THE LAWYER IN THE CASE; WHAT IS HIS RESPONSIBILITY.

The aftermath of the trial of the McNamara brothers at Los Angeles, on the charges of destruction of property and the taking of human life, is not pleasant to look upon. Peculiar questions, difficult to answer, are inevitably suggested to the mind of the looker-on. How far reaching is the responsibility that rests upon the professional lawyer in such a case as the one under consideration! Does the duty of the lawyer to his client in such a case arrest and hold in abeyance the obligation which the lawyer must hold and answer for to society and the State? Is he relieved of moral obligation to the popular sentiment and will of the people? Is he under obligation to take cognizance of the moral sense which governs popular opinion? Take the case under discussion under consideration.

Attorney Clarence S. Darrow was a professional lawyer, who by his talent had acquired a wide reputation as what is called a criminal lawyer; meaning, a successful pleader for his clients charged with crime before the courts of the law. He was hired to defend the McNamara brothers. He was paid, or was to be paid, for such defense a sum of money staggering in amount to the average mind. How did this hiring of his talents as a lawyer relieve and discharge him from his duty to the general public and the welfare of the state? These questions all arise in the mind of the looker-on, taking cognizance of what is going on, and thinking upon the various phases of such cases, as the trial of them proceeds.

Did Clarence S. Darrow, when he consented to take the enormous fee and to enter upon a defense of the McNamara brothers, know that they were guilty of the offense charged? If he did know that they were guilty, how far did his duty go, as a citizen of the state and as a lawyer, to see that his client had a fair and impartial trial before the courts? With such knowledge of guilt in his understanding, was he justified in ignoring the consciousness of such guilt, and making the attempt to prevent the conviction of his client, by the use of the tactics for delay and hindrance to the inquiry of justice, known to the technical practitioner at the bar? At what time between the arrest of the McNamara brothers at Detroit, Michigan, and the day on which he declared to the court that his clients desired to change their pleas of "not guilty" for one that openly confessed their guilt, did the knowledge of such guilt come to Clarence S. Darrow? Was it the result of the confidential confession by his clients to him as their attorney, or was it upon the revelation of such guilt, resulting from the contemplation of the array of facts concerning such guilt, as displayed by the prosecution in the case? If the former, how long after such confession was Attorney Darrow justified in keeping the knowledge of such confession from the court? If the latter, the same question might be applied. In other words, the plain question is: Was the attorney, Darrow, standing before a court of the country, under the majesty of the law, with knowledge that the clients in whose defense he stood, were guilty, justified in going beyond the plain duty of an attorney, to see that his client had a fair and impartial trial, preventing any act of injustice toward them through the malevolence of the prosecution, or any departure from the just rules of jurisprudence to prevent a conviction?

The ordinary bystander, looking at the procedure before the court, instinctively feels that an honorable and upright citizen of the state, though he be a lawyer, is not justified in any effort to defeat the ends of justice, by any "tricks of the trade," known to the professional lawyer. Said bystander knows that a great crime against society has been committed. He knows that an effort is being made to bring the offender to justice. He may feel an assurance that the accused are innocent of the crime charged. He knows that the machinery of the courts has been invoked to discover whether the accused are innocent, as he feels that they are. He knows that, the crime having been committed, some one or more must have committed it. Who was it? It is the object of the prosecution before the court to discover who the guilty person or persons may be, and the investigation before the court is to discover whether the accused be guilty of the crime charged. The prosecution is not justified in going beyond his duty to the state, by exercising any degree of maliciousness or spite towards the accused person on trial before the court.

By a parity of reasoning the defense in any case before the courts, in which an individual is charged with gross crime against the state, would not be justified in viciously withholding from the knowledge of the court his knowledge of the guilt of his clients, under the plea that his duty to his clients demands that (notwithstanding his knowledge of their guilt) he shall at any hazard of his reputation as a citizen, and by any trick, or appeal to any technicality known to the practice before such courts, attempt to save them from a just punishment. Any departure from the rule of right proceeding on the part of counsel on either side would be reprehensible.

From the foregoing questions and the reasoning suggested by them, it appears that the sudden abandonment of the defense of the McNamara brothers, occurring in the court at Los Angeles, presided over by Judge Bordwell, presents a singularly peculiar spectacle for inquiry and speculation. It is stated that Attorney Darrow had said that he had known for some months of the certain conviction of his clients, and consequently had knowledge of their guilt; and yet he continued his efforts to shield them from the action of the inquiry and prevent their conviction.

It is said that the McNamara brothers, as members of a labor union, by their plea of guilty did betray not only the union to which they belong but the cause of labor in general; that the previous stout denial of their innocence misled the labor unions all over the country, and that their confession of guilt when made was a direct betrayal of the confidence of these labor unions, and calculated to put them in a false and injurious light before the world. Was it such betrayal, or was it inevitable and just bowing to the actual truth in the case and the irony of fate which follows the evildoer? How far, then, is Clarence S. Darrow, attorney-at-law, under the influence of a great fee, raised by these labor unions, under the conviction of the innocence of the McNamara brothers, implicated in such betrayal? As to the sum raised for the defense of the McNamara brothers, enormous as it was, and gathered from the stated sources, what became of it? Into whose hands did it fall, and by whom was it expended? Was it Mr. Darrow? If it was, will he be responsible for the use made of it, and the manner of its expenditure? To whom and for what was it paid, and will he report to the labor union to which the accused brothers belonged, or to the court before which the accused was brought, and the investigation as to their guilt or innocence was made? Will the general public be permitted to know how this fund was used? Mr. Darrow may answer that it is no business of the general public.

Other men, under similar circumstances of apparent collusion with guilt, have made similar answers; but the denial that it was no part of the business of the public, does not stifle the inquiry nor prevent the recurrent asking of the questions. It is the business of the public to know of and by legitimate means in their power to aid the public administrators of the law, to ferret out the sources of criminality, and proceed against those who commit crime against society, in which the destruction of property and the taking of human life are involved. It is as a consequence the business and right of the public to know in what manner the obligations of the state and the defenders of the accused conduct the respective duties devolving upon them.

Hence the justness of the inquiry; how, by whom, to whom, and for what was the defense fund, raised by the labor unions for the defense of the McNamara brothers, before the California court, expended? Whatever balance there may have been left after legitimate expenses incurred by the effort to defend the accused have been paid, must be accounted for, to somebody. And it seems just to conclude that it should be reported to and accounted for to those labor unions, societies, and individuals, who may have contributed to the fund, that it may be disposed of by them, by the voice of the whole body, or turned into the treasury of each contributing union, society, or individual, contributing to the fund, in proportion to the amount each had subscribed.

Upon consideration of the questions above asked, it must be discovered that the aftermath of the trial before the court at Los Angeles, in the case referred to, is not pleasant to look upon, from the contemplated moral point of view, inevitably to prevail in the minds of the general public.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

RELIGION AT HOME.—Dr. Nicholas Murry Butler, president of Columbia University, New York, in his report for 1911 expresses his regrets that college students lack early religious training. He says: "Home training in religion has in this generation all but disappeared, and that which formerly supplied the foundation on which the college might build is no longer to be relied upon. Compulsory measures to overcome this deficiency are neither wise nor successful. Sensational methods are as objectionable on the grounds of principle as of taste, and they produce no permanent results. Already, since the system now in operation at Columbia went into effect, a noteworthy change in the student attitude toward religion has been noticed."

Bro. James Yates lately received the following notice in the local paper at Ripley, Oklahoma, the item being accompanied with a halftone cut of the brother:

"Elder James Yates, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Mr. Yates and family took up their residence in Ripley four years ago and since coming have organized a church of their faith and have a growing congregation. They are erecting a new two thousand dollar church which is nearing completion."

A WOMAN PASTOR.—The Kansas City Journal announces that a prominent local church has appointed a woman as assistant pastor. It is thought that the assistant pastor in this case can carry the social end of the pastorate, looking after pink teas, and the more important work of acting as advisor and spiritual counselor to the women of the pastorate, thus leaving the pastor with more time to prepare his message for pulpit delivery on Sunday. We believe that every pastor should have a woman assistant. He needs the help, counsel, comfort, and moral support of a woman. But this female assistant should be his wife. She can do more for him without ordination than a dozen ordained women pastors can do. In fact, she has been ordained to just that position by the great God who gave her to be his helpmeet.

WE SHOULD NOT HAVE RESPECT TO PERSONS.—Mr. Charles Stelzle, in his work, The Church and Labor, says: "We take it upon ourselves to say many things to the workingman that we do not dare to say to his employer, because the workingman is helpless and he doesn't own the pews in our church." Mr. Stelzle is a leading Presbyterian. However, he does not confine his criticism to his own denomination. And it is a fact that the impression obtains widely among workingmen that the sins of the rich and powerful members of the congregation go unrebuked from the pulpit. This is one cause of the alienation of workingmen from the churches. It should not be so. God is no respecter of persons. The Scriptures very plainly teach that we should not have regard for class distinctions of this kind. Evil is evil wherever found. Duty is duty, no matter of whom it may be required. We must insist that the wealthy and powerful conform to the law just as completely as the poor are required to do. Money can not buy immunity in the sight of God.

ONE REASON WHY MEN QUIT THE MINISTRY.—In a recent address before a conference of ministers, Rev. Edward Talmage Root, field secretary of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, mentioned the fact that ministers are leaving the ministry. He spoke of one conference of a certain denomination in Massachusetts that had lost four men during one year. He declared that one reason was because of small salaries—salaries that do not enable the minister to educate his children. But he also uttered this significant statement: "A deeper reason is that they feel that in spite of all the sacrifices, they are not working for the kingdom of God." This is about what Joseph Smith told the ministers of the various denominations nearly a century ago. The message was not heeded then; but experience forces it home. There is no satisfaction in working to build up purely human institutions.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY NOT HUMBLE.—One of the most drastic criticisms that we have heard passed on modern so-called Christianity refers to the fact that Christ's ministers are required to be humble, while the great missionary nations of to-day, those that are sending missionaries to the "heathen," are blatantly proud and boastful. Great Britain, Germany, and the United States are cited as examples.

AN HONORARY ELECTION.—Pres. Frederick M. Smith a few days ago received a handsomely engraved announcement that he had been nominated for membership in the Academy of Political Science, of New York City; and upon his acceptance would be enrolled as a member and the current literature be sent him. The announcement contained the mark of the seal of the institution together with the signatures of the officers. The honor comes unsolicited and without knowledge to Bro. Smith until he received the announcement. He has notified the academy of his acceptance. We understand this honor is given only to those who have done sufficient studying along the lines designated by the academy.—Zion's Ensign.

JEWS AND CHRISTMAS.—"There are in New York over a million Jews, most of these having been in America long enough to have no animosity whatever toward Christianity. They simply treat it with a superb indifference, rather as they do their own religion. They have no religion at all. They attend neither church nor synagogue. The average Jew in New York is simply an accumulator of wealth and a seeker of pleasure. Even those Jews who have more recently come among us from places where they have good reason to hate Christianity are not immune from the Christmas spirit, for one can not go through any section of the city where the Jews flock together without becoming speedily aware that here, too, Christmas is being celebrated. There are Christmas decorations in the windows, and it is not uncommon to see in the little parlor a lighted Christmas tree. The Jewish shops are all decorated with ferns and evergreens. Your Jewish friend greets you with a "merry Christmas." The Jews are giving Christmas presents, just as are the Christians, to each other. He may not take the name of Christ upon his lips, but he is taking the practice of Christ upon his heart. He may not say that he is a follower of Christ, that he has the mind of Christ, but in reality on this Christmas Day he is following the Lord of love and is looking out upon life through the eyes of the Great Giver of good gifts. He has come under the spell of the altruistic life, which is the one great note of the Christmas gospel for this one day at least."—New York Evangelist (Pres.).

BOOK REVIEWS.

SCRAP BOOK OF MORMON LITERATURE.—The HERALD editors are in receipt of two volumes entitled, A Scrap Book of Mormon Literature. These books contain 570 pages each, and are mostly made up of tracts written from the viewpoint of Utah Mormonism. Some of these tracts are in reply to publications issued by the Reorganized Church and were widely distributed some years ago by the Northern States Mission, including such tracts as The Corner Stones of the Reorganization. The book is gotten up by Elder Ben E. Rich, and the two volumes cost $3.50. They are to be obtained from the Deseret News Book Store, Salt Lake City, The Liahona, Independence, Missouri, or the publisher, Ben E. Rich, 33 East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street, New York City. The books contain considerable matter that may be of interest to our elders who are posting up on the Utah question.

WORLD ORGANIZATION AND THE MODERN STATE.—This is the title of a book published by Columbia University Press, agents Lemcke and Buechner, 30-32 West Twenty-seventh Street, New York. The author is David Jayne Hill, and the text consists of eight lectures delivered before the Columbia University, during March, 1911, on the Carpentier Foundation.

FIVE GREAT PHILOSOPHIES OF LIFE.*—In this work, which is a revised and considerably enlarged edition of From Epicurus to Christ, Pres. Hyde of Bowdoin College has studied in their chronological order five great moral systems, produced from the birth of Socrates to the death of Christ. These were the Epicurian pursuit of pleasure, genial but ungenerous; the Stoic law of self-control, strenuous but unforbidding; the Platonic scheme of subordination, sublime but ascetic; the Aristotelean sense of proportion, practical but uninspiring, and the Christian spirit of love, broadest and deepest of them all.

His plan has been to make each philosophy speak in measure for itself, accompanying this exposition by narrative comment and final deductions showing that each had in it some element of good, and that in the Gentile world there was a constant progress, culminating in Aristoteleanism, the most nearly perfect of these philosophies, but yet insufficient, and requiring for the emancipation of man, Christianity, which is not a philosophy but a religion, not a doctrine but a life, not the performance of a task but the maintenance of certain personal relationships; in a word, the spirit of love or charity.

In Christianity all that was good in the ancient philosophies is embraced, and those forms of it which lack any of these elements are imperfect. Thus, according to Pres. Hyde, ascetic Puritanism, for instance, is Christianity minus the truth taught by Epicurus. While its main motive is to show that it is by the inclusion of whatever elements of truth and worth other systems have separately emphasized that a Christianity shall be reached which is really catholic. The book forms a useful and clear method of comprehending the systems of heathen philosophy of which he treats, and of comparing their relations to each other. It is, therefore a valuable volume for both the theological and the secular student. Its influence will confirm that vogue of thought which is replacing biology by sociology, and which realizes that it is a much more fundamental study to classify the spiritual life of the world than the animal and vegetable.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 16.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

METALS IN ANCIENT AMERICA.

The Book of Mormon teaches us that the metals were used on the American Continent, and that all kinds of precious ore were not only wrought, but refined:

-And behold, there was all manner of gold in both these lands [North and South America], and of silver, and of precious ore of every kind; and there were also curious workmen, who did work all kinds of ore, and did refine it; and thus they did become rich.—Helaman 2: 27.

The ornaments in the Temple of the Sun, at Cuzco, described previously, with the "inner and outer walls," covered with "sheets of gold," the three great temples of Palenque, alone, in Central America, will attest the truth of the book on this point.

The three massive temples in the latter place are characterized respectively as follows:

1. "The Temple of the Cross."
2. "The Temple of the foliated Cross, number 2."
3. "The Temple of the Sun."

Three great structures with inscriptions made in stone! Surely, Mr. Traum, these, and the numberless other monuments of America which you have described, were not erected with arrowheads, flint chips, teeth, and bones.

But in the beginning of the Nephite civilization on this western soil, the Book of Mormon declares:

And I did teach my people to build buildings; and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious ores, which were in great abundance.—Page 64.

And we multiplied exceedingly, and spread upon the face of the land, and became exceeding rich in gold, and in silver, and in precious things, and in fine workmanship of wood, in buildings, and in machinery, and also in iron, and copper, and brass, and steel, making all manner of tools of every kind to till the ground, and weapons of war; yea, the sharp pointed arrow, and the quiver, and the dart, and the javelin.—Page 133.

As in the former chapter, Mr. Traum snatches at little excerpts of testimony describing the present conditions of the people inhabiting the territory of the ancients on this continent. He questions Foster as "treating iron as a civilizing agency." True it is, and the Nephites putting it to use on this continent, evidences their civilization. Baldwin, whose work is now before me, says:

It is impossible to conceive how the Peruvians were able to cut and work stone in such a masterly way, or to construct their great roads and aqueducts without the use of iron tools. Some of the languages of the country, and perhaps all, had names for iron.—Ancient America, p. 248.

But, Mr. Traum, the ancient Americans dealt in "gems" and precious stones, "engraved with hieroglyphics"; the "jadeite and other stones of a similar green color, and the turquoise, both represented as lustrous bodies, like brilliantly polished mirrors sending out eyes, or rays, in four directions."—Bureau of Ethnology Bulletin 28, p. 150.

Were these hieroglyphs written in these stones with teeth or with stone points?

In 1892, at the American Historical Exhibition in Madrid, Guatemala was represented by beautiful archæological remains, "one of which was the Egyptian scarabæus found in the lake of Amatitlan."—Bureau of Ethnology, p. 77.

This engraved stone was, of course, wrought with the teeth of the savage, according to Traum. That "iron" was unknown to the people in the time of the "Incas," or the revival of "arts," long after the period of "disintegration" and "disorder," we may admit, but of the times previous to that, Mr. Baldwin says:

Iron was unknown to them in the time of the Incas, although some maintain that they had it in the previous ages, to which belong the ruins of Lake Titicaca. Iron ore was and still is abundant in Peru. It is impossible to conceive how the Peruvians were able to cut and work stone in such a masterly way, or to construct their great roads and aqueducts without the use of iron tools. Some of the languages of the country, and perhaps all, had names for iron; in official Peruvian it was called quillay, and in the old Chilian tongue panitic. "It is remarkable," observed Molina, "that iron, which has been thought unknown to the ancient American, has particular names in some of their tongues." It is not easy to understand why they had names for this metal, if they never at any time had knowledge of the metal itself.—Ancient America, p. 248.

It is stated that "anciently the Peruvian sovereigns worked magnificent iron mines at Ancoriamas, on the west shore of Lake Titicaca." "It is remarkable," says Molina, "that iron, which has been thought unknown to the ancient Americans, had particular names in some of their tongues." In official Peruvian it was called quillay, and in Chilian panitic.—Atlantis, p. 451.

In the Administrative Report for the year 1903, or ending June 30, 1903, the "chief" of the Bureau of Ethnology says, page 12:

The Leslie iron mine study has an interesting bearing on the technic and industrial history of the tribes. It has been a matter of much surprise, as investigations of ancient mining and quarrying have progressed, that the aborigines, seemingly nonprogressive and shiftless, should have conceived and carried out really great enterprises.

This mine is located in Missouri, at Leslie, and Mr. Holmes writes that "the ancients penetrated the ore body in many directions, and to surprising depths."—Page 11.

The Mexican Calendar stone described as the "marvel of the Western Continent" was, according to Traum's theory, "wrought out" with stone, and we suppose, engraved with savage fingers! It is thus:

This stone was found near the site of the present city of Mexico, buried some feet beneath the soil, of the same character on which was engraven an almost infinite number of hieroglyphics, signifying the divisions of time, the motions of the heavenly bodies, the twelve signs of the zodiac, with references to the feasts and sacrifices of the Mexicans, and is called by Humboldt the Mexican calendar, in relief, on basalt.—American Antiquity, p. 246.

It is extremely narrow to confine investigations to local points, as Traum has done, by simply referring to the ruins of Copan and Palenque, to settle the iron question, especially since the bureau informs us "that excavations" in that territory "have hardly commenced."

But if no iron could be found it would not invalidate the subject of the principal proposition,—the Book of Mormon. The first three fourths of the century past is found to have been prolific of doubts as to the truth of the Bible, because of its account of the origin of Babylon, and writers boldly denied that such a city existed, holding that it was impossible that such a city should have existed in very ancient times, from the fact that it had passed so completely out of existence and out of mind that no one could positively assert where it stood.

Rollin, the renowned historian, informs us that in his day it could not be found. Will Traum wreck the divinity of the Bible on such a slender point? Fortunately for us, the "spade" has not lain idle so long; the evidence has come in shorter time for these "gold, silver, iron, copper, and brass subjects, than for Babylon and Nineveh, that were so long known only on the gilded page of history.

The American Antiquities, page 234, has the following on the subject of the Shawanese:

Their oldest Indians say, when children, they had often heard it spoken of by the old people of the tribe, that anciently stumps of trees, covered with earth, were frequently found, which had been cut down by edged tools. Whoever they were, or from whatever country they may have originated, the account, as given by Morse, the geographer, of the subterranean wall found in North Carolina, goes very far to show, they had a knowledge of iron ore, and consequently knew how to work it, or they could not have had iron tools, as the Shawanese Indians relate.

Again, the same author, writing of Valley River, North Carolina, affirms of mines, iron, copper, and steel compounds:

There is also a deep and difficult cut across a very bold vein of this rock, in pursuit of metal [in a prehistoric mine], but it is now much filled up, having been used subsequently for an Indian burying ground. At this place, says the Journal [of Sciences and the Arts], nothing short of the steel pickax, could have left the traces on the stones which are found here.

Not far from this place, have been found the remains of a small furnace, the walls of which had been formed of soapstone, so as to endure the heat without being fractured. In the county of Habersham, in Georgia, was lately dug out of the earth, at a place where the gold ore is found, a small vessel in the form of a skillet. It was fifteen feet under ground, made of a compound of tin and copper, with a trace of iron. The copper and tin in its composition, are undoubtedly the evidence of its antiquity. . . .

Crucibles of earthen ware, and far better than those now in use, are frequently found by the miners [who were then (1833) working the mines in North Carolina]. By actual experiment they are found to endure the heat three times as long as the Hessian crucibles, which are the best now in use. Bits of machinery, such as is necessary in elevating the ore from the depths, as used by the ancient nations, are also frequently found in the earth where those mines exist, which clearly shows those ancients were acquainted with the minerals.—Pp. 397, 398.

Cyrus Thomas, in Problem of Ohio Mounds, page 31, referring to the "finds" in North Carolina, and the publication of them in the American Naturalist, also in Science, vol. 3, pp. 308-310, says: "The iron implements found in North Carolina" were mentioned in the above papers, and he gives a "cut," which bears the title, "Fig. 1. Part of an iron blade from a North Carolina mound."

On my desk lies a Catalogue of Prehistoric Works East of the Rocky Mountains, by Cyrus Thomas, issued by the Bureau at Washington, District of Columbia. Mounds are catalogued by states, counties, and townships, with the findings of those opened up to that date, 1891. The finds consist of "ornaments of gold," "silver flakes," "copper ornaments," "copper axes," "copper implements," "copper plates," "ancient copper mines," "Indian axes made of steel," "sphere of iron ore," "silver crosses," "pearls," etc., etc., by the score, and the conclusion of the scientific minds on the antiquity of the mounds is that while the evidence shows that "some are of modern build, the escape from the conviction that most of them are prehistoric is impossible." Those marked "ancient" in the catalogue, have yielded the metallic "finds."

In an interview published in the Kansas City Journal for September 19, 1899, is the account of an interview with Mr. Dayolheasala, of Spokane, chief of the Mohawk Indians. He was at the time, in the employ of Boston capitalists, locating copper mines. He is reported as having said:

There are now only four thousand six hundred of us on the Mohawk Reservation, comprising six nations—the Mohawks, Tuscaroras, Delawares, Oneidas, Cayugas, and Onondagas. Some Indian tribes will become extinct, just as some branches of the white race will become extinct, but not so the Mohawks. . . . Their religion is almost the exact counterpart of the ancient Jewish religion. We have not accepted modern forms of worship. We believe in a supreme being and follow many of the ceremonies in vogue among the Israelites. In fact, we observe all of their feasts except that of the Passover. The general belief among the people of the tribe is that we are descendants of one of the lost tribes of Israel. At certain periods of the year we gather for religious worship, and our priests are the old men of the tribe whom we reverence. They tell us what we shall do and what we shall avoid in order to reach a future state of happiness, and we place faith in their teachings and follow them.

We are taught to love one another, to respect property rights, the laws of marriage, and in all respects to follow what to the religion of the white man are the ten commandments. We are taught nothing about a place of future punishment, and to the mind of a Mohawk the belief that a good God can condemn a frail human being to everlasting punishment is preposterous.

Of our origin, anything that may be said is purely speculative. That we were at one time in a state of the highest civilization is evidenced by utensils which are still in our own family. They are of beaten copper and of the most exquisite handiwork. This is a lost art among us.

Page 520 of the Book of Mormon records that the ancient people worked in "all manner of ore," and in order to obtain it, "they cast up heaps of earth to get ore of gold, and of silver, and of iron, and of copper."

Baldwin's Ancient America, p. 43, declares as follows:

Remains of their mining works were first discovered in 1848 by Mr. S. O. Knapp, agent of the Minnesota Mining Company, and in 1849 they were described by Dr. Charles T. Jackson in his geological report to the national government. Those described were found at the Minnesota mine, in Upper Michigan, near Lake Superior. Their mining was chiefly surface work; that is to say, they worked the surface of the veins in open pits and trenches. At the Minnesota mine, the greatest depth of their excavations was thirty feet.

The evidences which we submit on the subject of metals, is, we believe, all-sufficient to overturn our critic's objection, and sustain the claims of the Book of Mormon on this phase of the subordinate proposition. We pass to the question of animals under the charm of the following:

In Peru, long before the earliest settlement of New England, there lived a people so refined, so industrious and so civilized that invading Spaniards, fresh from the wonders of the Alhambra, Madrid and Toledo, saw in this almost unknown country palaces and dazzling evidences of wealth that threw into the shade all the grandeur of Spain. Before Spanish avarice such a civilization could not maintain itself. Beaten and cowed by the invaders, the Incas paid enormous ransoms only to find their conquerors perfidiously demanding more. When in response to the demands of Pizarro the Inca filled with gold a room twenty-two feet long, seventeen feet broad, and eight feet high, the Spaniard, maddened by the sight of so much wealth, swore a mighty oath that unless another room of similar size was filled with silver he would kill the helpless monarch. The ransom was duly paid. Temples, palaces and homes were stripped of their ornaments, and for weeks a steady procession of Peruvians marched to the royal palace, bearing contributions toward the release of the Inca. The treasure once collected the Spaniards, in the name of that Christian religion which it was their boast to profess, burnt at the stake as a heretic the unhappy captive.—Story of Manual Labor, by Simonds and McEnnis, pp. 556, 557.

Concluding his evidence on the question of metals, Elder Traum says: "Beyond italicising certain words, or phrases, we have sought to take no part in this discussion. It is simply Mormonism against the science of archæology."—Mormonism Against Itself, p. 144.

No, no; it is simply the statement of those who say, "We do not know whether the first civilizers of America had the metals they claimed to have had," against the statements of those who say, "We have found the evidence that they did have the metals claimed."

XVI. THE PRIESTHOOD; MELCHISEDEC AND AARONIC.

BY APOSTLE GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

There are in the church two priesthoods, namely: The Melchisedec and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priesthood, Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1, and it is evident, from what is written in the Scriptures, that these priesthoods existed either contemporarily or separately from Adam to the days of Christ. And in proof of this statement I cite the reader to the following quotations in the Bible, Doctrine and Covenants, and history. Hebrews 5: 10. It is stated that Jesus Christ was called a high priest after the order of Melchisedec, which proves emphatically that the Melchisedec order of the priesthood existed previous to the time of his being called, or he could not be called after it. Again, we have this priesthood referred to in Moses' time, Exodus 3: 1: "Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian." Psalm 99: 6: "Moses and Aaron among his priests." And in Genesis 14: 18-20 we are informed that this same order of the priesthood was in existence in the days of Abraham. And Melchisedec, king of Salem, brought forth bread and wine; and he was the priest of the most high God. Hebrews 7: 1, 2: "For this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him; to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being by interpretation King of righteousness, after that also King of Salem, which is, King of peace."

In corroboration we offer the following extracts from Marvelous Discoveries in Bible Lands, pages 40, 41, and 42. The account of Melchisedec from "The tel-el-Amarna Tablets"; now preserved in Berlin, "It is evident from these tablet inscriptions that Melchisedec, king of Salem, and priest of the most high God, who is taken as a type of Christ in his united kingly and priestly office, was not the solitary occupant of that dignity, but one in succession of the priests—kings, which continued to the times before the conquest." And they further state "that it was in virtue of his priesthood that Abram the Hebrew paid tithes to him, after the defeat of the foreign invader."

Therefore the close observer can readily see that it was by virtue of this priesthood that Melchisedec occupied the important position of high priest and head of the church, and that by lineal right or descent. The Inspired Translation, Hebrews 7:1-3 says, that Melchisedec was ordained a priest after the order of the Son of God, which order (priesthood) was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life. And all those who are ordained unto this priesthood are made like unto the Son of God, abiding a priest continually. Mr. Gregory, Oxford, tells us that the Arabic Catena, upon the authority of which he depends much, gives this account of Melchisedec, that he was "the son of Heraclim, the son of Peleg, the son of Heber, and that his mother's name was Salathiel, the daughter of Gomer, the son of Japheth, the son of Noah."

In Matthew Henry's commentary, volume 1, page 57, Calvin also presents the view that Melchisedec was a man and a great high priest; a father, at the head of the church, in the days of Abraham, to whom Abraham paid tithes. Calvin, on Genesis, volume 1, pages 386-393. And the fact that Peter states that the church of which he was a member and minister had the "holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." Hence we must conclude that wherever God had a church upon earth there must of necessity be within it the priesthood to "offer sacrifices acceptable unto God." This high and holy priesthood was first conferred upon Adam by God. "This order was instituted in the days of Adam and came down by lineage."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:18.

Thus we learn that the priesthood not only had its origin in Adam, but that it was a lineal priesthood also. For further proof see Doctrine and Covenants 83:2; 104:18-29. A full and complete exposition of this priesthood is given in Doctrine and Covenants, as to its origin and the various appellations by which it was and is distinguished from the lesser priesthood. For its power, authority, duties, and prerogatives, see Doctrine and Covenants 84:3; 104:9; 83:3; 104:3.

Now with reference to the second order of the priesthood, namely, the Aaronic, or Levitical, the following references prove conclusively that it was first conferred upon Aaron and his sons. Exodus 28:1: "And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons." (See also Doctrine and Covenants 83:3.) The second priesthood is called the priesthood of Aaron because it was conferred upon Aaron and his seed throughout all their generations. There are those who contend that this priesthood had its origin in the days of Adam and continued down parallel with the Melchisedec priesthood; however, I have failed to find any trace of it prior to the Mosaic dispensation.

But I do learn from Doctrine and Covenants 104:8 that the lesser priesthood is an appendage to the greater or higher priesthood. The term appendage, as used here, should be sufficient evidence to prove that a thing must exist before anything can be appended or added to it. And the further fact that the term second priesthood is used in the same paragraph to distinguish the latter from the former, confirms our contention that this priesthood did not exist until it was conferred upon Aaron. And if it did, where was it, and by what name was it known? It surely did not exist in the days of Melchisedec, for the reason that it was the head of the church and president of the Melchisedec priesthood to whom Abraham paid tithes, which evidences that the lesser priesthood did not exist, because it is the right and prerogative of those at the head of this Aaronic priesthood to receive tithes and offerings and to have charge of all temporal affairs, and not the president of the holy priesthood, as it is his primary duty, with those holding like authority, to minister in spiritual ordinances, Doctrine and Covenants 104:32; 106:1; 104:9. But it is argued by some that because of the statement that they offered sacrifices during the period from Adam to Moses, as a consequence only those of the Aaronic order could officiate in that capacity, losing sight of the fact that those in the higher priesthood could and always can administer in the duties of the lesser in the absence of such officer, or when occasion required; nevertheless, those of the lesser priesthood can not officiate in the duties assigned to those of the higher priesthood, except where their duties are similar. The greater always includes the lesser; and for this reason the bishops of to-day are taken out of the High Priests' Quorum, because of the absence of a literal descendant of Aaron, see Doctrine and Covenants 104:32; and many elders are occupying and officiating in the offices of priest, teacher, and deacon, in many branches at the present time.

At this juncture I desire to treat upon the power and authority belonging to these respective priesthoods, and to point out the rights prerogatives, and duties of the various offices therein. In Doctrine and Covenants 83:6, God, speaking to the church through his inspired prophet says:

For whoso is faithful unto the obtaining these two priesthoods of which I have spoken, and the magnifying their calling, are sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies: they become the sons of Moses and of Aaron, and the seed of Abraham, and the church and kingdom and the elect of God; and also all they who receive this priesthood receiveth me, saith the Lord, for he that receiveth my servants receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth my Father, and he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father's kingdom. Therefore, all that my Father hath shall be given unto him; and this is according to the oath and covenant which belongeth to the priesthood. Therefore, all those who receive the priesthood receive this oath and covenant of my Father, which he can not break, neither can it be moved; but whoso breaketh this covenant, after he hath received it, and altogether turneth therefrom, shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come.

There are a number of statements in the above revelation which I call special attention to, and wish to emphasize. Firstly, we are told that those who receive those two priesthoods become the sons of Moses and Aaron and the seed of Abraham and the church and kingdom and the elect of God. How many of us realize the importance of our calling and the close relationship that exists between us and God and Christ? Secondly, that those who receive these priesthoods enter into an oath and covenant with God the Father, which they can not break, neither can it be removed; an oath or covenant with God by receiving the priesthood, and they who neglect the magnifying of their calling or turn away therefrom are doomed; for "they shall not have forgiveness of sins in this world nor in the world to come."

Personally, I am of the opinion that no man should to be ordained to any office in the priesthood until he has been given an opportunity to read the revelation herein referred to, and have ample time to prayerfully consider it, as the consequences of a failure to honor the holy calling will be very disastrous to them in time and eternity.

The order of the priesthood designed by God for the accomplishment of his great purposes, was perfected by him; therefore, if all who are holding any of these sacred appointments will acquaint themselves with the authority, duties and prerogatives attaching to their office, and faithfully discharge the same, the end God has in view must and will be realized. He, primarily, is responsible and, so far as pertains to him, as the great controller of all these concerns, nothing can arise which was not anticipated, and hence not provided for, to necessitate any change. God is not an experimentalist, but in his condescension has chosen mankind to cooperate with himself in the scheme of salvation; and great and wonderful are the responsibilities devolving upon those who act as God's ambassadors, who stand, as does Christ, between God and the people. Therefore, if anything does go wrong, so far as these matters are concerned, it would be the height of folly to change it upon a supposed imperfection in the system (priesthood of God). The cause of the trouble will be (if we are honest with ourselves) traceable to imperfection in the human instrument; so that if, through ignorance, or lethargy, or rebellion, we fail to perform the portion of the work allotted us, we clog, and more or less disarrange the workings of this system, to the detriment of the whole body, but more particularly and more disastrously to ourselves.

Therefore let us not blind ourselves to our own interests, and especially to the interests of God's work, but remember that all those who have accepted the honor of the priesthood have also been made partakers of its responsibilities; but whosoever will not learn his duty, and diligently perform the appointed functions, shall not be counted worthy to stand.

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so. Amen.— Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.

While it is true that God is long-suffering and will bear with us patiently for a time, yet there is a limit to even God's long-suffering, and if we persist in our neglect of duties delineated by the divine Being, but voluntarily assumed by us, he has declared we shall, as a consequence, be taken out of the way. When God formulated the system of the priesthood which he declared through the latter day Seer "should be kept perfect," in harmony with the latter statement he told the ministry in the incipency of this latter day work, "Therefore let every man stand in his own office and labor in his own calling."— Doctrine and Covenants 83: 21. Therefore it is necessary, that every officer should ascertain the character of the work given unto him to do. And perform the same with all diligence, as it is absolutely necessary that he not only know the duties of his own office, but that he also be familiar with the duties of his brother officers, so that proper respect and due courtesy be shown toward his fellow servants.

The priesthood, which God calls a perfect system, is like a piece of perfect machinery, each part is an integral part, and each dependent upon the other in order to perform its proper functions, and to answer the end for which it was created. In like manner has the Lord arranged his priesthood, placing different officers in their respective orders, one dependent upon the other, and all cooperating in the government of the kingdom, hence it is written, the hand can not say to the feet, I have no need of you, nor the feet to the head, I have no need of you. Also the body hath need of every member, that all may be edified together. (Doctrine and Covenants 83:1.) In order to have a perfectly operating priesthood and a complete organization, it necessitates twenty separate offices, and that many distinct ordinations, namely:

1. The President of the church.
2. The Counselors to the President.

3. The Twelve Apostles.
4. The Seventy.
5. The Seven Presidents of Seventy.
6. The Patriarch.
7. Evangelical Ministers.
8. High Priests.
9. Elders.
10. Bishops.
11. Bishop's Counselors.
12. The High Council.
13. Stake Council.
14. Stake Presidents.
15. Counselors to Stake Presidents.
16. Presidents of Quorums.
17. Counselors to Presidents of Quorums.
18. Priests.
19. Teachers.
20. Deacons.

The above officers are divided into divisions and subdivisions, and each have their respective line to work in, from the highest to the lowest. I sometimes use a chart or diagram representing a wheel to illustrate what I mean by the above statement.

The hub of the wheel represents the presidency of the whole church, comprising the First Presidency and the twelve. Seven spokes radiating from the hub represent the various lines of authority, all of which have separate heads and are attached to the hub, or the presidency, and have distinct and specific duties to perform in the organization. In proof of the assertion that the president and his counselors and the twelve apostles constitute the presidency of the whole church whose duty it is to regulate and direct the affairs of the same at home and abroad, I cite the following:

The parallels are in the presidency, the president and his counselors; in the second presidency, the twelve.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9.

The high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watch-care of the membership, and nurturing and sustaining them under the direction and instruction of the presidency and the twelve.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.

The following opinion of the First Presidency, as communicated to the Quorum of Twelve, 1890, was adopted as the opinion of this joint council, which shows that these quorums have a mutual understanding, that the First Presidency and the Second Presidency, the Quorum of the Twelve, constitute the presidency of the whole church, but the latter laboring under the direction of the first.

As a traveling, presiding council, your quorum has the active supervision and presidency, under the first presidency, over the entire field of ministerial labor, and control over districts and branches, and the ministry as a whole, and as a church organization, and not as local presiding officers in these several organizations, holding special local presidency, where no organization has been effected, in a similar way as the first presidency presides over the whole church, differing in this, that the first presidency is necessarily local, while your province is not localized, nor do we mean by this that the word abroad is to be construed to mean foreign lands, but in the fields of itinerant gospel labor everywhere, as contradistinguished from branch, district, or other local organizations.—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 23.

The missionary line is properly composed of the Twelve and the Seventy; however, high priests, elders, and priests can labor as missionaries, but the latter are volunteers, as there is no law compelling them to labor in that capacity. When laboring in this line they labor under the immediate direction of the Twelve the same as the Seventy. The Twelve are the head in this line, to whom all missionary reports are made, but the Twelve receive their appointments from the First Presidency, to whom they report their labors, and by whom they are directed. This shows how closely these two quorums are connected with each other. In the missionary work, first the Twelve, second the Seventy. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9; 104: 12; 16: 5; 107: 40; 122: 3; 107: 4; 122: 7.)

The pastoral department includes the branch, district, and stake lines; the high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons are denominated by the Lord as "the standing ministry," and assigned to labor in the three lines just previously named, under the immediate direction and instruction of the Presidency, thus connecting these lines to the Presidency, or the hub. (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9; 120: 3.)

The patriarchal or prophetic line is composed of the general patriarch and the evangelical ministers. However, the head in this line is the presiding patriarch, who also is a prophet, seer, and revelator unto the church, and is to act in concert with the president of the church, thus showing that the head of this line is in touch with the Presidency, or the hub. (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29.)

The Bishopric line is composed of the presiding bishopric and all the bishops and their counselors, and the character of the work required of those who labor in this line differs from the responsibilities that are placed upon those in the other lines referred to. And the Presiding Bishop, who is the head in the same, is joined to the Presidency. (Doctrine and Covenants 48: 2; 17: 17; 68: 2, 3; 104: 8, 37.)

The judicial line consists of the general high council, stake council, the bishops' and elders' courts (Doctrine and Covenants 99: 1; 104: 35; 42: 22), and the fact that the Presidency presides over the highest court of appeals connects them with the Presidency, or the hub.

Thus we have tried to prove from the word of the Lord that the priesthood is a perfect system, and it is all organized like a wheel within a wheel. Hence we see the wisdom of God in the statement that "every man stand in his own office and labor in his own calling."

MORE ABOUT THE JUDGMENT.

In your issue of November 15 a brother questions the purport of my article, "The eternal judgment," which appeared in the HERALD of September 6. The following may make the points referred to somewhat clearer.

It was not intended to say, neither did I say, that there are "many Saints who can never see celestial glory." A careful reading of my article will show that upon obeying the gospel, the sins of the repentant are forgiven, going before to judgment; that, if they live the celestial law (the gospel), they will receive celestial glory; that, if they live some other law, they will receive the glory of the law they live by.

If I understand aright, in the celestial glory there will be the individuality that we develop, at least in part, in this life; our life acts determining our future estate there. For instance: In the parable of the pounds, he who gains ten is to rule over ten cities, while he who gains five is to rule over five cities. Both are commended, but one is qualified for a greater estate.

I understand that the record of our lives will be retained until we appear before

THE JUDGMENT SEAT OF CHRIST.

The scripture cited by the brother from Jeremiah 31:34, and Acts 3:19 both support this, as a more careful reading will doubtless show him. The time when Jeremiah says God will "remember" their sin no more, is clearly stated to be in that day when they shall no more teach another, "Know ye the Lord"; but all shall know him from the least of them to the greatest of them. Of course that day will not come until Christ appears. The Hebrew word zakar, which is here translated remember, also means imprint, and could have reference to recording, though I do not urge that rendering in this place. In Acts 3:19 Peter plainly says the sins referred to may be "blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ," in the times of "restitution." If the sins are to be blotted out at the coming of Christ, they surely are not blotted out before then.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE UNCONVERTED.

I did not make the statement the brother placed in quotation marks as coming from me, but under the above heading I did, however, say:

"Of all the portentous events of earth, none can compare with the awful solemnity of that day when its billion of inhabitants, past and present, shall stand in suspense before the great white throne, where sits the omnific Ruler; before whose presence the very heavens are dissolved. Who, in his consciousness of guilt, shall be able to endure that allsearching presence? Regret, with its flood of memories, may overwhelm the soul when, with inexpressible vividness, is exposed to view the naked past; but that regret which is actuated by fear of punishment, disappears when the fear is removed. All must learn that permanent happiness comes only to those who love the right. That is life's lesson to all. Soon or late, every soul must learn it. If learned in this life, it will fit us for the transcendent glory of the celestial place; otherwise we must pay the penalty of our failure, folly, willfulness, or disobedience."

To disprove what he erroneously quoted me as saying, the brother quotes from the Book of Mormon as follows: "O my beloved brethren, turn away from your sins, . . . that you may not remember your awful guilt in perfectness." Quoted more fully it reads thus:

"O my beloved brethren, turn away from your sins; shake off the chains of him that would bind you fast; come unto that God who is the rock of your salvation. Prepare your souls for that glorious day, when justice shall be administered unto the righteous; even the day of judgment; that ye may not shrink with awful fear; that ye may not remember your awful guilt in perfectness."—Book of Mormon, p. 74, small edition.

Here, Jacob's exhortation to these unconverted brethren, to prepare for the judgment day, clearly supports my statement concerning such that, "with inexpressible vividness, is exposed to view the naked past."

Jacob also intimates plainly that the righteous will have some remembrance of their past, at the judgment day; though their sins may not be remembered in "perfectness." Otherwise his language would be very misleading to those whom he was addressing.

That my quotation from Ecclesiastes 12:14 refers only to sins which have not been atoned for, I do not admit. It says: "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." There is nothing ambiguous about this language. I see no more reason to doubt it than Jesus' command to baptize. It refers to both good and bad, and no exception is made. It is in harmony with many other scriptural statements, and contradicts none, that I remember of. It seems to me that it is as absolute as anything in the Bible. I need not discuss here the time when every work shall be brought into judgment.

The idea that one who chooses to do wickedly until old age prevents further activities, may then be converted and obtain every advantage that would have been his had he served God faithfully from his youth up, is contrary to justice and righteousness, puts a premium upon crime, and is an incentive to the young to continue in the seductions of sin until the night of death begins to cast its somber shadows around them.

A correct understanding of my article need cause no genuine Saint to sorrow, except as we all should be sorry for the sins of our past life. It appears to me that it should be rather an incentive to higher action each day. We can not build of "wood, hay, and stubble," and obtain the reward promised for "gold, silver, and precious stones." One will be burned. The other will eternally endure.

PUBLIC DEBATES, WITH RESTRICTIONS.

As a church we have no hesitancy in meeting any religious society in fair public debates, but in doing so we have as a rule given our opponents privileges not profitable to themselves or to the hearers. Surely experience and observation are great teachers, and I believe we have learned that in nearly every discussion, whether on church propositions, divinity of the Book of Mormon, or the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, our antagonist has devoted the greater part of his time endeavoring to prejudice the minds of the people against the angel's message by reading statements manufactured and given to the world by the Brighamites and other enemies of Joseph Smith the Martyr, in the endeavors to prove that he sanctioned that soul-destroying doctrine of polygamy.

Knowing as we do that many of the men who challenge us to engage in public discussion with them are, unfortunately, those having corrupt minds, possessing little or no love for the gospel of Christ, we believe they would not, in all probability, engage in debates with Latter Day Saints if they were not privileged to proclaim their most favorite theme, polygamy, against the beloved Prophet and Seer of Palmyra.

Now, inasmuch as we, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, have kept a challenge continually before the Brighamite Church for over forty years, to prove if they could, in public debate with us in their tabernacle at Salt Lake City, that Joseph Smith the Martyr taught or practiced polygamy, and as they (the Brighamites) have not and will not accept the challenge, which failure to debate, really and truly means they dare not even try to prove their allegations against the martyred Prophet they claim to revere, and the Utah Church having failed to properly meet the great issue, why should we be under any obligations to devote the time appointed with other ministers on other propositions, to answer questions about the origin and practice of polygamy in America, that the Brighamites themselves will not affirm in debate in their own tabernacle in Salt Lake City? I have concluded that when questions of debate arise on church propositions, etc., I will test each man's sincerity and love for truth and honorable discussion by submitting something like the following for him to sign, and if he refuses to be governed by it, then I will consider the man an undesirable opponent,—not a lover of truth, fairness, or uprightness in debate:

A SPECIAL RULE TO BE OBSERVED IN PUBLIC DEBATE:

"Whereas, The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints claim that Judge John F. Philips, of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri, Western Division, at Kansas City, Missouri, has, in the celebrated Temple Lot Case, decided that Joseph Smith the Martyr did not teach or practice polygamy, but, that in all probability the obnoxious doctrine was introduced in this age of the world by Brigham Young, and fostered by the Utah Mormon Church; and that similar decisions as that of Judge Philips, they claim, has been made by Judge L. S. Sherman of the Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, in the Kirtland Temple Suit; also a decision by Chief Justice Armour, of the Queen's Bench Divisional Court at Toronto, Canada, when the question was finally decided as to the legal right of a Latter Day Saint minister to solemnize marriages in Canada; and further, the public speeches of United States Senators Julius C. Burrows, and Fred T. Dubois in the Senator Reed Smoot Case, recorded in the Congressional Record, December, 1906, agrees with the judges hereinbefore named, I will therefore be controlled by their (the Latter Day Saints) interpretation of the above, and be governed by the said decisions during the debate with — at —, and will not make any effort to disprove said purported court decisions at said place of holding debate for ten days prior to said discussion or during the public investigation and for ten days after its close.

Signed, — —."

I believe the above will be agreed to by any opponent who really desires to be honorable in the town or place before the discussion begins, during the engagement, and for ten days following. Such a contract would prevent the man from planting himself on the ground before the debate begins and poisoning the minds of some against the gospel, also would be a written guarantee of his behavior during the examination of the questions at issue and for ten days thereafter, on one important matter that belongs to the Brighamites to prove and not the man we contract with. If he will not "be good" that long, we would be justified, as a rule, in passing him by, for we should in every way possible prevent giving the enemies of the martyred Prophet an opportunity of pelting his fair name and blessed work with unsavory epithets, but prepare and declare for good, clean, true investigation at all times, and the attendance at such debates would be better represented by people desiring truth, hence more would come into the church as a result.

It is well for every minister to have a few copies of the tract, The Church in Court, on hand, for it can be used to excellent advantage when you need copies of court decisions to mail or hand out. Order them from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Yours for more honorable debates,

DELOIT, IOWA.

The Work in Toronto.

TORONTO, December 10, 1911.

Dear Herald: I have thought for some time of writing to you of the great work carried on in the Princess Theater by Bishop R. C. Evans. Very few have any conception of the vast amount of work there is in carrying on these meetings, and the number it takes to insure their running smooth.

Srs. Faulds and McLean have a large choir of over fifty people, all church members, to look after and teach; Sr. Hazel Hathaway, our beautiful and talented soloist, whose singing is like a divine inspiration; Bro. Sam Clark, with his fine orchestra, and Sr. Elsie Hill, the church organist, assist the work nobly; Bro. Faulds has about twenty-five acting under him as ushers; Bro. Joseph Gillett, who has charge of the bill posting, has another small army of young brothers and sisters out in the evening posting bills and distributing them in the store windows, we could get scarcely a storekeeper to let us put one of our bills in his window a few years ago. The bishop's sermons in The Sunday World and Theater have made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in Toronto.

There is also a lot of work attached to finding places and distributing these billboards every season. This season we put them out on the Monday before the opening. I think it was the coldest day that has yet come this season. Bro. J. T. Whitehead brought his horse and wagon, and with the assistance of Bro. Kelly spent half a day in the west end of the city putting up boards. Bro. E. J. Law, of Davisville, came down with his fine big auto and with the bishop and another brother spent all day, until about half past six, putting up boards. It was so cold that the radiator of the car froze when they were putting up the last board.

We opened on Sunday, November 19, with an overflowing house and numbers turned away, because of the police regulations which compel us to close the doors when all the seats are filled.

The bishop never appeared in better form than he did on the opening night. In fact, he seems to get better all the time. In this respect he is not like the majority of platform speakers. After you have heard them a time or two you tire of them, but with the bishop, as the season approaches the people will stop any of the Latter Day Saints on the street and ask them, "When is Bishop Evans going to open at the Theater?" As soon as the doors are open, they come in crowds to hear him, and as a rule behave splendidly during the service. When we consider that the bishop is not a sensational preacher, but a man speaking the word in soberness before the Lord, and yet we have this crowd filling this large theater from Sunday to Sunday; while on the other hand we have many sensational preachers in this big city who will resort to as many tricks as a low down politician to get or hold a crowd, we are led to conclude that God truly is with his servant.

We had a very beautiful gift of tongues and interpretation through Sr. Ada Hamilton, Sunday, November 12, by which Bishop Evans was much encouraged and comforted. Also Elder McLean, our branch president, was commended for the faithful way he has stood by the bishop and assisted him in the work. The whole branch was spoken to and counseled. Since then the branch is in a fine condition. The Holy Spirit has been present in all our meetings, some who have been estranged for years have humbled themselves under its sweet influence, and are now friends.

The Woman's Auxiliary, a noble band of Saints, under Sr. R. C. Evans, who is president, held a fine bazaar December 7 and 8, from which they made about two hundred and fifty dollars, to place on the church debt. We are nearing our last payment and soon will have our building free of debt, a building worth about twenty thousand dollars, and that in the space of about six years. When we consider that the Sisters' Auxiliary has raised over half of this amount, we can not speak too highly of Sr. Evans and the faithful little band that has stood so nobly by her. This should inspire the sisters of every branch where the church building is poor to work, let me say right here, Sr. Evans has not accomplished so much without opposition and discouragements. May she and her faithful little band remain long with us, and when the day of reward has come, they will hear from the Master's lips, "Well done."

Your brother in the gospel,

98 VICTOR AVENUE.

JAMES A. WILSON.

From a Jewish Viewpoint.

The day of miracles is not past. I inclose a letter from the Toronto Sunday World which is against the sermons of Bishop Evans. After Jacob's funeral the Spirit came to Joseph, saying, "Behold, thy brethren are afraid you will average thyself upon them," and Joseph said to his brethren, "Fear not, I am not in God's place." Another place God says, "The gods of Egypt I will judge." God really meant the Egyptian man who made himself gods of wood and stone, and punished the children of Israel. They did not ask God, Shall we labor with the children of Israel or shall we leave them alone? but they did as they pleased, which is something like Mr. Davis does in his letter. He says, "I have kept my feelings bottled up until now." He does not consider that the Lord has kept his mouth shut until Bishop Evans is ready with his text, "What shall I do with Jesus?"

We as a people, Jews or Israelites or Hebrews (it makes no difference what we may be called), are in the eyes of so-called Christians looked upon with condemnation and hatred. Why? Because the scribes and Pharisees nineteen hundred years ago crucified Christ, and Pilate was asking, "What shall I do with Jesus?" Now, in the times of the Gentiles, the Gentile scribes and Pharisees, so-called Christians, are seeking to crucify Jesus, but they can't find him, and so every day they take a revenge on his word, wresting it and trying to put it away. So Bishop Evans asks the same question, "What shall I do with Jesus?"

In the next sermon Bishop Evans mentioned the fact, "I am still alive." I would die before Bishop Evans was hurt by any of these scribes and Pharisees? Now the preacher asks me, Who made Evans a bishop? When God made man he did not make Adam alone, but he made all his people as well, and stored them away. When Christ came he said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Now, when we buy a bag of salt we do not use it all up at one meal, but only a little at a time. So the Lord takes a few of his people and puts them in each century to look after his work and to keep the wolves from the flock.

I wish the whole church a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. I hope to meet Bro. Evans at Christmas and give him a Christmas kiss.

I am your Jewish brother in the Reorganized Church, NHATAN MORRIS.

SAINT JACOBS, ONTARIO, November 25, 1911.

London, Ontario.

Bro. and Sr. Vasbinder, of Brandon, Manitoba, are here visiting Saints and friends. Bro. and Sr. George Rodwell, of Norwich, are visiting Sr. Rodwell's mother. Bro. and Sr. Butler, of Nebagamon, Wisconsin, paid our branch a flying visit on the 24th. They intend spending Christmas and New Year's Day with Sr. Butler's sister in Brantford. None were more pleased with their Christmas box than Bro. George Talbot. It is a boy this time. Elder F. Gray and Sr. Gray, of Toronto, are spending the holidays with Saints and friends. Bro. Frank occupied the stand Sunday morning. The Saints were intensely interested in his talk of the great work in Toronto carried on by Bishop Evans.

The election of officers for the Sunday school was conducted by Elder F. Gray, district superintendent, and resulted as follows: W. A. Hardy, superintendent; James Winegarden, assistant superintendent; Mae Constable, secretary; Mamie Harrison, treasurer; Joe Heaslip, assistant secretary; Aubrey Blanchard, librarian; Florabell Cambridge, organist; Elder Henley, chorister; Ernie Cambridge and Norman Winegarden, janitors; Herbert Talbot and Fred Plummer, auditors. Prior to election of officers the school was addressed by Elder F. Gray, district superintendent, and Elder Henley, assistant superintendent.

Our Sunday school held its annual Christmas tree and entertainment Friday evening the 22d. Elder William Fligg occupied as chairman very acceptably. Program was mostly by the children. Miss Pratton assisted very materially by classic instrumentals. A tableau by Sr. Henley's class was very good. Prizes according to merit were presented to the pupils. The home class members, with the school, all received the usual Christmas treat.

The church services on the 24th were thoroughly enjoyed by the Saints, especially in the evening. The choir master, Bro. T. B. Richardson, spared no pains to give extra music. About twenty-five took part in the choir. Short addresses were given by Elders Henley, Mottashed, and Gray. Elder Fligg presided.

Sr. Garner, of Windsor, is spending the holidays with her parents, Bro. and Sr. Everitt. Bro. Everitt leaves this week on a trip to England. Bro. and Sr. J. Tomlinson, of Bethune, Saskatchewan, are visiting with the latter's sister, Sr. Thomas Timbrell. They intend visiting several places in the district prior to their return home.

At the last regular business meeting of our branch the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: Elder William Fligg, president; Elder George Henley, priest; James Winegarden, associate priest; W. A. Hardy, teacher; W. H. Farthing, associate teacher; R. Y. Martin, deacon.

Our branch is doing well under the administration of Elder Fligg. The meetings are very well attended and the members are doing what they can to further the work of the Master. On the 17th Elder Henley and Priest C. Insell occupied in the morning and J. Winegarden in the evening.

Elder Fligg met with a very painful accident last week. While splitting up some old timber he stepped on a large, rusty nail which penetrated his foot. He was unable to attend services and will be laid up for a few days.

Bro. and Sr. Harry Simpson have returned from Wetaskiwin, Alberta. Sr. Maggie has not been well for some time and it was thought a change to the Northwest would be beneficial, but her health is not improved.

Sr. Annie Heather has made her home in the city again, after living in Detroit for a while.
W. A. HARDY.

SAINT JACOBS, ONTARIO, December 2, 1911.

The summer resorts are closed, the rivers are freezing, the sleighbells are ringing, and the evangelists are traveling to keep their feet warm. Their pockets may be empty, but they are smart fellows. They know that the farmers are through harvesting and are butchering, so there is money in the country. I must be saved for they pass by my house without calling. However, I intend to visit them once in a while to let them know there are some people looking after them. The following appeared in the Daily Telegraph:

"'Prayer' was the theme of an interesting and impressive discourse delivered by Evangelist Gale at the union evangelistic mission in the Zion Evangelical Church on Tuesday evening. After Mr. Collison had rendered, 'Spend one hour with Jesus,' in beautiful style, the evangelist commenced his address by stating that there are few Christian people who spend one hour out of twenty-four in communion with God, while the average Christian in this busy age does not spend five minutes a day in prayer and meditation. They have their hours for eating and sleeping, but very little of their time is devoted to prayer."

Later the following letter appeared also:

"Does God speak to his people? Editor Daily Telegraph. Dear Sir: Having noticed your news article in the Daily Telegraph of the 22d inst., re 'Discourse on Prayer,' my answer is: The Christian ministers of to-day tell us that God does not speak to the people any more (as in olden times) and if he doesn't speak, he doesn't answer, and if he does not answer what is the use wasting time in prayer? Why does not Mr. Gale turn round and blame his brother ministers instead of my Christian neighbors, for making unsound statements? Now I would like Mr. Gale to answer me a question, namely: Why does not God speak to his Canadian children? Are they not as good looking men and women as those who lived three thousand years ago in the eastern countries? Are the Canadian Christians not as God-fearing people as those in the East were? Is their morality not as good? Are they less charitable? I believe the Canadian people are spending more money in one month for God's sake than the eastern people spent in a decade, and why should God not speak to his people in Canada? I am your Jewish friend, N. Morris."

In the HERALD of November 22, page 1117, was an article about the Lutheran College at Waterloo. I can't see where the Lutheran Church is growing. In Saint Jacobs it is going down, in Conestogo it is sleeping, in Bridgeport not yet awakened, and in Elmira the poor preacher died. These places are all around Waterloo. "The seminary was opened in the presence of four thousand people." They must have counted me at least a couple of thousand times for I was there.

Regarding Bishop Evans's sermons in book form, I can say that whoever has that book in his house has a blessing there; for I have followed his sermons. And if Bishop Evans will print the sermons he is going to preach in 1912 in book form he can have my five dollars for it right away in advance. So remember the claim that a Jew doesn't give money for nothing.

Moon Law Interpreted.

An important phase of the Moon law interpretation made by the Iowa supreme court this week is the fact that it marks another epoch in the history of the movement aimed at a more rigid regulation of the liquor traffic.

While extremists are denouncing those who do not agree with their methods as "hirelings of the saloon" the tide of human progress is moving forward with slow but irresistible power. While the visionary reformer is spinning his theoretical fabric the practical men and women are weaving the warp and woof of actual accomplishment.

Look back across the years. Has not Iowa made notable advancement? Is there not a healthy temperance sentiment which was unknown twenty-five and fifty years ago? Is not the coil of legislative restriction steadily tightening?

The Moon law was written by a Democratic and passed by a Republican legislature. Of course it does not eliminate the saloon from Iowa, but under the unanimous interpretation of our court of last report it closes more than two hundred bar rooms in this state.

When the court lays down the doctrine that a saloon license is not a vested right it emphasizes the fact that the liquor business has a precarious hold on existence. In county after county the saloon can not obtain a foothold. Under the peculiar nature of the mulct law it exists only in certain counties because a majority so decree and then must submit to a monthly penalization.

Meanwhile society has less use for the drunkard every year. The great railroad companies insist upon total abstinence. The business world is looking only for men and boys with clear heads.

The world is moving forward. Iowa is keeping even pace—in fact is far ahead of many of her sister States. The reaffirmation of the nonpartisan Moon law is one of the signposts along the pathway to ultimate victory.—Des Moines Capital.

Ferguson Woman Distinguishes Between Mormons and Latter Day Saints.

FERGUSON, IOWA, December 16.—Editor Capital: I notice in the paper that Lamoni is spoken of as a Mormon town. These things are very objectionable to people with clean records. It is well understood by all intelligent people nowadays that the real Latter Day Saints are not Mormons. The name has been stained through the wickedness of Brigham Young and contemporaries. The word Mormon, as applied to my people in this day, is just as respectable as to say they are people of the red light district, and that is what it means to intelligent Latter Day Saint ladies, who have just as good education and hold as many degrees in the fine arts as anyone else. Now we know that any man, woman or child who has understanding at all ought to know the difference between the Mormons with headquarters at Salt Lake City and the Latter Day Saints with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa. There is as much difference, and more, between these two churches than between the Catholic and M. E. Church. People who designate us as Mormons certainly mean to be unjust, full of spitefulness, prejudice, or any other phase of cruelty you can name. I hope that the day will come when people who are honorable citizens in every sense of the word will not have to suffer before their friends the persecution of vile names. There was never a lie so plausible as one with part truth, and the fact that the Brighamite faction has a man at the head of their so-called church named Joseph F. Smith, while the one at Lamoni has one Joseph Smith, makes it hard on us.

It is a noticeable fact, also, that the F. is generally left out to make it appear that we are all the same bunch. Oh, yes, many people say they are practically the same, all believe in polygamy just alike, etc. Now I want to tell you that you can't get a Salt Lake Latter Day Saint, so-called, to stay in the home of the real Latter Day Saint people over night. Why? Because our people understand them and will expose them. Those people do not like the light turned on. They say, We do not practice polygamy. No, but they have many living examples of having true faith in it, just the same. Among our people you can not find them denying a thing and having living evidence of it in their midst. A club lady called on me not long since, saying, "We want to build a monument to Brigham Young. He helped make the history of Iowa." "For the sake of decency," I said, "don't do it. Do you want your boy to pass along and view that monument to the crime of adultery, and say, 'Mother, I see you have to be a bad man to become noted. What's the use of being good? No one notices you. But there is a monument to one of the rascals of the present century, standing in a sacred spot of the country of liberty—America.'" Why speak of Brigham Young in such a manner when he's dead and gone? Some say it's a sin to speak evil of one who is dead. Why, we speak of the cruelties of Nero, the compositness of Epicurus, the wickedness of Judas Iscariot, the awfulness of Apolyon, why not speak in warning tones of the cussedness of Brigham Young, who has established his filthy dogmas to last throughout the ages? And now comes the disposition to show him great honor.

Respectfully,

MRS. CHARLES B. MARTIN.

Reflections.

Loyalty to the truth is loyalty to the church.

Stories grow as they travel. The traditions of the elders are largely a lot of old lies. Some people never know what they believe until they find what Bro. So and So thought, who is now dead. This is a species of idolatry. The question is, What do you think? Or have you nothing to think with?

It is fortunate indeed that the poor priest has a pope to tell what he (the priest) believes; otherwise the poor priest would make a mistake and be damned.

Why not candidly admit that you don't know much?

Liberty is more important than authority.

"Contend against no church, save it be the church of the Devil." The church of the Devil is not a visible organization.

If you want to argue, you can probably find a passage of scripture to prove you are right and your neighbor wrong. That is easy, and also cheap.

I changed my mind yesterday and may change it tomorrow. Since I am not infallible, do not punish me for trying to be honest rather than consistent. Consistency is a fraud.

Nearly all intelligent men admire heretics, more or less, but will not help them much when they get into trouble.

Do not harp all the time on authority; it is selfish. Authority, in all ages past, has been a curse, as well as a blessing. A successful temperance lecturer who saves drunkards is doing more good and will receive greater reward than a bigoted preacher who harps on authority all the time.

It may be that God's kingdom, in some sense, is an absolute monarchy, but practically it is a democracy because God works through men who are blessed by degrees of inspiration and are all equal, or should be. God is no respecter of persons, and none of his children are infallible.

I believe in authority—with a string to it. But I do not want to argue the question.

When you are "rotten egged" don't say anything about it. Wash, and then examine yourself carefully. There is something the matter with you as well as the eggs.

An Open Letter.

Dear Sr. Walker: I have just finished reading "The uninvited guest" in HERALD of December 13. While I yet read a plan was taking shape in my mind that I think that dream was sent to inspire, and it was to do just as those were doing at the entertainment where in his dream Jesus had led the stranger. And my thoughts reverted to the custom of the Island Saints at their Christmas entertainments which is or was when we were there.

After the exercises are over as many scribes as there are branches represented at the entertainment take their seats behind a large table equipped with pencil and paper, and almost every native present, both old and young, will walk in single file to that table and place their offering in front of the scribe belonging to his respective branch or island. This obviates the necessity of writing the name of the branch each time; that is placed above the column and stands for all the names below it.

This custom is ahead of us more civilized (?) people. Now, can we not do a little better than the natives? That is, make the offerings first, and make it an established custom for the Latter Day Saints' Christmas entertainments? It would be a beautiful custom, and as seen in the dream, would secure the presence of Jesus and his blessings. Let the gift be in the little envelope, and the name and amount, if the giver chooses, be written on the envelope as other gifts are. It seems good to have the name at least, since all have an influence, and each name helps some one else and cheers all, too, by showing that they are sufficiently alive to the work to remember their Christmas Offering.

I truly hope that the Sunday school teachers and superintendents will favor this view, and by a few well-chosen words, before the children take their offerings to hand in, will bring the children in closer touch with the Lord, and they will realize more vividly that they are in very deed giving to the Lord, and it will be an inspiration to greater diligence in the coming year. Step by step the Saints are being shown the pathway "Back to Jesus and his plan."

Requests for Prayer.

Bro. and Sr. Hines, of Stewartsville, Missouri, request the prayers of the Saints for their daughter, who is sick with appendicitis.

Sr. Emma Burneth, Reedersburg, Indiana: "I am sick with asthma and ask to be remembered in prayer. I am away from the Saints and miss them much."

Sarah P. Carrel, Pittsfield, Illinois: "I ask the prayers of the sisters in the prayer union, that I may recover from the effects of a fall which broke all the ligaments of my shoulder, and which has made my arm useless to me since. I suffer much pain."

There can be no doubt that the great majority of American public schools are actively contributing to-day to the diffusion and development of good manners among the people, and hence to the improvement of the social conduct. Whoever learns to observe and respect, through manners firmly based on ethics, the lesser rights of others is likely to acquire increased respect for the larger rights of the neighbor and the citizen.—Dr. Eliot.

ROCHESTER, MINNESOTA, December 23, 1911.

Dear Herald: I arrived on October 27, to look after my daughter, Mrs. William Hurworth, of Miner, Montana. She came here to have an operation, and I am pleased to inform the Saints and friends that she is getting along finely. She will soon be well enough to go home. I am very thankful to my heavenly Father that he has directed us to come here, and that he has inspired the Mayo brothers and their associates with wisdom and understanding, so they can have such success in their operations.

Some will object to the expression "inspired of God" because they are not one of us. I believe that the Lord does inspire men out of the church as well as those in the church for good, and the Mayo brothers are honorable, upright, and honest men, and with the help of God are a great blessing to thousands of suffering humanity that come here every year for treatment. Yours in gospel bonds,

E. WILLIAMS.

GLADSTONE, ILLINOIS, December 11, 1911.

Dear Herald: I am now past seventy-two years old and have passed through some very trying scenes and hardships. I came near dying last February. I am at an age where I can not promise myself very many more birthdays, and whether or not I will be rewarded in the great reckoning time for true chivalry to my country I know not; but I gave the best of my life that my country might live, as evidently destined by Him who instituted it. I am not worrying about the fulfillment of the Lord's work, or whether the earth is hollow or solid, or where the lost tribes of Israel are. That is the Lord's business, not mine. He knows all about it, and just how Israel is to be gathered, and it is a glorious thing to be guided by the Spirit of truth, and to know and to see the things to come.

RIPLEY, OKLAHOMA, December 18, 1911.

Dear Herald: We write to report progress at this point. Baptized two here one week ago Sunday, and eight more yesterday.

Since our church house was burned down, a short time ago, we have been moving toward erecting a new and more commodious house. The inclosed clipping from the local paper here is hardly accurate in its statement that the Saints' church is nearing completion, for we are just getting the foundation in. The valuation of the new structure, as given in the clipping at two thousand dollars, is somewhat exaggerated.

Our new church will stand just across the street from the Christian church, whose pastor had boasted that if we would sign up propositions for debate here, that the result would be that the Mormon oak in Ripley would fall to the dust from whence it came.

Since the debate they have baptized one, and we have troubled the water of the broad Cimarron River every few Sundays, and instead of the one here and there, they have been coming in groups.

Just upon the opposite side of the new church stands the Methodist Episcopal church, and across in the other direction, and a block away, stands a Baptist church, so it will be very convenient for churchgoers in this town to "halt between two opinions" when seeking a place in which to worship. In gospel bonds,

J. E. YATES.

GARWIN, IOWA, December 19, 1911.

Dear Herald: I must tell you of our meetings this fall, held at the brick schoolhouse at Montour, a small town near the Tama Indian Reservation.

Elder Reiste started from his home about the middle of October, on his motorcycle, and almost reached his destination when he was thrown to the ground, and his ankle badly sprained.

Despite this accident, he was able to use crutches, and would sit in his chair and talk to us, teaching and explaining the beautiful truths of the gospel, and we certainly did appreciate his efforts. Sometimes his limb would be so badly swollen that we would urge him to rest till it would improve, but with a steadfast determination he kept on and brought to the fold through the waters of baptism five precious souls, and others were left seriously thinking of obeying the gospel ere long. Grant that they may not think too long, but act.

He left for home about Thanksgiving, promising to return in the near future and again renew his efforts. He also baptized three during the summer, and Elder Christy, who was with us a few times last spring, baptized two of our number at the reunion at Colo, in August. So we have been wonderfully blessed the past year in having such able ministers of the gospel with us, and the results of the meetings are certainly encouraging.

We hope that other localities in need of the gospel may be blessed as we have been.

Yours in the true faith,

MARY KENNEL.

SALT LAKE, LOUISIANA.

Dear Saints: I have been sick for ten weeks; I am very weak, and I ask the prayers of all that I may be healed if it is the Lord's will. I love this work, which I have only obeyed in part. But I am very sorry and pray that I may have forgiveness. My desire is to live nearer to our God each day. I do wish we had the pleasure of listening to some good sermons and could meet with the Saints. I love to read the church papers. I pray that my boys and girls may hear and obey this glorious work soon. My oldest boy is eighteen and I have five old enough to obey.

Pray for me that I may be faithful to the end.

JOSIE HELM.

An Anniversary.

Thirty-one years ago to-day I was authorized, commissioned, and ordained a representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. For a few years I labored locally, then for about twenty-six or twenty-seven years I have been under General Conference appointment; and as a missionary I have always tried to do my duty as far as I understood it. My eyes were first opened to the fact that there was something wrong with the doctrine taught by the different churches because of the different plans of salvation they presented to the people for the plan of salvation; all differing from each other, and yet all claiming to be messengers sent from God, and teaching the true plan of salvation. And yet not one of them taught the people what the Bible taught was the plan of salvation. Therefore I came to the conclusion that the whole thing, Bible, churches, and all, was a farce and a delusion. But when I heard the first Latter Day Saint sermon, which was preached in our schoolhouse by Elder I. N. White, I was convinced, if the Bible was true, that the Latter Day Saints had the truth. The more I heard the more I wanted to hear, and the more Bro. White preached the Bible the more the Adversary kicked and fought it. But many were gathered out for Christ in our neighborhood, until a branch was organized.

I have seen many remarkable cases of healing of every kind of diseases. And above all, God has answered prayers and fulfilled the promises which he made to his children in ancient and latter times, so we know that God is a living and true God. And when I read that note in the HERALD of December 6, page 1155, by Bro. U. W. Greene, where he says: "A gale had been blowing several days, the surf was furious, and I doubted the ability of any woman to stand in the undertow. After prayer the sea became calm as a pond and remained so during the service. Immediately after closing the service the great waves began rolling in higher than my head, breaking like thunder on the beach," that certainly was God's power made manifest in favor of his people, and it makes one rejoice in the God of Israel.

The instance related by Bro. Greene brought very vividly to my mind an occurrence which happened at Montrose. Bro. H. C. Bronson and the writer were holding a series of meetings, and on the 21st of February, 1886, several were to be baptized. (I have forgotten how many. I am told there were twenty-three.) The ice was broken on the Mississippi River, and was going down at a great rate, tons and tons in a piece. It was very dangerous to go into the river; but there was a large bayou to one side of the river in which the floating ice was in a continuous circuit, going round and round, never stopping, tons and tons in almost every piece. And if one of those ponderous pieces would catch an object it would crush it into the bank. So in order to prevent an accident, a number of men volunteered to get ice poles and hooks and to stand by the water's edge and keep the ice back when it came floating towards us, so it would not crush us to death. But as I stepped down into the water, the large pieces of ice moved back, straight back into the middle of the bayou, and stood still as though it was frozen fast, till I had baptized the whole number; then, when I stepped up out of the water, the ice started on its usual round and round circle. I am convinced that God took care of us; Elder Best, of Saint Joseph is a witness to the above statement, as are also others. Bro. Best was baptized then.

There was a man at that meeting who was convinced that it was his duty to obey the gospel, and his good wife was very anxious to see him baptized. But he was not going to let her know that he had any notion to obey till he would walk into the water, and in that way surprise her. But on Thursday afternoon we had a prayer meeting, and the above mentioned baptism was to be on the next Sunday. The Spirit was with us in great power, and it raised that man on his feet, and the first word he said was, "I am ready and want to be baptized." It certainly was an agreeable surprise to his wife.

This is a glorious work. The happiest hours of my life are when I am preaching this glorious gospel of Christ restored to earth again. I have had a fine time this summer. I labored five months in Iowa; God blessed my labors; I baptized nineteen, and preached one hundred and eighty sermons; married ten couples; administered to about fifty. The Saints and friends were all very kind to me, and supplied all my wants; and I was glad to see so many of those with whom I had labored some thirty years ago. God has truly blessed my labors, for which I feel thankful. I have baptized five hundred and sixty-five, all told, thus far. Oh, I wish that I could meet them all in the celestial glory, where parting will be no more.

May God bless every effort put forth for the salvation of man. J. S. ROTH.

News From Missions

Arizona.

It has been over two months since the writer came to this valley, accompanied by Bro. L. W. Fike, who remained here for about three weeks and then returned to his home at Bisbee, leaving the writer to fight the battles alone, until the seventh inst., when he was joined by Bro. S. D. Condit, who was a very welcome and much appreciated assistant in the work. Having canvassed Safford and Layton previous to his arriving, we concluded to make an effort to reach the people of Thatcher on his arrival. Thatcher is the Mormon stronghold of this part of the country. The officers of the Saint Joseph Stake reside here, and of course the stake tabernacle and academy are here. On our arrival we held a cottage meeting at the home of Mr. O. B. Williams, who is not far from the kingdom; the next evening we were invited to the home of John Nash, a counselor to the stake president; he invited some of the "faithful ones" and such as held the "high priesthood" to be present, and we were permitted to talk to them for the space of two hours, setting forth our positions, and then the questions came and we answered questions until 11.30 p. m. The next evening we held an open air meeting on the street corner at about 4.30 p. m., after which we were invited to the home of a Mr. Robinson, a returned missionary, and we again spoke and answered questions until 11.30 p. m. We occupied the street again the following day, and from there to the home of Mr. Woolcey, where we held another meeting that lasted until nearly midnight, and here we got our friend Nash in a box so tight that he went home without saying good-night to us. The next evening we held forth at the home of a Mr. Clawson, and the same procedure was had; and we not only got our friend Nash in a box, but also our friend Blazard, who is one of their "wise men"; and as a result of his failure to make his point he sat down and could say nothing more, and that ended our cottage meetings. It was another case of "see how you prevail nothing" "and they durst ask no more questions," but "marveled at the doctrine."

We continued our street meetings until Sunday last, and the change in weather brought snow and cold and we were obliged to discontinue our street meetings.

We held three meetings again at Safford, closing last night, the attendance being small, and during the last two days the writer went to Central, a little town three miles northwest of here, where we put tracts in every house in the place and talked with the people as opportunity afforded, and found only three homes that showed a willingness to receive and examine the matter; the rest were very well satisfied with what they had.

The writer is again alone, since Bro. Condit left for Bisbee to-day, where he expects to spend Christmas with his sister, and the rest of the good Saints there.

During our labors here we have been surprised to hear young ladies who are attending the Mormon academy fairly fight for polygamy, and then considering the argument made by Joseph E. Robinson, president of the California mission Sunday night in support of polygamy, the writer is forced to conclude that they yet quietly teach the doctrine of polygamy to the young as a true tenet of the Mormon faith.

The writer will try to look after the interests of the work here, and continue as long as wisdom may direct. It is certainly trying on the feelings of an individual to be fifteen hundred miles from home and loved ones, among strangers and surrounded by those who desire our discomforture and the holidays drawing near, but he who has "put his hand to the plow and looking back is not fit for the kingdom." "And if God laid down his life for us, we ought also to lay our life down for the brethren"; and I guess, therefore, it is only proper that we lay down our life for the blessing of an ungrateful world.

Ever hopeful of the triumph,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

THATCHER, ARIZONA, December 23, 1911.

Niagara Falls.

Just a few lines to say that we're still on terra firma, trying to battle away for the one and only thing worth fighting for—the kingdom of God.

The enemy as usual, is the same old ministerial hypocrites, who, true to their avaricious instincts, dislike to be disturbed in their blood-sucking business; leeching, as they do, the very vitals of honest ignorance.

It just seems that one can not mention a single feature of this latter day glory without arousing the ire of that holy (?) horde, who are not only pledged to the task of building Babylonish bodies, but fixed in their determination to fight the faith divinely restored.

But the work rolls on. Indeed, it is the predicted purpose of the Lord to perpetuate the progress of the "little stone"—the kingdom of God, the church,—until it fills the whole earth. That's why we're happy in the work, and full of confidence that our cause will eventually triumph over all.

The enemy in the recent scrimmage employed the usual tactics; underhandedly and clandestinely prejudicing the people. That's the only move in the game of religious investigation that they can work; and that they work successfully, for a time at least.

Parson Schaul has made himself ingloriously famous in tactics of this kind. For a long time he has been poisoning the community with his anti-Mormon, anti-truth, pro-Presbyterian trash, supplemented by his wife's testimony that while "the Roman Catholic shall be saved, the Latter Day Saint—never!"

To clear up the fog enveloping the honestly deceived, we felt obliged to publicly challenge Mr. Schaul to meet the issue on the platform of public discussion.

The challenge went broadcast, and the average American, never to be cowed by a challenge, surely expected that his parsonship would meet the issue. We may just add that for very pronounced reasons, better known perhaps to himself, Mr. Schaul considered it highly imprudent to discuss the matter in public. No! "It's dishonorable to discuss!" but it's eminently righteous to defame! They do not hesitate to express their views to one whom they suppose is unacquainted with the facts, but to back up their unfounded assertions on the platform, in the presence of a Latter Day Saint, is a task altogether too weighty.

Schaul crawled! No debate for him! At once, however, there was a meeting called. It was a meeting of the "international, interdenominational, Ministerial Alliance of Niagara Falls, New York." It was surely a solemn assembly. The public was discussing everywhere the literature circulated by the Saints, and the challenge published in the daily press of Niagara and Buffalo. Something must be done! To debate,—well, that was out of the question; it would expose the fallacy of their position. One course, in their judgment, was open, and that was to so blacken Latter Day Saintism that discussion with us would be rendered dishonorable. And so in solemn, true, ministerial style, not a drum being heard, nor a funeral note, they passed a resolution that will surely go down in history as an earmark of ignorance, a blot of bigotry. It was that the Latter Day Saint Church is not a Christian denomination; and furthermore, that this resolution be proclaimed from their pulpits the following Sunday. After the singing of a hymn and the offering of a soul-consoling prayer which doubtless invoked the blessing of Baal, they dispersed, emitting sighs of satisfaction at being so graciously relieved of the awful trial of attempting to defend their speechless gods and home-brewed religions on the Mount Carmel of public test.

The manner of acquiring the end sought, that of relief from discussion, reminds us of those early puritan religionists of New England. Anxious to acquire possession of some Indian lands which they did not altogether like to steal without some plausible reason, they met together in solemn assembly, and by resolution resolved into their possession the lands they were after. The resolutions ran something like this: I. "Resolved that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." Carried, after some discussion. Resolution II. "Resolved that the earth should be held by the Lord's saints." Carried unanimously. Resolution III. "Resolved that we are his saints." Carried amid great rejoicing.

Well, the ministerial resolution was read. This was followed a week later by a sermon from Rev. Donald Macclaur. (What a magnificent name to waste on such an unworthy mortal!) His subject was, "Joe Smith and how he faked the Book of Mormon." Like his predecessor of kindred faith, he crawled and "kivered" when confronted with the request that he prove his assertions on the rostrum of public discussion. But no! Debating with a Latter Day Saint was beneath his notice. He felt more at home maligning the defenseless dead, where none might disturb with a curtain raiser of truth.

We replied to the gentleman through the medium of a circular, distributed from house to house.

In the meantime, our meetings were disturbed by an ex-Disciple parson, who did not fail to abuse his privilege for asking questions, by running his remarks into contradictory assertions. We replied as easily as we could for a couple of evenings, noting that his presence helped to bring the people. On the third night we insisted that while anyone might ask as many questions as they chose, that we would not accept any more counter speeches, unless it be on a signed proposition for discussion. Our opponent, not being disposed to thus canvass the question, took his departure, and has not been heard of since. Am constrained to believe that he was an agent of the Ministerial Alliance.

The work is moving at Niagara. Twelve have been baptized during that late series of meetings, while the Saints are rejoicing in the work. They have a firm lot of young men in office, who are an honor to the cause. Recently William Landes and James Breegle were ordained to the office of priest and teacher, respectively. The former, possessed of a keen intellect and excellent learning, will make a decided help to the cause, aided by the Spirit of God. The latter, a robust brother, whole-hearted and enthusiastic, will emit a flame of spiritual force among those he may be permitted to labor with.

As for the other officers, Brn. Mesle, Landes, and Montgomery, they are all well-known and appreciated. With such men laboring in unity and in diligence, the whole city is bound to feel the presence of a superior organization.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

DECEMBER 20, 1911.

New Mexico.

I have just closed a ten session debate with the nonprogressive wing of the Christian Church. My opponent was Elder Huff, of Oklahoma. I am glad to say that Elder Huff conducted himself more as a Christian gentleman than any of their church members I have ever met before in debate.

The subjects discussed were the usual church propositions. I am satisfied that good was done for the cause of truth, and much prejudice removed, many friends being made for our side. The debate was held where we have no membership and where much prejudice was manifest toward us. Two dreams or night visions given to me, one during the debate, and the other the night the discussion closed, were significant, to say the least. The first one, given me the third night of the debate, I dreamed I had set fire to an old trash pile the previous day, and in the morning, on going out, I saw quite a number of black snakes whose bodies had burned off, leaving the heads and part of the bodies alive, and they were trying to get away from the burnt trash pile. I secured a stick and began killing them. One of my brethren in the flesh came to my assistance and we killed a dozen or more, when I awoke.

The second dream, or night vision, was given me the last night of the debate. I dreamed that in company with two others, I went to a small stream to fish. I saw some fish flopping in the shallow water, and stepping down into the edge of the water, I began reaching in and throwing them out. I called to a brother on the bank to come and take care of them, to keep them from getting back into the water. He came and I continued to reach in with my hand and throw them out till it began to grow dark. I noticed one who stood on the bank was my father, with a lamp at his feet. I asked him to hold up the light so that I could see in the water, which began to turn dark. He did so, and I continued to catch and throw out fine fish till I was tired. That this may mean the gathering in of the honest in heart in New Mexico is my prayer.

I am laboring under some trying circumstances, but I am determined to push the gospel all that is in my power, praying the Lord to give the increase and every necessary support.

News From Branches

Independence.

During the last week or two there has been some sickness of a serious nature among the Saints; and this afternoon we are called to attend the funeral of our beloved sister, Charlotte Cleveland, who passed peacefully at the home of her daughter, Sr. Fred Koehler, on the morning of the 20th, being of the ripe old age of eighty-four years. She was esteemed and loved by a large circle of friends. Also yesterday the remains of the eighteen-year-old son of Bro. and Sr. William Horne were conveyed to Blue Springs; the funeral service having been conducted from the home here. Our young brother had been ill with typhoid fever about a month. There are a few cases of diphtheria, one being that of a young sister, Lillie Ruth, the granddaughter of Sr. Lytle. On Wednesday, the 13th, were the obsequies of Sr. J. Scott, in charge of Bishop G. H. Hilliard. Our dear sister, after a long siege of painful illness, died on the 11th, and left many friends to emulate her life of faithfulness and trust in God.

Several of the missionaries have returned home for the holidays, among them Brn. Aylor, Chatburn, Slover, Jenkins, W. R. Smith, and J. W. Rushton.

Sunday, the 17th, was a day full of comforting experiences; for at the early morning prayer meeting there was an unusually large attendance of the young people, Brn. Charles Warren, of Boston, Lester, and A. Morgan presided. Four precious souls were baptized at the noon hour,—two young men and two little girls. Among them was James A. Smith, a former clergyman of eight years in a church of the Brethren. He was from Nebraska, and at present resides in Beatrice. He became acquainted with the faith through the faithful efforts of Elder E. Rannie, and now being spiritually satisfied, is rejoicing in the truth. The Saints, on hearing his testimony, felt joyful and comforted.

The morning sermon was by Bishop E. L. Kelley, and the one in the evening by J. W. Rushton. The excellent instruction and cheering encouragement of the morning sermon, and comforting and uplifting inspiration of the evening's meditation upon the words of the psalmist, (thirty-seventh chapter), both sermons were a spiritual solace and imparted to the brethren a sense of "rest, peace, love, and joy" to each waiting, trusting soul.

Said our inspired brother, "The majesty of David was his humility." "It's the men of tranquility that are the greatest victors of the world: it is the consciousness that we are right that makes us immune to the attacks of evil; a wonderful heritage is that of a condition of rest, love, peace, and joy. Like the mellifluous cadences of an angel's tongue come falling on the ears of the faithful the words, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him."

"Great Master, touch us with thy skillful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die;
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let Hidden and lost, the form within us die."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our Thanksgiving service, which was held the first Sunday of December at our regular sacrament service, was a spiritual and profitable service indeed. The time was fully occupied in prayer, testimony, and song, all praising our heavenly Father for his many blessings to us.

Through our pastor, Bro. T. J. Elliott, Bro. G. S. Trowbridge was called to the office of priest and Bro. F. Mottashd to that of teacher. By order of the district conference, which convened December 9, 10, they, with five others of the district, were ordained.

Our conference was one of the most spiritual we have had for some time. The business was especially peaceful and spiritual. Services were held the entire day, lunches being prepared at the church. Brn. Archibald and Paxton were the speakers, and uplifting and edifying discourses were delivered by them. Four were baptized, by Bro. Dowker, from Saint Charles, Missouri, and from the papers we learn that he baptized five more there a few weeks ago. Thus the work is growing.

The missionaries report that the gospel is winning its way. Bro. Archibald, the bishop's agent, says there is a growing tendency toward keeping the financial law. At this conference Bro. Charles Remington was called to the office of elder.

Our regular branch business meeting elected the same officers to serve the ensuing term.

The Christmas entertainment of the Sunday school, which was held on the 23d, and the song service by the choir on the evening of the 24th, with a fifteen minute talk on the Christmas theme by Bro. J. A. Tanner, of the Chicago mission, was a decided success, both entertaining and instructive.

On the morning of the 24th Elder S. A. Burgess delivered a splendid discourse, telling us that when we celebrate the birth of the Savior we celebrate the coming forth of a new life to man and the way of salvation.

Bro. Morris, of Xenia, Illinois, spoke to us the morning of the 17th. He is one of God's aged veterans who knows how to tell the gospel story in the old time way. Brn. Elliott, Reeves, and Masten were also among the speakers of the past month.

Bro. J. E. Betts, sr., of Belleville, Illinois, passed from this earth life December 8, at the age of seventy-six years. Bro. R. Archibald preached the funeral sermon at the home of his son, Joseph Betts, jr. Bro. Archibald also had charge of the funeral service of Bro. William Jacques, of Belleville, December 15, at the age of sixty-seven. The bereaved families have our sincere sympathy in their trials.

Stock Raisers Attention!

It will pay you to investigate the conditions pertaining to stock raising in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming. There are 6,000,000 acres of pasture lands in this section. The natural adaptation of the climate and the products of the soil tend to the best development of animal life. The high altitude produces a strong-lunged, hardy, more vigorous breed of stock, more free from disease than in the lower altitudes. Plenty of alfalfa makes this an ideal hog country. There is no fear of cholera and the market for years will be at home. Plenty of grass, good water and mild winters also make dairying very profitable. There is no better opportunity anywhere for the stock raiser, and there is still some good, suitable land available at low figures.

Editorial

"A MORMON MANIFESTO."

The following taken from an editorial of the London Times, perhaps the most noted and most influential newspaper in the world, may serve to bring to mind and emphasize the prophecy made by President Brigham Young, at the time the purported revelation on polygamy was offered, August 29, 1852, that it should sail over and ride triumphantly over all opposition and prejudice and finally be considered the best doctrine that was ever proclaimed among men. One by one have declarations been made against it, until probably the most powerful newspaper published in the English language pronounces the verdict of the universal world against it.

Well may Apostle Francis M. Lyman say from the Utah pulpit, that the deceiving and leading astray of wives and daughters of the church must stop, as they shall not any longer be deceived by this doctrine, which no one now on earth is authorized to minister in. We commend to the readers of the HERALD the plain, practical, common sense of "The Thunderer," which title has long been applied to this leading newspaper journal of the world.

A MORMON MANIFESTO.

We publish to-day a statement in writing which Joseph F. Smith, the President of the Mormon Church, has handed to our special correspondent in Salt Lake City for publication. The document, as our correspondent rightly insists, is "official to the fullest extent," for it was approved by the two other presidents, who, together with its author, constitute the First Presidency of the sect. It is a remarkable document. It is written with a judicious moderation of tone which is well calculated to appeal to the sense of justice of the British people, and it breathes a spirit of earnestness, simplicity, and truth. It is pious, and yet not over pious, as is seemly in a manifesto addressed in the first place to the "ministers of the gospel of all denominations," and ending with a benediction in the name of the Almighty. Mr. Smith begins by stating that his object is to contradict the misrepresentations now being made in England, and to establish the truth. With this end, he affirms that during the nine years in which he has held office as president no man in the church having one wife has been allowed to take another; that no authority of the church has been allowed "to perform such a marriage," meaning thereby a bigamous or polygamous marriage, and that nobody is invited to join the church in the expectation of living in such marriage. "All persons," he declares, "are invited only to join us as brothers in Jesus Christ and share the fullness of grace vouchsafed to us, as we believe, in revelations." The church, he alleges, enjoins obedience to the laws and to all properly constituted authority. All statements to the contrary, or ascribing to the church willingness "to countenance or encourage any form of immorality or loose living whatever," are false and slanderous. Mr. Smith does not ask us to accept these assurances on his unsupported word. He deprecates indeed, and begs all of us to resist, appeals to passion or prejudice, but he and his followers "earnestly solicit a most searching investigation into the conduct of their members in every community of the church," and they pledge themselves to assist such an investigation to the utmost of their power.

It is unfortunately not in our power as a State to comply with Mr. Smith's solicitation. The Home Office are at this moment making such inquiries into the operations of the Mormon missionaries in this country as the law permits, and we are content, with our correspondent, Mr. Leslie Scott, to await the result of their labors. But Mr. Smith must have known perfectly well when he wrote this invitation that nobody in this country can possibly carry out the "searching investigation" which he desires in the place where alone it could be conclusive, namely, in the State of Utah. To be of the smallest service an inquiry of the kind would have to be conducted by a body empowered to summon witnesses and examine them upon oath, and to compel the production of documents. No Government can, of course, undertake to make such an inquiry outside its own territory, and no examination undertaken by private persons as volunteers and unarmed with these indispensable powers would be able to get at the truth so as fully to convince public opinion. More unfortunately still, there does not appear to be any outside authority which can accede to Mr. Smith's request. The State of Utah has been itself a sovereign State since January, 1896, and the Federal Government of the United States has not even power, as Mr. Leslie Scott reminds us, to enforce the provision of the Utah constitution which forbids polygamy, although the admission of Utah as a State of the Union was made conditional on the insertion of this provision in that instrument. A thorough investigation carried out by the Federal Government would no doubt completely satisfy opinion. It would "establish the truth," as Mr. Smith desires, and, if it confirmed his statements, it would effectually dispel the "misunderstandings" of which he complains. It is difficult to be certain as to the exact limits of State and Federal rights under the American Constitution, but, as at present advised, we imagine that the inquiry for which Mr. Smith is so eager is outside the competence of the Washington authorities. If that be so, there is nobody who can conduct it. An inquiry by the State of Utah, or under its authority, would be a mockery, for that State is wholly under the control in its politics of the Mormon sect. It is to be feared that Mr. Smith's solicitations are vain, and his promise of assistance futile.

While desiring as far as possible to keep an open mind on any evidence which may be tendered in support of Mr.

Smith's statements, we can not shut our eyes to certain facts which tend to discredit them. In 1904-6 the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate was called upon to examine a protest lodged against the return of Mr. Reed Smoot as a Senator, substantially on the ground that he was a Mormon apostle. With the case itself we need not concern ourselves, except to say that Mr. Smoot was not a polygamist and that the Senate refused to disqualify him. But a great deal of evidence was given before this committee, some of which seems to be very pertinent to Mr. Smith's appeal "to the ministers of the gospel." He himself was a witness, and amongst the statements which he is alleged to have made were that there was a State law in Utah prohibiting unlawful cohabitation. He admitted that he had habitually violated this law. He admitted that he had five wives, and that all of his wives had borne him children—eleven in all—since 1890, the year in which the then president of the church had "advised" the faithful to refrain from marriages forbidden by law. There can not, we imagine, be any mistake about the identity of the "Joseph F. Smith" who was examined by the committee and the "Joseph F. Smith" who now bestows upon us his benediction. Nor do we fancy that he can be other than the "Joseph F. Smith" who on November 23, 1906, pleaded "guilty" in the district court of Salt Lake City to a charge of unlawful cohabitation and was fined three hundred dollars. We have no wish whatever to appeal "to passion or prejudice," but if the person who confessed to having five wives before the Committee of the Senate, and who confessed to unlawful cohabitation when brought before the court, be the author of the manifesto disclaiming for his church all willingness to countenance loose living, it seems desirable that the readers of this plausible appeal for fair play should know the history of the man who makes it. The character of a witness is very material when he invites us to consider his unsupported statements.

AN OLD REVELATION.

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 13.

Wonderful changes have occurred during the eighty years since the giving of this revelation. There seemed little prospect of its fulfillment then; now events shape themselves so that we see its accomplishment begun. Notice the change since it was given. Then there was little danger of conflict except between nations closely adjoining one another, or between colonies and the parent land. Now all lands are knit together by a system of world-wide commerce, facilitated by our modern means of transportation and communication. Distance and time are no longer barriers between nations, nor safeguards of peace. A mere question of trade may plunge one people into war with another people on the opposite side of the globe. The two hardly knew each other's existence eighty years ago. We are in touch with all the world, and in a commercial sense even now fighting all the world. We do not know the color or the language of the people that to-morrow may be stirred to actual warfare because of this condition.

It has been the dream of dreamers for many years that we were drawing near to a time of universal and continuous peace when civilization would destroy war. If that were true this revelation were false; but surely none save a dreamer can think that now. The causes that produce war have not been removed; they have been increased and aggravated. The spirit of rivalry between nations is more intense. The struggle for existence is more severe. The arms and armaments of the nations are more costly, heavier, more deadly than ever before; and the men behind the guns are just as fierce and desperate fighters as though they had never heard of civilization and peace ideals.

All this indicates that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is correct in predicting that war shall be poured out upon all nations; and that the philanthropist is mistaken when he talks of the near dawn of peace.

We learn from this revelation that war is to be even more immediate than between nations; it is to come into one's own land and obtrude itself between neighbors, to the extent that the man who remains in the world will be compelled to take up his sword against his neighbor.

Here, again, we note how conditions have changed. Eighty years ago the individual in any foreign land who found circumstances too straitened for his liking, could flee to America. It was in a literal sense the land of Zion to all the world. The individual who wearied of the struggle in the East could always push his way toward the West. There was an abundance of land for the taking. That day is ended. Nature has no Zion now to which one may flee from his neighbors. He will find quite similar conditions everywhere; or if not now there will soon be a uniformity.

He finds society divided between those who have money and those who want money. He finds anything but good feeling between the two. He also finds the laboring classes divided among themselves, and these two conditions are and will be the cause of bitter conflict. Conflict to-day exists between neighbors over issues undreamed of in America when this revelation was given.

The laboring man in many places, even now, has but the choice between the two horns of a dilemma. If he joins a trade union he places himself largely in the hands of others. He may at any time be called from his work because some one in a city of another State has a grievance, the justice of which is more or less a matter of conjecture. He is ordered out on picket duty to prevent his neighbor, who is not a union man, with whom he chatted amicably yesterday evening, from continuing work for the men who have incurred the displeasure of the union. He may or may not be naturally disposed to resort to violent measures; in any event he is pretty sure to become involved in the heat and bitterness of a stubbornly contested strike and so will do what yesterday he thought impossible. He sees his family suffering for food while his neighbor by working makes more remote their chance of obtaining it. His condition makes him desperate. Then some night he finds himself one of a mob that has caught that "scab" neighbor without police protection and "beaten him up."

He may choose to hold aloof from the union. In that case he may find it difficult to hold a job. Union men will do their best to make it intolerable for him. He is in an actual condition of warfare with his neighbors, and when the strike is on must go armed against them. These are not idle words. These conditions have actually existed in every great strike during the past few years.

What will be the outcome? Will conditions better themselves? Apparently not. The laboring class is constantly becoming more aggressive and better organized. The capitalists are constantly moving higher the mark that indicates great wealth. The man who was counted extremely wealthy a few years ago is now considered but fairly well to do. More millions must be made, regardless of consequences. These millions are employed too often in an ostentatious extravagance that is to the worker like a red flag to a bull.

All this is in harmony with Bible predictions that wars and disturbances and perilous times should come in the last days. In view of it all the Bible believer of any nation well might ask, What does God intend to do with me? Will he expose me to the same disasters that he visits upon the wicked and ungodly? Has he prepared a way of escape? Does he wish me to escape? His answer, as found in Luke 22: 36, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." He wants his people to escape, then, and modern revelation tells us the method he will employ. Those who wish to avoid these evils must "flee unto Zion." "And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy."—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 14.

The plan is in direct harmony with God's way in all ages, as a very brief review will show you. After the flood, when the earth began again to be peopled, "the whole earth was of one language and of one speech." They were scattered only because of wickedness, and a multitude of languages and nations resulted. Remove the cause of this scattering and will they not come together again as one people, no longer Jew or Gentile, bond or free? Evidently that is God's will, for we find that those who were righteous were permitted to remain together under Jared and his brother, who came to this land.

Just as soon as God found a righteous man in the Old World he began a gathering under Abraham, of whom he said, "And in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." The work was partially defeated during the sojourn in Egypt and was taken up under Moses, to whom God said, "And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey." Again, after the Babylonian captivity we find God moving upon Cyrus, king of Persia, commanding him to build a temple at Jerusalem and bid the people gather there, and Cyrus made this proclamation, "Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel."

Next we find Christ himself taking up the work, and he declares, "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" The very spirit of the gospel is gathering. No man becomes imbued with that spirit but longs to be with God's people and see them all one.

Now to return for a moment to the present condition of the world, particularly the business world. How will it be remedied? Legislation can not control the situation because the trouble lies beyond the reach of human law. It lies in the hearts of men, and there is no human power that may change the human heart.

The present condition will continue until men learn to cooperate, each working for all. This can be done only among a people whose hearts have been freed from selfishness by the power of the gospel, the only power that can do such a work. That people will be God's people and that place will be Zion.

At present people think that the man who is gifted as a preacher or statesman or philosopher or scientist should use his talents for the good of the whole world, while the man who is gifted with the power to make money is fully entitled to use it all for himself. In time to come we will see, and he will see, that his gift should be used for all. When his own reasonable needs are supplied, his reserve force will be at the disposal of God to use for the entire people of God, as will every other man's reserve of money or brain or heart.

So we look for two great things to be accomplished under the gathering. The gospel will begin to destroy race prejudices, making the gathered of all races one, until we get back to the primitive condition of one people and all nations are put under the feet of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Second, we look for the gospel to destroy individual conflict between neighbors, so that they will learn to cooperate. The result will be peace, under Christ, the greatest peacemaker. The individual who works for this is truly blessed, for he has said, "Blessed is the peacemaker."

All this may seem far away; but it will come. It will be accomplished, and that along the lines laid down. It is God's way and the only way.

One commandment we should take to heart, "Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6. If we are not one we will merely gather from the scene of conflict in the world to one of conflict in the church, and the latter will be the more intolerable. If we all seek to become like Christ we will be one. We may not see alike on all points, but we will be one in spirit and can settle our differences peaceably.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A REPUBLIC IN CHINA.—A republican form of government begins to take form from the wreck and ruin of internal warfare in China. Doctor Sun Gat Sen has been made president of the united provinces, his inauguration taking place on New Year's Day. One of his first acts was to send word to the Chinese all over the world that with the day of the inauguration, January 1, 1912, China was to begin to reckon her dates by the Gregorian calendar of the Western World.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE BUSINESS WORLD.—Formerly the dominant idea in the business world was that a man should get money, honestly if he could, but in any event he should get money. When moral obstacles appeared in the onward march of material progress they were borne down. The end was supposed to justify the means. But of late many teachers have arisen who insist that honesty is the best policy, and that in business the rights of humanity should be considered first. As one puts it, that one should not "bring out anything for one's own advantage without regard to rights or right." This is a wholesome sentiment that should spread; but such a policy will be impossible of execution generally and in all its details until business men subscribe to the theory taught in the Book of Mormon: "Before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good, to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted."

That mysterious power we call man's soul will always find happiness, because there will always be work for it to do, in a universe infinite and eternal, requiring constant supervision and distribution of matter and force by the thinking spirit which controls both.—Selected.

"Some folks—many, indeed—rebel against the drudgery of everyday life. But rebellion will not reduce drudgery. It may increase its burden. The best antidote for drudgery is the spirit of joy. Be happy in your work, and your tasks will seem light, heavy though they may be."

Life, like war, is a series of mistakes, and he is not the best Christian nor the best general who makes the fewest false steps. He is the best who wins the most splendid victories by the retrieval of mistakes. Forget mistakes: organize victory out of mistakes.—F. W. Robertson.

THE MAN OF SIN.

2 Thessalonians 2:3 speaks of the man of sin, also called the son of perdition. This verse has been variously interpreted. Personally I believe it refers to the Devil, that he is the man of sin and the son of perdition. I am confirmed in this belief by the following statement in the Church History, vol. 1, p. 192, "The Lord displayed his power in a manner that could not be mistaken. The man of sin was revealed," etc.

This man of sin was to oppose and exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God, verse 4.

Undoubtedly the temple here referred to is man, "Man is the tabernacle of God, even temples." (Doctrine and Covenants 90:5; 2 Corinthians 6:16.) God purposes and intends to dwell in man, by the light and power of his Spirit; but when man departs from him, the Devil takes possession, sits in the temple in God's stead.

The work of the Devil in the general apostasy, and the bringing of the world into gross darkness as a consequence (a condition which the Lord suffered to come before his second advent) is "that which withholdeth" that he (Christ) might be revealed in his time. (Verse 6.) That work of demoralization was going on in the days of Paul. "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work, and he it is who now worketh, and Christ suffereth him to work, until the time is fulfilled that he (the Devil) shall be taken out of the way." Then (at the coming of Christ) shall that wicked one (the man of sin and the son of perdition) be revealed; the Lord shall consume him with the spirit of his mouth and destroy him with the brightness of his coming. (Verses 7-9.)

The reader will notice that this rendering in the Inspired Version differs from the other versions. From this it is clear that the language, "He who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way" in the common versions is faulty, a mistranslation, and that it is Christ who suffereth the man of sin to work, until the time is fulfilled when he (the man of sin) shall be revealed and taken out of the way.

This probably is the same event foretold by John in Revelation 20:1, 2, where he says, "And I saw an angel come down out of heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years."

The chain here mentioned must represent some power from heaven by which the man of sin is revealed and disarmed, probably that spiritual endowment which will result in greater gospel righteousness among the Saints of God; hence the statement in the Book of Mormon, referring to the same time and event, "And because of the righteousness of his people, Satan has no power; wherefore, he can not be loosed for the space of many years; for he hath no power over the hearts of the people, for they dwell in righteousness, and the Holy One of Israel reigneth."

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

BY J. F. GARVER.

(The following article is one of a short series prepared by request of the officers of the Men's Social Purity Committee, and we heartily commend their perusal to the Saints. The writers are especially representing the purity committee in their respective fields of labor. May the reading of these articles incite in all a greater diligence in the observance of all that may be necessary to make us "pure in heart" according to the divine standard.—Charles B. Woodstock, for the committee.)

I the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments.—Deuteronomy 5:9, 10.

In the consideration of parental responsibility we enter a field broad, far reaching and inexhaustible. In this field Latter Day Saints have a deep interest; and to it they have given study and thought. In the word accepted by the church the Lord has instructed in the training and governing of the children of Zion; and he has not only decreed that the parent shall be held to account for his care of the child, but has also made it plain that the parent may be hindered in his personal work—the general cause being correspondingly hindered—by a failure in this care. It is as essential, then, to the ultimate triumph of the latter day work, that the children receive proper direction.

This article has to do only with parental duty as relating to social purity. It is not the purpose even in this connection to be definite, but rather in a general way to briefly suggest the gravity and sacredness of these responsibilities of parenthood as touching the emancipation of the individual and the purification of society.

The power of the parent to determine in the affairs of the child is set out vividly in the scripture herein quoted. To the superficial reasoner it seems unjust that one man suffers as a consequence of the act of another. This shortsightedness always overlooks the further provision that one man has advantage following the act of another. He who rebels against the decree "the iniquity of the fathers" shall be visited "upon the children" needs to read also that "mercy" is shown "unto thousands" of the children

"of them that love me and keep my commandments." In the principle herein expressed we have an exposition of the law providing for each act its consequence. Individual action bears fruitage not only in the after life of the individual, but also in the life of the offspring, in the family, and in society. From this law there is no appeal; and in that hereby is largely intrusted to parenthood the future of the child and of society, rather than be met in rebellion, this provision should call forth every manly instinct and enlist all in the ranks of "them that love me and keep my commandments."

We shrink in horror from the consequence of evil. Yet these consequences are ever before us and with them we daily deal. In institutions and asylums for the blind, the deformed, the inefficient, the feeble-minded, the insane, the inebriate, in reformatories and prisons for the derelict and the criminal are thousands upon thousands who have been hurled on to dependence, misery and crime by the "iniquity" of those who have gone before. Insidiously at work among circles refined is the demon impurity, perhaps not responsible for such dire distress, yet reproducing the tendency to moral looseness and uncleanness.

To abhor this work of evil will not suffice. While these examples illustrate the inexorable consequence of evil they also set forth the surety of the "mercies" that attend upon righteousness. As one condition follows, so does the other. With every power set against impurity the social worker turns determinedly and hopefully to the possibilities of righteousness.

Parental responsibility, then, begins not when the child enters the family circle, but far in advance of its coming. In preparation for the child there is only one way—the righteous way: The holding of the mind to right thinking, to the exclusion of all that is base and carnal; the holding of the body to the laws of health; the holding of the physical functions to a legitimate exercise; the moving of the entire man in an atmosphere of purity and dignity—these are the forerunners of children vigorous in body and in mind, pure in thought and wholesome in disposition. With such children come from such ancestry the battle is already half won.

The direction of the activities of the growing child and of budding manhood and womanhood must depend largely upon the child itself—its inclinations and its associations. However, a few general suggestions may be permitted.

The child needs to know its proper relations to society; and it needs to learn early. Learn it will from some source, and it is best that the instruction come from the right and unpolluted source. The information that has come, perhaps, in lewdness, lessons that have come, perhaps, in pain and in remorse to its predecessors should be brought to this child at the proper time and under proper circumstances; that it may be spared possible misery; that it may have knowledge without vulgarity; that it may learn to hold as a sacred thing the physical functions; that it may approach in vigor, in intelligence and in reverence the responsibilities of parenthood.

It is the inevitable duty of the parent to teach the child. And what shall it be taught? Certainly the proper care of the body, that it may be strong for the child's own achievement and for the achievements of those to follow; certainly the proper functions of the body, that the child may be shielded from undirected companions and from unscrupulous elders; and that those functions be not impaired by the vicious practices of childhood and early manhood; certainly the regulation of the procreative function that the health, the vitality, and the moral strength of the offspring be not weakened; certainly the ever present need of that purity of thought that works to the subjection of carnal desire and passion, and that holds mind and body to those lines necessary to emancipation and triumph. He who fails in this teaching sends forth his child unprepared, unprotected and alone to learn from whatsoever source he may learn, if, indeed, he ever learn, the sacredness of his own person and the sanctity of the marriage relation, without which neither societies of men nor of God can triumph.

It will not be enough that the parent teach by precept; his example, a far stronger incentive, should be chaste and the personification of purity. By word, by act, in every relation with and in the presence of the child the parent needs to bear in mind that the child is being directed. The attitude of parent to child; the attitude of one parent to the other; the attitude of parent to other adults—from all these associations is the child formulating his standard. If his ideal is to be one of purity, if he is to guard his own thought, govern his own desire and passion, hold his own physical being in subjection, it needs be that he have before him that parental example in word and act that will inspire him to purity, to chastity—to self-government.

The need of proper care and training of the child, as we have seen, was early suggested in the law given to ancient Israel. That Israel might be free from unclean influence idolatrous and adulterous nations were removed. The sons and daughters of Israel were commanded not to intermarry among the heathen. Had this people heeded the counsel of God and remained untouched by the impurity of their contemporaries, had they in this connection been true, then might their teaching in the home have been thorough and effectual. Through their intermingling with the heathen, carnal influence and adulterous disposition crept in, and with other departures worked the overthrow of the nation God had called "to be his peculiar people." When to the children of this nation Christ made his appearing they were unprepared, and instead of liberation they received as their portion rejection and destruction.

Latter day Israel, as early as February, 1831, was warned against lust and adultery. In December of the same year the Lord said: "There were among you adulterers and adulteresses; some of whom have turned away from you, and others remain with you, that hereafter shall be revealed." On different occasions thereafter the Lord repeated the word of warning. Yet adultery, following as it invariably does unclean thought and lust, continued its deadly work and became one of the mighty forces of evil resulting in the apostasy of the latter days.

In all this is there no lesson for the Reorganization? From the consciousness of the consequence of our own cleanness or uncleanness of mind; our own preservation or debilitation of body; the curbing or excess of our own physical function; our own purity or impurity; from this consciousness is there no incentive to self-government and to the teaching of self-government to our children!

If Zion is to be redeemed and a people be made ready for the coming of the Lord and the consummation of the latter day work, we need to set about to that end. Among other things we need to become pure in heart. To this purpose, then, let us purge ourselves of impurity and excess; let us hold our minds to chastity; let us bring our bodies into subjection; let us bend every energy to the emancipation of ourselves from carnality, that to our children may we bequeath that vigor of body and mind, that moral stalwartness, that inclination to purity that will, indeed, call down upon us and upon them the "mercies" of Him who, with us all, labors to the end of our peace and triumph.

THE PROBLEM OF CHURCH UNION.

The efforts made toward a consolidation of the forces of modern Christianity have always been of interest to Latter Day Saints. For years the question has been discussed pro and con. The following extracts are examples of the trend of thought along that line.

In the Northwestern Christian Advocate, December 13, 1911, there is a lengthy article entitled, "A Plea for United Methodism," written by President T. H. Lewis, D. D., LL. D., of the Methodist Protestant Church.

Mr. Lewis's article covers the ground of the union of Methodism rather extensively. In view of the fact that there are seventeen factions of Methodism, it would seem to be an undertaking requiring considerable ingenuity and much patience.

The following are extracts from the article:

The Methodists of America ought to be united. . . . this admission of the "oughtness" of Methodist union is a great step forward. . . . Those who have studied the situation where these rival Methodisms are at work, or at war, admit that present conditions are wasteful, unnatural, and only not disgraceful because they seem irremediable. They admit that there can be no excuse for Christian people who are trying to do the same thing in the same way and for the same end to get into one another's way so that none of them can do anything. . . . It is a commonplace of the pastorate that there is nothing like a revival to set things going in wiping out divisions and factions. And as I feel quite sure that Methodist union will cause a great revival, I am sometimes inclined to believe that nothing but a great revival will ever bring about Methodist union. . . . Most of the denominations have arisen because loyalty to him [Christ] was impossible without them to the men involved. But when a denomination ceases to afford us a way to express that loyalty in the peculiar form required by our connections, or when other forms of expressing are equally valid to us, then the denomination ceases to have any claim upon us.

I am willing to test the duty of Methodist union by this principle.

President Lewis sees a hindrance to church amalgamation, "even as to Christian people," in the trait of selfishness. He says:

And there is still a larger number in every denomination not unwilling to be office-bearers; and they reason that many denominations mean many opportunities, whereas one denomination may not mean even one.

Under the caption, "Sectional differences," he takes up a prolific cause of church disruption in the past; one which has had too much to do with the divisions in many church organizations. We quote:

But I know there are those who insist that a union of Methodists is impracticable because of ineradicable differences in temperament, in viewpoint, in the way of doing things, in their estimate of social values, and in many other things. . . . Where were these ineradicable differences between these Northern and Southern Methodists from 1773 to 1844? At the first conference of American Methodists in 1773, there were reported 560 Methodists north of Mason and Dixon's line, and 600 south of it. They lived and worked and rejoiced together for seventy-one years; and they lived apart sixty-six years. That is what the ineradicable differences amount to, just five years short of an ineradicable likeness. . . . All our divisions have arisen from contentions about matters which must be called incidental. I do not say that they are insignificant matters, but they are not properly Methodist matters at all. And the proof is that whatever we call ourselves all Methodists are as much alike now in all the essentials that justify us in calling ourselves Methodists as we were when John Wesley died.

In commenting on the fact "that Methodism made last year in this country a net gain of membership of less than and one half per cent," he says,

In remaining apart Methodists must defend separation; and in doing that they must give a great deal of time and energy to matters which are really not Methodistic at all; whereas if Methodists were united, the whole stress and energy of Methodist life and power could be given to the propaganda of that life and power.

As to the ultimate advantage in this specific case:

We would stop emphasizing the things wherein we differ and put the whole stress of prayer and effort on those things wherein we all agree and have always agreed. . . . And when that era comes it will furnish its own demand upon Methodist pulpits. Preachers will have to get new ammunition to take the place of the controversial dynamite. . . . Then pastors will be able to give more time to edification when it will not be necessary to keep their members zealous for some "ism" of Methodism.

From a recent issue of the Christian Herald, in an editorial on the subject: "Is church union possible?" the following is noted:

Any appeal to denominational Christians to unite, except to the extent of cooperative action in sessions of revival, or of friendly exchanges of pulpits, or to carry out some mission of Christian work or philanthropy, seems to fall very largely on deaf ears. One may be a thorough-going Christian and still be so loyal to his denomination that he could not give it up without a heart pang. His own church is endeared to him by many hallowed ties. It was the church of his father and mother—the church in which he was first led to see the light. As a faithful soldier loves his regimental colors, so the true Christian is attached to his old church and its simple, familiar ways. . . .

In the broad scheme of church union known as "the Level Plan," Bishop William M. Brown, of Arkansas, has outlined a proposition which is, substantially, that all the Protestant churches should accept the superintendency of bishops, each for itself, at the hands of the existing historic order of bishops in his own communion—the Protestant Episcopal. He admits at the outset that there is no chance for the coming together of the churches for the world's evangelization on the basis of sacerdotal Catholicism, and believes the only basis possible is "republican Protestantism." But such a proposition would have the effect of creating an ordained priesthood, which is at variance with the principles of the Protestant church, organic and spiritual. No one who is observant of the religious progress of the time will contend that the church is ripe for so radical a departure. Protestantism is essentially republican. It had its origin in the reaction against the undue assertion of ecclesiastical authority and religious dogma, and the multiplication of Protestant divisions is simply a demonstration of the continuity of that independent spirit. Organic independence is valued too highly and has cost too dearly to be lightly surrendered. We doubt whether any single Protestant denomination would consent to pass under the ecclesiastical authority of any body of Christians outside of its own lines, especially if that body be one holding exclusive views on the question of historic authority. Such, as we view it without bias, is the attitude of the Protestant churches at the present time.

That stifled hum of midnight, when traffic has lain down to rest; and the chariot wheel of vanity, still rolling here and there through the distant streets, are bearing her to halls roofed-in, and lighted to the due pitch for her; and only vice and misery, to prowl or to moan like nightbirds, are abroad; that hum, I say, like the stertorous, unquiet slumber of sick life, is heard in heaven!—Thomas Carlyle.

WHEN JESUS COMES.

When Jesus comes! A glorious hope indeed, and yet how feebly we sense it. The finite mind is too limited in its power to fully comprehend the scope of the simplest prophetic utterance relative to the procedure of our Lord when he appears in person as the King of kings and Lord of lords, to enter upon the task of subjecting the race of Adam to the will of God, as indicated in part by many inspired statements. However, we live in hope, satisfied the day is drawing near when the veil will be lifted, and we will no longer be obliged to look "through a glass darkly." Till that day dawns, our understanding of the millennium will be more or less imperfect, according to the degree of light and inspirational intelligence that has reached the secret and most sacred recesses of our souls, and there discovered its eternal counterpart. The Lord informs us, "Light cleaveth unto light and intelligence cleaveth unto intelligence."

We are warranted in looking for the earth itself to undergo many marvelous changes, thus purifying it and restoring it to its original glory and acceptance with God. Likewise, we are justified in believing that man must pass through a series of changes, thus elevating him to his first estate. The earth and the processes of its purification we shall not discuss in this article, but confine our comment to the human race, hoping always to improve upon the past in the extent of our conception of the prophetic word. However, before touching the question directly at issue, we wish to digress a little to consider a SIGN OF THE END.

That sign is the preaching of the gospel to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. Probably some hold that this latter day work has to be carried to every individual nation now upon the earth, before the Savior comes. If this be correct a ponderous task yet lies before the church; for to carry this gospel to every nation of Europe, Asia, Africa, the Americas, and the many islands of the sea is no small undertaking. The writer believes this to be an extreme interpretation and entirely unnecessary. The phrase "all nations" is used in other connections, and does not admit of every nation, but is unmistakably used in a limited sense. Note the language found in Daniel 2: 38, with reference to Nebuchadnezzar's rule: "And wheresoever the children of men dwell . . . hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all." A similar statement is made concerning Cyrus, the king of Persia. Ezra 1: 2 reads: "Thus saith Cyrus, king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth." Strictly speaking, neither of the statements is correct. Nebuchadnezzar did not rule over every part of the globe as the words, "whosoever the children of men dwell" would imply; nor did Cyrus have "all the kingdoms of the earth given him." The Assyrian empire overruled Chaldea B. C. 1270, and is regarded as the first universal kingdom. Babylon overthrows the Assyrian power, B. C. 625, and was in turn overthrown by the Persians B. C. 538. In neither case did their rule extend into the extremities of Asia, Europe, Africa, or America, for upon the latter continent dwelt the Jaredites from B. C. 2200 to about B. C. 500. To force the exact wording would do violence to facts, and is unnecessary, for the evident intention of the historian is to record the facts as known to them, and they apparently did not know of any distant nations. Coming nearer to the subject please observe what is recorded in Revelation 13: 3, "And all the world wondered after the beast," and again, in verse 7, "and power was given him over all kindreds tongues, and nations." Did all the world wonder after the beast? Did Babylon, (Rome, and her daughters included if desired) ever make all nations drunk? Here again, we must limit the words, and we can do so without injury to the text. It is on a par with the statement made in Mark 1: 5: "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan." So, we reason, the liberty to limit the phrase "all nations" when reference is made to the spread of the gospel. Babylon represents apostate Christian religions, and these were confined to the continent of Europe till the reformation period, and since that time little is known or found of Babylon, in either Asia or Africa. If the true gospel as restored reaches the "all nations" coming under the influence of the great apostate church, then the prophecy is reasonably interpreted, and the likelihood of the Savior's near approach more easily accounted for. What other explanation can be given of the revelation, given in 1834, saying that "Zion might even now have been redeemed" had the Saints been true to their trust. It appears not so much a question of preaching the gospel to the many existing nations, as it does for the Saints to come up higher, and build up Zion. The nations, and every individual therein, will have ample opportunity to learn of God, and serve him apart from the preaching of the gospel as a warning, or sign of the end. Naturally the question arises, or destroyed at the coming of Christ? Are all the inhabitants of the earth to be cut off, leaving only those who have heard and embraced the latter day evangel? Supposing the gospel was carried into every nation, without a single exception, before the end, we can hardly suppose every individual in the nation will have heard it. What then of these who do not hear it, though it be preached to their nation? Are all outside of the pale of the church to be classed with the wicked and swept off the earth by judgments? What also about the house of Judah and the many heathen nations? Surely there are people, even whole nations, outside the knowledge of full gospel truth that are not going to be cut off. Babylon has no promise of abiding the day of Christ's visitation, so we may safely conclude her destruction to be certain. But what percentage of the earth's people are to be classed in with "Mystery Babylon the Great"? The restored church is almost completely made up of those who once formed a part of Babylon. "Come out of her my people" is being verified every day. Are the Jewish people, or the heathen nations, classed with Babylon? We venture to say not, and personally believe they will remain after Babylon, which is a gross misrepresentation of Christ and his word, has been destroyed. With this understanding the Saints are not the only people on the earth to enter upon the millennium. The

WHAT PEOPLE ARE TO BE CUT OFF,

is a prominent feature of the millennial age. From Paul's writing to the Thessalonians, many gather the idea that when Jesus comes the worthy Saints alive at the time, whether gathered or scattered, will all be changed together, from the mortal to the immortal state. Paul's statement is of a general character, and in itself is incomplete. For instance, he speaks of the righteous dead being raised; the living being changed; and all being caught up to meet the Lord in the air. All these things are represented as taking place at one time, and all are left up in the air. This catching up of the body is evidently the same as mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27, and is but temporary, for if all were caught up and remained so, there would be none to inherit the earth. Providing there is a catching up of the living body of believers, during which time it is presumed the earth will be subjected to a purifying process, there may be somewhat of a change made in the creature, but it is not a change from mortality to immortality. From the 13th paragraph of the 63d section of Doctrine and Covenants, we read: "and he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye." There is no chance for a misunderstanding here. Those living, and found in the faith at the coming of Christ, will be "blessed," and under this blessing the millennial age and camp of the saints begins, and there is no doubt but what it will continue through to the end; "nevertheless" everyone thus blessed is "appointed to die" in due time, but they shall not sleep in the dust, but be changed in the twinkling of an eye. This is the change from the mortal to the immortal state, and is to take place as an individual matter during the millennium. Death therefore invades the camp of the saints; but the spirit will not separate from the body as is the case now, but when the appointed time comes for each person to die, the spirit will remain in the body, the latter undergoing the change from mortality to immortality. It is therefore clear the saints are not all changed at one time, nor yet at the moment of the Savior's appearing. We may accept death as positive proof of mortality, and it is certain all who form the camp of the saints must die and are thereby removed; yet the camp will by no means decrease in numbers. Instead of diminishing, their number is to increase, inasmuch as to those who make up this righteous camp; and it may here be added that birth is also an evidence of the mortal condition. Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10, speaking of the faithful saints living at the time of the Master's coming, declares "the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance: and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst and his glory shall be upon them and he will be their King and their lawgiver." Observe the statement, "they shall multiply and wax strong." Whatever the number of the camp in the beginning, it will increase greatly by births; notwithstanding the fact "children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die."

Digressing for the moment, we turn our thoughts to the house of Judah. We understand the Jews are to gather to their own land, and become a mighty nation before Jesus comes. They are to be engaged in a fierce combat with other nations when the Lord appears. As a nation they are still ignorant of Jesus of Nazareth being the true Christ; and while in the midst of a great struggle, the Savior presents himself upon the Mount of Olives, and the mount cleaving in twain, they are saved from bitter defeat. They recognize the visible scars of the wounds received so long ago, and are convinced he is their own Messiah. But now, what becomes of this highly favored people? Are they destroyed or are they allowed to enter upon the millennium? All are obliged to admit the latter, and so we have a with headquarters at Jerusalem. Zechariah 13: 1 states, "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness." They will have the gospel then, and in all probability enjoy its benefits as fully as those who form the camp of the saints in Zion. In support of this, Isaiah 65: 17-25 is cited: "I will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die at an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed. And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat; for as the days of a tree so are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord and their offspring with them." It will be noticed from this reading, that similar conditions exist in this camp of the Jews as is found in the camp of the saints. Children are born, and death occurs. "There shall be no more thence an infant of days nor an old man that hath not filled his days, for the child shall die an hundred years old." Mortality reigns throughout this camp also, and yet the glorious millennium has dawned. The gospel must reach them as a nation after the appearance of Christ, and it is possible the "fountain opened . . . for sin and uncleanness" is a prophetic reference to the introduction of the gospel, as it shall be carried to them from the camp of the saints. Accepting the gospel and meeting its irrevocable demands, it appears reasonable to believe they too will be "changed" to the immortal condition, when each in turn come to the appointed time of death. Mention of the "sinner" dying, and being "accursed," indicates some will not obey the gospel law, and so have to suffer a separation of spirit and body; the rebellious spirit going to the pit, to await the last resurrection; while the body sleeps in the dust. No doubt but what the camp of the saints may furnish their quota of "sinners," who likewise must suffer the curse. Satan being bound does not preclude sin. An abuse of agency caused Satan to fall, and an abuse of agency in the millennium will as surely make "sinners" of those who err in like manner.

THE HEATHEN NATIONS.

It is possible, and does not require much stretch of the mind, to reason, that the heathen nations enjoying the universal peace and gospel privileges of the age, will be situated similar to both of the camps referred to. Upon acceptance of the gospel, and fully observing its holy precepts; which may then be better understood than at present, it seems right to allow them the same blessing as other mortals. By the end of the millennium these heathen nations will be greatly increased in number, and when Satan is loosed out of his prison, he will apparently succeed in influencing many, whom we may class as "sinners," and "accursed," to oppose the progress of the gospel, and make an attack upon the camp of the saints, which may be the seat of all gospel operations for the whole millennial period. Fortunately, the camp is protected, and those so influenced are destroyed by the power of God. This war may be the means of gathering together under one head all those who refuse to abide gospel law, and their removal will leave only those worthy of the Lord's protection and blessing. Coming now to a consideration of the dead, our first inquiry is, when he comes in the clouds of heaven? These are evidently the spirits of the righteous dead, from the resurrection of Christ down to the second coming of Christ, who have been resting in paradise; there awaiting the hour of resurrection. In our judgment, it does not include those who were resurrected at the time of Christ's resurrection; nor does it include the city of Enoch that was taken up into heaven. Alma, in the Book of Mormon, pp. 311, 312 conveys the idea that all the righteous from Adam to Christ were raised from the dead at the time of our Lord's conquest over the grave, and this while not positively stated, is confirmed in a measure by Matthew 27: 52, 53, where we read, "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." It is rather strange that Matthew should be the only writer to mention such an important matter, and that he should write so little. The probability is the wonderful work was accomplished by the Lord in a quiet way, there being no occasion for any demonstration in the presence of the living. Matthew seems to have had a faint conception of what had taken place, while others may not have known; or nearing, they refused to believe; as there would be very little evidence of such an event to the natural man. The only convincing proof would be in them appearing unto many, but we see no purpose served to publish it far and wide; nor can we conceive of any good reason for God acquainting the ignorant, doubting race with an act of such magnitude. The secrecy maintained commends itself, and is but another evidence of the wisdom of God. If then the righteous from the days of Adam down to the resurrection of Christ were resurrected at that period, we at once observe there is no necessity for them returning with Jesus when he comes; at least for the same reason as those who have died subsequent to Christ's death, and whose spirits are now in paradise awaiting his coming. Another thought of interest is, whether those raised from the dead when Jesus comes, together with those previously raised, are to form a part of the camp of the saints at the opening of the millennium. To be resurrected means immortality. Are the DEAD AND LIVING TO MIX?

The one is mortal, the other immortal; are they to mingle together during the thousand years? Many may believe so, but constant meditation has compelled the writer to think different. The resurrected are separate from the camp of the saints during the millennium. It is reasonable that it be so, for their condition is far from being the same. Where then are the resurrected located, if not a part of the camp? We answer by citing Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13, and read, "Yea and blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, when the Lord shall come, and old things shall pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord in the holy city." Where is this holy city? We read again, Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5, which declares: "these are they whom he shall bring with him, when he shall come in the clouds of heaven, to reign on the earth over his people; these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just; these are they who are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly place, the holiest of all, these are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and the church of Enoch, and of the Firstborn." Where is this Mount Zion? Where is the heavenly place, the holiest of all? Where is the city of the living God? Where is the general assembly? Where is the church of Enoch? An answer to these queries settles the question as to where the resurrected are. Who will say the camp of the saints answers this description? Theirs may be termed a holy city, but not the "holiest of all." We especially ask the reader to notice that when the dead are raised at the coming of Christ, they join the "general assembly," the "church of Enoch and of the Firstborn." There is a place then where all the resurrected dead assemble, and this because all are not resurrected at one time. The church of Enoch went there. The righteous from Adam to Christ went there. Matthew can not mean Jerusalem when he speaks of the "holy city." There would have been no advantage leaving paradise to dwell in Jerusalem as it was in the first century. Jerusalem was soon after destroyed for its wickedness. There is but one legitimate conclusion and that is the "holy city" these great and holy men entered was no other than the "city of the living God," the "general assembly," the "church of Enoch." Then again, when Jesus comes, according to the plain statement found in Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13, those having part in the first resurrection, receive their inheritance before the Lord in the "holy city." This we recognize as the "general assembly," and not as the camp of the saints. Distinguishing them between the camp of the living, and the city of the dead, at the beginning of the millennial reign, and believing the separation will continue through the entire period, the possibility of a passage from the mortal to the immortal is accomplished presumably by the

and cite Doctrine and Covenants 98: 5, as support: "In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious." The day spoken of is the millennium. The child will not die in infancy, but reach a mature age—the age of a tree—and coming to the appointed time he is changed. This means immortality, as before stated; but notice, after this change has been wrought, the individual thus favored is taken away from the camp; as clearly expressed in the words, "and shall be caught up." That this change and removal is an advantage over millennial conditions, is evident from the words, "and his rest shall be glorious." Body and spirit have been taken away, being made necessary by the change, and the inference is strong that such a person leaving the camp of the living, has passed over to the side of the immortal, to occupy this place in the "general assembly." Thus one by one they leave the camp and enter the heavenly place, the holiest of all; the city of the living God; and at the end of the millennium the

HOLY CITY DESCENDS.

John the Revelator in all probability witnessed the descent of this great city. It came down from heaven, and this vision of the end coincides beautifully with the ideas presented in this article. John said: "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth. . . . And I John saw the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven. . . . And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." Doctrine and Covenants 36: 13 will then be fulfilled, wherein it declares, "Then shall you and all your city meet them there . . . and there shall be my abode, and it shall be Zion which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made; and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest." Note the words, "Zion shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made." This could not possibly be till after the winding up of the millennium, for those taking part in that favored period are certainly to be reckoned as a part of the creation. The phrase, "And for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest," we understand to mean a thousand years shall intervene as a period of rest to the earth, before the Lord makes his "abode" with the people.

Again, in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4 we read: "Therefore, it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever and ever." The sanctifying process begins when Jesus comes, and will no doubt continue all through the thousand years; after which time it will be fully prepared to be "crowned with glory, even the presence of God the Father; that bodies of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever." The holy city John saw descend is perhaps none other than the "general assembly" of celestial bodies. This is surely the "holiest of all" conditions. God dwells with the people. Verily this is the celestial kingdom. It is the "Zion of all the creations" which the Lord hath made, and the great city for which Abraham looked, whose builder and maker was God.

IN CONCLUSION.

The few thoughts presented in this article are offered for the consideration of those who read, and whose trust is in the Lord. There are many texts of a general character verifying the saints' inheritance, but in every case these should be interpreted to accommodate the more definite passages. Our hope is that all who read may be encouraged, even though the thoughts presented should be counted somewhat strange; and to those disposed to criticize sharply, we simply ask that the matter be considered well before resenting or antagonizing the position. No positive claim is made for the correctness, for as the whole matter appears it is one of conjecture, so far as man's conception of the future is concerned. The reader must therefore reach his own conclusions, and in the exercise of this divine right he should not be unduly opposed.

In hope of eternal life in the holy city,

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE.

Glory to God in the highest, and on the earth peace, good will to men.—Luke 2: 14.

And again, I say unto you, . . . lift up an ensign of peace, and make a proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 11.

. . . It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin. . . .”—Ibid., 49: 8.

If we were to add a subtitle to the one used above, or use another text with which to commence our article, it would be the reason given by the angel to Joseph, for giving the name Jesus to the son of Mary, “He shall save his people from their sins.”

Whatever the world may think of “The Seer,” or however they may regard him and his claims to prophetic calling, one thing must be apparent to all who study the financial law given to the church, and under which he proposed to “build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness”; he sensed the cause and cure for the social evils that were and are cheating the world of the peace that was proclaimed by the angels in Galilee so many centuries ago.

This cure was not to be found in simply the preaching of what are commonly called the “first principles of the gospel,” though without these and a hearty obedience thereto the cure would not be wrought, for “Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God,” and the first fruits of faith is always repentance, and of repentance is baptism, and then, through the assistance of the Holy Ghost are we able to see and love the “whole counsel of God.”

In the beginning of the “marvelous work and a wonder” that was to be wrought when the trumpet was blown, the declaration was made that “no one can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.” The unequal distribution of wealth and the consequent sin and suffering can never be remedied by every man trying with all his might to amass as much or a little more of this world's goods than his neighbor, but when we are “willing,” and the Psalmist has said, “Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power” (and how often we pray for this endowment of power), whenever we are willing to be so temperate in all things that are intrusted to us that we are satisfied to retain only enough for our support, not wasting flesh and having no need, (see Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3,) not only being willing to be equal with the man who happens to possess more of this world's goods, but willing to so consecrate our whole lives that we are willing to be brought low, that the poor may be lifted up; then, and not until then, will the “ensign” be so lifted that all the “dwellers upon the earth” may see.

It would, probably, not be profitable for us to enter into a citation of all the scriptures, from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, that bear upon the subject of this equality and its importance, but we feel impelled to say that, unless we do these things we will be, comparatively, like the Pharisees who paid tithes of mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass (ed) over judgment and the love of God,” and it will be said to us by the Savior, even as he said to them, “These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.”

The adding of thousands to the church by baptism, the friendship of the world that may come to us by reason of our hearty obedience to, and sustaining of the moral code of our nation, nor the building of many fine church edifices or temples, around which to group our people in city, town, and hamlet, nor even the supporting of institutions of learning, and philanthropy, will prove or make good our claim to the title which we assume, “The kingdom of God upon the earth”; it may, and probably will need all and much more than these things, but above all, there must be such a hearty acceptance of and obedience to the law of consecration, that in our temporal things we are “equal, and that not grudgingly,” that the world may see and know that we are one, before they will really sense the full significance of the work commenced by the Prophet of the nineteenth century, or be willing to subscribe allegiance to the ensign lifted to the nations. In short, neither numbers, worldly favor, nor financial prosperity will ever make a Zion, either in Missouri or elsewhere. We must “stand in holy places,” not by starving out the poor, but by lifting them up, and in so lifting shall we ourselves be exalted to be really “coworkers with God” in the redemption of “the purchased possession.”

We hear a great deal about the world's peace, which so many of our statesmen are so anxious to conserve, somewhat upon the basis of our ability and willingness to trounce the other nations into an acceptance of our terms; but there can be no peace, other than an occasional truce or breathing spell, as long as the great problem of the unequal distribution of wealth remains unsolved; and this problem will never be entirely legislated, or fought away. The solution must come, and can only come through obedience to the great precept, “Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself,” and only the Christ Spirit will enable men to do this.

Somewhere it is written, “judgment shall begin at the house of God,” or words to that effect, and why not? May we continually preach Christ to the world and not live Christ among ourselves? “Be ye perfect” is no idle precept, nor one that can be attained unto by any less than an obedience to "the whole counsel of God." "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder," was the admonition of the Savior, and he has declared that it is only upon obedience to this "celestial law," that Zion will be accepted. Are we willing not only to pray "Thy will be done," but to do that will as it has been so clearly spoken in these days? May the Master help us to be "doers of the word and not hearers only," that we may not be disappointed when he comes.

That any who may be interested in looking into these scriptures here referred to may be able to so do, we give the following citations, Bible, Inspired Translation, Genesis 7: 23 and 14: 39; Acts 4: 32-37. Book of Mormon, Nephi (who is the son of Nephi, one of the disciples of Christ) 1: 1-21, authorized edition, and Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8-10; 49: 1-5; 70: 1-3; 83: 1, 2; 106: 1, 2; 122: 6, and 129: 9.

CAMPBELL'S "NEW THEOLOGY."

Reverend Doctor R. J. Campbell, successor to Reverend Doctor Parker, at the City Temple, London, England, has, by his present preaching tour in the United States, increased American interest in his "New theology" which caused such a theological flurry when first preached in London about five years ago. The publication of his book, The New Theology, a little later, did not in any wise allay the disturbance in the religious atmosphere of England. A "New Theology League" was organized "for the encouragement of progressive religious thought," and many passionate defenders of his views rallied to his support, including his own congregation, influential periodicals and clergymen, scientists and socialists.

But Doctor Campbell's teachings were also sharply, and even scathingly, criticized, not only by conservative theologians, but also by those most liberal. Prominent representatives of his own denomination, Congregationalist, asked with Doctor Guinness Rogers if he had forgotten the purpose for which the City Temple had been built, Doctor Campbell Morgan wondered how those who held to the "new theology" could remain in the Congregationalist ministry, and Doctor Nicoll, editor of The British Weekly, laid stress on the fact that the author of The New Theology had not passed through a theological seminary.

The fact that Doctor Campbell's views have evoked such widespread interest and comment binds us to recognize that the issues involved are of a quite extraordinary character. We give those views as stated by himself in an article contributed to the London Daily Mail. In this epitome of the "new theology" he says:

The starting point of the new theology is belief in the immanence of God and the essential oneness of God and man. . . . We believe man to be a revelation of God and the universe one means to the self-manifestation of God. The word god stands for the infinite reality whence all things proceed. . . . The new theology, in common with the whole scientific world, believes that the finite universe is one aspect or expression of that reality, but it thinks of it or him as consciousness rather than a blind force, thereby differing from some scientists. Believing this, we believe that there is no real distinction between humanity and the Deity. Our being is the same as God's, although our consciousness of it is limited. . . .

There is a vagueness about this "starting point" or basis that is likely to mystify the ordinary reader. It lacks clearness. With the average person the concrete reigns supreme, and nothing can be too definite, especially if it is to express the abstract. But the word immanence has many meanings, and the "essential oneness of God and man" is to abstruse and meaningless to one not versed in the terminology of this philosophy. But it may be that the explanation of this is to be found in the statement that "there is no real distinction between humanity and the Deity." The logic of this would be that, with no distinction, man is God and God is man, that they are the same, that they are man, which is equivalent to saying there is no great personal Being superior to man—rank atheism.

In view of this we are interested in his statement regarding the immortality of the soul:

The new theology, of course, believes in the immortality of the soul, but only on the ground that every individual consciousness is a ray of the universal consciousness and can not be destroyed. It believes that there are many stages in the upward progress of the soul in the unseen world before it becomes fully and consciously one with its infinite source. We make our destiny in the next world by our behavior in this, and ultimately every soul will be perfected.

Our comment upon the above is that it expresses belief in immortality in a restricted sense, that it leaves no room for the doctrine of a literal resurrection, and savors of universalism.

However, upon the statement regarding evil we can look with a little more sympathy:

The new theology looks upon evil as a negative rather than a positive term. It is the shadow where light ought to be; it is the perceived privation of good; it belongs only to finiteness. Pain is the effort of the spirit to break through the limitations which it feels to be evil.

Mr. Campbell declares that the "new theology is in sympathy with the higher criticism of the Bible." Moreover, it believes that the seat of religious authority is within (not without) the human soul." The scriptural doctrines directly rejected are mentioned in the following language:

We believe that the story of the fall in the literal sense is untrue, it is literature, not dogmas, the romance of an early age used for the ethical instruction of man. . . .

We reject wholly the common interpretation of atonement, that another is beaten for our fault. We believe not in a final judgment, but in a judgment that is ever proceeding. Every sin involves suffering, suffering which can not be remitted by any work of another. When a deed is done its consequences are eternal.

To quote Mr. Campbell's language on sin, from a sermon of a few years ago, is to condemn it:

Sin itself is a quest for God—a blundering quest, but a quest for all that. The man who got dead drunk last night did so because of the impulse within him to break through the barriers of his limitations, to express himself, and to realize the more abundant life. . . . That drunken debauch was a quest for life, a quest for God. Men in their sinful follies to-day, and their blank atheism, and their foul blasphemies, their trampling upon things that are beautiful and good, are engaged in this dim, blundering quest for God, whom to know is life eternal.

The theological views above quoted and briefly commented upon are excused by a writer in the Outlook, who outlines what he terms the "old theology," thus:

There are many affirmations in the old theology, as popularly defined, which no longer appear thinkable to men of the new school of thought. Such are the doctrines that the Bible is verbally inspired and in all its parts equally authoritative; that man was made perfect, committed four thousand years ago an act of disobedience in the Garden of Eden, and all the sin and misery of human life have followed in consequence; that God's wrath burns with an unquenchable flame against the human race because of that first sin and the hereditary sinfulness which has resulted; that the just punishment for sins, large and small, is an eternity of torment; that it is just to transfer the punishment of sin from the guilty to the innocent; that this has been done, and that thus and only thus can a way of escape from torment be found by guilty man.—Outlook, 85: 349, February 16, 1907.

In summing up the distinctive features of the "new theology," we would enumerate at least four. First, the identification of God with man, that is, that "there is no real distinction between God and man." Second, belief in the immortality of the soul in a restricted sense, a universal attainment of perfection without a literal fall or literal resurrection. Third, rejection of the doctrines of atonement and final judgment. Fourth, disbelief in religious authority outside of man and the discrediting of scriptural teaching, of which the only logical end is essential infidelity cloaked in Christian terminology.

With last night's service the year 1911 ended. We have had good success in our work and hope for better yet. The publishing of Bishop R. C. Evans's sermons has probably been the greatest work of the year. This has required an immense amount of labor on his part; but we believe his efforts will be amply rewarded in the publicity given our doctrine, and the good accomplished. The year's contract ended with the issue Sunday, December 31, 1911, and his sermons will no longer appear in the Sunday World. While we realize the benefits we have received from this contract, we are pleased to note, according to a statement in the World of December 17, 1911, that their circulation increased 74 per cent during the year 1911.

The ending of this contract has brought great relief to the bishop, as was clearly shown in last night's sermon on the subject, "Home, and how to make it happy." Not having to produce so much proof, and the careful arranging of every quotation, he was enabled to close all books, step out to the front of the stage, and throw himself into his subject in his old-time style, which has always held his audience spellbound. The manner in which he carried his audience was shown by the numerous congratulations sent up among the questions on the collection plates, and the urgent request that he sing that old familiar song, "Home, sweet home." In response he led the choir in singing hymn number 375, and closed by offering prayer; and thus ended a service in which the strongest sympathy existed between audience and speaker, that we have yet experienced.

Not only did Brother Evans perform his part in masterly fashion, but our own pair of girls, Hazel Hathaway and Elsie Hill, were in superb form. Hazel sang in that sweet voice and unassuming manner which only she possesses; while Elsie on the piano was perfection. The encore could not be denied; and Sister Hathaway sang a Christmas ode composed by Bishop Evans. Breathless silence enveloped the audience while our young girls glorified God by using to the limit the wonderful talents he has given them.

We regret to say that Bishop Evans's book of sermons is not yet ready for distribution. Owing to accident at the paper mills and the rush of holiday business, the printing has been delayed; but Brother Evans has taken advantage of this, and added five sermons; so that instead of forty-five there will be fifty, which means a larger and more complete book. The entire World series, save two sermons, will be in it. This is probably the greatest aggregation of sermons ever published; and is particularly suited to both ministry and laity. Every point of our doctrine is made clear. The book will be valuable as a reference. If you have a neighbor who will not go to church to hear our elders, hand him this book. He will read it at home when he would not be seen going to a Latter Day Saint service. Get the gospel before the people in some way.

The worst street railway accident in the history of our city occurred Sunday evening, December 24, at 6.55. Many passengers were on board, bound for the Princess services. A new King Street palace car, with seating capacity for fifty, was traveling westward with about one hundred and twenty passengers crowded into every available inch of space. The car attained an excessive rate of speed when crossing the Don River, on the overhead bridge, the car did not make its usual stop, but dashed down the incline, and along King Street with terrific momentum. Sparks flew from the wheels as they sped along. Suddenly an open switch loomed up, and the flying car turned into Saint Lawrence Street, throwing its load of humanity in all directions, killing two and injuring over fifty. Six Saints were among the injured. Brother Gillam had his arm broken in two places, and his head cut. Brother Blow's head, shoulders, arms and hands were badly cut. He is suffering from concussion of the brain, but will recover. The other four not so seriously hurt. All are doing nicely now. The accident has cast a gloom over our holiday season.

Our services in the church continue good. Prayer services well attended and spiritual. Ten baptized yesterday.

Your brother,

A. F. McLEAN.

Reunion of Joseph Smith's Descendants.

ONLY LIVING RELATIVES OF FOUNDER OF LATTER DAY SAINTS' CHURCH GATHER AT LAMONI, IOWA.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 26.—December 23 was the anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith, whom Latter Day Saints believe was the instrument in the hands of God in founding their church, and the Smith Family Association, composed of his descendants and those connected with the family by marriage, held their family reunion at the residence of Elder Frederick A. Smith on the corner of Linden and First Streets. Elder F. A. Smith presided and Miss Inez Smith acted as secretary. An interesting program was rendered, including reminiscences of the family by the widow of Alexander H. Smith, son of the Prophet.

This association has a membership of one hundred and five persons, viz: President Joseph Smith [a son] of Independence, Missouri, nineteen grandchildren, fifty-eight great-grandchildren, four children of great-grandchildren, and twenty-three who are members of the association from choice whose peculiar attachment for some direct descendant of the family led them to annex themselves. This includes every descendant of Joseph Smith now living, and also their companions.

This family takes considerable pride in the fact that not one of the descendants of Joseph Smith or those married into the family have ever affiliated with the Mormon Church of Utah, but all are united in earnest contention against the practices there. Yet this association has no church significance. It is a family association, a family reunion, purely, and has no more significance from a church standpoint than would any other family association or family reunion. Its members are entitled to no more recognition because of service rendered to church, town, county or State than are the members of many other families. This is especially mentioned because this reunion in some press notices has been confounded with church work and some members of the family are anxious that the distinction should be kept clear and that this association should be considered only on a par with associations and gatherings of their neighbors.—Omaha World-Herald.

Land Without Women.

IT IS THE OLD REPUBLIC OF ATHOS MOUNT.

There is a womanless republic on a peninsula south of Macedonia in Greece, where ten thousand men live, studying and praying constantly, and where policemen guard the coast to keep out women pilgrims and other persons who would make undesirable guests. Professor Caspar Rene Gregory, theologian of the University of Leipzig, student of biblical manuscripts, who is here to lecture to-night at the Fine Arts Institute, told this the other day of this most unique of all countries.

"The place is Mount Athos, classic peninsula of Akte, the easternmost of three little peninsulas below Macedonia. It is called the Mount of the Twenty Monasteries, and was used in ancient times as a signalling station to Asia Minor. It is a real republic. There are ten thousand monks there, who govern themselves without interference from Turkey or any other country. There are, however, no government buildings, no president, or other officeholders.

"The only police force is composed of men who patrol the coast to keep out women and men who have no permit to enter this most exclusive of countries. Only those who have a letter of permission from the Greek patriarch in Constantinople are allowed to enter the holy place. The holder of the letter must present it to Karges, the village capital of the peninsula."

