It has the appearance that the churches fostering this council and that have been fostering the world in the church in a measure, have now said to an association having had to do primarily in the past with social and intellectual entertainment and worldly enjoyment, We now will become subject to you and promote your interests, as we expect you to promote our united interests, and subdue any encroachment upon our rights by such churches as the Catholics, Unitarians, Seventh-Day Adventists, Latter Day Saints, and Christian Scientists, with a few other minor organizations.

It must not be overlooked that this council, through its board, is to have charge of all church extension; that is, all rural communities are to be supplied through them, and opposition made to any church work not consonant with their ideas. I believe that I can see the silken cords more firmly bound about these human religious organizations, and I realize more fully the necessity of the enduement of the Holy Ghost to break these bands to reach even the honest in heart.

MINISTERIAL QUALIFICATION.

I have brought to mind a statement made by Professor Bronson in his lecture on "Rural churches," wherein he says:

We are receiving and appointing to pastoral supervision men who are absolutely untried and who know nothing at all of administering a modern church. The way to remedy it does not seem clear, in the presence of the pressing demands for men.

It is very apparent that men must be qualified to meet modern movements and reach the people with the gospel, and especially as they exist in the cities, and to effectually reach out from thence into the rural districts near by. Our demand for ministers, lack of means to meet the necessary expenses of the families and the ministry, especially in places where openings can only be secured at great expense, presents a very perplexing problem. Shall we utilize those who have by study and experience become acquainted with this class of work to associate with the younger ministry, and by so doing let wisdom be justified of her children, safeguarding both the interests of the church and those who are young in ministry? Shall we send out the young minister to learn by experience and the church suffer from the mistakes made while they are learning? or shall we assist the young minister by the experiences and association of those who have been tried, and have maintained sufficient ministerial dignity as not to have brought the church under reproach while they were defending its interests? Shall we give the use of our church buildings for the purpose primarily of developing the young minister, or shall we prepare by study and humility, with purity of heart, for the "school of the prophets" where the necessary development is to be secured and a proper recognition of divine authority is shown?

FINANCIAL SUPPORT OF THE CHURCH.

The Reverend C. S. Adams, previously mentioned, tells us that the seventy-seven churches of the Presbyterian Church that were growing paid an "average salary" of "but $837.35." I thought if our brethren and their families received that much, as an average annually, what a relief it would be to both the minister and his family, and with the same economy now used, on an average, what an additional power for pushing the work would this amount be to them.

I noticed in a recent article that the Seventh Day Adventists advocate that each member of the church give $15.00 for missionary purposes. This is either a change from their former practice of each giving a tenth of the gross receipts, or else it is that much in addition to the other.

All these suggestions indicate the insufficiency of human theories to supply, or a lack of faithfulness to the divine theory. In the case of our church, it is the latter. While they who know not their Master's will will be beaten with few stripes, what will our harvest be, who know and do not? This problem can be answered.

HEALING.

The overproduction of any commodity cheapens it. That which proves too much proves nothing. This the adversary of souls is well apprised of, hence we have advertised in several publications the healings which are said to occur, some through the efforts of the Pentecostal people, some by the Dowieites, some by the Christian Scientists, some by the Church of God, and some by the Seventh Day Adventists. Then there is the magnetic healer, the hypnotic healer, the psychic healer, the Spiritualists, the Brighamites, and Doctor Yokum of California, with his following; and have received tracts sent out by several other societies, all advocating healing by some power, and claiming that some are healed. What is almost universally claimed by all these is that God is with them by his power, either with the healer in an especial manner, or with the society or organization with which he is associated, and that therefore they are in the right way, God testifying of that fact through healing.

The mere fact of being healed proves only one thing, and that is that that which was or was thought to be sickness is gone, or the deranged condition, either of the physical, or of the mortal mind as some believe, has been corrected. The source of the power by which this has been brought about is not established. To claim that healing of itself proves the divinity of the organization represented, or the person through whom it has been accomplished, would result in proving organizations diametrically opposed to each other (and some promoting corrupt theories) to be of God, which would prove too much, just enough to destroy faith in God. Healing only when accomplished by faith, in accord with the law of God, and under the direction of the Spirit of God, establishes divinity of the gift. Too many people are like the good lady that I once knew who said: "Just so I am healed, it don't make any difference to me whether it is by God, man, or the Devil"; then should relief come, ascribe it to God with the specious plea that to be healed is good, and all good comes from God.

EMERSON A PROPHET.

On the 19th of last month Doctor B. F. Mills, formerly an evangelist, now posing as a liberalist of the unitarian type, was here to tell us that Emerson "was not so much a scientist, a scholar, a philosopher, or even a poet, in the ordinary sense of the term, as he was a prophet—that is, a messenger of divine truth." Then he tells us what that message is, which affects, to my mind, the conclusions he has arrived at. He says:

His gospel was the "Infinite of the Private Man." He taught the divinity of all men and things, and that God is in man, reconciling the world unto himself, or the spiritual constitution of the universe. He had the rare power of classifying facts of the invisible world. He taught the unity of all life. He taught evolution as the unvarying method of life. . . . He taught the final conscious union of all souls with God.

This is a commingling of Buddhism, Spiritualism, Darwinism, and Unitarianism. As will be noticed, he denies the divinity of Jesus Christ in any special sense, and that there is or ever was any necessity for the special work of the atonement, but that good is in all men and things, and through the evolutionary divine process of this good all souls would finally, and all things would finally, as the Buddhists claim, find conscious union with God, the constitutional unity and spirituality of the universe,—this is divinity.

This is another of the representations and deceptive results of what is called the higher criticism. Doctor Mills concludes his peroration on Emerson with this statement:

He was continually in the psychic state and attained the unveiled vision wherein all that is he seemed to see the glory of the Lord. As he looked over the marvelous panorama from Grey Lock Mountain, he said, "God! It is all God!" In his divinity school address he says he looked for a new teacher who shall see the shining laws come, full, not in fragmentary segments, as in our ancient scriptures. He himself was that teacher.

Blessed be the Lord, that new evangel has come, and not only truth in its fullness has been restored, but authority through which the fullness of its power may be realized, and all who desire to see the glory of God and enjoy it in their fully developed and immortalized individuality may enjoy this happy experience; but this will not be until the wicked are destroyed and this earth is freed from the curse placed upon it for man's sake, and God in his personality will make his habitation with man.

THE REDEMPTION OF THE CRIMINAL.

Reform in methods of dealing with the criminal has had many zealous advocates since John Howard accomplished his wonderful work in effecting prison reform in the eighteenth century. Great improvement has been made in different countries and along various lines. Three important contributions to modern criminal law and criminal procedure have had their origin and application in the United States. One is a system of probation applicable to both adults and minors, the second is the organization of juvenile courts, and the third is the adoption of the indeterminate sentence.

MORE REFORM NEEDED.

Yet we are far from having attained ideal prison conditions or ideal methods of handling the wrong-doer. To quote the language of Coleridge, if his satanic Majesty were to visit some of our jails to-day he would "get some hints for improving his prisons in hades." For instance, a daily paper of a few days ago contains a description by a police officer of conditions existing at present in a certain jail, from which we quote the following:

Girls in their teens, only developing into womanhood, are forced to be companions of fallen women steeped in sin and vice. Bedridden women are left practically at the mercy of lunatics, who, in turn, are looked after by a defenseless woman who is herself a prisoner. The pure and moral living, against whom no crime has been proven, are compelled, while being held for trial, to mix and come in contact with the diseased social outcasts who have fallen to the lowest depths of degradation. The surplus population in the woman's section sleep on mattresses placed in the corridors. There is no accommodation which would allow the separation of what might be termed the "undesirables" from the others.

Under such conditions the redemption of the criminal is impossible. Not only this, but the moral degradation of those for whom there would otherwise be hope is certain and complete. If this be true, the removal of these conditions is necessary, before we can consistently hope to restore the criminal to a useful place in the social structure.

THE PURPOSE OF PUNISHMENT.

In fixing the punishment for crime three principal objects should be kept prominently in mind: First, reparation to society; second, the reclaiming of the offender; third, the protection of the public.

To accomplish these objects the individualization of punishment is essential. We must consider the circumstances and conditions that surround the offender and the act committed, the nature of the offense against society, and at the same time have an eye to the protection of the community.

If at all possible the offender should be reclaimed to a position of usefulness, but there appear to be many cases, of murderers, for example, where this is impossible without sacrificing the real demands of society. In such cases society must act promptly and perhaps rigorously, excluding such offenders from all association with their fellow men.

THE PRINCIPLE THAT SHOULD GOVERN.

A comparison of the views of Brand Whitlock, novelist-mayor of Toledo, and Joseph Smith the Seer, should prove at least interesting, especially to Latter Day Saints. Brand Whitlock says:

Every prison in the land is a denial of every church in the land. They make a grim, stupendous paradox; if men believe in the churches, as they say they do, they ought to pull the prisons down; if they believe in the prisons, as they say they do, they ought to pull the churches down. . . . The money we spend for courts and prisons is very ill laid out. . . . An acceptance of the sentiment of love throughout Christendom for a season would bring the felon and the outcast to our side in tears, with the devotion of his faculties to our service.—Current Literature, 42: 654.

Joseph Smith in his "Views on the government and policy of the United States," nearly seventy years ago expressed a very similar sentiment, thus:

Petition your state legislatures to pardon every convict in their several penitentiaries: blessing them as they go, and saying to them in the name of the Lord, Go thy way and sin no more. Advise your legislators when they make laws for larceny, burglary, or any felony, to make the penalty applicable to work upon the roads, public works, or any place where the culprit can be taught more wisdom and more virtue, and become more enlightened. Rigor and seclusion will never do as much to reform the propensities of man, as reason and friendship. Murder only can claim confinement or death. . . . Abolish the cruel customs of prisons (except certain cases), penitentiaries, and court martials for desertion; and let reason and friendship reign over the ruins of ignorance and barbarity.—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 723, 725.

WHAT ONTARIO IS DOING.

Since abolishing the Mercer Reformatory, two hundred and twenty-five girls have been dealt with at Toronto. Every one of them has been placed in a good home and away from the former environment. Of these girls eighty-five per cent are making good. As Premier J. P. Whitney, of Ontario, says, "It's a very poor home that is not better than an institution."

But perhaps more bold in conception and far-reaching in its consequences is the prison farm scheme at Guelph, instituted at the instance of Provincial Secretary Hanna. This represents an attempt to reform the criminal by treating him with every possible kindness and consideration, and giving him the maximum liberty that can be given a prisoner.

This scheme has received the approval of prominent sociologists in the United States and England. Doctor Gilmore, warden of the Ontario Central Prison, claims it to be not only a boon to the prisoners but also to society at large, and in addition he advocates the adoption of the indeterminate sentence. The indeterminate sentence would keep him until he was fit to return to society. It would place his future in his own hands.

One of the works on which the prisoners at the Guelph farm are employed is getting out stone and crushing it for roadway purposes. This gives useful employment and at the same time prevents complaints of the competition of prison labor.

ONTARIO SCHEME ADOPTED IN ENGLAND.

The success of the prison farm as conducted at Guelph has been so marked that the prison authorities in England have taken a step in that direction by the recent opening of the Camp Hill prison at Parkhurst. This new prison is to be conducted along the same lines as the Ontario prison farm. Its chief features are outlined in the following paragraph:

The new prison has an ideal situation as to air and environment. Some of the rules to govern the prison are quite as advanced and radical as those employed at Guelph. For instance, the convict who shows that he is particularly hungry and who conducts himself well, will be allowed additions to the ordinary prison diet. By good behavior in prison the men will qualify for certain gratuities which they can spend at the prison canteen, can transmit to friends outside, or can have held in trust until they are free to leave the prison gates. The men will dine together in groups of twenty-five to forty, and will be allowed to converse. A feature will be made of the prison library as a reforming agency. Work at the outset will be provided in the clearing of eighty acres of forest. When this is done the principal occupation will be gardening. The prison consists of four two-story blocks and will accommodate forty prisoners. The cells are roomy, lofty, and well ventilated, and communicate with open corridors. Cell windows can be opened and closed at will. Baths of hot and cold water are provided.

THE FINAL VICTORY.

The contest for the suppression of crime seems hitherto to have been a losing one, but in such methods as these lies our strongest hope for final victory, for the bringing about of millennial conditions, and the redemption of humanity. Let the good work go on until these grave questions affecting the well-being of society shall receive their final settlement.

Specific Instances of God's Blessing in Toronto.

As it is now some time since I penned anything for the Canadian column, and as the march of events has been both rapid and resistless, it seemed almost a species of ingratitude to sit down to enjoy the many and interesting letters from all parts of the country in your valued columns, and to contribute little or nothing ourselves in reply, so to speak.

But upon this occasion my contribution will not deal as formerly with the work of our esteemed bishop in the Princess Theater; as my partner in life does not go out in the winter months, and being lonely at night, I usually sit with her, reading the HERALD and the church books, etc. My letter to-night, therefore, will take an entirely new departure; for I believe that our numerous readers will like to hear somewhat about the detail that does not come under the public eye or the public notice; for the same reason that the biography of some good, or great, or prominent man is always the more entrancing and interesting when it is written by the man's wife, or mother, or by some other member of the family who was formerly in daily intercourse with him; and who, therefore, was a witness to that part of his character and psychology which was hidden or unknown to the public gaze or the public knowledge.

Hence, I highly esteem the "Lucy Smith" life of Joseph Smith the prophet; for here we get those little sidelights and touches upon his inner disposition and makeup which even the most labored and elaborate church history would fail to present us with; such as his calm, complacent attitude when that colonel or officer of the troops came with a warrant for his arrest on a certain morning and found him quietly seated at his table with the best of all books open before him, or his divinely scathing denunciation of those prison guards when, with all the fearlessness and authority of a Daniel or of an Elijah, he arose and rebuked their wickedness and their profanity in terms that for the time being completely, effectually, and utterly reversed their positions, making him their judge and they the condemned convicts—his prisoners.

Speaking, then, of this many-sided city of Toronto, and when we come to know the more hidden and sacred side of the Saints' lives and characters, when "they that feared the Lord spake often one to another,"—we discover, perhaps for the first time in our lives, that even for years past in this cosmopolitan city of Canada the Lord has been silently but ceaselessly blessing his servant the bishop and his servants the elders by confirming their words with signs following, as he had previously promised them in Doctrine and Covenants, page 92.

For instance, some time ago a lady informed me that passing along one of Toronto's streets or avenues in the west end, carrying in her arms a sick child, and almost ready to faint with fatigue and exhaustion Elder Evans, who was passing along on the other side of the road, offered kindly to carry the child for the lady until she had reached her home. Speaking to the child's mother upon their way about the Lord's everlasting gospel of restoration, the lady invited Brother Evans to see her husband, and, if he would, to administer to the child, which was suffering severely from running ulcers, having been given up by two physicians, who informed the distracted parent that her little girl was simply "wasting away" and that nothing possible could be done for her.

Elder Evans at once administered, commending the little mite to our heavenly Father's notice and care, and lo! within three hours not a trace of the running sores or ulcers could be found; the result being that in less than one month both the father and the mother of that little one had yielded obedience to the everlasting gospel.

Another man, whose friend was an inveterate enemy to the truth, had been persuaded by one of our members to come "just for once" and hear Bishop Evans at the Opera. He came, though, as he himself said, more for the "fun of the thing," and to pose Elder Evans with questions at the close of the lecture! The man came again three times, vowing every time that he would enter that building no more, and the very next time he came one Sunday morning and yielded obedience by baptism "unto the remission of all his sins."

Another man had a long-standing complaint, whom one of the elders (not knowing of the complaint) visited and was led to administer in the name of the Lord. That man is now not only well of his affliction, but is an earnest and energetic upholder of the very truth and of the very gospel which he once heartily and bitterly despised.

But more recently and more remarkably, a brother who had been almost killed in a terrible street car accident, in which two lives were lost and twenty-six more or less seriously injured, was miraculously healed when Elders R. C. Evans and James Wilson, being sent for to the hospital, laid their hands upon his head. The brother heard at the same time a voice from heaven acknowledging him and these His chosen servants the elders, while the brother beheld in open vision the "throne of God and of the Lamb," and these two elders offering up to God his poor maimed body in their arms,—just as Moses the man of God and Aaron his brother offered up the sacrificial lamb in that sacred, solemn, and significant service in that great and God-appointed tabernacle in Sinai.

The emotions of the Saints when, but one week later, this same brother was seen at the Sabbath morning prayer meeting relating his testimony and offering fervent praises to God for such a signal mark of divine blessing and interposition, can better be imagined than described; and Brother

Blow is still among us, a signal evidence of what God not only can do, but of what he is actually and positively doing; when other and lesser victims of the same accident were still at home or in the hospital, too sick to move.

Indeed, dear editor, when I look around over the faces at prayer meeting, bearing in mind past and bygone scenes of healing and blessing by the administration in one form or another, it is no fiction to say,—as indeed we are once reminded by the Spirit of God, that but for the interposing and healing powers of God himself nine tenths of them would not be there at all, for the grave would have received them long ago. One family, in fact, would have been completely wiped out by suffocation from escaping gas in their bedroom.

At another time our branch president's life was in danger from malignant quinsy sore-throat, and being administered to by Elder R. C. Evans and another elder, the blessing was granted, and in ten days or less he was again at his employment and again at his post as the respected leader of Toronto's largest and most flourishing Canadian branch.

Numerous other instances could be cited and many such as would strongly savor of boasting were it not that all of our readers who have seen or felt similar experiences know as well as we do that it is "not in man that walketh to direct his steps"—Jeremiah 10: 23, and that consequently the healing powers and operations are "not by our power or holiness," but "to the Lord our God belong mercies and forgiveness; though we have rebelled against him; neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in his laws which he set before us."—Daniel 9: 9, 10, 11.

Is Life Worth Living?

Is life worth living? Yes, so long
As there is wrong to right,
Wail of the weak against the strong,
Or tyranny to fight!
Long as there lingers gloom to chase,
Or streaming tear to dry,
One kindred woe, one sorrowing face
That smiles as we draw nigh;
Long as a tale of anguish swells
The heart, and lids grow wet,
And at the sound of Christmas bells
We pardon and forget;
So long as faith with freedom reigns,
And loyal hope survives,

And gracious charity remains
To leaven lowly lives;
While there is one untrodden tract
For intellect or will,
And men are free to think and act,
Life is worth living still.

How May We Bring Them Back?

Dear Sisters: When reading the article by Mary Abbie Hawley, of San Francisco, California, "Why does white slavery exist?" I felt it my duty to write a few lines on the subject.

It exists because Satan rules and reigns supreme in the hearts of lustful men and women. The sister in this article has given one cause, but, my dear sisters, the causes for white slavery are legion. I have no criticisms to make. This sister has given her experience, and I believe her every word is true. I know many girls are driven into these lives just for this one cause, yet had these dear girls had the proper training at home, they would know that there was protection for them from such lives.

My sympathies go out to these poor girls. They are victims of circumstances; but, my dear sisters, I, too, have had considerable experience with erring girls and women. I could not begin to tell half of the sad, sad stories poured into my ever sympathetic ear, and the cause is so varied. The effect is always the same. They have fallen into lives of shame. Their condition is deplorable indeed.

There are remedies. One is to legislate for the girls, and the best time to save them is before they fall. Parents could do a great deal of this rescue work right at home, if they would only take the time to get acquainted with their girls. But there is so much written and said on this subject that I refrain. But what to me is a very important view to take of the situation is, "How may we bring these girls back to Christ?" I answer thus: There is just one way it can be done, and that is for sisters, brave and true, to go out into the hedges and highways, meet these poor lost girls in their places of sin (we do not need to be afraid to go, for the Spirit will go with us and keep us from all harm), carry the message of salvation to the erring ones, and teach them the love and mercies of God both by word and deed. There is many a noble heart that would gladly come back to the Father's house if it only knew the way and guessed that it would be welcome.

I believe there should be a home prepared for the care of these girls when rescued from the lives of sin. I asked a brother once why we had no home prepared for the care of rescued girls and women. He answered that it was because God had never ordered one built. Now I believe that the reason God had never ordered such a home prepared by the Saints is because there was not enough timber in the church to build it with. To begin with, it costs money to buy or build such a home. Next, the home would have to be officered by brave and faithful sisters, who would be willing to sacrifice everything in this world to the cause of Christ and the rescuing of the fair daughters of our land. There are plenty of sisters in the church who need homes and support that could, if they would, take charge of a rescue home for girls. They could be mothers and advisers to our erring sisters, who for the most part have been more sinned against than sinning, and who are more to be pitied than censured.

I am in favor of legislation and placing the age of consent at twenty-one years, and then enforcing the law to the very limit in every case. But legislation will never lift up the already fallen. God alone can do that through the instrumentality of his servants, and to reach these girls we must go and meet them in their haunts, for they seldom ever attend a religious meeting of any kind. Their captors tell them that they are unworthy to go to church or even attend street meetings. So if we ever reach them with the angel's sweet message we will have to go to them, for they won't come to us.

Sisters, I have seen, and so have you, a picture entitled, "Simply to Thy cross I cling." It is the picture of a woman with both arms thrown around the cross, while the dark waters lash all around her. It is a beautiful picture; but one which pleases me more is the same subject, but the woman with one arm firmly holding to the cross, while she reaches down with the other arm and helps her less fortunate sisters to get up on the solid rock. Which picture do you like best?

Let us pray over the subject and see if God will not open a way for us, that while we are clinging to the cross we may rescue some of our fallen sisters. I hereby pledge myself to the cause.

Your sister in the one faith,

Request for Prayer.

A sister in Oklahoma asks the Saints to pray for her and her family, also for her sister's family, that God will be pleased to give unto them the aid that they need, as they are passing through a very severe trial, and feel that without God's help they can do nothing.

Letter Department

WAGONER, OKLAHOMA, February 25, 1912.

Editors Herald: The work was first introduced here by Lee Quick, he preaching on the street, as there was no house available. Large crowds greeted him each night and much interest was shown among them. There were only Brother Newland and family here at that time; later Brother Cato and family moved here from Missouri, and Brother Shores and wife from Wilburton, Oklahoma. They began to have prayer meetings at their homes, and it seemed that the leaven began to work soon. J. W. A. Bailey arrived, he being sent to labor in this district, and he began to preach on the street. Large crowds attended, and he succeeded in leading quite a number into the waters of baptism, and on February 11 J. F. Curtis, Lee Quick and J. W. A. Bailey returned and organized a branch with twenty-seven members. Brother Newland was ordained an elder and chosen president; J. N. Cato, priest; Brother Reed, teacher, and Brother Bristow, deacon; myself as clerk.

We haven't any church building of our own, but have a lot given to us and we are going to build as soon as possible. We hold our meetings in the county courthouse.

We have had some fine prayer meetings of late; the Saints are all alive in the work, and have adopted the rule to help one another.

There will be seven or eight new houses built in the future, all belonging to the Saints. The papers here are very friendly towards us, calling us Latter Day Saints, and not Mormons. I think there are some to obey yet; they attend our services most all the time.

May the work of God continue to grow till the honest in heart are gathered into his fold.

EVERT RESER.

CANTON, OHIO, February 20, 1912.

Editors Herald: I have been greatly blessed here of late and I have grand and glorious promises ahead if I am faithful to my calling. Though I am passing through a great trial at present, the Lord is with me and strengthens my weakness that I fall not. It seems to me that all are sleeping over their work to a great extent. Let us examine ourselves and see if we are in the faith as has been revealed to us. Let us awake from our slumber and be gathered into Zion in the near future. There are nearly one hundred thousand of us. If each Saint would pay one dollar to the Bishop there would be nearly one hundred thousand dollars. Some of the Saints could pay five dollars; some ten, etc. How quickly Zion could be redeemed and all could come forth to sing the everlasting songs of Zion!

In Christ,

ISAAC TRUE.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, March 4, 1912.

Editors Herald: As we have not written to the HERALD for some time, you will pardon us for intruding for this time. We in the Second Saint Joseph Branch are getting along finely, the Lord is adding to our number such as want to be saved. Others are investigating our claim. Some very noble folks have been baptized during the past year. Two noble young men have been called to the priesthood, and if they prove faithful will do a noble work. We are having some very spiritual meetings, both in preaching and testimony. A goodly number of outsiders are coming to the meetings.

