country because they did not work so much there and he would feel more at home. This class among our poor is the hardest to deal with; their habits of life are more or less fixed; they need to be reeducated; to be born again to habits of life that will lift them on a higher plane; they must come to a realization that their method of life is contrary to the divine law, and that they are out of harmony with their brethren who are trying to honor it. They need our sincere sympathy and love, expressed in deeds, not in maudlin words of hypocrisy. It is in a large measure the greatest task of the church, and it will ever remain so, because in the future, as in the past, the gospel will ever appeal to the poor and unfortunate. It touches their hearts as no other message does; they see in the gospel their only hope of improving their condition. In the main, they are more honest than the world in which they live; they are kind of heart, and of this none knows better than the missionary who has shared their hospitality and knows of their willing sacrifice for his comfort.

Our heavenly Father has committed to us, as a church, the solution of this great problem. It will not solve it to speak harshly and unsympathetically, and in hardness lay the blame on the unfortunate ones of this class,—it will not heal a sore to continually apply an irritant. We need men and women, of wisdom, patience, full of love and unlimited faith in God and his work. With this spiritual condition a loving Father will supply what we lack, so that we can accomplish his work. He has done it in the past and will do so again if we make ourselves worthy.

The helping societies of the church will play an important part in the uplift of the poor; they will not usurp the functions of the church, but will cooperate, and help and encourage the officers in their arduous and responsible duties. The most important part of the work of the Order of Enoch will be to assist the poor; to help them get homes, and to establish industries to furnish them employment. Those who want to honor God's law, and by that means help the poor, should give their moral and financial support to the order. It will accomplish great good because it is trying to obey our Lord's commands. The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service has the greatest opportunity to render "service" to the poor that has ever been presented to a society, and the good King Benjamin said, "When ye are in the service of your fellow beings, ye are only in the service of God." Many of our poor are not in a condition to enjoy solos, sweet music, and eloquent addresses on the mooted questions of the day,—they need the ministry of "service" in their homes; they have heavy burdens to bear; poverty, sickness, and aching hearts are in their meagerly furnished homes. The following words are very appropriate and could be used very nicely as part of a ritual for the opening of every service:

"By acts of mercy let us show
We have not heard in vain,
But kindly feel another's woe,
And long to ease his pain.

"The widow's heart shall share our joy,
The orphan and oppressed
Shall see we love the sweet employ
To succor the distressed."

There is a great deal of evil in this old world; in fact, we see so much that some are inclined to think that all of the good has left it. Not so. Wherever we look in the civilized world, and in many places among the uncivilized, we see a small army working for the uplift of their fellows. Some are working on independent lines, some through churches that they are associated with, and some cooperate with county and city governments. The printing presses are issuing tons of literature in the form of books and magazines, giving the thoughts of our most advanced thinkers and the experience of the successful workers. Not since the time Jesus taught his disciples in Jerusalem and on this continent the simple rules of life that would make men free, and their lives happy, has there been such an effort to lift up men and put sunshine into their lives as at the present time. All nations feel it, the opposition is strong and unscrupulous, but the small army is on the Lord's side, and their efforts will be crowned with good results. If it is not true, then the historian has led us astray as to the world's history.

The very important question that confronts us as a people is, Where are we going to take our stand on these important questions? The Lord told us eighty years ago what to do, and now, while the good people of the world are struggling to find a solution, we are hesitating, waiting for something to happen, to turn things upside down without us doing anything to help in the great work. Miss Wilson, youngest daughter of the President elect, Woodrow Wilson, has chosen for her life work, to labor among those of the city who need the ministration of love and kindness, to succor the distressed, to bring comfort to the sad-hearted, to assist the tired ones, to be a friend to the friendless, to be like Jesus, going about doing good. Miss Jane Addams, of "Hull House" fame, is called the "First Lady of Chicago." She has a world-wide fame, because of her philanthropic work in Chicago. When she finished her school life, about 1887, without money or fame to introduce her to the public, she went into that part of Chicago inhabited principally by foreigners, to work for their uplift. It is too long a story to tell here, but to tell it briefly, she has spent her life doing good. Twenty Years in Hull House gives an interesting account of what she has done. Is it not possible that we have in the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service one Jane Addams, one Margaret Wilson? There is a golden opportunity in Independence and Kansas City to work for the moral, social, economic, hygienic, intellectual, and religious uplift of many of our people. Will they do it, or will the Lord have to push them aside and build one out of material that will be "doers of the word and not hearers only"? The work of the "helps" in the church need in no way conflict with the officers of the church, but there should be a hearty cooperation between them all. The Lord recognized them all in seeking to accomplish his work.