Some reports have it, Professor Gregory said, that this republic was formed in the ninth century. It is said that the foot of a woman has not touched the soil of the place for centuries. All the monks represent the Greek Catholic Church. They work the soil, but live chiefly upon contributions from pilgrims. Probably the greatest collection of biblical manuscripts is in the monasteries of this republic.

"It is the most interesting place in the world for the student of the Bible," the doctor said. "I have been there three times already, and I never will tire of going. There are in the monasteries there thousands of Greek manuscripts, and hundreds of them are connected with the New Testament. Hundreds of students have studied these manuscripts very carefully, but there are other manuscripts that have not yet been read carefully. It may be that great discoveries, valuable to the Bible scientists, will emanate yet from this great storehouse of manuscripts.—Kansas City Star.

The Quality that Americans Most Need To-day.

The Amazon is a larger river than the Mississippi, and it flows through a land as rich. The Rio de la Plata is a larger river than the Hudson, and it has a climate as good. The Amazon was discovered in 1500; the Rio de la Plata in 1516; the Mississippi in 1541; the Hudson in 1609.

They are all old rivers of the New World; old in geology; new in history. And the Hudson is the newest of them all.

Yet the story of the Hudson and Mississippi is richer, fuller, more glorious than the story of the Amazon or the Rio de la Plata. They water a larger and more important tract in the world-estate of humanity.

Why?

Because of the Spirit of America.

Because the men who settled the valley of the Hudson brought certain invisible things with them: Moral convictions, social ideals, traits of character—call them what you will. These invisible things made them one with their fellow colonists in beginning a new race for the New World.

A race self-reliant and energetic; a race believing in fair play and common order; a race holding that God calls every man to make the best of himself and of the world in which he lives.

Two hundred years after Hudson discovered the river, Fulton made it the cradle of navigation by steam. The spirit of America is inventive, progressive, creative. But, first of all, it had to be self-respecting, orderly, equitable, just, obedient, God-fearing, man-loving. That is the foundation—essentially conservative—and on that foundation the energy of America has stood steady to do its work.

People explain the greatness of the United States by the largeness of the land, the richness of the soil, the abundance of natural resources.

They are wrong.

All these things would have been little, if the Spirit of America had not been there to use them.

The quality that the Spirit of America needs most to-day is Self-control.

Where a hundred million people live together each man must learn to master himself in order to serve the others. Legislation may express aims and ideals. But only persons can realize and embody them. The future of America depends upon the production of an actual manhood whose highest type shall be "King of himself and servant of mankind."—Henry Van Dyke, in New York American.

Life a Story.

"We spend our years as a tale that is told."—Psalm 90: 9.

All the world loves a story. The little child at bedtime cries, "Tell me a story." The savage at his campfire, the barbarian in his hut listens eagerly to the stories of his clan. The immortal Iliad was originally a series of stories, told probably by Homer himself in the halls of the Greek princes of his day. In the Middle Ages troubadours, minstrels, and minnesingers roamed over Europe from castle to castle in an age when few could read and books were scarce, singing to lords and ladies, knights and peasants the songs of the time, and narrating with skillful tongue the stories of the age, crooning their tales, as Scott so beautifully brings out in "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," in the dim light of the castles' great halls to an intent company of listeners.

Life in the text is compared to a story. Such is the life of every individual, however lowly—an entrancing story, with adventure, sentiment, perhaps history in it. Life has its plot, its transitions, its adventures, its surprises. Sometimes the incidents of life flow smoothly into each other. Sometimes the chapters are full of adventure. Some new interest is expected to develop with each new chapter begun. How like the opening of the new year! Perhaps in the new chapter we are opening our life's story will approach its climax.

The majority of readers clamor for a story to end happily. No play can hope for popular success that does not have a "happy ending." Life's story, however, by no means always has a happy ending, but is sometimes unutterably tragic. Numberless prisons speak eloquently of wrecked lives and scattered fortunes, while the growing number of divorce suits tell pathetically of broken hearts and ruined homes. When we come to the end of successive chapters of some life stories we lay down the book with a sigh.

The life story of the true Christian always ends, so Holy Writ declares, with a triumphant conclusion. The world may not think so, but nevertheless it is so. The life of the Apostle Paul seemingly had a pathetic ending when he was led from his dungeon along the Appian Way to be executed. But Saint Paul did not think so. "I am now ready to be offered; there is laid up for me a crown."

The magnificent church in Rome now standing on the spot, Saint Paul's in London, and numerous other churches named after him bear witness to his life's triumphant ending. The cross likewise seemed to the people of Jerusalem, even the disciples, a pitiful ending of a noble and useful life. But not so our Lord, "who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame," through the cross bringing in redemption.

So with the lives of all true Christians, whether their lives close in peace, calm, in modest enjoyment of honors acquired or blessings gained, or by a change of the great wheel of fortune in suffering, failure, and poverty, still their life's end when the tale is all told is a happy one. If faithful they "enter into the joy of their Lord."—Reverend De Witt Lincoln Pelton, Ph. D., rector Saint James' Episcopal Church, Fordham, New York City, in New York Herald.

Did you ever hear of a man who had striven all his life faithfully and singly toward an object and in no measure obtained it? If a man constantly aspires, is he not elevated? Did ever a man try heroism, magnanimity, truth, sincerity, and find that there was no advantage in them—that it was a vain endeavor?—H. D. Thoreau.

Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New.—Bacon.

The Children's Home.

(Lovingly dedicated to Sr. L. L. Resseguie.)

Glad sound of singers reach my ear,
Of children's voices sweet and clear,
And this refrain I seem to hear,—
No more our childish feet shall roam,
For we have now a cherished home;
Home, sweet home! There's no place like home—
Sweet home!

When winter's icy breath congeals,
And snow the flowers and grass conceals,
No more its terrors we shall feel,
Safe, safe within our cherished home,
No more in the cold world to roam;
God bless our home! God keep our home—
Sweet home!

Enshrined within our home is love
Like unto that which dwells above,
The gift of God's own Holy Dove,
Love swayed the hearts that built our home,
Love sent us there no more to roam;
Love feeds us, clothes us, warms our home,
The Children's Home, dear Children's Home—
Sweet home!

M. E. KEARNEY.

COLTON, CALIFORNIA, December 9, 1911.

Dear Sisters: Since Autumn Leaves is not open to letters, I feel like responding through the Home Column to an article found in Autumn Leaves. It is that of Brother Trowbridge. We "shut-ins," who have not the privilege of hearing testimonies, appreciate more deeply those that we read, and I wanted to say, if Brother Trowbridge, or anyone else, has any more such testimonies or experiences in the same line as the one given in December Autumn Leaves, "On a strange road," I hope he will not withhold them from the public. They are feasts to the soul. I think I have never read anything so replete with testimony as was that experience, affirming, beyond a question, that the living God of Abraham is the same to-day in his operations upon the mind of both man and beast as he was anciently. And, comforting thought, we are numbered with the people with whom he thus operates. The same influence and power that moved faithful Abraham to get him up and go to a place that he knew not of, moved also upon this brother, another of God's obedient ones, to get him up from the writing table in a warm room, and go, he knew not whither, neither for what purpose. And, like faithful Abraham, he went forth without doubt or question and in the face of a raging storm.

And again, the same power that stood in the way of Balaam's beast caused "Dobbin" to refuse to go farther as he was being guided. Who shall say that he, too, did not see the angel with the drawn sword? A balking horse refuses to go in any direction, but "Dobbin" went freely in the way he was being led, and faced the blizzard till he got to the house to which he was being directed to go.

This instance makes one think of ancient times when the two heifers were hitched to the cart in which the "ark of God" was, and left without the guidance of a man to go as directed by the invisible power. Then when the brother saw for what purpose he was brought there, and felt his weakness, the same Lord and Master, who told his disciples while he was yet upon the earth to take no thought of what they should say in those times of emergency, reassured the brother, also making him feel stronger in the defense of the truth. Thus the Lord confirmed his promises made to those who would defend the truth, so many years ago. And the crowning testimony of all was that the Lord made clear which people he was for and which against.

It seems to me, if those two men who represented the Utah church had, previous to that time, honestly believed that their position was the right one, they could not then fail to see which side the Lord was on. How sad to think that men will so hazard their souls' salvation as to hold to a creed or church in the face of a manifest disapproval of God! What will it profit them?

And now we ask, what brought about this extraordinary circumstance in which is seen from first to last the unmistakable evidence of being divinely appointed? The answer is, the prayer of a humble sister. Her husband was being blinded by the cunning craftiness of men; he was being led out of the right way, and to the accepting of principles that would drive peace from their home. Woman is the reigning queen in that department of life, the home, and when an enemy threatens its destruction, she has a right to call for the help that is needful; and, though quiet and unassuming, it is seen that this sister, by her faith, had power to move heaven and earth, so to speak, in behalf of her husband and the peace of their domestic life.

And right here comes in the question asked by Sister Walker in her leading article of the same magazine, "Can the work of man and woman be separated?" The sequel gives the answer. It required the sturdy hardihood of the man to bring to pass the answer to her prayer, and how one's respect rises and deepens for the man, or men, who honor their manhood and go forth where duty calls, even though the prince of the powers of the air sends a fierce blizzard with the hope of intimidating him.

This illustrates, I believe, the true position, as designed of God in the dawn of creation, that woman should occupy in her sphere, and by faith send forth her influence, while the man goes forth to dare and to do, as duty impels. What a brilliant contrast is this from the one who would remain where it was warm and comfortable, and resist the Spirit by assuring himself that the Lord would not want him to go out in that storm.

The lessons of life teach us that the Lord wants men to rely upon him, and brave anything that may obstruct the way which he points out to them. As I write this, there appears before my mental vision the blanched face and the erect form of a true-hearted God-fearing man standing at the helm of a mite of a vessel, pressing her forward in the very face of the incoming mountainous gyaves that to the natural mind the encounter would be sure and sudden death. But he knew in whom he trusted, and swerved not from his purpose. And the God of Israel was with him and carried his frail bark over the terrible breakers.

Oh, that we all would hold ourselves in a position to know the leadings of the Spirit and obey! Then would we realize in this church many more such occurrences as that related by Brother Trowbridge, that goes farther to vivify our perceptions of God as being with us than many sermons. I feel there will be more of those tokens of the presence of God with his people, and that in the near future. I can feel the evidence of a greater degree of the Spirit being enjoyed by the Saints in their written words sent forth in the church periodicals. Of late some of those pages have been fairly illuminated by the Spirit. It brings joy and peace to the heart and makes one feel that "It is good to be a Saint in latter days."

Request for Prayer.

Sister Julia Neal, of San Antonio, Texas, sends in her name for prayer and says, "I have been a member of the Prayer Union since it was organized and always remember the subjects each Thursday, and keep some part of the day at home, as we have no local organization."

DONALDSON, KENTUCKY, December 29, 1911.

Editors Herald: I am indebted to some one for having the HERALD sent me since July 1. I certainly have enjoyed reading its pages. I had never subscribed to it but had read it a few times when they had been given me by a sister. I will subscribe for the HERALD in the near future. I write this to thank the one who has so kindly sent it, although I do not know who it was. I am a sister in the true gospel,

MRS. E. C. SKAGGS.

DISLEY, SASKATCHEWAN, CANADA.

Editors Herald: At the close of another year I feel that I would like to pen a few lines to your priceless paper; yea, priceless I mean, for money could not satisfy my soul with the food I derive from them. It does not matter which page I turn to, there is a good, interesting piece, the editorials, the department of General Interest, Canadian Mirror, Mothers' Home Column, Letter Department, etc. There is always food for thought, and as I realize that time is rolling on, seasons coming and going, years rolling by, the time for the second coming of Christ is drawing nigh "even at the doors." I have thought how many of us are able to be like the wise virgins who had their lamps trimmed. Do we as a church realize the necessity of keeping the commandments of God? and, as Christ said, "If ye love me keep my commandments," abstaining from tobacco, from hot drinks. Obeying the first principles of the gospel is not all. "Love thy neighbor as thyself," and as Christ said to the rich man, If you have done all these things, give all that thou hast to the poor and follow me.

I know we have many things to overcome in this world. We are human and apt to fall into divers temptations, and I know there are many things I must overcome before I shall be able to say I am prepared to meet my Savior. Let us unitedly, this coming year, strive more earnestly to battle against the elements that surround us, to build up the glorious latter day work. Out in Northwestern Canada great work can be done, plenty of room for the work to spread forth its arms of love and affection for the redemption of mankind; plenty of room for the missionaries to go out without crossing each other's lines, and as I have heard it said, The work in this Northwest is like a bud just beginning to open.

As a branch we have been blessed exceedingly with the divine Spirit of the Master. Though not big in numbers we are united in spirit, and blessings have been bestowed which would otherwise have been withheld, and as I scan the history of the branch I can see where God in his infinite mercy has been with the Saints in their struggles, striving to build up the work and pushing out before the people. Only last Sunday, December 10, three were called and another cheered, counseled, and admonished in his work through the gift of tongues and interpretation, and as I sat and listened to the voice dictated by the inspiration of heaven I marveled, Surely the signs follow the believer, and as Christ said, They shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or man. Having been blessed with the privilege of obeying this gospel my desire is to press onward, to be humble and faithful in the duties which have been allotted to me. There are hundreds and thousands who oppose as ignorant of facts as little babes. Could they but see the Book of Mormon, which seems the main point of attack, they would, like Pilate, say, I find no fault in this man (book).

"If this work be of man it will come to naught, but if it be of God nothing can overthrow it." How sweet and cheering is that precious verse! I love this work and the people who are engaged in it. Pray for me, Saints, that I may grow strong in the faith; my prayers are for God's people, with the best wishes for the work. Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH BATES.

EUFAULA, OKLAHOMA, December 29, 1911.

Dear Herald: Thinking it might be possible that there might be some wondering how it came that I had my name enrolled upon the church records, I will make as brief a statement as possible. In March, 1909, and at a time when my wife had been the means of my trying to earn an honest living, I received a letter from one whom I had never seen or spoken to, by the name of James E. Yates, of Ripley, Oklahoma, telling me I must be united in the common brotherhood of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that it had been made plain to him that he would in time baptize me, and that any time I was ready he would come and baptize me. About this time I was thinking quite often as to whether or not I should join the church and try to be a pattern to my family to follow after. I had no doubts as to the truth of the latter day work—in belief I have always been a Saint.

Well, Brother Yates came over by request a short time after receiving his last letter and baptized me and my only daughter, aged fourteen. At that time my only worldly possessions consisted of a small bakery, worth about eight hundred dollars. This year, 1911, I and wife paid tithing on three thousand dollars. I mention this by way of belief that I have been made to prosper through obedience to the gospel, and for which I have always been thankful to Brother Yates as being an instrument in the hands of God in bringing us into the kingdom. And we are glad our health has been sufficiently good that we may labor with our hands and earn the means that will help others.

My life has been spent among the worldly people, and yet while taking in the world and all its ways I never forgot to think of a Latter Day Saint. I was a constant smoker for thirty years, and on entering the church I asked the God of heaven to make this habit look distasteful to me. I did not ask nor think to ask that the taste be removed. I have not smoked since, and if there is a habit that looks bad, it is that of using tobacco. While I may not have received the assurance that others have, I am willing to strive for the same.

In years past and gone, in the time of W. W. Blair, Charles Derry, Mark Forscutt, and others, I have been witness to the healing of the sick and the speaking in tongues and prophecy, and that by those that could not have been deceivers; they were too innocent and honest for that. My belief, if only through the evidences of others, would warrant me in saying I know it to be true, and I am thankful and not ashamed that I am trying to be a Latter Day Saint.

With a happy New Year and a God bless you all.

T. S. MARTIN.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, December 25, 1911.

Dear Herald: As I sat thinking this beautiful Christmas Day of God's goodness to me, of his beautiful lessons and glorious promises left on record for my elevation and spiritual growth, and especially the gift of his dear Son, that I might become like him and fit and prepared for his coming again,—I am prone to ask myself the question, Will I be able to hold out faithful to the end?

There are so many environments that seem impossible to overcome. It calls me to think of our dependence on the Lord and our nothingness after all, although many fail to sense it.

Happy are we if we do our level best for the uplifting of humanity, keeping out the thought: "Now big I did that," or "Will I be repaid for the time spent?" If we do this and trust God fully, barriers which seem mountain high to us will disappear like snow before the sun's hot rays. I am glad of this fact, and feel like praising his holy name for this assurance.

The Saints of Bennington Heights provided a Christmas tree for the Sunday school children, and the program rendered by the young was very effectual and pleasing.

We would enjoy much more happiness if we had more of the Christmas spirit in our hearts the whole year through, and ever keep in mind that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

May we Saints enjoy a large degree of his Holy Spirit this coming New Year, is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

Conceived in Sin.

This language is found in the Inspired Translation in two places: Genesis 6:57; Psalm 51:5, and once in the Authorized Version: Psalm 51:5.

The purpose of this letter is to briefly set forth a few objections to the common interpretation placed on Psalm 51:5. Many of my brethren claim that David spoke of his own peculiar case; that he, confessing his sins to God, made mention of the unfavorable conditions under which he was born; and further, the excuse that his mother lived under questionable conditions in the period of his conception and birth. In brief, this is the sum and substance of what we hear when Psalm 51:5 is referred to. Our first objection is that we can not warrant such interpretation for the simple reason that God himself, firstly, was the author of this term "conceived in sin" and plainly stated that every son and daughter of Adam's race was conceived in sin. (Genesis 6:57.) Secondly, it calls in question the character of David's mother and questions the fact that he was a son of Jesse, and his having scores of wives and concubines was due to the character of his mother. Such a claim seems a little faulty, to say the least. God decreed the plan and David understood just what had taken place; hence the term, "In sin did my mother conceive me." He simply understood how he had been taken from the spirit world and "conceived," plunged, immersed in sinful environments, and his sinful life was the natural result, and not because his mother was a bad woman.

News From Missions

Missouri.

On November 27 James Moler and the writer joined forces at the Star Schoolhouse, near Butler, Missouri, where we continued till December 10, having a good attendance and baptizing six excellent people—all adults. There are as many more ready. Conditions seem to indicate a branch organization in the near future.

Brother Moler left on the 11th and I began meetings at the Black Schoolhouse, five miles east of Butler. The school board objected and we held only one service. The house was voted open, but we submitted for the time. We will see to that place later. We have some friends there who want to hear our message.

We were called to Rich Hill on the 30th ult., where we officiated at the marriage of Brother Rollo Duzan and Sister Velma Houston, both excellent young Saints. We also performed a similar service December 20 for Brother Fred Rogers and Sister Ethel Searfus, near Butler, Missouri. They are an honor to the work.

Will soon return to Lewis Station, where we expect to baptize several. The prospects in the district are encouraging.

The Enemy of Society.

The dynamiter is a social enemy. He is a far more dangerous person than the ordinary criminal, who offends in the domain of private well-being. The less of a common criminal, the worse he is. When in the name of "labor" the Los Angeles Times building was destroyed, the attack was against the very foundations of civilized society. If a private enemy, having a personal grudge, had attempted to take the life of General Otis, it would have been a serious crime. But an attempt to take his life for the reason that he edited his newspaper in a certain way, and carried on his business in a certain way, was an infinitely more serious matter. The freedom of the press must be preserved in this country at all hazards. It must not be thought that a newspaper building can be wrecked with dynamite because some movement or organization dislikes the politics or the economic views of the editor. Nor must it be thought that an employer's factory may be destroyed because he refuses to employ union labor, or will not permit a walking delegate to dictate to him about his affairs. It is a serious question whether capital punishment in the case of an ordinary private murder is in any way desirable. But society must defend itself against enemies who would destroy civilization as such. The anarchist who throws a bomb because he would destroy government is entitled to no mercy, whether his bomb kills anybody or not. If any man deserves to be hung, it is the assassin who strikes at the representative of public authority, or the dynamiter who attacks the fundamental conditions of economic society. For this reason, the detective, William J. Burns, has rendered our country a public service of inestimable value. Every possible effort should be continued to discover and punish everybody who may have been connected with these crimes, perpetrated in the name of a movement. The more it can be shown that the dynamiter is a fanatic, and not a crook or a criminal in the ordinary sense of the word, the more dangerous he is, and, therefore, the more necessary it is to treat him as if guilty of treason in the extreme sense of the word and to punish him accordingly.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Review of Reviews for January.

The Chinese empire never puzzled the West more than it has puzzled us in recent weeks. The news and developments have been most startling—and most strange. It is impossible to understand some of the features of the situation, while prediction is not hazarded even by intelligent, experienced correspondents who have spent years in China. Is there to be a revolutionary transformation there? Will a real republic be established? Will it live and prosper, if established? Will the very radical constitution granted by the Manchu dynasty in an hour of panic and dismay become a vital, significant instrument? Are there to be genuine political, social, and administrative reforms in the provincial and imperial spheres? Will the more moderate statesmen succeed in saving the throne and converting China into a limited monarchy? Or is China threatened with civil war, anarchy, decentralization, disintegration and foreign intervention?—From Highways and Byways in Chautauquan for January, 1912.

The United States' Opportunity.

After nineteen hundred years the opportunity is presented to the United States to take the lead in the great movement for universal peace. Its greatness, its wealth of resources, and the demonstrated bravery of its men, which preclude even the suggestion that it is actuated by cowardice, its freedom from entangling alliances and its comparatively insular position—all combine to make possible its leadership in this great movement. The people of the world look to us to give this impetus to the peace movement.—From President Taft's "The Pending Arbitration Treaties" in the January Century.

There is a beautiful harmony between the good of the state and the moral freedom and dignity of the individual. Were these interests in any case discordant, were an individual ever called to serve his country by acts debasing his own mind, he ought not to waver for a moment as to the good which he should prefer. His soul he must never stain or enslave. From poverty, pain, the rack, the gibbet, he should not recoil; but for no good of others ought he to part with self-control or violate the inward law.—W. E. Channing.

"Spiritism and Psychology."

The investigations in supernormal psychology undertaken in recent years have so upset preconceived notions that the average man hardly knows what to think. To him it seems as if a kind of insanity had fallen upon a part of the learned world. High authority is quoted in behalf of the strangest phenomena, and ingenious theory is pushed to the verge of total incredibility. Theodore Flournoy has never committed himself to any extreme views, while he has always stoutly upheld the importance of seeking to explain the facts of so-called spiritism. He is now professor of psychology at the University of Geneva, and his book, From India to the Planet Mars, published some years ago, is not a Jules Verne romance, but a valuable evidential document. In his latest work, Spiritism and Psychology, just published by the Harpers, Professor Flournoy reviews the whole field of psychic research, showing how, when we understand the workings of the subconscious mind, many strange occurrences become easy of comprehension.

Professor Flournoy practically destroys belief in the actual intervention of spirits in human affairs, while he clings to a spiritual view of the universe and evidently believes in survival. It is curious to see how many baffling cases reveal their true nature under the microscope of the author's analysis. It is well worth while to read of the cases in which messages from "the other side" have proved entirely false. One man was informed by automatic writing that his son had committed an indiscretion which was about to cause his dismissal, and, hastening to his son's employer, found that nothing of the sort had occurred. A woman saw an apparition of a friend which told of the friend's recent death. Later a letter informed her that the person whose "spirit" she had seen was in his usual health. The case of the famous medium Eusapia Palladino is taken up in detail.

Spiritism and Psychology does something more than appeal to the curiosity; it is as enlightening as it is fascinating in its subject-matter. Hereward Carrington, the translator, supplies notes and an introduction, and there are numerous new and scientifically valuable illustrations.

"In the absurdities of their doctrines and their disregard for the facts of nature and human history, the Christian Scientists stand alone among the sects that have won material and propagandist successes among the Anglo-Saxon people. Consistent in their belief that the control of the mind over the body is absolute, they ignore the existence of well-defined and even irremediable disease. . . . The establishment of so pretentious, ignorant and dangerous a sect is possible only in a country in which biological culture is low, and the people are ready to be bamboozled by every kind of political, sociological and medical charlatany."—From Herter's Biological Aspects of Human Problems.

Some Eyesight Tests Show Queer Results.

THINGS NOT ALWAYS WHAT THEY SEEM FROM A VISIONARY POINT OF VIEW.

Nine persons out of ten place, or think they place, the most implicit faith in the testimony of their senses. As a matter of fact, however, few of us accept this testimony in the more important affairs of life.

We do not believe that the sun moves around the earth, although we see it; and the flatness of the earth that is evident to our un instructed physical sight is refuted by the understanding. We do not believe our senses, but our reason, in these premises, though we do rely upon them in many matters where we should know better. We have for guidance such truisms as "Don't trust in appearances" and "Believe nothing that you hear and only half what you see," still we are often deceived. Illusions and delusions afflict us from the cradle to the grave.

We think that we see and hear a great deal that we do not see or hear at all. On the witness stand and under oath we testify to things that we imagine have taken place, only to have our testimony contradicted by that of other witnesses, equally reliable and conscientious, who describe minutely things and occurrences as being evident to them at the same time and place as those we have described, yet materially different in every important detail. It is contended by many able men, and with much reason, that the much derided "circumstantial evidence" is, after all, more reliable than that of so-called "eye-witnesses."

Professor Hugo Munterberg, in the course of a lecture to a Harvard class, staged a mimic "holdup" in the lecture room, having his actors suddenly rush in, engage in a pretended fight, and suddenly depart. There were some fifty members of the class, and each was requested to write an accurate description of the occurrence. The result was about fifty differing versions. One man had seen an assault committed with a knife, another with a pistol, another with a club, and so on. None of the descriptions of the persons engaged tallied with the facts. Yet each man was willing to swear to what he had seen.

This is all natural when it is considered that no two persons have the same sense of color, form or sound. And whose senses are reliable? No one's! Try your own, for example. Close one eye and with the index finger of your right hand point at some small object, say a spot on the wall a few feet distant. Keep the finger pointing, open the eye that was closed and close the one that was opened, and see where you will be pointing. Then, still pointing, open both eyes. Observe the result.

Do you pride yourself on your powers of observation? Tell us, offhand, which way the profile of "Liberty" faces on a dollar, half dollar, or other coin. What is the prevailing color of Lake Michigan on a clear day and how many colors can you count from the water's edge to horizon? What is the color of your best friend's eyes? How many spokes in an ordinary wagon wheel?

Looking down a long, straight stretch of railway, the tracks converge at a certain distance according to the testimony of our eyes. The lines of a building slant sharply away from us, in appearance, though we know that the height of the distant portion is the same as that of the near. That is "perspective," we say, and recognize the laws thereof in drawing a representation of the building. Did we attempt to draw the building in its exact proportions it would be ludicrous. We draw what we seem to see, not what we know, and our reason gives the correct impression.

Take a small round object—a bullet or small marble—and lay it in the palm of the left hand. Then, crossing the index and middle fingers of the right hand, place them over the shot so that both are in contact with it, and, closing the eyes, roll the object about in your palm. You distinctly feel two objects, though you know there is but one there. So much for actual testimony.

Who has not been deceived by echoes or by the arts of the ventriloquist? Yet we presume to believe our ears, though we can not locate the place of sound.—Chicago Tribune.

"So soon as man develops imagination to strive, not merely for his immediate needs, but also to forestall his future ones, by accumulating a food supply, whether by killing game or by cultivating the land, he becomes a capitalist. . . . That the effects of capitalization are in general very distinctly advantageous to man is so obvious a truth as to require no discussion, whatever may be said against the abuses of the modern capitalistic system."—From Herter's Biological Aspects of Human Problems.

Is There a Santa Claus?

We take pleasure in answering at once and thus prominently the communication below, expressing at the same time our great gratification that its faithful author is numbered among the friends of The Sun:

"Dear Editor: I am 8 years old.

"Some of my little friends say there is no Santa Claus.

"Papa says 'If you see it in The Sun it's so.'

"Please tell me the truth; is there a Santa Claus?"

"VIRGINIA O'HANLON.

"115 WEST NINETY-FIFTH STREET."

Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They do not believe except they see. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible by their little minds. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, as compared with the boundless world about him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole of truth and knowledge.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas! how dreary would be the world if there were no Santa Claus. It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias. There would be no childlike faith then, no poetry, no romance to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment, except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would be extinguished.

Not believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch in all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus, but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Nobody sees Santa Claus, but that is no sign that there is no Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men can see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not, but that's no proof that they are not there. Nobody can conceive or imagine all the wonders there are unseen and unseeable in the world.

You may tear apart the baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world which not the strongest man, nor even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance, can push aside that curtain and view and picture the supernal beauty and glory beyond. Is it all real? Ah, Virginia, in all this world there is nothing else real and abiding.

No Santa Claus! Thank God! he lives, and he lives for ever. A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten times ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the heart of childhood.—Reprinted again from The Sun of September 21, 1897.

Gastronomic Crimes.

Nor is it enough that school girls and boys should be taught to cook; they should also learn how to eat. Few learn this at home. They are usually taught to eat silently, and not to take soup off the end of a spoon or to put the knife into the mouth; but the more important art of mastication is ignored. It is a branch of physiology, and should be taught by experts in the schools.

If it were, the next generation of mothers and fathers would know that it is a crime to let their children swallow food, particularly milk and cereals and vegetables, before it has been kept for a while in the mouth to be mixed with saliva and made digestible.

If it were indelibly impressed on school children that gluttony is a vice which defeats its own end, that by eating slowly much more pleasure can be got from one mouthful than by bolting a whole plateful, that this pleasure can be vastly increased by consciously exhaling through the nose while eating, and that those who eat in this way will escape the pangs of indigestion—if these truths were impressed on every child mind, two thirds of the minor ills of mankind would disappear in two generations, and most of the major maladies also; for the stomach is the source of most diseases. As Thomas Walker wrote nearly a century ago, "Content the stomach, and the stomach will content you."—From Henry T. Finck's "The future of cooking and eating" in the January Century.

"A locomotive which fails to develop more than a small fraction of its potential capacity would be regarded as a failure and would quickly be replaced by one of a better type. Probably most human nervous systems develop only a small fraction of what is within their power, either quantitatively or qualitatively. The recognition of this will lead to increasingly intelligent efforts in the development of personality, in other words, to improve education."

"The problem of education is humanity's greatest problem, as it always has been and always will be."—From Herter's Biological Aspects of Human Problems.

Roosevelt on President Hyde's Book.

Theodore Roosevelt, in a recent article in The Outlook on The Search for Truth in a Reverent Spirit, takes occasion to refer to President William DeWitt Hyde's From Epicures to Christ. "Mr. Hyde's short volume combines," Mr. Roosevelt says, "in high degree a lofty nobility of ethical concept with the most practical and straightforward commonsense treatment of the ways in which this concept should be realized in practice. . . . This book of President Hyde's gives me something that no other book does and means to me, very, very much."

"From Epicurus to Christ" has just been published in a new and extensively revised edition under the title of "The Five Great Philosophies of Life."

War is the most bestial of madresses. It is a most execrable thing to destroy a man's life, not only because of the wonderful work of nature in the human body, but also of the respect due to the soul that dwells in such a marvelous piece of architecture; since truly whatever it may be, the soul is certainly a divine thing and should therefore be allowed to occupy its habitation at its own good pleasure and should not be driven from it by our anger or malignity.—Guglielmo Scala in Mona Lisa.

The world is full of renunciations and apprenticeships, and this is thine; Thou must pass for a fool and a churl for a long season. This is the screen and sheath in which Pan has protected his well-beloved flower; and thou shalt be known only to thine own, and they shall console thee with tenderest love. And this is the reward: The ideal shall be real to thee.—Emerson.

To free a man from error is to give, not to take away. Knowledge that a thing is false is a truth. Error always does harm; sooner or later it will bring mischief to the man who harbors it.—Schopenhaur.

THE LESSON OF THE ROUND TABLE.

King Arthur was a great and good king who tried to teach the knights of his court chastity, charity, humility, and all true Christian virtues.

Like all such men he met with disappointments in his efforts to adjust perverse human nature to his idealism.

The story goes that on a certain time he made a feast for his knights. He was the last to arrive, and while they waited for him to come they fell into a dispute as to who should have preeminence and sit near the head of the table, and who should be humble and sit at the foot.

The dispute grew into a tumult and a struggle, noisy and brutal. They fought for place like hogs at a trough.

So keen was the interest in the struggle that the king entered unobserved and stood in shocked silence, contemplating the shameful scene, a scene which in its very nature repudiated his every past teaching. When at last his presence was noticed, awed silence fell upon the group.

King Arthur then and there resolved that the scene should never be repeated. So he caused a great round table to be constructed,—no head no foot,—at which his knights might sit in absolute equality.

This was a mechanical contrivance intended to secure equality.

Like all such mechanical contrivances, and later legislative devices, though splendid in purpose and original in conception, it was doomed to fail when put to the rigid final test.

In a group of men whose hearts do not desire equality, equality can never be forced,—not if any material or mental development at all is permitted. The love of preeminence will find some way of expression.

Long before the days of King Arthur, Jesus himself had an experience not unlike that which led to the founding of the celebrated round table. His "knights" of the gospel, the twelve apostles, fell into a quarrel as to who was greatest in the kingdom. Jesus asked them what they had talked about by the way, and they fell silent, for they well knew that their struggle for supremacy was foreign to his spirit and teachings.

He then proceeded to instruct them, sweeping away all material, worldly, commonly accepted standards of rank and position, and making service the standard of merit. His servants (or rather friends) must be equal, and content with equality. Any preferment must come from God and be received as the result of service—the one who is servant of all being considered greatest of all. Such preferment does not carry with it luxury and ease, as in the world, but in most cases only greater responsibility and opportunity to work, so that they remain in the last analysis equal so far as position is concerned, each receiving all that he is fitted and willing to use and enjoy in the way of opportunity.

Jesus did not attempt to produce some mechanical device, nor yet any theoretical scheme that would bring equality, fraternity, and justice automatically, with or without the free consent of the brains and hearts of his subjects.

He chose a less alluring, a long and tedious, but the only practical method—that of individual education and regeneration.

God is no respecter of persons. He has no regard for the artificial distinctions of wealth and birth that seem so important to men, and so often make base men and women seem honorable. Of him Peter says: "The Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work."

God does not recognize these distinctions, and he demands that his Saints shall disregard them, so far as is possible; by and by they will cease, though now they seem so important.

We are not to seek the best seat at the table, or the position of honor in the synagogue. If these places come to us, let them come at God's direction. It is better to take a lowly seat and be called to a higher, than to establish ourselves in an exalted position and be called down.

We should not glory in titles, or in dress, or in wealth.

We are to treat all with true Christian courtesy and not pander to those who are wealthy or well dressed. James says: "If there come into your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool: are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts?"

James was your true church democrat, and it irked him to see worldly class distinctions creeping into the church. He knew that when such a spirit entered in, religion would depart and church politics take its place, with all the shameful wire pulling and scheming that disgrace certain church circles where clique vies with clique in the struggle to outshine and outdress all others, church machinery being manipulated by the men with the longest purses, pew and pulpit alike controlled by money and not by brains and piety.

There is a lesson for us in the incident of the round table. The whole church should be and will be in one sense a great round table at which men may sit as brothers,—banished every false and artificial class division.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

SANFORD, OF THE "HOLY GHOST AND US" SOCIETY IN TROUBLE.

For some years past Frank W. Sanford, founder of the "Shiloh" community has attracted some attention as one of those modern prophets, or would be prophets, of the class of Dowie, who keep the people guessing as to whether they are inspired, demented, possessed of the Devil, or simply seeking notoriety and financial gain.

Some months or years ago Sanford and his followers started out in a sort of sea crusade in two ships, the Coronet and the Kingdom. This seems to have been a part of their religious program, as Sanford claims to have visited every sea and ocean in the world excepting the Arctic.

The Kingdom was wrecked off the coast of Africa. The survivors were taken on board the Coronet, and the latter was kept at sea continuously for seventeen months. As a result of this long sea voyage, without fresh vegetables and fruit, six members of the party died of scurvy.

For their death Sanford was arraigned before a court in Portland, Maine, and was by the jury pronounced guilty.

According to the reports of the trial, Sanford testified that the Coronet was at all times under direct control of the will of God. He alleged that God had forbidden them to visit any land over which they had previously prayed. Storms and adverse winds prevented them visiting or reaching lands over which they had not prayed, so there was nothing for him to do as master of the ship, but to keep her at sea. However, they were finally compelled to turn back from an effort to reach Greenland.

The jury refused to consider the plea that God was responsible for the death of the six persons. The Federal Government has jurisdiction over all sea-going vessels and very properly held Mr. Sanford responsible for the death of these persons who were forcibly kept at sea so long that they finally died from the ravages of the dread disease of scurvy.

How wise was that position laid down in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, that he who keeps the law of God has no need to break the laws of the land. So-called religious leaders who disregard this position are constantly involved in difficulty. Thus Arthur Evelyn See, Frank W. Sanford, and others find themselves in jail, not because they are obeying God, but because they are disobeying the just laws of the land.

But it is replied, Was not Paul in jail, with Silas? Yes; but Paul was not guilty, and when a hearing was granted, his jailors were glad to set him free; indeed begged him to depart, for as a Roman citizen he had grounds for damages. They had no case against him.

Another says, Did not Joseph Smith die in jail? Yes; awaiting trial. Like Paul, he was accused but not convicted. To be accused is not to be considered guilty. The presumption of innocence holds until guilt is proved.

Joseph Smith was murdered because his enemies had despaired of being able to convict him in the civil courts. They had no case, so declared, "If the law will not reach him powder and bullets will." In like manner, failing to secure conviction, the enemies of Paul swore that they would not eat or drink until they had killed him.

Such cases furnish no excuse for men like Sanford and See, who, after a fair trial are found guilty.

The Master pronounced a blessing on those who were accused for his name's sake, only on condition that the accusations and the evil things said were false. Men should remember that condition.

WHO ARE HELPING?

We have sometimes wondered why certain of our well-known missionaries, as well as others, do not contribute to the HERALD, and do nothing for it by way of securing subscriptions. We have wondered if they are interested in having the HERALD a growing success. If they are, what are they doing for it? Do they have a good word for it where they labor? If not, is it because of indifference, or because in their opinion it is not worthy of commendation? If the latter, have they ever written to the management to show wherein it does not measure up to what they think it should?

What per cent of our field men ever get a subscriber for the HERALD? If the facts were known, the proportion of those who help would be surprising for its smallness. And how many local workers fail in this regard?

Would it not be well for many of the Saints, laymen as well as missionaries and local ministers, to think of these matters, to find something they can do for the official paper of the church?

This is not written in a faultfinding spirit, but is prompted by a desire to "boost." Let all get behind the HERALD and push it forward and upward. There are thousands of loyal readers and workers for the HERALD. They will get their reward, because it brings good cheer and inspiration to those who are isolated, reassurance to the despairing, and additional hope to all.

Very little is accomplished when one is only lukewarm. Let us get enthusiastic and the result will exceed our hopes.

SIMEON OF OLD.

And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ. And he came by the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, then took him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. And Joseph and his mother marveled at those things which were spoken of him. And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against; (Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also,) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.—Luke 2: 25-35.

We have here the record of a man who, having finished his life's work, was ready to depart in peace. His prayer was: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word."

The time comes soon or late for all men to depart, but not all are by any means ready to depart when the summons comes. Others, weary of life, hasten their own departing; but, though anxious to go, they can hardly be said to depart in peace.

Why was Simeon ready? Why was his departure to be in peace?

In the first place we are told that he was a "just" man. He had a conscience void of offense toward all men. In the evening of his life he was not troubled by recollections of wrongs done his fellow man.

To deal justly and honestly with all men is one important way of preparing for absolute peace of mind; and a contented heart and a peaceful mind are indispensable to happiness.

In the second place, Simeon was a "devout" man. He was religious and prayerful. He did not make the mistake, so commonly made to-day, of supposing that he could be a good man and a just man and yet a nonreligious man—right with his brethren but wrong with God.

The statement that he was "just and devout" defines his relationships with God and man, and those relationships were correct, therefore Simeon was at peace and did not fear death. He had friends on both sides of the great divide.

There are two ways of facing death: one displays the courage of ignorance; the other the courage of knowledge.

Some time ago there was published a little poem, just a verse that attracted some attention:

This little child so white and calm,
Decked for her grave,
Faced death without a quail,
Are you as brave?
Ah, she did not know, you say,
This child of four—
Do you know more!

It is given men to know more, if they will only trust the revelations of God. Simeon knew more, and approached the end of a well-spent life with the courage born of knowledge and the peace that attends faith. Simeon had seen Jesus. This was the crowning experience of his life, the gratification of his highest ambition. But what is it to see Jesus? The Jews who stood around the temple gate that day saw all that he saw with the physical eye. And what did they see? Only a little babe, no different, apparently, from other children of a similar age. They saw the child (as he was supposed to be) of Joseph and Mary.

But Simeon, we are told, was filled with the Holy Ghost, and by it he was able to see Jesus as the "Lord's Christ." He was able to discern Jesus as the Son of God, as Peter did later by the same Spirit, and to understand his character and mission. This is seeing Jesus; and anyone who will do the will of God to-day can see Jesus in the same way and in the same sense.

This ability to discern Jesus brought peace to Simeon; for Jesus is the one who gives peace, not as the world gives, but in his own way and time.

Simeon understood the gospel plan, for it is written that he said: "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel."

We are assured that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the "power of God unto salvation," and we believe that when Simeon saw the "salvation" which God had "prepared before the face of the people" he had a knowledge of that gospel of salvation which was to be preached in all the world, as well as a knowledge of the individual whose life, death, example, and doctrines would make that salvation possible.

He saw that Jesus was set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel—the fall of those who rejected him, the rising of those who accepted him. Simeon accepted him, and so was at peace.

Simeon was certainly fortunate, yet all that he had we may have. He was just; we may be just. He was devout; we may be devout. He saw Jesus and understood his salvation; we may do the same. Every blessing that the gospel conveyed to Simeon the gospel will bring to men to-day. With it men may be at peace as they approach the end of this mortal state; without it there is no peace of a permanent nature, at best there is only the bliss of ignorance which attends those deluded mortals who esteem it folly to be wise.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ARTICLES ON SOCIALISM.—We have received several communications in regard to socialism. They have been forwarded to Associate Editor E. A. Smith who, according to his statement in HERALD of December 20, 1911, will make a selection for use in the HERALD.

COST OF SAVING A SOUL.—Various ministers have been figuring what it costs to save a soul in Boston. One Methodist clergyman puts it at $3.12, a Baptist placed it at $70, while "Billy" Sunday figures it takes $450. Why this difference? We are yet in doubt as to which way the money is supposed to go in these cases. And are Sunday's converts worth more than those of other ministers, or is it worth more for him to save a soul, or is it the result of overcapitalization or "watered stock" on the part of the Baptist and Sunday. Inflated valuation is one of the tendencies of the times.

"Rabboni."

When Jesus was born there was heard in the sky
The angel hosannas, praising God the most high,
But who would have thought, at his wonderful birth,
What suffering and sorrow he'd endure while on earth.

The foxes have holes and the birds have their nest
Where, when weary, they find both safety and rest;
But the Savior, who for us his life blood has shed
Had no home, nor a pallet, to lay his dear head.

Persecuted and scorned, rejected by men,
When reviled, he bore it but reviled not again.
His strivings and yearnings, to win them from loss,
Brought him hatred and mockings, the scourge and the cross.

Oh, then who could not love our God's blessed Son,
So unselfish and tender in all he has done!
Thou blessed Rabboni, oh, help us to be Ever faithful till death, that we be welcomed by thee.

Nature.

As a fond mother, when the day is o'er,
Leads by the hand her little child to bed,
Half willing, half reluctant to be led,
And leaves his broken playthings on the floor,
Still gazing at them through the open door,
Nor wholly reassured and comforted
By promises of others in their stead,
Which, though more splendid, may not please him more;
So nature deals with us, and takes away
Our playthings one by one, and by the hand
Leads us to rest so gently, that we go
Scarce knowing if we wish to go or stay,
Being too full of sleep to understand
How far the unknown transcends the why we know.—Long-fellow.

QUESTION.

How does it come about that writers of books and periodicals, published by our church, will admit that any church now in existence came down by succession from the days of the apostles?

Of course they say that it apostatized from the original church.

How such ideas can accumulate in the minds of Latter Day Saints, with the standard books in their hands, is beyond my comprehension.

Now let us see: The Bible says, "That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition."—2 Thessalonians 2: 3. The foregoing is as strong a text as I find in the Bible to prove an entire apostasy. The text quoted from 1 Timothy 4: 1, "Some shall depart from the faith," has reference to the latter day; and not to the former day apostasy. But should one insist that it applies to both, let it be read, "some," not all.

Let us see, if we can rightly divide the word of truth. (2 Timothy 2: 15; Daniel 7: 23-25.) Daniel saw a power that should arise that "shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High."

Jesus saw: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11: 12.

In Revelation 13: 1-7, John saw the same that Daniel saw described as a "beast" and that the "dragon gave him his power and his seat, and great authority . . . and he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God . . . and it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them." To the writer's mind, this "beast" and the "saints" are spoken of, in that distinct and separate sense, that there is no need to try to connect them in any sense whatever, so far as there ever having been one, so that the one withdrew from the other.

It is made plain from the above texts that the saints did not all apostatize but "were worn out," "taken by force," "overcome."

Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 3: 139-141, Nephi saw, "The foundation of a great church . . . which slayeth the saints of God and bringeth them down into captivity . . . and I saw the Devil that he was the foundation of it." We see from the above, that the saints were either killed or brought into captivity, and that all connection the "beast" power has to the church was that one overcame the other, and that one was of God, and the other was of the Devil, and that the one founded by the Devil has as much connection with the saints as the Devil has with God.

Doctrine and Covenants 84: 1: This describes "the great persecutor of the church, the whore, even Babylon, that maketh all nations to drink of her cup, in whose hearts the enemy, even Satan, sitteth to reign; behold, he soweth the tares, wherefore the tares choke the wheat and drive the church into the wilderness."

In this, she is called the "apostate," but does that necessarily signify that she apostatized from the church of Christ? Or might she not have changed from her own original position? Isaiah, in his 24th chapter, speaks of some who "transgressed the law, changed the ordinance." Can one not transgress law without first obeying it? Could not some parties have assumed to be the church of Christ; but changed the ordinances, or would they necessarily have needed to belong to the church in order to do these things? The writer thinks not. "Drive the church into the wilderness," or in other words to God, by killing off the saints.

The church then is one thing, and the power that drove it is another.

"And immediately there shall appear a great sign in heaven, and all people shall see it together. And another angel shall sound his trump, saying, That great church, the mother of abominations, that made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, that persecuteth the saints of God, that shed their blood; she who sitteth upon many waters, and upon the islands of the sea; behold, she is the tares of the earth, she is bound in bundles, her hands are made strong, no man can loose them; therefore, she is ready to be burned."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 26.

All of the above texts prove to the mind of the writer that the "beast" power arose independent of the church of Christ, and will continue so, until the day of burning, which will no doubt take place at the coming of Christ.

If there needs be any excuse given for this article, the writer will simply say that he stood it as long as he could.

J. C. CRABB.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."---PART 17.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

ANIMALS IN ANCIENT AMERICA.

Elder Traum resumes his attack on the Book of Mormon by the introduction of a subordinate proposition involving the unreliability of its account of the animals on this continent both in the time of the Nephites and Jaredites. It is recorded of the colony emigrating from Jerusalem to the "wealthy nation dwelling without bars" or gates, and "apart by themselves," that,

We did find upon the land of promise, as we journeyed in the wilderness, that there were beasts in the forest of every kind, both the cow, and the ox, and the ass, and the horse, and the goat, and the wild goat, and all manner of wild animals, which were for the use of man.—1 Nephi 5: 45.

In this reference Traum blunders. He has it Nephi 17: 25, when there are but seven chapters in the First Book of Nephi, and fifteen in the Second Book of Nephi. The quotation proper is recorded in 1 Nephi 5: 45. He also misquotes the passage, omitting the word wild, modifying "animals." His purported quotations are garbled all through the book.

Of the Jaredite, or "wealthy nation," whose "booty" the Nephites availed themselves of, and who came out from the Tower of Babel about 2,222 years B. C., we read that the Lord took the curse from off the land (for there had been famine, S. W. L. S.), and the house of Emer did prosper exceedingly under the reign of Emer; and in the space of sixty and two years, they had become exceeding strong, insomuch that they became exceeding rich, having all manner of fruit, and of grain, and of silks, and of fine linen, and of gold and of silver, and of precious things; and also all manner of cattle, of oxen, and cows, and of sheep, and of swine, and of goats, and also many other kinds of animals which were useful for the food of man; and they also had horses, and asses, and there were elephants, and cureloms and cumoms; all of which were useful unto man, and more especially the elephants and cureloms and cumoms. And thus the Lord did pour out his blessing upon this land, which was choice above all other lands; and he commanded that whoso should possess the land, should possess it unto the Lord, or they should be destroyed when they were ripened in iniquity.—Book of Mormon, p. 517.

In this reference, Traum blunders again. The quotation proper is recorded in Ether 4: 3. He cites us to Ether 9: 18, 19, while there are but six chapters in the book of Ether. He also leaves the impression that the Jaredites should question the idea of "swine" being "fit" for food. He doubtless, in a careless manner, desired to blend the idea in the mind, with the Nephites, who were of Israel, and who say nothing of "swine," in the list mentioned in 1 Nephi 5: 45.

Thus the Book of Mormon affirms an abundance of oxen, cows, sheep, swine and cattle, horses, asses and wild goats, such as were known to exist at a later time on this continent. We shall not pause to cite the fact that these people counted "swine" fit for food, or that "oxen" is not equivalent to "cattle," since there were "cattle and oxen," or that an "ox" is produced only in one way, and that is by a surgical operation; but it is more to our liking to show that, if this book claims to be a history of the Western Hemisphere, its alleged facts must be substantiated by unquestioned proof, else its claim to credence must be abandoned and the book be adjudged spurious. For if it is not historical, it is spurious, and, if spurious, it must be fraudulent.—Mormonism Against Itself, p. 145.

This statement is extremely wild. It evidences distorted imagination. In the first place, the Book of Mormon never hints at being the history or "a history of the Western Hemisphere." No such claim is made for it. No such claim is in it, and should Traum build a fabric upon this assumption as high and pyramidal as the tower of Babel, the falsehood under his argumentative bubble will tear it into confused shreds in its swift fall. In the second place, he should submit the Bible to the same test, and see if its alleged facts will stand the scrutiny of the investigation. Not that we object to the rule being applied to the Book of Mormon, but if the Book of Mormon goes down by the application of the so-called test, will not every other book considered authentic go down under the same test? Mr. Traum should know, that so far as the historical portions of the Bible concern this question—this test of his, they must surrender.

The Bible affirms the existence of such animals as the "unicorn" and behemoth in the days of Moses and Job, fifteen hundred years B. C. Also the character, the capacity, and appetite of those animals, must come up to the test—fill the measure. The bones of this last animal are as "strong pieces of brass." "He drinketh up a river." "He taketh Jordan with his eyes," and "he eateth grass as the ox."—Job 40: 15-24. Also the "horse" in Job's day. He was so different from the horse now. Then, "his neck was clothed with thunder." "His nostrils" were a throne "of glory." "He swallowed the ground," seasoned with "fierceness." He could "believe," or "not believe." He could "talk." The question is, When did these animals exist? Elder Traum will be under the necessity of writing again, to Washington, D. C., for information to destroy the divinity of the Bible. He might prove that, "if the Bible claims to be a history of the Eastern Hemisphere, its alleged facts are substantiated by unquestioned proof, else its claims to credence must be abandoned, and the Book be adjudged spurious."

Of the "behemoth," we are told he did not exist in the quaternary period, was not known to the geological period fifteen hundred years B. C. Is the Bible to go down, because of this theory? The opinions of scientists are contradictory along these lines of organic existence. We are informed that the "unicorn" of Genesis is "mythological," did not exist at all, and the "behemoth," though described as a terrestrial animal, and regarded as amphibious by some, can not be found, unless among the fossils of the pliocene epoch—250,000 years ago. Doesn't Traum see that the same dates, epochs, and periods, set to destroy the authenticity of the Book of Mormon will also sweep the Bible off the map? The evidence from Washington, considered by Traum to be so damaging to the claims of the book, does not appear to be so dangerous after all. His informant is very "positive" to begin with as follows:

If the period between the years 600 B. C. and 420 A. D. only is involved in your investigation, I can say very positively that none of the animals enumerated in your letter are known to have existed in America during that time, but at a much earlier date, though geologically speaking in comparatively recent times, this continent was inhabited by great numbers and varieties of horses, elephants, mastodons, camels, bisons, peccaries, and other animals represented by forms living to-day, all, however, differing in a more or less marked degree from any of the present day species. Of the groups mentioned, representatives of the bison and peccary only are known to have survived the great changes attending the close of the glacial epoch in America.—Mormonism Against Itself, pp. 147, 148.

Yet, in answering questions two and three, he modifies very materially thus:

In certain sections of a portion of the United States and in Alaska, however, their remains have been found in supposed post glacial deposits.

He is discussing the horse and his antiquity on this continent in this latter answer. Now, the "glacial" period is conjecture. It is based on the theory of "eccentricity," and this theory is by no means established. It has miserably failed to command even general assent in the face of difficulties involved. Doctor James Croll, of Edinburgh, was the author of the theory on which the "glacial" period is built, and he simply followed a suggestion of Hershel's. To sum up the consensus of opinion on the theory, it is this:

An ice age must appear, or occur every period of twenty-one thousand years in times of high eccentricity; but the unmovable difficulty is, the evidence fails to establish, during the ice age, so rapid an alteration of glacial and temperate conditions.

But we will not stop to discuss the question, but will proceed to present evidence of recent existence, prehistoric existence of animals. The first we cite attention to, is the statement of an English professor in the Westminster Review, of January, 1872, p. 19, thus:

When the animals and plants of the Old and New World are compared one can not but be struck with their identity; all or nearly all belong to the same genera, while many, even of the species, are common to both continents. This is most important in its bearing on our theory, as indicating that they radiated from a common center after the glacial period. . . . The hairy mammoth, woolly-haired rhinoceros, the Irish elk, the musk-ox, the reindeer, the glutton, the lemming, etc., more or less accompanied this flora, and their remains are always found in the post glacial deposits of Europe as low down as the south of France. In the New World beds of the same age contain similar remains, indicating that they came from a common center, and were spread out over both continents alike.

Even the species "are common to both continents," indicating that they "radiated from a common center after the glacial period." Their remains found with the flora, always in the "postglacial deposits."

We next add the testimony of Professor Alexander Winchell, as follows:

In the United States we detect also some evidences of the coexistence of man and extinct species of quadrupeds. Doctor Koch, the reconstructor of the Tertiary Zeuzlodon, insisted long ago that he had found in Missouri such an association of mastodon and Indian remains as to prove that the two had lived contemporaneously. I have myself [says the author] observed the bones of the mastodon and elephant imbedded in peat at depths so shallow that I could readily believe the animals to have occupied the country during its possession by the Indians, and gave publication to this conviction in 1862. More recently [he says] Professor Holmes, of Charleston, has informed the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, that he finds upon the banks of the Ashley River a remarkable conglomeration of fossil remains in deposits of posttertiary age. Remains of the hog, horse and other animals of recent date, together with human bones, stone arrow-heads, hatchets and fragments of pottery, are there lying mingled with the bones of the mastodon and extinct gigantic lizards. Contemporary with these American animals, but not yet found associated in their remains with the relics of the human species, lived in North America horses much larger than the existing species, grazing in company with wild oxen and herds of bison and shrub-loving tapirs. The streams were dammed by the labors of gigantic beavers, while the forests afforded a range for a species of hog, and a grateful dwelling place for numerous edentate quadrupeds related to the sloth, but of gigantic proportions.—Sketches of Creation, pp. 356, 357.

Here is that "pesky" old word "oxen," Mr. Traum; suppose you pause long enough to "scrap" with Professor Winchell. Again Mr. Winchell says:

It is a curious fact that so many genera, now extinct from the continent, but living in other quarters of the globe, were once abundant on the plains of North America. Various species of the horse have dwelt here for ages, and the question reasonably arises whether the wild horses of the pampas may not have been indigenous. Here, too, the camel found a suitable home.—Ibid., p. 210.

Ignatius Donnelly affirms:

Recent discoveries in the fossil beds of the Bad Lands of Nebraska prove that the horse originated in America. Professor Marsh, of Yale College, has identified the several preceding forms from which it was developed, rising, in the course of ages, from a creature not larger than a fox until, by successive steps, it developed in the true horse. . . . The fossil remains of the camel are found in India, Africa, South America, and in Kansas. The existing alpacas and llamas of South America are but varieties of the camel family.—Atlantis, pp. 54, 55.

This same author says of Desire Charnay's finds:

Desire Charnay believes that he has found in the mines of Tula the bones of swine, sheep, oxen, and horses, in a fossil state, indicating an immense antiquity.—Atlantis, p. 350.

Permit me to inject the statement of the Jaredite preparation on this point; before embarking for the American Continent:

And it came to pass, that when they had prepared all manner of food, that they might thereby subsist upon the water, and also food for their flocks and herds and whatsoever beast, or animal, or fowl that they should carry with them.

"And when they had done all these things," they boarded the vessels, and before the "trade-winds" were wafted to this "promised land."—See Book of Mormon, page 510.

They brought "flocks and herds," "beasts and animals" with them. So that Elder Traum's boasted evidence from Washington, that "all the domestic varieties of cattle, oxen, and cows, sheep, swine and goats" are of Old World origin," does not damage the claim of the Book of Mormon in the least, were we to admit the whole testimony of the "M. S."

Elder Traum knows, if he has investigated geology, that its leading advocates attest, on the point of "species," that, "the present species of the horse, rabbit, bison, peccary, beaver, muskrat, elk, deer, raccoon, opossum, hog, sheep, dog, and ox date from the so-called glacial period." See Dana's Manual of Geology, p. 398; Elements of Geology, p. 324; Holmes and Leidy.

This was the close of the "Terrace epoch" and the duration of the "glacial." "The present species" of those animals date that far back, and admitting the glacial period before the Jaredites imported their stock, the same species would be found here in America. Has Mr. Traum forgotten his schoolboy days when he studied the conquest of Peru? Does he remember the vast amount of gold found in the temples? Has he forgotten that part of the gold taken back to Spain represented sheep, one of the "domestic animals" in question? Still more, the ancient Peruvians had more than twenty sheep with their lambs, attended by shepherd, all made of gold. (Atlantis, p. 395.) Where did they get the knowledge of sheep?

T. H. Hittel read a paper before the Historical Society, in a meeting of that body in San Francisco, California, and it appeared in the Bulletin of March, 1888. The paper was written by Doctor D. L. Yates. One paragraph we select, and present in this connection, bearing on the horse.

In speaking of California possessing the oldest known relics, the paper remarks:

The first authenticated record of the original occupants was found on the table mountain region in Tuolumne County, and is of an age prior to the great volcanic outburst. Fossil remains of the rhinoceros and an extinct horse are found under the lava layers forming the table mountains, which are 1,400 feet thick, 1,700 feet wide . . . where the river beds have been washed out, and have been covered again to the depth of from three thousand to four thousand feet more since the flow of the lava. This lava rests on a bed of detritus, which is often entered by running tunnels (in mining). The human relics and stone implements found in these formations give evidence of human habitants differing from any known since. There have been found spearheads, a pipe of polished stone, two scoops of stalactite rock (resembling the grocer's scoop), an implement of aragonite, resembling an unbent bow; but the use of which is unknown and can not be conjectured, a stone needle, with notches at the larger end, and the finest charmstones that have ever been found.

There have been brought to light the fossils of nine mastodons, twenty elephants, various pachyderms in the Table Mountains, numerous evidences of animal life in the calcareous formations in the Texas flats, obsidian spearheads, fossils of the elephant, horse and camel about Hornitos, bones and evidences of prehistoric human industry in Tulare, and in Trinity and Siskiyon many proofs of the contemporaneous existence of man and extinct mammals.

The Book of Mormon records a volcanic outburst, accompanied with earthquake and storm, (the catastrophe accompanying the death of Christ on Calvary) and that sixteen cities were destroyed, six by fire, and four "sunken into the sea," and six "buried in the depths of the earth"; and in the land northward, "the destruction was greater," "many great and notable cities were sunk." (See Book of Mormon, pp. 437, 438.)

This is corroborated by Central American books, notably, Codex Chimalpopoca.

A few more brief evidences and we will have our "horse" laden with proof.

Professor Winchell says again:

We are in fact, acquainted with twenty-one species of horselike animals, and the genus of true horses has been traced down to the times preceding the present.—Professor A. Winchell in Evolution, p. 82.

Professor E. V. Hayden, United States Surveys in the Great West, page 44, says:

In the later fauna were the remains of a number of species of extinct camels, one of which was of the size of the Arabian camel, and a second about two thirds as large; also a smaller one, . . . although no horses were known to exist on this continent prior to its discovery by Europeans, yet Doctor Leidy has shown that before the age of man, this was emphatically the country of horses.

In a report of 1873, he says:

The skeleton, which I excavated with my own hands from the side of a bluff, adds considerable to our knowledge of this genus of horse.

Ignatius Donnelly, in Atlantis, pages 54, 55, says:

Recent discoveries in the fossil beds of the Bad Lands of Nebraska prove that the horse originated in America. Professor Marsh, of Yale College, has identified the several preceding forms from which it was developed, rising, in the course of ages, from a creature not larger than a fox until, by successive steps, it developed into the true horse.

The human will is like the beast of burden. If God mounts it, it wishes and goes as God wills; if Satan mounts it, it wishes and goes as Satan wills. Nor can it choose the rider it would prefer, nor betake itself to him, but it is the riders who contend for its possession.—From the Life and Letters of Martin Luther.

Of General Interest

Poor Boys May be Rich Boys.

Mr. Carnegie, addressing the members of the young, or younger, Mr. Rockefeller's Bible class, repeated his now familiar contention that it is lucky to be born poor, and a dangerous blessing, if not an outright misfortune, to have wealthy parents. "As a rule," he said, "millionaires' sons do not average up so well as the sons of poor men. However," he added, possibly because he remembered the parentage of his most distinguished auditor, "nowever, when a millionaire's son does come up to the mark he is entitled to double credit, for he has many temptations that the poor boy knows nothing about."

Now it is true, and unquestionably true, that the millionaire's son has more opportunities to yield to certain temptations than does the poor man's son, and can yield to them without suffering consequences as prompt or as unpleasant, but it is not true that the poor boy does not know those temptations—that he is not as likely to want the joys and luxuries of life without earning or deserving them. Lack of industry, of self-reliance, of the independent spirit, of scorn for a parasitical existence, is not unknown among the poor. On the other hand, if the rich boy has his special temptations, he is free from others, at least as numerous and at least as strong, that besiege the son of poverty. For instance he who can have for the asking anything he wants, is entitled to no double credit if he comes up to the mark as regards the common honesty which consists in refraining from outright theft.

Underlying all of Mr. Carnegie's remarks on this subject lies his fallacious assumption that he himself began life as a poor boy. That is not the case. To be sure, he was not a millionaire's son, but none the less did he start with a magnificent inheritance from his parents—that of a sound mind in a sound body, with the natural, instinctive impulse to work hard, and the natural competency to "get ahead," financially first, and then in more important ways.

"Rich" and "poor" are terms with so many meanings that they are the poorest of foundations for any argument. "Success" is another word of the same kind, for what one man calls success his neighbor may call dismal, even disgraceful, failure, and the two could dispute endlessly without arriving at any conclusion on which they could agree.—Selected.

The Power of Character.

The desecrators were driven from the temple of God not so much by the scourge as by the gleam of character that flashed from the eye, which was the index of a righteous soul. The Roman soldiers could not lay hold upon Christ. Without character the strongest are weak, with it the weakest are strong.

The credentials of Christianity are the characters of those who have been transformed by her power. Unless the representatives of Christianity exemplify her transforming power in their own lives they will be impotent in power.

Washington, dignified and ennobled by a spotless character, was loved and trusted never more than in the dark hour of defeat.

Napoleon, unsurpassed in brilliant generalship, was feared and distrusted never more than in the hour of victory.

If when brilliant accomplishments fail character is thus authoritative in the secular realm, it is criminal not to realize that the power of Christian manhood depends not so much upon intellectual genius and brilliant attainments as upon the conformity of life to that Pattern which is the ideal that will ultimately transform the world.

The truest eloquence is the eloquence of noble character. When the casket containing the great manly figure of Phillips Brooks, one of the simplest and yet one of the greatest of men, lay upon the catafalque in front of Trinity Church in Boston there stood before it a vast multitude mourning for the one they had loved and lost. Every head was bared and bowed. They sent up to heaven a silent, loving tribute to that character as guileless as a child. Those lips upon whose eloquence thousands of hungry hearts had feasted were cold in death, but that character—so true, so pure, so transparent, so childlike—was eloquent with an eloquence which words could not contain.

To have Christ's character is to have Christ's power over men. If we would lift others up we ourselves must be upon higher ground. Sometimes we can not wonder that the keen eyed, skeptical world is not convinced.

Authority inheres not in the sacred cloth of pious cant, not in sacerdotal office, not in ecclesiastical relations. Authority inheres in fidelity to God, in fidelity to truth, in fidelity to self. This authority, this power man can not give, can not take away.

The law that action and reaction are equal is true in morals as in physics. Every word, every deed, every thought, every feeling selects, shapes, polishes, or fixes a stone in the imperishable monument of character. That which is a monarch without becomes a despot within. Conduct is the expression of the inner self. Whatever may be psychologically possible, practically our choices represent our character as they determine our activity. We are free to mold character, but we are not free to live contrary to character. How fearful the thought that man can become the slave of a character which leads to sin! How blessed the thought that we can build a character which will make us subjectively pure and objectively powerful!—Editorial in New York Herald, December 10, 1911.

February Reading.—Early Childhood.

"How very nice it is to think

The world is full of meat and drink,

With little children saying grace

In every Christian kind of place.—Stevenson.

We all of us look back to our early childhood days with varied feelings, recalling the happiest days of our life, happiness not unmixed with little childish troubles that seemed so large to us then that they completely covered the blue sky and shut out the dancing sunbeams. Since we have grown older we feel like smiling at what seemed so very serious to us then; and looking at these troubles with our grown-up eyes, they seem nothing at all to us now. But with our added years we feel the great responsibility that devolves upon us in trying to train the little ones who have been placed in our care. With what tender affection we should seek to guide their little footsteps in those ways which will be for their best good. It seems to me we can not bestow upon them too much love, but at the same time our love should be tempered with wisdom, to prevent us from yielding to their wishes to such an extent as would result in harm to them.

I am afraid that sometimes mothers are too indifferent to their little ones, and do not realize what a wealth of affection they demand. I recall an instance of a dear little girl whose mother, unfortunately, was of such an indifferent nature that she seldom bestowed a caress upon her little girl. The child, craving the affection which was denied her at home, was irresistibly drawn to a neighbor lady, who, having no little ones of her own, was happy in bestowing the caresses the little girl so sadly needed. We see in this instance the danger of alienating the child's natural affection for her mother. Another instance I remember which happened years ago, of a little motherless girl going up to her guardian with outstretched arms, and her heart full of love, only to be repulsed with the command, "Go away, none of that:" and there never was any more of it, either.

On the other hand, I have before me the picture of a little boy, who, whenever his mamma was cross or impatient with him would put his little arms around her neck and say, "I want to love you, mamma," and I am glad to say that the little fellow was not turned away.

My own little four-year-old boy paid me a compliment not long ago, which I prize very highly. As he and I were on our way to town one day, he was running a little ahead, and turning around he asked me whose mamma that was as we passed one house and saw a mother and her little girl in the yard. On being told who it was he walked on a moment in silence, then he turned and came back and put his little hand in mine, looked up into my face with a most beautiful smile and said, "Mamma, I would better have you for my mamma."

But while bestowing affection upon the children, we must not forget the absolute necessity of teaching obedience. Without obedience there can be no real affection. But while demanding obedience from the child, the principal object is to teach obedience from a sense of right and not through a feeling of fear. I believe that obedience gained through a feeling of fear alone will eventually result in harm to the child. If we can be successful in surrounding little children with these two very important principles of love and obedience, I think there will be no doubt of their obeying the gospel law when they arrive at the years of accountability.

Selfishness is a fault that we notice in very small children. How easy it seems when left to follow their own inclinations; for them to say, "Give me the biggest apple," "Give me the biggest piece of candy." And yet with a wise word and perhaps a little urging sometimes, the child will soon learn to say, "Let brother have the biggest one this time, mamma."

And the children's morals must be watched, oh, so closely. How soon a naughty word is learned or a naughty deed is done. Even the little two-year-old will repeat what the older child says. And right here let me say, that mother is a wise mother who keeps her little ones near her as much as possible. Her opportunities for gaining her children's confidences are unlimited. Why, almost every hour of the day something comes up that mother must settle.

Do not drive a child. If they seem determined on not doing what is wanted of them, try persuasion; give them a little time to think about it themselves, and in almost every case, even the small child will be won over and no disagreeable results will follow. Children have their own ideas about things, and what they need is a watchful, guiding hand to turn their ideas into the right channel.

Another thing that seems a real necessity to me is reading to the children. How pleasant it is to the children, for mother every now and then to sit down with the smallest one on her lap while the others crowd around, either to talk or to hear a story read. These little whiles are indeed precious to the busy mother, who would so love to give far more of her time to the children than she is able to do.

There are times, too, when the little two-, three-, four- and five-year-old, while the older brothers and sisters are at school, love to hear the stories of Jesus and other Bible characters. At bedtime they are generally too sleepy. And the questions they ask and the ideas they gain are wonderful; sometimes amusing. A little four-year-old boy came home from Sunday school one Sunday without his hat. His mamma asked him where it was and he said he did not know, he could not find it anywhere. She sent him back with an older brother to look for it, and presently he came back with it on. His mamma asked him where he found it, and he said, "O, mamma, Jesus found it for me." His mamma said, "Why, Donald, where was Jesus?" He said, "Oh, he was at Sunday school and he found my hat for me." His mamma found out that he had seen a man with a long beard, who, with his childish mind he thought was Jesus.

As a rule little children love to hear Bible stories, and they love to play church and Sunday school, and at night, before they go to bed, no matter how tired they are, even down to the little two-year-old, they want to pray to God so he will take care of them through the night.

A little girl who had been sick almost all of the four years of her life, and had been administered to much and prayed for often, for years afterward, when she was not strong enough to play with other children very much, would play with her dolls and administer to them and pray for them just as the elders had done for her. Perhaps some will think it was sacrilegious to allow such a thing, but she seemed so happy and so sincere that her mother allowed it to go on, trusting that in time all would be right; and now that she is older she has all the reverence for sacred things that one could wish.

Little children love to hear stories read. They will sit quietly for a long time and listen, and then will ask innumerable questions. They think mother knows everything, and that everything she says is absolutely true, as indeed it should be. It is a true saying that "The mother's heart is the child's schoolroom."

How very careful we should always be to speak the exact truth, thus teaching the children to be truthful also. What a very wrong thing it is to frighten a little child. I have seen parents frighten a child into obedience by telling him that if he did not do as they wished, something would get him. And I have seen the same little child run into the house screaming hysterically at the very thought of such a thing while the older members of the family stood by and laughed. Could we blame such a child for being untruthful?

Children must be taught habits of neatness and industry. Even the very little ones can be taught to keep their faces and hands clean, and to take care of their clothes. A clean child is much sweeter to look at and to love than a dirty, untidy one, and it is only a matter of a little patience and painstaking watchfulness to teach them so that they will acquire the habit of neatness in everything they do.

Let the children help mother with the work. They love to do it, and what if they do do things in a way that does not satisfy our own fastidious ideas? Praise them for what they have tried to do. A word of praise and the dear little ones are almost willing to lay down their lives for you. Do not ever be afraid of letting them know how much we appreciate having them around us.

"Have patience, the little hands are, oh, so busy;
Have patience, the little feet can not keep still;
Have patience, though hand and brain are worn and dizzy,
Have patience to mold and guide the little will.

"Have patience to form the little disposition;
Have patience the little tempers to control;
Be thou the little spirit's best physician;
Have patience to guide the wee, immortal soul.

"Have patience, then, to-day and yet to-morrow;
Have patience from each dawn till set of sun,
And should the Father take the child, in sorrow,
Have patience still to say, 'Thy will be done.'"

Keep temptations away from them as much as possible. If they must face them, teach them how they can be overcome. One lady who has no children of her own, when she invites her friends who have children, puts away all fragile things beforehand. Some children are trained not to meddle, but there are few mothers who can be easy in an unfamiliar house with little children, no matter how well trained. It takes only a short time to put them away, and her friends assure her that it is a pleasure not to be on the alert all the time. A basket filled with odds and ends enables the little ones to amuse themselves, and everything goes well.

And then comes the time at the close of the day, when they are tired and sleepy, and sometimes cross. When the two smallest ones climb into mother's lap and cuddle down contentedly, and mother's arms close around them as if she would never let them go, and as the tired little eyes close and she lays them in their little bed, and kisses the dear little faces over and over, she breathes a prayer from the depth of her soul, Grant, heavenly Father, that I may become the mother that I ought to be." Notice.

To the Sisters of the Clinton District: Having been appointed field worker in the Clinton District, and as we have, to my knowledge, but one local, I take this means of teaching you in behalf of the Children's Home. Will all of the sisters who have anything to spare for the home in the form of clothing, quilts, etc., send the same to the district conference to be held at Nevada, Missouri, in February? (Watch for date in the paper.)

Dear sister, this is not meant for the sister across the way, or in another town—it is for you. The Lord has made it known that it is time to take up the work of the Womans' Auxiliary in the district. Can we not all put our shoulders to the wheel and help roll the work along? Whatever your condition, isolated or otherwise, there is a work for you to do. Will you do it? Find some one going to the conference and send by him what you have prepared.

I wish to visit the branches, but it will be some time before I can do so. In the meantime I shall do what I can by correspondence. From those who are interested and do not hear from me soon enough, I shall be pleased to hear at any time.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MINA KEARNEY.

Request for Prayers.

"Will the Saints please pray for my son who was kicked by a horse, and badly injured in the face? Pray that he may recover entirely, if it is God's will, and that he may not be left disfigured. Most of his teeth were knocked out and his jawbone broken."

SADIE BURCH.

Letter Department

WEBB CITY, MISSOURI, January 1, 1912.

Dear Herald: Though I don't feel well in body, I have had a day of rejoicing. There has been an influence around me to-day such as I enjoy. I feel that the Spirit of the Master is a very good companion to start in on a New Year with, and I would live so that every day would find me enjoying such a portion of his Spirit. I feel that then I could easily overcome the temptations that so easily beset me.

I can look back and see where the hand of the Lord has guided me, and my husband was the instrument which he used in doing it. Had it not been for his faithfulness and patience I never would have been where I am to-day. When we were married I belonged to the Baptist Church. I was still attending the Baptist church; but sometimes I would go with him, to please him. Finally I told him I would go with him to his church for preaching services if he would attend the Baptist Sunday school with me; so he gladly consented, and it went on that way until I was shown in a vision the difference in our standing.

It seemed that I was in a very deep hollow, and on one side was a mountain or cleft almost straight up, too rough and rugged to think about climbing, and on the other side was the most beautiful, shady lawn, or park, that I ever saw. In the valley where I was standing was a deep, narrow stream, but it was wide enough that I could not step it,—it ran just in front of me. As I looked over at the side that was so beautiful, I saw my husband sitting on the ground under one of those beautiful trees, but his countenance was sad. I asked him the second or third time why he didn't come and help me across, and his only answer was, "I have done all I can." I was pleading with him to come and help me across, when I looked up the valley and saw, to my horror, a body of water coming towards me and sweeping everything before it, and my thoughts were, Oh, what shall I do? and as I turned my head from the awful sight to the little stream in front of me, I noticed that the stream was divided, and I hastened over on a little dry path to where my husband was, just in time to escape the danger, the water rolling down behind me.

To say that my husband's countenance brightened next morning when I related what I had seen, is putting it mildly. He realized more than I did that his prayers had been answered, for he had been praying that some manifestation might be given me to show me my condition. I am more than thankful to-day that he led me to see my duty.

I am thankful to our Master that he has taught us to be humble and patient. We have felt at times that our trials were too great, but realize that I would never have known patience had it not been for the trials husband and I have passed through; but can we expect happiness and pleasure in this world (outside of trying to serve the Master) after coming in contact with this work and realizing as we, God's people do (or should) the responsibility that rests upon us, and that our work is not completed just by being baptized, but only begun? Also seeing the condition the world is in to-day, and realizing the short space of time which we have to make it better, by our living in it, it makes our hearts sad to know of so many that have grown indifferent and careless concerning their duty. I realize we fall short of a great many blessings because of our neglect. I feel weak and feel that our service as wife and husband is somewhat limited because of our present conditions. We know he has promised to bless us if we do our duty, and we doubt not his promises, but realize the cause to be neglectfulness of our duty.

I think we as parents, and especially mothers, should live humbly, truthfully, and prayerfully, in order to set the right examples before our little ones. I believe I would have been a better woman to-day if I had had the right kind of training. It takes patient and prayerful living to bring to one the full knowledge of his duty.

I am thankful for the blessings we have received; and especially so for the three babies that have come to brighten our home, the oldest three years old now. I am thankful to be counted worthy of the care and guidance of them, and my earnest prayer is that I may live right before them and always have his Spirit in guiding them that I may do it with patience and kindness. Dear brothers and sisters, pray for me, for we need each others' prayers to hold us up. The HERALD is always a welcome visitor in our home, and we feel strengthened and encouraged after reading its pages.

A sister in the faith,

MRS. A. N. DEEVER.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, January 2, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: Please convey to the many friends both in and out of the church my cheery good will. May peace and pleasure be their heritage for the New Year. Tell them the truth is as dear to me as of yore; that my soul still craves communion with God and my heart responds to the loving solicitude of his children. I still long to follow the divine Master in service.

From communications at hand there seems to be some misapprehension as to the cause for my leaving Kansas City. God knows why I came away. The First Presidency of the church had my confidence. That is enough. My relations with the First Presidency were both cordial and friendly. I will never forget the fatherly interest of Brother Joseph and the cordial companionship of Brother Fred M. Smith.

I may hold positions somewhat at variance with some of my brethren, but this should not estrange us. I believe that God is love; that there is no hate in him at all. None of his punishments are retributive. Any restriction imposed by him is corrective and reformatory. Restraint may be imposed on an individual for the good of all, but this restraint is never vindictive. There is no element of vengeance in his nature at all. In the nature of things he can neither hate nor do wrong to anybody or anything.

No services should be propitiatory. We can none of us do God any good. We can neither add to his glory, nor yet expand his goodness or intensify his love.

The death of Jesus was not the sequel to a divine fiat. God did not demand the death of Jesus to pacify himself. The death of Jesus was not necessary to assuage divine anger or, in a retributive way, to even up Adamic sin. Jesus died in order that he might complete his work. His death was necessary to save man, and not to satisfy or pacify God. The necessity for his death consisted not in the exactions of divinity, but in human necessity. Without the death of Jesus the resurrection would have been an impossibility. There was more of atonement in the life of Jesus than in his death. As compared with his life his death was incidental. Jesus died for man, not for God. The necessity for his death was all on the man side. It must be remembered that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." The religious views of the individual, as well as the collectivity, is progressive. Man's information is necessarily cumulative. The standard of excellence is ahead, not behind. Our lawgiver is in heaven, not on Sinai nor yet in Jerusalem. The Bible is a finger post. It is not a closed port. It is not a complete and minute exposition of the entire scheme of salvation. It measures man's capacity. It does not contain all the wisdom of the infinite. Bible truths are clothed in the idioms of man and not the vernacular of Infinity.

For presenting these views, I ran counter to some of the eldership. I did not care to persist in their presentation and develop antagonism. For the time being, I withdrew. My ardor has not waned. My love to God and man has not diminished.

May God bring us to see eye to eye and to function as he wishes us to function.

Your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

PLANO, ILLINOIS, January 4, 1912.

Editors Herald: As we are now just entering upon the duties and cares of the new year, and perhaps its disappointments, we are glad that we can report the old Plano Branch is still flourishing spiritually, and is still on the increase numerically. There were seven added by baptism during the last reunion, and then a week ago last Saturday two were baptized by Lester Wildermuth, they being the sons of Walter and Ida Kimball, late of Janesville, Wisconsin. So that nine have been added by baptism, while at the same time we have lost four, three by removal and one by death, leaving us a net gain of five the past year. Even with this small gain we feel encouraged.

We held our annual business meeting Wednesday evening, January 4, 1912, resulting in sustaining the writer as presiding officer, with a full and complete retinue of other officers. Our auxiliaries, Sunday school and Religio, also the Ladies' Aid seem prosperous and flourishing, each in its line of work, and we now have a committee zealously soliciting and collecting means to purchase and install a new heating plant of some kind in the old stone church, where so many of the Saints have worshiped in the past, and we hope many more will be blessed by meeting together within its hallowed walls to praise God in the future. Some of our young people have shown themselves wonderfully efficient in this line of work. Not long ago they held a bazaar, which netted them about eighty dollars.

We are glad to feel that the Lord is blessing his people and that they are concentrating their efforts and thus pushing forward Zion's cause,

In bonds,

E. M. WILDERMUTH.

OELWEIN, IOWA, January 1, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: The work here is growing some, we have added by baptism twelve members to the branch since May 31. We had Brother J. S. Roth with us about two weeks in October and he preached some powerful sermons, for which he is noted, he baptized four young people while here; Brother Robert Smith, our branch president baptized five and the writer baptized three. Brother Smith is a faithful and untiring worker wherever he is put and it was through his faithful efforts that the branch is where it is.

We have a nice Sunday school here, also a Sunshine Band.

Brother Lenfin Loveland was ordained to the office of priest December 11, 1911, and has a bright future before him. Sister Nettie I. Smith is another of our faithful workers, she is president of our Sunshine Band. Sister Laura Clark and others here are striving to upbuild the work and ask an interest in your prayers. We wish all the Saints everywhere a Happy New Year.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOHN S. MCQUEEN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

To those who know me, I wish to say that it is by the blessing of God the eternal Father that I am out of the Sanitarium. I was one of the first, as well as one of the weakest patients taken to the Sanitarium nearly two years ago. Now I'm not only out, but at work, as the following will show:

I once was a patient in the Sanitarium,
Built by command of Jehovah, the Lord;
But by the great blessing of him who has promised,
I'm out once again and rejoice in his word.

CHORUS.

We'll sing and we'll shout, etc.

Since being released by the attending physician,
I'm not only out but am shoveling the coal,
I'm sleeping by day and I'm working by night,
Which gives me great joy and rejoices my soul.

C. J. SPURLOCK.

NEBO, ILLINOIS, January 6, 1912.

Editors Herald: Some time last July I was called to Cincinnati Landing to preach the funeral sermon of Brother Thomas Blacketer, who was nearing his eightieth birthday; although he did not unite with the church till late in life, he died strong in the faith.

On November 1 I was called to Pittsfield, Illinois, to administer to Sister Sarah Carrol, who had fallen and dislocated her shoulder. Although she had been attended by a physician, and the joint put in proper place, she was suffering very much. After administration she slept her first night after being hurt, but her blessing seemed only temporary, and by letter from R. T. Walters I learn that she is no better. I hope that every Saint that may perchance read these few lines will breathe a silent prayer that Sister Carrol may be relieved. She was baptized in Nauvoo. She was fourteen years old when Joseph and Hyrum were murdered, and was present when their bodies were brought back to Nauvoo. When the scattering time came she walked to Pittsfield, where she has resided since; where we are told there was once a flourishing branch, but most of the workers migrated to Zion, I suppose, and most that remains is that little, dilapidated, lonely chapel. How will we harmonize the command to gather and the visible results of some branches literally vacating the field to the work of sectarian opposition and their exultation that they have killed us, "Mormonism is dead," etc., etc.?

The district conference at Saint Louis, December 9 and 10, was certainly a success. All enjoyed themselves. The business meetings, Sunday school, preaching, and the work of the entire conference was spiritual. The financial part was better than ever. There were six ordinations to the priesthood, from deacon to elder.

Brother Arthur came up from Saint Louis December 29, and organized a Zion's Religio-Literary Society with thirty members.

Our Sunday school is in better condition than ever before.

I was invited to speak at the county convention of the Anti-Saloon League of Calhoun County, which I very cheerfully responded to, and had the honor of being on the rostrum with the Honorable G. A. Wilson, an able attorney of Quincy, and member of the last and preceding general assemblies of Illinois. The man who stood pat above the Lorimer scandal, and also fought a bill through, creating a dry district around the Old Soldiers' Home at Quincy, Illinois, and further succeeded in getting a bill through which makes it a finable offense to be found intoxicated in Illinois, on any depot platform or on any train. We being orators of the day, notwithstanding there were several ministers present. Many compliments continue to encourage the idea that it is possible to appeal to the people under the Spirit in every good work. They knew who and what I was. Mr. Wilson was heard making favorable comments in another town the next day, by one of our brethren whom he didn't know at the time. Mr. Wilson delivered two able speeches on the moral issues at Kampsville, another at Nebo. Before his Nebo speech he called me, over the telephone, and invited me to take supper with him, which I did, and I enjoyed his friendly association very much.

May the Lord raise up scores of just such men as I believe Mr. Wilson to be. Good men, moral men, honest men, ought to be the watchwords, and not whether he be a Democrat or a Republican.

May the good work prosper everywhere is the sincere wish of your brother in Christ,
W. A. GUTHRIE.

MOBILE, ALABAMA, January 5, 1912.

Dear Herald: I have been laboring as best I could this year. I have been hindered some on account of sickness; but I feel that the Lord has been with me.

I have been absent from my field about five weeks because of sickness of my wife and baby. Both came near dying, but thanks be, they are well again.

My books show I have baptized thirty-six this year, so I feel my labors have not been in vain. The Lord has blessed me in many ways. I have felt well at times preaching the restored gospel, and in it all the Lord has been with me.

In one place near Theodore, Alabama, a good (?) Baptist preacher had been lecturing on what he called Mormonism and put our people down as being low, degraded. He was to preach one afternoon in the settlement where I was holding meetings, so I went out to hear him. He made some statements that were not true, so after the meeting I asked him to explain. We talked some in the house. Here came up the good deacon and ordered me out of the church. I told him I was only asking the preacher to explain. We went out and began talking. The old deacon came up and caught me by the arm and said, "You leave here; now don't stay here any longer. You are down here for trouble, and you will get it." I asked him to please let me alone, as I was talking to the preacher. But the preacher got angry, called me a liar several times, and bemeaned me for all he was worth. Now I was never much of a hand to take the lie, but for the sake of the gospel I said, Thank God, I can be called a liar for his precious work's sake.

Again the deacon (he is a powerful man) stepped up in front of me and said, "You came for trouble, and I will give it to you." He then drew back his fist to hit me. A bystander told the deacon's son to catch his father's hand, but the son said, "Let him go." Thanks be, however, one or two did catch him; so that ended the incident. On going back, I told my companions that some lies would go out about the matter and something would happen. Three days after this the deacon went stone blind and had to be led around. He still wants to get where I am, and says he will whip me if he gets a chance. I love this latter day work—there is nothing so grand. I love to be associated with the Saints, and there are many warm hearted and kind ones around here, too.

I remember all my dear friends in Texas and elsewhere with the kindest regards and love. I want you to write me a letter at the above address.

Asking the prayers of all the Saints that I may be humble and enjoy the Spirit in my ministerial work.

808 ELMIRA STREET.

ALBERT VAN CLEAVE.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, December 28, 1911.

Editors Herald: This morning after awakening I glanced out of the window. I was surprised to see the ground, trees, and fence covered with a mantle of snow—something unusual for Lower Lake. Soon the old daily stage came rumbling by the front gate, we have no railroads in the county, and dropped the mail bag, as usual. On opening it, to my joy there was a copy of Autumn Leaves. We drew up our easy chairs around the chimney, in which a good log fire was blazing, and eagerly read the concluding chapters of the "Mormon Girl," then the "Travel Sketches," and ended up with "The Homesickness of Elder John Howard." I know all the Saints will say with me, Sister Paula, come again. Words are inadequate to express the gratitude we feel for the enjoyment we experienced in reading your interesting story around the fireside during the cold winter evenings while the elements were in commotion without.

It was only a few days ago that we read with interest the "Extracts from the Diary of Elder J. H. Lawn." It was a wonderful testimony, similar to that related at our late reunion at Irvington by him. It is plainly to be seen that it was God's interposition to protect his servant from the violence of the mob, for no human power could have quelled them, as facts proved that they were bent on his destruction; but the Devil was foiled once more. Yes, we more than enjoyed Brother Lawn's testimony.

A short time ago we were cheered and encouraged by a visit from Brother F. M. Sheehy. His interesting talks upon various subjects were not only entertaining, but were instructive and much appreciated by all. We hope that ere long we may be similarly favored by him. After a stay of about a week the writer, accompanied by him, drove to the McKinley farm, about sixteen miles distant, where we remained over night and did what was in our power to cheer Sister McKinley; she is blind, and paralyzed in her lower limbs, and although so sorely afflicted, she is very patient and even cheerful and uncomplaining. Before taking our departure for Middletown next morning, Elder Sheehy administered to the afflicted sister; assuring her that, though the result might not be as desired, a benefit was sure to follow in some way, which gave much comfort to her.

Arriving at Middletown, we called at the residence of Sister Graumwich, where we took stage for San Francisco. We have with us now Elder Cannon, wife and son from Modoc County, to help us spread the truth. Brother Cannon is an able man, heart and soul in the work, free from bad habits, and is engaged in sowing the good seed broadcast wherever he can get an opening, and he seems pretty successful in getting these opportunities.

Our Sunday school and Religio are prospering, and we trust that good will result.

In conclusion, I wish all the Saints a very happy New Year, and hope to meet them at the reunion in Irvington, in September, 1912.

In gospel bonds,
E. F. ADAMSON.

XENIA, ILLINOIS, January 1, 1912.

Dear Old Herald: I send you this token of my love and esteem for you and your dear old senior editor. You have been making your weekly visits to our home for more than forty-three years—since June, 1868. I think you are the best paper in the world. The little Hope came to us with its baby clothes on. My children have all left home, but the Hope is still a welcome visitor, as also the Autumn Leaves. We have taken them from the beginning. God bless our church publications.

Your brother,
I. A. MORRIS.

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO, January 2, 1912.

Editors Herald: Some time ago I received the following vision: In the nighttime I saw three buildings, one above the other; they appeared before me and vanished; this was done three times. At the last appearance a great door in the top building opened and a great crowd of people, some dressed in white, black, and all manner of colors, came out and turned to the left. They were accompanied by three red beasts which went a little way, then fell down, got up, struggled, went a few steps, and fell down again.

In the second building a large door opened and a great company, dressed much like the others, in all manner of colors, rushed out and ran in all directions; they jostled one another and seemed to be in very great confusion. This company was accompanied by two beasts who fell down and remained down; they struggled but could not raise up.

In the lower building a door opened and two distinct classes came out, some in white, the rest in black. These turned to the right and seemed to have their eyes fixed on some distinct object, afar off. They looked neither to the right hand nor to the left, but straight ahead. No beasts accompanied these.

I hope some one will be given the interpretation. If anyone receives it, please send it to me. My address is Willooughby, Ohio, R. F. D. 2.

JOHN A. STEVENSON.

SAINTS' HOME, KIRTLAND.

VANCLEAVE, MISSISSIPPI, January 7, 1912.

Dear Herald: As this is a new year I hope to see every Saint striving to do his duty. I can say that this branch is not what it should be. There are but a few Saints here. We have a little Sunday school, but not very many that will attend. But we have had lots of sickness here and hope and pray that the Saints may overcome their weakness.

Brother L. C. Goff, of this branch, after a long suffering was laid to rest on the 29th of December; he left wife and five children to mourn his death. Dear Saints, if we are doing our duty we will not hate to see our time come. We must go to Sunday school every Sunday and take others with us, and parents should go with their children; not send them toddling along the road by themselves, not knowing whether they get there on time or not. We must have our lamps trimmed and burning, for we know not when our time is coming; so, dear Saints, let us be prepared, and not one wait for another. We should be up and doing, for our time is short. I hope I may have strength to do my duty at all times; let us as Saints strive to so order our lives that we may all meet as an unbroken family in the great beyond, and that our lives may be worthy of imitation.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH BARNES.

BAY PORT, MICHIGAN, January 7, 1912.

Editor Herald, dear brothers and sisters: Just a few words to let you know how I am getting along this winter. I am not very strong in body, but I am feeling splendid in spirit, and God is truly blessing our efforts in this place. I have been holding meetings in this branch since Thanksgiving, with the very best of interest. I have baptized twelve, and there are five more who have given in their names; I have blessed eighteen children, and there are others who have requested theirs blessed; so the people are getting wakened up. The Saints are happy, and the Methodist minister is feeling very badly because we are getting the best of his members. He says he wouldn't care if I would leave his church alone; says I must be crazy to be taking members out of other churches. Well, I would like to get him too if he would repent and be baptized for the remission of his sins. I will try to show them in kindness the light of the gospel.

I will tell you more when I get through with my meetings here. Best wishes to all and a happy New Year.

Your brother in Christ,

O. J. HAWN.

"Light Makes Manifest."

We as the preachers of the gospel of the Reorganized Church have been telling the people that the angel referred to in the 14th chapter of the Revelation of John, 6th and 7th verses, has flown in the midst of heaven, and has come to earth, and restored the gospel to the world, or people.

I have read, and heard it repeated over and over; and have so repeated it myself, believing it to be true; but as I have received more light, I have been looking up the evidence for that position, and I have failed so far, to find a scintilla of reliable evidence to prove that that angel has flown, or appeared to any person on earth, at any time or place. If you think that you can refer me to any reliable evidence to prove that said angel has come to earth, please let me have the benefit of it. Understand, I do not say the gospel has not been restored, and that by an angel, as it is in the Book of Mormon.

I read that when that angel shall come, or fly in the midst of heaven, he will cry with a loud voice, saying, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come. No angel has made that proclamation to the people of earth until this good day.

If you have any additional light upon the subject, please turn it on. We can be taught anything, even if it is false, until we think that it is true, for our consciences are creatures of education, and will dictate to us to do whatever we have been educated to believe to be true and right. I am very much inclined to think that it is the case with many in the church, as to the angel referred to by John 14: 6, 7. Truth has nothing to fear.

E. W. NUNLEY.

Among Disciples.

Perhaps the members of the church will be interested in some of our experience in the Eastern Maine District, and will see in this account the unmistakable marks of genuine conversion.

On the fourth of June, 1911, the family, including wife, two children, and myself, moved to Jonesport.

It required a journey of two thousand miles to place us in Maine, and involved us in no small expense.

Two brethren came to Machias after us in a boat, and family and luggage were taken to Jonesport via the "briny deep."

On our arrival we found a goodly company of Saints to welcome us, who also had secured a house for us, which was nicely fitted out for our occupancy.

The oncoming winter found us in need of many articles of clothing that we did not require in "Old Missouri."

Had it not been for what to us was an unprecedented exhibition of generosity on the part of the Saints, we would still be minus some very necessary articles of both clothing and food.

Here is a partial list of contributions which will help you to understand how the Saints are looking after our needs: Two barrels of apples, three chickens, ten pound pail of lard, one barrel of flour, one package of sugar, six nice pieces of pork, from as many hogs, killed at different times, one large piece of beef, sacks of potatoes, and many other articles such as eggs, vegetables, etc. The sisters gave wife a fine new skirt, waist, and belt to match. We had some moose meat in the bargain.

Families of the church who are on a ministerial basis will have some appreciation of what this meant to us in the circumstances briefly stated.

Personally, I have been provided for in a way that I never expected; so that I have been able to secure some things that have been very helpful to me in my ministerial work and which many of our elders must do without because their circumstances do not enable them to secure them.

There are not a great many Saints in this place, but in many ways they give evidence of true discipleship; and we certify that their hospitality and the contributions of "many hands" have made our "burdens lighter." A practical application of James 2:14-17.

Last March I was presented with a magnificent fur overcoat and funds with which to purchase a new hat, shoes, and other clothing, for which I am indebted to the Saints of Beals, Jonesport, and Head Harbor.

I have met a number of elders from other places who have been in this section on church business, who are unanimous in their expressions of appreciation for the treatment they have been accorded in this district.

Elders who have business here always find what I have found; that they are among the Master's friends.

Any community of Saints who care for their elders and their families as Eastern Maine does, especially Jonesport and Beals, will ever live in the memory of those who have been the objects of their benefactions.

We believe, and hope, and pray that the Good Shepherd will lead them into many green pastures, and beside still waters in this life, and give them an eternal residence in the presence of Him whose cause they love.

We take much pleasure in writing thus of those whose lives are unmistakable attestations of an established discipleship. (Doctrine and Covenants 83:16.)

We will furnish some general news items in another letter.

J. A. KOEHLER.

JONESPORT, MAINE, December 18, 1911.

The Dunkards' Sacramental Feast.

Sister Vida Coffman escorted me to a Dunkard semiannual feast, or supper. We arrived at the church about a quarter after three. Service was to commence at 3 p. m., but it did not start until about 3.30. I suppose the church was about seventy by forty feet; the membership from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy-five; the platform on which the preachers and deacons were seated seemed to be about eighteen inches above the level of the floor, about ten feet wide, and twenty feet long. At the rear end of the church, from the main entrance and to the right side of the platform was a stairway down into the basement. In the basement they have a cooking stove and other utensils.

The women were seated on the right, and the men on the left of the church. The backs of the seats were on a hinge at each end, similar to that of a car seat. By turning the back of the seat, it would answer for a table, and two seats faced the table, one on either side; about every other seat formed a table, so as to have tables for all of the membership.

The ministers sit on one side of the table, on the platform, while the deacons sit on the other with their backs to the congregation.

A white tablecloth was spread on each of these tables, which occupied about two thirds of the church, a large bowl that would hold about two quarts of soup each, a tumbler of water, a plate of bread, and some meat on same plate, and four large tablespoons to each bowl. The soup was made of beef, with bread broken in; and when the meeting was about ready to commence, this soup was put in each of these bowls; bread sliced, beef also, and put on these plates. The plates were set on top of the soup bowls, the glasses filled with water, one tumbler of water to each four, then the part of the tablecloth that hung by the side of the table was thrown over the table so as to cover from sight.

Each of the members took his respective seat opposite the tables, the women removing their Shaker bonnets, putting them on the seat underneath their table. But each woman and girl had a cap on, made of swiss, or bobbinet, some of them small enough to cover the hairknob only, and a white ribbon or band about five eighths of an inch wide fastened to the border of the cap and passing behind the ears, and tied in a bow under or to one side of the chin.

The men, or officials, wore a black coat made similar to a Prince Albert coat, but not nearly so long, with a standup collar to it, wearing a white shirt, with collar and no necktie. Most of the men wore beards, upper lip shaven. When the men meet, they shake hands and kiss. The women do the same with their own sex.

The meeting was commenced by singing a couple of hymns. Then the president read the fifth chapter of Paul's letter to the Ephesians; then, after a few moments, another one offered prayer. After the prayer was offered silence reigned for a few minutes, the preachers doing some whispering to each other, as there were about ten of them facing the table. Then another read 1 Corinthians 11, then sat down. After a while one got up, stating, "No wonder we feel dilatory to get up to speak on occasions of this kind." Then he addressed the congregation on the necessity of their being present to take of the supper, etc., while two others spoke of the feet washing and the necessity for it.

After a prayer the feet washing was to commence. Having about six large pans that would hold about fourteen gallons of water each, with about four gallons of warm water in each pan. Three were set at equal distance among the women, and the other three among the men.

The president was the first man to pull off his coat, set the pan of water opposite the man nearest him, taking a large white apron, taking the strings and girding it around his waist, tying in front. The other fellow had his shoes and stockings off by this time. Placing his feet in the pan, he washed them. He did not proceed to scrub them, but merely put water on them, passed his hands over them a few times, lifted his foot out of the dish, then took the towel and wiped them; then the other foot the same way. When that was done, they both rose to their feet, shook hands, and kissed each other.

Then the one who had his feet washed, pulled his coat off, and girded the towel around him, and washed the feet of the man who sat next to him. This course was repeated until the last one; and the last one who had his feet washed and got the kiss, took the pan, walked barefoot until he came to the person who washed the first man's feet, and washed his and gave him a kiss. The women did the same as the men in washing each other's feet and kissing each other.

When all had the feet washed, the deacons took the pans and towels into the basement. After the feet washing then the kiss was again passed.

One of the ministers rose by request and blessed or gave thanks for supper. After this everyone sat in his place; the covers were taken off; the food prepared, each one taking a spoonful, dipping into the one bowl, supping the soup and eating the bread and meat until all the soup was eaten, or each was satisfied; enough being prepared to satisfy the appetite of any ordinary person.

The room was filled with the odor of the soup, and it was getting near five o'clock, so it made one feel like a little would not be out of place for him to eat.

After all had eaten, one of the parsons arose by request and gave thanks for the meal. Then the cloth was put over it, covering it from sight, and kissing was indulged in. Then, after some talk on their unworthiness to eat, the bread and wine were brought forth, thanks being offered for it; using unleavened bread cut in strips about a quarter of an inch thick, one inch wide, and a foot long.

The president took one of the strips, broke a piece off and put it in his mouth, then gave the strip to the one next to him, immediately after. This course was pursued until all had a piece, and when the last man received his portion, he arose, took the strip left, gave it to the president, and then he administered it to the women, one or two of the ministers breaking a small piece and giving it to each one of them. Then all ate together.

Then wine was blessed and partaken of in a similar manner. After some announcements were made, a hymn was sung and meeting was dismissed. That was about 7 p. m.

So your servant returned to Brother Coffman's, about two miles distant, realizing for the first time in his life of fifty-five years, what a Dunkard feast and sacrament meeting was like. The Dunkard Church was organized at Swartsbourg, Germany, 1708, with seven members. They don't claim any revelation. Took what was given to the apostles for their authority.

They are no better than any of the rest. They baptize three times, face downward, the candidate on his knees.

In gospel bonds,

SAMUEL BROWN.

Extracts from Letters.

John R. Rudd and wife, of Dow City, Iowa, write that they are getting old and unable to read, and that Brother Rudd has had a stroke of paralysis. They request an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Sister Emma Shoup, Shirley, Illinois, writes: "I would like to know if there are any Saints in or about Bloomington, Illinois. I have just moved to Shirley and will be glad to hear from them. My health is very bad and I am lonesome away from the Saints. I have received many blessings by administration and through the prayers of the Saints. We desire the prayers of all the Saints."

George Elson, Wayne, Nebraska, writes: "Something like three months ago I made a request for the prayers of the Saints. My condition is one of weakness of the nerves, and in its way reaches the mind. I do get some relief, but not a full healing. I can not understand how I can be continually denied this desire in its fullness."

Mrs. and Mr. A. D. Moore, Clear Lake, Washington: "We are both sick and under the doctor's care. We request an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may recover if it is God's will."

As dyed in blood and streaming vines appear
While long and low the wind about them grieves;
The heart of autumn must have broken here,
And poured its treasure out upon the leaves.

There are moods in which we court suffering, in the hope that there, at least, we shall find reality, strange peaks and edges of truth. But it turns out to be scene-painting and counterfeit. The only thing grief has taught me is to know how shallow it is.—Emerson.

Pennsylvania.

It seems one could postpone writing, especially when we think of the many Saints there are to write to the church papers. I eagerly look for letters from those I am acquainted with, and when I find one it is read with much interest. I recently read a short letter from Brother J. McKiernan; also one from Brother J. F. McDowell. I had been earnestly looking for a letter from these brethren. I then thought, Perhaps some one is looking for a letter from me. Each passing year brings its changes; to some its joys, and to others sadness. My only brother passed away November 1. Since t'at time two brothers-in-law have passed into the great beyond.

Brother Leon Burdick and I have labored together part of this conference year; this being his first year on missionary experience. I find him a genial companion. We held services in six different schoolhouses in northwestern Pennsylvania with good interest; some were baptized, and a number are investigating. We did not try to hurry or over persuade people to join the church, preferring to let them have time to study and count the cost, as this gospel of the kingdom appeals to the intelligence and it is best for people to be properly taught before they are baptized.

We also labored near Oil City, where a number were baptized. In our travels we found a few Saints careless and indifferent, but the majority are striving to do their duty.

I had a profitable visit with Saints in Garland, then I went to the village of Fieldmore, where I was successful in making a new opening, although in a Catholic community, even the teacher being a Catholic. They readily consented for me to use the schoolhouse, where I had a number of attentive listeners. I made my home with Brother Thomas and family, in Titusville. They know how to make an elder feel at home.

At present I am holding meetings in private houses in Sharpsville in homes of people who are not members of the church, Brother Ahlstrom, presiding teacher of the Sharon Branch, assisting me. Six or eight have expressed themselves as believing the gospel and expecting to yield obedience soon.

To-morrow, wife and I go to New Castle, then south to other points. All the Saints are kind to us, not forgetting Brother and Sister Atwood, of Conneautville; Brother and Sister Correy, Brother and Sister Ahlstrom, in Sharon; also Brother and Sister Beck, of New Castle, where we made our home while laboring in their vicinity. We are having snug weather here, from 2 to 3 degrees below zero.

Ever praying for the success of the work, I am your co-laborer.

The street railway companies in American cities maintain active schools of bad manners wherever they fail to provide a number of vehicles adequate to carry in a decent manner the throngs that are compelled to use them. Any crowd which is in a hurry is apt to afford practice in bad manners.

'Tis only when they spring to heaven that angels
Reveal themselves to you; they sit all day
Beside you and lie down at night by you,

Is rounded with a sleep.—The Tempest.

News From Branches

Independence, Missouri.

Although the Saints here have been called to unite their faith and prayers in behalf of the many sick and afflicted among us, also of some who have been bereft of their loved ones, many blessings from our heavenly Father's hand have been theirs to enjoy; and in grateful offering of praise we can say:

"Here's to the year, the glad New Year,
A-sparkle with the frost,
And may it bring us better things
Than any we have lost;
A brighter hope, a broader faith,
A seed for every clod;
A little less of greed, and gain,
A little more of God."

The holidays presented scenes of happiness in many homes because of the sympathy and good cheer materially expressed by many of the Saints (who were aided by the "Good Fellows"), and the joy of attending the ceremonies of Christmas offering by the children, with their beautiful little carols and speeches, all added to the brightness of the passing year. The weather had been delightful for many days, but on Saturday, the 30th, a very cold spell with a thick blanket of snow, announced the sure coming of winter, and with the thermometer registering from four to six degrees, Sunday, the 31st was ushered in, and all, excepting a few of the very old and very young, met it with a smile. Only about 339 attended Sunday school, yet the lower room was comfortably filled in the afternoon and an enjoyable meeting was had; also two good sermons were reported as having been preached, morning and evening respectively, by our veteran brother from the firing line, the cheery Jots Man, and the young and successful missionary, J. F. Curtis.

Reverend J. B. Bolman, of Kansas City, delivered the closing address of the evening in behalf of the exconvicts, and aid was rendered in this good cause.

But we must not fail to mention the excellent sermon of Brother Joseph on the morning of the 24th; for taking for his text the oft-quoted words found in John 17:3, which are a part of that memorable prayer of our blessed Lord in behalf of his disciples just before his going away, "And this is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent," our beloved brother spoke eloquently concerning the Savior's life and teaching.

Many an encouraging and uplifting testimony has been heard at the prayer meetings of late, among them being T. J. Sheldon and Ammon White. We also remember with joy the message given by the aid of the Spirit through Sister P. Peterson. Also we rejoiced in hearing the stirring words of Elder I. N. White, whose long and faithful service in the Master's cause has endeared him to all the Saints. May he grow strong and be enabled physically to go on as he has in the past, doing an acceptable work in his important mission.

The business meeting on New Year's night was attended by about one hundred. The usual routine of business was done, officers elected and all ended with the consciousness of duty well done. Our faithful presiding deacon, B. C. Smith, after having served faithfully for many years was succeeded by J. G. Jenkinson.

The busy, cheerful sisters of the Ladies' Aid Society met in the hall on the 3d, served a fine luncheon to over sixty persons, then gathered in a business capacity to elect officers and do other work which might be presented. The following constitute the official board: Mrs. H. O. Smith, president; Mrs. Barto, first vice president; Mrs. Beaman, second vice president; Mrs. C. E. Guinand, secretary; Mrs. Ella Whitehead, treasurer.

Skillful, busy hands, and willing, generous hearts have been enlisted in the Master's cause during the past year for much good and to the collecting of the amount of $553.66; in addition to this the free will mite offering of $14.30 to the little china bank. A motion prevailed that the Ladies' Aid Society of Independence should become a part of the Womans' Auxiliary.

At the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, at which our beloved brother, S. A. Burgess presided, prayers were offered in behalf of Vernon Quick, G. H. Hilliard, Sister M. Givens, of West Virginia, and others who were seriously afflicted. For them and all others who need our prayers, let us pray and pray unceasingly, "for our prayers are much availing if we walk upright and just."

FIRST CHURCH BRANCH.

The first active days in the New Year were utilized by the branch and its auxiliaries in laying a new foundation to govern their activities during the coming period. Tuesday, January 2, the Religio Society elected officers as follows: C. B. Hartshorn, president; Guy Fairbanks, vice president; F. E. Bone, secretary; Vernon Reese, treasurer; Grace Johnson, chorister; Ada Hartshorn, organist.

Thursday, January 4, the branch elected the following officers: James F. Keir, presiding elder; H. Passman, presiding priest; C. B. Hartshorn, associate priest; F. Sly, presiding teacher; F. E. Bone, F. F. Wipper, Guy Fairbanks, associate teachers; L. A. Hartshorn, presiding deacon; Glenn Fairbanks, J. H. Camp, Brother Parker, associate deacons; O. O. Randall, chorister; Ida Schrunk, organist.

Sunday, January 7, the Sunday school elected the following: Frank F. Wipper, superintendent; Guy Fairbanks, assistant superintendent; C. B. Hartshorn, secretary; Lucie Sloan, assistant secretary; F. E. Bone, treasurer; O. O. Randall, chorister; Ada Hartshorn, organist; Fannie Prentice Magahan, assistant organist.

The library board, constituting a representative from each organization consists of the following: Vernon Reese, branch; Belle McMasters, Sunday school; Blanche Fairbanks, Religio Society.

The big thing before the branch at the present time is the dedication of their church, which will bring to a close what promises to be one of the most successful financial campaigns ever undertaken by an organization of like character. We expect to be able to announce the date of dedication after our next quarterly business meeting. The two members most prominent in the prosecution of this commendable effort are our present presiding elder, James F. Keir, and our deacon, L. A. Hartshorn; the former for his untiring zeal, earnestness, and activity, and the latter for his judicious handling of the funds.

Sister Mead, who in a former letter was reported as having broken her arm, has now practically recovered. Brother W. J. Sloan has been suffering very severely of late from an acute attack of rheumatism, but from the last reports we understand that he is up and around. In both of these cases the prayers of the Saints availed much.

It will be pleasant news to the Chicago Saints to be informed that Sister Beardsley has returned here to stay permanently.

Brother Tanner, our worthy missionary, is on a holiday vacation to his family, but we expect him back next Sunday to dispense to us our welcome portion of manna.

The young men of the branch contemplate organizing a Sunday Afternoon Club; object, study of parliamentary law and science.

The Sunday school officers contemplate an active campaign with a view to increasing the membership.

The Religio Society has just closed a fairly successful season, and since its election of officers, it is hard at it again, determined to make the coming season a banner period; and the outlook is very promising, too, we can assure you.

The general activity indicates a good degree of spiritual progress, which we trust will develop until we reach our ideal.

We wish you all a happy and prosperous New Year.

FRANK F. WIPPER.

1845 SOUTH HOMAN AVENUE, January 7, 1912.

Philadelphia.

Now that the New Year is fairly entered on its flight, the many activities interrupted by the Christmas holidays are again in full swing. The semiannual business meeting of the branch is already a thing of the past; the Religio has held its business meeting; the Sunday school has entered another round of its work with a zeal and enthusiasm that gives promise of greater success than ever before; and past results have been by no means discouraging.

Perhaps of the greatest importance was the branch business meeting, for not only were the officers elected for the ensuing six months, but to a great extent, the work for that period was mapped out. It was decided to again hold a vacation school and to indorse and continue the work of the North Philadelphia Institute and Young Men's Association, and suitable committees were chosen to direct the work. In this connection a letter from Brother U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, was read, in which he commended the efforts of the branch and expressed pleasure at the progress of the work in this city. He assured them that he had followed closely the various ventures and that he felt that they had already emerged from the experimental stage and had proved their worth.

Our pastor, Brother Walter W. Smith, was reelected branch president, a position he has held for many years, and one that, we hope, he may hold for many years to come. As presiding priest, Brother Walter Lewis was chosen; and Brethren Albert Hall and Charles Scott were elected presiding teacher and presiding deacon, respectively. In addition to these, Brother John Schade was chosen secretary; Sister Lillian Hiller, stenographer; Brother Claude L. Hull, chorister; and Brother William Young, organist; and the nomination of Brother Ellsworth B. Hull as pastor of the Beacon Light Mission was confirmed by the body.

The New York and Philadelphia District is to hold its conference here on February 10, and preparations were made to give the visitors a rousing welcome and to make the occasion a landmark in our history.

Some months ago, an addition to the church building was completed at a cost exceeding eight thousand dollars, and having arranged to liquidate this debt, it was decided that conference offered a good opportunity for its dedication, the more so as President Frederick M. Smith will be present at that time and can participate in the exercises. The opening of the second term of our night school, the "North Philadelphia Institute," is scheduled to take place during the time of his presence, and he has kindly consented to deliver one of the series of lectures that are included in the course.

There has been, it might be said in passing, over fifty baptized into the church during the past year. Into our Sunday school has been enrolled scores of "outsiders," while of the 205 who are taking advantage of our evening classes, probably eighty per cent are non-Saints, but we hope that this proportion will soon be decreased (by baptism). The outlook is bright and promising, and we hope that each day may see some progress, some advance in the work for his kingdom, and it is with grateful thanks for the past, and with hopeful determination for the future that we press forward into the fray.

Proposed Amendment.

Notice is hereby given that at the next General Sunday School Convention the following amendment to the Constitution and By-laws will be presented.

To amend Article VI on page 13 of the Constitution, by striking out all after the word shall, in the first line, and add thereafter the following:

"Maintain the following departments, grading the pupils in classes as closely as practical upon the basis of age, capability, and work done in the Sunday school.

"1. Cradle roll department, including the children under three years of age.

"2. Primary department, including the children from the ages of about three to nine years. Where it is necessary this department may be divided into beginners, or first primary and second primary.

"3. Intermediate department, including the children from the ages of about nine to fifteen years. Where it is necessary this department may be divided into juniors and intermediates.

"4. Senior department, including all the pupils above the age of about fifteen years. DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents or secretaries of the various stakes, districts, or branches not in districts.
 Such officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organizations at the General Conference of 1912, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that the report of the committee on credentials may be made up and printed before the opening of the conference, as provided for by the session of 1911. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of body appointing, with name of such organization and place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are not necessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference:

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privilege as delegates of districts. But when the membership of such branch exceeds twenty-five it shall be entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five members."

 and instruction of delegates, etc., see Rules of Order, chapter

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

By Frederick M. Smith, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 5, 1912.

I do hope that when sending for the book of sermons people will not send bank checks for just one dollar and fifty cents, for it costs me fifteen cents to have each one cashed. If you must send check, make it for one dollar and sixty-five cents; but the better way is to send registered letter or express or money order. They come all right, and make no trouble or expense. R. C. EVANS.

Died.

PROVOST.—Llewellyn Jaques Provost was born October 10, 1867, at Osborne, Ontario; married to Martin Provost, of Millington, Michigan, April, 1893; was baptized at Osborne, Ontario, December 8, 1889, by George Henley, confirmed by John Shields. Departed this life December 22, 1911, at Saginaw, Michigan. She leaves to mourn her departure, husband, mother, four brothers, and two sisters. She was a kind and loving wife and bore her afflictions with patience. Funeral services were conducted by Elder David E. Dowker. She was laid to rest in the Millington Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

DRAZEY.—Alice Caselman Drazey was born in Illinois in 1852, was the daughter of Nelson and Zelpha Caselman, old-time Saints. In 1868 she was married to Stephen Drazey, a Catholic. Through her influence he joined the church. She died August 12, 1911, at the home of her brother, Frank Caselman, where she had been visiting. She united with the church at an early age; loved the faith and was always anxious to make others acquainted with it. Her faith never faltered when she entered the valley of the shadow of death. By her request, funeral sermon was preached by Elder Duffey, of Post Oak, Missouri. She leaves seven children, three of whom belong to the church; four sisters, and three brothers, all Saints, a host of relatives and friends.

BENC.—Alzena Palmer was born near Toronto, Canada, January 12, 1833; came with her parents to Wisconsin in 1844, where she married Joseph Benc in 1857, at Walworth County, Wisconsin. They moved to Harrison County, Iowa, where she was baptized in 1860 by Elder Redfield. She went to California in 1892, where she remained until her death, December 15, 1911, at the age of 78 years, 11 months, and 3 days, at the home of her son, William Benc, near Visalia, California. Funeral services at the Saints' church, Tulare, California. Sermon by Elder Charles W. Duell.

WEATHERBY.—Amanda Josephine Mauker was born April 20, 1861, in Pike County, Illinois; died December 26, 1911. She united with the church about twenty years ago and lived an exemplary and self-sacrificing life. She was united in marriage to Brother W. O. Weatherby July 31, 1884. He is left to mourn his loss, as are six children and two brothers and a sister. The funeral was from the church in San Bernardino, California, December 28. The sermon was by Elbert A. Smith, assisted by F. M. Sheehy.

MANUEL.—Thomas E. Manuel was born December 25, 1829, at Merthyr Tydfil, Glamorganshire, South Wales, and died January 2, 1912, at his home in Canton, Illinois. In 1852 he was married to Elizabeth Jones. In 1854 they came to the United States and took up their residence about the time of the breaking out of the Civil War. Later they moved to Illinois, and have resided at Canton for many years. He united with the church in 1885 and was a faithful member. He had been an invalid for many years. To mourn his departure are left his aged companion, and William C. Manuel, an adopted son. Funeral held at the home in Canton, conducted by O. E. Sade. The remains were laid to rest in the Greenwood Cemetery.

JONES.—Eliza Jones was born in Wales in 1840, and died at her home in Canton, Illinois, December 17, 1911, being 71 years of age. In 1861 she was married to Joseph L. Jones. They soon came to America, and have resided in Canton ever since. She joined the church June 7, 1876, and was ever faithful. She was patient in affliction, which she has endured for four years. There are left to mourn an aged husband, and an adopted daughter, Mrs. Ida L. Snow, of Omaha, Nebraska. Funeral at the house, O. E. Sade officiating. Interment in the Greenwood Cemetery, to await the coming of the Master.

Ignorance cast a shadow over the Dark Ages. It has plunged many a nation into dreadful and useless warfare. It has blocked the way of every man who has had the imagination to see a better future for mankind and the initiative to try to lead to its achievement. And in this day of enlightenment, when the man who can not read is so rare as to attract attention, when newspapers and magazines and books place knowledge within the reach of all civilized peoples, ignorance still occupies the road of progress, still hampers whoever would try to lead humanity up toward its destiny.—Selected.

A Belief in Life Beyond the Grave.

IT IS MADE POSSIBLE, DR. JEFFERSON SAYS, BY THE ESTABLISHED FACTS OF SCIENCE.

Following the death of their son Raymond, while a student in Leland Stanford Junior University, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. West last year established a course of lectures to be delivered annually at Leland Stanford, the one restriction being that the course should always have as its subject matter the problem of immortality. The first lectures in this course were delivered last February by Doctor Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle Church, New York, and the volume, Why We May Believe in Life After Death, presents in printed form what Doctor Jefferson then told his auditors.

A New Book

has just been issued, entitled

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

(1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.

(2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.

(3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.

(4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

(Why We May Believe in Life After Death. Raymond F. West Memorial Lectures on Immortality. By Charles Edward Jefferson. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.)

It is a book that makes good reading—cheery, wholesome, sane. Doctor Jefferson is not one of those who affirm that belief in immortality should rest on faith alone. Neither does he profess to believe that immortality—or even the survival of personality after the death of the body, which, conceivably, is quite another matter, since it does not necessarily involve eternal survival—can ever be demonstrated with scientific exactitude. But he does believe that from the findings of science, as from the teachings of philosophy and religion, warrant can be had for the traditional faith of mankind in life beyond the grave; and in these pages, while by no means ignoring the argument from philosophy and religion, he stresses especially the established facts of science which afford, in his opinion, reason for an affirmative answer to the world-old question—if a man die, shall he live again?

This Doctor Jefferson rightly insists is undoubtedly the question of questions. It is the most human, the most universal. Or, as he says in a beautifully written paragraph: "It belongs to the scholar and also to the man in the street. Kings and peasants alike ponder it. It beckoned to us when we were children; it will haunt us when we are old. Philosophers and theologians discourse about it, and unlettered and humble folk feel more than they are able to express. Unknown and unnoticed men, living in lonely places, turn wistfully again and again in their quiet hours toward the mystery which flows round all the world. The man of the schools and the man who can not read stand side by side and peer into the abyss which yawns round the edges of the Seen."

Doctor Jefferson's own answer, as was said, is emphatically in the affirmative; with reliance rather than inference from scientific data than on blind, unreasoning faith. To be sure, as he points out, there are certain scientifically established facts that make against belief in immortality. There is the unquestionable disintegration of the physical and mental faculties in old age, disease, insanity, and death. The body is dissolved and disappears, the mind likewise is subject to decay. Memory, imagination, reason, will—all crumble and fade away. So far as our eyes can assure us, "the soul is only a bundle of powers tied together by a cord of flesh, the bundle falling apart as soon as the cord is loosed or destroyed."

Human consciousness, so far as we know it, is no more than a function of the gray matter of an organ lodged within the skull. Every phenomenon in consciousness is attended by a corresponding movement in the cerebral convolutions, and mind and brain thus appear to be identical. But are they? Says Doctor Jefferson: "We must not forget that there are different kinds of dependence and various types of functions, and whether or not the soul ceases to exist when the brain is dissolved depends upon the type of function and the kind of dependence represented in the brain. We know that for every molecular activity there is a certain change in consciousness, but we do not know that the one is created by the other. They are concurrent phenomena, but their relationship still lies completely in the dark. . . . It may be that the soul is to the brain what the engineer is to the engine, and that the soul uses the brain as a locomotive to carry it along the track of its thought. . . . It is not denied that in this earthly life thought in its human form is dependent on the brain, and that without a brain man on earth can do no thinking, but if the brain is only the instrument . . . it is open for us to believe that when the present instrument is worn out another will be provided."

Still further—as indicating that the brain is, after all, only the instrument of the mind—is the discovery of latent and formerly unsuspected faculties in man, revealed through the delvings of modern psychology in the realm of the "subconscious." The scientific probing of personality, Doctor Jefferson reminds his readers, has disclosed mysteries as great as any among the constellations. "Man is endowed with occult powers, the extent of which it is not possible to conjecture. . . . It is not conceit but sober sense, which leads to the surmise that gifts so wonderful can not find full scope for their appointed exercise within the narrow limits of this earthly life, and that death is only a liberation letting life out to its completion." Add to this, the scientific law of the conservation of energy. If forces like heat and light and electricity are indestructible, possibly personal force is also beyond the reach of annihilation.

"Personality is a form of energy, and if the cosmic energies with which the scientist in his laboratory is wont to work can not be destroyed, it may be that this highest of all the forces of energy with which we are acquainted, the energy of the human will, also belongs to the category of realities which will abide for ever."

Finally, Doctor Jefferson invokes to the support of belief in immortality the scientific doctrine of evolution, echoing Charles Darwin's protest: "It is an intolerable thought that man and all other sentient beings are doomed to complete annihilation after such long-continued slow progress."

In all this, of course, there is no absolute proof that the soul survives the death of the body. It is wholly a matter of inference; and upon the reader's temperament and training will depend the manner of his reception of such inferences as to Doctor Jefferson seem reasonable and sound. For ourselves, we feel that he has stated the case for immortality, in the light of present knowledge, in its strongest possible form.—New York Times.

Ignorance is dangerous, not because it is ignorance, but because it persists in remaining ignorance. The baby is ignorant, but he has the brain and the disposition to learn many things—perhaps to become one of the greatest among mankind. But the stolid, sullen, half-educated ignoramus, when he has been taught that whatever is must necessarily be right—that the way he has learned to do must be the right way—that nothing he can not understand can be of any value—he is the stumbling block in the path of all that tends to raise people toward better and nobler things. He may not be as densely stupid as the unfortunate savage whose brain can not grow because the formation of his skull will not let it grow, but he occupies a far more menacing position, for he can openly proclaim his borrowed ideas, and openly deride men who are trying to do things that he never dreamed of doing.—Selected.

A man may see how this world goes with no eyes. Look with thine eyes; see how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: change places; and, hand-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?—Shakespeare in "King Lear."

The world of an ordinary man is so circumscribed, so conventionally molded, that he can scarcely conceive of things that may dwell normally in the mind of an extraordinary man.—Algernon Blackwood in "The human chord."

These riches shall not fade away in life
Nor any death dispraise.—Edwin Arnold.

A WORD OF WARNING.

In these days of constant commotion, almost from every source, there seems to be even among the Saints a disposition in individuals to laud their own personal powers by seeking to secure by means of cooperation the financial support of others for the purpose of exploiting schemes which they have arranged for the carrying on of an enterprise in which cooperation can be exemplified.

It will be well enough for the Saints, the general body anywhere they may be located, to be on their guard as to these movers of different projects among them. Working as the church is, or claims to be, under the principle of revelation, there is a system of cooperation provided for in the law. Anyone who proposes to proceed outside of these provisions may be properly subjected to suspicion, and whenever an enterprise of this sort is started in any locality of the church, it is well that the individual who is chief originator, the most noisy demonstrator of the particular scheme sought to be put in operation, should be subject to close scrutiny, and if he is not a responsible person both as the world goes and as the church goes, it will be at an extreme risk that the Saints put their money into a cooperative scheme and allow the individual who originated it to become the principal operator in carrying it into effect. It too often happens that these individuals are speculative dreamers. They have made no success in carrying on their own affairs: they may have been willing to work and may have worked, but the result has been unfortunate. They have gathered nothing: they have been rolling stones, and it is proverbial that "rolling stones gather no moss." It seems strange to us that, looking at some of the efforts of the past which have been made in this direction and their peculiar and distressing failures, men of everyday good judgment are so easily taken in by specious reasoning and the building up of a scheme on paper, the carrying into effect of which centers the responsibility upon one of these dreamers; that is, ineffective men who are more prolific in schemes for the beneficent use of the means gathered by other men than they are in using that which they themselves have succeeded in securing.

We call to mind two instances of which we had observation among what was called the Grange movement, in which cooperative stores were made a specific means of securing benefits to the farmers. One of these was at Princeville, Illinois, wherein a brother having a good property became impressed with the good results that were to follow a combination among the farmers known as the Grange. He sacrificed a valuable property and with others put the accumulated amount into a store, a farmers' store. I was unfortunate enough to become acquainted with this movement after the cream had been skimmed off and the brother who had been one of the chief movers in it was a great financial sufferer, and a portion of the goods still remained upon the shelves and the business had gone to ruin. Another we met with in Nevada, where an accumulation of means had been secured among the members and a man was put in charge of it, and it ran well for a year or two and then the life was sapped from it by the individual subscribers trading with the store to the amount of their several accounts and neglecting to pay money either for the goods they had received or for the recuperating of their stock holdings. The result of it was there was no capital left to supply the place of the goods which had been sold. When we met with this case the brother was still holding a small stock and the business had gone to ruin.

It ought to be remembered that in every case of this kind the one taking charge must have a reasonable compensation for his labor, and if subscribers to the stock eat out the life of the scheme by securing to themselves from the staple supplies that which they need, leaving the unsalable remainder upon the hands of the salesman, it must be inevitable ruin to the business. A case in point: A number of the brethren in one of the large cities gathered a sum amounting to about $1,200. They agreed upon the establishment of a grocery business. They secured a building on a third rate street, from which locality the business had drifted more nearly to the center of the city as it had increased in size. They put a man in charge who was to receive $75 per month for his services; a horse and wagon for the purpose of delivering goods was purchased at a price of about $400; a system of bookkeeping was adopted and letter heads and business cards and other paraphernalia of the business desk to the amount of $150 secured. Upon the rest of the money put in a business was started. We were fortunate enough to visit the city just about the time that it was apparently flourishing. The one who was in charge had an assistant whose duty it was to help put up the goods that were ordered and deliver them with the wagon. We found the brother too busy apparently to spend any time in talking with us about the business or anything else connected with it. The readers of the HERALD may ask, "How long did the business last?" It lasted long enough to use up the money that was on hand after the paraphernalia had been bought and a certain amount of rent paid, and then it collapsed. The $75 per month ate up a portion of the supply, the pay for the assistant used up some more of it, the rent of the place in an unfavorable location used up the balance. There had not been a sufficient amount of sales to secure a paying business, and the result of it was that every subscriber to that fund lost the money he invested. One brother who solicited to take stock in the enterprise, and who looked favorably upon the movement for a time, was warned in a dream in which he saw a canoe representing the enterprise, and saw it loaded, saw whom it was in charge of, and he was invited to step on board. He saw from the peculiar character of the canoe, a treacherous water craft, that it would be dangerous for him to enter into the boat, and he saw it put off from the shore without him and saw it wrecked. He did not subscribe and he did not lose anything. The result of this was that considerable fault was found with the originator of the scheme who talked favorably and who evidently engineered it. He was without personal resources himself, and all that they had was the amount subscribed by the individuals who were willing to attempt to carry on a cooperative store.

It is not worth while to enumerate others which have passed under our observation. We simply utter this note of warning: be sure that the individual operators, or would-be operators of these schemes, are in themselves responsible men, willing to put in not only their individual effort for which they are to be paid a compensation, but have also something else to put into the enterprise in equality with those who furnish the greater amount of the means to be used in carrying on the scheme. Do not permit the experience of a certain German citizen in a distant city to be repeated. In telling the story of a business enterprise when met at the place of business he said: "I met mine friend, mine Yankee friend, and he was a man of experience. I was not; I had mine money, mine thousand dollars, and mine friend persuaded me to furnish the money and he to furnish the experience. Well, we carried on that business for one year; what was the result? We failed at the end of the year and mine friend he had the money, and I had the experience; see?" And so he very philosophically shouldered his loss and went about striving to recuperate himself.

There is a legitimate cooperation, and there is, or may be, and frequently has been, illegitimate schemes which have brought ruin both to the finances and to the faith of the members of the church who should have been wiser. However, the Master said, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," and this is one of the instances in which this is true. Our prayer used to be not that the Lord would give us wealth, but that the Lord would give us wisdom to use what we had, and unless wisdom could be given us for the use of this world's goods, we prayed that we should not be permitted to waste the Lord's substance. Selfishness reigns in the human breast almost universally to too great an extent, and men who are too anxious to engage in the disbursing of other men's means upon schemes of their own devising should be watched closely, and if they lack responsibility the Saints should not invest their money with them, no matter what the scheme may be.

There was a revival or a so-called reformation in Utah in 1857, in which it appeared there was to be a general moral cleaning up, and in 1875 an effort was made to bring about a spirit of general consecration in which it was stated that the heads of families should consecrate everything they had, including members of the family and whatever property they had. A rather shrewd business man on hearing and reading of what was contemplated took it upon himself to visit President Brigham Young to see if he had a correct understanding of the matter before he ventured to go into it. President Young received him quite suavely and answered his questions, in which it appeared, as the visitor summed it up, that he was to consecrate wife and children and property all to the head of the church, then President Brigham Young. He seemed willing to comply with any proper requisition, but his final question to President Young was, "You have yourself complied with this principle of consecration and have consecrated everything you have to the Lord, your property and all?"

"Well," said President Young, "n-no, I have not."

The brother was surprised and queried, "If you have not, I suppose you will do so?"

"No," answered President Young, "I do not believe I will." This met with a quick retort,

"Why not?"

President Young then very deliberately said, "Brother, when I find a man that I believe can carry on my business better than I can, I will probably give my business over to him, but not until then." The brother arose and ended the interview by saying, "That is just precisely what I shall do." One of the results that followed this was that in that particular locality the word spread and the cause of consecration in the form that had been presented was very strikingly defeated. The application is obvious.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MORMONS EXCITED.—Elders R. E. Pratt and O. A. Snow, of the Utah Church, have appeared in the New York papers in efforts to stem the tide after the anti-Mormon mass meeting at Carnegie Hall in that city. The former acknowledges polygamous marriages since 1890, and says: "But the processes by which they did so were wholly eliminated, and about the quickest way to bring ostracism and universal condemnation upon your head is to stand today, if you are a Mormon, for any kind of plural marrying under any conditions in any part of the world. While set upon this point, the church membership is equally set upon respecting and fellowshiping with those men and women who went into polygamy prior to 1890." Elder Snow severely arraigns those who issue canards about the importation of women from Europe, and states a readiness to show exact and reliable figures as kept at their mission headquarters in New York.

BROTHER MINTUN.—Brother J. F. Mintun keeps a careful watch on the papers of Des Moines and frequently appears in their columns with matter concerning the Reorganization. Recent issues of the Capital and the Register and Leader had letters from the brother setting forth our position on polygamous cohabitation, and speaking for a constitutional amendment to prohibit the same.

ANTI-MORMON MEETING.—In another department we give a history of the latest effort of the anti-Mormons in New York City, as furnished by Brother William E. LaRue. He recently got a short letter into the editorial page of the Evening Sun, which made plain to the readers of that great paper the position of the Reorganized Church, as well as the distinction between the names of our president and the president of the Utah faction.

ELDER J. B. GOULDSMITH.—By letter from his son, we learn of the death of Elder J. B. Gouldsmith at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, on January 12. An obituary will be found in another column.

Nothing is more depressing, more deadening to the mind than to doubt the justice of the great power under which we live and develop. Man can not be good unless he believes in infinite goodness and justice.—Selected.

The unremitting retention of simple and high sentiments in obscure duties is hardening the character to that temper which will work with honor, if need be, in the tumult or on the scaffold.—Emerson.

Our Friend, Jesus.

Many the days when with despair
We view results of our thought and care,
Failure seems stamped on everything
That our mind creates,—our efforts bring.

Gone are the joys of yesterday;
Sorrow is here, perhaps to stay;
Faded the rose we once admired,
Vanished the hopes our soul required.

"Life is a curse," we cry in pain,
"Where are the ones who friendship claim?"
Dark is our path, no one is near,
To help along with a word of cheer.

Onward we stumble, grumbling the while,
When all we need is a pleasant smile;
Friends oft forget to share their joys,
Even as we, when naught annoys.

Yet, we've a friend, who is sincere,
A Friend, e'en though the angels jeer,
A Friend, in all that name implies,
A Friend who reigns o'er Paradise.

Loving, he waits our earnest plea
For help, in times of misery;
Always forgiving, always kind,
If we, our sins will leave behind.

"Come unto me," oh! hear him call,
"Ye shall find rest. Come, ere you fall";
Kindly he pleads with us, his friends,
To shun all sin and make amends.

His lov'ng arms outstretched will be,
When e're in true humility,
We seek the path, the one alone
That leads unto his Father's throne.

So let us, then, when things seem blue
Just trust in God and "we'll pull through,"
For, if we've done our very best,
We've done our part, he'll do the rest...

PURITY OF THOUGHT, WORD, AND ACTION.

Purity: State of being pure; cleanness; chastity.—Webster.
Zion: The pure in heart.—God.

God says he delights in the chastity of women, and we also believe that he delights in the chastity of men and children; and while we desire to teach the children the necessity of being pure, let us remember our teachings will be in vain if we do not set the example thus proving to them that we are sincere. "Let him who would move and convince others, be first moved and convinced himself. Be true if you would be believed. Let a man but speak forth with genuine earnestness the thought, the emotion, the actual condition of his own heart; and other men, so strangely are we all knit together by the tie of sympathy, must and will give heed to him."—Caryle.

Paul said to Timothy: "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example to the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.—1 Timothy 4: 12.

Confronted with the above fact, my feeble effort shall be directed, principally, to the priesthood and to the more mature, in years, among God's people.

1. "PURITY OF THOUGHT."

Paul to the Galatian Saints—"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Galatians 6: 7, 8.

"As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

I can not help but think, when reference is made to the heart, in Holy Writ, such as purifying the heart, as a man thinketh in his heart, etc., the heart of the brain, where central thought lies, is meant, rather than the organ that pumps the blood. It is true there is a feeling in the regions of the heart, when those peaceful blessings are being poured out upon us, while serving God, but something touched the high tuned chord in the heart of the brain that caused it; anyway we shall look at it from that standpoint, presently.

Purity of life depends upon purity of mind.

As long as Satan is going to and fro in the earth seeking whom he may devour, we may expect evil, impure thoughts to attract our mind, and as Satan's forces seem to be very busy at all times, so must we put on the whole armor of God and never retreat or surrender, but keep battling until we are able to keep those evil thoughts from camping or abiding in our mind. Our breastworks must be good literature and pure companionship, until our minds are kept so full of good thoughts, with their uplifting influence, that there will be no room for the evil ones.

We are sowing seed in our minds every day, and sooner or later the reaping time will come. What kind of seed are we sowing? The law that governs the sowing and reaping of wheat and other grain, teaches us that we sow a few seed to reap a multiplicity of seed. If the thoughts we sow are pure and good we shall reap joy and peace of mind here and the multiplicity, or great harvest, in the life which is to come.

ELDER O. R. MILLER.

We are told that eye hath not seen, tongue can not tell, neither has it entered the mind of man "the blessings in store for the righteous, the pure in heart!" Such beautiful thoughts from God's word should inspire us with great zeal for good. But how sad when our minds revolve and we are made to remember that men have fallen, who were once instruments for good in this great work of God. Were they attacked and overthrown through the effort of one charge by the enemy's forces? I am inclined to believe they were not. A second, a third, and maybe a hundred attacks were made, and finally the army of Satan was permitted to camp in his mind; he entertained a thought that once he despised; he fed, he nourished it, and he was taken by stratagem. A prophecy delivered at the reunion at Kirtland in part was as follows: "Satan has no power over you only as you allow him. If you will turn from him and refuse to obey his orders he will flee from you." Then when a brother or sister falls, remember—the seed of thought was first sown, they fed, they cultivated it. The fall, the almost destruction, was the reaping of a more abundant harvest than was expected. The fallen are to be pitied! Help them up, if you see they desire to arise, and maybe they will profit by the sad experience; and let us also profit by it, God helping us, "BE PURE, BE PURE IN HEART."

PURITY OF WORD AND ACTION.

I place purity of word and action in one heading because they are both the fruits of thought. With some people "From the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh," but with others, "The actions reveal the abundance of the heart." My brother, my sister, are your conversations what God would have them? Paul says, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." A modern writer says, "We are largely known by our manners." I do not believe the writer wanted to leave the impression that a person is known by his manners, just when among the many or away from home, but also among the few and at home. A wise man once said, "No man is a hypocrite in his amusements. Equally true it is that a man's character is revealed by his admirations, by the company he keeps (birds of a feather flock together), by his enthusiasms. We profess that we have come out from the world. Have we? Some have and some have not. By their fruits ye shall know them. Shall I be permitted to point out some of the evils of to-day in the camp of Israel, or had you rather hear me condemn the Catholic, Protestant, and heathen? Affirmative argument is all right in its place, but when you denounce it altogether you denounce a great deal of Christ's work. Christ came to destroy the works of the Devil. He declares his servants should carry his work on to a greater work, a more extensive work. Are you true to your covenant, my brother, or do you intend to get faint-hearted and preach and write to please men? Paul declared, if he preached to please men, under the existing condition, he would not please the God of heaven; so let us get down to practical life and deal with present conditions for a few moments.

We are told that for every idle word, we shall have to render an account. Evil thoughts come when man is idle, and evil thoughts make evil words and actions. Are our conversations uplifting and educational, or are they filled with meaningless terms that benefit no one?

I heard a person chastened once for overflowing too freely with levity, and his reply was, "If you only knew how much I was sacrificing along that line now, you would not criticise." Great argument that! Paul says the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. I sometimes wonder how long it takes it to show the effect on some people, but the Book of Mormon says there will be people who will say, "We can do a little of this and a little of that, sin a little, God will forgive us." If those prophecies must be fulfilled, let some one else fulfill them, but we are to be a light to the world. This gospel should make us a refined people. God has intrusted us with the greatest plan that man has ever known, which should make us a refined, mannerly, pure class of people, and will finally redeem the human family. We can hasten the redemption. Some of the late revelations admonish the ministry, and Israel in general, not to relate coarse and vulgar stories and not to indulge in too much laughter, for it is sin. From the editorial of a late magazine I quote the following, regarding words of expression: "Who has not heard young people talking together (older ones also,) on the street, so incoherently, so foolishly, so like intoxicated parrots, that, had they not been the children of sane and responsible parents, the listener might have feared that they were overtaken with semi-idioty? Their mood was not gayety; it was not the result of elevated spirits; it seemed rather the base letting down of personality." I call to mind a young married couple, she is a member of the church, he is not. On one occasion he accompanied her to a social gathering of our people; he heard expressions that disgusted him. He said, "I have never heard the young people that I associate with, who claim no religion, use such expressions." You say he is prejudiced! I have talked with him; I believe he is not. Ephesians 4: 29: "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers."

Oh! the unwise, false, impure words sometimes uttered against thy brother or sister, only time and eternity can reveal the broken hearts and crushed souls caused thereby. I once heard of a lady, a member of the Catholic Church, who spoke impure words about her neighbor, when she went to confession, she revealed it to the priest, and here is the lesson he gave her: He gave her a basket of thistle seed and told her to scatter them on her way home and then return and he would tell her what to do next. She obeyed and when she returned he said, "Now, you go and gather them up again." "Ah," said she,

"impossible, some have been carried away by the wind, the birds have picked some up, and some have fallen into the crevices of the earth and rocks." Said he, "So it is with the words you have spoken; they now belong to the public and go on carrying a deadly poison with them that only eternity can heal. It is easier to avoid mistakes than to correct them after they are made. It takes less time and energy to stop and think and decide a question or line of action wisely than it does to rush ahead thoughtlessly and carelessly do the wrong thing, and then have to undo it and do it over properly. Worse yet if it is a thing that can not be undone; that must stand as a monument to our lack of care and thought."

The little untamable member, with its poisonous effect, goes on its way of destruction; its slimy trail can be traced in every age, and no doubt its work will continue till Satan is bound. God help us to conquer! Step by step may the advance be made till the Spirit of the meek and lowly Nazarene be felt in every crevice and corner of the universe, till true charity, which thinketh no evil, shall cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep.

Do our actions prove to the world that in going through the waters of baptism we have come out from the onions and garlic of Egypt? out from the world? At one of our reunions the men and women went in bathing together. The Lord spoke to the camp of Israel, mildly rebuking them for such conduct, and he further said if they would rectify the conditions he would pour out of his Spirit abundantly, until tears of joy would flow freely down the cheeks of many. The prophecy was accepted, the correction made, the blessing came and came so abundantly, according to the promise, that many, including our aged, much experienced patriarch, John H. Lake, testified that they had never witnessed anything like it. But how soon we forget! The next reunion came, and I suppose the prophecy was forgotten; at least back to the water they went, all together.

Question: Do you think we are leading the world as we should in the standard of morality? or shall the world move ahead and teach us? Arise, ye reunion committees and people of Israel, and answer! Latter day revelation admonishes us to read all good books; so get busy, my brother, my sister, and see how far behind the world you are! About two years ago I learned through a popular magazine that a number of cities had passed resolutions against the men and women bathing together. In some cities they have separate pools to bathe in, for they declare the influence on the young mind is more demoralizing than dancing. Will you denounce dancing and uphold and indulge in the other? I denounce both! And declare in words of a more able writer, in words of soberness: "All pleasure and gain that costs character is an immeasurable loss." It is not enough to say I or we wanted to have a little fun; we did not mean anything. The intelligent world is getting tired of that old threadbare excuse: "I did not mean anything." In other words, we can do anything we please and not mean anything, but the other fellow must never attempt such. Paul says to "shun the very appearance of evil."

"Disguise so near the truth doth seem to run,
Tis doubtful whom to seek and whom to shun;
Nor know we when to spare or when to strike,
Our friends and foes they seem so much alike."—Sel.

"The only safe way is to live so as to bear watching and then never mind who watches you."—Selected.

"Conduct is the great profession. Behavior is the perpetual revealing of us. What a man does, tells us what he is."—F. D. Huntington.

Those who are leading or accompanying these little buds of promise into places and games of pastime that are unbecoming to a Saint of God, are sowing the seed, and some day they will reap a multiplicity to their condemnation. Jesus says if we break the least commandment and teach others to do so we shall be the least in the kingdom of heaven. Are we breaking the commandment of high morals and teaching others to do so? Oh, says one, I like to see the Saints be sociable. So do I; but there is a vast difference between sociability and familiarity and, sure as man exists, familiarity will lead to adultery. Not long ago one of our noble missionaries saw in vision the word familiarity as it once existed in the early church and was shown that it led to — polygamy. He again saw familiarity as it does or may exist in the Reorganization and was shown that it would not again lead to polygamy but adultery. Adultery! That terrible crime next to murder in the catalogue of crimes, that which has been the downfall of the human race in all ages, its blushing, shameful face can be seen in every dispensation—O, Israel! Let us arise from lethargy and shake off the fetters of impurity and redeem Zion! Our loving Father tells that Zion might have been redeemed even now if it were not for the transgressions of Israel. We can not be overthrown by outside influences if we are pure and upright before God.

I am aware of the fact that stronger men than I have fallen, influenced by what I am condemning, but should that cause me or anyone else to hesitate in the denunciation of such wrongs? I too, may fall; I know not my future, but I can only say, by the help of God I shall try my best to be pure. Angels can do no more. And while men in and out of the priesthood have fallen into the pitfalls of impurity, some of our sisters are to a degree to blame.

A word to ye sisters of Israel: When a man approaches you unbecomingly, whether he be deacon or apostle, confront him with stinging words of rebuke. A writer has said, "Silence is golden, but there are occasions also when silence is cowardice and injustice." You may be unjust to yourself and to the offender to keep silent on such occasions. Teach him a lesson. He may say he does not mean anything, but Herbert has said, "Hell is electrified with such expressions." And Mary T. Whitney has said in her impressive works, "Girls (and women) entertain no impure thoughts a moment. Never tolerate for an instant an impure word, or 'touch' from anyone."

It is said when General Grant was President, a congressman commenced telling a lewd joke, first remarking that there were no ladies present. President Grant said: "There are gentlemen present." The joke was not told. If you should discover a poisonous serpent among your children, at the risk of your life, you would immediately attack it. Neither should we tolerate impure words and actions among the children of Zion. I appeal to each individual and not to rigid ruling. Men and women who will respect themselves by proper deportment shall be respected by all men. Courage consists not in blindly overlooking danger, but in seeing and conquering it. The road to destruction is usually a pleasant one, excepting at its end. It is easy to drift with the current, not knowing where we may land, but the harbor of safety is up the stream and to get there we must apply the oars. This work means activity and discrimination. What shall we cling to and what let go? We may let go all things which we can not carry into the eternal life. Let us hide nothing, and we shall not be afraid of being found out. Let us say and do nothing impure, and mankind will admire us.

"Between two evils is the halfway-house of virtue; wise is he who points out its exact location."—George Pritchard.

"If we would please God we must watch every stroke and touch upon the canvas of our lives; we must not think we can lay it on with a trowel and yet succeed."—Selected.

A good criterion to go by is, "Avoid all impure thoughts and words and keep from all impure actions." These things we must bear in mind and move forward if we expect to redeem Zion. Some amusements which we must not indulge in, may at first seem harmless, but remember, it is the entering of the wedge. The sot began with an occasional drink, the gambler with an occasional game of cards, and we are told that three fourths of our popular gamblers of to-day learned to play cards around the Christian (so-called) firesides. And the great evils of polygamy and adultery began by familiarity, some one excusing himself because some one else did not do as he should.

The chief cause of the Deluge was social impurity. (See Genesis 6: 1-13.) The principle reason for the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah was social impurity. (See Genesis 19:1-11.) We can see truly that God will not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. Let us be pure and good because God wants us to, and because we love him and love to do his will.

"For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."—Ecclesiastes 12: 14.

"THE PURE IN HEART SHALL SEE GOD."

Blest are the pure in heart;
For they our God shall see,
And from his presence ne'er depart
Through all eternity.

I will be their delight
Who here delight in me,
And they shall walk with me in white
Who seek for purity.

No more in thought they err,
They're free from every stain;
They've washed their robes of character,
And spotless they remain.

Oh, bliss for which we've sought—
From sin to be secure!
In every word, and act, and thought,
For ever to be pure.—Selected.

The old philosopher, Seneca, used to say: "All I require of myself is, not to be equal to the best, but only to be better than the bad." That is not a very high ambition. Such should never satisfy us, but rather the standard that Christ gave us: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect."

May our armor be the word of God; our eyes fastened upon celestial glory, is my earnest prayer.

NEW YORK CITY.