We are about getting used to surprises, too. It was an agreeable surprise to all of us when we read the notice in the HERALD that the long looked for book of sermons of Elder J. S. Roth was ready for sale. Another surprise was that a book containing thirty-six sermons and articles, 529 pages, cost only seventy-five cents. It certainly is a gospel messenger; when it was stated last night in our meeting, that I would take orders for the Gospel Messenger, Number 248a, Roth's book of sermons and articles, in less than half an hour I had twenty-one names on the list, and others will take it who were not there last night. Elder Roth and his labors in the church are so long and widely known, that The Gospel Messenger will soon all be sold. One outsider who had heard Brother Roth preach, ordered one of them. It is a grand book; and so cheap, too.

Brother Bootman dropped into our meeting a short time ago, and stayed long enough to give us three of his fine sermons. He is a very interesting speaker, and doesn't go to sleep while he is dispensing the gospel truth. We were glad that he stopped with us; we are always glad to have the missionaries help us in our work. Our next surprise was also an agreeable one, when yesterday, just as the Sunday school was closing, who should step into the church but the old veteran, Elder J. S. Roth. Well, we were truly all glad to see him again, for we had heard that he had a hard spell of sickness. But the Saints here prayed earnestly for his recovery, and God heard our prayers. Brother Roth has consented to stay with us till the 15th, and hold meetings. He began last night with one of his characteristic sermons, "Rejoice because your names are written in heaven." How can we get our names written in heaven? It was a grand effort; the Spirit carried the truth home to the heart, a goodly number of outsiders were present, and all seemed well pleased with the sermon.

Our prayers are that before the meetings close a goodly number will obey the gospel, "And have their names written in heaven" (Luke 10:21). We are pleased to note the progress of the work all over the land. May we all be ready to meet the Lord in peace when he comes.

In gospel bonds,

A. A. RICHARDSON.

HARPURHEY, ENGLAND, March 9, 1912.

Editors Herald: We regret to record the loss by death of our Brother and Sister Hughes. Many of your readers will remember them, as they have been to America on more than one occasion. They were among the first members baptized into the Reorganization in this city in 1876. Previous to this they had been members of the Utah Church. In the year 1867 they made the journey to Salt Lake; their object being that they might perform the rites of sealing. The journey in those days was indeed a hard one, and having three very young children with them made it all the harder. However, what they saw and heard on their arrival there made them change their minds, and they returned to this country wiser and sadder for their experiences.

In 1878 they went to Nebraska City, where they kept a store on Main street quite close to the late Mark H. Forscutt. Sister Hughes was the daughter of the late John Mathers, of Nebraska, and sister to the late David Mathers and Sister Joseph Tempest of the same city; also of Sister John Tempest, of Terre Haute. She died December 28, 1911. At the funeral service, January 28, 1912, Elder Thomas Hughes spoke for about half an hour, thanking the Saints and bearing testimony to God's goodness. About fourteen days after our brother received his summons home. He was buried on February 16; he had reached the ripe age of eighty-four, and had maintained his faculties until the last. Thus passed away two noble souls who had stood faithful to our work since its inception in this city.

Another of our worthy old members has passed away in the person of Sister Chambers. This sister had suffered for a long time, but she bore it very patiently, and the summons home was indeed a happy release.

We were pleased to read, in a recent letter from Brother Jones, of Wales, but were sorry to learn that he had been compelled to return to work. And why? Not because he was tired or discouraged in the Master's work, but because of lack of means to sustain him in the field. When we read further that it had resulted so disastrously to our brother, he being run over, we can see that some one is to blame. Let us ask the question, Is it I? The financial part of our work in this mission is one that requires more attention than we have yet given it. And seeing we have a bishop in our midst, who has been specially sent over to look after this part of the Lord's work, let us see to it that we rid our garments of responsibility in this matter by cheerfully complying with our part of the duty.

This mission is a very hard and trying one, and I fully indorse Brother Jones regarding our emigration. Our branch has been a great sufferer in this regard, three families of over twenty souls having emigrated to Brisbane, Australia, and when we tell you that one of them was our president you will see our loss is a great one. He was a man greatly loved by the Saints, and we were very sorry to lose him. It did seem at one time that most of the members of our branch would follow him, so badly had the fever struck us all. However, this brother wrote advising the brethren to stay where they were; so that stopped the wave of emigration for some time. There is no doubt things are very bad here, and might very easily be improved by going to other localities; but would it not be as well to take the Lord's advice in these matters? He has said we must seek first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness, and all else he has promised to look after. This is our first duty; what our second might be we will not stop to inquire. When we have done our part we have the Lord's promise that the righteous shall be gathered out of all nations and shall come (in his appointed time) with songs of everlasting joy. It would seem, however, as though we thought the Lord was too slow to move in this matter, or perhaps he has forgotten us altogether; therefore we take the matter into our own hands and move as the fancy takes us. If we must move, why not comply with the directions given us and consult with the authorities and if practicable move into the regions of Zion? Then we can assist in the building it up until we shall be able to point to Zion as the perfection of beauty out of which God hath shined (shown forth the light), and surely there never was a time in the history of the world when it was more needed than now.

The industrial outlook is such that it can truly be said all things are in commotion. Strikes and labor troubles on every hand until men's hearts are failing them for fear. Many schemes are doomed to failure, therefore we ought to diligently bend our energies to bring about God's revealed will upon these matters; then, and not till then, will we be able to point to the living example as shown forth by the children of Zion. To this end we pray for the success of the Order of Enoch.

The anti-Mormon crusade is not dead. It is being revived by drama, living pictures, and serials. One of these has just commenced in Tit-Bits, entitled, "The sin of Utah." Evidently there is still money in the business. Amongst all this we find it very hard to get any interested in the work, but we hope to be able to remain unmoved, and be found standing on holy ground.

Praying for the success of the work, I remain your co-laborer.

JOHN BAILEY.

45 ROCHDALE ROAD.

Dear Herald: This leaves us all well and rejoicing in the everlasting gospel. When I last wrote you it was to request prayers for my healing. The same day, February 29, I started to Sioux City, where I was sent by our home doctor to undergo an operation at the Saint Vincent Hospital. I was told that the operation would be one hundred times more dangerous than an operation for appendicitis. I had been administered to twice here at home; was blessed and benefited both times, but God has a purpose in all he allows his children; hence the necessity of going to a hospital.

I sent for the elders in Sioux City and Brother Parker, and to my surprise and pleasure, Brother Sidney Pitt, sr., came to see me, and administered to me on March 1. I was relieved again, but on Sunday, March 3, my thirty-eighth birthday, I was told that on Monday I must undergo an operation. I sent again for the elders, who came and administered to me again. I was prepared for the operation. They prayed that God would remove the cause of my trouble, and if it was his will that he would stop the operation. Thirty minutes later I was on the operating table; then a very mystifying thing occurred. The cause of my suffering had been removed. They found absolutely nothing; they said it was the strangest thing that they had ever heard of. They performed the work, dressed me, and forty minutes from the time I left my room I was back, and thirty minutes later I was awake. I felt sick from the ether but did not vomit. By three o'clock I drank water and had tea and cocoa at intervals all night. Tuesday morning I ate regular diet. I improved so rapidly that everybody, even the Saints, were surprised at my rapid recovery. I was up all day Saturday, and on Sunday I went to church, Brother Joseph Turman being so kind as to come for me and bring me back in the evening after my having spent a most enjoyable day with the Saints at the home of Sister J. J. Bowers. At six o'clock Monday evening I came home to my loved ones, who were both surprised and pleased to see me home so soon.

I will never forget the kindness of the Saints of Sioux City, nor the beautiful flowers sent me by the Ladies' Aid. God bless them all.

Since asking the Saints for literature I have received a great quantity. I would like to write to each of you separately, but am not able to do so. I take this means of thanking each of you for your contributions, and will say I have all I need at present. Please do not send more until further notice, but do not allow the precious papers to be wasted, and last, but not least, I wish to mention the Moorhead Branch, who so nobly came to our rescue in our hour of need, both spiritually and temporally. God will surely bless the doers of such deeds of love and sacrifice.

Pray for us that we may ever be found faithful,

MRS. SADIE BURCH.

WILKESVILLE, OHIO, March 15, 1912.

Editors Herald: Prejudice is not so very bad around here. The people are all Methodists. They are not so prejudiced but what they will read the HERALD and Book of Mormon. We have the Book of Mormon, but it is at the neighbors' most of the time. Most of the neighbors read the HERALD.

One of the HERALDS mentions a round table and asks the members to give their evidence as members whether they are members known as members to the church by everybody or is their membership kept secretly. I must say that our membership is publicly known, for we talk to other parties and give them the HERALDS and lend them the Book of Mormon. We try to live by the plan of our heavenly Father as near as we can. We would like to do more for our heavenly Father if we could, but we are poor in this world's goods, but still try to do the best we can.

We ask the Saints to pray for us that we may be worthy of the One whose name we took upon ourselves to honor and serve.

Brethren James Moler and E. E. Long, please give us your addresses. Brother Moler's nephew wants his address.

E. E. AND ADA LAMBERT.

ELIZABETH, WEST VIRGINIA, March 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: I offer the following interpretation of Revelation 14: 6, 7, for the consideration of Brother E. W. Nunley, and all others who may be interested in the question he proposed concerning the angel who was to fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to be preached unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, and (they that preach it preach), saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him," etc.

I believe that those who were to preach were the ones to use the loud voice, and that the angel messenger was not to speak with a loud voice any more than to preach. Of course it was not expected the angel would preach.

Again, the angel of Revelation 14: 6 was to have the everlasting gospel; the same thing that Moroni delivered to Joseph Smith (Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2). So we see the everlasting gospel the same message John foresaw, delivered to men to be preached everywhere as John's message was to be, and for the same purposes. Most likely it was the same messenger also—I think so.

I have been in the church but a short time, and am only a "newborn babe," and give these suggestions as such hoping they may be received with the same kindly feeling as tendered.

Your brother,
E. G. HAMMOND.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister E. L. Pringle, McIvor, Michigan: "We have been struggling along, trying to get the gospel before the people through the efforts of one and another of the ministry who would chance to call for a few days, or were outside their field of labor. Yet we have never lost courage by reason of a promise given through Brother J. H. Lake, that if we would remain faithful there would yet be many added to our numbers. We believe we are shortly to receive the fulfillment of the promise. On February 18, Brother O. J. Hawn came to our assistance, having been directed to come. He preached every night but two for three weeks, and baptized ten precious ones, all heads of families; all good, reliable people who will be a help to the work, if faithful. Brother Hawn left us, promising to return if appointed to Michigan, and the Saints are earnestly praying that if it be the Lord's will he will be so appointed, for the continued question is, When is he coming back? Brother E. S. White was with us last week from Saturday till Tuesday, held four services and organized a Sunday school, and all were pleased to have him with us."

Sister Anna E. Humberger, 278 North Main Street, Wichita, Kansas: "Since I have been ill I have longed to have a few numbers of the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves to read during my convalescence. Words are inadequate to express the joy and comfort these papers would mean to me."

Brother L. C. Donaldson, Riverton, Iowa: "This is the worst March weather we have had for twenty years. We have been visited with heavy snowstorms and the roads are blockaded so the mail carriers can not get over the routes. The HERALD and Ensign are welcome visitors, as they bring the news from several parts of the world and tell how the gospel is wending its way. Brother Knisley baptized two while here, so we have a few faithful ones here that are trying to keep the camp fires blazing. Jesse A. Donaldson is doing a good work as superintendent of the Sunday school."

Brother Halberton Crowley, West Jonesport, Maine: "I am trying to live a life pleasing to my heavenly Father day by day, but although I have many things to overcome in this life, when I cross to the other side I wish to see my Savior first of all. I can truly say that this work is true. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may ever be found faithful."

Sister Rosa Wilson, Luther, Montana: "I would be glad to have the pleasure of assembling with the members and hearing the gospel preached again. One gets discouraged at times, being isolated. My husband is not a member of our faith, but I hope he will be some day. My mother has been very low with a stroke of paralysis and hemorrhage of the brain; she is better now. I desire the prayers of the Saints that if it is God's will she may be healed."

Sister Bertha Rathbun, East Pharsalia, New York: "Though we live back here in the country, we as Saints are yet alive to the work of God which has been planted here. Brethren Alma Booker and A. E. Stone have been with us a while the past two months, and we feel that some good has been done. Brother Floyd Rathbun was called and ordained to the office of elder while Brother Stone was here. We are but a small band of Saints; our membership being only ten, but we are trying to push forward and lift the banner so that God can see fit to pour out his Spirit upon us and bless us with the things we feel needy of."

News From Missions

South Dakota.

I have felt so small in this large State that I have refrained from writing until now. I visited Fairview, Running Water, Springfield, Avon, Wagner, Madison, Hudson, Sweeney, and a few other points, holding meetings a few at least in all these localities, but not in all the towns named. The Saints are very much scattered, and but one branch in the State, that at Bonesteel, in Gregory County. I was gladly welcomed and cared for by the Saints wherever I found them, and they generously provided for my necessary wants. I also found that the Lord had graciously remembered them in their isolation, so that their faith had been confirmed in the work, though debarred from the privileges of branch association.

This was peculiarly true in some cases. In some places where I tried to hold meetings I found prejudice very strong, so that but few would come to the meetings. This was especially the case at Hudson, where we met in a private house, and at Huron, where we used a tent. But in each of these places warm-hearted Saints cared for the needs of the preacher, as at other places, all of which he remembers with gratitude.

The larger part of the warm weather from June till November was spent in South Dakota; and the balance in my Nebraska field.

I was called to visit Sister Allen, of Springfield, South Dakota, recently, on account of sickness, where I am at this writing. Snowstorms, mud, and sickness combine to render preaching almost out of the question. I expect to remain in these parts till about April 1, then move in the direction of conference at Independence.

I can not tell of large achievements, but have tried to use the talent intrusted to me for the good of the work, and feel that the Master has, in a measure at least, blessed the effort, and that some good has been done.

I wish to remind the Saints of the State, except those of Gregory County, that Brother E. E. Willard, of Huron, South Dakota, is the bishop's agent, and he will receipt you for your tithes and offerings and make due report of the same.

I learn that Elder J. W. Smith will locate his family at Bonesteel, and we hope good may come to the work from this move.

Should I be continued in this mission I should be glad to hear from all scattered Saints in the State, and it will be my purpose to visit as many of them as practicable.

SPRINGFIELD, SOUTH DAKOTA, March 20, 1912.

New York City.

We have just closed our week of mission services, conducted by Elder W. W. Smith, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The meetings began on March 12 and concluded on the 17th. The largest attendance was one hundred and thirty and the smallest sixty-four, and it should be noted that on the evening when sixty-four were present it was raining very hard, and it was almost a wonder that anyone came. Some estimate that the attendance of nonmembers would average as many as twenty-five at each service. These meetings were held in the church in Brooklyn and the Saints supported the effort in a whole-hearted way. Brother Smith gave us some excellent sermons, and we are sure this effort will be far-reaching in its effects for good. It is said that the success of this effort has been unprecedented in the history of the church here, and it has at least convinced the Saints that they can hold a successful series of meetings here as well as elsewhere.

Brother U. W. Greene, our missionary in charge, paid us a visit since our last communication and preached for us in the church in Brooklyn and at our mission in Manhattan. President F. M. Smith and wife were also with us for about one week. Brother Smith spoke twice for us. The Brooklyn Daily Eagle gave a very good account of his visit to the city, and inserted with the article a picture from one of his latest photos.

Just now we are in a quandary whether or not we should give up our meeting place in Manhattan in the Genealogical Hall. We have never held a service there without drawing out at least one adult stranger, and sometimes many more. The definite results following the work done so far are difficult to relate—it is hard to tell just how much good has been accomplished. A letter of removal has just been received from Pittsburg for Sister Dora Benn, who has been practically lost to the church for many years and was attracted to the hall through the newspaper advertising. We have given out a vast amount of tracts and met a great number of inquirers, and tried to tell them of the merits of our claims through this effort. Besides lifting up the warning voice in the midst of the greatest city in the world and bearing our testimony to them, this meeting place has given us advantage with the press, and it is safe to say that our work has never received such an advertising as during the past year. Some of the scattered Saints in Manhattan who find it inconvenient to come to Brooklyn for service have been regular attendants at the hall. As early as 1832 the Lord commanded Bishop N. K. Whitney to come to this city, also the cities of Boston and Albany, "and warn the people of those cities with the sound of the gospel, with a loud voice." So far, the efforts of the Reorganized Church to this end have been very limited; so much so, that it is safe to say that a very large percentage of the population do not know that there is such a church, much less that a small branch of it exists in a remote part of one of its boroughs. As the Lord has further said, "Go ye forth as your circumstances shall permit, in your several callings, unto the great and notable cities and villages," we have felt it to be our duty to give the people a chance, at least to hear, and we by no means feel discouraged by the results that have attended the work during the fall and winter. The only reasons why we hesitate over the matter of continuing the work are the expense and approaching summer weather.

Brother Claud Wheeler, of Kansas, is now located in the city and being employed by the Insular Steamship Company. Brother W. J. McLean, of Bloomfield, New Jersey, and family, who worship with us occasionally, are about to move to West Virginia. Brother J. A. Jack and family have moved recently near the church in Brooklyn from Manhattan. We are pleased to note that several of the Saints are moving nearer the church, including Brethren Philip Scott and Charles Harris. Doctor Milton Gilbert and wife, from Fall River, Massachusetts, made us a brief but pleasant call while on their honeymoon. Bishop R. C. Evans made a flying trip to this city on business in February, and while here preached two of his characteristic sermons for us and took orders for a number of his books. He gave me three copies of his book of sermons to be placed in the libraries here—the New York Public Library has a very extensive collection of works on Mormonism, perhaps the largest and most complete of any in the world.

The young men of the church in Brooklyn are about to institute a society for the benefit of themselves and others, to be called "The Young Men's Association"—to engage in work and pleasure similar to that of the Y. M. C. A.

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN OKLAHOMA.—Conference of the district convened with the Sunny Hill Branch, near Calumet, March 2 and 3. In the absence of the district president, T. L. McGeorge, Hubert Case was chosen to preside; Elders J. E. Yates and E. H. Smith assisting. Sister Minnie Connell was chosen secretary of the conference. Statistical reports were read from Davidson, gain 2; Alva, Seiling, gain 25; and Sunny Hill, a new branch with 39 members. Elder Hubert Case, bishop's agent, reported on hand at last report, $37.96; received, $982.32, expended, $952.73; balance on hand, $67.55. The ordination of Matt Crowmover was left with the minister in charge. Sunny Hill Branch was selected as the place of the next conference and reunion. The time and place to be determined by the ministers in charge and district officers. The following officers were elected: T. P. Powell, president; H. F. Durfey, assistant president; Sister R. M. Maloney, clerk. The following named delegates were chosen to the General Conference: Brother and Sister T. L. McGeorge, Brother and Sister Hubert Case, Sister Hattie McLauohlin, J. E. Yates, R. M. Maloney, J. H. Baker, E. H. Smith, W. A. Connell. The preaching was done by Hubert Case, James E. Yates, and E. H. Smith, which was kindly received by all. Mrs. R. M. Maloney, clerk.

PORTLAND.—District met in conference with the Portland Saints February 24 and 25, 1912. District president M. H. Cook, assisted by N. T. Chapman; R. E. Chapman, secretary, assisted by F. W. Haines; Lillian Appleman, chorister; Cecil Stover, organist. A few remarks were offered by the chair, and after the privilege of the floor being given to visiting Saints, a report was heard from the reunion committee, recommending a reunion to be held by the district. A delegation from the Seattle and British Columbia District was heard from, they being sent for the purpose of extending an invitation to the Saints of the Portland District to meet with them in reunion to be held next August at Centralia, Washington. Their invitation was accepted. Ministry reports: M. H. Cook, N. T. Chapman, L. Stover, G. W. Howard, W. H. Barker, A. Whorlow, G. M. Appleman, Clark Livingston, H. A. Jones, R. E. Chapman, R. S. Coop, W. J. Vanderlurt, William Russell, George Pearson, and Joseph Lardon. Summary of their labors: Sermons 300, baptisms 12, confirmations 12, children blessed 7, ordinations 1. Bishop's agent's report: Received, $1,009.62; paid out, $947.62; balance on hand, $62. The reports of branches were read: Portland 195, gain 12; Vancouver 33, gain 12; Hood River 46, gain 4. The following delegates were chosen to General Conference: F. M. Sheehy, W. H. Barker, N. T. Chapman, M. H. Cook, William Johnson, S. P. Cox, George Thorburn, W. A. Goodwin, J. D. Stead, Clark Livingston, and they were authorized to cast a majority and minority vote. Conference adjourned, subject to the call of the presidency. R. E. Chapman, secretary.

WINNIPEG.—District conference convened with the Winnipeg Branch, February 17, 1912, Brother E. E. Long, missionary in charge, presiding; assisted by Nelson Wilson, district president, T. R. Seaton, branch president. William I. Arnold, assisted by Estella Hayward, was chosen secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Spy Hill, Rosendale, and Winnipeg. The ordinary routine of business was transacted. Reports were submitted by district officers and approved, also report of bishop's agent and district treasurer. Reports showed the work gradually progressing. A goodly number from outside points were present. It was decided to purchase a tent for missionary work in the district. All the district officers were continued in office. William Henry was chosen vice president and T. R. Seaton second vice president of district. The meetings were marked by a peaceful spirit prevailing. S. W. Tomlinson preached Saturday evening. At the Sunday morning prayer service the Spirit was manifested to a marked degree. William Henry, of Rosendale, was called from the office of priest to that of elder; Joshua Graham, of the same place, to the office of priest, and Wellington Wilson to the office of teacher. The Saints in general were commended for their efforts, and were enjoined to greater faithfulness. Prayer service was in charge of Elder N. Wilson, assisted by W. I. Arnold and William Henry. Preaching at 11 a. m., by T. R. Seaton. Sunday school at 2.30 p. m., and preaching in the evening by E. E. Long. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the Winnipeg Branch for their hospitality in caring for those from a distance. Conference adjourned to meet as per the resolution on the books, the time and place of the next conference being left to the president of the district and the presidents of the branches. Sister Predetta Wilson, press committee, assisted by W. I. Arnold.

Convention Minutes.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—The semiannual convention of the Sunday school association convened at Oakland on March 1, 1912. Superintendent M. A. Saxe presided. The statistical reports showed 11 schools in the district; 10 reported. Total enrollment, 440. Election of officers as follows: M. A. Saxe, superintendent; J. M. Terry, assistant superintendent; Lizzie Day, secretary; Hazel Burgess, treasurer; Olive Harris, library board; J. A. Crocker, home department superintendent. The committee appointed at the previous convention on report blanks for schools reported by presenting a draft on the blackboard. Moved and seconded that we recommend this form to the General Association. Carried. The theme of graded lessons introduced; only two schools out of ten voted no on graded lessons. Our district voted yes. A motion prevailed that our next convention be held at same place of the next reunion; the time to be left with district officers. Mrs. Lizzie Day, secretary.

Reunion Notice.

Northern Minnesota District will hold its annual reunion at Clitherall, Minnesota, June 22 to 30 inclusive. Clitherall is located on the shore of Clitherall Lake, on the Northern Pacific Railroad. Those wishing to engage board should notify committee. Provision will be made to care for teams of those who may drive. Those having tents please bring them. Everybody come, enjoy yourselves and learn more of the goodness of God. A. W. Whiting, chairman, Clitherall; O. E. Tucker, treasurer; Lester Whiting, secretary, Henning, Minnesota.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT IN AND FOR THE DISTRICT OF SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

To the Saints and Friends of the District of Seattle and British Columbia: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Brother Frank Holmes, who has been acting agent for the district of Seattle and British Columbia for a number of years, and upon the recommendation of the conference of said district, Elder William Johnson, 111 Kilbourn Avenue, Seattle, Washington, has been appointed bishop's agent in his stead.

We commend Brother Johnson to the patronage and help of the Saints. Trust the Lord will bless him in his work, and each one of the Saints will strive to assist in the extension of the work in the district and the furtherance of the cause of the Master.

The Bishopric take pleasure in commending the work of Brother Holmes as agent for the district for the past number of years, and trust the Lord will especially bless and direct him in his labors wherever he is called to perform same.