The third class are those who are unable to have steady and remunerative employment. There is a class of people who believe that any man that wants work can get it if he seeks for it. Such persons so woefully exhibit their ignorance of industrial conditions in the world that their testimony before intelligent men would be taken at one hundred per cent discount. The proposition is so self-evident to the intelligent observer that I will not lengthen this paper by its intrusion for an analysis of it, but be content to give a few examples. A carpenter can only work part of the time; the storms in the summer and cold weather in winter make a closed season during part of the year. Laborers in a brick yard, on street and road work, and other outdoor work of various kinds are all limited to a short season. Many factories and mills give employment only part of the year. In many occupations the compensation, if continuous employment could be had, would not be sufficient to properly feed and clothe them. The following is an example of what we often find in a mill or factory; A is a common laborer and receives, as a wage forty dollars per month; B is a mechanic and receives eighty dollars per month; C is foreman and receives a hundred dollars per month; D is the superintendent and receives two hundred dollars per month. Work gets slack and A is the first to be laid off; B is the next one to follow, but C and D are kept on, and, work or play, they receive their pay. The would-be wise man says, "A should have saved some of his salary for the proverbial rainy day." It is too absurd to dwell on. I will leave it to the reader to reflect on the matter.

The fourth class are those who have made up their minds that they will not work as long as some one else will give them their living. They can be classed as lazy, without any qualification whatever. The wife and children are often great sufferers from this class. To withhold from one causes the innocent and needy worthy ones to suffer; to give aid encourages the lazy ones, and makes them parasites on society.

Of political conditions resulting in poor laws that add to the burden of the poor, I will not write. It is sufficient for me to know that God holds out to the church the hope of its solution under the civil laws of our country. If, as good and loyal citizens through the various political parties, we can help by the enacting of laws for the help of the poor and oppressed, we should do it most heartily.

From the above analysis we learn that the solution of the problem of the poor is a very important one; it will take great patience, wisdom, and faith to solve it. The doubter, in God's plan, the faint-hearted and grouchy, will be of no help in such a cause.

To say that the problem can not be solved is an imputation of the love, wisdom, and power of God. It has done in the past, and can and will be done in the future.

The solution of the problem is as follows: First,—To develop a class of men and women who have faith in God and his plan, and who will eliminate from their lives covetousness and selfishness; and show their love for their brethren by doing those things that God has commanded to be done to fulfill his holy law for the relief of the distressed and unfortunate ones among us.

Second,—To give financial and moral support to those whom God and the church have made the responsible leaders in the various departments of church work to accomplish the object in view.

The writer is an optimist and has unlimited faith in the Lord and the plan he has given us to work by, and believes that all hindering causes, whether from men in or out of the church will finally be overcome, and the faithful Saints will accomplish the work intrusted to them. My faith leads me to believe that in the not distant future the Saints of God, the pure in heart, in Zion, will express in song and prayer their thankfulness, because they see the fruit of their labor in seeking to lift up the poor and comfort the distressed among their brethren. It will be unalloyed joy; it will be supreme happiness.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

A good way to test the vitality of your Christianity is to ask some one to accept Jesus Christ.

Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the virtues of the universe, in comparison with the apparent insignificance of this globe, has sometimes shaken my reason for the faith which is in me; but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The Sermon on the Mount can not be a merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience. The whole history of man proves it.—Daniel Webster.

The Gathering Place.

Life changes all our thoughts of heaven;
At first we think of streets of gold,
Of gates of pearl and dazzling light,
Of shining wings and robes of white
And things all strange to mortal sight.
But in the afterward of years
It is a more familiar place;
A home unhurt by sighs or tears,
Where waiteth many a well-known face.
With passing months it comes more near,
It grows more real day by day;
Not strange nor cold, but very dear—
The glad homeland not far away,
Where none are sick, or poor, or lone,
The place where we shall find our own,
And as we think of all we knew
Who there have met to part no more,
Our longing hearts desire home, too,
With all the strife and troubles o'er.

—Robert Browning.

The Prayer Union.