On the evening of January 10 a mass meeting under the auspices of the International Council of Women for Christian and Patriotic Service, 542 Fifth Avenue, New York City, was held in Carnegie Hall, to "protest against polygamy and Mormon control of politics in western States."

Honorable ex-Senator Frank J. Cannon was the principal speaker; ex-Senator Charles A. Towne was also on the list of speakers, and Mr. Hans P. Freece, who is reputed to have been the leading spirit in the recent anti-Mormon agitation in England. Mr. Freece is an ex-Mormon, the son of a polygamist—his father is the author of the anti-Mormon book, The Letters of a Father to His Son. Very frequently we notice by press reports that a company of Mormons have passed through some of the eastern ports, under the guidance of Mormon elders, on their way to Utah and vicinity. Such reports have alarmed the above-named council and others and upon inquiry they are officially informed that "About seven or eight hundred Mormon converts, a majority of whom are women, pass this port (Boston, Massachusetts) annually."

This led the anti-Mormon workers to go over to England and other countries and warn the public against Mormonism, and has resulted in the Mormon elders being driven out of some of the countries entirely, and banished from several cities, and has made their work much more difficult.

The above meeting is announced as the beginning of a series of meetings of the kind which is to spread throughout the country, warning the people of the impending danger from the growth and spread of Mormonism.

Mr. Cannon is an impressive speaker and was frequently applauded throughout his address. His effort seems to be mainly directed against the Mormon leaders. He says he loves the Mormon people and deplores the fact that they are dominated by their polygamous leaders. He scored Doctor Lyman Abbot for his recent editorial which appeared in the Outlook, in which it was asserted "that polygamy is dead." Mr. Cannon vigorously denies this, and says that polygamy is now upheld and practiced in Utah and vicinity to a far greater extent than people are usually aware of. He says that those who practice and uphold polygamy are slated for special favors and honors, by the heads of the Mormon Church.

At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Cannon recommended three courses of action by the people against Mormonism, as follows: "An amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the practice of polygamy in all States of this republic." This would enable the Federal Government to take immediate steps to punish polygamists in Utah, as well as elsewhere. "That the Department of Justice begin an immediate proceeding under the Sherman Law and dissolve the Mormon Church's property trusteeship as a combination in restraint of trade." Such a proceeding must be barely possible, else it would not be recommended by a man of Mr. Cannon's ability. The result of it would surely be interesting. For a long time I have wished that a proceeding might be inaugurated restraining them from using the name of our church. The next recommendation was, "That Congress no longer admit as senators and representatives the ambassadors of the Mormon kingdom."

A preamble to resolutions which were passed by the meeting read, "Like an octopus, the terrible Mormon hierarchy is drawing under its evil control converts, mainly young women from all over the world; from these centers the converts are sent to Mormon settlements in the West, by their votes to increase the political power of the church and by their tithes its financial power." This state of affairs was described as, "wicked, immoral, and a burning disgrace to American honor and decency."

In communication by the above named council of women, they report that they have found that special favors have been granted by steamship lines to Mormon immigrants, and that tickets to the United States could be bought more cheaply at the Mormon headquarters in Liverpool, than in the regular offices. Here is the unfortunate statement which they make: "Eighty years ago, when Mormons began their treasons and conspiracies against this Government, the proportion which they bore, to the country's whole population, was about one in 1,125,000. Now the measure of Mormon strength is roundly one in every 125 of population."

To go back eighty years ago would make the beginning at the year 1831, and we would resent the idea that the church in that day was in conspiracy against the Government, or that it was ever guilty of treason; but on the other hand it was "organized agreeably to the laws of our country," and its members were taught that he that "keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land." The Mormons who have openly confessed to breaking both the laws of God and man can make their own apology, but those who have remained true to the original faith have no need so to do.

This council also says that "if polygamy should suddenly stop enough young people have entered the relation recently, to keep the institution alive in Utah for another fifty years"; that "it is nearly as prevalent there now as it was before 1890"; that "the church still teaches polygamy openly as orthodox Mormon doctrine"; that "the church still keeps in its book of doctrine the principles of polygamy, and does not publish the Manifesto against it"; that "the Mormons maintain 'cities of refuge' in Utah which they call 'lambing stations' where their polygamous children are born"; that "the prevailing custom in Mormon settlements in Canada is to keep the legal wives in Canada and their polygamous wives in Utah or Mexico."

The people at large are asked to write their Senators, from their State, and protest against Mormon invasion and urge legislation to abolish the system; they are also urged to take action in removing from the battleship Utah the silver set bearing on the coffee tray a picture of Brigham Young. They are also urged to write to Honorable Winston Churchill, Home Secretary of England, commending the Government investigation looking to the expulsion of Mormon missionaries from England. Mayors and police of all cities are to be urged to report the appearance of Mormon missionaries and refuse them license to preach. "The mayor of York, Pennsylvania, ordered the Mormon missionaries from the town. Can not other mayors and village presidents be influenced to pursue the same course?" The council calls for money to assist them in their work, and took up a collection and charged an admission at the meeting for this purpose.

After this meeting had been widely announced, I visited the newspaper offices of all the leading papers in the city, with photos of President Joseph Smith, and our anti-polygamous tracts, and expressed the desire that if our church was assailed the press would guard us from misrepresentation upon the knowledge of facts. In every place I was received with courtesy and kindness and was thanked for the information offered.

In the mass meeting not the slightest reference was made to our church and consequently no mention was made of our church in the newspaper reports of the meeting.

A few days before the meeting I wrote the president of this council of women as follows:

MISS C. E. MASON,

President Interdenominational Council of Women for Christian and Patriotic Service.

542 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dear Madam: By recent press reports I notice that you are announced as leading in a movement called, "War upon Mormons."

You will observe that I am connected with the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, which sometimes has been confused with the Mormon Church of Utah, but in fact is radically different from it in every way.

It happens occasionally that our church and people are made to suffer a great injustice by being classed with the Mormons of Utah, when in fact we have done more actual service in opposing their unchristian doctrines than all other movements combined.

You may be informed concerning our religious principles and our standing as citizens and as a Christian people; however, I may here state that we are anti-polygamists. Several years ago our church in its general assembly passed an act which was sent to Congress favoring the enactment of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting polygamy. Our denominational headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa. Joseph Smith, the eldest son of the Joseph Smith who was the founder of the first Church of Latter Day Saints, is president of our church, residing at Independence, Missouri. He has always been a most strenuous opponent to polygamy and is a vastly different man from his cousin, Joseph F. Smith, the president of the Mormon Church of Utah.

Volume 9 of the Encyclopedia, "The Americana," under the heading Latter Day Saints, has a very fair article setting forth some facts of history and what we believe. Many of the books of reference grossly misrepresent our views.

I do not believe that your movement is directed against us as a church, and as our meeting place in Manhattan is near where your mass meeting is to be held, it would be very gratifying to me if it might be stated publicly that your efforts are not aimed against our church. Several very fine people, members of my congregation, were once identified with the Utah Mormons, and in fact our church has been, practically, the only one to make converts from that people. I would be very glad to send you literature or call for personal conversation or give your society a lecture on the difference between the two churches of Latter Day Saints and show that Brigham Young was the author of polygamy, instead of Joseph Smith, as some suppose.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. LARUE.

To which I received the following reply:

TERRYTOWN, NEW YORK, January 3, 1912.

MR. WILLIAM E. LARUE, 1331 Park Place,
Brooklyn, New York.

Dear Sir: This council has no desire to persecute you or the Mormon Church either, and we welcome the truth from whatever source we can find it. I will be very glad indeed to have you send me any information that you have at command, but I do not see how you can get around the writing of your first Prophet concerning marriage in which he refers to his wife Emma. We are not fighting Mormons, but we are fighting the evils of polygamy and the attempted control by the Mormon hierarchy of the political situation in Western States. We have a plan by which I believe this whole system can be changed without injury to the interests of any Mormon or their feelings except in so far as it forbids the practice of polygamy, and with safety and justice to the nation as well. I am too busy now to give you a personal interview, but possibly after you write me again I shall be able to arrange it. I would particularly ask which Mormon books you accept as revelations from God. We believe our movement will be as helpful to the next generation of Mormons as it will to the next generation of Gentiles.

Very sincerely yours,

C. E. MASON.

To this letter I made the following reply:

JANUARY 5th, 1912.

THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN FOR CHRISTIAN AND PATRIOTIC SERVICE.
542 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

MISS C. E. MASON, President, Tarrytown, New York.

Dear Madam: I thank you for the courtesy of your letter of the 3d inst. In response to your request I inclose the following literature which cover points of information concerning our church and its history in which you are most interested.

First, I commend for your careful reading the pamphlet, Joseph Smith in His Own Defense.

Second, The tract by his oldest son, who is the President of the Reorganized Church, entitled, One Wife or Many.

Third, Polygamy; Was it an Original Tenet of the Church, by Alexander H. Smith, another son of Joseph Smith, jr., the founder of the church. This son is dead.

Fourth, The Bible versus Polygamy, by David H. Smith, another son of Joseph Smith, jr., now dead.

Does it not strike you as a peculiar thing, in the face of the ordinary conception of who and what Joseph Smith, jr., was, that his sons should put themselves upon record in his defense, showing clearly that he was not responsible for the obnoxious evils of Utah Mormonism?

These tracts were written especially for circulation amongst the Utah Mormons, and they have had good effect, in that many who were misled into the errors of Mormonism, have been reclaimed, as I told you in my previous letter, that in my congregation are several who were once members of the Mormon Church of Utah.

From this literature you will see that from every conceivable standpoint we are, and ever have been, unalterably opposed to the crime of polygamy; therefore our opposition to that evil has been more effectual than that of any other society in the world.

As to the "attempted control of the political situation in Western States by the Mormon hierarchy," we are also opposed to the church dictating to its membership as to what shall be their political creed. Such a thing was never thought of, much less attempted, by the leaders of our church, and if it were, it would meet with a pronounced resentment.

In answer to your question as to which books we accept as revelations from God, will say, First, the Bible; second, the Book of Mormon; third, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

The Doctrine and Covenants contains revelations given through Joseph Smith, jr., up until his death in 1844, to which has been added the revelations given through his son up to the present date. There is a vast difference between the Doctrine and Covenants, of our church, and that of the Utah Church, specially in this: In our book is a statement on marriage as follows, "marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife." This was ratified, as all revelations to be binding upon the church must be, in general assembly of the church, during the lifetime of Joseph Smith, jr. The Utah Church has eliminated it from their book and have inserted the polygamous revelation in its stead. How absurd and inconsistent! Whatever else these books teach, I affirm that they do not teach polygamy, but they do condemn and forbid it.

I notice with interest your statement, "I do not see how you can get around the writing of your first Prophet concerning marriage in which he refers to his wife Emma."

The only writing on the subject of marriage, that I know of, in which he is made to refer to her, is in the purported revelation on plurality of wives, in which it is said of her, "but if she will not abide this commandment she shall be destroyed," meaning polygamy. I should think the facts would even make a Utah Mormon blush with shame. She not only rejected this infamous document, with her husband's name forged to it, and never was known until after he had been dead eight years, and in defiance of the threat to destroy her she lived for thirty-five years thereafter, and always protested against any assertion that her husband ever taught polygamy or was the responsible agent in its introduction.

Brigham Young was the author of that revelation, and to give it effect with the people, forged the name of Joseph Smith, jr., to it. It was never officially ratified by the church and is in direct conflict with all other revelations found in the books.

There is evidence of the most loving affection which always existed between Joseph Smith, jr., and his only wife, Emma.

We have no word of protest against what your society may do or say against Utah Mormonism—we make no apology for their doings since they left the faith established by Joseph Smith, jr.

Any further information, other than contained in this letter or inclosed literature, will be furnished upon request.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. LARUE.

To the present date I have not heard further from this council and I am anxious that in this warfare upon Mormonism our church shall not be drawn into the fray and we be made to appear as apologists for such an institution as these people conceive Utah Mormonism to be.

If they will confine their attack to Utah Mormonism; to its history from 1844 to the present; to the wickedness of its principles and the unrighteousness of its leaders, we can justly have not the least opposition, and as we are and ever have been opposed to the same things, we can say, Amen.

As it seems to me, our ministry and membership, in every place where this agitation may be waged, will do well to inform those who are leading in it, by personal letter or otherwise, of our position, and inclose some of the tracts above referred to. Of all the anti-polygamy arguments ever made, the sons of the martyred Prophet have far excelled them all in what they have written, and it should be widely circulated.

In the "Notes and news of the churches," as reported in the World, in which was announced the above mass meeting, the editor gave my subject prominent mention, "Why I belong to the Church of Latter Day Saints." As our meeting place in Manhattan is near the Carnegie Hall, we feel gratified in that we are able to make a humble effort to counteract any misrepresentation of our views and give the people of this great city an opportunity of learning the truth. In every instance, every stranger who comes to our meetings comes with the thought that he is going to hear a polygamist Mormon preach, and they often express themselves as being agreeably surprised to learn how radically mistaken they have been. The great trouble is, however, that there is a decline of interest in religion of all brands in this great city. There is no lack of attractions to satisfy all the passions of human hearts who know not nor appreciate the love of God. With so much misrepresentation abroad and being so little understood as a church, we have a great fight on hand, as the way is so hedged up and we are encompassed with limitations on every side. The best thing for us to do, in my judgment, is to keep the fires aglow, and by upright conduct as Christian people and law-abiding citizens, let our light shine out to the world. I do not approve of any method in meeting the opposition of our enemies, that is not tempered with the spirit of love and with wisdom that is full of good fruits. If we have the truth, as we surely believe, what we have will remain true, and in our effort to manifest this truth to our fellow men, we should employ only such methods as are to be linked with the noblest and highest of gentlemanly conduct. This will win the respect and commendation of those whose opinions we regard as valuable.

The World Almanac for 1912, is just out and makes very fair mention of our church and classes it as separate from the Utah Church, and gives our place of meeting in New York City and my name and address in connection therewith. This will be to our advantage, as this book is widely circulated and largely consulted for facts. We have continued our lease on the Genealogical Hall, 226 West Fifty-eighth Street, to April 1, when the mission will close for the summer months; and we hope the work may be continued for the season next winter. The Saints of Brooklyn Branch have, in addition to other heavy expenses, borne the additional burden of the expense of this mission, and they are to be heartily commended for their generosity.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. LARUE.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

MAN CONTEMPORANEOUS WITH HORSE AND MASTODON.

We now turn to the evidence that man was contemporaneous with these animals, some of which are extinct. Of South American collections, Prehistoric America, pp. 25, 31, has this to present:

Mixed up promiscuously with the human remains were found those of several animals, chiefly feline and cervine [cats and deer], still extant in the same region [province of Minas Geraes, Brazil], together with others belonging to species which have now migrated or become extinct. Amongst the last we may name a monkey, a rodent of the size of the tapir, a peccary twice as large as the living species, a horse very similar to our own, a large cat bigger than the jaguar, a llama, a megatherium, and several others, such as Chlamydotherium Humboldtii, an edentate of the size of the tapir, and the Platyonyx of Lund. . . . By prolonged and careful work he [Lund] succeeded in gathering complete specimens of forty-four species now extinct, including several monkeys, some hoplophori, which were as large as our oxen, and the Smilodon, a large feline animal akin to the Machairodus, or saber-toothed tiger, which inhabited Europe in posttertiary times. . . .

Several years ago Séguin collected on the borders of the Rio Carcarana [in the province of Buenos Ayres] numerous bones of extinct animals, including those of a bear larger than the cave bear, a horse, the mastodon, and the megatherium. With these remains lay human bones. . . .

We think, therefore, with Ameghino, that man lived in South America with animals long extinct.

Of North America, the prehistoric associations of man and animals are thus presented:

There are deposits in California and Oregon where, to use a popular expression, the remains of elephants and mastodons might be had by wagonload. Besides gigantic pachydermata we meet with the Palæolama, the Elotherium, extinct oxen, Hipparion, and several kinds of horses.—Ibid., pp. 41, 42.

Hewn stone implements, the work of their hands, are not the only relics of the early inhabitants of America. In many places human bones have been found, associated with numerous fragments of extinct animals.—Ibid., p. 23.

In the löess of the Mississippi at Natchez, Doctor Dixon found, side by side with the bones of the mylodon and megalonyx, a human pelvis.—Ibid., p. 34.

In a salt mine on the island of Petit Anse, Louisiana, was found a mat made of interlaced reeds. The salt occurs at a depth of fifteen to twenty feet, and the fragment of mat was found at the level of the first deposit of salt. Two feet above lay some fragments of the tusks or bones of an elephant.—Ibid., p. 36.

Mr. J. B. Holden says, In nearly every State west of New England portions of this creature—the Mastodon—have been disinterred, and every year there are several found, in a state of more or less complete state of preservation. The circumstance of several skeletons having about them evidences of man's handiwork is extremely interesting. On one account, it brings the date, though greatly indefinite, to man's existence. We are therefore able to say man and mastodon are contemporaneous.—Prehistoric America, vol. 1, p. 40, 1894.

Again:

Doctor Holmes in 1859 made a communication to the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences in which he described the fragments of pottery found on the Ashley River, South Carolina, in connection with the bones of the mastodon, and megatherium, both of them extinct animals.—Ibid., vol. 1, p. 13.

In fact they are so recent an animal that the contents of the stomach were preserved, analyzed and classified: "Professor Barton, of University of Pennsylvania, discovered a mastodon at the depth of six feet, and in the stomach of the animal he found a mass of vegetable matter, composed of leaves and branches among which was a bush common in Virginia.

Winchell says:

The ancient lakelets of Michigan inclose numerous remains of the mastodon, and mammoth, but they are sometimes so near the surface that one could believe them to have been buried within five hundred years.

The one found at Tecumseh lay but two and a half feet beneath the surface. The Adrian mastodon was buried about three feet. The Newburg, New York, mastodon was just beneath the soil in a small pool of water.

Professor Hall says: "Of the very recent existence of this animal there can be no doubt. The mud beds and muck swamps where these remains occur, are the most recent of all accumulations." See Prehistoric America, by S. B. Peet, vol. 2, pp. 40, 41; where he affirms that "these animals survived and may have been contemporaneous with the mound builders."

But why multiply evidences? They simply become voluminous in corroboration of the Book of Mormon claims, and dash Elder Traum's would-be objection to the ground.

Johnson's Natural History, in two volumes, page 508, has this to say of the "ox" (that "pesky" fellow that torments our critic so much): "North America has been the home of several species of the bovine quadrupeds. The ox has left his bones mingled with quaternary deposits in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi, Texas, and California."

Of course, Elder Traum can see clearly how the "ox" could have "a home in North America" without his mother, the "cow."

Doctor Nicholas Leon, sub-secretary of public instruction, of Mexico, says of an avenue discovered among the ruins of Pueblo, that, "in ancient times, loaded oxen traversed up and down the hill."—Records of the Past, vol. 2, p. 223.

In view of the increased, and ever increasing evidence on this question, we ask Mr. Traum if he wishes by his assertion recorded on page 146 of his book, or a statement back of which he stands, to be understood as arguing that the Spaniards came to America in the glacial period?

PRIESTHOOD.

Elder Traum devotes chapters eleven, twelve, thirteen, and fourteen to a consideration, such as it is, of priesthood authority, under the general head of "The Mormon priesthood." His so-called range of criticism is nuncupative, having been used orally in the discussion with Elder Columbus Scott, at Wirt, Indiana. As it is here transcribed, its flavor is somewhat stale.

Page 155 he passes on a tangential rampage through the kingdom, power, and glory of his overweening imagination, as follows:

The course of reasoning by which these assumptions are held valid is, first, the unchangeableness of God; second, the antiquity of the gospel, and, third, the bestowal of both these priesthoods in the time of Aaron. These three questions cover the ground for them, and, such being the case, afford us a definite line along which we can follow them.

First, the unchangeableness of God.

If there is any force in the doctrine of the unchangeability of God touching this question, then there never was a time that the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods did not exist side by side, and there never will be a time when they will not be coexistent. Furthermore, to tie God down to the almightiness of his own unchangeability is to for ever close all avenues for him to take the initiative in ever introducing anything more perfect, or more nearly perfect, than has always existed. Confessedly, in the light of the Scripture, the Levitical priesthood was marked with some kind of imperfection, which made necessary the coming of another priesthood to bring about perfection. But the unchangeableness of God, if the Mormon position is correct, would make the one just as perfect at the first as at the last.—Mormonism Against Itself, pp. 155, 156.

To the first, we reply that the gospel of Jesus Christ, with the authority by which it is administered is as old as man. Paul affirms the gospel as being "the power of God." (Romans 1:16.) Can Traum conceive of a time when God had no power? But it is "the power of God unto salvation"; then, it is as old as fallen man, if it is God's power to save man. The gospel has Christ as its embodiment, and in the wisdom of God, Christ "was foreordained before the foundation of the world" (1 Peter 1:20), and was "slain from the foundation of the world." (Revelation 13:8.) Melchisedec was a priest officiating in the priesthood in the days of Abraham—a day when Abraham saw Christ's work "and was glad"; a gospel age. Of Melchisedec, we read:

And Melchisedec king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God. And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth.

This man was called "priest of the most high God," and officiated in an eternal order of priesthood, and this order of priesthood "having neither beginning of days nor end of life abideth continually" (Hebrews 7:1, 3); and of Jesus Christ occupying in this eternal order, "the Lord hath sworn and will not repent, thou [Christ] art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec," (Psalm 2:4).

As Jeremiah was "ordained, and sanctified, a prophet before he was born," so Jesus Christ was "ordained from the foundation of the world," a "prophet, priest and king." See Jeremiah 1:5; Hebrews 5:4-6.

The apostle affirms, Hebrews 9:11, "But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands," shows that the order Melchisedec occupied was that of the high priesthood, else Christ did not officiate in the "order of Melchisedec."

The Melchisedec and Aaronic departments of the same priesthood do exist contemporaneously, but the "unchangeability of God," does not necessarily involve the operation of both departments at one and the same time. John Baptist ministered in the line of priesthood held by his father Zechariah, Luke 1:8, 9, 17, before the Melchisedec department was administered by Christ. John was sent in "the spirit and power of Elias" as a "harbinger"—a "messenger"—to prepare the way of the Lord, "a voice crying in the wilderness"; and that he was a priest, ministering "faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins," we prove, both by the "law of inheritance," recognized by the multitudes gathering "in the wilderness" to his standard, and yielding obedience, and the express word of God:

My covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name. The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity. For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts.—Malachi 2:6, 7, Authorized Version.

And of this work of John, so far as the opening of the Christian dispensation is concerned it is expressly described as "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ." (Mark 1:1.)

Surely the Christian dispensation can not possibly be supposed to retrograde, and to become more Judaic in its fuller development. Did not every sentiment that John uttered, every ordinance that he practiced, constitute a portion of the ministrations of Christ, and the apostles?

We have elsewhere in this review proved that the Aaronic department of priesthood existed prior to the giving of the law on Sinai; that Aaron and his sons were consecrated and set apart, to minister in an office which was intact, a part of the preexisting priesthood; that priests are mentioned as officiating for "the Lord" before the tables, which were "prepared of God," were given to Israel. "Now," says Paul, under this Levitical priesthood, "the people received the law." Yes, "under" it. The priesthood existed first, and the law administered under it. The law administered by this priesthood was perfect for the purpose to which it was instituted. It was intended as a pedagogue,—a "schoolmaster," a kindergarten, to lead Israel to Christ, but when Paul contrasts the intention and the object of this law with the higher and grander object to be achieved by the ministration of the glorious gospel, he says it could not impart the virtues and excellencies to make "perfect, as pertaining to the conscience." Every true principle in the universe is "perfect" in its sphere. Addition, or multiplication, as principles of mathematics, are perfect for the purposes intended. The statement of the apostles, recorded in Acts 6:2, that "it is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables," evidences a change in the law—in the service of the priesthood.

Elder Traum's logic leads to a miserable blunder by parity of reasoning. He might as well conclude that all the duties to be performed, all legislative measures to be enacted into law, and all law executed and enforced can be carried out in our civil government without authority, as to conclude that the gospel can be administered by an institution destitute of divine authority. "Jesus Christ having come a high priest,"—the indefinite article, "a," is used, signifies that he was among others who were high priests, and his priesthood being "unchangeable." (Hebrews 7:24), and he having officiated as "a" high priest in the establishment of the church, even to the offering of his body as a sacrifice to the icy embrace of death, we can see that in "calling unto him his disciples, and of them he ordained twelve, that he might send them forth to preach." (Mark 3:13, 14, 15.) He imparted to them spiritual power and authority of the priesthood that he himself possessed, and that was the spiritual power and authority of both the departments of priesthood, for he held it all. And when those men on whom he conferred the priesthood authority established churches, by the gospel of Christ, called honest, faithful people into covenant,—"oath," relationship with God, they were addressed:

Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.—1 Peter 2:5.

Notice, the New Testament church was "built up an holy priesthood." The "draft," the specifications, of this building, were in the mind of the Architect, the Builder, before it was erected, and the structure is the expression of the mind of God,—the "will of God" through Jesus Christ. What was the character of the priesthood God "built up" through Jesus Christ? Answer:

But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.—1 Peter 2:9, Authorized Version.

Of the men whom he ordained Jesus said to his Father:

As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.—John 17:18, Authorized Version.

To the men whom he ordained, Jesus said:

And when he had so said, he showed unto them his hands and his side. Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord. Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.—John 21:20, 21, Authorized Version.

How did God "send" Christ? Answer as "an apostle and high priest," Hebrews 3:1. How did "the apostle and high priest," send his ministry? As "apostles and high priests." John the Revelator bears witness:

And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.—Revelation 1:6, Authorized Version.

John was one among the number Jesus "sent" as the Father sent him! If history can render this point stronger, we appeal to Eusebius who says: "John that rested on the bosom of our Lord, who was a priest that bore the sacerdotal (priestly) plate" (page 243); he also informs us that Origen "received ordination to the priesthood at Cæsarea" (Ibid).

Now what becomes of Traum's bluff when he says "the priesthood" is of such a character that Christ "can not delegate it to anyone else in all the universe"? (See p. 161). The growth of pious pomposity and assumption is something astounding in the progress of his work.

There is truth for him that will find it in every old religion, in every faith, old and new. Religion is the expression of man's craving for knowledge. Religions, as they rise and fall, embody and mark, as milestones in history, the progress of mankind.—Selected.

It is better in some respects to be admired by those with whom you live than to be loved by them. And this is not on account of any gratification of vanity, but because admiration is much more tolerant than love.—Arthur Helps.

"In the Bosom of Eternity."

Agreeably to the "promissory note" I gave some time ago to contribute to your interesting and inspiring columns from time to time, I am sending you a few lines to assure you of the deep and abiding interest taken by the Saints on "this side of the line," in your writings and presentations in the SAINTS' HERALD. The onward and forward strides of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society and other organizations of Toronto Branch are in themselves well worthy of almost a page, or at least a column to themselves.

Apropos of literature outside the pale of the three sacred books, and perhaps the "Vision of Mirza" and the "Dream of Gerontius," I know of nothing more sublime and soul-inspiring than that magnificent piece of imagery known as "The dream of the Poet Richter," from the German, which reads thus:

God called up from his dreams a man into the vestibule of heaven, saying, "Come thou higher and behold the glories of mine house." And to his angels, the servants that stood around his throne, he said, "Take him and undress him from his robes of flesh; cleanse his vision, and put a new breath into his nostrils; only touch not with any change his human heart, the heart that fears and feels and hopes and trembles."

It was done! and with a mighty angel for his guide the man stood ready for his journey into infinity; and from the terraces of heaven, without sound of farewell, at once they wheeled into the myriad miles of endless space. . . . Sometimes with the solemn flight of angel wing they fled through Saharas of darkness, through wildernesses of death, that divided asunder the worlds of life; sometimes they swept over frontiers that were quickening under prophetic motions from God. Then—from a distance that is counted only in heaven, light dawned for a time through misty flame, by unutterable pace the light swept to them, they by unutterable pace to the light! In a moment the rushing of planets was upon them; in a moment the fierce, lurid blazing of suns was around them. . . . Then came eternities of twilight, that revealed, but were not themselves revealed.

On the right hand and on the left towered mighty constellations, that by self-repetitions and answers from afar, that by counter positions built up triumphal gates, whose architraves, whose archways,—horizontal, upright,—rested, rose,—at altitudes by spans—that seemed ghostly from infinitude. Without measure were the architraves, past number were the archways, beyond memory the gates. Within were stairs that scaled the eternities below—below was above, to the man stripped of his gravitating body; depth was swallowed up in height insurmountable; height was swallowed up in depth unfathomable. . . .

Suddenly, as thus they rode from infinite to infinite; suddenly, as they thus tilted over abyssmal worlds, a mighty cry arose—that systems more vast, worlds more mysterious—other heights and other depths—were coming, were nearing, were at hand. Then the man sighed, and stopped; shuddered, and wept. His overburdened heart uttered itself in tears; and he said, "Angel, I will go no farther, for the spirit of man acheth with this vast infinity. Insufferable is the glory of God. Let me lie down in the grave and hide me from the persecution of the infinite; for end, I see there is none."

And from all the listening stars that shone around issued a choral voice: "The man speaks truly: end there is none that ever yet we heard of, 'End there is none.'"

The angel solemnly demanded, "Is there, indeed, no end?—and is this the sorrow that kills thy soul?" But no voice answered, that he might answer for himself. Then the angel threw up his glorious hands toward the heaven of heavens, saying, "End is there none to the universe of God! Lo, also, There is no beginning!"

Nova Scotia.

It may not be amiss to write a few words at this time in behalf of our little province, as the occurring events seem too valuable to have them pass unnoticed and not recorded on the pages of history.

Glenville can now boast of having the best Sunday school in this province, having only missed assembling one Sunday since its organization, which was due to the death of a friend. It has now assumed such a form that each student is putting forth every effort to make it a success, and with such an energetic superintendent as Brother Kenneth Hyatt such a thing as failure will never be known.

Williamsdale has also a Sunday school worthy to be mentioned, and under the genial management of Brother and Sister Leander Johnson it is making good progress; during the balance of the winter it will be held at their home.

There is one thing to be regretted about Nova Scotia, however, and that is that even with all the efforts of those who are doing what they can, there are some who call themselves Saints and do not seem to care if the work goes on or not, as they remain away from Sunday school, and in no way try to assist, except when the elders are around. We believe they may be doing this with a clear conscience, but we can not think they realize the importance of this work, the only special work that God has in process here, and one that should not be neglected by anybody. We do not wish to insinuate as to any particular person or persons, but the trouble with the work in Nova Scotia in the past is due wholly to Saints taking no part, but gossiping around or holding some hard feeling against their brother or sister. This may seem rather plain talk, but dear Latter Day Saint, how dare you stand in the way of those who would do better? how dare you stand with folded hands when there is so much to do all around? We are not in this work for fun. If we were we would join some popular church and we had better do it; but we are engaged for a mighty conflict and must be ready to fight to the end. It is the earnest prayer of the writer and the active Saints in this part of the country, that the time will soon come that everyone who is recognized as a Latter Day Saint will join hand in hand to meet the foe, by building up that great kingdom. It has been well said, "If ye are not for me ye are against me."

A joint meeting of Williamsdale and Glenville Sunday schools convened at the Latter Day Saints church at Williamsdale on the 30th of December, 1911, and the quarterly review was conducted by the home department superintendent, with nearly all the scholars and officers of the two schools present, after which a short but well occupied prayer meeting was held in charge of Priest Leander Johnson. The first part of the meeting was occupied by prayers and the latter part by testimonies. In the evening we were invited to the home of Brother Leander Johnson, where a very agreeable supper was prepared, one of the many pleasing dishes to a hungry crowd was a bowl of home raised baked beans. After spending a very pleasant evening we parted for our homes, each one feeling fully repaid for the long drive of nearly twenty-five miles in the cold.

The home department is progressing very nicely, having a membership of nearly twenty, nearly all of whom are taking a very active part; and South Rawdon, a live branch of this department, promises to have a very active Sunday school in the near future, judging by the reports and sentiments expressed by the members in that territory.

I wish to take the liberty, at this time, to extend my best wishes to all the Saints, and especially to the students of Graceland College, whom I have had the pleasure to meet, and trust that ere old friendship fades away, we may have the pleasure of meeting again.

Wishing the editor and all inquiring Saints success beyond your highest anticipations, I remain,

RALPH W. JOHNSON.

AMHERST, NOVA SCOTIA, January 6, 1912.

London, Ontario.

Brother and Sister A. Butler, who have been visiting with Saints and friends here, left for their home, Nebagamon, Wisconsin, the first of the week. They intend visiting Chatham and Detroit before reaching home. Brother and Sister Vasbinder also left for their home in Brandon, Manitoba. Brother Duseling of Waterford, paid our branch a visit last Sunday. Brother Alfred Barnes is quite happy these days because a boy has been born to them. Sister Rose Gray has been visiting friends at Bothwell.

Our services since the New Year have been largely attended, though the weather has been very cold. Sunday morning was sacrament service, Elder Fling presiding. He gave the Saints a heart to heart talk in the evening, preparatory to a revival or series of meetings to be held the latter part of the month. We are in hopes of having Elder F. A. Smith or Elder Scott with us.

The Religio local selected the following officers to conduct affairs for the next term: President, James Winegarden; first vice president, Fred Plummer; second vice president, Joe Heaslip; secretary, Aubrey Blanchard; assistant secretary, Rose Gray; treasurer, E. Maker; representative on library board, George Cambridge; auditors, W. E. Hardey and R. Gray; janitors, A. Langdon and J. Heaslip; organist, Gladys Maker; assistant organist, Grace Mottashed; chorister, Fred Plummer. Election conducted by Elder J. C. Mottashed.

Letter to the Home Column.

Dear Sister Walker: Will you please allow me space in your valuable column to say a few words in regard to training the youth? Many parents do not stop to consider the value to be placed upon the early training of a child. Let me tell my own experience in life and perhaps I may be able to assist some mother or father in realizing the importance of early training their children.

When I was a child the Bible was never read in my father's house except by my mother. Instead of teaching us the object of our creation we were allowed to do as we pleased, and as my father was a worldly man and cared not for the things of God, it was but natural that his boys would be more or less like him. We were never taught to have confidence in our parents, and I am sorry to say our parents never told us the things that every child should know. At a certain age every boy is possessed with a desire to know more about himself and his nature, and that is the time parents should teach them the things they ought to know. They are bound to find them out some way, and if the parents do not teach them they will learn them at school from those who do not know what modesty means.

Every child can be taught the value of purity, if taken in time; but if allowed to go out among evil companions they soon fall into bad habits. I speak from experience. When I was about eleven or twelve years of age an evil boy, a few years older and much larger and stronger than myself, came into my life and started me on the downward course to ruin. At first I was shocked at his actions, but instead of going to my parents and telling them about it as I should have done, and doubtless would have done had they taught me to have confidence in them, I said nothing about it, and soon that which seemed so terrible to me at first lost its awful appearance and I became a bad, evil-minded boy, simply because I did not have confidence in my parents, and they in turn did not do as they should have done by me.

To make a long story short I went on and on, until now at the age of only twenty-four I am a broken-hearted ruined man. When I was about fifteen I had a great fear of death, and for a while I tried to live right; but instead of encouraging me, I was laughed at and made fun of by other members of the family, and before long I was again doing wrong, only worse than before.

In the spring of 1907 I was again wrought upon with a desire to live right, and I obeyed the gospel and was soon called to the priesthood, and for four happy years I was blessed with the Spirit, and by the help of God accomplished much good. I often preached when the Spirit was with me in mighty power, and oh, how I rejoiced to know that God had forgiven me, and I was very, very happy! However, about May 25th last, Satan undertook to overcome me and he held my past life up to me, and from then till now I have not seen one happy day. I have tried hard to shake it off, but I can not, and oh, how I suffer! I see so many opportunities to do good, but am burdened by the sins of my boyhood. How I wish my parents had been Saints, but it is too late now.

If parents only knew the value of teaching their children purity and holiness how much sorrow we might be saved. My life is ruined, and where will I spend eternity? If my broken life would only be an example to other boys I might feel that I had not lived all in vain. I hate sin now, and I hope to live pure the rest of my life; but the good I might have done, if I had not sinned, is gone, and I regret it more than I can express in words.

Children should be taught to have confidence in their parents, so that when they are met with certain things they might go to their parents and ask them regarding those things, and then parents could tell them whether or not those things are pure and holy.

Oh, when we think of eternal life how wonderful it is, and on the other hand how terrible the suffering of sinners will be, oh, how we should strive to do right by our children! God has said in latter day revelation that he will require great things at the hands of parents, so parents should be very careful.

Some may think that children ought to know better than to do wrong, but let us remember that Satan is very powerful and he is doing all he can to overthrow the young people; and, as it is easy to sin and natural to do wrong, let all Saints and others try hard to tell the children the awful consequences of sin so that they may do their duty to God and be saved.

Your broken-hearted brother,

[We trust that the above letter will not only fill its mission of warning parents, but that it will also elicit a response from some of our elders showing the writer the sin and folly of his present position. We will gladly give space to such a communication.—EDITOR.]

Correction.

In the Home Column in our last issue (17th), by mistake all contributions listed therein were shown as having been placed in the hands of the Executive Committee. The gifts of clothing, merchandise, etc., and cash on page 59, and down to and including the item, "Feldhahn, pasturage," on page 60, should have been shown as having been received by the Children's Home. Beginning with the line, "Through Sister Kibler," the donations were properly shown as having been made to the Executive Committee.

Letter Department

From the Islands in the Southern Seas.

It has been several months since anything has been written to your columns from the southern seas, therefore I shall write a few lines as to the work of the Lord in this far off mission, where we are striving to hold aloft the banner of truth among the "dusky browns" of these isolated islands.

In the month of July, on his return to his native land, Brother Haworth, of Australia, spent one month with us, departing for New Zealand in the early part of August. In short, we will say that his visit with us was greatly enjoyed by all and will long be remembered.

Since the great island storm many of the Saints have been busily engaged at the printing work. We have printed almost eight hundred Sunday school quarterlies for the adults, and four hundred for the children, five hundred small tracts on temple building, in answer to the Mormons who have been boasting of "mighty works." This, together with the printing of the monthly issue of the mission paper, has kept us busy, as Brother and Sister Savage have spent a few months upon other islands, laboring diligently in the service of the Master.

We have been greatly assisted in our work through the efforts of Brother and Sister Charles Lake, who, although several thousand miles from us, had prepared the above-mentioned Sunday school books in the native language. We have also received several manuscripts from Brother Lake, of articles to be printed in the mission paper, and this has also been a great help to us. May the blessings of the Lord be abundantly granted unto our brother and sister, who now have a fervent desire to return to these fields according to General Conference appointment. We have oftentimes felt incapable of performing the many tasks required at our hands in consequence of the return of our brother and sister to America, and at various times, when troubles have arisen which were perplexing, we have found the Lord "a present help."

We realize that the natives have not as yet reached the spiritual condition desired of the Lord, and that they are prone to wander into forbidden paths, having a greater disposition, as a rule, to pattern after the evils brought here by foreigners than they have to follow strictly after the message of truth brought to them by the missionaries, yet we feel consoled in the fact that our own people are in advance of the average native. If we have sufficient missionaries to station one over every two or three islands, that is, about seven white missionaries over the twenty islands inhabited by the Saints, we believe that a much better condition would be attained by them. We have over twice as many members as the Mormons in this mission, but for years they have had about four times as many missionaries as we.

Since the great island storm many of the Saints have been in a scattered condition, and owing to the scarcity of missionaries they have been as sheep without a shepherd. Having been thus handicapped in their labors during the past few years. Brethren Burton and Lake deserve great credit for their untiring efforts.

Sister Macauley and daughter, of Independence, have been with us a few months. They arrived about one month before the arrival of a little May blossom and a little Savage. (Two new missionaries.)

We were also pleasantly surprised with a short visit from Brother J. D. White, who was on his way to Australia. His sermon to the natives was edifying. We rejoiced greatly in meeting those from our native land; also our brother from Australia.

We are pleased to report that the people of the priesthood company who were cut off from the church by Brother Burton because of their connection with that work, are at the present time assisting the Saints in the building of new chapels, and although the Mormons, the Seventh Day Adventists, and the Protestants have met with them, they firmly bear their testimony that they know that this is the true Church of Jesus Christ, and while they are considered apostates, they have left off many of the things for which they were condemned, and are meeting with the Saints and appear to be Saints indeed, at heart. All that stands between them and the church at present is they have not received the action of the High Council; that is, repent and be baptized. Three of them have done so since the last conference. Their leaders, however, are not as yet disposed to be rebaptized, but they are assisting in the work, one of them being chief carpenter in the construction of a new church building in the island of Kaukura. We are pleased with their present attitude toward the church.

The Saints in the island of Tahiti have been having special meetings every three months at our branch at Taronā, here and the one in Tiona, alternately, at which time various gospel topics have been discussed. These subjects have been printed in form of an invitation and were scattered among the friends of the Saints, the Mormons, Seventh Day Adventists, Protestants, and Catholics, special invitations to the pastors of these various denominations have also been sent that their congregations come and discuss the questions and subjects announced. One such meeting was held on Friday, November 24, within the stone wall at Taronā, in Papeete, and a feast was observed in the evening. Great opposition was made by the foreign missionaries of the mentioned churches, save the Mormons. One of our members went to the Catholic headquarters to invite a friend to the meeting, and while waiting at the door was met by one of their foreign missionaries, who asked what he desired. He said that he was waiting to meet a friend. He held a notice of the meeting in his hand. The Catholic missionary asked him what he had, and after being informed, asked permission to see it, and after reading it turned to our brother, saying with an angry voice, "Are you not tired of blinding the people in this manner?" at which time he tore the notice up into small pieces, throwing it at his feet.

The Seventh Day people and the Protestants being instructed not to come, the Saints were somewhat disappointed, but when the day set apart for the gathering arrived, a large number came at the noon hour, the Seventh Day Adventists and two branches of the Protestants from a small village about ten miles from Papeete, also others of Papeete, and there were also some Catholics who came, and these with our own two branches and about forty of the priesthood company (before mentioned) made quite a large assembly. A large gathering place had been prepared, and the various groups of singers were seated under this canvas-covered gathering place, and after all of the groups had sang one selection each, different ones would arise and give their interpretation of the various subjects, and while there was a diversity of opinions, they were expressed with the best of feelings one toward the other.

At night, after the feast, they again assembled, and it was a very large crowd which gathered. It was estimated by several that there were seven hundred people at the evening meeting. The nature of the subject discussed brought out the thought as to the proper method of baptism, and it was quite interesting. Of course it seemed to be a one-sided argument to us, and great good was probably done. These meetings have removed a great deal of prejudice from the minds of people, but have evidently angered the foreign missionaries sent to labor among them. Since the gathering I have heard that some of the people were met by their missionaries while on their way here and were told not to come, but they were answered by being asked if it was wrong to meet friends and exchange thoughts.

As my letter is somewhat lengthy I must close. Will say further, however, that Brother Savage is now in Rairoa and from there he will go to the island of Kaukura where the Saints are building a new chapel. The Saints are also building a fine large church in Rairoa which will be completed in time to be dedicated when conference convenes, which is to be held upon that island next April. Since conference there have been about twenty-five baptisms reported to me. We are also pleased to say that the island mission has been practically self-supporting financially for the past year and a half, and that besides the money for the Order of Enoch and the Christmas Offering sent to Bishop Kelley, there has also been about three hundred dollars collected for the building of a new chapel in Papeete.

May the Lord prosper his work in this, and in all parts of his vineyard, that the redemption of Zion, upon which our hearts have been so long centered, may speedily be accomplished, that the time may speedily be brought to pass when those of the islands of the sea and all other foreign fields may mingle their voices in song and testimony upon the land of Zion, praising the Lord for the restoration of the everlasting gospel and the regathering of his chosen people upon the promised land, which was formerly inhabited by the ancestors of the people among whom I have been appointed to labor.

Your brother in Christ,

J. CHAS. MAY.

Among the Lamanites.

We are perched away up in the top of the Rocky Mountains, wife, myself and three children.

Between the San Juan River and the southern boundary of Colorado, two or three miles south of the line is a flag station on the little toy railroad which loops out from the Denver & Rio Grande and retains the name of the parent road.

Although famous for neither music nor honey, this little collection of white-faced, red-topped buildings bears the name of Dulce (pronounced with long u and two syllables), the pure Latin word for sweet. Dulce is the agency town of the Jicarilla (hee-ca-re-ah) Apache Indian Reservation, and my wife and I happen to be serving the United States as house-keeper and teacher respectively in the La Jara day school which is hid among the hills about twenty miles south of Dulce.

We have fifteen pupils in attendance. The parents of the children live in a number of log huts in a cave near the schoolhouse. Each cabin has a fireplace built of adobe, which serves as both heater and ventilator, and in some instances as cook stove for the domicile.

These fireplaces are molded out of mud, and are two feet across, nearly round, and have an oblong opening in one side at the ground to stand up wood in and to throw out the heat. Occasionally you see a large pile of dobe which looks like an immense caldron kettle inverted, with a small opening in one side before which a flat rock is placed when in use. This is the community oven, and when used is filled with wood and covered likewise on the outside and fired until heated through and through, when the ashes are scraped away, the bread placed inside, and the opening closed with the flat rock and the bread baked as delicately as the city baker could do. But the oven is not always put into service, as the Indians are fond of making their bread into tortillas (tr-tee-ahs) a la Mexicano. They make the same as for biscuits, then cut into strips and fry it in a pan upon the open fire.

Like Isaac of old, these Lamanites are fond of savory meat, made from the goat, and their chief occupation is herding. When we first saw the small herds turned loose in the morning our mind was filled with visions of Old Testament times, and we thought of the many passages wherein the good Shepherd was said to lead the sheep for the goat, and sheep dogs do actually lead the flock here. These dogs are taken from their mother when quite young and trained to suckle a goat. Thus they are raised with the goats and when they reach the combative age they go before the flock and woe unto the stranger, either man or beast, who tries to molest one of the flock. He leadeth them beside the still water and maketh them to lie down in green pastures. If the goats swerve to the right or left Shep gallops across and soon takes his place in the van, as advance scout, and the goats usually follow where the dog leads.

During the day the flocks are allowed to scatter out, so as to feed with as much freedom as possible; but should it become necessary to bunch them up, the shepherd utters a peculiar cry, followed by a shrill whistle, and the sheep come around him as if seeking protection from some imminent danger.

My son and the forest ranger had occasion to take charge of two thousand sheep for violating the rules of the range and it kept them both busy all night riding around the flock to keep them together, but when the owner came and paid the fine the shepherd just stuck his finger in his mouth and made a peculiar whistle, when every sheep came moving toward him and he led them away. The sheep know the voice of the good Shepherd.

I have talked the Lamanite story to the chief and found him full of interest. He is an intelligent Indian and speaks Apache, Mexican, and English with more than ordinary ease.

There is a young missionary of Presbyterian faith located here, but he is working for the Reformed Church of America, as they have a better system of looking out for the missionaries, so he informed me. He is just from Princeton and has a working knowledge of Latin, Hebrew, and Greek, also some German, and is undertaking Mexican and Apache, but it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to convert the world, and maybe that is the way to reach the Apaches too.

We had a desire to tell the gospel story to these people, but there are some restrictions placed upon those employed in the schools in regard to teaching doctrine, and we have not been able to learn the limit of our liberty in that line, so are going slow; but when we are informed of the nature of the restrictions we are going to crowd right up to the dead line, and do our level best to shed a little light in their befogged minds.

Yours in bonds,
DULCE, NEW MEXICO. RUFUS B. BROWN.

News From Missions

Saskatchewan.

With the thermometer hovering around thirty below zero, the Saints of the Saskatchewan District, undaunted by the elements, met in conference capacity with the Minnesota Branch at Vanscoy on December 30 and 31. Whether it was due to the fact that joy bells were pealing forth the approach of the glad New Year, or a patriotic emotion emanated from Brother Kissick's red, white and blue, does not appear quite clear; at any rate, all present appeared unanimous in expressing the sentiment that it was one of the best conferences they ever attended.

This was the second conference that has been held with the Minnesota Branch within a year, and the Saints at Vanscoy believe they can verify the axiom, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Their hospitality is only exceeded by their generosity, and in the words of Washington Irving: "It breaks through the chills of ceremony and selfishness and thaws every heart into a glow."

Religio and Sunday school convention convened on the 28th and the 29th, followed by the conference, as above stated, the details of which will be supplied in due course by the district secretaries. Among the items of new business, a motion to divide the district was made, which was left on the table for one year, after calling forth a number of speeches, pro and con. It was agreed that a division of the district at the present time could not be entertained as being in the best interests of all concerned, as the work is still in its infancy in the west and a division would materially affect the growth of isolated branches and districts. Saskatchewan being one of the largest districts in the church, the railway fares and items of expense during conference time were no small consideration, and while many were of the opinion that ultimately, the best interests of the work would be served by perhaps two or more divisions, the time for the first division was yet for a future date.

A colonization scheme was another important announcement, as made by the district president, who has all the details of this undertaking in hand and which will undoubtedly develop into a boom for the work in western Canada.

The Saints were pleased to have Elders J. L. Mortimer and J. W. Peterson of the missionary staff with them, and a number of good, instructive sermons were delivered. The school where the meetings were held is in the extreme eastern part of the district from where the Saints are living, which necessitated a drive for most of them of from three to five miles. Tables were spread in the school and lunch served in picnic style. The time and place of the next conference was left in the hands of the district president.

C. V. SMITH.

Utah.

I have been an interested reader of the HERALD and Ensign for a long time, but this is my first attempt to write anything for others to read. I have just lately completed a trip into southern Utah with father, going as far south as the railway does, and doing what we could for the furtherance of the cause in the intervening towns. We had in all a good trip, considering the circumstances under which one must labor in this part of the field. We obtained the use of the Mormon church for our services in two of the towns, which in itself was quite an opening of the heart and hand on their part. We found, in the main, the people willing to attend and listen, though in places counseled not to, and in some places we had an exceptionally good interest, and some of the people asking us to see them every day and bring our books, and then sitting up, reading those books and our literature, and comparing them with their own, till the small hours of the morning. And in one place a teacher in the Utah Church assisted us in tracting the town, and gave an announcement of the meetings and an invitation to attend in every house. Such things make the work seem lighter because we can see results. For the most part we used the house of our Methodist and Presbyterian friends, only on two occasions having to use the schoolhouse.

I will relate a little incident that shows the attitude of a great many people here in Utah towards us, and the truth we bring. I was holding meetings in a little town in the Methodist chapel, and a former Methodist mission teacher, then a public school-teacher, told me of a family whom she thought would be interested in my message of repentance to this people, living about five miles out of town. So I walked down the railroad track to their ranch, arriving just as they were sitting down to an early dinner (11.30). I introduced myself and at first they took me for a Utah missionary and began telling me how I was the first to call on them in something like ten years of their residence there. Of course I soon set them right on that score and then we settled down for a good talk that lasted till six in the evening, and as I had a goodly presence of the Spirit, we all profited by it. I found that they were Mormons only in church membership, and Josephites in belief, and as they had paid no tithing to the Mormon Church for years on account of the transgression of the leaders, they had not a very good standing as members of that church.

We find a good many people with the same inclination towards our message, and the Lord helping, we expect the truth to reach them soon.

Yours for the furtherance of the cause,
CHAS. S. CHASE.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, January 11, 1912.

Australia.

Realizing that my letters would lose much of their interest after leaving Palestine, I have not burdened your pages very much since. It occurred to me that a few lines from this far-away land might be of interest to some, as your correspondents in this country do not seem to be very numerous.

We have been in Australia nearly six months, having arrived at Fremantle last June. Here we met a little band of warm-hearted Saints, presided over by Elder Edwin Davies. The branch is small, and the members hold their meetings in a private house and on the street. They have secured a lot and expect to erect a church in the near future. We remained a month with them and were made very welcome. I preached twice on the street with good liberty, and an excellent interest was manifested. I believe a good work could be done here, if a proper effort were made. Some of the members are feeling just a little disappointed that they can not secure a little missionary help, especially as they are liberal with their means. But we trust their turn will come before long. I almost promised to return and assist in the opening of their new church, provided they had it ready before I left for home. I trust I shall be able to do this, though it will be a long way to travel back, nearly two thousand miles.

Our next stopping place was Adelaide. Here we met a warm welcome by the Saints, who had prepared a reception for us at the hospitable home of Mr. and Sister McGrath, the evening we arrived, and we were soon made acquainted with the Saints, and were made to enjoy our month's stay with them. The kindness extended to us by Mr. and Sister McGrath during our sojourn in their city will not be soon forgotten. The Saints have not a church, but they, too, think of erecting one, and are raising a fund to that end. Elder J. W. Davis, the American missionary, has charge of the work there, and is doing well. They hold their Sunday services in a good hall near the center of the city. I secured an excellent hearing; on one or two occasions, the hall being full. Elder Davis and Elder Dyke baptized some seven or eight, and some others were investigating.

August 21 we reached Melbourne, and were kindly provided for at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Ford. Here we made our home for three months, and shall not forget the kindness shown us. The Saints have a good church here, but they were rather worse off than if they had none, as the building was heavily mortgaged, for more, so I was told, than the building was worth. And then, too, it was rather unfortunately located, where there were but few Saints, the Saints being badly scattered, and the cost for car fare to attend church is no small item. So, after hurriedly taking in the situation, I pretty nearly decided that I would be able to do little good here, and was anxious to move on, but was prevailed upon to stay and hold a series of meetings. This I consented to do, and by the help of the three missionaries, Brethren Jones, Robertson, and Longfield, who worked faithfully in advertising my meetings, good audiences were secured, and the effort was a decided success. To God be all the praise. To still further help along the good work, Elder Butterworth, the missionary in charge, came over from Geelong, and succeeded in persuading the Saints to lift a portion of their church debt, nearly half, to the great surprise of all. So we left the branch in much better condition and trust it will now prosper and accomplish a good work in that great city. While in Melbourne, we visited the other branches in the district, including Geelong, Hastings, and Glen Forbs.

We spent a few weeks with Brother and Sister Butterworth and family in Geelong and greatly enjoyed the pleasant times with them. Trust the Lord will bless them for their many kindnesses. We held meetings in each of these places, and were associated with Elder Butterworth. I baptized nine at Geelong, the fruits of others' labor. After three months labor, where we had only expected to stay a month, we bade a host of friends good-bye and proceeded to Sydney, the city we had booked for from New York, about fifteen months before.

On landing in this city we were met by a delegation from both branches, the Balmain and the Leichardt, and received a warm welcome. We also, in connection with Elder Haworth, who had just returned from America, were given a public reception, where addresses of welcome, recitations, and music were the order of the evening. Of course we all had a good time. We were kindly entertained by Brother and Sister Prescott, the first two weeks. The first Sunday here I was called upon to baptize four. Some others have been baptized since, and I understand there are others to be baptized next Sunday. This indicates that the work is onward. I held a series of meetings in Leichardt Branch with good interest, and expect to hold a series of meetings in the Balmain Branch after the holidays.

I am kept very busy; in fact we are both kept busy, for Rose assists me in all my work, and people say we make a good team. I appreciate her help in music and at the typewriter especially. I have given over one hundred and twenty blessings in the last six months, and have been greatly blessed myself in this line of work. It seems to revive the Saints more than anything else. I can understand now why a patriarch is called a "revivalist."

Our district conference convenes the first of next month at New Castle. That will be our next stopping place. We hope to be able to visit all the branches in the mission during the next year. We expect to make our headquarters at Sydney, however; so this will be our permanent address.

I would like to tell you more about the people and the work in general over here, but I think, with many others, that long articles in our church publications are a mistake. I usually pass them by myself in favor of the short articles.

We were pleased to read in late HERALD that the work is prospering in Jerusalem. God bless the little band in that city, and may the work continue to grow.

I noted the statement, too, in Brother Jenkins' letter, that on Thursday afternoon the "gifts of the Spirit" were enjoyed for the first time in Jerusalem for many centuries. This, I take it, is a slip of the pen, so to speak, in that the gift of prophecy was manifested, perhaps. For I can hardly think that the brother thought that Brother Griffiths and the writer labored for six months in that city without the manifestation of some of the gifts of the Spirit. Sister Carr can bear testimony that the gift of healing was manifested in her behalf. And Brother Griffiths had the gift of prophecy in a certain blessing he gave while in the city. I call attention to this because sometimes some of the Saints forget that the gifts of faith, wisdom, healing, and other spiritual gifts are just as much the gifts of the Spirit as are the gifts of tongues or prophecy. I trust the little band in Jerusalem may be richly blessed with the Holy Spirit, and Brother and Sister Jenkins will be greatly blessed in their work there.

While in Sydney we are being kindly cared for at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Seaberg. This is the home Brother Wells and others have been made welcome in, and we trust that the Lord may abundantly bless them and all the others, who have so kindly ministered unto us.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., AUSTRALIA, December 14, 1911.

Michigan.

F. Z. Burkett, an evangelist of the Church of Christ, came down from Bangor and opened up in the academy, later in their church building, cutting and searing the isms, notably "Mormonism," "Spiritualism," and "Christian Science." His slanderous statements and misrepresentations were accompanied by a challenge to our people to prove that the Book of Mormon came forth as it is claimed by its believers. Brother H. N. Robertson called us by phone and the "wire" was followed by a brief letter from Elder J. D. F. Earle.

We arrived on Tuesday afternoon and the same eve attended the evangelist's services. A question box was patronized by our Brother Earl, with the query "Does not the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints oppose polygamy more than any religious body in the world?" The Reverend gentleman had previously filed us on the same wire with Utahism, and the answer to this question was looked for with anxiety, but he "slobbered" over it, evading the answer, saying, "If they do oppose polygamy we give them the right hand of fellowship," and "If Joe Smith preached the gospel, we give him the hand."

Closing his service, he walked down the aisle, and we were introduced. He talked, his tongue running like a flutter-mill, telling where he had been and what he had done. When the opportunity offered, I said: "As you are so well acquainted with places and things, you should have given the audience a direct answer to Elder Earl's question." After some explanation he replied, "I know you people oppose polygamy."

"Then," said I, "why didn't you so inform the congregation when dealing with the question?"

He grew indignant, said we came there to break up their services. He ordered us out of doors, threatened to arrest us, accused us of falsifying, said the Mormons would stick to each other, right or wrong, that was the Mormon tactics, asserted that we had defiled the church of God, and they would not permit me to go into their pulpit. I had informed him that the challenge he "hung out" was accepted, and nothing he could say would release him from the responsibility. 'Twas either come to time or crawfish. We were as quiet and polite as we knew how to be, hence we knew what power was raging in his heart. He would come to no terms then, or meet us nowhere in Hartford to arrange—nowhere but Bangor, Michigan, his home. We told him we would go to Bangor. Next day he sent the local pastor to Brother Harry Robertson's jeweler's shop, and had reconsidered the matter of going to Bangor to arrange for debate, and for us to write propositions for him to consider. We jotted down four,—two church propositions, one Book of Mormon, and one revelatory proposition.

The matter is in his hands, but we have heard nothing from him. We will not wait here for his ultimatum very long, as we are not engaged in any services—can not very well run counter to prior announced protracts, and we have work at other points. He has said that he would debate, but would not be interrupted in the series of meetings. This is all right. He is wonderfully developed in ego, and expansive in pettifoggery, and concentrated,—self-centered in bull dozing. But to get the work before the people is the object of the brethren.

We have submitted a prefatory statement to the people through the Hartford Day Spring, and the failure of the evangelist, and local pastor of the Church of Christ, to give us an ultimatum in reasonable time, will call forth the propositions submitted to them, printed on "slips," and scattered like autumn leaves. Brother H. N. Robertson will see that this is done, and the people will be informed.

News from Branches

Omaha, Nebraska.

Our choir and the Walnut Hill Methodist choir gave the "First Christmas" cantata at our church Sunday morning, December 24, and at their church in the evening of the same day. We were shown respect by our Methodist brethren and sisters, with but one or two exceptions and our people carried themselves well. This may lead to the removal of some prejudice; at least we hope so.

The Sunday school entertainment, while not a very elaborate affair, was well rendered, especially the children's part. A treat of candy and nuts was distributed to everyone present. The church was well filled. Decorating committee did good work with the holiday church decorations.

Religio and Sunday school institute of Fremont, Pottawatomie, and Northern Nebraska districts, met Friday evening, December 29, at 8 p. m. President F. M. Smith gave us a couple of lectures on auxiliary work, which were very much appreciated. Brother J. A. Gunsolley lectured on normal work and grading of schools and uniformity of lesson text. The latter called up quite a discussion, but the beloved president of Graceland is too mild tempered a man to allow any arguments to ruffle him at all, so nothing came up to mar the general peace of the meeting.

Saturday and Sunday were occupied with morning, afternoon, and evening sessions, ending Sunday night with love as the theme.

Brethren Columbus Scott, Peter Anderson, and T. A. Hougas were also with us and in evidence, as also was Sister Hougas.

We in Omaha are looking forward to a spiritual awakening which is already beginning to be made manifest. Pray for us.

Your brother,

W. E. STOFT.

Independence, Missouri.

Considering the intensely cold weather of the past two weeks, no complaint is forthcoming concerning the attendance at the usual meetings.

On January 7, Elder J. W. Rushton preached in the morning and Brother Jesse Roberts in the evening. The services were excellent, together with the one held in the afternoon, when old and young united to partake of the sacrament. The mercury registered ten to fifteen degrees below for many days, and destitution and suffering have been heard of all around us, especially in Kansas City. The Associated Charities here have been busy supplying the needy, and have merited and received high commendation from every Christian man and woman in the community.

On Sunday the 14th the snow was deep and the air icy cold, but Elder Joseph Luff discoursed before a large and appreciative audience in the morning, and the three meetings in the afternoon, the Men's League, the young ladies' meeting, and the regular prayer service, were well attended. Among the names mentioned for prayers were those of our afflicted brethren, I. N. White, P. Peterson, G. H. Hilliard and others; also Sister L. Crick, who in consequence of a recent affliction has suffered much. Brother White, in making mention of his impaired health, intimated going by way of Denver and San Francisco to Los Angeles on Friday the 19th, in order to regain his health. The closing hour of the afternoon was occupied by the younger sisters in a meeting presided over by Sister Grace Krahl, who introduced as speaker, Sister Ruth Smith, and she was ably assisted by Sister Audientia Anderson, who favored the audience with appropriate songs.

President F. M. Smith was chosen to address the Saints in the evening, and his excellent effort was preceded by the usual monthly sacred concert given by the choir.

We can not speak too highly of the fine, instructive effort of Sister Ruth Smith, who with delicacy and earnestness touched, perhaps indirectly, and by comparison, upon the many obstacles in the way of many young girls toward reaching a true standard of usefulness, morality, and virtue, while urging on to higher attainments: Such a lesson as she imparted, also the one by Brother J. F. Garver as published in the HERALD'S last issue, on the subject of Parental Responsibility, lead the reflective mind to criticize somewhat unfavorably the vain manners and customs prevailing among the pleasure seeking, scantily-robed women of the world, with their adornment of needless furs and costly feathers, high, clicking heels, and grotesque hats. And we fain would hesitate mentioning further the follies of a modern "made-up" follower of the vain and unbelieving goddess, Pride; but may the Spirit of revealed truth, which has led its children hitherto, ever keep them safely guarded against such things within the sacred fold, and many of our brethren and sisters be raised up to lead the young and teach the principles of the narrow way. Exceeding cold weather, registering fifteen to twenty degrees, continued until the 18th, when a great change took place, a general thaw setting in.

On Tuesday, the 9th, the sad news of the demise of our young brother, Vernon Crick, was sent out to anxiously waiting friends, and on the 11th his obsequies took place at the Stone Church. On this day also our beloved brother, Joshua C. Nunn, passed away; and thus two of our brethren have been called away, in the very prime of life, and have left many loving relatives and friends to mourn their early departure. Many comforting words were spoken over their remains, which were covered with choicest tokens of love and sympathy, Brethren R. Bullard and William Aylor preaching the sermons, respectively, and we are reminded of the comforting words,

"There's a voice—a small, still voice,
That comes when the storm is past;
It bids the sufferer's heart rejoice,
In the haven of peace, at last:
It tells of joys beyond the grave
And of Him who died, a world to save."

May this be the comforting hope of every suffering and mourning Saint.

No one was ever more willing and anxious to help in the church work than he. For the last two years he has assisted in mission work at Englewood, where he was superintendent of the Sunday school and president of the Religio. He married Louise Roeder, September 6, 1903, who is the chief mourner. He leaves father, mother, five brothers, and three sisters. Sermon by W. M. Aylor, assisted by G. E. SOCIALISM DEFENDED.

In the HERALD for December 20 there appeared an article entitled "A sidelight." This article reviewed the situation in Los Angeles during the trial of the McNamara brothers and the part taken by Socialists in their defense. The article contained a severe arraignment of the Socialist Party on the ground that it encourages an appeal to force and violence and aims at the overthrow of the Government and the Constitution. At the time we announced that we would publish the best article of similar length to be received defending the Socialist movement providing the article should not be in direct reply to other articles previously published (this to forestall any prolonged discussion between individuals in which principle might at last take secondary place and personalities become most prominent, as sometimes happens.)

We have received a number of articles, some of which ignore the conditions imposed. Brother Victor W. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, writes, his line of argument being that no one now blames the Republican Party for an appeal to force of arms in 1860, though the appeal might have been avoided had the people heeded Joseph Smith's advice to purchase the slaves; Moses was a radical labor leader who slew an Egyptian who was oppressing laborers, and in this regard was like the McNamaras; Jesus said that he came not to bring peace but a sword, and was accused of plotting to overthrow the Government and make himself king, also appealed to force when he scourged the money changers from the temple; Nephi killed Laban; when a Republican or Democrat orator shouts, "Give me liberty or give me death," he is cheered, but when a Socialist expresses a similar sentiment he is an anarchist; and lastly that though an appeal to arms might be proper Socialists advise using ballots instead of bullets.

Arthur W. Gorbutt, of Seattle, writes that he has been employed as railroad man and later as United States letter carrier for twenty-two years and has come in close contact with all classes of Socialists; since the McNamara case every little mediocre newspaper has echoed the sentiments of the leading dailies, which are controlled by "big business," and as molders of opinion are false, prejudiced, and worthless; postage on such stuff should be increased about eight times, while religious and educational matter should go free; years ago we spelled dynamite when we refused the demand of determined and desperate workers; a change in the affairs of the world is bound to come; should the working class awake suddenly to its true condition the days of the French Commune would be outdone; wealthy men and corporations constantly break the laws and are as guilty as the McNamaras; churches are full of rich people who are singing empty music while streets are full of the hungry and unemployed; old parties are dying and Socialism will be a very lively issue in the future; the time will come when the Lord will touch the lips of his servants with coals of fire and they will offer the true panacea to the nations.

Brother J. A. Anthony, of San Francisco, thinks that we of all people should be most fair and should approach the question of Socialism without prejudice; we should go to the platform of the party to discover its principles, and not to the statements of irresponsible laymen; when in his street preaching he is asked to define his position on Socialism he does not denounce it in harsh language, he proceeds to read section 101, paragraph 2, of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, setting forth the Lord's plan regarding temporal matters; also explains the object of the Order of Enoch and the position of the church on equality.

Ere long we shall publish an article on this subject, when we have heard from others and decide which one is entitled to first place under the rules laid down.

A WORD OF TRIBUTE.

Before passing into the last stages of the sear and yellow leaf of life I feel it incumbent upon me to give the meed of credit to such of my fellow men and associates in the church as is their just due. Those of the readers of the HERALD who are also readers of the History know that my name is coupled with that of Brother Heman C. Smith as associate historians. This writing will serve to show that the work which I performed in getting out the history was practically a secondary one. The real work of gathering the data and arranging the material so gathered into its historic form was done by Brother Heman C. Smith, assisted in the labor part of it by Brother D. F. Lambert.

About the only practical work done by me was that done by the supervising committee, consisting of Brethren Charles Derry, W. H. Kelley, Joseph R. Lambert, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and myself. I shared this work with the others of the committee, and the work was perfunctory rather than original, consisting of the duty of taking from or adding to the written work read to us in committee sittings of such things as our memories and our judgment decided would help or mar the general character of the work, as the case might be.

The real credit for the volume and symmetry of the work is due to Brother Heman C. Smith, the now active historian of the church. I make this statement as a tribute of justice to Brother Smith, so that it may be known and credit be given where it is due, "lest I forget." JOSEPH SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 24, 1912.

ATTENTION.

The attention of the eldership who received a personal letter from the President is called to the words "their number" as noted in question twenty. The words "their number" refer to those mentioned in the opening portion of paragraph 11, section 104, of the Doctrine and Covenants. The quotation marks were an error. JOSEPH SMITH.

SELF-RELIANCE.

There is a time in every man's experience when he arrives at the conclusion that envy is ignorance; that imitation is suicide; that he must take himself for better, or worse, as his portion; that though the wide universe is full of good, no kernel of nourishing corn to come to him but through his toil bestowed on that plot of ground which is given him to till. The power which resides in him is new in nature, and none but he knows what that is which he can do, nor does he know until he has tried. Therefore, my text is, Trust thyself. Is it not an iron string to which vibrates every heart?

What I must do is all that concerns me, not what people think. It is easy to live in the world after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after your own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the turmoil of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.

The objection to conforming to usages that have become dead to you is that it scatters your force. It loses your time and blurs the impression of your character. If you maintain a dead church, contribute to a dead bible society, vote with a great party either for the government or against it, spread your table like base housekeepers—under all these screens I have difficulty to detect the precise man you are. But do your work and I shall know you. Do your work and you shall reinforce yourself.

The other terror which scares us from self-trust is our consistency; a reverence for our past act or word, because the eyes of others have no other data for computing our orbit than our past acts, and we are loath to disappoint them. A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds, adored by little statesmen and philosophers and divines. With consistency a great soul has simply nothing to do. He may as well concern himself with his shadow on the wall. Speak what you think—to be great is to be misunderstood.

Insist on yourself; never imitate. Your own gift you can present every moment with the cumulative force of a whole life's cultivation; but of the adopted talent of another you have only an extemporaneous, half possession. That which each can do best, none but his Maker can teach him. Where is the master who could have taught Shakespeare? Where is the master who could have instructed Franklin, or Washington, or Bacon, or Newton? Every great man is unique. Shakespeare will never be made by the study of Shakespeare. Do that which is assigned to you and you can not hope too much or dare too much. There is at this moment for you an utterance brave and grand as that of the colossal chisel of Phidias, or trowel of the Egyptians, or the pen of Moses or Dante, but different from all these. Abide in the simple and noble regions of thy life, obey thy heart and thou shalt reproduce the master works of the world again.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IN EXPLANATION.—By one of those peculiar happenings Brother Walter W. Smith's letter in this issue has been considerably delayed, as also the report of the Pittsburg and Kirtland reunion. While getting a desk ready for removal from our office we discovered these letters, which had in some way fallen behind the drawers, and but for the removal might have remained undiscovered indefinitely. We make this explanation to the brethren interested and trust it will be satisfactory.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING FOR GRACELAND?

Yes; what are you doing; or don't, you care whether Graceland sinks or swims?

"Oh, well," says one, "I didn't have a chance to go to college; let others do as I did."

Is that the spirit of "love your neighbor as yourself"?

Another says, "Graceland is no part of the church."

Is it not one of the helps to do the "work intrusted to all"?

"Don't need education to preach the gospel," says another. "The Lord will give you what you should say."

Yes; but upon what conditions? "Treasure up in your minds continually the words of life." Does that mean prepare or not? "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith." "Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning." What is a house of learning? (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.) "And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten . . . to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 12.

"Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in no wise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

Is a college to train our young men and women in the knowledge of "history," "countries," "kingdoms," and laws and how to deliver a message when you have one, a good work? Think it over. Does an education hinder or help us in being "laborers together with God"?

"Oh," says one, "the sectarians do that."

Well, suppose they do; is all they do wrong? We have been told that "It is better to be a sectarian and right than unsectarian and wrong."

Paul said he was all things to all men, that it might by all means save some. If you go into the pulpit and use poor English, strangers are apt to say: "That man doesn't know much." So to be the best means of attracting them at first you must have the best possible preparation. That will be one of the means of helping "to save some."

I remember when I was a boy in Nevada I persuaded my teacher to go to hear one of our elders, and after the discourse I said, "How did you like the sermon?" Her reply was, "Oh, he used adjectives for adverbs, and the wrong tense." She concluded he knew but little.

I thought, I'll try to not do that if ever I should be a preacher; so when I got a chance I studied grammar. I did not have much chance, however, as I had to work six months of the twelve and do chores for my board. I had to get up at 4 a. m. and milk thirteen cows before breakfast; chop wood for three fires; boil potatoes for, and feed the hogs before I went to school. Did not have to boil the potatoes every day, but had to keep sufficient on hand. That is one reason why I want to see every boy and girl that is willing, have the chance to get an education.

We ought not to be indifferent toward others because we did not have a chance. I know the need of a chance. When I was fifteen I went to school and the teacher was a man. He was very proficient in grammar. We were talking of religion and he was surprised to find a boy so well informed. He said: "Charley, you teach me religion, and I'll teach you grammar, I'll take special pains with you, for," he said, "you'll be a preacher some day and need grammar." So I did my best to teach him and he joined the church. I did the best I could in the time I had with grammar, and I know enough not to use adjectives for adverbs, or to say, "I seen a man," or "I knowed a man," or "he runs slow," or "time passes slow," as the man with whom my teacher found fault.

Neither my wife nor myself have too much education, but we are willing to do what we can to help some one else know how to engage in business or tell the people what they ought to do to be saved; how to obtain the "good will" of the great Creator so they will be approved by him when they go to the other side. We ought to be prompt in fulfilling our obligations too. When we agree to do anything, do it, and if we find we can not, say so.

As a people we ought to get out of the rut of not being willing for others to have more knowledge than just what we have.

Yours for Graceland,

CHARLES A. PARKIN.

Nothing in this life is worth while, to a man worth while, except achievement, successful accomplishment. And what is achievement except making perfect that which was imperfect, and making beautiful that which was hideous?—Selected.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST IS THE TRUE SCIENCE OF LIFE.

"I am the way the truth and the life."—John 14: 16.

We understand the word science to convey the thought that science is truth demonstrated and made manifest to the mind of one who is honestly seeking the truth. If that which purports to be truth can not be demonstrated, it is not truth, and is therefore not scientific.

With this statement before us we wish to set before the reader Jesus Christ as the true science of life. We have that in the world to-day which is called Christian Science, but we declare it to be false, and not truth, because it does not see in Jesus Christ the origin of life. It only sees him as one who shows the way of truth.

Jesus did say: "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

Beloved reader, do not lose sight of this fact—for fact it is—and we hope to be able to prove it to you, as it has been demonstrated to us by the Spirit of truth.

As to the way: Jesus is the only way—the truth and the life. "For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to his Son to have life in himself."—John 5: 26. "No man cometh unto the Father, [hence to the life] but by me."—John 14: 6. This shows him to be the Son through whom the life flows—the true vine of life.

He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness [of the life] in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.—1 John 5: 10-12. (Read also 1 John 1: 1, 2, also first part of John 1.)

When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.—Colossians 3: 4.

Christ in you, the hope of glory.—Colossians 1: 27.

We might fill pages from the testimonies of men who wrote the Bible, whose testimonies we have believed; and because we have believed this record God hath given of his Son and we know we have received the witness in ourselves, and have passed from death unto life. Christ, the life, and Spirit of truth, beareth record to my spirit that I have received of the bread of life, and thereby became a Son of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ—a branch grafted into the true vine. Therefore the life of the Father floweth unto me through the Son, the true vine of life—in like manner as the sap of the vine of earth flows to all its branches. But do not lose sight of the fact that the vine of the earth draws its life from the earth. So also does the Son, the vine of our life, draw his life from the Father, who is spirit and life.

Now all this is truth, and the believer who has received like precious faith, and the witness in himself, will hear the voice of God bearing witness to his Spirit that it is truth. Yet to the man who has not believed it is not truth because it hath not yet been demonstrated to his mind. To him it is only the testimony of other men. Dear reader, if you are one of this kind; if you want to know the truth; if you will open the door of your mind, we, by the Spirit of truth, will demonstrate the life to you according to a scientific standpoint.

You must believe before you can get the witness in yourself; also, that this belief or faith comes not of yourself. It is the gift of God saith Paul. Jesus said: "No man can come unto me except the Father draw him." How, then, will the Father draw him? He must create faith in the man before he can draw him to his Son for life and salvation. How does he create the faith? Paul says, "By the foolishness of preaching." He will save them that believe, but not by foolish preaching. It is written that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved; but Paul asks, "How then shall they call upon him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent [with something to preach]?"—Romans 10: 14, 15.

This was demonstrated to about three thousand people on the day of Pentecost, when Peter stood up full of the Spirit of life and preached Jesus whom they had crucified—that God had given him for the life of the world, and raised him from the dead. He thus demonstrated to them that Jesus was the Son of God, the Redeemer and the Holy One of Israel, promised to them by the Holy Ghost through the prophets. As Peter thus preached the word of life that was made flesh and called Jesus, they, that is three thousand of them, heard the voice of God calling, and drawing them to the Son for life. Then they believed and began to call upon God, saying: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Then Peter, (unto whom was given the keys of the kingdom of heaven, which means power and authority to administer the ordinances thereof and admit to citizenship those who make proper application) said unto them, "Repent, and be baptized everyone of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and (then) ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 37, 38. Then you shall receive the witness in yourselves.

Now we want to give you a thought here that has been given us of the Spirit. It is given for saint and sinner, believer and unbeliever, and the record that God hath given of his Son will bear me out that it is truth. The thought is that Jesus Christ is the remission of sins, and not baptism as has been supposed. Baptism is the door unto Jesus Christ whom God hath given to take away the sins of the world. "Behold the Lamb of God," says John, "that taketh away the sins of the world." If he takes them away then they are remitted, and no man's sins can be remitted outside of Jesus Christ; and no man can get into Jesus Christ except he is baptized into him. Paul says, "He that is baptized into Christ hath put on Christ." Thus, Peter laid down the conditions to which all ("even as many as the Lord our God shall call") shall have to comply in order to be grafted into Christ, the vine of life.

Again we wish to say that our baptism in water alone, without proper repentance, will never be accompanied by Christ, the one Spirit of life. Hence we may be baptized in water a thousand times and yet remain out of the vine, and void of the life of Christ. For, remember this, that the life is not in the ordinances of the gospel of Christ, but in the Christ, and the ordinances are the means that God hath ordained by which the children of men can get into Christ and become the children of God. The ordinances are a means to an end. The end is Christ.

Romans 3:25 shows that the remission of sins is in Christ and not in the ordinances of baptism. The principle of forgiveness is essential to salvation, but forgiveness is not salvation. Without it, however, no man can be saved, for all have sinned, broken the law of life in Christ Jesus, and come short of the glory of God, which glory is eternal life. Hence, if God would not forgive our sins we would for ever remain cut off from the tree of life—even Jesus, the true vine, the hidden manna.

Oh, reader, give ear to what we are about to write unto you, for the Spirit of the Lord is upon us. He hath anointed us to preach unto you Jesus, the bread of life. Yea, to open the eyes of those who have eyes wide open, but see not; who have ears but hear not. Why? Because ye have not been able to look behind the ordinances of the gospel of Christ and discern the true bread of life. Therefore many of the holy ordinances become unto you a dead form, and, as Paul wrote to the Hebrews: become dead works; by which ye lay the foundation for repentance from. Yea, many of you have become as the Jews of old, who killed sacrifices and offered them to God as a dead form. They did not see Christ foreshadowed in those sacrifices. All they could see was an offended God, and they thought that he delighted in the blood of bulls and goats; that their blood would appease his wrath. I say unto you that many who profess to believe in Jesus Christ will turn away when we declare unto you, Except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of man, even the man Christ Jesus, ye have no life in you. Yea, you go to church and partake of the bread and wine and discern not the Lord's body in the emblems. For this cause many now, as in the days of Paul, are sick, and many sleep. (See 1 Corinthians 11.) This holy ordinance that God hath ordained for the transmission of the hidden manna from the body of his Son (which is the head of the holy priesthood) to the branches, the members of his body, through the under priests who transfer the Spirit which is the hidden manna, from the glorified body of Christ to the bread and wine by their hands coming in contact with the emblems. By the prayer he has given for the blessing thereof, we declare in the name of Jesus, that he who can not see this all in all central truth is as blind as the Jews were when they said: This is a hard saying. How can this man give us his flesh to eat? and left off following him—except the twelve.

Many will call the writer a false prophet because he speaks the words of truth and not the traditions of men. But if you see not this truth and partake of the bread and wine, it is a dead form unto you. No matter whether you are member, priest, or elder, I spare you not; you have no life in you and have need to be taught again the first principles of the doctrine of Christ; yea, you have not gotten rid of the traditions of your fathers which look upon God as an angry God; that because Adam sinned, God is angry with all of Adam's race; that nothing but the blood of the innocent child Jesus would appease his wrath; or, as some teach, satisfy his divine justice.

Such a thought is an insult to the justice of God! Get thee hence, Satan; it is from thee and not from him who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son. The only one of the sons ordained to come to this world that did not sin. Hence the only one that he could give for the life of the world; that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Therefore we declare unto all men, saint and sinner, that when man fell, he fell from the divine nature, the image of God, to the animal nature—the image of the beast—and as the beast dieth so dieth man except he is restored to the garden of God where he can put forth his hand and partake of the tree of life and live for ever. The beasts of the field were not created to live in the flesh for ever, but man was; provided he keep the law of life. This is shown in the command, "Thou shalt not eat . . . for in the day ye eat thereof ye shall surely die." Then the truth is, had Adam not eaten he would not have died. Then the seed of man became corrupted by the serpent. Then God set in operation the law of purification, to purify the seed of man. This law operated from Seth, who was given the place of Abel, whom Cain slew, on down the line until God called Abraham out as a distinct channel through which the seed should flow till one was born pure and undefiled—a lamb without a blemish, a second Adam, the express image of God. This Adam is also to multiply and replenish the earth; not by the will of the flesh but by the will of God. But this Adam, (Jesus) can not fulfill this command if he abide alone. Therefore God hath ordained for him a wife. But he must be put to sleep that a rib may be taken from his side to make him a wife. This Jesus foretells when he saith, "Except a corn of wheat fall in the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

Therefore I testify unto every man that reads these lines that the gospel of Christ is calling men and women to become the bride of the Lamb without blemish. And while the Lamb sleeps the bride is being formed from his body—bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh, and when this world sees the second coming of Christ they will see him glorified in his saints; his wife produced from that very body that hung between heaven and earth on the cross; which body was glorified as it was received in the cloud of spirit and was thus made a quickening spirit which, when received into our mortal bodies and not grieved by sin, continues to dwell with us, and shall also quicken our mortal bodies. So saith Paul, and it is truth. When this takes place, behold the first resurrection, not from a hole in the ground as you have supposed, but from among those who are dead in trespasses and sin; from among those who, as Jesus said, have no life in them. And "Let the dead bury the dead, but come thou and follow me." These are they that are dead in the living Christ, who said, Because I live, ye shall live also. These are they who are dead to the world with its afflictions and lusts, but are on the earth (not asleep in it), waiting for the change, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. These are the virgins of the Lamb, waiting for the marriage of the Spirit and flesh and bone to take place; after which bride and bridegroom, as the second Adam and Eve, Christ and his glorified church, shall proceed to bring forth the fathers that have fallen asleep in Jesus. This will take a thousand years. The fathers will receive their bodies from the bodies of the bride, the children of the fathers; for while they all died in the faith they received not the promise, for they without us can not be made perfect. (See Hebrews 11.) Theirs is the sixty fold salvation, while those of the first resurrection who sleep not in the earth receive the hundred fold salvation, which one hundred means perfection, and death can have no power over them, and they will receive the same bodies which were their natural bodies.

The Lord has told us, through Joseph Smith the Prophet, to search for it, and we will find a mine of truth revealed therein.

The thirty fold salvation is for those whose spirits are saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, after the suffering of his wrath, who hath been delivered over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh and bone, but are redeemed from the power of the Devil and are become ministering spirits to other worlds, by which they, by good works in the spirit shall be counted worthy to be born again upon some other earth, but not this one. For it is written in the Doctrine and Covenants that where God and Christ are they can not come, worlds without end, yet he says they shall be heirs of salvation. But further we will not write—they are in God's hands, who hath all power and whose arm is not shortened, that he can not save.

How shall this man give us his flesh to eat? The flesh of Jesus unquickened by the Spirit, could not bring salvation to man any more than the flesh of the bulls and goats did to our fathers, nor the manna that they ate in the wilderness. Therefore, saith he, Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. But he that eateth the bread that I shall give shall never die; and the bread that I give is my flesh. (John 6.) Yet ye think Jesus did not mean his flesh because of his words to the twelve, saying, The flesh profiteth nothing: it is the Spirit that quickeneth. Had the words of Jesus been recorded correctly they would have read as follows: The flesh profiteth nothing, unquickened by the Spirit. This makes perfect harmony and does not destroy his former statements, where he said, Except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man ye have no life in you. He knew that the literal eating of his flesh as they ate the typical lamb without blemish would not profit them anything. But he also knew that his flesh and blood was to be quickened by the consuming Spirit of God at his glorification, when he was received up into the cloud of glory as God's burnt offering for sin. And be it known to all nations, kindreds and people that the Holy Ghost that descended upon the apostles on the day of Pentecost was the outer body or at least some part of it which is the fruit from the tree of life. This was foreshadowed at the translation of Elijah when his mantle fell on Elisha. Ye that believe not this statement, answer me: What is meant by the statement, The Holy Ghost was not yet, for Jesus was not yet glorified again; it is expedient that I (Jesus) go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you. But if I go away I will send him unto you. The question is, If the Holy Ghost was something separate from Jesus, why could not the apostles receive it before the ascension and glorification of Jesus? Again, take his own statement concerning his death, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." This shows plainly that Jesus knew that his body of flesh and bones must die and be quickened by the Holy Spirit that was in him, and that quickened flesh must fall on the believer and become the seed of immortality to everyone that receives it as an abiding Comforter; and that he that receives not that holy bread can never have eternal life of body, soul, and spirit which make a holy trinity. The spirit may be saved from the power of the Devil, but can not be clothed with the wedding garment of immortality of flesh and bone. To conclude this subject, which is endless, we will give you a little from the Book of Mormon. In 3 Nephi, Utah edition, we read: "And it came to pass that he (Jesus) brake bread again and blessed it and gave to the disciples to eat. Now there had been no bread, neither wine brought by the disciples, neither by the multitude, but he truly gave them bread to eat and also wine to drink; and he said unto them, He that eateth this bread eateth of my body to his soul; and his soul shall never hunger nor thirst but shall be filled. Now when the multitude had eaten and drank, behold they were filled with the Spirit."

The above plainly shows that the Spirit comes from the glorified body of Jesus, and matters not where the bread came from. The point is that after he blessed it it was charged with the essence of life—transferred from the body of Jesus. Now as Jesus shed forth this spirit of life upon those whom he had chosen to spread the word of life, and they are chosen from the holy priesthood, he has left them a means by which the engrafted word of life, also called the Spirit, may be transferred to the believer. And that means the ordinance of the laying on of hands. The priesthood, being clothed with the body of Jesus will also, in the handling of and the breaking and blessing the bread and wine, transfer to the emblems a portion of the body of Jesus, and he who eats of it understandingly discerning the Lord's body, will receive the witness in himself.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

WAS THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH LIMITED TO AARONIC PRIESTHOOD?

He frequently makes use of the term, "crudeness of Mormonic conception," when considering the question of authority. Let us compare the crudity of which he speaks with the "Campbellite" conception of the theological question. One of the founders of the institution represented by Traum, while preaching a sermon in the Bracewell Schoolhouse, using the second chapter of Acts of the apostles, dwelt particularly on the apostle Peter using the keys of the kingdom of heaven, delivered to him by the Savior (Matthew 16:19). In his remarks respecting Peter opening the kingdom to the Gentiles, at the house of Cornelius, he said: "Having no more use for the keys, for aught I know, he threw them away."

If comparisons are odious, the obnoxious element arises from one conception being more crude and gross, and in the contrast, the "Campbellite" concept stands out opposed to the original in bold deformity. But Traum has a queer visual angle. He admits that Christ held the priesthood, was a Melchisedec priest, and "it was of such a character he could not delegate it to anyone in all the universe" (page 161). Just see the finale to this: Inasmuch as Christ was the only one holding the Melchisedec priesthood, and inasmuch as he could not delegate it to anyone in all the universe, and inasmuch as the church built by Christ was by inspiration called "an holy priesthood" and a "royal priesthood," and inasmuch as the priesthood consists of two departments,—Melchisedec and Aaronic,—it follows with certainty that the New Testament church possessed the Aaronic priesthood!

Elder Traum can not, by theological somersaults, extricate himself from these ruins. But he argues that "the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change in the law" (Hebrews 7:12). Yes, but to "change" a thing is not "to do it away"; does not mean to "abolish" the thing. Paul says, in the Corinthian letter, chapter 15, and verse 51, "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." Does he mean we shall all be abolished, annihilated? Paul and Peter should be harmonized, above all by these men who propose the unification of the world on the basis of an harmonious gospel. But Traum has Paul fighting Peter. He has Paul testifying to the abolishment,—the utter destruction of that which Peter affirms to be a contributing cause of the members of the church being "alive," or "lively stones." "Yes," says Traum, quoting Paul, if "Christ were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to law" (Hebrews 8:4). Ah! priests under the law "offer gifts according to the law." Christ was not a priest, offering "according to the law." He would not be that kind of a priest, not a priest of the "old covenant," that being dead, and Paul's argument, legitimately conducted, ranks Christ as a priest of the new covenant, and the "more excellent ministry" (see verses 5, 6, 7), and Paul, in harmony with himself and his apostolic colleague, Peter, says:

Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house.—Hebrews 3: 1, 2, A. V.

Here is a "profession" of "high priests and apostles." What profession is it? Answer; The Christian "profession." The profession Traum avers, he means "war," "hell," against. His persiflage, he will bear the consequence of. "Profession" is defined as "an open declaration; a collective body of persons engaged in a calling." The apostles enjoin the saints to "hold fast that profession." (See 4: 14.) The "brethren" were "partakers of the heavenly calling,"—it was from heaven, and "appointed" of God. But if there are high priests in the Christian ministry to-day, what do they offer? "Spiritual sacrifices," Mr. Traum, of course. They are ministers of "the true tabernacle which God pitched, and not man." They are ministering the gospel regime, the ecclesiastical functions of the kingdom of God, one of which Paul affirms: "And hath committed unto us the ministry of reconciliation; the word of reconciliation; now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—2 Corinthians 5: 19, 20. The Almighty had appointed them, and was pleading through them, and ministered in "Christ's stead." They were working with God, not against him. Over in the epistle of Saint James we have a declaration of another duty, function, or administration, as follows:

Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.—James 5: 13-15, A. V.

Here are God's ministers officiating in spiritual things, offering unto God a spiritual sacrifice, acceptable to Jesus Christ, and the almighty God commanded the oblation, claims the necessity, and approves the expedient. Why, Mr. Traum, you are not up to date with your information bureau! Your Jerusalem Herald must have been delayed in a storm!

It remains for our critic to reconcile his peculiar clashing of theory with the established institutes of the uncorrupted gospel of Christ; his stereotyped limitations of the priesthood of Christ, and the fact that the church, "the body of Christ" was united to the "head" by a "royal priesthood."

Says Traum, "Further, to tie God down to the almightiness of his own unchangeability, is to forever close all avenues for him to take the initiative in ever introducing anything more perfect, or more nearly perfect than has always existed."

UNCHANGEABILITY OF GOD DISPLEASES ELDER TRAUM.

Now just listen to this professed minister of Jesus Christ. Over against this, we place the expressed word of the unchangeable God himself: "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Malachi 3: 6. Doesn't our critic want to teach God? What does he mean? God is destroyed as God, or as the God revealed to "crudeness of Mormonic conception"; what is this conception of the infinite, eternal, and immortal God? If this theory doesn't seek to drive the Almighty out of his sphere, what does it do? If it does not reduce him to finite limitations, where would we look for a theory that would? The Apostle James says:

"Do not err, my beloved brethren. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James 1: 17.

If "the Father of lights" is shorn of his attribute of unchangeability," then all other attributes are disarranged, and by the destruction of his attributes God is destroyed as God, or as the God revealed to us in the Scriptures. Elder Traum has drunk into the false doctrines of "no word from God," no more revelation from heaven, no more inspiring influences of the Holy Spirit," no "gifts" from "the Father of light," for so long, that his "crude conceptions" of the Almighty have wrought confusion in his mind, and he is mistaken in the God he is trying to describe. His theory, more likely, incorporates the Deity the Psalmist describes:

"Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands. They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not: they have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not: they have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat."—Psalm 115: 4-8.

GOD DOES NOT EXPERIMENT.

The attributes of God's character revealed in the Bible are love, power, knowledge, mercy, justice, truth, impartiality, wisdom, and unchangeability. He possesses an infinity in all these attributes, and therefore he is not experimenting. Finite man may take a piece of machinery and experiment and bring it to a state of relative perfection, as to temporary use, but an infinite being of all knowledge is not limited to this necessity. God understands his own work to absolute perfection. The Apostle James declares: "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world."—Acts 15: 18. "For your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him."—Matthew 6: 8. The righteous recognize that "he is the rock, his work is perfect"

(Deuteronomy 32: 4), "his ways are judgment, a God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he." They also recognize that "Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne; mercy and truth shall go before his face."—Psalm 89: 14.

These attributes of his character are the foundation of intelligent faith in God, and "if the foundations of the righteous be destroyed, what can they do?"—Psalm 11: 3.

Just see where this theory, so unreasonable and unscriptural, will leave our critic: If God is an infinite being, he possesses these attributes in infinite plenitude, a fullness. If he "knows all things" (John 21: 17) he could only change by knowing less, than "all things." If he is "omnipotent"—all power (Revelation 19: 6), he could only change by a decrease of power. If he is "all wisdom" (Colossians 2: 3), he could only change by being a little less wise. If he is infinite in truth (Psalm 86: 15), he can only change by lying a little; and this is just what Traum's theory seeks to make God do! The inevitable result of his negative system is to "make God a liar," and hence the truth, God's word is not in it. (1 John 1: 10; 2: 4.)

God has an "eternal purpose" in view in recommitting truth to man, and one evidence of unchangeability in him is that in "taking the initiative" of recommitment, he acts like himself, and by direct revelation performs his work; and right here the system of "Campbellism" falls as flat as the walls of Jericho, never to rise.

AN EFFORT TO FIT GOD TO A THEORY.

Traum's objections are based upon the "Campbellite" interpretation of certain texts. The theory first exists, and instead of bending the theory to harmonize with God's word, God's word is twisted by him, to conform to their theory. Hence it is that "no gospel was preached until Pentecost," and the effort to invalidate the facts of the Bible attesting the contrary forces him to dethrone God, making him as vascillating as a puppet, and withal a liar. He has simply confused the "immutable counsel" of God, the eternal laws of the gospel, universally applicable, unchanging in its character, and irrevocable, ratified by the blood of Christ, with the temporary kindergarten established as the politico-eclesiasticism of a local body of Hebrews under Moses, and ratified by the blood of bulls and goats. We will not take the space to detail, the evidences are too numerous, but we will offer a few texts in refutation of his theory of gospel antiquity.

The question is, does the Bible teach that for more than four thousand years the world was without the gospel? Peter says, speaking of Christ: "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4: 12. Jesus affirms: "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me."—John 14: 7. This proves that whoever was saved before Christ came in the flesh was saved by and through him, for he "is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe."—1 Timothy 4: 10. Do you deny it, sir? Speak up. In Hebrews 13: 8 we have the very important statement, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." He was, is and will be the same Redeemer and Savior to all who believe on his name. If, therefore, the Son of God was a Savior to the people before he died on the cross as well as afterwards, he was a Savior through the gospel plan, for that is the only plan which has been given of God for the salvation of the human family. Hence Paul said, "But though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached let him be accursed."—Galatians 1: 8. The Apostle John says, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."—2 John 9. This "whosoever" makes it apply to everybody, in all time, and it establishes the gospel plan as the only plan or means by which we can come to God. Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.

Hence it shows how Enoch walked with God three hundred years and "was not, for God took him."—Genesis 5: 23, 24. How could he walk with God, until he first came to him? "No man can come to the Father but by me," says Christ,

Noah also, "was a just man and perfect in his generation, and Noah walked with God."—Genesis 6: 9. How did he become perfect? By the law of natural morality? Either that, or the gospel. The Mosaic law was not in existence as yet. Now Peter says (2 Peter 2: 5), "Noah was a preacher of righteousness," and Paul says (Romans 1: 17), "the righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel." So Noah was a "preacher of the gospel," hence could be perfected by it, and "walked with God." Paul also affirms (Romans 4: 17) that "righteousness" is the grand characteristic of the "kingdom of God." Coming down to the period when Israel was in the wilderness of sin—"Unto them was the gospel preached as well as unto us," Hebrews 4; but they would not receive it. Hence a fiery law—the schoolmaster was added. Christ took the "added law" away, and what was left? Simply the gospel! To take the "added law," away the thing that remains, will be that to which the law was added. We find, when the law was taken away, the gospel in all its beauty. Moses and Elias appeared clothed in glory and light upon the mount. Were they saved? Is there any other system to permanently sweep the night from the shoulders of eternal day, but the one circling round "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world"? Have not the swarthy legions of the Devil toiled in pioneer ages as unremittingly as since the cross? Have they not left a blot in the glory of creation, which the gospel, and the gospel only, can wipe out? Has not sin like a pestilential blast, desolated the world's Eden, and like very rotteness eaten out the heart of the royal cedars of Lebanon? This loathsome leprosy on the white robe of innocence, this rent in the sacred veil, from which God withdrew, must be alike cleansed, and closed by the "propitiation of the sins of the whole world"! Paul affirms that "the gospel was preached to every creature under heaven."—Colossians 1: 23.

Paul says to the Romans: "Have they not heard? Yes verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world."—Romans 10: 18.

This explains the testimony of the prophet—"To him gave all the prophets witness," i. e., they testified in the report which resounded in the ends of the world. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." These ancient worthies kept step with the music of the gospel harp. They were "perfect and walked with God." If perfect, their characters were such by virtue of a "perfect law of liberty." If they "walked with God," their natures had been changed, "old things had passed away, all things had become new."—2 Corinthians 5: 17. If they "walked with God," they were in Christ, for "if any man be in Christ he is a new creature."—2 Corinthians 5: 17. If they "walked with God," they were not condemned. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus."—Romans 8: 11. If they "walked with God," they walked after the Spirit, and "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Romans 8: 14. If they "walked with God" they had been made "free from the law of sin, and death." If they had been made "free from the law of sin, and death," they have been freed from it, by "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus."—Romans 8: 3. If they "walked with God," they walked not after the flesh—the natural—the carnal, such as deception, fornication, idolatry, adultery, effeminacy, thefts, covetousness, drunkenness, extortion, and revilings. If they had been freed from this carnal law, then they had been made members of the kingdom of God by faith in Christ to come, baptism in water, and baptism of Holy Spirit, for, "know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you, but ye are washed, ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus and by the Spirit of our God."—1 Corinthians 5: 9-11. If they "walked with God," they were "dead to sin." If they were "dead to sin," then were they "buried by baptism into death."—Romans 6: 4.

If they "walked with God," and were "his sons," being "led by the Spirit of God," they had "overcome the world."—Romans 12: 21. If they had overcome the world, they had been "born of God," for whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world. (1 John 5: 4.) If they had been born of God, they believed in the divinity of Jesus Christ, for "who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus Christ is the Son of God?"—1 John 5: 5. If they overcame the world, it was upon the profession of this faith, for "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—1 John 5: 4. If they obtained complete victory it was through Jesus Christ, for "thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Corinthians 15: 57. "In all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."—Romans 8: 37.

Parable of the Tobacco Seed.

Then shall the kingdom of Satan be likened to a grain of tobacco seed, which, though exceedingly small, being cast into the ground, grew, and became a great plant, and spread its leaves rank and broad so that huge and vile worms formed a habitation thereon. And it came to pass, in the course of time, that the sons of man looked upon it, and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So they put forth their hands and did chew thereof. And some it made sick and others to vomit most filthily. And it further came to pass that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said, "We are enslaved, and can not cease from chewing it."

And the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul, and they were seized with a violent spitting, and they did spit, even in the ladies' parlors and in the house of the Lord. And the Saints of the Most High were greatly plagued thereby. And in the course of time it came also to pass that others snuffed it, and they were taken suddenly with fits, and they did sneeze, with a great and mighty sneeze, insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears, and they did look exceedingly silly.

And others cunningly wrought the leaves into rolls, and did set fire to one end thereof, and did suck vehemently at the other end thereof and did look very grave and calf-like; and the smoke of their torment ascended up like a fog.

And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business in the earth; and the merchants waxed rich by the commerce thereof. And it came to pass that some of the professed saints of the Most High defiled themselves therewith, even the poor, who could not buy shoes, nor bread, nor books for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith.

But with one accord they exclaimed, "We can not cease from chewing, snuffing and puffing!" Oh, ye professed followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, will ye be the slaves of a nasty, poisonous weed?

One is your Master, even Christ.—Selected.

Dear Sisters: As I feel lonely and discouraged this Sunday afternoon, I thought I would write a line for the Home Column and inclose a poem clipped from Farm Journal, for use in the column if you think it worthy of space. I receive so much good from the Home Column that I often wish I had the talent to write something interesting for others to read; but circumstances at home prevent me from doing as much for this work, that we are so much interested in, as I would like to, but some day I hope the clouds may be lifted.

A SISTER IN THE FAITH.

Children at Home.

O Time! if thou couldst wait awhile
And keep the children young,
And still let linger in my home
Their lisping, broken tongues—
The cuddling, croodling, coosie coo
Of babies at my breast;
O Time! if thou couldst wait awhile,
I think I should be blest.

What thought my rooms are littered o'er
With books and broken toys,
I would not shorten by a day
The childhood of my boys;
And though the baby's rattle lies
Upon the fresh swept floor,
I sigh to think the day will come
It will be there no more.

The day will come, 'tis coming fast,
When we shall be alone,
When from their childhood's happy nest
The children will have flown;
When broken toys will all be gone,
And not a cradle seen,
And all the rooms be far too still,
And far too neat and clean.

Sometimes I'm tired and cross at night,
And full of mother care;
And then I think the boys at play
Are more than I can bear.

I think so for a moment, then,
Remember years to come,
When to their whistling and their mirth
The echoes will be dumb.

Oh, if Time could but wait a while!
But since it can not stay,
Why, then we'll make the very best
Of every happy day,
For when the boys and girls are grown,
However far they roam,
I'd like them to look back and say
They had a happy home.—Selected.

Must Germans Absorb Jews?

"The Germans must absorb the Jews in Germany, otherwise the Jews will dominate the country," said Doctor Hermann Heger of Berlin, who was seen at the New Willard, and who is touring this country for observation and on business.

"There is a Jewish question in Germany, and Doctor George Lomer, who has studied the subject thoroughly, contends that the Jews are gradually abolishing existing inequalities by the sheer weight of their growing influence, so that ultimately they will control the destinies of that great empire. The Jew predominates in all professions in which brain power tells. The high schools of Berlin already tell a striking tale of the prevalence of education among Jewish children. No fewer than two thirds of the Jewish children of the German capital receive the higher education, which is a much greater average than the children of other creeds.

"Throughout the German empire," continued Doctor Heger, "the Jews form little more than one per cent of the total population, but twenty per cent of the children in the high grade schools of the country are Jews. In such schools in Berlin and other great cities the percentage of Jewish children is still higher, reaching thirty, forty, and fifty per cent." —Washington (D. C.) Herald.

[One can not well read such testimonies as the above without feeling that after all the centuries of terrible persecution and wide dispersion of God's chosen people, his choice of them as the depositories of his truth, his law, and his righteousness is being vindicated.—EDITORS.]

Long lists of names are sometimes sent from Sunday schools and branches, in connection with donations to the Children's Home, with the request that all names be published. The space at our disposal in the Home Column will not permit of this.

Boxes containing goods for the home should be plainly labeled with name of place from which they come and of the society or person sending the same. Proper credit could not be given in some instances because this has not been done. Use your judgment as to the advisability of sending all articles donated. It is better not to pay freight on any of doubtful service.

Years ago many of the Saints enjoyed contributing birthday offerings to the gospel Boat Fund. Recently we heard a brother tell how, in days gone by, his dear old mother anxiously awaited her birthday each year to avail herself of the privilege of sending an offering to this fund. We suggest that this plan might be adopted in raising money for the home, especially by isolated ones who are not in a position to join with others in the regular monthly five cent subscription.

Letters containing money for the Children's Home should be addressed to the treasurer of the Executive Committee, Mrs. M. B. Nicholson, Lamoni, Iowa. All other communications please send to Lucy L. Resseguie, secretary of committee.

Request for Prayer.

Sister Alex. Mellon: "I ask an interest in the prayers of the prayer union in behalf of my daughter, Idella B. Mellon; one of her ears runs, caused by catarrh. Several years ago it troubled her, and through prayer and God's mercy she was healed. She works away from home and she got a hard cold and started it to running again. She wrote home and asked me to write for her. Pray that she may be led to accept the gospel and become a worker for Christ and his cause."

GERING, NEBRASKA, January 22, 1912.

Editors Herald: With pleasure I take up my pen after some months of silence. Since last writing I moved from Bayard to this place, some thirty miles distant. Those who have labored in the North Platte Valley will be pleased to know that a branch was organized here on the twelfth of this month, by Brother J. R. Sutton, he coming here by request of the Saints here, who, after a special prayer service, asking the Lord's will in the matter, were assured through our worthy missionary, C. W. Prettyman, that the time was ripe, and also calling Brother O. O. Henry to the office of elder and designated him as our presiding officer.

This is a faithful band of Saints here, having held out and braved the storms for several years. True, from time to time they have been cheered and strengthened by those of the traveling force, among whom I might mention James Caffall (who planted the work here), C. W. Prettyman, R. O. Self, J. E. Kelley, and J. L. Detrick, and D. W. Shirk of the local workers; Brother Detrick now being president of the branch at Bayard. Though trial and discouragement must be met, we feel that a bright future awaits us as children of the kingdom if we are diligent in keeping his commandments.

Ever praying for the honest in heart, I am your servant in the struggle for salvation, BERT HART.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, January 19, 1912.

Editors Herald: All is going nicely with us here. Our branch is in a fine condition. Our meetings well attended. The preaching good, instructive, and spiritual. At present there are no difficulties or trouble of any serious nature, in our midst, but all are united and trying to do their duty. We were never in a better condition than at present, spiritually or physically. We are surely growing.

We have been favored with the presence of a number of wanderers of late, among whom were F. M. Sheehy, E. E. Keeler, C. E. Crumley, S. D. Condit, H. J. Davison, F. B. Farr, and P. M. Hanson. They have all preached here, strengthening and upbuilding the Saints, and edifying strangers. Brother Farr held a series of meetings on the outskirts of the city, where the word was presented to a few more strangers. J. A. Anthony continues to hold forth on our streets, so he is warning many of the perilous times to come.

Our Religio and Sunday school, under diligent officers, are in fair condition and doing well.

The Ladies' Aid meets regularly, and are putting forth strenuous efforts to help clear our church from debt; so all are working together for good.

Three young men belonging to the navy have recently made themselves known, and are attending our meetings. They are Brothers B. F. Kyser, from Pittsburg, Kansas, William Clare, from Wier City, and Vernon Dawe. They are on the training ship Saint Louis, at Goat Island, here in our bay.

One of the great revivalists, Gypsie Smith, is here, preaching to thousands his ideas of religion, and receiving favorable comment from nearly all quarters. A few days since he led a religious procession of over two thousand men through our streets. They all carried Bibles, containing the word of God, which they do not understand and do not believe.

Elder J. M. Terry, our district president, keeps himself busy among the branches, and Bishop C. A. Parkin is ever active, looking after the financial line and dispensing the gospel.

Our weather is mild, green grass springing up everywhere and flowers in bloom, while zero weather seems to be prominent around your quarters. Nevertheless our eyes are still Zionward.

Editors Herald: Please find inclosed a clipping from the Sioux City Journal for January 8, 1912. This leaves us stronger than ever in the faith and fighting to keep the gospel banner afloat. There are only a few Saints in this town. Infidelity reigns supreme, even in the hearts of the professed Christians. It is hard to believe that the mind of the world is in such gross darkness, and I have lately discovered that the Jews are not the only ones who claim to believe in God but deny the immaculate conception, or that Jesus is the Son of God. At present there is an evangelist here, preaching in the Christian church. I am not worrying much about him, for he can not leave the people in much worse darkness than that in which he finds them.

We hope soon to be able to have the angel's message delivered here; but the hardest task we have before us is to teach the people to believe the Bible.

I wish the Saints who have literature that they can spare would please send it to me to distribute among this people. I want to place boxes in the depots and post office for free literature, and knowing how papers will accumulate, I make this appeal.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am as ever your sister in the faith,

SADIE BURCH.

LEES SUMMIT, MISSOURI, January 16, 1912.

Dear Readers: I write to inform you of my whereabouts, as there may be those who formed an early acquaintance with me in the church, and are wondering if I am yet alive and in the faith.

I will say that the years that have rolled by since 1884 have confirmed rather than diminished my faith in what is known as the restoration of the gospel, and the reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ in these last days.

It has long been a settled conviction with me that we are living in the times of great apostasy; and the so-called religious world is acting without direct authority or divine guidance from God, and that nobody, synod, conclave, or council can arrive at any definite and fixed conclusion with respect to what the mind and will of God is, by consulting the Bible alone; or for aught I know, any other book or books.

Certain it is that in all the ages past, there have always arisen exigencies or conditions in which it became absolutely necessary for God to impart of his superior wisdom and foresight, that mankind might not perish. To accomplish this end he, in his wisdom, chose various means, of which to write would likely burden both the reader and the HERALD.

To the best of my knowledge and comprehension this principle of direct communion or affiliation with God is more apparent or manifest among the Saints, or Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, than any society, and I feel to honor God and to acknowledge the same.

In all my reading, conversation, and reflection, none have ever claimed that as organizations they have more fellowship with God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ than we do. If it is a fact that we have fellowship and communion with them, then I am forced to the conclusion that we must observe those laws leading up to such conditions. And unless it can be established that fellowship and communion with the Godhead is useless, that man can be guided alone by his own wisdom, or that there exists a body of people who enjoy superior communion and fellowship and are in greater rapport with God, I must in all consistency and conscientiousness remain in the faith I espoused some twenty-seven years ago.

Dear Herald: We are isolated Saints and have very little opportunity of hearing the real gospel preached, or to get instructions as to how we should conduct ourselves at all times and under all circumstances.

Is it profitable for isolated Saints to attend sectarian churches and Sunday schools? I am inclined to believe it is more a damage than a benefit. Here are my reasons: I concede that it would be a benefit to the church to attend other church services, as we would have a better claim upon their attendance at our services. But as far as the isolated Saints are concerned, I can not see the benefit. Suppose a man has a family of children and attends other churches and Sunday schools, takes home their quarterlies, the children study the lessons, go back, listen to the minister misrepresent the word of God, and then in Sunday school service the children are required to answer questions contrary to all law and gospel, (as for example: Q. Can salvation be obtained without any ordinance whatever? Ans. Yes.) Then when home is reached the children have to be shown the errors they have been taught, which is quite discouraging to them, and both old and young drift into the habit of worshipping God in a half-hearted, slovenly manner.

Now if I am wrong, I am ready to be corrected. Please give me your opinion.

Yours for the upbuilding of God's work,

FRANK WHITING.

Editors Herald: With kind regards to all the Saints scattered abroad we peruse the pages of the HERALD and our hearts are gladdened by the many spiritual pieces which its columns contain, and especially the letter of Brother U. W. Greene, and the anniversary letter of Brother Roth. How soul-inspiring. In our family we have enjoyed the great manifestations of God's power, and we hope to be faithful to the end and meet with the Saints in the sweet by and by.

Editors Herald: In your issue of January 17, 1912, Brother E. W. Nunley asks for evidence that the angel spoken of in Revelation 14: 6, 7 has already come. I invite his attention to Doctrine and Covenants 108: 7, as follows: "And now verily saith the Lord, That these things might be known among you, O inhabitants of the earth, I have sent forth mine angel, flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, who hath appeared unto some, and hath committed it unto man, who shall appear unto many that dwell on the earth; and this gospel shall be preached unto every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, and the servants of God shall go forth, saying with a loud voice: Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth and sea, and the fountains of water."

There is no doubt but what these two passages of scripture have reference to the same event; one foretelling what will be, the other telling what has been. But you will note this distinction; while the former indicates that the angel is to declare with a "loud voice" the latter shows that that part of the work belongs to the "servants of God." A very comprehensive distinction it is, too.

Yours for the light, and for the right,

J. C. CRABB.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, 112 West Ontario Street.

Dear Brother Elbert: The church work continues to progress with no distinguishing rapidity or show, but with a certain steadiness that makes it apparent to all that the Lord is working with us. We have gathered some fifty-four this year and feel that ere the New Year's festivities are over we shall report more. Some of this year's garnering are very fine, some are ordinary, and some of those we count ordinary will doubtless surprise us, and some of those we call fine may disappoint us sadly. On September 1 I baptized one Edward Franklin Smith, a descendant of Asel Smith the father of Joseph Smith the patriarch and father of the Prophet Joseph. His people live at Provo and Ogden, so he tells me, and his father and mother were cousins, both Smith's, both descended from the Smith mentioned above. He is a bachelor of science and medical doctor and useful in our new enterprise as a school-teacher. He devotes considerable of his time to this work, and we hope he will find it practical and enjoy the associations. He has never been baptized before. Through him I learn that Edwin Fahs Smith, provost of the University of Pennsylvania, is descended in like manner. He is uncle to the doctor before mentioned, as also A. J. Smith, dean of the medical school of the University of Pennsylvania. However, I was as rejoiced at the baptism of some of the children that have come to us during the year and are valuable in the sight of God.

The services are all well attended, and we have been blessed lately with the gifts and manifestations of God's good will to usward in healing and other gifts.

The preaching meetings have been attended extraordinarily of late; sometimes one half of the evening audience would be nonmembers, often one third. The Sunday school work still yields its share of sheaves to the work. The Religio has led a precarious existence for nearly a year, but is on pretty firm ground just now, meeting on Sundays at 6.30 p. m. Our Young Men's Association, a sort of athletic and gymnastic association, is progressing nicely and has yielded its share of profit in souls, as also the daily vacation Bible school bringing us several more young people.

Our latest venture, or rather the latest development of our school venture more than a year old now, will be understood by the inclosed clipping. We have to date enrolled about two hundred pupils. We have a most interesting class of people, some young, some old, all interested and anxious to learn, and we have a fine lot of teachers, willing and able.

We have arranged for a series of popular lectures on educational subjects to be given under the auspices of the institute this winter; the first one will be delivered on October 20, by Calvin O. Althouse, head of the commercial department of the Philadelphia Central High School. Dr. E. F. Smith, provost of the University of Pennsylvania, has promised to give us one lecture in January, and we hope to get such men throughout the year. We are doing all we can to lift the ban of prejudice from the name of Latter Day Saints, and we feel that we are doing it somewhat. I was one of the speakers by invitation at the late Philadelphia county Sunday school convention, and Mrs. Smith was also, both at the same convention. I spoke on teacher training and Sister Smith spoke on girls' work. We are to have the Thirteenth District of the Philadelphia county Sunday school association meet with us the last week of January in annual convention. This will be a good thing for us, too. It will help lift the prejudice a little more.

WALTER W. SMITH.

PITTSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, October 23, 1911.

The joint reunion of the Kirtland, Ohio, Pittsburg and West Virginia districts convened at Kirtland, Ohio, August 17 to 27.

Permanent organization was effected by the selection of Elbert A. Smith, R. C. Russell, and F. J. Ebeling as the presidency; L. F. P. Curry, secretary; J. A. Becker, chorister; Miss Jennie Jones, organist; Charles Mottashed, usher; J. W. Metcalf, chief of police.

The reunion presidency was given authority to appoint the speakers, and the Saints were treated to soul-inspiring sermons by President E. A. Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, Apostle R. C. Russell, and others. Practically all the prayer and testimony meetings were of an active and spiritual character. The young people met during the last four days of the reunion by themselves; different expressions from them since prove that this innovation was timely and very helpful. The Spirit spoke to the young, admonishing them to prepare themselves for service in the Master's vineyard.

The historic temple, a building of love and sacrifice, threw its influence over those gathered to worship there, and its very nearness lent a deeper tone to all that was done about it, extending through the various spiritual and educational activities, even to the recreations.

Under the direction of Sister Hattie R. Griffiths the auxiliary work was quite capably cared for, teacher training classes being provided, as well as instruction in general church law and talks on Sabbath school subjects. During the morning preaching service the smaller children were gathered in a tent where they were taught to weave bookmarks, napkin rings, etc. This was so interesting to them that the daily period was awaited with the utmost anticipation. The younger boys organized a club, styling themselves the "Gospel Scouts." As the others engaged in weaving the boys would either gather around their leader or go for long tramps; the latter frequently making them late for dinner, but the dining hall committee always provided sufficient, albeit cautioning against repetitions of tardiness. One notable place of interest visited was the quarry from which the stone were taken for the temple walls.

Baseball, tennis, croquet, bathing, etc., were enjoyed. Conducted by several of the young men, walking trips were taken occasionally in the afternoon, to various neighborhood beauty spots.

Under Bishop Kelley's direction round table discussions were held on matters pertaining to the financial laws of the church, the "Order of Enoch," etc.

A proposition was laid before the reunion looking toward the acquisition of permanent grounds for reunion purposes, but the idea appeared to be too new to engender much enthusiasm, and while no negative vote was registered, yet the vote affirmatively was exceedingly light.

Quite a number of the Canadian Saints were welcomed to the reunion. It was quite apparent that national lines were laid aside and that both Canadians and Americans were united in the Master's cause.

The time and place for holding the 1912 reunion were left to the committee appointed, consisting of two members from each district, as follows: Kirtland, J. A. Becker and F. J. Ebeling; Ohio, minister in charge and N. L. Booker; Pittsburg, Charles Fry and C. Ed. Miller; West Virginia, Frank Shinn and Joseph Biggs. This committee will announce the arrangements made in due time.

PURYEAR, TENNESSEE, January 10, 1912.

Editor Herald: I have been a member of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for twenty years, but it took me a long time after I became a member to be fully converted. After being tossed on the waves of doubt for a long time, I feel sure this is the church for which Jesus died. If I had lived faithfully, I would have known it much sooner.

It has been about a year since I fully obeyed the temporal law, and it might seem like boasting if I should tell how the Lord has blessed me. I have had a cross to bear on account of paying tithing, and I realized that as soon as a man's righteousness exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees the Devil wakes up and gets busy. He has been busy against me with my best friends. These trials must be endured, even though it causes great dissatisfaction along some lines of business.

I admire the courage and love of any man who has great wealth and obeys the gospel. I believe those who lay aside every weight and the sin that besets them will have to make a daily sacrifice.

I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may be able to do this and continue to the end. Your brother in Christ,

MANASSEH H. GORE.

HOUGHTON LAKE, MICHIGAN, January 10, 1912.

Dear Herald: I wish to bear my testimony to the truth of the latter day work. I have proved it often and find it in accord with the work of Christ and his apostles. I do not have the privilege of meeting with Saints and have not heard a sermon for five years; have not met with the Saints in prayer for nearly six years, until last November, when I went to visit with friends in the south part of the State. On my way home I stopped at Sparta, and as my first question on getting into a new place was, "Are there any Latter Day Saints here?" I was told there were. Then I inquired for my relatives and went there, but found my niece would not be at home that night. I then asked if there was an elder of the Latter Day Saints in the town. "No," was the answer, "there is no elder, but Fred Field lives down back of the depot; he is a fine fellow; he preaches when there is no one else here. You will get lodging."

I was sick and almost blind. Readers of the HERALD will remember I wrote a year ago asking the prayers of the Saints that I should not go entirely blind before I could be administered to.

Well, I came to the house of that "fine fellow." A lady came to the door and I said, "I am looking for some of the members of the Church of Latter Day Saints." I was made welcome. There were three Saints there. Brother Fred Field has been an elder for six or seven years. He works at the factory. The people did not know he was an elder. I was administered to by him and can say I was freed of pain in a few minutes and I had a good night's rest. But my eyes were no better; so at the Wednesday night prayer meeting I was administered to again for my sight, and found the next morning that I could see to write. I feel that I have much to be thankful for. We are poor in the things of this world. I have a knowledge of the gospel, and if I live as I should I shall reign with Christ when he comes.

But to-night I am sad. Brother Charley Brooks' house burned last night, and all that is left to him is five children, not old enough to care for themselves. Sister Brooks passed to her rest five years ago. He was working twelve miles away from home. It happened that one of his girls, a young lady, was at home from her work on a visit or the little girls would have been burned. She had to carry them out for she could not waken them. If there is anyone who has anything in the line of bedding, dishes or clothes that they can spare, I think he will be glad to get them. Anything sent to Saint Helen for Charley Brooks, of Houghton Lake, Michigan, will reach him, as he works near that town, but his children are here among strangers until he can keep house again. His family consists of Augusta, 16; Phebe, 14; Charley, 12; Anna, 10; and Callie, 8; all school children.

With love to all the Saints,

MRS. A. B. HAWLEY.

Jots by the Wayside.

We are at Scammon, Kansas, the hotbed of Catholicism, unionism, and Socialism. However, there is a little band of faithful Saints here, and they are determined by the help of God to keep abreast of the surging tide. Their independence of spirit has promoted the erection of a neat little church, twenty-eight by forty-six feet, in which they may worship, no one molesting them or making them afraid.

For some time past the unordained ministry (sisters) have been unceasingly at work by various methods and means, gathering money to purchase a fine corner lot in the best part of town. They have admirably succeeded and now have a deed for the lot. The building committee is appointed, composed of T. W. Chatburn, L. J. Hisle, and Evan Edwards. Plans have been drawn, and while the horizon of the future is a little clouded, yet we believe the dawning of a better morning for the Scammon Saints is among the things seen that are unseen.

On the part of the committee, we hereby earnestly invite and solicit cooperation of the Spring River District, by sending in a mite to assist in this godly enterprise. We can work a few men who care to work upon the building. Work will begin Monday, February 5, 1912, and donations in work or means will be greatly appreciated from in or out of the district.

Come, brethren, show your faith by your works in assisting us to have a chapel of our own. Communicate with T. W. Chatburn, Pittsburg, Kansas, or L. J. Hisle, Scammon, Kansas. All donations of work or cash will be properly credited and accounted for.

Jots.

Cancer Cure.

While laboring at Vales Mills, in the missionary work, making my home for a part of the time at Elder S. J. Jeffers', I learned that Brother Jeffers had quite recently had a cancer drawn from his face. I made inquiry as to the means employed and learned the following:

Brother Jeffers accidentally cut an underskin pimple upon his cheek about June last, which he could not get healed up. In September, Sister Jeffers (nee Winship) who is an excellent nurse, applied for three nights in succession the following plaster, at the end of which time the tumor fell out. The wound was easily healed thereafter.

Make a salve of the yolk of an egg and fine salt, bind on a poultice of the salve sufficiently large to completely cover the cancer. Change the poultice every twelve hours, and from three to six of them will generally be sufficient.

I pray that this recipe may bring relief and cheer to the suffering and sorrowful.

News From Missions

Massachusetts.

I have hesitated in complying with your request of some time ago for news from the missions, for the reason that I can not speak or write of things, only local. My work has been confined to a large extent to the city of Fall River, and but little news comes to me of a general character. However, I have had some experiences in the East that may possibly be of general interest.

I got into the field only in time to attend the eastern reunion, of which your readers have been well informed by various writers, and immediately after the close of the reunion I repaired to the city of Providence, where I had been instructed by the minister in charge to make my headquarters. I was not permitted to remain there very long before I received a call to this place, to take charge of the branch as its pastor. Since that time, September 11, my time has been wholly taken up with local work. About the only thing that has broken the monotony has been a trip to Boston to attend the conventions of the auxiliaries, and a trip to Concord, New Hampshire, to represent the church there in dedicatory services held in a new library building that had been built by one of Concord's citizens and presented as a gift to the New Hampshire Historical Society.

The call to attend this meeting came through the Historian of the church, and it is needless to say that I enjoyed the trip and the meeting to the utmost. It was a new experience for me, but it brought home to my mind more forcibly than ever the power for good that was being exerted by one of the church publications, viz, the Journal of History. It has found its way into the various historical societies of the nation and the world, and is doing more to-day to set the matter of our history right among the people than any movement that has ever been inaugurated by the church. One could not but be impressed with the broadness of mind of those with whom he came in contact in such a gathering. There was the entire absence of petty prejudice which, I am sorry to say, one finds in the religious gatherings of the present day, and which has to some extent, no doubt, pervaded the religious atmosphere of the past. I was recognized as a minister of the gospel, and seated at the banquet that followed the dedication services on the platform with other men of the "cloth." I shook hands with, and mingled with governors, senators, millionaires, and members of the historical associations from all over the United States, and could not but think of the fact that our Journal of History was getting into the hands of men who are writing as well as making history, and that the result could not but be good for us.

Under such conditions as this corrections of errors must be made sooner or later, and a better understanding of our position obtain; and I hope the time may come soon when we will not have to meet the humiliating experiences of the past in having history quoted against us. I am glad I was there, and my experience at that gathering gave me an appetite for more. I furthermore believe that we should avail ourselves of every opportunity to attend such places. It will do much to allay prejudice, and bring about better understanding.

Even though I have been engaged in local labor, it has not been without its general interest. None of the Saints here being in a condition to give me a suitable room, a room was hired for me in the Young Men's Christian Association building. In this way I have come in contact with the various churches of the city, and the result is that I have been, without any solicitation upon my part, asked to become a member of the ministerial association of the place, and have attended one of their meetings in which a very interesting paper was read on "Modernism" by an ex-Roman Catholic priest, an Italian, and an interesting discussion followed in which I was invited to participate. I have now upon my desk an invitation to attend the next one, which is to be held next Monday morning in the First Congregational Church chapel. Perhaps it would be well not to call the last one an invitation, but simply an announcement such as is sent to all the members of the association.

And, as I am considered one of the pastors of the city, I am also privileged to be present at all the gatherings of the ministry of the town. Last Thursday noon an informal luncheon was given to the pastors by the Young Men's Christian Association in this building, at which the feasibility and desirability of holding a convention of the "Men and Religion Movement" in Fall River was discussed, at which I was invited to be present, and was present. I did not have anything to say, and was not the only silent one, but greatly interested in what was said, pro and con. I found out what attitude the local pastors hold upon the question of spasmodic efforts in religion, and discovered that they did not favor them as a rule, but believed that the greatest results came from steady, earnest work upon the part of the local men and congregation.

It seems that the "world do move," when one of our ministry is asked to become a member of a local ministerial association, when hitherto we have had to fight for recognition and did not always get it then, in fact got it seldom. Perhaps Brother Macgregor will think that I have gone over to the enemy, but I would rather have their good will than their ill will, providing I do not have to compromise truth to get it. From past experience I am persuaded that in many instances we court their ill will. I was very much impressed with a statement made by one of the "outsiders" upon one occasion. A barn had been burned, at a place where I was holding services, belonging to one of the brethren. Rumors were afloat, as there always are, that it was done on account of religious prejudice, and we were being persecuted. The matter was being discussed in the presence of a lady who did not belong to the church, but was connected with a family who did belong. She had nothing to say for some time, when presently she remarked, "It seems to me that these Latter Day Saints expect persecution and are disappointed if they do not get it." I am afraid that there is truth in the statement.

However, I am expecting good to result from my position here, and I shall be disappointed if it does not come. There is an opportunity, it depends as to how the chance is used. I am not going to try to use it too soon. I believe that if I wait my position will be more securely established, and then I can get in some good work for the church. By acting too precipitately I may lose the chance to do good.

The work is moving, but it takes a pretty good eyesight to see it sometimes. The greatest obstacle is our own lack of progression as a membership. We can not hope to interest others in something that we will not carry out to its legitimate conclusion ourselves. We can not hope to convince others that we have an "angel's" message when we are exhibiting fruits that can spring only from an opposite source.

A word more. In the last HERALD just received last night I notice a criticism on the ministry in regard to their interest in the HERALD. I can say that for one I have always made the HERALD the especial object of interest; not, perhaps, so much in contributing to its columns as in other ways; but my interest may not be apparent to the editors. It is no sign that I am not taking interest because I do not send in subscriptions. Nearly all branches have a representative of the publishing interests of the church, and when subscriptions are offered me, or when I solicit them, I always refer the person to the regularly appointed branch representative, and the subscription is sent in through him. I believe in honoring the man in the place for which he has been selected, and I believe in influencing others to do the same, so I may be responsible for several hundred subscriptions during the year, and my name or influence not be known to the editors or publishers.

I am a loyal friend to the Ensign, but whenever only one paper is taken by the membership, I always advise them to take the HERALD. It is the official paper of the church and represents its progress, and the spiritual condition of the member can largely be gauged by his interest in it, and I always urge the membership to take it. If I go into a home and do not find the church papers on the table, I am greatly disappointed, and at once try to find out the reason why it is so. If it is indifference, I try to get them interested, and if I succeed, I turn them over to the local agent, if there is one. It is the same with the books of the church.

I presume I have exceeded the limit already in the length of this letter, but that is characteristic of me, so it will have to go.

Yours in bonds,

H. O. SMITH.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS, January 20, 1912.

England.

Utah Mormonism is still receiving public attention in this country. Yards of films are filled with modernized tales of elders of the above church alluring young women into polygamy; their claims, that is, the claims of the picture show proprietors, are that such exhibitions "have done more than all the preaching and lecturing of the clerics against the hated Mormons."

We see that picture shows are entering their claims for honors in cleansing society from its evils and pests; this kind of thing will have a strong hold upon the unreasoning public.

We are having an enormous quantity of rain for the last two months.

In my last letter I said that by the time it got to press that in all probability I should be at work in the mines again instead of the mission field; and ill luck followed me. When I had been at work about five weeks I was (through another man's inadvertence) run over by a train of coal. I thought the earth was in upon me; my side and back were crushed and bruised badly; but it was miraculous how I was saved without a bone being broken.

I have been laid up six weeks now, but am hopeful to be able to resume my toils soon. It is not always sunshine on the missionary, still God is kind after all.

There should be a new growth soon in the British Isles, after the necessary pruning is done, which has been pushed forward by the missionary in charge as it should be. It is an unpleasant and undesirable task; yet it has more evil consequences if left undone.

I hear again that the emigration fever has taken a hold on quite a number of the Saints; of course every man is free, but some who are doing well are on the move, which is a pity. A crowd draws a crowd, does not seem to appeal to the folks here. I refer to this, because after the untiring efforts of the contented spirits to build up the work numerically and spiritually a wave comes, and a fever catches hold of the Saints and down goes the hopes of the little Englanders again. What I wish to say is, that this works a hardship on those who love their fellow countrymen, and want to persist in giving the folks here a chance at the gospel. Possibly the easiest thing would be for us all to flit away like the swallows.

Since being here we hired a meeting room on the premises of a shop, the Brethren Copes' here worked hard, made seating, and fixed it up comfortably; but the very nervous neighbors, tenants of Lord But's, of Cardiff, lodged complaint that they were disturbed by the singing and probably the noisy little preacher, and we had no remedy but to give up. Had we got a common old gramophone, blating out comies and nonsense, they may have wanted to come in, or asked us to open the windows so they could hear the lovely music.

What will the harvest be, I wonder? We must take courage; while many of the strong are falling and others are getting faint, yet I rejoice that God is with his faithful children everywhere. Let us in every land be of good courage in the fight during the present year; let every brother and sister remember that great possibilities are within the reach of one determined, persevering person. We can not measure the things that can be accomplished with a people who are God's, blessed of his Spirit, united with the gospel union that Christ refers to in his teachings.

Industrial wars are not yet ended here, and I suppose never will be until the Golden Rule is adopted and practiced. All this turmoil might be avoided would the nations and kindred people of earth adopt and sincerely seek to practice the divine law; then would our peace flow as a river and plenty be found for all. I can not here give my views on trades unions, but perhaps the editor may invite me to, if I keep on.

I am glad that our aged Brother Joseph is alive in the year 1912, and able to enjoy life. God bless him.

I remain as ever, your coworker,

THOMAS JONES.

Reading, an hour since, the very gentle, though appealing rebuke to negligent missionaries and others, for not helping our leading church paper with contributions and subscriptions as we ought to do. I am ashamed that I have done almost nothing, neither have I any good apology to offer. A natural diffidence which I have never been able to overcome, along more lines than one, is my chief reason for such neglect of duty. Only when in actual conflict, have I, from youth, been able to rise above that feeling of timidity. Regarding contributions I have never felt competent to measure pens with most other writers for the church periodicals. One venture of years ago, in which a piece in verse which I, no doubt, overestimated, written for a Sunday school district convention, and read therein was sent, by suggestion of another, to the Autumn Leaves for publication. The poem appeared in Zion's Hope, presumably being regarded beneath the standard of Autumn Leaves literature. The disappointment did not help my courage at all. I will not, however, forget that later the recital of two spiritual manifestations found place in the Leaves. The HERALD and Ensign have each given place to brief accounts connected with my field labor, but it is, or has been, my lot to experience so little of the unusual, compared with others, that I have been content with offering little, now and then. I have promised once, or per chance twice, to do better. I was once told, forty years since, "Your resolutions are like ropes of sand." That may yet be true. Enough on that topic.

Concerning subscriptions I have met with the almost universal discouragement which has confronted me at nearly every attempt to do something for Graceland; the plea of "not able." In most of the Saints' homes where I have traveled the Ensign is taken because of its lower price. Many think they can not take the HERALD because "it is so high." I have said, "I never could be a peddler, nor even a canvass-salesman." Why? Because it would require no more than two or three repulses to start me home to seek other employment. However, I am willing to "try again," and will begin right now on one line, and improve my very first opportunity on the other.

After seven Sunday afternoon sermons in June and July, at a country schoolhouse, eight miles northwest of Wray, Colorado, followed by a series of night services, including one sermon each Sunday, twenty-three in all, labor elsewhere intervening, it was our happy privilege to baptize four precious souls, in a splendid cement reservoir twelve feet square, in which, on a bench also of cement, some five feet wide along one side the water, clear as crystal, direct from the wind-mill pump, was adjusted to a depth of three feet. Confirmation took place at the evening service, November 5. Sacrament was administered next morning, in the home of the family in which were three of those baptized; the fourth being a sister of this brother, living near. Our next work was thirty miles northeast of Wray, where the work was already begun, ten having been baptized. This series comprised only nineteen services, resulting in one more baptism. After the eleventh sermon in the next series, eight miles north of Wray, on the night of December 14, a few moments after retiring, Brother Walter Curtis, and a son of Sister Shaw, of the above mentioned neighborhood, known by "The cement schoolhouse," called for the writer to go with them to administer to Sister Shaw, who was low with pneumonia, and whom the physician called had given up to die. A ride of twenty-five miles, the road being somewhat circuitous, with a change of horses at Brother Curtis', brought us to the sister's home about 4 o'clock a. m. Administration was had at once. About 7 o'clock, after a short sleep, we administered again. The fever soon began to abate, the condition of the lungs began to loosen, expectoration became easy, and hopes of her recovery were soon entertained by all. Tarrying a few days at the sister's request, the inclement weather came on, keeping us there with the Saints some three weeks or more, during which the sister was, most of the time, slowly improving, for which we felt to praise the Lord.

While there the writer spent much time with Brother Benton Travis and family. On the night of January 1, during wakeful moments, there appeared before my vision, a circular coil of bright red light, just a fiber, similar to that which lingers an instant in the electric light bulbs when turning off the electricity. Four times it appeared in quick succession. On the night of the second, after midnight, the same light appeared only once, but much more of it than before. Soon after I was dreaming of meeting some one (I do not know who) that I was very glad to see. Approaching him, and extending my hand to clasp his, I awoke to find that I was reaching my right arm full length toward the ceiling. Instantly a hand, so white as to be almost transparent, also the arm nearly to the elbow, without sleeve, was extended downward toward me. It was so near that I extended my hand a little further to clasp it, whereupon the other withdrew slightly. I was made to realize that the reason was that it was spirit, mine was flesh. It did not disappear till I took my arm down. I took the manifestation to be a heavenly recognition of my humble work, a hand reached down to help me on in the work of the Lord.

Brother Travis, who was lodging with me, was awake and saw my arm reaching upward and wondered what I was doing, but did not see the other hand.

I had not thought of writing this till since reading the kindly admonition mentioned at the beginning. If there is any merit in this communication worthy of a humble place in the HERALD you may use more or less of it,—as the scrutiny of the editors may select. If not, accept as a confession to the personnel of the editorial staff, and then consign it to the wastebasket.

Respectfully,

O. B. THOMAS.

WRAY, COLORADO, January 19, 1912.

Minnesota.

As this finds me spending the night in a hotel among strangers, I will improve the time writing you. There are some peculiar experiences to be found in mission work. Sometimes one is so busy he hardly knows where to find time to accomplish all desired; and again, time seems to pass very slowly.

I am on my way home for a short visit, having been gone since December 8, and during that time have visited the following vicinities: Duluth, Two Harbors, Knife River, Deerwood, Brainerd, Bemidji, Frazee, and Osage.

I just came this afternoon from the little town of Osage, (ten miles west,) where I was called about two weeks ago to preach the funeral discourse of Sister Henry Way, who passed to the paradise of God on the morning of January 8. Sister Way was well known by all the older Saints of Minnesota, having been an earnest Saint, and living here many years. She was born near Nauvoo, Illinois, in the stirring times of 1842, and in the breaking up times of the church. She settled with her parents at Manti, Iowa, with the faction under Alpheus Cutler, and with her husband and little family in 1865, came with that colony (as part of it,) to the wild, new country of northern Minnesota.

We are making an earnest effort to keep the gospel camp fire burning here in Minnesota, and we are glad to report we think some progress is being made along the line, though it seems plain to discern that sin and unbelief are increasing in the world as the years go by. Surely we are reaching the closing of the Gentile times.

Brother W. E. Shakespeare has been traveling with me part of the time during the summer and winter, and is a very earnest young man. It has been his first year in mission work. He has done well, and if he continues, in time will make a useful man in the Master's service.

The severe cold weather of the last few weeks has made it difficult to accomplish much in mission work. The thermometer has frequently registered thirty to forty-five degrees below zero, and has seldom been above zero in the past month.

We have some very earnest and faithful Saints in Minnesota, though our membership is quite scattered. A fair number have been baptized here this year. Our reunion held at Frazee in June was quite well attended and we had some very good meetings. We hope the Saints may make an earnest effort to attend the one to be held at Clitherall the coming summer; also try to bring the good Spirit with them, that we may have a pleasant reunion. The time seems to have come when the success of our work depends on the individual efforts of all. I have felt greatly blessed in the past year in presenting the word, and space forbids a kindly mention of the kindnesses and assistance given me by the Saints and those of our friends in the gospel service.

Sister May Anderson, one of the Lord's faithful Saints, was taken to the bright home of the Saints above, in August. She was known and loved by many.

At our June conference, Brother L. A. Gould, of Bemidji, was chosen to fill the office of Bishop's agent in the place of Brother Birch Whiting, who had filled the office for several years, but who has moved to the great prairies of the Canadian Northwest.

This is the busy season of the year among the tall pines of northern Minnesota; when the woodmen are cutting the great forests for wood and lumber—one of nature's harvests.

With kind regards to all Saints.

In gospel bonds,

L. HOUGHTON.

Lees Summit, Missouri.

As Saints we are in fair health. We have regular preaching, prayer, and sacrament service, Sunday school, Religio, Sunshine Band, and have just started having priesthood meeting and a class formed for normal work. From these we should get enough help to live good, righteous lives.

We wish you all a happy and prosperous New Year. The weather has been very cold of late—twenty or more below zero. Crops were rather light here last year, owing to drouth.

D. W. SHIRK.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

The severe weather detracted from the attendance at our sacrament service but it was reported as having been a good, spiritual service.

Since last report we were highly favored by having with us Brother Warnky, of Kansas City, and Brother Tanner of the Chicago Mission. We received excellent instruction through discourses delivered by them. Other speakers the past month were Brethren Elliott, Reeves, and S. A. Burgess, and on the morning of January 21, nine of the priesthood spoke on the growth of the church, giving splendid food for thought. They were Presiding Priest George Reeves, Brother Gall, Brother Mottashed, recently ordained to the office of teacher, Brother Jacobs, Brother G. S. Trowbridge also recently ordained to the office of priest, Brother Masten, Brother Rhoades our presiding teacher, Brother A. W. Smith, and our pastor, Brother T. J. Elliott.

The priesthood meeting was held the evening of January 7.

Our Sunday school and Religio are moving along fairly well. One feature worthy of note is that each will soon have a normal class wherein those who have the opportunity may learn more thoroughly of God's books, and thereby be more capable of teaching the law to others.

Conference Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.—The business session opened Saturday, October 7, 1911, at 10.30 a. m., at Woodbine, in Saints' chapel. President Sidney Pitt, sr., was chosen to preside and authorized to choose his assistants. He named the assistant president, S. B. Kibler, and minister in general charge, J. W. Wight. On account of physical disability, Brother Wight was excused from serving and James Crabb was chosen in his stead. The clerk of the district was made clerk of the conference, S. B. Kibler in charge of the music, and Annie Stewart, with what assistance she needed, press correspondent. Report of the Missouri Valley building committee was called for, but on account of the absence of those having the matter in charge, no definite information was forthcoming. Sidney Pitt, sr., of the committee on district tents, reported but one tent in condition to use. It was used for seven weeks at Dunlap, Iowa, where Elder W. A. Smith held services with success; it was then loaned to the reunion committee to be used for a rest tent at Magnolia, and from there it was taken to Sandy Point, where meetings were held by Sidney Pitt, sr., and Charles Derry. No expense was incurred that was not fully met locally, nor were there any funds on hand. The tent was stored at Sandy Point, with Brother J. W. Pratt. For the time it had been used, God had blessed the efforts and good had been accomplished. All meetings were left with presiding officers. Courtesy of the floor was extended to visiting members. President Pitt had found no reason for discouragement over conditions, the tendency was onward and upward. President Kibler had been out of the district most of the time, but since his return had been busy locally. Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrando, reported on hand June 1, $197.04; received since in tithes and offerings, $846.74; total cash, $1,043.78; paid to elders families and for aid, $443.78; remitted to Bishop Kelley, $600; total disbursement, $1,088; leaving $44.22 due bishop's agent. This report was from June 1 to October 1, inclusive. President Pitt reported no response from any of the branches to the order made at the February conference for reporting branch labors, attributing the failure to a misunderstanding of the duties. By request, Elder J. W. Wight explained the General Conference resolution in regard to manner of reporting. The branch officers were to report to the branch president, the branch president a summary of these reports to the district president, and the district president, a summary of the branch presidents' reports to the district conference. A number of reports from individuals and branches were on the table and these were permitted to be read. Twenty-six of the priesthood reported 295 sermons; 366 times assisting; 13 priesthood meetings attended; 90 official visits made; 958 other services attended; 53 baptized; 69 confirmed; 7 ordained; 14 children blessed, and 207 sick administered to. The statistical reports from the twelve branches of the district showed a total membership of 1,979 as against 1,927 at last reporting. This included 1 patriarch, 1 high counselor, 4 high priests, 2 seventies, 42 elders, 33 priests, 29 teachers, and 20 deacons. A gain of 66 by baptism, 5 by letter, 2 by certificate; a total gain of 73. A loss of 15 by letter and 6 by death; a total loss of 21; a net gain of 52; five marriages and 5 ordinations. The spiritual condition of the various branches were reported somewhat improved since last reporting; no difficulties in any of them. S. J. Linn, of the Little-Sioux Branch and T. O. Strand, of the Moorhead Branch were recommended to the conference for ordination to the office of elder. Charles Ballantyne, of the Moorhead Branch, was recommended for ordination to the office of priest. The testimony of the Spirit, as witnessed by the proper officers, confirmed the validity of the call, and the ordinations were ordered at the Sunday morning prayer service. Logan invited the next conference and the invitation was accepted. Preaching services Sunday were held by Brethren Sidney Pitt, sr., J. W. Wight, and J. C. Crabb. Prayer services Sunday morning in charge of Brethren Charles Crabb and W. R. Adams. James D. Stuart, clerk.

 JANUARY 20, 1912. E. L. KELLEY.

To Gospel Literature Superintendents.

Since my appointment as gospel literature superintendent of Zion's Religio-Literary Society, I have been trying to get in touch with my coworkers in the different stakes, districts, and locals outside of districts. From the General Secretary of the society I obtained the names and addresses of the different stake and district presidents, and to each of these addressed a request, with return postage, for the name and address of the gospel literature superintendent. To date, ten have made report, leaving something over forty that have not responded.

It is entirely out of the question for me to do my part of the work unless I can get in communication with the different superintendents and workers. It is my purpose to use every legitimate means to get the names and addresses of my co-workers, and to do my part of the work. If this should come to the notice of any that received the above mentioned request and have not responded, I again appeal to you to give me the information desired.

A number of those that have replied to my notices, either state that they have no gospel literature superintendent, or if they have, they confound the library work with good literature work. This is a mistake. They are two separate and distinct departments. And if there are any districts not having appointed a superintendent, I would respectfully ask that it be done at once, and notice sent to me, so that we may get to work. The Lord told his people long years ago that the field was white, ready for the harvest. It is still white, and getting whiter, and I fear that some will be lost provided we do not perform our part.

Report of the work done is due me each six months of the year, July and January. To date but one partial report has been received, out of a total of more than fifty districts. I must have a report from each district, whether anything has been done or not. If you do not have the time to devote to the work intrusted to your care, or to make report of it, you ought to resign and let some one else do it that has the time. Do not stop the wheels of progress by holding to an office that you are not big enough, or willing to fill.

Some have expressed themselves as not understanding the duties that belong to their office. It has been my purpose to enlighten all such as best I could, and I stand ready and anxious to render, in every possible way, whatever aid and assistance is possible. If the writer can not give you the information and help that is necessary, others can. Ask and ye shall receive.

Hoping that we may be able to labor together in unity and harmony, so that much good may be accomplished, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
HARVEY SANDY.

Died.

PRESTON.—John B. Preston was born near Norwich, Chango County, New York, August 18, 1835, where he remained until February, 1860, when he came west to seek his fortune, making his home in Sarpy County, Nebraska, where he resided continuously, with the exception of five years, which were spent in Hitchcock County, Nebraska. In 1870 he was married to Miss Mary Dykes, and later located in the home where their children were born and grew to manhood and womanhood. To them seven children were born. One daughter, Mrs. Nettie McCoy, died eight years ago. He is survived by his wife and six children, Mrs. Alice Pittenger, Knobnoster, Missouri; Mrs. Silvia Snodgrass, of Gretna; Mrs. Mattie Pittenger, of Portal; George, Lydia, and Carrie Preston, of Springfield, Nebraska; one brother, C. K. Preston, of Independence, Missouri. The deceased united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints March 24, 1882. Death came at the age of 76 years, 5 months, 1 day, on the morning of January 19, 1912, at Council Bluffs, Iowa. He had been failing for several years, yet the welfare of his family was always his foremost ambition. During his residence here for half a century, he passed through many trials common to early settlers. Services at the M. E. church at Springfield, Nebraska, conducted by James Huff, of South Omaha, Nebraska.

Roush, at New Windsor, Colorado, March 16, 1897, and was always faithful and true, though suffering much at the last.

Crandall was born in Clay County, Missouri, April 15, 1835, came to Shelby County, Iowa, with his parents locating at Gallands Grove in 1852, where he was baptized and became a member of the Reorganized Church, and died strong in the faith at Boone, Iowa, August 17, 1911. Married Ellen Harding at Ames, Iowa, May 22, 1865. Ten children were born to them, three of whom preceded their father to the land of rest. Funeral services were conducted at the Saints' church, Gallands Grove, Iowa, August 19, 1911, and the remains laid to rest in the Holcomb cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just.

He died in the hope of the great resurrection.

Buried at Bonesteel, South Dakota, January 21, 1912. Funeral by Levi Gamet.

How a Prisoner Feels When He Enters the Penitentiary.

In the February American Magazine there is the first of a new series of articles of "The Man in the Cage." It is an account of the prisons of America—what the prisoners do and how the State in most cases fails to handle them with wisdom. The following is an interesting extract:

"The first shock of arrest and imprisonment is, to the first offender, the great crisis of his life. He realizes, suddenly and vividly, that the State is not merely a political abstraction out of a long forgotten school-book, but a thing alive, armed with jaw and claw. The effect of this is overwhelming. There lives no human animal more penitent and plastic than the first offender on his first day in prison. On that day, of all days, the State can mold him easily to its civic needs. Turn him over to a man who believes in the bottom good in him; teach him a trade whereby he may learn to support himself honestly when released; give him a share in his earnings so that he may, even though in prison, support his innocent wife and helpless children—or, if he is alone, save a bit of capital against that blackest day in his whole life, the distant day of liberation; in other words, give him work and hope, the two things which all men need in order to live, and you will have set him on the road to citizenship. Deprive him of work and hope and you will as surely have set him on the road to criminality.