Commending all to the blessing and good-will of our heavenly Father, I am in behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Died.

FALKNER.—James Falkner was born January 13, 1868, and died March 19, 1912. He was born at Aydery, Scotland, and moved to London, Ontario, when five years old. He resided there ever since. He was baptized by Gomer T. Griffiths July 13, 1880; married March 30, 1888, at Corinth, by Elder Arthur Leverton. He leaves to mourn, his wife and two children; also two brothers of Detroit, Michigan. Funeral in charge of Elder William Fligg.

ALCOTT.—Sister Catherine Elva Key was born in Randolph County, Indiana, April 18, 1839. Removed to Berrien County, Michigan, and was married to Alfred Burreis in 1854. Nine children came to gladden the home; six of them died in infancy and childhood. Her husband having died, in October, 1878, she became the wife of Elder Robert Alcott, who preceded her to rest. In company with Brother Alcott, she united with the Reorganized Church March 27, 1881, and lived the life of the true child of God; a devoted mother in the community; an exemplary woman beloved by all in the church, and a faithful member. Her faith was strong, her conception of the hereafter clear, and confidence found expression in an earnest longing to go to her future home. A large circle of friends are bowed in sorrow, besides three children, eight grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren, two sisters, and one brother. She died at home in Galien, Michigan, March 8, 1912, after an illness of sixteen weeks, of cancer of the stomach. Funeral was conducted from Saints' church, March 10. Elder S. W. L. Scott preached the sermon to a large concourse of people. The beautiful floral offering whispered the rest remaining for the people of God. Burial in Galien cemetery to await full realization of the gospel hope.

WARPOLE.—Thursday, February 15, while at work trimming trees, he was stricken with heart failure, falling to the ground and dying instantly. Mr. Warpole was not a member of the church, but on one occasion opened his house for preaching, also giving the elders a home. He leaves a wife who is a good, faithful Saint, and two small children. The funeral was from his home in Newark, Delaware, February 18, 1912. Sermon was preached by Elder William Anderson, assisted by the Methodist minister, and the Methodist choir furnished music.

Investors and Home Seekers.

Before investing or buying a home examine the possibilities in Saskatchewan, especially in and around Saskatoon. The wheat and flax industries have attracted much attention in this locality but it is not all we have. We can raise anything here that you can grow in the northern States.

Our lands have advanced in value very rapidly in the last five years, but there are yet many profitable investments to be made here. Come to Saskatoon and see Dorr & Diggle. We will place you in touch with the owner of the land and look after the title of the land you buy.

All correspondence personally attended to. Reference i. required.

The Saints' Herald

The Best Preachers.

When larger, better "Heralds" we are reading,
With "Pleasant Chat," and lovely "Bible tales,"
And path to "Blisston" marked out for our beeding,
Forgetting fingers weary and brain that fails,
We shall exclaim, "How swiftly Zion sails!"

Then courage! Prophets, Apostles, and Teachers,
Ye Officers bear rule from day to day;
Ye Saints most dear, remember, the best preachers
Are those who practice what the preachers say.

—David M. Smith, about 1870.

"God Shall Find Out a Way."

(Romans 7:11, 15-17.)

BY F. R. TUBB.

Do inborn sins afflict thee,
And mar thine onward way?
Does Satan e'er resist thee
The while thou striv'st to pray?
Do friends forsake and leave thee
In loneliest paths to stray?
Let not these troubles grieve thee,
"God shall find out a way."

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
Or Achor's gloomy vale,
The Everlasting Fountain
Shall never, never fail;
Though tribulation's waters
Thy shrinking soul dismay,
For Zion's sons and daughters
"God shall find out a way."

Doth grief's overwhelming billow
Thy small, frail bark assail,
And seas arise like mountains;
Causing thy heart to fail?
Look up! The Lord's bright angel
Proclaims the dawning day;
Telling thee that to-morrow
God shall find out a way;
Yea! on that bright to-morrow,
God shall find out a way!

What though the accuser threaten,
With fierce, malignant spite,
To slander and o'erwhelm thy soul
With falsehood in the fight;
Thy truth shall yet ride glorious
As yonder orb of day,—
For God, the All-victorious,—
He shall find out a way:
The Lord, the All-victorious,
Himself shall find the way.

Then why mistrust thy Savior?
Whose mercies never end;
In every harm and danger
Thy never failing Friend;
He shall defend from legions
In panoplied array,
Though great Diabolus command,
"God shall find out the way."

Then why mistrust thy Master,
Whose mercies never cease?
Can any dire disaster
O'erwhelm the Prince of Peace?
Though lightnings fierce shall rend the heavens
Till midnight glares like day,
His mighty form shall conquering stand;
"For God shall find the way."

THE WELLS OF THE FATHERS.

"And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham."—Genesis 26: 18.

Isaac was one of the first great conservationists. Finding the land desolate and the wells filled up, he set himself to the task of reclamation and conservation. Water meant life. So in the interests of human life he digged again the good old wells of his fathers. Jacob and those who came after him con-

Centuries later, Jesus, standing by Jacob's well at Sychar, on the "parcel of land" that Jacob had given to his son Joseph, talked with the woman of Samaria and drank the water from the well of Jacob. The Jews and Samaritans had cherished the well of natural water; but they had forgotten the wells of spiritual water.

So Jesus, teaching her, said, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."—John 4: 13, 14. If the man who digs again the wells of the fathers and opens up the natural resources of the land confers a great benefit upon his generation, so that it is esteemed a matter worthy of perpetual record in the word of God, how much more important is the work of the man who opens up the forgotten wells of hidden spiritual power and refreshment that sustain the fathers.

Long before the dawn of the eighteenth century men had forgotten again the wells of living water that Jesus had opened up to men so long before. Religious teachers had become quite unlike the old prophets, Isaac and Jacob, Jeremiah, Samuel, and others of whom Walter Rauschenbusch says: "They went to school with a living God who was then at work in his world; and not with a God who had acted long ago and put it down in a book."—Christianity and the Social Crisis, p. 23.

Religious people came to think of God in the past tense, as of one who had acted and put it down in a book. Their teachers drew inspiration from dry-as-dust commentaries, and not at first hand like those tinued the good work and cherished the wells and fountains of water that had refreshed their people and sustained their lives in days gone by.

But these people had access to other water also. If Isaac and Jacob opened up the wells that supplied natural water, they also kept open the wells that supplied spiritual water. Of their descendants in the days of Moses, before the "law was added because of transgression," it is written that they all "drank of that spiritual Rock which followed them: and that Rock was Christ."—1 Corinthians 10: 4.

holy men of old who wrote and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

There is more than jest in the anecdote of the man who wrote a book of comments on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and sent it to the friend with the query, "What do you think of my Commentary on the Lamentations of Jeremiah?"

The friend replied: "My only regret is that Jeremiah is not alive to write a book of lamentations on your commentary."

The wells of the fathers were pretty thoroughly stopped up. Revelation had ceased. Men did not care for further revelation, indeed, they denied the possibility of further revelation coming from God. Learned disputations over the letter of the law continued long after the Spirit had fled.

To them we might well apply the words of Jeremiah: "They have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water."—Jeremiah 2: 13.

Such was the condition when Joseph Smith and his associates came, "digging again the wells of the fathers."

This man, when confused by the war of conflicting creeds, alarmed at a world-wide poverty of spirituality, passed by all the dry and broken cisterns that men had constructed, and acted on the conviction that there was truth in the statement: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1: 5.

Profoundly impressed by the truth of this promise, and its potentiality for good to himself and others, he went directly to God in fervent, simple prayer.

As a result, God revealed himself to him, as he had done to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and others of the fathers, and pointing to his Son, who also appeared, declared: "This is my beloved Son, hear him."

No more important words were ever uttered. In an age that trusted in the arm of flesh and in the wisdom of men, God again called men to hear Jesus. This was the beginning of the opening up anew of revelation and spiritual power in these last days. The old avenues to God were opened again. The old blessings came back. The wells of living water were uncovered and men were invited to come and drink, that they might have everlasting life.

If ever we build a material monument to Joseph Smith, we may well inscribe on it the words used concerning Isaac:

"He digged again the wells of water, which they digged in the days of Abraham."

THE UNIVERSALITY OF THE GOSPEL.

BY ELDER CHARLES FRY, PASTOR OF THE CHURCH IN PITTSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.

To the mind of him who has looked into the record of the gospel, the universal application of that gospel must be apparent. At the coming of the Savior into this world, and upon the threshold of the dispensation which he brought, the voice of the angel declared that the good tidings should be "to all people."

In sending his gospel forth Jesus said to his apostles:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations.—Matthew 28: 19.

And again:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16: 15.

In speaking of the work of the last dispensation the Lord said in prophecy:

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations.—Matthew 24: 14.

The Apostle Paul declares the universal brotherhood of man under the gospel in the following:

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free.—1 Corinthians 12: 13.

Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all, and in all.—Colossians 3: 11.

Peter perceived under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.—Acts 10: 34.

But the gospel in Christ's day was sent to a nation having strong national prejudices, that were bitterly selfish, and these, with religious factionalism, prevented the gospel from finding permanent place in its midst. The history shows that these things had their effect within the church as well as without, and the church was well nigh rent asunder when, in carrying out its world-wide mission, the Gentiles were brought in. The Apostle Paul, seeing these conditions, many times declared the universality of the gospel, but factionalism within the church, with factionalism and nationalism without, with their attendant evils, eventually wrought its overthrow.

The great mission of Christ, and the gospel which he gave, was to establish

UNIVERSAL PEACE AND GOOD WILL AMONG MEN, and if the gospel had been permitted to fulfill its purpose that condition might have existed to-day. The only means by which such a condition was possible was rejected of men. But what have human institutions accomplished in that line? For centuries they have had opportunity to prove themselves, and what is the result? Nation has followed nation, and government superseded government, so rapidly of late that thrones of kings are coming to be looked upon as like chaff which is swiftly swept away by the changing wind. Governments have not brought to their own citizens that which satisfies, and men have struggled for improvement even to the overthrow at times of the old forms. Labor unions have sprung up to do for the working men what the governments had failed to do.

All Protestantism is a protest against any claims of Catholicism to having brought the world any nearer to this ideal condition, and each successive shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

The advance of science and invention has brought the whole world to a compactness never before known, and men of every nation are coming to realize that humanity has a common need. Notwithstanding human organizations and factions have multiplied, yet the development of the age is away from such. Their multiplicity is their weakness, and the continual coming of new forms indicates general dissatisfaction with the old. The original independence of the individual organizations of the several classes has gradually faded away until various degrees of unity have been attained. Thus the churches which once opposed each other in a sometimes bitter struggle for supremacy, have largely discarded their differences and now work harmoniously together; while some have actually united.

Labor organizations have gradually evolved into national and international unions, and a movement has recently been started toward bringing under one head all the labor unions of the whole world. Business corporations have combined, resulting in great trusts having control of the several lines of industry throughout the whole world, and so extensive is their power that they are practically beyond the control of the governments in which they had their origin. The dominion of the nations is world-wide and their interests so intermingled that they have come to divide, by peaceful Brother Waller and the missionaries of the church operating in Hawaii are reaching Chinese and Japanese as well as Hawaiians.

Protestant movement is a like protest against its predecessors. The very existence of such institutions as the Young Men's Christian Association is a standing rebuke to all religious denominations in their failure to meet the whole need of the whole world. Fraternal orders, too, have arisen almost by legion, to help humanity in ways which the religious institutions had altogether neglected. The existence of all of these evidences the inability of each other to meet a universal need. And thus the world is seeking in a thousand ways to improve conditions, every man working according to his own conception of things, and while each may accomplish some good, the results designed in the gospel of Jesus Christ are not to be attained in that way, for—

They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and means usually, their respective "spheres of influence." Through the universal commingling of nationalities each nation has come to learn that others have rights as well as itself, and thus has grown up a sentiment in favor of the settlement of differences by arbitration. Men have even talked of an ultimate world-wide republic. The activities of men in all directions are becoming world-wide.

But notwithstanding this progress, human institutions have not kept up with the times. Governments furnish slight relief from the power of the oppressor; churches, charitable organizations, and fraternal societies, offer but the pittance for the momentary help of the individual, without changing the universal condition, while the poor and oppressed of all nations are crying out with one universal cry to the great Father of all for relief from oppression, for equal opportunity, for peace, for happiness, such as the world heretofore has not given. Governments are too national; political and other parties are too factional; churches are too denominational; fraternal orders are too limited in their fraternity, to supply the world's need. Any movement designed to meet the growing demand of the age must be a world movement, adapted to every need of mankind.

With the evidence of centuries of failure upon the part of human institution, is it not apparent that a higher wisdom and greater power are required to inaugurate and maintain a work that is to be and at the time of his departure two angels stood with the disciples and said:

This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts 1: 11.

The coming of the Lord will not be without preparation upon the earth. According to the parable of the virgins a cry is to go forth: "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," prior to his appearance. Isaiah says:

Behold thy salvation cometh; behold his reward is with him, and his work before him.—Isaiah 62: 11, and Malachi:

universal? To God must men look through his Son Jesus Christ for such wisdom and power. Through Christ and the gospel was the promise of "Peace on earth" made nearly two thousand years ago and the promise still awaits fulfillment. God has not forsaken this world nor left it altogether to man, but—

He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand.—Daniel 4: 35.

Jesus Christ still holds "all power . . . in heaven and in earth," and—

He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. . . . He shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.—Isaiah 42: 1, 4.

When here upon earth he said:

I will come again.—John 14: 3,

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts.—Malachi 3: 1.

As the coming of the Lord will be world-wide, so that "every eye shall see him," so must the preparatory work be world-wide. Of necessity it must have its beginning in some nation though not of that nation. In its incipency it may be small and restricted to one country, but it must go to every land.

THE GOSPEL RESTORED.

In 1820 God again revealed himself to man, and subsequently to that revelation, restored the authority by which the gospel could again be preached in its fullness and the ordinances performed. These, with the organization of the church in 1830, according to his command, were the beginning of the Restoration. Just prior to the organization of the church the Lord said:

A great and marvelous work is about to come forth unto the children of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 1, and shortly after the wheels of organization had been set moving he said again:

And even so I have sent mine everlasting covenant into the world, to be a light to the world, and to be a standard for my people and for the Gentiles to seek to it, and to be a messenger before my face to prepare the way before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2.

TAKING THE GOSPEL BACK TO JERUSALEM.

Elder Griffiths and Pitt and other Saints in the Holy City.

At this time the Lord declared that

The voice of the Lord is unto all men, . . . and the voice of warning shall be unto all people, . . . unto the ends of the earth.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 1, 3.

The gospel as restored in the latter days has not changed from what it was in former times. It is still adapted to all classes of men of every nation. It recognizes none above others, but reaches out to all men as a common brotherhood, having a common need, inviting them into the "one body" of Christ,—the universal kingdom of God. It knows neither nationality nor geographical division, but is "to all people" and "to every land." If the gospel were anything less than this it could not meet the necessity and demand of this age of light and progress.

Here, then, is that which meets the world's need. It is a universal standard, the "everlasting gospel." Under it sin will cease from the hearts of the children of men until there will be no crime, and present criminal laws will be known only in the past. Selfishness will vanish, and with it will go poverty with all its attendant evils. Inordinate ambition will be drowned in love, and the oppression of tyranny will sink to rise no more. Factionalism, denominationalism, and ultimately, at the coming of the Lord, nationalism will yield to the "kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever," (Revelation 11: 15), and

He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. . . . Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him.—Psalm 72: 8, 11.

He who would to-day work for the whole world must work with God, and likewise, he who works with God will work with the whole world. As laborers together with God, the children of the kingdom must not forget that

ITS MISSION IS TO THE WHOLE WORLD, and that it is so complete within itself that it can meet every need of every man. To work with God man must enter into the "everlasting covenant" with God and remove sin in all its forms from his life. He must enter the kingdom in which the light and power of God are manifest, and work in harmony with its laws. He must leave behind the "dead works" of the world, the prejudices, the narrow partisanship which bind him to kindred, party, lodge, or denomination. He must become a world-man, a brother in the great brotherhood of men, and seek to bring all to that higher brotherhood in the kingdom of God,—sons of God; and Faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

If men would but come to that gospel standard and "let love rule in their hearts" the great armaments of the nations might be broken up and their swords beaten into plowshares; the vaults of the magnates containing rich treasures reserved for the few, would open their doors and consecrate of their abundance to the "God of the whole earth" to establish the only system of equality possible among men; the prisons would be torn down or turned to better uses, for there would be no criminal to find lodgment therein, nor tyrant to incarcerate the innocent; the boast of nobility and the proud claims to royal lineage would disappear in a universal equal honor in that all were sons and daughters of God,—an honor superior to all else in the world; patriotism would be the patriotism of principle rather than of sectionalism or nationalism.

TRUE PATRIOTISM.

Faithful service to God does not destroy a proper allegiance to "the powers that be" to which He has said we should be subject. True patriotism leads men to support their respective governments in all that is right and true, and to seek by honorable means the removal of all that is evil. But to support them in what is wrong and unjust is false patriotism which tends to the destruction of the nations themselves and is destructive of the rights and liberties of man, and contrary to the purposes of God. What is just and true in one nation will work no ill to another, and hence will be for the good of all mankind. Patrick Henry was well up not for the children of the kingdom to oppose the governments under which they live, nor to take up the sword,

For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.—Matthew 26: 52.

But it is for them to oppose sin wherever found:

Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 2.

My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight.—John 18: 36.

There is little room in the child of God for the war spirit which is often born of an unreasoning prejudice and a lust for blood, and too often mis-with his times when he said: "I am not a Virginian, I am an American," and were he here to-day to speak in harmony with the times he would say: "I am not an American, I am a world-man." True patriots of to-day will look farther than the bounds of their own country and see humanity. In the practice of true patriotism there will be no conflict with God and his work. He has said in latter-day revelation:

Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until he reigns whose right it is to reign.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

This instruction is applicable in all lands. It is taken for patriotism. The only implements of war under the gospel are truth and the Spirit of God, the only armor faith,

For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.—Ephesians 6: 12.

Every man who enters freely into this spiritual warfare can not fail to serve his country well for he is building up that which is permanent.

The church is not to seek temporal power or dominion, as to do so would utterly remove it from its high calling. It could not be united with an earthly government and fulfill its mission, for it is the design of God

- That the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 3.

from the curse which has come upon them through the sins of their fathers.

For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.—1 John 3: 8, and

As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God.—John 1: 12.

Their cleansing may not be absolute in this life, but it is certain that those who by obedience became sons of God will have every curse removed when they shall come forth in the first resurrection. In the church militant there must be equality of opportunity for all men, and when perfection is reached by those who avail themselves of such opportunity, there will come equality of condition and glory, and they will be brothers indeed.

Within the light of the gospel may live and grow every true art, every branch of science, every industry, every human endeavor for the betterment of the world; and in it every true desire for truth, justice, equity, and righteousness, will find its highest realization. In its services men will find their purest joy, their greatest happiness.

Whatever is new may not be good, but it is not necessarily bad. All ideas were new at one time, and if they had not been originated and advocated

Likewise the members of that church need to stand independent of all other institutions, according to the law of God, which law requires that they "be subject to the powers that be," which powers have an acknowledged dominion under which men come by birth. The covenants made with other institutions, however, are optional, and the same law of God says that all old covenants are done away in the new and everlasting covenant,—the gospel. (Doctrine and Covenants 20: 1.) He acknowledges none of them. To hold membership in them is to tie the church to the world and hinder the accomplishment of its holy purpose.

Behold, I the Lord, who was crucified for the sins of the world, giveth unto you a commandment, that you shall forsake the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 53: 2.

The gospel is all sufficient. It adds to all that is good in every nation, yet takes naught of good from any. It is a divine institution designed for the whole world,—as many as will, and it will meet the world's need. There is no room in it for the distinctions of nationality, for all have a right there by obedience. The red Indian, the yellow Chinaman, or the black negro, may not be desired as companions by the white man of advanced tastes, but it must be remembered that many white men would not be desired either, and why? Because sin, with its evil consequences, has fallen upon them and they have become degraded. But take away their degradation and will they not be acceptable? There is power in the gospel to cleanse the white man of low degree, and that power is sufficient to cleanse the red man, the yellow man, and the black man

CHOOSING MEMBERS OF THE SEVENTY.

BY ELDER J. F. MINTUN, OF THE SEVEN PRESIDENTS OF THE SEVENTY.

Those who have lately entered the fold, and especially those who have been of late ordained elders, are solicitous of all the light that will better qualify them to do intelligent service. Since we make prominent the claim that men to occupy in any position in the priesthood must be called of God, many times it is necessary to explain how the seventy are chosen or called to that special position, and an intelligent explanation comes from a correct knowledge. Being placed in a position where this question has been made a special duty for some years, I essay to present a few thoughts.

ELDER J. F. MINTUN.

"Never was there a time when there was greater need for more laborers in the vineyard of the Lord; and never was there a time when a greater need existed for pure and clean men."

The Lord, in showing the order of the seventy, reveals the fact that there should be seven presidents to preside over the seventy, and that upon them rests the legal responsibility of choosing other seventy till there be "seven times seventy, if the labor in the vineyard of necessity requires it." (See Doctrine and Covenants 104:43.) It is recorded by the historian Luke, that when considering the work of the seventy in New Testament times, and there was a need of more laborers in the vineyard, the Christ in speaking to the seventy chosen (for it is said that "the Lord appointed other seventy also") said "unto them," "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into the harvest," and this because "the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few." (Luke 10:1, 2.)

We find the church and the harvest in the same condition to-day. As late as 1894 the Lord so declared. That the Lord may send more laborers there must be given the mind of the Spirit to those who are to make the choice of men for the office of seventy, and to make known their calling, and the Lord has thus provided and given instruction that those authorized to so act are to "be guided by wisdom and the spirit of revelation." These men then must be supported by those officials feeling, to the greatest extent, the need of more laborers, and by the whole church, that they be recipients of and be directed by the Holy Spirit, through which comes the gifts of "wisdom" and "revelation." Not only are they to be a prophetic body, enjoying the "testimony of Jesus," the Lord, as to whom he desires to send into the vineyard, but they are also to exercise the functions of a judicial body, inasmuch as they are to consider the evidences as to which the elders are "qualified and in a condition to take upon them the office of seventy," and one of the qualifications is, they must be "none but men of good repute." (See Doctrine and Covenants 120:10.) This would make it imperative that they should understand what affects reputation of men that would exclude them from the class of "men of good repute." One of the conditions that is always taken into consideration when the name of an elder is under consideration is the record that the man has made since he became a member of the church, and especially since being ordained an elder. In some cases much evidence is presented for consideration, and it always takes the wisdom of God to assist us to a correct decision in regard to this question, as to whether this man is "qualified" along the lines specially defined in the law, and in a "condition to take upon him the office of seventy." To decide this latter feature of the case another class of evidence must be considered, and sometimes the spirit of revelation is the only means by which a decision can be rendered. The persons whose names are being considered are not consulted, unless under exceptional cases, and then only to determine whether they are in a condition to occupy as a seventy.

As the Presidents of Seventy prayerfully wrestle with the work of considering names of elders for the responsible position of seventy, all that can be known of the man is secured and considered, and due weight given to all the evidence that comes into our possession before a choice is made, unless direct revelation comes to the council. If there is one dissenting voice to the selection of one to this holy calling, action is deferred, temporarily, which may become indefinitely after further consideration at a future time. Not only is it necessary to inquire into the quality of the man as an elder and as a minister, but the conditions that may affect the selection may be with his family; so such evidence as can be secured from those acquainted with the family is considered in the light of concluding whether he is in a "condition to take upon him the office of seventy."

As much depends upon the disposition of the companion of the one chosen as upon the one chosen, for oftentimes she has the greater sacrifice to make and burden to bear, and unless she receives of the spirit of her husband's office and calling she will never be able to endure. Sometimes it means the sacrifice of health, and sometimes of life, to bear the burdens of a wife of a missionary. They must be economical to live within the limited amount it is consistent for the church to furnish each family out of the small amount received from the free-will offering of the people, and their economy commend them to those who have sacrificed to render the supplies that go to furnish the families of the missionary and the poor. Oftentimes their manner of life has more to do in soliciting the sacrifices of the people in a temporal way than the preaching of the missionary himself. Then there should be in her heart the true missionary spirit, to be continually breathed out upon those who are given into her charge as a mother, and those with whom she may be closely associated. Hers must be a willing sacrifice. Should complaint be continually made by her it oftentimes poisons the minds of the children and their associates against the life of a missionary, when the pleasure of giving one's life should make the sacrifice a cheerful one.