Dear Home Column: Seeing Sister Eleanor's request in the HERALD, will say in answer that I am one of the sisters who has belonged to the Prayer Union since it was first organized, and have always observed the hour in my home. I was never privileged to meet with a local organization.

Yes, Sister Eleanor, I remember the memory texts that used to come to us each week with the subject for the day, as at first they were changed each Thursday. Once I remember the subject for that Thursday was "For unbelieving husbands," and so after praying for ten long years that my husband might accept the gospel, he and my sister's husband were baptized the next day. We had a meeting in progress at the home conducted by Brother I. N. Roberts. Now some might say that he would have joined the church at that time anyway, or that it just happened so, but if they knew all the mysterious conditions that were brought to bear in connection with his conversion, they could not help but see that nothing short of a miracle could have brought it to pass. I prefer to attribute it to the many prayers being offered up for the same purpose at the same time. This is only one of the many bright testimonies that has come to me through the Prayer Union.

As I write another comes to me: One Thursday morning I got up with the hiccoughs. This worried me all day and up to the hour, two p. m. I went to my room and knelt for prayer. At once I was taken with a paroxysm of coughing that seemed to almost take my breath away. I called on the Lord to remove this affliction until I could perform my duty. Instantly I was relieved and was never again afflicted in that way. Then such a spirit of prayer came, and it seemed to me that God was so near that I could touch him with my hand. I thought I was truly converted before this and could say that Jesus is the Christ, but never before did I feel the nearness of his presence to such a degree. I realize that I can not confer this knowledge upon others as it came to me, neither do I feel that I have merited such blessings. It is only through the mercy and loving-kindness of our heavenly Father.

Then after some time the subjects were to remain unchanged, so I clipped them from the HERALD and pasted them on the flyleaf of my Bible. There they are yet, but I seldom refer to them as they are so indelibly stamped on my memory. One subject, "The gathering of Israel to their native land and the restoration of the pure gospel in its fullness, and its acceptance by them to their everlasting peace," has found its fulfillment. I call to mind now how at that time it looked almost impossible for that to be brought about, looking at it from a human standpoint.

Yes, I think when the Lord put it in the heart and mind of Sister Eleanor to introduce the Prayer Union, it was one of the grandest auxiliaries to the church. After I read her book, Pattie, or Leaves from a Life, that life so full of faith, I could comprehend in a measure why she had such extraordinary faith.

While the special requests for prayer are being sent in, I would like to send mine. I have lost the sight of one eye. Am also afflicted in other ways. While the good Lord has answered my prayers so many times in life, I realize in union there is strength. Your sister in the faith,

JULIA V. NEAL.

News from Missions

California.

I am sending you a copy of the Los Angeles Times, in which is to be found a reference to the finding in the La Brea tar beds the bones of a giant camel. Professor R. C. Stoner, of the University of California, is in charge of the work. Professors J. C. Merriam and Charles Hart, it is reported, unite in pronouncing the bones the remains of a camel twice the size of the living species. Considerable notice has been given these beds, one of the richest of their kind in the country. I recently visited the grounds, which are on the western edge of this city, and saw numerous bones of birds and animals of the long ago being recovered. Many of the specimens have been sent to Berkeley. The grounds are in the oil fields, petroleum exudes from the earth, and it is in the tar pockets the bones are found, four to fourteen feet below the surface. They are imbedded in asphalt. A skull of a lion was dug out just before my arrival. I saw recovered a perfect specimen of a horse's hoof. Bones of horses, deer which never grew to be more than two feet high, wolves, bison, and of the saber-toothed tiger, sloth, and lion are all found in these pockets, which are nothing short of wonderful depositories of a portion of the world's history.

The beds are a few miles from the mountains, on the plain, in the midst of a slight depression of the earth; the theory is that the animals went there to drink and were unable to extricate themselves when once in the tar beds.

Of such interest to me are the contributions from others to the HERALD that I seldom write of my own thoughts, views, and experiences in connection with church life. Though I have not written frequently to the church papers, I need but pass a ray of consciousness over impressions of the past to revive many spiritual experiences, and happy hours, of inestimable worth, that have come to me in the church, which cause me to marvel at the indescribable goodness and power and glory of God.