"This is so obvious a truth that one would expect it to be the very cornerstone of our penal system. But the melancholy fact is that there are not ten prisons in the country to-day which teach the prisoner a useful trade, and scarcely one, so far as I know, which permits him to make any rea- sonably decent provision for his dependent family; and in nearly half of the States of the Union he is sold to a private trader, called a prison contractor, for an average of not much more than fifty cents a day. At best, the contractor is a business man; at worst, a merciless slaver. He has absolutely no interest, human or other, in the prisoner; and the prisoner has no rights which he need respect.

"This is the heart of the prison problem as it confronts us in America to-day."

Mr. White, who is head resident of Trinity House, New York, undertakes in his book, The Call of the Carpenter, to interpret the New Testament in terms of sociology rather than theology. He introduces Christ as the working man and represents Christianity as taking its rise in an economic upheaval planned by the Carpenter and in process of being carried through an amalgamation of the submerged classes of the nation to a revolutionary consummation. It was checked by the assassination of the Carpenter.

Mr. White holds that since Rome was indulgent toward mere religions in her empire that her efforts for a hundred years to stamp out the Christians is significant for the industrialism for which they stood. He holds that Christ's message was specially applicable to the workingman despite the fact that certain preachers and teachers have made of it an abstract matter with no vital connection in the affairs of toiling and moiling humanity. Mr. White is audaciously frank at times and his viewpoint expressed so epigrammatically that it is thought provoking to say the least.

"I will not doubt, though sorrows fall like rain
And troubles swarm like bees about the hive;
I will believe the heights for which I strive
Are only reached by anguish and by pain;
And though I groan and writhe beneath my crosses,
I yet shall see through my severest losses
The greater gain."

THE SAVIOR'S COMING.

The following is from the Kansas City Journal for January 22. We insert it in the HERALD for the purpose of calling the attention of the ministry to the somewhat significant coincidence in point of time, and the philosophy of the Savior's coming, between the conclusions of Doctor Unger and the legendary teaching of some of the speculative reasoners, as to the duration of time involved in the meaning of the word "generation." We have no speculative opinions to express, regarding these conclusions of Doctor Unger, but we may be pardoned by our readers, if we recall to their minds the statement of the Savior in the 24th of Matthew, wherein the Son of Man himself stated, that "no man knoweth the day or the hour that the Father hath set in his power." And that the Saints are commanded, both in ancient and in modern revelation, "to occupy till he come"; the word "occupy" meaning active cooperation together with God, to continue to bring to pass "the marvelous work and a wonder."

This occupation till he comes involves two important statements made by him; one in the twenty-fourth of Matthew, which reads as follows: "And the gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come"; the other is in the fourteenth of Revelation, six, "And I saw an angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." This certainly comprehends a wider distribution of the efforts the church is making to preach the gospel to every nation. In the philosophy of "the hastening time" it would seem to be wisdom in the eldership, to take advantage of the peculiar cosmopolitan population of the great cities and their environments, where large numbers of the different nationalities are gathered. For instance, among the thirty to fifty thousand operatives in the mills for textile goods at Lawrence, Massachusetts, there are forty-seven dialects. It would seem to be a wise thought and resolution for some of our young men to devote themselves to the study of some of the living languages, in which they might preach the gospel to these that are gathering to "Joseph's land," under the direct statement by revelation, that we are at liberty to prosecute the work of the ministry as widely as we may, showing that there is no restriction as to time or place. The "army" has not yet become "very great" and it would seem that speculative and imperative teaching concerning the meaning of the words "this generation," "the redemption of Zion," and "the building up of the kingdom of God," is idle, and void of specific beneficent results. If there is a failure on our part to avail ourselves of the larger liberty included in the statement of the Savior touching the preaching of the gospel to every nation, it is still the warning time and let us be about it. Let him who ruleth all things and knoweth all things fix the time of the coming of the Savior when he will, it is out of the province and the power of Doctor Unger, or any other man, wise as he may be, or thinks that he is, to determine by a calculation of the chronology of the Scripture when the day of that coming will be. Every speculation since that of Doctor Miller in 1843 that the Savior would come on the 12th of May of that year, to the last one that has been fixed by our Adventist brethren, has failed, and the Lord's word is still there, "No man knoweth the day nor the hour," "Occupy till I come."

CHRIST EXPECTED WITHIN TWENTY YEARS.

"Christ will again appear on the earth within the next twenty years," declared D. S. M. Unger, of Chicago, last night, in his address before the Theosophical Society of Kansas City at the Studio Building.

"The Great White Brethren have so predicted, and the world is calling for a change. Whenever a new race is born a new teacher must come. We are now living in the last decade of the fifth sub-race. Heretofore, as history will bear out, the Lord has come at the beginning of a change. Science, art, literature, music, capital, labor, and everything is now crying for a change, and surely it must come and with it will come a new teacher to tell us how to live and sound a new note in life.

TO TEACH BROTHERHOOD.

"We are not sure, but we think the Lord will come this time in a brown body. Now comes the supreme question, 'How will we know him?' It is not likely he will come this time with a flock of angels or in a white body, and to be prepared for the great occasion we must know him in our hearts.

"His message will be brotherhood. He will tell the rich their responsibility to the poor, the wise to the ignorant. He will tell mankind how to live, how this life must be lived upon earth in order to enter the kingdom of heaven.

"The Spirit of God in man is a dual aspect. Man must have wisdom and love together in order to be possessed with Christianity: He must know Christ.

THREE FACES OF CHRIST NATURE.

"There are three faces of the Christ nature, the historical, mythical, and mystical. The historical Christ is the Master of love and compassion; through ignorance the church has lost most knowledge of the mythical Christ. Some wise men claim that Christianity is not a new religion, that it has been taught since time commences, which is very true, and it will be taught so long as time continues, there has been a teacher with every new age and we can expect one with the new age upon which we are closely bordering; every teacher has passed through the mystical Christ. It is the spirit of God living out among men."

"What time within the next twenty years will Christ come?" was asked of Mr. Unger.

"I can not say," he replied. "You know in heaven there is no time, it is calculated up there on change in condition, besides we are only little children compared with the Great Master, all that we know is that He is coming, and we are preparing for his arrival."

"What country will he come to?"

Again he refused to try to give a definite answer, saying, "We can not say. He will very likely appear in a brown body. The body has already been prepared as it was on his other visit to the world."

THE BASIS OF ALL LAW.

It is an interesting thought and worthy of all consideration, that the basis of all human law, from the inflexible lines engraved upon the tables of stone all through the Mosaic code, in which are found the forceful edicts of action and the restrictions of human passion, clear down to the rise of the use of courts under the application of the common law, to the cumbersome enactments of human laws both international and those of state legislatures, and the teaching of the ethics of the Son of God, have their base in the simple statement made by the Savior, "Whatsoever you would that men should do to you, do ye also unto them."

If any of the readers of the HERALD doubt this statement let them take up any of the laws governing human conduct with which they may be acquainted and see if they can not find the motive for its enactment in that comprehensive edict which fell from the lips of Him who said he came to do the will of his Father who sent him. Pick up the statute book, read the definition of crimes against persons, of crimes against property, of crimes and misdemeanors in all human conduct, and see how interwoven in the written edict is to be found the simlicity of measurement afforded in that wondrous line uttered by the Son of Man.

A proper consideration of this thought which will reduce the axiom to a rule by which our everyday life is governed, will inevitably give the man who thinks and reasons a larger view of the rectitude of human conduct, and make him affable and friendly to all with whom he may be surrounded, and to strangers and those who seem to have no more positive claim upon his regard or attention. It is the real essence of human courtesy and exemplifies the beauty and grandeur of the loving kindness which should characterize all men, but more especially those who are striving to live the Christian life.

Think, if you will, of the Man of Galilee who was asked with reference to the binding character of the Roman Law which demanded tribute from the citizens. His reply to the question was, "Show me a penny," and when the coin was shown him, he asked the question, "Whose signature is this upon the coin?" When told that it was Cæsar's, then came the measure of the rule of life which would characterize the citizen: "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." And the second part of the statement was like unto it, as it contained the measure of the rule which should govern the man of God, "and unto God the things which are his." Providing himself with the means to pay the tribute, he took from the mouth of a fish the tribute money, and paid it to him authorized to receive it, thus discharging his duty both to God and to the commonwealth.

Consider his action in the case of the woman taken in transgression. Her accusers, who had taken her in the act as they declared, presented her to the Master, certifying to him of their own knowledge, that she was taken in the act of transgression. The Master knew that her accomplice in sin had not been arrested by these accusers of the woman, as it appears from the history of the case, and as a consequence those men who had constituted themselves self-executors of the law were in fault. He knew the grievous penalty of the written law, as construed by the lawyers and teachers of the letter of the law. So, stooping, he wrote upon the dust at his feet while they waited for his answer, Let him that is without sin among you, first cast a stone at her. The majesty of this reply, the wondrous recognition of the law to which he would not object, and the tender commiseration of his soul for the weakness of the woman, and his utter contempt of her human accomplice whom her accusers either dared not arrest or attempt to bring to judgment, were all manifest in this answer. Conscious of the righteousness of the judge to whom they had appealed, and feeling that his wonderful spiritual intuition took cognizance of their own individual sin, they one by one slunk away abashed, leaving the righteous one and the unfortunate sinner standing face to face. Raising his eyes from gazing upon the ground he looked into the face of the guilty one, and asked, "Where are these thine accusers?" The woman realizing that her accusers had departed, gave her reply and waited for the decision of the judge. The judge knew that he could not condemn her except upon the testimony of witnesses, and feeling the unjust discrimination which had been exercised toward her out of the greatness of his regard for human weakness, and assured of the rightfulness of mercy, under the rule of penitence, gave his decision: "Neither do I condemn thee, go thy way and sin no more."

The after life of Magdaline proved the justness of the application of the rule: "Whatsoever that you would that men should do unto you, do you even so unto them."

A beautiful legend of the life of Jesus is given as follows. Traversing a street of the city one day he saw a collection of men standing round some object lying upon the ground. Drawing near he found that a dog had fallen and died in the street. His appearance indicated age and starvation. One remarked upon the dirtiness of his coat; another upon the ragged and uncouth appearance of the animal; another upon the disgusting sores upon its body where the flies had irritated him, sunken as they were. The man who had come to listen parted the lips of the dog with the end of his staff and remarked, "Pearls can not exceed the whiteness of his teeth," and passed on his way, leaving the lesson planted upon his hearers' minds. There was something commendable to be discovered even in the case of a dog fallen in death from poverty and starvation. Here again the wonderful perception of the law, the rule of human action, which demands that goodness, beauty, or virtue should be recognized, was acknowledged by the Divine One, who could not forget the height and depth and breadth to which he came to call men.

I close this little screed by the quotation from Doctor Holland's "Bitter Sweet."

"Up the broad stairs which value rears
Stands motives beckoning earthward,
To summon men to nobler spheres
And lead them worthward."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MISSION NUMBER 2.—We are pleased to show the following report of Mission number 2 for the last quarter year, as kindly furnished us by Brother J. F. Curtis, in charge: 183 baptisms; 15 ordained; 91 children blessed; 2 debates held; 37 new openings made; 3 branches and 3 Sunday schools organized; 2,337 sermons preached. This is a report of work done by missionaries in the field.

DEATH OF BROTHER J. C. CLAPP.—Word came to us that Elder J. C. Clapp, well known to the church because of his long years of faithful service, passed away at the Sanitarium at Independence on Wednesday, 31st ult. Sister Horton writes: "In the beautiful words of Brother Luff we can sing:

"Call this not death; 'tis but a Father's hand
Beckoning home
A weary pilgrim from a foreign land
No more to roam;—
Care, toil, and woe, exchanged for rest and peace;
This is not death; 'tis but a soul's release."

Certain letters containing branch news have arrived too late for use in this issue.

Do you know a book that you are willing to put under your head for a pillow when you lie dying? That is the book you want to study while you are living. There is but one such book in the world.—Joseph Cook.

Generations are as the days of toilsome mankind; death and birth are the vesper and the matin bells that summon mankind to sleep and to rise refreshed for our new advancement.—Carlyle.

Angels.

In the old days God sent his angels oft
To men in thrashing floors, to women pressed
With daily tasks; they came to tent and croft
And whispered words of blessing and of rest.

Not mine to guess what shape those angels wore,
Nor tell what voice they spoke, nor with what grace
They brought the dear love down that evermore
Makes lowliest souls its best abiding place.

But in these days I know my angels well;
They brush my garments on the common way,
They take my hand and very softly tell
Some bit of comfort in the waning day.

And though their angel names I do not ken,
Though in their faces human love I read,
They are God-given to this world of men,
God sent to bless it in its hours of need.

Child, mothers, dearest wife, brave hearts that take
The rough and bitter cross, and help us bear
Its heavy weight when strength is like to break, God bless you all, our angels unaware!

—Margaret E. Sangster.

A PLEA FOR SOCIAL PURITY.

Social purity, the polite term for sexual purity and the closely associated study of sexual hygiene, presents such a broad field and is so little understood by the masses that when once our attention is drawn intelligently to the subject we are filled with surprise that man—that cool, calculating creature with the bulging forehead, producer of prize cattle and crops, skyscrapers and scrappers, racing machines and diplomatic go-betweens—we are surprised, I say, to notice that this wonderful creature permits desire to supersede reason in the very foundation of his closest domestic relations, and where reason is flouted ignorance domineers!

So as soon as we approach the sex problem, up go the hands in protest and rebuke, but more likely to cover the lack of knowledge that would be displayed in open conversation. Yet it is a sad fact that our newspapers purvey all the sordid details of scandal and criminal lust, discussed and disseminated over yard-fence and tea-table by all accountable members of the average family, but the intelligent consideration of matters that produce these abnormal conditions of society is tabooed.

I am not at all anxious to see a time when the family will glibly discuss sexual matters in high-sounding phrases; may that be afar off, but that these matters might be shorn of their present day prudery and be robbed of their fearsomeness, brought forth from their secret chambers, and be treated as guests and guardians of the family welfare, is my hope.

A Cleveland judge, soliloquizing on the great number of divorce pleas before him to decide upon, was moved to consider whence came this great infection, this blight upon married life; and he simmered it down to a very plain figure: "The whole fabric of society rests like an inverted pyramid, tottering upon an apex of—what? A moment's intoxication."

But, far from being pessimistic, this venerable judge goes on record with a statement that our young people will do well to consider, in connection with the Lord's implied desire regarding the choosing of a life's companion, that our degree of faith will form this bond within the church:

"There is a love distinct from the love that brings about the majority of marriages; it is love founded upon congeniality of tastes, upon the same ambitions, aims that understand each other, the same views of life, the same interests; but unfortunately—for them and for the race—most men and women don't wait for this kind of love."

Now, who are these "most men and women"? Just the grownup boys and girls of yesterday who, in the secret halls of their hearts were led to suppose that marriage was a license of indulgence and promised the possession of home with it; and while the same is true in a certain sense, there is a greater fact—that nature is a more inexorable lawgiver and administrator than those of civil life, so that those who form ties for any but high and noble motives soon find such ties irksome and the companionship repulsive. It speaks well for humankind that some have early discovered the error, adjusted themselves to the conditions of nature, and saved themselves from marital shipwreck, but lax divorce laws offer an encouragement of the evil.

There is need of temperance, too, in the marriage relation, if one would have peace and harmony prevailing in the home; for it is impossible to exhaust nerve force under the goading influence of stimulating matters taken into the body (be they tonics, drugs, liquors, flesh foods, or condiments) and expect to retain a calm and contemplative temperament; such fuels taken into the human mechanism flame up into abnormal desires, devour reserve force, and leave in their wake passion, morbidness, and a generally unstrung condition.

From some years' experience in a large commercial plant, watching the varied conditions of my fellow workers, and rubbing shoulders with many thousands of wage earners, I am forced to the conclusion that there is a very dangerous substrata under our ornate civilization of to-day; the coarse lewdness of the shop can be found in a more refined degree in the office, and all this is but the reflection of the disease that is inherent in the heart.

I heard one time of a boy in the shop who possessed a number of photo pictures which he displayed to his companions with much cautious pride, for the mere possession of them was a felony. I sought him out and desired a look; he shamefacedly said, "I couldn't show 'em to you, Mr. Webbe," but I finally won him over and he promised to bring them into my office. He kept his word, and while boasting, in reply to my question, that some were worse than the first few, tried to put himself right by offering to give me the whole pack. I reached up for a bottle of nitric acid and made a little puddle on the bench; then I dipped them one by one therein and laid them before him. He was too interested in the beautiful color changes as the chemicals fought it out, to utter his regrets, but presently said, "Gee! but that's bad stuff; what is it?" I then told him and, the psychological moment having arrived, impressed upon him the fact that the subjects of his late art treasures were much more destructive and poisonous upon the lives of the boys, men, and even little girls to whom they had been shown.

Think of that, you parents, who with best intentions block the social purity work; this is not only a common danger in our factories, where "it's too busy for such things," but in the very schools, under vigilant eyes, these things do exist; look through the postal racks, pictures, and modern novels, there you will find a supply of suggestive and two-meaning subjects to meet a pernicious demand, and the demand indicates the fell disease that we are out to combat, for much of the fault is not the boy's, not the girl's, but the dear good father's or mother's who thinks their child is too good and wholesome to be attracted that way, and the child has the same adoration for the parents, only more so, and would rather die than outrage their parent's immaculate propriety! There are doubtless exceptions, as in the case of a boyhood chum of mine whose older cousin (fifteen) took upon him the delicate task of telling us two lads how we came into this sad world.

Sid's face grew so white that the freckles stood out as strongly as his red hair, and suddenly he was bellowing like a young calf. It took us all to hang on to him so he wouldn't run right into his home and get his mother's own word for it; and his cousin couldn't stand for that just then.

So here you see our youth getting the sacred laws of life from a very questionable source; surrounded with mock shame and secrecy at the outset, it grows harder to disillusion those who trust us, and so the days drift by and the old, staid people of an older and more conservative day do not recognize the fact that son and daughter of a faster day and age is experiencing the awakening of what should be a glorious maturity, are forming opinions, and while every other line of knowledge is being arrayed before them, this, the procreative power with its uses, requirements, dangers, and pleasures; its care and demands for self-loyalty—all this is left to go by instinct! The same instinct doubtless that leads the small boy to enjoy green apples and defy the after consequences in spite of previous experiences; there may be something in the Adam's apple theory after all, though I've never been able to find authority for the apple part.

Given a little encouragement, boys readily loosen up and take advice if done up in honest sandwiches; healthy sport reaches him every time, and they are quick to realize that when men take such care in training a horse, or getting in shape for a bout, a boat, or a run, it is surely worth while to keep in shape to be a winner in life itself, and to honor and respect one's mother and sisters, and respect and honor the other fellow's too, if we want their respect toward ours.

To be clean, and love cold water inside and out; to be content with food that won't burn you up, drive you to drink, or inflame and injure your nerve cells. Aim high and follow up your aim; God wants the best you have, and having that, "All things else shall be added unto you."

THE MILLENNIAL REIGN; ITS NATURE; CONDITIONS EXISTING; WILL IT BE ON EARTH?

The inspired servants of the Lord, in all ages of the past, have looked forward to the time when peace and righteousness would prevail on the earth; when sin with its terrible results would no longer be found. Job received comfort in the midst of the trials of life, when his body was covered with boils, his children slain, and his earthly possessions taken from him, by contemplating the glories of this wonderful condition. He expresses his consolation and hope by saying, "Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19: 23-26.

Job informs us that he knew that his Redeemer lived, "and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth," and although his mortal body may return to Mother Earth, yet at that glorious time when Christ should stand upon the earth, at the latter day, he would be there in a body of flesh and bones, and be permitted to "see God."

Abraham saw the same time in the world's history, and he beheld the beautiful city, the New Jerusalem, the home of the redeemed and sanctified of earth, which caused him to look upon the things of this world and feel towards them as "a pilgrim and a stranger" does while passing through a foreign, barren land, to his own beloved and native home. His whole energy was exerted to make a successful journey, and nothing could compel him to turn from this one purpose. He saw the gates of this beautiful city and his eyes were never taken from them, nor did his feet depart from the road that leads the "pilgrim" to their portals. This road sometimes passed through barren deserts, beneath the scorching rays of the blazing sun and over rolling rocks and slippery hills, yet the hope of finally reaching this wonderful place, cheered and strengthened him all through the journey of life. He looked for this "city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." (Hebrews 11: 10.)

THIS CITY WILL BE BUILT.

"When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." "Zion" and "Jerusalem" will both be built at the same time, and become centers from which the work of the Lord will radiate, for David says, "To declare the name of the Lord in Zion and his praise in Jerusalem." (Psalm 102: 21.) Zion will be built by the Lord, before Christ "shall appear in his glory." To build it, the Lord will use human agency, just as he did when he fulfilled the statement, "I will build my church." He built his church by directing his servants how to proceed. They followed the plan of the great Architect, proceeding according to his directions, and thus Christ built his church. So Zion will be built. The Lord will choose his workmen and direct them by revelations telling them when and where to begin and how to proceed. And thus he will build up Zion.

We can not expect the coming of Christ till Zion is built, but when the Lord directs us to begin the building of this city, we will know that the time of his coming is drawing near.

In 1831, the Lord said, "build up my church in every region until the time shall come when it shall be revealed unto you from on high, when the city of the New Jerusalem shall be prepared." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 3.) "The New Jerusalem" was not to be built, nor any part of it, till it "be revealed unto you from on high." When the time comes, the Lord will "reveal" the fact and give directions how to proceed.

In 1832 we have "the word of the Lord concerning his church, established in the last days for the restoration of his people, as he has spoken by the mouths of his prophets, and for the gathering of his saints to stand upon Mount Zion, which shall be the city New Jerusalem; which city shall be built beginning at the temple lot which is appointed by the finger of the Lord, in the western boundaries of the State of Missouri, and was dedicated by the hand of Joseph Smith, jr., and others with whom the Lord was well pleased." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 1. See also 57: 1.) From this we learn not only the location but the exact place where they will begin to build this "city of Zion," "the New Jerusalem." It will begin at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple "shall be reared in this generation" (verse 2). "Which city shall be built, beginning at the temple lot."

From these statements, we conclude that the temple will be the first building that the Saints will begin work on, when they start to "build up Zion," and from it the work will be extended according to the plan that the Lord shall reveal, till it will eventually be developed to the magnificent grandeur that was seen by the prophets of old.

Enoch of old was permitted to see this city, as it will be built in the last days, and he was informed that "righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood to gather out my own elect from the four quarters of the earth unto a place which I shall prepare,—a holy city that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming for there shall be my tabernacle and it shall be called Zion, a New Jerusalem." (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 12.)

This informs us that the Lord's own elect will be gathered "from the four quarters of the earth," to dwell in this city. They will be gathered by the presentation of "righteousness and truth," which the Lord "will cause to sweep the earth as with a flood." The "elect" love "truth and righteousness" and they will hear the voice of the "Good Shepherd" and be willing to follow him. They will be gathered to this "city of Zion," and shall "be looking forth for the time of my coming."

THEN CHRIST WILL COME.

"And the Lord said unto Enoch, Then shall you and all your city meet them there, and we will receive them into our bosom, and they shall see us, and we shall fall upon their necks, and they shall fall upon our necks and we shall kiss each other and there shall be my abode, and it shall be Zion which I have made, and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 13.

The city that was built by Enoch, was inhabited by the "pure in heart" and they "were of one heart and one mind," and it "was called the city of holiness, even Zion." "And lo! Zion in process of time, was taken up into heaven." "And after Zion was taken up into heaven," "the Holy Spirit fell on many and they were caught up by the power of heaven into Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 5, 6.)

When the "New Jerusalem," "Zion," is built up in the "last days," and the "elect" are gathered into it, and are looking for the coming of Christ, he will come; and the promise was made to Enoch, "Then shall you and all your city meet them there." When Christ with Enoch and all the righteous and the "city" returns, "for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest." Then is when "the great millennial, which I have spoken by the mouth of my servants, shall come." (Doctrine and Covenants 43: 7.)

At the beginning of this wonderful age, many stirring events will take place. The righteous will be resurrected first. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thessalonians 4: 16.) "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." (Revelation 20: 5.)

"For the day cometh that the Lord shall utter his voice out of heaven; the heavens shall shake and the earth shall tremble, and the trump of God shall sound both long and loud, and shall say to the sleeping nations: Ye saints arise and live: ye sinners stay and sleep until I shall call again."—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 5.

"The dead in Christ," "ye saints," "shall rise first," while "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." This gives us a period of time of at least one thousand years between the time of the beginning of the millennial reign and the resurrection of the wicked. During this time Satan will be bound (Revelation 20: 2). "Because of the righteousness of his people, Satan has no power. Wherefore, he can not be loosed for the space of many years, for he hath no power over the hearts of the people, for they dwell in righteousness and the Holy One of Israel reigneth." (Book of Mormon, page 52, verse 4.) The resurrected saints will possess celestial bodies. While all resurrected beings will possess immortal bodies, yet these bodies will differ. The righteous will have "celestial bodies," while the less worthy will have "terrestrial," "testial," or be among the sons of perdition. (1 Corinthians 15: 40. Doctrine and Covenants 85:6.)

"But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."—1 Corinthians 15: 35-38.

It seems from the above quotation that men were asking the same questions in the days of Paul that they are asking to-day. Paul seems to think that the answer is easy, and proceeds to illustrate by referring to the growth of seeds. The life germ or principle that is contained in the wheat, leaves the seed that is sown, and is contained or continued in the seed produced. The seed that is sown dies, but the life germ or principle is contained or perpetuated in the new seed produced. So it is with our bodies. The body dies, but the spirit, which is the life of the body, is contained in the new body which is a new creation, and this is the resurrection of the dead. The life of the seed of wheat will reproduce a new body, a grain of wheat; the life of a seed of mustard will produce mustard, etc. So it is with the body. The spirit of man that is of the celestial order will produce a celestial body in the resurrection. One of the terrestrial or testial order will produce a body of its own kind. These bodies will differ in quality. The celestial is superior, or else there would be no advantage to us in obtaining a body of the celestial order. Paul says, "the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another." (1 Corinthians 15: 40.)

The difference in the glory possessed by these bodies is compared to the difference in the brilliancy of the sun, moon, and stars; for one star differs from the others in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead. (1 Corinthians 15: 41, 42.) This beautiful illustration shows the great difference of glory that will exist in the resurrected bodies; one body will possess the glory represented by the sun, another the glory represented by the moon, and the other the glory of the stars. Each will have a body of his own order and he will enjoy the glory of the order in which he is resurrected.

"The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth" (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 6). This statement enables us to know what the glory of God consists of. It is "intelligence." So we conclude that the glory of the resurrected body is the same. And the difference in the glory obtained is the result of the difference in the degrees of intelligence possessed by these bodies. Each order will eventually receive a fullness of the glory of that particular order; but no promise is made that they will ever pass from one order to another. A simple minded person may learn some things, but he soon reaches the limit of his capacity and beyond it he can not go.

"Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and also they who are quickened by a portion of the testial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who remain, (sons of perdition) shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, etc." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.) This brings all mankind forth in the resurrection with immortal bodies, but the latter class "must inherit a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory." They do not possess the intelligence that is the "glory of God." They do not understand truth and light, nor true principles. Many men have gained prominence in the nations and in the church, simply by displaying ability to oppose true positions. In progressive bodies they stand as the honorable negative, the hard fighting minority. They are able to make a cunning, shrewd argument, that will puzzle many, till time demonstrates the error of their positions. They have intelligence, but it is not the intelligence of God, neither will it bring to them permanent, eternal glory.

THOSE WHO WILL REIGN ON EARTH.

The earth will be "sanctified from all unrighteousness," "that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever and ever." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.) Our Savior said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." (Matthew 5: 5.) In the vision shown to John the Beloved, he saw the redeemed and heard them sing "a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." (Revelation 5: 9, 11.)

These verses teach that those of the celestial order will "possess" the earth in its sanctified form, and that the "redeemed," the resurrected, (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4) will "reign on the earth." For we are told that "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." (Revelation 20: 4.) Let us trace the movements of our Savior. "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God." (Mark 16: 19.) "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1: 11.) "Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things." (Acts 3: 21.) He will return when the "times of restitution" come, and "if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1 Thessalonians 4: 14.)

As he will bring the righteous with him, the question will naturally arise, where will he come? We are informed that "his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, . . . and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." (Zechariah 14: 4, 5.) When he descends from heaven, at the time here referred to, he will come to the earth and the every location where his feet will rest is designated, and "all the saints" will be with him. This is when the righteous are resurrected. The general condition that the world will be in when Christ comes is described as follows: "For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken and the houses rifled and women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city. Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle." (Zechariah 14: 2, 3.) Then when Jerusalem is in this critical condition, with "half of the city in captivity," is the time when the Lord shall come and plant his feet "upon the Mount of Olives," and he will have all his Saints with him. He will then be on earth, surrounded by the resurrected saints, and they "shall reign on the earth" "with Christ a thousand years." Again, "I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand." (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2.) This presents the same condition described by Zechariah, with the additional fact that Christ will "dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years." He will not simply visit the earth occasionally, but will "dwell" here. He has left heaven personally, "with all the hosts thereof," and has come to the earth and will "dwell with men on earth a thousand years." This is when he will make his redeemed and worthy brethren "kings and priests," when they "shall reign on the earth." It is the time referred to in the parable when he said, "Well, thou good servant; because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." And to another he said, "Be thou also over five cities." (Luke 19: 17, 19.) The same time was referred to by our Savior when he said, "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my father hath appointed unto me" (Luke 22: 29), and this will make our Lord "King of kings."

WHO WILL BE ON EARTH DURING THE MILLENIAL REIGN?

"And all the proud, and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth; for the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke, so shall it come to pass." (Doctrine and Covenants 28: 2.) "But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." (Isaiah 11: 4.)

These verses, which are in harmony with many others, teach that when Christ comes the wicked will be destroyed. Before the "great millennial" begins the earth will be cleansed of the corrupt and the vile. None will be left but the "pure in heart." Just what degree of perfection one must have attained, to be permitted to remain, may not be easily decided by man. Yet it is evident from the following that many will remain in mortality, and of them there will be many who are not even members of the church.

Zechariah tells us of the judgments and destruction that will come upon those who were fighting against Jerusalem when Christ comes, and then says, "But it shall come to pass that everyone that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." (Zechariah 14: 16.) Just how many that fought "against Jerusalem," will be left of "the nations" we are not informed, but there are many left, and there is no indication that they were saints, for they were engaged in a very unholy undertaking. They were doing what the Lord condemned, and yet many of them were spared, "left," and they were required to "go up to Jerusalem" every year "to worship the king, the Lord of hosts," or they would "have no rain." (Zechariah 14: 16-19.) The wicked will be destroyed, yet there are many among all nations who are not wicked in the sense the word is here used. The kingdom of the Devil is composed of wicked persons, and it is the members of this "kingdom of the Devil" that are to be destroyed, for "they are those who must be consumed as stubble." (Book of Mormon, pages 51, 58, 103, 175.)

The number that belongs to the "kingdom of the Devil" is great, yet there may be far more that do not belong to it than we may think. This "kingdom of the Devil" is also called the "whore of the earth," and "that great and abominable church, which was founded by the Devil and his children." (Book of Mormon, pages 27, 46.) This church or kingdom of the Devil is composed of all the men and women on earth that serve Satan, it makes no difference what church they attend, or even if their names are enrolled among the saints and they are recognized by men as Latter Day Saints. They are members of the "church of the Devil" in reality, and will be consumed. This "church of the Devil" is not composed of any particular organization. They constitute one great division of the human family. All men become connected with one of these two divisions. Those who belong to the "church of the Devil" are in the "broad way," that "leads to destruction," and all the rest are in the "narrow way" that "leadeth to life." (Matthew 7: 13, 14.) There are only two conditions, "life" and "destruction," and only two ways that lead to them. All mankind is going in one of these two ways. If you are in the narrow way, you are in the Master's fold, but if you are in the broad way, you are in the fold of the Devil. "And now if ye are not the sheep of the Good Shepherd of what fold are ye? Behold, I say unto you, that the Devil is your shepherd, and ye are of his fold; and now who can deny this?" (Book of Mormon, page 218, verse 6.)

We remain from birth in "the narrow way," the "fold" of the Good Shepherd, till we refuse to heed the call of the Master to service. We then decide whether we will serve him or not, "for the voice of the Lord is unto all men and there is none to escape," but if we rebel against him we "shall be pierced with much sorrow." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1.)

It makes no difference where we may be, or of what tribe or nation; the voice of God will reach us, and we must decide whether we will remain in "the fold of Christ," or whether we will go into the "fold of the Devil."

This call comes to some much earlier in life than others, as we see by the parable of Matthew 20: 1-16. Some were called to labor in the vineyard very early in life, while some stood in the market place "all the day idle." They were there when the first were hired or called to labor and they were there also at noon and at three p. m., when others were chosen, but the call to labor never reached them till a short time before the close of life. But when the call came to them they obeyed and were entitled to eternal life. They remained in the "narrow way," the "fold" of Christ.

These divisions bring about or constitute two churches, and only two; "And he said unto me, Behold, there are, save two churches only: the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the Devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations, and she is the whore of all the earth." (Book of Mormon, page 28, verse 46.) Again, "contend against no church, save it be the church of the Devil." (Doctrine and Covenants 16: 4.) As one can be a member of "the church of the Devil" and have his name enrolled in any or no organization, so anyone can belong to the church of the Lamb of God, as here referred to, and have his name enrolled as a member in any or in no organization. They are the ones referred to as the "honest in heart," and as "my sheep," or "Israel," or "my people." There will be enough of this class left in mortality to constitute "many nations," and they shall say, "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." (Micah 4: 1-4.)

These nations will learn and Christ will "judge among" them, and they "shall beat their swords into plowshares," and "learn war no more." Peace shall prevail, righteousness shall reign, and "they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make him afraid." In that day "the wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them." "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." (Isaiah 11: 6-9.)

Those represented by the five wise in the parable of "the ten virgins," "shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance."

This will include more than the members of the church. They will be left in mortality and "they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their king and their lawgiver." (Doctrine and Covenants 45:10.) These, the wise virgins left in mortality, will raise children and these "children shall grow up without sin unto salvation." Yet "it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye." (Doctrine and Covenants 63:13.) From this we learn that those that are left in mortality, as well as those born afterwards, will be changed from mortality to immortality. Men will still have their agency, and Isaiah describes it as follows: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that has not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner, being an hundred years old shall be accursed." (Isaiah 65:20.) Thus one generation after another shall pass away "till the thousand years are ended," and then "Satan shall be loosed out of his prison" and he "shall go out to deceive the nations," and he succeeds in collecting a great number, like "as the sand of the sea." They went up and "compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." (Revelation 20:7-10.)

Those nations that were deceived were composed of the men that were born during that generation. They had not reached that stage of perfection that enabled them to forsake the seductive influences of the Devil. Satan lost his power over mankind at the beginning of the millennium, because the people turned to the Lord. Not that Satan was taken out of the way, and as a result the people became good, but the people became good and Satan was bound as a result, as the following shows: "And because of the righteousness of his people, Satan has no power; wherefore, he can not be loosed for the space of many years; for he hath no power over the hearts of the people, for they dwell in righteousness and the Holy One of Israel reigneth." (Book of Mormon, page 52, verse 4.) As a result of this righteousness, Satan "could not be loosed for the space of many years." During this time (a thousand years) the "vineyard" would be productive and producing much good fruit. "Wherefore, I will lay up unto mine own self of the fruit for a long time (a thousand years) according to that which I have spoken. And when the time cometh that evil fruit shall come into my vineyard, then will I cause the good and the bad to be gathered, . . . and then cometh the season and the end." (Book of Mormon, page 127, verse 28.)

These statements give us to understand that there may be a few old sinners found during the millennium, but when one has become "an hundred years old" he "shall be accursed." But the time will come when so many of the mortals on the earth will become "sinners," and serve Satan, that he will be loosed again, as a result of the power given him by transgression. This period of time will be short and "then cometh the season and the end."

They will be gathered against the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire came down from God and devoured them. (Revelation 20:9.) The saints were still on earth. They were in "the beloved city." This beloved city is where the resurrected and redeemed receive their inheritance.

When "Zion is built up," it will be called "a holy city," "Zion," "a New Jerusalem." (Doctrine and Covenants 36:12.) It will also be called "the New Jerusalem." (Doctrine and Covenants 42:3) and "the holy city," "Mount Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 108:10.)

This city has been located, and we will begin to build it "at the temple lot," and Enoch's city will descend and join it at the beginning of the millennium. (Doctrine and Covenants 36:13.)

The resurrected saints "shall come forth and stand on the right hand of the Lamb when he shall stand upon Mount Zion, and upon the holy city, the New Jerusalem, and they shall sing the song of the Lamb day and night for ever and ever." (Doctrine and Covenants 108:10.) Again, "They shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord, in the holy city." (Doctrine and Covenants 63:13.) As we have "the holy city" located (Ether 6:1), we know where the redeemed will be after they come back to the earth with Christ. The "holy city" is here on the earth, which shows that resurrected, immortal saints, will be here on earth on their inheritances in the holy city, while mortal men are living and composing the nations of the earth.

Whenever one reaches the "age of man" and is worthy to be translated, he will "be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious." (Doctrine and Covenants 98:5.) Where will he be taken when he is "caught up" after being changed? He will be taken to Christ, who will "dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years." But in what part of the earth will he be? In Zion and Jerusalem, "For the law shall go forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." These two places are to be the final and eternal homes of the righteous, the great centers from which the work of God will radiate. Ether was permitted to see the coming of Christ in glory, and the conditions that would then prevail. Moroni gives us a very limited account of what Ether wrote, and we have this account in Ether 6:1. Moroni was about to write more, when he was "forbidden." In this short account given, he tells of "a New Jerusalem" that was to be built "upon this land, unto the remnant of the seed of Joseph," and that it should be "a holy city." He also saw that the "Jerusalem from whence Lehi should come" would be rebuilt after it was destroyed, and it should also "become a holy city of the Lord; and it should be built unto the house of Israel." After these cities were built, the people of God would "no more be confounded until the end came, when the earth shall pass away. And there shall be a new heaven and a new earth; and they shall be like unto the old, save the old have passed away, and all things have become new."

These two cities were to be built and inhabited by Israel, and those numbered with Israel. Those of "the remnant of the seed of Joseph," in the New Jerusalem, on this land, and those of "scattered" Israel will inherit the Jerusalem of old. These cities will be completed and beautiful during the millennium, so by the time when the earth will receive its final purification, "and all things have become new," they will be in that glorified condition described by the prophets. These cities will contain the immortal and glorified saints. In these cities they will receive their eternal inheritances. These cities will be caught up to heaven while the earth is being purified by fire, and they will remain there till "all things are made new." Then they will descend. John describes "the New Jerusalem" and its return. But Ether saw the return of both. After speaking of the earth and all things being made new, he says, "And then cometh the New Jerusalem; and blessed are they who dwell therein, for it is they whose garments are white through the blood of the Lamb; and they are they who are numbered among the remnant of the seed of Joseph, who were of the house of Israel. And then also cometh the Jerusalem of old; and the inhabitants thereof, blessed are they, for they have been washed in the blood of the Lamb; and they are they who were scattered and gathered in from the four quarters of the earth, and from the north countries, (countries of northern Europe) and are partakers of the fulfilling of the covenant which God made with their father Abraham."

We have located these cities on the earth where they were built and inhabited, and the only way they could descend from heaven is for them to be taken there first. Not only will the New Jerusalem come, but "then also cometh the Jerusalem of old," which was to be rebuilt and inhabited by scattered

Israel during the millennium. It, too, was to come to earth in the same way as the New Jerusalem. It, too, will remain on earth after "all things are made new," when this old world of ours, with all its beauty and defects, has been sanctified and made grander and more glorious than man can conceive.

May we have our inheritance among the celestial, glorified beings.

Seven Ways to Kill a Church.

1. Don't come; stay at home, or go somewhere, rather than come to church. Staying at home is not only helping kill the church, but by degrees is killing the spiritual life of the individual.

2. If you do come, come late. The faithful few are generally on time. Getting to church on time shows an interest in the Lord's work that no one can call in question.

3. If you come, come with your mind made up to take a back seat. Act as if you were afraid of the front seats, and afraid to be seen.

4. If you come, come with your mind made up to find fault with the service; the preacher in particular. There are some that never have a good word to say about the church nor the preaching of the word, though they go to church occasionally.

5. If you come, come determined not to give a cent to any object, not even to keep up the expenses of the church. Many say they would go to church if it was not for the taking of so many collections, and yet such people never give anything. This ought not to keep them away.

6. If you come to church, return to your home without shaking hands with your pastor or with any of the brethren or sisters. The preacher often, after a hard effort to reach his people, returns to his home with the blues, saying: "I wonder what was the matter with Brother Snider, Brother Snow, Brother Simmons, and Brother Smith—not one of them spoke to me."

7. If you come to church, come all alone; don't bring your wife or husband, or children, or neighbors. Many people when they start to the house of the Lord slip off as if they were afraid some one would find out where they were going. "Andrew first findeth his brother Simon, and he brought him to Jesus."—John 1:47.

The seven things mentioned above will kill any church. Are you guilty of any of them?—C. C. Haymore, in the Biblical Recorder.

Columbus and Colon.

It is a strange thing that Columbus, who was not looking for America, at all, but for the shortest road to India and Japan, should have caught his first glimpse of the American Continent at the very spot where we are now digging the Panama canal. Of course he had already seen the islands of the West Indies, for this was his fourth and last voyage across the great "Sea of Darkness"; but now arose before the prows of his caravels the cloudy peaks of the San Blas Mountains, and his fleet anchored in that harbor which we call Limon Bay, but which Columbus called "Naos," or the Bay of Ships. There to-day is the Atlantic entrance to the canal, beside the city of Colon, as the Spaniards called Columbus.—Farnham Bishop's "The Story of Panama" in February Saint Nicholas.

Supplementary Reading.—Training the Hand.

Exercise and fresh air are most essential elements in child life, and nature provides for them by implanting in all children a strong instinct to play out-of-doors. Make it your first care to gratify this instinct. Play is within reach of all and nearly all can play in the open air. Children are often deprived of it through ignorance and thoughtlessness; quite as often, through fear of soiling their clothes. We do not wonder that a tidy mother, who has never thought much about the importance of sunlight to every growing thing, but who, perhaps at the washtub and ironing board, has gained a vivid conception of the difficulty of keeping clothes clean, should think it better for her little white robed daughter to play in the clean sitting room, under her own eye, than out-of-doors "in the dirt." For it must be confessed that immaculate frocks will not remain immaculate long if their wearers are allowed to make mud pies; but the making mud pies is so much more important to the child's well-being than is the wearing of immaculate white dresses, that we should take it in preference; as another has said, "In case of clean clothes verses mud pies, I take the side of mud pies every time."

Children's favorite occupation is dabbling in some soft mess, out of which they can shape something. Modeling seems to be a necessity to childish happiness. All the heavy-hearted years that have passed since my own childhood have not been sufficient to deaden the remembrance of the delight afforded by a lump of dough, out of which I made crude images, to my heart's content. Even a keener delight was experienced when permitted to make mud pies; because these must be made out-of-doors.

But this species of culinary operations is attended with difficulties, especially when the material is the rich black mud of the prairies, as it was in my own case. A pile of sand in the back yard obviates all these difficulties, and is a veritable child's paradise. It is much cleaner than mud, and when well moistened, can be molded as well. This building instinct is very strong in children, and shows itself in the nursery, where stools, tables, and chairs are pressed into service as material. But its appropriate field is out-of-doors, and a sand pile gives it full scope. If every father knew how much pleasure a load of dry sand would afford his children, and how much it would relieve his wife by keeping the little ones safely, healthfully, and happily employed, he would have one at whatever cost.

A little wooden spade, "mine dig," as a little friend of mine calls it, should be in the possession of every child. With it he digs holes in his sand heap, or tosses the sand about, exercising his muscles and growing strong thereby. Next he goes to grubbing in the ground, making little beds and shaping a mimic garden. If he chooses your beet bed or the flower garden as the scene of his operations, as he is apt to do, because the ground is all prepared for him, there is trouble in the camp—but don't, we beg of you, pour out the phials of your wrath upon the incipient gardener, nor drive him out of your garden without giving him one of his own. By giving him a garden of his own, you are teaching him to distinguish between mine and thine, and are thus giving him lessons in the duties and privileges of ownership. Such lessons are the foundation of honesty in future life. I remember once sitting with a young mother when her three-year-old boy came up to her, tugging with all his might at a little trough, but exhibiting the greatest delight in its possession. His mother, recognizing it as belonging to a neighbor, sprang up, exclaiming, "Oh, you naughty, naughty boy!" and took it away from him.

The little fellow sobbed as though his heart would break, and his mother seemed no less distressed, though from a very different cause. He cried because he wished to retain his prize, and did not understand why he could not. Her distress voiced itself in the tearful exclamation, "What if my Freddie should grow up a thief!" But the fact that he took the little trough which pleased his fancy from his neighbor's adjoining yard, instead of from his own, did not indicate any danger of his growing up a thief; it had no moral significance whatever. It simply proved that the idea of ownership was not clearly enough developed to make him distinguished between mine and thine, and that boundaries had as yet no place in his mind. A little garden patch, of which he is sole proprietor, will give him these ideas.

Destructiveness is only constructiveness turned wrong side out; the instinct which leads children to pull their toy to pieces is the same that would lead them to make it from the beginning if they only knew how. If you would afford children lasting pleasure, as well as train their hands and brains, give them playthings with which they can do something—building blocks, slate and pencils, a blackboard, tools and materials for work. Very simple things will give great pleasure to a child if they fulfill this condition.

A basket of clothes pins will keep a child pleasantly employed for hours, if mamma will only show him how to put them together, and occasionally stop to admire his handiwork. Here is a point worth noting,—the intense desire your child has for your companionship, even in his play. Many loving, conscientious mothers deprive their children of much pleasure, and lose one very powerful means of molding their character by ignoring this natural desire. Play with your children if you would enter fully into their lives.

A quantity of smooth, brick-shaped blocks, such as a kind elder brother can easily prepare, or a carpenter will make for a trifling expense, furnishes the best kind of playthings for children. The variety of things which an ingenious child will make with them is astonishing. This kind of play helps children of different ages to be company for each other.

A brother four or five years older can cut with his knife, from little blocks, toy houses and other pretty shapes, which will delight his five-year-old sister more for having seen them made, than any similar toy, though much more beautiful, purchased at the store.

No toy should ever be given a child that is too nice for him to play with; at least, if such a thing is given do not deceive yourself,—you can not deceive him,—by supposing you are giving him pleasure. It is not the fine French doll, dressed so elaborately that it is fit only to sit in the parlor and never be played with that her little mistress loves; it is the old, maybe shabby, doll whose clothes she can make and mend, wash and iron, take off and put on; the doll which she can hug and kiss and pet, that she loves. This is not because children naturally love ugly, shabby things; it is because they like things with which they can do something, on which they can use their hands.

To fix the child's attention long upon anything, we must permit him to use his hands. Sight satisfies children for a little while, as they take in impressions greedily; but unless you allow them to work out these impressions with their fingers, they soon become listless or 'fretful,' according as their temperament is lymphatic or nervous.

Watch little children looking out of a window, how eagerly their eyes follow everything in the street. How they notice every little detail in the house opposite and in the passers-by. But they are not long content with watching; they wish to give expression to what they have seen; often they do this mimicking the movements they see, or by tracing rude outlines with wet fingers on the window pane. If no means of expression is allowed them, they soon become tired of the show in which they have no part. If a slate and pencil had been given them and their fingers had been trained to make rude drawings in which their vivid imaginations could discover a likeness to the panorama without, it would have held their pleased attention much longer. Keep a child's hands busy and you are sure to hold his attention. Neglect of this principle is to blame for the habit of inattention acquired by children, and no mental habit is more hurtful, for attention lies at the base of all learning, whether it be from books, from nature, or from men. The hand is the scepter of humanity, distinguishing man from the brutes and rendering possible all the form industries of the world. The advantage of training children to use the hand dexterously can not be overestimated. Steam and machinery are doing much of the hard, rough work of the world, but everywhere there is a growing demand for delicate and artistic processes which can be done only by hand. In this age of the world, what the human hand needs is not so much strength as skill, and this is best gained by acquiring complete control in childhood. All know how necessary this is if one would become an expert piano player; it is just as necessary in all departments of labor.

Teachers find a wonderful difference in the faculty with which children of the same age, coming to school for the first time, use their hands. Some are so awkward and clumsy they can not grasp the pencil, much less use it; other fingers, no larger than theirs, are dexterous and quick. This is not all, or mainly, due to natural difference; it depends much upon training. If children have not been allowed or encouraged to use their hands in work or play, as nature designed; if in infancy they have been waited upon continually by nurses who did not know how to train their hands; or if they have always been supplied with ready-made playthings, and have not been allowed to play out-of-doors, where they can not help using their hands, they are found to have little dexterity. Their hands are so helpless we can not help pitying them, no matter how daintily pretty they are. At the opposite extreme we find children's hands so stiffened by rough work, too hard for them, that it will be very difficult in later life to train them to work requiring delicate manipulation. Thus, in very childhood, they are condemned to a life of hard, unremunerating toil, because in mature life remunerative fields of labor will be closed to them by this abuse of the muscles in their childish hands.

But many children, and we are glad to find the number increasing, have parents farseeing and wise enough to commence in early childhood that training of the hand which will make it ready for whatever work maturity offers it to do. Much of this training is given through the plays of children, if we are wise enough to utilize this instinct. What child does not love to play piano on stove hearth, table, or chair? Encourage them in it. To be sure it does not produce much music, but it makes the little fingers supple and dexterous.—Childhood, Its Care and Culture, by Mary Allen West.

Editors Herald: Will you be so kind as to allow us space in the HERALD to return "thanks" to the friend who so kindly sent the Toronto World to the old folks at the Saints' Home.

We were very much interested in the sermons of Bishop R. C. Evans. We looked forward from one week to the next for the coming of the paper, and when it arrived we all gathered to the sitting room to listen to some one of our number read the sermon.

With sincere thanks, we are,

W. S. MACRAE.

CLARKSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, January 23, 1912.

Editors Herald: Inclosed you will find renewals for the church publications, which I could hardly get along without. I consider the church publications a great inspiration, and I find where our members do not have them in their homes that they are in most instances correspondingly weak in the faith and lacking in spiritual energy; therefore I always advise them to subscribe for the church papers.

In talking to one sister she was bewailing the fact that her children and husband had been joining the sectarian churches. I asked the sister if she took any of the church papers. She said no, she had always neglected to subscribe for them. Not having the advantage of Sunday school, and of meetings for her children, she neglected the means of the church in providing this influence in her home. Could she expect them to do otherwise? It seems to me that our parents do not fully realize the importance of raising their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. We should not allow others to teach our children, for the Lord has said that he will hold us accountable, and that our children shall have been so taught and so instructed that when they arrive at the age of which he says they are accountable to him, they shall be prepared and ready to obey this gospel. If they are not prepared, whose fault is it? The Lord says the sin shall be visited upon the head of the parent. Therefore we, as parents, should not allow the influences of the world to come into our homes, but should throw around our children such influences as will tend to lead them and to create in them a desire and a love for this great gospel plan that we that have accepted should be laboring to build up. My companion was convinced of the truthfulness of this gospel by reading Autumn Leaves, something which I have been unable to accomplish, therefore I think I have just reasons for appreciating them and their work. I am glad to say that this branch is growing, not so much numerically as spiritually.

There has been a gradual spiritual growth in our branch since we have built a church, which is not entirely ours yet, but we expect it to be before very long. The Lord has blessed us in many ways and has shown forth his hand to us, causing us to realize that any and all efforts which may be put forth in the service of God is labor well spent. Notwithstanding the fact that our Christian friends put forth great efforts to keep us out, and have boasted that they will yet make us tear down our church, we are not discouraged, and feel to thank God that the millions of this world could not buy from us the hope which is an "anchor to our soul, steadfast and sure."

I realize that this is a work that calls for valor and that if we expect to accomplish anything as soldiers of the Lord we must put backbone and energy into our work. A half-hearted work will not accomplish results.

Ever praying for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God, I am yours in bonds,

FRANK L. SHINN.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, January 25, 1912.

At the reunion at Irvington in the year 1910 I was elected district gospel literature superintendent. I have just received my first local gospel literature report for the time ending January 1, 1912, from the San Francisco Branch, although the locals should report twice a year to the district superintendent.

The report was filled out and signed by Sister Lavinia Chalmers, Brethren C. C. Day and W. A. Page. I consider their zeal in the distribution of so much of our gospel literature very commendable. I am sure good will result. If the other locals from the different branches will only send reports with a showing one half as good, I will be proud to hand my report to the district conference.

I suppose the reason that the locals have failed to report is that they were ignorant of the fact that it was required of them to do so, hence this reminder.

I think it would be well for Brother Ferris to give the locals a few words of instruction through the HERALD.

In bonds,

E. F. ADAMSON.

TAMPICO, MEXICO, December 30, 1911.

Editors Herald: Inclosed you will find $3.50 to renew my subscription to HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves; these are the only church influence I now get. When they arrive at the ranch they are the first in the line of papers that I read. So many of the articles seem to be especially adapted to my needs, and were it not for them I would lose entirely the progress of the work of the church.

I have been here now over three years and Brother Sheehy is the only other Saint I have seen in that time, but from the disastrous experience he had I am afraid the other elders will steer clear of our ranch. But I want to assure them we have a large launch of our own and I will gladly meet any elder desiring to visit us at Tampico and take him to and from the ranch.

We are continually working quite a number of natives and eight to ten Chinamen, and there is a good opening for missionary work in either of these languages for some man and his wife that could speak those languages sufficiently to conduct a Sabbath school.

I am prepared to pay fair wages and give house rent free and furnish all the land for truck gardening free to a young couple, the man to work for our company; and will give steady employment the year around for the right kind of a man, one that could adapt himself to all kinds of work, and who has had sufficient experience to take the lead.

The natives and Chinamen have no recreation here, except dancing, card playing, and drinking, and I often feel that this is a good field for active missionary work, and believe they would take kindly to it, and I would gladly give every assistance I could.

Possibly in this way there may be an opening for some of our church workers. The health here is remarkably good, very little malaria, and to any couple that would like frontier life it seems to me a good opening.

I have felt impressed to write you along this line for some time, and now may the influence of the Spirit tell you whether to publish this or not. Ever praying, and hoping I may again be able to live under the church influence.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA, January 29, 1912.

Dear Herald: I love this great latter day work, and while thinking upon it my heart is made to thrill and rejoice as I recount God's many blessings to me and the verifying of his precious promises to his believing children.

It seems that more glorious impressions come to me to-day than usual; it being the anniversary of my ordination to the ministry. How vividly does the picture of one year ago come to my mind, when under the hands of Elder F. M. Slover I was intrusted with the Aaronic priesthood. Never will I forget the meditations, prayers, and impressions that were mine on and previous to that time, realizing the responsible position that I, a mere boy, was expected to fill. It seemed an impossibility to me, for I was "slow of speech," but I soon learned that I had nothing to fear from that source, for He that hath power to save to the uttermost has been with me in my labors and his Holy Spirit has enabled me to speak and act with a power that was not of man.

Later I was intrusted with the higher priesthood, which brought more duties and responsibilities, but also more strength and light to enable me to perform them, and confirmed my faith in the latter day work to such an extent that the sacrifice (?) sinks into insignificance, and in the language of Paul, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

Aside from the outward manifestations of the Spirit, there is linked together in my life a chain of circumstances and evidences that prompts me to bear my earnest testimony to the truthfulness of the angel's message. Go, dear HERALD where my feet may never tread, where my voice may never ring out the words of eternal truth; go to the heathen nations that may be groveling amid the darkness of paganism, if perchance some may see the light; go to the honest in heart and convince them of God's great plan; go to my brethren, sisters, and friends whom I love, and tell them the Angel message is true; that God's power is among his people; that the field is white already to harvest; that we might thrust in the sickle and reap; tell them to be faithful and true, that God may use them in his work to accomplish his purposes, and bring about the redemption of Zion, and speed the time when we can see as we are seen and know as we are known.

A. E. WARR.

Dear Herald: I feel within me a strong desire to bear my testimony to the work, and write of an experience I had about four years ago. My child, then eleven years old, came out of school very sick; she had not been well for a few days before. It was on Friday. Through the night she grew still worse—could not sleep, and was suffering from a severe headache and fever. Next day we called the elders. She received a blessing, as we always do when in harmony with the law; but while my child was yet suffering I felt all the time like singing praises, and felt very happy.

I had not been very well in the past, and as my child needed lots of care and I had to do the necessary housework for four, the work was quite a little more; but to my surprise, the work seemed very easy. As I have stated before, I was always happy, so much so that I always felt like singing praises, and yet my child suffering greatly; no sleep came to her, night or day, and lots of times she was out of her head; her headache was so great she had to vomit; her bowels were very bad, and no eating whatever; the fever was very high.

The three said they could not understand how I could be so happy and my child so sick. I said to the Lord, "How is it? for you know I love the child, and can't be sorry, and she suffers so greatly?" The Spirit whispered, "You have got the strength to take care of her." Oh, our Father, our tender, all-loving Father! He saw where I was in need, and he was near me and my child, and who could harm us?

We had the elders every day for the four days. My child says, "I know now what sick means. I can't hardly endure the pains, mamma; will you pray for me?" I knelt and prayed with her. That day the elders thought I ought to get a doctor. I told them not as long as I felt the way I did. The fifth night my child suffered so I could not resist from calling the elders after 1 a. m. My husband called them and soon they were administering to her. God's Spirit was there. I had the assurance a neighboring sister, wife of one of the elders, was helping us by praying. One of the elders wanted to stay; he thought I must be worn out by this time. I said, "Brother, look at me. I am well and able to take care of her." When the elders went I told my husband I would lie down and take two hours rest; so he stayed with her while I slept. I awoke and felt I had received two hours' rest, but my husband said it was fifteen minutes: I could not believe it, for I felt so rested. I hurried to my child. She was calling me. I dropped down beside her bed, took her sweet little hands in mine, and felt happy; her sweet presence, I enjoyed it so. My heart was so full of love that I felt love was pouring into my heart and was running over. Oh, what a happiness came over me; it was the Spirit, and I can't tell the great happiness which I enjoyed. Now I looked into her face and saw it had grown very thin; the eyes seemed sunken and one side of her face was as pale as a corpse. A cry went up, "Oh, she will be torn from me." I broke down. My husband tried to comfort me. It seemed like I was crushed, but I gathered all my strength, for I wanted our Father's will to be done, and plead with him for strength.

Not to disturb my child, who had then for once dropped asleep, I went out of the house—just daybreak in May. I lifted my eyes and heart to God and was then enwrapped in an open vision; evidence itself can not describe the beauty and grandeur, and it was made known to me my child was given to me once more, but it would be a time before she would grow strong.

When I went in my child was still asleep but soon awoke to great suffering again. I was so strengthened and filled with the Spirit that I needed no earthly food that morning. In the evening of the same day my child received the blessing of being healed, but it took years before she grew strong.

Praise God from whom all blessings flow. May we all strive faithfully and diligently until the victory is won, in my prayer in Jesus' name.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister H. A. Moffit, Melby, North Dakota: "I have had many testimonies that this is the true church. I thank the Lord for permitting me to accept the plan he has given. I have tried to lay aside all pride, envy, and strife, and put my trust in the God of Israel."

Of the various Ideal Systems and Utopian Schemes proposed by dreamers and reformers, there is this to be said: their chains have but one weak link, and that is the human link. And a chain is no stronger than its weakest link.—Frank Crane.

News From Missions

Missouri.

I left home and loved ones on the 2d inst. (after "pacing the streets of Zion" a few days) and wended my way to Springfield, where I joined company with Brother J. D. Wiltfong. We went to the Macomb Branch and spent a week with the Saints there during the cold weather, preaching some and talking some, leaving the Saints feeling better from our visit with them, I believe. Thence south of Macomb to Brother Vancil's where we have a few members located. Stayed with them one week, preaching and visiting both Saints and friends. It was surprising to see the people turn out when the roads were so rough. They were surely thirsting for the word of righteousness.

Here I separated from Brother Weltfong, leaving him to preach a few nights longer and then move east to Denlow, while I came south to look after the work in this part of the district, Brother Vancil bringing me by hack over the breaks of the Ozarks, covered with snow and ice a good part of the way. So when we ran up against a glacier that we could not surmount we simply backed off and found another way. Arriving at Brother Ensley's at noon of the 22d after a drive of eighteen miles through the cold, I found myself so hoarse I could scarcely talk; but, worst of all, as I started for the house I struck some ice and found myself flat of my back with a grip thrown to each side. I did not unjoint my neck, but it is yet sore from the fall. I will not grumble, it takes it all to make up the life of a missionary; so what can't be cured must be endured. I found Brother Ensley enthusiastic in the work and ready to get out an appointment among his neighbors, that they might again hear the gladsome sound of the gospel. Brother Ensley is a local elder who farms for a living; but he finds time to go sometimes as far as twelve miles to preach Saturday nights and Sundays, in order to keep the camp fires blazing; and that the people might hear the gospel. I would be glad if all the local force would get out appointments at the different schoolhouses in their vicinities, and see just how much good they could do in one year. It would save both time and means for the missionary; and he would be able to do a greater amount of work as well as a greater amount of good. Our missionary force is small indeed in this district. We can't get everywhere, but we will do the best we can; and while we do that, let the Saints do the best they can; and remember that it takes means for the missionary to travel from place to place. Also for clothing. As ever,

AVIS, MISSOURI, January 23, 1912.

Canada West.

Since writing in December we have had a taste of Canada winter. We are just emerging from a four weeks' spell of weather forty to sixty degrees below zero. Like many troubles ahead, they are worse before one gets to them. In the vernacular of Canada, it was not "too" bad; in fact, I have suffered more with cold in the States. Though not feeling well, I have ridden several times eight to twenty miles in the coldest of weather without receiving a frostbite. Of course we dress warmer, and wrap up in furs with a warmer at our feet. One, too, must watch fingers and nose, but that seems to relieve the monotony of the trip. Had I been at all well, I am sure I would have enjoyed it. We are now approaching the first of February and have had no blizzards and only one storm that was worthy the name.

The women folks here suffer from a disease called "indoors." They and small children are practically in prison most of the winter.

The reader can see how quite impossible it is to hold meetings during such weather. Missionaries have some spare time to give to some long neglected book or subject, or to make a deeper search of their Bibles. I have been spending a few weeks of mine reviewing Hurlbut's Revised Normal Lessons. I suppose I would not be thanked for stating my conclusions till we meet in open convention.

There is not much to write about with regard to missionary work. A relation of four weeks' experience will serve to illustrate some of the difficulties to be overcome, or, rather, to be endured. Before taking my trip to the far North, mentioned in my last, I wrote out and had posted, some handbills announcing a series of meetings to commence three weeks' later near Birdview. The use of the schoolhouse was readily secured, and the two or three families of Saints living near busied themselves inviting their neighbors, and it was freely talked of at school. The Saints who live there enjoy the high esteem of their neighbors, so that we were anticipating a respectful hearing; but instead, the neighbors "respectfully" declined. Only two nonmembers came, and the next evening only one other, who came with us in the sleigh. I should mention as a fourth, Brother Perchie's hired man, who drove team for us. Of all the places for respectful (?) indifference, Canada takes the cake. We are getting a taste of the cream of society—the ice cream.

After holding a few poorly attended meetings at Saints' residences, we next tried in the neighborhood of Brother Lewis Gerdron, near Lama, with much less success than at Birdview. The trustees of the schoolhouse were so profuse in expressions of willingness to have us use the schoolhouse I almost looked for them to pay us something to have us occupy, and they could scarcely wait the hour for meeting so they might hear a representative of Mr. Gerdron's faith, whom they held in high esteem. Not ice cream this time, but taffy—or was it blarney? Not a soul except the preacher and Brother Gerdron and son attended the evening service, although we had the teacher read a notice of our meetings before her school, and we personally invited several of the neighbors. Next day I visited several of the neighbors, had some friendly chats with some of them, and flattered myself that I had broken the ice, and at least a few would come to meeting that night; but results were the same as the evening before. A third attempt bore the same fruits, and so we thought to try in town, three miles away. I changed my tactics there. We entered town late in the afternoon and completely concealed our identity; readily secured permission to use the schoolhouse, and no questions asked as to who we were. I went before the school and announced my meetings, representing myself as having been a missionary in the South Sea Islands, made them a nice little speech about the islands and their people, the origin of coral, etc., and promised to sing them some songs in the Tahitian tongue if they would attend meetings. Received the lavish thanks of the teacher for my speech to the school and returned that evening to the schoolhouse only to find the fire out and windows up, chimneys broken, and lamps empty. Brother Gerdron came early with oil, and we made out with a few broken chimneys to light the entire congregation, which consisted of Brother Gerdron and myself. I went early in the evening to a neighbor to borrow a lantern, so I could see to build a fire, and was urged to take their only lamp also, which I was trying to learn to "respectfully" decline and was almost urged to take the cookstove also. Next day I visited every house in town, talked with the clerks in the stores, who expressed themselves as only too glad to persuade everyone who came in to attend church that night, and pay them for doing so. Stopped at the hotel for supper; saw the bartender (all hotels have bars here) kissing the landlord's wife, with no extra charge for the show, and no pay for supper, as the bartender was hotel clerk. "We never charge preachers anything," he said. "It would be 'too' bad." One man attended church that night (it may have been the bartender), but only looked in at the door and quickly went away. Brother Gerdron and I held a council of war and decided to try one more night. We drove in, early, built a good fire, made a good light, with no better results than before.

Now the weather was fine, and the busy season over, and at each of these places a good warm shed for horses. I took leave of the good family of Gerdron's, he sending one hundred and seventy-five dollars tithing with me to conference.

But as that event was two weeks' away I resolved to try another place in the neighborhood of Brother Perry Leach, near Swanson.

I arrived at Delisle and was starting for the hotel, but met a man running toward the train who said, "Hotel just quarantined with smallpox." This man had jumped the quarantine and I heard was arrested at Saskatoon that evening. Several others had escaped through doors and windows and down the fire escape, and the whole town was likely exposed, and myself with the rest. Now I am very much opposed to vaccination. I prefer to have my blood clean than a lot of poison thrown into it from some old cow. The doctor told me he could give me some medicine that would destroy smallpox germs, but which in fact came near destroying me. Five weeks have now passed and I have scarcely eaten enough to keep a cat alive, especially after my first week. It is all the more lamentable as the scare turned out to be only chicken pox.

At Brother Leach's, before mentioned, we thought cottage meetings from house to house the best. Brother Duckworth drove me to see the neighbors and we announced our cottage meetings, beginning at Brother Leach's the first two nights, but no one came. A neighbor was in when we were talking over our plans and thought the cottage plan all right and fervently invited me to preach in their house the third night, which I accepted. They hurried home so as to get the chores done early and return to church, but as before stated, they nor others came that or the next night, and I did not feel to accept their invitation to occupy in their house. The fourth night one man came. I preached on the unchangeability of God, as seen in nature and religion. The man said the most logical sermon he ever heard and one that could not be disproven. As he did not return the next night, it was probably taffy. He was Scotch, however. Brother Mortimore, do they have taffy in Scotland? Some excuse may be offered for Brother Leach's neighbors, for a new 30,000 bushel elevator was completed about that time and filled in four days.

Had a splendid conference, though I was not well enough to enjoy it very much.

Think I can recuperate better in Zion than in the frigid North, and a few days more may find me there.

JANUARY 22, 1911.

Arizona.

It is with a degree of hope and anticipation that we enter in upon the duties and opportunities of a new year; and being cheered by the blessings of the past we renew our courage and feel like redoubling our diligence, and improving all our opportunities for good in the year just opening before us.

The God we serve has been wonderfully kind to us in the year just past, and we feel it a duty as well as a privilege to express our appreciation and gratitude for the peaceful influence of his divine Spirit which has stimulated and cheered us to the present time. We are cheered in the work, because He who directs this work is greater than him that opposeth, and with the Spirit of God to cheer we are masters of the situation, we are victors in the conflict, and heroes in the battle.

The year that is just past has brought to us new opportunities as well as new experiences, and we feel to rejoice in the fact that he who hath called us to the work has also sustained us in it, and we have been made a partaker in a marked degree of that Comforter, even the Spirit of Truth, that is promised to all those who ask for it. And we therefore enter in upon this new year's work with confidence that He who has been our support in the past will not fail us if we but trust and obey. We realize more and more the need of personal consecration to God, and to his laws, and we desire to urge upon all who have this work at heart to renew their diligence, and with a spirit of optimism move forward day by day, trusting the God of heaven for grace sufficient to fit each for his peculiar duty, that as a united whole we may move forward the cause of righteousness, having brought ourselves in such close rapport with God that we are able to perform his will in our every action. It has been wisely said that "He that is born of God keepeth himself, and that evil one toucheth him not," and we desire to see the time hastened when they who have named the name of Christ will so far depart from evil that it will have no place among them either to destroy or mar their peace and good works among men.

We believe strongly in the proverb which says: "All things come to those who try," and we are certain that nothing was ever achieved without an effort and therefore we realize that if we ever expect to attain unto that degree of righteousness described in the law it will be by virtue of the fact that we have daily applied ourselves, and have by a persistent effort gained one truth or virtue each day, which added to the other brings us just that much nearer the goal of perfection that must be reached before we can expect to dwell with God, and become a partaker of his glory and presence.

It is true we are not all capacitated alike, but there is one thing certain, and that is we can all fill our measure with the "choicest of the wheat" if we will be diligent in winnowing out the chaff; but it is also true that we can not fill the measure with the pure grain if we already have it two thirds full of chaff unless we first empty out the chaff, and then enter the fields and glean and winnow until we have filled our measure.

Our thoughts determine our destiny, for "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he," and as truly as the sun rises and sets again we will develop into the likeness of the things we contemplate; therefore it becomes us to guard our thoughts well, and dwell on those things that have a tendency to uplift and ennoble the character.

A persistent, personal effort on the part of each during the year that is before us, will, if it be directed aright, bring us several degrees higher in our standard of righteousness, and will enable us to approach unto that condition of Zion, the PURE IN HEART.

Ever hopeful of a complete victory, I am your servant for Jesus' sake.

BISBEE, ARIZONA, January 26, 1912.

Honolulu.

Well, the Old Year is gone and a new one is here, full of hope and promise. As I have just made out report for the last quarter, covering the work done by Brother Barrett and myself, I thought I would make the matter complete by writing.

This leaves all the missionary force well and contented, though Fern is not feeling as good as I wish she were. She has been taken up with preparing the children for the different Christmas entertainments, etc., which with her other work was too much for her. But though we may be somewhat thinner than of old, and somewhat disfigured, we are still firm in the faith, and intend to try and make something turn up that will be worth noticing.

When you receive our reports you will note that we stopped the work as it were for a time, to help on the painting of the church. I wondered at the time whether we had better do it, but the branch was so far in debt that I thought we had better help. Since then my choice has appeared to be a wise one, for the Mormons are building a new chapel on King Street, farther out toward Waikiki than our church, and their white elders are all down there digging and helping. But maybe you can't see where that applies to us. In this way it does. They are using every possible thing to make us appear wrong in the eyes of the Hawaiians, and had we gone and hired our church painted I am sure that the Mormons would have been telling around how superior their "haule" (elders) were to ours, and how we were afraid to work, etc. I find that because we can not talk Hawaiian, they tell the natives we are too lazy to learn. But just wait, for if the Lord is willing, and I am retained in this mission another year, I am going to try and make a "dent" in their present easy sailing.

In many ways the past year is not what I had thought it would be, but in others it is gratifying. We have had fourteen baptisms for the year, mostly children, two Sunday schools have been organized and the work previously started has been kept up. Also at Christmas time we have had three Christmas trees instead of one, as formerly.

We held the first one in the hall in Chinatown for our Chinese Sunday school, and there were about one hundred present, children and a few of their parents. The children spoke pieces and sang Christmas songs which Fern had taught them and just did finely. It was the first entertainment ever given exclusively by the Chinese for the Chinese under the auspices of the Reorganization.

The next tree we had at the church on Monday night (Christmas Day), to which all the Sunday schools were invited, except the Chinese and Japanese. We had a big crowd and all had a big time. But the best-thing of all was the following evening when we had a special car bring in the people belonging to the Japanese school in Kalihi. About seventy-five came, and we used the same tree we had the previous evening, giving them the use of the church for the occasion. The little folks just did finely with their recitations and songs, etc., and besides the ones in English which Fern had taught them, they sang some songs in Japanese, including the national air and several others of note. This school is only about six months old, but is very promising, and it looks as though they were going to take hold of the work much sooner than the Chinese. Indeed, it is a different proposition altogether with them from what it is with the Chinese; for where the Chinese are slow to take up new ways, the Japs are just the opposite. This was also the first Japanese entertainment ever given by our church.

But we have not lost hopes for the Chinese. Last year you will remember that I asked consideration of the matter of erecting a Chinese mission, that some one might be prepared to take the gospel to the home land, and I stated that this was the "key to the Orient." The year's events have proven that Honolulu and the education carried on here was the key to the Orient in more ways than one, for the very man who has been foremost in the Revolution now nearing an end in China is a Hawaiian-born and Hawaiian-educated Chinese. And it appears to me that this civil preparation is but paving the way for the gospel, and if a Hawaiian boy should be chosen out of four hundred million people to be their first president (as the indications are that Doctor Sun Yat Sen, to whom I refer, will be), is it not very probable that it will be the same when the gospel is taken there? You know the promise has already been given to Too Shau Chinn, that if faithful, he should be among the first to carry the gospel to his own people. And while he is not as active as he might be, he still takes the church papers, is living a good moral life, and if work was really opened up for him to do here among the Chinese, I think he would enter in gladly.

Brother Waller seems to think it is what we need (a mission for the Chinese, I mean), and I think it is time the matter received more consideration. I am going to see if we can not formulate some sort of a plan which might be used as a basis from which to work the matter out.

Am inclosing picture of our gospel tent which Fern took the day we closed for the season, and we now have the tent stored away waiting for nice weather to come again next spring. The paint picture also was taken a few days ago, when Fern and Mary were down watching the naval parade which passed the church last Friday morning.

Am watching with interest the development and progress made by the Order of Enoch, and it looks to me as though they struck a snag somewhere. We hear no more of that $500,000 that the Bishop wanted to start things off. I hope we may see something doing in the near future by it.

Praying for a prosperous year for the church in all its departments,

Sincerely,

M. A. MCCONLEY.

Ohio.

I am still engaged in the Master's work, and interested in the angel's message of latter days. I left home November 15 for Catawba Island, where we were permitted to occupy the union church. Met with bitter opposition, they trying hard to close us out, but failed. Then they locked the organ and carried off the song books, starting all kinds of rumors about the Mormon preacher. But the preacher had made a few friends in the short time he had been there, who stood by him, so we occupied until time for them to use it for their Christmas entertainment. We closed with the request and promise that we would return in the near future.

We then came to this place, called Nina, seven miles east of Oak Harbor. Commenced meetings in the Grange Hall, December 19, with fair crowd and good interest. The crowds have increased until the hall is filled almost every night. On the 21st, we were privileged to baptize three precious souls into the kingdom of God. On the 12th, we were called to Akron to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Ida Snyder, whom we baptized April 3, 1911, in a font at their own door, she being sick at the time. She had believed the gospel for some time, the writer having preached in their school-house some years before, and making my home with them during that time. She was a noble woman. Her husband is an excellent man, but has not yet seen his way clear to accept the gospel. We hope he will ere long.

We stayed for night services at Akron, and baptized two little buds of promise, (Saints' children) just before the preaching services,—the first to be baptized in the font of the new church, after which the writer was asked to occupy, which we did, with good liberty and good attention, a number of outsiders being present.

The next day, January 15, returned to Nina, beginning my meetings the same evening, with a good crowd. Have continued each night, and am still holding forth. Sunday I was privileged to baptize Brother George Floro and wife and sister. These are young people, and we feel that they will be a great help to the work here. We also blessed two children, and organized a Sunday school.

The people are very anxious to see the work prosper here; and we feel that the time is nearly ripe for an organization of the church. The writer is stopping with Brother Lewis Finken, who has been in the church several years, and holds the office of priest. He is doing all he can to forward the work here. His wife is one of the first three we baptized here,—a noble woman. And we must not forget Sister Nana Dewitt, who rendered noble service, playing the organ each evening, and assisting in leading the singing.

We expect to continue here while interest lasts. Some are investigating our claims. A doctor was at the baptizing yesterday, and is somewhat interested. The Saints are good and trying to do all they can to help the work. Indeed, they have been so good to the preacher, that he is loth to leave them. They have left nothing undone in a financial way, that was necessary to be done. The preacher is wanting nothing, because there is nothing lacking. Surely the Lord will not forget such noble-hearted people. One of them is not a member of the church, Mr. Isaac Floro; but the writer, since coming here, has baptized his wife, son, daughter, and daughter-in-law; and we are in hopes he will follow soon.

In hopes of the final triumph of the gospel.

Your brother in Christ,

JAMES MCCONNAUGHY.

OAK HARBOR, OHIO, January 22, 1912.

Nebraska.

I will try and tell you of things as they appear to me in Nebraska. I have attended three conferences and two reunions. My experiences and observations have taught me that the spirit of uplift, the coming up higher sentiment largely prevails among the Saints. The contrast between now and thirty years ago is very marked. During the past year the good Spirit has largely prevailed, the business has been dispatched without harmful friction, not because we always saw eye to eye, but because the spirit of toleration and good will so largely prevailed. In our social relations kindness and love were the ruling force which is always sure to make such gatherings profitable and enjoyable.

The convention and conference held in Lincoln on the 19th, 20th, and 21st inst. will go down in the history of that district as a red-letter day, the standard of excellence has been lifted very high. Efficiency in management, economy in time, money, and nerve force were marked features, and with the good spirit that prevailed, they made it a very pleasant and profitable gathering; succeeding conferences will have to climb high to hold the pennant.

Notwithstanding I see things from the viewpoint of an optimist, and that the future looks bright to me, I am not blind to the evils that exist among us. Love of money, politics, the pleasures of the world, a cowardice that makes some ashamed of their faith, and that of their fathers, and perverted ideas of education have blinded some to that extent that they do not realize the dangerous ground on which they are standing and that some day they must hear words of disapproval from the Master. It is strange, but nevertheless true, throughout the entire church, that many of our people who have been successful in an educational and financial way owe it to the fostering care of the church which has constantly sought to keep the young in an environment that would protect them from the evils so common in the world, and encourage them in everything that is good, and also to the blessings of a loving Father, who with a lavish hand bestowed them upon his children whose highest and holiest duty should be to render service to the household of faith that had done so much for them. It is an act of moral cowardice, that does not belong to the true and brave, that will desert the ship that has carried them over many troubled seas because their faith is despised and they are called "Mormons." Our Lord was called just as bad names, and we are no better than he was, and are not entitled to any better treatment.

I have preached in Nebraska City, Lincoln, Wilber, Fairfield, Clay Center, Comstock, Eustis, Benedict, South Auburn, and Beatrice; of the latter place I must make special mention. I went there on July 12, to the home of Brother and Sister Harry Dibble, and was invited to preach in their home, which I did to an audience of about twenty. Among the number was the Rev. James A. Smith, of the United Brethren Church. The Dibble family had no place to go to church among our people, so they attended his, and also the Sunday school. Their faithful lives to the faith that they had accepted attracted his attention, and he readily accepted an invitation to come to the meetings. My first venture was a historical lecture on the church, its origin, development, division, scattering, and reorganization. It was his first satisfactory knowledge of the church, and he invited me to visit him at his home the next day, which I did, and several hours were spent in asking and answering questions. It was an opportune time for my visit. Mr. Smith had been a minister for about eight years, and during that time he was dissatisfied with the faith that he had accepted and was preaching. The final clash had come, and he and a large part of his congregation had withdrawn from the church and were worshiping as an independent congregation. He was furnished the standard works of the church, he quit preaching, and secured secular employment and went to studying. In September I returned and remained five weeks, did what public preaching I could, and was a regular visitor at his home, during which time a careful examination of the subject was made. Our brother was dissatisfied with sectarianism; he was honestly seeking for light; the Spirit of God was leading him, and his experience was like many others under like circumstances, he saw the light and had the courage to embrace it. I was agreeably surprised on December 16 when he came to Independence, Missouri, to visit me and be baptized, which was done on the next day. His visit was a profitable and pleasant one, and he will ever remember his kindly reception among the Saints. Blessings, like troubles, do not always come alone, for I had the pleasure of baptizing his wife at our conference at Lincoln on the 21st inst.

From my first meeting the family until the present time there has been a chain of providential acts which show that a loving Father's hand was leading them, and it brings forcefully to my mind the expression of the Master, No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him. Two lessons were very strongly impressed on my mind. First, that the faithful lives of his children are the most powerful sermons that can be delivered; and second, that we need have no fear of presenting the standard works of the church to an honest seeker after the truth, and any other kind would not believe our message if an angel from heaven told them it was true.

I am greatly encouraged in the work, and see no need for the faithful ones to feel discouraged. Sometimes we find the pessimist, who thinks that we do not enjoy the spiritual blessings as in the past, perhaps he doesn't, but the faithful ones do. Paul says the fruit of the Spirit is "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," and surely we are enjoying those among many, and they are not so easily counterfeited as some others.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

BEATRICE, NEBRASKA, January 26, 1912.

Ohio.

Another year opens before us with the unfolding of ominous scenes such as the world has never seen. Forms and rules from time immemorable have been completely changed in the last year. Almost too mighty to comprehend—a Chinese republic! We can hardly articulate to express the term. For thousands of years ruled by absolute monarchial domination, now a popular government whose first president is Doctor Sun Yat Sen, once an exile from his native land, now recalled and given the highest gift of a downtrodden people.

From these changes in the far-off Orient our minds go across the Atlantic to the mighty changes in the English House of Lords; once the dictators of the world, but now a mere figurehead. From them has been stripped the last vestige of power to despoil the people. Long live Lloyd George and Asquith! From all parts of the globe emancipation and human rights are looming up. Gradually is the old, corrupt, and tyrannical idea of "kings rule by divine right" giving away to the divine right of the people's rule. The first king was given to Israel against the protest of God. The idea of kings ruling by divine right originated with apostate Israel. Our own land, dedicated to the liberty, freedom, happiness, and prosperity of the people, is as much under the dictation of a monarch as any nation could be—not a monarch who is crowned with stateliness and sits in a certain seat of power; but a monarch who rules almost supreme in the halls of Congress, the courts of justice (?), in the municipalities, in the churches, and in state and politics—his name is Moneyed Monarch; intoxicated with a frenzy for more.

In the days when human endurance could no longer bear up under the tyrannical power of King George, a Washington arose to put it down and establish a rule of the people. Three quarters of a century later, when the same power appeared to distract our national existence so dearly bought, a Lincoln appeared to arrest its further progress; but now the third and most threatening of all has appeared to despoil our dearly bought rights; but who will be the man to appear to dethrone this money monarch? We wait with anxiety to see. Truly it will come. This people, the mightiest of all in social power, have arisen to demand it; and once stirred to action, spurred on by the ever-increasing sentiment of equal privilege, no power on earth can prevent the full accomplishment. I am speaking entirely now of the power of sentiment, and not of the sword. The former is divine, the latter demoniacal. The man who compels submission by the sword only procrastinates the day of his own execution.

The horrible and bloody wars of past ages have fully demonstrated the fact that there is a principle of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness in the bosom of humanity which will not down, but sooner or later will predominate.

Truly the gospel is called the perfect law of liberty. Liberating all who will put themselves under its influence from that which has estranged them from the right to be happy. We find no less strife and agitation in the religious world. The spirit of "higher criticism," which is but a high-toned name for infidelity, is fast displacing the plain teachings of Christ and the apostles.

Utah Mormonism is again raising its head in a more defiant attitude. In a recent debate with Elder Langdon, Ben E. Rich's secretary from New Jersey, he openly defended polygamy, declaring with emphasis that their lips were no longer sealed in regard to polygamy, and they were ready to defend it.

In November, ex-Senator Frank Cannon lectured in Columbus under the auspices of the Daughters of the American Revolution. It was expected by those securing his services that he would make an indiscriminate attack on all forms of Mormonism, but in this they were quite badly disappointed. Just prior to this the preachers and the society mentioned had worked up quite a feeling toward our people by the means of newspapers and indignation meetings. The Columbus Saints thought our interests should be considered at the lecture of the senator, hence made up a purse and sent Brother Booker and myself; Brother Nieman accompanied us. We listened with interest for two hours as the senator described the impregnable power of Utah Mormonism in politics, bringing under their influence such strong men as President Taft, Roosevelt, and Bryan. Men who had declared themselves on certain policies completely turned about face immediately after a conference with Joseph F. Smith and his aids. We were more inclined to believe the speaker was telling the truth because he was free from that animosity and revengefulness so characteristic of many on like missions.

After the lecture we pushed ourselves to the front, to the Senator, who by this time was earnestly engaged in conversation with the committee to oust Mormonism from Columbus. I heard one of the committee say to the other, "Do you know, we have three missions right here in Columbus, and that at the present time they are holding meetings and making converts on Hosack Street?"

This aroused my curiosity, as I was one who was holding meetings on Hosack Street. I interrupted by asking, "Are those the real Mormons from Utah?"

"Yes," she replied.

"Do they really believe in polygamy?"

"Yes."

I replied that I understood that those people called themselves the Reorganized Church and did not affiliate with the Mormons of Utah.

She said, "Oh, yes, they are all the same; they will tell you anything."

At this juncture I touched the senator on the shoulder, who quickly turned and faced us. "I ask," Senator, "is there any difference between the people calling themselves the Reorganized Church, and the Mormons of Utah?"

"Yes, a big difference," he quickly replied, "The Reorganized people fight Mormons of Utah harder than you people do. There is as much difference between them and the Utah church as there is between the Baptist Church and the Utah church."

He turned and resumed his conversation with the other two of the committee, but, soon turned to us and said, "If those are the people who have missions here, with headquarters at Independence, Missouri, they are not the same people"; thus giving us a compliment that was quite gratifying, but it seemed to crush the spirits of those goody-goody ones who heard the conversation.

I then said, "Now, Senator, I know what I am talking about; I am one of the men holding meetings on Hosack Street." Then I told them how we, as the senator had said, have fought Utah Mormonism, and how we had done and endured more to put down the evil doctrine of polygamy than all the churches combined; quoting the court decisions, etc. I concluded by saying, "Now, ladies, we are with you in any proper effort to down polygamy," and left them looking as though they had lost everything on earth.

The visit of the Senator did lots of good, and I haven't heard anything about the affair since, notwithstanding just before the lecture some of the brethren were invited to leave the city. I heard that the senator drew the line of difference in a lecture a few nights later in Athens.

At present I am holding meetings at Sand Run with good, interested crowds. A few fine Saints here who have stood loyal and faithful, and have made the name Latter Day Saint honorable.

I secured the use of the Baptist Church at Guysville for three sermons. On Sunday night I preached two hours and fifteen minutes and many desired that I continue longer. The good Lord blessed me with good liberty, and why shouldn't they want to hear more? Most of the people, and six or seven of the trustees, wanted me to continue the meetings, but, like almost every place, they have a "bell sheep"; this one objected and overruled the other six trustees and the people. We expect to take the tent there next summer. Brother South and family reside there and are highly respected.

I expect to join Brother Russell at Creola next week and labor with him until the conference at Columbus, February 24 and 25. Let all the Saints of the district attend who possibly can, and make this a joyful occasion.

We were glad to read the letter of J. F. McDowell, and rejoice to see this brother of peculiar talent getting into the harness again. We remember him from our early boyhood days. May the Lord abundantly bless him.

We were also glad to read the reasons for Brother T. W. Williams' leaving the Kansas City Branch, and glad to learn that it was for no other crime than opinion's sake. Trust the day is not far distant when we can express our opinions without feeling the pangs of harsh criticism. I was glad to see the proposition presented at the last General Conference crushed beneath the mighty weight of popular feeling, attempting to circumscribe the elder's right to express himself on political questions. If the church has not confidence in the elders to trust them with the sacred right to use it properly, it would be far better to call them home and deal with them individually. Such circumscribing of the people's rights by the early councils of the church resulted in the Dark Ages. The intentions of the brethren, however, were good; for I know them to be men of God, interested alike in the common good of humanity.

With an earnest prayer for a prosperous year for the church, I am as ever,

Your coworker in the conflict,

JOBS, OHIO, January 19, 1912.

CENTRAL BRANCH.

The district conference which convened with this branch was indeed a feast of good things, the attendance from the district was fair, but many in the city who desired to attend the business sessions were prevented on account of work. On Sunday the church was filled. One noticeable feature of the prayer service was the number of young men holding the priesthood who took part. Surely God is marshaling his army.

At this service two were ordained to the eldership, namely, Guy Fairbanks of First Chicago Branch, and Henry P. W. Keir, of this branch. The sermons of Elders F. A. Smith, J. A. Tanner, C. H. Burr, and L. O. Wildermuth were uplifting and much food for thought was presented.

Our Religio has changed its meeting from Friday night to Sunday evening at 6.15. Our support was very low and we felt a change would result in greater numbers present and more good accomplished.

Our presiding officer, Elder E. J. Lang, and his wife are at present in California. Whether he returns will depend upon the outcome of a business venture.

The Sunday school has its financial scheme started—that is, to get a thousand feet of dimes; rules that are one foot long are passed out to be filled and returned—one dime to every inch. This is to apply upon the church debt.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 31, 1912.

Notice to First Seventy.

Dear Brethren: I am sending to you to-day blanks on which to make out your report to the quorum March 1. Trust that all will be prompt in sending their report to me. If any do not receive their blanks by the time this appears, they will know that I mailed it to the address last reported to me, and if not forwarded in due time report to me and another blank will be sent to your present address. I would be pleased to receive the present address of all the members of the quorum, if any change has been made since last conference. The date of our first meeting will be announced in due time. If there are any questions the brethren of the quorum would desire to have examined during the sessions of 1912, please to so inform me as soon as practicable after reading this notice.

In the practice of the Master,

J. F. MINTON, Secretary of First Seventy.

DES MOINES, IOWA, January 20, 1912.

1205 Filmore Street.

Order of Evangelists.

Dear Brethren: About January 10 we mailed to each member of the order a copy of our circular letter, with a few additions to it as sent to you a year ago; also our report blank, which plainly tells you how and when to report. Please look it over before you begin to make out your report, and be sure and read the footnotes. Do not throw the circular letter to one side after a hasty and casual reading, but carefully preserve it, make yourself acquainted with its contents, and be sure to observe them, as far as practicable. Excuse me, brethren (I speak with reverence of the ordinances of God's house), but is it not high time that we had learned that there is something more for the true minister for God to do than simply to pray and lay on hands?

I am pleased with and thankful for the degree of progress which has been made in our work, together with the better knowledge of our mission and calling and the cooperation and sustaining help of the Saints. Should it be God's will, I shall be glad to attend the General Conference, at Independence, Missouri, next April. My occupancy as president of the order will probably be of short duration, and I am anxious to leave this important department of the church work in as good condition as possible for the one who shall be called to succeed our esteemed brother, Alexander H. Smith, who has passed over the river before us, and we, trust, is now enjoying the blissful conditions of the land of light and peace and glory.

J. R. LAMBERT, Acting President.

Was a devout Christian and lived as she believed, always taking the moral side of any question. Sister Dayton's pure life and noble character were a product of the restored gospel. Gentle and unassuming, she was adorned with those virtues that enrich character and fit the soul to dwell with God. The beauty of her life and the solidity of her principles is the highest proof of the utility of the gospel in its power to exalt and ennoble human life. She and her husband had celebrated their golden wedding October 7, 1911. She passed away January 14, 1912, at her home, Sycamore, Illinois. The funeral was held at the family residence at half past two o'clock, January 16. The address was made by Elder F. M. Cooper, of Burlington, Iowa, who was followed by a few appropriate remarks from Reverend F. W. Miller, of Chicago, Illinois.

Radicals and Conservatives.

There is some confusion in the public mind on the question of progress and reaction. Some men have a radical way of posturing and making phrases who are quite conservative in principle. There are others whose forms of expression are careful and restrained, but whose thinking is radical almost to the point of revolution. Mr. Underwood is said to be radical as tariff reformer, but conservative because he does not favor the referendum or the recall. The country has the impression that Woodrow Wilson has veered about from conservatism to radicalism and that Judson Harmon is a reactionist at heart. What we most need in the presidential office is firmness, wisdom, dignity, and unselfishness. Every sane and well-instructed American should be at once a progressive and a conservative. A man may hold fast to well-established institutions and at the same time seek to reform abuses and to make laws and governments conform with social changes.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Review of Reviews for February.

Great hearts alone understand how much glory there is in being good.—Michelet.

There is nothing so easy but that it becomes difficult when you do it with reluctance.—Terence.

A great man is made up of qualities that meet or make great occasions.—Lowell.

If poverty is the mother of crime, want of sense is the father.—De La Bruyere.

We seldom find people ungrateful as long as we are in condition to render them service.—La Rochefoucauld.

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

(1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.

(2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.

(3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.

(4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

LAMONI, IOWA, FEBRUARY 14, 1912

NUMBER 7

Editorial

AN ARTICLE IN DEFENSE OF SOCIALISM.

In the SAINTS' HERALD for December 20 there appeared an article in which Socialism was severely arraigned, being particularly charged with harboring a spirit of violence. At the time we announced that we would give space to the best article of similar length defending Socialism against such a charge. We are obliged to limit the number of articles published on this subject, otherwise the HERALD would be filled for many weeks with articles pro and con.

In another part of this issue will be found the defensive article, according to our promise, the author being V. W. Gunsolley.

The SAINTS' HERALD has no idea at present of engaging in a campaign for Socialism or against Socialism. The idea of the HERALD is to place within reach of its readers information which will help them to form correct conclusions on this as on any other subjects. Correct conclusions can not be reached when only one side of a question is heard.

It is worth while to attempt to secure correct information on Socialism for several reasons.

First, Socialism as a world movement has made phenomenal advancement during the past ten years in nearly all civilized lands. It now claims a voting power of one million in the United States.

Second, it challenges the attention of Latter Day Saints because it claims to do the particular work that we are accustomed to regard as our work, thus differing from most or all other political parties. Its professed object is to do away with poverty, war, and crime, the very things that Jesus proposed to abolish through the agency of his church when he came "to destroy the works of the Devil." Consequently we may well feel an interest in its doctrines sufficiently to compare them with the doctrines of the church and in its proposed methods sufficiently to compare or contrast them with the methods of the church; so that we may be able to decide which will be most likely to bring about the millennial conditions that must follow the cessation of war, poverty, and crime, or discover if the methods and doctrines of Socialism and the church are indeed identical, or at least not inharmonious.

It is alleged that we should not institute such a comparison between a political party and a church, that we should compare parties; but the unique claims of Socialism as the harbinger of millennial conditions almost force such a comparison. And indeed Socialism is to many of its followers their religion.

In the January number of Hampton's Magazine Charles Edward Russell, Socialist candidate for governor of New York, in 1910, says:

But to answer the question why men and women are so much drawn to this cause that they are willing to sacrifice all for it, and to find at the same time the power that drives this unusual organization on its way, you must know the spirit back of Socialism. Here it is; simply this: To these men and women Socialism does not mean a political party organized to win elections and to secure offices. Socialism is to them a religion. . . . They look upon their propaganda as the practical salvation of the world. . . . To their thinking no other cause in the history of the world was ever so important.

True, this sentiment is not found in the platform of the party. And one writer urges that we should judge the party by its platform. There is a good idea in that thought, we concede. We should go to the published and authorized platforms and creeds of parties and churches to learn their leading doctrines and tenets. But often the spirit of an organization can best be judged by the public utterances of its members, and particularly its leading members. We do not discover the spirit of the Utah Church during the early fifties and sixties by reading her published platforms and creeds alone. We get much light on that subject from the public utterances of Brigham Young and his associates. We do not mention this in connection with the Socialists to cast any reflections upon them, but to illustrate our thought. While it is proper to go to the platform of the party for a statement of its faith, it is probable that our readers will still continue to give due weight to the public utterances of prominent Socialists in their efforts to discover the spirit and genius of the movement.

Any institution, the tenets of which are accepted by any considerable number of its adherents with religious fervor, is not to be ignored in our reckoning with social forces. As Ruschenbusch says: "Religion is a tremendous generator of self-sacrificing action. Under its impulse men have burned up the animals they had laboriously raised; they have sacrificed the first born whom they loved and cherished; they have tapped their own veins and died with a shout of triumph."

Any institution, the principles of which are accepted by its adherents with religious fervor, may in time develop into a dangerous rival of the church if its teaching and spirit are antagonistic to the church; or if in accord with the church it may become a valuable ally. If Socialism is really in accord with God's plan and is capable of saving the race and bringing about conditions of universal peace, equality, and purity, such as the church is laboring for, we have nothing to fear. We may expect our brethren who accept Socialism to become our most spiritual and active members—regular attendants at church services, regular tithe payers, ardent missionaries. If Socialism is not what it claims to be, and is not in accord with our gospel, we may expect those who accept it with anything like the enthusiasm mentioned by Mr. Russell, to gradually drift into the position where Socialism is first and the church second—irregular church attendants, non tithe payers, indifferent missionaries, close students of Socialist literature but ignorant of church literature.

Another factor that makes Socialism a force to be reckoned with is its organization. One joins the Democratic Party or the Republican Party by voting the ticket or enrolling for a primary. Not so with the Socialist Party. One must secure an application card which he must sign, answering certain questions and making certain pledges, after which, on the recommendation of a party member, he is considered by a special committee and afterward voted on. The application card, one of which we have before us, reads in part: "I, the undersigned, recognizing the class struggle between the capitalist class and the working class and the necessity of the working class constituting themselves into a political party distinct from and opposed to all parties formed by the capitalist class, hereby declare that I have severed my relations with all other parties, that I indorse the platform and constitution of the Socialist Party, including the principle of political action, and hereby apply for admission to said party."

In this way the party gets a grip on members that other parties do not get. It is a notorious fact that the old line parties are losing their grip on individuals, men are less partisan than they were twenty years ago, but in this case the grip is tightening. The members as a rule are active propagandists.

At the last meeting of a Socialist local which we were permitted to attend, after an arousing address, somewhat revivalistic in temper, members passed through the congregation bearing application cards and laboring with prospective converts in much the same spirit that formerly led men and women to urge their friends to "get religion."

We mention these things simply to explain why we are giving some space to this subject, that our people may be informed concerning a movement that has back of it such a spirit and such an organization. In the past some have denounced it and opposed it who knew very little about it, thus making themselves ridiculous. This should not be. Some others, we are afraid, have accepted it and launched out in its defense when they knew as little about it. This, too, is ridiculous and should not be.

The article in question will probably be followed in time by others that in our judgment may be worth while; but we do not intend to make the subject unduly prominent, to the annoyance of those who may find themselves on either side of the question.

NOTES FROM SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

In company with Brethren F. M. Sheehy, Robert Cooper, and E. Keeler, the junior associate editor was recently privileged to enjoy a ride in Brother Cooper's automobile from Los Angeles to the reunion grounds of the Southern California District. The Southern California Saints have a desirable tract of land here for a summer camp, located a little way back from the beach and in view of the old Pacific, near Hermosa, and easily reached from Los Angeles. They have also purchased thirty feet of ocean front running down to high-water mark, so that no one can get between them and the deep water, providing they care to "get into deep water." If ever they are so unfortunate as to get caught "between the Devil and the deep sea," as the old saying goes, they still have a choice left. While here we were told that ocean front in southern California is becoming very difficult to purchase; very little of it is for sale at any reasonable figure. We also discovered that the church owns a jackrabbit. At least we found one domiciled in the center of the church tract. From what we observed, if he is ever audited, it will be by a very lively committee.

The associate editor was also privileged to attend the international aviation meet then in progress at Dominguez Field, near Los Angeles, going out with Brethren Shade, Sheehy, and Adam, in Brother Shade's automobile. Man has found his wings at last. Yet it is marvelous how soon the wonderful becomes commonplace in this age. A few hours of watching the evolutions of six or eight of these big machines in air leaves one tired, and a few days of it would leave him sated,—all wonder gone. After trying for so many centuries to cut loose from the earth, it will soon cease to be a matter of comment to see men fly. Indeed we heard it freely predicted that a crowd could not be drawn to another aviation meet in Los Angeles unless something unusually spectacular were billed.

Of those who flew that day one was killed,—his machine turning in air and falling bottom upwards. The sea gulls, original aviators, flew overhead watching the show, careless of such accidents. Their motors never stop. Their planes never give way. They habitually break endurance and speed records and think nothing of it. Their brains are in instant communication with every extremity of their flying apparatus; but man must feel his way to the tips of his wings with levers and wires, if he is too slow his life is the forfeit. Even before the remains of this unfortunate were extricated from the wreck of his machine other bird men leaped into the air and the show went on without delay. The dead aviator (a Yale graduate named Page) had boasted that morning, "I will outdo Beachy or break my neck." He did both, as he won the five-mile race just before he fell.

Let some aspiring sculptor turn from the outworn theme of the "dying gladiator" and carve a representation of the dead aviator, sublime commingling of courage and folly, pioneer of a new era, lying broken among his broken wings so lately acquired that he knew not how to use them, so recently threading the bypaths and highways of the upper deeps, now as dead as any common earth-bound plodder.

During the night of January 25, Beachy, Parmalee, and others under cover of darkness flew out from Dominguez Field over San Pedro Harbor and dropped pseudo bombs (oranges) upon an imaginary fort. The gunboats in the harbor failed to detect the air men with search lights. Had the fort been real, and the bombs real, and the war real, probably the air men would have destroyed the fort and the ships,—had they not destroyed themselves first. Our old-time target for ridicule, D. Green, with his flying machine, was a pioneer after all, and started a serious business. Some day we may see a fulfillment of Tennyson's vision, in which he "Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew

From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue."

Returning to the aviation field, Beachy could not resist the temptation to indulge in a few spectacular stunts. With his canvas wings blazing with red fire he flew up and down, here and there in the darkness of mid-air, a spectacle to attract the attention of men and angels. If the old mythological gods are still active they perhaps took note of his temerity and marked him for destruction, as we may imagine they did Hoxey one year ago when he broke the altitude record, getting nearer to heaven than wings and gasoline had ever carried man before, and the next day fell on this same field and was killed; or as we may imagine they did Rodgers, who crossed the continent in air and fell within sight of the ocean; or that other aviator who assayed the Alps and, after conquering them, fell thirty feet and died. This same Beachy is the man who flew down the gorge of Niagara Falls, under the bridge, dipping his wings in the spray of the great cataract. So he is an old offender, having dared all the powers of fire, air, and water.

We occupied in the church in Los Angeles Sunday morning, and evening January 21, on invitation of the branch president, Brother Fred Adam. The attendance was good at both services and the attention all that could be asked. We were pleased to note the apparent absence of ostentation and pride from this congregation. Los Angeles has a noble band of Saints, including many bright and active young men and women. We were not privileged to meet our old friend and brother, T. W. Williams, while in Los Angeles, as our time was short and he was absent from the city on Sunday, having a Sunday morning preaching appointment in Santa Ana; but no doubt our loss in that particular resulted in gain to some one else.

As we are located in San Bernardino it has been our lot to address the Saints at that place nearly every Sunday since coming to California. San Bernardino is an old branch; regular services having been held here for many, many years. Like all old branches, it has had its fluctuations of spiritual life and numerical strength. At present the attendance is at a lower ebb than it should be, considering the total enrollment of membership. The branch president, Brother A. E. Jones, is endeavoring to correct that condition with the aid of other excellent branch officials, mostly young and zealous workers. The presence of young men and women in active service is an encouraging feature of the work in many localities. Elder Holmes J. Davison is now laboring in southern California, and has operated at San Bernardino, Colton, and Los Angeles. Elder Paul M. Hanson has also been active here, but at present writing is engaged in debate with his oldtime antagonist, Reverend Love, at Santa Rosa. Whether or not Love can prevail over logic is a question that will soon be solved. Judging from the reports logic will prevail,—also we trust that the love which is mentioned by Paul in Romans 12: 9, which is not the love against which Brother Hanson contends, may ever prevail, hand in hand with logic (now do not accuse the editor of putting a private interpretation on this passage).

Sunday, January 28, after occupying the pulpit in San Bernardino in the forenoon, we visited the Saints in Redlands in the afternoon, in company with Brother George Wixom. Brother Newton Best met us with his automobile and conveyed us to the home of Sister Jessie Smith, where we addressed a few of the Saints, together with certain interested neighbors who had assembled to hear the old gospel message. Redlands is a very beautiful city. The home where we preached is set in the midst of an orange orchard, whose dark green foliage hangs full of big yellow globules of burnished gold with a fitting background of purple foothills and snowy mountains (like the simile used by Solomon: "Apples of gold in pictures of silver").

Redlands is a very wealthy city. It has the largest bank deposit per capita of any city in the United States, or at least it was so rated a few years ago. But a large bank deposit per capita does not spell universal prosperity unless it is properly distributed. In this case it merely means that there are an unusual number of very wealthy people who have located in Redlands, perhaps believing it to be the nearest approach to an earthly paradise. But it is quite unlike the city of Enoch, for there are many poor, and the city has some of the meanest and most squalid hovels that ever desecrated the name of home. So that here in sight of the ancient mountains we find a grave problem almost as ancient. The gospel that we preached contains the ultimate solution, but not many either rich or poor cared to hear it. How long it will be ere the people will lend an attentive ear is a matter concerning which only the unwise or the divinely inspired would dare to venture a prediction.

Our return to southern California has given us an opportunity to meet some new friends as well as to renew friendships made during a two-year sojourn here some years ago. It is interesting to note the changes that have taken place in individuals during a separation of ten or more years. Some have grown up beyond our expectation and have passed into the estate of manhood. Others have aged and become more or less broken with the abating of physical vigor. Others, apparently, have remained unchanged. Probably a corresponding spiritual process has gone on. Some have gone backward; some have stood still; some have made progress. As the poet says:

"Souls have leaped into life;
Souls have lain down in death;
Souls have stood still, as it were,
And merely measured their breath;—

Souls have progressed to the light,
Storing their minds with peace,
And riches of wisdom bright,
Whose fountain shall never cease."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AUTUMN LEAVES.—We are in need of a copy of the August issue of Autumn Leaves to complete our file for the editorial library. Who will be the first to donate a copy for this purpose?

OUR THANKS.—We are pleased to get so many letters from the Saints showing they are alive to all things pertaining to the work of the church. We appreciate the fact that the letters we publish every week are a source of comfort to many, and it is with reluctance and only when wholly necessary that we make extracts from our letters. Writers will please remember this and bear with us when we find it necessary to cut down their communications.

Cheerfulness is also an excellent wearing quality. It has been called the fair weather of the heart.—Smiles.

Judge a man by his companions rather than by his relations. His companions are usually of his own selection, but his relations are thrust upon him.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER.—This is the name of a book of sermons by Elder J. S. Roth and is just from the press. They are a selection from the many subjects covered by the brother in many years of gospel work. They cover a variety of subjects which are of interest and profit to church members. Those needing something of this kind will do well to get this volume. The price is seventy-five cents per copy. Address Herald Publishing House, and be sure to give catalogue number, 248a.

SENATOR CANNON.—Clippings containing reports of Ex-senator Frank Cannon's efforts show that either the senator fails to distinguish between Joseph Smith, jr., and Joseph F. Smith, or his hearers fail to understand him. We are inclined to take the latter view, as we do not believe he would willfully injure the founder of the church by blaming him for the polygamous and law-defying relations in which the present president of the Mormons is living. The Boone, Iowa, Republican makes several references to Joseph F. Smith, but the failure to supply the middle initial is wholly misleading to those who are ignorant of the facts.

BISBEE LEADER.—Brother J. E. Vanderwood has a well-written statement of our church position in a recent issue of the Bisbee, (Arizona,) Leader. It is a good method of getting before the people, and our field men will do well to keep in touch with the printers where they labor.

Elder Rees Jenkins writes from Jerusalem as follows: "We have moved into our new home, and we have had several well-to-do Arab farmers and traders to listen who seem interested, Brother Solomon Njeim interpreting. We are having good meetings and we believe some will be baptized soon.

"The municipality of Jerusalem will have street cars running here ere long. The contract is already given. England has succeeded, it is said, in obtaining the right to build a railroad from Port Said to Jaffa, with a branch to Jerusalem. Soon Damascus, Shechem, Jaffa, Jerusalem, Cairo, and Alexandria, will be connected by railroad."

None but the brave deserve the fair.—Dryden.

Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed.—Alexander Pope.

Calvary.

Behold, in dark Gethsemane,
The Savior prays on bended knee,
Hear the words of God's dear Son,
"My Father, let thy will be done."

Despised, forsaken, see him stand
Amidst that cruel, wicked band;
Hear the cry, both far and wide,
"Let Jesus Christ be crucified!"

See the thorny, piercing crown
Pressed on his head with many a wound,
See the soldiers bend the knee
And hail him in mockery.

Passive, he yields him to his fate;
Such bigotry and fiendish hate;
They spit upon, and smite in scorn
A God, although of woman born.

See him bow his noble head
As rudely he's to Calvary led;
They nail his fair form to the tree
To writhe in dreadful agony.

See the blood is coursing down,
Making dark pools on the ground.
Hear the suffering Savior's cry,
"Eloi, Lama, Sabbacthani?"

Creation can not endure the sight;
The earth is veiled in blackest night;
The thunder rolls, the lightnings flash,
The rocks are rent with fearful crash.

Our Lord is dying, hush the breath,
Let all the world be still as death;
Hark, Oh hark! he groans, he dies;
Completed is the sacrifice.

Ah, stricken ones, is this the end?
Will you no more behold your friend?
Are words of holy prophets vain
Which say that Christ shall rise again?

Most tenderly, as tears they shed,
They lay him in his rocky bed,
Then mournfully they turn away,
To their sad homes, to watch and pray.

Three days have rolled their course along,
And soldiers rude, with jest and song,
Have guarded well the sacred place
Where lay the hope of all the race.

But hark, what means that fearful sound?
A dreadful earthquake rends the ground.
The rocks in massive fragments fly;
The thunder rolls through darkened sky.

Two angels of the Lord descend,
Their faces with the lightning blend.
Their garments dazzling, snowy white,
The guards fall down in sore affright.

They reverently approach the tomb;
Their glory lightens all the gloom;
The earth regains its normal tone,
And they roll away the ponderous stone.

Fear not, they to the women say;
Come, see the place where Jesus lay;
No longer in this gloomy prison,
The Lord of all the earth is risen.

Instead of thorns to pierce him now,
A crown is on the Conqueror's brow:
No more he's spat on, scorned, despised,
He reigns triumphant in the skies.

No more forsaken by his own,
No more in weakness left to moan;
Unnumbered angels hail him king,
Angelic choirs his praises sing.

On God's right hand, on royal throne,
Sits he who trod the press alone,
Seraphic hosts his presence greet,
And bow in homage at his feet.

And best of all there is to tell,
He holds the keys of death and hell;
And all who will his laws obey,
Shall reign with him in endless day.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

We present one more text as proof that the gospel embodied in Christ was preached and obeyed to a remarkable degree among the Israelites in "the church," in the wilderness, where Christ was (Acts 7: 38).

But after a time it did not profit because of unbelief (Hebrews 4). In 1 Corinthians 10: 1-9, A. V., we have the following disclosure:

"Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink: (For they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ.) But with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted. Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them: as it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand. Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of serpents."

Where there is no gospel, there is no Christ, and where there is no Christ, there is no gospel. The apostle affirms here, that the Israelites who passed "through the sea," "did eat of the spiritual food, and drink of the spiritual rock which followed them, and that rock was Christ." He also says: "Neither let us tempt Christ as some of them also tempted." (Verse 9.) We are told by our Savior, "Many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 8: 11. In Galatians 3: 8, "The gospel was preached to Abraham." Did these venerable patriarchs partake of the blessing? "In thee shall all nations be blessed." By whom? through whom? by what means?

If Abraham, Abel, Enoch, Isaac, Moses, or Jacob should appear at the portal, and gain admittance into the future palace, and kingdom of heaven without obedience to the gospel, the entire Christian dispensation since Christ was born, with that of the "fullness of times," would rise up and convict the Almighty, in thundering tones of the ransomed legions, of palming onto them a stupendous fraud through Jesus Christ and the holy angels. Telling them that since Christ was on the cross they were required to obey the gospel, or be dammèd, while those ancient patriarchs and seers are granted seats at the blessed banquet gratis! Better conclude that the "box office" was open, in those days, and "tickets" of individual "election, and calling" were issued by the proper authority, than to hug a theory so lovingly, that deposes God, and advances to the destruction of his camp. Traum should be able to see that the gospel in olden times was administered superior to, and above the law, and when in the "times of the reformation," the "antetypical lamb" was nailed to the cross, it was abrogated, as a religious code, with all its bloody distinctiveness, and we leave it just where Paul assigned it, as the political basis of civilized government (1 Timothy 1: 8-10), and the everlasting gospel declared with power, under a Christian priesthood, to all nations for obedience, is the divine arrangement since. Elder Traum can not deny that the gospel was administered before the law of Moses was taken out of the way, without impeaching the divine mission of Jesus and John Baptist, as also the ministry of Christ, who were all strict observers of the law. It was not a requirement, under the law, but was administered, superior to it.

FALLACIOUS PRESUMPTION.

Page 168, Elder Traum renews his encounter with the priesthood in this strain:

The Aaronic priesthood, in this new dispensation, was said to have been first conferred upon Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and that, too, at the hands of an angel. But Joseph Smith is of the tribe of Ephraim, whereas God designed that this priesthood should remain in the possession of the sons of Aaron and members of the tribe of Levi. (See Numbers 3: 10; Deuteronomy 21: 5; Numbers 16: 40; 18: 7; Hebrews 7: 13.) And so determined was God that this tribal regulation should be respected that he decreed the penalty of death upon any who sought to serve in that office. But it will be said that God did not punish, with such dire affliction, Joseph Smith, jr., which only shows that there was no such office at the time in which he might serve, and for the lack of opportunity he never officiated in that capacity. Joseph Smith, jr., just lied, and whoever sins in that particular way has an end appointed him (Revelation 21: 8).

In this statement, that God designed that this priesthood should remain in the possession of the sons of Aaron, and members of the tribe of Levi, is an unproved assertion. The citations he gives contain not one word of proof for the above statement, as anyone can observe that will read them. According to this postulate, those who occupied in this priesthood before God gave it a place in the tribe of Levi, or before he set apart the sons of Aaron to minister therein, should have been notified that God was doing wrong, for this priesthood in kind, existed before, and men, other than of Levi occupied in it. An order of priests inferior to Moses, before the giving of the law and long before Aaron and sons were called, is given in the following:

And the Lord said unto him (Moses), Away, get thee down, and thou shalt come up, thou, and Aaron with thee; but let not the priests and the people break through to come unto the Lord, lest he break forth upon them.—Exodus 19: 22-24.

Samuel, the Ephraimite that performed priestly service (1 Samuel 7: 10), and Manoah, of the tribe of Dan (Judges 13: 19, 20), and David, of the tribe of Judah (2 Samuel 6: 18), ought to have been smitten dead according to Traum, and in failure of which, it proves, "that no such office at the time existed in which they might serve, and for the lack of opportunity they never officiated in that capacity. The Bible just lied, and whoever sins in that particular way has an end appointed him" (Revelation 21: 8). You will notice when Traum's logic is applied it lands these Bible worthies not of Levi in "the lake of fire." The presumption of the man increases. He first destroyed the Almighty, by limiting his eternal and unchangeable attributes, deposing him as God, and now he slides into God's place, and assumes to condemn God's prophets, and passes sentence, sending them to the lake of fire. No wonder he presumes to destroy the divine call to the ministry, and jumps up to teach God! We wish it to be borne in mind, that this particular priesthood is called the Levitical, or Aaronic, to distinguish it from the higher order called the Melchisedec, and in the organized commonwealth of Israel, it was delegated to the Levites. There is absolutely nothing in the Bible to show that those who became Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise may not hold and exercise similar authority as did Aaron, and his seed, and those before Aaron was called, either with or without the ceremonial law. The main point is, Mr. Traum, God never had a people in any age of the world, for 4,100 years covered by Bible history, that he did not bless with priesthood privileges and benefits!

A MISREPRESENTATION.

Page 169 is another exhibition of the garbling which is so general throughout the critic's book. The statement and pretended quotation follows:

In a revelation dated September, 1830, the Lord (?) enumerates the messengers who have at various times appeared to Joseph Smith. There was Moroni, who gave the plates, or, rather, showed him where they were; there was John, "which John I have sent to ordain you into the first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained, even as Aaron"; "and also with Peter, James and John, who I have sent you, by whom I have ordained you, and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry." If, now, these men were ordained by the angel, by John, Peter, James and John, and it can only be done by the laying on of hands, then unquestionably these individuals laid their hands on Joseph and Oliver.

Now says Joseph: "Accordingly we went and were baptized; I baptized him and afterward he baptized me; after which I laid my hands upon him and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood; afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood—for we were so commanded."

The two above citations, the one from the Book of Covenants and the other from the history of the Prophet, establish, so far as Mormon literature can establish anything, that Smith and Cowdery laid claim to having been ordained to the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods.

Let us place the original quotation from the Doctrine and Covenants side by side with his garbled effort thus:

TRAUM, P. 169.

"Which John I have sent to ordain you into the first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained, even as Aaron;" "and also with Peter, James and John, who I have sent you, by whom I have ordained you, and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry."

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS

"Behold, this is wisdom in me; wherefore marvel not, for the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth, and with Moroni, whom I have sent unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of my everlasting gospel; to whom I have committed the keys of the record of the stick or Ephraim; and also with Elias, to whom I have committed the keys of bringing to pass the restoration of all things, or the restorer of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, concerning the last days; and also John, the son of Zachariah, which Zachariah he (Elias) visited and gave promise that he should have a son, and his name should be John, and he should be filled with the spirit of Elias; which John I have sent unto you, my servants, Joseph Smith, jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained even as Aaron; and also Elijah, unto whom I have committed the keys of the power of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children and the hearts of the children to the fathers, that the whole earth may not be smitten with a curse; and also with Joseph, and Jacob, and Isaac, and Abraham, your father; by whom the promises remain; and also with Michael, or Adam, the father of all, the prince of all, the ancient of days."

Is this the proof he gives of stating "propositions in the exact words the Saints employ"? Lengthy quotations are not objectionable, and short ones are excusable, if in the abbreviated form they are transcribed correctly and contain the full substance; but to cut a sentence in twain, and join on parts which are not in the paragraph quoted, and otherwise torture a passage, exhibits an inexcusable carelessness. Do you find the latter part of Traum's quotation in the second paragraph at all? It is a part of the third paragraph, and there it is incorrectly transcribed; words are omitted and changed, and closes at a semicolon. Such is the outward manifestation of a spirit within that would hazard an objection at the sacrifice of fairness.

THE PRIESTHOODS.

Elder Traum is introducing this quotation for the purpose of convicting "this archimpostor" as he calls Joseph Smith, of the "crime of fraud." Let us note how he performs this magisterial work. Joseph, in giving the account of the bestowal of the Aaronic priesthood authority, says this:

We still continued the work of translation, when in the ensuing month, (May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine), we, on a certain day, went into the woods to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness." He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter, and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me.

Accordingly we went and were baptized, I baptized him first, and afterwards he baptized me, after which I laid my hands upon his head and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and afterwards he laid his hands on me and ordained me to the same priesthood, for so we were commanded.

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.

Immediately upon our coming up out of the water, after we had been baptized, we experienced great and glorious blessings from our heavenly Father. No sooner had I baptized Oliver Cowdery than the Holy Ghost fell upon him and he stood up and prophesied many things which should shortly come to pass. And again, so soon as I had been baptized by him, I also had the spirit of prophecy, when standing up I prophesied concerning the rise of the church, and many other things connected with the church and this generation of the children of men. We were filled with the Holy Ghost, and rejoiced in the God of our salvation.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 865, 866.

Of this transaction, Oliver Cowdery wrote to the Messenger and Advocate September 7, 1834, published at Kirtland, Ohio, pp. 15, 16, as follows:

After writing the account given of the Savior's ministry to the remnant of the seed of Jacob, upon this continent, it was easy to be seen, as the prophet said would be, that darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people. On reflecting further, it was as easy to be seen, that amid the great strife and noise concerning religion, none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the gospel. For, the question might be asked, have men authority to administer the name of Christ, who deny revelation? when his testimony is no less than the spirit of prophecy? and his religion based, built, and sustained by immediate revelation in all ages of the world, when he has had a people on earth? If these facts were buried and carefully concealed by men whose craft would have been in danger, if once permitted to shine in the faces of men, they were no longer to us; and we only waited for the commandment to be given, "Arise and be baptized."

This was not long desired before it was realized. The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed in glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance!—What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world were racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard, as in the "blaze of day"; yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature! Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear. We listened—we gazed—we admired! 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! And as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were wrapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? Nowhere; uncertainty had fled; doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled for ever!

But, dear brother, think, further think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing)? when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!"

This testimony of Oliver Cowdery, so graphic, and beautifully inspiring, is in complete harmony with that of Joseph's, although it does not go as far. But the agreement furnishes additional strength, when it is noted that it clusters around one of the most important periods in the history of the latter day evangel. Elder Traum confuses the transactions, makes the conferring of the Aaronic and Melchisedec priesthoods occur at the same time, whereas, order and system characterize all the works of God. But wherein lies the impeachment of Joseph Smith? Why, after baptism Joseph said, "I laid my hands upon his head [Oliver's] and ordained him to the Aaronic priesthood, and he afterwards laid his hands on me, and ordained me to the same priesthood." "Exactly," says Traum, "the same thing that it was claimed the angel came to do, was the thing that Joseph and Oliver said they did to each other." This is the "crime of fraud," of which Traum thinks he convicts. But we do not see it that way. Joseph says, "for so we were commanded." God was "taking the initiative," Elder, and in so doing he did not omit "the referendum," a principle always known to the government of God. The administration of God is not despotism, the rights of his people are fully protected by the "law of common consent." When Moses received the divine enactments, they were at once referred to the general body, and Israel said, "All the words which the Lord hath said will we do."—Exodus 24: 3-7. When God commands, he respects the principle that conserves the liberties of the people, and "all Israel says Amen!" (Deuteronomy 27: 15; Nehemiah 5: 13.) Joseph and Oliver, though ordained by the angel, were commanded to ordain each other upon the "consent," or vote of the members, in respect of the rights guaranteed, and the law of God, and when God speaks Israel should say, "Amen," which means we assent to the conditions under which the thing occurred (Deuteronomy 27: 15-26).

In the New Testament times a leper came to Jesus, and "worshiped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean. And Jesus put forth his hand and touched him, saying, I will; Be thou clean." And his leprosy was cleansed. Jesus commanded him to "go show thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded for a testimony unto them." He commanded to obey the law providing for the cleansing of leprosy, Leviticus 13: 10, Elder Traum believes that God sent Jesus Christ to abolish the law, to utterly spoil the "principalities and powers" of the law of "carnal commandments," yet in the case of the leper he urges obedience to the law "for a testimony" unto the priesthood. Will this critic convict Jesus Christ of "the crime of fraud"? If God sent Jesus to repeal the law, and substitute the gospel in lieu thereof, we can argue that Christ had no right to do the thing which the Father commanded him not to do. But it was for a "testimony." So with the formal ceremony of ordination,—for "a testimony." We submit the following to conclude the point: "And all things shall be done by common consent in the church, by much prayer and faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 25: 1.

Neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order, and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 4.

In the history of the church, Joseph mentions the fact that the angel which appeared to him the evening of September 21, 1823, quoted, among others, the following passage: "Behold I will reveal unto you the priesthood by the hand of Elijah the prophet before the great and dreadful day of the Lord."—Malachi 4: 5.

In May, 1829, six years afterward, John the Baptist, whom Christ called the Elias (Matthew 11: 11-15; 17: 3-13; Mark 9: 13; Luke 1: 17; 9: 30), appeared and conferred the Aaronic priesthood, as before stated. But for Elder Traum's special delectation, we submit six verses of the third chapter of Malachi, as follows:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment: and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.—A. V.

When our critic's eye rests on the third verse in the above, he will see his pathway into a wilderness of complications whither his wild hallucinations drive him, and every twig will reach down, and clutch his hair, and while suspended thereby, the winds will moan, "Absalom." Should he take the position that this prophecy was fulfilled in the first coming of Christ, heralded by John Baptist, with the subsequent work of "building the church," he comes face to face with the administrations of the priesthood of the "sons of Levi," the Aaronic. If this be true, John the Baptist, of the Aaronic line, changed the service of the priesthood by executing the gospel under its authority. (John 1: 5, 6; Mark 1: 1-4; Luke 3: 3; Luke 7: 28-30.) But John was only one, while the text says "sons of Levi," plural. This easily gives us the Aaronic priesthood in the Christian church. Again, this change is spoken of in the Melchisedec priesthood as follows:

For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.—Hebrews 7: 12-14, A. V.

“Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood” in “the tribe of Judah,” yet here is Christ, a “lion of the tribe” when he comes, invested with the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood.

But again, if Traum flies the track, and argues that Malachi 3 points to a period subsequent to the time when John and Jesus represented the claims of the kingdom of heaven, and the organization of the Christian church, the same Levitical priesthood comes “treking” along to vex his righteous soul, for whenever the prophecy receives fulfillment, the “sons of Levi,” are to be purified, and “offer to the Lord an offering in righteousness.” And, inasmuch as John the Baptist could, and did execute the “counsel of God,” as an Aaronic priest, therefore, when Malachi 3 is fulfilled, the sons of Levi will execute gospel work under the authority of the same priesthood.

Once more, as fortifying this conclusion, and striking down this monstrosity set up by Elder Traum, we append two more prophetic statements of Holy Writ:

“The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called Trees of righteousness. The planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified. And they shall build up the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations. And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen and your vine-dressers. But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.”—Isaiah 61: 1-6, A. V.

Jesus Christ used the foregoing for his first recorded text, see Luke 4: 16-18.

If Traum takes hold of either horn of the dilemma in which this prophecy places him, it gores his theory to death. In verse 6, the Lord says, “ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord”; “men shall call you the Ministers of our God.” If he argues that this prophecy was fulfilled in and during the existence of the church of Christ nineteen hundred years ago, then Peter’s inspired statement, and our claims for it, that priests constituting a “holy priesthood” was in the church, is sustained. If he takes the position that this prophecy reaches down to a future period, subsequent to the existence of that institution Peter called “a holy,” and “royal priesthood,” he denies the express declaration of Jesus Christ, who says: “This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears” (Luke 4: 21), and our contention is yet sustained.

Traum can, just as easily, conceive of a neighborhood without neighbors, or a brotherhood without brothers, as he can conceive of a priesthood without priests!

I will not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids, until I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob. Lo, we heard of it at Ephrath: we found it in the fields of the wood. We will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool. Arise, O Lord, into thy rest; thou, and the ark of thy strength. Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy. For thy servant David’s sake turn not away the face of thine anointed. The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne. If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them; their children also shall sit upon thy throne for evermore. For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell: for I have desired it. I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread. I will also clothe her priests with salvation, and her saints shall shout aloud for joy. There I will make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a lamp for mine anointed.—Psalm 132: 4-17, A. V.

David, in inspired vision foresaw the church of God with “priests” under Christ, “clothed with salvation,” gospel authority, as verses 9 and 16 of the above sublime ecstasy disclose. Let our critic writhe under the situation into which his false theory has plunged him. Turn which way he will, these statements of God’s servants are upper and nether millstones between his man-made, man-indorsed, and God-rejected opinionism is ground to powder! Talk about a local congregation with elder, and deacon being the church in completeness? Above the elders in charge of local congregations of the church “God set” as members of the general body high priests, invested with gospel authority clothed with salvation. Hebrews 5: 1 says: “For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.” Peter’s declaration to the church: “Ye are an holy priesthood to offer spiritual sacrifices,” is fortified by Paul, and made impregnable by Jesus Christ in John 20: 22, 23: “And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghost; whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained.” These prerogatives of the ministry of Jesus Christ are the qualifications, according to Paul, of high priests offering "spiritual sacrifices." The word of God places them "in the church." Then come apostles, prophets, and if Traum doesn't preach according to the foregoing, he doesn't preach Christ!

WHO IS THE ANARCHIST?

I have before me a cartoon of 1859 reprinted in the Review of Reviews for April, 1901. It represents Abraham Lincoln being carried to the lunatic asylum by a crowd of fanatics, one of which says, "I want everybody to have a share of everybody else's property." Another says, "I want religion abolished, and the Book of Mormon made the standard of morality." Another, "I represent the free-love element, and expect to have free license to carry out its principles." Another, "I want a hotel established by the Government, where people that ain't inclined to work can board free of expense."

These are some of the "arguments" that were used against the Republican Party just prior to its final triumph. We have its parallel in the opposition that is being waged against the Socialist Party today.

Nobody condemns the Republican Party for taking up arms to suppress the rebellion, and nobody, today, accuses them of advocating violence and encouraging the spirit of anarchy. Yet had the advice of Joseph Smith been taken, to buy the slaves and set them free, all the horrors of the war that followed might have been averted.

The Socialist Party is now and always has been conducting a campaign of education, urging the enslaved working class to use ballots and not bullets in their fight against their masters, the capitalists.

It is an easy matter to take some agitator's impassioned speech and so twist its meaning as to give it the coloring of violence. Surely we are not unaware of the attacks that may be made against the Christian religion in the same way. What better example can we find of a working class uprising through the agitation of a radical enthusiast than that of Moses? Have we forgotten how he slew that Egyptian taskmaster whom he found beating a Hebrew, one of his brethren, and hid him in the sand, and then skipped off to Canada (Midian) when Pharaoh sent the officers after him? Haven't the McNamara brothers the same excuse to offer for their deeds?

Then notice how he plans to literally rob the people before their eyes, pick their pockets, so to speak. (Exodus 3:22, Inspired Translation.) "But every woman shall borrow of her neighbor, and of her that sojourneth in her house, jewels of silver, jewels of gold, and raiment; and ye shall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters; and ye shall spoil the Egyptians." Then after torturing their masters by a series of plagues, he brings the matter to a focus by having the first born of every family, and even the unoffending beasts, literally slain, killed; after which they walk out, taking with them the treasures they have "borrowed" according to the instructions above referred to.

How would this sound if it came from some Socialist "prophet"? 1 Samuel 15:3: "Now go and smite Amalek and utterly destroy all they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." Then because Saul and the people were too tender-hearted to carry out this instruction in detail, he was severely reprimanded and rejected from being king; and Samuel, in order to give Saul an example of how he should treat his enemies, called for Agag, the king whom Saul had taken alive, "And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal," (1 Samuel 15:33.)

Do Latter Day Saint elders, as well as others, when they are trying to make a case against the Socialists forget the language of Jesus? Matthew 10:30, 31, Inspired Translation: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his fathers," etc. (Breaking up the home, like the Socialists want to do, you know.) And somehow we forget how he took a whip and drove the bankers and merchants out of the temple, upset the furniture and scattered their money, and called them thieves! (John 2:14.)

Then, there's Nephi, of Book of Mormon history, who committed the double crime of murder and theft in securing the plates; and Joseph Smith, of modern times, who organized Zion's Camp and went on an expedition to reclaim lands in Jackson County, fully prepared to shed blood and destroy property, if necessary to accomplish their purpose. (Volume 1, pages 474, 475.)

[For the protection of the church we must state here that this expedition was for the purpose of carrying clothing and supplies to destitute Saints in Missouri, and to defend them when reinstated in their homes by the civil authorities. The expedition carried arms in self-defense but absolutely made no attack on anyone in the course of the entire undertaking. The proceeding was legal, not anarchistic, as the Saints in Missouri had been advised by the state authorities to arm in self-defense.—ASSOCIATE EDITOR.] (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 439.)

It is a very easy matter to conjure up some pet theory, then select some isolated and fragmentary quotations to bolster it up; but if we really want the truth we will select various statements on the same subject, let each have its appropriate bearing on the other, make allowance for figures of speech, and derive our conclusions accordingly.

If a souvenir pocketknife with the pictures of two misguided Catholic, union, Democrats on one side and the Socialist Party motto on the other is the strongest evidence of the spirit of anarchy that can be found among Socialists, we have little occasion for anxiety.

When a Republican or Democratic spellbinder quotes, "Give me liberty or give me death," everybody is ready to applaud, but when a Socialist agitator declares that the time is near at hand when there is likely to be "Wanted, a few men who are not afraid die," in order to preserve this same "liberty" "to ourselves and our posterity," he is at once branded as a vicious character, secretly plotting the destruction of human life.

Of course the idle rich who revel in the wealth created by others are not responsible for demonstrations of violence when certain wretched victims of their legalized greed employ the only means within their knowledge to extricate themselves, from the hopelessly desperate condition in which they find themselves. And I suppose the Socialist who undertakes to enlighten these wretched creatures and prove to them that the workers of the world, those who produce the wealth, are the ones who should enjoy it, is the real anarchist.

Don't you remember what the main accusation against Jesus was? Plottin' 'gainst the government. Luke 23:2: "We found this man perverting the nation . . . saying, that he himself is Christ, a king." You see, the instant a man undertakes to preach the gospel of a better government he is at once accused by the ruling power, and those who wish to curry favor with the rulers, of encouraging violence, etc., and a lot of ridiculous stuff that is not worthy the consideration of thoughtful people.

Latter Day Saints, especially elders, insist that they be judged by their own statements with reference to their religious views, and are very much concerned when an opponent undertakes to read into his words that which he does not say.

In this connection I desire to present a few quotations from the Appeal to Reason for December 16, 1911, the words of Eugene V. Debs, probably the most radical Socialist orator that we have:

The Socialists alone come out of all this mess with unsmirched character. From the beginning Socialists in the unions have opposed the tactics of the McNamaras, and have fought for the only tactics that make such actions as theirs impossible.

And now let us proceed with our work of education and organization and let us profit by this latest experience. Let us show union men the futility of dynamiting, and that dynamiting and similar outrages are the logical results of the impotency of pure and simple craft unionism.

Let us show the workers the necessity of uniting in one great industrial organization and one great political party, and using the weapons of intelligence only in waging our warfare for liberation.

Let us show them that a united working class, with intelligence to guide it, scorns the exercise of brute force in fighting its battles; that reason is more effective than violence; that crime injures those who commit it, and that the intellectual dynamite of the workers is far more deadly to capitalism and wage slavery than the kind used in blowing up buildings and bridges.

The same issue of the Appeal has a statement from Charles Edward Russell, editor of the Coming Nation, another Socialistic magazine, as follows:

The lesson of the whole sickening story that violence begets violence, that injustice fosters revenge, that violence always defeats any good end, that agitation and union are the strongest weapons against wrong in any community—may that not be lost upon this country.

The following is from the pen of the editor of the Christian Socialist:

The worst possible treason to the working class, and therefore to all future society, is to disgrace and retard the struggle for social emancipation by anarchistic methods which are social poison in themselves, and the worst possible tactics. The methods of anarchy, whether used for purpose of financial gain or because of fanatical loyalty to the union, must be condemned.

The Christian Socialist for December 21, has the following:

Socialism is the world's greatest power for peace. It does not merely talk, it acts.

When, during the Morocco dispute between Germany and France a few years ago, the German emperor seemed determined to take advantage of France's unprepared condition to force humiliating concessions or declare war, the German Socialists, two hundred thousand strong, assembled for a mighty peace demonstration in Berlin and declared that "the working men of Germany have no grievance against the working men of France and refuse to murder them."

This tremendous demonstration convinced the emperor that he could not depend upon his own people to support a war against France over a matter so trivial, therefore he was forced to send his representatives to the Algeiras arbitration conference and take his bitter medicine there, which he had formerly refused to do.

When Sweden and Norway were on the verge of war over the separation of the two countries, the Socialists and labor union men of both nations met in general convention and authorized their executive committee to call a universal strike in both countries on the day that war was declared or begun by either. The machinery of war can not grind when the wheels of industry are still. Therefore there was no war between Norway and Sweden.

Other instances might be cited, such as the tremendous demonstrations now being made in Italy by the Socialists against the murder war in Tripoli.

The Italian assault on Turkey to grab Tripoli is the most startling and convincing demonstration of the absolute mockery of "Christian" civilization under the profit system. Labor wars, cheating in business, gigantic stock jobberies, poisoned foods, the liquor traffic, the brothel, and all wars for territory or commercial advantage—these all adhere in the profit system. Socialism alone can remove these world-wide, unspeakable crimes.

I could easily furnish column after column of this kind of matter from various socialistic writers, and yet in the face of all these glaring facts in our favor, men, and women too, bishops and seventies, will continue to assert that Socialism breeds anarchy and fosters violence, with the same consistency that some people display in charging that Josephite Latter Day Saints would still practice polygamy if they dared. In Response.

Sister Walker: I chanced to see in the Home Column of January 24 a letter signed "D," in which the writer spoke of feeling great despair because of his past errors, and as though he can not have any more happy days. Reading this caused me to desire to say to him that although by his errors he has failed to do some good in the past, yet his faults do not make him an outcast from God, now that he has repented and is able to say with all his heart, "I now hate sin and I hope to be pure the rest of my life." Nor will it keep him from the sympathy and aid of noble and worthy people, those who are so in harmony with God's redeeming grace as to be always ready to lift up the fallen and comfort the erring. Nor need it prevent him from doing in the future a greater work, even that which awaits his effort and which the Lord will lead him to find, if he puts his whole trust in God and goes forward.

Then, my brother, do not despair, nor say that you can not shake off this feeling; for though great grief may come to you at times, yet look to God continually and he can and will so bless you as to make you very useful in his work for humanity. Even though you feel much humiliated, yet you can obtain from the Lord excellent comfort and great peace, and have joy in the work of lifting up and aiding many poor mortals, because you now see and understand better than you ever did before the great need there is of helping erring humanity; and you will have a deeper love, a greater sympathy, a broader philanthropy, and a more unselfish and absorbing purpose to make your life of the best possible value to your fellow mortals, especially to those who desire to rise above their errors as you do above yours.

Another point is that usually they who have suffered most have the most compassion and genuine sympathy for others who have fallen into trouble, therefore such are usually better fitted to work with God in comforting, encouraging, and lifting up the unfortunate, than if they had not themselves been down into the depths. See what one of the inspired poets of our time has written on this point. He was a tender, loving soul, who encouraged many by the light that God gave him. He wrote as follows:

"No risen Lord could eat the feast of love
Here on the earth, or yonder in the sky,
Had he not lain within the sepulcher.
'Tis not the lightly laden heart of man
That love the best the hand that blesses all;
But that which, groaning with its weight of sin,
Meets with the mercy that forgiveth much."

Again he speaks of God and of his loving purpose to redeem and exalt man, and of holiness and sin as ever accompanying humanity, as though they walked side by side, both permitted of God and each with a work to do; and he declares that he cares not whether the Lord ordains that evil should live, or if he only permits, but he asks:

"What He would have this evil do for me?
What is its mission? What its ministry?"

How shall it nurse my virtue, nerve my will,
Chasten my passions, purify my love,
And make me in some goodly sense like Him
Who bore the cross of evil while he lived,
Who hung and bled upon it when he died,
And now in glory, wears the victor's crown?"

Again he writes:

"God seeks for virtue, and that it may live,
It must resist, and that which it resists must live."

Further on he says that sin

"Unlocked the door to highest destiny,
That Christ might enter in and lead the way.
God loves not sin, nor I; but in the throng
Of evils that assail us, there are none
That yield their strength to Virtue's struggling arm
With such munificent reward of power
As great temptations. We may win by toil
Endurance; saintly fortitude by pain;
By sickness, patience; faith and trust by fears;
But the great stimulus that spurs to life,
And crowds to generous development
Each chastened power and passion of the soul,
Is the temptation of the soul to sin,
Resisted, and reconquered, evermore."

Therefore, as all this is in accordance with the way that Christ has represented God and his love for all who repent and forsake evil, so all who have erred, and who do thus turn to God and Christ, all these have cause to be comforted, and to lay strong hold upon faith and hope so as to endure to the end and to obtain the greatest of all the gifts of God, even eternal life. That Brother "D" will do so, with thousands of other erring ones we should all pray for and seek for is our wish. Let us help by aiding and comforting all we meet.

I will close with a quotation from the same poet, as he places the words in the mouth of one who sought to know the true way. He says:

"Teach me the better way,
And every expiration from my lips
Shall be a grateful blessing on your head;
And in the coming world I'll seek the side
Of no more gracious angel than the man
Who gives me brotherhood by leading me
Home with himself to heaven."

LAMONI, IOWA, February 3, 1912.

S.

[We are glad indeed to be able to give the above letter to the readers of the HERALD, and to our discouraged correspondent "D." And if it should be that there are others beside him who are allowing themselves to be tempted to doubt the completeness of God's work in the putting away of their sins through their obedience to his law, we trust that they, too, may find in it the encouragement they need to help them to press on and overcome. It may be that they have fallen again into sin, after God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven them. What then? "I say not unto thee until seven times, but until seventy times seven." These are the words of the blessed Master, and think you he will require of us more than he is willing to grant? Why, then, did he teach his disciples to pray, "Forgive us our sins as we forgive those who sin against us"? Let the inspired Psalmist answer: "He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him. As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." It is well, however, that we bear in mind that all these promises are to those who love him, and because they love him, fear him. "He remembereth that we are dust," and when we have failed, if we truly repent he will forgive. But let us strive earnestly to remember that no man is tempted above what he is able to bear. If then in weakness he yield, God may and will forgive him if he truly repents, but the strength he would have gained had he resisted the evil, it is not a part of the plan of God to give. Men grow strong only by looking to God for help and bracing themselves to resist and overcome the evil.—EDITOR.]

To Our Sisters and Friends.

Our constitution provides that the advisory board shall issue a call for help when the funds are low in the general treasury. In accordance with that provision we now appeal for money for our general fund. We need money and need it badly. The work of this society can not be successful without more financial help. If you approve the work of the auxiliary, please do not pass over this call without responding if you can do so.

We are pleased to acknowledge the generosity with which many have remembered the Children's Home, and we trust that it may be continued; for its needs are constantly recurring, and we hope the help may be also. But there are other lines of work the society has in hand that are just as necessary as the work of the Children's Home, and we must not neglect them.

The Religio voted three hundred dollars for social purity work to be carried on among the boys and young men, and by vote turned the work among girls and young women over to the Woman's Auxiliary. Now, if it takes three hundred dollars to carry it on among the young men, how much of that line of work do you think we can do with five or ten dollars? This work can not be done without the distribution of literature. We also need literature for the home and child welfare department. The monthly readings, and the leaflets printed from them are published in the interest of this department, and they are a great help but even for this division of the work more money is needed.

The plans for enlarging the work of the organization will demand added expense. The correspondence carried on by the officers of the society is increasing all the time. Heretofore the expense of this has largely been borne by the officers themselves, but as the work increases they can scarcely be expected to continue this.

Send money to our general treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Hulmes, 909 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

ADVISORY BOARD W. A. FOR S. S.

Requests for Prayer.

Brother William Anderson, Scranton, Pennsylvania: "There is a sister here who is suffering from cancer and at times suffers extreme pain. The doctors say that all her organs are affected. She has asked that all the Saints will pray for her, that if it is the Lord's will she may recover, as her little family needs her care."

A sister in deep trouble and distress asks the prayers of the Saints that God will rule in her peculiar trial for the best good of all concerned, and will grant unto her the righteous desires of her heart.

Notice.

All local societies of Woman's Auxiliary and others who have donations for the aid of general work of the organization; also those contemplating sending money to general treasurer for Children's Home fund, please do so by March 20, as my list for Children's Home fund must be prepared in time to be published as usual when Bishop Kelley's list appears in HERALD, before or after conference.

Editors Saints' Herald: The unpleasantness of not being free to do what one sees needs to be done, oh, so badly, has been one of the features of time's allotment to me for several months, but while I have experienced this unpleasantness I have had the pleasantness to learn how to endure, and for the assistance of the loving Father in both of these experiences my heart beats in grateful appreciation. Not to be understood by men is a very trying experience, but to know that God understands more than compensates for what one has to undergo, and not till one has been brought to experience that which follows being misunderstood does one become acquainted with the sweetness of the fellowship one has with God and with his Holy Spirit.

I am just reminded, by seeing the fire wagons passing with its necessary equipments to subdue one of the destructive forces of material things, that the provisions thus made prevent greater losses, and that God has as wisely provided for the protection of spiritual destruction through those whom he has commissioned to visit the house of each member of the church and teach and exhort each to the performance of duty, for the keeping out the combustible influences that mar the peace of the church and destroy the spirituality of the children of God; and if this duty is wisely done, there will not occur the necessity of the duties of those who are set in the church to put out the fire after it is once started. Prevention is truly better than cure.

Many of the afflictions that now have to be endured would never have occurred had each one cared for himself as the Lord has given us information how to, and these instructions were more clearly and fully given by those who are to instruct the Saints how to attend to the care of the body, with other family duties, and the Saints would with greater care attend to applying this preventive. I am more than ever convinced that those set apart and chosen by branches to visit the house of each member should become better acquainted with the law of hygiene, and the law given of God relative to proper foods and drink, and show their faith in the word of God, to teach it in regard to what is wise in this regard. To remain well is certainly a greater blessing than to be healed after we are made to undergo sickness. We hear many testimonies of how the Lord has healed the sick, and this is something we should be indeed thankful for, but we hear but few testimonies from those who are given a continued blessing of being kept from sickness.

And just here I am reminded that I am one who has much to be thankful for in being kept in health nearly all the time. I believe I suffer more when I am brought in contact with others' sufferings and can apparently do nothing for their relief. In such cases as this is where the just must "live by faith." Last week two of the brethren were called to seek the Lord through prayer and the anointing with oil for one not of the faith, but he believed in God and had been taught the divine provisions in such cases. He had inflammatory rheumatism, and was immediately relieved of all pain, so we are informed since, and has so far recovered as to be about the house and town.

The two brethren who administered in this case had those who were sick at their own homes, and the ordinance had been sought but relief had not been secured; but with faith in God's promises they sought him for others, and they were blessed while their own continued to suffer. Can we tell why this is? Because we can not do that make the promises of God of any less effect? Should it mar our faith in the least? It should not; but in many instances it does. One of these sick ones has received a marked recognition of God's power, while the other lingers. Shall we say that the faith we have is unwavering because we are denied what we ask for at the time we think it ought to be granted? I want to prove that my faith in God is unwavering, though I have been denied the blessing sought, and I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may with patience endure.

On account of the extreme cold weather and some adverse spiritual conditions in the district, there has been but little missionary work done this year. Some effort was made by Brother Reiste, with but little response. No requests for special meetings have been made that have not been satisfied. We look for more of an interest after the conference that is held at Runnells, Iowa, the 9th to 11th of this month. We request all Saints to inform us, then or previously, of any interest for a series of meetings. The mission in the south part of the city continues, but the cold weather put a crimp in it, as it did in many other things. Sickness has affected the interest at the Sunday school some.

I am specially pleased with all the church publications, and so well pleased that I thought better material was being furnished by others than I could offer, hence have not made my appearance for a time. I trust that this letter may not depreciate the spiritual value of our official organ. I am more than ever convinced that there should be a quarterly, or a system of quarterlies, for the use of mission schools where the Bible is but little known, and its contents much less. It might be well to have leaflets of some kind for this class of schools.

As with the divine head, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, there is unity of purpose and agreement of work, so there must be in the head of every branch, district, mission, and auxiliary, as well as the church itself, if we represent the Christ. "Except ye are one ye are not mine," applies in every organic element in the church, and when choosing officials where the choice is left to the people this principle should be kept uppermost in mind; then the choice, when made with much prayer and faith and with common consent, will thus be governed. The husbandmen first being partakers of the fruit of the gospel, recommend it by the peace that prevails in their counsels and ministrations. It is not in the power of numbers that the most is done, but in the power of unity represented in those who should be laborers together with God.

As I recall the many years of my labor in local and mission work since 1878, I remember that it has been my happy experience to enjoy unity and peace with my associates beyond measure. I desire to continue to thus labor, that although difference of opinion may at times exist there may never be anything but the peace of the Spirit of God that shall season every act performed. When all is done in an earnest desire to build up the work of God, then we will be "humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to our care," for the Lord has said that no one else can assist in this work. I desire to so be qualified, and what little I may do may be to assist the work.

The district officials representing the church, the Sunday school, the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and the Woman's Auxiliary, are all working in unity, and the work under their charge is advancing, and all working together are of assistance to the work as a whole.

Preparations for General Conference in the arranging of the business of quorums and the programs of work is enlisting the attention of those appointed committees or that have special charge of the work, and from what now appears, the coming session will be one of great interest to all. May God care for his work. I believe he will.

Hopefully,

J. F. MINTUN.

RIBSTONE, ALBERTA, January 27, 1912.

Editors Herald: 'Tis more than a year since I last wrote to the HERALD. Since then God has blessed me even more than I deserve. Indeed, I can not fully express how truly thankful I am to my heavenly Father for his mercy towards me. It is now the desire of my heart to put myself fully and contritely in God's power. As I have been freely a recipient of God's blessings, I desire to freely impart that which I am empowered to do. I feel indebted to those who have made sacrifices and enabled God's servants to go forth and proclaim the glad news of a restored gospel. It makes my duty plain that I must do all I can to help the work along, that some honest-hearted individual, somewhere, and at some time may hear and obey. How often, brothers and sisters; indeed too often, do we shirk from our labors in God's work, and while still longing for that great millennial day, we waste our valuable time and energies in building up institutions of men.