It takes great faith in God for those upon whom this duty rests to make choice of seventies, to fulfill their duties. For we must not only recognize that God must give to the brother chosen evidence of his calling, and sustain him in accepting the sacrifice, but God must also give to his wife and children the same spirit, that they may consent to such a life of sacrifice as is the life of the family of the missionary. It is marvelous how God has sustained our selections, and it gives us faith in God to continue in the work assigned until he shall see that we can better occupy elsewhere to his honor and glory.

By some it is supposed that we select only those who will remain faithful to the end, but that is not made a part of the law governing our work, and it is no more consistent that such should be thought our duty than that those who baptize should only baptize those who are to be faithful to the end. It is expressed that mistakes have been made in choosing certain men, because they so soon yield to temptation and commit some gross act that totally unfits them to act in the office to which they are chosen; but the mistake is made by the individuals chosen, in not continuing in a condition that the Lord can longer use them in such a sacred position. Tears and forgiveness do not necessarily remove the disqualification brought about by the sins committed, for the record of immoral and corrupt actions disqualifies them to be "men of good repute," and their ability to represent the word and work of God effectually, and to resist temptation is affected. When what the people say of a man or woman is predicated upon past immoral or corrupt actions correctly recorded, it removes them from the possibility of being of "good repute," especially when this record is made after they enter into covenant relations with the Lord, and have accepted the priesthood of the Son of God.

There may be elders whose reputation and other qualifications are such that they are qualified to do missionary work, yet they are not in a position to take upon them the office of seventy. There are other duties of a general character noticed in Doctrine and Covenants 104 and 120, that are of such a character that they would be unfitted for, but such ones should never be placed in the missionary field where they are to perform all the duties of a seventy unless they are qualified to be chosen to that position. And wherein a minister has by iniquity disqualified himself to act in the office of seventy he should never be placed where all the responsibilities of a seventy rest upon him, no matter how humble a position he may be willing to occupy as a member of the church, or however true he may be to his covenant as a member.

That which clearly represents the mind of the Lord in reference to the qualifications of those who labor in the vineyard is found in Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1, given previous to the organization of the church, "and faith, hope, charity, and love with an eye single to the glory of God," qualifies himself for the work; and in Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4, given also previous to the church being organized, it is written, "And no man can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."

This applies equally to membership as to minister, but the instruction in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5 applies directly to the ministry, and reads, "And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of the church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach." This, qualified by God's interpretation of what the Spirit is and does, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 10: 6, which reads, "And now, verily, verily I say unto thee, Put your trust in that Spirit which leadeth to do good, yea, to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my Spirit," is of great assistance in determining who is qualified and in a condition to be chosen to the office of seventy, for that which would apply to the membership and to the lesser priesthood, to a greater extent applies to those who are to occupy positions which are associated with greater responsibility.

Never was there a time when there was greater need for more laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, and never a time when a greater need existed for pure and clean men, who are so living that in them the Spirit of God may dwell, and continually lead them, so that they may withstand the fiery darts of the wicked one, and endure patiently the severe trials that have of late years been visited upon God's servants, of the seventy and twelve especially, by way of afflictions upon them or their families.

How blessed is the example set by Brother John Kaler! This should have its beneficial effect upon us who yet remain to minister and to suffer, so that God may be glorified, and the works of the brother follow in the accomplishment of much good, so that he being dead may yet speak to the praise of our heavenly Father. How much more glorious is a vacancy made in this manner, after a life so faithful to his trust, than to be overtaken by temptation, and reproach be brought upon this beautiful and all-important message!

AN INTERESTING DEVELOPMENT IN THEOSOPIY.

BY ELDER JOHN W. RUSHTON.

It may be of interest to some of your readers, especially those who followed the able series which appeared some time ago, written by Brother Burgess, on Theosophy, to learn of some comparatively recent developments in this cult.

At the present time much interest is aroused in this esoteric philosophy, owing largely to the enthusiastic propaganda of Mrs. Annie Besant, who with tremendous energy has championed Madam Blavatsky's movement and since that lady's death, in 1891, was elected president of the society in 1907.

Mrs. Besant is an interesting and remarkable personality. Her revolt against the stereotyped forms of religion which led to her estrangement from her husband, who was a clergyman in the Church of England, ultimately led her to adopt Secularism under the leadership of the late Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. In this movement she was admittedly as powerful an exponent of the doctrines of "The Hall of Science" as Mr. Bradlaugh himself. When she discovered the failure of Secularism she was just as fearless in her renunciation as she had been in her advocacy; and now she is again before the public with all the original power of her magnificent personality, splendid intellect, and remarkable power

APOSTLE JOHN W. RUSHTON.

"We should think boldly and fearlessly; for the disciple of truth will always be the most valiant and trustworthy crusader for Christ, and become in turn the most reliable defender of the church."

as a platform orator, with the addition of the charm of mellowed persuasion as the ablest exponent of this adaptation of Hindu mysticism to the western mind and thought.

Her life is an epitome of the tremendous struggle through which a great soul passes in the search for truth, to attain which no hardship is too severe, no sacrifice too great, and no disappointment discouraging sufficiently to deflect its course. When she had discovered what she believed was truth she, with the eloquence and charm of Hypatia, and the acetic zeal of Loyola, commenced her crusades against misery, ignorance, and oppression; and, with the optimism of the prophets, sought to elevate humanity to a worthy plane.

It does not matter what we think of the occultism of Theosophy from a religious point of view, it is a matter that calls for respect at least that such a woman should bring into the very heart of Occidental civilization the hyperbolism and imagery of Orientalism and win in London a hearing and following of men and women from every grade of society. And that in America she should also with irresistible zeal make an attack upon the common enemy of all religion, materialism, and establish small congregations of earnest devotees to a philosophy which from heart to epidermis is spiritual.

In the interests of Theosophy Mrs. Besant has made the following record: besides giving lectures throughout Great Britain in 1907, she visited America, traveled 10,629 miles, gave forty-eight public lectures and fifty private lectures, besides her work in Europe from Sweden to Italy, all in addition to her remarkable work in India.

The particular work which calls forth this article is that which was done this year in the months of June and July in London. The famous Queen's Hall was engaged for Mrs. Besant for a series of lectures on "The immediate future." This hall has a seating capacity of 2,000 and these lectures delivered on Sunday nights, from June 11 to July 9, aroused "widespread, sensational interest," according to the press accounts.

It seems that "ecclesiastical obscurantism" is rapidly retreating before the growing influence of a scholarly and social interpretation of religion. Theosophy is one of the signs of the growing tendencies, and the interest which is developing in this and similar movements, such as Christian Science and New Thought, is a welcome omen of a near-by time when humanity will be welded more closely together in its religious movements and base its hope of the future upon a surer foundation than ever before. The remarkable demand for "solidarity" and the modern expression of that demand in the union of church organizations and the sympathy which is existing among the ministry in these great ecclesiastical bodies with only one or two notable exceptions which are pathetic anomalies, betoken the coming day of brotherhood and Christian unity in unmistakable ways. The great law of the "survival of the fittest," which in all departments of experience has been eliminating the "unfit" and cherishing only the "fit"; has been and still is at work in the great ecclesiasticisms of the past and the present. The witness of this is in the passing of many and the modification of those which remain.

We are conceding nothing of truth in this pronouncement, for only the truth can survive; and all human movements have possessed some truth; and all movements have possessed some error. Time, with the growing experience of the race, has been the great melting pot into which the whole is, and has been in a state of flux. Evermore the dross is being cast out and the precious crystalline elements of truth are running together into an indissoluble mass; and some day, please God, we shall rub our eyes and with a shout of joy the sons of God will sing together the song of the Lamb.

We, therefore, in common with others are in this melting pot, and we shall have to cast off the dross of tradition and error, no matter how much we may cherish it, and retain only the pure truth by which alone our liberty can be actualized.

We consequently view with gratitude the growing appreciation of a modern interpretation of the Christian principles and the application of them to modern necessities in all and every place. With the statesmanlike vision of the Apostle Paul we sympathize, so that no matter "how" or "by whom" Christ is being preached and anticipated, in that fact alone we rejoice. God is moving throughout the universe and, "all the earth is full of his praise."

We are living on the verge of a new epoch of intellectualism, the chief characteristics of which are first, the dispensation to discover the lines of agreement in diversities, and secondly to eliminate the lines of disagreement. The age of "unreasoning faith" is passing and the age of a "faithless reason" goes with it. In their places already we see growing into shape with beautiful symmetry and harmonious outline, a strong faith in the abiding reality of the "unseen," and of reason made luminous and reverently expectant by faith. These two, both equally the "gifts of God," for long centuries divorced, have met and in the kiss of reconciliation are already bringing a rich harvest of spiritual influences into every aspect of life. The history of the closing years of the nineteenth century and the opening years of the twentieth will always be described in the language of the Hebrew hymn:

"Mercy and Truth are met together;
Righteousness and Peace have kissed each other.
Truth shall spring out of the earth;
Righteousness shall look down from heaven.
Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good;
And our land shall yield her increase."

For we say that already we have reached the period when the accepted definitions of life and its concomitant responsibilities are and evermore must be preeminently spiritual.

Of course there will be the warrings and clashings of the forces of materialism as they make frantic struggles to retain the mastery against the steady tide of victory for the spiritual, but they are the death throes of despair.

And who among us will be bold enough to deny that in the great struggle of the wheeling legions of light and truth in mortal combat against the dark hosts of error, sin, and misery, as foreshadowed in the Persian mythologies of Ormuzd and Ahriman, that all of these agencies as Spiritualism, Theosophy, Christian Science, New Thought, and Liberal Theology, together with the Modernism, which is now heaving and writhing within its chrysalis of fossilized ecclesiasticisms are all being used in the wisdom and love of the omnipotent all-Father as he broods over the time vesture of the present, evolving therefrom the spiritual and eternal destiny of the race. Just as now we can see that all the movements of the past have made for the development of the present.

True it is that many extreme views, exaggerations, aberrations, and indeed follies have and still do exist which warp and hinder the world progress to the higher and nobler plain of power; but is there any philosophy with which man is concerned that can plead guiltless to the same charge?

Even in our own movement does not our history stand as concrete witness of progression, and in the very fact of progression we have sloughed off our worn-out garments and trappings. The General Conference Resolutions provide a wonderful field for investigation, as we have resolved and rescinded in a strange medley of discordant sounds and blurring of the outlook, but ever faithful to the "vision splendid" we have pushed, jostled, and burrowed our way towards the light. In all of the pains of travail incidental to the birth of the present from the past we have not always been tolerant and patient with "pioneer minds," as for consistency's sake our condemnation of others who have been guilty of bigotry and cruelty, the fruit of ignorance and superstition demands we should have been. We have been, and I am afraid still show symptoms of petty spite and injustice to those who have scaled the mountain of knowledge and seen a vision, or heard a voice, or sensed a presence which have been denied to us who have not yet reached the altitudes of the "watchman" going on before. They saw things unlawful for them to utter, and blundered from the standpoint of diplomacy in voicing too early sentiments that could not be understood by the masses below; so we treat with contempt, try to silence or repress, and even excommunicate, and otherwise fill up the measure of humanity's shame in narrow, insular prejudice.

Let us try and believe that God, who in the past has spoken in many voices, revealed himself in many ways and in the mysterious power of his wisdom and love can transmute the "wrath of men into praise unto himself" and from the wreckage of blighted humanity can produce the progeny of the Divine, surely is able, yes, and is even inspiring these very movements Godward, to carry forward to final triumph these feeble efforts of both individual and collective life.

In the light of these sentiments may we not sympathize with the conclusions of an English journalist, writing in the London Chronicle, "Perhaps another and higher phase of Christian evolution is being prepared."

Ought not some of us at least to revise our views and get out of our exclusiveness and believe that after all we are only a part, an important part, with a miraculous origin and a glorious destiny it is true, —but still only a part of the straining uplift of humanity to God?

But while we thus plead for wider sympathies and broader vision among ourselves, it nevertheless is very necessary that we act with conservatism and proceed with caution. In fact, there is a danger of swinging to an extreme laxity in indiscriminate enthusiasm and adopting heresy and falsity as being truth and principle. We therefore suggest that with the increasing liberality of thought and more tolerant attitude there is correspondingly demanded deeper and more accurate analysis, just as a wider liberty demands commensurate intelligence and self-control.

It will be best every way for preacher and congregation alike to have the "message," no matter who shall be the instrument of its deliverance or the clothing it shall be presented in, thoroughly examined before it shall be adopted. For time will inexorably publish from the housetops the shame of a lie as well as the glory of the truth.

We should think boldly and fearlessly; for the disciple of truth will always be the most valiant and trusty crusader of Christ and become in turn the most reliable defender of the church.

What, therefore, is of special interest in Mrs. Besant's current propaganda is the development of eschatology or a doctrine of "last things" peculiar to Theosophy; and in the lectures referred to she has outlined as in prophecy "the immediate future," and so has committed to Time, the ultimate arbiter, the cause she has championed, for approval or disapproval.

It is singular how fascinating the prognostication of future events has been and still is to many people, and yet it is on this rock so many have wrecked their theories and disappointed their followers. Richard Baxter, Doctor Grattan Guinness, Mrs. E. G. White among the multitude have ventured to declare in precise terms what the future will bring forth, usually the presaged events being calculated from a literal interpretation of the Bible and the rather fantastical textual arrangement of scriptures.

Little edification has resulted, and only one thing is at all clear, that is that whosoever may be right, they at least are woefully mistaken.

"The revealed things are ours and our children's for ever, but the secret thing is the Lord our God's."

It is unexpected that a mind of Mrs. Besant's culture should commit herself in this way and risk the success of her cause so precipitately in prophecy.

While in a way her calculations are different, largely reaching her conclusions by reading the signs of the times, from the shadows of coming events, so to speak, she nevertheless claims to speak as one in possession of information from sources beyond the reach of uninitiated, as an occultist, or one who has developed supernormal faculties. This is the statement of the editor of the Brotherhood.

Mrs. Besant's program of the future involves two features that Latter Day Saints will approve of in a general way.

First. The growth of a World-Religion, and Second. The near advent of a World-Teacher, who will be the Lord of love, none other than the Christ returned to earth.

Of course in these two features generally speaking we have the expectations of the Christian faith in all forms. Indeed this is also characteristic of the writings of the Hebrew prophets and also of the various religions of the Orient and of the religions of this Western Continent according to the traditions and records to which we have access.

It will be seen that stronger and stronger the great religious tendencies merge one into the other as the destiny of the race works itself out.

The ideas of Mrs. Besant regarding the growth of the world-religion are very striking and are worthy of a serious consideration.

"She does not expect the world-religion to be established by a triumph of Christianity over Buddhism and other great religions of the world.

"Devout men of all religions will see in it the soul of their own faith; the most advanced spirits everywhere, those who have most of the divine consciousness and therefore most love for their fellow men, will feel that all that is noblest, dearest, and surest in their own religion is summed up in the World-Religion; that the World-Religion is their own faith carried to the highest."

That this enshrines a beautiful and much to be desired ideal, and one that all of us who love God and mankind can approve of, is clear.

We must believe there is much truth as well as error in all religions, and we also may conclude that it is the truth and not the error in these religions which attracts the devotees, for as Carlyle says in his trenchant manner, "The first of all gospels is this; That a lie can not endure for ever."

As before stated, time will therefore discover the error in all forms and experiences of religious feeling, and in the nature of things when error is eliminated from religion the truth in all forms of religion will inevitably coalesce.

For truth is indivisible and only error can disintegrate, consequently eliminate error, and behold! Truth is one.

So we look for a time also which is drawing perceptibly nearer, when there will be only one religion in all the world, and that will be the religion of heaven, where the chief outlines of that religion were suggested by Jesus Christ, "The will of God done," and when the will of the divine is done as faithfully on earth as it is in heaven, then earth will be the habitation of God and it shall be said, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men."

In this coming time, when men shall worship the one God unitedly in the truth without any admixture of error, God and man will be one as Jesus prayed, earth will be lost in heaven, for heaven will have been discovered in earth. "How long, O Lord, how long!"

This, nevertheless, is the discovery to which the world will awake some glad morning with a shout of praise that shall rend the skies and bring down the glory of God upon the race.

But of the coming World-Teacher, I am afraid Mrs. Besant is not so clear or trustworthy.

These lectures developed as the result of an experience which Mrs. Besant claims to have had; and, with her well-known forcefulness and dogmatism it is not difficult to understand why they should attract a large hearing and gather out of the audiences a large following which she has organized into a society to prepare public opinion for the "Coming One." This society bears the title of "The Order of the Star of the East," and as members it claims some very intelligent people, and in the list of officials appear the names of Professor Wodehouse, M. A., of Benares City, India; also three clergymen of the Church of England, and others of whom caution and circumspection in some degree at least one would expect. The head of this order is a marvelous seventeen-year-old Indian lad, J. Krishnamurti (Acyone), around whom centers this dominant enthusiasm of Mrs. Besant and her followers.

The following account of this Hindu boy will be of interest and, in the light of the cardinal doctrine of Theosophy, metempsychosis, it is not extravagant to believe that Mrs. Besant believes the "Coming One" already is here and only waiting for the growth of a nucleus to receive him, when he will reveal himself. Of this young man the following account is presented by J. Bruce Wallace, editor of The Brotherhood.

"Accompanying Mrs. Besant from India are two Indian youths. One of them 'Acyone,' or J. Krishnamurti, is supposed to be a marvelous personality. Mrs. Besant cherishes with regard to him, for occult reasons, very exalted expectations.

"An ordinary man, such as the editor of the Brotherhood, has of course no opportunity of knowing by personal experience whether or no there are 'akashic records'; or whether or no, on the supposition that such exist, anyone really is able to read them. A developed occultist, who claims to have arrived at supernormal powers, ought not to take it amiss if people with powers only normal, while fully believing in his or her good faith, hesitating about accepting, as completely reliable, statements for which they, in their present stage, are unable to find any corroboration.

"The case of 'Alcyone' is here mentioned 'without prejudice,' as the lawyers are wont to say; just as in other numbers of the Brotherhood alleged remarkable psychic phenomena have been described, which are at least deserving of serious investigation."

In the Theosophist, edited by Mrs. Besant, there has recently appeared a series of papers entitled, "Rents in the Veil of Time," wherein are accounts of no less than thirty incarnations through which this "Alcyone" is supposed to have passed. In some of the incarnations this reincarnating ego was a woman; and some of them were in very remote ages, many thousands of years before Christ.

"In this present thirty-first life," says the writer in the Theosophist, "'Alcyone' was again born in the south of India, and at thirteen years of age was brought under the fostering care of the president of the Theosophical Society (Mrs. Besant). Soon after this the Master (Kut Humi, a Tibetan Mahatma) admitted him as a probationary pupil, and after only five months (the shortest period yet known) passed him on to the second stage—that of accepted discipleship. After only a few days in this degree, he was received into still closer union of the third stage, and became a 'son of the Master'; and at the same time he took the most important step which an ego can take, for he 'entered upon the stream'—he attained the first of the Great Initiations which not only makes a man safe for ever, but also admits him as a member of the Great White Brotherhood that rules the world. What shall be the future of a life which opens thus?"

Whatever may be the explanation and significance of them, the lad has evidently had some strange experiences during his present life; for he presumably is the youth referred to by Mrs. Besant in her address of welcome at the thirty-fifth anniversary and convention of the Theosophical Society held at Adyar in December last,—in words probably as mysterious to the readers as they are to the editor of the Brotherhood. She said: "Here, last January, carefully guarded, lay the empty body of the young disciple, taken away to far Tibet for his mystic Initiation; and hither the new Initiate returned to take up again his dwelling therein, to live under the guardianship of his elder brethren until the time is ripe for the ending of their trust. Here also are others preparing for the same high achievement; and there is good hope that several others will, ere long, join the White Brotherhood, sworn to the service of humanity. So fully has the promise been fulfilled that 1910 should be the beginning of the new cycle, and thus has been accepted and consecrated by the Masters the center prepared at their behest. Beside this great Reality the more mundane side of our growth seems of little import."

"What 'Alcyone' learned from his mysterious 'Master' he tells very simply in a booklet entitled, 'At the feet of the Master.' It is a book of excellent counsel for everyone who wants to tread upward paths, but there is nothing new in it—nothing that might not have been learned in quite normal ways."

From the foregoing it is obvious that to modern Theosophy the immediate future is full of events, either good or ill, to its success.

In speaking to an interviewer of the London Daily Chronicle Mrs. Besant is reported as saying:

"There are physical and social changes observable all over the world, which tell us that the age of militarism is drawing to its close, and that fraternity will be the watchword of the future. The Anglo-American peace movement is a sign of this; and if Germany should be converted the peace of the world might be assured. But I do not think this can be brought about by political means. It can only result from some vast spiritual movement that shall unify all the warring creeds, making them merely sects of one great religion. This will be the task of the coming Teacher, prefigured in the Christian dogma of the second coming of Christ. This will happen, in my belief, at no distant date, and with it our æon will close and a new age will open."

As we wait for the development of events we can wish success to this and all other movements aiming at the elevation of humanity and the alleviation of suffering, ignorance, and misery. Believing with Tennyson:

"Nothing walks with aimless feet,
Not one life shall be destroyed
Nor cast as rubbish in the void;
When God shall make the pile complete."

Nevertheless we shall watch the development of events regarding Mrs. Besant's esoteric prognostications regarding Alcyone and the World-Teacher with critical eye and adopt the advice of Mr. Asquith to the impatient Conservatives in the British Parliament, "Wait and See."

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities.—
Julius Cæsar.

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARD OTHER CHURCHES.

BY ELDER G. E. HARRINGTON, PRESIDENT OF THE INDEPENDENCE STAKE.

Our attitude toward other churches should be one recognizing that the foundations for their faiths have grown out of some sincere convictions that could not be forfeited without dishonor attaching to them.

The facts are that many good deeds are done by them, many sufferings endured, many useful activities are engaged in, revealing good will towards mankind.

To us they have formed a misconception of the truth of the gospel and its proper application to a greater or less degree.

ELDER GEORGE E. HARRINGTON.

"Ours should be an affirmation of the gospel message, not a denunciatory proclamation."

They are not divinely authorized to place anyone coming to them for salvation where divine training will produce in them the qualifications essential for celestial glory.

Therefore, our attitude should be one of endeavoring to present to them the truth, believing ourselves to have it, for sanctification is made possible only by a knowledge of it and its application. To take any other view would be to accept the oft repeated statement, "You are all right so long as you are sincere." We must stand for the attitude that absolute perfection must be, and can only be attained by a perfect knowledge of essential truth. This it is our duty to convey.

The Savior authorized his ministry to go and teach all nations the gospel. They did it to some extent, to religionists, as well as nonprofessors of religion. Among the religionists they found their bitterest enemies suffered the greatest tortures, were denied many privileges, and many of them were swept out of existence for fidelity to their convictions.

However, with all the evil they did, it did not bar them from the offer of pardon which was fully given when a true recognition of the condition they were in was felt and acknowledged by them and pardon sought.

Our work being the reflection of the divine light, correcting the errors of the world, brings us into contact with all things that are wrong, and whether among religionists or among others, the proclamation of the gospel should be made.

To do this we need not denounce religious bodies of people, but rather present our conception of the truth of the gospel, so that in listening to us they may know, if they choose to, or take the consequences that follow a rejection of it. Ours should be an affirmation of the gospel message, not a denunciatory proclamation; an offering of opportunity for a higher and better life than is possible to be secured without the full measure of truth.

Let us tell the truth, and if an attack be made let it be made upon us; then we become the defenders of our faith.

There are some marked distinctions between us and other religious bodies, and if they are informed about their faith, they will know if we are at an agreement with them or not; and if not, we have done our part to support our story, and nothing can be gained by constant insult which we may give, when we submit to them that they are wrong and we are the only people that are right.

There are evidently many truth-loving people in all organizations, and the ministers for Christ should be wise servants, and draw from the fountain of truth the waters of life; that which is necessary should be sought after and presented; but we must as ministers be worthy of the light of God and the cooperation of his Spirit in order to be safe representatives of the Master.