From the time of my first conscious contact with Divinity, until the present moment I have esteemed the privilege of taking part in the Lord's work as of greater worth than all earthly treasure. Service intelligently rendered before God can not fail of triumph nor of reward. And so I am deeply interested in the welfare of every department of church activity, at home and abroad; the development and expansion of all the church papers, publications, and magazines, that they may become a universal power for good; the institutions for the worthy aged, for the children, and for the afflicted; the progress, difficulties, and triumphs of the ministry; and the questions of the hour that concern the whole membership of the church. What a harvest field is open to all; to both sexes in every condition of life!

Many are the avenues that are open to legitimate endeavor; and there is not room for condemnation of anyone, who, because of his gifts, is prompted to research or study along lines that contribute to the strength of the church. Ignorance must never presume to dictate, or control, or harass, the course of anyone who is inspired with a desire for a better equipment along musical, literary, or professional lines of any character, that thereby he may render a better and fuller service to the church and humanity. Ignorance is not a resultant condition of inspiration; and those who see their duty from an eminent viewpoint, must perform it, regardless of those who see only from the valley. Encouragement, and not discouragement, is the impetus that should be given, even in remote quarters, to research and study along all legitimate lines.

The work of the Palmyra Seer looms high on the horizon. It was a startling claim that was made by the young man, Joseph Smith, in the early part of the past century, when he announced that God had spoken from the heavens, once more to man; that a record of the prehistoric inhabitants of this continent was revealed by the power of God; that he is the great "I Am," and lives as truly as when the clouds of Sinai were laced with vivid lightnings and he communicated his will to Israel; that the church of Jesus Christ, after a long, dark night of apostasy, was reinstated by act and command of God, men officiating therein under priesthood power committed to earth by an angel; that peace would soon be taken from the earth, and that the time was near when he who would not take up his sword against his neighbor would have to "flee unto Zion for safety."

How startling! And yet God's unfoldment of himself can not be otherwise than of a startling character—the glories and truth of the infinite world can not burst upon the little, narrow, finite, undeveloped mind of man without producing strange emotions and causing him to pause and think about the meaning of God and life and man. The work of God in all ages is full of claims that startle: John the Baptist, sent of God, in the wilderness bringing to naught the kingdom of the Jews; the remarkable birth of Jesus; appearance of angels all through biblical history; the intrusion of a holy power into the persons of men and women which constrained or permitted them to sense events of futurity, and speak them forth in prophecy; speaking intelligently in strange and unlearned tongues; sick healed through faith in God, in the name of Christ; dead raised; reappearance of Christ to the church after his death; his triumphal and glorious ascension in the clouds. How startling is it all!

The dead claims of the sectarian churches that God does not speak to man; no miraculous power now that can be put in operation; no inspired ministry, etc., does not blend with Christianity.

Multitudinous forces, ominous of danger to individual and social life, are daily brought clearly to view. A resort is made by many to numerous expedients for the establishment of social tranquility. But a crisis is inevitable. A rejection of God is followed by forces that make the world empty. A crisis is the culmination of a series of mistakes. A world's crisis is not far away. "Darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people"; the world can not see God in the stillness of a calm—scarcely is he thought of in the thunders and tempests.

God has spoken to the church by way of tempest and in the calm—have we perceived our God in it all? Have we, regardless of his tender mercies, and everlasting goodness, hidden our faces from our "own flesh"? Have we walked with our God, and counted it a joy? See the dark days of the church, its division, and many led to Utah, and see the tempest! See the children of the fathers who are true returning and building up Zion, reinhabiting the waste places. See the calm! I see the clouds breaking, the tempest clearing, and Zion coming forth to bless the world.

Jots by the Wayside.

We have just finished a series of meetings at Scammon, Kansas. The new church is now plastered and completed, and it is a great source of rejoicing for that faithful, noble, little branch of God's people, and stands as a striking monument of perseverance and fidelity for and to the cause they love so well. By the citizens of the village it is remarked: "It is marvelous, how have you done it?"

Our half-brother, Frank Jones, of Lamoni fame, kindly plastered the building. It was a freewill offering on his part; the Saints furnishing the material. He is an afflicted man, scarcely able to work on a scaffold, yet his testimony is, "I never felt better in my life than I have since commencing this job." The Lord has truly aided all who have so generously toiled, and their rewards are sure.