We, as a people, claim that God can save to the uttermost. Do we then have faith in God's will, as expressed in his words delivered even in our time, when we save our temporal means and energies for ourselves and expect God to save our souls?

Let us remember the parable of the rich man whose granaries were bursting full. In western Canada there are opportunities for Saints to acquire a fair surplus of this world's goods and also to be factors in spreading the gospel and helping the church. As the gospel has brought joy to many a son and daughter of Adam's race, may we as a people help it to roll further afield, that all who will may come and take of the water of life freely.

Your brother in the gospel,
W. OSLER.

WIGAN, LANCASHIRE, ENGLAND, January 23, 1912.

Editors Herald: Kindly permit me to say, through your valuable columns, that the Saints in this town, with the exception of one or two who are not attending meetings, are in good spirit and doing their very best to live the life of Saints. We are having splendid meetings, and it gives me great pleasure to say that we have baptized eight precious souls into the kingdom, who, I believe, will be a credit to the church and the branch they belong to. Brother James Entwistle, a young man who has received the work with joy and gladness, is a promising young man for future work in the branch; and Sister Florence Todd, a young woman who has joined us, is also doing good. She has been the means in God's hands of bringing three to the meetings who have since joined the church.

We have also several friends interested; a Mr. and Mrs. Marsh, two bright and promising souls, and very kind and willing to help; also Mr. and Mrs. Townsend, who are well known to the Saints here. There is also the husband of Sister Taylor, whom we hope will yet receive the gospel.

We have Elder William H. Chandler, of Warrington, with us every Sunday, who is doing a splendid work amongst us, preaching and visiting the Saints and friends. We have also good support from the Manchester District, and I beg to thank all the brethren who have so kindly visited us. Brother Roderick May paid us a visit and preached a grand gospel sermon, which was well appreciated by Saints and friends. We hope he will come again.

In conclusion, dear Saints, let me say: Be steadfast; immovable; always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our work is not in vain in the Lord. Your brother in the gospel of Christ.

WILLIAM SPARGO, President of Branch.

33 SCHOLEFIELD LANE.

COLTON, CALIFORNIA, January 30, 1912.

Dear Herald: Having just read the letter in the Home Column signed "D," I feel a deep sorrow for the brother and offer a few words by way of comfort.

How came it, brother, that Satan has so blinded you? You say you desired to do right, and obeyed the gospel, was soon called to the priesthood, and that for four happy years you were blessed with the Spirit and rejoiced to know that God had forgiven you. If you knew that God had forgiven you, is not that sufficient? Is there any word of God on record that after one has repented of his sins and obeyed the gospel in full purpose of heart, that God will again impute those sins against him? If he would again impute past sins to one he would to all, and where, then, would be the saving ordinance of the gospel? Is not Christ's atonement sufficient for you? Were your sins of a deeper dye than those of any other individual? Has he not said, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool," and if such an one be willing and obedient they should eat the good of the land? This comforting promise was made to a very wicked people, and all upon the condition that they wash themselves and be made clean,—is not that washing the cleansing act of baptism? Then to "put away the evil of their doings, and cease to do evil, and learn to do well." Can you not take God at his word? Were it the Lord who was afflicting you for your sins, then bow in humility and submission, bearing your trial in patience and sorrow until he says it is enough.

But you say, "Satan undertook to overcome me." With those words before us that I have quoted from Isaiah we can not believe it to be God,—therefore resist that power! Yes, Satan is powerful, but thanks be to God, He is more powerful; cease to doubt him; trust him and do all the good you can, and don't submit yourself to the destroying power of the Evil One.

If you have no other hope than to be weighed in the balance, then pray God for length of days and, letting no opportunities pass, work for your life, your eternal life, that your good deeds may outweigh the bad ones in numbers and in sincerity of purpose. Let your fear be that of displeasing God the Father and Jesus Christ our Redeemer by doubting the efficacy of their plan of salvation.

Your sister,
E. BURTON.

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS, January 23, 1912.

Editors Herald: The Saints of the Twin Cities have for the past seven years met in the Art Gallery in Moline. But feeling a desire to have a building of their own, have at last materialized their fond hopes. Sunday, January 21, was the formal opening day, when we held two preaching services, 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.; also Sunday school at 10 a. m., and I am continuing preaching each evening this week and over next Sunday. The church is not quite completed, but will be in the near future; twenty-eight by forty feet is the size. A very neat, commodious building. We believe the move will prove beneficial to the work in general. Trusting you and yours are improved in health, and enjoying the change.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH ARBER.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, January 28, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: Great preparations are being made here at present, as Billy Sunday, the noted evangelist, will hold the fort here six weeks beginning February 18. His advance agent has been here about a week making arrangements for his coming. A large tabernacle will be erected to accommodate about eight thousand people, and from all indications it will be crowded each night. The sectarian churches are very active in his behalf. Prayer meetings are being held in various parts of our city and in nearby towns. This week about one hundred cottage prayer meetings were established where prayer will be offered for the success of the meetings of this great evangelist.

Our friends are manifesting quite a zeal and we hear about Sunday on the street, in the factory, mills, and about everywhere. We envy not the work of this man. If he is successful in causing men to abstain from intoxicating drinks, we believe there will be happy homes in our city and good accomplished.

Brother Richard Baldwin held a series of meetings here ending on the 17th. The services were productive of good, as the speaker was blessed very much with the Spirit of the Master. At the conclusion of one of his sermons he delivered a prophecy in which the Saints were instructed to have more confidence in God, as it was through the lack of faith that many blessings have passed over our heads. We are satisfied that such has been the case, not only here but at other places through the church.

Sisters William and Gomer Liston, of Short Creek, were at social meeting to-day. Brother William and Gomer Liston are employed by the Wellsburg and Bethany Railway Company. This line runs into the town where the old historical college stands which was built by Alexander Campbell and followers of the Christian Church.

Sister Lydia Thomas has been on the sick list for the past week.

Brother Myron Thomas has resigned his position with the United Dairy Company and is making preparations to enter the active ministry.

Brother and Sister Samuel Winship, from Glenco, Ohio, worshiped with the Saints to-day.

Sisters Mabel Thomas, Edith and Vera Serig, Brethren William Brewster, Sam Martin, Matt Liston, and the writer spent last Sunday with the Stubenville, Ohio, Saints; it being their Sunday school rally day; an enjoyable day was had.

Elder O. L. Martin and coworkers are prosecuting the Sunday school work here. We are glad to note that twenty-six dollars were raised for Christmas Offering.

Sarah Gill, our aged and esteemed sister has been indisposed more or less all winter.

Dear Herald: Inclosed find an excerpt from the Arkansas Baptist, of January 24, published by Ben M. Bogard, as follows:

"My recent debate with Mormon Apostle Curtis at Adamson, Oklahoma, was a pleasing experience. Adamson is a coal mining town and the town was started by a Mormon by the name of Adamson. At Wilburton, only a few miles away, is a strong Mormon church of 180 members. A goodly number of them came over to the debate. The Baptists have been tormented by Mormons in that section until it became unbearable. They needed cooking down and they got it good and plenty. I left the Baptists shouting happy and as mad a set of Mormons as you ever heard of. The Mormons won't be apt to be very noisy for some time to come in that region.

BEN M. BOGARD.

The above mentioned debate I attended in full, and when he says "Mormons at Adamson," there is not a Mormon in Adamson unless the true Latter Day Saints of the Reorganized Church is what he means. If he left the Baptists "shouting happy," as he calls it, then the man is most happy when his conscience is seared to that degree that without compunction he can uphold a pretended Christian in the grossest misrepresentation. Bogard said the Latter Day Saints taught polygamy and murder, and read, "Zion must be redeemed either by purchase or by blood." Boasted he would be glad to know he were a relative of the preacher Bogard who assisted in driving out the Saints; he would have done the same. As to the "Mormons," as he persisted in calling us, being mad, he is willfully mistaken, for the Saints are rejoicing in the truth and the fulfillment of prophecy that no shaft organized against the work should prosper.

All is well here. Three baptized last Sunday, and I think more to follow soon.

Respectfully yours in bonds,

H. R. HARDER.

POLSON, MONTANA, January 30, 1912.

Dear Herald: We take this method of letting such of our old friends as read your pages know where we are. We came to Montana five years ago from Wyoming, where we spent a little over one year after leaving South Dakota. Two years ago we came down here on the Flathead Indian Reservation, just before the number holders began filing on the farm units, as the ranches here on the reservation are called.

At that time as far as the eye could reach there were but two houses to be seen; now we can ascend the hill a little way and on a clear day can count more than one hundred homesteaders' houses; some of them good, substantial houses, too. If it were not for the scarcity of water this would be an ideal place to live, and this defect will soon be remedied, as the irrigation project is nearing completion. We are in hopes the water will be turned into the big ditch by next June, as is called for in the contract.

This reservation lies in a beautiful valley, bordered on the east by the Mission Range of mountains, and on the west by the Little Bitter Root Mountains. At the north lies beautiful Flathead Lake, and through the midst runs the Pend Oreille River. This is a very swift river, impossible to ford, but spanned by the longest wagon bridge in the State. This bridge is at the head of the river, just as it leaves the lake, and by it one can reach the thriving little city of Polson, which has grown in three years from a trading post to a city of two thousand people, with electric lighting system, waterworks, and all the modern improvements (except saloons) to be found usually in cities of twice the population. There are people from all over the United States here, but we have not met any Latter Day Saint since coming here.

Your sister,

RUTH A. BARNES.

MONTROSE, IOWA, January 23, 1912.

Editor Saints' Herald: The writer has been a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for a number of years, but is sorry to say is not posted on the work as I should like to be, neither have I advanced as much as I should in the time that has passed. However, I am interested in the great work and want to do all I can to push it forward.

My object in writing this is to tell of a little experience which I have had recently.

Since the 31st of December the Methodist people of this place have been conducting one of their so-called revivals under the leadership of Mrs. S. A. Keel, the evangelist (?). They have succeeded in working up quite a good deal of excitement and have "scared" not a few to the "mourners' bench."

I have not attended regularly, but have gone several times. She preaches hell and damnation, and holiness and sanctification.

The second night I attended, during the early period of the meetings, the above mentioned Mrs. Keel came to a gentleman who sat next to me, and sought to lead him forward to the altar. (This was during the after part of the service, of course.) I listened to what she had to say to the gentleman and when she could not induce him to go she turned to me and said, "How is it with you, brother?" I replied, "All right, I guess." "Well, are you saved?" she said. I told her that I did not think I was, but that I was trying to so live that when the end of my earthly career came, I would be saved. I told her that the Bible says, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved," and I believed that no one could come into that condition until after they shall have passed out of this life. She tried to tell me that after a person became converted and was wholly sanctified it took away the desire to sin and therefore they did not sin. I asked her how they arrive at that condition. She said, "You have to repent and be born from above and be filled with the Holy Ghost." I asked her how she received the Holy Ghost. She did not answer my question directly, but said the Holy Ghost was upon her for three days, (I believe it was,) and ordained her and sent her out to preach the gospel. "But," I said, "You don't preach the gospel, or at least not when I am here." She replied by saying, "You are not here all the time, are you?" at which I answered "No," and undertook to tell her what the steps, or the principles of the gospel were: Faith, repentance, baptism, etc., when she undertook to make some remark about "Your church." I said to her, interrupting her, "How do you know what is my church?" "Well," she said, "I suppose you've got a church." "Yes, indeed I have," I replied.

I then commenced to tell her some of the principles which she had not preached upon, and mentioned the laying on of hands and asked her, "Do you believe in the laying on of hands?" Without answering the question, she said, "I know what you are now!" which amused me. I pressed the question, and still she did not answer, but made some remark, all of which I could not catch, but to the effect that she would not want a polygamist to lay hands on her head. I told her we did not believe in polygamy and there was no church which denounced it in stronger terms than did ours. I cited her to what Paul said: "If any man or an angel from heaven shall preach any other doctrine than that which I have declared unto you, let him be accursed." "Well, we preach the Bible all right," she said. We continued to talk some little time, and when she finally left me, I bade her remember what Paul said.

During our conversation the Christians(?) were gathered about the altar with some children who were seekers, as they call it, and were all praying at once, creating a great confusion. Each evening the husband of the evangelist, during the after meeting, would work himself up to a high state of excitement in prayer. He could be heard more than a block away and the church was shut up tight. He would yell and scream and cry, and upon some occasions would get down on all fours and even bump his head on the floor. The evening I had the talk with the lady evangelist, after her husband had had one of his performances, she said, "I'm so glad the Holy Ghost fell upon husband this evening."

I continued to attend the meetings occasionally, but the evangelist never came to me again; however, she always looked upon me with contempt, or at least it seemed so to me. She would often make some slight remark about some of the things I had said to her, and as she pretended to think or believe against our church. Among the remarks which she made was: "There will be saints in heaven, but not Latter Day Saint who practice polygamy."

Of course we did not take that to ourselves because the shoe didn't fit.

I had told the evangelist that I did not believe in an eternal hell. I told her the Bible teaches that God will reward us according to our works. That I believed we would have to suffer for our sins, but after we had paid the uttermost farthing we would come out and receive a certain degree of glory.

She made reference to this in one of her sermons and said, "The young man who said that was not a Catholic, but was worse." I rejoiced in the fact that she was not nor would not be my judge.

These people have been working on a certain middle-aged man, a personal friend of mine, and one whom I believe is convicted of sin and is honestly seeking for the light of the gospel. They have continued to surround him, night after night, in a vain effort to get him to the altar, but still the meetings closed and he did not go.

Last night, January 22, was the last night, and as I was leaving the church, at which time there was more or less confusion, caused by many leaving the church, and others talking to one another, the above-mentioned gentleman was standing near the door, and as I came up to him he extended his hand and said, "Hello, Joe, how are you?" I, of course shook hands, and being very intimate hesitated a moment. One of the converts was standing by his side and had been trying to persuade him to go forward. Somehow we at once entered into a conversation on religion, of which I will not write in detail for fear of making this letter too long, but he soon left me, and the other fellow commenced asking me questions and telling me he did not think it was necessary to go to the altar, etc.

I did not think there would be any harm for me to tell him my ideas and how I understood the things which he asked me, and at once commenced talking with him. Several persons were near us, among them some boys about sixteen or eighteen years of age. We were in the back part of the church, near the entrance, my back being toward the altar.

We had not been talking long until some one took hold of my shoulders, and upon looking around, I beheld the angry countenance of the pastor of the church, Reverend L. C. Moore, who said to me, "Won't you please not make a disturbance in our church?" I answered by saying, "I did not know I was creating a disturbance"; that I did not mean to, and that if I had said or done anything I ought not, I did not know it. Then the person in question spoke up to the Reverend and said, "He is not doing anything, only giving me a little good advice." "Well," he said to me, "you are talking to people whom we are trying to get saved." "I am talking to people whom I would like to see saved," said I, "and if I am saying or doing anything that is not right I would like to have it shown to me." "Well," he said, "since you can't agree with Sister Keel, won't you please not talk against her and our church." At this my friend and I both denied that I had done anything of the kind. So he continued accusing me of first one thing and then another falsely, none of which he could substantiate.

Finally he said, "We are glad to have you come to our church at any time (?) but won't you please when you are here not talk to these people?" This I would not agree to, telling him I thought I had a right to say and do as I pleased, wherever I was, so long as I conducted myself in a gentlemanly way and said nothing which was wrong.

He then said something more about my disturbing the meeting and threatened to use the law if need be, and left me. He was very angry, and as he turned to go I touched him on the shoulder and said, "You have done yourself more harm right here than you have me." He answered by saying, "Thank you," and we left the church.

My friend was very much worked up over the incident and denounced the reverend gentleman for his conduct. He wanted to know when we were going to have meetings. I could not answer him definitely, as I did not know. He has heard the gospel preached in our church and I would not be surprised if he goes forward and obeys after he receives a little more light.

I write this that the world may see how the sectarian churches are working against us. I might mention again that the evangelist never came to me after the interview which I described, neither did she nor any other of her workers go to any of our members except to two boys of one of our sisters in the church. One of these boys belongs to our church. Each evening these boys attended, several of their followers tried to persuade them to go to the altar, but in vain. The boys bravely defended our work as best they could.

I trust I did nothing which was wrong, for I did not mean to. I simply tried to defend the work in my own weak way. Oh, how I wished I had had the power to refer to different texts of scripture which I felt and knew, but could not. We are but a handful in this place, but we are striving to do the best we can under existing circumstances. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may ever be firm and steadfast and do what I can to advance this great and glorious work, and that I may grow in grace and the knowledge of truth, and at last be found worthy of a part in the first resurrection. Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOSEPH H. REED.

Extracts from Letters.

Jesse Clark, Fairbank, Iowa, Route 3: "We have enjoyed the recent calls by Elders J. S. Roth and J. B. Wildermuth. I am at present in need of a good steady farm hand on a large farm in northern Iowa. Some single man that understands farming and also dairying, as I have a large number of cows to milk. Anyone wishing work write for particulars at once. Would prefer some one from Iowa or surrounding States."

News From Missions

Missouri.

I landed at Toronto five weeks ago to-day, and under very unfavorable circumstances I have managed to get the gospel before many people and they are marveling that we believe and teach the Bible; as the Reverend Scott, of Eldon, of the Christian or Campbellite faith, told both publicly and privately last fall that I was an impostor and did not believe the Bible nor anything but what came through Joe Smith; and that all the difference there was between our church and the Utah Mormons was the word reorganized prefixed to the name, and many other false things which they are proving to their own satisfaction to be untrue.

How sad to think that men who are looked up to as religious teachers have so little truth to defend their positions with that they should stoop so low as to do the very thing that our Master said his disciples should not do. Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets. (Matthew 7: 12.) Paul says to speak evil of no man. (Titus 3: 2.) Several whose minds were poisoned against the Book of Mormon by this enemy of the truth have made a personal examination of the same and are convinced that it is just what it and its friends claim for it; that it is a true record of the ancient inhabitants of America and also a true record of the gospel of Jesus Christ as delivered to them by the Lord himself in fulfillment of John 10: 16 and came forth in due time to help establish the truth of the Bible in the last days when the word of God should be esteemed as naught, and are we not living in that day? When the world's great evangelists, like Billy Sunday and Pastor Russell of the Millennial Dawn fame, will rally around the statement made by Paul, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, and teach the people that no matter what you believe as to doctrine, organization, or tenets of faith, just so you believe in Jesus as being the Christ. See Acts 16: 31, and the 32d verse says they spake unto him the words of the Lord (the gospel). See John 12: 50, and as soon as they heard the words of the Lord they were baptized both men and women. Now hear Jesus and Nicodemus (John 3: 1-5), "How can a man be born again when he is old? Jesus said, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of the water and the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God." That is how Jesus says a man can be born again; first of the water; second, of the Spirit; that makes a man a member of the church; kingdom of his dear Son; household of God; body of Jesus Christ; sheepfold. Hear him speak of himself and see how he entered the sheepfold. He said to the young ruler, If thou wilt be perfect . . . come and follow me. Jesus came to John (a man sent from God), and was baptized of John in Jordan, and straightway coming up out of the water the Spirit descended like a dove upon him. Water first, Spirit second! immersion in water, too, because it says he came up out of the water. Could you come out of a house before you had entered it? Verily, no. Neither could Jesus come up out of the water before he had been buried therein. Now this seems to be proof enough that we are living in the age when the word of God is considered as naught. In Colossians 2: 11, 12, 13, we read they were circumcised with the circumcision of Christ in being buried with him in baptism, and in making or conforming to the gospel covenant, of which the law of circumcision given to Abraham was a covenant.

Well, I am plodding along doing the very best I can under the circumstances. The elements and Satan and all the powers of darkness are arrayed against the gospel. I was talking yesterday to an old, gray-haired leader of the Campbellite faith who dropped in to visit awhile, and he said, "I can't understand what you are trying to get at." I told him I was trying to show him the mission work of Christ. Later he said, "That is universalism." I told him Christ was a universalist; if one understood the different orders people were to come forth in, and after I had continued quoting scripture for half an hour more he jumped up in a rage and started home, saying, "I won't listen to any more of that. That is pure infidelity."

So it goes. Others say it is the first time they have heard the Bible preached, and that it is the most reasonable and sensible doctrine I ever heard. I heard one lady say, who had only been out to hear me twice, that she learned more from those two sermons about the plan of salvation than she had learned all the rest of her life; not because I knew so much, but because she knew so little. She was about thirty years of age, and had sat for years under the sound of Campbellite preaching.

I am domiciled at the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Willoughby, who are held in high esteem by all who know them; their hearts were made sad by the loss of their little son Lowel, whom we laid away to await the resurrection morn. I go from here to-morrow to Nobby, Benton County.

With a prayer for all the Israel of God, and the advancement of the truth,

I am your brother,

C. J. PETERS.

TORONTO, MISSOURI, January 18, 1912.

Michigan.

I have been in the Western Michigan District since November 14, 1911, having been appointed here by F. A. Smith.

In company with Brother H. E. C. Muir, of Valley Center, Michigan, I started work at this place, preaching my first sermon here in the town hall, to a nice little crowd, November 15 last; subject, the differences existing between us and the Utah church. We made friends from the start and many became interested. We stayed for about ten nights and then Brother Muir made up his mind to return home, owing to conditions in his home. I decided to remain for a night or two, and did, preaching three more sermons. Being somewhat discouraged at the loss of my partner, and at other things, decided to return home too, but God ordered it otherwise, and I am thankful that he did. Brother J. W. Burgett, living at Chippewa Station, met me at the train, having been sent there (Lake Station), by the power of God, so he says, and I believe him, for I had decided to visit my cousin at the lake a day or two and then go on home.

I went to Brother Burgett's home and we began holding meetings in a schoolhouse and church and did much good. I am now back in Orono and expect to stay this week. I have preached over forty sermons since I came, baptized nine, and assisted others about thirty times, so I don't think my work has been all in vain. My friends in this place have certainly done me a great favor; taking up a collection all unknown to me, they bought me clothes amounting to $29.20 at the retail price, but the merchant sold at cost and some things below cost. He is a kind man by the name of Eichenberg. I am staying with him part of the time. I hope all of my brethren in Christ may meet with just such friends.

Uncle Joseph Shippy of Lamoni is now in town and has preached twice. He is a nice old man.

I know the work is true, and I hope and pray that by the mercy and goodness of God I may be instrumental in doing much good.

Your brother in bonds,
R. D. WEAVER.

ORONO, MICHIGAN, February 4, 1912.

Utah.

There are two little matters touching this field and the Mormon Church that I wish to call attention to for the benefit of those who may be engaged in our church work where they sometimes run counter to this "man of sin" of the Latter Day Saints.

The first is their claim to a membership of five hundred thousand (500,000), and the system of enumeration upon which such a claim is based.

I have before me a little pamphlet entitled, "Annual Instructions, 1909; Circular No. 10; To Presidents of Missions, Bishops and Counselors, Stake, Mission, and Ward Clerks, and all Church Authorities"; bearing the date of January 1, 1909; addressed from the presiding bishop's office, Salt Lake City, Utah, and signed by Joseph F. Smith, John R. Winder, Anthon H. Lund, First Presidency; C. W. Nibley, O. P. Miller, David A. Smith, Presiding Bishopric.

On page 18 of this pamphlet is the following instruction, "The names of children who are blessed and who have one or both parents in the church should be entered in the ward 'Record of Members,' as those of children under eight years of age. When children not of Latter-day Saint parentage are blessed, only in the 'Ward Historical Record'; and such names should not be counted in the quarterly or annual statistics."

Under this rule of enumeration it is no wonder that they claim five hundred thousand membership. Last year I baptized a father, mother, and grandfather, and have blessed four babies in that family. While we only count this an accession of three to our numbers; still, if we were to adopt the above method, it would be seven. I wonder if this is why they always administer the sacrament to all the babies who are old enough to eat a piece of bread and drink a sip of water—never wine, they claim that is too expensive; they can't afford it. Sometimes I feel as though we should take up a collection and purchase a basket of Dixie grapes for them, that they might really make the sacrament what the Master says it "should be."

The other matter of which I speak is, perhaps, an old subject, but I wish to refer to it once more at the risk of being called a "bore." It is the date of the so-called "Revelation on the eternity of the marriage covenant, including plurality of wives."

The document in their Doctrine and Covenants says, "Given through Joseph the Seer, in Nauvoo, Hancock County, Illinois, July 12, 1843," but in order to get back to cover the dates of the first plural wives claimed for Joseph the Seer, 1841, Joseph F. Smith, the present president of this faction, in an article published in the Deseret News of May 20, 1886, and quoted in their Historical Record, volume 6, page 219, says, "The great and glorious principle of plural marriage was first revealed to Joseph Smith in 1831. (Italics mine.) . . . It remained an 'unwritten law' and commandment of the Almighty to the faithful, only of his Saints, designed to be enlarged as intelligence and fidelity to the laws of God increased, until the 12th day of July, 1843, when a portion of the revelation was written." Of course the two terms, "given through Joseph, the Seer," and "first revealed to Joseph Smith," are not necessarily conflicting; not nearly so much as the records of the times are with both statements, but Job has expressed a wish, "Oh that mine enemy had written a book," and that is just what has occurred out here, and in volume 5, pages 500 and 501 of the History of the Church as copyrighted by this same Joseph F. Smith for the church, we find under date of 1843 the following excerpt, claiming to be from the pen of "Joseph the Seer": "Wednesday, 12, I received the following revelation in the presence of my brother Hyrum and Elder William Clayton," and then follows section 132 of the Utah Doctrine and Covenants, entire.

There is a popular song entitled, "Somebody lied," and there is also a statement in this same Doctrine and Covenants which says, "All liars shall have their part in that lake which burns with fire." Surely there is a warm time awaiting some one in the great hereafter. It seems to us they had better repent.

Sincerely in the conflict for the truth,

A. M. CHASE.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

Since the 18th of January we have enjoyed very pleasant weather, and in taking a general outlook of spiritual conditions, we can report very favorably for the Saints.

They have indeed been called to mourn the departure of loved ones; and a few of our brethren and sisters have been, and still are, sufferers on account of sickness and affliction, yet the Lord has been graciously mindful of his little flock in this the center place, and when meeting together in his name they have been blessed.

The young people,—among them the Religians, the home classes, and those engaged in the various lines taken up by the auxiliaries, continue to do good work, and there is much skill and intelligence, as well as musical and literary talent manifested.

On Sunday, the 21st, at the Sunday school there were 746 pupils and 87 teachers present; at the morning service Elder J. W. Rushton, selecting his text from 1 Corinthians 13, also Galatians 5: 6, discoursed before a large and attentive audience on the subject of love, and his basic thought was, "Nothing but faith working through love avails."

The sermon of the evening by Bishop R. Bullard on the theme of the temporal law was also full of instructive and uplifting thought.

The prayer meetings of the young folks also have been well attended; and their singing class, lately organized under the direction of Sister Anderson, is being well equipped for successful work. They meet for instruction every Thursday afternoon.

On last Sunday President G. E. Harrington in the morning, and Elder Ammon White at the evening hour, gave excellent and necessary instruction in moral ethics and spiritual philosophy, based on the word of God as found in the Scriptures.

The Saints had a joyful meeting in the afternoon, rejoicing in the spiritual gifts of prophecy, tongues, and the spirit of prayer. There was also a confirmation of a little one under the hands of Brethren William Rushton and W. H. Garrett.

On the following evening there was a well-filled lower auditorium and nearly all the people turned out to hear and be heard on the all-important subject of cooperation. Those presiding were the stake presidency and the stake bishopric, and these were also assisted by Apostle J. W. Rushton and Bishop E. L. Kelley.

Quite a number of questions were put to the main speakers of the occasion, and a few of the well-informed ones imparted much light through the sound, logical, and revealed information as given in the good old "books." It was an educational meeting, and another of the same import was announced for the third Monday of this month.

On Sunday, the 28th, the sad news was received here of the death of Brother Charles W. Bullard, and his funeral obsequies took place at the church on the 31st, Elder Joseph Luff preaching the funeral sermon. Our beloved brother met his death on Sunday, the 28th, while on duty at the Saint Louis, San Francisco & Texas Railway Co.'s yards, and his remains were interred in Mound Grove Cemetery. A large number of relatives and friends, among them his quorum of teachers, accompanied them.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Cleveland Branch is having good meetings and larger attendance. Bishop Becker and Elder Farnfield were among our latest visitors. There is no organized effort at present outside of the regular branch work. Most all the same officers were installed at last business meeting.

Sister Farnfield has charge of the Sunday school home class department. We hope many will assist her in this important work, which is a feeder for the Sunday school and church.

We have had severe weather, but good attendance and some outsiders.

Funeral service January 28, in charge of Elder John Smith; sermon by Elder H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Elder R. M. Elvin.

Doctor Miller's books are widely read because they preach the gospel of cheerfulness, the value of optimism. No one can read his Beauty of Self Control without being benefited and having a greater appreciation of the art of looking pleasant, even when things go all wrong, as they frequently do for even the most cheerful souls. Who will not echo his words, "A temper under control, a voice cheerful with hope, and a countenance light with kindness are invaluable possessions to any man or woman. Perfect self-control is ideal life. A man is kingly when he has complete mastery of his temper, his feelings, his appetites; when he can be quiet under injury and wrong; when he can stand amid temptations and not yield to them. Not only is self-control strong, it is also beautiful. Anger is not beautiful. Ungoverned temper is not lovely. Rage is demoniac. But a spirit calm and unflustered amid storms of feeling and all manner of disturbing emotions, is sublime in its beauty."

The Beauty of Self Control, by J. R. Miller (New York; Thomas Y. Crowell Co.).

Don't object that your duties are so insignificant; they are to be reckoned of infinite significance, and alone important to you. Were it but the more perfect regulation of your apartments, the sorting away of your clothes and trinkets, the arranging of your papers—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all your might," and all thy worth and constancy. Much more, if your duties are of evidently higher, wider scope; if you have brothers, sisters, a father, a mother, weigh earnestly what claim does lie upon you, in behalf of each, and consider it as the one thing needful, to pay them more and more honestly and nobly what you owe. What matter how miserable one is, if one can do that? That is the sure and steady disconnection and extinction of whatsoever miseries one has in the world.—T. Carlyle.

Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life.—James 1: 1.

PREACHING.

(A paper prepared to be read before the priesthood of the Independence Stake.)

WHAT IS PREACHING?

Preaching is a public declaration and exposition of the word and will of God by one properly authorized to make such declaration and exposition. We speak of "fireside preaching," but "fireside preaching" is more conversational, though it may be and should be an exposition and declaration of God's word. We also speak of the preaching of those who certainly are not properly authorized to represent God, but this is not preaching in the strict sense of the term, as it is used in the Bible to denominate that kind of preaching by which God is pleased to "save the world."

PREACHING VERSUS LECTURING.

We are asked to tell the difference between preaching and lecturing. The lecturer may or may not represent anything besides himself. But the preacher represents God and the church and is morally bound to present the ideas that he has good reason to believe are indorsed by God and the church. While he draws financial and moral support from God and the church he can not honestly give his time and talent to the promulgation of other gospels or of that which is foreign or contrary to the will of God and the church.

The lecturer may or may not operate under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit while speaking in public. Of the preacher it is said emphatically: "The Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:5.

The lecturer usually appeals to the intellect almost solely. He is concerned with the giving of information. His aim is to educate. The preacher appeals to the intellect; he also appeals to the emotions. He desires to educate; he also desires to save. Salvation is his theme. The Apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost preached a sermon that was profoundly emotional. It stirred the hearts of his hearers to their depths. His performance on that day illustrates the difference between the lecture hall and the church; between the preacher and the lecturer; between an inspired statement of the doctrine of Jesus Christ, which is the "power of God unto salvation," and the mere promulgation of ethical teachings originating with man, or the academic delineation of facts historical, scientific, or otherwise.

THE USE OF STORIES.

We are asked if preaching is "to tell religious stories in public." A line of stories does not constitute a sermon. Yet we believe that the right kind of a story may be used to good effect to drive a point home and fix it in the mind, or to clear up and explain a difficult problem. Jesus at one time told a story about a man who built his house upon the sand and another who built upon the rock. He also told a story about ninety and nine sheep that were safe in the fold and one that was lost in the wilderness. These stories so impressed the human mind that they will never be forgotten. Whenever retold they carry with them their original lesson. He told many other stories, mostly based on the common, every-day things in nature, and the affairs of men that he had observed around him. He was a great observer and used that which he saw to good advantage in his work.

The fact that a story is witty does not, in our opinion, necessarily disqualify it. But here is room for wise discrimination. Many stories that are supposed to be funny are merely foolish. A bright shaft of wit glancing athwart the discourse may wake the people up and cause them to listen and remember. But it is a bad sign when the people remember only the story and forget the lesson that it was intended to convey.

Here is where some preachers err. They make the story of primary importance. They hear a good story and can not resist the temptation to use it when they have no real need for it to illustrate some great truth.

No story or illustration should be used which is offensive to good taste, or in its nature intended to be suggestive of things indecent, or which in any way lowers the dignity of the pulpit.

Surely no one could object to the story of Sir Launfal as used by a member of the Lamoni Stake Presidency in a discourse not long ago.

The writer, when preaching on practical Christianity has used the story of Goldsmith, who was a practicing physician in Bankside, Southwark. He was once called to see a poor patient who plainly stood in need of food more than medicine. Goldsmith diagnosed the case and the situation, and this was his prescription: Putting all the money that he had into a pill box he wrote on the label, "To be taken as occasion requires."

Can anyone find fault justly with the use of such an anecdote for such a purpose?

WHO SHOULD PREACH?

We are asked the question, Who should preach? This question is answered specifically in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants: "It shall not be given to anyone to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church, except he shall be ordained by some one who has authority, and it is known to the church that he has authority, and has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church."—42: 4.

Both God and the church are interested in this matter of preaching. No one can preach the gospel successfully and represent the church who is not in touch with God and chosen of him. On the other hand, no one can preach this gospel and represent God who is not properly ordained and in good standing in the church and sustained and supported by the church morally. This fact should be remembered by those who from time to time may be tempted to draw out and become free lances, thinking that they can do some great work for God independent of the church. Such efforts have ever failed and are doomed to fail.

WHERE SHOULD WE PREACH?

Undoubtedly the church is the best place in which to preach, providing we can induce the people to enter such a place, dedicated to God, in which the atmosphere aids in the contemplation of divine things. But if the people will not come to us we must go to them. If churches are not to be had in many places where we fain would present the gospel, we must seek other edifices, or preach in tents or in the open, as wisdom may direct and opportunity offer.

Early in his ministry Jesus entered into the synagogue in his home town on the Sabbath day and taught the people. This it is said was his custom (Luke 4: 16); but the people were offended at his teaching and led him out of the synagogue and thrust him from the city. After that he preached on the mountain, by the sea, in private houses, on the streets, wherever he could find audience, not even disdaining to enter again into the synagogues as the opportunity offered. (Luke 13: 10; Matthew 4: 23.)

TO WHOM SHOULD WE PREACH?

The commandment was to preach the gospel to "every creature." Jesus himself paid little attention to class distinctions. He preached to the rich young man and to the desperately poor beggars that abound in the Far East; he preached to the virtuous Mary and Martha and to the woman taken in adultery who would have been stoned to death but for his intervention; he preached to the ultra religious and professedly pious Pharisees and to the ungodly publicans. He sometimes passed by the "better classes" and went in search of the most depraved sinners, on the ground that they who are the most sick have most need of a physician. He declared that he was sent to seek and to save that which was lost. He was like the shepherd who left the sheep that were safe in the fold and went to seek the one that was astray in the night and the storm; or the woman who lighted her candle and sought for the piece of money that was missing.

HOW SHOULD WE QUALIFY TO PREACH?

We have previously stated that inspiration is necessary while delivering a message; it is also necessary to make previous preparation by prayer and study, so that a well-stored mind, coupled with a disciplined and spiritual heart, may be ready to cooperate with the Holy Spirit when the crucial hour shall arrive. We are commanded to seek learning even by study and also by prayer. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.)

Some have said that no man can preach from notes and have the Spirit. Others declare that no man can stand up without previous preparation and selection of subject and preach a connected and profitable discourse.

We should not draw the lines too closely. One man can not follow another man's methods. Let each discover the methods by which he can work to best advantage. Many will find it to their advantage to have some sort of an outline of their discourse in mind before entering the pulpit, being directed therein in their choice of subject and construction of outline, and leaving plenty of liberty to the Spirit to introduce new thought at any time after they have begun to speak. Such may or may not use notes to indicate leading divisions of the discourse. We know by experience that the Spirit will not refuse to cooperate in either case if the heart is in the work. But one should avoid too elaborate notes, that will hold his attention from his audience and keep him constantly referring to his notes.

WHAT SHOULD WE PREACH?

The great apostolic commission was: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel." In our times the following instruction is given: "The elders, priests, and teachers of the church shall teach the principles of my gospel."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

This term "preaching the gospel" is quite comprehensive and gave the apostles considerable latitude in the declaration of things religious. It is written:

"They ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ."—Acts 5: 42.

"Go thou and preach the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 60.

"We preach Christ crucified."—1 Corinthians 1: 23.

"Preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection."—Acts 17: 18.

"Preaching peace by Jesus Christ."—Acts 10: 3-6.

"Many other things . . . preached he unto the people."—Luke 3: 18.

"Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee."—1 Timothy 4: 16.

"Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine."—Titus 2: 1.

Many other passages might be cited showing that the life, death, message, and character of Jesus, and the principles of his doctrine and gospel furnished the ground work of the preaching of the apostles. And all of our preaching to-day should be seasoned with good, sound Bible doctrines and precepts calculated to move sinners to repentance or to educate and build up the Saints as the case may be. These old-time, eternal verities should be so stated that their application to present day needs may be discovered, and in language that the people can understand now. Jesus and his message are the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and meet the needs of men now as well as of old. It is our mission to make men see that forgotten fact.

The preaching of the principles of the gospel opens up many allied subjects connected with the gospel and human needs, for the gospel is as wide as eternity. But we should be careful not to wander far afield into mysterious and unprofitable realms of the unrevealed, or into the seductive labyrinths of transient human philosophies which change with the passing day as men change politics or women change styles.

Yet the Spirit is to be our guide. No man can prepare a list of topics upon which his brethren may preach and another list that must be avoided. God has not attempted such a task, nor has he authorized any man to make such an attempt.

WHAT IS THE SCOPE OF THE MINISTER'S FIELD OF STUDY?

As a minister is to preach "the gospel," of course he should study first of all those inspired books which contain a statement of gospel principles and a history of God's dealings with man. After that he is told to study all good books (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 5). God has not attempted to prepare a list of all good books, nor will he. The minister is a free man in this church in the choice of his fields of investigation.

It will be well for the average minister to avoid specializing. We need a few specialists, it is true. But the average minister should qualify himself for all around work. His reading should be as wide and varied as is consistent with his time and ability.

In the present crisis in the industrial world, which is clearly in a period of transition, and in this day of the redemption of industrial and spiritual Zion, the minister may well devote some study to economics and sociology, that he may be prepared to express himself on the movements of the day in such a way as not to betray ignorance, but rather in a way that will help and enlighten. This study should be accompanied by a close study of the revelations of God on these subjects, and thereby he will discover the superiority of God's plan, and the means of its adaptation to present human needs.

WHAT ARE THE STANDARDS OF AUTHORITY?

The standards of authority in the church are the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. We deprecate any disposition to controvert or appeal from these standards on the part of church members.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants was formally adopted by the church in 1835, and later by the Reorganization. Every revelation therein has been adopted by vote of the church and is binding on the church. And in it we read: "The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

HOW LONG SHALL WE PREACH?

The eloquent Whitefield said: "To preach more than half an hour, a man should be an angel himself or have angels for hearers." Probably this is an extreme statement. There are times and places when one may preach for two or more hours and the people wish him to continue. It would be a mistake to miss such an opportunity. But such things are the exception.

In this as in all things it is given, and always shall be given, we are told, to the elders to conduct all meetings as they shall be led by the Holy Ghost. But the Holy Ghost operates in connection with one's own native good sense. When one continues to preach after his audience becomes bored and restless it is fair to presume that neither the Spirit nor common sense is in control,—personal enthusiasm has been mistaken for the influence of the Spirit.

There are men who habitually preach for an hour or longer and fail to hold the interest of the people. They become known as dry speakers. If they would cut their time down severely and concentrate on one subject, saying as much as possible in a few words, they might hold their hearers and would say as much as they have formerly said in the course of an hour or more.

THE MAN AND THE MESSAGE.

A mistake is made when the man becomes more prominent than the message. He wins followers for himself and not for the Lord. When he dies or drops out his following melts away. God and the church are not enriched. Here is a splendid poem written concerning one whom we might call a "secularian" preacher, yet it is true and noble:

He held the lamp of truth that day
So low that none could miss the way;
And yet so high, to bring in sight
That picture fair—"The world's great light,"
That, gazing up—the lamp between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

He held the pitcher, stooping low,
To lips of little ones below;
Then raised it to the weary saint,
And bade him drink, when sick and faint;
They drank—the pitcher thus between—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

He blew the trumpet soft and clear,
That trembling sinners need not fear;
And then with louder notes and bold,
To raze the walls of Satan's hold!
The trumpet coming thus between,—
The hand that held it scarce was seen.

But when the Captain says, "Well done,
Thou good and faithful servant, come!
Lay down the pitcher and the lamp,
Lay down the trumpet—leave the camp"—
The weary hands will then be seen,
Clasped in the pierced ones—naught between.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CORRECTION.

In the Inspired version of the Bible, small type edition, Romans 9: 8 appears this language: "They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God." In the large type edition this is rendered: "They which are the children of the flesh, these are the children of God." The latter rendition is clearly an error, evidently a typographical error.

"JOURNAL OF HISTORY."

It has been determined to make the April number of the Journal of History an Independence Number. It will contain only historical articles that in some way have reference to the history of Independence. Some of the articles to be published are as follows: "Early history of Independence," containing an account of the first missionary effort in that vicinity and the first Latter Day Saint settlement; "The exodus," giving an account of the trouble of 1833; "Zion in her desolation," setting forth the troublesome times during the period that the Saints were not permitted to dwell there; "Returning to Zion," giving an account of the return after the war and of the Independence Branch; "History of Independence Stake"; "Independence publications," in which the history of the Book of Commandments will be discussed; "Memories of Independence," by one who resided there in childhood and youth; "A romance," having one of its principal events in Independence, the characters of which are well-known characters of church history.

The most of these articles are to be illustrated.

Some of the authors have not yet appeared in the Journal, and some of the illustrations have never yet been published. Your visit will be more enjoyable when you attend the General Conference at Independence in April if you have this number in your possession. If you do not attend, the account of the conference will be more interesting if read in connection with this interesting number. Do not fail to subscribe in time to receive the April number. Price $1.00 the year. Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE "OUTLOOK."

The Outlook is one of the great magazines of the day for a number of reasons. Chief among these reasons is the fact that it is preeminently a business man's magazine of a high order. Edited by profound scholars and students of affairs, religious, governmental, political, and literary, it is an excellent aid in keeping even with the news—and dependable news at that—of a very busy world. The personnel of its editorial staff is a continuing guarantee of merit. Mr. Lyman Abbott is editor in chief. He is a profound theologian and writer along religious lines. His "Spectator" column is a refreshing bit of observation, breezily written by one who sees with intelligence and understanding. Hamilton W. Mabie is associate editor, and Ex-president Theodore Roosevelt as contributing editor is giving to thousands of readers the benefit of his knowledge and experience in governmental matters. The Outlook has a mission and is filling it splendidly.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

"CALLED AS WAS AARON."

On page 171 Traum criticizes the work of calling the apostles, in the first organization of the church, not in "1834" as Traum has it, but February 14, 1835, History of the Church, p. 540. He proceeds to give the account thus:

Having now seen that the system is itself based upon a fiction, we shall find it interesting to make note of the Lord's (?) method in choosing the twelve apostles of the new dispensation. So far as we have been able to see, the record does not confirm their oft-asserted boasting that they were "called of God as was Aaron." At Kirtland, Ohio, on the 14th of February, 1834, a conference was called by Joseph Smith for the purpose of laying before the elders the subject of choosing the twelve. Joseph stated that the first business of the meeting was for the three witnesses (Cowdery, Whitmer, and Harris) of the Book of Mormon to pray, each one, and then to proceed to choose twelve men from the church as apostles, to go to all nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples. The three witnesses, namely, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer and Martin Harris, united in prayer. They were then blessed by the laying on of hands of the Presidency, and then proceeded to make choice of the twelve as follows.

As usual, Mr. Traum omits, either intentionally, or unintentionally, an important clause in the account. The proper transcription reads thus:

President Joseph Smith, jr., after making many remarks on the subject of choosing the Twelve, wanted an expression from the brethren, if they would be satisfied to have the Spirit of the Lord dictate in the choice of the elders to be apostles; whereupon all the elders present expressed their anxious desire to have it so.

A hymn was then sung, "Hark, listen to the trumpeters," etc. President Hyrum Smith prayed, and meeting was dismissed for one hour.

Assembled pursuant to adjournment, and commenced with prayer.

President Joseph Smith, jr., said that the first business of the meeting was, for the three witnesses of the Book of Mormon, to pray, each one, and then to proceed to choose twelve men from the church, as apostles, to go to all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.

The three witnesses; viz, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, united in prayer.

These three witnesses were then blessed by the laying on of the hands of the Presidency. The witnesses then, according to a former commandment, proceeded to make choice of the Twelve."—History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 541.

Traum drops from the account the essentials in this consideration. He says nothing of the remarks of Joseph as to the Spirit of the Lord dictating in the choice of men to be chosen. He omits the qualifying clause, "according to a former commandment," the witnesses proceeded to make a choice, etc. Mark you, Traum is attempting to explode the "called of God as was Aaron" principle, and he can see no proof, as he says, of this oft-asserted boast. I propose a little "eye salve." The evidence goes to show that he can see, but is not disposed to do so, for why should he omit just at the particular juncture, the statements of divine direction in this matter? The suggestion of President Smith, "if they, (the brethren. S.) would be satisfied to have the Spirit of the Lord dictate in the choice of the elders to be apostles," and they "expressed their anxious desire to have it so." Then a hymn was sung, and the meeting was dismissed for an hour. Assembling again, President Smith stated the first business of the meeting. Then prayer. What for? Divine direction. They then, according to a former commandment, proceeded to choose. What was the "former commandment"? Doctrine and Covenants 2: 6:

And now I give unto you, Oliver Cowdery, and also unto David Whitmer, that you shall search out the Twelve, who shall have the desires of which I have spoken, and by their desires and their works you shall know them; and when you have found them you shall show these things unto them.

Isn't it in accord with the methods of the selection of apostles in the days of Christ? Let us see.

And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named Apostles.—Luke 6: 12, 13.

Isn't it in accordance with the methods of the twelve who chose a successor to Judas, at Jerusalem? Let us see.

And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.—Acts 1: 24-26.

They "prayed" in all three of the events of selecting apostles, with the expression of Jesus Christ backed up by his example in their minds and hearts, "Ask, and ye shall receive," "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he may send the laborers," etc. Yes; but what about the "committee"? Call it a committee if you choose; we have a precedent, and similar committee chosen to search out officers, in the New Testament.

And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables. Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word. And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch, whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.—Acts 6: 1-6.

Comment is useless. Traum urges a similar criticism as to the choosing of apostles in the beginning of the Reorganization, but as the Reorganized Church did not vary from the instructions given, and the rule governing in the previous instances, we will allow this to be an answer to the latter objection also. So that "the point in his observation" is not well taken, scripturally.

Traum descends to low depths in speaking of the "batch" of apostles chosen in the first organization of the church. Storm periods will arise in the history of all organizations, and the church of Christ especially, finds arrayed against her foes without and foes within, the combined assaults of the world, the flesh and the Devil, but do such conflicts destroy principles? Moses, soon after the deliverance from bondage with all of its monumental attestation of miracle, and the direct protection of God, was only absent from the camp forty days, and was confronted with the Israelitish host worshipping in the service of idolatry, and his first counselor was the leader, manufacturing the golden calf. Did this invalidate the facts of the Mosaic commonwealth? Nay! Yet Traum, a Christian minister, with the Bible in his hands, professing to know the history, principles, foundation, and progress of the work God has sought to do among men, descends to little, petty faults of weak humanity, to prove God did not know whom to choose, in the development of his work from the beginning down. Israel remembered not the multitude of God's mercies; they provoked him at the Red Sea; they forgot his works; and condemned his counsel. They tempted him in the desert, a fire was kindled in their midst, and the wicked were burned. They changed the glory of God. They envied Moses in the camp; he contended with the ecclesiastical rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. The earth opened and swallowed them up. They murmured in their tents, and despised the pleasant land. They joined themselves unto Baal-peor, and ate sacrifices to the dead, and increased their wicked inventions until the Almighty lifted up his hand against them to overthrow them in the wilderness, and scatter their seed among the nations in all lands, yet the truth of God marched on. The New Testament records the failures of men, the eternity of principle, and the exalted excellencies of our Father's will, but who would think of attempting the destruction of that will, or the excellencies thereof, because of men's failures.

There are so many falsehoods and misrepresentations in Traum's writeup, that we brand the whole of it as a tissue of untruths. He can use his pleasure as to adopting parliamentary usage here.

"POOR SELECTION."

On page 172, Traum calls attention to what he deems a "poor selection," in the Twelve, as chosen in 1835, in the following language:

It is almost a waste of time to call the Saints' attention to the poor selection that was here made, for as time went on the most of these men fell from grace. Doubtless the Saints will have their reply in readiness, for they are well-informed along the line of like offenses, and will say that so did Judas Iscariot betray his Lord, as did the chief apostle Peter deny him, and that not one of them was present when the time came for Christ to tread the wine-press alone. This can be granted, but in granting it let us say that the offenses of these men came before their "endowment," after which they were true till death, whereas among the Mormons the time of the "endowment" was at the very beginning of the offenses of which the Twelve were guilty.

He should have gone further, and stated that he believed, because Judas betrayed his Lord, and Peter cursed and swore in denying him, that therefore the work of our Lord was a fraud, and Jesus an impostor, for this is the end of his argument, if it may be called one, to prove that the failures and blemishes in men's characters are evidences of fraudulent designs within the system they propagate. If not, why refer to character at all? He should have enlarged his view, and informed us that "after the endowment" of the primitive church, "offenses" of grave character swooped in upon the people of God, and some of the main pillars of the church were under the cloud. In Acts 15: 39, Paul and Barnabas engaged in such a "contention," they severed the bonds of fellowship temporarily, and separated, going in different directions, Paul and Silas going with the recommendation of the brethren, and poor Barnabas, and Mark, went into Cyprus without letters. In Galatians 2 Paul was brought face to face with "false brethren," who came in privily to spy out the liberty the apostle had in the gospel. The object, as stated, was to bring the saints "into bondage"; and the matter of discussion became so aggravated that Paul affirms, "when Peter came to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed." Before the "sentence" passed by James, in the apostolic conference, (Acts 15: 13-18) Peter ate with the Gentiles, but when they came, he withdrew, and separated himself, being afraid of those which are of the circumcision. Paul said the other Jews acted the hypocrite "likewise with him," and "Barnabas was carried away with their dissimulation,"—hypocrisy. Paul says: that they "walked not uprightly according to the gospel." Now, mark you, Mr. Traum, this strange condition developed after the endowment on Pentecost day, but what does it prove? Again, the church at Corinth was divided, contention existed, Paul could not feed them, save with "milk"—they couldn't bear anything stronger; because, he declares, they were carnal. Envy, strife, and division were among them; they walked not as saints, and had criminals among them, and Paul delivered some of them "over to the buffetings of Satan for the destruction of the flesh." They had "false apostles and deceitful workers" among them. All existing after the endowment; and to the Corinthian church, Paul says: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." Does the existence of this condition prove the gospel false? This is Traum's argument.

Again, just previous to his martyrdom, Paul enumerates a great number who had made "shipwreck of their faith," (1 Timothy) and two of these Paul turned over to Satan, "that they may learn not to blaspheme." They had turned aside into "vain jangling," giving "heed to fables and endless genealogies," "doting about questions, and strifes of words, whereof come envying, railing, evil surmising, perverse disputing of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness." Paul caps the climax when he completely answers Traum's would-be objection, by giving in few words, a radical charge: "All they which are in Asia be turned away from me." And, "At my first answer, no man stood with me, but all men forsook me."—2 Timothy 1: 15, 4: 16. Near the close of the first century of the Christian era, the conditions were so changed, the shipwreck of faith so complete, that only seven congregations remained true, and these seven were in such poverty-stricken state, spiritually, that the Almighty considered them, with few exceptions, as dead, threatening to "spew them out of his mouth," permit them to be troubled by their enemies, so they would be "cast into great tribulation." He finally said he would "fight against them with the sword of his mouth," and remove the candlestick, the church, "out of its place."—Revelation 1: 11; 2: 2, 5, 6, 13, 14, 15, 20, 22, 23; 3: 2, 16, 17. I would advise Elder Traum to read Sermon 66, on the subject of "the mystery of iniquity," by John Wesley, and page 178 of Alexander Campbell's Christian System, on this question, and become enlightened. These woeful conditions obtained in the church of which Traum claims to be a member, while yet inspired men were shepherds to the flock, and they occurred while the torch of inspiration was in full blaze. Then what argument must Traum adopt? The one he now uses, of the "Twelve," and others going into polygamy will not damage the truth now, any more than the wrongdoing of those in New Testament times, or, in the church he claims to affiliate with, damage the truth then, and he claims, as will be seen on page 192, that he is "driven to the conclusion that the only succession that will meet the exigencies of the case is the apostolic succession of truth." Then if he claims the truth to have succeeded undamaged by the wrongs done by those who professed to avow it, from the first century of the Christian era, what sense is contained in his argument that the wrongs done by those in the first organization of the church, by restoration, and that wrought its rejection, proves the truth to be a fraud?

REJECTION OF THE CHURCH.

On page 173, he expatiates on the taking away of the two principal shepherds by martyrdom, and the consequent state of the church as "rejected," and without a "head." Upon the term "rejected," he seeks to make a point affecting the authority of the Reorganization. That the church was rejected upon the failure to perform its duties, we can believe, just as the Lord said he would do to the church in Asia Minor, anciently,—“remove the candlestick,” church, "out of its place,"—for failure. But that the church with its priesthoods, in this latter case, was annihilated we deny. The rejection simply marked its condemnation, its disfavor in the sight of God, its chastisement, its being darkened and scattered, its condition of disorganization. In Isaiah 3: 1, 2, we have the following:

For behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah the stay and the staff, the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water, the mighty man, and the man of war, the judge, and the prophet, and the prudent, and the ancient.

The execution of this judgment did not destroy the kingdom of Judah, but expressed disfavor, and darkness; so in Jeremiah 7: 19, we read:

Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? Why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us? we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble!

The rejection of the church in the latter days affected it in a general manner, similarly as the rejection of Judah, and did not destroy the church. To reject is not to destroy, but it is "to deny favor, to repel, to refuse to bless."

Inasmuch as Traum admits the contention of the Saints, that this "rejection" was a matter of prophecy, (not in section 100 of Doctrine and Covenants alone, as he has it, but in section 107, and section 105, of Doctrine and Covenants) he must also admit the conditions upon which this prophecy, or these prophecies are delivered. The same authority which he admits as foretelling the rejection of the church, is also the authority for the following:

And it shall come to pass that I the Lord God will send one mighty and strong, holding the scepter of power in his hand, clothed with light for a covering, whose mouth shall utter words, eternal words; while his bowels shall be a fountain of truth, to set in order the house of God, etc.—Millennial Star, volume 14, p. 284, 1832.

Paul tells Timothy that the "house of God," is the "church of God,"—"the church of the living God."—1 Timothy 3:15. 1 Peter 4:17 is substantially the same thing. In Hebrews 3:6 Paul affirms: "But Christ as a Son over his own house, whose house are we" (the church). The one mighty and strong is not to build a new house, he is not to lay the foundations of a new church, but is to set in order the one he finds on his coming; and this he could not do, unless it was thrown into disorder, and this disorder was affected by disorganization. On pages 179 and 180 Elder Traum writes thus:

The Mormons themselves being the judges, the apostasy that it is alleged existed before the reign of the Prophet Joseph was only apparent, not real. As, following the death of Joseph, authority did not die with him, although the church was rejected, so may it be said that authority could have existed though the church organizations had all gone into apostasy. Ministrations of faithful men were valid then, whether that service consisted of baptizing, ordaining or otherwise administering the gospel. By this we mean to say that the reasoning is as correct when applied to those who presumed to do the will of God before the days of Joseph Smith as it is when applied to the Josephites in the Reorganization after God had rejected the church. And what we have been solicitous to show in this discussion is that in every instance the "call" to service has been from man, and when the appointing power grew dissatisfied with the officers they could as easily not alone expel them from office, but with equal facility "turn them out of church." So far as the evidence can be applied to this discussion, it is manifest that the Mormons from the days of the Prophet Joseph to the present time have never heard a voice other than the voice of man.

This is an extreme statement. The Bible doctrine of the apostasy, before the restoration of the gospel and its authority, in which Joseph was a leading administrator, is this:

The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish. The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.—Isaiah 24: 4-6.

This everlasting covenant was the one ratified by the blood of Christ (Hebrews 13:20), and is the gospel covenant, the only one Jesus Christ commanded to be preached "in all the world," "to every creature." This "covenant by which we draw near to God," was broken soon after Christ, and until renewed, all the inhabitants of the earth were living under a covenant unrenewed; and that it could not be renewed without immediate revelation, such as, "I saw another angel flying through the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel [the stipulations of the covenant.—S.] to preach to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people."—Revelation 14:6. That its renewal involved the power and authority Elder Traum gives us incontestable evidence that he is yet under the broken covenant, by denying and opposing the very brains of the everlasting covenant,—namely, revelation from the heavens wherever, and whenever the covenant is in renewed operation. The everlasting covenant when divinely renewed, and in operation, provides for man's ears, and God's mouth. Traum, and his fellows profess to believe that God was in touch with his people in the days ago (it is always farther off with them), and they profess that they have the covenant of the gospel that was operative in the days when "the church was left perfected by the apostles." Now will he note what that covenant and condition of the covenantees,—the church, provides for.

But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven.—Hebrews 12: 22-25.

Refuse not him that "speaketh," "if we turn away from him that speaketh from the heaven." All in present tense, or future progressive tense. This is what the covenant provides for. One of the irrefragable, essential, immutable parts of the "oath," "in which it is impossible for God to lie."

Then after this covenant has been renewed, by angelic ministry, and the priesthood authority incorporated in the renewal, that authority should never be taken from the earth, "until the sons of Levi offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." So the "rejection" of the church dogma, offers no support to the argument of its destruction, or annihilation. We would inform Mr. Traum, that the kingdom of God set up "in the days of these kings,"—in the plural number—symbolized by a "little stone" "cut out without hands, shall never be destroyed."—Daniel 2: 44. It may experience the shock of satanic power, as God's work always has, pass through the vicissitudes incident to changes and revolutions in the political birth of states, and the civil death of nations, but of this particular work of his in "the dispensation of the fullness of times," his word is, "it shall never be destroyed," and "shall not pass into the hands of another people," (Daniel 2: 44) "and shall stand for ever." To "not be given into the hands of another people," signified to the believer in God's word, that the ones to whom the kingdom was at first given, should be the leading administrators of the gospel law, and the "One Mighty and Strong, who should come and set in order the house of God should be of the lineage of him to whom the priesthood authority was first committed in these latter times; and in this faith and hope Zion's children who followed not the misfortunes of Brigham Young, rested. They had received the following as emanating from God:

Therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.—Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3.

This does not hint that the priesthood should be restored to the "one mighty and strong who should set in order the house of God," but it was to remain, continue with them, which could not be true if the priesthood had been taken from the earth when the church was rejected.

THE REORGANIZATION.

Is Traum so ignorant of Bible principle and precedent that he fails to recognize them as he passes along? He has the facts leading up to the reorganization before him, and yet in a "light vein" he speaks of Briggs and Gurley, with others, as the "body" hunting around for the "head."—P. 173. Oh, no; they knew where the "head" was, but in line with God's people, were simply awaiting God's time, for the proper one to come and take his position in the place God had assigned him, which was done in the "acceptable time of the Lord." They acted true to the principles of the divine economy in all ages,—permitted God to do his own work, in his own way and time. They presented the necessities of the case to the God of revelation, who hears and answers prayer; and does Traum really believe their prayers were not answered? Can he prove they were not answered by revelation? Until he can, he should keep his spirit of ridicule out of his pen, if he can not evict it from his heart. When Israel went astray anciently, and as a consequence was plunged into the Babylonian captivity, hanging their harps on the willows and weeping, when they remembered their former state, the Lord spake to whom he would among them concerning their deliverance. Ezekiel says: "As I was among the captives by the River Chebur, the heavens were opened and I saw visions of God."—Ezekiel 1: 1. Daniel also, among the captives, saw visions and had revelations concerning the same deliverance. Haggai, among the same captives, received the word of the Lord, and Zechariah as one of the band of exiles, in the same year, received light from God. Here is a principle. Does it justify Traum's hope? God would answer then, among the Babylonian captives, and if he acts like himself, he would answer in the "cloudy day," when the faithful, praying, patient Saints required comfort and hope.

"Antipolygamy became the new bond of union, and found its expression at last in the organization of the Reorganized Church," says Traum on page 174. He should have said the whole law of God "became the new bond of union and found its expression at last in the organization of the Reorganized Church," inasmuch as the resolutions adopted at that conference of 1853 read thus: Polygamy was only one of a batch of false doctrines, and corrupt practices into which the apostate leaders took their followers. The scattered Saints were commanded to proceed "by what was written," to "build according to the pattern," and after the choosing of the apostles in the Reorganization, the church adopted the following:

Resolved, That this conference regard the pretensions of Brigham Young, James J. Strang, James Collin Brewster, and William Smith and Joseph Wood's joint claims to the leadership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as an assumption of power, in violation of the law of God; and consequently we disclaim all connection and fellowship with them.

Resolved, That the successor of Joseph Smith, junior, as the presiding high priest in the Melchisedec priesthood, must of necessity be of the seed of Joseph Smith, junior, in fulfillment of the law and promises of God.

Resolved, That, as the office of first president of the church grows out of the authority of the presiding high priest, in the high priesthood, no person can legally lay claim to the office of first president of the church, without a previous ordination to the presidency of the high priesthood.

Resolved, That we recognize the validity of all legal ordinations in this church, and will fellowship all such as have thus been ordained, while acting within the purview of such authority.

Resolved, That we believe that the Church of Christ, organized on the 6th day of April, A. D., 1830, exists as on that day, wherever six or more Saints are organized, according to the pattern of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Resolved, That the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.—The Messenger, vol. 2, p. 9.

The instruction given to the Reorganized Church in those days was, "Rise up, cast off all that claim to be prophets, and go forth and preach the gospel, and say that God will raise up a prophet to complete his work."—Tullidge History, p. 581.

In April, 1860, the proper one came to the church at the conference convened at Amboy, Illinois; came not of himself, "but by the influence of the Spirit," installed "by a call from heaven," and supported in his administrations by the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Now, remember these facts were before our tender critic, and why he passed over, in silence, the true status, and ridiculed incidentals, is known to himself. He repeatedly affirms that the "call for service" has been "from man in every instance"; thus denying the facts of history, which were before him. In each and all of these transactions, they proceeded according to law, and commandment, in the organizations. And in the Reorganized Church, its president is of the lineage pointed out in the revelations of God; he was appointed of God through his father, in accord with the revelations. He was called of God by revelation, according to the law. (Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6.)

This latter review began by using Traum's statement on page 179, but in a general way, we have it covering miscellaneous matter on pages 173 to 179. Page 176 tells us Jason W. Briggs "withdrew from the church at Independence, Missouri, conference," 1886. This is not true. He did not withdraw from the church at Independence, Missouri, but at Lamoni, Iowa. But this withdrawal was not on account of his faith being affected, in the latter day work, nor of dissatisfaction with reference to the active part he had taken in it. When on the witness stand in the Temple Lot Suit, in answer to questions regarding the reasons for the step he had taken, he answered: "It was simply a matter of discussion through the columns of the HERALD that caused my withdrawal. It was through a discussion which arose, and was attempted to be carried on through the columns of the HERALD; but while the other party was allowed access to the columns of the HERALD, I was denied that privilege."—Plaintiff's Abstract, p. 400.

Elder Traum can not produce one iota of evidence that the men whom he mentions in connection with, and including J. W. Briggs, ever abjured their allegiance to the original faith of the restoration of the gospel. Why he persists in misrepresenting historical facts, is attributable either to ignorance or to willful deception.

THIS MAY BE INTERESTING.

Many Mormons who emigrate from Europe to Utah come via Canada. The number for the year averages about one hundred weekly. One of the more recent contingents of converts secured in Norway, Sweden, and Holland, arrived at Halifax a week or so ago in charge of Elder Parker, a missionary of the Utah Church, and they are described by the American immigration officials as a more than ordinary good looking lot of people. The Utah Church seems to have considerable success in inducing European converts to emigrate.

The London Free Press, in a recent issue, contains a paragraph announcing a series of meetings to be held there by Elder F. A. Smith, in the Saints' chapel. It makes it very clear "that two important court decisions in the United States have, after exhaustive examination, declared that Joseph Smith, the so-called Mormon Prophet, never taught, practiced, nor preached polygamy"; and that "this church, in justice to its members, must not be confused with the Mormon Church of Utah, organized by Brigham Young after the death of Joseph Smith."

Items from London, Ontario.

Apostle F. A. Smith, president of this mission, arrived in the city on the 27th to commence a series of special meetings. We are pleased to have him with us, for his sermons are not only convincing to the outsider, but inspiring to the Saints. The first of the series was largely attended and much interest was manifested. The Princess Theater has been secured for next Sunday afternoon and evening.

Elder Fligg, president of the branch, called the officers together Monday evening at Mr. Maker's, King Street, (Brother Smith's home while he stays in London,) to make arrangements for special services. Tom insisted that this was no "deacon's meeting," and proceeded to be master of ceremonies, having planned a birthday surprise for Elder Smith. Mr. Maker in a neat speech stated that it gave him much pleasure to have Mr. Smith at his home, and hoped that he would make it his home whenever he came to London. He was pleased to congratulate Elder Smith upon his fiftieth birthday. At this juncture Harold, Mr. Maker's son, presented the elder with a large box. Elder Smith in a few words thanked Mr. Maker and family for their kind remembrance and words of welcome. The brethren urged the elder to open the box, and it happened that there were three or four boxes nested, the last one containing a beautiful pair of gold cuff links with the elder's initials engraved on them. The rest of the evening was given over to sociability.

Brother O. W. Cambridge has been very ill the past week.
JANUARY 31, 1912. W. A. HARDEY.

The special services being conducted by Apostle F. A. Smith in the Princess Theater last Sunday, the 4th, were largely attended, despite the fact that it was a bitter cold day. Quite a few are interested, and we look for a big day next Sunday. The elder is feeling splendid and has started in for good solid work.

Brother O. W. Cambridge has been greatly afflicted the past week. He is slightly improved after administration, but still suffers, and requests the prayers of the Saints.

Brother and Sister Barne's babe was blessed last Sunday by Elders Smith and Fligg and named Frederick James.

One of the pleasing events which lend sunshine and form a bright spot on the pathway of life was held at the home of Elder Henley last Monday evening, being a birthday gathering in honor of Sister Henley. The resident priesthood and their wives and others were present. The date was timely in that we were favored in having Apostle F. A. Smith with us. The evening was spent with music and social chat, followed by a banquet spread with every good thing the season provides. All enjoyed the evening thoroughly and left at an early hour with good will and wishes that the host and hostess may be spared for many years to enjoy the association of the Saints.

Sister Edith Gray and Sister Beemer of Saint Thomas were visiting the Saints last Sunday.

Church Union.

The wise men in their councils met,
Compare their wornout creeds,
And from this junk they make a church
To fill progression's needs.

If the old warp had been all right,
May a truth seeker ask,
Why should these men have set themselves
A such stupendous task?

If warring creeds can all be right,
As we've heard o'er and o'er,
In the name of all that's liberal,
Let's have ten thousand more;

So everyone can have a church
That's based on his pet fable;
But perhaps we'd better not forget
What happened at old Babel.

And turn us back to the good old Book
Which says there's only one;
But if man's wisdom we enlist,
Our troubles have begun.

For hundreds cry, Lo here, Lo there,
Ours is the safest way.
Like rivals in a fight for life,
Each strives to win the day.

The conflicts of theologies
Are to a hungry soul
As empty husks and broken cisterns
Which can no water hold.

Confusion fills the weary brain,
From all we turn away,
And from the Author of the Book
We seek the "narrow way."

'Tis paved with light, but then 'tis hard
To bear the cross, the shame,
The "covenant of sacrifice,"
The "ve'ling of our name."

More flowery warp allures us back,
To look upon credentials;
They've sheathed their swords, they say, "We're one,
Except in nonessentials."

Again I see that perfect plan,
As framed by One potential.
Who is frail man that dares to say
One jot is not essential?

Our God deals not in idle words,
Each doctrine he has given
Is a golden link in a perfect chain;
Break one, the chain is riven.

But the chain was broken ages since
By proud self-seeking man,
And with its golden grains of truth
Mixed earth's coarse, clogging sand.

Two thousand years the world has sung,
"Peace and good will to men,"
But the din of strife and the clash of war
I hear above the strain.

Most cruel wars and bloodshed blot
Christianity's fair name,
And unbelieving hosts suggest
The Savior died in vain.

They'll sing and pray o'er wornout creeds
Till earth's last empire topples;
But God puts not his rich new wine
In old, imperfect bottles.

Go, cast your idols to the dust,
And break them every one;
Then seek the loving God of heaven,
Who's neither deaf nor dumb.

Another year has rolled by, with its usual cares and blessings, and we feel thankful for every day, and year, given to us in which to work and pray.

Our district conference was again held in our "Minnesota Branch," the four last days of the year 1911. It was a very peaceful and spiritual session throughout and, I believe, good results will and do follow. For instance, all the young men so far as I know, are heeding the admonition of the Spirit to study the word of God, pray, and try to make themselves ready for whatever work the Master may call them to do.

We hear rumors that the branch will invite the officials to appoint a reunion and district conference in our vicinity for next summer. If they decide to do so I am sure good will be done. However, we do not wish to be selfish and choose all the best for ourselves, but hope the reunion and conference may be held wherever the Lord may direct.

I read an article in our Canadian Mirror Department in November concerning the Canadian Saints as "financial assets" of the church. I hope none of the Iowa or Missouri Saints will get envious from reading that article, thinking that we are getting rich fast up here, and sell out at ruinous prices in order to flee to the "get rich quick" country; for there might be some mistake. With all due honor to the writer of that article, I could not agree with his figures, but if you will take his estimate and figure up the financial status of the Saints in Iowa and Missouri, you will feel so well off that you will not think of coming to Canada. But in my limited experience of nearly fifty-nine years on this hemisphere, nearly half of that time in the church, and nearly seven years in Canada, I should figure the financial status about this way. Four fifths of the church members are children, and mothers and grandmothers, who never earn anything, and it keeps the other fifth hustling to provide for them.

Yours for truth,

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

Toronto, Ontario,

This is the first time I have written to our beloved HERALD, a welcome visitor in every home. Bishop R. C. Evans continues to lecture each Sunday in the Princess Theater, with large audiences. The work is advancing rapidly in this part of the world. We have many young people in our branch who assist the work greatly, and I feel confident that when they are left in charge of the work it will continue to grow as fast and perhaps faster. I believe that it becomes the young people of Israel to eschew worldly evils and the things that cause us to forget God, that we may help push this great work along.

As I look about me in this great city it seems to be teeming with pleasures and temptations, all that youth loves best, and in the world they forget that God has said, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." In a city like ours there are many theaters, pool rooms, and other things, pleasures that are wicked and worldly. No Saint should take any part in them.

I think of an illustration given by Bishop Evans to the effect that as a boat is in the water we are in the world. What happens if the water gets into the boat? Does it not sink? So it is with us when we are in the world. We must not let the world get within us.

Will any Saints living in Florida communicate with me and give me information concerning the climate, and if there is work for stenographers; also as to where there is a Saints' church. My address is 203 Van Horne street, Toronto, Canada.

CANADA FROM THREE VIEWPOINTS.

Most people are interested in getting a glimpse of themselves as others see them, so we give below excerpts from three articles relating to Canada. The first is written by a former Canadian now living in New York, and his bitter attacks upon his former country will be regarded by Canadians as merely the insane ravings of a madman. The feeling that prompts these utterances may perhaps be properly described in his own language, "Analyzed, this feeling would probably be found to be nothing more than an aggravated attack of jealousy of a peculiar kind." However, it serves to show the attitude and opinions regarding Canada and things Canadian encouraged by a certain class in the United States.

The second article is more nearly the truth, while the third is from an address delivered by Judge Riddell, a Canadian, addressing the Canadian Club, London, Ontario, a week ago. It expresses very clearly the consensus of Canadian sentiment.

CANADA OLD MAN'S LAND; NO CANADIAN SPIRIT.

W. R. Givens, in the New York Independent, May 30, 1907, says:

And first let it be understood that it is with no intention of treating the matter in a political way that the present writer approaches the subject. The truth of the matter is that Canada is scarcely going ahead at all to-day. Were it not for the inflow, not a little of it from the United States, to the great Northwest, drawn there by reason of the natural wealth and fertility of that land, the Canadian population to-day, if an honest census were taken, would not improbably be found to be less than it was ten or twenty-five years ago. That is to say, what Canada has gained in the west—and she has gained that, not because of any trade, commercial or educational advantages she offers, but rather in spite of the lack of them and chiefly because Mother Earth is there fruitful and yielding—she largely has lost in the eastern sections, which in many parts might almost be said to be suffering from dry rot. . . .

The truth is that Canada is an old man's land, ruled largely by old men, and running in its every phase of life in a narrow groove, rust on the rails, moss on the sides, and ballasted unevenly and insecurely. . . . Canada is not only an old man's land, but it is essentially not a place for young men. The field, limited at best, is doubly limited by the really crude and foolish notions that prevail there of "seniority" and of the rights of seniority. There one always feels, unlike Pitt, that one must actually endeavor either to palliate or to deny the "atrocious crime of being a young man." It will not necessarily benefit him that he have ability; he must advance "in order," rarely displacing an older man save in the event of death. Of course there are exceptions even in Canada to this rule, which is applicable to all lines of business, to the law, to the church, to medicine, and, though to a lesser degree, in politics. . . . There are no young men leaders. In politics, it may be ventured, there is scarcely a man of prominence who is not well on to sixty years of age; in law, with one or two exceptions, the same statement will hold true; while in business it assuredly is true.

Now why is this? Her people are of the same color, the same blood, and the same temperament as the people of the United States; why, then, should there be this difference? The answer is simple. The people are of the same color, but they are differently constituted. Canada, in short, is a hybrid land. Her people are Canadians and yet not Canadians; they are free and yet not free. To this very day there is real little Canadianism in the Dominion; there is really no such thing as a true Canadian spirit. . . .

It is fortunate for Canada that she can boast, as she well can do, that her system of finance is unexcelled, that her laws are well administered, and her judiciary clean and incorruptible and that her people, whatever their other faults, are a sober, industrious, honest, moral, God-fearing people. For clearly they have need of all these excellencies and virtues in the face of such shortcomings as burden them down.

NO ANNEXATION SENTIMENT IN CANADA.

Says Agnes C. Laut in the American Review of Reviews for May, 1908:

The Dominion is the United States' nearest neighbor,—nearest as to place, race, speech, and financial interests. . . . For seven years the number of American settlers going into Northwestern Canada has fluctuated from 59,000 to something over 100,000 a year. In other words, counting promoters and capitalists, more than half a million Americans have gone into Canada in the past seven years; and the extraordinary thing about 't is that even the homesteaders have been a moneyed class. They have been western American farmers who have sold their land in Nebraska and Kansas and Missouri and the Dakotas and Minnesota and Iowa for from $50 to $150 an acre, and with that amount have moved into Canada, homesteading a quarter section and buying adjoining sections. . . .

More facts need not be adduced to prove that Canada and the United States are near neighbors as to financial interests, but if you think that means annexation, you are mistaken. You can search Canada from Halifax to Victoria and you can not find one genuinely sincere annexationist who is a representative man, except Goldwin Smith, and he is not a Canadian. He is an English scholar whom Canadians are glad to have among them, but his sentiments on annexation are not the sentiments of the Canadian people. The fact that there is absolutely no annexation sentiment in Canada may not please certain theorists, but it is a fact, and we have to accept it and acknowledge that the United States has solely and wholly herself to thank for the fact. Canada has been forced into the self-reliance of nationhood independent of the United States by the American policy toward her.

Look at the map: Canada is 3,000 miles broad at her greatest width. The natural course of trade would have been north and south across an invisible boundary, instead of east and west across barren wastes between isolated provinces, but the United States erected a tariff wall that shut out Canadian trade. . . .

And withal, note this: Only one tenth of Canada's fertile lands are occupied. In area Canada is, roughly speaking, the size of Europe. . . . With one tenth of her fertile lands occupied Canada numbers a population of almost 7,000,000. When all her lands are occupied she will have a population equal to the United States.

SUBJECTS OF THE KING OF CANADA.

The following is quoted from an address by Judge Riddell, as reported by the London Free Press:

Throughout our whole history since 1792, we have steadily kept two great principles in view. The first is our insistence upon British connection. The loyalty of the United Empire Loyalists was a passion, and it has not been bred out of their descendants. We have steadily resisted the suggestion either to go off by ourselves or to join any other nation in allegiance. What Upper Canada did, so did Lower Canada—the heart of the French-Canadian is loyal and always has been.

But while we have insisted that the British flag shall be ours, there is another principle we have never lost sight of—we have kept steadfast to this principle in fair weather and in foul—sometimes amidst trouble and misunderstanding and sometimes even what almost looked like revolt—we have determined to govern ourselves. The Englishman, the Scotchman, Irishman, Frenchman, who came out to Canada could not be made to believe that he had left his brains behind him, or that he had forgotten how public affairs should be conducted. He did not believe that those who had not come out but had remained behind, knew more than he. And his descendants do not admit and never have admitted that the descendants of those who remained behind are better than the descendants of those who came to Canada. And Canadians of all kinds have confidence that they are able to govern their own land without interference by any people, British or otherwise. And so we shall remain British, and as British we shall govern ourselves—and we are content.

Canada is mistress in her own house to-day. Canadians are subjects, not of the king of England, but of the king of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British dominions beyond the seas, who is also king of the people of England. We are not subjects of England, we are subjects of him who is king of Canada in the same way that he is king of England. We pay no tribute to that king, but the tribute of love and well-deserved loyalty. We do not desire to change our allegiance or our condition for anything upon earth. The king unites all the British folk together, except those of the union to the south of us. And we rejoice to know that the nations are growing closer together, each country to live out its own life, and work out its own destiny, but each confident at all times of the warmest sympathy and most cordial cooperation of the other.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches; none are just alike, yet each believes his own.—Pope.

LATER CHILDHOOD.

From five to eight is a very eventful epoch in the life of the child and in the experience of the parent. It seems to be an age for training, instructing, and preparing the little one for the battles of life, and preeminently a period for keeping its confidence in its natural guardian.

Comparatively few children keep anything from their parents before the age of five, and by the time they have reached eight years the bond of confidence has, generally speaking, been either firmly welded, or shattered and broken to such an extent that it rarely becomes so complete again.

The association between parent and child should for many reasons be very close at this age. In early childhood the parent has almost entire charge of the little one, but about this time new associates begin to have claim upon it. Playmates, teachers, and school companions all have their part in its education, and as the powers from without become stronger and more numerous, parents must rise to the occasion and hold their place as court of appeal in all matters of importance and perplexity, and as prime instructors in the moral and spiritual education of their own offspring.

There are many reasons why the years leading up to eight are important. The brain is rapidly growing and the child's mentality is daily developing. Psychologists tell us that the brain increases in size very little after the eighth year. Early impressions are the strongest and the most lasting. Plant in the childmind a high moral standard and you lay a foundation for character upon which he can build with security, and one by which he will be armed against temptation as he never could be without it. No one can live better than the standard of honor set up in his own mind. How very important, then, that the children be given only the noblest ideals.

God has placed the age of eight as the time when a child is held accountable for his own acts, and is permitted to be baptized for the remission of sins.

Accountability and responsibility, no doubt, come gradually, for we read, "Power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hand of their fathers."—Doctrine and Covenants 28:13.

How necessary it is, in view of these truths, that parents and teachers should devote themselves to the training of the little folks while our Father is mercifully holding in check the arch enemy, that we may be permitted to give them a proper start in life,—lay a strong foundation of moral goodness and spiritual excellence before Satan appears on the scene to antagonize us at every turn.

God has designated some of the things that should be taught during this period, viz, an understanding of the first principles of the gospel, with such spiritual training as will cause the child to desire baptism at the age of eight.

They are also to be taught to pray and to walk uprightly. We have met children of Saints at twelve and fourteen years of age who had never prayed, and yet the parents thought they had discharged this duty beautifully. They had simply taught them to say prayers. When they were very little, "Now I lay me down to sleep" was considered sufficient, and as they grew older they were taught to repeat the Lord's prayer; but to come to the Lord themselves, as unto a Father kind and true, and to express their own desires in faith, was something of which they knew nothing.

This ought not to be. Children of five will offer prayers of remarkable faith if taught the simple truth that we should ask God for what we need and he will give it.

Some time ago, in talking to the primary department a sister said, "When we pray we should ask God for just what we need and he will give it to us." She then said, "Let us pray," and all knelt while she led in a simple little petition. When school was over one little girl of five said to her grandmother, "Grandma, I am going to get a pair of new shoes."

"How do you know?" asked her grandparent; for she knew that her father had been out of work for a long time.

"Well," said the child, "Sister — said if we needed anything and asked God for it he would give it to us, and I asked him to give me a pair of shoes, for I needed them."

The little darling had not long to wait, for next day her father got work and in the evening bought her a pair of shoes. Nor did she forget the Giver, for running to her mother she said, "Mamma, come into the room and we will thank God for sending my new shoes."

This little girl had a broken arm which, when healed, was stiff and crooked. Her parents wished to take her to the doctor to have it broken again and properly set, but she said "No; God will heal me"; and of her own accord asked for administration and was healed.

There is no time in life when faith can be planted in the heart so effectually as in childhood, and when properly nurtured will produce such marvelous results. With them there is no such thing as doubting. The promises of God are all yea and amen.

A beautiful way of teaching the principles of the gospel and other truths of scripture lore is in the relation of the interesting Bible stories, to which almost every child delights to listen. Each and all of the principles and virtues of the gospel can be told in this way and the child thus taught will never forget that wonderful education and will readily call to mind the characters enacting the different events related. Parents should study to tell the practices of the Old and New Testament, connected with the narrative unfolding them, that the children may have photographed in their minds the scenes there depicted. Surely this is delightful work. Bible students and teachers enjoy these conversations with other people's children. How perfectly delightful it must be to relate them to our own. As we do so the bond of divine love will make stronger the natural ties and the child will be drawn nearer to us in thus together drawing near to God.

In what more beautiful way could we teach a child the doctrine of baptism than in the stories of the New Testament concerning this ordinance.

Take the story of John the Baptist, for instance: The angel's glad message to Zachariah, his doubt and subsequent dumbness, the birth of the baby boy and the choosing of a name; his growth to manhood and his work in preparing the people for the Messiah to come, by preaching the gospel in the wilderness; whither multitudes resorted and were baptized in the river of Jordan for the remission of sins. Then the greatest event of all—the appearance of the man Jesus, of whom John was sent to bear record; the argument, the baptism, the coming up out of the water, the dove descending and the voice of God expressing approval. It all makes a charming story, and at the same time teaches the necessity, use, and mode of baptism in a manner that a child can understand, remember, and defend.

The same may be said of the events of the day of Pentecost: The command to tarry for the promised endowment, the waiting and praying; the blessing as a rushing, mighty wind; the tongues of fire; the running together of the people; the gift of tongues and the people's surprise; the sermon and its effect; the question and the answer, and the baptism of the people is a story as engaging as any David and Goliath tale; containing the doctrine of baptism for the remission of sins, the giving of the Holy Ghost, the gift of tongues for believers, and several other doctrines.

So with the stories of Cornelius, Saul, the jailer and his household, Philip's talk with the angel and his subsequent meeting with the eunuch, their talk, the water, the going down into and coming up out of the water by the preacher and candidate, and Philip's marvelous transportation to Azotas. This will rivet the attention and imprint the events inerasably upon the young mind, and in so doing will leave the indelible impression that baptism is by immersion and necessary for salvation, and that God must send the servants to do the work, none others being accepted.

So with the other ordinances and sacraments: teach them in connection with the events related in scripture and you will find it much more interesting to yourself and the children, and it will give them a broader knowledge of the word than to state the abstract principles unrelated with the historical occurrences of holy writ.

In like manner may the graces of the gospel be taught: Daniel's moral courage, Joseph's virtue, David's faith and aggressive bravery, Jonathan's unselfish friendship, Job's patience, Moses' meekness, and Gideon's success may all be made character builders for your child.

Children will never forget the evenings spent with their parents in listening to these sacred stories, and that home will in after years appear to them a heavenly place and will be a strong fort against the assailments of the enemy. Why not have a certain portion of time set apart for this work, when parents and children may commune together in heavenly places?

We heard Brother E. C. Briggs say that at the age of seven he was thoroughly conversant with all the stories of the Old and New Testaments, and we were not surprised that he was blessed with an open vision before he was eight and was prepared for the arduous task of recalling wandering Israel to the fold when as a young man he started out, the first missionary for the Reorganization.

But there is another department in the child's education which forces itself upon the parents at about this age. The child, as he begins to mingle with his fellows in school, hears and sees many things that he does not understand. Naturally he comes to his parents for the required information. He has reached the danger line, and here lies your golden opportunity to become his protector and advisor all through life.

He may ask you questions that are hard for you to answer, but it is better to master the difficulty now by drawing the little one close to you and telling him the facts. The child feels no shame in these early years in listening to the law of his being. Why should you? In these heart to heart talks the bond of confidence will strengthen, and time will only unfold to his developing soul the truth and wisdom of your instruction, and will save your child from being overcome by the temptations that will assail him all along the line of childhood and youth.

I once met a lady (not a member of the church) in company with her son and daughter who were then in young manhood and womanhood. The perfect liberty, confidence, and delicacy of respect manifested by the young people for their mother was so unusual that I availed myself of the first opportunity to call upon this stranger and make inquiry how she succeeded in holding the confidence of her children to such an extent. She answered quickly, "I did it when they were little. I never hushed my children when they asked me questions, and I never told them a wrong story." She then related to me how as their wondering minds began to inquire into the mystery of life she gradually unfolded matters to them. She remarked, "I had to listen to many a bad tale when they started to school, but I always waited until I got the whole story and then told them just what was right and wrong about it." In this way she had retained their confidence all through life and she declared that both her boys and girls continued to confide in her in matters of love and courtship, making her their bosom friend from whom no secret was kept until they left her rooftree to occupy homes of their own. This mother was a farmer's wife of only moderate education and who had not the enlightening influences of the gospel in its fullness to help here in the care of her children; but the results of her wise training were so apparent that he who ran might read.

How much better this policy than that followed by multitudes of parents who, looking into the sweet, upturned face of inquiring innocence, shirk their duty to bring up their children in light and truth, and either dismiss them from their presence, or quiet them by telling them they must not talk nor think about such matters; or perhaps, worse still, turn them away with a falsehood.

The child is nonplussed. He knows there is a mystery and instinctively feels that this mystery is connected with something so shameful that he must not talk to his parents about it. He takes their advice and speaks to them no more on the subject, but consults with his schoolmates instead, whom he finds ready to blight him with baneful information. Remembering his late experience he is ready to follow their suggestion, "Don't say anything to your father or mother about this." In this way is the confidence of many a child, which hitherto flowed unimpeded into the parental bosom, turned from its natural course, and is transmitted into a pool which can only breed corruption.

This is the beginning of strained feelings and flagging confidence between many parents and their children, the result of false modesty upon the part of the former; but what is the ending? Let the ruined lives of thousands of the sons and daughters of good, honest parents answer. But in the reckoning day, when all shall give an account of the deeds done in the body, those children shall not have to bear alone the burden and shame of the mistakes of life. Great things are required at the hands of their parents.

Doctor Winfield Scott Hall, professor of physiology, in a lecture delivered in Chicago, 1909, speaking of the laws of morality, said: "Let us see to it that our children are instructed in these matters by telling them the truth in early childhood."

Yes; that is the time, and the only time that your instruction will come as God has commanded: "Bring up your children in light and truth." If you try it later it will read in the majority of cases, "Bring back your children to light and truth, if you can."

Earnest A. Bell, Secretary of the Illinois Vigilance Association, in summing up the causes of girls going astray, gives eight prominent reasons, and winds up by saying: "These eight, and the greatest of these is the first, parental inefficiency."

Among Latter Day Saints we think this condition is unnecessary, if not, indeed, inexcusable.

God has said, "every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning, and God having redeemed man from the fall men became again in their infant state innocent before God. And that wicked one cometh and taketh away light and truth, through disobedience, from the children of men and because of the traditions of their fathers. But I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth."

One of the traditions of our fathers (and mothers) and one that works great havoc among the young, is that children should be kept in ignorance of their physical origin and makeup; but God has said, "bring up your children in light and truth."

What is light and truth? He tells us in Doctrine and Covenants 90:4; "Truth is the knowledge of things as they are, as they were, and as they are to come." It appears to us, then, that to bring up a child in light and truth would be to tell him, to the extent of his ability to understand, the facts about any matter.

"But," say some, "we will tell our children these things when they get older."

When? After they have imbibed the evil tales of their companions which you have refused to hear repeated, or at least failed to correct; and after they have polluted their minds and in many cases their bodies, until they can no longer look you in the eye with honest, innocent inquiry? Will you approach them then and explain the beauty and purity of God's order of things? Ah! if you have not the courage to face the sweet, unconscious, innocent of five or six, how will you approach your shamefaced boy or girl of twelve or fifteen, whom you have avoided instructing in the days when they rushed to your arms for light and truth only to be turned away by darkness (no answer), or falsehood instead of truth?

We do not believe the time ever was that a child was safe in ignorance. We would not think of making such an argument with regard to an open well or a fire. But if ever there was any moral security in ignorance, that time is past, both in city and country life. All investigators of the subject of the moral degradation of the flower of our country are united in proclaiming with no uncertain sound, that in careful, early instruction only, regarding both the right and the wrong, the good and the bad, can the young of this generation escape the moral evils of the day.

The child who knows the good way and the results that it will produce even in this life, to say nothing of the life to come, and is also aware of the evil and its consequences, is armed for the conflict. Without this knowledge of the facts he is defenseless and will fall an easy prey to the Tempter.

I am convinced that if children were given a proper understanding of the sacredness of love, virtue, and marriage, and an equal standard set up for both sexes, that the social evil and divorce perplexity would be solved: they would fade away for want of patronage.

The real reason why people do wrong is generally because their standard of honor is not sufficiently high. They see no harm in what seems to them little sins, and Satan leads them on by silken threads until he binds them with his strong cords for ever.

BAY PORT, MICHIGAN, February 6, 1912.

Dear Herald: We thought perhaps your many readers would be pleased to hear from this place. It is twenty-five years since the gospel was introduced here by Elder J. J. Cornish. Many of the Saints will remember the winter of 1887 and the work accomplished by Brother Cornish. In forty-seven days he preached fifty-three sermons and baptized sixty-three persons, held two debates, and had enough stories told about him through the press to fill a small volume. We have had another ingathering here this winter. Elder O. J. Hawn came to Bay Port on Thanksgiving and preached for us that evening. Being impressed that the time had come to do a work here, he returned in a few days. While here he preached fifty-three sermons, baptized twenty-two persons, and blessed twenty-nine children. With many more investigating, we expect him back in April, when we expect several more will obey the gospel.

Your brother in Christ,

C. U. GRANT.

Blessed is the boy or girl who is early taught that love and marriage are as sacred as heaven itself and should be kept as pure. These, and the laws governing them, are the things they never hear from their playmates, and ignorance of which is the cause of much of the immorality extant, for they do not realize that marriage sanctifies that which would otherwise be sinful.

Reverence for his own body as the temple of God, the house of the Spirit, is easily taught to the small child, and due modesty for his person can be impressed as readily as cleanliness, and if given a proper understanding of his duty in this regard, and of the consequences of sinning against himself, in the majority of cases he will be proof against the most degrading and common sin of childhood.

"I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth."

Dear Editor of the Saints' Herald: I feel proud to be a Saint. We have had two elders this winter in this vicinity; J. W. Peterson and J. L. Mortimer. They both are great when it comes to quoting the scripture and preaching the gospel. They did good here and we hope and pray that they may be able to come again.

We are young in the work, but have a Sunday school. Brother Sims was ordained to the office of priest by J. L. Mortimer; Brother Peterson baptized two, and Brother Mortimer four, and organized the Sunday school. We would like to see some more Saints in this part as we think there is no better land for mixed farming than in this part, and that this is a good place to make a start. There are homesteads in parts to be taken. Those who wish to know more about this part of the country may write to me.

We hope that Brethren Peterson and Mortimer will be sent back, as they are live wires, and that God will bless the readers of the HERALD.

Yours in bonds,

GEORGE G. CRUCE.

RICHMOND, WEST VIRGINIA, January 10, 1912.

Editor Saints' Herald: I am so situated that there is not much that I can do to advance the cause of the kingdom of God, except to live as becometh a child of the kingdom, which I daily endeavor to do. I talk to those who care to listen, hold a Bible reading whenever and wherever I can get two or three to unite with me in Bible study. But oh, so few care to know aught except what they have been taught. I try to drop a seed thought now and then in the hearts that seem to have good soil, but only the Lord of the harvest can foretell what the result will be.

I attended a prayer meeting in the little Methodist Episcopal church around the corner not long ago. They have a young man for a pastor whom I have known since a little child. He seems very zealous and earnest, but alas, as is so often the case, it is a zeal without knowledge. He gave a blackboard talk and his subject was the need of evangelical enthusiasm. Writing these words on the board, he called the attention of the people to them and told them that was what they needed to win souls to Christ in the church and Sunday school. "We must cultivate it," said he, "work for it; strive for it. We must rouse ourselves; must stir each other up, and not rest until we have this evangelical enthusiasm; then we shall be able to interest the Sunday school and the young people of our church, and we will see them flocking to the altar, seeking Christ."

After the service, as I shook hands with him I said, "You spoke of evangelical enthusiasm; it seems to me if your teachers and church workers were all filled with the Holy Ghost you would have evangelical enthusiasm without striving for it."

"Yes, yes; that's what we want; we must get at them, sister, and stir them up——" as if by so doing we could give them what they lacked.

"When you get home, read Acts 2:38, and you will see what is needed," I told him.

"All right; Acts 2:38; I'll read it."

He took it, but I don't know about the result. However, God has said that his word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that whereunto it is sent. I felt that I was given the word to say and dared not withhold the message.

Ignorance along gospel lines is appalling when one considers the necessity of obedience to the gospel. A lady who is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church came in the other day and said that her husband had professed religion.

"How did that come about?" I asked.

"Why, he came downstairs Sunday morning and said, 'I've sworn off. I've taken my last drink, and have said my last cuss word. I don't ever intend to let another oath pass my mouth.' And don't you know," she added, "he dressed and went to church and he hasn't touched a drop nor sworn an oath since."

It had been nearly a week and this poor, deluded soul thought her husband had gotten religion. The city has many such professors at the beginning of every new year, and most of them are the result of soreheadedness over a drinking spree, as this man's resolutions evidently were. Religion! The majority of the professing Christians do not know the meaning of the word.

A Baptist church near here is without a pastor. Their pastor asked for a raise in salary and they thought they could not give any more, so shortly he had a "call" to another field and a larger salary. So this church sends a "call" to the pastor of another large and flourishing church, whose pastor is getting much more than they were paying theirs, and offer him even more than he is now getting; but he is bound by some sort of an agreement and can not leave his flock. I remarked to the lady who told me this, a member of the pastorless church, "That does not seem to me the right thing to do. Do you think it right to call Mr. J. from his flock and have him leave them to the mercy of the wolves? Why does not your church call some unemployed minister?"

"Because there are none," she said. "I heard Brother Pitt (one of their greatest preachers), say, not long ago, that there were almost no young men fitting themselves for the ministry; that some of them were leaving it for other callings where they could make more money; that in a few years, at this rate, the Baptist churches of this city would have to consolidate in order to have any preaching at all."

"Well, that looks as if God was not calling many people in your church to preach the gospel, does it not?"

"Yes, it does look that way."

This gospel of the kingdom is very dear to me, and I would rejoice to have a good live branch built up here.

Ever striving to be faithful and trying to keep my lamp trimmed and burning, I am your sister in Christ, Long-Roberts Debate.

Elder E. E. Long met Elder W. G. Roberts, of the non-progressive Christian faith, about twenty miles southwest of Lamoni, Iowa, November 28, to December 7, in what proved to be a profitable debate for the church. Church propositions and the Book of Mormon were discussed, six sessions of two speeches for each disputant, two sessions a day. The debate was held in a church owned and occupied by the Church of Christ people. In the Ensign may be found a brief review of the arguments, herein being set forth something of the "spirit" of the discussion.

This debate followed a long correspondence between O. A. Timmons, of the Church of Christ, and a number of our brethren. Elder Timmons, a local pastor, was determined to have a "scrap," and finally "got it." When it came to the issue Elder Timmons failed to make good, and sent the propositions to W. G. Roberts. Brother Long had signed expecting to meet Elder Timmons, but if Elder Timmons expected him to withdraw when Elder Roberts was called to the rescue, his mind was disabused by Brother Long's blunt statement: "I'd as soon meet Roberts as any man in your brotherhood."

Brother Long had met Elder Roberts at Broadhead, Kentucky, a couple of years before, so knew what to expect. It was evident, too, that Elder Roberts knew what to expect, for his moderator, Elder Timmons, had a deal to say about "holding them down," expressing a hope that the debate might be carried on without roughness. Elder Long's moderator assured Elder Timmons that he would hold his dog as long as Timmons held his, but no longer; adding that the minute Roberts began his rough work he would not only "let go" but he would yell "sic 'em, Long."

Elder Roberts is perhaps as rough and as unprincipled a disputant as our brethren ever met in discussion. He has a superabundance of self-importance. Wearing the scars of sixty-seven debates, this veteran champion of Campbellism charged into the arena bristling at every point. He labored hard to impress the audience with his superiority over a man who "never read a line of Greek"; "never saw the inside of a grammar"; "knows no more about the Bible than some children know about a last year's bird's nest." What with vaunting his own triumphs in "twenty-two debates with the Mormons," and his attempt to belittle Brother Long, Elder Roberts succeeded in thoroughly disgusting the audience with himself, and in rallying many to Brother Long's defense before the first proposition, our church proposition, was half over.

According to the volunteered statements of the best people of the community, Elder Timmons had seen to it that the "Mormon pedigree" had been published in a way that was thought to be of advantage to the Roberts' side of the controversy. For two years our work had been misrepresented, Elder Timmons the while failing to produce satisfactory indorsements, defying the whole world of "Mormons" to come out of hiding and submit to a "genuine whipping." Elder Roberts was not backward in taking advantage of this "advertising." The feeling was indifferent to bitter toward us during the opening sessions. But when the audience saw that Brother Long was able to care for himself and to establish our work, and when he finally turned on Elder Roberts and laid bare his tactics, sentiment came our way. The last vestige of Elder Roberts' advantage was swept away before Brother Long's attack on the Church of Christ church proposition, so that when it came to the Book of Mormon, the last proposition, Elder Roberts was without influence and powerless.

Only in a few instances did Elder Roberts endeavor in a manly way to overthrow argument. Much of his effort was to "raise dust" by strained interpretations of the Scriptures, to lead away from Brother Long's affirmations. He sought constantly to cause Brother Long to appear to disadvantage, endeavoring thus to weaken his argument. Time after time he resorted to misrepresentation, duplicity, and abuse. A few statements and instances will suffice to show his methods of attack.

In his personal reference to Brother Long, Elder Roberts said: "I'll get his Mormon hide"; "He'll grin, if his face is red"; "If he'd read the Bible more and the Book of Mormon less he'd put up a better debate"; "As a polemic Long isn't big enough to play leapfrog with a chigre"; "As a polemic, I could put Long in the hollow of my old tooth."

In his efforts to discredit argument, Elder Roberts remarked: "Down goes his Mormon cob house"; "Pretty Mormon cob house! I've a notion to pour kerosene on it and burn it up"; "I'll let that soak"; "Long can't touch my argument with a ten-foot pole"; "Now will you go way back and sit down and be good"; "If that's the best you can do, good-bye, my boy, good-bye, my honey boy, he's gone."

Elder Roberts paid his compliments to the Book of Mormon as follows: "The Book of Mormon is not a forty-second cousin to the Bible"; "If this book (holding up the Book of Mormon) came from God, this book (holding up the Bible) came from the Devil"; "The Book of Mormon is no more like the Bible than a wheelbarrow is like a threshing machine." The Doctrine and Covenants and the Inspired Version were defined as "Miserable Mormon hash."

Joseph Smith came in for his share of the onslaught: "Old Joe talked through his hat"; "Joe Smith was an ignorant knave"; "If an angel ever came to Joseph Smith, it came from hell and was sent by the Devil"; "When Joe Smith was shot he went to the warm place where the snow never flies, to visit his old dad, the Devil."

The following illustrates Elder Roberts' misrepresentations: Pretending to read from Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4, where it is stated "It is not right to persuade a woman to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband," he read "It is not right to baptize a woman without the consent of her husband." He proposed to show that we did not believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God; when asked to do so he read 1 Nephi 5: 47. He stated that we believed God had a set of digestive organs "just like you and I have," and when pressed for chapter and verse read Ether 1: 7, the words of the brother of Jared, "I knew not that the Lord had flesh and blood." He tried to have the Book of Mormon contradict itself by reading page 483, small edition, "There were no gifts from the Lord," and on page 537, "Hath miracles ceased? Behold I say unto you nay."

The Reorganization—our church—was not forgotten. Comparing it in numbers to the church he was affirming, Elder Roberts said: "There wouldn't be enough Reorganite Mormons to make a frying pan stink, if you fried the whole outfit."

Elder Roberts clamored for a sign. Brother Long met his demands with the words: "Whenever you show where Christ or any one of the apostles ever performed a sign to satisfy the morbid curiosity of a sign seeker I'll perform one."

After Brother Long had repeatedly shown Elder Roberts' misrepresentations and duplicity, and the exposure was having its effect on the audience, Elder Roberts tried intimidation: "Elder Long, you must stop slandering me. Hitherto shalt thou come, and no farther! Here shalt thy proud boasting cease!" But it wouldn't work. Brother Long reminded his opponent of his threats to "get his Mormon hide," saying, "Come on, Elder Roberts, I'll be at the skinning, and I'll stay as long as there is a patch of hide left as big as your thumb nail, and furthermore, I'll have a hand in the skinning." Elder Roberts had tried to tell the audience of different ones of our elders who had run from him. "Maby they ran," says Brother Long, "Maybe they did. But I'll give you emphatically to understand, sir, that you have hold of a man now who will not run, and who will give as well as take. And if you want me to be good, Elder Roberts, you be good. You started the rough house; now take your own medicine."

Elder Roberts had an idiotic laugh he pulled off when he was hard hit, especially when Brother Long was reading from Elder Roberts' own church history. This sideplay was effectually checked when thundering applause followed Brother Long's: "Laugh, if you will. I know it's a bitter dose, but take it down, it will do you good. You'll get it in good big doses before we get through, and if you take enough of it it'll clean all the Campbellism out of you." Having thus failed to offset the telling effect of the early writings of Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone and others, Elder Roberts tried to make Brother Long appear to disadvantage by saying: "Long wants to lead me away from my affirmation and get me to spend my time answering this old history; but I'll not allow him to take advantage of me in that way." Brother Long replied: "Don't insinuate that I am a thief of time. I don't need any advantage of you, sir." Applause followed. Elder Roberts half arose, turned to the crowd and said, "Help him out, you Mormon sympathizers"; he was clapped down with greater applause. Smiling, Brother Long said, "Must be a lot of Mormon sympathizers here." "Don't know," says Elder Roberts, "its pretty weak." The "sympathizers," sustaining Brother Long, answered this with thundering applause, some of Elder Roberts' own people even joining in the deafening roar.

By the time the Book of Mormon, the last proposition, was reached, Elder Roberts had lost out until he could not raise a laugh even with the "hole in the top" and "hole in the bottom," or the "rent on the pole." He kept asking for scripture. After submitting considerable in one of his speeches, Brother Long turned to his opponent and said: "Elder Roberts, here is scripture. And let me tell you, if you will take up this scripture in the proper spirit and answer it in the right way it will have a great deal more weight with this audience than all the foolishness you go through with when you get up here." Thundering applause followed. Thereafter, Elder Roberts left off the foolishness. He had long before lost his braggadocia. Thoroughly disarmed, he dropped back into a sort of evangelistic attitude, appealing to the audience as "dying friends."

After the first three days Brother Long and his moderator were treated with the utmost kindness by the people of the vicinity. Their homes were opened and their hospitality enjoyed. A number of Books of Mormon were sold, as was considerable other literature. We have friends everywhere outside the Christian camp, and from reports some within it, and have been urgently requested to hold services in the community, having been promised a house as soon as it can be opened for us.

From the fray Campbellism came limping, further disabled when Elders Roberts and Timmons both publicly denied that we had been misrepresented in the vicinity prior to the opening of the debate, Elder Timmons' insistence, at the close of the debate, that we bear half the expense for oil and fuel proving the last straw to "break the Campbell's back." Where before we had no influence we now have a host of friends who have respect for our people and reverence for the truth.

Extracts from Letters.

Brother E. F. Wright, 108 Belair Street, Brockton, Massachusetts: "I am very much pleased with your paper. It is the right paper in the right place. As I am young in the work I need something of this kind to build me up and add to my storehouse."

Brother Albert E. Martin, Herschel, Saskatchewan, writes: "The weather has been very severe here for three weeks; as low as sixty degrees below zero. . . . Inclosed find two dollars for the Children's Home. I often think I should help more in the church, for the Lord helps me, and I am enabled to earn necessities of life for my family, which is located now at Brandon, Manitoba, but will move here. My object in coming west is to get more of this world's goods, so that when the time comes we will have more to take to Zion with us. I would like to have the gospel preached to this people and would help care for an elder. Brother Day and myself could care for an elder for a time. I don't want to neglect my duty to God and to his temporal law."

Sister Tapping writes from Manchester, England: "I am glad for the light received through the gospel. It helps me make my life better, and to fill the place of mother, with its responsibilities. I thank God for many blessings, and that my husband is a member of the church. The branch here is called the Bradford Branch, and we have had Brother Griffiths and Bishop May visit us. May these brethren be spared to the work as long as life shall last. God has given me many dreams and visions and they have been a source of strength, for which I am very grateful."

Brother Oliver Hansen, Hartford, Arkansas, writes: "I am convinced that it will always require an effort on my part to keep in line with this great latter day work, but I trust in the promises that I will not be tempted more than I can bear. . . . I know it is my duty to live up to the requirements of the temporal law, just as it is my duty to live up to the spiritual law. I find much better reading in the Bible and the Book of Mormon than I can find in fictitious stories running continually in the newspapers and magazines. I wish the best success possible for the work of God."

Sister Susan Pepper, of Brockton, —, says: "It has not been a year since I learned of this grand latter day work, yet I have been made partaker of great blessings during the past week. I was unable to avoid exposure to the cold, and was attacked by severe cold, and filling up of my lungs. I prayed for some of the Saints to be sent to me, and Brother Albert Cowden was so sent. He administered to me, and in an hour I was able to laugh and talk, whereas I could scarcely greet him when he came, because of my voice being gone. . . . I am thankful for my blessings."

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

On Sunday, the 4th, the sun appeared in all its splendor, but a cold wind from the northeast, while the mercury registered 4 below, hindered many from attending the 8 o'clock meeting; and the Sunday school attendance was only 526, with 98 seniors, the collection being $12.21.

The morning sermon, by Elder J. W. Rushton, was based on a text from Matthew 5. Much interest was shown while he discoursed upon "the sermon on the mount" and it was a most comforting setting forth of the blessings which the Master pronounced upon the believers, not only of his day, but of all time, upon those "who shall believe on the words of his disciples, who come down into the depths of humility and be baptized."

Said our brother, "These precious words, spoken into the ear of the church, were overheard by the people of the world. Jesus with deliberation takes no notice of conditions,—poverty, sorrow, hunger, thirst, reproach, and persecution; but all these things he makes into the prescription of blessing. Scholars say blessed means happy; the blessed life is the life of Jesus, and the sorrow of Jesus is the revelation of his love. The blessedness of life is the inheritance we look forward to, and it is now and here."

A goodly number of the Saints braved the wintry air to listen to the evening discourse by Elder B. J. Scott, and it was full of instruction, wholesome and uplifting.

At the business meeting on the 5th many matters of importance were brought forward, among them the receiving by letter of about thirty new members, the considering of improvements in the platform of the upper room, in the new seating arrangements for our fast-increasing choir membership, etc.

On Thursday evening, the 8th, Doctor W. Miller, of Columbia, Missouri, gave an excellent illustrated lecture under the auspices of the Archæological Institute of America.

Last Sunday's meetings were all very well attended considering the prevalence of illness among our number, and many names, in the afternoon service, were offered for prayers; a few, we are glad to note, are convalescent, and of these are our young sister, Minnie Gould, Brother G. H. Hilliard, and Sister L. Crick. Our beloved brother, J. W. Wight, who has been resting at the Sanitarium, also Brother Pender, have received much benefit during their stay with the Saints here.

As in our last items we recorded the late passing away of Brother J. C. Clapp, so to-day it falls to our lot to regretfully note the later departure of a well-known Saint, Brother L. R. Devore, of Holden, Missouri,—another tried and true veteran soldier of the cross. Both completed a well-rounded life tenure; both were pioneer preachers of the glorious gospel; and they have now found rest in paradise.

The meetings of the 11th were highly spiritual. The Lord's presence was felt at the early service of the young people so that as our presiding priest, Brother Morgan, expressed it, we too, can say, "It was an ideal prayer meeting." The morning preaching service, in charge of President M. H. Bond, was full of good counsel to both old and young and, as one rightly dividing the word of truth, he dispensed some of the riches of the Scriptures to the Saints, provided by Saint Jude in his third verse, "Contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the Saints."

For the evening lesson President W. H. Garrett chose for his text 1 Samuel 22: 15: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." The wonderfully thrilling story of disobedience to God as depicted in this chapter furnished our brother with an abundance of food for thought, and among the rich morsels gathered are these: "Sin hath no place before the Almighty; with all the knowledge of the worldly wise, the great strides made in the arts and sciences, they will find these things are not to be compared to the teachings of the gospel of Christ." "Let us not separate ourselves from God, so that by grace we may be enabled to endure to the end, and overcome."

Order of Evangelists, take Notice.

In my notice to you, published in the SAINTS' HERALD of last week, I was made to say the following: "Should it be God's will, I shall be glad to attend the General Conference, at Independence, Missouri, next April." What I desired to say was this: "Should it be God's will, I shall be glad to meet as many of you as can attend the General Conference, at Independence, Missouri, next April."

You see the difference in meaning. The omission of seven words, by mistake, did the mischief.

J. R. LAMBERT, Acting President.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 13, 1912.

Notices.

I would like the address of some of the Saints living near Centralia or Chehalis, Washington. Will return postage. Address R. F. D. 1, box 25, Little Sioux, Iowa, J. W. South.

Quorum of High Priests.

To the Members of the Quorum of High Priests, Greeting: Please take notice that I have commenced mailing to each member of the quorum a blank on which to make your annual report, and if this blank should fail to reach you on or before March 1, and you will notify me to that effect, I will immediately mail you another. All blanks are sent to the address as published in the 1911 Annual.

As your secretary, permit me to urge that you furnish all the items of labor it is practicable for you to do; for such insertions as: "baptized many," or, "preached several times," or, "administered to many," are of no use in compiling the work done by the quorum, for our annual report to the General Conference, and the more of these indefinite statements, the less labor we have to report to the General Conference.

Please to take time before making up your report to carefully read the "Note" at the bottom of blank; also, the information contained on the title-page of the blank.

Your fellow servant in bonds,

ROBERT M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 13, 1912.

To the Quorum of the Twelve.

A resolution is upon the minutes of our last session requiring the quorum to convene on March 15, 1912, in Independence, Missouri, at 2 p. m. This, of course, should claim first attention. It is very desirable that all of the members attend this meeting who can do so is in reason. Whether it would be wisdom, however, for those laboring far away from the place of meeting to make the necessary sacrifice of time and means to attend must be left for each to determine for himself. There is nothing of grave importance in sight that would require the attendance of a full quorum to meet weighty or alarming conditions. Of course the regular routine of inquiry and decisions relating to General Conference business is always important and to the front—so important that we need divine wisdom to enlighten and direct. So let us meet under the inspiration of our office and calling, to do whatever is done in the manner that the Lord would have it done.

Those wishing to communicate with the quorum may address the president or secretaries of the quorum at Independence, Missouri, in care of J. W. Rushton or Frank J. Curtis.

WM. H. KELLEY, President.

F. A. SMITH,

J. W. RUSHTON, Secretaries.

Resolution passed by the Burlington, Iowa, Sunday School.

Whereas, Our heavenly Father, in his divine wisdom, has permitted our beloved brother and former colaborer, Charles W. Bullard, to be removed by the hand of accidental death:

Therefore, be it resolved by the Bright Prospect Sunday School, of Burlington, Iowa,

That, while we bow in humble reverence to the will of the Father, we deeply deplore the death of our beloved brother and sincerely grieve that we will no more see his cheering presence in earth life.

And be it further resolved, That we extend to his bereaved wife and children our profound sympathy in their great sorrow and pray to the God of all comfort to give to them the consolation and support that we would gladly offer but which are powerless to give, and he alone can supply.

And resolved further, That the superintendent and secretary send to Sister Bullard a duly attested copy of these resolutions and preamble; and that the secretary enter a copy on the Sunday school record; and that copies for publication be furnished to THE SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign.

ETHEL A. LACEY, Superintendent.

EDITH WILLEY, Secretary.

On February 10, 1912, at 11 o'clock, 10 minutes p. m., Brother Devore passed from this life over the river, hopeful and strong in the gospel faith, for which he had labored for so many years. He was born December 28, 1847, being at the time of his decease 64 years, 1 month, and 12 days of age, not an aged man, but one who had been active and, although afflicted especially in his life in later years, was diligent in the service of the Master until the last. He became a member of the church through the ordinance of baptism June 29, 1874, at Graysville, Ohio, under the administration of Elder James Craig; ordained a priest shortly after, and in a short time after this was ordained to the office of elder under the hands of Brother James Craig. In the year 1886 he was ordained a Seventy by W. H. Kelley, of the Twelve, at Vales Mills, Ohio, and since that time was under General Conference appointment every year from April, 1883, until April, 1910, when he was placed upon the superannuated list. He served the church as branch and district president, also missionary in charge in this country. He was on foreign mission to the South Sea Islands five and a half years, in charge of the work there, and during the time baptized one hundred and ninety-six into the faith on the different islands. In the United States he baptized three hundred and fifty-six, making a total of five hundred and fifty-two. Elder Devore also in his work presided over the following branches in connection with other duties: West Wheeling, Ohio, Dewitt's, Meigs County, Ohio, Lemerick, Ohio, Temple, Ohio Branch at Kirtland, branch at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and branch at Columbus, Ohio, also Holden, Missouri. Was in charge of the Kirtland Temple for three years waiting upon visitors and telling them of the faith. He served as district president of Ohio and West Virginia and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania districts, also missionary in charge in this territory during his missionary labors. On the 28th day of December, 1867, he was married to Miss Rebecca E. Sheldon, Belmont, Ohio. Sister Devore is left as the only immediate member of his family, and to mourn his loss, though he has living of his father's family four brothers and two sisters, who reside in the State of Ohio. Brother Devore, in his last dictation to amanuensis used the following language, "Have opened up the work in many new places. My only regrets at going are leaving Ella alone in the world. She has been such a great solace in time of my ministerial work and trials. I leave all I have to her to dispose of as she sees fit." The funeral took place in the Saints' church at Holden, Missouri, largely attended; Brethren James Moler, C. F. Scarcliff, W. H. Garrett, and E. L. Kelley took part in the services. Remains were laid to rest in the north cemetery, at Holden. E. L. K.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE AND THE CHURCHES ON SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

During the closing days of December a great church conference was held in Cardiff, Wales, to consider church problems. Catholic and Episcopalian high officials were in attendance, as well as many leading business men and politicians. The bishop of Landaff acted a chairman, and the assembly was addressed by Bishop Welldon. But interest centered in the remarkable address by the Right Honorable D. Lloyd George, M. P., Chancellor of the Exchequer, who in spite of his titles seems to be very much a man of the people, and who as a statesman has become famous as the promoter of the old age pension system and other radical reform movements. His address was remarkable in nature, and we make some extracts from it as it appeared in the South Wales Daily News, December 30, 1911. In the opening of his speech he said:

I am not here to criticize the churches. (Hear, hear.) I certainly am not here to criticize or admonish. I am just here as a humble member of a Christian church in Wales to talk to my brethren on questions which concern them. But I am going to talk quite frankly. (Laughter.) But I am not sure that by the time I have ended there will be a single party in the hall which will agree with me. (Renewed laughter.) And I will tell you why I am going to tell you what I conceive to be the truth without reference to its bearing on any political program at all. What are the facts? Let us take the main facts. The first fact is this—that poverty is not the fault of Providence. (Hear, hear.) Providence has provided an abundance. This is the richest empire under the sun. That is the first fact that we have got to get into our minds; that if there is poverty, misery, and wretchedness in this land it is not because the land is sterile and poor and does not provide enough for all. (Hear, hear.) What is the next fact? There are millions of men and women in this country who, through no fault of their own, are suffering unnecessarily. How can you preach to children about behaving temperately and refraining from anything that will bring poverty upon them? There are millions of men, women, and children in this rich land who go through life sodden in poverty, wretchedness, and despair—(hear, hear)—maybe through low wages and high rents, maybe a lack of steady employment, maybe a breakdown in health, maybe a chronic condition of under health, maybe the fluctuations of trade.

What is the next point that I have got? This, that the area of poverty fluctuates without any fault of the people who endure it. Is the workman who is out of work, is he responsible for the fluctuations and variations of trade? Is he responsible for the change in the fashions which may throw him out of work? But although at one moment you may have a very broad area of poverty, and at another period a much less narrow area, you have always got a large, wide, deep area of chronic poverty and misery in this country. When I came down to Wales the other day there had been a northwest wind blowing and it was very cold, and the hills were covered with snow. At night the direction of the wind changed, and there were soft breezes from the south, and when I woke up in the morning there was sunshine on the hills, and the snow had vanished. But I noticed this—there were clefts on the mountain where sunshine never reached, which were like the depths of chilly starving homes. That is the condition of things in this land to-day. In times of bad trade you have a wide sweep of country covered with poverty. But even when the south winds of prosperity blow over the land, you have always got this chronic wretchedness where the beams of the sun never reach the millions of the race. What is my other proposition? That there are multitudes who live a life of wretchedness, misery and despair, partly through their own faults, but largely through the fault of what I dare not call environment after what you said (turning to Bishop Welldon, amidst loud laughter). At least I dare not do it without episcopal sanction. (Loud laughter.) And so, as not to be beaten by a bishop, I will call it surroundings. (Loud laughter.) Bad housing, public houses, all those circumstances so eloquently and so freely set forth in the speech of Bishop Welldon—partly the fault of the man himself and also partly the fault of the surroundings.

Here we have a great statesman pointing out to great modern churches certain things with which we as a people have long been familiar, or at least with which we should have been familiar. First, he says that poverty is not the fault of Providence. "Providence has provided an abundance." Over seventy years ago the Lord told Joseph Smith, "The earth is full, and there is enough and to spare."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

We need no revelation to tell us the further fact pointed out by Mr. George, that, despite this abundance, poverty exists, and that in some instances this poverty is the fault of the poverty-stricken individual himself, and in other instances he is the helpless victim of conditions and circumstances.

Mr. George then proceeded:

Well, now, I come to my other position. You can not deal with a problem of this magnitude by mere spasmodic appeals to the charity of the benevolent. (Cheers.) It is hopelessly inadequate as a remedy. You might as well try to run the army and navy by voluntary subscriptions. (Laughter.) What is the good of going to the country and saying, "Here, we want an army, and it is absolutely essential that we should have a navy to protect our homes, and we appeal to you for subscriptions," and the chancellor of the exchequer takes the hat round. What do you think I would get? (Laughter.) I have a very much more effective method of getting that—(laughter)—not as popular, I admit, still I get enough in that way. If you depended for the defense of our shores upon mere eloquent appeals to the patriotism and the sympathy and the charity of the people you could not build or maintain a navy of Chinese junks in the country. (Laughter and applause.)

With this proposition also we are in accord, for it is evident that the occasional throwing of a dime or a shilling to beggars, the distribution of funds raised by church suppers, and the activities of municipal soup houses, are inadequate if not worse.

Long before the churches awoke to the gravity of the situation the Lord said: "Therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

Continuing, Mr. George referred specifically to one social problem, that of housing, and followed with a statement of the national wealth:

Bishop Welldon has referred to the housing problem. I wonder how many people in this district realize what the housing conditions are in this coalfield—one of the richest mineral deposits in the whole world. (Hear, hear.) Here you have a wealth, deposited by nature, which overflows into every corner of the globe, and while you have got that in certain districts in South Wales you have housing conditions which are a disgrace to civilization. I had given to me to-day, and the other day, reports which appeared in the South Wales Daily News upon the conditions in some parts of the South Wales coalfield. I read over these reports, which appeared in the Western Mail upon the same subject, and I may say I am glad to see that the great leading papers in South Wales are beginning to direct attention to the subject. I commend your attention to this. It is not merely in the South Wales coalfield, but in the rural districts as well. (Hear, hear.) Here is a passage from one of the reports in the South Wales Daily News. I won't name the district because it will look as if I was attacking a particular district. (Laughter.) Somebody in the House of Commons the other day called "Name, name," and I did name—(laughter)—and they have been very angry with me ever since. (Loud laughter.) But one or two additional people more or less angry with me does not make much difference. What is one among so many? (Loud laughter.) But here you are. This is the quotation from the South Wales Daily News:

"There are slums in this particular neighborhood where the inhabitants are condemned to worse than death. Men are hopelessly callous and indifferent to their fate. They have ceased alike to hope or despair. They stagger blindly and desperately on, hemmed in on the one hand by the hard conditions of labor and on the other by homes which are a disgrace to civilization. Crime is comparatively rare, though there is more or less drunkenness. I have seen examples here of the most lurid character, and under some of these conditions even decency is barely possible."

Barely possible! Here—this is a district, a rich district, and you might have thought the resources were quite adequate to cope with these great evils. I shudder to think what would happen in these valleys had it not been for the fact that you have got hundreds of churches and chapels whose influence does really sweeten the atmosphere, but their duty does not end there. (Hear, hear.) They really ought to take a greater responsibility in the matter of relieving the cases. When it is a question of moral or physical health men have no right to take risks, and that is true with regard to the housing problem, not merely here, but throughout the whole of Wales. I had a report the other day, but it is marked private and confidential, and I can not make it public. It is from a district in North Wales, a town in the healthiest neighborhood—one of the very best sites for building a town. I was appalled at the report which was given of the housing conditions in a small town of that character. There are miles of land there. I won't go any further, otherwise you would discover what place it was.

Well, now, what should the churches do? The churches should be like searchlights turned on to these slums to expose them, so as to shame those in authority into doing something. (Applause.) I have been reading some of these reports upon the rural districts of Wales. That is not because there is a congestion of land, nor of population. The population has gone down during the last generation or two. There ought to be no difficulty at all in providing adequate and healthy accommodation for the population in rural districts, but there you have got cottages reeking with tuberculosis; damp, wretched, dark, dismal. Look at the statistics of health in some of the healthiest counties in Wales, or in Britian, or in the world—the plague of consumption sweeping away men, women, and children, at the very period of their lives when they ought to be full of vigor, strength, usefulness, and service. It is rather hard that women should be condemned to death for the sole crime of sticking too closely to their homes; and that little children should have the germs of death sown in their systems by the abominable housing accommodation in some of the counties of Wales. The churches must have responsibility for these; most of these women and children are members of the churches in Wales, and they really must protect them from being condemned to their death by means of this kind. Well, now, that is what I have got to say with regard to the problem of housing.

What are the churches to do? The churches are to call attention; the churches are to rouse the national conscience on the subject to a sense of its responsibility in the matter. . . . If you got an investigation of that kind in every district throughout the country you would soon settle the question of poverty, because the nation would feel something would have to be done under these conditions. Now, what is their definition? It is not that men are deprived of luxuries; it is not that men are deprived even of the comforts of existence. It is that they have not enough to purchase the barest necessities of life for themselves and their children.

And if their strength fails then they are confronted with beggary. According to Mr. Rowntree, one fourth of the population of this country, even in times of prosperity, live under those conditions. Why? Is it because they can not afford it? Is it because the country can not maintain them? Is it because the land is poor? I have already pointed out to you that it is the richest country under the sun. The national income is £1,800,000,000. That is the revealed income—(laughter)—because, however much a man may boast, as I have already said once before, he never brags to the income tax collector. (Laughter.) Very well, what does that mean? That means £200 a year for every family in the United Kingdom. One third of that income is received and spent by 250,000 people. What is that? One two-hundredth part of the population of the country, or, take them in families—one fortieth of the population, receive and spend one third of the income of the country. Why do I point this out? In order to show if there is poverty, penury, and oppression in the land it is not because there is not an abundance. (Cheers.) And in order to point out a second thing—that it is incumbent upon those who have been so fortunate, so blessed by Providence as to receive a larger share than the others, to make greater sacrifices. (Cheers.)

Here we have the idea presented that those who have been blessed with an abundance of this world's goods must come to the rescue of those who are in need; this to be done, as already stated, in an organized way and not by spasmodic individual acts of so-called charity.

First, however, we must remark that such a plan can justly be carried out only among a people who are "Christian" in fact and not in profession only, a people working under the gospel rule, among whom these differences in material wealth will be the result of natural and just causes (such as misfortune or disability on the one hand and vigor of body and mind and executive or manual skill on the other) and not the result of graft, monopoly, or oppression. It will never be to the credit or good of the nation or of individuals for certain ones to obtain immense wealth by fraudulent means and then voluntarily or under coercion bestow a surplus upon the poor.

So in this particular regard we will differ from Mr. George, who holds that the duty of the churches is to point out social evils and then uphold the statesmen of the realm while they put into operation corrective schemes, such as old age pensions, employer's liability acts, etc., which are supposed to remedy if not cure the indicated evils.

We are heart and soul in sympathy with all such corrective methods suggested by social reformers as by experience shall be discovered to alleviate human suffering and make more tolerable the heritage of the aged, the sick, and the poverty stricken. But these things do not go far enough. The gospel and the gospel alone strikes at the root of human ills.

There are many schemes now advocated that are expected to do away with poverty, war, and crime, and bring in that which might be termed the millennium, or that which at least in many particulars corresponds to the Saints' idea of the millennium. As the leading editorial in the January Review of Reviews says, after referring to the present era of political and industrial unrest: "These things make men long for millennial days of reason, justice, and universal good will."

But these schemes, which are in effect efforts to save men without their accepting gospel terms, forget that Christ said: "He that believeth (the gospel) and is baptized shall be saved."

These are the terms of the promise. Jesus came to save man from crime, disease, poverty, war, and sin—with a salvation both temporal and spiritual. Man can cooperate with Jesus in that work. But man can not save himself. And no body of men who ignore Jesus or his plan, or both, can ever hope to go very far toward saving themselves or others.

Mr. George closed his address with a very dramatic appeal, quite foreign to the old idea that the church is concerned with spiritual matters only. He said:

The church can not stand by with folded hands whilst millions are being drilled for slaughter; whilst multitudes are in despair throughout the land the church certainly can not say, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Ah, I wonder what would happen if during this last Christmas those who have been sitting comfortably enjoying their Christmas dinner found at the height of the festival an invisible hand sliding a panel in the wall and opening a window, and showing them another household of men, women, and children like themselves—no worse, some of them probably better in all the essentials of character—huddled shivering in wretched dens. I tell you what would happen. Merit would be frozen in every heart. The conscience of the nation would be roused in a way it has never been before. There would be a demand from every quarter of this country that our rulers should do something to rid the land of this pestilence of wretchedness. It is the business of the church to open that window. (Applause.) It is the business of the church to keep it open, keep our eyes steadfast upon it until the spectacle of wretchedness, woe, and despair shall have been transfigured into one of happiness and hope.

It behooves the Saints to keep in touch with the great world and national movements that are going on, helping where they can do so intelligently and conscientiously. But we must remember that the conditions indicated by leading thinkers to-day were pointed out to us in prophecy many years ago. God has outlined his own plan of redemption. It is our duty to carry out that plan as directed, for he says it must "needs be done" in his own way. Our very first duty in all things is to the church, for we are to seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness. ELBERT A. SMITH.

EDITORIAL SELECTIONS.

INDIANS ARE TOO LATE.

North American Indians have taken initiative action toward forming a confederation of all the thirty-four tribes scattered throughout the country, and although they have avoided using any more distinctive name for their union than brotherhood—the organization being called the Brotherhood of North American Indians—the purposes outlined in the constitution indicate an interesting attempt to bring the several tribes into close political association.

The interest in this step lies in the fact that it is a revival, after several centuries, of the idea of union through representation which the Europeans found in existence on the continent when they came to America, and which antedated any effort to the same end by the Caucasians. It is strange that the model of the United States which was supplied by the Iroquois confederacy should have lapsed so long into abeyance and should be revived now under the protection of its emulator. The Five Nations, or the Six Nations as they became later, embodied in their organization the principle of delegated authority which Greece and Rome failed to discover and from the ignorance of which ancient coalitions fell apart. Representation was known in England, of course, and in fact found its origin in that nation, but representation as a means of binding together independent peoples was developed in this country before the union of the States set the civilized world an example that has been followed all over the earth.

What would have happened in America but for the arrival of Europeans in the sixteenth century must always remain a matter for conjecture, but the signs are not wanting to show that the strength of union would have prevailed over the weakness of isolation and that the confederated Iroquois would have established dominion over as much of the continent as they cared to control. They had already conquered their former foes, the Algonquins, who had once subdued individually the tribes they were unable to cope with as a unit. The fate of the other tribes with whom the Iroquois came into contact; and mastery by the united Six Nations would have been inevitable through sheer force of combined power. Had this happened before the white men came, the history of the world might have been far different from what we read, for the opposition to French and English and Spanish would have been less easy to overcome.

How far the Indians can however recover the position on this continent that might have been theirs is an entirely different matter. Their time has passed, and although union for them now may improve their condition as one of the multitude of units that go to make up this big nation it can have little further effect. It may secure the rights of the Indians, it should accomplish valuable service in preserving ancient traditions, promote industry and thrift and otherwise tend to elevate the descendants of aborigines, as the constitution contemplates, but it can not at this late day catch up with the federation that has progressed where its original type has fallen into decay. The moving finger's writings are no more easily blotted out in this land age than old Omars.—Detroit Free Press.

A CASE WHERE SPIRITUAL LAW INTERCEDES THE NATURAL PROCESS OF PHYSICAL DISSOLUTION.

The following diagnosis and prognosis in the sickness and recovery of Sister Doctor J. L. Benson, as given by the attending physician, Doctor C. D. Carter, of Dekalb, Illinois, is almost, if not quite, an arithmetical demonstration of the accuracy of the proposition at the head of this article. When all of the associated facts of this remarkable case are considered, even in the light of scientific analysis, Paul's thesis, "Howbeit, that which is natural first, and not that which is spiritual; but afterward that which is spiritual"—still stands as the impregnable fortress of human hope amidst the shifting sands of the material phase of human existence.

DOCTOR CARTER'S NARRATION.

"I was called to see Mrs. Benson for the first time December 7, 1910. Found her ill with a double tonsillitis and also uvulatis, as the palate and pharynx were severely inflamed. Muscles of the left side of neck, shoulder and arms were sore and stiff, causing severe pain upon slightest movement; her general condition seeming very unfavorable. Tongue heavily coated, dry and foul, with intense thirst and continuous nausea. After two day's treatment her condition was much improved in some particulars. Tonsils and entire throat quite well. Pain and soreness and stiffness in muscles of neck, shoulder and arm entirely relieved, but the nausea and burning in stomach seemed to have improved not at all, if, in fact, not worse than before. On December 10 the thirst was great and the only liquid taken into the stomach was small quantities of coffee made from toasted bread crust; but even that produced terrible pain in the stomach and also in the throat. This burning acid condition of stomach continued in spite of all treatment. The pulse had been very rapid from the first and was now 134. Respiration was irregular, with sighing. Some blood vomited. Urine normal, except slightly acid. Bowels have been very constipated and no results follow the administration of strong doses of cathartic remedies of various kinds: only by enema have we been able to get response, and then very unsatisfactory. Thus her condition remained till on the morning of 15th, 3.30 o'clock, when I was called to attend labor. Found upon my arrival that labor was advancing very rapidly, but was thought to be two or three weeks premature, yet the condition of the patient was quite satisfactory. December 16.—Since confinement the bowels have responded freely and all functions of body seem now restored to normal. December 17.—Patient was weak and depressed, contrary to all expectations. Repeated examinations, physical, chemical, and microscopical, failed to reveal the cause of this terrible depression. On the morning of December 17 she was taken with pain in the right side, and at 10 a. m., I pronounced the diagnosis lobar pneumonia. At 12.30 p. m., called again, taking the pneumolytic serum with me. Called Doctor Anderson to be with me on the case, and upon his satisfying himself that diagnosis was correct, we administered the serum (20. c. c.). Returned at 6.30 p. m., and gave second dose, her condition unimproved. Patient has been delirious for some hours and is growing worse. Respiration shallow and rapid. Pulse 172; temperature, 104 and three fifths degrees—ordered oxygen inhalations. December 18, 8 a. m.—Unimproved. Delirium violent. Has had no sleep for two days. Repeated serum, giving 40. c. c. At five p. m., administered serum, 20. c. c. Condition growing worse. Pulse irregular, respiration shallow, temperature 104 to 105 degrees, with delirium very great. December 19.—Gave serum 20. c. c. at nine a. m., and at seven p. m. Can see no effects, either of serum, oxygen, or any medicine. December 20.—gave 20. c. c. at ten a. m. No change, only for the worse, have given up all hope. Seven p. m., no change, gave no serum, as we decided that she already had had enough, if it would do her any good any way, and with instructions to continue the hypodermic injections of medicine and the oxygen inhalations we left, fully believing that she could not possibly live through the night. December 21, 8.30 a. m.—Called to find she had enjoyed several hours of quiet sleep, her mind clear, her fever gone, tongue moist and clean, lung clear. Eight p. m.—Called and found her condition so much improved that it could not possibly be explained from a medical standpoint. Respiration from 18 to 20, pulse 76 to 90, temperature 98 and two fifths. Bowels had moved freely, urine voided normal, taking nourishment with a relish, and not looking at all sick. I did not see her again till I was called to see another member of the household one week or ten days later, and found her physically normal as to health so far as we, by careful examination, were able to determine.

"On the evening of December 20, when we left the patient, there was not one indication but what pointed to an unfavorable prognosis and a fatal termination. There was absolutely not one symptom, or sign on which we could look but warned us of pending dissolution. No ray of hope could be seen from our standpoint as M. D.'s. Had we not seen other cases the same in every point and seen them taken away from their families under like, in fact, identical conditions, we might have seen some ray of hope. Pneumonia following confinement we knew from our own experience was generally fatal. Statistics from the best hospitals and from the best skilled physicians in the world bring us hope only for the recovery of one case out of every four of uncomplicated pneumonia following labor. It was with foreboding and grave fear that we approached the home on that morning of December 21. There was no crape on the door, we enter, the moist eyes and glad faces which meet us within tell to us quickly that the Master had been there. The tale is not new, though strange, indeed, it sounds to-day; but nevertheless 'tis true that had not help reached her other than all the human mind could bring, she would have been taken from her family, husband, children, friends, all. None save He "whose arm is not shortened," and who is the same "yesterday, to-day, and for ever"; He who, though they sleep the sleep of death, hath power to raise to life, could have brought her thus, as it were, from death unto life. May the glory be to God, "who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not."

We add: On the night of December 20, in the presence of her husband and brother, Sister Benson, apparently in a lucid state of mind, had the following manifestation: She said the angels were coming to invite her to go with them. She heard them singing, she said, and joined her voice with theirs in song. They came on a train, and when the train stopped they invited her to come on board. But she said, "No; I don't want to go now, as I would prefer to go on a train with my husband, and besides I don't want to leave my babies." The train passed on. She, noticing that her husband was weeping, said, "Joe, don't cry, for I shall receive my blessing, get well and stay with my babies, and to-night will be my worst night." This was literally fulfilled, for the next night she was healed. At the close of this manifestation she lapsed into the terrible delirium which had racked her mind and frail body for days. On Monday evening the doctors said that from a medical viewpoint our dear daughter would, doubtless, die that night. The vigilant nurses were constantly by her bedside, watching and noting the slightest change in her condition. Her husband, brave and true, was still praying and hoping for God's special intervention. He had stood like an oak in the midst of the storm. All was anxiety in that home on that memorable Monday night. Maudie's father and mother, with her mother's sister, sat in the kitchen that Monday evening, listening, though two rooms away, to a familiar voice in the terrible throes of mad delirium. Nine o'clock. There was, at times, a slight subsidence in the energy of the voice of that wandering mind. Ten o'clock. At short intervals the patient lay quiet, as if resting. Eleven o'clock. The faithful nurse reports that the sick one had napped a number of times in the last hour. Midnight. Blessed midnight! Maudie is now sleeping the sweet sleep of peace. The delirium is gone, for the angel of life had touched her. The unseen forces of the infinite Spirit had performed an infinite act beyond the ken of human analysis, yet known to human experience as a part of life's sublimest realism. The next morning the two physicians came, and after careful examination of their patient Doctor Carter said, "All that we have here this morning is only an ordinary case of confinement." Doctor Carter submitted to his associate physician, Doctor Anderson, substantially the following query: "As the liquefying and expectorating processes are essential in removing pus from the lung of a pneumonia patient, will you explain how Mrs. Benson's lung, solid as a liver last evening, was cleared of all pus during the night and is normal this morning without the exercise of these processes in its elimination?" Doctor Anderson gave a negative answer, saying that he was "up in the air" so far as the proposition was concerned. When Maudie was first stricken with her last illness, the fact of her sickness was sent to a number of nearby branches with request for prayers in her behalf. Most, if not all, of these branches held special services, praying for her recovery, and the impression of all, so far as we have learned, was that she would get well. This information came to us even before her sickness had reached its maximum stage. Prayers and the administration of the ordinance of God for the healing of the sick had been the order from the first. Abstinence from food had also been observed. Special blessing had been given at different times. The struggle was on, whether this young mother was to leave her three little children, as millions of loving mothers had done before, or that God would arrest the progress of the death forces by the application of the higher laws which mean, at last, the abolition of death in the triumph of life. The infinite Father gave assurance to praying, fasting Saints that Maudie would live. By his magic touch he transformed this fever-brained maniac into a prophetess who predicted her own recovery and who said: "To-night will be my worst night." When God touched her by his Spirit she slept the normal, restful sleep of life—she had been healed.

In the morning the doctors came and witnessed the changed conditions. Medical science is dumb now, her oracles are silent: like an idiot she has no precedents, or rules to measure or explain a phenomenon like this. But the infinite Spirit, whose glory gilds the starry universe with ineffable beauty and intelligence, has written the eternal laws of life upon human hearts and in human experience, and the soul, springing up in touch with the life that never dies, struggles against the environment of evil, both within and without, and its aspiration for holiness and perfection will never be satisfied until we are made in the likeness of Him "who loved us, and who gave himself for us."

Subjection by Fear.

Some time has elapsed since I entered the Mother's Home Column to exchange a few thoughts with you. Yet I have never failed to read and enjoy the product of the pen of those who have been moved upon from time to time, to express their views, offer suggestions, and thus lend a helping hand to many young and inexperienced mothers in the all important work of child training.

As I read the article on "Early childhood" in HERALD of January 17, I heartily wished that all mothers could view their responsibility in the same light as the writer. What a host of happy, trusting, loving children the world would possess!

I beg leave to quote a few passages or thoughts which have impressed me in this reading. In fact are the particular topics which have proven a burden to my soul as I beheld dear, little, innocent babies become martyrs, so to speak, to the ignorance and folly of parents!

I quote: "On the other hand, I have before me the picture of a little boy, who, whenever his mamma was cross or impatient with him, would put his little arms around her neck and say, 'I want to love you, mamma.'"

You may ask why this especial quotation? The following incident will satisfy the query. Not long since I was seated in church, the occasion being a funeral service. As the mourners and friends arrived and were seated, I noticed a man with a child in his arms. As he passed along the aisle and seated himself in front of me, I found myself musing, What a stern, cross face to have the care of a dear little child! Where may be his mother if he has one? I was so impressed that I could scarcely take my eyes from the strange pair. As the services began, he placed the child on the seat, where he sat quietly for a few minutes, then looking up in the father's face he whispered a few words—that was all—but in the eyes of the father it was a great offense, for oh! the cruel frown he gave the child has never been erased from my mind. My attention was riveted upon them and I was lost to my surroundings for the time being. The little one sat a few minutes longer and appealed again to the father in the same quiet way, this time making an effort to get in his arms. I knew the child was timid among so many strange faces, perhaps unused to being away from "mamma," and felt that in father's arms he would be safe from all harm! Did those loving (?) arms enfold him and thus calm and quiet the child's fears? I hoped they would; but no, those cruel arms picked him up and forcibly sat him down again on the seat! This was repeated several times, each time the little heart nearer broken and the father more angry and determined, until at last the brave little heart could no longer smother the sobs, and then to quiet the outburst, he jerked the child up, scolding and threatening him! He made an effort to control himself—mere babe that he was—and now that he was in father's arms he seemed to feel safer and comforted for a short time. But he was so distressed and seemed to fear more the angry, savage frowns, and wanted his father to love him. As he looked up into those cruel eyes with the tears coursing down his dear little face, he begged for a kiss. Think of it! That father refused to grant it. As the child still pleaded in his childish way, the father finally yielded and leaning over gave the upturned face a "peck" which proved to be the "pipe of peace," as he nestled down for a time, but soon wanted another kiss, as his little heart yearned for love. Oh, blind father! Is it any wonder that I heard not the sermon—that I mourned more over the fate of the living child than I could possibly mourn with friends for the loss of their loved one to be laid away for ever? My heart was pierced, indignant feelings aroused, and a determination to use my efforts for the prevention of such cruelty.

If this little one had begun crying aloud or screaming, as children often do in public places, there would have been some incentive for his course of procedure. But he was so quiet, whispering and weeping, pleading his cause so bravely and persistently, that it seemed to me the most pathetic scene I had ever witnessed.

This is not overdrawn. It is just as I relate it. That father expected too much of the baby; he didn't understand child nature ; he wasn't worthy the name of father. Alas! how lamentable the fact, that he is not alone in his ignorance!

As the little boy whose mother was cross and impatient said, "I want to love you, mamma," so was the desire of the other little one; he wanted to "love" the one who had so misused him. How forgiving is the heart of a little child! How far are we from heeding the injunction "to become as a little child"!

Again I quote: "What a very wrong thing it is to frighten a child into obedience by telling him that if he did not do as they wished, something would get him. And I have seen the same little child run into the house screaming hysterically at the very thought of such a thing, while the older members of the family stood by and laughed." Oh, that those parents and guardians could but realize the magnitude of such a sin! Could pause for one moment to consider the torture of mind of the little child thus frightened. And worse than all, the loss of faith and confidence in the parent as he grows older. For there will come a day when he will remember that his parents intentionally misrepresented, as well as cruelly wronged him. What of the future confidence of those parents? What of it, think you? Yet we are confronted to-day with this grave wrong. We hear a mother trying to enforce obedience in this way: "A black man will get you if you don't do so and so." "A big dog is coming after you if you don't be good." And more shameful still is the method of trying to frighten a child to sleep by saying to the little, trusting soul, "A big bear will come if you don't go right to sleep." Perhaps the little one may be in mother's arms and she burdened with work and anxious to be free, thoughtlessly tries to soothe (?) the little, restless mind, and induce slumber by "soft lullabies" of big bears and black men! Or perhaps she may threaten, as the lullaby has it,

"Hush-a-bye, my little picaninny, Mamma's gwine to swat yo' ef yo' don't."

Don't think for a moment, mother, that such measures calm the restless, tired little mind and hasten sleep! No; they have the opposite effect, to arouse and excite, fill with fear; and though he may at length fall asleep, it is from sheer exhaustion that he succumbs. And what, think you, is the state of the mind and nerves of the child who is subjected to such abuse? Is it any wonder that he tosses and moans in his sleep? Wouldn't we? Is it surprising that he "cries out" or even screams on awakening as these grewsome thoughts spring into his mind? What mother could compose her mind and sleep, if expecting some dire calamity? Who could control the fear that would result from the certainty of some animal springing from a dark corner, in the event of "failing to go to sleep quickly"? How many mothers think they could sweetly slumber, serenely fall into the "arms of Morpheus," under such conditions? Then don't expect your dear, helpless children to control their fears where you would fail. "We are but children older grown." Another common method of frightening a child into obedience is shutting him in a dark room or closet. Oh! what a sin! Listen, mothers! Children have died from fright; or worse, become demented for life under such cruel measures.

Think of the nervous condition, as well as the agony of the child who is continually subjected to fear. Such punishment should have no place in this enlightened age!

Why, your child is really taught fear by such procedure, that he may never outgrow. Actually frightened by the mother whose duty it is to keep fear from the trusting little soul; to be his protector and comforter! Don't do it, mothers; don't do it!

Now may those who are guilty of this practice see the error of their ways and reform. May those who have been in the past and have raised their families, partly atone for the wrong by using their influence and raising their voices to proclaim against such a barbarous practice. If you will help but one mother to see her mistake, you will have accomplished a great work.

One other quotation: "Do not drive a child. If he seems determined in not doing what is wanted of him, try persuasion; give him a little time in which to think about it himself, and in almost every case even the small child will be won over and no disagreeable results will follow."

How very much food for thought this paragraph contains. How often we see injustice dealt out to a child by driving or compelling him to do a certain thing in a certain time or in a certain way, when he hasn't really had time to know what is desired of him; doesn't really know he is in the wrong until perhaps with an angry word he receives a hasty blow—which naturally makes him rebellious, and then follows a scene, which results in an angry parent, an injured child, and no lesson learned. An unjust punishment, because no law was broken, as no law was known to the child in this case. A little time, a little persuasion will often win him over to your side, and no disagreeable trouble will follow.

Never reprove or punish a child in the presence of strangers, if it can be avoided. If unruly, take him into another room, or anywhere that you can be alone with him, so that you can center his attention on you first; then lead his mind to the wrong he has committed. Then may follow the punishment, or better still the little talk that will show him that he had made mamma sorry because he had been naughty or disobedient. Do we "older children" not prefer this method when we are overtaken in a fault, rather than to be unceremoniously "called down" in the presence of disinterested spectators? Which is more humiliating and hurtful to our feelings? Then deal with your child wisely, that he may suffer no injustice, though reproof may be necessary. A child should be taught very early to trust mother and should be taught the meaning of yes and no. Not by abuse or angry words, but by your tone of voice and expression of your face. Thus you can show pleasure when he obeys or sorrow or reproof when disobedient. This is all sufficient to teach a young child right from wrong. Slapping, pinching, pushing, or other abuse is entirely uncalled for, and only displays the temper and ignorance of the parent.

As the child older grows he can better understand what is required of him; and good talks in regard to right and wrong will prove all that is necessary in many cases in child training. How much better, when it can be possible, and I believe it can be in most cases, to follow such a course than to use corporal punishment. What of the example you set for your child, when you in anger scold or slap for the least offense? A child is a close observer of the acts and words of older ones and will emulate that example at first opportunity. For instance, the little girl with her dolly will be noticed scolding in her childish way, or slapping when dolly is supposed to be naughty. The little boy, under same training, will be found whipping his horse, though it may be but a broom stick. They are putting into practice their early impressions, and though it may be smiled at, it is a very serious thing.

A little child one day was playing with an older person, and in the course of time she said, "Play you were my little girl and I was the mamma."

"All right," and almost immediately she received an emphatic slap on the back.

"Why," she said in surprise, "what did you do that for?"

The child answered, "That's the way my mamma does."

What a deplorable state of affairs! Her idea of a mamma was one who would slap and scold! Such is the power of example and observation!

I do not believe any mother desires to so impress her child, but what of your duty and everyday training? What of it?

Request for Prayers.