To what extent can we cooperate with them? I would say, to the extent of their willingness in all good works, having first placed ourselves squarely before them for the principles of truth as we see them. If after that they choose our association, they may properly expect us to defend our position when occasion requires.

We could hardly cooperate with them in their religious services, join with them in union services, for the reason that we could not in honor recommend or encourage their views, or allow the impression to go out or to be held by them that we accept their means of salvation by maintaining a silence, allowing the deception to be practiced upon the people who under such circumstances should of necessity hear the truth and the whole truth. Neither should we feel the least measure of objection to them for not asking us to cooperate with them under such conditions, or make complaint against them for that reason.

But we believe that we might properly ask for admission among their ministry in their alliances if there be no restrictions therein that would in any sense compromise our honor or discredit our faith.

We may preach in their pulpits, and invite them into ours, always reserving the right to correct any error projected, and if we have occasion to represent their views, we should present them from their authorized standards, their own works.

This I believe should be our attitude towards other churches.

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARDS SECTARIAN CHURCHES.

BY RICHARD BULLARD, BISHOP OF INDEPENDENCE STAKE.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," must be the basis of our attitude towards all men. Shade, color, religion or nonreligion, should not affect our attitude to our fellow man.

The olive branch of peace should be in our hand, and our life effort should be conciliatory, emphasized by earnestness and saintly firmness.

Churches, as represented by sectarianism, are but human institutions, made up in membership from the great masses of humanity, the offsprings of God, in the sense of his fatherhood to the whole human family. We are a part of that family.

God so loved the world, was so wondrously emphasized in the life of his Son, that there need be no mistake as to our duty to our fellow man.

One of the hardest lessons laid down by the Master for us to learn, is couched in the following language, "Love your enemies, bless those who curse you, do good to those who hate you," the latter part is easier, "pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you," for it is easier to say, or pray, than to do, under such conditions.

What purpose had the Master in mind when issuing this command? Answer, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven, for he maketh the sun to shine on the evil and good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

This clearly defines our duty and attitude towards all men. We are liable to proudly refer to what the Master said of his church in Doctrine and Covenants, section 1. The only church under the heavens with which he is well pleased; but he had to qualify that statement, by referring to the organization, and not to individuals, for he knew the tendencies of weak man to excuse himself from duty and his obligations to God and his fellow man, hence the commandments following, and the many admonitions to live on a higher plane than they were then living.

"Their creeds are an abomination in my sight," was the language used to Joseph Smith, by the Master. Not that all who were then subscribing to those creeds were abominable to him, for he speaks to them and cries, "Come out from among them, oh ye my people."

BISHOP RICHARD BULLARD.

"Our work is and must be constructive in its character."

So our attitude to them should be like that of the Master, to earnestly seek their release from sectarian bigotry and intolerance, and by kindness and moderation show to them the effects of a better and more effective system in our lives and attitude towards them.

To use harshness in pointing out the defects of the various organizations or churches who oppose us, is not the way to win their friendship, or get them to listen to our argument. We had better use more gentle methods, and let the harshness come from the other side. Charity suffereth long and is kind, and if our work for Christ is not tempered with charity, when he passes upon it as to its merits, and measures it by his standard of measurement, it can not be accepted by him.

Our work is, and must be, constructive in its character. The foundation is sure and solid, and can not be erected upon the ruins of sectarianism. So let us build up the kingdom of heaven by cooperating with the Christ, leave the fall of Babylon to the powers now in process in bringing about its fall and destruction, and extend to all men a helping hand.

• * * * •

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARD OTHER CHURCHES.

BY C. ED. MILLER, MINISTER IN CHARGE OF THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE.

Viewed from a social and doctrinal standpoint, we must confess that with what experience we have had with other denominations, that between us socially there is some barrier and doctrinally an almost impassable chasm.

As the church of Jesus Christ, logically we are somewhat exclusive. We look upon the other religious institutions as simply human organizations with human creeds. The Lord says in Doctrine and Covenants 1:5: "Those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased."

Our attitude toward these human institutions can not be one of whole souled fraternity, and we are assuming a more or less hypocritical attitude when we try to leave the impression that we feel that way. We know we have the truth; they only have a part. The ministry of this church are called to preach the whole gospel; other ministers have only a partial conception of that gospel; so there are tangible and vital differences between us and every other denomination on earth. They must change their position; we can not change ours and still abide in the truth.

This is one phase of the situation. But can not a one hundred point man have dealings with a fifty point individual? Will there not be some things in common between them? There are many important truths which we hold in common with our contemporaries. We assume they are largely in favor of temperance, of morality, and of civic purity and the betterment of the whole world in general. We can assume an attitude of cooperation and a fraternal spirit with other religious workers along these lines, as being within the scope of gospel labor. The gospel is divided into two heads, doctrinal and ethical.

The Lord has called men to various tasks in life. He revealed his purposes in Nebuchadnezzar, called a Cyrus, moved upon a Columbus to discover a new world, and raised up men to form a constitution for part of that land. Can we not look upon many of the men in the sectarian ministry as being called to proclaim the ethical part of the gospel, or the terrestrial law, and can not we very properly affiliate with them along terrestrial lines? Christ, at times seemed to preach terrestrial law, as we may term it, to such as his wisdom revealed were eligible to such a condition. The woman, taken in the moral crime, was not advised to "Repent and be baptized and wash away thy sins," but "Go and sin no more." The sermon on the mount is the ethical law, and the sectarian ministry are making an effort to teach it. Can we look upon some of these men as being actually called of God to teach morality? Is there any grade in the call of God? Does divine invitation reach from a call to preach the everlasting gospel, to making a constitution for a great nation? and does a call to preach a moral law come in between somewhere? When ministers of other denominations ask us to assist them in ministering in the ordinances of the gospel, then we can assume one attitude only; that of refusal. We can't assist them in ministering the sacrament, nor in the baptismal service, but we can help to make a bad man good and an evil community righteous. Men can do much good of themselves, and many of the religious organizations of the day are doing good, and we can properly cooperate with them along ethical lines. We do not think our exclusiveness should extend so far as to refuse to help any organization making an effort at world betterment. While we have a mission which they can not perform, yet the other churches are making efforts to make the world better and we can very properly help along some of these lines. In our ocean greyhounds, first-class passengers can visit the steerage, and they have access to every part of the ship, but steerage passengers can not go above the steerage. Other churches can not enter the field of celestial administration, but may not the Lord have called some of them to do good in their sphere, and as our mission is the world, can not we very properly cooperate under some conditions?

As we view it, our attitude toward our religious contemporaries should be one of toleration and not of contention against them. Our mission is not so much to tell others what they haven't as to let them know what we have. More of our time should be given in building ourselves up instead of trying to tear others down,—not necessarily a lack of aggressiveness, but an abundance of affirmativeness.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

ITS IMPORTANCE TO ESTABLISH AND CORRECT HISTORY, AND ITS SUPPORT OF THE CLAIMS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON FOR THE ANCIENT CIVILIZATION OF AMERICA.

(A paper read before the First Quorum of Seventy and by vote of the quorum offered to the SAINTS' HERALD for publication.)

BY ELDER RUDOLPH ETZENHOUSER, OF THE COMMITTEE ON AMERICAN ARCHÆOLOGY.

In the above caption the word history may easily be assigned first place, or be considered of first importance in this consideration. History may be conveniently defined as the record of past events. The oak, the monarch of the forest, is sure evidence that there was the preceding acorn—and alternating oak and acorn to the primal one. The acorn, hickory nut, or fern leaf, found in lower stratum of rock or coal are evidence both that these had existence in kind prior to the formation where found and that changes occurred; what was developed above the earth and of vegetable substance became a part of the earth's strata. So, likewise, in mountain strata, or other shell, etc., testify of previous things and also changes.

Archæology reveals what has been in the past by the remains discovered in its operative processes. "The pen is mightier than the sword," a time-honored phrase and maxim, has, in reference to archæology, a supplemental counterpart, or may be paraphrased; "the spade is mightier than the pen." It is to archæological research then that we may look for the results, remaining monuments of what has been, to give us true history.

The supposed history of ancient America has been attempted by many, resulting so far in little else than confusion, causing Bancroft to write: "America might have been peopled in so many ways it is a hopeless task to find the one particular way." Archæology may well be resorted to for what it may hold in its keeping decisive on the matter. History of Old World nations recorded at times near or remote to occurrences is found to be susceptible of correction by results of archæological research.

In the American magazine section of the Los Angeles Examiner of Sunday, January 1, 1911, appeared reproduction of relics from a grave fifteen hundred years old: "Some remarkable discoveries just made near Giessen, Germany, indicate that the Dark Ages, the period in European history from about A. D. 475 to 1200 A. D., were not as dark as historians have hitherto believed. Some ancient graves dating back to 550 A. D., which have been opened by archæologists within the past few weeks, have brought to light a number of articles which demonstrate that the Germans of that time must have attained a high state of civilization instead of being the barbarians they have hitherto been regarded."

The historic Island of Crete affords another revelation of the same sort: "The Island of Crete, lying midway between Greece, Asia Minor, and the northern coast of Africa, occupies a unique position; not only geographically, but also historically. To the student of Greek history it forms a shadowy background to peoples, things, and events. One is conscious that there were on this mysterious island great men and great occurrences, but he is given no definite information as to them, and gradually comes to regard the island and its people as more than half mythical. So it was with even the wisest until a few years ago. The partial removal of the power of the Turkish sultan made it possible for archæologists to go upon Crete and work to advantage, and during the decade just past they have worked with such success as seldom crowns the labors of the spade. Englishmen, Italians, and Americans have toiled in friendly rivalry at Cnossos and Phæstos and on the eastern end of the island. The scholarly world owes much to each and all of them, but most to the distinguished British archæologist, Arthur J. Evans. Together they have brought to light the remains of a marvelous prehistoric civilization, a civilization surpassing any that had yet blossomed in the Ægean and far more advanced than any that Greece was to know for hundreds of years to come. The story has recently been well told by Mr. and Mrs. Hawes, in a delightful and illuminating little volume, Crete the Forerunner of Greece. It is a story of intense interest to the lover of art, and to every student of human progress. We see the ancient Cretans—or Minoans, as scholars now call them, in honor of their great King Minos—in their shops and markets, at sleeves, and with flounces about the skirts. We feel strangely at home among these people.

“But there haunts us all the time a feeling of uncertainty, a questioning as to who these moderns of the ancient world really were—of what origin, race, and language. Written records are not lacking, for Evans and his coworkers have brought to light thousands of tablets and seals evidently recording the commercial and official life of the Minoans. But they have written in a strange and unknown script, consisting of pictures, or of characters evidently derived from pictures. Like the Sphinx of old, these have challenged the wonder and the ingenuity of scholars ever since Evans began to publish them at the turning of the centuries. He is now engaged upon a definitive treatment of all the inscriptions, and has already published the first volume of his most important work, Scripta Minoa. It was a copy of this that fell into my hands at the close of the college year and stimulated my curiosity to such an extent that I temporarily postponed the completion of my report on Venetic and Etruscan, in my desire to outwit, if possible, the Cretan Sphinx.

“I was attracted chiefly by the Phæstos Disk, which is written in characters differing from those employed in all other Minoan writings. This unique monument of ancient civilization was brought to light two years ago by Doctor Pernier, of the Italian Mission. He discovered it in a part of the palace at Phæstos, under conditions that lead scholars to agree in dating it not later than 1600 B. C. It is a disk of refined clay, about three quarters of an inch thick, and six and a half inches in diameter.

It is not inscribed; but when the clay was still soft, characters were impressed upon it by means of engraved stamps, not unlike our rubber stamps. Each individual character, or picture, was thus made with one stamp, and is consequently always exactly the same. We have here, in fact, a remarkable anticipation of the sort of printing that is done to-day in stores and shops, when signs and placards are produced by the use of rubber stamps containing a single letter each.”—Harpers' Monthly, January, 1911.

From South Africa there is reported still another similar, of the days of Hiram, King of Tyre, Solomon, and the Queen of Sheba. Egypt, Assyria, and other parts have been yielding similar results. Any alleged discovery may well be carefully considered in all its possible bearings before it is passed upon “Those armies of robbers . . . began to come down and to sally forth from the hills, and out of the mountains, and the wilderness, and their strongholds, and their secret places. . . . And they did commit murder and plunder; and then they would retreat back into the mountains, and into the wilderness and secret places, hiding themselves that they could not be discovered.”—Book of Mormon.

ANCIENT CLIFF DWELLING, MESA VERDE, COLORADO.

their sports, and in their palaces and humbler dwellings. They were a wonderfully modern people, pursuing the arts of peace in large, unfortified towns, secure in the consciousness of the mastery of the sea—much like the people of another famous island in our own day. The traces that still remain of the attainments of Minoan artisan, architect, and artist alike excite our interest and admiration. The palace at Cnossos was a town in itself, with quarters for guests and servants and craftsmen of all kinds, and was fitted out with sanitary plumbing such as the world was not to see again until the nineteenth century. The walls were decorated with paintings and mosaics that tell us much of the life of the time. The dress of Minoan ladies was modern, close-fitting about tight-laced waists, with low necks and puffed and declared spurious. Time-honored theories have oft been crushed by the increase of knowledge. The supposed impossible has come to light. Error long enthroned as right has been rebuked, set aside, and the truth established.

The evidence above cited from late exploration in Germany and Crete, show conditions in eras long passed to have been far different from that supposed. Much more of the same kind awaits us in an unknown quantity and may be very large. The supposed universal "stone age" theory, receives a rebuke in each such discovery; for if evidences of higher civilization are found where not at all supposed, the universal "stone age" may yet be shattered even among its staunchest advocates, as it already is with others.

That cultures have been evolved and have gone into decay in successive waves is established in the revelations of the above cited cases of archæological research. This being the fact with reference to Old World peoples, whose history was supposed to have been complete, on general terms at least, we may hold ourselves in readiness for all kinds of surprises in this western New World. The three cultures admitted, Mexican, Central American, and Peruvian, remain as so many puzzles, whether arising independently or evolved from one another. Differing as they do, and unsolved, they may be added to by various others. It is, indeed, already accomplished and may be much enlarged upon. In evidence is the following from the National Geographic Magazine, February, 1909: "Between the regions occupied of old by the Aztecs, and the realm far to the south over which the Incas ruled, lies an immense stretch of territory, a thousand miles long and eight hundred wide, where the remains of unknown and wonderful civilizations are being discovered. This region extends from the northern boundaries of Peru to the southern limits of Costa Rica. In one section alone along the coast of Ecuador, six entirely unknown civilizations were recently brought to light by Professor Marshall H. Saville, and a vast collection of relics has been brought to New York, where it is stored temporarily at a house up town. This collection is to be the nucleus of a great American museum, which will represent the history of ancient peoples who attained an extraordinarily high degree of civilization, yet whose very existence has been hitherto lost in antiquity. The famed marble chairs of Rome at its zenith were not more symmetrical or beautifully carved than those of one of these unknown civilizations. No pottery of any other ancient race was more delicately patterned than that found in vast quantities, as numerous almost as pebbles, on the sites where these extinct peoples dwelt. Their cloth was of truly marvelous weave: in beauty of design, richness of color, and fineness of texture, no fabric of to-day surpasses it. Thus far, Professor Saville has not been able to explore more than one section, which embraces the provinces of Manibi and Esmeraldus, in Ecuador; and the remains are so thick that more surveys will be necessary. Not a grave is opened in Esmeraldus but contains heaps of jewelry. In a single grave, the bullion value of the gold jewelry was $1,800. The costly expeditions to Ecuador have been made possible by the generosity of George G. Heye, a New York millionaire. Mr. Heye is a young man, a graduate of Columbia University, and is one of the most enthusiastic archæologists in the United States. Aside from the large assortments of relics just brought from Ecuador, he possesses the greatest private collection of North American Indian archæological material in the world.

"It is from the province of Manabi that the majestic stone seats come. Manabi lies directly upon the equator and borders upon the Pacific Ocean. Inland the Andes tower rises to a great height. The whole coast of Ecuador has a sparse population of only 100,000 inhabitants, of whom few are whites.

The people live along the sea coast, and the interior is a desolate wilderness. The stone seats or chairs are found in an almost incredible abundance on the summits of the hills not far from the sea, within an area of about twenty miles in diameter. Nearer the mountains in Manabi other extinct civilizations have been discovered, but they bear no relation to this particular one, and, in fact, do not resemble one another. No such stone seats, nor any ruins similar to them, have been found in any other part of North or South America."

In these empty skulls at one time dwelt the divine spark of intelligence. These are the ancient Americans who lived, loved, fought, and died in the dim and mysterious past. Archæology endeavors to unravel their history. When it is fully written we may expect it to accord with the Book of Mormon story.

So it has been in Egypt, Babylonia, and elsewhere. If on the supposed older continent, where history is estimated as being authentic, archæology must correct it, it is obvious that on the Western Continent, whose history has been oft attempted since the date of its discovery four hundred and eighteen years ago, results of archæological research are the more important. In our schools, colleges, and universities history is taught, and it is supposed it comprises the world aspect of important history of nations. It therefore is superlatively as well as imperatively necessary it should be correct, and its correction largely dependent upon archæology. History as taught in some courses of study does not embrace reliable history of past ages of this continent, but that which has been written in the various attempts during the short period since the discovery, and fabulous as the various different attempts evidence.

The greater importance attaches to archæology here, as the history is less developed from the world viewpoint. Were the Book of Mormon accepted as history the viewpoint would be changed. The correctness of Book of Mormon history is largely to be determined by the results of archæological research. The Book of Mormon, a reputed revelation from God, is accepted as such by comparatively few, the Bible by more, but not all.

Each of these books to some have sufficient certification aside from an appeal to archæology, but, to many, all other evidences are not sufficient. Archæology, with self-evident and conclusive results, makes the evidence complete. It is, therefore, of first importance in support of Book of Mormon claims to those to whom other evidences appeal if at all only in a minor sense.

On the Book of Mormon claim for ancient civilizations archæology is the only source of evidence that is entirely unimpeachable as well as self-evident.

Prejudice—that blind hatred of anything that is not as old as humanity—is founded, not on caution or conservatism, but on ignorance. The sullen opposition to new ideas, whether they be clearly good and useful or not, that has been the despair of many able and far-seeing men, has its root in ignorance.—Selected.

Our whole trouble in our lot in this world rises from the disagreement of our mind therewith. Let the mind be brought to the lot, and the whole tumult is instantly hushed; let it be kept in that disposition, and the man shall stand at ease, in his affliction, life a rock unmoved with water beating upon it.—T. Our daily familiar life is but a hiding of ourselves from each other behind a screen of trivial words and deeds, and those who sit with us at the same hearth are often the furthest off from the deep human soul within us, full of unspoken evil and unacted good.—George Eliot.

THE RELIGIO CONVENTION.

APRIL 2.

The sixteenth annual convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society convened with a prayer and testimony meeting in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, April 2, 1912, at 9 a. m., J. A. Gunsolley and S. A. Burgess in charge. Redeemer of Israel was sung, prayer by Brother Burgess, who also pronounced the benediction.

At 10.15 a. m., the assembly was called to order for business, President J. A. Gunsolley in charge, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser acting as secretary. Number 11, Zion's Praises, was sung, prayer by W. H. Garrett.

The report of the credentials committee was approved.

By motion the general officers of the society were chosen as the officers of the convention. The nomination by Sister M. A. Etzenhouser of Louise Giesch as assistant secretary was approved. The president and his associates were authorized to complete the organization. Paul Craig was appointed chorister, being authorized to select assistants. He chose Flo McNichols as assistant chorister, and Sister Royal Brocaw as organist. As press committee the following brethren were appointed: J. F. Garver, M. H. Siegfried, and J. A. Becker; as notification committee, G. R. Wells, Alvin Knisley, and N. L. Booker.

The following from the executive committee was read:

"The executive committee recommends as a feature of the convention that we have a committee on resolutions, a nominating committee, and an appropriation committee."

By separate motion that portion of the recommendation providing for committees on resolution and appropriation was approved; that pertaining to a nomination committee being denied. In answer to a question the chairman stated that this provision was for this convention only. The following were appointed on resolutions committee: J. W. Wight, J. T. Thompson, M. C. Fisher, J. A. Tanner, and Harvey Sandy. A motion prevailed appointing the executive committee as the appropriation committee.

President J. A. Gunsolley reported having been prevented by other duties from doing all he would like to have done. He had done field work in Kansas and Missouri, having directed field work and provided workers elsewhere. The year had been one of progress. In his opinion quarterlies or lessons should be provided, based on biographies of prominent men and women of the church, and leading events connected with the origin and building up of the latter day work. Provision should be made for the continuation and further development of the social purity work. The things the society has been fostering should be pushed; perhaps no new thing to be taken up, further than to assist in every good work.

"Program committees and their work" was discussed; led by J. A. Gunsolley.

S. A. Burgess, vice president, reported having done little work, owing to other duties. He had conferred with the other officers as required, and had done special work at Saint Louis and Lamoni. Reporting as general librarian, he had directed the literary work in connection with the library commission.

A discussion of the duties of the social committee was had, led by T. J. Elliott.

Song number 141 was sung; dismissal by M. H. Siegfried.

At 2 p. m., after fifteen minutes of song, prayer was offered by A. J. Layland. Minutes referring to the prayer service and of the business of the morning were read and approved.

The general secretary, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, reported having received reports from every district, only two of these being incomplete. One new district had been organized, Western New York. Two new openings were made, locals for the first time being organized in England and Palestine, one in each country. Independence Stake ranks first in numbers gained for the year, Eastern Michigan coming next. Saint Louis District shows the highest number of new locals organized, being third in rank for numbers gained. For the year a gain of 16 locals, 1,029 members, and 566 home department members, was shown, making a total membership gain of 1595. As field worker the secretary reported work done in Canada, Michigan, Illinois, and Iowa, also institute work in Missouri. The general ministry and local workers were commended for their efforts of the year.

A paper by C. W. Barker, on "Records and reports" was read by T. J. Elliott, followed by discussion.

J. A. Gardner, treasurer, reported increased sale of the Quarterlies. He had especially called to the attention of local treasurers the importance of the relief work; this work in his opinion needs further systematizing. The financial report showed a balance on hand last report $1,834.79; total receipts for year, $1,787.94; total expenditures, $956.34; balance on hand, $2,666.39.

The auditing committee reported having examined the accounts of the treasurer and found same to be correct. This report, with the report of the treasurer, was approved.

The report of the treasurer was followed by a discussion of "Relief work," led by J. A. Gardner.

The revising committee reported the work of revising of Quarterly lessons to have been performed in the regular way, smoothly and with little difficulty.

The lessons committee recommended that junior lessons be provided, to be in harmony with the regular series, to be included in the present Quarterly as an appendix, the present lessons to be somewhat shortened. The resolution was referred to the executive committee with power to act.

Number 99 was sung, dismissal by J. A. Gunsolley.

At 7 p. m., a men's meeting, under the auspices of the committee on social purity was held, at which there was discussed: Our responsibility as ministers of God in teaching personal purity and social hygiene.

At 7.30 p. m., number 96 was sung, prayer by F. A. Smith. A twenty minute program of music with a reading followed.

The home department superintendent, Altha Deam, reported gains in this department, which furnished during the year material for eight new locals, transferred eighty-two members to locals, still having a membership of 2,404, net gain 466. Southern Nebraska leads in gain, Clinton District second, Oregon third. Independence Stake leads in membership, 386. Colorado comes first in contributions, with Little Sioux second, Northern California third. Sister Deam reported special work done by herself in Iowa and Missouri.

A discussion of home department work led by Sister Deam followed.

The resolutions committee recommended the consideration of the amendments proposed by the Gallands Grove District as published on page 139 of Autumn Leaves for March, 1912. This amendment was to cover section four and five of article four. By motion the amendments were approved, the amended sections to read:

Section 4. Withdrawals.—Any member who may wish to withdraw from the society shall give one week's notice of his intention to do so; except when he desires to remove and unite with another society or home class in which case if in good standing, he shall be given a letter of removal, recommending him to membership in such a society or home class, and a vote may be taken without one week's notice.