We were impressed to come here (Joplin), yet it was against other arrangements made. The only thing we could think of was a new church at Joplin while we had our hand in. On consulting the president of the branch we were informed, "nothing doing," but were urged to stay over Sunday. Sunday morning the old church was full from the opening of Sunday school, to the benediction at nine in the evening. We are pleased to note that it was the most spiritual meeting that we have experienced in the Spring River District or anywhere else for many years. Another long mark on memory's walls; another green spot in our pathway of life. The house seemed to be filled with a halo of light, and nearly all were melted to tears. The communication from God, rebuking in a measure, encouraging and instructive to a large degree, as a whole was very inspiring indeed.

Brother Sidney Gray was called to the office of elder; Brother Walter Christensen to the priest's office; and Brothers Ray Foster and George Pierson to that of teacher. All were accepted and ordained with the exception of the elder, and he was recommended to the coming conference. A priesthood meeting is called for Tuesday night and we remain to take part in it. We feel assured with these additions a greater unity will prevail, an impetus be given that will result in great good to the work here, and it is not improbable that before the sear and yellow leaf shall again come a magnificent new church will be reared to accommodate the increasing throngs. For Sunday's service, so far as the writer is concerned, it is with feelings of profound gratitude that we render thanks to our merciful Lord, and with equal regrets do we recall some facts in our checkered career which we have sorely repented of, indicative of the fact that at that time we did not appreciate the preserving hand of the Lord as we should have done. It is not because of our own righteousness we have escaped, but for the good we could do for others under the divine hand. We feel assured, however, we have fought a fearful fight with the flesh and the Devil, and by our own actions have strung up on memory's walls some few pictures of regrets, and as the sands of life run out and we near the other shore, we are glad to say we are still in the bow of the boat, looking forward to the rewards we have earned by vigilance and sacrifice.

This reminds us, we had a sly hint from home—if we did not come home for Christmas we need not come at all—we're going, sure.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Minnesota; Greeting: I have lately been appointed to labor in the Minnesota District, until the conference, in the interests of the general church work, and especially to teach the financial law. In beginning the work we find the Saints so badly scattered that it becomes necessary to endeavor to reach some of the isolated ones through the columns of the HERALD. Surely the Lord has blessed the earth with a bountiful crop this year, and especially has the Northwest reaped a splendid harvest of good things. I wonder how many have stopped to consider the fact that we owe a debt to the Giver of all we receive. Let us not thoughtlessly "rob God of the tithes and offerings," but see that we get all "the tithes into the storehouse" as soon as possible, that the work of the spread of the gospel may not be impeded. "Let every man be diligent in all things," is a commandment with promise, and one that can not be neglected, and yet we be blessed of God. If there are any that have never paid tithing, have you ever stopped to think that it is as specifically commanded as are faith and repentance? "Without faith it is impossible to please God," and, "Except you repent you shall all likewise perish," are no more emphatic than: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming), . . . Wherefore, if ye believe me ye will labor while it is called to-day."—Doctrine and Covenants. Can we believe the former and reject the latter and yet claim allegiance to the accepted revelations to the church? Can we read the following unmistakable claim upon the part of Jehovah as to what is due him for the free and untrammled use of his talents, his soil, his sunshine, his air, his moisture, and his life; and expect to be forgiven the debt when we stand at the great Judgment Bar?

"And all the tithes of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord."—Numbers 27: 30.

"Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase."—Proverbs 3: 9.

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Malachi 3: 8-10.

The nation stands condemned of robbery. Shall the Saints likewise forget their God? My contention is that if all the tithes were brought into the storehouse, there would be plenty and to spare for the more complete carrying on of the work of the church. There are men in this church that will face an awful debt when they face the judgment. My experience is that four in ten are really observing the law of tithing, and the query is, What will be the consequences in the day of burning?

If we have been negligent in the past, let us become diligent for the future and see that this year the Lord's portion is not withheld. Saints of Minnesota, send your tithes and offerings to the writer, or to Leon A. Gould, Bemidji, Minnesota. R. R. 1.

There are any scattered Saints that can secure new openings in the State, will you kindly write me for arrangements for services. Send all money and communications to Ward L. Christy, 1111 Seventeenth Avenue North, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Teachers of Southeastern Mission.