Under date of February 19, a sister asks the prayers of all Saints that if it is God's will she may be healed of her distressing afflictions.

Does the road wind up-hill all the way?

Yes, to the very end.

Will the day's journey take the whole long day?

From morn to night, my friend.

Shall I find comfort, travel-sore and weak?

Of labor you shall find the sum.

Will there be beds for me and all who seek?

Yea, beds for all who come.

—Christina G. Rosetti.

The child who enters life comes not with knowledge or intent; So those who enter death must go as little children sent, Nothing is known, but I believe that God is overhead, And as life is to the living, so death is to the dead.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS, February 6, 1912.

Editors Herald: The district conference which convened here February 3 and 4 was a fine one indeed, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather at the time, a good representation was had. A partial organization of the quorums was effected, which will doubtless be completed at the conference in June, when the presence of Apostle J. F. Curtis is desired. The preaching was inspiring.

Our veteran, Brother T. W. Chatburn, has a warm place in the hearts of the Saints under his presidency. The writer has been engaged here in a house to house campaign with varied success. The importance of the latter day evangel and the inspiring influences of the Holy Spirit are considered sufficient ground for driving away discouragements and to induce us to press "onward" and "upward" in every good word and work, and battle on in the fray between right and wrong. With infinite pleasure we remember from time to time the statement in one of the revelations to this church that "if it so be that you should labor all your days in crying repentance unto this people and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father." This line of work, to your humble brother, has been a source of real pleasure; not that there have not been any trials and difficulties in the way, but it is certain that sin and unbelief are increasing in the world as the years go by.

A recent visit to the humble home of Elder J. Alfred Davis, south of Pittsburg, was greatly enjoyed. It seems that this aged servant of the Lord has been afflicted for some time, and is just waiting his turn to enter the upper and better home of the Saints. May the Lord in his great mercy comfort all such in their sunset of life. And may the Saints everywhere continue to grow in grace and favor with the Lord, seeing that the day is fast approaching.

BEATRICE, NEBRASKA, January 30, 1912.

Dear Herald: As a mariner often makes his reckoning from some fixed star in order to determine his course and avoid running on dangerous rocks, so should we from a fixed star, the word of God, make our reckoning and avoid running counter to God's plans in our work, and avoid injuring the work we hope to help along. In writing this short article the writer is simply trying to exercise the right of any member of the body, to express his views, without any thought of reflecting on those who are by the law the executives of the will of the church.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

"The word of the Lord, in addition to the law which has been given, making known the duty of the bishop which has been ordained unto the church in this part of the vineyard, which is verily this: to keep the Lord's storehouse; to receive the funds of the church in this part of the vineyard; . . . that this also may be consecrated to the good of the church, the poor and needy."—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3.

"All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances. And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."—Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2.

From the above we learn the following facts:

1. The bishop is to receive the funds of the church.
2. The Saints are to pay their money to the bishop according to the law (see Doctrine and Covenants, 101: 2, latter part of paragraph) of his gospel.
3. The poor, the widows, and orphans, are to be provided for from the funds in the possession of the bishop.

From what we have read in the HERALD and from statements made by some who are in a position to know, it appears that it is the intention of the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service to assume the responsibility of caring for the Children's Home to receive and disburse the funds for its maintenance. Where is the law for such a procedure, in the face of the facts that we have quoted from the law? The highest duty that that or any other society can assume is to be a "help" to help the church by turning the result of its labors into the treasury of the church. Is there any just reason why their work should be reported in the columns of the HERALD instead of in the bishop's regular report to the church? If that is right and proper, why not all the other societies in the church that are engaged in benevolent work do likewise?

Under the same principle of law Graceland College can be properly classed.

1. Graceland College belongs to the church; it was authorized by the church. A body that has the right to authorize a thing to be done, has the right to do it.
2. It is just as much the duty of the church to provide for the education of her children as it is to feed and clothe them and provide homes for them. It is the right of our children to have an education, under such conditions as will insure them a good, moral environment, and also under such conditions that their faith in Jesus Christ and his gospel will not be destroyed.
3. If first and second principles are a correct statement of the law and the facts, then Graceland College should be maintained by the church from the funds of the church; if not, then it should surrender all right of government and control over it.

Under the temporal law, as well as the spiritual, we are not exempt from performing our duties. "And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God; yea, neither the bishop."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3. As given to us we have tithing, surplus, offerings, and consecrations.

Some part of the law, or all of it, is applicable to each one of us. When we pay our tithing, if we still have some left it is a surplus, and the payment of our surplus is just as much a duty under the law as that of tithing. If we need it in our business it is not a surplus, but the very moment we do not need it, then it becomes a surplus.

From the above we can deduce the following: If a member pays all that the law demands of him he can not have any money to pay to an endowment fund for Graceland College, either a temporary or a permanent one. If we pay to an endowment fund for Graceland College we are withholding that amount of money from the church which the law directs us to pay. Suppose ten persons each paid ten thousand dollars, which would be one hundred thousand dollars; on interest it would bring about six thousand dollars per year. But that would be withholding from the church what should have gone to buy land, or build factories or homes for our people, and the returns would come to the church in tithes, offerings, and the consecration of surplus. It matters not which way you try, you can not lawfully aid the college only by the money coming through the church.

I have a very high opinion of the integrity and ability of the men that compose our General Conferences, and at the same time believe it was an error when on two occasions it was voted not to take any money from the general church treasury. I believe our vote was more the result of our prejudices than our sober judgment of the law. I am willing to confess that I voted with the majority, but a more careful study of the law showed me that I was in error.

In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10 and 122: 7 the law contemplates the building of our churches from the funds of the church, at least in Zion. Under our present method of doing these things great sums of money are paid out for such purposes, and as a result of such a course many are not able to pay tithing, and so far as the bishop's report indicates, they are not doing anything in a financial way for the church.

Under our present method of doing things the branches, districts, reunions, and privately people are constantly being dunned to contribute to some special fund until it is becoming a burden and in a measure offensive, and it is having an injurious effect on the general funds of the church. A person's ability to pay, by the fixed income he receives, makes it impossible to pay to one fund without withholding from another.

If we do not call a halt on our multiplying of funds, we may find something like the following: "Woman's Foreign Missionary Society," "Young Ladies' Home Mission Society," "Society for the Care of Invalid Missionaries," "A Society to Promote Sociability."

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, February 6, 1912.

Editors Herald: I see in your issue of January 31, 1912, an effort on the part of Brother J. C. Crabb to enlighten me as to my position in regard to the angel referred to in revelations of John, 14: 6; 7.

I claimed that what John saw had not been fulfilled, as to said angel. Brother Crabb thinks it has, and as proof that it has, he refers me to the Doctrine and Covenants 108: 7. I have read that many times, yet I fail to see that the angel referred to by Joseph Smith, jr., is the same one that John refers to. You remember, I said before, that I believed that the angel referred to by Joseph Smith, had restored the gospel as it was in the Book of Mormon; but I don't believe that the angel that John referred to, is the same one, for different reasons. The angel that John saw fly in the midst of heaven, had the everlasting gospel to preach, etc., and it is said that angel would cry with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come. If language means anything, it means that the angel was to cry with a loud voice, not tell somebody else to cry with a loud voice. Another reason against Brother Crabb's views, is that the angel Moroni, that delivered the gospel to Smith, did not have it as he flew in the midst of heaven; it was in the Hill Cumorah.

I will say again, if any brother has more light, please turn it on. I am yours for the truth, and right, now and for ever.

MOUNTAINVILLE, MAINE, January 25, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: I often ask myself, as I read the interesting articles, letters, etc., contained in your valuable pages from time to time, just what is my duty in regard to adding my mite. On the one side arises the question: Should I use the space which abler and more instructive and interesting contributors might fill? while, on the other hand is the thought, Ought I to absorb all the good of others and never add anything? So, between the two, you may see by these few lines how I have tried to decide by the Spirit's direction. As I write there comes to my mind an old, familiar verse:

"Little drops of water;
Little grains of sand;
Make the mighty ocean,
And the pleasant land."

So, while one's written thoughts may be small, in a way, perhaps many somewhat similar thoughts may unite to form that which may be mighty in its final results. So let each be willing to do what little his hands (or mind) may find to do, leaving the results in the hands of Him who doeth all things well.

Are we as Saints making the most of our opportunities? Are we not living beneath our opportunities day by day? Are we not, in many ways at least, failing to come up higher, according to the command. We certainly are, unless we are putting forth every reasonable effort to not only save ourselves, but to save others, and thus help as instruments in God's hands to upbuild his earthly kingdom and help to establish the truth in these latter days.

Many of the Saints seem to feel that if they are doing all possible to save themselves they are doing their whole duty. Are they? "Let him that is warned warn his neighbor," is as true to-day as when given. In the words of the poet, I believe that we are "saved to save others," and we need not wait until we are called to some office in the church to do it either. I believe that there many of lay members of our church to-day whose light and talent along certain lines would do more to save souls than many sermons would ever do. Many lives lived according to God's law would be more effective preachers, though silent, than many that are to-day sounding forth from the pulpit the angel's message. Not that I would speak disparagingly or discouragingly of that line of noble and God-ordained work, but that I would advocate the upspringing dormant faculties, whose work would be equally effective to theirs if used according to the Lord's ways and methods in their respective lines of work. Never before, in the opinion of the writer, have there been such glorious opportunities for all, especially the young men and women of our church, to branch out in the work of the Sunday school, the Religio, the social service, etc., as there are at the present time. Everywhere are to be found those idly waiting, spiritually asleep, who might be brought in and made useful to themselves and others by a little effort, and a few words wisely spoken by those already in those auxiliaries of church work.

But perhaps I have already said enough along this line at this time. Only let me add that I sincerely believe that unless we, as God's people, use and improve upon the talent already given us in a practical way, the Lord will cease to add "line upon line, precept upon precept," until we do. A word to the wise is sufficient.

I want to say that I am stronger in this blessed latter day work to-day than I have ever been before, for the reason that the longer I remain in it as a worker, striving to keep the laws and commands of God, the more I am convinced in different ways of the truthfulness of the gospel; and, realize that the gifts and blessings indeed follow those who believe.

My determination and hope is to continue to press forward that I may not only be a hearer, but a doer of the word as well, and remain faithful to the end, that I may ultimately reach the goal and receive the promised reward. To this end I desire the prayers of God's people.

W. A. SMALL.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, January 19, 1912.

Dear Saints and Fellow Pilgrims on the Road to Zion: I have felt impelled to commit to pen and paper a few thoughts which occur to me as I survey the vast field of hope and glory, conflict and victory, which yet expands, golden and glorious, before the "feet of the Saints."

Apropos of victory,—I was never more powerfully impressed with a more telling and relevant thought than when, two or three months ago, passing one of the main streets in Toronto's down town district my eyes alighted on a book of sacred songs displayed for sale in a shop window. The volume contained both words and music, and was opened at a most strikingly beautiful, impressive, and appropriate hymn, entitled, Victory! The chorus, or refrain to the last stanza, was that which instantly attracted and appropriated my attention, for the words were these:

"Fling out your colors brave and true;
The Victory may depend on you!"

Anything more uplifting, more ennobling, or more inspiring I do not remember to have encountered for a very long time. May we all have grace to lay it up in our heart of hearts.

The Lord is markedly blessing us here in the city of Toronto.

The more public and prominent features of our respected bishop's work in the Princess Theater (surely one of the most boldly conceived and fearlessly carried out enterprises of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints), with the whole-hearted and efficient aid of such as Sister Elsie Hill, organist, Brother Samuel Clark, in the leadership of the orchestra, and last but not least the touchingly inspiring manner in which our young sister, Hazel Hathaway, renders sacred songs as "O Lord, abide with me," "Holy City," "The land eternal," and "Lead, kindly light"; songs which abound in technical difficulties and in sudden modulations which many a far older and more experienced singer would hesitate to even attempt; these and other interesting features of the important evangelistic work carried on in "Ontario's Queen City" have been so ably portrayed and so interestingly depicted in your valued columns by Elder James A. Wilson, and later still by our esteemed president of the branch, High Priest A. F. McLean, that further comment upon my part would not only be useless, but also superfluous.

Permit me now to introduce to your many readers a phase of this glorious and all potent latter day work which I am sure must have escaped the notice of nearly, if not all the leaders of scientific thought in the van of Israel's armies; for, to my great wonder, I have never once seen it prominently brought forward, or, indeed, brought forward at all, in even the ablest and most well-considered sermons or lectures that have ever been reported or recorded in your evidently read columns. I allude to the truly marvelous manner in which the science of seismology confirms this glorious latter day work.

By the science of seismology I mean the phenomena of volcanoes and volcanic or seismic eruptions, including, of course, earthquakes. Chancing a few years ago to light upon a small volume entitled, The Wonders of Creation in Volcanoes and Volcanic Eruptions, I immediately purchased the book; being from my earliest youth a student and lover of the marvelous, the wonderful, the sublime, and upon perusing the volume in the quietness and seclusion of my home, I was literally amazed and astounded, not only at the intense power and awful ferocity of the terrible scenes and events of volcanic eruption, but still more at the truly marvelous manner in which eruption after eruption, tempest after tempest, earthquake after earthquake, coincides most remarkably and exactly with such dates as 1830, the rise of this glorious latter day work; 1833, a most important year in relation to angel instructions and ordinations or organizations among the leading quorums; 1844, the fatal year of the Prophet's martyrdom, and, no less strange than confirmatory to us as members of the Reorganization, the year 1860 figures most prominently in both earthquake and volcanic eruptions.

So wonderfully and noticeably were these coincidences portrayed, both as regards the old organization and the new, that I was compelled again and again to return to the title-page of the book in order to assure my eyesight that the volume was not penned by some elder for the express and avowed purpose of establishing the claims of the latter day work in trying to show how marvelously it was corroborated, even date for date, by terrific and colossal eruption of the forces of nature in far distant lands and climes upon the very years, and in many instances also the very months rendered dear and sacred to Latter Day Saints in the memory of their ever loved and ever esteemed leader, the Prophet of the most high God.

One instance of these remarkable coincidences must suffice, for I fear to infringe upon the time and space of abler and more attractive writers.

The volume records on page 63 that in 1830 the volcano on Graham's Island in the South Pacific Ocean suddenly burst forth into violent and terrible eruption, and a most remarkable episode was, that three immense columns of vapor arose; red, dark blue, and green in color. These, after nearly thirty-six hours, changed to ten columns, rising high in the air while the vivid blasts of fire mingled with thunders and forked lightnings rendered the scene awful and terrible. In about six weeks the whole island suddenly sank into the depths of the sea, and has never again been seen!

How vividly and wonderfully are we here reminded of the Master's prophetic warning words concerning "blood, fire, and pillars of smoke."

Again, on June 24, 1829, the volcano of Jorullo, near the southernmost point of Uruguay, burst forth into violent and disastrous eruption, beclouding the landscape for many miles around with thick, dense volumes of smoke and with a roar which, especially at nighttime, was almost deafening in its intensity.

One concluding instance only can be given, dear readers, but I am perfectly willing to adduce many and even more striking examples from the volume itself, at the discretion of your esteemed editors, as I have been penning them only from memory.

The volcano of Colima, in the State of Jalisco, is twelve thousand feet above the level of the sea and belongs to the mountain chain which traverses Mexico from east to west. For forty years it had been entirely quiescent, and was supposed to be an extinct volcano. On July 12, 1869, it began to smoke, and a few weeks later to pour forth a stream of pumice stone, intensely hot and red (the color of blood), which spread out for miles and covered hundreds of acres. It was still in eruption in 1873, four years later.

Thus you see, dear HERALD readers, its previous eruption, after forty long years of silence, was at practically the very time of the angel's first visit to the choice Seer in 1829.

The entire volume, though penned by Professor Phillips, M. A., late of the Ontario Board of Education, some years ago, and therefore written by no Latter Day Saint at all, is a practical and emphatic, though totally unconscious vindication of the Lord's words to his prophetic servant, Joseph Smith, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 85:25: "For after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground and shall not be able to stand."

How surpassingly and surprisingly wonderful that the Lord, the Chief Astronomer, should thus potently cause the very rocks and mountains to testify to this "marvelous work."

When the handwriting on the wall is thus so palpably and potentially confirming the word of his called and chosen servants "with signs following," upon the heavens above, and with "blood and fire and pillars of smoke upon the earth beneath," what manner of persons ought we to be in all holiness of conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening unto the "coming of the day of God."

Yours in the glorious hope,

F. R. TUBB.

FEBRUARY 4, 1912.

Editors Herald: In your issue for January 31 appears a letter written by a brother who is among the isolated ones, and who is asking for information relative to Saints who are thus isolated attending other churches and Sunday schools.

At best we are all creatures of circumstances, in a measure at least, and we are all more or less governed by our early traditions, but it occurs to the writer that we should look at things squarely and meet every issue in truth and fairness.

The brother seems to think that the effect of international Sunday school lessons would be injurious to the children. Largely this is true, as may be seen by the following items brought to the personal notice of the writer, where the international Sunday school lessons took the position that David wrote the 85th Psalm, expressive of his gratification of the return of Israel to Jerusalem after the seventy years captivity in Babylon, which of course would be very wide of the truth, for David had now been dead 479 years. Again, a superintendent of one of the Sunday schools the writer attended not long since taught his constituents that Esther was the queen of Sheba, and of course any Bible reader knows the queen of Sheba lived in the days of King Solomon, and Esther did not live until the time of the captivity; so we have something like four hundred years intervening there; and further, the queen of Sheba was from the south and Esther was a Hebrew.

Again, we heard a minister of the same church, at a later date, preach from the 55th chapter of Isaiah, and he said Isaiah wrote that chapter during the time of the captivity, which was a mistake of about two hundred years.

Such things of course, if permitted to be taught, would be misleading; but there is no need for Saints to err in these things, whether isolated or in a large branch of the church, if they will employ the means within their reach, and teach their children the gospel in its simplicity and purity. Solomon said: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it."—Proverbs 22:6.

And in the latter days the Lord hath said: "I have commanded you to bring up your children in light and truth."—Doctrine and Covenants 90:6. "And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; . . . and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

Now it occurs to the writer that if this instruction be heeded, and parents teach their children the truth at home, not only in precept, but also in example, they can with profit attend other Sunday schools and churches, even though they be isolated, because they will have a knowledge of the truth, and it is the imperative duty of parents to so teach and instruct their children, that they will be able to detect the errors in the philosophy of others and be grounded in the true faith by virtue of their early training.

Personally we are in favor of our people attending other churches and Sunday schools, especially where they are isolated; but we would insist upon the parents at least following the advice of Paul to Timothy to "Study to show yourself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." If we as Saints do our part, whether we be isolated or not, we will wield an influence for good in the world, and in the language of Christ: "They shall go in and out and find pasture," we have everything to gain, and true love knows no fear.

Your humble servant,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, January 20, 1912.

Dear Herald: About four years ago I was taken down with rheumatism, and I haven't got over it yet. I have not been able to work for five years, and have longed to be healed by the Lord. I have been administered to many times, and have been relieved through prayer many times, but have not been healed for some reason, I know not what. I know the Lord has power to heal me, and I believe that some day, if I live aright, I will be made well of all my afflictions. I believe I will yet be able to do a good work for the Lord.

I have wished that I could be a preacher, or a servant of God's, ever since I was a small boy, and I have believed I would. I joined the church when fifteen years of age; am now twenty-eight. I have let the Devil use me, or have given myself over to him, instead of keeping myself in a condition so the Lord could use me.

I am thankful that I can say that the things of this world do not tempt me to sin as they once did, for as Paul said, the things I once loved, now I hate, and I am trying to live the best I can, though I do wrong many times. But when I see that I have done wrong I am willing and ready to get right, either with my brother or with my Redeemer. We do not live as close to the Lord as we should. We are not humble enough. We must lay down pride of life and put behind us the wickedness of this world and get right before God. Who of us will be able to stand? Let us take courage and lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh.

Pray for me that I may receive health and more light in His work, that I may yet be instrumental in the Master's cause.

JAMES H. BUSSELL.

HARTFORD, MICHIGAN, January 29, 1912.

Editors Herald: Perhaps some of your many readers would be interested in hearing from this part of its great mission field. We have been struggling along, in a quiet way, trying to get the gospel before the people, with occasionally some assistance from the missionary forces.

There is now, however, some prospect of getting the word before the people in a more general way, through public discussion, because of misrepresentations made by a Church of Christ evangelist. The local plant of that church here, engaged Elder F. Z. Burkett, evangelist, and pastor of their church at Bangor, to hold a protracted meeting here for three weeks, now extended to four. His opening discourse was preached in the opera hall with the subject as announced beforehand, "What have the religions of the world contributed to the building of the church of Christ? Special consideration given to Mormonism, Spiritualism, and Christian Science."

I had not thought much of attending any of their meetings, but when I saw this announcement, I considered it my duty, as a local representative of our work, to be on hand for this subject, at least, and more if necessary. I accordingly attended. Brother and Sister H. N. Robertson were also present. In alluding to Mormonism, he spoke of the Book of Mormon as a fake book; it was written by one Homus, he said, whose grandfather died in Sing Sing prison; that Joe Smith got hold of it, hustled around, got some money, and hired some simple minded farmers to sign their names as witnesses, then sent the book afloat.

His tongue rattled so swiftly that I could not catch much more than the above. He spoke of the iniquities of Brigham Young and his successors, drawing no line whatever; so, when his meeting was closed, I asked him if he referred to the Reorganized Church, while speaking of the wickedness of the Utah people. His reply was that he meant everybody who believed in Joe Smith and his book. I had not opportunity, at that time, to say more; so, depending on further development, and the Lord to direct, I left him.

The following Thursday night I attended his service, and put in the box the following question: "In your discourse Sunday night, January 7, you spoke of somebody's grandfather dying at Sing Sing prison. To whose grandfather did you refer, and what was that grandfather's name?" To this I signed my name, and as pastor of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints here. In his reply he said the question was not such as they would like to have, but he would give it an answer. He then turned on to the Book of Mormon, said its real author was Homus, and his grandfather died at Sing Sing. He then challenged any man to produce evidence that the book was what it claimed to be.

I informed him, after his meeting was closed, that I thought his challenge would be accepted. "All right," was his reply; so the following morning Brother Robertson got in touch with Brother S. W. L. Scott by phone, and I wrote him a letter.

I prepared another question, along the same line. It was as follows, "Inasmuch as you have made Mormonism a part of your talk, referring to all who believe in the mission of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon as being in the same class with Utah Mormonism, is it not a fact that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, who believe in the mission of Joseph Smith as a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the Book of Mormon as divine, is a separate religious body, having no connection whatever with the Mormon Church having headquarters at Salt Lake City? and further, is it not a fact that the said Reorganized Church is as strongly opposed to the doctrine of polygamy taught in Utah, as any religious body in the world?" This question I signed, the same as I had the previous one. I held it until Brother Scott arrived, with the object in view of drawing their fire, and the signal for the prospective conflict. The reply was very evasive, and Brother Scott called attention to it, the result of which he has already written. (HERALD for January 24.)

I have put in a few questions since, that have given them some worry. I have put them with the sole object of putting thinking minds to work. The questions and the replies thereto are as follows: 1. Was John the Baptist authorized of God to preach and baptize, and was John's baptism accepted by God? If so, why were the twelve Ephesians rebaptized? To this he replied with strong emphasis, that John had authority from God and that God accepted the baptism, but that John's baptism was unto repentance, and not into Christ; therefore the twelve men referred to, had to be rebaptized into Christ.

2. Who was Melchisedec, and what about his priesthood? Was it greater than that held by Aaron? His answer was, Of course it was greater, because it was direct from God; that the "without father, mother," etc., did not refer to Melchisedec, but to the order of priesthood, which was direct from God, who was without father, mother, etc.; but the priesthood of Aaron was from blood, and to illustrate his meaning, he said that if he could prove beyond doubt that there coursed through his veins one drop of the blood of Aaron, he could by legal right officiate in the Aaronic priesthood. I thought the answer excellent, considering his theological position.

3. Was not the Aaronic priesthood from God, as well as the Melchisedec? and which of these two priesthoods did Moses occupy? This question I could observe caused him some worry. However, he answered in the following manner. He admitted that it was from God, but was a priesthood of blood, etc.; the part of the question referring to Moses was not answered; only this statement made, "God was angry with Moses, and for this reason made him take his shoes off."

4. If, as Paul tells us, under the Aaronic priesthood the law (Jewish) was given and administered, what was given and administered under the Melchisedec? and in speaking of righteousness as distinct from the law, to what did Paul refer in Galatians 2:21? The substance of the reply was that the Melchisedec ministered in the Spirit, or spiritual things, and the Aaronic ministered in the letter, and that the righteousness referred to was the gospel.

The above answers have paved the way for another question, which I have not yet submitted to them, but possibly may within a few evenings. It is as follows: If, according to answers previously given, the Melchisedec priesthood ministers in spiritual things and the Aaronic in the letter, does the Melchisedec priesthood continue with the church of Christ? If so, what has become of its spiritual power, glory, and organization, Mark 16:17; 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4:1-15; James 5:14, as manifest in the days of the apostles and their immediate successors? If these things are done away, would it not be conclusive evidence that the Melchisedec priesthood, which ministers in spiritual things, has been removed from the church of Christ, and only the Aaronic, which ministers in the letter, remains; and further, if none but the proven posterity of Aaron can minister in this priesthood, is it not possible that the church of Christ is without any priesthood whatever?

I am fully confirmed in the thought, as a fact, that the Lord knew what he was talking about when he said of Zion: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper."

FRANCIS EARL.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, February 8, 1912.

Dear Herald: I have just read a short article from the pen of dear Brother C. A. Parkin, entitled, "What are you doing for Graceland?"

I heartily agree with him, that we should exert our energies to advance the interests of that worthy institution!

It seems to me that it is the nursery of the church. I wish I were possessed with means commensurate with my desires to aid in the better education of the young, and for that matter, the old, who have not yet lost ambition for the improvement of the latent talent when opportunities may present themselves for so doing.

It is really painful and wearying to listen to the beautiful gospel preached with flagrant grammatical errors that with a little study and thought might be avoided. I know that "outsiders" notice such faults, and it is really unnecessary in this day and age of educational advantages.

I feel that everyone in the church should take a deep interest in aiding Graceland to become not only a college second to none, but accredited with the best universities!

Yours for progress along lines leading to Christian perfection.

MARIE J. T. ADAMSON.

THURMAN, IOWA, February 20, 1912.

Editors Herald: I am writing you in regard to Wesley Martin, to know if he lives at Lamoni, and if he is a member of the Reorganization. His half sister, Mrs. Flora Stephenson (Mrs. Flora Mann-McElroy), lives here at Thurman, and has not heard of him for some time, she inquired of me, as she heard he was a member of the Latter Day Saints' Church, and his residence was at Lamoni.

In case you do not know of him, would you publish a few lines in the HERALD so we may locate him for her?

Yours respectfully,

JAY LEEKA.

CHARLES CITY, IOWA, February 17, 1912.

Editors Herald: I wish to bear my testimony for this blessed work, and to tell how much joy and comfort it has brought to me. When at times the burden has seemed greater than I could bear, the sweet comfort of God's Holy Spirit has been with me, and I can look back now and see where God's hand has been leading me through it all. I feel to thank him for it.

There are only a few Saints at this place, and we are trying to let our lights shine by having our Sunday school and prayer meetings; but when you get to prayer meeting and only have three present, it is nearly discouraging, but we are trying to keep our meetings up, knowing that God will do his part, if we do ours.

If Brother William Shakespeare should happen to see this, we just wish to say that the future does not look any brighter than it did when he was here.

We are in the Des Moines District, but have not had any preaching since a year ago last October, and then by Elder Dutton, of Wisconsin. I guess the elders in the Des Moines District have forgotten there is such a place as Charles City. I do not wish to find fault, but I can not help wondering at times why there are always to be found in certain towns every Sunday, from three to five elders, while the rest of the flock are starving for spiritual food.

Although there are only a few of us here, we are always willing to help towards railroad fare and board and room for anyone who will come our way.

Asking your prayers, that our little band may be united once more in serving the Lord.

MRS. H. S. OTT.

Jots Man.

Just a "jot" to say that the Spring River District is moving onward, as indicated by the late conference action, in organizing district quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, with the advice and consent of the First Presidency.

It is conceded that there was gathered together the best representative body that ever convened in the district, the organization of the quorums being the incentive. At the proper time the conference rested for two hours. Each quorum held its own meeting, balloted for president, and after election was had the presidents chose their counselors. The spirit of peace, good will, solemnity, and progression pervaded each heart, abundantly testifying it was the right mové.

Elder W. H. Smart, of Joplin, Missouri, president of the quorum of elders, with Elders F. M. Connor, of Fairland, Oklahoma, and Charles Kiser, of Pittsburg, Kansas, counselors; the quorum to be known as Elders' Quorum No. 10.

The quorum of priests was duly organized, with Sidney N. Gray, of Joplin, Missouri, president, with Orson Bradley, of Webb City, Missouri, and Otto Hemple, of Pittsburg, Kansas, counselors. This is to be called Priests' Quorum No. 20.

The teachers quorum selected George Ross, of Pittsburg, Kansas, as president. He chose E. C. Pigg, of Weir City, Kansas, and H. L. McCall, of Columbus, Kansas, as his counselors. This is to be called Teachers' Quorum No. 21.

Brother John Virgen, of Webb City, Missouri, was chosen as president of the deacons. No counselors chosen as yet. This quorum will be known as Deacons' Quorum No. 26.

The district has also moved up in getting the reunion on its own feet. Organization will be effected at the next reunion. It has also dedicated all its churches that can be at present. In fact Spring River District is alive, through its active ministry and wideawake membership.

The preaching at the conference was of a high character and well received, Brethren Hale Smith, Ellis Short, and Henry Sparling being the speakers. A large and commodious storeroom near the church was turned into a dining hall, and was the real social event of the conference. The viands dished up in "good taste" all furnished and equipped by the branch and free to all Saints and friends who wished to partake. This indicative of the energy of the Pittsburg Saints and that they do not do things by halves.

Come to our next reunion to be held in the beautiful Pittsburg park and be thoroughly convinced.

Brother George Edwards is now a fixture of this district, having moved his family from Springfield, Missouri, to Weir City, Kansas. He was ordained an elder on the 11th by the order of the conference.

We are hard at work building a new church at Scammon, Kansas. The moving pictures of other days under similar conditions move vividly before our optics.

T. W. CHATBURN.

A Word from Detroit.

The Saints of this city have had a strong desire to have a church building in which to worship, one which they could call their own. As a result of this desire, about five years ago they purchased a lot, thus taking the first step.

When Brother Arthur Allen was appointed to this field in the spring of 1910, they were using a rented building. Brother Allen soon became convinced of the need of a church building, and at once entered into the work, with them, of securing a new church building, with his characteristic earnestness and energy, and with the result that October 1, 1910, the committee was authorized to begin the work.

Means were soon collected and the basement started; it was pushed rapidly to completion, a temporary roof put on, and on December 18, 1910, the basement was opened for public service without any debt on it. This was so satisfactory that it became an inspiration for the work that was soon to follow.

In August, 1911, they began the work of raising the money with which to complete the building, and met with such satisfactory success that on October 1, 1911, they began the work of erecting the superstructure. The basement is a fine one and was in constant use during the building of the upper auditorium, with the exception of one Sunday.

The building is forty by seventy in the main square, with a bow window for the pulpit and a tower sixteen feet square on the northwest corner, making it forty-five by seventy-nine feet over all. The tower is a little higher than the comb of the roof. The roof is of slate; the basement has solid brick walls; the superstructure is frame, brick veneered; dark red brick, with white stone window caps and sills, and white stone water table; the windows are gothic art glass, with a fine combination of colors. It makes a very imposing and nice appearance from the outside. The interior is finished nicely. The entrances to the basement, main auditorium, and gallery are all in the tower, and are very convenient; the gallery will seat sixty-eight and is carpeted and seated with pews which are very comfortable; the main auditorium is finished in oak, the floor carpeted all over, and it is nicely seated with opera chairs of the latest pattern, and will seat 367 as now arranged, making a total in the upper part of 435. The floor is raised at the rear, with raised platforms for the pulpit and choir; is finely lighted with electric lights; the acoustic properties are fine.

The basement will seat about two hundred in the main room, is well lighted, has two dressing rooms with toilets, and a baptismal font between the two dressing rooms in the main room; a furnace room with a fine furnace in it; another room fitted up as a kitchen, or general utility room, and everything complete throughout the building.

It has cost them, in actual outlay of money, $7,500, outside of the furnishings. This could not have been built for that money, but for the constant personal supervision and labor of Brother Allen, who brought his experience as a contractor and builder into the work, and the great amount of volunteer labor that has been given.

In the sixteen months the building has been under construction they have raised the sum of $5,000, leaving them the sum of $2,500 as the outstanding debt on the church. The estimated worth of the church and lot to-day is $12,000.

The Saints of Detroit are justly proud of their new church home. It is a credit to the church and a monument to the united and persevering efforts of a band of Saints who have sacrificed in the interests of the work of God in this city.

The church was formally opened to the public on Sunday, February 18, 1912. At the morning service the pastor, Elder Arthur Allen, was in charge; Elder William Fligg made the opening prayer; the sermon was by Elder F. A. Smith; the song service was in charge of the branch chorister, Henrietta Davis, with a full choir, Sister Jennie Hunter at the organ. The music was fine. A large audience. The weather lovely, and the opening was pronounced a success by all present, so far as we have been able to learn. The evening service was as well attended and Elder William Fligg, the president of the London Branch, was the preacher. He was supported on the stand by Elders Allen, Smith, Liddy, and Shippy. The beaming countenances of the Saints bore witness of the joy within. It was surely a happy day for the Detroit Branch. What had seemed to them to be almost an impossibility two years before had been realized beyond their fondest anticipation. May unity and prosperity continue with them in their new home. The church is on Fourth Avenue, near Holden, Third Avenue car line.

OBSERVER.

The Love-Hansen Debate.

On January 15, at Santa Rosa, California, a debate began between Earnest C. Love, of the Church of Christ (non-progressive Campbellites), and Paul M. Hanson, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Four propositions were discussed, viz, (1) The Bible is the complete and final revelation of God's will to man. Love in the affirmative. (2) The Book of Mormon is of divine authenticity; and its teachings entitled to the respect and belief of all Christian people. Hanson to affirm; and two church propositions. Three nights were devoted to each of the first two, and four to each of the church propositions.

Elder Love is the same man whom Brother Hanson met in debate at Santa Ana last summer, and who wished to repeat it in his home town. He is editor of the Pacific Tidings, is very aggressive, and possibly above the average of their men as a debater. His tactics, however, do not differ in any essential particular, and the same old rehash of attacks on the character of Joseph Smith, the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and the early Saints in general, with some of Braden's and Neal's "affidavits," and some of the latter's "dynamite" (?) was about all the audience was treated to by way of argument against us. He borrowed very liberally from his illustrious predecessors in the art of ridicule, even making use of Braden's "bowels yearned and eternity shook"; "Oh, what a yarn"; it raised a laugh, but placed a weapon in the hands of his opponent that the latter was not slow in using. He used Whitmer's address very extensively, and in seeking to prove the establishment of the New Testament church on the day of Pentecost, quoted P. P. Pratt in Voice of Warning to prove we teach it.

While on the first proposition Love made the statement that "credulity is the grandest faculty of the human mind," and when he began to ask for a sign Brother Hanson used it so effectively against him he was glad to tread lightly on that ground. On his church proposition he first had the apostles in the foundation, then later he had them in the scaffolding, to be removed when the church became complete. He was so dissatisfied with the way things were going that he issued a little folder containing an attack on us and taking the Brighamite position on the word otherwise in the Book of Mormon, Jacob 2. In this he stated that "God tolerated polygamy in the Old Testament." This was used against them with telling effect.

The debate has certainly helped the work in Santa Rosa, and the courteous, gentlemanly manner of Brother Hanson, contrasted so strongly with that of his opponent that it won friends, even among Love's people. One lady stated, and it was sanctioned by others standing around, that if she went to heaven she expected to meet us (Brother Hanson and the writer), but if Love were going to be there she would not care to go. She is not a member of any church. The chairman was very much prejudiced at the beginning, but was very much our friend at the close. The debate was well attended all through, and several times the comment was heard on the streets, "That young Mormon has got Love all tied up." The last Sunday evening we had twenty-six "outsiders" out to our preaching service, and anyone who knows the history of the work in Santa Rosa will concede that to be almost a miracle. Brother Hanson is an able defender of the work, and won a victory for the cause at Santa Rosa.

FRED B. FARR.

Elder Joseph Carlos Clapp.

He departed this life in the evening of January 31, 1912, at the Independence Sanitarium, after a struggle with bronchial trouble. Assistance was rendered for his relief, but without avail. He was cheerful, patient, and courageous through all his afflictions.

Elder Clapp was born at Far West, Missouri, August 24, 1837, and was blessed by Joseph Smith the Prophet. At the time of the driving out of the Saints from Missouri he, with his parents, moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, and there witnessed the tragic scenes following the assassination of Joseph Smith the Prophet, and Hyrum Smith his brother.

In the year 1846 the family moved to Council Bluffs, Iowa; later to Salt Lake Valley, where he remained until he became a young man. The influences surrounding his father were such as to lead him to accept the doctrine of polygamy in a practical way. This troubled the young man, because of the sorrow and grief he witnessed on his mother's part. It caused him to determine to take his mother and her children away and provide for them. He made his father acquainted with his determination, and when opportunity offered itself, went to California and carried out his purposes.

It was while living in California that he became acquainted with the Reorganized Church, studied it, was convinced of its divinity and accepted it, being baptized June 6, 1863, and ordained an elder before the hands of the elders were removed from his head in the confirmation.

He became an active missionary in the church, having charge of missions part of the time. He suffered considerably during his travels, yet was greatly blessed, and remarkable instances of divine favor were shown him, as will be seen by those who may be interested in reading his autobiography as published in Autumn Leaves, beginning in the latter part of the year 1907.

He married Miss Serville Austin in the year 1878, January 24. To them were born three sons: Carl, Hollis, and George. He continued his missionary labors after his marriage, his wife accompanying him part of the time. Their mission was a difficult one, and attended with trial; however, not without many evidences of God's watchcare over them. Many were brought into the church by his efforts, and branches were organized in the field of his labor.

He moved about considerably during the later years of his life, which at times he said was much against his will, and advised against that way of doing.

He came to Independence about six months ago for relief from his afflictions, and obtained such assistance as was thought best for him, but without favorable results.

His life was a remarkable one and is worthy of a careful review. There are evidences of courage, endurance, fidelity, and heroism, indicating a strong character, one worthy for the Master's kingdom, one calculated to inspire others to noble purposes and deeds.

The funeral service was in charge of Elder W. H. Garrett; the sermon by Bishop E. L. Kelley. Flowers from the various auxiliary societies of the Independence Branch were brought for his grave. The remains were laid away in Mound Grove Cemetery, Independence.

G. E. HARRINGTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Brother W. S. Jenkins desires an elder to call on him at his home in Palisades, Colorado.

Sister Mary E. Smith, Lansing, Michigan: "The Saints are all well and doing well in the gospel. We enjoy the Spirit and they all try to be at the meetings. We have had two added to the church, and one ordained a priest. We have been very fortunate in raising money to help the work along and fix up the church."

Sister Joseph White, Gladwin, Iowa: "As a reader of your columns I have been strengthened by the letters of the Saints. We have no church or Sunday school to attend. I have four children and would like to have Sunday school here. I know this work is true. I was baptized in June, 1910, by Brother Burt, and I have been trying to live for my Master. I am alone in the work, as my husband has not yet seen the light of this latter day gospel. My prayer is that he may obey it. I attended conference this fall and was greatly blessed; the Spirit of the Lord was there among the Saints. I ask the prayers of the Saints that the Lord will bless me in doing his will."

Sister R. M. Maloney, Niangua, Missouri: "We are isolated and lonely. There was an evangelist holding meetings here last spring and a nephew of Brother Smith, only thirteen years old, got into an argument with him about Isaiah 29. I gave the preacher a copy of the Voice of Warning. Plenty of prejudice since. Tent meetings were held here in August."

Sister Effie J. McCullough, Pondcreek, Oklahoma: "We are still in the faith of the angel restored gospel. We are isolated from the Saints. The church papers are a great help and comfort to us. I give them out for others to read whenever I can. Many seem interested. I ask the prayers of the Saints that the Lord will prosper us temporally and spiritually."

News From Missions

Southern California.

Yesterday the beckoning call of the pleasant weather, parks, resorts, and theaters was heeded by an innumerable number of persons from all classes. The clear sky, green grass, and balmy atmosphere made one think of a beautiful summer day. Some were out to enjoy a little freedom after a week of close application to work. The day was much like other days in Los Angeles—California weather invites one to get out of doors. Very different are the climatic conditions here at this time of the year, as compared with the storms and low temperatures of the East. Yet there is something artificial to this country; and as for the favorable conditions, earthly things do not fully satisfy. Deep down in the hearts of men and women who have sensed to a degree the meaning of life, is a yearning for a higher and better life. And so there is a response on the part of many to the simple and soul-satisfying teachings of the Savior of the world. But those who respond are few in numbers compared with the hurrying and scurrying multitudes.

Nearly every cult is represented here; spiritualism, hypnotism, the mystifying oriental philosophies, "divine" healers of every brand, and a hundred other isms, not counting the multitudinous phases of Protestantism, call for a part of the time and attention of the investigator. No wonder that many become lost in the labyrinthian ways, or emerge from them all agnostically or atheistically inclined. But one sorrowful phase of the whole matter is the degeneracy everywhere apparent resulting from a lack of contact with God; the degeneracy is alarmingly manifested in the countenances and physiques of the surging masses, resultant from the setting of the supreme affections of the heart upon material things and seeking for mere pleasure and luxury. Onward the world moves—what of the finality?

Recently I called at San Francisco—what a change has taken place since I was there when I called on my way bound for the southern hemisphere. In how short a time the rumblings and devastation of an earthquake may be experienced! But new and greater buildings than the ones that were destroyed mark the old sites. I shuddered as I thought of the past and of a possible repetition of the earth again being shaken from its moorings.

Again in San Francisco. How beautiful is the view from the bay—as I looked out through the Golden Gate and peered across the great waters, in memory I retraced my steps in foreign fields, through New Zealand, Australia, across the mighty waters, preaching in the Holy Land and disseminating along my pathway the good things connected with the Lord's precious work of latter days. How swiftly but clearly my mind reviewed these scenes and experiences which followed in swift succession, as I looked out through the entrance to the harbor through which I passed when on my way to foreign fields. Again in San Francisco—and mingling with Saints, many of whom I met before.

But now I am back in Los Angeles. An address was delivered here in the city yesterday afternoon, in Blanchard Hall, by Elder F. M. Sheehy, who took for his subject, "The failings of Socialism, as compared with the teachings of Jesus Christ." In this hall the Socialists hold services every Sunday afternoon. The address was by request of their pastor, Reverend J. W. Wells, secretary of the Christian Socialist Fellowship of California. There was a large audience. The order was for Brother Sheehy to occupy in the stand, his speech to be followed by questions from the audience, and a number of five-minute speeches from different ones in the assembly, then Brother Sheehy to have a few minutes in closing the discussion. The whole proved very interesting. Only a few of the points can here be presented. That there was a deplorable state of affairs in the world was recognized. But that Socialism was the panacea for every human ill could well be questioned. Jesus Christ was held forth as the highest expression of Deity, and to detach from his work a part and attempt to make that part perform the work for which the whole was designed was not the proper way. Light came to the world through Jesus Christ: and a part of that light makes known that man is a duality. If Christ is appealed to as a Socialist, or Socialism attempts to find its basis in him, his work should be considered and accepted as a whole.

Man being a duality, in possession of a spirit as well as a body, mere physical environments do not meet the needs of humanity. There must be environments that reach the spirit as well as the body. The whole work of Christ must be held intact. Why appeal to Christ, and accept only a detached part of his teachings, thereby creating a condition similar to what is found in religious sects, which is denounced by Socialists? The spiritual needs must not be forgotten; man has a subjective nature as well as a physical organization—and the words of Jesus were quoted, "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." Physical environments mean much, but they are not everything.

The matter that was presented in the five-minute speeches showed what could be said when the "trolley" was off. One speaker asserted that environment was everything; that after a long dry spell rains would fill the trees with life; then added the difference between a man and a tree was that a tree was a soul with its roots in the earth, man was a soul the roots of which were in his stomach. Another speaker had an "orthodox" Bible, not one made eighteen centuries ago, but one consisting of the teachings of Emerson, Paine, Jefferson, Lincoln, Hubbard, et al. One speaker said one could not live according to the teachings of Christ under present social conditions. Another speaker devoted his whole time to an arraignment of the religious mind and the claims made in the Bible for Christ.

I need only say that in replying Brother Sheehy reaffirmed his former positions; and declared that so far as the Bible was concerned, the chief point to be considered was not its antiquity but its principles; that principles of right are always right, not being affected by antiquity. In answer to the assertion that one could not under existing social conditions keep the teachings of Christ, Brother Sheehy said the teachings of the Savior could be kept now as well as they could be kept in the times of the Roman empire. Then articles from the Order of Enoch were read to show what the church is doing along lines to establish equality—not waiting for Rockefeller, et al, to “disgorge.”

And now what of Zion? Speaking prophetically, it is announced that “Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.” Zion represents the practical realization of the ideal of the church. In Zion is found every vital governmental principle; therefore, it is the “perfection of beauty.” Where any fundamental principle of government is ignored, democratic, representative, or theocratic, there will be, sooner or later, decay and oppression. God must not be forgotten. And so I have faith in Zion. Zion’s interests are my interests, and with her cause is wrapped up my brightest expectations.

“I say unto you that Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven. And the day shall come, when the nations of the earth shall tremble because of her, and shall fear because of her terrible ones. The Lord hath spoken it.”

“But firstly, let my army become very great, and let it be sanctified before me, that it may become fair as the sun, and clear as the moon, and that her banners may be terrible unto all nations; that the kingdoms of this world may be constrained to acknowledge that the kingdom of Zion is in very deed the kingdom of our God and his Christ; therefore, let us become subject unto her laws.”

“Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world. . . .”

“I the Lord . . . willeth that all men shall know that the day speedily cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world.”

“Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall be fulfilled.”—Doctrine and Covenants, pp. 166, 283, 284, 118, 2, 3, 4.

In closing I wish to say that it fell to my lot not long ago to engage in a fourteen night’s discussion at Santa Rosa, California, with Ernest C. Love, editor of the Pacific Tidings, a small paper published in the interest of the “Church of Christ,” of which he is a representative. The debate was held in Trembley Hall. There was a fine attendance; and judging from the favorable comment of nonmembers of the respective parties in discussion, the debate proved educational to many. It is not for me to say, but of course I felt like our side came up smiling after every round! Elder Fred B. Farr acted as my moderator, and rendered valuable aid.

We have started out again and have held meetings in Marysvale, Junction, Kingston, and Circleville, and are just leaving the latter place for Panguitch. In each place we have had a full house and an interested audience, with the exception of one night when there was a free dance in town, and that is one thing that we can not beat in Utah. We held meetings and had a fair audience at that time, however.

In one of the above-mentioned places the bishop took us home to supper and also to stay all night. With the exception of that place, we have been obliged to rent a room at all others between here and Salt Lake City where we did not have relatives. At present we are staying with a cousin of my father.

The people are all anxious to hear our message, with the exception of a few who are narrow minded. Some come out in every town and plainly say, “We haven’t been to meeting for years.”

We run across some startling accidents of nature out here in reference to personal testimony; one man here testifying that he was an eyewitness to the fact that Joseph the Seer was a polygamist because two old ladies had told him so. So it goes on every hand, in the endeavor not only to fasten the blame on some one else, but to have an excuse for holding to it, for he said that he had lived in polygamy since he was twenty-six years old, and proud of it, and expected to continue to live that way. Of course such people simply hang themselves if let run far enough.

A great many people have and are buying our books and are investigating and reading for themselves. We hope to see the day when some of them will come our way.

Ever working and praying for the cause, I am,

I found a big flock of sheep! A little over a year ago I stopped off at Anamosa to visit Brother McClout and see what prospects there were for meetings in his neighborhood. I found two families of Saints, Brother and Sister William H. Buckner and Brother and Sister Fred McClout; good Saints, and anxious for meetings; so they announced by phone meetings for that night; we had only a few out, but they were good listeners, and I spoke five nights and then had to go to district conference; but the last night two of those present asked me to return, and they promised to try and get the Methodist Episcopal church for me to speak in at Fairview, a small inland town. I learned later these two men were trustees of the church. So after our district conference I returned and started meetings in the Methodist Episcopal church, but there was lots of opposition. Of course the preacher ordered me out, and the trustees ordered me to continue, and one brought an ax to chop the door in if they locked me out, and finally the presiding elder said they had better let me alone; so I had the use of the church over two weeks, had good attendance and a fine interest. I came back again last May and held meetings in schoolhouses, and am now preaching in a large room of a private dwelling in Fairview that was fixed up by people not then members of our church, and am having fine attendance and interest and have baptized twenty-five here, so far, and the end is not yet.

We now have a new branch, a fine Sunday school, and the sisters have an aid society called “Zion’s Circle.” I was present at their meeting last week, about twenty members and friends present. And say, in a whisper, I was guilty of being proud; yes, sir, really proud, of my family in the gospel; and if you had been there I am sure you would have excused me for such vanity. But I thank our Father in heaven and give him all the glory, for it was the Spirit that attended the word that made them see and understand.

Have baptized thirty-nine so far this conference year, and more are now ready, but they are a little afraid of the cold water yet.

Elder Warren Turner had held meetings in this locality and baptized his daughter and her husband, William H. Buckner and wife, also Fred McClout and wife, but nearly all I have baptized never had heard a Latter Day Saint sermon. Nearly all are now taking a church paper, and all have a Book of Mormon in the house, and all able to give a good reason for the hope they have in the restored gospel of Jesus Christ.

Brethren L. G. Joslin, priest, president of the branch; George R. Joslin, teacher; Fred McClout, deacon; L. G. Joslin, superintendent of the Sunday school; Alonzo Beem, assistant superintendent; Olga Joslin, secretary; Sylvia Joslin, treasurer; Nada Joslin, organist; Sister Eliza McClout, librarian; Fred McClout, janitor.

Thanking God for his goodness and all blessings, I am,
Your brother,

FIRST CHURCH ITEMS.

"And departing, leave behind us Footprints on the sands of time."

Event after event is unfolding before us here in rapid succession. If comparison determines the basis for fluctuation, the conditions at the present time certainly indicate interest developed to a point that is bound to manifest itself into fruitfulness.

Our missionary, Brother J. A. Tanner, by the grace of God is imparting unto us a knowledge of the world's events associated with the establishment of the "kingdom of heaven," that greatly exceeds our fondest anticipations. These services are very well attended, and we are further pleased to add that a number of outsiders are greatly interested.

The writer just came home from one of these services (being Sunday evening), and the different features brought out were the events leading up to the restoration of the gospel. Our brother was blessed with a great degree of liberty, and was wonderfully aided in presenting this subject matter with an eloquence and clearness that served to edify and strengthen us to a considerable degree.

Concerning our Religio society, this body of young people met as usual on last Tuesday evening and rendered an excellent program in connection with the lesson study. The main feature of the evening was the reading of their monthly publication called "The Echo," consisting of editorial, social, and humorous matter. The effort was favorably commented upon by all.

The services from which we expect to receive our greatest portion of spiritual strength seem to be interfered with of late. We were prevented from making our Thursday evening as successful as we would liked to have made it on account of a repetition of furnace trouble. Our deacon, whom we exonerate from all blame, has urged us to patiently bear with him until the difficulty is overcome.

Our Sunday school organization is aiming to reach a point of efficiency which they believe will serve to increase the enrollment to quite an extent. Notice was given of another one of those interesting officers' and teachers' meetings. At this meeting Brother J. A. Tanner will give us a lecture on "How to teach a lesson."

Our dear Sister Culver, aged eighty-six, is quite sick, as is also Brother Sherman's little girl and Brother Guy Fairbank's little boy. The prayers of the Saints are earnestly solicited in their behalf.

FRANK F. WIPER.

FEBRUARY 18, 1912.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Soon after the appearance of our January letter, one of the Saints remarked that he was glad to see that Philadelphia was still on the map. He seemed to have mistaken our silence for inaction, and had, perhaps, concluded that we were dead. However, if the Philadelphia Branch be a corpse, it's a mighty active one, and it would require a courageous graveyard to hold the remains.

Perhaps this is treating the subject in too "grave" a manner, but as a matter of fact, it was our continual activity, rather than any lack of activity, to which our silence was due. Were each week to contain twice its number of days, and were each day twice its usual length, then perhaps we could safely allow a spare hour in writing; but under the present chronological system, writing is a luxury that can only be indulged in at rare intervals.

Take for instance, our roster for the past two weeks. On January 30, the Thirteenth District of the Philadelphia Sunday School Association held its annual convention at our church. The afternoon was devoted to a series of institutes on elementary work, the home department, and on opportunity. This was followed by a superintendents' and pastors' supper, and round table conference and business meeting, and the exercises were concluded by a meeting at which the chief topic was "Increased efficiency." Forty schools were represented and our church was filled to the doors, indeed many of the visitors were kind enough to say that it was the most successful convention in the history of the district. At the business meeting, which preceded the exercises of the evening, the annual election of officers took place, and of a total of three, two of these are Latter Day Saints, so that our school has twice as many officers as the other thirty-nine combined, and in addition, our Brother Walter W. Smith was elected to the executive committee, and Sister Anna Zimmermann was chosen district elementary superintendent.

With the sacrament service on the Sunday following, we ushered in a series of special meetings that continued through the week and closed with the New York and Philadelphia district convention and conference on Saturday. Among the speakers were President Frederick M. Smith and Elders U. W. Greene and R. C. Evans, a notable array. President Frederick M. Smith presided at the conference that evening, and preached the dedicatory sermon of our new church the next morning, and was speaker in the evening. That's our hospitable way of treating visitors—putting them to work and keeping them at it. To demonstrate how necessary it had been to enlarge our church, every available seat was taken, the platform was crowded and many were lined up in the back of the room. We had opened the meetings with two baptisms, we closed them with five more, and there are at least three candidates for Sunday evening.

The week's work proved to be most successful, and much of this is due to the unselfish and unceasing labor of our pastor. Indeed under his care, the past year has proved to be a most fruitful one. Over sixty were baptized since January, 1911, and of these by far the greater number were from families in no way connected with the church. Much credit is due to the Sunday school, for of these probably two thirds were introduced through that department of the church work, and although many of these would have ultimately entered the church through some other channel, in some cases the Sunday school was the means of bringing a realization of the truth of the gospel.

On Monday evening following the dedication, President Frederick M. Smith delivered a lecture on the "Relation between religion and education." It was one of the series connected with our evening school and marked the opening of our second term. In it he made a strong plea for "rounded" men and women, and he showed how destructive was the old belief that ignorance was necessary to religion and how it served to drive from church work many trained, educated workers.

Classes are to be held in gymnastic, music, textile work, dressmaking, millinery, embroidering, stenography, bookkeeping, chemistry, history, drawing, and English literature, and from present indications our enrollment will exceed that of last term. Through it we hope to reach many who would otherwise be unapproachable, and if it have no other value in it, there always lies an opportunity to aid others, a no unimportant part of God's work.

"JUDGE."

Independence, Missouri.

The junior singing classes, which meet with Sister Anderson on Wednesdays and Thursdays, the church choir weekly practice, and the Ladies' Aid gathering for strenuous work, together with the meetings of the leagues, and clubs and auxiliaries, are all, as usual, very busy.

The Men's Athletic Club gave an entertainment on the 15th, having for their leader, Doctor H. E. Braum, Physical Instructor.

The young people are forging ahead. At the early meeting of the 18th about one hundred were present, and a new method of conducting the meeting was introduced by Bishop Bullard, who presided. After the usual opening three of the Saints were requested to offer prayer, then quite a number of the younger folks occupied the remaining time in testimony and singing, and it proved to be a profitable and cheering service.

The carpenters had, during the week, been making a few changes in the platform in the upper auditorium, it being enlarged slightly.

Sunday morning the juniors were called up onto "the stage" by their director to sing in honor of Washington's birthday anniversary and they did very well. The day was pleasant and the few changes suggested in the usual Sunday meetings tended to relieve the monotony of weekly church service. A "new minister" held forth at night, our choir gave a splendid vocal and instrumental sacred concert, and, lastly, instead of the afternoon prayer and testimony meeting, we had the pleasure of listening to speeches of import from Brethren G. E. Harrington, Horace Roberts, Harvey Sandy and J. F. Rudd, who are engaged in the all-important work of the good literature distribution including also an address on that subject by Elder J. W. Rushton.

The morning preaching hour was occupied by Bishop Kelley. The subject of our brother's discourse was "Peace," and he read several selections on that theme from the Scriptures. During this service our little brother, named "American John" by somebody, seeing Brother Joseph seated near by, thought it just the proper thing to have done,—to be blessed by the Prophet as well as by Grandpa Rushton. So it was done.

The discourse of the new minister referred to was by Elder Evan A. Davis, who spoke at the evening meeting on the subject of the infinite justice, goodness, and wisdom of God. It was full of inspiring thought. He said among other remarks treating on the omniscience of his heavenly Father, "The church is not the only thing that God is interested in. He is interested in the welfare of mankind, the whole earth and in all the creations of his handiwork."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

A quiet spirit reigned during our sacrament service the first Sunday of the month, which was in charge of our pastor, Brother T. J. Elliot. There seems to be quite an improvement in the attendance and interest in the evening prayer services.

The priesthood meeting was held at 6 p. m., February 4. Brethren T. J. Elliot, S. A. Burgess, George Reeves, J. Davis, and G. S. Trowbridge were the speakers during the past month, using subjects of benefit and interest.

While all are to be commended for their efforts, Brother G. S. Trowbridge's discourse on charity is especially worthy of note, because it was his initial sermon, he having been ordained but recently to the office of priest. He did well.

We are pleased to report that we now have Sunday school and Religio normal classes, and a good interest which we trust will continue.

Sister John Davis has been very ill and requests the prayers of the Saints for her early recovery.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT IN AND FOR THE DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

The Saints and friends of the District of Virginia, please take notice, that upon the resignation of Brother Isaac Coffman, by reason of his aged condition and infirmity, of the office of bishop's agent in and for the District of Virginia (formerly known as the New Hope District) that Doctor P. P. Starke, of Auburn Mills, Virginia, has been duly appointed agent to act in and for said district. We commend Brother Starke to the brethren and friends of Virginia and ask that they remember him in the position of bishop's agent and assist him in his work, that the Lord may bless the work and each helper in the district may receive the special blessing that the helpers of the Master's cause are entitled to.

Brother Isaac Coffman has been a good and worthy veteran in the cause for a number of years, acting as bishop's agent and fully acquitting himself for one who is interested in the Master's cause, striving to perform the work allotted to him. We trust that the Lord will especially remember him now in his declining years, and that he may be strengthened, guided and directed in whatever he is called to do. The Bishopric extend special thanks to Brother Isaac Coffman for his help in the work as bishop's agent for Virginia in the past.

I trust that each one may remember the address and name of the new agent, and that each may assist by encouraging by their help and thus fulfilling also the law of Christ, I am in behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Pastoral.

To Saints of Little Sioux, Iowa, District; Greeting: We prefer to invite you at the beginning of the year, rather than urge you near its close, to look well to your faith, and works in the discharge of duty, and obedience to the revealed word, not least of which are the financial requirements. We need not cite you to chapters or sections; suffice it: That the Holy Scriptures, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants all teach tithes, offerings, consecrations, for extension of gospel, care of poor, that the law is just, and applies to all who have means, large or small.

The churches of the world to-day adopt tithing, and many who have not the light we have are loud in its praise. Say what we may, the Brighamites are strong in their faith on this feature of the law, and note their financial success, as a church, and power to support missions, because they observe it. Our maternal grandmother, fifty years ago, carried her one tenth of pumpkins, potatoes, carrots, etc., to Brigham's storehouse, and because of all complying the "desert blossomed," by their works. That church to-day can do financially what we can not. Some say, "We do not like the present management," or some of our ministry, missionaries, or their families are squandering the means supplied. I made the statement at our late reunion, that the "faultfinders" were not the tithe payers. That the ones who paid most, or regularly, enjoyed their devotion to duty, and compliance with the law, to which Bishop C. J. Hunt said, "Amen, I've found it so in Gallands Grove District." Not all are healed; shall we deny "the promise"? All are not living as they should; shall we turn from the truth because of it? Do we desire the poor to be cared for? the gospel preached? Yes, assuredly. Will our prayers alone suffice? We think not. Are you as conscientious in your obedience to financial requirements as in other gospel requirements? Do you teach it to your children as you do other features of the gospel? If not, why not? Have you made a covenant by sacrifice? In what? Not by uniting with the church, and obedience to the gospel that you expect shall bring to you eternal, celestial life and glory. No, not that; but in the denying yourself for the work's sake. Not by a dollar now and then, to salve your conscience, but by doing your whole duty. Of him who hath naught, naught is required; of him who hath little, little is asked; he who hath much, hath much to give.

We hear daily of the "high cost of living"; we think it should more properly be called, the cost of high living; and are we not falling into the error of the world to-day, in desiring the luxuries, the fashions, the demands of the day, as do they? To an extent, yes. We desire to have all converted to the needs of the hour, the care of the poor, to the support of those who bear the message. Are you doing your part? We hope to enroll every member of our district on our bishop's agent's book, who loves the work and thereby desire its success, we have a subagent in every branch, or you may remit direct.

ALMA M. FYRANDO, Bishop's Agent.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA.

Attention High Priests.

To the Quorum of High Priests, Greeting: Dear brethren; another conference year is near a close: and the time is near for us to assemble in quorum session. I was more than pleased with the showing made in the sessions of 1911; our attendance record was splendid, exceeding previous years, and a number of our meetings were highly educational, as well as spiritual. Let us see to it that the good work is kept up.

Allow me to call your attention to the necessity of reporting, that you be prompt, and make your report as full as possible—all reports of the work done the past year should be sent in the first of March.

Brethren in the field, when you are making out your annual report to your minister in charge, neglect not to send a report to our quorum secretary, and the local brethren, Go and do thou likewise; there were some reports came in last year near the close of our gathering, and this should not be. Let us aid and accommodate our secretary, so that he shall have ample time to systematize his work, and thus facilitate whatever shall be necessary to bring before the quorum meetings.

Printed programs will be mailed with the report blanks to each member, and I would suggest that you bring the program with you to conference, and come prepared to bear your portion of quorum labor, and to take part in the discussion of the important subjects presented for examination and consideration.

Trusting that the peace of God and the guidance of the Holy Spirit shall be with us in all of our sessions, is my earnest desire and humble prayer.

JOSEPH A. TANNER, President.

An Appeal.

Please say to the Saints of the Spring River District that we have completed the foundation of our chapel at Scammon, Kansas; the sills are laid and we are ready for the carpenters who can give us a few days' work, or will send us the earnings of a few days, and all others interested in this godly work who can and will donate a few dollars toward the erection of our little home, it will be greatly appreciated. The Saints here are all miners—"the humble of the earth." They have been paying rent for a hall for seven years. Every man is taxing himself to the utmost, and the sisters aid with weary brain and fingers, and are showing their faith by their works. If we can secure sufficient money to pay the lumber bill we believe we can marshal the hosts sufficient to put up the building with our own work, all of which must of necessity be gratis.

Who will hear our plaintive cry and say in his soul, 'I'll help that struggling branch'?

Died.

ERVIN.—A. B. Ervin, son of Alexander and Sarah Ervin, was born near Hamden, Ohio, February 25, 1841. Died near Jackson, Ohio, February 1, 1912, of apoplexy. Baptized January 25, 1880, by L. R. Devore. He leaves his wife, two sons, and five daughters to mourn the loss of a good husband and father; also fourteen grandchildren, four brothers and one sister, and a host of friends. Sermon by A. B. Kirkendall in the Evergreen Church. Interment in the Evergreen Cemetery.

Dearest father thou hast left us,
 And our loss we deeply feel,
 But 'tis God that hath bereft us;
 He can all our sorrows heal.

KNAPP.—Thursday, February 1, at 8.30 o'clock, after an illness of a few days from paralysis, Sister Melissa Otto-Knapp closed her eyes in the slumber that knows no awakening in this world. Grandma Knapp, as she was commonly known, was born July 22, 1825, Farmers Valley, Pennsylvania, and at the time of her death was aged 86 years, 6 months, and 9 days. She is survived by six children, as follows: Mrs. J. J. Gorman, Republican City, Nebraska; G. E. Knapp, Natoma, Kansas; Mrs. A. Smith, Stuart, Nebraska; E. J. Knapp, Omaha, Nebraska; F. E. Knapp, Maxwell, Nebraska; Mrs. O. W. Grout, Beloit, Kansas. Sister Knapp has lived a long and eventful life, in which her kind and lovable disposition had made many warm friends for her. Her husband died eleven years ago. "After all, there is something tenderly appropriate in the serene death of the old. Nothing is more touching than the death of the young, the strong. But when the duties of life have all been nobly done; when the sun touches the horizon; when the purple twilight falls upon the past, present, and the future; when memory with dim eyes can scarcely spell the blurred and faded records of the vanished days—then, surrounded by kindred and friends, death comes like a strain of music. The day has been long, the road weary, and the traveler gladly stops at the welcome inn." Grandma was baptized into the Reorganization March 1, 1863, at Wheeler, Iowa, by W. H. Kelley. Funeral was held from the home, February 3, Beloit, Kansas. Address by Elder S. J. Madden. Interment in the Elmwood Cemetery by the side of her husband.

LAWS.—John F. Laws was born June 14, 1874, at Nosell, Missouri; baptized into the Latter Day Saints' Church December 13, 1908, at Purcell, Missouri; ordained to the office of teacher October 9, 1910, but owing to ill health he was not able to attend to his duties long, but displayed a patient, Christian spirit during his long illness and never lost faith in God. He was survived by a wife and four children, a father, and several brothers and sisters. But while he leaves many sorrowing friends behind he has gone to meet a loving mother and three babies in the great beyond where God has prepared a place according to his infinite wisdom. Funeral services conducted by Elder Sparling in Purcell church, and interment in the Friends' cemetery at this place.

EVANS.—At Wellburn, Ontario, Canada, Sister W. J. Evans, born October 4, 1866, in West Nissouri Township, County of Middlesex, Ontario, Canada; baptized May 27, 1894, in Ottawa County, Kansas, by Priest Henry Resh; died January 13, 1912, at Wellburn, Ontario, Canada, of heart failure. She was about her household duties when she fell dead. Brother Evans had left home a few hours before to take care of his grandchildren, while the daughter went to town. Sister Evans was a true Saint, and died firm in the faith. Her cheery, kind-hearted disposition made many friends for herself and for the church. A husband, two daughters and one son are left to mourn her death. The funeral sermon preached by G. C. Tomlinson in the Wellburn Methodist Church to a very large audience of relatives and sympathizing friends. The Methodist choir furnished special music.

SHARROCK.—Elder F. M. Sharrock was born November 25, 1845, near Taylorville, Illinois. Died February 9, 1912, at Pana, Illinois, making him 66 years, 2 months, 15 days old at death. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, seven children, and one sister. He was baptized by Ensley Curtis November 30, 1890, at Rich Hill, Missouri, and was soon afterwards ordained an elder, and presided over the Rich Hill Branch for a number of years. He moved to Pana, Illinois, and at the organization of the Pana, Illinois, Branch, he was selected for president, and was their presiding officer for eight years with the exception of about eighteen months. He was a faithful member of the church and a noble servant of the Lord. He was loved by all who knew him. Funeral service in charge of Elder Frank Izatt; sermon by Elder R. T. Walters.

"There are four lines of advance for social development," says Davis Watson in Social Advance—"individual effort, legislative action, social cooperation, and economic betterment." Under such a category it should be easy to classify all effort. The book itself is a sane and discriminate analysis of the whole social question and goes as far toward a definition of Socialism as possible. (George H. Doran Company, New York.)—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE PERFECT LAW OF LIBERTY.

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."—James 1: 25.

The term, "The perfect law of liberty," suggests two great fundamental ideas—law, and liberty.

What splendid themes. When we consider how this church stands for law, the law of God in its entirety, and for liberty, the right of man to believe and be, with all that this means, we should be filled with joy and freely forgive those who have misunderstood and slandered us.

Without liberty man is a slave and can not develop and express himself as God has designed that he should. And without law there can be no true and safe liberty. As the old proverb has it: "If liberty with law is fire on the hearth, liberty without law is fire on the floor."

PERFECT AND IMPERFECT LAWS.

All human systems of law are experimental and evolutionary. Men pass a law. In a little while they outgrow it. Then they chafe under it, evade it or break it for a time, until at last they annul or forget it and make a new law to meet new conditions and satisfy new public sentiment.

Blackstone lays down the rule that human laws are "the embodiment of the moral sentiment of the people." The moral sentiment of the people changes from generation to generation. We can not approve of the old blue laws of the Puritan's, one of which was: "No woman shall kiss her child on the Sabbath or on a fasting day."

In those days moral sentiment considered it a crime for a fond mother to kiss her child on the Sabbath day; we do not feel that way now,—unless indeed we stand too much in awe of the germ theory, and germs do not know Sunday from Monday. So we have discarded and almost forgotten the old "blue laws";—how aptly were they named! Our children will discard some of the laws that we now cherish.

Half the legislative enactments of states and nations remain inactive and soon are forgotten. Many of the ordinances of every city are never enforced. Our statute books are cumbered with laws that are inoperative, some of which we presently discover to be foolish and others wicked,—that is, wicked from the new viewpoint, as we now would consider it wicked to hang a man for stealing a sheep, a pleasant custom that our fathers had, and a legal one, too, at the time.

Those who have recourse to the law do not find it perfect in conception, and too often it is not perfect in operation. Voltaire, with his characteristic, biting sarcasm, said: "I never was ruined but twice—once when I lost a lawsuit, and once when I gained one."

Human systems of law are never perfect,—always striving toward perfection. Human brains and hearts, out of which human laws proceed, and by which they are interpreted, and human wills, by which their enforcement is determined, are all alike imperfect. But God is perfect in intellect, emotion, and will, and his power to execute is unlimited. So we are told:

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. . . . The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes . . . the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. —Psalm 19: 7-9.

Purity, righteousness, truth, and perfection characterize the law of the Lord; and those who submit to its beneficent rule receive conversion, rejoicing, and enlightenment.

LIBERTY.

Liberty is one of the watchwords of human progress. France, Germany, Great Britain, America,—all civilized nations—cherish as the brightest pages in their history those pages that record some victorious struggle for liberty. We in America delight to make the "eagle scream" and the "welkin ring" on our "Independence Day."

Every schoolboy has recited the burning words of the erratic but eloquent Patrick Henry: "I know not what course others may take, but, as for me, give me liberty or give me death." They sound bombastic, but they are genuine words, springing from humanity's heart. Thousands have made the choice and have died in their struggle to obtain liberty for themselves—or, more glorious object, for others.

THE SHADOW AND THE SUBSTANCE.

But has it ever occurred to us that regarding this thing that we prize so much, we may cherish the shadow while the substance eludes us?

A man may live in free England or Canada, or in America, the "home of the free," and yet be in bondage. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty for individuals as well as for states and municipalities. A state may be under the rule of a corrupt political ring, a city under the despotism of graft and liquor, and a man under the rule of vile and evil habits. In America, almost as readily as in Russia, where it is frankly admitted that the government is a "despotism tempered by assassination." Indeed, political liberty sometimes makes possible forms of bondage that are not dreamed of in lands that are ruled by the iron hand.

The Jews to whom Jesus talked boasted:

We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou. Ye shall be free?—John 8:33.

They resented the future tense, "Ye shall be free." They thought they were free. Yet politically they were under the dominion of Rome. Religiously and intellectually they were dominated by the rabbis, and did not think or act for themselves. Morally they were ruled by evil habits until Jesus declared that they were of their father the Devil.

Jesus said to them: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8:36.

FREEDOM AND THE TRUTH.

He also said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Freedom is possible only to those who know the truth. Proclaim liberty throughout all Russia tomorrow, and depose the Czar and the head of every bureau, and the Russians could not be free, because they do not yet know true principles of freedom and self-government.

Jesus is the great emancipator. He wishes man to be free in the mass, politically, industrially, and intellectually, and his Spirit is working to that end in all the world; he also wishes men to be free individually. He addresses the "inner man": that dominating entity that sits under the dome of each human cranium, directing its own destiny; the inner man that weighs principles and determines actions, for whose consideration the news of the earth is flashed under oceans and across continents; whose support is solicited by kings and presidents, who listens to the appeals of passion, appetite, and prejudice that surge up from the deep citadels of his own physical and spiritual being, whose privilege it is to say yes or no, in harmony with truth, and continue to rule, or abdicate the throne and permit blind emotions to usurp his place.

This man may be a slave to his own misguided nature even in the midst of the most desirable surroundings. He permits tobacco to rule him until his once steady hand trembles, his heart pounds intermittently, and his breath smells to heaven. The inner man says: "I would like to stop, but I can not." He is a slave. He gives himself over to the control of drugs, opium, cocaine, morphine, until he is an absolute physical, moral, and mental wreck. He surrenders to the carefully planned attack of alcohol, and finally with disrupted nervous system dies of delirium tremens. He is bound by habits of profanity, profligacy, gluttony, and all evil tendencies.

Great big men will hide behind that little saying: "The spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak." They will prostrate themselves before a glass of beer or whisky, saying: "I wish I could leave it alone. I know it will destroy my body. It will break up my home; it may make me a murderer, but I can not stop."

Often these men have merely mutilated the text. They mean: "The flesh is strong enough, but the spirit is not willing." Any man who has strength to stand up on his feet in the attitude of man should be able to say, I will, or I will not, and enforce his decision. Any man can do that who will take God for his helper and really do his part. Men do not realize the power of the human will. They do not try. The perfect law of liberty comes to them and says: "Be men. Stand up and acquit yourselves like men. Be free."

The writer vividly remembers a certain incident that happened years ago in northern Iowa. There came a heavy snowstorm that was followed by a fall of rain and sleet, so that a coating of smooth ice covered all the country. During this state of affairs we ran out of flour and were compelled to make our way laboriously to town. Near the town there was a long, steep hill. As we were returning we met two men toiling up this hill. They would climb until the steeper places were reached, then they would get down and crawl. As they passed, one of them gave the laconic information, "We are crawling after tobacco."

That was a very apt expression: "Crawling after tobacco." The posture too was appropriate. There was their master, at the top of the hill, saying: "Come! Get down and crawl to me!" And they were coming—on "all fours." Here is the point: They thought they did not have sufficient will to break the tobacco habit; but when it was a question of forcing their way over miles of road and up a slippery hill, they had will enough to surmount every obstacle. Men have will enough but they refuse to enlist it in right causes.

A REVOLUTIONARY CHANGE.

To the individual entity Christ comes with the proposition of "self-government" under the sovereign protection of God and the guidance of the Holy Spirit. The proposal is revolutionary in the extreme: All old things are to be put away.

The declaration is: "Ye must be born again."

"Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

Paul says:

Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him.—Colossians 3: 9, 10.

This language shows just how complete the emancipation from all that is old and evil is to be. As Christ said: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Paul recognized that this emancipation was to come through knowledge, for he said, "Renewed in knowledge," or as the Master put it, "Ye shall know the truth."

We plead for the greatest freedom to man in his search after knowledge. In the past men have chained up the Bible so that none but the priests could read it. They were afraid to have the masses read the truths contained therein. But an open Bible is the way toward truth, and truth is the way to liberty. Men have tried to stay the hammer of the geologist in midair, and deflect the telescope of the astronomer, because they feared the discoveries of science. They feared that in the record of the rocks man might find some truth that would contradict the Bible. They feared that among the starry hosts they might discover some fundamental fact that would deny the revelations of God. But Jesus was not afraid. All truth is one. It is true that there is science "falsely so called." And it is equally true that there is religion falsely so called. When we find what science really says and compare it with what religion really teaches there will be no conflict.

Obstruction is wrong. Men must be free. The search for truth must be untrammelled. The Man of Galilee was serenely confident that all error would ultimately be overthrown and truth prevail.

There are many ways into error, but only as men are free to investigate and choose can they hit upon the right and true way. The honest investigator, though wrong at the moment, is less to be feared than the fanatical though apparently pious obstructionist. The cause of truth suffers less from those who boldly investigate than from those who slyly sneak around and warn people to avoid investigation.

REGENERATION.

The preliminary steps required in the law of liberty are set forth in the word of God. Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." —Mark 16: 16.

Paul gives perhaps the most concise statement of the preliminary steps in his catalogue of that which he terms the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. In this he is in perfect agreement with the Master. We quote: "Therefore leaving (the better translation gives it not leaving) the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of dead, and of eternal judgment."—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

The first step is faith in God and his Son Jesus, authors of the law of liberty. Without this confidence no forward move can be made. The second step is repentance, which includes sorrow for and loathing of the past estate of sin and a determined effort to forsake evil and learn to do good. The second step is baptism, by which former sins are washed away and through which as a type of the burial and resurrection of our Lord man comes up into a new life, a new man in Christ Jesus (Acts 2: 38, 39; Acts 22: 12-16; Galatians 3: 27, 28; Romans 6: 4), as Christ himself said: "Born of the water and of the Spirit." The next step is the laying on of hands by authorized ministers of Jesus, by which the Holy Ghost is conferred (Acts 8: 14-19; 19: 1-7; 1 Timothy 4: 14; 2 Timothy 1: 6, 7). The other principles, the resurrection and the eternal judgment, wait God's time for execution, and through them man will at last be set free from death and its reign.

In the meantime man must obey the other part of the law: "Go on unto perfection."

In this work the Holy Spirit is to be his aid, for it "helps our infirmities." The preverse and sometimes debased will of man needs such an help, and will receive it, unless there is a willful and determined inclination to turn back. God himself will not make men free who do not wish to be free. After all the bloody and costly war to set the negroes of the South free, many of them mourned all their days for the good old times when they were slaves. They went back to their masters and were slaves in all but name. So it is with some who start out to obey the law of liberty. They look back with regret to the good old times when they were under the dominion of pleasure and appetite; and at last they go back to their old masters.

Such should consider the admonition:

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.—Galatians 5: 1.

An important part of the work of the Holy Spirit is thus stated by the Master:

Howbeit when he, the spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth.—John 16:13.

This is the part of the program included under the term "going on to perfection." "Line upon line, precept upon precept," truth is revealed, and with the knowledge of truth comes perfect freedom.

LAW EVASION.

Men have become very expert in law evasion. During a speech in Lamoni some time ago Mr. Mohammed Ali told the people about a certain class in India who are permitted to marry only on a certain day that comes but once in twelve years. Parents try in every way to have a husband ready for their daughters when that auspicious day comes. But if one is not at hand they evade the law (while professing to honor it) by marrying the girl to a bunch of flowers. When the flowers wither she is a widow—widows can marry at any time. Ridiculous, isn't it? Yet we resort to similar foolish devices to evade laws that we have outgrown but do not have the courage to repeal. We honor in letter but break in spirit. This is not so bad when man made laws are broken, for they are faulty.

But many have adopted a similar attitude toward the law of God. They honor it by profession, but seem to feel that it is outgrown, and so they devise many ways to evade it. They do not like to be baptized by immersion, so they adopt sprinkling—and call it baptism, just as the Indian maiden marries a bouquet of flowers and calls it a man. But in this case we are dealing with the laws of God. This is the perfect law of liberty. Man never outgrows it. It never needs to change. It is eternal, like God. We change it or evade it at our peril.

It would seem the part of wisdom, after all the centuries of failure to arrive at perfection, for us to accept the law of God and give it a thorough trial. The salvation of the race awaits the time when men shall generally determine to accept God as the Lawgiver and abide by his commandments.

Life.

Life! great problem! who shall solve it?

Who the myst'ry shall explain?

E'er we reach its golden summit,

Lo the day begins to wane.

Each and all become an actor,

On the stage of life to play,

But our Allwise benefactor

Holds the crown to close of day.

Life at best, is full of troubles,

Which around us seem to twine,

But how oft these prove but bubbles,

Floating down the stream of time.

Off the road is steep and thorny,

And the pathway hard to climb—

For life's sea is rough and stormy,

E'er we reach the shore sublime.

In the midst of life's great highway,

For a moment looking back,

Here a turn and there a byway,

Down the weather-beaten track.

Down the valley slowly wending,

Drawing near the dark abyss,

'Neath the load of life then bending—

Falling o'er the precipice.

Then there comes a time of weeping,

Both the noble and the blythe,

(When the angel cometh reaping,)

Fall before his sarpen'd scythe.

Then the wondrous drama ended,

Since the valley dark has grown,

Though with gentle hands we're tended,

All must in the grave lay prone,

Till the sound of Michael's trumpet,

Shall the faithful ones awake,

Liberated from their casket,—

God shall all their fetters shake.

Chang'd from mortal to immortal,—

Cloth'd with their true house from heaven.

Then they'll pass within the portal,

Where the righteous robe is given.

On and on right through the ages,

Live through all eternity.

The fond hope of ancient sages:

Endless bliss,—felicity.

But, hand, you shall work away."

AN ATTACK BY JUDGE ROYLE REVIEWED.

The American Tract Society, which has in the past published some of the silliest trash that ever escaped a wastebasket, has almost outdone itself in this regard in issuing a tract by Judge J. C. Royle, entitled, "Faith and credulity; or, the Book of Mormon."

He claims that his article is "directed to those Mormons who . . . believe in extra-biblical revelations, and that they may add to or take from the sacred canon of the Scriptures by such revelations."

That the judge is apparently ignorant of the subject will be clearly seen by anyone at all familiar with the faith of Book of Mormon believers. It is a well-known fact that one of the teachings of that faith is that no so-called Christian body has the right to deviate from the word of God in any respect, either to refuse compliance with any word that he may give, or add to any word that he has given. The condition of the judge in this regard reminds one of the Irishman who, in making his escape from a burning house at midnight, hastily got into his trousers, with the seat thereof in front, and jumped from a window to the ground not far below. As he stood gazing at himself in dismay, a friend, hearing his dismal groaning, asked where he was hurt. "Indade," replied Pat, "Oi don't feel hurrut, but, hegorra, Oi'm badly twisted."

If the judge's tract is intended for Book of Mormon believers, it is evident that most all of them are being used elsewhere. It would seem more honest to admit that their real purpose is to prejudice the minds of those who know little if anything of the subject, hoping thus to prevent them from investigating and learning the facts. It would probably be entirely fruitless elsewhere. It would certainly never convert any informed person, though it were circulated among them for a million years or more.

In order to better defend his position, the judge claims that the Bible is "infallible and complete."

If the Bible is complete, why does it mention about twenty inspired books that are not now to be found either in the Bible or elsewhere? The following are some of them:

"The Prophecy of Enoch," Jude 14; previous Corinthian epistle, 1 Corinthians 5: 9; epistle to Laodiceans, Colossians 4: 16; previous epistle of Jude, Jude 3; prophecy of Ahijah, 2 Chronicles 9: 29; prophecy of Shemaiah, 12: 15; prophecy of Oded, 15: 8; book of Iddo the Seer, 13: 22; book of Jehu, 20: 34; sayings of the seers, 33: 19; several books mentioned in 1 Chronicles 29: 29; and a number of other books are referred to in different places in the Bible. John 21: 25 says that he supposes that the world itself could not contain the books that should be written about what Jesus did. Inasmuch as the judge maintains that the Bible is infallible, he should not object to one such book as John says should be written. The Book of Mormon does tell us about some of the things that Jesus did on this continent; the proof that his mission was to include all the world.

The Bible therefore does not contain all that God has revealed, or may reveal to man, whether or not all are willing to admit it.

In endeavoring to contrast Joseph Smith to Moses, the judge says that the latter was a grand specimen of our race, "carrying as his credentials from God to the people miraculous powers." Certainly, Moses was a grand man, but he killed a man without even the excuse of self-defense, and was judged unworthy to enter the promised land. Joseph Smith was also a noble specimen of our race, on whom no stain of blood was found, save his own that was shed by his murderers. He carried with him as credentials from God such miraculous powers as have no parallel in authentic history since New Testament times.

Of the time when God gave the law to Moses, the judge says: "Truly these things were not done in a corner, nor behind a blanket, nor was the law spoken to the people in an unknown tongue, or written in strange hieroglyphics."

Maybe it was not done in a corner, but it was done upon a lonely mountain where Moses did not have even a scribe as a witness to testify how he obtained the law. Joseph Smith had several scribes who wrote during the time he translated the Book of Mormon. Had he been an impostor he would not have been willing to risk changing scribes so often, for fear of detection and exposure; which shows that he concealed no deception. Furthermore, if Moses had no blanket he had at least a veil. The high priest also was screened by a veil or curtain while performing service in the most holy place. The difference between this and the method employed by Joseph Smith is such as only hairsplitters will contend over.

If the law was not written in strange hieroglyphics, neither was the Book of Mormon. The Sinaitic inscriptions may not have been strange to those living when they were written, but they are strange to those living to-day; so also the Book of Mormon hieroglyphics were not strange to those living in the time when the record was written, though they may be to us: another difference for hairsplitters only.

If the stones on which Moses wrote the law could be set before the judge to-day, could he read them? If not, he would of course condemn them as frauds. From his unjudicial argument we are compelled to believe that he would expect to find them written in English.

After claiming that miraculous powers were the credentials from God, and arguing by inference that Joseph Smith lacked these, the resourceful judge soon forgets the point of his own argument, and cites John the Baptist as a model method for God to use in heralding a message. But the Bible says John did no miracle (John 10: 41), therefore, if miracles are the credentials from God, poor John was woefully deficient in this regard. In either case Joseph Smith is found in good company. This peculiar method of the judge is like children building cob houses and then destroying their own work.

To be charitable, we must admit that the judge is pitifully ignorant of the facts concerning the Book of Mormon and its believers when he says: "We understand that the Mormons claim this book as the warrant for and the origin of their organization."

Those who are at all familiar with our claims know that we base them upon the fact that there has been an apostasy from the doctrine of the church of New Testament times; that the Scriptures clearly foretell a restoration of that doctrine and church, by divine intervention and the appearance of an angel in the latter days (Malachi 3: 1; Matthew 24: 14; Revelation 14: 6); that by direct revelation God has again spoken in these days and commanded the reorganizing of his church according to the New Testament pattern, and has confirmed this work by restoring the gifts of the Holy Spirit as they were anciently given to the saints.

The relationship of the Book of Mormon to this work is, that it claims to be a record of the ancients of America, written by themselves, in which they testify that God revealed himself to them and gave them commandments similar to those he gave to his people in Bible lands; being thus an added witness to God's impartial love to the nations of both continents. As such we believe it to be of God.

Another statement made by the judge that can be proven false by the most superficial reader, is where he says, "The evidence of the facts or fancies stated in the 'golden bible, or Book of Mormon,' is to be found in the golden plates alone."

That the foregoing statement is untrue must be known even by the judge if he has any knowledge at all on the subject. The Bible itself indicates the truth of many things stated in the Book of Mormon. It speaks of the lost tribes of Israel, showing that some of them came across the ocean or sea, and that God would reveal to them his will. Jesus speaks of the lost tribes and says that they should hear his voice. The traditions of the American aborigines abundantly attest the truth of the Book of Mormon on these points and many others. They tell of the flood and tower of Babel; of how their progenitors crossed the ocean; of two distinct civilizations, one led by four brothers; of sacred records hidden in the earth, and of prophets through whom God spoke to them; of great earthquakes, and in fact of numerous things that the book shows to have occurred.

The discoveries made in the field of American archæology since the Book of Mormon was published are most convincing proof of the genuineness of the book; more so in numerous instances than are the discoveries in oriental lands proof of the Bible. In the briefest manner we notice a few of these.

The Book of Mormon tells us there were two civilizations anciently upon this continent, many cities being destroyed and rebuilt; that they made cloth; had a monetary system; mined and used various metals, employed horses, elephants, and other animals, made tools and implements of war and of agriculture or peace; that there was a band known as the Gadianton robbers who built in the fastnesses of the mountains; that there came a time when a tremendous upheaval buried whole cities in a number of places and disfigured the face of the land; and many other matters are detailed with an accuracy that forbids the idea of a fraudulent compilation. Each of these details have been verified by discoveries made and published since the Book of Mormon was printed, besides many others that we have not space to mention here. For further study upon this extremely interesting subject the reader is referred to The Book of Mormon Verified, and other archæological works published by the Herald Publishing House.

The judge further says, "The evidence that such facts were ever written on the plates and translated into the Book of Mormon comes from Smith alone." This blunder or willful misrepresentation is inexcusable, the testimony of three witnesses being published in every edition of the Book of Mormon ever printed, directly on this point. A reading of their testimony is sufficient refutation of this false statement.

The next remark of the judge is, however, equally contemptible. He says: "The existence of engraved golden plates of any kind rests only on the testimony of Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris (called the 'three witnesses'), and of Joseph Smith." A seven-year-old child could count better than that. Everyone who has read the Book of Mormon knows that it contains the testimony of eleven witnesses directly to the point referred to by the judge, certifying to the existence of said plates. It does not seem possible that any fair-minded person will give credence to the statements of a man, be he judge or otherwise, who will so glaringly misrepresent the most apparent facts.

The judge further objects to the Book of Mormon because, he says, it was "hid in the rubbish of the earth for ages." This averment is very misleading as, instead of being in "the rubbish of the earth," the plates were carefully deposited in a tightly cemented stone box which thoroughly protected them until the time when they were taken by Joseph Smith for the purpose of translating them. A man who has no better argument than this to make against the book, proves the hopelessness of his cause.

This objector further complains that it "was withheld from myriads of mankind and creates a huge unaccountable gap of eighteen hundred years in which the will of God, held in reserve, came not to man."

It does seem difficult indeed to satisfy this man. First he complains because the book came forth at all, then he grumbles because it did not come sooner. His objections savor of the infidel's arguments concerning Christ and his teaching: "Why didn't it come before?" And they remind us that parts of the New Testament were "hid in the rubbish of the retreats of priests and monks for ages," before being discovered and brought to light. If the judge regards the things that happen to the parts of the Bible as evidence in its favor, the same things should be evidence in favor of the Book of Mormon when happening to it. But his statement is not correct. The Book of Mormon was not hid in the earth until about A. D. 420. At that time practically all of those at all receptive to the word of God had perished from the American continent, hence the word was withheld from them, but was again brought to light after the re peopling of this continent since its discovery by Columbus.

The assertion is also made by the judge that the three witnesses who testified to the Book of Mormon, "impeached their own testimony by declaring it was not true." In a very unjudicial manner he refrains from citing us to the document where such impeachment is to be found, and we challenge him to produce any such statement made by them. It is a fact, and is well known, that the three witnesses continued to reiterate and maintain their testimony on behalf of the Book of Mormon throughout their lives. Whitmer, a man of high standing and integrity, reaffirmed it in a most solemn manner upon his dying bed, in the presence of his physician and other witnesses.

It has been one of the marvels of the latter day work, to many outside the faith, that these men should continually maintain their testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon, and allow death to for ever seal their lips without ever denying that testimony, unless they were indeed telling the truth. They had all to gain by denying their testimony, as far as this world is concerned, and everything to lose by continuing to affirm it, yet these men unhesitatingly chose a course most unpopular in the world, and met derision, scorn, bitter persecution, and ostracism without flinching; going into eternity with that calm and strong assurance that spoke of an abiding trust for the future life.

This tract writer from the bench seems to find anything he may happen to want, but evidently does not consider his quotations very valuable, as he has not in a single instance given a reference showing where they are to be found, except a few Bible verses that are irrelevant to the subject; and not all of them are quoted correctly. It is in this manner that he claims, "The imposture was detected while the Book of Mormon was being printed, by the printers pretending to lose some leaves of the translation, which Smith could not duplicate."

If it were thus detected, is it not strange that the cause should prosper from the start, and that opponents were unable to present the alleged occurrence and at once overthrow the work when meeting its advocates in public discussion, as they often met? The facts are quite the reverse, it being admitted that in nearly every instance those who opposed the work found themselves getting the worst of the argument. Had such a detection ever been known to occur it would have overthrown the work at the start.

As to the character of Joseph Smith, which is next brought in question, many honorable persons who were intimately acquainted with him have testified of the high esteem in which he was quite generally held, both in his younger days and afterward. We know of no instance where a reliable and respected citizen has shown him to be otherwise than a man of noble principles, high aspirations, and moral and spiritual integrity.

Near the conclusion of his tract the judge says: "We have searched the word and found no message pointing to the peculiar doctrines of the Mormon Church as being from God." We are forced to believe that if the judge ever really searched the word for the foregoing purpose, he must have done so after the manner of the proverbial tramp who looked for work but prayed that he might not find it; but if not, we shall be glad to help him find the ostensible object of his search. The following are some of the "peculiar doctrines" of our faith sustained by references to a modest number of scripture texts.

That the Bible has foretold an apostasy from the faith is proven by 2 Peter 2: 1; 1 Timothy 4: 1; 2 Thessalonians 2: 3; 2 Timothy 4: 3; Revelation 12: 1-6; Revelation 13: 7, 8.

The restoration from this apostasy, which has already been referred to, consisted in reorganizing of the church in harmony with the New Testament pattern, with every office of the ministry named therein, referred to in the following places: 1 Corinthians 12: 28; Ephesians 4: 11-16; Philippians 1: 1; Luke 10: 1.

The church must have a ministry called to these various offices by revelation from God; Romans 10: 14; Hebrews 5: 4; John 15: 16.

The six principles of the doctrine of Christ are all necessary to be taught and practiced: Hebrews 6: 1, 2; Matthew 19: 20; Hebrews 5: 12; Acts 8: 18; 19: 6; Mark 10: 16; 16: 18; 2 John 9; 2 Timothy 4: 16.

The gifts of the Holy Spirit must be in the true church and will operate in the manner taught in the word: Acts 5: 32; John 14: 26; 15: 26; 16: 13; 1 Corinthians 12: 7-10; 14: 39.

Many other texts might be adduced in support of the teaching of the Saints, but not to make the subject too long we quote but one as cited by the judge, and hope all who are looking for a church that is in harmony with New Testament doctrine in all respects, will use it as their text while making the search." It is as follows: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1: 8.

I have in my possession a tract put out many years ago by the American Tract Society, in which they inform us that at one time God was all alone in heaven, but becoming lonely, he made the angels, and afterward "made the world out of nothing." I confess that I was incredulous when, as a boy, I read that statement. I could not accept it as being probable then. I am not yet converted to that theory, but will confess that the reading of this tract-written by the judge has given me some further reflections along that line, for he has demonstrated, almost, that he can produce something out of nothing.

REPENTANCE.

SERMON OF JOHN W. RUSHTON, DELIVERED AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, NOVEMBER 23, 1910, AT SOUTH SIDE BRANCH. REPORTED BY MRS. A. MORGAN.

We will read our lesson this evening from the 15th chapter of the gospel written by Saint John, commencing at the 11th verse.

These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it to you. These things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also. But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me. If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin. He that hateth me hateth my Father also. If I had not done among them works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but now they have both seen and hated me without a cause. But when the Comforter is come, word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, They hated me without cause. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me; and ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.

The second letter of the Apostle Paul to the Corinthians, 7th chapter, beginning at the 9th verse, I read:

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance; for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death. For behold this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what avenging! In all things we have approved ourselves to be clear in this matter.

I have read you to the close of the 11th verse. I am going to talk to you about repentance, and I want you to understand what we really mean by repentance. I am in favor of the Calvinistic doctrine, which postulates that repentance is the natural fruit of faith. I can not say that I favor the school which prevails in my own country, England, of which the Wesleyan Methodists are by far the most enthusiastic exponents, that repentance precedes a saving faith. I don't know how they can conscientiously reconcile that, though I have done the best to understand it (I refer to the Reverend Doctor Fields). But they object to the Calvinistic interpretation of repentance, especially as being the adjunct of faith, and argue that faith is the outcome of a repentant state of mind. Well, I think that as we begin to understand the nature of repentance we should very easily be able to decide in our own mind this theological misunderstanding. John Wesley himself says: "By repentance I mean conviction of sin, producing real desires and sincere resolutions of amendment!" (2d Catechism of Wesleyan Methodist, Old Edition.)

"Conviction of sin; real desires and sincere resolutions of amendment." "True repentance is a grace of the Holy Spirit, whereby a sinner, from a sense of his sins and apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ, doth, with grief and hatred of his sin, turn from it to God, with full purpose of, and endeavors after future obedience. The word repent is a translation of the two Greek words metamelomac and mallanceo the former signifying "after-concern," and the latter "afterthought." "After-concern,—anxiety and concern on account of something that has been amiss; afterthought signifying such a change or alteration of mind as implies the return to right views, right feelings, or right conduct, or as expressed in Luke, the coming to himself of a man who has been acting a foolish and criminal part." And Chambers' English Dictionary defines it as follows: "Repent; to feel such sorrow for sin as produces newness of life." I don't know but I should tell you none of these are Latter Day Saint authorities, but if any of you have got any doubt in your minds, let me tell you once for all there is not one of them a Latter Day Saint authority.

Now, there you have the theological and evangelical and philological definitions of repentance. I think also you will see easily that this state or condition of mind must have some adequate cause or causes to bring it into being. Whenever there is a doubt in a man's views, and a change in a man's feelings, and a change in a man's conceptions, we may always assume, without doing any violence to reasoning, that there has been at least some force or influence at work by which this resultant change has been brought into being. After-concern, implying as it does do, a state of uneasiness in regard to our past, may in one instance be the effect of conscience, but conscience in this case is only the instrument of revealing some higher authority and supreme intelligence which undertakes to sit in judgment upon our actions and upon our conduct, and incidentally may I remark that in this fact alone you have one of the strongest evidences of the existence of a Deity that it is possible for a man to have to his own conviction.

When people discuss nature, they very often discuss nature minus man, but that obviously is not a fair estimate of nature, to deduct its most attractive and its most influential, and its most potent quality. That view of nature which includes a careful consideration of and study of humanity is more likely to be right than an investigation of nature which will undertake to eliminate man from the realm of nature. Man is there, is part and parcel of nature, and must be considered as an inclusive manifestation of nature, and not as an isolation from nature, and then when you consider man as a part of nature you have to consider the whole man; not only his bodily and mechanical expression; not only his animal life or soul, but you have to consider the man as a whole, and when you consider man as a part of nature and you discuss man as a whole you must take into account this peculiar attribute of humanity, that we call "conscience." It does not belong to the mind, in the careful use of language, for what I call my conscience presides over me, over my personality, including my intelligence, my emotions, and my will power, and will sit in judgment upon the expression of my intelligence, the inclination of my emotions and the authority of my will, and this conscience will do against the operation of the intelligence, or of the inclination of the emotion, or of the intent of the will.

Where does it come from? You have to account for it. It is not the creature of evolution; it is not an appendage; it is there in the man, yet not of man. It sits in judgment upon all that I think; upon all that I see; and all that I do, and one of the most remorseful experiences that any one of us can have is the experience in which we are living in open and persistent violation of our inward conscience. I venture to say I am giving its direct definition when I say that conscience is the particular instrument in the consciousness of every individual through which God is speaking and directing, and it is only when we have outraged our conscience that conscience fails to perform its normal functions of revealing to us the mind and the will of God; and that really is, that man has become impervious to its influence. I leave it with this statement, that conscience is the instrument in the case of every individual life through which God is operating and speaking to the individual and all history witnesses to this in all things which are universally estimated to be right and disapproval of those things which are universally estimated to be wrong. No people could doubt but what murder is wrong, and at least should be punished in some form or other, adequate to the crime. But apart from that, this change in a man's attitude—I am going to leave that thought there with you—I say the change in a man's life may come as a result of his conscience; that may be one way of expressing it, but what I want to especially impress upon you is this, that you have not stated the whole of the case when you have simply said that a man's conscience has wrought a change in his conduct. There is something back of the conscience that must be recognized, and must be understood, and we must be made familiar with.

In the old-time theology they acknowledged it. Repentance is the grace of the Holy Spirit, and I don't know but what that is probably the best way of getting at the matter. One of the most important works of the Holy Spirit was the conviction of sinners; so that we may well take it that the Spirit of God which is, as we stated I believe last evening, is one of the springs of the internal intelligence at the back of the universe, is putting itself into contact with human personality through the agency of the conscience, and therefore repentance, involving as it does, a sorrowing and after-concern of our conduct, issues in a change of conduct because the divine intelligence, manifesting itself through us, through our conscience, convinces us that what we have done is out of harmony with what the divine mind must approve of. Well, we could say much more, but with a multiplication of words there would be an obscurity of the point. We will leave that there, too.

The definition of ours the other evening from Professor James, of Harvard, psychologist—and if any man has a right to speak on these questions Professor James is the man,—in the book I referred to the other evening, The Varieties of Religious Experiences; a Study in Human Nature, one of the series of Gifford Lectures, says—notice the language:

We and God have business with each other; and in opening ourselves to his influence our deepest destiny is fulfilled. . . . There is a certain uniform deliverance in which religions all appear to meet. It consists of two parts; first, an uneasiness; and secondly, its solution. The uneasiness, reduced to its simplest terms, is a sense that there is something wrong about us as we naturally stand. The solution is a sense that we are saved from the wrongness by making proper connection with the higher powers.

Now that is the psychological definition of repentance. The very moment there is generated in our conscience—I hope I am not using terms you don't understand—I say the very moment there is generated in our consciences the knowledge of the existence of this Supreme Intelligence that we define as God, we can not prevent ourselves from putting ourselves into contrast, as we actually know ourselves to be, with what we understand are the salient characteristics of the Deity we profess to believe in. No, it is impossible, and the very moment we abandon ourselves to the acceptance of the divine mind as the standard, according to which I will regulate my life in all of its activities, and issues, I am made uneasy with the realization that my past has not been what it should have been, and I become sorrowful and regretful and remorseful of the prostituted opportunities, the wasted time and the violated privileges. This is the process of all true repentance.

Our New Testament speaks particularly of repentance from sin. Did you ever consider what sin really was or what sin really is? I wish we could say "sin was," but did you ever consider what sin really is? Some people say that it is wickedness. Some would have us believe it is crime. Some would have us believe it is vice, immorality. Consider these terms a moment carefully. Take crime, to begin with. Crime is a breach of the civil law, a gross offense against the constitution of civil society. I hope the lawyers will excuse me for delving into their cult, but quoting Blackstone on this point, he says, that a crime or misdemeanor is an act of rebellion against the civil law. That is Mr. Blackstone's definition of crime. You will at once observe that crime can only become sin when the public legislation of any nation is a direct and complete expression of the divine mind. So that sin is more than crime, for at the present, I can not believe our countries are legislating in harmony with the divine mind. I wish they were. Is it vice or immorality? That all depends on circumstances. Vice or immorality is the most obvious illustration of sin, and yet it is not necessarily coexistent with sin. For instance, Socrates, in ancient Athens, was reprimanded as an immoral man because he insisted on educating the youth of his nation. That was immorality to the Greeks. I need not call your attention at all by any personal reference to constitutions and institutions to-day, but I could show you by documentary evidence that in some institutions it is a vice to illuminate the mind of the public to-day, and where institutions can only prosper in proportion as the vices, according to their judgment, of education and popular development shall be restrained.

Vice, therefore, is not necessarily coexistent with sin. We should learn to apply God's definition of virtue, and a violation of God's laws of virtue will then constitute itself sin. Wickedness.—That is certainly a common term among religious people, and the theological term of wickedness in its modern use is not necessarily sin, for wickedness is frequently made to mean an offense against me. We had a very striking illustration of this in Plymouth. Brother Newton and myself were holding some open air meetings. I don't know what I said that was particularly offensive, but a man stepped up and told me he would attend to my case if I didn't get out, and assumed a very pugilistic pose. He said, You are the most wicked fellow we have ever had around here. He was a Publican, right across the road. I was wicked because I was offending him and his business. Think of it! How many times have you heard the expression used against you, that they are wicked, or you are wicked, simply because the me, the ego, has been offended by some particular act on the part of the other fellow.

Wickedness to become sin involves that the personal conduct of the individual shall not be in perfect adjustment to the mind and will of God. Of course this is only stated briefly to you, for your investigation and to generate thought in the matter. Sin is more than wickedness. Sin is more than vice. Sin is more than crime. Sin goes the whole gamut of the human passion, of the human will, and the human intelligence. In one striking sentence, sin is the measure of the disparity between what I know myself really to be and what I know God would have me be. That is my sin! To confirm that by a quotation, I will ask you to study carefully the statement made by John, I think you will find it in his first letter; it is the second chapter. "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. But if any man sin and repent, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous; and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected; hereby know we that we are in him."

And it is interesting to remember, mark you, that it is John, the apostle beloved, says it; not Peter. I could understand Peter telling a man he was a liar to his face; but you have a psychological phenomena in John's telling a man to his face that he is a liar. "The Apostle of Love" says if a man says he loves God and keeps not his commandments, he is a liar. You wouldn't want me to apologize for using that term, would you? "But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected; hereby we know we are in him."

Now, may I refer to my definition? The measure of sin is precisely the difference between the way in which I am regulating my life and the way in which I know that Jesus Christ would regulate his life. That is the measure of my sin. It may, therefore, express itself in vice or in crime, or in wickedness. It may be more than that, for sin is the outraging of the revealed truth of God, and yet some of us are more careful of the civil law than we are of the revelations of God's mind. Some of us are more careful about the breach of our social ideals of morality than the revelation of divine morality. May I impress it upon you again, ask you merely to consider it? When we talk about repentance from sin we mean after-concern about the course of our past, and a determination that our future shall be as much as we are able to make it, in accord with the mind and will of God, as we have had it given to us. Now, that is repentance. Nothing short of that is repentance. It involves, therefore, not only sorrow, but it involves a readjustment, a rearrangement, a change, and here is where conversion becomes the legitimate fruit of a repentant state.

Now, my friends, this definition of Professor James once more, in the light of what we have said touching repentance. There are two characteristics we have uniform in all religions. Religion begins to express itself in its uneasiness, brought about as a result of believing in God. It finds its further expression in the change of conduct and the change of desire and the transmutation of will, instead of it being manward and selfward, it is Godward. Now let us put ourselves in contrast, therefore, with these definitions, and I think we shall begin to understand, therefore, what Latter Day Saints mean when they talk about repentance. The Apostle Paul, in speaking of this matter, as we have read here from the letter he writes to the Corinthians; I will ask you again to notice it with me: "Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance. They had been inquiring. It was a case of after-concern. Now notice the cause of it. "For ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. For godly sorrow worketh repentance." A godlike sorrow, that has the approval of God, will work repentance. An after-concern, that concerns itself from love, because of its examination of love, under the immediate consciousness of God's provision, will issue in amendment and readjustment; "for godlike sorrow worketh repentance, to salvation not to be repented of; but the sorrow of the world worketh death." Now notice the effect: "For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort,—now notice—what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what avenging. In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter." They had been careless hitherto. The first outcome of a repentant state was a great and sincere care; afterthought, what carefulness it wrought in you. Now the next one. What clearing of yourselves; clarifying of yourselves; making yourselves transparently sincere. They hadn't done that hitherto. In addition to that, what indignation,—against all manifestations of human conduct not in harmony with the revelation of the divine standard. In addition, what fear, what reverence, what longing. Readjustment. In everything they had approved themselves to be clear in the matter. There you have it. That's the result of repentance.

Now, notice, in conclusion. The repentance that the New Testament metes out in the life of the individual, as well as the whole, is that state of mind which is concerned with the past, and care of the future, and not only issues in the sorrow for the past, but a determination to bring the future into perfect adjustment with the mind and will of God, the end, therefore, of all religions being the making of proper connection with the higher powers, and involves that my faith in God shall be so profound and become such a veritable obsession that all my life shall be lived in accord with the mind and will of God.

Now, put it to the test, and I am only using this incidentally, and for the purpose of illustration.

What can be the state of mind of a man who professes to believe in God and become repentant of past sins, but persists in continuous rebellion? Can that be repentance? Let me put my question again. What can you say of that attitude of mind which, professing belief in God and sorrow for past sin, persists in continuous rebellion against the mind and will of God? Can that be repentance?

Our definition of God last evening implies that when we speak of God we mean the wisest, the most powerful and most loving, and from that we have confidence that what he commands is the best; what he commands is the most affectionate; what he commands is the kindest and most beneficent that can be proclaimed. It follows, therefore, that any man who shall undertake to revise his life according to the mind and the will of God, is undertaking that, which in the nature of things, is by far the most potent method of anything suggested by any other philosophy.

Now, may I put the question? The only question to be decided is, Is the commandment of baptism an issue from God? What becomes of my obligation to my heavenly Father? Thou shalt love him with all thy heart. What becomes of my obligation to my neighbor? Thy neighbor as thyself. I ask this once more, as illustrative of the principle at stake in the doctrine of repentance, and it follows as clearly as the day follows the night, that a soul that has passed through the spiritual crisis of repentance, is living to the very best of his or her ability, according to the mind and will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ, the established ideal of their soul,—anything short of that can not be repentance.

It touches the emotions. It touches the intelligence. It touches the moral fiber. I will have to change my way of living, that instead of rebellion and disobedience there shall be submission and filial surrender. On this condition, and this only, is the approval of God promised, and to be worthy of the approval of God vouchsafed on any other terms than these, such justice of God would be a standing outrage to his own personality.

CIRCULAR NUMBER 8.—We have received Circular Number 8, which is a "Brief history and financial summary of the Gallands Grove, Iowa, District." It is written by Bishop C. J. Hunt, and is illustrated with halftone cuts of various churches and drawings. It covers the period from 1852 to 1912, and is a very interesting pamphlet.

"CALVARY."—Brother Edwards calls our attention to a mistake in his poem in issue of February 14. The last line of the fourth stanza should read, "And hail him king, in mockery."

On Sunday, the 11th, the special services of Elder F. A. Smith at the Princess Theater were better attended than the week previous. His discourse on "Worship God—How?" in the afternoon was very forceful and brought out many to the evening service. Duty called Elder Smith to Saint Marys, but he will leave for Detroit the end of the week to be at the new church opening there on the 18th. The services at the Theater will be continued by the local ministry for a couple of weeks. At the close of the morning service the infant son of Brother and Sister George Talbot was blessed by Elders Smith and Flegg and named George Herbert.

Brother George Everitt is home after a six weeks' visit in the old country. The trip did him good.

Priest C. Insell entertained the priesthood to a banquet the other evening. Elder F. A. Smith was chairman and called on the brethren for speeches. A very pleasant evening was spent, concluding by a humorous speech by Tom Maker, honorary member. Tom has a mission on Lyle street.

Ribstone, Alberta.

I have never before sent a line to any of the church papers, but this lonely afternoon courage came, and I trust that this my first effort may find a place in your most valuable paper.

We have had bitter cold weather for the past few weeks, but it has moderated some and we do not expect it to be so cold again.

The Saints here are feeling well in the work of the Lord. Our prayer and testimony meetings are well attended. Last Wednesday evening, not considering the cold, brethren and sisters came six and seven miles to meet with us, one brother coming eleven miles. I am glad of this as these are the kind of Saints the Lord needs to help to build up his kingdom.

I pray that God may give his children courage, faith and wisdom to so look into the future that we may be able to stand with the faithful few. I know this is God's work and I am so thankful my family have all obeyed.

Brother Beckley is our pastor and he preaches almost every Sunday, also attends prayer meeting when possible.

We have heard good news from the Vanscoy conference, of brethren being called into the ministry, and they are needed in this great Northwest, so much to be done and so few to do it. We hope to have a conference here in Ribstone in the near future. We enjoyed the reunion at Edgerton last summer. It was my privilege to be there, and it was indeed a pleasure to meet with God's people and servants, among whom was the son of our beloved prophet, also Brother and Sister Lewis, and Brother Kelley. Their presence cheered and encouraged us.

Dear brethren and sisters, I love this latter day gospel and my desire is to ever prove faithful and be worthy of the blessings which God in his wisdom bestowed upon me through the hands of his servant Brother Lewis.

It is some time since I started this letter and we are now having the loveliest weather—sunshine and snow.

The work is growing here, and there is such a lot of bright young people that in the near future will be heard from in this gospel. We trust God will give us wisdom to set them a good example.

I must not close, without saying we had a visit from Brother and Sister Peterson, also Brother Long. We were pleased to have them with us, and learned considerable about our brethren and sisters on the Islands. Those far away Saints have always appealed to me. Their faith should be a great lesson to us at home here, whose privileges are so much in advance of theirs.

My prayer to God is that we may all prove faithful and meet with our Lord and Savior as one family. To this end I ask an interest in your prayers that we here in Ribstone may do our full share to help bring about these conditions.

Your sister in the true faith,

MRS. THOMAS SMITH.

Blenheim Branch is Oldest in Canada.

Last Sunday was a red letter day in the history of the Blenheim Latter Day Saints' Church, it being the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the church. The different meetings of the day were well attended, and many of the representative officials and members of the Chatham District were present.

At 9.30 a. m. a prayer and sacrament service was held, in charge of Elders Snobelen and Shields, at which many encouraging prayers and testimonies were given as to the truthfulness of the gospel and the gifts and blessings that followed the believer.

At 11 a. m. Elder James Davis was the speaker. He chose as a basis for his sermon, Ecclesiastes 11: 1, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." The speaker said that promptness, diligence and faithfulness to God's service always brought reward. He referred to the satisfaction and hope that all enjoyed through faithful service.

At 2.30 p. m. an afternoon session was held, presided over by Elder S. Lamont, who in a few appropriate words introduced the nature of the meeting.

Elder Richard Coburn, the president of the Blenheim Branch, read an address from Elder F. A. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, who is minister in charge of the work in Ontario, regretting his inability to be present.

Elder Coburn's account of the history of the branch was interesting to all, reviewing the early days of the work. Many of the members moving to Blenheim, the church was also moved, and the name changed to the Blenheim Branch, and dedicated the 23d of June, 1877. This was the first branch of the work established in Canada, and from this branch the members spread out through Canada and Michigan, and established the work as it exists to-day.

Good addresses on the advancement of the work in the Chatham District were given by Elder J. Shields, of Toronto, Elders David Snobelen, S. H. Bacon, J. Tyrrell, F. Gregory, James Davis, S. Lamont, J. C. Dent, J. W. Badder, and E. A. Hewitt. The musical services included a trio composed of Mrs. L. Bacon, Miss Annie Bacon, and A. R. Hewitt, a duet by Miss Pearl Russell and Leata Vince, also a trio by Mr. and Mrs. O. Coburn and Miss May Brown.

At 7 p. m. Elder F. Gregory gave an instructive and interesting sermon on the restoration of the gospel. The choir rendered appropriate music during the day, and an enjoyable time was spent by the members and visitors who attended the various services.—Blenheim News-Tribune.

SYNOPSIS OF THE HISTORY OF BLENHEIM BRANCH.

On the 27th day of January, 1862, Brother John Shippy baptized and confirmed Brother George Cleveland, and Sisters Julia Shippy and Ellen Lambert, and on the 13th of February he baptized and confirmed Brother Joseph W. Shippy and Sister Charlotte Cleveland. Brother George Cleveland was ordained an elder and Brother Joseph W. Shippy a priest on the 16th day of February, and the branch was organized and called the Buckhorn Branch.

Brother J. W. Shippy was ordained an elder on the 9th day of December, 1863, and it is likely he was chosen to preside over the branch. We can not find any minutes of the meeting when he was chosen to preside so we can not give the exact date.

He was presiding elder until the 15th day of November, 1876, when he was released by his own request, as he was going away to Hersey, Michigan. Priest B. Blackmore was chosen to succeed him and he served the branch as president till April 29, 1877, when he was released and Elder George Cleveland chosen president. Brother Cleveland presided till the 26th day of August, 1879, when he was released at his own request, as he also was moving away to Hersey, Michigan. Priest William Carnes was then chosen president and he presided till the first of January, 1882, when R. Coburn was ordained a priest and chosen as branch president. He acted as president till April, 1890, when he was released on account of moving away, and Brother Bacon, then a priest, (now an elder), was chosen president. Brother Bacon occupied the office of president till February, 1894, when he requested to be released and R. Coburn was chosen to preside and is now acting as presiding elder.

On account of a majority of the members moving to Blenheim, on the 15th day of November, 1882, the name of the Branch was changed to Blenheim Branch. There has been about 248 members received into the branch and nearly 200 lost by removal, death, etc. When Brother Joseph W. Shippy moved away from here quite a number of the Saints went with him and they organized what is known as the Hersey Branch in the State of Michigan.

We think Brother Joseph W. Shippy is the only one alive now of the members that were present when the branch was organized.

The church now occupied by the Blenheim Saints was bought and moved here in March, 1877, and was dedicated on the 23d of June, 1877. Elder W. W. Blair preached the dedicatory sermon. He was assisted by Elders J. J. Cornish and Joseph Luff.

The Railway that Goes to Sea.

The first American sea-going train arrived at Key West last week, voyaging from the mainland by way of the string of "keys" where Florida tails off into the Gulf of Mexico. The trains of this salt-water railway do not really need to be amphibious, for they have a roadbed of solid and enduring material under them. But for many miles of the journey between Miami and Key West the passenger looking from the east windows can see nothing but the wide Atlantic, and at times even from the west windows the eye may seek in vain for any sign of land. Fifty miles of the distance from Miami to the city of cigars and filibusters the road is built on arches of concrete built up from beneath the sea. The credit of the great achievement belongs to Henry M. Flagler, president of the railway and the father of Florida's east coast development, who, at eighty, has the satisfaction of seeing the realization of his life's greatest dream. He has put Cuba twenty hours nearer New York, and, better still, has been the chief inspiration of all that new activity which is settling down to work among the orange groves and along the white beaches of a land that needs only intelligent effort to become the paradise of the subtropics.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

MORAL EDUCATION THROUGH PLAY.

For child or man, play gives more complete self-expression than work. It is therefore a wonderful test of character. When we do what we like to do because we like it, we show what we mean and care for. Goethe understood this in portraying the common people in Faust. When he desired to show the meaning of their lives he chose, not the six days of their compelled action in obedience to the wills of others, but the one day of glad freedom to do what they pleased. It is then that what they really care for appears.

As play is the most expressive form of action, so it gives a growth, both in power to do and power to appreciate, that does not come in equal measure from work. When we compel ourselves to an action, we grow in power to compel ourselves: but in the action itself we are hampered by the friction involved. When the action itself is attractive and our whole interest is absorbed in it, the growth in power is greatest; for we go forward most rapidly in mastering the difficulties of the action when our attention is not forced by the will, but held by the charm of the action itself. Similarly with appreciation, our work initiates us into the struggles of other people, our play makes it possible for us to appreciate their love and desire. When a little girl "plays dolls" or "keeping house" she is living herself into the deepest springs of human life. So play quickens observation and imparts instruction in the most effective way. The boy who watches the carpenter build a house on the corner, and then on Saturday constructs a hut in the back yard, has learned how a house is made better than we can teach him by any process of intellectual instruction.

If play is then so powerful an instrument of education, it should not be left to chance and whim, but should be utilized consciously in the home and the school, and adapted to the period of the child's development.

The child's play is of value not chiefly as a means of instruction, but as calling forth healthy expression of intellect, imagination, and emotion, developing the creative power, and the ability to appreciate, and cultivating at once independent action and social harmony. With this larger moral aim before us the following principles should guide us in selecting and regulating the toys and games of children.

1. There should be simplicity in the character, and rigid limitation in the number of toys given a child. Many complicated toys suppress instead of waking a child's activity. One simple cloth doll a child may dress and undress is worth a show window of wax puppets finished in imitation of overdressed adults. One box of plain blocks is better than a hundred complicated toys, whose chief use is to stimulate the child's faculty for investigation as he takes them to pieces, at the expense of cultivating a dangerous destructiveness.

2. The toys and games should furnish a means of activity and stimulate to it, the better if the activity is creative. This principle is vastly more important than questions of color and form in the toys. Indeed those questions are rather incidental, to be settled by good taste without reference to education. The toy I remember with greatest pleasure from my own early childhood was a quantity of blocks sawed from a piece of smooth scantling. They were homemade, in size about 2½ inches each way, uncolored, with no distracting pictures upon them, and could not be broken. They were simple units from which one could construct all manner of interesting objects, especially trains and castles, and outlasted both in interest and educational value, the objects of admiration of many a Christmas morning. Next to the toy I recall with most interest was a box of empty spools possessed by a fortunate friend whose mother was a seamstress. While less ready units than the blocks, the spools could be used in many a game of construction.

The value of the collections of stamps, flowers, minerals, which most children have a passion for making at a certain stage of their growth, is, similarly, that such interests stimulate an educative type of action. Still more helpful are living pets in furnishing opportunity and stimulus for much activity on the part of the child. No inanimate toy can be equally effective. Moreover, in caring for his animal friends and charges, building huts for them, feeding and protecting them from storms, the child's action is not only creative, but expressive of the most generous and affectionate emotions. Thus few instruments can be more valuable for moral culture than this.

3. In all the child's play there should be room for the imagination and a stimulus to its activity. Anyone who has watched a child make a train of cars out of a row of chairs placed together, or a few square blocks on the floor, and has contrasted the lastingness and intensity of the child's joy with the brief interest he has in a complicated mechanical imitation engine and cars, will realize how largely both the pleasure and the educational value of the play are due to the imagination. From this point of view simplicity in the character and limitation in the number of toys become doubly desirable. In every aspect of human life to-day we can see the deadening effects of over equipment. We are always in danger of slipping into slavery to the things that should serve us. We need good tools, but we must keep the upper hand and use our tools, otherwise they become a burden. It is difficult to study hard in a college overluxurious in its appointments. I have seen schoolrooms so decorated with a multitude of things that pupils and teacher alike seemed unable to live up to their clothes. Life, like art, demands a certain hard restraint if it is to be independent and forceful. Thus, especially in childhood, we must beware of suppressing mind and imagination by a multitude of things. The blasé child, sitting in the midst of a nursery crowded with uncared for toys, is father of the man who has "gained the whole world," or a good part of it, and lost the kingdom of his own soul; and the child is more to be pitied than the man because he is not to blame for his condition.

Thus a child gains far more joy and culture from his play when a large element must be filled out by his imagination. This explains why the little girl will cherish a rag doll that does not look at all like a real baby with so much more affection than an imitation of a human baby, uncanny in its likeness. On the other hand, wonder is closely akin to active imagination, and the stimulus that comes with surprise in the presence of some unexplained mechanism may awaken activity. Thus occasionally it may be helpful to surprise the child with some little invention of the age, that is not as good as the daily bread of its playtime.

4. It is well that a child should learn to play alone, without the stimulus of association with other persons. This makes for resourcefulness in human life, and involves an independent activity of the imagination that is helpful. Except for those children who tend to withdraw overmuch into a dream world of their own, parents should seek to cultivate in the child this ability to depend upon himself in some part of his play.

5. On the other hand, a wholly new element of moral education enters when play involves association and combination with others. Here, again, it is to the kindergarten we turn for the most noteworthy application of the principle. The games of the kindergarten involving social union and action cheerfully in harmony with others, are among its most valuable contributions to education. The same principle is the basis in those vigorous athletic games, played by organized teams, and especially available for boys. If only the number of players and spectators could be reversed! Such games demand at once strong personal initiative on the part of each member, with rigorous subordination of his action to the purpose of the whole; thus cultivating just that combination of independence and obedience necessary in moral living. These games, however, which have often been pushed quite beyond sane relation to the aims of education in school and college "athletics," if the most spectacular, are by no means the best illustration of the principle we are considering. Many quiet games played with toys, even in the nursery time, can be so guided as to teach the child harmonious combination with others; and all outdoor play can be so arranged. We thus gain, not only the added education in socially harmonious action, but the great stimulus to the child's activity that results from companionship. This element of social combination can be utilized increasingly as the child grows, since the natural process of moral development is toward action where means are consciously adjusted to ends and where the individual's sympathy extends over a widening area of life.

6. It is impossible to emphasize too strongly the value of some measure of companionship in the child's play on the part of the parent and others guiding the child. Not only do we thus learn to know more intimately the tastes and tendencies of our children and gain opportunities for the exercise of the most helpful personal influence, but our companionship is itself one of the most important factors in making the play morally educative to the child. His self-expression is helped and guided and his activity is brought into harmony with the whole of life. Parents should take a hint from the fact that the most effective workers in boys' and girls' clubs have always been those who could play the game most enthusiastically.

7. On the other hand, we must beware of overregulating the play of our children, or its spontaneity will be lost and it will degenerate into a dull routine. The child must keep his initiative and the adult should be comrade, not master.

By consciously selecting and guiding the child's play in harmony with the principles above outlined, we can utilize it as a powerful force for moral education. Perhaps the most important moral result, however, is the learning of the art of joy. With all our failure in the art of work through overhaste and misdirected energies, we understand that form of action so much better than we do the art of joy. One of the most significant evidences of our failure in our civilization is found in the way we strive to enjoy ourselves. The soldier or sailor, home from some month's endurance of hard work and privation, who wanders into the underground dives where poisonous drink is sold and sad caricatures of what once were women are ready to pander to every degraded sensibility, is seeking to be happy. The rich man who strives to distract himself by wandering aimlessly over the earth, by incessantly gambling, or by buying thousands of acres other people need and turning them into a wilderness through which he may follow dogs, is trying to be happy. Even the cultivated human being, who should know better if his education has been sound, makes such sad work of it when he attempts the art of joy. The very name we give our play shows our failure; for we speak of "distraction" and "diversion," as if we wanted to be diverted, pulled off from the serious business of life, failing to see that true play is recreation, the recreating of our powers, bodily and mental, through their spontaneous and joyous expression.

Perhaps we are slow in learning the art of joy because joy itself has so long and so widely been regarded as evil. We are only beginning to understand what Spinoza argued so clearly; that joy as joy is life, and that pain as pain is death. It is true, life may spring from death, and the "ministry of suffering" may teach what could be learned in no other way. Yet true joy means greater vitality and power, and it should be the inheritance of every human being.

Thus we should give opportunities of joyous play to our children if we are to educate them for the art of joy in human life; and "our children" could mean all children. As it is the duty of every parent and teacher to utilize the play of his children so it may contribute to their whole culture, so it is the duty of society as a whole (that is, of every man and woman,) to give every child opportunity for such culture, and guide his use of it. Only as this is done for all children can we hope to make play contribute the great aid it may furnish for moral education.—Edward Howard Griggs, in Moral Education.

Request for Prayers.

Brother R. F. Davis, Box 788, Coalgate, Oklahoma: "My wife stuck a rusty nail in her foot Sunday, which is painful. We ask an interest in your prayers, and that we may both remain faithful in the one and only true faith. I would like to learn of any Latter Day Saint living in this place."

Letter Department

WARD, IOWA.

Dear Herald: We are still in the faith and I have been made glad to see our old friend and brother, J. F. McDowell, Our latchstring is always out for him and any other Saint who may come our way. I first met Brother McDowell about fourteen years ago and he made his stopping place with me in Ohio. I found him a very affectionate and kind brother. I have had a great many openings in these two states and had Brother McDowell come and take up the work in a more able way than I could, and he always made friends for the work.

When I heard that he had laid down the armor for a while my heart went out to God to spare his life. Many times in the last few years have I gone to the Lord in behalf of our brother, knowing the great ability and wisdom God had given him; and when I saw his letter in the HERALD I sat down and wrote him and asked him to come to my place. He came last Monday and preached three times for us with the greatest liberty, and gave us three of the best sermons that have been preached here. We need more of this kind of preaching. I told our branch about Brother McDowell's lecture on the Book of Mormon and they voted unanimously for him to come and give his lecture.

My wife and I expect to go to conference in April and look at land in the "regions round about."

Yours in the faith,
G. W. HULL.

EDMONTON, ALBERTA, CANADA, February 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: I write to let the Saints know how we are getting along with the work at Edmonton. Until some of the Saints came up (about Christmas) to Edmonton from the Edgerton and Ribstone branches, to work here for the winter months, we had no preaching services, except as an elder dropped off and held services in Sister Beak's or Brother Arnold's places, and no Sunday school, as there were only five members as far as known. But after their arrival a Sunday school was organized which we as Saints of Edmonton hope to be able to keep up after the Edgerton and Ribstone Saints (nine in number) return home in the spring.

We also clubbed together and rented a hall for Sunday evening at which Elder Clyde Walrath after working hard all week, spoke. We have had a fair attendance and good interest shown, and also on account of the meetings being advertised, Brother and Sister Johnson and family, of Toronto, who did not know there were any Saints in the city, became acquainted; also Brother and Sister Closson, from Oklahoma, and family, situated the same way. Elder J. J. Cornish is expected to be here soon. Each and all of us are uniting in the prayer that God may so move the hearts of the Saints in other districts where branches are already started to club together, even though none may put in much and all help some, so as to send help to us here, that we can rent a suitable place (rent is very high in this place) for Elder Cornish to preach in, as we know that in this city of fifty thousand people there are many honest in heart who are anxious to hear the gospel; and as all the other churches, with their false doctrines, are going ahead and getting started, what are the Saints going to do? Be up and doing while it is day, as the fields are already white for the harvest. The Saints here are all in humble circumstances and unable to do much, so they must depend on outside help; therefore if you will be kind enough to insert a notice in your paper, asking for aid from the different Saints, you will be greatly helping God's work here.

We have no branch here as yet, and no elder for all the time, as Brother Walrath is here only for the winter, but we have a church committee to look after the hall rent, raising money, advertising, etc. The church committee is composed of myself as chairman and secretary-treasurer, Brother Frank Atkinson, 1111 Victoria Avenue, and Earnest Sheppard, 17 Donald Street.

Asking God's blessing on one and all, and especially on God's work, we will close, thanking you in advance in behalf of the Saints here for your publishing the notice, and the different ones for their help.

I remain your humble brother in Christ,
GEORGE W. WINN, Secretary-treasurer.

PURYSBAR, TENNESSEE, February 17, 1912.

Saints' Herald: I have been in this work less than six months, but have many undeniable testimonies that it is of the Lord. I accepted the gospel under very trying conditions, but I am very glad I was able to see the light. Some Saints who have been brought up in the work and never had cause to doubt the divinity of it, do not seem to be able to bear with others, who are slow to accept the gospel; for they do not know just how hard it is for a person to believe a thing they have always been taught to disbelieve.

We need not expect to convert the world to the truth, as a whole, because everybody will not believe our report, much less obey it. But God be thanked, the honest in heart will gladly hear and obey from the heart.

We can see that times are similar now to what they were when Christ was on the earth. The glorious gospel light is restored again to earth, but the world doesn't comprehend it. "The light shone forth in the darkness and they comprehended it not." So it is to-day; we have the light in our reach, if we will but come to it. Howbeit, if our deeds are evil we will not come, lest our deeds be made manifest. Paul looked down through the ages with a prophetic eye and saw that, in the last days there would be some who would not endure sound doctrine. Well, do we know of such people to-day? Surely all who will not endure the gospel in its fullness will not endure sound doctrine.

The world, religious world at large, want only a part of the doctrine of the church of Christ. Since it takes a complete body to be a sound body, it takes a complete doctrine to be a sound doctrine.

If a man should say he possessed a sound body and be minus his head and an arm and without any legs, do you think you would believe he had a sound body? No, you would not.

Well, it is just as easy to detect a sound doctrine from an unsound one as to detect a sound body from an unsound body.

If we claim we have a sound doctrine and say we have need of only three principles of the doctrine, we deceive ourselves and fail to endure sound doctrine. This looks plain enough for the simplest to see it, but people who possess worldly wisdom and would not accept an unsound body for a sound one appear both willing and anxious to have an unsound doctrine.

The Saints in this part of the harvest field seem to be taking a new interest in the work, not only in word but in deed, as many are coming forward and doing their duty in a financial way. This is very encouraging to a new beginner.

We have a very interesting Sabbath school and hope we will be able to organize a Religio in the near future.

I would be pleased if some of the ministry would write at least a tract on the subjects named below: "Man's ways and God's way"; "The law of Moses and the gospel law." I think they would prove a blessing to the earnest searcher for truth, and do much in overcoming error.

WEST PLAINS, MISSOURI, February 20, 1912.

Dear Herald: You may tell all your readers that J. T. now lives in the beautiful city of West Plains, Missouri. I have bought a home here and am happy in the thought that we are in the boundaries and regions of Zion. We are on the main line of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis Railroad.

Conditions are fast changing in this country from the "freeze out" spirit to a kind and friendly feeling and an acknowledgement of the rights of the Latter Day Saints.

This country seems to have been thrown into convulsions in the last few years and a feeling of unrest has taken hold of the people, so that everyone wants to "sell out" and go somewhere, they don't seem to know where. Therefore we have had a fluctuating element for some time. There are many good homes that can be bought at what one must call a "low price."

This is the center of the "land of the big red apple." The dairying business is fast coming to the front in southern Missouri.

We are happy to say that some of the Saints are coming in and buying homes here, and seem to be well pleased with the future outlook. Opportunities, however, are passing; prices on land are advancing fast; and oh, if the Saints could take advantage now! Doors are opening to us for the preaching of the gospel, but the laborers are few, indeed.

Since I took the malaria fever in the swamps of Arkansas last September, I have not done as much preaching as I would like to have done, but the time has not all been lost, as I have firesided the time quite well, and may say I feel myself in much better shape to leave my family and go into the field the coming conference year than ever before.

Have some debates pending but can not say what will happen. May blow over. May the Lord bless the coming General Conference.

Respectfully in gospel bonds,

JAMES T. DAVIS.

MAPLETON, KANSAS, February 26, 1912.

Dear Editors: Thinking some would like to hear from this place, I pen a few lines to let you know Mapleton is a lively place just now. The debate between Brother J. S. Curtis and John Gidden is on, the first propositions are finished, but Gidden not being satisfied, challenged said brother to meet him on the polygamy question. The essence being that Joseph Smith was the author of polygamy and for said crime came to his death. The debate has been spicy and large congregations attended. Prejudice has been displayed very plainly, the different churches having joined together to suppress the truth. Elder Gidden made wonderful boasts of how he would tear Curtis up and bury him one thousand feet below the surface of Kansas. He also had propositions just the way he wanted them, and was surprised at Curtis being so easily cornered, etc.

I only wish I had the talent to tell of the results. The people of this town were actually pitying us for such boasting. It seemed sure we were doomed. It would be mild to say that he was utterly defeated in every effort he made to attack the truth, and he also received a number of severe punishments. I have heard several outsiders say that instead of Gidden getting our man in that deep hole, Brother Curtis pushed him in and covered him up.

Brother Curtis says he never had the Spirit like he has in this debate. Seems as though an especial blessing has rested on our defender. The Saints are glad in heart, and are much confirmed in the faith. Several outsiders are talking of obeying. A member of the Christian Church said she liked to hear our brother talk; there seemed to be such a good spirit attending him, and that she was disgusted with their man.

We hope this complete victory will result in gathering the honest in heart into the kingdom.

Your brother,
A. C. ANDERSON.

BEMIDJI, MINNESOTA, February 8, 1912.

Dear Herald: Having read Brother Frank Whiting's letter, I would like to give him my plan under like conditions. It may be of benefit to him or others. Thank God that time is past with us now, and for almost a year we have enjoyed the benefit of our own Sunday school. This is the first we have had, except at two reunions, and my little ones seldom miss a session, although it was a union Sunday school part of the time, with no other "Mormons," as they called us, except our own family, but run principally by the Methodists. There were many times we were told, "It does not mean as it reads," and such a thing was "not that way," etc., etc. Many times I have wondered and doubted whether it would do good or harm, but have always had our lessons at home, as I taught the children from the time they were old enough to listen to a story or read it themselves. We had our own Sunday school literature and would study our own lessons first, and I have always tried to impress on their minds, that this is Christ's own church and all others are man's, and gave them my reasons and proof so far as the history of Christ can give.

Sometimes our quarterlies have had the same lessons that they would have at Sunday school and I would have the children compare the two. I have given our quarterlies to the superintendent when we have had a lesson that was already in our own, and it seemed to be appreciated, as it gave so much more on the good part of the lesson. I always read the lessons from the Bible and explained that the notes and comments on the lesson were simply man's explanation and their own opinion of the subject, and we must take it for just what it is worth and use the word of God for the authority.

It will take some of your time, but you will certainly not get into the habit of worshipping God in a half-hearted manner.

If you study with the children in that way and attend Sunday school yourself sometimes at least, and are not afraid to answer the questions your own way every time you get an opportunity, it makes it more interesting for all concerned. Don't be afraid of being called a "Mormon" or of being called down for your answers if you keep close to the Bible. They will soon learn you can answer correctly most of the questions or give an explanation when they can not. Don't get discouraged when your answers are cut short, or the "time is up," etc., but stand by your ensign and you will get a hearing after awhile.

You and your children will be a great deal more apt to study God's word if you attend Sunday school than if you attempt to study at home all the time—that has been my experience. I have sent four children to sectarian Sunday school, and the oldest is fourteen but he began to attend when but three. I sometimes think it does no good to teach, "they will be what they will be." We will have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done what we could. That is the only satisfaction one has in this world sometimes.

We can not do without the dear old HERALD. Were sorry to hear of the death of Uncle Joseph Clapp. He certainly will find rest with the Master. I hope we may live that we may see him, with our dear ones, when the Savior comes.

Hoping that this may help some in like circumstances, I am yours in the faith,

L. WILLIAMS.

Australia.

Some one may feel encouraged by my writing a few lines, as it gives me much joy and encouragement when reading the different letters from my brothers and sisters. I love this latter day gospel, for truly, is it not a marvelous work and a wonder? God has been very good to me all through life and his mercy and goodness have been far beyond that which I have deserved.

We have a small branch here, and we are very much in need of help. We also need a church badly, as most people do not care about going to a private house to the meetings. We have Book of Mormon class once a fortnight; also Religion; prayer meeting every Thursday evening, sacrament meeting every fortnight, and preaching services same.

The brethren do street preaching in the city every Sunday evening, but have had but very little results as yet.

However, we hope the seed that is sown will bring forth much fruit for the Master. We hope to erect a church before long.

We have had Brother and Sister Pitt with us few months ago, and all felt much strengthened and encouraged by their visit. Most of us received blessings. I was indeed pleased to receive my blessing. It gave me much encouragement and showed me the love that my dear heavenly Father had towards me; and though at times we wander away, yet he still loves us and is willing to protect us if we only come and cast our burdens upon him and trust his constant care.

Last Thursday night prayer meeting the Lord poured out his Spirit in great measure. Three prophecies were delivered through Brother Davies, warning the Saints and telling them that the Lord would shortly pour out his wrath upon this land, and would also pour out his Spirit upon his people. All were truly made glad, and felt it was good to be a Saint in latter days.

Many times when reading the letters in the HERALD about the goodness of the Lord to others, I am made to rejoice because of the goodness and love of the Lord to me. Dear Saints, I ask you to remember me in your prayers, because I feel I am weak, and I realize the prayers of the righteous avail much.

The Utah people are here, but don't seem to get many converts. It seems to me that wherever you go you will find those people. I had a long talk with one of their elders one day. Of course he tried to make out that it was our Joseph Smith, the Martyr, that was the polygamist; and said he knew some of the women that were his wives. He also said that our own Church History, vol. 3, substantiated it. Said he would not mind having a quiet talk with any of our elders, but didn't want any public discussion. We are hoping that help will be forthcoming since New South Wales conference which convened at the New Year.

Trusting I shall remain faithful till the end and be permitted to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

E. BROADWAY.

17 GLADSTONE STREET, E. PERTHE, W. AUSTRALIA, January 15, 1912.

Gloucester, England.

The HERALD came to hand as usual this morning, and noting the many contributions from various missions and branches, I thought I would just write and let your readers know we have a branch in the very ancient city of Gloucester. And sometimes we feel we are citizens of no mean city. We have a very fine cathedral, noted for its ancient architecture. The crypt itself is a monument to the religious sentiments of over a thousand years ago, being built about the ninth century. From the cathedral, running in various directions, underground passages have been found, connecting the crypt with old hotels and monasteries, etc.; also two chambers in which have been found heaps of human bones, suggesting mysterious treatment at the hands of those who controlled the religious substitute for Christianity during what is commonly called the Dark Ages.

Gloucester has contributed its part toward the religious freedom of this country and we believe the world too. We are informed by some writers of history, that the independence of the city of London once depended on the gallant stand made by the citizens and garrison of Gloucester, in favor of Cromwell's Parliament, against the Royalists who had besieged the city.

The first meeting room of the Gloucester Branch was a large room in the old mansion where during the siege of Gloucester there resided the able and gallant soldier, Colonel Massey, who successfully withstood the attacks of the Royalists, who had besieged the city. The Saints will remember the many happy-times spent together in that room, and some remember that there they first received the unmistakable evidence of the divinity of this latter day work.

The Sunday school, as a movement, was born in Gloucester, and we often look at the little house in which was held the first school for boys, and without mention of anything locally, we believe the world-wide extent of the movement itself is a fitting monument to the kind heart of the man who founded it, Robert Raikes. He was a citizen of Gloucester and editor of the newspaper, The Gloucester Journal, which he used to some extent for the furtherance of the Sunday school movement.

The writer first became acquainted with the Reorganized Church in 1896, when he was baptized on November 1 of that year. Brother G. Mackay, with his family, came to reside here, and the writer being ordained to the office of priest, we both set to work to accomplish an organization of the church in Gloucester. After repeated efforts we failed, got discouraged, and gave up the effort. However, the writer was informed, through the gifts of tongues and prophecy, that he would be blessed of God, and he would yet do a work in this city if faithful. We became discouraged, and through offenses we became estranged to the work; and finally, after receiving the verdict of a court of elders, was cut off from the church, we would oftentimes smile as we thought of the prophecy. However, time went by, and we found ourselves yearning for the pleasant times once enjoyed in the association of the Saints; and we determined once more to play the man. We became reconciled again, and we found ourselves once again in the waters of baptism. We received a satisfaction that what was done was approved of God. Again the voice of inspiration, through the gifts, pointing out the place in the priesthood previously held and confirming the prophecy that had been formerly given that "we would yet do a work in this city if faithful," even as he had said in days that were gone.

Before our ordination had been accomplished we were moved away, seventy miles distant, into Wales. After three months we again moved, this time into the association of the Cardiff Branch. There we gained much experience in branch work, where we met various brethren of the missionary force, among them our Brethren Joseph Smith, R. C. Evans, when on their visit to this country, and others whom we esteem who have helped to add to our experience, such as Elders William Lewis, E. B. Morgan, and John Davis. Finally, after an absence of four years, we again returned to our beloved city. In the hope of accomplishing what had been predicted, we renewed our efforts but could not make any progress. After a period of about eighteen months by request we were organized as a mission. We renewed our efforts, our congregation numbering three persons. The writer was in charge, Brother G. Mackay, teacher, assisted to the best of his ability, and we say this to the brother's credit, he stood loyal. My wife was the third person and she acted as our treasurer. Other members resided in Gloucester, but they looked upon our effort with contempt.

But the Lord was more merciful than they; he looked upon us with love. Some were added by baptism and on Sunday, the 4th of July, 1909, we were organized into a branch by Apostle J. W. Rushton. The writer was chosen as presiding elder and Brother G. Mackay, teacher. Time went on, the Lord was good to us, and he surely did bless us, even in the preaching of the word; others came in, even those who were formerly opposed to us, and we can say the Lord has indeed blessed our efforts. The writer is still sustained as presiding elder, my brother, Alfred Tom Trapp, is our branch priest, Brother John Harris and my loyal friend, G. Mackay, are teachers, with Brother Miles as deacon. We number thirty or more on the record.

We have now moved from our old mansion meeting room to more suitable premises; indeed, our Bishop R. May said it was "just fine." So we now look forward, that with the favor of God we may prosper in good works and increase in numbers.

The Mormon elders have been busy here too, and at an open air meeting in one of the most prominent parts of our city Elder Thomas Jones and myself introduced ourselves to four of their elders, but they accomplished a hasty though undignified retreat. A few days after the writer was informed by one of them that he did not approve of our methods, and it was characteristic of our people the world over. Personally we felt we were not to blame if we took advantage of the good crowd they left behind to make known the usual differences between us. We have not seen them preaching in public since.

If any of the Saints in the States have friends who reside here in this city and would like them visited, I should be pleased to honor their request if at all possible.

With kind regards;

ERNEST J. TRAPP.

Extracts from Letters.

Brother W. J. Smith, Cash, Michigan: "I began a series of meetings here on the 8th inst., and am having splendid liberty in trying to tell the gospel story. People are coming for miles to hear, and the invitations to occupy at six other places have been extended me. The spirit of enthusiasm and love for the gospel work is filling my soul as in days gone by, and I sincerely hope the day is not far distant when I may again be engaged in active missionary work.

"The gospel is to me more to be desired than fine gold, and is sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb; and although I have made mistakes in the past, I still know that this work is true, and that God is my friend; and when I enjoy the opportunity of speaking to my fellow men of the precious truths of the great gospel plan, and feel the sweet influence of the Holy Spirit's power filling my heart, like one of old, I feel to exclaim, "My soul doth magnify the Lord exceedingly." I shall continue if the weather permits and the Lord is willing, and look after the interests of the work as best I can."

News From Missions

Nebraska.

I have just arrived here from attending the debates of our people with the Church of Christ (Campbellites). Brother Leonard Holloway met W. G. Roberts in eleven sessions at Wauneta, Nebraska, on church propositions and the Book of Mormon. Brother F. A. Russell was moderator for Brother Holloway. We were strangers in Wauneta, none of us ever having been there before. But the difference in names and choice of language between the disputants told in our favor from start to finish, and before the debate was over it seemed the whole town was in our favor except the members of Roberts' church, and I heard that some of them were very much disgusted with Roberts.

I felt rejoiced to know the people could discern the fine accomplishment of a man of God as compared with one who has never experienced the refining influence of the gospel of Christ. Brother Holloway met the arguments of Elder Roberts in a pleasant, manly way, though Roberts was very abusive; so much so that the people talked of running him out of town. The people manifested their appreciation of Brother Holloway and the way he defeated his opponent by handing him a purse of about twelve dollars. We were invited back to preach with the assurance that they would furnish a free hall and take care of the brethren.

At the close of the debate at Wauneta, Brother F. A. Russell joined issue with Elder L. S. Terry, of the Church of Christ, at Ough, Nebraska, for ten sessions on same propositions that Brother Holloway and Reverend Roberts had discussed at Wauneta, Brother Holloway being his moderator. Excitement ran high, and though the roads were very bad, the schoolhouse where the debate was held was crowded to overflowing. Elder Terry followed much the same line that Roberts did, though he was not so abusive. But he was no match for Brother Russell. Of course he kept his church back at Pentecost. But his unfairness in doing so was so plainly seen that I believe he would have made a better fight if he had come out and confessed the facts and defended them the best he could. Brother Russell pressed him so hard to bring out his church so he could examine it that his evasion became silly and laughable, and the people did laugh.

Brother Russell carried the audience with him from the start. Judging from the demonstrations, almost the whole audience at Ough favored the gospel as presented and defended by Brother Russell.

The past two months have been very unfavorable for church work in western Nebraska, on account of snow and cold weather.

Western Iowa.

Welcome spring is fast approaching with its happy burden of leaves and flowers, and the increase of outdoor privileges. We welcome its return with all our hearts.

Cold, as I have felt in this State in the winter past, is abnormal. Heat, as I have sensed it under the far southern sun, is also abnormal; though in my case the latter is most intolerable of the two excesses.

One's mind reverts to the remarks of Parley Pratt's exquisite flight on the future arrangements of God pertaining to the geological and meteorological conditions of our globe. But, comment as they may, I doubt not but what there will be variety hereafter as well as here, not only pertaining to life biological and botanical, but also, as to atmosphere and earthly conditions. The most that we can contend for is that where mountains and valleys are too numerous, or too projected or depressed; where cold or heat is too severe, God will regulate them in harmony with his great design and sovereign will with a view to the greater ultimate comfort and happiness of his children.

We will have our individualities hereafter as well as here. We will not all wear the same solitary facial expression. To every seed will be given its own body. The lives of flowers will be variegated; the rose and the lily will each breathe forth its own distinct odor; and the climate will be diversified throughout the ages.

Eternal, unbroken sameness is lonesomeness, dreariness. We will want organs as well as harps. The trumpet will not be silent for we will hear its regaling symphonies. Nor will the same unchanging tune for ever greet our ears. Our likes and preferences will not be in identity, for what one likes best another likes less, or prefers something else. But no one will be rude enough to say, "Don't play that, for I don't like it," when they are conscious that some other may. No one will say, "Bring only apples," without he knows the hearts of all, and that in his speech each heart is likewise spoken. No one will want to take up all the time when there are others who may be heard and still others who would like to hear them. The crowd will want all to develop and will make a demagogue of none. They will fawn on no one, no matter what his station may be. No one will receive adulation or be fawned upon. No one will deliver all the speeches because he can without an opportunity to his fellow to be heard as well. He who is up will rejoice, whose joy will not be marred because another is higher than himself; it will be a source of joy in that he will conceive that he can get higher also. And if lower down, on descending steps he sees some clutching, clambering others, he will again have joy because he knows that as he is where he is because he came there; that they can come there also. And so all will glory in what they have and where they occupy, and their consciousness of gradation will be no diminution of their glory. On every height to be climbed, every distance to be traversed, every depth to be followed, every wall to be scaled, there will be inscribed the word possibility. Every lock will have a key; and in luminous characters the words endless progression emblazoned in the horizon will invite the masses on and on, worlds without end. The conditions merely fulfilled, growth will result as with a boy who eats his mush and milk.