Section 5. Dropping.—Members who are neglectful of duty, or indifferent to responsibility assumed, should, after being labored with by the lookout committee lovingly, prayerfully, and persistently, and being given not less than one week's notice; or those who have become lost to the society by moving from local or through failure to report, after an absence of three months, be dropped from membership in said local society.

A communication from the Quorum of Twelve was read stating that they had been visited by the notification committee, and assuring the Religians that they were in harmony with the good intentions of the society, wishing it godspeed.

A communication from M. A. McConley to the secretary relative to the condition of the work in Hawaii was read. While there was no gain in numbers, he reported an individual development. The president of the Honolulu local is a Hawaiian, speaking the Hawaiian and English languages; the vice president a Japanese, speaking the English and Japanese languages; the secretary a Hawaiian Chinese, speaking the English, Hawaiian and Chinese languages. These young men are educated in the English language and Brother McConley thinks they will be heard from in the future.

APRIL 3.

At 8 a. m., a men's meeting was held, at which the following was adopted:

Resolved, That we recommend to the General Religio Association the appointment of one member to act in conjunction with one appointed by the General Sunday School and one by the General Conference; if approved, to form a working committee to be known as the Social Purity Board, whose work shall be the meeting of the men's problems relating to social purity.

At 8.30 a. m., a thirty-minute devotional service was conducted, in charge of J. A. Gunsolley and W. W. Scott.

The minutes of previous meeting were read and approved.

The library board reported progress. Cooperation from all sources was asked. A new instruction pamphlet is needed. A catalogue of books for libraries is ready for publication. Treasurer reported expenditures for the year $150; balance on hand $47.40.

The work of local library boards was discussed, led by C. B. Woodstock.

Harvey Sandy, good literature superintendent, reported 19,604 pieces distributed by ten districts. The missionary force had distributed 50,000 pieces.

A discussion of gospel literature work was led by Brother Sandy.

Resolutions asking that the lessons be shortened, and for intermediate and primary quarterlies were referred to the lessons committee.

Resolution asking for a field worker for the Pacific Slope was referred to the executive committee.

A resolution extending the ex officio membership of the convention, so as to include state normal superintendents and others necessary, was referred to a committee.

Resolutions looking to the publication of the Book of Mormon in the Hebrew, Spanish and Bohemian languages were referred to the executive committee, First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric.

The executive committee was authorized to appoint a historian for the society, for the year.

A resolution indorsing the action of the Trustees of Graceland College in making tobacco using a bar against enrollment as students was approved. It was also expressed as the belief of the convention that the same attitude should be taken touching members of the faculty and Board of Trustees; said action being referred to the General Conference.

Number 228 was sung, S. A. Burgess pronouncing the benediction.

At 2 p. m., fifteen minutes of song, with prayer by T. A. Hougas, preceded the reading of the minutes of the forenoon session. Minutes approved.

The following officers were elected: President, J. A. Gunsolley; vice president, T. J. Elliott; secretary, Sister M. A. Etzenhouser; treasurer, J. A. Gardner; librarian, S. A. Burgess; home department superintendent, Altha Deam.

R. W. Farrell, Quarterly editor, reported. He realized the impracticability, if not impossibility, of teaching the Doctrine and Covenants to children, so had made no attempt to do so. The only logical criticism that came to him was concerning the length of lessons.

Methods of lesson study were discussed, led by Brother Farrell.

Elbert A. Smith, editor of the Religio's Arena in the Autumn Leaves, reported. He felt the need of matter for publication in the Arena from the heads of departments.

Literary service was discussed by Brother Smith. The social purity committee reported. Seventy special purity services were held; 1,380 pieces of literature were distributed, and a tract written and now ready for distribution.

The resolution adopted by the men's meeting relative to the creation of a social purity board was approved, and C. B. Woodstock chosen as the member for the Religio.

The following appropriations were made: general purposes, $300; social purity, $100; library board, $100; normal department, $50; good literature work, $50; Graceland College library, $200, and in case a college library building be erected, $500, the entire amount to be used in erecting said building; erecting a Chinese mission building in Honolulu, $500, providing the General Sunday School and General Conference each appropriated an equal amount.

Number 111 was sung; dismissal by J. A. Gunsolley.

At 7.30 p. m., prayer by T. W. Chatburn was followed by a musical entertainment of thirty minutes.

Diplomas were presented to forty-two who had completed the first course of the normal work, and to fourteen who had completed the post graduate course.

Normal superintendent, Sister David H. Blair, reported. In her opinion a text book on advanced Bible study, published by the church, would be advantageous. A condensed church history for normal study would also be profitable.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

RANDOM CONFERENCE NOTES.

JUVENILE CHOIR.—One of the most inspiring features of conference was the singing of the juvenile choir of one hundred and seventy-five voices, under the leadership of Sister Audentia Anderson. These boys and girls when banked in the choir circle presented an animated and pleasing spectacle, and when they launched out in song they swept the audience with them. In them we saw the future men and women who shall sound the gospel story in song and sermon in years to come. The audience was enthused. Tears came to their eyes and courage to their hearts. To our minds came the old verse that Whittier wrote:

"Hail to the future singers!
Hail to the brave light-bringers!
Forward I reach and share
All that they sing and dare."

PRESIDENT SMITH OPENS THE CONFERENCE.—Owing to several weeks of affliction with his old facial trouble, it was feared that President Joseph Smith would not be able to appear at the business sessions. But when the hour came, marking the opening of the conference and the fifty-second year of his presidency, he was in his accustomed place and announced the opening hymn and offered the invocation.

GROWTH OF THE CHURCH.—The report of the General Church Recorder shows 3,062 baptisms for the year, a net gain over losses by death and removal of 2,485. The present membership is 65,415. Reports of ministers in charge indicate a ratio of about one baptism to every twelve sermons. The ratio fifteen or twenty years ago was not so good, being about one baptism to twenty sermons. Missouri leads in church membership with 10,004; Iowa is next with 9,683. Among the States Michigan leads in baptisms for the year, with 375; Iowa has 318; Oklahoma 269; Missouri 257. Canada reports 288 baptisms, and a net gain of 259. The gain for the year for the church is above the average for ten years past. Among the new branches reported we note one at Geelong, Australia; and one at Jerusalem. Brother Rees Jenkins reports that prospects for the latter are very good.

If one may judge by the conferences and conventions, there is a steady growth in numbers and in intellectuality. We were about to add spirituality, but remembering the deeds and sacrifices of the fathers, we forbear.

SYSTEM.—The growth of our conferences and conventions and the increasing volume of business compels us to systematize, and much more is now accomplished in a given time than was considered possible in years gone by; especially is this true of routine matters during opening days of conference, thus leaving time to devote to discussion of important matters later on. Committees on resolutions and nominations were an innovation in the conventions this year, and seemed to work well. Nominations and resolutions were referred to them or were originated or perfected by them, thus saving much time. The time saved was devoted to special institute and educational features. In the conference time was saved by the distribution of printed credential reports, the appointment of a committee on boundary lines of districts, and by other means not now called to mind.

A LIVELY TILT.—The Historian's report gave some space to an account of changes in the Utah Church, under the heading, "Rival organizations." Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths immediately moved that all reference to the Utah Church be stricken from the report, on the grounds that such reference would confuse the two churches in the minds of the people. A spirited debate followed, and the motion was voted down. A half hour later Brother Gomer T. Griffiths' report was being read and in it he devoted some space to the operations of the Utah Church in his mission. The Historian then arose and moved that all reference to the Utah Church be stricken from the report. Considerable merriment was created by this unexpected turn of affairs. Brother Gomer might protest that the cases were not exactly alike, but that did not destroy the flavor of the joke. It was one of those good-natured little encounters that enliven conference but do not get into the minutes and are lost to those not in attendance. Indeed, without the original setting, such incidents lose much of their piquancy in the telling.

CHURCH INSTITUTIONS.—Conference reports call to mind the fact that we now have a sanitarium, a college, a children's home, and five homes for the aged. The Children's Home was opened on the fifteenth day of last August. Two of the homes for the aged are in Lamoni, two in Independence, and one in Kirtland.

PRESS AND PULPIT.—The Church Historian reports that cheap papers and cheap preachers of the "lower strata" continue to misrepresent us in the usual mean and false ways. But the higher classes of magazines, preachers, and lecturers are more fair than in times past. The historical magazines, in particular, are giving us space for articles in self-defense.

MARVELOUS POWER OF ELECTRICITY.—During the conference we met a newspaper reporter who told us how at the conference some few years ago he imposed himself on the administration committee as a worthy and afflicted Latter Day Saint. He said that when the elders laid their hands on his head he felt an influence pass through him from his head to his feet. He wriggled his fingers violently to illustrate the supposed feeling. He added that he would be perfectly frank and say that the pain in his shoulder from which he had suffered, due to rheumatism, departed immediately. But he said: "I attribute it all to e-lectricity." We advised him in the future when troubled with rheumatism never to fail to try "e-lectricity."

A CONCISE TESTIMONY.—At one of the prayer services this testimony was borne by a well-known member of the Order of Evangelists: "This work includes all that is good, and rejects all that is bad. He who forsakes it to secure the good that is in the world leaves the whole to secure a part. He who rejects and opposes the work as a whole opposes all that is good and allies himself with all that is bad. This work is so pure, so grand, so comprehensive, that it claims my utmost devotion."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

W. H. Kelley submitted a ministerial report of labors performed.

President Joseph Smith, chairman, submitted a report for the committee appointed to investigate the matter of incorporation in stakes, stating that since the provision for the organization of the Order of Enoch, this investigation was practically unnecessary, recommending that the committee be discontinued. Report was approved, and recommendation adopted.

President Joseph Smith, member of the committee on revision of church history offered his resignation from said committee. Resignation was accepted and President Smith was tendered a vote of thanks for his services.

Joseph Smith, chairman of the committee on monument to the martyrs, reported no appreciable progress other than the securing of the site where the bodies lie. He tendered his resignation, which was accepted. President F. M. Smith chosen to fill the vacancy.

The First Presidency reported: President Joseph Smith in addition to acting as editor of SAINTS' HERALD reported a considerable correspondence of importance during the year. President F. M. Smith in addition to important office work reported labors in the Canadian Northwest, and in the Eastern States. President Elbert A. Smith, in addition to acting as associate editor of the SAINTS' HERALD and editor of Autumn Leaves, had labored in Central Western States and in California. Special meetings were reported in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Kansas City, and Toronto. The holding of such meetings were encouraged. The outlook, in the opinion of the Presidency, is good.

The Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium reported: Nine patients January 1, 1911, 131 admitted, total treated during the year, 140; 112 were discharged, 17 died, 11 being left under the care of the institution; 57 operations had been performed. Their financial report was also submitted. It is the opinion of the board that the Sanitarium is a valuable aid to the church. Reports approved.

Report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College was submitted. Necessary repairs had been made on the dormitories and farm house. A central heating plant had been installed. Various departments had been strengthened. A new system of accounting for the institution has been adopted. Additional room for the library and museum is needed. A falling off of offerings and endowments had occurred. Financial support and cooperation was asked. The financial report was submitted in connection with the above. Action of the report was deferred.

Presiding Bishopric reported the past year had been a busy one. Work of the bishops and agents was commended. Counselor G. H. Hilliard had been ill and incapacitated for labor during a portion of the year, this disability being thought to be due to overwork. Foreign fields had been better supported than in past years. The laying of the foundations of Zion is thought to be one of the most important features of the work. Saints' and Liberty Homes had been well cared for by the committee, John Smith and Lorenzo Hayer. Additional means had been provided for the care of the aged by the opening of Bonheim and Kensington Homes, Independence, Missouri, and by repairing the home for the aged at Kirtland, Ohio; Kirtland Hotel had been repaired. A children's home had been opened at Lamoni. Financial report of the Bishopric was also submitted.

The roll of ex officio officers of the conference was read.

The General Sunday School Association reported six sessions held during its convention. An increase in membership of 1,859 was reported, making the total 29,457. Normal books for Book of Mormon have been reissued. Normal department, library work and home department all had been ably handled. Financial condition was good—$2,602 on hand. Association is arranging to publish graded lessons. The association appreciated the fostering care of the church and the cooperation of the ministry.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society reported seven sessions held in convention. A gain of 16 locals, 1,595 members was shown; total membership 10,657.

Provisions for junior lessons based on biographies of leading church men and leading events of the church was made. The Religio voted to cooperate with the Sunday school in providing a new normal book to be published to replace Huribut's Normal Lessons.

Committee on boundary lines submitted the following report:

To the General Conference: Your committee appointed by the Presidency to consider discrepancies in statements of district boundary lines, including petitions referring thereto, recommend

1. That all unorganized territory in southeastern Missouri be annexed to Southern Missouri District: counties of Iron, Reynolds, Carter, Ripley, Madison, Wayne, Butler, Bollinger, Stoddard, Dunklin, New Madrid, Pemiscot, Cape Girardeau, Scott, Mississippi.

2. That Callaway County, Missouri, be annexed to the Northeastern Missouri District.

3. That Hood River, Wasco, Sherman, and Gilliam counties, Oregon, be annexed to the Portland District.

4. That Grundy and Livingston counties, Missouri, be added to the Far West District.

5. That the petition of Northeastern Illinois District be granted and that the boundary line of that district be as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of the State of Illinois and running west to the west line of Winnebago County on the northern State line; thence south on a line with the west line of Winnebago County to Bureau, and from there to the north line of Mason County. The Illinois River shall be the western boundary line thence east on the south line of Tazewell, McLean, Ford, and Iriquois counties to the Indiana State line; thence north on the east line of Illinois to the northeast corner of the State, the starting point.

6. That Hood, Johnson, and Ellis counties, Texas, be taken from the Eastern Oklahoma District and added to the Central Texas District.

7. That Bonner, Kootenai, Shoshone, Latah, and Nezperce counties, Idaho, be added to the Spokane District.

8. West Virginia District. That the petition of the West Virginia District be denied, and that the entire Panhandle of that State remain in the Pittsburg District.

The matter of appropriation for a Chinese mission house in Honolulu was taken up. The Religio Society had appropriated five hundred dollars; the Sunday school eight hundred for this purpose. It was moved that the conference appropriate one thousand dollars for said purpose. A substitute referring the matter to the Presiding Bishopric prevailed.

The First Presidency, the Quorum of High Priests concurring, recommended that William Sparling and H. O. Smith be ordained to the office of high priest. The recommendations were approved, and the ordinations were ordered provided for.

The First Presidency and Twelve recommended that Eli Hayer be ordained a high priest. The recommendation was adopted.

Committee appointed to consider the reinstatement of J. W. Jackson to membership in the Second Quorum of Seventy recommended that the matter be referred to the First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. A motion to refer to the Seven Presidents of Seventy was lost. Recommendation referring to joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, was approved and the matter so referred.

The following from the Twelve was read:

Whereas, the law of God to this church, as found in the Doctrine and Covenants 42:7 provides

"Thou shalt not commit adultery; and he that committeth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out; but he that has committed adultery and repents with all his heart, and forsaketh it, and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive; but if he doeth it again, he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out."

Therefore, be it resolved, That it is the sense of this quorum that parties excommunicated from the church for the second offense of adultery can not be received again into fellowship in the church even by baptism. It was moved to adopt.

The following substitute was offered: Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that when a person is expelled from the church for what is known as the second offense of adultery, (Doctrine and Covenants 42:7) the one cast out to be with other offenders and sinners in the world and may be preached to and labored with the same as any other sinners and that when they shall sufficiently sense their condition, repent, and make restitution so far as they can, they may be received back into the church by the ordinance of baptism.

The chair was resigned to President F. M. Smith.

The substitute was lost. The original motion prevailed by a vote of 200 to 199.

It was moved to reconsider. A motion to defer until Thursday afternoon was lost. The chair stated that the body would adjourn.

Number 182 was sung, W. H. Kelley pronouncing the benediction.

APRIL 11.

The 9 o'clock prayer service was in charge of A. M. Chase and S. B. Kibler. The speaker at 10.45 was W. A. Smith, assisted by Henry Sparling.

At 2 p. m. the assembly was called to order by President F. M. Smith. After singing number 143, G. T. Griffiths offered prayer. The minutes were approved.

Additional report of the credentials committee was adopted.

The matter pending at adjournment was taken up. It was moved that speeches be limited to four minutes, and that after four speeches be made the vote be taken. It was moved to amend by adding that after these four speeches Bishop E. L. Kelley have five minutes to speak. By motion the whole matter was tabled.

The following from Zion's Religio-Literary Society was read: Resolved, That as a convention we heartily indorse the action of the Trustees of Graceland College in making the use of tobacco a bar to membership in the school as a student. Resolved, further, That we believe that the same attitude should be taken regarding the faculty and the Board of Trustees.

It was moved that the action of the Religio be indorsed. By motion the whole matter was tabled.

The Third Quorum of Seventy reported a membership of 24. Forty-six new openings had been made, two debates being held.

It was moved that the Children's Home at Lamoni be incorporated under the laws of the State of Iowa. Motion prevailed.

It was moved that the body select a Board of Trustees of seven, and that three be sisters. Motion prevailed.

Moved that four trustees be elected, leaving three to be nominated by the Woman's Auxiliary. The following were selected: Joseph Roberts, Oscar Anderson, Heman C. Smith, Richard Bullard.

The following was moved: Resolved, That copies of the Book of Mormon be furnished by the church to missionaries who may be laboring among the Lamanites for their distribution among them, and that such distribution be fostered and forwarded by the church.

Moved to refer to the Board of Publication. A substitute was moved to refer to the Presiding Bishopric. The whole matter was tabled.

A communication from I. N. White, of the Twelve, was read. The condition of his health prevented his attendance at the conference, and after December had made his release from the active service necessary, and he had gone to California. His health had improved, but would not permit an appointment of responsibility.

Committee on correction of typographical errors, etc., in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, reported corrections made, a concordance compiled, and a new publication issued. The work done was approved and the committee discharged.

The following was moved: Resolved, That Sunday next until the evening meal be set apart and observed as a day of fasting and prayer, in petitioning our heavenly Father for direction and aid in the interests of the church. Motion prevailed.

Moved to take up the matter of amendment to Rules of Order on representation, referred to in minutes of 1911, page 1455. The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

Whereas, the church membership in the various stakes and districts is rapidly increasing in numbers; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the rules of representation be so amended that the membership of one vote for every fifty members and fraction thereof, instead of one vote for every twenty-five members and fraction thereof, as at present constituted. Moved to adopt the amendment.

Moved to amend by striking out all reference to fractions in the amendment.

By motion action was deferred.

Matter of fixing the limit for new business was referred to the Presidency.

Number 86 was sung; benediction by M. C. Fisher.

APRIL 12.

At 9 a. m. the prayer service was in charge of F. J. Ebeling and T. W. Williams. The speaker at 10.45 was E. E. Long, assisted by J. A. Dowker.

President E. A. Smith called the assembly to order at 2 p. m., announcing number 367. V. M. Goodrich offered prayer. Minutes were approved.

Saturday, 2.15 p. m., was announced as the time limit for new business.

The joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric submitted the following:

"Resolved, as a joint council of the First Presidency, Bishopric, and Quorum of Twelve, that the matter of the nature of the services to be held in the Kirtland Temple shall be left to the discretion of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric."

The resolution was adopted.

Joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy reported touching reinstatement of J. W. Jackson to Second Quorum of Seventy, recommending that the petition be denied. Report was adopted.

The Seven Presidents of Seventy recommended that James E. Page and Edward Rannie be ordained to the office of Seventy. The recommendations were approved and ordinations provided for.

Second Quorum of Seventy reported 10 debates, 98 new openings, 59 members.

The committee appointed to draft resolutions of appreciation to President Joseph Smith submitted the following:

To President Joseph Smith: Your brethren of the ministry, ex officio members and delegates in General Conference assembled, on behalf of the membership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints throughout the world, congratulate you upon your continued service and usefulness to the body.

We regret the necessity which has prompted you to tender your resignation from the various committees on which you have so faithfully and successfully served.

We recognize, however, that the purpose of such resignation is not to shirk duty or to shift responsibility, but to give you the opportunity to concentrate your activities along lines more vital and to service which could not well be performed by others.

Your keen perception, mental acumen and penetration, your clear grasp on questions of general interest gives unmistakable evidence of divine grace and blessing. We know that your interest and devotion to the cause of truth will never wane though physical disabilities may limit the field of your activities.

In renewing your continuous and extended services in the church we are reminded of the days when God in his wisdom called you to fill your father's place, and recall with joy the unselfish consecration and devotion of your life to conserve the glory of God and to bless mankind.

Your service has been an inspiration; your loyalty a benediction; your life an open book; your example clean and virtuous; your conduct above reproach; your sympathy proverbial; your kindness a household blessing.

By your upright life; your freedom from dogmatism; your absolute fairness; your unassuming dignity and humility; your gentleness and charity towards all, you have won our love, esteem, and honor, and endeared yourself to us by ties which are inseparable.

We greet you as a leader, comrade, brother. We love you not alone for what you have done, but for what you have been; not alone for the arduous and untiring services rendered, but for the unselfish spirit you have manifested; for your willingness to bear rather than to give pain, to endure rather than to inflict wrong.

Your exemplification of the dynamic principle of constructive service, "Resist not evil," as enunciated by the Master, enshrines you in the confidence and affection of a loving, grateful fellowship.

We therefore, by a rising vote, and on behalf of the entire membership of the church tender to you our sincerest thanks and grateful appreciation for the services rendered, and affectionately extend our sincere wishes for continued years of service for and with the body.

By rising vote the above was unanimously adopted. To this President Smith feelingly responded:

Brethren, I appreciate the motive of the body in appointing this committee; I appreciate the motive of the men who were selected and who have composed and written this article in obedience to the wishes of the body. All that I can say in return for the expression of good will and confidence and warm admiration which are breathed in this communication is that when I am gone I want no prouder motto or epitaph engraved upon the stone that may mark my resting place than that which was accorded to one of the humblest of the servants mentioned in the New Testament scripture, "She hath done what she could." And if in the past I have at any time failed in doing what was expected of me, it was through inability and not through any desire to shirk the responsibility that the body or the Master had imposed upon me. I have trusted to him, who is the great genius of the work, to suggest to me in his own way that which would be sufficient to satisfy my judgment and direct the course which I should pursue.

I have not tried to please men as men, either in or out of the church, and I have tried not to fear the just censure of them who were friends to the cause, and I have cared nothing for the scorn of those who are without. And I desire to bear tribute to those who have stood with me in this conflict, who have with unflinching courage been out upon the frontier and standing before adverse congregations and meeting all sorts of calumny and vituperations and scorn from those who were desirous to destroy the magnificent work in which they were engaged; that they have not shrunk from duty, so far as my knowledge goes, and that they are, if anything, more entitled to tribute from us than I have been, under the conditions which have governed and surrounded at the time that their work was demanded.

I have always had friends near me. I have always had some one to help me bear my burden and share in my association in the work. Many of these men have labored alone and have labored under threats of harm which have never been expressed towards me. They have borne privations to which I was never subjected. I have heard no complaint from them. I have tried to help them when I could, which I believe they will bear evidence of if requested, and if I have failed in cheering and in encouraging them, I feel that it has not been because of a desire, on my part to desert them, or to fail to listen to them. I have prayed for their success. I have trusted them and I believe that the Master has called them, and as he has trusted them I have rejoiced in their triumph. I have been strengthened in their strength, and have been encouraged in the expression of their courage, and I feel that the tie which has bound us together has been the more remarkable from the consideration of the fact that the body has been composed of men of such wonderfully different individualities that it is a wonder that there has been so much of unity among us as there has been, differing as widely as the places from whence we came. Many of these men have left companionship and associations in which they were well received, and in which they were esteemed and respected, to take up this great work, and they have faithfully met all the consequences that have ensued; and God be praised that I have been enabled to appreciate the manly courage which they have shown, and understood the difficulties in which they labored, and to rejoice in the true spirit of devotion which bound them to the Master's cause. And when I have reflected upon those who have gone out from us either from their own choice having changed their opinion and their belief, or have been driven from us by the adverse circumstances of transgression, I have been pleased to know that the words have been fulfilled to us that no weapon formed against the work should be prospered, and I have rejoiced therein.