We met at Dixonville, Alabama, according to previous announcement, on October 25, and were organized into a quorum, with the few who were there. I take this means of notifying the other members of the quorum as to what was done. T. J. Booker was elected president, with W. H. Drake counselor. A resolution was passed that each member be assessed twenty-five cents for quorum dues, which is to pay all expenses of the quorum. Adjourned to meet at the call of the president. Let the brethren be active and alive in the work, and prompt in answering letters of the president and secretary, for this work is important.

Resolutions of Condolence.

At a quarterly conference of the Spring River District the following preamble and resolutions were ordered:

Whereas, Our Father in heaven has permitted the removal of our much esteemed and beloved brother, Bishop George H. Hilliard, and, whereas, The removal of such a faithful life and coworker from our midst leaves a vacancy and a shadow expressive of our serious loss to church and state; therefore,

Be it resolved, That with deep sympathy with the bereaved wife and family, we express our hope that even so great a loss to them and the church may be overruled by the power of Him that "doeth all things well." We recognize a great loss to church and country, that the masses can scarcely appreciate, but those of us who have followed his work closely and noted his wonderful faith, fidelity, and golden worth, will feel the keen sense of his loss to the work he loved so well, and to those who came under a personal acquaintance and the benefit of his wise counsels have suffered a personal loss in his demise. The branches will miss him, where he strove to be a peacemaker. The conference will miss him, where his wondrous storehouse of useful information, shedding light on vexed problems, ever freighted with firmness, loyalty, and love, was greatly appreciated. His last words were filled with calm resignation, evidenced by: "Brother _____, I knew I would get well in my last sickness; but I am saying nothing now." Hence his death was not an unwelcome intruder. He died as he lived, firm in the faith of a glorious resurrection. We commend his loved ones to the wondrous love of the God he served, with a prayer that their earth life and end will leave on church and state as hallowed a glow as does the life of George H. Hilliard.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the district; also published in the HERALD, and a copy furnished to the bereaved wife and family.

Signed:

T. W. Chathurn, president of the district; W. H. Smart, president of the quorum of elders; Sidney Gray, president of the quorum of priests; George D. Ross, president of the quorum of teachers; John Virgen, president of the quorum of deacons.

Died.

KNAPP.—Little Philip Eugene Knapp, son of Brother and Sister P. Knapp, of San Diego, California, was born at Phoenix, Arizona, November 2, 1910. He was blessed by Levi Hemenway, and J. Rulin, June 12, 1912, and fell asleep November 26. Funeral at the residence, 4043 I Street. Many friends were present to pay a last tribute of respect to this little sunbeam whose sunshine could be felt no more, except in sweet memory. Interment in the city cemetery. His spirit has flown away to the gardens of heaven. Sermon by Levi Hemenway.

DAY.—William B. Day, husband of Sister Bertha (Brown) Day, died at the home of his birth near Stockport, Iowa, December 8, 1912, aged 44 years, 7 months, 3 days. He was married to Sister Bertha Brown, November 27, 1894, at Keosauqua, Iowa, by Elder James McKiernan. Mr. Day leaves his wife, six sons, and one daughter to mourn the loss of a father's care. Only five weeks previous Sister Day had lost her mother. Funeral was at Winchester Methodist Episcopal church, Elder James McKiernan in charge, and interment in nearby cemetery.

KNISLEY.—Hazel Gill, born in Emerson, Iowa, December 26, 1887; died December 7, 1912, at Boise, Idaho. She was blessed in childhood by Henry Kemp, baptized at eleven years of age by J. F. Mintun, received her patriarchal blessing under the hands of Alexander H. Smith, and was married to Alvin Knisley at Shenandoah, Iowa, in March, 1909. When deceased was about one year old the Gill family moved from Emerson to Saint Edwards, Nebraska, where she was brought up and schooled. She graduated there from the high school, afterwards qualifying herself for teaching, by a course at the normal, of Peru, Nebraska. About six years ago the family moved to Idaho, where Brother Knisley met her while on a mission there. She taught school in Nebraska and Idaho. She spent a period in Graceland during 1908-09. Her sickness began about the middle of August, 1912. Her husband and a little boy, latter less than three years of age, survive. One funeral was held in Boise, discourse by New Madden; one in Independence, discourse by J. W. Rushton, burial being at latter place.