No combines or grafters will be there to store out of reach the bread of the needy. No steel, oil, or railroad magnates will infest the land, nor will any other ravenous beast be found.

I feel that the past year in Fremont District has been a success so far as my ministry is concerned. In the main I have tried, in conformity with my office, to direct my energies toward the outside element. I have baptized a few and have the names of quite a number of others who delay the action for warmer weather, in which case I might not be the one to officiate, but I shall be satisfied so long as it is done. I am glad I have gotten that far ahead.

A couple of days ago I was pleased to receive a letter from an intelligent lady to whom I introduced our message a month ago, a Congregationalist, to come and baptize her. "I have decided to be baptized," she said. She is a tireless, inveterate reader, and at her present rate of advancement it will not be long till she has intelligently canvassed our whole catalogue of books. She bids fair to be a worker in the neighborhood where she dwells.

What a satisfaction it is to the man with the bread of life from heaven to meet a truly hungry soul; one who has a demand to supply, an emptiness to fill; one who has become tired of drinking from the ditch and now wants something right from the fountain. When I can meet a number of such rare mortals in the same vicinity my books fly and I get down to work.

Talk about the Gentile world being tired of sectarianism and hungry for the truth! It is not true; not as to the hunger at least. The statement is too sweeping. They may be indisposed toward sectarianism, but that produces no marked reaction in our favor, generally. Were it merely an indisposition towards the other churches it would not be so bad, but it is toward God, toward religion—religion in general—and things pertaining to God, which makes them unapproachable from our standpoint as well.

No, sir; the Gentiles are becoming more obdurate, growing less susceptible to gospel influences, more and more careless about things pertaining to God. Which trend of events, which condition is only responding to prophecy, ancient and modern, that we would turn from the Gentiles to the Jews. And why do we thus turn from the Gentiles to the Jews? Surely not because our message is meeting with a general and increasing acceptance on the part of the Gentiles, for it is owing to their rejection of it that we turn from them. It is true that we are recruiting their ranks, that a fertile spot is struck now and then by our ministry, which will continue to be so until we formally or informally abandon them to their fate. But it is equally manifest that they are deteriorating nevertheless, and that gospel success among them is decidedly on the wane.

Yours loving and hoping,
MCPAUL, IOWA. ALVIN KNISLEY.

Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii.

I read that recent article on, "What are you doing for the church publications," and I answered in my mind, Getting all the subscriptions I can and trying to get the old ones to pay up. But I will confess I might send in more news. And as this section has not been heard from for a year will send a little, and the editor will please abridge if I get too much.

Hawaii is growing in importance from a worldly standpoint, and is now recognized as one of the most important naval bases under the American flag. From the latest recommendations of the Secretary of War, we learn that from twelve to fifteen thousand troops are to be permanently located here, the greatest portion to arrive this year. I guess they are afraid some one will run away with the canal.

This makes it necessary for us to try to reach some of the military part of the population, and to this end we have secured permission to have the church publications sent to several of the Army Post libraries. Also for the past several months we have had preaching at the Naval Station here in Honolulu on Sunday at 11, at which a goodly degree of the Spirit has been present. Several of the boys who were interested, however, are leaving for Manila on the transport Sherman to-day. We put quite a number of HERALDS, Autumn Leaves, tracts, etc., on the boat, and were assured by one of the boys whom we met that they would be read until they were worn out.

Two Sunday schools have been organized and fifteen baptized here during the last year. One of these was among the Japanese, being the first strictly Japanese Sunday school ever conducted here. They are very zealous and are so enthusiastic over the work that I notice they have prepared a nice lighted float for the Japanese lantern parade to take place on the evening of Washington's birthday.

The Chinese Sunday school continues to flourish, or at least to hold its own, which is doing pretty well considering the inducements we have to offer the children as compared to what the other churches are offering. But one thing is certain to my mind, and that is, that the work among the Chinese has gone just about as far as it can without having a building to meet in which they can feel is their own. The place where we meet now is a political hall, and we simply have the privilege of using it for a short time on Sunday.

For many months the Chinese revolutionary flag has been very prominent around town, Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the provisional president of the new republic being a Honolulu Chinese and a great favorite of his people here. Yesterday the old flag was hauled down on the Chinese consulate and the new one run up. I hope this will mean an open door for the gospel in China.

Elder Waller is in San Francisco and Brother Barrett and myself are keeping things on the move during his absence. Sorry we can not go to General Conference, and trust that those who can may be blessed by an abundance of God's Spirit.

Wishing the HERALD and the church in general a successful year,
MYRON A. MCCONLEY.

News from Branches

Omaha, Nebraska.

We have held our annual branch business meeting since you heard from us last, and elected the same officers and two additional ones. M. A. Peterson continues as our presiding elder; Leon Snow was elected chorister to succeed Sister Kirkpatrick.

The Northern Nebraska District met here in Sunday school-Religio convention capacity, Thursday evening, February 15, at 8 o'clock, and continued Friday with three sessions, the local Sunday school giving an entertainment in the evening in recognition of their having attained to the "Standard of Excellence." Conference convened Saturday morning and continued over Sunday, with prayer service and three preaching services, beside local Sunday school and Religio services. So we were busy, but there seemed to be a happy, cheerful spirit, and we believe it was a near success.

One of the pioneer missionaries, Elder Charles Derry, preached Saturday and Sunday evening; Elders Crabb and H. S. Lytle preached Sunday morning and afternoon respectively. We missed our dear brother, Apostle J. W. Wight, whom we learn is again so afflicted as to be forced to go to the Sanitarium.

Though we are meeting with apparent obstacles in our spiritual advancement as a branch, yet we hope they are blessings in disguise. May we put forth enough effort to overcome the weaknesses of the flesh which may now hinder our progress. We have been promised again and again that God stands ready to bless when we are able to receive.

Yours for truth,

W. E. STOFF.

Conference Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.—District conference was held at Logan, Iowa, February 3, 4. District presidents Sidney Pitt and S. B. Kibler selected to preside. President Pitt reported labors at Pisgah, Turin, Mapleton and Ute, and since the first of the year had visited nearly all the branches in the district. Had found in all the branches a spiritual lethargy that he had never noticed before, nothing to be alarmed at, but enough to put us on our guard. No troubles existed. Urged that the spirit of levity be banished and a spirit of prayer encouraged in branch meetings. Spiritual matters had not advanced as he had hoped and the labor expected had not been performed. President Kibler stated that a priesthood meeting had been held in the Woodbine Branch and quite a number had agreed to occupy whenever and wherever openings permitted for the preaching of the word. They had stood in readiness whenever it had seemed to be wise or whenever invitations were extended, but the fall work and severe weather had prevented the work they had hoped to do. President Pitt presented a summary of the reports sent to him. All branches but Pisgah reported. All branches hold regular meetings and Sunday school. All branches, excepting Persia and Evergreen, have Religio locals. In the branches reporting, 78 preaching and 50 prayer services had been held each month. The spiritual conditions were fair to good. In four of the branches, the membership were visited by the branch officers each quarter. One had done no visiting during the last quarter. Three made no reports on this item and the others did not visit thoroughly. Priesthood meetings were held in most of the branches with good interest. Baptisms and confirmations totaled 22; three ordinations, and 9 children blessed. The report was not as complete as it could have been if better understood. J. R. Fry, of the Missouri Valley building committee, reported the building lot paid for in full; $46 or $47 on hand; $30 due them for rent of the lot, and about $150 with the Aid Society which they expected to contribute. The local committee had not understood their duties and had done but little. The bishop's agent reported the receipts since October 1, 1911, to February 1, 1912, $1,603.50, which included $24.31 at the beginning of the report instead of a deficit of $44.22, as reported in error at last conference. Had paid to elders' families and for aid, $492.10; had remitted to Bishop Kelley, $1,000; and had $111.40 on hand. The annual report for the conference year ending December 31, 1911, showed the names of 221 contributing tithes, offerings, and consecrations. The total amount received for the year was $3,223.84; on hand at beginning of year, $40.06; total cash, $3,267.90; paid to elders' families and for aid, $1,412.50; remitted to Bishop Kelley $1,650, and had on hand $201.40. This report was audited and found correct. The statistical reports from the twelve branches of the district showed a total membership of 1,998, which included one patriarch, one member of the high council, 4 high priests, 2 seventies, 43 elders, 33 priests, 32 teachers, and 20 deacons; 20 were gained by baptism; 16 by letter, and 6 by certificate; a total gain of 42; 20 were lost by letter, 5 by death; a net gain of 17. Five marriages were reported and one ordination. By unanimous vote J. F. McDowell was recommended to the minister in charge, the Quorum of Twelve, and the bishopric for active ministerial labor under General Conference appointment. A resolution was passed instructing the branch clerks and presidents to locate as far as possible the absent membership; ascertain their wishes in regard to uniting with their nearest branch, urge them to unite with the branch that is most convenient to attend, and report the result of their labors to the next conference. Seventy-nine delegates were nominated to represent the district at the General Conference. Sioux City was chosen by unanimous vote as the place to hold the next conference, and June 1 and 2 as the time. Bert E. Fry, of the Biglers Grove Branch, was recommended to the conference by the branch for ordination to the office of elder. The call was properly testified to and the brother was ordained at the Sunday morning prayer service, February 4, under the hands of Charles Derry and Sidney Pitt, sr. J. C. Ballantyne, Charles Derry, Sidney Pitt, sr., and J. L. Parker occupied at the preaching services. James D. Stuart, Magnolia, Iowa, district clerk.

SOUTHWESTERN TEXAS.—District convened with the First San Antonio Branch at 7.45 p. m., February 9, with the district presidency in the chair. After preaching by W. C. Carl, the district presidency was chosen to preside over the conference and appoint services and speakers. The 10 o'clock prayer service Saturday was followed by a very touching sermon from Brother Hay. Business session began at 2.45 p. m. Saturday. The reports consisted of those of the two branches, the First and Second San Antonio Branches, six elders, W. C. Carl, J. W. Morgan, John Harp, W. H. Davenport, T. J. Jett, and Gland Kuykendall; five priests, Gregoria Menchaca, Andrew Kuykendall, J. R. Wheeler, A. R. Wheeler, and C. F. Wheeler. After extending voice and vote to visiting members, the conference accepted a recommendation from the Second San Antonio Branch that C. F. Wheeler be ordained to the office of elder. The election of officers resulted in the following: J. W. Morgan, president; W. C. Carl, vice-president. The other district officers were sustained, except that John Harp was elected superintendent of the district Sunday school association. John Harp, Gland Kuykendall, Ruth Gifford were chosen delegates to the General Conference. The 8 o'clock hour Saturday night was occupied by John Harp and he indeed brought forth the new from the old. After this preaching service, Riverside Park in San Antonio, kindly offered by Brother Palmer, and a most suitable place, was accepted as the ground for our coming conference and reunion, which is to begin on Friday before the first full moon in August. After Sunday school Sunday morning a resolution was adopted that we pledge ourselves to pay as much as five cents each, every month, for the benefit of the Children's Home, and Sister Elma Neal was appointed to take charge of this matter. The 11 o'clock hour Sunday was occupied by a preaching service. At 2.30 we had the pleasure of seeing a young lady buried in the liquid grave. At the afternoon prayer service this sister was confirmed, and C. F. Wheeler was ordained an elder. The closing service was a sermon by Brother Palmer, Sunday night. The report of the bishop's agent, which was not finished in time to be read before the business session, was read and accepted. We are looking forward with brightest hopes to the conference and reunion, because we have the promise that if diligent and prayerful we shall then receive a great blessing. Carl F. Wheeler, secretary.

EASTERN WALES.—A conference of the district convened at Nantyglo, February 3 and 4, at 7 p. m. on the third. District president, E. J. Traop, in the chair. Apostle G. T.

Resolution.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father in his inscrutable wisdom to remove from our midst, our beloved and esteemed brother, Joshua C. Nunn, taking him from active service in this state and giving him place in the realm of peace and rest; and,

Whereas, our departed brother was an honored member of the First Quorum of Priests, and at the time of his death the faithful and energetic secretary of the same,

Therefore, be it resolved, That while we regret his premature death and mourn the loss of a valiant and able comrade, yet we reverently submit to the will of God whose perfect love and wisdom leads us to believe that he doeth all things well; and we hereby extend to his sorrowing wife this expression of deep sympathy in this hour of distress and gloom, and invoke the blessing of Almighty God upon her that through the gospel of hope she may look beyond the darkness of the present and in anticipation of the future, when in the light of immortality, all broken strands will be reunited, and every mystery made plain, and all tears be wiped away in the unity and grace of the Holy Spirit.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be forwarded to our sister.

Literary Note.

For the first time in the history of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, the gold medal for distinguished work has been awarded to a poet, James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier bard, being the lucky recipient. The meeting of the institute was held in Philadelphia. Mr. Riley, who is one of the "forty immortals" was unable to attend. A telegram bearing the glad news was sent him over the signature of John W. Alexander and Jesse Lynch Williams, president and secretary of the institute.

The medal is of solid gold, about two inches in diameter and a quarter of an inch in thickness. It was designed by Adolph Weinman, a member of the institute, and shows a Greek head in relief on one side, while the reverse bears a lighted lamp of ancient pattern, and an inscription.

James Whitcomb Riley, although he is always closely associated with his native Indiana, is the poet of all America. He naturally fills the place once held by Longfellow and Whittier, and every line he writes strikes a responsive chord in the human heart. He is indeed worthy of the honor that has been bestowed upon him.

How blessed to feel from my care-laden heart,
Christ knoweth my sorrows, and bids them depart;
To lay my tired head in an infinite rest,
On the heart of all others that loves me the best!
When my lips have been touched with the spirit of prayer,
I feel that the presence of Jesus is there;
From all condemnation my soul is now free,
For the blessed Redeemer has suffered for me.

A LETTER OF INSTRUCTION.

In presenting the following letter of instruction, to the readers of the HERALD, I have deemed it advisable to do so by a series of questions, having in consideration the subject matter of the position, privilege, and duty of the Quorum of the First Presidency in its several parts contingent upon the death or deposition for cause of the President of the church, denominated in the law as the president of the high priesthood. In answering the several questions the following premises should be remembered and observed.

First. Priesthood, delegated authority, is conferred for the expressed purpose of accomplishing, by human means, the work of the divine mind, for the benefit of mankind.

Second. Office in the priesthood is intended to designate the general and specific work that the individual called, chosen, and ordained to the office is to do.

Third. Office in the priesthood is not conferred to increase the importance of the individual or as a means to self-aggrandizement or personal emolument.

Fourth. All offices in the priesthood are equal in honor before God, the honor of each as to the individual holder resulting from the manner in which the duties of the office are performed.

This is evident from a consideration of the statement made by the Apostle Paul, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. . . . That no flesh should glory in his presence."—1 Corinthians 1: 26, 29.

Fifth. It is equally essential to remember; that in using the terms, "called," "appointed," "chosen," and "ordained," referring to any person, chosen and ordained by the body to any office in the priesthood, the worthiness, fitness, and qualifications to act in such office should be understood and conceded without a constant repetition of these terms.

Sixth. It is the axiom of the church, that persons ordained to office in the church are so ordained because they are called of God by revelation.

This follows the injunction of Paul to the Hebrew brethren, "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God."—Hebrews 5: 4.

1. In the case of the death of a president of the church, or his removal from office for cause, what would be the position of his counselors?

To reply to this question intelligently it is necessary to ascertain to what office they have been called and ordained. Section 104, paragraph 11, reads thus: "Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church." In section 17, paragraph 1, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were called and ordained apostles. In section 87, paragraph 3, it is stated that Sidney Rigdon and Oliver Cowdery were equal to the president in "holding the keys of this last kingdom."

By provision in section 99, paragraph 6, the three high priests who were chosen as the Presidency of the Church are rated as equal in authority to preside over the high council. In section 68, paragraph 2, these three presiding high priests are distinctly authorized to officiate in the ordination of those who are called and appointed to act as bishops in the church, either of the order of Aaron or by virtue of holding the office of high priest.

In the church articles of incorporation, Article 1, in the government of the church, there is provision made that the church should be presided over by a First Presidency, consisting of a president and two counselors. We have already seen how these counselors are chosen.

From what is given from the authorities cited above, it is clear that in authorizing the organization of the church, the Lord provided an ample safeguard against imposition upon the people from the improper aspiration of any of the leading authorities of the church, by establishing three quorums as checks and counter checks upon each other, the three being equal in authority in matters of importance, neither one of the three being paramount to overriding the authority of the other two. It is therefore reasonable to suppose, that in case of a vacancy occurring in either of the quorums, unless such vacancy was of such a character as to reduce the membership of the quorum below the permissible majority provided for in section 104, where it would be impossible to secure an undivided quorum, such quorum in which the vacancy occurred would still hold its unity of power, a majority existing, providing there was a unity in the remaining members of the quorum. Or in other words, that a quorum broken by death or by deposition, providing a majority still remained, would hold its quorum authority intact, and could not be deprived of its quorum authority and privileges unless it should be overruled by a unanimous decision of the other two quorums. It would not therefore be reasonable to suppose that the Quorum of the First Presidency would be so completely broken by the death or removal from office for cause of the president of the high priesthood that such quorum would cease to exist, as a quorum, or its duties to the body as a quorum cease upon the death or removal of the president. The provision is an ample and wise one, as anyone can see by examining the proposition devoid of prejudice, the result of wrongdoing in the past.

It would then seem clear that the members of the First Presidency who would survive the death of the president would still hold the office of presiding high priests over the high priesthood and be authorized to act in such duties of the presidency in a similar manner that they may do during the life of the president, restricted only by the exceptions found in the law, the most important of these perhaps being the restriction as to the right of receiving revelations and presenting them to the church for the government and guidance thereof. It would further seem reasonable that as these officers were high priests those whose priesthood warrants the belief that they might receive revelations from God, it would not be impossible that the Lord might speak through one of those who remained in the quorum after the death of the principal, or his removal from office for cause, as it is the privilege of the Lord to speak through whom he will. There could be no danger of the church being misled by such revelations, these revelations being subjected to the same scrutiny by the quorums as those given by the president himself.

2. When would their term of authority cease and what would be the extent of their duty pending the appointment of a successor?

Their office as counselors merely would cease at the death of the president, for obvious reasons; but their office as members of the First Presidency to which they had been ordained after being called and chosen would not pass until a successor to the deceased or deposed president was chosen, upon which choice properly made by the body a reorganization of the Quorum of the Presidency would be requisite, their office passing at their report and laying down their office, awaiting the action of the body.

3. Would their right to act as presidents cease at once upon the death of the president or would they be authorized to continue to act as presidents until a successor was chosen?

Being chosen and ordained as presidents of the high priesthood forming a quorum, and not as counselors only, they would be authorized to continue to perform the perfunctory duties of presidents until a successor was chosen or other provision made for an acting presidency.

This is agreeable with section 107, paragraph 39: "I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and first presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church." This shows clearly that the intention of the Great Organizer was to create a quorum, and not simply to institute two men as counselors with no responsibility attaching to them, in case of the absence by death or deposition of the president. It would seem that divine wisdom would not so loosely form a three-fold cord, like that made by the three quorums, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, that one of them would cease to exist, if one of its members was to be removed, leaving the other two intact to perform quorum duties. It is safe to assume that when these three forming the Presidency were appointed by revelation, and chosen and ordained "as three presiding high priests," they would be qualified to perform the necessary duties attaching to their office as members of a quorum, with equal authority under the law.

4. Should they report the death of their principal officially to the Quorum of Twelve through the presiding officer of that quorum?

Yes. They should not only report to the Quorum of Twelve, but also report to the Quorum of Seventy, through its president, these quorums holding concurrent jurisdiction in matters of decision. This they should do, not only as a matter of courtesy but as a matter of right.

5. Or should they report to the next ensuing session of the Annual Conference and continue to act as presidents until such conference convenes and their report be made?

They should report to the next ensuing conference and should continue to act in their office as presidents of the high priesthood, until the successor of the deceased president should be chosen, and the

First Presidency as a quorum reorganized. They should consult with the presiding officers of the two quorums, Twelve and Seventy, and if upon such consultation it would be deemed advisable to call a special session of conference, they should make report to such special conference, in conjunction with the officers of the quorums referred to.

6. Would either of them be eligible to be chosen as president to succeed their principal by virtue of their holding the office of the high priesthood to which they had been ordained as counselors?

Yes. The same as they were eligible to be chosen as members of the First Presidency when such presidency was formed by their accession to it.

7. If the death of the president should be reported by these counselors to the Twelve, would it be the duty of that quorum to at once assume the care and direction of the affairs of the church?

The Quorum of Twelve would not be authorized to traverse outside of their duties as "a traveling, presiding high council," and take absolute direction and control of church affairs, if the remaining members of the Presidency were in agreement and showed no disposition to assume arbitrary control, without proper recognition being given to the two other quorums holding concurrent jurisdiction in matters of decision. Should there be disunity among the remaining members of the Quorum of the Presidency, and confusion and strife as to authority arise between the counselors, the Quorum of Twelve should then be recognized as authorized to secure a proper unity of action in the church in connection with the Quorum of Seventy, holding equal authority in matters of decision. It is not in accordance with sound reason, that either quorum would have the right of absolute dictation over the authority and jurisdiction of the other two ruling quorums, these all three having been made equal by organic law. The assumption of arbitrary power and control by either one of these three bodies, declared in the organic law to be equal, would give rise to opposition and active protest, and confusion would inevitably result.

8. Or should they await the sitting of the next ensuing Annual Conference to which report should be made by the counselors and then assume the direction of affairs and proceed to secure nomination and election of a president to fill the vacancy created by death or removal from office for cause?

They should await the action of the ensuing Annual Conference unless by agreement referred to above an earlier conference is called, at which report of the death of the president should be officially made, when their right to assume temporary control should be accorded them through their presiding officer, subject to voice and vote in the usual form of opening conference.

9. What should be the course of procedure in securing such choosing and sustaining of one to fill such vacancy?

Conference should be opened in the usual manner by choosing a president pro tempore and the necessary secretary, by nomination and vote, whereupon the report of the remaining members of the Quorum of the Presidency should be presented by them, and the conference proceed to act upon said report, or to set an hour on that or a succeeding day, at which the report would be taken up and acted upon. The setting of an hour, as suggested, would give time for the appointment of credentials committee and the hearing of their report, that the conference might be fully prepared to vote viva voce or by a yea and nay call of delegates. There would be no need for friction, if there was a disposition upon the part of all to grant the courtesy and rights to others that they would make demand for themselves, in the spiritual understanding that it is not for the purpose of self-aggrandizement or self-laudation that they are met, but to do business which will conserve the safe interests of the entire body.

10. Should the Quorum of Twelve by one or more of their number by virtue of their office preside at the conference next ensuing after vacancy in the Quorum of the First Presidency occurred?

No person has the right, either in custom or law, to demand the prerogative and rule of authority to preside over the conference of the church when met for business, at a stated period, and arbitrarily assume control without the choice of the assembly obtained by nomination and vote.

11. Or would it be legal or expedient for the conference to choose some one to act pro tempore by usual nomination and vote?

It would be lawful for the conference to choose by nomination and vote any qualified person, holding the Melchisedec priesthood to preside pro tempore, but Paul's adage, that "all things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient," would be in force in such instance, and the wiser and safer course would be that the president of the Quorum of Twelve or some one of the quorum, or other, whom he might suggest should be chosen to preside until the First Presidency as a quorum was reconstructed.

12. Could one of the counselors be so chosen by nomination and vote and preside until the vacancy referred to was filled?

Yes. The rule of expediency suggested in the answer to the preceding question would be of force and value in this issue. The remaining members of the Quorum of the First Presidency would be persons directly in interest in the pending business of choosing a successor to the removed president, and the same propriety that causes a presiding officer to vacate the chair when matters in which he is in interest are being considered would suggest that neither of these counselors would desire to preside, under the circumstances governing in the case. If adverse criticism or opposition be made touching the work of these counselors during the interim between the death of the president and the convening of the conference, they should be left free from presiding responsibility, to meet such conditions free from other responsibility. It would seem safe to infer under such conditions that the counselors would decline to accept the duty of presiding, while the matter of succession was being considered. Not until the Quorum of the Presidency is reconstructed would the position of these remaining members be definitely ascertained, as they may or may not be chosen to succeed themselves, and the will of the body may otherwise dispose of them, as to their office.

13. Would it be considered imperative that such vacancy in the Presidency should be filled at the next ensuing conference after such vacancy has occurred?

It would not be imperative, but the rule of expediency would require that if such vacancy could be filled, in the spirit of peace and good-will, it should be done. It would be advisable that the church should know as soon as practicable who should assume definite control of the affairs of the church, for if there should be friction, by reason of contention between individuals as to rights and prerogatives an interim without the choice being made would only serve to sow distrust and disaffection in a wider field. In this as in many other things, precaution is the parent of safety. It is safe to presume, that under the ordinary circumstances of church work the conference assembly would be as prepared to act at such ensuing session as they would be at any succeeding period of time, and the risk of unavoidable difficulties occurring would not be incurred.

14. If not, would the Quorum of Twelve in their organized capacity direct and administer in the care of the church until such time as a successor was chosen?

The office of the counselors as members of the Quorum of the Presidency not expiring until the quorum is reconstructed, they would continue to act as stated in answer to question two, and the Quorum of Twelve justly could not take arbitrary control of the affairs of the church outside of their office work as a traveling high council, except upon agreement between the three quorums involved, accepted, and acquiesced in by the voice of the conference. If such agreement was reached and the Quorum of Twelve so installed the counselors would at once cease to act, leaving the quorum vacated, as if their office as counselors expired at the death of the president, they could not hold office as counselors to either a president pro tempore or to the Quorum of Twelve. If they did not exist as a majority of the Quorum of the Presidency, their identity as active officers would be lost to the church, except they should act by sufferance or by courtesy. Strenuous contention as to the rights and prerogatives would be out of place and incongruous under such conditions, and the church has a right to expect that such will not occur.

15. Do the words, "Your priesthood hath remained with Christ in God," as given in section 84, paragraph 3, given to the elders of the church by revelation, taken with other passages of scripture and the revelations found in the Book of Covenants, justify the belief in the right of the sons of those acting in the offices in the priesthood to succeed their fathers who have been or are acting in offices of the priesthood?

The clear understanding of this passage is that the priesthood had remained latent, "hid with God in Christ," but the office in such priesthood depends upon the manner of call by revelation, choice, and ordination. Call, choice, and ordination presume worthiness, fitness, and qualification.

16. Does the law of primogeniture inure to the first born?

Yes. The church, however, is dealing with living entities and the eldest living son is; so far as church work is concerned, to be considered eligible as the first born.

17. Are such first-born sons eligible to be chosen to succeed their fathers, other qualifications of fitness to act in the office being equal and satisfactory to the church?

Yes, without question.

18. Do the terms occurring in section 104, paragraph 18, wherein the office of patriarch is mentioned, refer to the priesthood as other officers included in the priesthood called Melchisedec, the words being, "This priesthood descends from father to son"?

The words, "this priesthood," occurring in the section referred to, apply to the Melchisedec priesthood and not to any office in the priesthood. The patriarch is an office or an order in the priesthood. There is a division of labor under different offices in the priesthood, but no division in the priesthood is created when a person is ordained to an office. One of the earliest teachings of the church, and most substantial, is that there are but two priesthoods. The multiplication of the offices could not create an additional priesthood.

19. Is this priesthood referred to in this paragraph the same as that which appears in the third paragraph of section 104 wherein the provision for the choosing of a president of the high priesthood is given?

Yes. The quotation referred to makes it clear and decisive that the priesthood from which the presiding officers are to be chosen is the Melchisedec priesthood, and not from any specific quorum or office in the priesthood.

20. Is there just reason for believing that the words designating the class and number of such class of officers, refer to and include only the members of the apostolic quorum?

The value of this question will be seen when it occurs to the reader that there is an organized body professing belief in the priesthood as given by revelation to the church, who construe the language occurring in paragraph 11, of section 104, designating the class of officers from among whom the three presiding high priests, constituting the Quorum of the First Presidency are to be chosen as applying to the apostolic quorum only, assuming that the words "three presiding high priests" mean only those who have already been chosen and ordained as such presiding high priests. Acting upon this interpretation of the language, they have assumed the right to confine the choice and ordination to the Presidency to those who have previously been ordained apostles of the Quorum of Twelve.

The term "three presiding high priests" who were to constitute the Quorum of the First Presidency applies to the three chosen and ordained after such ordination has taken place to the office of three presiding high priests over the Melchisedec priesthood, and by no means indicates that the appointment by revelation from God, and the choice and ordination by the church are to be confined to the apostolic quorum only.

21. Or is the number there referred to inclusive of all the members holding and occupying in offices of the high priesthood?

The choice by revelation is at the disposition of the Lord. He has the right to designate whom he may choose; but when the matter is left to the action of the body, those holding the high priesthood, known as Melchisedec, whether members of any quorum or not, would be eligible.

22. Do the revelations given in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants justify the belief that a son of a president of the church, duly called by revelation and ordained and sustained by the church, is eligible to succeed his father as president, other qualifications of fitness being equal, with other members of the high priesthood. Do such revelations justify a belief that such a son should be chosen to succeed his father as president?

Following the legendary teaching of the eldership and the precedent established in the reorganizing of the church, based upon the revelations which were accepted and on record at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the eldest living son of a president of the high priesthood acting as president of the church would be eligible under the considerations named in the question.

Unless such action was contravened by revelation directing otherwise, such son should be chosen. This would be in harmony and consistent with the precedents of history and the legendary teaching referred to.

23. Do the revelations point out with sufficient clearness that such a son is appointed by revelation as the proper one to be chosen and sustained as successor to his father, his father having died in office while being sustained by the faith, confidence, and prayers of the church?

Yes, unless such action upon the part of the church is prevented by revelation directing otherwise.

24. Or do such revelations require that such a person to succeed should be appointed or named by the incumbent prior to his death in order to justify the church in making such person their choice of successor?

In the absence of direct revelation otherwise the church would be justified in choosing and ordaining such a person to succeed a president removed by death under conditions named in the question.

25. Would the church be justified in choosing and electing such a person under the direction of present and existing revelations or does the spirit of revelation and wisdom in the various quorums and members of the priesthood sufficiently point out or designate such person as should be chosen to fill the vacancy in the Presidency caused by death, without such previous designation being so made by the existing incumbent in the office of president?

In the view of the subject thus presented, as shown by the precedent, established in the choosing of a president of the church in 1860, it would appear clear that the church would be so justified; for the reason that the spirit of revelation and wisdom as manifested to the one chosen in 1860 and to the members and officers of the church then in partial organization, there was sufficient coherence as to justify the action of the church upon that occasion. There is now, as there was then, evidence of a supervising Spirit working upon the different members of quorums and workers in the church, pointing to such a consummation, should the occasion arise demanding action upon the part of the church.

26 and 27. By whom should the nomination for the choosing (and electing) of a successor to fill the vacancy in the Presidency by death at the conference meeting to choose such successor be made? Would such nomination be confined to the Quorum of Twelve in their capacity as a quorum under the provision of the law which says, "they shall regulate and set in order," etc., as found in section 104, on priesthood?

When the conference has assembled and has been duly called to order, and the business properly stated, the common rule would permit any member of the assembly entitled to voice and vote to make such nomination; but a custom of courtesy having been established in the church, a priority of privilege should be cheerfully accorded to the one holding highest office by ordination; and if there should be two or more holding office alike in this regard, seniority in point of age should be considered, and by common consent he be privileged to make such nomination. If, however, the question should have been considered in quorum capacity by the leading quorums of the church and an agreement reached by such quorums as to the person to be nominated, it would be proper for such nomination to be presented by the Quorum of Twelve by the president of that quorum, by consent of the quorum or by some person to be named by them, either from among their own number or one from either of the quorums holding the Melchisedec priesthood.

This course of procedure in nominating would prevent any disturbing question of right or priority from occurring, the end to be reached being the good of all and not the gratification of any personal self-interest.

28. Is there just reason to believe that a successor to the present incumbent of the office of president of the high priesthood is sufficiently clearly designated to warrant the church in making a choice in case of the death of such incumbent?

The right to give revelation belongs to God. Necessarily the giving or withholding of revelation is determined by his wisdom, and is not governed by the desires of those who believe in revelation, nor by the necessities and exigencies of the church judged only by the wisdom of men. Hence, in the light of what has been stated, in answering the questions going before there is just reason to believe, that if no further revelation should be accorded the church, more specifically directing who should be chosen to succeed, in case of the removal of the present incumbent by death, the church would be justified in proceeding to make such choice upon what has already been vouchsafed, bearing upon the subject.

It must be taken for granted that He who has watched over the church since its establishment in the days of Adam and of Enoch up to the present must be accredited with the all-pervading wisdom that provides for every exigency through which the church may be called to pass. It is upon this fact that the confidence of the church must rest, to the effect that apparent direction for the accomplishment of certain designs has been given, and further and more definite direction does not follow the church is justified in pursuing that course which is to it justified by the spirit of wisdom and revelation resting with it in its various quorums and organizations, for the various works of the church. As we are distinctly told, that "our ways are not like his ways, our thoughts are not like his thoughts," the church is justified in doing that which is necessary to be done, by the wisdom that may be given it at the time such work is to be done, if no specific direction is given how such work shall be performed, and there is abundant evidence to justify the belief, that if the church will pursue such principle the Lord will not permit the work intrusted to their care to suffer from failure upon his part to give such specific direction, much as his people may have desired it should have been given.

One of the reasons why it is difficult to answer the foregoing questions, with apparent satisfaction to all, is that the only precedents established by the church are those incident to the choice and installation of Joseph Smith, jr., the first president, and the choosing and ordination of his successor in 1860, so far as the choice of the president direct is concerned.

The choosing and appointing of a presiding officer by those engaged in the Reorganization can scarcely be regarded as a precedent, except so far as a recognition of the rightful successor, by the choosing of one to represent him, and the many spiritual manifestations connected with the choosing of such a representative and his associate officers of the church.

It will be remembered by those conversant with the action taken by the Reorganization, and those who have read the history of those events, that the spirit of prophecy accompanied the various efforts of those who had held the priesthood through ordination and administration of the martyred president and patriarch, and foreshadowed each successive movement. In answer to prayer those men were, by revelation, directed to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as containing the rules of law in the observance of which the foundation and superstructure of complete reorganization could be safely accomplished. The effect of this recognition of the revelations given during the formative period of the church and that which was done under the observance of the instructions therein given, practically reduced the interregnum which it is charged interrupted the onward sweep of the church in its office work, from the sixteen years elapsing between 1844 and 1860, to the eight years elapsing between 1844 and 1852; eight years instead of sixteen.

It is a fortunate circumstance that the conference of 1852 was held fully two months before the promulgation of the so-called revelation on plural marriage, and the action taken at that time shows beyond successful dispute, that the supervising spirit of the work had wisely forestalled the spirit of the adversary which sought to destroy surely the spiritual building of the church organized in 1830. Each successive step following that conference up to the April conference of 1860 strongly confirms the line of instructions given in answers to the questions above stated.

The church is not at liberty to accept or to follow the precedent supposedly established by the action of the Quorum of Twelve in the fall of 1844, in the Twelve taking absolute charge of the administration of the affairs of the church which culminated in 1847 in the installing of a Presidency by taking three from the then nine adhering members of the Twelve existing at the death of the Prophet, and installing them in the Presidency of the church with Brigham Young as their chief, which action was followed by public proclamation of the plural marriage dogma with its concomitant corruptions of the doctrines of the church, through the revelation and the restoration of the gospel.

This precedent and those established by James J. Strang, Lyman Wight, William Smith, and others, are of no value in directing the action of the church, other than they serve as warnings against deviating from the letter and the spirit of what had been given to the church prior to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. They are but precedents showing what the church may do in safety.

In the organic law given in section 104 it is clearly pointed out that the Lord intended to provide a sufficient safeguard against a possible contingency in which there might be an effort made by one or more ambitious men, more mindful of self-exaltation and aggrandizement than for the good of a spiritual people, to so far obtain control in authority that mischievous and pernicious theories and doctrines, in either faith or organization, by which the symmetry of the whole might be virtually destroyed. This was done by authorizing the establishing of three quorums holding equal authority in matters of extreme decision, forming a three-fold cord in spiritual affairs and in fact that could not easily be broken. The same organic law provides rules by which when these quorums are once established, they may be kept intact in so far that no one of them may under ordinary circumstances become so disorganized as to prevent its working in connection with each of the others in harmony for the good of all. This provision is found in the direction that a majority may perform service if it is impossible that the entire body of either quorum be present; or in other words, that if it should be impossible that the whole of each be available for the important service.

This view is held to be applicable to the Twelve and Seventy by some, who in the absence of specific instructions in the law assume what may be called a logical or constructive interpretation of various provisions of the law. There is no reason in law or logic nor the common renditions of prudence and wisdom why the same principle of completeness in majority should not apply to the leading quorum known as the Presidency as well as to those of the Twelve and Seventy. The ordination of those chosen as presidents of the high priesthood, constitute the three thus ordained as a quorum. Citations from the law are given in two or three answers to questions in the foregoing list which clearly and definitely determine this point.

That one of these three high priests thus chosen to constitute a quorum should hold the office of president of the high priesthood with the prerogatives of receiving revelations for the government and guidance of the church when conditions require that such direction and guidance are necessary, and are asked for, as well as to be in place for the discharge of such duty if the wisdom and will of the supreme Lawgiver has such wisdom and guidance to give to the church, does not so far impair the apparent intention of making three quorums equal as to destroy the completeness of such quorum, if that individual be taken from the quorum, by either death or transgression, providing that the remaining members are a unit in belief and decision. To assume that the two other than the principal are but counselors to the one, and that upon his death or deposition the Quorum of the Presidency is hopelessly and helplessly broken as one unit of the three equal quorums, and that the functions of their office were only advisory as counselors, and so ceased at the death of the principal, thus ending their responsibility and authority, is to strike at the symmetry of the whole structure and leave an unfortunate weak spot which evidently was not intended to exist by the great Masterbuilder.

But there is another provision of the law to which attention is called, that should the emergency arise by the death or defection of the incumbent of the Presidency and the death or deposition of one of the remaining members of the Quorum of the Presidency, leaving but one in minority, that it would be well for the church to remember and bring into operation, if serious necessity should occur. It is distinctly stated in the law that the high council, presumably the standing high council of the church in Zion, is in equality in its decision with that of the Quorum of the Presidency or that of the Twelve, supplying the third member of the three-fold principle in spiritual control, if either of the quorums of the established order might be lost to the economy of the church by death or defection of either one of the important component parts of the three-fold cord, constituted by the unity of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. (See section 104.)

By accepting the fact that those composing the Quorum of the Presidency are ordained unto the equal functions of authority as a quorum, with the exception of specific duty imposed upon the president, the quorum is not in danger of dissolution by the death of either of its component parts; but will continue its work as a quorum so long as a majority of the quorum remains intact, and may carry on the work unto which they were ordained as presidents of the high priesthood until the quorum shall again be reconstructed and full membership established. By accepting this view there is authority for the continuation of the quorums acting together in unity, or if divergence of opinion occurs an equilibrium in the principles of action between either two of the quorums is preserved, and the work go on smoothly.

By assuming that two of those ordained to the office of president of the high priesthood are but counselors to the one, and that at the death of the one the office and authority of the counselors cease, the equilibrium is destroyed. If they were counselors only, and not entitled to act in any other role or capacity, they being counselors only to the president removed by death or deposition, they can not as such counselors act in association with either the Twelve or the Seventy or the High Council in Zion, they not having been ordained as counselors to such offices.

There is no rule of law or logic that warrants such a construction of church procedure, and it would perforce be a singular stretch of courtesy that would continue them as counselors to living authorities when their office as counselors had passed by reason of the death of their principal. As such counselors they could not demand that the president of the Twelve or the seven presidents of the Seventy should accept their offices as counselors, nor could these authorities demand their presence and assistance upon the supposition that their ordination to their dead principal had given them warrant for such demand.

As members of the Quorum of the Presidency continuing in the discharge of the duties as presidents of the high priesthood, according to the terms of their ordination to such office until such time as the office made vacant by the death or defection of the president of the church is again filled by revelation, choice, and ordination, and themselves or others chosen as associate presidents of the high priesthood, there need be neither difficulty nor danger of a lapse of unity or a fear of conflict of authority. There is danger if other course of action is taken. Observing the premises laid down at the beginning of this letter of instruction, there need be no hesitancy in accepting the views expressed in these answers and adopting the course therein set forth.

Assuming the right seemingly conferred in the revelations contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and conforming to the safer principles enunciated in the legendary teaching of the eldership, I, Joseph Smith, the present incumbent of the office of president of the Reorganized Church, definitely designate my eldest living son, Frederick Madison Smith, as the proper person to be chosen by the church as my successor in office, believing as I do that the Spirit of revelation and wisdom has manifested to me that such choice should be made as directed by the Spirit of the great Masterbuilder. The present incumbent of the office of president of the Reorganized Church states further that he has trust and confidence in that Spirit which called him to the position which he has held for the last half century of time, and more, that such manifestation will be given to the several eldership of the church as will confirm the advice and direction herein given.

He, therefore, submits this letter of instruction to the careful consideration of his associate officers and members of the church in the work intrusted to the care of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LETTERS.—We have been again forced to cut down many of the letters sent us for publication. Saints will appreciate the editor's position and bear with him. It is better to pick out the meat of a letter and use it than to hold and thereby incur loss of timeliness.

IMPORTANT.—We call attention to the notice from Church Secretary R. S. Salyards, concerning credentials and railroad rates. These are matters of considerable importance, and the Saints should attend to them. A careful observance of the secretary's instructions may obviate trouble and annoyance.

BROTHER I. N. WHITE.—By card from Brother I. N. White, we learn that he is improving in health. He writes from Ocean Park, Colorado, as follows: "I think I am slowly improving in my health—though scarcely perceivable, as it comes so slowly. But I feel God is with me. The hardest thing I ever tried to do in my life is to try to do nothing. This alone is sometimes more than my weakened nerves will stand. I wish to be remembered."

ILLINOIS BAPTIST.—Brother R. Etzenhouser sends us the following from Brother M. R. Brown, Wayne City, Illinois, in answer to a letter of inquiry from the former:

"WAYNE CITY, ILLINOIS, December 15, 1911.

"MR. R. ETZENHOUSER,

"Detroit, Michigan,

"Dear Brother: Your favor of December 11 at hand; calling my attention to two items published in the HERALD of November 15, page 1090. Yes; brother, I copied those two items from the Illinois Baptist, sent them to our publishing house, and now they are published in the HERALD, just as I found them in the Illinois Baptist. The date of the paper from which I copied, is March 19, 1910. I think I sent the date to Herald Office, if I did not, you have it here.

"Yours truly,
"M. R. BROWN."

NEW YORK WORLD.—We are in receipt of the New York World of March 2, in which we find a brief notice of the work of Elder W. E. LaRue in Greater New York. His picture accompanies the same. Brother LaRue writes concerning his work in that great city as follows: "I must say that it seems that I have accomplished about everything I could reasonably ask for with the papers in this city, and in visiting the offices I have been treated with courtesy. Public sentiment is against us, as a rule—it may not be seen openly, but its outcropping occasionally reveals a dark, hidden, powerful undercurrent of prejudice. Every time we can get into the papers with a proper sentiment will be to our advantage."

ALBANY DAILY LEDGER.—Brother John Zahnd sends us a clipping from the New Albany Daily Ledger (Indiana) which gives our work a good notice and an account of the branch there having moved into better and larger quarters at Eleventh and Oak Streets. The account closes as follows:

"This church must not be confused with the Utah Mormon Church, as they have no affiliation whatever with the Mormon Church which call themselves Latter Day Saints, but are bitterly opposed to the teachings of that church. The headquarters of the true Latter Day Saints, of which this is a branch, is located at Lamoni, Iowa, and they have always been found on the side of right, trying to help better the conditions of our city, as well as to upbuild a higher standard of morals for good."

THE GIRL.

"O woman-mother! woman-wife!
The sweetest name that language knows,
Thy breast with holy motives rife,
With holiest affection glows,
Thou queen, thou angel of my life."

In these words Holland eulogizes woman's work in the world, raising her duties to privileges that belong to royalty and even approach divinity.

As the block of marble has within it the delicate, beautiful statue, awaiting only the chisel in the master's hand, so, within the heart of every young girl lie dormant the elements of gracious wife and motherhood.

It therefore devolves upon the mother, who is the sculptor, to develop these qualities as they should be developed.

Woman is a home maker. A home on earth is but an earnest of our home in heaven, and as it takes us a lifetime to be properly prepared to dwell in our heavenly home, so I think a girl's training for a home maker should begin early—I mean in the cultivation of home making qualities, love, sympathy, contentment and religion.

I believe a girl taught to look upon the acquiring of and properly caring for a home in all its influences for good, as her highest and best state in life will approach the dangerous and, by mothers, dreaded age of puberty in more safety and with more dignity than will one who has not been so taught. It eliminates the frivolous idea of marriage, and teaches her to look upon it as God meant she should. I believe that teaching her to incorporate this thought with her religion lessens the danger of unmated parenthood.

God has provided that this should be her happiest and most useful state, but it remains with her to make or mar it, and as she is taught so she will make or mar.

The alpha and omega of all true greatness is simplicity. Above everything keep our girls' lives simple; simple as to dress, home life and enjoyment. It has a sanctifying influence.

All work and no play certainly makes Jack a dull boy, but the idea of constant and ever varying entertainment as a tether to hold our young is as certainly crowding into the background the importance of duty, and its place in their lives, with reference to work, self-sacrifice, and the proper kind of independence. It is the parent of discontent, for life is not all play.

Aprons of dress, let me quote from the New York Evening World: "One may search from the Battery to the Subway's end without meeting one bonafide specimen of the old-fashioned school girl, with a braid reaching to her waist and with skirts to her shoe tops and without puffs, rats, pompadours, false curls, hobble skirts or French heels."

Your girl nor mine may not go this far, but whenever we begin to separate simplicity and child life whether it is French heels or late hours, hobble skirts or promenading the streets, we are subscribing to that evil that rapidly grows and only waits upon larger opportunities on our part, or the part of our daughter.

I have been much laughed at because I hesitated so long about allowing our nine year old daughter to go alone to Sunday school. It does seem an extreme attitude now when mothers put daughters even younger on a train and send them half across the continent in the care of a conductor whom they have seen for the first time.

Self-reliance is an excellent quality, but there are so many ways to develop it, that we have been reluctant to cultivate it along that line, trusting our daughter too much on the streets of a large city alone, to be at the mercy of the white slave shark. Even aside from this great danger, she becomes too independent in going about on the street alone.

Girls soon acquire a liking to be stared at and openly admired. They think it silly to resist a little familiarity, and as an ant builds its house one grain at a time, so infinitesimal encroachments can be made upon the white soul of a young girl.

Holland beautifully describes the intimate relation that should exist between parent and child:

I felt, in her benign attention to my words,
In her suggestions clothed with gracious phrase,
To win my judgment and in all those shades
Of meek and manner which a mother's love
Inspires so quickly when the form it nursed
Becomes a staff in its caressing hand—
She had made space for me.

This making space for our children in the home life, talking matters over with them, sharing our confidences, giving their good thoughts and suggestions proper consideration, makes for the growth and perpetuation of home ties and love.

The Lord says, "Come, let us reason together." Can we not do as much by our children?

What shall we tell a girl between the ages of nine and twelve? Absolutely all she desires to know: absolutely nothing more.

There has been so very much said and written about the physical demands of a girl of that age that I feel I can add nothing. It might be in place in this connection, however, to mention that it is our determination as our children become old enough, to take them to those institutions where the effect of physical vice and excess is shown.

I mentioned this to one lady and she held up her hands in horror. "Barbarous!" Perhaps, and perhaps not. I spoke of it to another who in her maturer years was paying the penalty of her early and secret sins. (Although I did not know it until she told me.) She wept: "If some one had been as wise in my behalf I should not be the sufferer I am to-day."

The first lady, who is a prominent child trainer, believes we can inculcate pure principles by comparison to beautiful flowers, etc. Much depends on the child. That may impress childhood, but it does not altogether fortify for the temptations of maturity.

Talk to me about the loathsomeness of leprosy and I shudder, but in time the horror of it wears away, and I might become indifferent to the conditions that would make me a leper, but show me one in the grasp of the hideous disease and the memory abides always and with the memory, caution.

Let us lead our girls carefully, cautiously along the path of young maidenhood, keeping our eyes ever fixed upon the light that radiates from home and our Father in heaven, believing, if we seek to do well and use all the wisdom he sends us, they can not be lost, even though they cause us to mourn.

I often think of the cry of all parenthood that was wrung from the lips of the Master. It has come down to us through the centuries and in these troublous latter days has lost none of its yearning: "How oft," he cries, "would I have gathered you, and ye would not." But the time will come when they will turn to him with joy. So will our Israel some time look with joyful remembrance upon our efforts in their behalf.

The thought renews my courage:

"Thus, when oppressed with rude, tumultuous cares,
To thee, sweet home, the fainting mind repairs,
Still to thy breast, a wearied pilgrim flies,
Her ark of refuge from uncertain skies."

To such ministration are our girls born.

Request for Prayer.

Sister Sadie Burch, Ute, Iowa, asks the Saints to pray for her. She is to undergo an operation at the Saint Vincent Hospital in Sioux City, Iowa.

Sister Martha Thorp: "I request prayers for Brother Richard Bennet, of Walkerville, who has been sick for a long time. I desire the Saints to remember him in their prayers. He is a loving husband and father, and has a large family that needs his care. Let us give our prayers to the Giver of all good that he may heal him, that he may be spared to bring up his children in righteousness."

Work is salvation. Doing something mightily, with all one's heart, with complete loyalty, something worth while, something useful to one's fellow beings, is the backbone of life. . . . Many forms of work in themselves apparently dreary, and done with weariness, may prove to be attractive when the man has once put himself fully into it in the right way; when he has become loyal to his task and not merely attentive to it.—G. S. Partridge, in The Nervous Life.

To love and bear; to hope till hope creates
From its own wreck the things it contemplates;
Neither to change nor falter
This is to be.
Good, great, and joyful, beautiful and free;
This is alone life, joy, empire, and victory.—Shelley.

Definite work is not always that which is cut and squared for us, but that which comes as a claim upon the conscience, whether it's nursing in a hospital, or hemming a handkerchief.—Elizabeth M. Sewell.

Letter Department

THATCHER, ARIZONA, February 25, 1912.

Editors Herald: We are glad to report a measure of success in our efforts for good here, and we are hopeful in the final outcome of our work here, we feel sure there are those who will obey the gospel when they know it. On the 22d I had the pleasure of baptizing four here, the first fruits of Gila Valley, and we are hopeful of others in the future. The work here is new, the writer being the first to enter the valley with the gospel message; and we find it a field that needs attention. There are a great many good people here, who need to be educated along gospel lines.

Of course the Mormon hierarchy have closed all the public buildings against us; but that will only serve to aid us when street weather is had, because the people who are honest will be able to see the true condition of things, and will thus be better able to arrive at correct conclusions.

I expect to wend my way homeward in the course of a few days to assist loved ones in preparing for the General Conference. I am optimistic in the work.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

SANDUSKY, MICHIGAN, February 22, 1912.

Dear Editors Herald: The HERALD letters are very strengthening. I hardly miss one of them and often say that if the letter department would be cut out of the HERALD I would not care much for it. Some are very inspiring, and often the Spirit has filled my soul to overflowing when reading them. The tears have streamed down my face and I have thought, What have I done to make these columns better? I have gone through great trials since I last bore my testimony through the HERALD. I wish to mention two of them.

First our little darling James, the younger of our two boys, was taken from us. How it grieved me to part with him! I could not see the hand of God in it at that time but now I can look back and realize it was for our good and that the time is not long until I shall meet him and other dear ones gone on before. What a joy will be there. Another trial came through reading the works of Tom Paine and Robert Ingersoll. Leave them alone; they will breed skeptical ideas. I saw in a vision, shortly after coming into the church, on a wall in large, red letters, "Read, read, read." I sent for church books, and as I read them I was builded up and strengthened.

When Elder E. J. Goodenough was confirming me he said that the time would come when I would doubt this work and God. I was in McKeesport in real estate business at that time, and as I felt myself drifting into a class of society that did not look upon God as I did, I returned to Michigan to live. While reading is good, always keep this thought before us, Seek ye learning out of the best books. I can see the hand of God in that it has also made me strong, for it was a fulfilling of prophecy that I did not realize at that time. Now I can see that our heavenly Father was gently leading me. Now I am rooted and grounded in the precious truth many times since I have felt the power of the blessed Spirit resting on me, and have been forced to give utterance to the same. Instead of exalting me it has humiliated me, and I am rejoicing in the gospel of Christ.

I see in a late HERALD a letter from Elder James McConaughy of Akron, Ohio, and often think of the effort we put forth in a little church I rented in McKeesport, and how earnestly he worked. May God bless him.

Elder Willard J. Smith, of Detroit, is with us at Cash and has been preaching every night for some time to good crowds. Some nights the church is full. He is a powerful man with the Scriptures, and he had made many warm friends to our branch here. Some are very near the kingdom. He seems to have a great degree of the Spirit with him at all times, and clinches every argument so forcibly that there are no questions asked, though he gives them the privilege. On the evening of the 20th he spoke to the young. The meeting was well announced and many of the young responded that had never been there before. He occupied over an hour with fine interest and he had wonderful liberty. The church was full. He is well liked by all and he preaches at night and goes calling in the daytime.

We have a fine band of Saints and I believe all are trying to let their lights shine. Last Sunday Elders Grice and Sweet joined us in prayer meeting and the blessed Spirit was there to own and bless his children. I want to live so that I never will be ashamed to own Jesus and his gospel, that when life is over I may stand with the redeemed of earth. May God continue to bless us, is my prayer.

FRED W. CADOW.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

Editors Herald: Some time ago while alone and pondering over the past and contemplating that day when I must stand before the Judge of all and give an account of my conduct on this sphere of action and visibly sensing the enormity of my sins against morality, truth, and virtue in the past, this proposition presented itself to me, What can I do that would bring upon me the smile of God's approval? and what can I accomplish in life for the salvation of my fellows from the yoke of error that has hindered and retarded their development? The thought came to me, Write a letter to your paper and give your friends the benefit of your observations that have come to you unsolicited.

The severest affliction of the human race is crude selfishness; that which is born of immorality, laziness, pride and ignorance. This kind of selfishness kindles the fires of prejudice, hatred and intolerance against its opponents and is not willing to wait for time to vindicate its position; it diligently seeks out all that is bad in the creeds of its opponents; it detests those who are liberal, patient, and optimistic and are inclined to look on the bright side of things, and would subjugate the minds, souls and bodies of all to its sordid ends. It is this form of sin that has more than any other charred and crisped the souls of mankind. It is from this malady that I have been made to feel that many of the members of the church of Latter Day Saints suffer, but let us be lenient with each other and realize that we are in duty bound to unite as we have never in the past to educate one another out of our crudeness and this we can only do by being as zealous in the future in trying to discover something good in one another as some have in trying to discover something wrong. Though the beauty of the face of the sun is sometimes marred by dark spots which are loathsome to astronomers, yet its influence on the earth is the most beneficent of all that exerted by the subliminaries and other planets and other elements combined. So it is with the other sects and parties who have not yet attained to the knowledge of the fullness of the gospel; they may be more righteous in some respects than we are; their tolerance, tenderness, and mercy may in instances soar above ours, and therefore our Father in heaven is more pleased with them than he is with us if we are possessed with bigotry, intolerance and unholy selfishness. Let us realize that our souls can never expand and grow white and become perfumed with the flowers of love, tolerance, and mercy in his name and by his mercy and by the grace of his words until we put away from us these things and walk forth as free men and women.

BENJAMIN F. SHORT.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, March 4, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: To explain to the many Saints and friends in the Southern Indiana District, and the States of Kentucky and Tennessee the reason for my absence from the field, I wish to say that I was called home from southern Indiana the latter part of January on account of the serious illness of my wife with articular rheumatism. Her suffering condition required my presence and attention for nearly four weeks. I was very sorry to be compelled to leave the field when I did, but when my wife gave her consent and willingness for twenty-one years to my going into the missionary field without complaint, we felt that it was our duty to go at once in answer to her call. This was the first time in all these years we were called home on her account.

If arrangements can be made we are expecting to spend a short time in the Spring River District before General Conference.

Weather very bad now for work in the country.

Yours in the gospel,

H. E. MOLER.

LACONA, IOWA, February 26, 1912.

Dear Herald: I feel thankful that the words of Christ have been fulfilled with me, as recorded in John 7: 17, though it does not say the knowledge shall be given immediately upon obedience, but the man that will do God's will shall know.

The strongest evidence of Christ's statement was given to me several years after coming into his kingdom.

After being called to the office of deacon, and while performing the duties of that office, I became discouraged; and while sweeping the church one Sunday morning, I decided within my own mind I would lay down the armor. But just at that juncture I heard a voice say, as distinctly as any man's voice could say to me, "The work you are engaged in is of God, and not of man." I looked around to see who was talking to me. Seeing no man, knew from whence the voice came.

I have many testimonies of God's goodness to me, but only one of recent date I wish to relate. On January 26, 1912, I met with an accident while working on the top of a coal mine, replacing a sheave wheel. The cage dropped a little with a jerk, causing the wheel and sheaf rests to fall again. I was standing on the edge of the shaft, and one of the sheave rests, a timber eight by eight inches by s'x feet, fell about eleven feet, striking me on the back of the head. Instead of knocking me down the shaft, as one might suppose, it knocked me back the other way. While we both fell to the ground,—the timber and I,—the timber falling and lying across my head. But the miraculous part of it was, the timber raised up of its own accord. That is, it was raised up by some unseen power. Sister Edith Cackler was an eyewitness to the same. I have wondered many times since why I was spared; but, dear Saints, the Lord knows our life's mission, and if we are faithful it will be unfolded to us as the days go by.

I often think of the statement made in Malachi 3: 10, 11, and wonder how long it will be before we as a people will be willing to do our part, and prove the Lord, as he said.

Surely he has blessed us in our unfaithfulness. Unfaithfulness because we have not complied with all the requirements of his law, both spiritual and temporal. On the other hand, what would he do if we were faithful in all things? Prove me, saith the Lord.

We are sorry to note here the loss of one of our most faithful and devoted workers for Christ from the Graceland Branch; Brother A. L. Keen deciding to take to himself a wife, and as Sister Martha Martin is the lucky one I suppose the Evergreen Branch will gain what Graceland Branch lost. I hope they will appreciate his labors, for he is a worker wherever he goes.

This is a good field for labor, as I saw in open vision this whole country as it were, one solid wheat field, and dotted all over this wheat field about six inches above the heads of the wheat, were the most beautiful roses that human eye ever witnessed. The wheat meaning the good field to labor in; the roses the honest in heart.

Dear Saints, pray for me, and also Graceland Branch, especially those who are acquainted with it, that the vine that God planted here may ever be able to bring forth the fruit designed.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

A. W. BORDEN.

FRUITLAND, NEW MEXICO.

Dear Herald: I drop you a few lines to let you know how the work of the Lord is prospering in this northwest corner of New Mexico. This is the stronghold of Brighamism in New Mexico; they furnish a good many young men for the ministry from this place. They still believe in polygamy as ever. Every Friday night is dance night. Then for every missionary that comes or goes they have a dance. They have dances for the children in the afternoons. Mothers take their children, boys and girls, and teach them to dance. Horse racing and dancing are popular here. I have labored among this people for four years, but it seems I can not do any good among them. They all know, far and near, that the Reorganized Church condemns polygamy. They say I am a "roaster," but I "roast" them with the word of the Lord.

Brother F. M. Sheehy and Brother Reister were here preaching to them. This is the Navajo Indian Reservation. Across the river they make fine Navajo blankets. They are peaceable Indians and good workers. You can trust them.

We have a Methodist mission and a Baptist mission, also a Government mission teaching the young Indians. I wish we had a mission to teach them the gospel of Christ. This country is covered with ancient ruins. There is no timber here. They built their houses of cement and rock. This is also a great coal field. The coal is fourteen feet thick, but no railroad to handle it yet. This is a healthful country.

I am glad to see the church prospering as well as it is. We have quite a number of members along this river but no missionary to preach to them. Oh that I had the strength of my younger days! Then I might get out and tell the people about God's love and tender mercies toward his children. My heart is full of praise to God as I pen these few lines for the manifestation of his love to us. The testimony that I bore when I was hurt in the coal mines twelve years ago is true.

Praying God to bless his Saints,

PETER ADAMSON, SR.

Urim and Thummim.

In case any should be in doubt as to why Joseph Smith should receive revelation and the power to translate by means of the Urim and Thummim before receiving the higher office under the Melchisedec priesthood, and not afterward, it might be well to remember to which priesthood the Urim and Thummim belongs.

We have no record, so far as the writer knows, that Moses, while in the Melchisedec order ever used it. In fact it might be quite difficult to prove that any Melchisedec priest ever used it. Even if it could be proved, it does not invalidate the fact that they were given and arranged not specially for that order.

The Bible account places it upon Aaron and his sons. (Exodus 28.) Also in Deuteronomy 33: 8 it was bestowed as a special blessing upon Levi at that time. It may not follow that none but an Aaronic priest could ever use it, if God by special favor caused Joseph Smith or others to use it he would be within the bounds of his prerogatives. And if after the Melchisedec priesthood was bestowed upon Joseph, the Urim and Thummim was taken away, it would only be leaving him as Moses was and nothing out of harmony with divine teaching.

Section 8 of the Doctrine and Covenants teaches us that Oliver Cowdery received the "gift of Aaron," and nothing but the power of God could cause it to be with him. Joseph, by the power of God, could use it also, even though the Aaronic priesthood had not been regularly bestowed upon him.

H. J. DAVISON.

From Brother J. J. Cornish.

Forty years ago to-day (February 22, 1912,) I was baptized into the church by Arthur Leverton, in the River Sidneyham, near Bothwell, Ontario.—February 22, 1872.

To look ahead this would seem to be a long time in the history of one's life, but to look back it does not seem so very long.

It was fortunate for me to have been permitted to hear the gospel then. I am glad that I heard it, and embraced it as soon as I understood the principles necessary to salvation. I had my doubts as to the correctness of some things which took place in the branch at that time (Zone Branch), fearing such was not of God. There have also been things which came up before me since coming into the church, especially in my early days, that have caused me to wonder as to the correctness of the position taken by the church, and some of which have never been clear to my mind. I fear more human than divine. But as for the truthfulness of the beautiful gospel of Christ, there has never been a shadow of doubt.

The thought of the administration of the angel to "Joseph the Seer," with the "everlasting gospel" to be preached to "every nation" is grand; together with all the authority necessary to carry on that work to the ends of the earth, "through him and his seed after him," fills my heart with joy while I think of it, and also as I now write.

So to speak, I was but a boy then, in my nineteenth year. The voice of the Spirit through Brother Leverton at that time (while being confirmed) to me was, that I should be healed of my affliction, and be made strong, and if faithful, be called into the ministry, and be clothed with authority to preach the gospel to the nations of the earth; that I would become as a polished shaft in Israel, and be the means of bringing many into the church and kingdom of God, etc.

I was indeed healed of my affliction. Although Doctor Woodruff, of London, Ontario, said I would not live long, the Lord caused my affliction to be removed, and about three years after my baptism I was called and ordained to the office of priest, five months later, an elder, and commenced to preach, others doing the reading of the hymns and lessons, etc., for a few months until I was enabled by study and the assistance of God to read for myself.

I commenced preaching there in the city of London. Two weeks after my first sermon I baptized James H. Stratton, now of Kansas City, Kansas, (my first) with others, and so kept it up ever since. For years before I was sustained by the church as a minister and since, until now, I think I can safely say that I have baptized into the church over thirteen hundred souls. I am not positive as to the number, passing through two fires, my records were lost. Among those baptized were my wife and all of our children. To my best judgment, I have confirmed about fourteen hundred. I must have blessed over two thousand children, and administered to the sick thousands of times.

I have presided over branches and districts at different times and places, nearly all of my life in the church, and acted as missionary in charge of different districts for years. Was bishop's agent for nearly twenty years, in which I believe I was successful; handling many thousands of dollars for the church. In this work there is more to do than some people have thought. The bishops and agents, of course, very well know. In writing receipts (until last year) one had to write the receipt, then on the stub, on the book, to the district conferences, then the annual report to the bishop, five times all told. I have written out (except the work done by my daughter, Bertha, in assisting), many thousands; so that for every one thousand written, it would mean the writing of the same five thousand times.

I have held twenty-eight discussions with ministers of different denominations, discussing the principles of the gospel, and the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, (Sabbath, and soul questions, etc.) in which I have often been blessed by divine aid.

In October of last year I asked to be released from ministerial work for the balance of the conference year, the principal reason being that our family had moved up into northwestern Canada, and thus leaving my wife almost alone, and we felt that we wanted to live near our children, so we arranged matters and followed them, and are now living in Saskatchewan, Canada. We took up a homestead with the rest of the family, and several of the Michigan Saints are with us. We have a nice branch of the church here, and I enjoy (as in the past) telling the gospel story, here as well as in Michigan (I began my work in Canada), and especially in the last sermon delivered.

I have been pretty busy for the months of December, January, and February answering the many questions relative to this country, the land, water, weather, cold, and warm, etc., but would say that this has been an easy winter for me. It was pretty cold for about two or three weeks in the month of January, but it was a dry, cold, steady weather. One will not suffer as much here as in a damp, windy climate. It is much drier here than in Michigan. I prefer this to that of Michigan. The month of February has been fine indeed. It is the first winter I have been permitted to be at home with my wife for many years. We have enjoyed ourselves well. I have had a fine rest, and I am feeling well in body, and while holding down a claim on a homestead, I do not intend to be idle in the Master's cause, neither in a spiritual nor financial sense.

May the blessings of our heavenly Father be upon us all I am, and hope to remain, your little brother in Christ,

J. J. CORNISH.

News From Missions

Utah.

After five years we are once more in this town and enjoying the reception given us by the people generally. This is the county seat and situated in the extreme western part of Garfield County.

Five years ago last December, with Brother Vanderwood, we were the first representatives of the Reorganization to visit this town. We developed a good interest then, so much so that it was said, "Panguitch is getting such a shaking up as she has never had before." After the return home of our colaborer, we went south through Long Valley and on to Kanab, and to Fredonia, Arizona, being gone about six weeks. This was all new ground. As we returned north, after an absence of about six weeks, we gave Panguitch another "call" and the interest seemed unabated. The next year Brother Sheldon visited the town and that is the last they have heard of our message till, with my son Charles, we commenced work here the 22d ult. We find some of the seed planted five years since, still alive and more soil ready for the planting. Interest seems to grow, and the message is the theme of conversation upon the street so much that one lady told us that it is all she could hear talked of when she went down town. We are preaching in the courthouse every night and do not see the end as yet.

We left Salt Lake City the 25th of January and have only missed three nights, or days, since that time from our service of preaching.

The places touched so far are Elsinore, Marysvale, Junction, Kingston, Circleville, Spry, Tropic, Cannonville, Henrieville, and Panguitch. Of these places, Junction, Kingston and Spry are new openings, while Tropic, Cannonville and Henrieville have only had one visit prior to this and that was, when in company with Brother Vanderwood, we visited them five years since. In some of these places we secured the use of the local house of worship, while in others we used the schoolhouse, and if we make an exception of the schoolhouse of Spry, where we were not well advertized, and where the people have a long distance to travel, the interest has been intense.

The message of the Reorganization is winning its way and answering perplexing questions for many who believe the message of the restoration, but who can not reconcile the teachings and conduct of the leaders of this people therewith.

We find a greater willingness to hear and a more tolerant spirit manifested than ever before in our ministrations among this people. We are sowing the seed carefully, and we feel confident that in his own good time, the Master will give a bountiful harvest. Nor are we alone in this opinion. One of the leading nonchurch members of this town so expressed himself to us only yesterday. However, do not take from this that all is easy sailing down here, for the edict of President Joseph F. Smith, issued about five years since, counseling the opening of their houses to other denominations while closing them against us, is invoked by such bishops as feel so disposed, but the effect of this is only to make the rank and file of the younger people the more anxious to hear and judge for themselves.

We are trying to conduct an educational campaign, and one man charged us with being employed in the interest of the merchants here, as within two or three days of our advent this time, every copy of the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon carried in stock here, was sold. This, we think, is a hopeful sign, and especially so, as some have announced to us, their intention of "going to the bottom of this thing."

Of course these are amusing incidents along the way and one occurred the other night when one of their elders thought to bluff us by challenging us to "debate the question of polygamy from the standpoint of the King James translation of the Bible and the Book of Mormon." After suggesting to him that we use the Inspired Translation of the Bible and the old edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, and letting him crow a little over our fear to meet him upon the proposed ground, we said, "Well, we'll just accept that challenge. We'd just as soon prick that bubble as not; so appoint your man and we'll appoint a man to represent us and they two can choose a third to act as chairman and we'll have the discussion." Well, as the darky says, "He faded away," and has not been in our audience since.

Another amusing incident was when one of their men complained that it was a "pretty hard pill to swallow," when we told them that the majority of the Twelve had lost their authority to lead the church, while the Lord recognized an obscure elder, presiding over a small branch, and gave him the revelation and authority to reorganize the whole body. Our retort was, "It may be a hard pill, but not nearly so hard as the one you offer us, to accept these men, even though members of the Twelve, as holding authority from Christ, while, according to their own testimony, they were living a double life, secretly teaching and practicing polygamy with all of its kindred evils of Adam God, blood atonement, 'do as you are told,' etc., etc., while publicly they were denying this and holding up the standard of monogamy. Christ does not work this way, and such a pill is not even sugar coated." Of course the most of the crowd saw the point.

So the work goes with us. We have not yet heard of the date of our district conference which is to be held at Malad, Idaho, so do not know just when we will turn north once more. Should we go south from here, Long Valley, with the towns of Glendale, Orderville and Carmel, also Kanab, thirty miles farther southeast, and Fredonia, six miles south of that, and in Arizona are before us. However, we wish to attend the Malad conference and are waiting and working here till tidings and funds for further travel reach us.

Ever laboring and praying for the Lord to hasten the day when the "Pure in heart will return and come to their inheritances" we are sincerely,

Your brother in Christ,

PANGUITCH, UTAH, February 29, 1912. A. M. CHASE.

Hawaii.

The importance of Hawaii as a missionary field is fast being recognized by the church workers generally, not only on account of its geographical position, but also because of its cosmopolitan population.

Honolulu, its capital, is a city of a little over fifty-two thousand inhabitants, and lying at the cross roads of the Pacific, is an important port of call for the numerous steamers plying between America, the Orient, and Australasia. The traveler stepping ashore here is surprised to find an up-to-date American city, enjoying an electric car, telephone, and electric light service, the equal of any to be found in the large cities on the mainland, and with handsome business blocks, commodious hotels, fine churches and a Y. M. C. A. building that cost over one hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

The last census of the Territory, taken in 1910, furnishes the following interesting statistics of our island population: Hawaiian, 26,041; Caucasian Hawaiian, 8,772; Asiatic Hawaiian, 3,734; Portuguese, 22,303; Porto Rican, 4,890; Spanish, 1,990; other Caucasians, 14,867; Chinese, 21,674; Japanese, 79,674; Korean, 4,533; black and mulatto, 695; all other, 2,736; total 191,909. Of the above, 123,099 were males, and 68,810 females.

Sugar growing, which is now, and has been for years back, the staple industry of the Territory, is responsible for the cosmopolitan character of our people, as labor for the cane fields has been recruited from China, Japan, the South Sea Islands, Russia, Portugal, Spain, and only a few weeks ago our population was considerably increased by the arrival of the large number of immigrants from the two latter countries.

The efforts of our church have, in the past, been mainly directed to the native Hawaiians from whom we have secured the largest number of converts. Besides them a small number of our own nationality, we have baptized a few Portuguese, Chinese, Japanese, a South Sea Islander, and a native of the Philippines. The reader will appreciate the difficulties a pastor has to contend with in caring for a congregation of this character, and unity in such a membership would be an impossibility without the help of that one Spirit that binds together in love the members of the body of Christ.

The younger generation of the different nationalities found here, all speak English more or less, and therefore our work here is much easier than is the case with the older people.

The publication, some years ago, of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants in the Hawaiian language has been a great help in the prosecution of the work among the native population, and sooner or later it will be necessary for our church to furnish these books in the Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, Spanish and Korean languages, to meet the requirements of the missionary work to be carried on in this field and elsewhere.

Our efforts among the Chinese and Japanese have not yet extended further than the establishment of Sunday schools and the publication of tracts; one in Chinese and two in Japanese. We have had a Sunday school amongst the Chinese for some years, but our Japanese Sunday school was only started about six months ago. An encouraging feature in this school is that a young Japanese and his sister, who are both members of the church, are acting as officer and teacher. One of the older members showed his enthusiasm by fixing up a banner on which the names of our church appeared, followed by the words: "Kalihi Japanese Sunday school"; to be carried by the Japanese children in a parade on the evening of February 22.

In order to push our work among the oriental population more tracts are needed at once, and we could also put to good service, right now, a mission among the Chinese where our missionaries and their wives could meet with and teach Chinese children. And, as our work grows and numbers of the different nationalities come into the church, provision will have to be made to care for them in their own meeting-houses as separate congregations. The present would seem to be an opportune time for pushing the work among the Chinese, who, under the direction of that wonderful leader and patriot, who is also a Christian, Sun Yat Sen, have surprised the world by overthrowing the old Manchu dynasty and establishing in its stead a republic. And amongst a colony that has produced a Sun Yat Sen—for here in Honolulu he lived as a boy and received much of his education—there should certainly be found some material that can be used in building up our church work among the Chinese in Hawaii as well as China.

Among the Portuguese, Spanish and Koreans we are not in a position, at present, to prosecute our work.

I have felt favored in having as collaborators in the work of this mission such capable, earnest, and energetic men as Brethren McConley and Barrett are proving themselves to be; and while the number of baptisms resulting from their past year's labor is not large, their efforts if continued, must sooner or later count to the grace of our work. Brother Barrett was ordained to the office of elder on November 8 last, and I feel sure that he will endeavor to honor his calling to the best of his ability.

In Sunday school and Religio work especially, Sisters McConley and Barrett have been willing, earnest and capable supporters of their companions and the writer.

Being reminded in recent editorial of neglect of duty, along with some others I hasten to make what amends I can. But first permit me to say, it certainly is not lack of appreciation, in myself or amongst others where I labor. The general consensus of opinion being that all our church publications are bright, newsy, diversified, spiritual, and withal, sound in the faith.

The glorious gospel of the "latter days," restoration! What a mighty word! How it thrills the soul of every true child of God! Undoubtedly the reformation has helped thousands as it were to see through "a glass darkly." Yet after 500 years what has it actually accomplished? Division, multiplied division; as predicted by Isaiah, the souls of men are still hungry and thirsty. But thank God in this "marvelous work and a wonder," there is that which gives satisfaction to honest hearts, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 108: 11:

"And for this cause, that men might be made partakers of the glories which were to be revealed, the Lord sent forth the fullness of his gospel, his everlasting covenant, reasoning in plainness and simplicity, to prepare the weak for those things which are coming on the earth; and for the Lord's errand in the day when the weak should confound the wise, and the little one become a strong nation, and two should put their tens of thousands to flight; and by the weak things of the earth, the Lord should thresh the nations by the power of his Spirit. . . . And this according to the mind and will of the Lord, who ruleth over all flesh; and unto him that repenteth and sanctifieth himself before the Lord, shall be given eternal life."

There is great encouragement in the thought as expressed above, that though we of ourselves are weak, our heavenly Father will work with us by the power of his Spirit, if we are willing to make the necessary sacrifice.

I wish I could say it of all throughout this mission, they were even trying to do so; but alas! my experience the past year as district president has revealed to me a state of lethargy and indifference in one half the branches, on the part of both officers and members; while in the others I gladly concede there is an earnest effort to come up to the pure, Christlike standard.

It is lamentable that a general conference appointee should have to take a part of the precious time which should be devoted to making new openings, straightening out matters, properly attaching to local officers. I sincerely hope that we shall see a marked improvement in this respect the coming year. The mission force have done well, considering the difficulties of this widespread frontier field. I have associated with them all, more or less, have thoroughly enjoyed the association, have found them men of faith and prayer, determined and resourceful; kind and indulgent towards him whom they are pleased to call the pioneer. It is thirty years since, to use a western phrase, I first struck Dakota Territory, and twenty-nine since I made my first attempt to spread the gospel message. Amid many mistakes and shortcomings, both of the flesh and the spirit, I rejoice in the gradual advancement.

I delight especially in the thought that bright-minded young men and women are coming to the front, working in the auxiliaries now, but the Spirit testifies to me, that many will finally occupy a wider field of usefulness; and I do sincerely hope that all that can, will help to support Grace-land, that finally, "the army of the Lord" may indeed be great.

Two thirds of this State have suffered severely by the past two years through loss of crops, which has affected the church finances disastrously. Previously the Saints, in true western style, were generous to a fault, and I feel deeply for all, especially those on homestead or government land. Another such a year and many must inevitably lose their homes. If it is good in the sight of our heavenly Father I pray such a calamity may be averted, and that our past experiences may draw us nearer to him.

At present I am alone and engaged in a protracted effort where Dunkards and Adventists predominate, along with some few who are not attached to any church. My best friends are among the latter, and I look for a few to accept the message when spring arrives. We have had a severe winter, the thermometer varying from thirty to fifty below zero, for about six to seven weeks, but owing to the light fall of snow, not so many blizzards as usual.

In spite of the hard times many are looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to our next reunion. It is a great treat to many isolated ones in this field, some of whom hear no preaching at any other time, to get together for a short time. Brethren Smith, Kelley, and Butterworth's instructions were highly appreciated, at our last meeting, by all.

Praying for the success of General Conference, and all that appertains to the work of the church.

Yours for success,
CALVIN, NORTH DAKOTA. WILLIAM SPARLING.

Wales.

I have a desire to let all Saints know concerning the work in this part of the Master's vineyard. I must say that we had a glorious time at our last district conference; the gifts of the Spirit being abundantly manifested. There were two administrations of the afflicted, and one brother has testified since that he was greatly relieved as regards to his sufferings. I am pleased to say we have had our noble Gomer T. Griffiths with us and he seems a very staunch supporter to the church that he represents as an apostle, and to see that the laws are properly carried out. I am glad to say Brother E. B. Morgan was also present, who was the one that baptized me when he was on his mission here the last time. It was through his presenting the gospel, not merely in word, but in power and in much assurance that caused me to be where I am to-day. I did not know that he represented any church at the time of my baptism only that he was a true servant of God which was indeed manifested through the striving of the Spirit which has been so often times preached as being able to guide us into all truth. In my past life I had been taught that the church of England was the Holy Catholic Church, and that they alone could stand representing the orthodox faith. I can thank God that I can see the difference now because I often ask myself the question, How is it that the gifts of the gospel are not manifested? They are without either apostles or prophets; so the question is asked, How can the spirit of the prophets be subject to the prophets if they are without the gifts, for surely the signs must follow the believer? Christ has promised to make himself manifest who has been in times past the prophet of Nazareth.

BROTHER H. SNOOK.

40 CURRE STREET, ABERAMAN, ABERDARE, WALES.

Bantry, North Dakota.

We have had some very cold weather, so you may not be surprised at us up here in this North Dakota country not having very large crowds out to our meetings, when the thermometer registers thirty-five to forty-five below zero. Still some have courage to come out and face the cold.

Went up in the Turtle Mountains during holidays, and held some meetings and tried to instruct the Saints and encourage them to be faithful. While some are trying to live the gospel, and attend to their church duties, and Sunday school, and Religio, others are careless and indifferent; so we see all are not wise. I don't wonder that the Lord compared the church to ten virgins, five wise, and five foolish. We should all try to be wise and have oil in our vessels and our lamps trimmed and burning, so we will be able to enter in when the bridegroom comes.

After holidays Brother Sparling met me at Dunseith, where we held a few meetings and attended to other church matters; we then went to Loma. Commenced meetings five miles north of Loma, where Sister Rogers and her two sons live. They certainly are good, faithful Saints, and know how to care for God's servants, as also do their neighbors, for they are a good, kind, hospitable people, just such people as make good Saints.

After commencing meetings, Brother Sparling was called away to Calvin, to preach the funeral sermon of Brother Newman, aged eighty-six years; then he was called to Clifford to administer to Sister N. C. Anderson, who was very sick. I was left to hold the fort alone. Preached nine times, with fair crowds and good attention. Went from there to Brother Dohls, five miles south of Loma, and held two meetings; one on Sunday but not many out. Good attention. On Monday night, a good crowd, and the best of attention; preached with good liberty for over an hour; distributed tracts to nearly everyone in the house. Next day went to Lawton to meet Brother Sparling according to appointment. Commenced a series of meetings in Lawton, having obtained the use of the Universalist church; not very many out to the meetings, but those that came paid close attention. When we closed our meeting some expressed a desire to obey in the spring. While at Lawton, we made our home with Sister Nash, who is a firm and devoted Saint. After the close of our meetings at Lawton, we separated; Brother Sparling going back to Calvin, by request, to hold a series of meetings. I went to Leeds; preached once in the Presbyterian church and was called home to look after some financial matters.

While the missionary has the coldness and indifference of the people of the world to meet, we have many things to encourage us. One is the comforting thought that the message we bear is true, and that if we are faithful in discharging our duty we will not lose our reward.

J. S. WAGENER.

BANTRY, NORTH DAKOTA, February 26, 1912.

Copenhagen, Denmark.

As the HERALD seldom contains any news from this corner of the Lord's vineyard, I will now contribute a few lines, that it may be known that we are still alive, and are striving to be about our Master's work. I have not the privilege to report great progress and bright prospects for the work, yet have no reason to feel discouraged or downhearted for

I have found comfort and encouragement in the conflict, and I am hopeful for the final victory for the cause that has become dear to our souls.

I have been in this city nearly seven months and have been preaching to as many as I have been able to persuade to come to our humble place of meeting; and besides I have visited many homes and distributed tracts and church literature wherever I had hope of accomplishing good.

We work under great disadvantage, being misunderstood and classed with the Utah people, who have made this city the headquarters for their operations in the Scandinavian countries for more than sixty years. They are quite strong here now and claim a membership of about five hundred in this city, but as far as making the name of Latter Day Saint honorable is concerned, they have been a total failure. Upon the other hand by their pernicious doctrine and practices they have brought upon themselves the odium and disrespect of all classes; and the fair name of the church has been tarnished to such an extent that it has become a very difficult problem to reach the ears of the people, and to induce them to investigate any subject pertaining to the latter day work.

In order to throw light on the situation, and to make known the claims of the Reorganization, I concluded to deliver some lectures on "Mormonism" and advertised in the papers, under the heading: "Mormonism unveiled." Elder Andrew Jensen, assistant church historian of the Utah Church, is at present in charge of their work in this country. I met him first in Utah more than twenty-five years ago, and we have met off and on since that time, upon various occasions. I wrote Elder Jensen before beginning my lectures, informing him of my intention, stating that I would endeavor to pursue an honorable course; that I would not attack his people or their doctrines without giving him, or any whom he might choose to present them, an opportunity to be heard, if they should choose to defend their claims, as I cherished no ill will towards any, and only desired that the facts should be known.

My advertisement brought out quite an attendance, more than our little meeting room could accommodate, but by an addition thereto, also using our living room adjoining, I believe all that desired had an opportunity to hear, though some came no nearer than to stand in the anteroom. I delivered in all eleven lectures on this subject, but only one a week, or each Thursday night, as on that evening of the week our Utah friends had no regular service of their own; and on Sundays I treated on other subjects.

Elder Jensen only attended twice, and each time came in after the meeting was well under way, hence only heard me in part, but he was each time granted the privilege of speaking. The first time was at my second lecture, and he then complained that I had only told the truth in part, and that, he claimed, was the worst kind of a lie. I could not, as to that, in this case agree with him, as I had given him the privilege to speak for his side and he had the opportunity to present anything that could throw further light upon the matter, if such had been withheld by me. Furthermore, I promised Elder Jensen that while I had not been able, during the short time he had listened to me, to tell all the truth, that I would continue until all that wanted to hear should know the truth about "Mormonism," and in order that it might not be a onesided affair, I invited Elder Jensen to be present, and to take part, thinking that by a united effort we might succeed in getting all the truth before the people.

The elder endeavored to inform us that when Brigham and followers located in the Salt Lake Valley, they carried out the teachings and policies of Joseph Smith, whom he claimed had predicted that the Rocky Mountains would become the gathering place for the Saints and for the up-building of Zion. I answered this by quoting from Brigham Young's sermon of 1863, Journal of Discourses, volume 10, page 255, where he says: "When we were ready to start on our pilgrimage west, a certain gentleman, who signed himself 'Backwoodsman,' wished to know on what conditions we would overcome and settle California. He gave us to understand that he had authority from headquarters to treat with us on the matter. I thought that President Polk was our friend at that time; we have thought so since, and we think so now. We agreed to survey and settle California—we drawing the odd numbers and the Government the even numbers; but I think the President was precipitated into the Mexican War and our prospective calculations fell through, otherwise we should have gone to California and settled it. Many of you did not know this." This, together with many other things from the history of those times, goes to show that they located in Utah not because Joseph Smith had so taught or predicted, but because that their "prospective calculations fell through," otherwise they would have gone to California.

The elder also endeavored to enlighten us in regard to the change they have made in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. He said before the Lord spoke to the church on marriage, it was governed by the general custom prevailing with other churches, and section 109 in the early edition of the book was copied after their creeds, especially after the Methodists. This was, to say the least, something new; but I could not concede it. I showed that this article on marriage was a declaration of the faith of the Saints, based upon the word of God as found in the standard books of the church, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations given through the Prophet Joseph Smith. However, I thought if we for a moment should admit, as Elder Jensen had claimed, that God by revelation had given a law embracing "celestial marriage," and that this new law had superseded the former, there certainly ought to be, to the church, a certain time known when the new law went into effect and when the old one was abrogated, and I asked the elder, as one of the church historians, to inform us at what time this change took place; but he evaded the question. I had later an opportunity to meet him at his office, and I reminded him that he had not answered my question, but he simply gave me to understand that he was under no obligations to answer my inquiries.

His closing statement at this time was one with which I became quite familiar while in the West, as it is generally the climax reached by these sons of Utah. It was this: The men who took an active part in bringing about the Reorganization of the church, were a band of apostates and traitors, that did not agree among themselves, but they finally succeeded in coaxing "little Joseph" to become their president. He then added: "We used to ignore them altogether, but as they are now becoming a little stronger, we have to notice them once in a while." I presume he thought that ought to settle the question, and perhaps it did in the minds of some of his own company, but people that would stoop to think could not help but see that the man's position had become desperate, and that he was making use of these wholesale accusations for the want of something better to defend his cause with. I felt to pity the man who had to stoop to such a level in order to find a substitute for argument or testimony. Elder Jensen endeavors to pose as a gentleman and would not have stooped to cast odium upon men, of whom he knew so little, only that he had looked upon matters differently than did the men with whom he had cast his lot. Had he better and more honorable weapons at his command, he would no doubt have preferred them.

Elder Jensen came the second time, seven or eight weeks afterward, and in his speech repeated some of his former assertions, but in addition told us that he felt especially grieved because that we would not admit that Joseph Smith introduced the doctrine and practice of polygamy. He got quite warm on this subject, and declared that it was a historical truth that Joseph Smith had a plurality of wives, and that he himself was a living witness of the fact. I could not see why this matter should grieve the elder so much, as it must be admitted that if polygamy was right, honorable, and lawful it would remain so, even if Joseph Smith had but one wife; and upon the other hand, if it was sinful and wrong it would still remain sinful and wrong, even if it could be shown that Joseph Smith had a plurality. He admitted that some mistakes had been made in dates as to when some women were sealed to the Prophet, and said in the case of Zina D. Young, she was not taught the doctrine of plural marriage until after she had been divorced from her husband, Mr. Jacobs, and the date given (October 27, 1841,) when she was sealed to the Prophet, was an error. I was glad for that much from Elder Jensen, as it exonerates the Prophet completely. "Aunt Zina," according to her own biography, published in Utah, in Women of Mormondom, was still the wife of Henry B. Jacobs at the time of the exodus from Nauvoo to Westwood. She informs us that when she had come as far as the Chariton, upon the bank of that stream she gave birth to a fine son. This lad was named after the stream, "Chariton," and he has been well known in Utah as Chariton Jacobs, the son of Henry B. Jacobs. Hence, according to Elder Jensen's testimony, it must have been years after the Prophet's death, that this lady was taught the doctrine of plural marriage, as it was not until after her divorce from Mr. Jacobs. Jensen was right; the date was wrong.

When Elder Jensen announced himself as a living witness in the case, it shows with what readiness these men will bear testimony. I myself was born into the world a year or two before Elder Jensen, and was in Utah two years before he gazed over the mountains. I have endeavored to make myself conversant with everything that has been introduced in order to make Joseph Smith the author of this corruption, but have found nothing of the kind that could be regarded as unbiased and reliable testimony. It would be the height of folly and inconsistency for either Jensen or me to pose as witnesses in the case, having neither of us been born until a number of years after Joseph Smith had finished his earthly career. It was rather strange that Elder Jensen should take up this issue, as it had not been discussed by me, but perhaps it was because it was something that he knew he could most readily make the masses believe, as they seem generally ready to believe anything mean concerning the founder of the latter day work.

I trust my efforts have done good, though even some of those who were pleased to see "Mormonism unveiled" thought I was not severe enough, being that I claimed that we could afford to be liberal if we ourselves had the truth, and could afford to accord the Mormons the same privilege that we claimed for ourselves. I claimed it revealed a weakness upon the part of the state church when its ministers are clamoring for the expulsion of the Mormon missionaries, as this and every other error is most successfully met with truth, in an open and not in a cowardly, underhanded way. I find myself more and more confirmed in this, and I am happy to be associated with a people who believe that the truth can bear investigation, even in the light, and that we have a gospel to preach of which we never need be ashamed.

I am glad to say a few are investigating the work, and trust the Lord may direct all such by his Spirit, until they shall be fully satisfied and ready to obey. May the Lord direct his work throughout and bless our beloved President, that he may be directed in his responsible work and be able so to order the cause of Zion that peace and prosperity may continue and that righteousness and holiness may increase among her children.

News from Branches

Chicago, Illinois.

CENTRAL BRANCH.

Just a few lines to let you know we are still trying to hold up the banner of King Immanuel. The Sunday school and morning preaching service are our best attended meetings. Few attend the evening services, on account of the long distances to travel. Nevertheless, those who do attend are made to realize that God is at the helm of this work, his Holy Spirit bringing joy and consolation to the souls of those who make the effort to serve him.

The Religio work is improving; the attendance has increased considerably.

The visiting priesthood of the branch have been busy working along the lines of their duties. We expect good results from this, as it is in harmony with the divine law, and benefits will be derived by all concerned.

God has recognized the fasting and prayers of his people here of late, in behalf of the sick and afflicted. Sister Eva Sherman, who has suffered greatly with heart trouble, is improving nicely. Paul Schwendener, one of our Sunday school pupils, had a growth upon his hand and the physician said he would surely have to be operated upon, but Paul had faith in the ordinance of God's house and submitted himself to the same, and the result is that the growth has nearly disappeared. Some others of the branch have received great benefits through administration.

March 3 was rally day with this branch. The weather was not very favorable, nevertheless there were a goodly number present.

Many good thoughts have been presented from the pulpit of late, by Brethren E. J. Lang, P. Pement, W. I. Cochran, J. J. Oliver, C. E. Cotton, and H. P. W. Keir.

A very pleasant surprise party was tendered our departing missionary, Brother J. A. Tanner, at the home of Brother Henry Keir. A goodly number from the West and South Side branches were present, and an enjoyable evening spent. A substantial purse was given Brother Tanner to assist him on his way.

Brother William Wainwright and family have moved to the vicinity of the church. This is a move in the right direction.

REPORTER.

MARCH 3, 1912.

Independence, Missouri.

In the very midst of social happiness we have been called to part with loved ones. Sister Myra Kelsall died on the 26th, after a few weeks of illness incident to advanced years, being eighty-two years of age. She came here from Monmouth, Idaho, and her son (by a former marriage) N. L. Sutton was present. The funeral took place yesterday, the 28th, at 1.30 p. m., at the church; Bishop Kelley preaching a comforting sermon. Brother Wallace E. Nelson's death occurred in Saskatchewan, Canada, on the 12th inst. His remains were brought home for burial, funeral obsequies taking place at the church on the 16th, Elder J. W. Rushton preaching the sermon. On the 16th Brother John O. Savage, a priest, passed away and the funeral service took place on the 19th.

Our brother was seventy-seven years old and died with a firm hope of a glorious resurrection. He also was a lover of his country and enlisted in its defense. Brother Garrett preached the funeral sermon. On Sunday morning, the 18th, Brother A. B. Colvin, a sailor, had spent most of his life in Australia, passed away as the Saints were helping him go to the Sanitarium where he might receive rest and cure. He was born in Rhode Island, in 1837, and at his obsequies on the 20th Brother G. E. Harrington discoursed over his remains.

These sorrowful reminiscences call to mind the uncertainties of earth life, but also the glorious hope and increasing bliss of beautiful home beyond.

During the past week we have been enjoying good meetings. At the early meeting of the 25th there was an attendance of one hundred, and those presiding were, H. H. Robinson and Alvin Christensen, a young brother who is a very active member of the good literature committee.

Prayers were requested by Sister Lake for a brother on the island of Tahiti, who, with his companion were attacked by the plague.

The Sunday school attendance was 712. The services were conducted morning and evening by J. W. Rushton, and a lecture was given on the subject, "The attitude of the church towards the liquor traffic."

The meeting on cooperation was held on Monday evening, and the Sentinel, our little daily, had, on the next day many words of ecoum in it for Brother Rushton's long and valuable experiences on the social and economic lines of active life.

Credentials to General Conference.—Under the new rule adopted 1911 the report of the committee on credentials must be published before the General Conference convenes. Enrollments in Quorums.—This work is in charge of President F. M. Smith, chairman of the committee, to which was committed the work of reorganization of all quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. Such quorums are being reorganized in missions, stakes, districts, and branches, according to territorial location of the local ministry. The work is being prosecuted as rapidly as conditions will permit. This in answer to numerous inquiries.

Railroad Rates to General Conference.—With the lessened rates now in vogue in the various States, no reduction in rates will be granted to our General Conventions and Conference until we can guarantee an attendance by rail of one thousand. With such number we can obtain a rate of two cents per mile in each direction.

Died.

CAMPBELL.—Don Campbell, son of Elder Duncan Campbell died at the Ames College Hospital Friday, February 16, of typhoid fever brought on largely by overwork. He was born at Pleasanton, Iowa, March 3, 1881, at which place he made his home till about a year ago when his father, sister and himself moved to Ames, Iowa, as they then contemplated, only temporarily, while he and his sister finished their education. He would have graduated in June of this year from the civil engineering course. He was baptized by his father June 11, 1891, and while his mental powers were employed almost entirely in the pursuit of his studies, yet he lived so as to merit the respect and the highest esteem of those with whom he associated in school work. Funeral services were held at the home in charge of the chaplain of the college, Doctor Cessna, assisted by Elder J. F. Mintun and Professor Stanton, the president of the college, who paid a very high tribute to the deceased—do not know how words could be used to express a higher tribute to anyone. He was buried in the cemetery at Ames. The chaplain and president of the college volunteered their services.

KELSALL.—Maria M., passed from this life on the morning of February 26, 1912, at the home of Mrs. G. E. Erickson, West Walnut Street, Independence, Missouri, with whom she had been making her home during the present winter. Maria M. Douglas was born August 2, 1830, at Saint Michaels, Canada East, and moved with her parents to Iowa in 1852. In 1860 she was married to L. B. Sutton, who died in 1868. Following the death of Mr. Sutton, she was married in 1870 to G. W. Kelsall, who died in 1889, leaving the present deceased a widow until the present time. In 1888 she united with the church under the administrations of J. S. Roth, and was a steadfast and devoted member of the same. She leaves of immediate relatives to mourn her loss, one son, N. L. Sutton, of Monmouth, Iowa, and several grandchildren. She was a worthy and upright sister and passed from this life in the hope of the better resurrection. Funeral services at the church at Independence, Missouri; services conducted by W. H. Garrett, George E. Harrington, and E. L. Kelley. The remains interred in the Mound Grove Cemetery.

Riders of the Purple Sage.

The mention of Zane Gray's The Heritage of the Desert will probably serve to bring up vivid pictures before the eyes of all who have read that remarkable story. There is no danger of confusing it in retrospect with any of the familiar varieties of Western romance. Impressions of the canyon country of southern Utah and northern Arizona are not easy to forget. Mr. Gray has now written a second novel, Riders of the Purple Sage, just published by the Harpers.

Here again plot and scene are unusual and striking; the story is riotously full of adventure and alive with strong feeling. But the real secret of its peculiar charm lies deeper. Not only does the author surprise us with novelty, but he has the precious power of making us feel freshly about simple, elemental things. In his two novels there is something of the same magic as in Lorna Doone and Treasure Island—tales which have little in common save this elemental freshness.

The reader who wishes to repeat the sensations felt in youth in reading the book that then seemed most enjoyable may be commended to Riders of the Purple Sage; not that the theme is in the least juvenile. The story is one of fierce passions; there is much gun play in it and some killing. It is natural, therefore, to inquire whether the effect is not a little melodramatic. In the contrary, it is, fine and bracing. We rejoice in so much self-reliance, resourcefulness, quickness of hand and eye, and we thoroughly believe in it all.

The scene of Riders of the Purple Sage is southern Utah; the time is 1871. The people are ranchers and cattle-rustlers, Mormons and gentiles. Jane Withersteen, a young unmarried their strange retreat, climbs a rock-bound passage to disciplined by her church for befriending gentiles and for keeping in her employ a gentile range rider named Venters. Through a conspiracy with the Mormons, a gang of rustlers drives off a whole herd of Jane's cattle. Venters, his life threatened, goes to find them. He tracks the thieves to Deception Pass, that "stone-walled maze of mystery," finds their strange retreat, climbs a rock-bound passage to discover the marvelous Surprise Valley, guarded by the balancing rock of the cliff-dwellers, which, once overthrown, will close the pass for ever in a mass of wreckage. Meeting rustlers, he shoots and wounds one, who proves to be a girl. He carries her to the valley; she recovers, and the two quickly grow to love each other. Meanwhile a much-feared "gunman," Lassiter, has come to Jane to ask the name of the Mormon proselyter who years ago abducted his sister. Jane knows but will not tell; she tries to soften him by making him love her. Lassiter is unyielding, but he and Jane find love in the very clash of their wills. These are the two threads of the story, which converge to a strong climax.

has just been issued, entitled

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

- (1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.
- (2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.
- (3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.
- (4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

Many of the scenes, however, are quite wonderful even apart from the plot. The "milling" of a herd is described with a force and economy of phrase almost Kiplingesque. There are some splendid horses in the tale—like the horses in Ben Hur—and there is the sort of race that makes the eyes shine and the breath quicken. Mr. Gray's place as a novelist is fully established by Riders of the Purple Sage.

Mongolia's Absorption by Russia Foreseen.

Russia's gradual infiltration into Mongolia, presaging its annexation, was described in "The Russian Road to China," published last year by Houghton Mifflin Company. The author, Lindon Bates, jr., made a midwinter sledge trip through the Trans-Baikal province to the Chinese border, and thence by native cart to Urga, the metropolis of Mongolia and the capital of Gigin, the "Living Buddah." He foresaw the probable annexation of this province by Russia and the now imminent construction of a railroad striking for the heart of China by way of the Mongolian desert, and thus checkmating the Japanese, who, by the war, had cut off Russia's railroad to Port Arthur.

"When the bumping tarantass rolls across the Chinese frontier into Mongolia, it enters a kingdom of the Middle Ages flung down into the twentieth century. Feudal princes, lords of armies weaponed with spear and bow, tax and drive to the corvée their nomad serfs. A hierarchy of priests, whose divine head lives in a palace at Holy Urga, sways the multitude of superstition-steeped Mongols, and receives the homage of pilgrims wending their way from Siberia, from the Volga, from Tibet, from all Mongolia, to their Canterbury of Lamaism. In prostrate devotion the penitents girdle the Sacred City, before whose hovels beggars dispute with dogs their common nourishment, and in whose compounds princes of the race of Genghis Khan, with armies of retainers, live bedless, bathless, lightless, in the felt huts of their race. Squalid magnificence and good-humored, kindly hospitality are linked to utter brutality. Sable furs and silks cover sheepskins worn until they drop from the body. Here and there among the natives a Chinese trading caravansary, alien, walled, peculiar, stands as of old the Hansa-town, with merchant guilds and far-brought caravan goods.

"The Russian advance has been always eastward, towards an ice-free port on the Pacific. Cut off by the Japanese the one outlet now for Russia is through Mongolia, striking straight for Peking and the heart of China. This is the century-old road of the tea trade. Here is the shortest route from Europe to the East. Here, through the defiles and the broken foothills of the Gobi Plateau, lies the future redemption of the great unfettered land route to North China. The Chinese are themselves advancing to anticipate it. They have already built into Kalgan. To this trading center across the pale a Russian railway may yet pass, and her colonists make fruitful the unpeopled wilds of Mongolia. A way of adventure and strangeness, where the years turn back, is this old road of the Golden Horde, leading down past the ancestral homes of the Turks to the Great Wall."

What Tobacco Does to the Boy.

It is generally admitted that in the immature the moderate use of tobacco stunts the normal growth of the body and mind, and causes various nervous disturbances, especially of the heart—disturbances which it causes in later life only when smoking has become excessive. That is to say, though a boy's stomach grows tolerant of nicotine to the extent of taking it without protest, the rest of the body keeps on protesting.

Furthermore, all business men will tell you that tobacco damages a boy's usefulness in his work. This is necessarily so, since anything which lowers the vitality creates some kind of incompetence. For the same reason the boy who smokes excessively not only is unable to work vigorously, but he does not wish to work at all. This result, apparent during growth, is only less apparent after growth, when other causes may step in and neutralize it.

Tobacco, in bringing about depreciation of the nerve cells, brings together with physical results like insomnia, lowered vitality, and restlessness, their moral counterparts, like irritability, lack of concentration, desire to avoid responsibility and to travel the road of least resistance.

If there were some instrument to determine it, in my opinion there would be seen a difference of fifteen per cent in the general efficiency of smokers and nonsmokers. The time is already at hand when smokers will be barred out of positions which demand quick thought and action. Already tobacco is forbidden during working hours in the United States steel corporation.—From Charles B. Towns's The Injury of Tobacco, in the March Century.

There is no time with God. . . . He does not promise that any given date or moment shall see the fulfilling of our hopes. The long years when we receive no visible answer are to him the same short day as when our hope began. It is laid up for us in heaven, like Aaron's rod within the ark: and there, in like manner, it shall bud, and blossom, and bring forth fruit simultaneously, when he shall choose.—M. Byron.

Socialism and Christianity.

What is Socialism? What goal does it propose? Is it practicable? Would it be any improvement on the present social order? What modification of generally accepted ethical, economic and political ideas does it require? What should be the attitude toward it of the more thoughtful part of the community? These are questions which are very much in the air at present and they are the questions which Henry C. Vedder's *Socialism and the Ethics of Jesus answers. A brief history of socialistic principles and parties in modern times is given, together with a critical examination of the principles of present day Socialism. This is followed by a study of the social ethics of Jesus, including both the fundamental principles and their chief practical applications and an outline of the history of Christianity sufficient to show to what degree the church has failed to realize the social ideal of Jesus. The whole issues in an inquiry concerning the fitting attitude of those who profess the religion of Jesus to social questions and to Socialism. It is a timely discussion of a theme that is more and more absorbing the thought of those who think. The book is not hastily written but is the outgrowth of many years of study or the problems involved, and of lectures and addresses delivered in many parts of the country.

Doctor Van Dyke's Literary Creed.

Doctor Henry van Dyke's literary creed may be summed up in his sentence: "Idealism in the conception and realism in the details—that's the secret of writing." And in the recent interview in which he said this he added: "When you have made the best boat that you can, and put your cargo in it, what then? Why then, let it sail on God's ocean as far as he pleases. Don't sit down on the shore and listen to the praise or blame of the onlookers . . . set to work on another boat and try to make it better." Doctor van Dyke's latest boat, The Mansion,* seems destined to sail as long a way as his previous one, The Story of the Other Wise Man, which is known to nearly every reader in America.

has been much talked about lately and there's no getting away from the fact—it's getting to be a very serious matter with many folks. I was out in Wyoming (the Big Horn Basin) recently, however, and I'll tell you there wasn't any of that kind of talk out there. No sir ree bob. The farmers and merchants were in fine spirits. Crop conditions are splendid, this year and next will be corkers in the Basin. You would be surprised if you could see the money some of those farmers are making off of a small herd of dairy cows and some pigs and chickens.

I wonder if you couldn't arrange to go out with me on the excursion leaving Omaha, 4.10 p. m., March 19, and look around? It wouldn't take long or cost much, and I'd like to have you.

MARRIAGE AND THE HOME.

"Marriage has in it less of beauty, but more of safety, than the single life; it hath not more ease, but less danger; it is more merry and more sad; it is fuller of sorrows and fuller of joys; it lies under more burdens, but it is supported by all the strength of love and charity; and these burdens are delightful. Marriage is the mother of the world, and preserves kingdoms, and fills cities and churches, and heaven itself."—Jeremy Taylor.

NEST BUILDING.

When two birds mate in the springtime it might be supposed that they would be content to float away on rainbow tinted clouds of connubial bliss. Not so. They get right down to the business of nest building. They work and sing and are busy and happy because nest building is the happiest and most important thing in the world. Everything is subordinated to the work in hand. If necessary, the mother bird plucks the down from her own breast to line the new home. Women who put dress first and home second are not so wise as the jenny wren.

Naturally there comes a time in the life of every man when he falls in love with some woman. The world laughs at him then. But if all goes well he can afford to laugh at the world. Presently orange blossoms open. Wedding bells ring. The blushing bride occupies the center of the stage, clad in raiment that no mere man can describe. The groom, in "conventional black," occupies a subordinate position a little at one side, and often wishes that it were even less conspicuous. The minister says the magic, some would say the fatal words, that make the two one,—and collects his fee. The wedding feast is eaten. The guests depart. The music dies away. The two are left face to face with the serious problems of life.

If this union is to be permanent and happy, there is nothing more important at this juncture than home making. This is an age in which the majority of the people do not own their homes. Such a condition is unfortunate. In the ideal society every man will own his home—every man, that is, who cares enough for a home to work for it and save for it, and it goes without saying that in the ideal society all will be of that class. The fact that the majority of the people do not own homes is of sinister import. It may be due in part to economic conditions, and in part to extravagance and intemperance. The latter causes should be eliminated from the lives of Latter Day Saints. It should be their ambition to own their homes where conditions are such that it is at all possible for them to do so. The United Order of Enoch, working in the interests of the church, has stated its purpose to be to help the worthy poor to secure homes. This is a worthy cause and an important one. Permanent employment makes permanent homes possible, and Zion should help her children in these matters. In predicting a good time coming Micah said: "They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree."—Micah 4:4.

SUITABLE HOMES.

Homes should be adequate and comfortable. In 1908 President Roosevelt appointed a commission to investigate conditions in penal and charitable institutions in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia. This commission reported:

The problem of crime among the people can not be considered apart from the general problem of their housing and their surroundings. It is impossible to understand any man apart from his surroundings, and especially apart from what he calls his home. Most of these people who find their way into the criminal court and eventually into prison, may be traced back to the miserable alleys and hovels which exist in such large numbers in our city and which are a reproach to our civilization. No one who knows how these people live wonders at their habits or their crimes. While we are striving for penal and reformatory institutions worthy of our people and our time, let us not neglect to remove these breeding places of vice and schools of crime, and put in their place clean and wholesome dwellings.

Society can undertake no work more important than to aid in every legitimate way the worthy and industrious to secure suitable homes. Extreme poverty and extreme wealth are both alike a menace to good citizenship. We do not grow the great staple crops that feed humanity in barren and sandy wastes, nor yet in excessively fertilized hotbeds. We grow them in moderately fertile open fields. The best citizens are not grown in the barren wastes of poverty, nor in the luxurious hotbeds of wealth, but in homes where the necessities of life are adequately supplied and luxury unknown. Children can not develop properly without sufficient nourishing food, clothing adequate to preserve bodily warmth and self-respect, shelter that is enough more than shelter to invoke the love that home should claim, education, and time and opportunity for innocent recreation. Extreme poverty denies these essentials; extreme wealth spoils them all. The hope of humanity is in the homes of the moderately well to do.

Not idly did Agur pray: "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain."—Proverbs 3: 8, 9.

"TAKE NOT SO SHORT A TIME."

Now for the two chief characters who are to occupy in this home of which we speak. Their alliance should not be formed with too great haste. Back of the divorce court at which so many rail is the hasty marriage which so many overlook entirely. One lecturer pictures certain modern matings thus: The phone rings. The young lady answers. A voice says, "Will you marry me?" She answers, "Yes! Who is it?"

This is a reversal of the logical sequence of the question and the answer. The question, Who is it? should have some months the start of the answer; Yes.

In these days when a young man just out of college enters a bank with head up and chest inflated and informs the bank president that he has decided to accept the position of head cashier, the banker whirls on him and asks a few pointed questions: "Do you gamble? Do you smoke? Do you drink? Are you afraid to work?"

If the young man can not answer no to these interrogations, presently he goes out with head down and chest deflated.

Surely a woman should be as exacting as a bank president. She has so much more at stake! Shakespeare says: "Take not so short a time to make a world-wide bargain in."

On the other hand the young man should be reasonably sure that he is getting a woman who will do her share in helping to make a home—one who is not afraid to work when necessary and has the saving grace of common sense. In these days of strenuous high school and college courses little time is left for girls to acquire the arts that made their grandmothers famous as housekeepers. It is perhaps too much to ask that they enter upon married life fully equipped with a working knowledge of housekeeping. But a man need not worry if he is sure that his chosen companion has the home-making temperament; if she is a potential home maker she will soon solve the problems that confront her, just as he from year to year must work out problems of bread winning that he knew little about when he made his start in life.

THE FLEDGLINGS.

Naturally in time other actors appear upon the scene. Longfellow pictures the wedding festivities in his poem the "Hanging of the Crane." (In the good old days they used to hang the crane in the new home. To-day in some homes they hang the stork.) Looking ahead a few years from the wedding day he says:

"Seated, I see the two again,
But not alone; they entertain
A little angel unaware,
With face as round as is the moon,
A royal guest with flaxen hair,
Who, throned upon his lofty chair,
Drums on the table with his spoon,
Then drops it careless on the floor,
To grasp at things unseen before.
Are these celestial manners? these
The ways that win, the arts that please?
Ah yes; consider well the guest,
And whatso'er he does seems best."

The young of the human race are born more helpless than the young of any of the animals. The little babe is absolutely powerless. He comes into the world without even a change of clothing and without money enough to pay for a night's lodging. But fortunately he brings with him something that makes up for every other deficiency—the power to reach out and take hold of human hearts as nothing else in the world does. When those little fingers close over the parent hand nature attends to the rest and the little mendicant becomes a king.

Then the home begins to perform more fully its functions. It becomes the nesting place of the fledglings.

CELIBACY; GOD VERSUS PAUL.

In the past, two erroneous ideas have been entertained regarding marriage. A great many people, particularly members of certain religious sects, have advocated and practiced celibacy. Their teachings have taken the color of authority from the writings of Paul, particularly the seventh chapter of 1 Corinthians. Paul makes but one concession to marriage. He says: "It is better to marry than to burn." Of two dreadful alternatives he would prefer marriage to burning.

But we should notice particularly that Paul is at pains to state at four different times in this chapter that he is giving his own opinion and not the opinion of God. Paul was a man who said that he had learned to be content in whatsoever condition he found himself. He found himself single and was satisfied to remain single. Had he married he would have written a chapter different from the one we are considering.

There is no warrant in the Word of God for the thought that marriage is an unholy state; or for the more common thought that though not unholy it is a lower state than celibacy and that God especially rewards those who do not marry. God said in the beginning that it was not good for man to be alone. When Paul says that it is better for man to remain alone than to marry, with all due respect to Paul, we must decide that God was right and Paul wrong.

POLYGAMY; DAVID AND SOLOMON VERSUS GOD.

Others have gone to the opposite extreme and have taught and practiced polygamy. David and Solomon practiced it, and some have thought that because of that God approved of it. But these kings of Israel practiced it, not in obedience to the law of God, but contrary to the law. The law said: "Neither shall he multiply wives to himself."

God was in no way responsible for acts committed in direct violation of his law. In the light of this the Book of Mormon is correct when it says that the conduct of David and Solomon in this particular was abominable in the sight of God.

THE TRUE LAW.

Probably the most explicit commandments regarding marriage are found in latter day revelation. Celibacy and polygamy are both mentioned in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants: "Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife and they twain shall be one flesh."—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

It appears from this that marriage is natural and ordained of God and that those who teach to the contrary are not ordained of him. Marriage must then be something more than a civil contract, to be annulled at the will of the contracting parties. And it is limited to "they twain." A man may have one wife. They two shall be one flesh.

Beautiful instruction is found in the following: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has just cause to be proud of its attitude in this matter. That attitude is more fully set forth in the marriage ceremony adopted by the church in 1835, in which the contracting parties are required to answer affirmatively the following: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives."—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 2.

The Book of Mormon, also, though much misunderstood, contains a sound and wholesome law, as follows:

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none."—Jacob 2: 36.

We may conclude that marriage is the highest and best estate of man in this world, being approved of God, he having presided at the first marriage of man and woman and having laid down the law to govern marriage. Any departure from that law is fraught with grave danger to the individual and society. Home is the place where married life finds its best expression. Any institution or tendency that threatens the integrity of the home is a menace to the individual, to the church, and to society.

A CORRECTION.

In "A letter of instruction," published in the HERALD for March 13, 1912, in the latter part of the third paragraph of the second column of the first page, there is an error in names, referring to section 87, paragraph 3, Book of Doctrine and Covenants. The name of Oliver Cowdery appears in connection with that of Sidney Rigdon, whereas it should read Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams, instead of Sidney Rigdon and Oliver Cowdery. The readers of the HERALD will please strike out the name of Oliver Cowdery and write in that of Frederick G. Williams. It was a slip of the memory.

THE STONE OF DANIEL 2.

Does the stone referred to in Daniel 2 symbolize the Government of the United States, or the church?

I say it does not represent or symbolize either; and if your pleasure will permit I will give my reasons.

In the first place, the stone was to be "cut out of the mountain without hands." I believe it was not to be anything material, to be seen or felt. But the effects were to be seen and felt, as it was to break to pieces the "feet of clay and iron." Now you will turn to Daniel 2 and read the thirty-first to the thirty-third verses inclusive, which give the description of the image from the head to the feet. In the thirty-fourth verse the stone cut out without hands makes its appearance, which fell on the feet of the image and broke them to pieces, and in its turn became a mountain that "filled the whole earth."

Then Daniel interprets the dream, and in his interpretation symbolizes the different parts of the image. Thus: "Thou art the head of gold"; which represented the kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar; and so on down to the feet, do the different parts of the image represent different kingdoms.

Now we come to the question, Does he symbolize the stone as the kingdom God shall set up in the last days? I say he does not. Read the forty-fourth verse; a kingdom is to be set up by God "which will never be destroyed." "And the kingdom shall not be left to other people." Other people than whom? Other than God's people, of course. So God's people will have the kingdom which is to stand for ever. "It will consume all other kingdoms." In like manner as the stone broke to pieces so shall the kingdom consume all other nations. Now understand, the stone did not and is not to consume all other kingdoms, but is to break them in pieces; whereas the kingdom set up by God was to consume or swallow up all other kingdoms; or in other words, they are to be contained in this kingdom set up by God.

Now to the stone; what is it? I say it is the inspired spirit of freedom. And this is my reason for so saying: It was to be cut from the mountain without hands, therefore is not to be material, which the spirit is not. Was it not this which lead Columbus to break away from the traditions and superstitions of his day and attempt to reach the East Indies by sailing west? Was it not also the same spirit of freedom which prompted the early day reformers to break away from and protest against the mother church?

The same spirit of freedom caused the early settlers to seek homes on the American Continent. Again the same spirit of freedom caused the colonies to rebel against unfair rule and to build the greatest and grandest republic the world has ever known. And thus the United States Government is but the product of that inspired spirit of freedom, which is the stone that is crushing all kingdoms to pieces and rolling on to make way for the gospel through the medium of free speech and press. And thus is Doctrine and Covenants 65: 1 fulfilled, "from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth until it has filled the whole earth." So the spirit of freedom or the stone shall fill the earth and the gospel will follow. Now note that the gospel is to follow the rolling of the stone. I do not believe that the United States is the stone, and here are my reasons. Still bear in mind that the rock was "cut out without hands." Now read Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10: "For this purpose have I established the constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood." So we see that the very foundation was constituted by the hands of man through the inspiration of God, and was redeemed by the shedding of blood which was also shed by the hands of man. Therefore the United States can not be the "stone cut out of the mountain without hands." And again, the United States Government can not roll forth to the ends of the earth; but the spirit of freedom, which is demonstrated by the United States Government, by her laws of freedom which were born by the inspired spirit of freedom or the stone.

Now to the kingdom that God was to set up in the last days. I say it was the church, not the stone. I believe that, as I said before, when Daniel said in the second chapter and forty-fourth verse that the kingdom was not to be "left to other people"; that he meant it would be left to God's people and no other. Now if God has set up a kingdom and it is to be left to his people and no other, being a kingdom, it must necessarily have laws by which to govern its subjects which must be the people of God. Now what laws will there be by which to govern God's people? There is only one answer for that question: The gospel law, and as the gospel is the perfect law of liberty, see how beautifully it harmonizes with the stone which is to prepare the way for it, which is the inspired spirit of freedom. For the spirit of freedom is to clear the way for the perfect law of liberty, and as freedom means liberty, how well they blend together!

Again we go back to the stone which is to become a mountain and fill the whole earth. The whole earth will be filled with freedom, and as we accept the gospel through choice for the love of serving God and doing right, therefore we accept the gospel which is the perfect law of liberty through freedom —the stone still running ahead of the gospel. The gospel, or the perfect law of liberty, will bring us a knowledge of God; and as the mountain fills the earth, so shall the knowledge of God or the glory of God, as spoken of in Habakkuk 2:14. Harmony again!

I believe that there is only one everlasting law and that is the gospel. And the kingdom that is to stand for ever must have an everlasting law. Therefore that institution or body of people which is governed by that law, (gospel) must be that kingdom which is to stand for ever. Now where is that institution or people which is governed by that gospel law, if not the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?

What I have said, I have not said with a spirit of contention, rather with a desire for enlightenment and correction if I am wrong. R. L. FULK.

DANIEL 2:44; THE UNITED STATES OR THE CHURCH, WHICH?

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand for ever.—Daniel 2:44.

Two things are apparent in the foregoing: the first is that the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom; the second, that such kingdom is the kingdom of God.

The fact that it is heavenly in its origin, indestructible and eternal in its duration, unmistakably emphasizes it as an organization absolutely unlike the kingdoms of this world. It is a kingdom of a higher order. It must be the kingdom of God.

It is significant also that the time assigned for the setting up of this kingdom, viz, "in the latter days" (Daniel 2:28) is the very time pointed out for the restoration of the gospel, "in the last days," "the hour of God's judgment," the "supper time" "at evening time" as a "witness" of a soon coming "end": "And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come or the destruction of the wicked."—Matthew 24:32.

It must be, therefore, these prophecies are related and the events noted therein, although stated in varying language, must pertain to the one and the selfsame work, the setting up of the Church of Jesus Christ in the latter days.

It is noticeable also that the results following the setting up of the kingdom of Daniel 2:44 is the same as that succeeding the restoration of "the gospel of the kingdom." Direful consequences follow in either case. The breaking in pieces and consumption of "all these kingdoms" as predicted by Daniel, is the same as "the destruction of the wicked" as stated by our Lord.

Bounded on all sides therefore by the same geographical scriptural lines, it can not be otherwise than that the kingdom of Daniel 2:44 is in fact the Church of the Restoration.

That the kingdom as set up by the God of heaven, or as Jesus puts it, "the kingdom of God;" pertains to the Church of Jesus Christ and to nothing else, is very evident from the following:

Seek ye first the kingdom of God.—Matthew 6:33.

But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God then the kingdom of God is come unto you.—Matthew 12:28.

Thou art not far from the kingdom.—Mark 12:34.

The law and the prophets were until John, since that time the kingdom of God is preached and every man presseth into it.—Luke 16:16.

And when he was demanded of the Pharisees when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation, neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! for behold the kingdom of God is within (among) you.—Luke 17:20, 21.

It is unnecessary that we enter upon any argument showing that the foregoing self-evident texts refer to the Church of Jesus Christ. Any other application is simply out of the question.

But we are told that the kingdom of Daniel 2:44 to be set up by the God of heaven, is the United States; in other words, that the United States is the kingdom of God.

Whence the origin of this theory we know not, unless taken from the fanatical ravings of an irresponsible writer a few years ago who went so far as to publish his delusions in the form of a book. The book, however, met with no popular reception, and prophetic students of every caliber absolutely ignore his vagaries.

"My kingdom is not of this world" said Christ, and for any overheated patriot to parade his national structure as the kingdom of God, is either a very exalted opinion of one's country, or else an extremely degenerate opinion of the kingdom of God. Probably both.

Patriotism is commendable when kept within bounds, but to wrest from the Holy Scriptures appellations and honors that belong only to the church, the kingdom of God, and apply them to a political government, human and corrupt, is, to say the least, shockingly indiscreet. It has its counterpart only, in the fanaticism of the Papist, who, over-anxious to flatter the Italian that rules at Rome, does not hesitate to adore him with such unlicensed honors as "The Holy Father," "The King of kings and Lord of lords," "The Lion of the tribe of Judah," "The Lord our God," and other blasphemous titles.

Personally we admire the Constitution of the United States, and are free to confess that the late Honorable W. E. Gladstone uttered no idle words when he said it was the greatest piece of work ever struck off by the brain of man; but when an individual tells me that when I was baptized to become a citizen of the kingdom of God, it was only, after all, to become a citizen of the United States—well, there's where I object. The United States may be good enough to enlist my allegiance here, but it can never save my soul hereafter.

Why should the United States be proclaimed the kingdom of God more than any other nation? Does it excel in the administration of justice? Let the poor colored man accused, but untried, lynched, and burned, make reply.

Is it purer in its political atmosphere? Let the Tammany Halls and Bosses, controlling the civic legislation of the nation make answer.

Is it cleaner in its morals and national life? Let the slums that pollute the nation from New York to San Francisco, and the divorce courts that have encouraged separation and licensed crime speak out.

Before me lies a recent number of the Detroit News, and as I read its flaring headlines—“Detroit's Awful Record—1002 Divorces in Eleven Months,” I am led to ask, If this be the kingdom of God, then what is the kingdom of the Devil like?

We do not question the righteousness of republican principles, but somehow or other such a government exists rather in sentiment than in reality. The Constitution of the United States is a mighty fine thing on paper, but they're not following it any too closely.

What mean these strikes and lockouts, combines and mergers, labor and other organizations, some of them anarchistic in their nature, springing into action everywhere, clamoring for an administration of that immortal truth, “All men are born free and equal.” Is it not testimony unimpeachable that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people does not yet exist?

One of the prominent features associated with the setting up of the Little Stone, the Kingdom of God, is that it shall be “cut out of the mountain without hands,” that “the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom.” In other words the setting up of this kingdom shall not be left to the ingenuity of man. God himself shall order and direct its establishment in a particular way. This will be done, doubtless, in the manner that he set up his kingdom nineteen hundred years ago. “In those days came John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.”—Matthew 3: 1, 2. His efforts were supplemented by the ministry of our Lord and the quorum of twelve apostles, divinely called and divinely directed. Thus was the kingdom of God established in so far as those times were concerned “without hands.”

After this manner therefore, will we expect the kingdom of God to be set up in the “latter days.” It will be established by the Almighty working through a prophet and twelve apostles.

And was this the manner in which the kingdom (?) of the United States was set up? Was there any special revelation commissioning a Washington, a Jefferson, a Tom Paine, and others; those moving forces that effected the establishment of the United States? If so, why did they so uncompromisingly array themselves against everything that savored of a kingdom character and proclaim a republic instead? Were they set apart to the office of prophets and apostles, and were they ever heard to cry, “Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand”?

No; decidedly no; the nation of the United States was set up after the manner of every other nation of this world. It was conceived in rebellion and born of blood. It was not set up “without hands,” but rather by human hands imbrued with the blood of their brethren.

It will be conceded that in the establishment of the United States that an overruling Providence undoubtedly guided, and this guidance may have been manifest to the extent shown in the setting up of the Babylonian empire, the head of gold. Of Babylon and its king the prophet said:

Thou O king, art a king of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold.—Daniel 2: 37, 38.

But whatever the omnipotent intervention wielded by an invisible scepter over the affairs of idolatrous Babylon, it was an earthly institution just the same, and could not claim such a distinctive honor as being the kingdom of God. It is thus with the United States. Fashioned and fathered by an undoubted dispensation of heavenly favor, prospered in many ways, perhaps beyond its fellows, yet after all it can claim no higher honors than the United States of America. In matters of faith, teaching, doctrines, practices, blessings, and government it is totally unlike the kingdom of God.

The setting up of the kingdom of God requires diviner intervention. No human being undirected, unenlightened, and unauthorized can do it. The Lord must speak. He must needs send a prophet, for “surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.” Such an intervention and such an agency has never been claimed by the makers of the American Constitution. No, they attribute it rather to other influences, to other forces, to the patriotism of a Patrick Henry, to the generalship of a George Washington, to the courage of a Paul Jones, and to the foreign assistance of a Lafayette, with now and again a bunch of Providence thrown in. When the founders of the United States, themselves make claim to having established the kingdom of Daniel 2: 44, it will then be time enough to indulge in such a delusion.

Nor do we think that the argument recently urged, that Columbus was "inspired to spy out this land," affords the faintest proof that the United States is the kingdom of Daniel 2: 44. As a matter of fact it was the Bahama Islands that Columbus discovered, which later became and now are, part and parcel of the dominion of Great Britain.

True, this initiatory discovery by Columbus led in later years to the discovery of that portion of territory now held by the United States, but not to that portion in particular, rather to the whole continent of America, North and South, of which the United States is a very small patch.

But whatever the argument put forth for the purpose of sustaining the assumption that the United States is the kingdom of Daniel 2: 44, we submit that a Canadian, if he was assuming enough, could present a case equally as strong, and a deal more consistent, than that urged on behalf of the United States.

In the first place, Canada occupies as does the United States, a habitation on that land discovered by an overruling Providence. It is established on Joseph's land. Canada possesses a government of a kingdom character. This is what the prophecy stipulates, a kingdom, not a republic. It is the most extensive country, in point of territorial dominion, in either North or South America. Canada is now generally regarded as the richest nation in the world in point of mineral wealth. Her resources are scarcely discovered. Her laws are just, affording the utmost political and religious freedom, and best of all, those laws are administered with expediency and impartiality. Her social life is commendably clean, uncontaminated to any great extent, with divorce courts and kindred evils. Her location as a northern country comprising those frigid regions of eternal snows is geographically harmonious with that land prophetically referred to as "the north country" to which Israel were led, and from whence Israel shall come, when "the ice shall flow down at his presence." "As a kingdom of peace, a fundamental element of the kingdom of God, it is without a rival. Since her liberation from Catholic rule under the French régime, 1760, she has yet to engage in a war of conquest and gain. And the only occasion that duty called upon her to arm her citizens, was in the war of 1812, the defense of right against might, from which she emerged triumphantly victorious. What an inspiring spectacle this! A hundred years peace! A thing unheard of among the nations of the world, ancient or modern.

True, Canada's borders have been enlarged, but not by "the shedding of blood." The great Northwest was acquired by nobler means. It was purchased from the Hudson Bay Company, and at a time too, when her sturdy sons of toil, enduring the discomfitures of a frontier forest life, were battling for the grim necessities of existence. Cash she had none, but her credit was good, and the stocks of Canada to-day are rated as the strongest and securest.

It belongs to that imperial galaxy of nations, the British Empire, of whose dominion the coinage of Canada recently correctly stated: "We hold a vaster empire than has been," whose united strength, as yet unexerted, engaged the admiration of the eloquent Webster; a power with which "Rome in the height of her glory is not to be compared; a power which has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts; whose morning drumbeat following the sun and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth daily with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England."

Nor is that power diminishing, rather is it increasing, as the dominions abroad, repudiating foreign reciprocities with its possible complications, extend to the mother land preferential tariffs and military help.

The United States, measured by the age of empires, is yet in its infancy and scarcely out of her swaddling clothes. When her flag, like the ensign of old England, has

"Braved a thousand years
The battle and the breeze," and shall have encountered and conquered like the mighty oak every political storm unto which a nation is subject, we shall rest securer in the contemplation of her temporal permanency.

Glory and greatness she has won in her battles at home and abroad, yet it must be confessed that the United States has never yet been up against a first-class power in the prime of its strength. Her victories over the Mexican and Breeds, the sickly Spaniards and halfstarved Indians were to be expected, while her triumph over England in the revolutionary experience was in reality the triumph of a young and vigorous son over a wearied mother whose hands were tied with long drawn out wars elsewhere.

It is true that the Book of Mormon states "that the Lord God will raise up a mighty nation among the Gentiles, yea even upon the face of this land," (1 Nephi 7: 15, authorized version) which is generally regarded as pertaining to the United States, but we are nowhere informed in the Book of Mormon, or in any other revelation, that this "mighty nation" is the kingdom of Daniel 2: 44. If it is, it would surely have made mention of such a phenomenal fact. Speaking further of this same "mighty nation," it states that "by them shall our seed be scattered." (Ibid., verse 16.) Does this look as though it is the kingdom of God? Is it the work of God's kingdom to scatter and persecute the seed of Israel, God's people?

And this, surely, has been the policy of the American nation toward the seed of Israel. Not only has the Lamanite been scattered and peeled, but the Saints of latter days, just as truly as the seed of Israel, have been robbed and murdered.

We shall not recall those harrowing scenes of inhuman cruelty perpetrated upon the most peaceful and law-abiding citizens that ever graced the American Continent. There they are, written in blood, ineradicable and awful, recorded in the tribunal proceedings of New York, of Ohio, of Missouri, and of Illinois. They adorn in gory splendor the pages of intolerant history that reaches from Palmyra to Nauvoo. Nor can it be denied that the Government of the country was concerned in these deeds of horror. It was the governor of Missouri who issued that infamous order of extermination, and it was the legislative assembly of that same State that appropriated $200,000 to pay the expenses of that war, which, without any provocation whatever, permitted an inhuman slaughter of the Saints.

It was in vain that our bleeding brethren plead their cause in repeated petitions for redress, the rulers of the nation turning a deaf ear to every plea, no matter how justifiable. Indeed, the President of the nation is reported to have said in reply: "Gentlemen, your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you. If I would I'd lose the vote of Missouri." Imagine, if you will, those disappointed petitioners, footsore and weary, returning to Illinois to inform an expectant, impoverished church of the results of their mission. See them congregated together in tattered apparel, homeless and hungry, as they meet to hear the reply of the nation voiced in that pitiless speech of its chief magistrate. Conceive, if you can, the feelings of their hearts as they learned of their every request being turned down. What a comforting morsel it would have been for some one to have arisen, exhorting them to be of good cheer, that the brutal denial of all their just and humble rights was but a benevolent expression of the goodness of the kingdom of God, the United States.

The ultimate destiny of the little stone is that it shall smite the image, break it to pieces, become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. Or, as later stated, "it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand for ever."

Of course this is the United States. We shall be excused, however, from imagining just how or when the nations of the world shall strike their flags and unfurl the Stars and Stripes. How intensely natural and convenient it will be for them to send their representatives to Washington instead of to London, Paris, Berlin, Saint Petersburg, Stockholm, Berne, Rome, Vienna, Madrid, Lisbon, Hong Kong, Delhi, Ottawa, etc. Talk about Yankee mergers and combines! Why, this is the biggest bubble yet unburst.

But then we are told that the United States will "eventually be given to the Saints of the Most High."

That being true, the United States can not be that little stone kingdom which prophecy says "shall stand for ever." The kingdom of Daniel 2: 44 shall not pass from the dominion of one people to that of another. It "shall not be left to other people."

The Scripture is quite clear in showing what kingdom it is that will continue to stand after our Lord's coming:

And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all of them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.—2 Thessalonians 1: 7-10.

The only people here spoken of as enduring after our Savior's coming are they that "obey" "the gospel," "they that believe," "his saints." The United States is not even hinted at.

Seeing, therefore, that it is they that obey the gospel, "the saints," that shall endure our Lord's coming and knowing that it is the little stone kingdom, only, that is to stand for ever, it must be, that "the saints" and the citizens of the stone kingdom are identical. They are one and the same people. Hence the little stone kingdom to be set up in "latter days," instead of being composed of citizens of the United States, will be composed of Saints—Latter Day Saints.

In this connection we may observe that it is just a little too presumptive to assert that the United States shall even continue until Christ comes. The rise and fall of nations, like the birth and death of individuals, is one of the uncertainties of earth, and no nation has any lease of life. Many a government of as commanding prestige as the United States has gone the way of all the earth, and "that which hath been, shall be."

The wages of sin is death, and it is not within the creative genius of man, a being so subject to sin, to bring forth an organization proof against the disintegrating elements of death, and George Washington and the United States are no exception to the rule.

The declaration of Almighty God concerning this land, was expressed long, long ago, when "he had sworn in his wrath unto the brother of Jared that whoso should possess this land of promise from that time henceforth and for ever should serve him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fullness of his wrath should come upon them." And oh! how repeatedly this has been fulfilled, so terribly attested in the annihilation of the Jaredites, the destruction of the Nephites, and in the degradation of the Lamanites. These people were the chosen, covenant people of the Lord, and shall it be supposed that the Gentiles who now pollute and populate the land by millions are any exception to an undeviating divine decree? No, verily no! and since these destructions were wrought in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry:

And this cometh unto you, O ye Gentiles, that ye may know the decrees of God, that ye may repent and not continue in your iniquities until the fullness comes, that ye may not bring down the fullness of the wrath of God upon you as the inhabitants of the land have hitherto done.—Ether 1: 30, 34.

When, therefore, the United States shall eliminate from its midst the suicidal seeds of graft and greed, robbery and wretchedness, combines and secret organizations, poverty and infamy, lying and stealing, sensuality and assassination, lynching and burning; then, and not till then may we indulge in a hope of its political continuance.

Whether the nation will comply with this fixed and unalterable condition upon which hangs the fate of the Republic, we know not, unless we may forecast the future by the follies of the present. But this much we do know:

If the Gentiles do not repent after the blessing which they shall receive, after they have scattered my people; then shall ye who are a remnant of the house of Jacob, go forth among them; and ye shall be in the midst of them, who shall be many; and ye shall be among them as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who if he goeth through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces and none can deliver. Thy hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries and all thine enemies shall be cut off . . . And it shall come to pass that I will establish my people, O house of Israel. And behold this people will I establish in this land unto the fulfilling of the covenant which I made with your father Jacob and it shall be a New Jerusalem.—3 Nephi 9: 51, 52, 53, 57, 58.

The visions of heaven as they mantled our martyred Prophet were none too promising as he foresaw the future of the United States. Persecuted with his people from pillar to post, robbed and ruined by mobs that were protected and encouraged by a Government that to this day has never repented to the extent of redress or remuneration, he brokenheartedly wrote in 1840:

Wednesday, March 4, 1840. I arrived safely at Nauvoo, after a wearisome journey, through alternate snows and mud, having witnessed many vexatious movements in government officers, whose sole object should be the peace and prosperity and happiness of the whole people; but instead of this, I discovered that popular clamor and personal aggrandizement were the ruling principles of those in authority; and my heart faints within me when I see, by the visions of the Almighty, the end of this nation, if she continues to disregard the cries and petitions of her virtuous citizens, as she has done, and is now doing.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 419.

The following from the revelations of the Lord will clearly show whether the United States or the church is the kingdom. As a simple solution of the problem we suggest that wherever the term kingdom appears that the term United States be read instead.

Doctrine and Covenants 45: 1: "Hearken, O ye people of my church to whom the kingdom (United States?) has been given."

Doctrine and Covenants 34: 6: "Fear not little flock, the kingdom (United States?) is yours until I come."

Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2: "Repent, repent and prepare ye the way of the Lord and make his paths straight for the kingdom of heaven (United States?) is at hand."

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 20: "I give unto you who are the first laborers in this last kingdom, (the United States?) a commandment," etc.

Doctrine and Covenants 24: 1: "All those who receive my gospel are sons and daughters in my kingdom." And who are they that receive the gospel? Is it not the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints? Yes, and no others.

Doctrine and Covenants 42: 18, to the elders in 1831: "Lift up your hearts and rejoice for unto you the kingdom or in other words the keys of the church have been given."

Doctrine and Covenants 87: 1: "Therefore thou art blessed from henceforth that bear the keys of the kingdom given unto you; which kingdom is coming forth for the last time."

Doctrine and Covenants 65: 1: "The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth until it has filled the whole earth . . . call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come."

The above excerpts taken from the revelations given to the church at the time of its setting up point so clearly to that church as being the organization referred to as the kingdom of God, that any argument therefor is absolutely unnecessary.

The church all along has entertained this view of the kingdom of Daniel 2: 44. Sidney Rigdon, counselor to the Prophet, in an elaborate series of articles on the millennium, wrote as follows in 1834:

It is said in the second chapter of Daniel's prophecy and the 44th verse, "And in the days of these kings the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom." . . . Surely this kingdom has never been set up until now.—Evening and Morning Star, April, 1834.

Again, Oliver Cowdery, another counselor to the Prophet, and editor of the Messenger and Advocate, commenting on a splendid ministerial report received from Elders Hinkle and Green, wherein they report over one hundred baptisms in a few weeks, observed as follows:

So spreads the mighty work! That stone which was taken from the mountain without hands in the last days will roll on until the knowledge and glory of our God fill the earth; for the same power which could take it from the mountain without hands, can speed it onward, though the powers of darkness attempt to oppose it.—Messenger and Advocate, March, 1835.

The remarks of W. W. Phelps, a leading representative of the early organization, are not only ingenious, but strikingly suggestive:

An angel came down from the regions of glory,
And told that a record was hid in Cumorah,
Containing the fullness of Jesus' gospel,
And also the covenant to gather his people.

There, began the Church of Christ in 1830, yea, there, the stone cut out of the mountain without hands as foretold by Daniel, commenced rolling to fill the earth, and may it continue in a moral sense in dreadful splendor till it fills the whole and wickedness is ended. So much for the hill Cumorah.—Messenger and Advocate, November, 1835.

It has been asserted that the destruction to be inflicted upon all other nations by the little stone kingdom, is now being accomplished by a diffusion of the republican principles of the United States, and the adoption thereof by the nations of the world in lieu of kingly governments. An illusionary interpretation surely!

The destruction to be wrought by the kingdom of God will be more sweeping than that. It is said that "it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever," an expression readily understood upon referring to the language relating to the conquests of the Roman power expressed elsewhere in the same vision, where almost the same identical words are used:

And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron, forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things and as iron breaketh in pieces all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise.—Verse 40.

The Roman conquests were of a thoroughgoing character. Everything was brought under the ruling scepter of Cæsar.

Even thus shall the kingdoms of this world be subdued when "the Lord ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

Republican principles may indeed be disseminating among other nations, but are those nations brought any nearer to denying their identity and swearing allegiance to the United States? None whatever! They each guard as jealously their territorial possessions as before. Consequently whatever the influence shed abroad by the United States, it by no means fulfills, nor shall it fulfill that mighty mission assigned to the "little stone"—"it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms."

The republican influence of the United States since its establishment has not been any too pronounced, in so far as changing the governments of the kingdoms represented by the image are concerned. The head of gold, the arms and breast of silver, the belly and thighs of brass, and the legs of iron, have not been altered very perceptibly, while the kingly governments represented by the ten toes remain as before, with the possible exception of Portugal and France. France, however, has so frequently changed its government that it is difficult to tell just where she is at. It became a republic in 1793, but remained so only twelve years, when it resumed imperial rule in 1805. Feverish restlessness, ever conspicuous in the French, again seized the nation in 1848, when it again tried republican rule, but soon sickening of the situation, it reverted to kingly rule in 1853, continuing thus until 1870, when it changed its government again. Evidently republican rule did not prove the bonanza expected, hence the frequent changes.

As for Portugal, its republican rule, recently set up, is in a most precarious condition. A large portion of the populace are ready to resume allegiance to a kingly government, and are only waiting the word of command to throw off the republican yoke.

But the United States was not the only, nor yet the first republican nation from which others may have imbibed their liberal sentiments. Ancient Greece and Rome maintained republican governments for a time, as did also Venice and Genoa. In the sixteenth century the Seven Provinces of the Netherlands on their revolt from Spain, adopted a republican form of government, and Great Britain was nominally a republic for eleven years, from 1649 to 1660.

So far as the spirit of liberty is concerned, that is a very ancient force. It began its fight whenever tyranny assumed to assert her illiberal rule. It was indicated in the uprisings of the Medo-Persian, the Grecian, the Carthaginian and the Roman peoples, and manifested in the long continued struggles of the Jews to free themselves from oppressive powers.

The foundation of every European nation was laid in their efforts to become free and independent, and they have unceasingly striven to perpetuate the sacred fire of liberty burning by times on the altar of human sacrifice and blood.

The spirit of liberty is as old as the gospel and began with the preaching of Adam, the labors of Enoch, and the proclamation of Noah, endeavoring to free the children of men from the dominion of sin. Instead of commencing with the United States it originated with God, who has graciously created in the bosom of every man, irrespective of race, creed, or generation, that unseen something that aspires to be free. The United States is but one of the latest expressions of that holy aspiration, and undoubtedly the fearless framers of the Constitution, in their efforts to construct a commonwealth according to their ideals, were but emulating the honorable efforts and the heroic achievements of man from time immemorial.

Let the good work go on, for liberty has scarcely begun her holy crusade, and we shall trust that he who could inspire the heart of Cyrus the Persian, of Leonidas the Grecian, of Judas Maccabees the Jew, of the heroine Joan of Arc, of Garibaldi the Italian, of Peter the Russian, of Alfred the Englishman, of Wallace the Scotchman, of Booker T. Washington the negro, of myriad others of immortal fame, can and will continue to raise up men of every nation, of every color, to fire into a holy flame the liberty-loving instincts of human hearts, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons."

The march of liberty continues. We may see it in the latest legislation passed by the British Parliament. Measures that will prove a God's blessing to millions, whereby the laboring class need no longer look upon old age or accident as a synonym of starvation, have just been adopted. It is the compulsory insurance bill, and provides that in case of sickness, incapacity, or old age, the policy holder shall be provided for by the Government, out of a tax that shall be gathered in equal parts from the employee, the employer, and the state.

And what matters it whether such bountiful legislation proceeds from a princely parliament or a senatorial assembly. The flavor of a foreign fruit is as luscious as that of our own. It is nursed by the same showers and ripened by the same sun, and the appreciative peasant will little care whether it grew on a republican ranch or was cultured on kingly soil.

In the meanwhile the kingdom of God continues her appointed pace, invincible and irresistible. The children of the church will do well, if, in tempering their clamorous, we shall not say idolatrous, admiration of a government of earth, they proclaim rather the virtues of the government of God. And in the exuberance of our patriotism let us not forget the campfire songs of the pioneers of this latter day work, when, with no other covering than the protection of the Lord to shield them from the biting blasts of a nation's hostility, they lullabyed their offspring to rest, chanting that earliest song of the Restoration,

The name of Jehovah is worthy of praising,

And so is the Savior an excellent theme,

The elders of Israel a standard are raising,

And call on all nations to come to the same.

These elders go forth and the gospel are preaching,

And all that will hear them they freely are teaching,

And thus is the vision of Daniel fulfilling,

The stone of the Mountain will soon fill the earth.

—Evening and Morning Star, 1st number.

Fraternally,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

FEAR.

Only mother-love is able to compass a task so gigantic, so filled with surprises, so easily defeated, so momentous if well done, so disastrous if not accomplished satisfactorily, as the safeguarding of the child against fear. Only eyes keen with mother-sympathy can discern the first hint of fear as it dawns in baby eyes; only mother-wisdom, intuitive and infinite, can banish the look and wipe from the slate of the tender child-heart, the trace of its impression. To pervert an old and make a reliable axiom, she must be "wise as a savant, and sensitive as a lover."

From all sources the child mind may be assailed with that which will affright; from sources least expected may come the doubts which create fear. Although the mother forbids and positively excludes from her home life every expression indicative or suggestive of fear, yet a neighbor, threatening her own children with the bogie-man on the other side of the fence, may be overheard by these safeguarded babes, and they will absorb fear so insidiously that it may grow for months before discovered by the most vigilant mother.

An unusual experience taught one mother from what unexpected directions fear may come upon her children. In doing some shopping in a store where the elevator was being installed, her three-year-old son wandered a few steps away toward the dangerous pit. A near-by salesgirl, seeing the danger, cried, "Come away from there or a black man will get you." The mother already approaching, hesitated long enough to rebuke her quietly but firmly, saying, "Never tell a baby a lie, or anything which will frighten."

Going to the child she said, "Theo must not go near the deep hole, for if you should fall in, you would be injured. Come and stand by mother."

While being led away he voiced his reason for the venturing tour. "What's the hole for, mamma?"

"To put an elevator in, so we can go up and down in the car when it is all done."

"Is there a black man in the hole, mamma?" he queried, remembering the girl's warning.

"I didn't see any," answered the mother assuringly.

"Then why did the lady say there was?" he persisted.

"Perhaps the man whom they have hired to run the elevator is a colored man," suggested she with divine inspiration, evading the insinuation that anyone had lied to him, yet correcting the wrong impression which had been made. They had seen colored men manipulating elevators, so the explanation left a perfectly clear and plausible idea in his mind, and there was no loss of confidence in what others might say to him.

For on the whole, it is better that children should keep faith with the world, even though they must, of course, be taught not to go away with a stranger, or obey any command of an unknown person without first consulting his parent.

"Your mother will put you in the black hole," exclaimed a thoughtless, half-grown girl to my delicate little daughter one day. Girlie came running to me, the agony of fear growing in her wide eyes. "Will you put me in the black hole, mamma?" she cried.

I smiled and drew her to my heart, kissing her reassuringly. It erased the horror, yet my answer did not eradicate the thought conveyed in the threat. "Why, yes, darling, if you wish me to," I said.

She hesitated—consulted my still smiling eyes—and reaching forward said, "Do it," which confirmed her perfect confidence.

Taking her in my strong hands, I tossed her lightly over my head where there was a trapdoor which led to the unfinished attic above. The door and frame, both painted dark brown, made—in its surrounding of white ceiling, literally a "black hole." Down she came, laughing gleefully, crying, "Do it more," her sense of fear toward the "black hole" for ever gone, no matter who threatened it.

But I tremble as I think of the development of that fear-racking suggestion, had it not been instantly eradicated. A darkened room, a cellar-way, a deep clothes-press, any one of so many places one may have to enter in the dark, would some time in life suggest anew the fear which the baby-mind learned from the awe-filled words "black hole."

It is an excellent practice to accustom children to the words which express the tragedies of childhood, simply in order to safeguard the baby-mind from the horror which they might hold if uttered by some thoughtless person with the intention of frightening. For instance, should anyone say, "I'll cut your head off," to one of the children of a certain family, it would only mean to their mother-trained minds, that their hair was to be trimmed, because she has always said, "Well, darling, we'll have to get that head cut-off," when about to trim their hair. The words hold no alarm—they mean "head of hair." Likewise she says, "I'll cut off your fingers," or "toes," with the sweetest smile when referring to the "nails," and the gruesome expression holds no terror—only the tender care of mother for their helpless bodies. Should they be used injudiciously, their sting is gone.

This practice she extended beyond the item of fear, as well. Knowing that in due time "Willie" would be perverted into "Billie" and "Bill," she began calling him Billie-Bill-ee as an especial pet-name, gradually cutting it down to Billie more commonly before he began going to school. He had scarce been enrolled a week before he told her the scholars called him Billie.

"You don't mind, do you, dear?" she asked.

"No," he hesitated, "only it's your name."

"Well, maybe they mean to be nice to you because you are away from me when they say that, so I'll not be jealous," she told him, and the sting of being dubbed Bill, which would undoubtedly have cut him to the quick had he been unused to the nickname, was removed by her forethought. And—her own heart had bitterly disapproved of the appellation when she had used it.

It is always necessary for a mother to stand her ground firmly when the thought of fear is brought into the presence of her children by others, especially by grown-ups. A neighbor rushes in at the approach of a thunder tempest, looking and acting the fears which possess those who dread these phenomena. Instantly mother-love must shield susceptible childhood. She must not allow anyone to express fears before her children by look or word. Self-control and trust in God must be exercised to the extent of safeguarding a child against a lifelong experience of fear at an electrical storm. Even children whose parents dread these storms may and should grow up without repeating, or even suspecting, the parents' experiences, if care is exercised never to express fear in word or deed.