I trust that these expressions of mine, feeble as they are, may find that response in the hearts of those to whom they are addressed, and to whom they are and should be applied, may be that while the Master shall call, while the Master shall permit us to serve together, we will strive earnestly and faithfully that no evil act of ours, no foolish forgetfulness of the duty we owe to God and to each other, will ever cause us to feel ourselves unworthy of the respect, regard, and love which have been our ties so long together in this work.

May God add his blessings and his peace, in Jesus' name, Amen.

The Library Commission reported the general library at Lamoni, Iowa, in good condition. A number of new volumes have been secured. An enlarged leaflet and a list of books suitable for small libraries is needed. The commission is seeking to unify the library work of the church. The Presidency, Bishopric, HERALD editors, and Church Historian need more books. Additional rare books touching the latter day work favorably and unfavorably are also needed. It was recommended that all libraries paid for by the church be under the direction of the commission. In consideration of conditions demanding, and inasmuch as the students of Graceland College had pledged $1,500 and Zion's Religio-Literary Society $500 for the erection of a library building, the commission recommended that a suitable library building be erected at Lamoni, Iowa.

Heman C. Smith was elected to succeed himself as a member of the Library Commission.

By motion the invitation of the Lamoni Branch and stake to hold the next General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, was accepted.

The following were elected as a Board of Auditors: for the three-year term, J. F. Garver; for the two-year term, G. W. Blair; for the one year term, Lester Haas.

The matter of erecting a library building referred to in report of the Library Commission was taken up, and it was moved to refer to the Presiding Bishopric and The Library Commission with power to act. It was moved to defer consideration of erecting library building until after general church offices be erected. The motion to defer was lost; the motion to refer prevailed.

H. O. Smith asked that his ordination to the office of high priest, provided for on the eleventh, be deferred for one year. The request was granted.

The following was offered: Moved, the address of appreciation offered to President Joseph Smith be suitably inscribed, engrossed, and illuminated; and then framed to be presented to the President. It was moved to amend by adding, "or bound in pamphlet or book form, as the committee may decide." The amendment prevailed, and the motion as amended was passed.

The following committee was chosen to carry out the above provision: T. W. Williams, R. C. Evans, S. A. Burgess.

Number 353 was sung, the benediction was pronounced by T. W. Williams.

At 7.45 the service was devoted to the work of daily vacation bible school work. The meeting was in charge of U. W. Greene, addresses being made by W. W. Smith and W. E. LaRue.

THE RELIGIO CONVENTION.

Normal work as applied to the Religio was discussed by Sister Blair.

A petition from the South Sea Islands asking for an appropriation to provide wall maps for use in locals there was referred to the executive committee.

A committee was appointed to cooperate with the Sunday school in arranging lessons on Bible normal work.

An appropriation of $100 was made to help release the mortgage from the home of Peter Muceus, incurred by expense of publishing Sandhedens Banner.

The convention pledged the raising of $500 for translation purposes, to be placed at the disposal of the executive committee.

The lessons committee was by motion continued. Minutes of afternoon and evening read and approved.

Following a motion to adjourn, number 232 was sung; dismissal by J. W. Wight.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

APRIL 4.

The twenty-first convention of the General Sunday School Association opened with a prayer and testimony service at 8.30 a. m., April 4, 1912, in the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, John Smith in charge.

At 9.15 a brief song service led by Audentia Anderson was followed with prayer by Daniel Macgregor.

Cradle roll and primary work was discussed; in charge of Callie B. Stebbins.

Fifteen minutes of song was followed by a discussion on expediting the business of a general convention, by D. J. Krahl; it being his opinion that resolutions, appropriations, and nominating committees should be provided.

The officers of the association, there being no objection, proceeded to the completion of the organization. J. F. Mintun and Estella Wight were appointed assistant secretaries; Audentia Anderson, chorister; Paul Craig, organist.

The credentials committee report was approved. Number 88 was sung, G. R. Wells dismissing.

At 2 p. m., after singing number 187, G. R. Wells offered prayer, followed by special music.

A discussion of home department work was had, led by Florence McNichols.

The following committees were appointed: Notification, resolutions, appropriations and nominations.

Daniel Macgregor, superintendent, reported. The year had been marked by earnestness of effort by all. More institute work in districts was suggested. A business manager, to have oversight over the financial affairs of the association was suggested. The surplus funds should be devoted to the building up of the Sunday school work.

G. R. Wells, first assistant superintendent, reported field work done in Wisconsin. He had counseled and cooperated with the superintendent.

A. H. Parsons, second assistant superintendent, reported field work in Illinois. Other duties had prevented in his work.

Secretary D. J. Krahl reported a net gain of 41 schools, 1,859 members; present number of schools 625, membership 29,457.

John Smith, treasurer, reported on hand last report, $1,850.75; receipts for year, $5,430.53; balance on hand, $2,602.09. This report, with the report of the auditing committee thereon, was approved.

The home department superintendent, Florence McNichols, reported progress, and a gain of 873 members. Headway had been made in England, Nova Scotia, and Hawaii. Present membership, 3,416; $649.60 having been contributed by the department.

The report of the normal superintendent, Sister D. H. Blair, was a duplication of the report made to the Religio convention, as was the report of the library commission.

Association historian, W. N. Robinson, reported having collected data, which had been referred to Edward Rannie for compilation.

The revising committee reported enjoying the Spirit of the Master in their agreeable associations as a committee.

J. W. Wight reported 16 schools organized in his field, 14 of which were organized by missionaries.

G. J. Waller reported the Sunday school an important factor in Hawaii. Two schools were organized, one being for Japanese. One normal class is operated.

At 7.30 p. m. number 99 was sung, prayer by T. W. Chatburn. Special music followed.

An address on institute work was given by Sister M. A. Etzenhouser.

Library work was discussed, in charge of the library commission.

Number 115 was sung, M. C. Fisher dismissing.

APRIL 5.

At 8.30 a. m. number 144 was sung, prayer by U. W. Greene, followed by singing number 4.

Minutes of meetings of previous day approved.

The following appropriations were made: for a

Chinese mission house in Honolulu, $800; for the Library Commission, $100; for contingent expenses, $750.

In the matter of graded lessons referred by the convention of 1911 to stakes and district conventions it was reported that twenty-two of the districts were in favor of the graded lessons, and ten against, the rest not reporting. The following obtained: Resolved, That the rule requiring uniformity of lesson texts be repealed, and a graded system of lessons be provided for.

Fifteen minutes of song was followed by a conference on normal work in charge of Sister D. H. Blair.

Number 157 was sung, dismissal by W. W. Smith.

At 2 p. m. session opened with fifteen minutes of song and music; prayer by C. Ed. Miller.

An address on The Exponent was given by G. R. Wells, urging the extension of its circulation.

The following officers and committeemen were elected: Superintendent, Daniel Macgregor; first assistant superintendent, G. R. Wells; second assistant superintendent, Anna Reynolds; secretary, D. J. Krahl; treasurer, John Smith; home department superintendent, Florence McNichols; member of the Library Commission, E. H. Fisher; member auditing committee, Ostar Anderson; members revising committee, Albert Carmichael, John Smith, and R. S. Salyards; member of the lessons committee, J. F. Garver.

Lessons committee reported lessons on Bible characters prepared to last until October, 1912.

The action of the Religio Convention providing for a book of normal lessons was concurred in, and committee appointed to cooperate with that of the Religio.

The action of the Religio Convention relative to the creating of a social purity board was concurred in, R. W. Farrell being selected as the member of the Sunday school.

A proposed amendment to the constitution seeking to provide for expulsion from schools was laid on the table.

A proposed amendment to the constitution seeking to provide that members were to be dropped from membership in schools after an absence of three months, as is now the rule, was tabled.

Financial reports of G. R. Wells as field worker and financial report of the Library Commission, with report of auditing committee thereon, were spread on the minutes.

A communication from the Quorum of Twelve expressive of the sympathy of said quorum with the association, and its willingness to cooperate with the association in every way possible was read.

A resolution authorizing the executive committee to appoint a delegate or delegates to the national

Sunday school convention to be held in Switzerland in May, 1913, prevailed.

The action of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College making the use of tobacco by the students a bar against attendance beyond the term prescribed was indorsed, it being the opinion, as expressed, that the same rule would apply to the members of the faculty and the Board of Trustees.

Number 73 was sung; dismissal by G. R. Wells.

At 7.30 p. m. the opening exercises consisted of singing by the Independence junior choir, and a piano solo; prayer by Elbert A. Smith.

An address on the mothers' work in the Sunday school was given by Sister F. M. Smith.

Minutes of the previous meetings of the day were approved.

A proposed amendment to the constitution seeking to change the order so that any convention might, on a two thirds vote, change to a mass convention was lost.

A resolution authorizing the executive committee to investigate the propriety of arranging for the superintendent to spend his entire time in the interests of the Sunday school work and report to the next convention prevailed.

Schools and districts were commended for their crusade against the advertising, sale, and use of tobacco, and a copy of the convention's action thereon ordered sent to the International Sunday School Association.

The following appropriations were made: For social purity work, $50; to cover indebtedness incurred in publishing Sandhedens Banner, $100.

A proposed amendment to the constitution seeking to change the system of grading in schools was referred to the executive and the lessons committees.

Minutes of the session were read and approved.

Number 90 was sung, J. W. Wight dismissing.

Before you decide to seek happiness in material things, resolve first to find some one they have made happy.

Do not expect much from your prayers for the poor while you withhold your pence; nor from your pence if given in lieu of love.

Help to dishonor greed by honoring Success measured by kindness, culture and content, not coin; for men will always seek honor.

Do not disclaim the possibility of peace and joy in your own life. It is but a confession you have never brought either into the lives of other.

We are not skeptics, but know something. We are not on by-paths, but on the highways of humanity. We are in league with what will be holy and strong in the future.—W. M. Slater.

DO THE SAINTS BELIEVE IN SANCTIFICATION?

"A saint is a holy or godly person"; a true follower of the Lord Jesus Christ; a member of the church of the only true and living God.

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.—Paul, Ephesians 5: 25-27.

This language shows that Christ suffered death on the cross; that the gospel which contains the provisions God has devised "for the remission of sins," and the sanctification of his people might be sealed and made efficacious by the blood of "the Lamb of God." As an ambassador for Christ, and a true minister of the gospel, Paul was inspired with the same love, and labored and suffered to bring about the righteous purposes of God. He has written, "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—2 Corinthians 5: 20. "For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ."—2 Corinthians 11: 2. And John the beloved disciple and loyal minister has penned the following words on the same subject:

Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife [the church] hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.—Revelation 19: 7, 8.

Jesus prayed to his Father: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." "And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth."—John 17: 17, 15, 19.

Jesus sanctified himself in harmony with the provisions of the gospel, "and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Thus teaching by precept and example that there is power enough in the gospel to cleanse, purify, sanctify, and save to the uttermost all them that come to God by him, if they will heed his teaching, and follow his example of humility and obedience.

The same means that saved and sanctified the Son of God, will save and sanctify every loyal and true son and daughter of God.

"Sanctify.—To make sacred or holy; to purify, in preparation for religious service; to set apart to a holy or religious use, hallow; to make free from sin, to make holy; to render productive of holiness or piety."—Webster.

Before one can be sanctified he must be cleansed from sin, and that is done in harmony with the provisions of the gospel when one believes, repents and is baptized in water by immersion, for the remission of sins. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2: 38, 39. See Matthew 3: 6; Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3; Acts 22: 16.

Baptism in water for the remission of sins is referred to in the words, "That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word." That is in harmony with the gospel, or the word of God, And faith, conversion, are referred to as the means of remission, and sanctification in the following; which also includes the birth of the Spirit and its cleansing and sanctifying and holy influence: "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."—Hebrews 10: 22.

And such were some of you: [before conversion] but ye are washed, [baptized] but are ye sanctified, [set apart to a holy service by being cleansed from sin] but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and the Spirit of our God.—1 Corinthians 6: 11.

That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost.—Romans 1: 15, 16.

The last citation shows that the Holy Ghost is a means of sanctification, though not the only means, and it should be received, retained, and enjoyed by everyone who is cleansed from sin, and set apart to a holy and religious use, as a "colaborer with God."

From 1 Corinthians 1: 24, 30, we learn that it pleased God to make Christ the power, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption of God. If you with Christ receive the same favor from God, you must obtain it through Christ; and whatever you obtain through Christ, must be secured in harmony with the provisions of the gospel. Says Paul:

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith.—Romans 1: 16, 17.

You can not correctly preach "Jesus Christ, and him crucified" without preaching the gospel; and you can not correctly preach the gospel, without preaching Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And the first or foundation principles of the gospel are as follows: Faith, repentance, baptisms, (of the water and Spirit) the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. See Paul's brief of what Jesus taught as the gospel, and the citations that show that Jesus Christ taught the same, as follows: Hebrews 6: 1, 2; John 3: 14-17; 6: 29, 47; 5: 24; Mark 1: 14, 15; Luke 24: 44-48; Matthew 28: 18-20; Mark 16: 15, 16; Matthew 19: 13-15; Luke 4: 40; Acts 9: 15-17; John 5: 25, 28, 29; 5: 22, 23; Acts 10: 42.

For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both he that sanctifieth and those who are sanctified are all one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren.—Hebrews 2: 10, 11.

By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.—Hebrews 10: 10.

But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth.—2 Thessalonians 2: 13.

Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.—1 Peter 1: 2.

One of the first declarations made by the church of Jesus Christ as she emerged from the wilderness, "clear as the moon and fair as the sun," and the revelations given to her since that time are in harmony with this truth. Here is what the church said:

And we know that all men must repent and believe on the name of Jesus Christ and worship the Father in his name, and endure in faith on his name to the end, or they can not be saved in the kingdom of God. And we know that justification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is just and true; and we know, also, that sanctification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is just and true to all those who love and serve God with all their mights, minds, and strength; but there is a possibility that man may fall from grace and depart from the living God. Therefore let the church take heed and pray always, lest they fall into temptation; yea, even let those who are sanctified, take heed also.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 6.

In a revelation given to the church in January, 1831, we find the following:

Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that the people in Ohio call upon me in much faith, thinking I will stay my hand in judgment upon the nations, but I can not deny my word; wherefore lay to with your might and call faithful laborers into my vineyard, that it may be pruned for the last time. And inasmuch as they do repent and receive the fullness of my gospel, and become sanctified, I will stay mine hand in judgment; wherefore, go forth, crying with a loud voice, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand; crying, Hosanna! blessed be the name of the most high God. Go forth baptizing with water, preparing the way before my face, for the time of my coming; for the time is at hand; the day nor the hour no man knoweth; but it surely shall come, and he that receiveth these things receiveth me; and they shall be gathered unto me in time and in eternity. And again it shall come to pass, that on as many as ye shall baptize with water, ye shall lay your hands, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and shall be looking forth for the signs of my coming, and shall know me. Behold, I come quickly. Even so, Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 39: 5, 6.

In a revelation given February, 1831, we find the following:

And thus ye shall become instructed in the law of the church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bebind yourselves to act in all holiness before me, that inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received. Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken, even that which ye have received. Purge ye out the iniquity which is among you; sanctify yourselves before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3.

Behold, this is pleasing unto your Lord, and the angels rejoice over you; and the alms of your prayers have come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, and are recorded in the book of the names of the sanctified, even them of the celestial world.—Doctrine and Covenants 85:1.

The last citation shows that the names of the righteous are recorded in the book of the sanctified, or in the book of life; and I refer you to the following: Philippians 4: 3; Revelation 3: 5; 13: 8; 17: 8; 20: 12; 21: 27; 22: 19. Sanctification is secured by obedience to the gospel, or the law of Christ, as follows:

And again, verily I say unto you, that which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8.

And if your eye be single to my glory, your whole bodies shall be filled with light, and there shall be no darkness in you, and that body which is filled with light comprehendeth all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 17.

That which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 6.

I here introduce the words of the apostle Paul as being in beautiful harmony with the last two citations, as follows:

For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth are named, that he would grant you according to the richness of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God.—Ephesians 3: 14-19.

And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.—1 John 3: 3. Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.—Hebrews 12: 14. Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.—Jesus.

Those officers and ministers of the church who have been called of God, and ordained to the Levitical and Melchisedec priesthoods, and are faithful in their lives as Saints, and in the discharge of their duties as ministers, and remain faithful unto the end, are sanctified to the renewing of their bodies, and the receiving of eternal life in the celestial kingdom of God. Surely such men are set apart to a sacred and holy service! If they are all they should be, they are sanctified in that sense, and Christ, "who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us"; is still praying the Father "to keep them from evil."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6.

Even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin; and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world and eternal life in the world to come; even immortal glory. For, by the water ye keep the commandment; by the Spirit ye are justified; and by the blood ye are sanctified.—Genesis 6: 62, 63, Inspired Translation.

Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore, it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it for ever; for, for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they sanctified. And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a telestial kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory; and he who can not abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom, can not abide a terrestrial glory; he who can not abide the law of a telestial kingdom, can not abide a telestial glory; therefore, he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore, he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory. And again, verily I say unto you, the earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it: for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body: they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4, 5, 6. See 2 Peter 3: 10-13. 1 John 3: 1-3; Revelation 21: 1-7.

From what is written above, and much more that might be written, we conclude that the Saints who reverence the sacred books of the church as containing the word of God, do believe in sanctification, and we may properly close this article with the words of Paul, as follows:

Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.—1 Corinthians 1: 2, 3.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

COALVILLE, IOWA, February 29, 1912.

WHO WAS MELCHISEDEC?

The above question was asked in The Gospel Quarterly, in the lesson for February 11, 1912.

I unhesitatingly answer: Melchisedec was Shem, the second son of Noah.

To prove this point, I shall quote from other books besides the standard books of the church; but we are told in Doctrine and Covenants to study all good books, and I believe it proper to use all the evidences at our command.

The Lord gave us minds to use; and when we find statements of this kind, let us investigate them.

We may ask a person, "Do you believe in the Book of Mormon?"

They answer emphatically, "I do not."

Then we ask, "Have you ever read it?"

"No, sir! I have not!"

Then we quote to them, "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is a folly and shame unto him."

Saints, let us not fall into the same rut; but when we find evidences that are not in harmony with our preconceived ideas, let us study them, compare them with the three books, and then I believe that the Holy Spirit will enable us to sift out the wheat from the tares.

In Smith's Bible Dictionary, we find this:

Melchisedec (king of righteousness), king of Salem and priest of the most high God, who met Abram in the valley of Shaveh, . . . brought out bread and wine, blessed him, and received tithes from him. (Genesis 14: 17-20.)

The other places in which Melchisedec is mentioned are Psalm 110: 4, and Hebrews 5: 6, 7. "There is something surprising and mysterious in the first appearance of Melchisedec, and in the subsequent reference to him, bearing a title, which Jews in after ages would recognize as designating their own Sovereign; bearing gifts which recall to Christians the Lord's Supper, this Canaanite crosses for a moment the path of Abraham, and is unhesitatingly recognized as a person of higher spiritual rank than the friend of God. Disappearing as suddenly as he came, he is lost to the sacred writings, for a thousand years.

"Jewish tradition pronounces Melchisedec to be a survivor of the deluge; the patriarch, Shem." (Italics are mine.)

In studying the life of Abraham, it came to me like this: How did it happen that he was a good, God-fearing man, called a friend of God, when Terah, his father, was an idolator, serving under Nimrod, the son of Cush, who was the son of Ham.

Nimrod was king of Babel, Erech, etc., in the land of Shinar. (See Genesis 10: 9, 10.)

It was during his reign that the language was confounded.

We must acknowledge that the Bible account is very meager, concerning the first fifty years of Abraham's life.

Now comes the Book of Jasher, meaning the upright record, and mentioned in Joshua 10: 13 and 2 Samuel 1: 18; translated from the original Hebrew, and published in New York, in 1840, by M. M. Noah.

This throws much light on the early life of Abraham. His life was threatened by King Nimrod, on account of a dream had by the king.

Terah, Abraham's father, had him, with his mother, and nurse, hidden till he was ten years of age; when he was sent to Noah and Shem, his progenitors.

The record says further:

And Abram went to Noah and Shem, and he remained with them to learn the instruction of the Lord, and his ways. . . . And Abram was in Noah's house thirty-nine years, and Abram knew the Lord, and he went in the ways of the Lord, until the day of his death, as Noah, and his son Shem had taught him.

Isn't that beautiful, and does it not plainly show why Abraham was a man of God, even though his father was an idolator?

The record goes on to say, that when Abraham was fifty years of age, he returned to the house of his father Terah, in the land of Shinar.

He told the people of the one true God, and also told them of the sin and folly of idol worship. Then he took a hatchet, and broke into pieces their idols.

For this, he was called before the king; and though persecuted, the Lord was on his side, and delivered him out of the hands of his enemies, and warned him, through a servant, to leave the country.

Here the Bible record again takes up the subject. (Genesis 11: 31.) If we study the Bible chronology we find that Noah lived three hundred and fifty years after the flood, and that Shem lived five hundred years after the flood.

Abraham was born about three hundred years after the flood and lived one hundred and seventy-five years; therefore Noah lived till Abraham was at least fifty years of age; and Shem lived over twenty-five years after Abraham died.

When we stop to think of this, it does not seem mysterious that Abraham knew Melchisedec and paid him tithes as we are told in Genesis 14: 18-20, and as this other record also tells us.

In Josiah Priest's American Antiquities, beginning at page 23 and reading the chapter, we find several strong arguments to prove that Melchisedec was Shem, son of Noah, and he quotes from Adam Clark's Commentary on the Scriptures to prove it. We understand that the name Melchisedec means King of Righteousness, and therefore refers to the office as well as to the man holding the office; and was not the name given him at birth.

In my mind, from the evidences given, and many more that space forbids my using, I haven't a doubt that Melchisedec, king of Salem, (later called Jerusalem), was Shem, the son of Noah.

INDEPENDENCE WARNS METHODISTS, TOO.

Many times in debate the enemies of the church try to make capital out of the fact that the Saints were driven out of Independence, and argue that it must have been their misconduct; that a whole community would not rise against a society unless there was something radically bad in its conduct. Latter Day Saints have ever held that the fault was wholly that of our enemies; a matter of persecution and not prosecution.

To show that it was the spirit of the place and times, I quote from a book written by a Methodist minister, Reverend William H. Goode, entitled Outposts of Zion. Published by Poe and Hitchcock, Committee, 1863.

Page 35: "Independence had been appointed as the place of holding the session of the Missouri Conference. A public meeting had been called, and resolutions adopted warning them not to assemble there and impliedly threatening revenge if they did. The little handful of our people then, unable of themselves to support the conference, and fearing results, wrote letters to Saint Louis, advising a change. It was accordingly made; and notice was published that the conference would convene at Saint Louis. So closed the labors of the eventful year 1854."

This was twenty-one years after the Saints were driven out and the same spirit still existed. Was it the fault of the Methodists that they were warned not to come? If not, was it the fault of the Saints that they were warned to leave?

Sincerely,

J. W. PETERSON.

RECORDS OF THE PAST.—We are issuing in this issue an article from this magazine entitled, "Discoveries indicating an unexplored culture in eastern Nebraska." We are enabled to use this article through the courtesy of the publishers of the magazine, and believe it will be of interest to our archaeologists.

Of General Interest

Discoveries Indicating an Unexplored Culture in Eastern Nebraska.

What seems to be a new culture is developing along the west bank of the Missouri River in Nebraska. Whatever its western boundary its eastern edge is the broad and "muddy" river, its southern limit may, for the present, be said to be the north shore of the Platte and its northern line has not as yet been determined. Scattered along the high bluffs which bound the western bottom lands of the Missouri are numerous saucer-shaped and sometimes slightly ovoid depressions in the earth which to-day are from a few inches to nine feet deep and from twenty-five to one hundred and twenty-five feet in diameter—the ruins of aboriginal dwellings. Some ethnologists regard them as of Mandan origin, others as Pawnee, and still others as Arikara, but although the culture seems to approach all of those it is only in that relationship which exists between primitive people and any attempt—as Mr. James Mooney expressed to the writer—to connect it with any living or historic tribe would be futile. According to the ethnologist quoted the culture seems to be that of an entirely extinct people like the so-called Mound Builders or the Cliff Dwellers. Possibly it represents the ancestors of the races found in the vicinity by the first white explorers, but there is distinctive geological evidence that the culture is that of a people who lived hundreds of years ago. These ruins are the remains of permanent homes. Some seem to have been of construction similar to the Mandan earth houses described by early writers. In some earth was used as a covering while others were covered with bark or grass and osiers. On some ruins the explorer finds the roof to have been nominally two or three feet in thickness; in others no evidence of a roof is visible, the floor of the dwelling being strewn with charred sticks, reeds or coarse grass. Many of the houses had been provided with a southern entrance and inclines fifty feet long lead down to deeper ruins.