MOORE.—James William Moore was born July 29, 1843; baptized January 20, 1876, by J. C. Foss, at Lebanon, Ohio; ordained teacher July 9, 1876, by Edmond Thomas; died November 12, 1912. According to his testimony, he held office of priest and labored one year as missionary; he also served in the Civil War and received a pension. He was a great sufferer during the latter period of his life, and finally succumbed to the dreaded disease, asthma.

LEEDER.—Jacob N. Leeder, youngest son of Elder Ed. and Sister Elizabeth Leeder, was born at Port Elgin, Bruce County, Ontario, November 27, 1902; was baptized by Elder A. Leaverton, July 16, 1911; died of acute Bright's disease, December 1, 1912. Services were held over the remains in the Saints' church, near Port Elgin, December 2, and interment made in Port Elgin cemetery. Jakie was a very bright little boy, and the pet of the family, and will be missed very much from the family circle. Sermon by W. D. Ellis, assisted by James Dobson.

FOX.—Glen Owen, son of Owen and Adaline Fox, died November 23, at about 6.15 p. m., after an illness of over three weeks, beginning with pleuro-pneumonia, and followed with a complex series of diseases. He was 2 years, 1 month, and 11 days of age. From the time that affliction made its appearance to the close of his life all that human skill in medicine, surgery and nursing could do, supplemented by many faithful prayers was done, but it was not to be that our selfish desires should be gratified in health being restored. He is now freed from his sufferings, and his spirit in better associations than mortality could give to him, even though those earthly associates were filled with the highest attributes of love.

'Tis a sweet, peaceful rest comes to those who are pure,
When they shall pass through the change called death:
This thought comes with comfort now that we're bereft
Of one of whom our blessed Savior sayeth
"Of such is the kingdom of heaven" composed,
And invites such to come unto him;
To which invitation with regrets we consented
Because we thought it should not thus have been.

We are to relieve the distressed, put the wanderer into his way, and to divide our bread with the hungry, which is but the way of doing good to ourselves; for we are only several members of one great body.—Seneca.

A nation is not a conglomeration of voters, to be represented by hungry politicians empowered to partition the spoils of office, but a people animated by a common impulse and seeking to work out a common destiny. The destiny of America is mutual service; labor is the corner stone of our nationality, the labor of each for all.—Emerson.

There is a principle which is a bar against all information; which is proof against all argument, and which can not fail to keep a man in everlasting ignorance. The principle is contempt prior to examination.—Herbert Spencer.

What is a failure? It's only a spur

To the man who received it right,

And it makes the spirit within him stir

To go in once more and fight.

If you never have failed, it's an even guess

You never have won a high success.

The Climax of Efficiency in the billing and tabulating typewriter is attained through the latest Remington development—

the Tabulator Set Key

This single key sets the Decimal Tabulator Stops for every variety of billing, form and tabular work. You simply move the carriage to the desired points on the paper and at each point strike the set key—that is all. Hand settings are avoided; all complications are eliminated. The setting of the stops is as quick and simple as the operation of the Tabulator itself.

The Set Key completes the work of bringing every act in the operation of the Tabulator within the compass of the keyboard. It makes the operation of the Billing and Tabulating Remington as easy and as simple as ordinary typewriting.

He who reigns within himself and rules passions, desires, and fears, is more than a king.—Milton.

We know the austere condition of liberty—that it must be recognized over and over again; yea, day by day; that it is a state of war; that it is always slipping from those who boast it to those who fight for it.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Strange it is, that men should admit the validity of the argument for free discussion, but object to their being "pushed to an extreme"; not seeing that unless the reasons are good for an extreme case, they are not good for any case.—John Stuart Mill.

A New Book

has just been issued, entitled

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

(1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.

(2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.

(3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.

(4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a.

California in the Winter Time

Why not? It's the Land of Out-o'-doors! It's the best place on earth to go to escape the winter; a grand place for the weary to rest and for the weak to be refreshed!

If your neighbor has been there, ask him. He knows. And it doesn't cost a great deal to spend a month there, either. Ask him about that, also. And it doesn't cost much nowadays to get there. Ask me. Burlington Personally Conducted Tours have greatly increased the pleasure of going and at the same time decreased the cost to the minimum.

Wouldn't you like to be away from business, away from household responsibilities, away from care and worry? Wouldn't you enjoy health! rest! change! rejuvenation? Come in and get your copy of our California folder, and then after you decide just what point you want to visit, I'll gladly help you plan all the details of the trip so that you can get every possible benefit out of it.