Self-control is absolutely essential,—in fact it is one of the chiefest virtues of the parent, under any circumstances.

The child knows no fear except what it learns from others. A tiny toddler will follow its mother's voice from room to room in utter darkness if it has never been taught to be afraid of the dark. As mother leads into the dark, the perfect confidence of baby will follow. Let her warn, "Go slowly, darling, lest you bump your head on a chair or table which you can not see." This teaches that there are objects—entirely harmless ones if seen and remembered—in the dark, and that a little extra caution in avoiding these harmless things will insure as much safety in the dark as in the light.

But should she once say, "Don't go in there, dear, for it is dark," there is given a feeling that darkness is some kind of a reason for keeping out of a room or place, ever afterward there is a growing sense of fear connected with the absence of light. Sometimes the growth is abnormal and rapid, and the wronged child almost instantly exhibits the most intense horror and fright at going into a dark place. Never again can there be a perfect freedom from the agony. He may be known by days for his bravery, but his greatest courage will be exercised in living through the tortures of the nights.

Fear in one form usually generates fears of many other things. One who is afraid in the dark, is more easily frightened by thunder and lightning; a person who dreads spiders and worms is more apt to be timid about animals; one whose childhood was haunted by "bogey-men," junk-peddlers, and tramps is usually nervous at sight of any ill-kempt man, and so on—the sources of fear are never so wide as their developed course—they never end where they begin.

But the vigilant mother may eliminate the main causes from her home; may stand guard defiantly against those which come from the outside; may remove the first seeds which accidentally find their way into the child-mind, and, each day, month, and year, she may teach the habit of looking things squarely and critically in the face, with the senses alert, judgment keen, and common sense active. This, more than anything else will insure the child against fear.

One fear which never ought to deserve mention, yet sometimes, alas, does, is the one which should never enter a child's life—any form of fear of its mother. Once I heard a mother say, "I would spank a child to death if it persisted in setting its will against mine. I would not give in until I had conquered. I want my children to be afraid to disobey me." I could scarcely believe that she meant this literally, and yet I knew that, in effect, it was true, for her children evinced every mark of fear of her. There was nothing that could be said then to save those half-grown children the experience of their life, but, mayhap, it might dawn on their minds to teach their own babes to obey because the request of the parent was right, just, and good. Often, in observing the methods of mothers, it will be found that children who cringe at the approach of mother and tremble at her hasty word lest a cuff follow, are the more inclined to tell untruths to escape the penalty of their misdemeanors and accidental mishaps, and to undervalue the love and confidence which should exist boundless and perfect between mother and child.

There are forms of legitimate fear which must be instilled into children, but they are rarely called fear. The fear of doing wrong is better called love of right; the fear of strange animals and of the dangers of street crossing is caution; the fear of endangering the health, body, or life, is properly care, precaution, hygiene. These all involve a small degree of the horror, repulsion, and mental alarm which characterize the unnecessary fears, but these are for the welfare of the mental, moral, or physical being, whereas they are for his undoing mentally—aye—sometimes also morally and physically.

So use every precaution to keep evil and legitimate fears from the thoughts and experiences of children, sparing life-long tortures which are wholly unnecessary and assuring a courageous generation of men and women, whom spooks, bogies, and omens will not affright, nor will the daily vicissitudes of living make afraid.—Emma S. Broomley, in American Motherhood.

There are moods in which we court suffering, in the hope that there, at least, we shall find reality, strange peaks and edges of truth. But it turns out to be scene painting and counterfeit. The only thing grief has taught me is to know how shallow it is.—Emerson.

Letter Department

ALPENA, MICHIGAN, March 2, 1912.

Dear Herald: I will write a few lines to let you know that the Alpena Saints are still living and striving to do their heavenly Father's will, and they are being blessed in their efforts.

We have had Brother and Sister Goodman, of Boyne City, with us and we have been much strengthened by their words of encouragement and feel stronger for the work that lies before us. We have had good interest in this part of the field, and there are many who are interested in God's work. We hope and pray that there will be many more who will become interested.

We have no church building but have a building hired by the year. We have Sunday school and prayer meeting in the morning; preaching in the evening; prayer meeting again on Wednesday night, and Religio on Friday night. We have an elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, but all are young in the work. Still we are fighting on in our weak way, hoping we are growing stronger.

We expect to start street meeting here just as soon as warm weather comes, for there are a great many souls going the wrong way, and we hope to get some interested in this God's plan. Remember us, dear Saints, and pray for us that we may be successful in God's work in this place.

Your brother and coworker,
ERNEST M. ORTON.

GORTON, MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, February 21, 1912.

Saints' Herald: I enjoy the reading of the HERALD letters. I have received great benefit from the reading of the experiences of the Saints in different parts of the world. I have no desire to be a drone, or to rest on the varied experiences of my brethren and sisters. I realize more than ever each day that I must work out my own salvation.

It is three years past last New Year's day, since I came to Manchester, England. Since then I have been a member of the Northeast Manchester Branch, and I am happy to say that the branch is a living branch; although there is room of course for improvement. During the last year I have labored for the most part outside the branch, visiting hospitals, infirmaries, and the sick and afflicted in their homes. I have received much blessing in so doing. Although the gospel has been preached here for many years, there are people living in the neighborhood who do not know that there is a church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in this part of God's vineyard.

When I first brought the gospel to some of those homes it was quite natural for them to think that we were Mormons. I have been enabled, by the grace of God, to convince many of them that we were not Mormons, according to their conception; but that we were followers of the lowly Nazarene.

To the first home that I carried the gospel in this way, I am pleased to say that the husband of that home has embraced this wonderful truth, and proves with me day by day that our religion is real. He is now a priest, and secretary of the branch, of which I am a member. This itself shows me the necessity of being in earnest, and having the work at heart. In other homes that I have carried the gospel to, some of the members have passed away; and almost their last words were, if the Lord would spare me I would be a member of your church. Surely our heavenly Father, in his wonderful plan of salvation, has made provision for such poor souls as these, who heard and believed but had not the opportunity of obeying the law. I look forward with joy to the time the baptism for the dead shall be established; when our heavenly Father may call me or some one else to obey those principles for them. There are many whom I could mention that have passed on before, whom I should like to see in the first resurrection, whom I believe will give me a hearty welcome when I reach that place where my Lord and Savior has gone to prepare for those who love him and keep his commandments.

There is one family that have been deprived of their breadwinner whom I visited in the hospital for months. He was turned out incurable with that deadly disease known as cancer. I visited him in his home; he belonged to what is known as the High Church of England. The minister of that church visited him also, in his home, but never asked him if he had made any preparations prior to going into the great beyond. He talked about his own health and the weather, theaters, and picture palaces, but not a word about Christ or his kingdom. It seems to me that such men as these have their own bread buttered on both sides, and they care not for sorrows and wants of those poor, benighted souls to whom they make profession to minister.

This home to which I refer has a widow and seven children mourning the loss of the breadwinner. No assistance has been given from that church up to date, but I am proud to say that the Saints have shown by practical sympathy that they can feel for the sorrows of those of their brethren who are in need of the necessities of this life. It is sorrowful to see on a Sunday, the seven little mites mourning their father's absence, wending their way to the wooden erection where the Latter Day Saints worship. I only wish that some of our sisters who read the HERALD could but see the little procession as I see it Sabbath after Sabbath. I would solicit an interest in your prayers and sympathy on their behalf, that the Lord may guide and direct them in the paths of wisdom and righteousness; as I believe there are some of them on the point of obeying the gospel law.

I have been attending a mission in connection with the Church of England, and it is surprising to note the apology for the gospel that they present to the people. To one that had received the light he would not wonder at the Lord saying to the early prophet: "Join yourself to none of them, for in vain do they worship me." They have had processions through the streets wearing white robes and carrying crosses, which is sufficient to convince any right thinking person that she is a daughter of the great harlot spoken of in Revelation. They are going back to paganism fast; so fast that the pope of Rome has issued a prophecy that "in less than twenty years we will have a Roman empire." This was announced in every Roman Catholic church only last Sunday. And the priests with their collaborators are determined to do their best to insure that this statement shall, in the process of time, be fulfilled.

I do pray that the Saints of God throughout the length and breadth of the world may be aroused to a greater sense of their responsibilities; that we may prove to the world that we worship not man, but a true and living God.

If the prophet who was martyred had made no sacrifice there would have been no church established. It is possible that the fullness of the gospel would have still been lying dormant in Cumorah Hill. Well may we sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet to guide us in these latter days." I only wish that every member of the church could truthfully say: "We feel it a pleasure to serve thee; and love to obey thy commands." If there was ever a time that I thank God for truth and light it is now. I pray that the Lord will hasten the time when righteousness will cover the earth as the waters cover the deep.

If any wish to correspond with me at any time, note the above address.

ELDER ROBERT MURRY.

180 QUEENS ROAD, GORTON.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 8, 1912.

Editors Herald: Four months ago to-day I fell and broke my right arm at the wrist and put the other bone out of place. This caused me a great deal of pain. Brother Henry Stebbins came to see me and I was administered to and have not missed a night's sleep since, although I have been in pain in my body since. I do not know of anyone that tries to do more for the afflicted than Brother Stebbins, and may the Lord reward him.

I have been here for five years and like it well, but my husband thinks he will have to go where he can get more and cheaper land.

If Brother William Sparling or others of the dear Saints come this way to conference I want them to stop and see us.

My testimony is that I know this work is true and God will carry it on. My love to all.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. MARTHA E. HOWERY.

HOUGHTON LAKE, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: I come begging a corner of your precious paper in which to express my thanks to the dear Saints for their kindness to me in the past year. As I was an invalid at the time, for whom Mrs. A. B. Hawley asked reading, I wish to say that I received reading matter from many of the Saints and one had Zion's Hope sent me for a year, and another paid for a magazine for a year.

I can not thank the Saints as I should for their kind letters and beautiful post cards; the most of them came to me when I was a prisoner, bound with the chains forged by pain. I am much better, but not well yet; and, dear Saints, while I thank you, I ask you to remember me in your prayers that I may be healed in God's own time and way. I have never heard a Saint preach, and wish one of the elders would come this way and call on us, as I would like to learn more than I now know of God's way.

I can only bear this testimony, that I know that my mother was raised, as it were, from death to life, and is in good health now; but like myself has not seen an elder since. I would like more reading.

FLORENCE MARIE LEIRY.

IPSWICH, QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA, January 29, 1912.

Dear Herald: As you have been a constant visitor to our house for the last twelve months, I wish to say that the contents of your pages have indeed been a source of great blessing and strength to me, while much of the information that I have received from you has proved invaluable. I am pleased to say that all through the changing scenes of the year my heavenly Father's arm of love and mercy has been extended to me. He has given me blessings for which I feel I shall never be able to thank him sufficiently. I rejoice daily in his glorious gospel, and since it has become the fountain of my existence I could not live without it. My desire is to press on in the straight and narrow path, and cleanse and purify my life day by day, that perchance I may be the humble instrument in his hand of leading some precious souls into the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

Trusting you will bring much strength and peace this present year and greater blessings than last year, and wishing you a very happy and prosperous New Year.

F. EDGORTH, Deacon.

ASHLAND, WISCONSIN, March 1, 1912.

Editor Saints' Herald: Being a recent subscriber, I have read very little of your literature, but desire to show my appreciation of what I have read and tell you what has been happening to us up here in the North.

Elder Emsley Curtis came to our city in November, 1911.

It was announced in the daily papers that he would hold gospel meetings at the Longshoremen's Hall. The announcement said that he represented the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; that he was a good Bible student, and that his church had no affiliation with the Utah Mormons, whatever.

The article attracted some attention; but most people read the word, "Reorganized," and judged from that that it was the same Mormon doctrine fixed up to be more readily swallowed by the people; for the Utah Mormons, or the Latter Day Saints, had missionaries here about two years ago and were driven out of town. You see, our people did not like the prescription with "polygamy" left out, when the Mormons declared that they believed the Bible taught it; only, they believed it best to leave it out in order to comply with the laws of the land. The Seventh Day Adventists had just finished a series of meetings lasting a number of weeks, trying to interest the people in their doctrine. Their meetings were interesting to those who attended; for they are really alive and working, which is more than can be said of many of the other churches. They do make out they are good Bible students to those who have never heard the truth and are hungry for it.

The other churches did not pay much attention till we got the Adventists stirred up for a debate. The first night was on the subject of "Authority to ordain ministers for Christ's church." The next night was on the "Sabbath question," and the last on "The state of the dead." The people came out; but the first night was a shock to many, for it not only hit the opponents, but stirred up some of the other churches. However, the cold weather and the holiday season coming on kept down the feeling to such an extent that no other discussion followed.

Elder Curtis succeeded in getting the Swedish Baptist church font to use for baptism, where he baptized five converts. Before he left there were four others ready and desirous of baptism; but the feeling had become so strong against him that he could not again secure the church font. The remaining converts must wait now until his return in the spring.

He organized a little Sunday school, which will meet regularly in prayer and Sunday school session until the winter is over, when we look forward with fond anticipation to wonderful work.

I, for one, was blinded by the Adventist's Sabbath doctrine; but am glad that my eyes are now open so I can see that the old Jewish Sabbath is not binding since Christ's resurrection. My husband and I expect to meet the Saints at General Conference to rejoice in the truth, which is new to us. Brother Colbert, of Chetek, informs us that we have been chosen delegates from the Reed Branch.

God is surely pouring out his Spirit in the last days, and those who are hungering and thirsting after truth and righteousness have indeed cause to rejoice. Thanking God for light and truth,

MABEL M. DENNIS.

MOORHEAD, IOWA.

Editors Herald: I have recently carefully read a set of four tracts and a religious newspaper called the Brooklyn Tabernacle, or People's Pulpit. The first article of the paper is called "Creed smashings," necessary for religious federation. They commence with Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist, and they quote Isaiah 8:12. Then they give the changes of creeds necessary for Baptists, Adventists, and Disciples in order to bring about federation, and again they quote Isaiah 8:12, and it finally states what the Catholic, Episcopalian, and Lutheran creeds must surrender to enter the church federation proposed.

I believe Mr. Russell is a sincere, honest man, and his works show him to be charitably minded and his offer to loan such books as one may be unable to buy show him to be an earnest Christian, even though he is not entirely correct in his teachings and claims no divine inspiration. He has come nearer finding the true mission of Christ and the final destiny of man than any other writer outside of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Tract number one has in the margin this question, "What do you think of this?" The title of the article was, "Are you of the hopeful or of the hopeless?" The teaching is eternal judgment, and I agree with him on this until he quotes Ecclesiastes 9: 12 giving a favorite Adventist passage: "For the dead know not anything," to prove his soul-sleeping theory. I wonder what he will do with the following scripture in proof of consciousness after death: Moses and Elias appear to Jesus after death, (Matthew 19: 1-4); John hears the martyrs speak, (Revelation 6: 9-11); A dead prophet appears to John, (Revelation 22: 8, 9); Rich man and Lazarus both conscious, (Luke 19: 19-31); Absent from the body, present with the Lord, (2 Corinthians 5: 1-9); Desires to depart and be with Christ, (Philippians 1: 21-24); Be with me where I am, (John 17: 24); To-day thou shalt be with me in paradise, (Luke 23: 42, 43); Gospel preached to the dead, (1 Peter 4: 5, 6); Were spirits who lived in Noah's day, (1 Peter 3: 18, 20).

Why should Jesus go and preach to these spirits if they are unconscious? and we have many more equally positive passages to prove consciousness after death.

Tract number two, Seven Women Desire One Husband, Isaiah 29: 11. I wonder why he did not quote the whole chapter. It is so full of prophecy which must be or has been fulfilled in these latter days that it seems funny how close some moths can come to the flame without getting warmed up. In this tract he uses these seven women to represent the world's great Babylon, and he is quite logical too, only he fails to show where the church is that we must come into when we come out of Babylon. He seems to want to impress upon the minds of the people that God has no church at present, that the church is still in the wilderness, but if he will go back to 1830 and thereabout, he will find that the 29th of Isaiah was fulfilled. But then, while Mr. Russell loves to dwell on the fulfillment of prophecy, maybe he considered this 29th chapter a spurious chapter. Ezekiel 37: 15-21, the stick of Judah, and Ezekiel 17, the stick of Joseph. Perhaps since he does not understand these and they do not accord with his teaching, he will tell us these are spurious too, but I hope not, for they mean much to the church and Saints of God.

Revelation 14: 6: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people." Mr. Russell is right in some things; yes, in a great many things; and if I were not a deep Bible student I might easily be persuaded that he was entirely right. But I have studied the Scriptures too thoroughly not to know of what the true church consists, and that the time is long since past for the church to be set up in the last days, and that the church was called out of the wilderness and reestablished among men more than eighty years ago. I wish Mr. Russell were as willing to examine our claims as we are to examine his.

Tract number three, The Millennial Morning Is Dawning, but a night of awful trouble will intervene, Isaiah 21: 11, 12. Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh, but a night also.

Tract number four, The Ransom Price Paid for Sinners, Guarantees a Millennial Age of Restitution. In both of these he brings in a whole lot of truth, but also a great deal of error according to my way of thinking; but when we take into consideration that Mr. Russell looks on so much of the Bible as spurious, and that the gifts and blessings promised the believers are among the parts he pronounces spurious, it is easy to understand how he, while giving so much truth, has made so many mistakes.

In the paper entitled "Creed smashings," he enumerates what each church would have to give up in order to become a part of the great church confederation. Now all churches have a portion of the doctrine of Christ in their creeds. Some will have to give up baptism by immersion for remission of sins; others will have to give up their faith theory; others will have to give up the doctrine of repentance; others that of laying on of hands for ordination; while others will have to give up the idea of a perpetual priesthood: so that if we Latter Day Saints should want to come in, I suppose we would have to give up all the blessed gospel. I find it is just such portions of the gospel that each church holds sacred that they are required to give up, and as we hold all the gospel and each principle essential to salvation, we would have to give up more than all the rest put together. I don't believe any one of us is willing to give up our God-given religion, so I guess we had better just plod along in the good "Old Jerusalem Gospel" way until our Lord and Savior comes and does away with all of this great Babylon confusion.

Yours for the whole gospel,

SADIE BURCH.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, March 7, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: I wish to express my appreciation of the good that has come through the pages of your valuable paper; may the loving Father above continue to bestow his blessings upon it.

The gospel work is moving along slowly in this district, and although our workers are few, yet they are not discouraged, and with their faith centered in their leader, Jesus Christ, they are determined to continue to battle for the right, feeling confident as to results.

We appreciate the valuable support which the workers have received, in having Brethren Elbert A. Smith, H. J. Davison, and E. Keeler added to the list. The Sunday school workers will feel happy to know that Brother H. J. Davison has consented to accept the position as field worker for the Sunday school of this district; he is a valuable man in this field of service and we are fortunate in securing his service.

Elder E. Keeler has been confining his efforts to other parts of the district; the Saints at this place will be glad to have him come this way, that he may help to revive them to greater spiritual power and activity, that through him the loving Savior may bestow upon them a Father's blessing.

Elder Elbert A. Smith has been confining his efforts to this part of the district in an endeavor to revive the work in this place and vicinity. Since February 11 he has been conducting "Special Sunday night services," at the church in this city. In order to advertize these meetings as far as possible, announcement was made in the three city papers, and in addition to this, circulars were distributed all over the city. The subjects as announced were as follows: "Jesus and the classes"; the attitude of the church toward capital and labor, the message of Jesus to the poor and the rich, God's cure for the unequal distribution of wealth, the ministry of material things; "The perfect law of liberty"; "The home," "Views of the Latter Day Saints' Church on marriage and the home"; "A problem in spiritual mathematics"; God states the terms of the problem; we must work it out; he gives the reward; "Eternal judgment"; when is the judgment day to come? What will be the reward and punishment? Will men be judged according to works or according to profession? "What must I do to be saved?" Is belief in Jesus alone sufficient? Must I be baptized? Are there works for me to perform? The last sermon of the series will be given March 24, on "The restoration of the gospel"; An account of the angel's message to the earth in these last days.

We are fortunate in having Brother Smith with us and I am sure his work among us will result in much good to the Saints and the encouragement of the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. In connection with his work in this place he has, in company with myself, been conducting Sunday afternoon services at Redlands, a city ten miles east of this place. Last Sunday, at the close of Brother Smith's sermon, opportunity for questions was given, and one lady, a prominent worker of the Methodist Church, said, "You teach the gospel just like the other churches, only they do not teach the laying on of hands as you do; and I wish they so taught; for then there would not be so many sick among us." Brother Smith then explained more fully our position on that subject. Another lady, who is not a member of any church, at the close of the service, expressed herself as being well pleased with the sermon, and said it appealed to her as the truth. We expect to follow up this work, and with the cooperation of Brother N. W. Best, of that place, we hope to reach many of the honest in heart in that city.

On the evening of March 4, in company with Brethren Smith and Will Boren, we attended a lecture, delivered by Professor Edward Adams Cantrell, representing the Socialist movement in this city. His subject was, "How we are gouged." Mr. Cantrell is one of the ablest speakers in this movement, a man of considerable ability. I was there to study the man and his message, to learn, if possible, wherein these men differ from those whom Jesus has chosen to go forth to the world to proclaim the only solution to this great question that is just now attracting world-wide attention.

I listened with deep interest as the speaker called to our attention the awful conditions that exist in the world, and as he referred to the early history of man he stated that man was a religious being, and in his innocence he had been imposed upon by the self-appointed priests, who instituted the law of tithing, and in this they demanded the very best, in order that they might live in luxury and plenty; but said he, "The people are getting wise; not all, but some are." He referred to the statements of Jesus where he rebuked the priesthood for their lack of interest in the poor. The impression was left, that the law of tithing was wrong and that all who claimed to be priests of God were impostors, and all who were wise would have no faith in such men, no matter what their claim or who they are, and the only path that would lead unfortunate humanity out of the wilderness to the promised land was the message as outlined by the Socialist Party. I felt sad to think that these men who boast of their fairness and their desire to stand for the truth, should be so unfair as to denounce the priesthood of God and to class them with all the impostors who have stood up in the name of religion, and to denounce God's law because wicked men have transgressed, and have imposed upon the innocent believers in Christ. I feel to sympathize with these men, who seem so anxious to bring better conditions, and are doing all in their power to enlist the cooperation of all others in their movement. We certainly deplore the sad condition of affairs as we find them in the world, and we long to see the time when want and suffering will be no more, but we are sure that just so long as the people of this world reject the message of Jesus our Savior and turn a deaf ear to his pleadings, just so long will they have to suffer, for this is the natural consequence.

Jesus has given to the world the only plan that will ever solve the problem, and the sooner we awaken to this fact the better it will be for us. In the days of Noah there was a need of better conditions, and God, desirous to help the people, sent a prophet to tell them of his plan to help them out. They rejected this message, and brought upon themselves their own destruction; the means of escape was prepared, but this too was ignored.

Have you not read what Jesus said about the time in which you and I live? He said, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of God." In this case the church represents the ark of safety, the ship of Zion; let us, with faith in God, stay with the ship.

Our message to the world is an affirmative one, and we will do more good if we so present it and let our hearers make the comparison. We must gain their confidence before we can help them. Let us deal kindly with those who differ from us. The man who is right can always afford to be patient and kind, yet firm in his stand for the truth.

May our kind Father in heaven continue to inspire his servants, and may the holy angels be sent to stand by them while defending the truth is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

Two Letters on Socialism.

It seems that the giants who rise to do battle against Socialism have not yet learned that a platform was long since evolved; but such is the case, and we feel to demand our rights to be measured by that platform. Strange indeed that well-informed men utterly ignore those most emphatic demands of that platform and condemn us by unqualified statements of Tom, Dick, and Harry. These are tactics used by the opponents of our church, in whose opinion we stand condemned before God and man.

Why should our church not be held responsible for the unqualified statements of some of its representatives who are radical Socialists? The writer knows of no other argument that speaks half so loud in favor of Socialism as the program of our platform which is appended hereto. As an individual I might wish to amend or modify some parts of our platform, but it is so far in advance of what is offered by the old parties that I dare not oppose it by favoring them, for God commands us to seek for good men for officers. Both old parties favor the measures that are fast making serfs of the masses and billionaires of a few. "Good men" will not do this. As Socialists we demand measures that will go far toward bringing equality; the thing we are commanded to work for; hence Socialism is godlike, or good. Good men; advocate good laws; bad men favor oppressive laws. Anarchy is "a lawless condition of society." Socialist publications make themselves burdensome by pointing out the anarchy of the old parties, therefore Socialism is opposed to anarchy.

Following are the demands of the Socialist Party platform, adopted in the National Convention assembled at Chicago, May 10, 1908:

1. The immediate government relief of the unemployed workers by building schools, by reforesting of cut over waste lands, by reclamation of arid tracts, and the building of canals, and by extending all other useful public works. All persons employed on such work shall be employed directly by the Government under an eight-hour work-day and at the prevailing union wages. The Government shall also loan money to States and municipalities without interest for the purpose of carrying on public works. It shall contribute to the funds of labor organizations for the purpose of assisting their unemployed members, and shall take such other measures within its power as will lessen the widespread misery of the workers caused by the misrule of the capitalist class.

2. The collective ownership of railroads, telegraphs, telephones, steamship lines, and all other means of social transportation and communication.

There can be no absolute private title to land. All private titles, whether called fee simple or otherwise, are (must be) subordinate to the public title. The Socialist Party strives to prevent land from being used for purposes of exploitation and speculation. It demands the collective possession, control, or management of land to whatever extent may be necessary to attain that end. It is not opposed to the occupation and possession of land by those using it in a useful and bonafide manner without exploitation.

3. The collective ownership of all industries which are organized on a national scale and in which competition has virtually ceased to exist.

4. The extension of the public domain to include mines, quarries, oil wells, forests, and water power.

5. The scientific restoration of timber lands and the reclamation of swamp lands. The land so reforested or reclaimed to be permanently retained as a part of the public domain.

6. The absolute freedom of press, speech, and assemblage.

7. The improvement of the industrial condition of the workers.

(a) By shortening the workday in keeping with the increased productiveness of machinery.

(b) By securing to every worker a rest period of not less than a day and a half in each week.

(c) By securing a more effective inspection of workshops and factories.

(d) By forbidding the employment of children under sixteen years of age.

(e) By forbidding the inter-state transportation of the products of child labor, of convict labor, and of all uninspected factories.

(f) By abolishing official charity and substituting in its place compulsory insurance against unemployment, illness, accident, invalidism, old age, and death.

8. The extension of inheritance taxes, graduated in proportion to the amount of the bequests and to the nearness of kin.

9. A graduated income tax.

10. Unrestricted and equal suffrage for men and women, and we pledge ourselves to engage in an active campaign in that direction.

11. The initiative and referendum, proportional representation, and the right of recall.

12. The abolition of the Senate.

13. The abolition of the power usurped by the supreme court of the United States to pass upon the constitutionality of legislation enacted by Congress. National laws to be repealed or abrogated only by act of Congress or by a referendum of the whole people.

14. That the Constitution be made amendable by majority vote.

15. The enactment of further measures for general education and for conservation of health. The bureau of education to made a department. The creation of a department of public health.

16. The separation of the present bureau of labor from the department of commerce and labor, and the establishment of a department of labor.

17. That all judges be elected by the people for short terms, and that the power to issue injunctions shall be curbed by immediate legislation.

18. The free administration of justice.

Such measures of relief as we may be able to force from capitalism are but a preparation of the workers to seize the whole powers of government, in order that they may thereby lay hold of the whole system of industry and thus come to their rightful inheritance.

D. R. BALDWIN.

Dear Editors: May I write about my experience with Socialism? I was reared among Socialists. My parents were Socialists and atheists. Atheism and Socialism go hand in hand. One need only read about their leaders and prominent men to know that they are atheists. In fact I never knew one Socialist who was not also an atheist until I accepted this gospel. They did not accept the gospel because of their Socialism, but accepted Socialism because of the similarity between Socialism and the plan laid down by the Lord—the perfect law of liberty. I lived in a home where God and Christ were ridiculed; where Socialism and science were worshiped, and it is true when I say Socialism was worshiped, for Socialism is not satisfied to enter politics alone, but must enter religion as well. I will not dwell long on my childhood home; suffice it to say that when I began to reason for myself and found a delight in going to church that I saw the fallacy of Socialism and atheism. How superior was the feeling of religion to that which posed as such. The peace that came with a clearer understanding was very sweet to me after the tumult of a Socialistic home.

Some of you will say, "Oh, that was your experience; all Socialists are not like that."

You who have the gospel can not judge. There are very few Christian Socialists. I have heard, in fact the remark was made to me by a Socialist, and I also read it in Socialistic literature, that "we Socialists do not want the people to believe in God. If they believe in a world to come they will not put forth the effort here. We want them to believe this is the only world."

How does this harmonize with Paul's teaching, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God"? Christ also said, "Think not of the things of this world." Socialists say, "Think only of this world." No man can serve two masters; the one he will love and the other hate. The only real unhappy time in my married life was the year and a half after my husband became converted to Socialism. From a contented, God-fearing man he became dissatisfied with everything, even to life itself, and Socialism had all but taken away what faith he had in God, when through God's mercy he heard this gospel and immediately saw the fallacy of Socialism compared with God's perfect law. Some years later in talking with a Socialist he mentioned the contentment and peace he had found in the gospel, but that he still thought the Socialistic theories were excellent if they could be carried out, but that every prophecy shattered any likelihood of it ever being accomplished. The Socialist replied, "You were never a scientific Socialist or you would have never believed in such rubbish." Scientific Socialists do not believe in God.

There is no use in me taking up more time, but is there good reason why Saints should embrace or even vote for a movement that causes discontentment, and where each member does his best to scatter the faith of his would-be convert? He that is not with us is against us. Can a movement that rejects God accomplish what the prophets have said would be entirely opposite? Socialism would bring a paradise on earth, but Christ said conditions would wax worse and worse. Latter day revelation says the same. Whom are we to believe? Socialism may be ideal in theory, but in practice is it reasonable to suppose that men and women who reject God are going to accomplish what the Lord's people are finding very difficult to bring about? It is true the Socialists have. "Christian Socialists," can you read Wiltshire's Magazine, the Appeal to Reason, and the Chicago Daily Socialist and see the connection between "Christian" and "Socialist"? In my mail box one morning I found across the top of the Chicago Socialist the following: "Gee; ain't it hell to be poor?"

Shall we as Saints allow such literature to enter our homes under the guise that the theory is good and that we are "Christian Socialists"?

"We thank Thee for the plan thou hast given, that will render us pure as a child." So, Saints, let us press onward in God's appointed way and let the world take care of itself. Let us do all the good we can, and by our vote bring about the best conditions possible until he comes whose right it is to reign.

ANNAH F. AYERS.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, February 16, 1912.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Mary E. Woodruff, Vera, Oklahoma: "I love to read the church papers and the church books. I love this latter day gospel and I know it is true. I was baptized March 21, 1909, by Brother Lee Quick, and confirmed by Brethren William W. Shoemaker and Quick. I am glad I obeyed the gospel. Pray for me, that I may be faithful to the end."

Sister A. E. Culbertson, Springview, Nebraska: "I ask an interest in your prayers in behalf of my husband, who is sick, and also my poor, crippled son, who by having to work away from home was induced to do a little sin which proved him guilty of crime and he was taken by the authorities and sent to the industrial school at Kearney, to be educated. He is being taken care of very well and I believe it is a good place for him. They said if I would pay for what he took and sold they would set him free, but they said if we let him go clear it would grow on him, and it would be the making of him to send him to the reform school. So I consented. Did I do right? It is grievous to me to have them blame me for not raising my children aright. I have done all I could to raise and influence my children to do right. I have been sick and afflicted very much and have been exceedingly patient. I ask my brothers and sisters to be careful lest Satan tempt them, for now is the trying time, when we all should be up and doing. I feel that my son isn't lost, but it is for him to have these experiences to make him strong."

Sister Martha Thorp, Trochee, Alberta: "I have had wonderful experiences as a servant of the Lord, although my life has not been free from mistakes, but I can boldly say I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that if I prove faithful I shall yet see his face."

Sister Ida E. Jubb, Merrill, Michigan: "I have not given up the cause or fallen by the wayside. I could not deny the faith, for God has blessed me many times. What a blessed Comforter he is in time of trouble. I was glad I had heard the gospel when I was called to part with my companion on the 24th of February. I hated to see him suffer and not be able to help him. Pray for me that I fail not, for my trials seem double now, with two boys to bring up. I hear little preaching, as I live fifteen miles from a branch."

Brother Malcom Broker, Brewton, Alabama: "I have been a member of the Reorganized Church since 1905. My father and mother are members of this church and taught all of us children from infancy that this was the true church of God. One of my sisters and myself are the only Saints here, and I ask prayers that we may endure to the end."

Sister Rebecca Hollery, Brewton, Alabama: "I have been a member of the church six years, but it took me a long time after I became a member to be fully converted. After being tossed on the waves of doubt for a long time I feel sure that this is the church Jesus died for. If I had lived faithfully I would have known it much sooner. I am eighteen years old; I have three brothers and seven sisters; all belonging to the church except three little ones. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may grow strong in the faith, and that my husband will obey the true work. He is a Baptist. I have a cross to bear on account of not paying tithing. I realize that as soon as a man's righteousness exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees the Devil wakes up and gets busy; he has been busy against me and my fellow men, and I pray that the Lord will help me to overcome."

Brother and Sister C. Moffit, Melby, North Dakota: "It has been only a little over a year since we began to read your columns, and whenever things commence to look dark and dreary and we feel cold and indifferent we get real relief from reading the SAINTS' HERALD; it puts new life and vigor in our minds, and we feel the Lord's Spirit come back to us. We have not as much of the gospel light as we desire, but we are glad we accepted the gospel. It has brought happiness to our home and we feel it is the true gospel of Jesus Christ. We are looking for an elder next month."

Sister Zelta Dielman, Polo, Missouri: "I am trying to press onward. I have lately married and my husband does not belong to the church. I hope he may sometime. I have had my trials and temptations, but God was always with me. I was baptized by my uncle, J. W. Peterson, some ten years ago. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints, and my prayers are ever for God's people."

Brother W. H. Powell: "We left Sagle Branch about the last of June, 1911, bound for the southwestern part of Oregon. We visited some friends in Portland; then took ship, July 5, for Coos Bay via the steamer Breakwater. The Lord's protecting hand was over us. I prayed that the ocean might be calm and that our little ones would not get seasick. His blessing we received, for when we crossed the bar at Astory the captain told me the bar was the smoothest that he had seen in twenty years. How thankful I was for this statement, for I recognized the mighty hand that was able to calm the sea. We arrived at Coos Bay with very little seasickness. We have not seen any Saints since we have been here. I am now working in the United States life saving station at Coos Bay."

Lake Sills, Myrtle, Idaho: "Brother T. C. Kelley has been with us a number of times this last year and has done a lot of good, baptizing a few, and we have a better interest here than ever before. If any of the brethren know where and when the United Brethren sect started I would like for them to let me know. The past year has brought to us new opportunities, and I feel to rejoice in the fact that all are trying to grasp them. We hope Brother T. C. Kelley will be appointed to work with us again."

The stake library board reported excellent progress along the line of library work, having formed five free traveling libraries during the past year, a total of 159 books, which are now circulating throughout the various branches in the stake. A large number of ministerial reports were received, and reports were received from the following quorums: Second Quorum of Deacons, Second Quorum of Priests, Fifth Quorum of Elders, and Second Quorum of Teachers, all reporting an active membership and good results accomplished during the past year. The annual report of the stake bishopric was received, and showed that the new bishopric (Joseph Roberts, bishop, R. J. Lambert and Oscar Anderson, counselors) are performing successfully the duties of their office. The following were recommended for ordination: Vaughn C. Bailey of the Lamoni Branch to the office of priest; Samuel Rowley and Daniel T. Williams to the office of priest, and Robert Zimmerman to the office of teacher, all of Hiteman Branch. Moroni Traxler was released as a member of the stake high council. The following 116 delegates were chosen to represent the Lamoni Stake at the General Conference: John Smith, R. S. At the business session on Saturday afternoon a set of resolutions regarding the Lamoni Coliseum was introduced. After some discussion the matter was deferred until Monday evening. At this special session the following substitute was presented: "Whereas, there has been erected at Lamoni, Iowa, by a stock company, a building equipped, among other features, with all the appurtenances of a modern theater, and whereas, despite the fact that the church is in no way responsible for the erecting of this building, the fact of said building being at the headquarters of the church is likely to cause a misunderstanding as to the relation of the church thereto, and whereas, in the opinion of this conference of the Lamoni Stake theater attendance is detrimental to the spiritual development of the Saints; therefore, be it resolved, That we look with disfavor on the theater, and discountenance theater attendance by members of the church. Furthermore, be it resolved, That copies of these preambles and resolutions be filed with the SAINTS' HERALD and Zion's Ensign, with the request that they be published." By motion the courtesies of the floor were extended to all present. Lengthy discussion followed. Good feeling and unity prevailed in all the discus-

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Six large consignments of potatoes are expected to arrive in New York from abroad during the next two days, bringing the total receipts for the season up to a million sacks. The duty on the entire quantity will foot up to nearly $700,000.

Can you imagine such a condition being allowed to exist? Think of it! Uncle Sam going abroad to buy potatoes! Why, there's no place in the world where a better quality of potatoes can be grown or where the yield per acre is greater than in some parts of the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming.

If you know of anyone who wants to make money raising potatoes, tell them to write to me. I can tell them some things worth knowing—and the information won't cost anything either.

OUR REASONABLE SERVICE.

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.—Romans 12: 1.

The foregoing language, quoted from the pen of the Apostle Paul, suggests that the true God will require no service that is not reasonable, though at times, not knowing the end of the matter from the beginning, we may be tempted to think otherwise. It may suggest also that there are other gods whose service is not reasonable.

PAGAN RELIGIONS.

Primitive religions usually require the worship of some divinity, imaginary indeed, but very real to his devotees, who was much concerned about ceremonies and sacrifices, but not at all or very little about morals. Being a despotic divinity, he demanded valuable gifts which must be presented in precise manners or he would become very angry and send famine or pestilence or some other terrible visitation upon his people.

Moloch, the god of the Phœnicians, required living sacrifices. Men brought to him their first-born sons, dearest objects of their affections, and in their extremity, believing him to be able to save their nation from impending calamity, offered these little children to the devouring flames. Even the Israelites in times of religious and national decadence turned to Moloch, and certain of their kings caused their children to "pass through the fire." Moloch was set up in the Valley of Hinnom at Jerusalem, later appropriately known as "the place of the groans of little children"—a great ox-headed bronze image in human form, containing in the interior a blazing furnace into which the little forms rolled from the outstretched arms of the god.

It is easy for us to see now that this service was unreasonable. The god Moloch was exacting regarding sacrifices and ceremonies, but cared nothing for the morals of his people—indeed, he made them murderers of a most revolting type, men who took the little ones whom the true God had given them to cherish and protect and ruthlessly slaughtered them to placate a false god of their own conception.

The goddess Venus required every Babylonian woman at some time in her life to present herself at the temple of Venus and offer her virtue to the first stranger who might approach her with a gift of money—the money to go to the temple service. The same custom also obtained in Rome at one time. The service of such a religion made men and women worse instead of better. Ceremony was everything to Venus; morals were nothing.

MODERN GODS.

We do not worship pagan gods to-day. Men have cast their idols of wood and stone to the bats and owls. Yet God says concerning the modern world, "Every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

The great god Material Prosperity dominates the race to-day. We feed him little children in the cotton factories of the South, the mines and factories of the East, and by many less direct methods. For instance, in many cities good citizens, devotees of this god, defend and vote for the licensed saloon on the sole ground that the license money floods the city treasury and reduces direct taxation. They must know that from each generation there must be dedicated a certain number of boys to become drunkards to feed the saloons that pay the license money that reduces their taxation.

Others uphold the red light district because it affords a fertile field for graft, and also by an ingenious system of fines, which is in fact a tax for revenue, a great deal of money comes into the city treasury. It is a foregone conclusion that a certain number of girls will be ruined each year to keep up the working force of the district; but Material Prosperity demands the living sacrifice.

This service is very unreasonable, even from a materialistic standpoint. Our sacrifices to Material Prosperity give us more cotton, coal, and revenue to-day, but to-morrow we spend it all and more for asylums, poorhouses, charities, and jails.

Other men subscribe to the doctrine that it is impossible to succeed honestly, and that they are bound to succeed. They wear themselves out physically in the ardor of devotion and die at an early age, besides sacrificing their very souls upon the altar. This is certainly an unreasonable service, but the god Material Prosperity demands it, and perhaps the gods of Fashion and Society who rule their wives and daughters also sanction the demand. So the fiat goes forth. Forms and sacrifices are in order, but morals are forgotten. Pope has formulated the leading tenet of this creed:

"Get place and wealth, if possible, with grace;
If not, get wealth and place!"

No wonder Jesus said, "Ye can not serve God and mammon."

And thus it is with the modern gods. The great god Society never was concerned with the question of morals, but was always a stickler for form. At one time the god of Society was strong on predestination, and no one, be he ever so good, could serve him unless born of the blue-blooded aristocracy; no one, be he ever so rotten and impotent a caricature of manhood, was excluded. Now the god Society approves salvation by works, and men and women who work hard enough and spend money enough get pretty close to the bosom of their divinity. They, too, are living sacrifices; as also, in many instances, are their children. What more could a man do for his god than to live in childless halls of marble that ring with the barkings of poodle dogs that occupy where the children that might have been are excluded.

As for the god of Fashion, who sends forth his edicts from Paris, he requires strict observance of form at any expense of morals. Is the service reasonable? Look at some of the costumes seen in Chicago, Kansas City, Los Angeles, or New York; from the frightful lines of the harem skirt to the strange weird form of the accompanying hat, the whole marvelous and apparently inhuman creation bespeaks a zeal of devotion gone mad in the interests of an unworthy cause.

THE OLD ISRAELITISH PROPHETS.

It is true that God, under the Mosaic economy, instituted a system of ceremonies and sacrifices. He took men as he found them, met them on grounds which they could understand, and began to educate them. He made the sacrifice point forward to something. The lamb offered up was an antitype of the Lamb that should take away the sins of the world.

"All the sacrifices offered
From the days of Abel down,
Forward point to this one proffered
On Golgotha's rugged crown."

His people at times lapsed into a low state spiritually, wherein they thought of him as being concerned solely with ceremony and sacrifice, a god like the neighboring pagan gods, to be appeased and bought; and felt that they had discovered a very certain way to gain divine favor by purchase while their private lives were yet blasphemous. But the prophets told them in no uncertain tones that God was concerned primarily with morals, and only secondarily with forms and ceremonies. Religious ceremony never gave license to continue in public or private wrongdoing. God could not be bribed.

Samuel said, "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than to sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."—1 Samuel 15: 22.

He made both church and state cognizant of that principle. He forced King Saul, chief representative of civil authority, to realize it; and the Lord applied it to Eli, representative of priestly or ecclesiastical authority, whose house was strict concerning the sacrifices and ceremonies, but lax regarding morals, concerning whom he declared: "I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever."—1 Samuel 3: 14.

Solomon said: "To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice."—Proverbs 21: 3.

Hosea said, "For I desire mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings."—Hosea 6: 6.

Isaiah gave the word of God to Sodom: "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats.

When ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood. Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow."—Isaiah 1:10-17.

Perhaps no more striking exposition of the divine attitude can be found than that one given, by Micah: "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my first born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"—Micah 6: 6-8.

THE RELIGIOUS IDEAL.

The prophetic utterances that we have quoted show that even under the Mosaic regime correct knowledge of God and obedience to him, judgment, justice, mercy, purity, and good works were of primary importance, while forms, ceremonies, and sacrifices (though they were required) were of secondary importance.

The ideal of true religion is not to placate God and keep him in good humor. The ideal of true religion is to secure correct relationship between man and God, and between man and his fellow man.

It is not God who has become estranged from man, but the reverse,—notwithstanding some of the creeds say that Jesus died to reconcile God to man. The true situation is thus stated: "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ. . . . God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself. . . . We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—2 Corinthians 5: 18-20.

UNDER THE CHRISTIAN DISPENSATION.

With the dawn of the Christian era the ministry of offerings and sacrifices of a ceremonial and expiatory nature came to an end. God had never taken pleasure in offerings for sin; much more pleasing would it have been to him had his people lived so that they would not have needed to make atonements for sin. It is written, "In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast no pleasure."—Hebrews 10: 6.

Jesus made the final sacrifice: "But this man, after he had made one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God."—Hebrews 10: 12.

In the Christian dispensation it was shown forth more clearly than before that Jehovah, unlike other gods, was concerned with the morals of men and their attitude toward him and toward each other more than with their material offerings and their ceremonies.

It is true that he has instituted in the Christian church certain forms and ceremonies, or ordinances, such as baptism, the laying on of hands, and the Lord's supper, that are binding and will remain until they have filled their mission, but these are not an end in themselves; they are the means to an end, and that end is the redemption of man.

The ministry that Christ appointed was not to wait upon altars and slay and burn offerings. They were to "seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness," as he himself declared. Later revelation makes it clear that all members of the church are to assist in this work, each in his place and according to his calling: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

THE OBJECTIVE MAKES THE WORK "REASONABLE."

God has in mind the reclamation of the race. He is working for the salvation of man and the upbuilding of a perfect human society that shall be in accord with all that is high and pure, from which all war, disease, crime, and poverty shall be banished, in which all men shall be brothers and all the sons of God.

He asks his followers to cooperate with him in this work. Every sacrifice demanded in the interests of such a cause is but part of a reasonable service.

Jesus gave a new meaning to the term "sacrifice." To sacrifice no longer means to make an offering as an atonement for sin. Sacrifice is not the sin offering of a fallen people but the free service of a redeemed people, cooperating with God toward a definite end.

As Paul says, God requires us to be living sacrifices. Not to be burned alive at the altar of Moloch, but to be a living sacrifice continually and daily offered up in his service in the work of building up his kingdom, and in the service of our fellows, in doing them good and helping them toward salvation and regeneration.

"Whereas, despite the fact that the church is in no way responsible for the erecting of this building, the fact of said building being at the headquarters of the church is likely to cause a misunderstanding as to the relation of the church thereto, and,

"Whereas, in the opinion of this conference of the Lamoni Stake, theater attendance is detrimental to the spiritual development of the Saints,

"Therefore, be it resolved, That we look with disfavor on the theater, and discountenance theater attendance by members of the church.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

NOTICES, ETC.—The work of the Herald Office has taken such proportions that we are compelled to go to press with the last form of the HERALD on Monday. This means that nothing can be incorporated into the HERALD which reaches us later than Friday evening or Saturday morning. We are continually getting matter late on Saturday and on Monday with urgent requests for to use "next" issue. We seem to be unable to change the order of things and herewith give notice that we will take no blame to ourselves nor allow others to find fault with us for failure to use matter received later than the time indicated in the foregoing.

DAS BUCH MORMON.—The Herald Office has now on hand for sale the Book of Mormon in German. In ordering be sure to give catalogue number, 88a. This book is bound in cloth and sells for $1.00.

The world benefits by every great mind that is born among men. If a Newton discovers the law of gravitation, the benefit of understanding that law becomes instantly available to all his brethren. If a Fulton makes steam drive a vessel, all men can travel in vessels driven by steam in a few short years. But the faculties of the men who think ought not to be used up in overcoming the constant objections of ignorance. Until men approach what is new with a spirit of investigation—until they keep their minds open to conviction, instead of ready to protest against whatever they can not comprehend, there will be a continual brake on the kind of thought and action which alone can bring the race toward the perfect civilization that is its destiny.—Selected.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

PRIESTHOOD UNDER MOSAIC AND CHRISTIAN DISPENSATIONS.

On pages 180, 181, Traum misrepresents Elder Kelley in Presidency and Priesthood. Referring to that work, citing pages 82, 83, where Elder Kelley arranges the roster of the priesthood under both the Mosaic and Christian dispensations, Traum arranges the roster of the New Testament Church in parallel to the Mormon Church. He arranges thus:

THE NEW TESTAMENT CHURCH.

1. Apostles.
2. Prophets.
3. Seventy.
4. Evangelists.
5. Pastors.
6. Elders.
7. Bishops.
8. Teachers.
9. Deacons.

THE MORMON CHURCH.

1. The First Presidency.
2. Patriarch.
3. Twelve Apostles.
4. The Seventy.
5. The High Priests.
6. Elders.
7. Bishops.
8. Priests.
9. Teachers.
10. Deacons.

Elder Traum, take the witness stand. Are you sure you have told the truth in describing "the New Testament Church," in the left-hand column? Are you a member of that church? Did Campbell reproduce the church you have described? Be careful! You are now hoisted by your own petard! Just following the above arrangement he says:

By observing carefully these parallel columns, we discover that numbers 2, 4, and 5 in the left-hand column—that is, prophets, evangelists and pastors—are not found in the Mormon Church at all; in the right-hand column, numbers 1, 2, 5, and 8—that is, the first presidency, the patriarch, the high priest and priests—are not found in the New Testament church. Their so-called prophet had been dead for years; they had but one, hence is not plural. Even allowing that they correctly use the New Testament phraseology, they have no men who serve as pastor, using that title as descriptive of his office, and their evangelists are an unknown company of people. Further, in all the history of this people they never had an "office" that was known as "prophet."

Hold on, Mr. Traum, you have left out (as usual) of the New Testament roster, two general departments mentioned in the same connection with apostles, prophets, etc., which, if interpreted by the Lord himself, would properly admit in the roster, those officers and powers which you call counterfeit in the Mormon Church. Paul says, "God hath set some in the church . . . helps, governments." Just why he drops these from his arrangement of the official structure of the New Testament Church, he must know. I am willing he should plead before a common jurisdiction. I have quoted from 1 Corinthians 12: 28. All the officers named in the Reorganized Church can be admitted under the terms of the New Testament, as found in 1 Corinthians 12: 28;

Ephesians 4: 11; Luke 10: 1, 2; Acts 6: 2, 6; Galatians 2: 9; Philippians 1: 1; Hebrews 5: 1; 1 Peter 2: 5, 9, and elsewhere. Traum doesn't seem to recognize that the same office is sometimes pointed out by different titles. The officers which Traum points out as existing in the New Testament, and not in the Mormon Church,—prophets, evangelists, and pastors,—he knows are a part of the organic structure of the Reorganized Church. Elder Kelley does mention in the very first of the category, marked "1," under the "Christian dispensation," Jesus as the apostle and the high priest, and prophet. But with the Campbellites Jesus is not a member of the church. He is a "prophet, high priest, and apostle," and none of these exist in the church to-day. I tell you, this theory is a bold one. Traum first robbed God of his character, and deposed him by the theory adopted, now he hurls Jesus Christ from membership, and official standing in the church.

Elder Kelley does point out in list marked "10," "high priests, evangelists, and pastors (the very class Traum says are not in the Mormon Church), set in their respective places, whose exact position, in point of preferment, are not definitely set forth in the Bible."

Traum's reference to 1, 2, 5, 8, in right-hand column, we have fully reviewed, except it would be the presidency and patriarch. Referring to a first presidency in the church, we cite Mr. Traum to the following:

And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.—Galatians 2: 9.

And add, that in this case, Paul found at Jerusalem these three officers who seemed to have held "chief" authority, and as Elder Kelley showed under the Mosaic dispensation a "presiding" head in "Moses, Aaron, and Hur," and as the church of New Testament times was admonished by Paul, as Moses was commanded, to "make all things according to the pattern" shown him, and as the "pattern" is "the example and shadow of heavenly things" (Hebrews 8: 5), the "heavenly things" must be reflected in the church. That Jesus Christ would not leave his church without a representative head is evidenced by Alexander Campbell, as follows:

During the personal absence of the King (Jesus) he has committed the management of the kingdom to stewards. These were first apostles, next to them prophets, next teachers, then assistants or helpers; then directors or presidents.—Christian System, p. 172.

Again:

Hence in every city, town, and country where the apostles gathered a community by their own labors, or by their assistants, in setting them in order, for their edification, and for their usefulness, and influence in this world, they uniformly appointed elders or overseers to labor in the word and teaching, and to preside over the whole affairs of the community.—Ibid, p. 173.

Again:

Bishops, whose office it is to preside over, instruct, and to edify the community—to feed the church of the Lord with knowledge and understanding—and to watch for their souls as those that must give an account to the Lord at his appearing and kingdom, compose the first class.—Ibid, p. 84.

Mr. Campbell assigns as a reason for this presiding power being in the church now, the following:

But it is not the will of Jesus Christ, because it is not adapted to human nature, nor to the present state of his kingdom, as administered in his absence, that the church should be governed by a written document alone.—Ibid, p. 173, ed. 1840, "printed by A. Campbell."

In an article Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 164, Mr. Campbell says: "Every congregation chooses its own overseers, and deacons, who preside over, and administer the affairs of the congregation." He also says: "Each congregation being subject to its own choice of presidents." Indeed, Mr. Campbell was so taken with the scriptural doctrine of first presidency, and presidents in the church, he bought the copyright of a New Testament that used the term, as a part of the church of Christ. Romans 12: 6, 9, in Campbell's Translation reads:

Having then gifts differing according to the favor which which is given to us,—if prophecy, act according to the measure of faith; if a ministerial office, in that office; if one is a teacher, in teaching, and the exhorter, in exhortation. Let him who distributes act with disinterestedness; him that presides, with assiduity.

See also 1 Timothy 5: 18. In answer to the question, "Would it be improper, in speaking of Peter, James, and John, whom Paul called 'pillars,' (Galatians 2: 9), to call them presidents or a first presidency of the Christian Church?"

Rev. J. W. McGarvey, [deceased] President of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Kentucky, of whom R. B. Neal says: "There is no higher authority on earth, than he is on matters pertaining to Palestine," replied November 24, 1902, as follows:

I do not think it would. A pillar is that which upholds the roof of an edifice, while a president is one who rules an assembly. There may be many pillars in the same edifice, but there can be but one president of a single assembly. We are always safe in retaining the metaphors of scripture, and when we substitute some of our own we are apt to make a botch of it.

Mr. J. A. Beattie, President of Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, Mr. Traum's Alma Mater, replied December 5, 1902, to the same question:

It has always seemed to me that the teaching in this passage is that these men being the chief men are represented in this place as the support—as upholding the church—as those who stood under it and held it up. The figure of speech which causes the use of "pillars," seems to press this as the idea, rather than the idea of office. It is true, that they guided, controlled, and in this way it is natural enough to look upon any one of them as a president and the whole as constituting the presidency or a presidency. I do not see anything especially improper in calling them presidents, and yet I do not think the writer intends to hold them up in this light, but rather as the supporters, the upholders, the sustainers of the church.—SAINTS' HERALD.

Here is shown that Elder Traum is at "loggerheads" with the leading and recognized authorities of the Campbellite church, as he says, "the first presidency is not found in the New Testament church."

This is Campbellism against itself again. It would seem that Elder Traum is not sound in the faith. Such wide differences in Bible questions among the ranks of the Campbellite clergy, argue strongly for the necessity of the priesthood. Their catnip, pennyroyal, paregoric, etc., will never hold them together.

As for patriarchs being essential in the church, we have no right to inform God that his work is incomplete, or that it is one of supererogation. Patriarchs existed in the days of Abraham, under a "gospel" dispensation (Galatians 3: 8), and he ministered as a "patriarch" under it. Psalm 105: 8-15; Hebrews 7: 4. Patriarchs were recognized under the Mosaic regime (Acts 2: 29), and that administration was a "shadow of good things to come," under the gospel. And shall we expect more in the "shadow," than in the "substance"? Yet this is the ultimathule of Traum's untenable theory.

Elder Kelley's argument was not supposed to enter into detail of the every office and officer, with the special functions belonging thereto, in the priesthood, any more than Saint Paul's argument in 1 Corinthians 12: 28, where he included a number of essential, and divinely constituted offices in the terms, "helps and governments." Our cute critic should read Paul's words in the chapter mentioned, where he says: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, and there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord."—Verses 4, 5.

But it seems that another people recognizes "patriarchs" besides the Latter Day Saints, and that people is none other than the Campbellites which Traum claims to affiliate with, and whom he is supposed to represent. The historian, A. S. Hayden, in Early History of the Disciples, page 253, gets off the following in a funeral sermon preached as late as August 3, 1870, in Hiram, Ohio. A tribute to the Life and Character of Symonds Ryder, by the then president of that college, B. A. Hinsdale:

Here I should speak more particular of Father Ryder's relations to the church, especially with reference to one point. As he was an influential citizen at the time of his conversion, he was justly regarded as an important acquisition to the cause, he took from the beginning, the leading position. The brethren were few in number, and poor in goods. He served the church, as was his duty, with little or no reward. The more the church grew, the more it seemed to need him. He was first the eldest brother, then the father, finally the patriarch.

It appears that the fraternity with which Elder Traum is training was following the work of the hands which they have pierced in this particular. This evidence was authorized to be collated and turned into the chronicles of the Western Reserve churches, by the "unanimous" concurrence of twenty-two preachers upon the resolution of President Hinsdale, at Ravenna, Portage County, Ohio, November, 1871, with the pledged "moral support" of the association. The preface signed "A. S. H." says: "Great care has been bestowed on the accuracy of every statement, both of date and incident," and that "the young will discover" in its "pages the planting and establishment of principles of religious reform which are now providentially committed to their trust, etc.

I have italicized some of the foregoing to direct special attention thereto.

Father Ryder, then, was "the patriarch" in his "relation to the church," and took "the leading position" therein. Here is Campbellism against itself again. We turn and ask Mr. Traum, When did they throw off their theological baggage? For their authentic history says they had "the patriarch." And as to the "head" or "first presidency" consisting of three, the same history says, on pages 63, 64, in issuing a monthly designed to develop the truth of the gospel, and to plead for the unity of Christians on Bible grounds, that, "in the very beginning of the masterly work, the grand triumvirate, Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, and Walter Scott, appeared side by side, as contributors to its pages." Without question these people of the current reformation installed "a grand triumvirate," and "the patriarch." It does not appear that Traum is in the faith. He doubtless thinks of Bishop Warburton's language: "Orthodoxy, my lord, is my doxy; and heterodoxy is some other man's doxy." He ought to cry out to his brethren, "The counterfeiter is abroad in the land."

In a book issued by the Christian Publishing Company, called the Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, we read of the "office" which Thomas Campbell, father of Alexander, held, that "This office fell providentially to his son." They thus recognized the "law of lineage," and that God had prepared it so, as "providentially" signifies. By the way, we are not told whether these men were of the tribe of Judah, or of Ephraim! See pages 64 to 66. As our critic is at fault in so many of his statements on these questions, we quote two texts from the Bible on the existence of prophets, and pass on:

And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that when the Spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease. But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the Spirit rested upon them; and they were of them that were written, but went not out into the tabernacle: and they prophesied in the camp. And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp. And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered and said, My lord Moses, forbid them. And Moses said unto him, Enviest thou for my sake? would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them!—Numbers 11: 25-29.

In the New Testament:

Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.—1 Corinthians 14: 29-31.

One more:

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets.—Amos 3: 7.

We wish Elder Traum could reconcile the theology of the system he defends with this theology of the Bible, but we will not let him off so easily, for on pages 127 to 130, Hayden's History, we read of the first time this church which Traum represents ever saw daylight, in 1828, at Austintown, "constituted June 26," and "the religious awakening which restored the church" began February, 1828. Walter Scott "built it anew on apostolic foundations," and in the laudable undertaking, the historian says, "The counselors of the church thought it necessary to have the young converts instructed in the doctrines of the gospel," etc. According to this, the church was "restored" with its "counselors." Who did the work there? Walter Scott. What was Walter Scott's official standing? Page 122, (History of the Disciples) is his own testimony. "In the winter of 1827-8, he opened at Simmons Sacketts, the plea of the ancient gospel," says the historian, and rising to the full position "he cried out in his magnificent voice, 'And what went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken by the wind? But what went ye out to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? But what went ye out to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet.'"

Here is one of the founders of the so-called Christian Church claiming to be a "prophet," and "more than a prophet," "restoring" "the church on apostolic foundations," and recognizing "counselors" as an "apostolic foundation." Truly our critic isn't in the faith, or else they have "cast overboard, with the contumacious sects" of which they said "their work was intended to disorganize all of this contraband ware." Traum should be consistent. His church has claimed "prophets, and more than prophets"; has claimed Elijahs and Elishas; has claimed "patriarch" and "triumvirate"; has claimed "office" which "providentially" passes from father to son, and Traum is out nowadays, attempting to brand as a "fraud," these same things. Why does he seek thus to destroy the Campbellite Church? But if the Campbellite Church has not these things, "the chronicles" of the institution says it has, then that church is a "fraud," and its ministers are howling "impostors." Thus "by his own words and his own test, is his church shown to be manmade and spurious."

SUCCESSION.

On page 186, Traum cites to Presidency and Priesthood, pages 132, 133, and (as usual) disjoins and omits sentences and words. Elder Kelley is treating on the Baptist idea of the succession of the church, citing authority for his quotations, and Traum represents him thus:

They believe that Baptist succession exists, and that the Baptist Church is that church. But which Baptist Church is the one standing in the true line of succession? This is not agreed among the Baptists themselves, and there are many Baptist churches; yet it is important to men interested in knowing the true way. This same writer, who seems to be wonderfully in love with the Baptists and down on everyone else (D. B. Ray, in Baptist Succession), admits that there are Baptists who believe in succession, but deny that succession can be proved. . . . Again, the writer has the courage to state that no man can be in the kingdom of Jesus Christ who is not in that kingdom which has succession from the apostolic age.—Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 132, 133.

The Baptists will doubtless be able to take care of their own difficulties, but with their permission we should like to take Kelley's battery and turn it on the Mormon fort. It is notorious that the Mormons have been at the fighting point for decades; nor is there any promise of abatement in the war. It is therefore germane to the question to substitute the word Mormon for the word Baptist, which will make the sentence read as follows:

"They (the Mormons) believe that Mormon succession exists, and that the Mormon Church is that church. But which Mormon church is the one standing in the true line of succession? This is not agreed among the Mormons themselves, and there are many Mormon churches; yet it is important to men interested in knowing the true way."

While Elder Kelley properly quoted is as follows:

They believe that Baptist succession exists (Baptist Succession, page 15), and that the Baptist Church is that church. But which Baptist Church is the one standing in the true line of succession? This is not agreed upon by Baptists themselves, and there are many Baptist churches; yet this is the important thing to men interested in knowing the true way. This same writer, who seems to be wonderfully in love with the Baptists, and down on everybody else (D. B. Ray), admits that there are Baptists who believe in succession, but "deny that the succession can be proved," yet he essays the task of proving it. Bold fellow, that! Again, this writer has the courage to state that "No man can be in the church or kingdom of Jesus Christ who is not in that kingdom which has the succession from the apostolic age." Of course the Baptist Church, in the mind of the writer (the one he belongs to), is the one in the line of "succession," and all who do not belong to that are outside of the church or kingdom,—lost. It becomes very important, then, that we examine this claim in the light of New Testament facts.—Presidency and Priesthood, pp. 132, 133.

As Traum has claimed to have turned the battery against us as follows:

Further, Mr. Kelley, your church, according to Whitmer, did not have any apostles at the very beginning. It was "regularly organized" on the sixth day of April, 1830, with the elder as the highest office in the church. This apostle business came later. With the church of Christ the apostles came first. In the first church they were indispensable; in the Mormon Church they are purely artificial excrescences on the body of the church. There never has been a time that they have been anything than a fungous growth. They are not indispensable even to the Mormon Church. The elder can baptize, and he can lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and perform every act that is deemed essential by the Mormons to induce a Gentile into the fold. And, as we shall see before we are through with the priesthood question, there is not even a "mark" of identity between the Mormon Church and the primitive church.

We will pause and train the gun on the masked battery of Campbellism thus:

Of forty millions of Protestants shall we constitute the visible kingdom of the Prince of Peace? Be it so for the sake of the argument; and what then? The Christian army is forty million strong; but how do they muster? Under forty ensigns? under forty antagonistic leaders? Would to God there were but forty. In the Geneva detachment alone, there is almost that number of petty chiefs. My soul sickens at the details! Take the English branch of the Protestant faith—I mean England and the United States and all the islands where the English Bible is read; and how many broils, dissensions, and anathemas may we compute? I will not attempt to name the antagonizing creeds, feuds, and parties that are in eternal war under the banner of the Prince of Peace. And yet they talk of love and charity, and of the conversion of the Jews, the Turks, and the Pagans.—A. Campbell, Christian System, pp. 105, 106.

Again:

Every party in Christendom without respect to any of its tenets, opinions, or practices, is a heresy, a chism—unless there be such a party as stands exactly upon the apostle's ground. . . . And all others are guilty before the Lord, and must be condemned for their opposition to Christ's own party, whose party are we, providing we hold fast, etc.—Ibid., p. 104.

Again:

And seeing Christendom all given up to the idolatry of partisan faith, he (Gaston) became skeptical.—History of the Disciples, p. 84.

Of the Baptists the historian says: "They unloaded the ship of contraband wares, and human tradition," when the Campbellite chariot was rolling along in the Western Reserve, page 85. Doubtless this is sufficient to show that the institution Elder Traum defends is wonderfully in love with itself, and down on everyone else, and "has the courage to assert" that no one can be "under the ensign of Christ" who is not training under the one unfurled at Austintown in 1828. There can be no other party according to Campbell, Scott, and Hayden. Seeing this is true, "they, the Campbellites, believe that Campbellite succession exists, and that the Campbellite

Church is that church. But which Campbellite Church is the one standing in the true line of succession? This is not agreed among the Campbellites themselves, and there are at least two (and the probabilities are strong for more) Campbellite churches, yet it is important to men interested in knowing the true way." Sometimes it is a poor rule which works but one way. "Our point is, that if apostasies, feuds, broils, and divisions, are evidences of "contraband wares," "idolatry," and "an adulterous brood," (See Christian System, page 291, 343.) and an "adulterous generation," then is the Campbellite Church in the same predicament.

LAYING ON OF HANDS.

FOR ORDINATION TO THE MINISTRY.

God came from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran. Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise. And his brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power.—Habakkuk 3: 3, 4.

In discussing any question where the Bible is concerned, it might be well to remember that many of its precepts are not in the form of commands, but they are contained in narratives of what was practiced by the men of God in other days. Alexander Campbell has very pertinently remarked, that, "Approved precedent is equal to an apostolic command," and to suppose anything else would be to make half of the New Testament of none effect, and that whatever we find the disciples of Christ practicing with the approval of the apostles should be considered binding upon us in this age.

What is true of the New Testament is also true of the Old. Some have concluded that, as there is no direct command to lay on hands in the ordination or setting apart of a man to the ministry, it can therefore be dispensed with in perfect propriety, and that it can be performed or not as suits the convenience or whim of the one ordaining or ordained. In this, however, we believe, as in everything else, God did have and does have system. To leave the matter to the caprice of the human mind would be charging God with folly, and would bring about confusion, and of this we do not believe God is guilty, but that he has instituted a method of procedure that is uniform and perpetual.

It is fortunate, perhaps, that we find in the Old Testament that at one time God did command the laying on of hands in setting apart a man for a certain position. In Numbers 27: 18-23, we are informed that God directed Moses to lay his hands on Joshua. The history of that event is as follows:

And the Lord said unto Moses, Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, man in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him; and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation; and give him a charge in their sight. And thou shalt put some of thine honor upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may be obedient. And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation. And Moses did as the Lord commanded him: and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation: and he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge; as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses.

In the final act of succeeding Moses it is said of Joshua:

And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses.—Deuteronomy 34: 9.

Here we have a precedent that should serve as a guide for all future ordinations, and we discover that the apostles of Christ followed the rule laid down here, and whenever they desired, or were directed, to ordain anyone to any office, they proceeded according to the pattern presented by this act of Moses, performed under the direct command of the Lord.

In the history of the New Testament church there came a time soon after its organization, or perpetuation under the direction of the apostles, that there was need of other officers besides the twelve whom Christ had chosen. The burden had become so great that like Moses of old they could not bear the burden of the people alone, they must have others to assist them. In the sixth chapter of Acts we are told how men were chosen, and set apart for this holy work. The disciples were instructed to choose seven men. These men were to be men of good report, and full of the Spirit. Such men were selected as directed, but it does not seem to have been sufficient for these men to have had the Spirit of God, and to be of good repute, and full of wisdom, but there was something else necessary to authorize them to act in the name of the Lord. They must receive authority, and that authority must come from those upon whom God had already placed the right to act in his name. When Christ was about to ascend to his Father, he called his disciples to him and said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth, Go ye therefore, and teach all nations."—Matthew 28: 18, 19. In giving this power it is not recorded that he laid his hands upon them, but he said upon one occasion, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you."—John 15: 16. The word ordained, in the sense of setting apart to the ministry of the word, as evidently used here, usually conveyed the idea of laying on of the hands of the one setting apart, or ordaining. We are told by historians that this was a common practice of the apostles of Christ, to that extent that frequently the imposition of hands was practiced when they wanted to set apart anyone to a particular work of the ministry, or for a particular mission, believing that by this act they consecrated them afresh to the work of God.

So when these seven men had been chosen to a special work in the church, and as assistants to the apostles, they were set before them and "they laid their hands on them" as a final act of setting apart. (Acts 6: 6.) They were then authorized to go forth and preach and perform the ordinances of the gospel.

The same procedure was followed when Paul was chosen for the work of an apostle as recorded in Acts 13. He and Barnabas had already been engaged in the ministry, but they were to be set apart for a higher office, and to a more important work, and after fasting and prayer, they "laid their hands on them, they sent them away."

Twice Paul exhorts Timothy to use wisely the authority or gift bestowed on him by the imposition of hands. In his first epistle to this disciple he says, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery."—1 Timothy 4: 14. This may or may not have been an ordination. It may have been the imposition of hands for the bestowal of the gift of the Holy Ghost, or it may have been an ordination to some lesser office than that to which Paul evidently ordained him later, for in his second epistle we find Paul saying to this young man, "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands."—2 Timothy 1: 6.

In both of these instances it is represented that a gift has been bestowed, and there could be no more fitting act than to represent that gift as being conveyed from one to the other by the laying on of hands. It is the natural way of bestowing a gift, and in fact we could hardly conceive of a gift passing from one to another only by the use of the hand in the act. So we are told by the historians of the past days that even the magistrates under the law of Moses were set apart to their respective offices by the imposition of hands. (See article "Hand" in Watson's Bible Dictionary.)

And it is wise to conclude that in the establishment of the church in this day that this matter would not be left to the caprice of man, but that there would be a uniform method adopted by the Lord, and that through the practice of this order the authority to preach and administer the ordinances of the gospel would be bestowed, and that as stated by the prophet, "he had horns coming out of his hands: and there was the hiding of his power," so by the imposition of hands he would bestow power and authority upon men, and they in turn upon others.

BLESSING OF CHILDREN.

In view of the arguments just presented on the question of ordination to the ministry, and the use of the laying on of hands in the bestowal of the gift of the priesthood upon man, it is not necessary to go into the question again in the consideration of this question of blessing children. The only question that need to be considered is, Did Christ institute this as an ordinance or practice in his church? If so, the natural conclusion would be that if blessings were to be bestowed that it would be through the imposition of hands of men acting instead of the Master. It will not be denied, perhaps, that Christ himself performed this ordinance, but the natural inquiry would be, Did he intend that it should be a perpetual ordinance? We believe that he so intended, and that it was instituted that parents might dedicate their children to the Lord and place them under his care in a formal and public way, during the years that they were coming to that age when they might act for themselves.

In studying the question from a biblical standpoint, it seems to have been a very early ordinance, or practice. Thus we see Joseph bringing his two boys to his aged and blind father, Jacob, for his blessing, the narrative of which event is found in the forty-eighth chapter of Genesis. Hence through some means or other it was an established practice in Israel, and served in many instances not only as a blessing to the child, but the blessing often assumed the form of a prophecy of the child's future, and became a source of comfort to the parents, and possibly an encouragement to the child when it got to that age that it could understand the import of the message that had been given in its behalf.

This might not be taken by some as evidence that it was to be perpetuated in the gospel law, but from the manner in which Christ treated the matter we believe that he placed his sanction on the ancient practice, and intended that it should be perpetuated in his church.

At least three of the Evangelists record the fact that little children were blessed by the Master, and the narrative goes to show that the practice had become deeply seated in the mind of the Jewish parent. In Matthew 19: 13, it is said: "Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands upon them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them." This shows that the practice was known to the people of the day, and the object of bringing the children was that they might receive a blessing at his hands. It may be that the reason that the disciples rebuked those who had brought their children to him, was that they had so often heard him teach against the practices introduced in former years, that they supposed that he would treat this particular practice as he had others, and that it would find no place in the gospel law, but Christ soon gave them to understand that this ordinance was agreeable to him, and he turned to them and said: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven," and at once proceeded to instruct the disciples as to the form of the reception of little children.

Mark gives the event like this:

And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

The object of bringing the children to the Master was, in both of these narratives, to have him place his hands upon them, as given by Matthew, and to touch them as recorded by Mark and Luke; in either case it means the same thing. The Master shows his approval of the practice by complying with their request, and also takes occasion to instruct his disciples as to the manner of blessing the children by taking them up in his arms, putting his hands upon them and blessing them.

If we take this instance in connection with the last commission as recorded by Matthew, we have a convincing argument in favor of such a reception of the child. In that last commission he says:

Go ye and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

It would be difficult to conceive of plainer teaching of the Christ than this instance mentioned here in regard to the children and their reception. He showed his displeasure at the attitude of the disciples towards the children and gave them to understand that children should be received, and that if we hope to get into the kingdom of God we must become humble as children, and then proceeded to illustrate the method of blessing the child.

It is safe to conclude that the disciples never forgot the instance, and that while the blessing of children is not mentioned in the after acts of the apostles, yet it must have been a part of their teaching and practice, or Christ would not have been with them as he was, for his presence with them was contingent on their teaching all things whatsoever he had commanded them.

And, looking at it from a natural standpoint, one could not conceive of a more appropriate and beautiful ordinance than this, as illustrated by his act in taking the children in his arms, putting his hands on them and blessing them, hence we believe that he intended to perpetuate the rite, and desires his disciples to continue it until the end of the world.

IKE HADLEY'S REFLECTIONS.

Some people who never can tell what is in the paper "kick" because there is not "much" in it.

The farmer who buys feed for the chickens doesn't have his place quite in "shape" yet.

A preacher should do something more than kick up a fuss with another church to show his Christian spirit.

An agent's success depends upon selling you stuff you do not want and do not need.

Many people are so far back in barbarism yet that they insist upon having a "leader" or chief; and when the intelligent leader attempts to give his followers greater freedom, they throw bricks at him.

The man who insists that he never made a fool of himself was born that way and doesn't have to.

I believe in "one man rule" just so far as it is practicable for one man to rule himself; further rule should be by the majority.

The "leader" who inherits office by law (and I do not admire such a law) but who is more concerned about progression in office than succession in office, and who is making an honest effort to bring about equality rather than establishing alleged personal rights over others, is earning his bread; instead of bearing down he lifts up; instead of riding he pulls with his brethren.

When a farmer's wagon wheel "squeals" in town he is more embarrassed than when the baby squeals in church.

In Zion's Ensign, January 11, 1912, there were printed nine stanzas of poetry, by Sister F. M. Smith, which, in my judgment, is one of the most sensational poems ever produced by a Latter Day Saint. The reason I say it is sensational is because of the surprising candor, absolute truthfulness, and great common sense found therein. How many will give this poem more than a passing thought? Probably not many. Better hunt it up and read it again and digest it.

equality? If so, you are in favor of aristocracy instead of democracy.

The man who insists upon having a boss probably needs one.

Have you the gift of discernment? The next sermon you hear notice carefully and you will easily discern whether its spirit is one of doctrinal controversy or the spirit of love.

The sixty-year-old gentleman who deeds his property to the young lady before the marriage ceremony is courting trouble—and will get it.

I have always thought there was some little difference between the golden rule and one man rule.

The young lady who prowls around the streets at night with her "fellow" will lose her reputation—not her character.

THE CAUSE OF RESTLESS SLEEP IN INFANCY AND CHILDHOOD.

It is said that the American people are fast becoming a nation of sleepless invalids, depending upon narcotics, hypnotics, and other drugs to get any kind of rest. This is a good thing for the vender of patent medicines, the druggist, and the physician; but, alas, it portends an increase of the already vast army of the insane, to say nothing of the hysterical, neurasthenics, and other classes of chronic invalids who are vainly "seeking rest and finding none."

When and where is the foundation of the almost universal abnormal wakefulness laid?

Cures and methods of treatment for all forms of adult insomnia abound everywhere—advertised on every fence, barn, and tree by the roadside, and in the papers and other periodicals of the day.

The wealthy employ the skillful masseur, or go to some sanitarium where they can have concentrated on their cases the combined hygienic influences of skilled nursing, water treatment, electricity, and the use of motor therapeutics, as well as diet, and rest from physical and mental exertion.

But who takes any note of the number of sleep disturbed little ones, from the baby a few weeks old up to the youth and maiden in the high school?

Watch babies under two years old while they are asleep, and see how large a percentage are disturbed in their rest, as proved by the various abnormal facial expressions, from the smile to tetany, spasms, and other muscular twitching, lying with eyes partly closed, crying out in the sleep, sudden starting and, when older, rolling about in bed, kicking off the bedclothes, grinding the teeth, and at times awakening rigid, and screaming aloud in the throes of night terrors. It would be safe to say, taking even our rural population, that more than twenty-five per cent of all farmers' children are more or less victims of sleep disorders. Many are sleep-walkers and talkers. . . .

During thirty years of active medical work the writer has observed the common, everyday habits of common, everyday people,—not so much in the slums and city charitable hospitals as in the ordinary homes in the country. Only a few months ago the little daughter of a friend was left in the writer's care. She was a healthy, active, farmer's child, two and a half years old, who had never had any serious illness. Yet that evening, under the combined nervous strain of an exciting frolic with other children and a hearty supper near her usual bedtime, her sleep was very restless, and she turned in her dreams into so many positions that she might have competed with an acrobat. Although the room was cool, and the air out of doors bracing and coming into the room in volumes, through a large half-open window, no bedclothes would the restless one tolerate, no matter how light and porous. She cried out in her sleep, ground her teeth, and tossed about for more than an hour. At last, when tired out with her somnambulant gymnastic performances, she lay comparatively quiet and could be kept covered. Every now and then she cried out suddenly, as if in fear, or peevishly, as if failing to get what she wanted. Next day she was more fretful and sensitive in the morning than usual. But soon the interest in her companions and playthings called the attention of the higher centers from the discomfort due to an unrested, overworked nervous system, and her day's life went on as usual, her mother merely remarking, "Mary always has a restless night if she plays too hard in the evening and eats too hearty a supper," evidently never thinking that oft-repeated violation of Nature's demands for rest must result in permanent nerve and brain depreciation, and lay the foundation for hysteria, neurasthenia, and a host of other nerve disorders in after life. The child's daily life and environment were superior to those of most farmers' children. Her parents were careful to keep her properly bathed, and reasonably clothed for all kinds of weather. Her food was wholesome and given at regular meal times. The home was well-ventilated, with fairly sanitary surroundings. She was out of doors a great deal, and her restless sleep was always the result of some extra afternoon or evening play and excitement, and when under this undue nervous strain, eating an over-hearty supper, which children, as well as adults, are prone to do when the appetite is overstimulated by party pleasures and the suggestion of seeing others dine.

What was only an occasional occurrence with this little one is often habitual with other children not so well cared for.

A father complained to the writer recently that his six-year old boy kept him awake at night by his restlessness. He pitied himself, but never thought of the child when he wished to know if his own sleep would not be more sound if he had the boy sleep in a crib alone.

The little sufferers from night terrors are objects of such acute suffering as to merit the sympathy and help of those who are responsible for their care and comfort.

A little girl of five was in the habit of waking the family several nights each week with heart-rending screams. It often took much time to restore her to the normal nerve-quietude. She was always worse after an evening of frolic with her four older sisters and brother, a game very popular with them all being called "Bear." This little one especially craved the excitement, and was always teasing Harry, the big brother, to get his fur coat and be the bear. After watching her excitement and fascination, bordering on abject terror, manifested by hysterical screaming whenever caught by the bear, it was no surprise to hear her frantic calls at midnight for mamma to deliver her from the bear. Her stronger nerved older brothers and sisters seemed unhurt by the frolic, but poor little Annie was put to nervous tortures by the thoughtlessness of the others in indulging in this play dissipation.

In early infancy, disturbance of sleep comes wholly from physical discomfort, as gas on the stomach, causing colic pains, spoiled food, over and under-feeding starvation, which may be the effect of excess of food as well as of scanty fare; foods of improper quality and unsuitable for the age of the little one; tight bands and woolen shirts, as well as wrinkles and folds, and pins which prick; soiled, wet napkins, causing chafing; and too much or too little covering, causing discomfort from overheating or chilling the surface; skin irritations, as so-called prickly heat, nettle rash, eczema; insect parasites, as lice, the itch mite, mosquitoes, bedbugs, fleas and gnats, and last, but not least, the common house fly, which makes the life of the little one miserable and cheats it out of much needed rest, and not infrequently infects it with deadly germs.

In summer it is often difficult to keep the little one cool enough to sleep, and parents, forgetting that every human being gives off much surplus heat, and that infants suffer from this, when compelled to occupy the same bed with adults, almost criminally allow these unhygienic conditions to continue. Often the baby needs only a clean, cool crib to rest in to get sound instead of broken sleep.

In winter sometimes a feeling of chilliness, especially cold feet, will cause restless slumber. A cold in the head, causing snuffles, is also often the cause of disturbed sleep.

When very young a child should be turned several times in the night or it will be awakened by the discomfort of one position maintained too long, causing overfilling of the depending veins.

Frequently sore mouth, as thrush, and the irritation of teeth, make the baby restless.

After six months, rickets is a very common cause of restlessness, and the child who habitually kicks off the bedclothes and has a sweating head should be examined for evidences of this disorder. As the child grows older and begins to take notice of outside objects, the excitement and stimulation of the emotions begin to exert either a quieting or a disturbing influence on the baby's nervous system.

Many parents, especially fathers, regard their children as they would some trained animal. The baby is put through his paces, much as the monkey or the puppy, for the amusement of the family. It is tickled to make it laugh, has its cheeks pinched and its ribs punched, and is kissed without its permission or any means of defense, by its elders with tobacco-laden breath, foul breath from teeth; or, it may be, from a mouth and throat full of pneumonia, diphtheria, or other disease germs.

Often at bedtime a child is kept awake for a frolic with adults, and so thoroughly aroused and excited that hours will pass before it is in a restful frame of mind and body.

Watch the lambs frisking on the hillocks and skipping over the stones while their dams look steadily on without interfering with the gambols of their offspring, and learn a wise lesson of noninterference in relation to the sports and plays of infancy.

The physical development of brain and nerve is nearly completed by the end of the seventh year; and it is during these years of rapid brain and nerve cell growth that most of the deaths due to convulsions, cerebro-spinal meningitis, and other nerve disorders occur. The unstable nervous structures break down readily under the influence of any nerve strain or over-excitement of the emotions, the result of joy, fear, or anger. The brain centers are also easily excited to an abnormal activity by the morbid irritation of any organ, be it the stomach overloaded with food, or the nose, obstructed by catarrhal excretions or abnormal growths. . . .

The mouth breather cultivates insomnia, dullness of intellect, and disorders of the pulmonary organs; as enlarged tonsils, tuberculosis, pneumonia, and chronic bronchitis.

Better than new systems of treating insomnia and neurasthenia, and the building of more hospitals for the insane, is the removal of the common causes of infantile restlessness and insomnia, and the cultivation of normal rest and sleep habits in the young.

Yellow fever and malaria, the two great scourges of the "Sunny South," yield to the destruction of the cause—mosquitos. American sleeplessness will succumb to a like common-sense destruction of its foundations, and with it would depart much of the almost universal craving for narcotics and stimulants.—Kate Lindsay, M. D., in Good Health.

"We have no natural appetite for beverages," writes Doctor Woods Hutchinson in his Handbook of Health, Book two of a series for school use recently issued by the Houghton Mifflin Company. "It is a most striking fact that, although these beverages have been drunk by the race for centuries, we have never developed an instinct or natural appetite for them! No child ever yet was born with an appetite or natural liking for beer or whisky; and very few children really like the taste of tea or coffee the first time, although they soon learn to drink them on account of the sugar and cream in them. Thus, nature has clearly marked them off from all the real foods on our tables showing that they are not essential to either our life or health, and that they are absolutely unnecessary, and almost always harmful in childhood and during the period of growth."

Editors Herald: Myself and my wife are the only Saints living near here, so far as I am able to learn. There are no meetings of any kind held in the schoolhouses near here, and it seems that the people are very indifferent as to whether there are ever any held here or not. I am very weak and am not sufficiently posted on the question of miracles and miracle working to meet the inquirers and defend the faith, but I am trying to do all that I can.

While I was talking to a friend the other day he asked me if our people believed in practicing Christ's teachings, such as healing the sick, curing the blind by the laying on of hands and the prayer of faith. I would like for some brother or sister to enlighten me on the best way to answer those who ask such questions. We take the HERALD, which is the only help we have, as we never had a chance to attend a single meeting since we were baptized in December, 1909.

One old fellow here says he used to belong to the Reorganized Church, but he left the church because it had gone astray, he says, for they don't adopt and advocate Socialism. I think that as we have to live under a political government, we should take some interest in politics, but we should not be too radical. Seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness, and all these things shall be added.

We ask an interest in your prayers.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, March 12, 1912.

Editors Herald: Having been so often blessed by the precious food the dear HERALD weekly brings to me, as to many others, I thought it would be but just for me to add my mite. I have often enjoyed the presence of the Spirit while reading the product of the other pens and minds, contained in the columns of our blessed HERALD.

Have just finished the article by John W. Rushton in late issue of March 6, page 224, "Repentance," delivered at Independence, Missouri, South Side Church, 1910. I wish to say that it seems to make the strongest appeal to me, as the clearest and best exposition of the subject I have had the pleasure of considering; it may not so appeal to others. Should love to have it in tract form, as it would surely fill a mission on earth.

Have been associated with this people since 1873; and can truly and positively state, this work is of God! Varied have been my experiences, and slow have I been in "coming up higher" as the Spirit has so often admonished, and for this, suffering has come, or the Lord has seen fit to chastise because of his great love for his children. "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."—Hebrews 12: 6. (See also verses 7-11.)

"As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent."—Revelation 3: 19. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."—Psalm 19: 7. This is verily true where the soul is willing and desirous for the conversion or change to be wrought, and such is only manifest by the soul who will work "together with God" (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8) to this end; such then receive "the testimony of the Lord" which "is sure, making wise the simple."—Psalm 19: 7. But Mr. Editors, this conversion, or change is altogether too slow in many of us! For this reason the work of the Master on earth is hindered, crippled, and retarded.

Many of us, I am fully convinced, make the mistake spoken of by James, "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass."—James 1: 22, 23. (See also verses 24, 25.) I do trust we shall each and all seek more diligently to live by every word of God. (Matthew 4: 4.)

The work here, while it is not all we could wish by far, is, we believe, holding its own, and think I can see manifest some growth in spirituality as well as an additional recruit occasionally. The times of "the fullness of the Gentiles" is about come in; so how very important it is then, that we arouse ourselves to all diligence that we be found not sleeping when the Master comes. I earnestly request the prayers of all Saints that I may fully abide, "in the doctrine of Christ."
—2 John 2: 9.

Extracts from Letters.

Josie Hehns, Sweetlake, Louisiana, writes that she has been sick for nearly six months, and much desires to be administered to, and that if Elder B. F. Renfroe or other elder sees this, will he please write at once, stating when he can come, and he will be met. She also says she is interested in getting the gospel before her neighbors, and will care for and provide a place for an elder to preach. There is one who wishes to be baptized, and many are hungry for the gospel. She wants the Saints to pray for her and hers.

News From Missions

Western Iowa.

Not having noticed any church news in your pages from the Pottawattamie District for a time, I take the liberty of intruding on the patience of your readers briefly.

Our winter has been one of those remarkably cold, snowy ones, of note in the experience of years ago, when the depths of snow enabled the populace to go across fence and lot, or stay close at home,—generally the latter.

I spent two weeks at home, with family, during the colder season. I think the railroads had the most interesting time (with the weather) of their history. It took me twenty-four hours to go from Council Bluffs to Lamoni, Iowa, a distance of some one hundred and seventy-five miles, passing over and by broken rails, and snowdrifts, and dead engines, no water in places. I think it a duty for a man to be with his family under some trying circumstances, and I speak as one having had thirty-eight years of experience as a traveling missionary, March 4, 1912, in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In all these experiences I have found our Father who art in heaven true to his promises when I endeavored to fulfill duties required. I could only desire that I had thirty-eight years more to be spent in the Lord's latter day work. But are not the missionaries' good, heroine companions to have any favorable word of mention in this connection? I believe when the balance sheets of heavenly rewards are brought into the courts of divine decision, an estimate from God will be placed on their records and sacrifices,—as Jesus appreciated the widow's offering when she "cast all her living" into the Lord's treasury. She makes the same sacrifice three hundred and sixty-five days in the year! She need not be discouraged—our Father is infinitely just and good.

I had the pleasant privilege of some pleasant association with Apostle Peter Anderson about the time of the holidays, when after his return from his lengthy European mission of quite two years he made a visit to relatives and former friends, now residents in this district. All were glad to see and hear him defending the truth. I had never before been privileged to become acquainted with him, so was much gratified. I thought I could discern in him much of what Paul advised Timothy to be. I have labored at several points in the district, as opportunity afforded during the winter. Saints seem to be firm in the faith, and they stand by the work financially.

During the month of February I made a brief visit into Gallands Grove District, met a number of the Saints, visiting at Deloit, stopping over with Bishop Hunt—a genuine hunter and pusher in the good work of the Lord. He has published two briefs of the work in the district dealing with official branch organizations and district finances, in which may be found much of interest to the readers.

Preached once at Deloit to a large congregation, and once at Dow City,—pleasing, I believe, Brother W. A. Smith, who was conducting a series of meetings. A large audience greeted us.

I visited Brother Romanan Wight, so extensively known as a faithful laborer in the field, but who, through physical disability, is unable at present to be on the firing line. I was glad to meet my former fellow yokeman in the work, but deeply regretted to find him unable now to be active in the work he loves. I was forcibly reminded of my experience of 1901 and 1902, when about all I was able to do was my duty to the General Conference work of those years.

No doubt the Apostle Paul, with many other faithful men of the past, Joseph the Martyr, and his son, would have hailed with delight the opportunity to have labored longer in the spread of the truth among men. But they, too, were faithful to God to the end. I also visited Gallands Grove Saints. The place is quite historic with the Reorganized Church in its earlier days, and even till now, as we may learn from volumes three and four of the Church History; also in SAINTS' HERALD, published years ago, "before my hair was gray." Brother Joseph H. Greenwood presides at Gallands Grove now; Brother Holcomb is his assistant priest. Brother Alexander Black has been severely ill this winter, but was convalescing in fulfillment of divine promise.

I was made to rejoice under the power and light of the Holy Spirit, as I stood in the pulpit of the three churches. I do not think I offended anyone at any of these points, for they all wanted me to come back right away. I looked upon the attendance at those places as an evidence that the Saints are alive to the interests of the work.

Evangelist C. E. Butterworth was busy; I had but one brief glance at his face, as he climbed off the steps of the train as I climbed on, and was gone; but this meeting and separation was not without hope—of meeting again.

At Dow City I met Brother H. Rudd, Raymond and Leonard Butterworth, all of whom seemed to be active; also Brother Jackson, all known to many in the church. Brother Raymond was active, we know, for we met a partner he had just entered into a life partnership with, and he was so jubilant about it that he had to look a long way down to see his path. May they never diverge from it.

The Pottawattamie district conference held at Council Bluffs, February 24 and 25, presided over by Elders John A. Hansen and J. M. Baker, of Northern Nebraska District, was a success. Harmonious all through. Brother J. Charles Jensen was secretary. Some additional members added lately. Business was transacted harmoniously. The report of the bishop's agent showed that readier response to duty financially had been observed. A number of the delegates to the General Conference were of the younger Saints, which indicated their willingness to fulfill responsibility to the Lord's work. Conference was well attended. Many of the older and experienced Saints of the district attended. Brother Daniel Butler, of Crescent Branch, was ordained a priest, and if faithful will be blessed of the Lord. At the conclusion of the conference on Sunday afternoon the funeral of Sister Lola M. Stewart was conducted at the Saints' church at 2.30 p. m. - She was a daughter of Brother and Sister Mary Wood, of Union Grove, Iowa, formerly known to many Saints of Nauvoo, and later of western Iowa. They were honest, tried Saints, and died in the faith of the Reorganized Church. They saw here the evils into which Brighamism was sinking and drawing the Saints, in time to escape this danger and also to save their family therefrom. Many, however, later, even after crossing the Great American Desert and the Rockies to Salt Lake Valley, saw that with the falsely so-called "reformation," that their baptism in Utah and beginning with the baptism out there and being ordained again was the beginning of an evil leaven of an evil lump, the planting of themselves in soil foreign to the gospel of Jesus Christ. A new plant which the heavenly Father had not planted. All baptized unto Brigham Young a purely Brighamite church. It was an assembly, but not of God; it was called "a new and everlasting covenant," but was not the one ratified by the blood of the Son of God. The everlasting covenant consecrated by the blood of the Son of God, is not to be superceded or supplanted by another "everlasting covenant," based on the doctrine of spiritual marriage, embracing polygamy, human blood atonement, maculate conception of Christ, or that he was only the son of Joseph, which if true makes Mary, the mother of his body, lie to the angel of God (Luke 1:34), and if Brigham Young was correct when he declared publicly that Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost, the active, life-giving energy by which God and his Son create all things, then the angel that visited Mary was guilty of lying and the New Testament record is based on those false statements.

I feel sad for the young men now sent out by the Brighamite church that do not know the founders of their church said these things herein cited, and have told me they thought I was persecuting them when quoting the statements of their church founders and builders. Poor "boys"! To debate with them is to just strike in the air; it is harder work than to strike real things, or meet arguments. I feel a sadness of heart when contemplating the sad, sad departure from the gospel to the way of darkness, apostasy, and woe that the people of the Brighamite church have chosen to walk in.

I met a young lady not long ago who had been lately baptized by one of those young men. I asked her if they described to her the true conditions obtaining with marriage relations in Utah; how she would be expected and taught to marry a man with possibly two or three so-called wives; live alone while he spent his time mostly with his other firstly, secondly, and so on. She thought for a moment, looking puzzled, and exclaimed, "Gosh!" in an excited way. I thought that word had to her, connected with the polygamists to the young woman's faith, a real meaning. Sad, sad! That young, innocent lives have to be for ever cursed!

Brother John R. Lentell, the missionary with me to this mission, is energetic and active, and has no reason whatever to be discouraged. I trust he may persevere in the holy calling faithfully to the end.

A series of two weeks' services are being concluded here under the management of the branch officers—Brother Davison in charge. Brother Joseph Arber and the writer were the preachers. Some, no doubt, will be baptized ere the close of the effort. A good interest is being manifested and the attendance is quite good. The services at Council Bluffs closed on Sunday evening, the 10th inst. Brother Joseph Arber baptized two persons during the series of meetings.

Brother Lentell was at Loveland and an interesting series of meetings was on, among those mostly not of our faith.

The interest was good; I preached for him there two evenings, and the house was full, and notwithstanding the late HERALD editorial on sermons long and short, I talked one evening one and a half hours and some said they could have listened for another hour! But ordinarily I do not favor long sermons. My theme was God's unchangeability respecting the accomplishment of his purposes, continued revelation, and the dealings of God here and hereafter with the impenitent. How infinite justice will not rob infinite mercy. (See Deuteronomy 8:5; Leviticus 26:18-23; Psalm 94:10; Luke 12:47, 48.) All of these scriptures show that our Father in heaven does not punish his creature, man, without showing to man his right to punish, the reason and the degree of infinite justice required in a given case, and that in his infinite love he reforms the sinner. Thus God vindicates himself from the unjust charge of vindictively punishing man without consideration of the degree of heinousness that attaches to any given case; showing also the falsity of the indiscriminate deal that is so out of reason and that makes so many turn away from God among the thinking men of our age. To our mind more should be said by our ministry along this line, but never forget to impress all that all sin done that is not repented of till punishment comes will be justly punished. In harmony with the ever loving will that the sinner be reformed this will be done. The infinite One punishes but the one punished is finite. The Judge of all the earth will do right. Many have not outgrown the blindness and error of the Dark Ages on this subject. The gospel will correct the minds of men here as on other subjects where error blinds if preached as it teaches and not as is too often done by many who have the false idea and then seek to pervert the plain word and say it means as they say, to bolster the error.

Mr. Editor, I did not mean to put so many sermonets into this communication, but this we may learn, that error stalks abroad yet with dark, unreasonable perversions. Error and human dogma must be tested by the truth exposed and the light of truth fades them as the elements do the mists, into the unreality that they are. On the whole our work is slowly onward, the light of truth enlarging to its field and drawing the honest to its enlightening banner. Western Iowa is inviting the light still; may it shine brighter and brighter till the perfect day and the church militant becomes the kingdom triumphant.

Hoping for a successful and profitable conference, one that shall set the church further into the advance.

Yours in the gospel,

COLUMBUS SCOTT.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 14, 1912.

Nodaway.

It has been long since I have seen anything in your columns from the Nodaway District. I have waited and waited for some more able writer to essay the task, and none having done so, I will make the effort, acting upon the suggestion of our worthy district president, Brother T. A. Ivie.

Nodaway District is still on the church map, though during the last two years we have lost quite a number of our members by letters of removal. Brother I. M. Ross and wife and Earl Ross and wife moved to Knobnoster; Brother Peter Anderson, wife, and three children to Cameron; Brother James Schofield, wife, and son to Lamoni, Iowa; Brother J. L. Gunsolley, wife, and five children to Eldorado Springs, Missouri; Brother James Thomas, wife, and five children, Brother Frank Hawley, wife, and two children to Fort Scott, Kansas; Brother Eber Hawley, wife, and three children to Lamoni Stake; and just now, as I write, I am informed that Brother J. T. Ford has purchased a farm near Kingston, Missouri, and intends to move this spring to his new home, which will move eight more members. Notwithstanding all this, we are striving to keep the banner of King Immanuel raised to the breeze in all of the places in the district that we can. We also lost Brother R. F. Hill, wife, and three children by letter to Saint Joseph Branch. Death, also, has claimed some of our members from time to time.

Through the good work of the Sunday school, aiding the parental efforts, we are gathering in the children, also others who may chance to be influenced by the preaching of the gospel and the lives of the Saints. The lives of the Saints count for much in making the preaching of the gospel effective.

It is too sad to see Saints deport themselves in a way unbecoming the name we bear, or to see those who once were in the light and able to bear a strong testimony to the divinity of the latter day work, turn away to the vain things of the world and fall into lust, etc., and become darkened in mind and fight against the work and counsel of God.

Through the experience of nineteen or twenty years, and having come out from the world that is full of religion (?) and fought my way, so to speak, into the church or kingdom of the living God, and by the testimonies that have come to me from God through the struggles of these years, the kingdom of God shines out in intense brilliancy, as compared with the kingdoms of men of churches of the day.

I am more than convinced now, as I look back over the struggles of these twenty years, upon the manifestations of God to me through prophecy, dreams, visions, and a study of God's unchanging law, and his communications to his people through his present-day prophet, that this is the work of God and will prove to be, as Paul says in Romans 1:16. And I perceive that, through the study and comparison of God's law, as given and preserved through the ages and as given to-day, and the light and manifestations of God that comes to the true student of his word, the language of David in Psalm 19:7 is true, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." So I am more than thankful that God permitted me to hear and know the gospel, and assisted me to obey the same, and I can say that I have been a busy man, doing what has been given to me to do, and to keep myself in the straight and narrow way, to work for my Master, and to keep myself in working order. One who is engaged in the work of God has no time or right to give himself over to the work of darkness, or to busy himself with the vain things of the world. But as Paul says in Romans 12:1: "That ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service"; this we should do.

A clause in my patriarchal blessing, given under the hands of Brother H. Kemp, gives me comfort and courage: "Blessed art thou because of the righteous desires of thy soul and the strong desire, begotten in thee through obedience, to keep the commands of God, for in this thou hast been blessed and thou shalt still be blessed with greater blessings in the future than in the past." And again: "Thou shalt triumph over all through Christ the Savior, and when the time shall come for thy change thou shalt pass through it with joy and rejoicing in God, and through the means prepared of Him from before the foundation of the world. Thou shalt come forth in the resurrection of the just and be clothed with immortality and be crowned with eternal life in the kingdom of Christ, and in this glorious condition the avenues of light and life shall open up before thee until thou shalt receive a fullness of Christ and be crowned with the blessings promised to the children of God, worlds without end." So dear brethren, I try to labor on cheerfully, willingly, and with pleasure in this latter day work, endeavoring to lay aside all weakness and imperfectness, and live true to the covenant made with our heavenly Father when I entered the waters of baptism.

According to the interpretation of a vision which I beheld some thirteen years ago, I have seen myself occupying seven or eight different positions among the lesser duties of this work, at one time, such as priest and book agent of branch; superintendent of district Sunday school, and superintendent and librarian of the local school; secretary and recorder of district, etc.; and other places, changing according to circumstances. According to prophecy, as the days come and go, other duties and greater responsibilities are placed upon us as we prove faithful and active, being humble and prayerful, and placing ourselves in a condition that the Lord can use us.

Our last district conference was held at Guilford, February 3 and 4. The stormy weather on Saturday prevented many from attending, but a good spiritual time was had. All seemed to enjoy themselves. Brethren Peter Anderson, A. C. Silvers, and William H. Kelley of the missionary force, were in attendance and preached some very instructive sermons. Brother Anderson seems like home folks. He is remembered and ever will be, by the older Saints, for the work done by him several years ago. I also love to hear Brethren Silvers and Kelley tell the gospel story.

The Guilford Branch is getting along fairly well. We look for a larger and better attendance at Sunday school and other services when spring opens up. Brother W. H. Ivie and son Bert moved to our town last fall, and we learn that Brother R. M. Jeffries and family, also W. T. Ross and family will move here this spring. We welcome all who may come, and will help swell the working strength of the Lord's cause.

Any of the Saints desiring to locate in this part of Missouri, and who would be willing to pay from $65 to $125 per acre for farm land, write to the undersigned at Bolckow, Missouri, or to Brother T. A. Ivie, Guilford, Missouri, and we will give you all the information we can. Guilford is a thriving little village of about four hundred population, surrounded by a rich, fertile soil. We have on hand a few farms that would sell, perhaps by next spring, as it is getting so late that one could not get possession this spring, they being rented now for another year.

The Saints of the Sweet Home Branch keenly feel the loss of Brother J. T. Ford and family from their midst, and as a token of appreciation of her labor and work as organist of the Sunday school, Religio, and branch, the Saints of the branch presented Sister Lillie Ford with a Bible.

From conference Brother Silvers went to Rockport to hold a meeting, and Brother W. H. Kelley went to Sweet Home Branch to hold a meeting. Brother Peter Anderson went home, to Cameron, Missouri.

The Sunday school work in the district has not yet reached up to the full standard of excellence. The home department work is very meager; only one school has a cradle roll; the library work is an infant yet, but is showing some sign of growth. The past year we lost out on an institute of the Sunday school work, owing to bad weather. Brother Aleck Jensen is district superintendent, and Alma Nelson, secretary.

Our prayer is that all will work in harmony with each other and with the law governing the house and kingdom of God, and all be found valiant workers in the Lord's work.

Your brother in the gospel,
W. B. TORRANCE.

Jerusalem, Palestine.

The work in this ancient and historic city is gradually growing, and we are still striving to instruct the Saints in the requirements of the gospel of Christ. It has also been our privilege to present the gospel to many of the natives, Brother Solomon Njeim acting as dragoman, or interpreter. Missionaries of the different denominations have also attended the services; two of their number, who are natives, have manifested some interest. But the American missionaries have made it their business to visit the homes of those who were attending our services and try to dissuade them; they have met with only a partial success. A few weeks ago three native (Arabian) women who were ill requested administration. I complied with their request, and one of them received the blessing instantly. She has attended the services several times since, and may yet be one of us. The other two we have not heard from since. They have chosen to walk in the path of the "nine." Three have applied for baptism: a Mr. Joseph Daher, Mrs. Solomon Njeim, and their daughter Olinda. The Jordan was overflowing when they applied, and as Olinda will not be home from school till the beginning of April, the baptism is deferred until then.

We have had a very mild winter. The "early rains" were unusually copious this season. Then we had about a month of dry, sunny weather; but it has started to rain again. Yesterday it rained all day. Surely the words of the prophets are being fulfilled, and the land is being prepared for the return of Jacob's scattered sons and daughters. True, the general appearance of the land presents a decidedly forbidding aspect at the present time. However, this remark is true only of land that is not cultivated. It has been said that it is not true that Palestine is "blossoming as the rose." True, Palestine does not; for, Palestine has not yet been cultivated. But those portions of the land that have received some little attention along this line, conclusively prove that Palestine is capable of being turned, not to "a fruitful field" only, but into a veritable garden. However, it is not the mere fact that the uncultivated soil is barren, that gives such repulsive appearance to the landscape, but the ruins of cities, towns and villages, that meet one's gaze as he "views the landscape o'er"; coupled with the long stretches of what appears to be solid rock, seem to force the conviction upon us, that Palestine's glory is gone for ever; and that the Psalmist's hope and prayer, "that glory may dwell in our land," and his prediction that, "The Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase," are so much vanity and folly. Not so. For those barren and craggy hills are well calculated for beautiful landscape gardens. In fact, naturally and artificially terraced portions of them are already under cultivation; olive and other trees seemingly growing, in some places, on the solid rock. But those long stretches of rock, which lend such forbidding appearances to the whole (?) surface of the land, are only a layer varying in thickness from a few inches to a few feet. Underneath is a rich, oily soil, which testifies that the ancient records concerning the fertility of the land, are true; and that its future possibilities are immeasurable. I do not mean, however, that there is no solid rock in Palestine, for it is here in plenty. But I mean the spreading bed of rock which contains so many secrets tending to the future glory of the land once "flowing with milk and honey." While lying waste and desolate, "enjoying her sabbaths," she, also, was gathering and conserving her strength and richness in her rockbound conservatory; and no man knew it. Perhaps the following statement said to have been made by Professor Richard Gottheil, of Columbia University, and Director of the American School of Archæology in Jerusalem, may be of interest. He says:

"The soil of Palestine is peculiar. It is remarkably fertile, as the primitive methods of cultivation show. If so much can grow as does grow with the mere scratching which the ground receives, how much might be produced if western methods were employed? I have seen trees growing where there was absolutely no dirt visible, but in some way the roots had reached the soil and they had obtained a foothold, which enables them to bear fruit.

"But what is more remarkable still is the fact that there is in the rocks which one sees on these hillsides, chemical properties which correspond with those ingredients in the best fertilizers, and these rocks decompose from time to time, so that which seems so forbidding from an agricultural point of view is really going back to the soil as manure. There is an institution in Jerusalem, founded to give work to poor Hebrews, whose manager actually pounds up the soil, not waiting for it to decompose, and he produces very fine crops as a result of this mixture. Several cases might be cited where hillsides may be made to bear, not exactly forests, but a sufficient number of trees to prove my contention that a great future awaits this country when conditions now prevalent are changed; and they will be changed; a new spirit is in the air, and in the government as well."

We regret to say, however, that the new government has not made better conditions for the Hebrews. Indeed, hundreds of young men have left the country because the government is forcing them to join the army or pay 50 liras, or about 218 dollars, for their freedom. Poor Hebrews can not produce the required sum, so they seek refuge under flags other than the Star and Crescent.

I notice Brother Pitt complains of a statement made by us in a letter written to Brother R. M. Elvin. Said brother had kindly sent us valuable literature, and in acknowledging their receipt, we took pleasure in mentioning a few items of interest with regard to the work in Jerusalem. In the prayer and testimony meeting held on the previous Thursday, both Sister Jenkins and myself received the gift of prophecy, or perhaps, I should say the gifts of prophecies. In mentioning it, we did not consider it necessary to specify, as the nature of the gifts was amply set forth in the words, "The promises were good. The Carr family here were promised great blessings; . . . An Arab brother who was present was also spoken to." Moreover, the statement complained of was modified by the words, "so far as we know." We certainly had no idea of casting reflection on the goodness of God to our brethren. God forbid. We are sorry to learn, however, that, "Some of the Saints forget that the gifts of faith, wisdom, healing, and other spiritual gifts are just as much the gifts of the Spirit as are the gifts of tongues or prophecy." I believe a frequent reading of Doctrine and Covenants 46: 4-8, and 1 Corinthians 12: 1-11, would help their memory considerably.

Brother Purfurst was with us for a few days the end of January, and we were glad that, at last, he had arrived. He left for Jaffa, Haifa, and other northern points on the first of February.

Peace be to the Saints in Zion,
Peace be to the church abroad,
Peace be to the brethren always,
Peace, sweet peace, the gift of God.

Your brother in Christ,
REES JENKINS.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

On this cold, windy, wintry morning of the 20th, with the green grass in sight, and with not even a bit of snow to adorn the landscape (showing us how uncertain are all mundane things), we are once more called upon to record the unexpected passing away of several of the Saints since the advent of March.

Sister Mary, wife of Brother Farrow of the south side, a prominent Saint here, eighty years of age, died on the eve of March 1. Sister Adaline F. DeTray, sixty years of age, died on the 3d. Mr. J. J. McCarthy, forty years old, died of heart failure (as did also Sister DeTray), his obsequies taking place at Brother C. D. Carson's rooms. Brother George White, seventy years old, died at the Sanitarium March 8, of senility. Sister Emma Chappelow, aged sixty-nine, died of pneumonia, funeral services at the south side chapel. Brother David W., the nine-year-old son of Brother C. E. Sterrett, of diphtheria, went to sleep on the 17th. Mr. James S. Murdock, brother of Sister Ralph G. Smith, suffered his last pain on the 18th, from a very sudden attack of heart disease, being nearly fifty years of age. Last evening we heard of the passing away of Sister Mary Tiborghien, aged sixty-nine, who recently, with her husband and several children, moved here from Kansas City to cast in their lot with the Saints of Zion.

A few of our beloved brethren and sisters are on the sick list, suffering from the grip, pneumonia, typhoid, etc., but we are happy to note many are well on the way to recovery and have been the recipients of God's love and mercy through the administration of the elders.

Owing to the near approach of General Conference there is much of interest to the Saints, and also there are a few items of general interest that we may mention.

The Twelve are filing in through the snowdrifts abroad, and, it may be many and varied obstacles, to do work for the Master, and for a short time the Saints will again rejoice together in joyful and uplifting association.

Following is an item or two from the Evening Sentinel, called by some "the official paper of the town":

"Little Paul May, five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles May, of Tahiti, was lately en route to the home of his grandfather, Mr. Shakespeare, of Lamoni. . . . There is talk of the Saints erecting a three-story business and office building here this summer, on the lot south of the post office."

Considerable stir and interest have attached to the convention of the stake Sunday school association; also that of the stake conference, which were held on the 8th and 9th inst. at Central Church, Kansas City. The preachers and speakers, whose voices lately, like a trumpet, have sounded forth the principles and the glories of the old Jerusalem gospel, have as usual been appreciated. They were Brethren J. W. Rushton, S. S. Smith, J. W. Peterson, J. C. Foss, Peter Anderson, W. H. Garrett, U. W. Greene, and E. L. Kelley, who on the 18th called the people together yet once more, instructing them on the Order of Enoch.

The social features of the church life have not been neglected. The little Sunshiners and the big church choir, also the Gym Athletes have been wide-awake with their entertainments, and none the less the other auxiliaries; the Sunday school, the Ladies' Aid, the Religio, and the Womans' Auxiliary, which presented on the 17th another instance (by discussion and readings and reports) of the lives and devotion of the mothers in Israel in their all-important work for the Master.

There have been a few baptisms and blessings, and we can say "all things" have been done in the spirit of love and peace. As the gentle Whittier says:

"Let me find in thy employ
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self 'to love be led,
And to heaven acclimated
Until all things, sweet and good,
Seem my natural habitude."

Conference Minutes.

KIRTLAND.—District conference convened at Akron, Ohio, March 9, 1912, at 10 a. m., R. C. Russell, F. J. Ebeling, and C. Ed Miller presiding; J. A. Becker and C. B. Keck, clerks. Statistical reports were read as follows: Akron 118, gain 12; Conneautville 39, gain 2; New Philadelphia 132, gain 9; Sharon 106, gain 3; Temple 133, gain 22; Uniopolis 16, gain 2. Report from Cleveland referred to officers of said branch for correction; no reports from Baldwin or Youngstown branches. A motion was passed providing that the priesthood reports required to be read in the conference be those coming through the district president and the local quorums. By resolution, a penalty of losing their licenses was placed upon all members of the local priesthood failing to report during a period of two years. C. Ed Miller was reelected district president; J. LINDSEY.—Nathan Lindsey was born in 1832 in southern Illinois and died February 3, 1912, at Onawa, Iowa. At the age of five his parents moved to northern Illinois. In 1859 he was ordained an elder. He was sent out on a mission through Iowa and Illinois. In 1866 he married Miss Susan J. Mefferd, near Woodbine. To them were born twelve children, seven now living. G. W. Lindsey, Mrs. E. J. Emerson, E. C. Lindsey, Mrs. E. E. Stone, Mrs. Susie Baldwin, Mrs. Elmer Davis, Lena C. Lindsey. He died devoted to the faith. He was laid to rest in Onawa Cemetery. Funeral sermon by Elder Hutchins, of Little Sioux, Iowa.

SHOEMAKER.—Clarence Sprague Shoemaker, little son of Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Shoemaker, was born October 22, 1902, in Beardstown, Illinois, and passed peacefully away to the paradise of God on Friday, March 15, 1912, after a severe attack of scarlet fever, aged 9 years, 4 months, 22 days. He was baptized by S. J. Bartlett, November 19, 1911. Besides his parents, he is survived by two sisters, Leah and Carletta. He was quite a little helper in programs, always aiding in both singing and readings. He was everyone's favorite, for his truthfulness, generosity, and sunshine. Interment at City Cemetery.

KEEGAN.—Sister Amelia Lurana Keegan, wife of Mr. Frank Keegan, passed away at the hospital in Oakland, California, where she was undergoing treatment for cancer on March 10, 1912, at the age of 42 years, 1 month, 9 days, leaving a husband, an aged mother, two brothers, and three sisters. The funeral was on the 6th, from the Oakland church, where she loved to go for worship in her life. It was largely attended, the floral offering was most beautiful, all in keeping with her pure-minded, saintlike life. The consoling prayer was by Bishop Parkin and the sermon by Elder Terry. Doctor Bush's choir furnished appropriate music. "Beyond the gates of Paradise" was sung by soloist Harry Tupper.

DEAL.—Sarah A. Jones was born April 8, 1858, at Putman, Iowa; married to James H. Deal February 12, 1880. To them were born three children, Oscar, of Logan, Iowa; Mrs. Clara Rees, of Julesburg, Colorado; and Oral, of Creighton, Nebraska. She was baptized into the church by Elder W. A. Smith June 8, 1906, at Woodbine, Iowa. She was faithful to her covenant and was loved by all. Many can say her example has been a blessing. She was a faithful companion, loving mother, and true friend. Passed from earth March 10, 1912, leaving husband, three children, six grandchildren, three brothers, and two sisters. Funeral services at church in Woodbine; sermon by Elder Fred A. Fry; services in charge of S. B. Kibler.

Editorial

IS IT AN ANOMALY?

There are three concurring bodies known as quorums in the church, holding in point of decision on important things concurrent jurisdiction, each understood to be the equal of either of the others, to be overruled in judgment by a concurrence of two, ruling by the principle of the majority. The church is concluded in the belief of direct revelation; that is, that the Lord by revelation directs when he deems it essential as to the faith of the organization and the conduct of the church in its various parts.

This revelation when originating with the Lord is understood to be communicated by him to the church through some particular channel of communication designated, appointed, and understood as to whom it is by the body. It is understood further that provision exists by which that when the wisdom of the body or any portion of it seems to be at fault and insufficient to the performance of the duty or duties required by the emergency, appeal may be made to the Lord through the specific channel known and accepted by the body to whom it is understood answer will be made, if the wisdom of the Lord so directs.

It is also understood that whenever the specific individual through whom communications known as revelations are given to the church, either by initiative on the part of the Lord or in answer to appeals under the stress of necessity, the revelations vouchsafed do not reach the church, as commands or directions to become a rule of action until they have passed the inspection of the three quorums referred to, i. e., the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventy.

There was a rumor current after the death of the Prophet and the Patriarch, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, that owing to the onerous burden laid upon the Twelve and the Seventy by the preaching of the gospel abroad, precluding the easy convening of these bodies for the purpose of counsel and definite action a separate body consisting of fifty high priests, chosen from among the body of the priesthood, who were to constitute a quorum to which revelations were to be submitted for examination and report for the action of the general church. Whether such a body existed or not, so far as the writer knows no authentic account of such organization appears in the published history of the church, nor is it known so far as accessible history shows whether, if such a body was appointed, it was done by the direction of the Lord. But whether such a body was or was not chosen and appointed does not affect the subject matter of this article.

If revelations are received and are submitted to the consideration of the quorums, they must pass a serious examination, and it is presumed that each member of the respective quorums acts according to his convictions in the premises and when the consent of the three bodies is obtained the revelation may then pass to the body for general acceptance, to become a rule of action.

We do not write to find any fault with what we believe to be the order instituted for the safeguarding of the church. It seems right and just to guard against imposition upon the body, either by ambitious men or unscrupulous spirits, working through whom whose agency they may control.

There are about four hundred separate organizations in the church, known as branches, existing in districts and stakes and isolated parts; that is, separated from continuous association with other bodies of sufficient number to constitute a district or stake organization. In each of these four hundred bodies having separate organization and existence prayer and testimony meetings are held in which each and every member is supposed to have equal right of speaking as he may be moved and is desirous to be heard. In many, if not all, of these various bodies, manifestations of the Spirit occur, it being considered that the Spirit may speak through whom he may, under the apostolic idea that there are differences of manifestation but it is the same Spirit, as stated in the 12th of 1 Corinthians, and 4th of Ephesians. In the latter citation there are helps and governments named with the other manifestations.

There is no possibility, so far as known to the writer, for the officers of these meetings held so widely as they are, to predict beforehand the kind of manifestation which may be presented, nor can they dictate to the individuals composing these bodies what they shall say when they presume to speak under the influence of the Spirit. The writer does not propose to find fault with this existing condition of things, but the inquiry is forced upon him; whether these several manifestations thus given, possibly for the direction of officers of the church, for reproof, against what may be supposed to be existing that needs reproof, admonition as to the duties of various officers and declarations of specific commands to the people of the church, are not supposed to be subject to presentation to these three quorums of the church for examination, as to either their genuineness or as to their being in harmony with the already existing rules and regulations resulting from revelations by which the church is governed.

Here is an anomalous condition; revelations received through the accredited channel must be submitted to examination, but revelations, prophecies, tongues, interpretations of tongues, or exhortations, given in any of the branches of the church may affect the faith of the church, already considered as the faith of the church and held by the consensus of opinion by the great majority of the priesthood, may attack the public conduct of the constituted officers of the church, sometimes called "the leaders of the church," or may present an opposition to the expressed conclusions of these constituted officers, called "the leading men of the church," and they pass current among the membership as revelations from the Lord; thus taking rank with those which have been received through the accredited channel, submitted to the quorums for examination as provided in the organic law, to prevent imposition; and those through whom they come pass under the name of prophets, whether they be men or women, and in the minds of many sometimes take the place in directing the affairs of the church, local or general, of already existing rules or revelations asked for and publicly accepted by the body.

Sometimes these manifestations are made the basis of views expressed by individuals, in seeming if not real opposition to the views of officers in the church, called and ordained to act in specific callings for the church, by reason of which doubt and distrust result.

The object of this article is to inquire; whether this is not an anomaly. Why should supposed revelations to one class of officers through whom it is understood the Lord may reach the church by revelation be subjected to such careful and close scrutiny to prevent imposition upon the body and those of another class of individuals, not called or ordained to such duty, be taken as the equivalent of that which has been received and agreed to by the action of the body, as the right rule of action? Is it what would be called in the political parlance of the age "a square deal"?

Archæology.

Do not think that the ignorance which confronts every movement toward progress is confined to those who do not know books, and who have never had the advantage of education. The unlettered man is usually eager to learn. He realizes that the sooner he finds out what more prosperous men know, the sooner will he bridge the gulf that yawns between him and them. To get new ideas, to learn things, that is what he craves to do more than all else.—Selected.

Try first thyself, and after call in God; for to the worker God himself lends aid.—Euripides.

THINGS AS THEY ARE---SHOULD BE---AND OTHERWISE.

It is to be feared that we are too often too greatly interested in our neighbor's affairs and personal conduct, and set ourselves too seriously about rectifying his thoughts and conduct by hedging him around about with the prohibitions, "Thou shalt not do this; Thou shalt not do that." We frequently busy ourselves in striving to set others right, in our own way of thinking, when the possibilities may be that we ourselves are thinking and doing at a divergence from the ways our neighbor thinks we ought to walk in.

A man may take an ordinary telescope, and looking through it from the little end, notice that he sees things apparently nearer to him. One who is unaccustomed to the use of the telescope could easily mistake the distance between himself and the object looked at, and underestimate that distance, the things appearing closer to him than they really are. If the same person should turn the telescope and look at the same object from the big end he would, in like manner, be likely to overestimate the distance between the object and himself, if he were unaccustomed to the use of the instrument.

It is something like this looking at our neighbor's thoughts and conduct. A man is neither lost nor saved because his neighbor, John or James, uses tobacco in some form, swears when he gets angry, occasionally drinks a glass of beer, wine, or whisky, feeds his horses corn instead of oats, or does things of a like kind. If the man himself abstain from the things which he objects to in his neighbor and does right things himself without regard to what his neighbor does, that is the source of his salvation, so far as such things tend to a man's salvation.

But because a man may be doing all the proper things which should mark a man as being in a savable condition is no reason why he should attempt to force his neighbor to abstain from doing wrong things. We sometimes look at our neighbors' faults through the little end of the telescope and see his faults and foibles enlarged. They irritate us because they appear to be so near; and turning the telescope upon our own conduct and our own faults we see them so much smaller that they appear to us insignificant.

Quite a number of attempts have been made to force restrictive resolutions respecting personal conduct through conference, and thus establish rules such that conduct of a certain kind would become a test of fellowship in the church. We have always been opposed to the adoption of such rules. The groundwork of our opposition has been, and still is, that we teach as a fundamental, all-pervading principle, governing in human life, and as old as the first law ever enunciated from heaven, that every man,—all men will be judged at the final judgment bar of God for the things done while in the body. This all-pervading rule makes every man responsible for his own acts, without regard to the conduct of those with whom he may be associated or surrounded, and so far as can be seen by human knowledge, without regard to environment; the latter being within the purview of divine consideration only.

If what others do can not affect our own responsibility, how can what we do affect theirs? We are quite aware that a great play of words has been made upon the question: "Am I my brother's keeper?" We are equally aware that these words form a favorite text with a certain class of orators, both in and out of the church, who sometimes build up quite an alluring appearing superstructure, by which the idea is presented to us that we are neglectful of the interests of our neighbor; if we do not busy ourselves in striving to set him right, when we fancy he is wrong. It has been said by some one that you can not make saints by acts of the legislature. The making of a saint is that which prevails in the heart, and is by no means the result of enforced obedience through the dictation of others.

This gives room for the other ground of our objection, to the adoption of rules by which certain acts are to be made or would be made tests of fellowship; that is, as follows:

As a body of believers in the gospel of Christ we teach that no man can say by the Spirit that Jesus is accursed; and by the same rule, no man can say that Jesus is the Christ but by the Holy Ghost. This broad principle narrowed somewhat in application by the apostle provides certain manifestations of of this Spirit, by the power of which a man may say that Jesus is the Christ, is to be guided and governed in his membership in the church which is the body of Christ, as to his thoughts, beliefs and conduct.

Acceding to the truth of this proposition, if we are to be bounded on every side by human rule, no matter how solemnly adopted, making these rules or the doing of those things provided against as tests of fellowship in the body of Christ; what part is there left for the operation of suggestion, restraint, advice, and counsel, and encouragement or reproof of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Truth? To us the idea of putting bounds of human restriction upon us, having their source in the human estimate of conduct alone, seems to be a striking disparagement of the office-work of the Holy Spirit, and while it may leave a man without excuse it leaves him without the moving force and influence of that which is the surest and only enduring bond of spiritual fellowship, the silent but ever present influence of the Holy Ghost.

A WORD OF WARNING.

W. D. C. Pattyson is an inmate of the state hospital at Saint Joseph, under detention by the officers of the law. He is held in that institution because it appeared to the courts that he was a dangerous person to be at large, and had threatened to destroy church property both at Lamoni and at Independence.

Some years ago he burned the building of the Church of Christ (Hedrickite), situated on the temple lot at Independence, being possessed with the idea that he was sent of the Lord to remove from that ground the structure that had been put upon it. He was sent to the institute, spent two or more years there, and was released. After his release he again made manifestations significant of the fact that he was possessed of the same ideas and made threats which came to the cognizance of the police officers. He was again sent to the asylum. Last year he was released, we believe upon parole, providing he was not to visit Independence or Kansas City, to the molestation of the citizens thereof. He again made threats, and while at Lamoni was found prowling about at night under suspicious circumstances, which caused the authorities there to put a watch upon him which resulted in their finding evidence, as it was believed, that he again contemplated efforts to destroy church property. An appeal was made to the authorities here and he was remanded to the institute at Saint Joseph.

We are in receipt of a pamphlet issued by him in which he advances instruction, the idea of which he is possessed, that he is Baurak Ale, the one who is to set in order the affairs of the church, entitled to the distinction of the leader of the Aaronic priesthood, and to have charge of the monetary affairs of the church, to administer in his own right. His pamphlet is addressed to the priesthood, and he closes with the statement, that he is to launch a magazine of some kind, setting forth certain claims, and asking that money be sent him as subscriptions for said magazine, the size and terms of which will be presented in due time.

The officers of the church have no assurance of this man's calling whatever. He is not a member of the church, and it seems but proper and right for us to state in reference to him that those who may choose to send him money for his proposed magazine are at liberty to do so, but so far as we have an understanding of the matter, it would be a folly and waste of money. He seems to set store by the idea, as he asserts it, that there is no one of the lineage of Aaron to act in the office of the bishop in the church, and that therefore there seems to be an opening for him to present his ideas and proofs, that he is the one called to this important office.

It is well enough to inform our readers, that the patriarchal blessing of Bishop E. L. Kelley pronounces him to be as of the sons of Aaron, and is therefore acting within the province of his priesthood, if the fact were made authoritatively manifest. Besides this, Bishop Kelley is clearly within the province of the law, acting with counselors in the office of the bishopric as high priest ordained to that office.

This covers the ground so far as the church is concerned, without outside interference upon the part of W. D. C. Pattyson or any other. If the "Lord doeth nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets," it is clear to us that the prophets referred to are those within the pale of the church after the church has been duly organized. As a consequence the church is not at the beck and call of any of whom no divine assurance reaches the church through its legitimate appointed officers.

"WOE UNTO YOU, WHEN ALL MEN SPEAK WELL OF YOU."

It has been said by some who hold adversely to the Reorganized Church, that that body can not be the church of Christ; for the reason that said church is well spoken of and is not subject to persecution. The same class of people assert that some of the leading men of the Reorganized Church can not be what they claim to be; for the same reason, that they are well spoken of. This same class claim that the quotation, "Woe unto you, when all men speak well of you," proves their contention.

Just now and for quite a while in the past this same class of individuals have been pretty busily employed in speaking ill of the Reorganized Church, its leading men and its ministry. This is one proof that all men do not speak well of us. The Church of Christ (Hedrickite), while they may not assail leading men of the church as individuals, are quite busy in making it appear that the Reorganized Church has no standing as the church of Christ because of the transgression and evil in the early founders of the church, and what they allege as a fact, that the Reorganized Church has adopted those fallacies and evils of which they complain. They are a part of all men and they do not speak well of us. Another evidence that removes us from the fulfilling of the text used in the caption.

Last year and for some years past a part of the so-called Christian Church, under the lead of R. B. Neal, secretary of the so-called Anti-Mormon Association, has in its publications and its ministry been waging an incessant warfare against the Reorganized Church and Mormonism as a whole. Another evidence which removes us from the curse of the text.

Not long ago Brother J. F. Curtis met one Roberts, a leading light of the Non-progressive Christians, and if he represents the church of which he professes to be a member, there is another class of all men who are not speaking well of the Reorganized Church. This same man Roberts, indorsed by a congregation of the Non-progressive Christians, met Elder S. W. L. Scott in Kansas City, and also in Independence, in which the fact was again emphasized that they did not speak well of the Reorganized Church.

Just a few weeks ago, Elder E. E. Long met this same Roberts, indorsed by another body somewhere in Iowa, and it was again demonstrated that that body of believers, "non-progressive" as they are, do not speak well of the Reorganized Church.

And now the latest manifestation which helps to take us out of the sweep of the curse of the text is that Brother J. F. Curtis has held a discussion with a Baptist minister, indorsed by a local congregation of that respectful body of professed believers in Christ, holding a fourteen-session debate with him, in which it was clearly manifested that the representative of that body did not speak well of the Reorganized Church.

Last year one R. E. Grant, a man who was dis-fellowshipped from the Reorganized Church some ten or twelve years ago for good and sufficient cause, swept through the branches in the Dominion of Western Canada, under the auspices of the R. B. Neal movement, emphasizing that attitude of that body in speaking ill of the Reorganized Church, and Mormonism in general.

The same R. E. Grant, under the same auspices, is moving in Oklahoma, seeking to sow dissension among the branches of the Reorganized Church, and was met at Seiling by Elder James E. Yates, and from what we learn of that discussion we are persuaded that R. E. Grant had no words of good for the Reorganized Church, and has given us another evidence that we do not come within the sweep of the text used as a caption. If to be illy spoken of places professed believers near to the coveted favor of being called the church of Christ, then surely the adversary is busy in his work, and the Reorganized Church ought not to be afraid of the result.

Let us learn to be content with what we have, let us get rid of our false estimates, set up all the higher ideas—a quiet home; vines of our own planting; a few good books of inspiration of genius; a few friends worthy of being loved and able to love us in return; a hundred innocent pleasures that bring us no pain or remorse; a devotion to the right that will never swerve; a simple religion empty of all bigotry, full of trust and hope and love, and to such a philosophy this world will give up all the empty joy it has.—David Swing.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

"What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."—Matthew 19: 6.

Of all legally or morally binding contracts which men and women are called, permitted, or voluntarily engage in, the only partnership contemplated by the divine mind, as we view it, of an indissoluble character, is the contract or covenant between a man and a woman, commonly called marriage.

It would be a tremendous mistake to assume that all the people who have assumed this obligation, or are entering into this contract, have anything like a full conception of its true meaning or significance, or have taken any pains worth while to make a study or analysis of its importance as a road which may lead to success or failure,—failure, partial, or failure utter and complete—the open door to a paradise or a prison, from which death only may furnish release.

Under existing interpretations of the law which Christ lays down in brief, or curtailed sentence, men and women by scores and by thousands have been made to feel that their liberties, their rights, or their freedom which they through lack of information practically inaccessible to them, have innocently signed away at the altar, have been forfeited through ignorance, for which the state, and especially the church, were in a large measure responsible.

Marriage is too often a contemplation of a "fool's paradise" indulged in by many, where subsequent realities dissolve in tears of disappointment and vain regret, the dreams of a vision, sensual in its origin, venal in purpose; a "bargain counter" deal where secrecy seems almost a necessity in order to secure a desirable exchange; a mirage, dissolving under the rays of the sun of truth, or an awakening to the knowledge of law and proper conception of the true meaning of the statement, "what God hath joined."

We may attempt to throw up barriers against divorce by penal enactment or social ostracism, as you undertake to dam-n, or condemn, the mountain stream or torrent, but its barriers will prove un-availing in the end, the breakage and overflow will come,—have come, and are flooding our communities, our courts, and our churches; and while suppression from public gaze may in a minority of cases conceal facts that might prove essential to the welfare of the race, were they more widely understood, and by which remedy for the welfare and in the interests of society might be had, it can only furnish a postponement of proper diagnosis and suggestion for permanent cure.

Will we ever learn that divorces are too often a consequence, and not a cause? That sewers, though covered from public gaze, permeate the atmosphere of society consciously, or unconsciously, with their deadly poisons of discontent, inharmony, too often caused by concealment, lying, injustice, often brutal and uncompromising, defying proof of the only cause for which the church allows relief, or opportunity for a reconstructed life may be had.

"What God hath joined!" It should be a partnership, not with two, but with three, before signing the contract.

Is baptism a sacrament? so is, or should be marriage. But how do we, or can we treat offenders? Our attempts to regulate seem to grow more and more futile and abortive. Is it not time to begin to educate ourselves as to cause and subsequent cure by a prevention and enlightenment upon this all important question and as affecting the interests of the church of God?

Divorces, it ought to be conceded, in a majority of cases, let us admit, would be a grave mistake. In too many instances, couples can serve God, themselves, and humanity by a Christian forbearance and mutual recognition of the fact that none are faultless, and that a divorce would augment, rather than obliterate their troubles; but the arbitrary ruling out of court of justice; the refusal to protect the innocent from crimes not referred to in the seventh commandment of the decalogue, is, to our mind, a travesty on religion, and authorized by the superficial consideration of a "letter that killeth," as well as the ignoring of the sum total of evidence contained in the Scriptures having a just relationship and bearing upon the subject.

When the prayer of our Lord shall have had its fulfillment, "Thy kingdom come," when his throne shall be established and where "justice and judgment" can alone be established, or have its full and complete vindication, then shall the rule of responsibility of each for all his or her acts have its application, and reward or punishment be administered according to justice, mercy, and truth.

What can we do to prevent divorce in the church of Christ? Or, how shall we make our definition of Christ's real attitude before the world upon this question?

I would like to propound the question, Are we guiltless in the sight of God when the ministry, especially, become knowing parties to the crime (for the consideration of fees, the superficial delights of the social function, and fashionable delights of wedding occasions), of a union or partnership between two people whose fitness for this most important step, important, not only to themselves, but to society, and the church, has been a matter of no consideration, or serious contemplation, for which adequate physical, moral, or spiritual success no thoughtful or rational provision has been made, a transaction which involves the rights of many others than themselves,—nothing,—save the legalized indulgence right whose fruitage and harvest of want, dependency, disease, sin, and death, is not confined to the segregated and already degraded graduates whose beginnings in, or provocation or inborn inclinations to sin had their conceptions and early germinations in "respectable" environment.

Matthew 19:7, 8: "They say unto him, Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away. He saith unto them, Moses because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives," etc.

That the conditions and causes for which a separation or dissolution of association between a man and a woman might occur in Moses' day, and the conditions existing in society in our day, are widely apart, so far as relates to justice for the woman is concerned, need hardly be referred to.

Note 10th verse: "His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry."

Jesus' answer to this, marks, to our mind, an abatement of the arbitrary rendition or interpretation that has been placed upon the question by those of the truly "orthodox" faith.

"But he said unto them, all men! can not receive this saying, save those to whom it is given." "He that is able to receive it, let him receive it."

In this evidently abridged account of what Jesus is reported to have said upon this question, the rights, privileges, or even the duties of the woman are not referred to, "Putting away," under a system that permitted the "crime" of polygamy, and the abasement of women such as would not be tolerated in our day, and the right and privilege of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" in this world, where the innocent victim of fraud,—of outrageous cruelty, enforced maternity, starvation, abandonment, should by every consideration of justice and of taking into account the responsibility of men and women for their acts, be deemed another, and an altogether different thing.

In the name of all that is truly good or reasonable or just, shall we not make earnest strife to live up to the standard of an education and accomplishment that will enable us, not by fear of ostracism, or penal infliction, but by an intelligent system of instruction, to be "able to receive" and apply a higher and more practicable system of ethics in the regulation of this all important question?

Shall we commit our lives to the advocacy and practice of the undisputed doctrines of Jesus Christ, that our "hardness of heart," in this, and other matters as well, may be tempered by a union compelled by love, a partnership where disaster is forestalled by an acquaintance and understanding that each is possessed of a dowry of qualities of soul and mind, in the mutual exchange of which life partnership only can develop to its apotheosis or highest conclusion, that the man, in this holy alignment has simply doubled his capacity for enjoyment and usefulness, and that the woman has not been "given away," either to get rid of her, or to acquire material possession of the man that has been "sold" under the influences of deceptive forces which a full understanding would have forestalled, but simply because she has "enlarged" herself and her life in a double proportion, because that both, upon the whole, have equally contributed to the success of the new partnership.

To-day, under our present legal status and educational systems, a man who is known to be a hopelessly diseased degenerate—physically and morally, —whose material or financial prospects consist in an ability to borrow funds with which to procure a license, may contract marriage, or unite himself in "the holy bonds of matrimony" with a girl of age limit whose mind is far away enough from idiocy or insanity to prevent interference or observation by the law, and to propagate their species, and give employment to reformers, and gospel educators a task of "saving" people in the "orthodox" way.

By our common law, it is made "a crime to conceal a crime." What are we doing to "conceal" or prevent crime and the breeding of criminals?

"Am I my brother's keeper?" Are there laws not written in the statutes that sensible, reasonable, and enlightened people are bound to respect?

SOME EVENTS OF INTEREST.

History is made up of events as they transpire, and to make a record of them may be of great value to coming generations, as the record of past events has been to us. The impressions these events have or have had upon us oftentimes bring out more closely the real nature of the event.

"Truth is knowledge of things that are, and as they were and as they are to come," and this is history in its most comprehensive sense.

Since coming events cast their shadows before, to understand the past gives us a clearer knowledge of the present, and to understand the past and present we have the shadows that may and, no doubt will help us to prepare for the things which are to come.

Many of the events of the past have been lost to the world as history, because of not being recorded, or by being incorrectly recorded. If but one, or sometimes two, undertake to make a record of events as they are passing, much is lost, for the things that one would consider and record as important another would not notice, and for this reason many things of real importance, and that which posterity has greatly felt the need of, have never found a place on the pages of history. This has occurred because those making the record of the past did not consider these events of importance at the time, or they were omitted from history's pages because of traditional prejudice, which caused the historian to not wish those events remembered. Think of how many things are recorded by one of the New Testament historians that are not recorded by the others, and how many times we feel the need of a more complete record of certain events now mentioned there without the particulars being given which would help us to better understand that which is mentioned, and also think how much of importance would be lost had not more than one have written of those times, persons, and events.

Much of that which has been recorded is, through exploration, archæology, and the discovery of private correspondence, coming to light nearly every day, and this is welcomed with delight, because of the help it renders us in better understanding the things we already have not fully understood.

In making mention of the items of history that are herein recorded, I do so with reference to the possible effect they may have upon the conditions of the world in the near future, especially its social and religious conditions, and whatever affects these have much to do with its financial and political condition. And whatever affects any one of these conditions, to a greater or lesser extent affects the others. Our religious economy has to do with each and all of these, and the importance of an event as a result of whatever bearing it has or appears to have on our work.

GROWTH OF THE BIBLE.

The latest expression relating to the growth and existence of the New Testament is from Doctor Casper Rene Gregory, of Liepsic University, who said in his talk in this city (Des Moines) last week, "The various apostles never thought that they were contributing to the Bible, as we know it, when they wrote their various lectures and discourses now known as 'books.' The first was sort of a diary written in Arabic by Matthew, or else dictated by him."

With this agree nearly all the best informed whose writings have been published. It is the less informed who still advocate, in the face of all this vast array of information, that those apostles and historians wrote for the purpose of compilation, and that whatever else they wrote, or that was written or spoken by equally inspired men was not intended for compilation. This is all traditionary presumption as the evidence clearly proves. Then it is further assumed, in the face of the fact that there have been so many different translations, all furnishing slightly or, as in some cases, radically different readings in various parts, that what is written in the books that have been compiled can not be incorrectly translated, but that the words as they appear, and the sentences as they are formed, express just what was in the mind of God to express. This idea precludes the possibility of the author of truth revealing the fact that errors have crept in through finite agencies through whom these translations have come to us, or of giving him the privilege of correcting such errors, or of making plain what may be obscure, as must be the case or there would not be so many divergent views gathered from the same readings.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

Mr. W. R. Hampton, who recently returned to Des Moines after having spent some time as a contractor in Salt Lake City, Utah, has this to say, among other things, of his experience there, and the conclusions that he arrives at resulting from his experiences:

No matter what the people may say, or the politicians at Washington may say, the Mormons are practicing polygamy, and plural marriages are very common indeed. If you ask the men if they are not amenable to the law they will answer you in the affirmative, but state it is to the law of the church, and not to the law of the State.

I wish Des Moines would wake up to the secret work which the Mormon missionaries are doing in the city.

The visitations of these missionaries to the city has had the tendency to confuse the people by their false claim to be Latter Day Saints, and advocating the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith and the divinity of the Book of Mormon, while at the same time they are defending their iniquitous doctrine of polygamy as divine and claiming that Joseph Smith was its author, and the Doctrine and Covenants as furnishing the proof. Then when we make our visitations and claim to be Latter Day Saints we are asked if we believe in the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the prophetic calling of Joseph Smith, and sometimes before we have the time to explain the differences in the Doctrine and Covenants, and the proof that Joseph Smith always condemned the doctrine of polygamy and all that is akin to it, we are excluded; and even if we are permitted a brief conversation, we can only partly correct the reproach they have brought upon the name of Latter Day Saint and the cause represented by them. The Book of Mormon they are selling here has footnotes referring to the polygamous revelation as found in their book which they call the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, thus reflecting upon any book called by that name. Not only do they stimulate prejudice against us as a people, but they increase doubt and skepticism; first, by advocating such a corrupt doctrine as polygamy in the name of Jesus Christ; and second, by using the Bible to furnish the proof they principally use in the defense of that doctrine. Then they befoul the character of one claiming to be a prophet of God by their claim that they believe Joseph Smith to be such and then advocate that as a prophet of God he received a revelation that is used as the basis of that corrupt principle of a plurality of wives.

One of the most insidious and dangerous arguments they have used here is that, since Abraham, Jacob, David, and Solomon held authority to act for God in the priesthood, and their acts even after they entered into polygamy were acknowledged of God, why should not God continue to acknowledge the authority of Brigham Young and the ministry that followed him, even though they did enter into polygamy and it was not right,—that it could not be considered any worse for men in this age of the world than for men in ages in the past.

Their ministrations have had and will have the effect with some to lessen their respect for what the Bible claims for God, and some of his most prominent representatives of the past; and hence, to increase infidelity to the church, the home, and the laws of civilization; and the claims made by Jesus Christ that Abraham and Jacob would be seen in the kingdom of God when the wicked would be out. It has brought about disrespect for authority, both human and divine; a spirit that is expressing itself more prominently everywhere.

RURAL CHURCHES.

At the late Inter-conference Convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church held in this city last month, Professor S. C. Bronson said that denominationalism must be laid aside in the work of building up the church in rural districts. In part he said:

The day is past when you can defend your denominationalism in contending with other Christian churches for the mastery in some little overburdened community. We fraternize with these brethren in all of the relations of life and yet we allow denominational pride and jealousy to afflict some community with a half dozen churches, literally bleeding them to death instead of contributing to their uplift. And the senseless thing has ceased now to be senseless. It has become harmful and unchristian.

In agreement with the above sentiment and emphasized by it was an utterance on the same subject delivered at the same meeting by Henry Wallace, editor of Wallace's Farmer. He said:

What right has the Home Missionary Board to go into a community where there is already one church and establish another?

Reverend C. S. Adams, of the Presbyterian Church, has made a careful survey of conditions relating to the rural churches in central Illinois. He presents the following: Out of 225 churches which he examined, only 77 had increased in membership; 45 were at a standstill; 56 were decreasing in membership; and 47 buildings were vacant. He advocates for the rural districts a community church in which all who profess faith in Christ should unite, laying aside denominationalism.

All the above argues that it makes no difference what is the doctrinal belief of the people, what church organic law is represented, what ordinances are cherished, that these all are valueless as relating to one's eternal interests. It savors of this condition in my opinion: Just act the hypocrite enough to pretend that you believe that it doesn't make any difference what Jesus Christ taught, while emphatically declaring, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be saved." Does this mean to believe that such a personage existed, but it is not vital whether one believes in the work that his Father sent him to do, only so far as to die on the cross? In contradistinction with this thought is this, "This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent." Then comes this important question, "What was he sent for?" Jesus says, "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me"; and "the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me." Then he explains by saying, "I will build my church," "The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say and what I should speak," and "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." Then the Apostle John shows the importance of the doctrine in this, "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." The reader can easily conclude where our safety lies.

CHURCHES UNITE.

On the 20th of February was held, by those that classed themselves as the Protestant Evangelical Churches, what was called an Inter-Church Council, and a permanent organization effected, advocating as some of its foundation principles the following:

That the inter-church council affiliate with the federal council of the churches of Christ.

Now as to who are to represent this council, and what is to be their work:

That from the nominations the members of the Protestant Evangelical Churches of Des Moines who are members of the Y. M. C. A. shall elect annually by Australian ballot a sufficient number of educators to maintain a total membership of twenty-one.

That this board shall conduct the Y. M. C. A. and have charge of all inter-church activities, including social service, missions, evangelism, community extension, boys' work, Bible study, etc.

It will be noticed that one who is not able to pay his dues into the Y. M. C. A. will have nothing to say in this movement, and that every church thus associated is held as sponsor for the support of the Y. M. C. A. Then all "missions" and "evangelical" work to be done in Des Moines must from henceforth be under the control and subject, directly and indirectly, to the Y. M. C. A., as it is controlled by a board of this "inter-church council" composed of men who must be members of that association. Thus Protestant churches have placed themselves subject to their child, and the social conditions will be affected largely thereby. This places the churches that have entered into this council sponsor for the card table, the pool table, and other worldly sports that the Y. M. C. A. have adopted as a part of their curriculum. It is no wonder that ministers are becoming defenders of the pool hall, bowling alleys, shovelboard, and billiards, as is in evidence from an advertisement that I received this morning from which I extract.

Reverend George F. Durgin, of the Tremont Street Methodist Church, says:

I would clean out the basement of this splendid church and into that basement I would put attractions that would appeal to young people. What harm could ever come if we had a billiard room or a bowling alley and gave opportunity for enjoyment free from corrupting influences?

Reverend H. F. Evans says in justification of opening one of the church buildings of the Second Baptist Church, of Saint Louis to a gymnasium and club room in which there are bowling alleys and billiards:

We are moved to this step because we believe also in a religion of joy and of the present life. . . . The church feels the responsibility of giving every possible opportunity for the development of each side of the child's nature.

Reverend W. A. Gardner, of the Christian Church of Olathe, Kansas, has this to say in defense of pool halls:

Pool halls, properly conducted, are perfectly legitimate, and many churches and Y. M. C. As. conduct them, to say nothing of every commercial club in the country.

The Utica, New York, Daily Press has this among other things to say about the dedication of the Grace Church Men's Club House, which was dedicated to the Protestant Episcopal Church "with simple rites of service and prayer":

In the lower parlors of the club rooms yesterday afternoon (January 11) assembled Bishop Olmstead, Reverend Octavius Applegate, rector of the church, Reverend Frank Knapp, assistant rector, Honorable T. R. Proctor, J. Francis Day, E. P. Bohm, R. Seymore Hart, and M. I. Stroebel. Bishop Olmstead, assisted by Mr. Applegate and Mr. Knapp, officiated at the simple dedicatory services before the small congregation, and the building was dedicated to the social work of the Grace Episcopal Church. (The editor then tells of its furnishings. He says), The basement of the building has been converted into a regulation bowling alley. . . . The second floor is devoted to shovelboard, billiards, and pocket billiards, and proved to be one of the most popular gathering places of the evening.

No wonder that the child of these churches, the Y. M. C. A., has introduced these worldly amusements, and little wonder that men who have been under the influence of this same Y. M. C. A., as now conducted would defend these sports as healthful to their church-work.

This nonsectarian, innocent appearing, and in the past, helpful institution to young manhood, is to be forced into a position to assume control of every church, and all phases of church work,—missionary and local, even to the social services, so that when this council gets into full working order no one will be permitted to preach without his preaching being censored by this association and by their consent, or to speak in tongues or prophecy or do anything that the Spirit of God may direct unless by the consent of the Y. M. C. A., or a board selected from that body. Think of such a condition as this existing in the days of Jesus and the apostles of his day! To consider this further leads us into absurdity.

This is certainly hastening things to a climax, when there will be no such thing as a claim for any inspirational work safely promoted; all religious work must be done under the inspection of and consent to it by those who make no claim for their position higher than to be members of the Y. M. C. A., and elected by the Australian ballot. And be it known that to be a full-fledged member of the Y. M. C. A., in this city, and enjoy all its rights and privileges, you must not only be a Bible student and an athlete, but you must understand how to participate in a game of cards, pool and billiards, be able to take a hand at bowling, and not averse to participate to some extent in the social dance.