The writer has performed a vast labor in these old ruins in three counties in eastern Nebraska, and the results other than a determination of the methods of their construction have been remarkable. Objects have been discovered showing a decided southern—Mexican or Central American—influence, their range being probably greater than that of any other culture north of Mexico.

These ruins are in no sense in village groups, but are scattered at random, the principal object appearing to have been to secure the most prominent and lofty natural sites far above the river. Sometimes a dozen ruins will be found generally in a north-south line from one hundred to two hundred feet apart. At other times there will be one central ruin of large size surrounded by four, a line connecting these will be found to form a square with the smaller ruins at equal distances apart, but often three smaller ruins will partly surround a larger one. Sometimes there are isolated ruins, no others being nearer than a mile or more. In eastern Douglas County there are possibly two hundred ruins, in Sarpy County as many more, while in Washington County the number is estimated at five hundred.

Ruins of a similar nature do not appear on the eastern or Iowa side of the river. There are many evidences, however, in western Iowa of a very ancient culture, easily distinguishable from that of the people of historic times.

Numerous tumuli are closely associated with these eastern Nebraska house ruins, but in only one instance has it been possible to secure skeletal material which can be related to the people who occupied these ancient sites.

In the ruins explored by the writer the floors are usually free of debris with the exception of evidence of a destroying fire. Experience has shown that the people were exceptionally orderly in their domestic habits and artifacts are seldom found scattered about. The major part of the objects in these ruins come from numerous caches placed in a circle from eight to ten feet from the center of the ruin where the fireplace was located. These caches extend down below the floor from three to six feet and are built in the shape of an inverted funnel and usually are about the size of a hog-head. Objects were placed in the cache and covered with wood ashes from the fireplace, then earth was packed in, and objects therein are in an excellent state of preservation, and after long and heavy snows I have found them absolutely dry, not a sign that moisture had ever penetrated the walls being visible. As many as sixteen caches have been found in one ruin, not all of them being used for storage of valued objects, however, many being filled with refuse consisting of broken shells, sherds, stones, burnt wood, and ashes.

Among the objects taken from the caches may be mentioned the various scapula implements designated hoes or digging tools, and paddles, knives, scrapers, and many unclassified articles made from the same bone.

Pots and bowls of more than a dozen kinds including a reddish ware of unusual hardness show marks of a basket weave, others being cross-hatched with markings which have been made with a grass-wound paddle. Other designs are incised lines, angular and wave, while one sherd is decorated with a good drawing of a turkey. Lugs or handles are adorned with mysterious modeled heads and faces, representations of a rising sun and turkey tracks. Much of the pottery shows the common finger-tip indentation on its edge, but some has been adorned with unique designs made with a pointed instrument. That the people were prolific potters is evidenced by the vast amount of sherds found in caches and refuse heaps which accompany the ruins. Some fourteen pots in the writer's possession are reddish while others are brown or black, the latter being unusually well made and slightly glazed. In size they range from vessels not larger than a thimble, to ollas that would hold more than four gallons.

No grooved axes are found in these ruins. (Handsomely made grooved axes, sometimes with two grooves, are occasionally brought to light by the plow, but they seem to belong to another culture.) Celt axes are the only kind found in the ruins, ranging in size from two inches long by one and a half in width to nine inches long by three inches wide. Numerous small celts may have been fastened in a splint handle like the flint swords of the Aztecs, frequently mentioned by Bernal Dias, evidence in the writer's possession supporting this assumption.

Pottery pipes of hitherto unknown designs are numerous, and neither McGuire's exhaustive work on pipes, nor that of the Wisconsin Archaeological Society contain similar patterns. The writer has them in the form of birds, beasts, and reptiles. One is adorned with conventionally drawn serpents. Fine pipes of a rich dark purple soapstone were also made, some are plain while others are engraved with circles and wave lines.

Shell spoons, a short handle cut in one end the opposite end showing an edge beveled at right angles to the grain of the shell are numerous; commoner spoons are without a handle. Shell pendants in form of fish, skillfully made and proportioned and shell bangles perforated for suspension are found. A shell gorget of unusual design is one of the recent discoveries. Various other objects of shell are of unknown use.

Four singular beads of clay were found closely associated with the charred strands of a plaited hair rope. These beads are a little smaller than a black walnut. One is ovoid while the others are round. The holes through the beads were not drilled, but formed when the clay was soft. These beads appear to have a glazed surface or a very high polish. The writer has yet to learn of similar beads being found elsewhere.

Arrows and four-edged stone knives are made of native flints and Wyoming jaspers. The former are of several patterns and are far better made than arrows turned out by the plow.

Shallow metates are made of drift rocks and sandstone. Discoidal stones and stone club heads, the latter ground so two crossing ridges are formed, and rounded and flattened crushing stones or pestles are among the stone objects. Arrowshaft smoothers of fine workmanship are made from a dark orange Dakota sandstone and a kind of pumice. A bead an inch long and a half inch thick, rounded, polished and drilled from each end is made of milky quartz. Pitted stones, possibly used for cracking nuts and pounding corn are common. A diamond-shaped flint knife socketed in the hollowed end of an antler handle and a hafted scraper are novelties, the scraper haft is also made of antler. Triangular and rectangular pendants of white soapstone are occasionally found.

By far the most interesting objects are those made of bone and antler. A straight bone, five inches in length and of the thickness of a lead pencil (the bone not identified as yet), its sides showing scores of slight notches, its ends beveled not at all unlike a modern steel drill, is probably the only true flint flaker found in these ruins. The antler objects accredited "flint flakers" show no wear such as would result from work of that nature. The writer has a dozen of the latter and has finally decided they were probably used as phalli, terra cotta phalli having been found in one ruin, indicating their use by these people. Various forms of fine bone needles or punches are numerous and a well-made series of flat and thin bone bodkins or needles with an eye are a part of the objects found. Shuttles not at all unlike the shuttle of the old-fashioned Singer sewing machine are among the rarer finds. They are formed from the tips of antlers. Fishhooks have notches on the outer curve of the elbow and a fishhook partly made, the latter discrediting the theory that bone fishhooks developed from the bone buckle, so featured in a recent work on the stone age have been found. Three stages of needle-making—the leg bone of a deer, the same bone deeply incised its entire length three or four times and complete needles made from similar bones—have been twice found. So-called arrowshaft straighteners with one, two, and three beveled holes are persistent features in the caches. One of these has a conventional snake engraved upon it. Bone celts of great fineness, some with a cutting edge, and bone "handles" have an extremely high polish. The most singular objects of bone found in the ruins are the right mandible of mule deer. On its inner side are two deep grooves an inch and a half apart, worn down through the teeth and deep into the bone as by a cord, the groove being very highly polished. There is no groove in the outer side of the mandible, which is also polished very highly. No one seems to be able to determine the uses of this implement, eight of which have been found. A hoe formed from the part of the skull of a bison is probably the only one of this kind ever found. Skulls of wild dogs and wolves and sometimes pieces of human skull are found in the caches. Anklets and bracelets, from one to two inches wide, are formed from the base of antlers of large deer or elk. The antler is cut so that the bracelet takes its form from the rounded portion of the antler, that is, the rounded antler gives form to the bracelet and therefore does not need to be fashioned or bent as would be the case were strips cut lengthwise from the antler. Tortoise shells are also frequent.

These are some of the objects found in the ruins of eastern Nebraska. What people they belonged to may never be known, but that they were sedentary and had no enemies is evidenced by the isolation of some of their homes. That they relied for sustenance partly upon agriculture is shown by charred corn cobs found in their ruins.

One result of an archaeological reconnaissance on the Omaha Reservation, Thurston County, Nebraska, the last week in September this year, showed how the Omahas regarded ruins similar to those in the three counties in which my labors have been pursued. I found the familiar ancient type of ruin at several points in the reserve and learned from Doctor Susan Picotte and her sister, Mrs. W. T. Diddock, of Walthill, Nebraska, both of whom are sisters of Mr. Francis LaFlesche of the Nebraska Historical Society, excavated a portion of one ruin situated fifty yards from the fine farm home of Noah LaFlesche, he, a relative by marriage of Mr. Francis LaFlesche—we found a "cache" filled with wood ashes, flints and sherds. The Omahas who were drawn by curiosity to the spot, were much astonished and declared that they had never known their tribe were pottery makers and they appeared at a loss to account for the ancient ruins.

The writer also noticed on the reservation associated with the ruins equally ancient tumuli, but limited time prevented exploration. The writer believes the exploration by his party to be the first comprehensive archaeological labor performed in the ruins on the Omaha reserve.

Surface work in a cornfield owned by Mr. Noah LaFlesche was productive of chert implements, potsherds and one sandstone "bone-pointer," similar in material and design to those from ruins nearer the Platte River.

The writer has placed his collections from these ruins in the Omaha Public Library Museum where they can be conveniently studied by scientist and layman.

A Prince of the Papacy.

To thoughtful Americans who witnessed the recent spectacular demonstration in New York, when three hundred thousand Catholics assembled to honor the newly created Prince of the Roman Church, John, Cardinal Farley, there must have come strange reflections. As a tribute to the distinguished prelate, it was picturesquely effective. But it was as a religious demonstration that it possessed a peculiar significance. For the first time in the nation's history, we witnessed on these shores scenes of religious veneration and enthusiasm that recall medieval days, when the Roman Church was at the height of its ecclesiastical and secular pomp and power in the Old World. Now, that power, though decadent at its ancient center, is strongest and most active at its periphery. In point of numbers and wealth, the western republic has become the greatest Catholic country in the modern world, and the recent spectacle in New York has heightened the hope of the Catholics that the dream of an American pope may yet come true.

Looking at the situation with a broader vision, however, we can not find any reason for serious apprehension. The Roman Church has lost its ancient hold in Italy, France, and Portugal, and the same is doubtless true of Spain. This expansive emancipation is due in great measure to the spread of education, which is fatal to ecclesiastical domination. It can not be forgotten that Rome has always been the foe of human progress and popular enlightenment. It has bound its humblest followers in chains of superstition and darkness. Ignorance and poverty are the lot of the common people wherever it has its greatest power and influence. It has even withheld the Bible from the people and forbidden it in the schools. Anyone acquainted with conditions in Southern Europe, in Central and South America, and in the Philippines, must admit the truth of this indictment. Here, however, conditions are wholly different. While religious freedom, to its utmost reasonable limit, is our valued inheritance, any attempt to abuse that splendid privilege would only result in disaster. This being so, we can see no cloud of Roman domination on the horizon. We owe it to the common sense and patriotism of our fellow citizens of the Catholic faith to believe that they, too, realize the futility of attempting to revive, in this land of progress and enlightenment, the secular and political influence of the church when almost every civilized nation in the world has already thrown off these bonds in the struggle for social and religious freedom.—Christian Herald.

THE BOY.

"Why does society insist that boys must sow their wild oats? There is no way to sow vice and reap virtue, any more than there is to sow tares and reap wheat."

The boy is the man of to-morrow. We want our boys to be manly men. We want them to be wise fathers. We want them to be men of Christ. How shall we accomplish all that we wish to do for them, that we may not be disappointed or grieved by the result? Always by beginning early. Each age is so dependent upon the last, to the very verge of mature manhood, that only by beginning early and continuing with patience and perseverance to the time when the boy is able to go his own way, can one's duty to him be done.

There are many things which might be mentioned as splendid to cultivate in a boy, but I have chosen from them all, obedience, self-reliance, and a love for work. And I should say to "cultivate" and let alone, from time to time, and always to use gentle means. If we wish to cultivate a rare plant so that it may grow, blossom, and bear fruit, we will plant in it a favorable position as to sun and shade, and in good soil. We will try to learn something about the habits of the plant, whether it needs much or little water, or what we can do for it to help it to grow. At times we will dig about the roots, gently, and not go at it so harshly that many of the roots are torn or broken. Wisdom and patience are two all-important things for the father and mother to cultivate within themselves, that they may be worthy to assist the boy God has given into their care and keeping.

Robert J. Burdette says: "The father is the boy's ideal of faultless and splendid manhood. Let the man, then, be honest with his boy. Let the boy understand that the father has not forgotten the days of his youth. Don't tell him that when you were a boy you never caused your parents a moment's uneasiness, were never cross to your little sister, never cruel to dumb animals, and always kept the golden rule. Be honest with him above all things."

He says, also, not to be too dignified with your boy, but to live with him as much as possible. He tells us not to turn a boy out to play and then say, "Don't run and get overheated. . . Feet of the dun deer! How can a boy play and not run?" And he does not believe in thrashing to bring about a complete and happy obedience. Read what he says about it in Before He Is Twenty. Certainly, punishing a boy as severely as I have known them to be punished in Christian homes, does not recommend to me the Christianity of the men who do the beating. To "wait three days" seems a good rule to me.

"Revenge is not punishment. Whipping is the punishment of the savage. It has been abolished from the army and navy, and is retained only in Christian homes and other homes not quite so Christian. . . . When you have made up your mind in a few minutes to whip your boy, wait three days and then see if you can take a stick and beat him."

Obedience should begin in babyhood and be continued in childhood, making the boyhood years easier for parents and boy. A lady had a friend visiting her, who was accompanied by three-year-old "Billie." The morning after he came he turned the hose on a neighbor's chickens, drenched a little girl and sent her home crying bitterly, turned it full force on the young girl was trying to turn it off at the hydrant, and danced in great glee as he brandished the hose about, sprinkling the inside of two houses as well as grass and flowers. The spanking he got didn't prevent him from turning the water on whenever he happened to think of it, although for the safety of the residents the hose at each hydrant was usually detached when not in use. I confess there is a problem hard to solve in directing such activity in right channels. Billie is a dear little fellow, mild and tractable between times, and willing to be reasoned with; and I am sure some plan could be devised to make him see that we must water at certain times and in proper places, perhaps by giving him a little garden of his own and letting him plant, tend, and water it.

If we heed the admonition to instruct our children in religious matters before they are eight years old, they will doubtless be willing to obey the word of the Lord and be baptized into the church at that age. If both parents have the full confidence of their boy, talking with him freely and openly, his religious life in later years will be a more sure and settled thing. How many men know their boys as strangers know them? is asked. Many things seethe through the mind of a boy, and if he has not been in the habit of talking with his elders, he will go into many an error which might have been prevented by a frank talk with a loved parent.

An obedient, industrious boy will make a self-reliant man. A boy brought up without work, will, more than likely, never come into the full usefulness which he might have developed. I know a man who is growing very old. He has no family of his own and none of his relatives enjoy having him with them. He is a lonely, pathetic figure. When he was a boy he was never required to work or go to school regularly. He never learned to apply himself to any one thing for any length of time. He has a good mind and has been a great reader, of science, as well as fiction. But he was always looked upon as a useless man, barely able to take care of himself, and never able to benefit anyone else.

William McKeever, of Kansas, says that a boy should be kept at work at least five hours every day in vacation time. He has some very sensible things to say in "Assisting a boy in the choice of a vocation." Also in "Wanted: the right job for your boy," in the May, 1911, Delineator, and he quotes from an aged minister, thus: "You can't develop strength of character in a boy or prepare him for a vacation unless you teach him to work. My three sons are well to do, prosperous men. Other people might have expected them to have been more than ordinary boys, when young, but I did not. Two things I always did require of them, and these were, strict obedience and plenty of wholesome work. We were as diligent in seeking suitable work for these boys as we were in keeping them in school."

The boys in our neighborhood rifled ice boxes until they had to be put under the care of the officer of the Juvenile Court. Parents must somehow be brought to realize the seriousness of affairs, and each do his part in guiding the boy that he may not be a menace to the people about him. These surely have not learned that to let their boys idle away their time hour after hour, and day after day, as they do, is not a good way to remedy matters, or they would see to it that they are occupied part of the day with "wholesome work" and amused under their surveillance the remainder of the time. It is almost better that a boy work too hard for his age, than that he should not work at all. Eight years seems to be the age to begin light work, according to several authorities. Work with him if possible. Play with him; read with him; visit the library with him; be interested in the things he is interested in. The future of the boy depends upon how his days are spent now. Help him to spend them well. Know what he is doing. Don't say, "I am too busy." Some day you may have to say, "My heart is broken."

Just one more thing I want to mention. Begin at babyhood to teach your boy purity. Teach him more as he can understand. If you do not know just how, or what is best to tell him, ask the help of those who have studied and have given us sweet, beautiful things to tell him. Teach him that to keep himself sacred for the one who shall be his companion for life, shall be the greatest gift which he can present to her, and the very best gift he can possibly give the son he will look forward to having, and whom he will welcome with much joy.

There are good hints in the "Son" stories by Ethel Train in Everybody's during the last year. Look up some of these I have mentioned, and see what they have in your village, town, or city library on the subject of "The boy." If you find something good, let us know. Assimilate that which will help you with your boy. Others may absorb something else to their profit. So short a paper as I have written can not contain much. It will serve a good purpose best if it sets us to thinking and reading upon the subject under consideration.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, March 3, 1912.

Dear Readers of the Herald: I have long wished that those whose sympathy and prayers have been extended towards the work in this place might know the good the gospel has brought to at least one family. And since Elder Pitt's reference to me in his letter from Australia, I have felt emboldened to make an attempt at telling them the story.

We left home three years ago in May, for this place, believing that God was leading us here, and since the prophecies spoken of by Elder Jenkins were given we have been assured that such was indeed the case. We had withdrawn from all church associations, and we were seeking by prayer and study to know God's will toward us.

After coming here I was constantly burdened with a desire to read the Book of Mormon, though why I couldn't tell, as we had had a copy in the house for many months but had never been interested enough to do more than glance through it. Sister Floyd came to visit us, and she told me she was a Latter Day Saint, and I asked her at once for a Book of Mormon which she readily loaned me. I read it, and though tempted many times to throw it far from me, yet I persisted, knowing that every word I was reading was the word of God and in perfect accord with the Scriptures. We reread it aloud several times; and my sons, Halbert and Paul, aged twelve and nine, never tire of hearing it read. This was two years ago in February and you may be sure we waited with impatience for the coming of an authorized minister to baptize us. We have been blessed since in many ways, though chiefly, perhaps, through the gift of healing which God has bestowed upon us.

When Elder Griffiths came here, he said many times that Satan would greatly oppose the work here. At that time we thought he had reference especially to the interference and persecution of other churches, but Satan has had a better way to secure his ends; he has been at work with the members, etc., and he has been and is still striving hard to overthrow us all. But thanks to the good brother and sister God has sent us, the work is not only holding its own against the current, but is gaining, if slowly, yet gaining nevertheless. The church surely has good reason to rejoice in the faithful, humble servants it has called to work here. But they need your prayers and help, for the battle is hard and the land strange, and though they never falter, they are very sober and sorrowful much of the time.

With Elder Jenkins's help we fasted and prayed many days, and after what seemed a very long time to me, we were blessed with the wonderful gift of prophecy and gained much strength and comfort therefrom. I should like much to tell you all our hopes and desires for the work here, and the blessings which have come to us since we entered into it, but shall content myself with saying that our greatest hope is to see the work go forward here, to see the city of refuge for the Jews established, and to see them entering into the fold.

And our prayer is always that God may fit us for his use, to further this work.

I should like to correct an impression which many may have gained from the article in the HERALD of December 20, which was copied from The Truth, on the cost of living in this land. In the first place foreigners can not buy at the same low cost as the natives, though my husband does better than most aliens in that the tradesmen know now that he labors hard for his bread. Even at that and with the added advantage that we are able to enjoy the native foods, to which, most foreigners can not become reconciled, still our living is far in advance of the samples tendered by the Truth correspondent. And considering the wages paid here the price of all things is greatly augmented in comparison. Oil and coffee, meat and eggs are cheap; but flour, sugar, milk, butter, cheese, vegetables, tea, and fuel are as high, and often higher, than at home. It certainly takes careful economy to make both ends meet, even for the natives, as you will no doubt notice from the samples spoken of.

Trusting I may not have taxed your patience overmuch, and that you all may be encouraged to pray for the work here, I am

FLORENCE CARR.

BELLAIR, ILLINOIS, March 10, 1912.

Editors Herald: We have just closed a four weeks' meeting, Elder L. C. Moore being with us from February 6 to March 4, doing the preaching, only missing four nights during that time. Four were baptized, one being my grandmother, who was seventy-five years old two days previous. Some of the skeptics expected to hear of her being dead because of her being baptized in the icy, cold water, but contrary to their expectations she still lives and rejoices in the angel message, having suffered no ill effects whatever.

The other three were ladies also; one being the doctor's wife, which caused some of her friends to "sit up and take notice," being a surprise to them. Some have failed to take notice of her since. Another was a member of the United Brethren Church here, and that caused considerable comment from that source. Several free lectures on "Mormonism" were delivered, but always privately, they being careful that no Latter Day Saint was around.

A local elder of the Church of Christ attended one night, and after meeting came up to the stand and asked for some tracts, but soon forgot that, and wanted a debate, desiring to prove Joseph Smith a false prophet, fraud, etc. He also wanted Brother Moore to perform a miracle, asking him to replace a finger he had cut off when a boy. He called Brother Moore's attention to the incident where Christ replaced the high priest's servant's ear which Peter cut off with the sword. But the "Christian" brother failed to produce the other part of his finger, so I guess he went away disappointed. Brother Moore submitted to him the regular church propositions, but he refused to sign them, only wanting to debate the Joseph Smith proposition.

Brother Moore is an earnest young missionary and got the people interested in the true gospel and we look for more to accept soon. The Saints were strengthened and are pressing forward in the discharge of duty. We are rejoicing in the work and desire to do what we can for its advancement.

Desiring to see all come to a knowledge of the truth, I remain,

L. M. EDMUNDS.

WATERLOO, IOWA.

Dear Herald: We are somewhat isolated here, as there is not any branch in the city now, and only some four or five Saints. The branch was broken up on account of members moving away. I am a beginner in the work; was baptized into the fold July 2, 1911, at Oelwin, by Elder Robert Smith, and confirmed by him. My confirmation has given me courage and comfort many times since, for it was told me that if I would continue faithful and do the Master's will I would be a mother in Israel.

I am thoroughly convinced that this is the church of the kingdom of God, and of Christ, and he has blessed me and family many times. My husband was baptized in Lapiere County, Michigan, in 1885, and loves this work. After talking and explaining the gospel to me I was convinced that it was the church and the way that leads to endless day.

We have two children, one two and a half years and the other twelve weeks. We had the oldest blessed under the hands of Brother J. B. Wildermuth, and will have the other blessed as soon as convenient.

I had two visions lately. The first one was as follows: I saw the prison house and Lucifer and his habitation. I was shown some of the spirits in prison, and one department which I wanted to visit the most, he refused to let me see it; and I came to the conclusion that I did not want a place reserved there for me. The second I will give to the HERALD readers at a later date.

Editors Herald: There are a few of us here but there is no concerted action between us as to work. There is an elder living twenty miles south of us, but he is not in active ministerial service. Elder Houghton, of Clitherall, Minnesota, was here two years ago and held services for two weeks, but the interest was not sufficient to warrant a longer effort at that time. Since then the Methodists have come in and organized a Sunday school and they have a minister come out from Beach every two weeks for preaching service. Neither one is much of a success as to enthusiasm. The people are a mixed congregation; Spiritualists, Methodists, Congregationalists, Lutherans, and ourselves.

They chose me as superintendent and Bible class teacher; not at my solicitation, but at their request. In taking up their lesson I manage to get in a goodly portion of Latter Day Saint teaching, but in a rather disconnected manner. It may be that it will bear fruit some time.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

G. W. LINDSEY.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, March 15, 1912.

Dear Herald: In reading your pages I find that I "feed my faith" and receive much spiritual strength. Realizing this I write to-day, thinking that perhaps my experience might lighten the burden for some one else.

As quite a number of the Saints and friends know, I am one of the afflicted ones, seldom getting out of the house except as the dear ones help me, and as I sit here, day after day I can count up many blessing in the numberless attentions and acts of kindness of the good husband, daughter, and two sons, who never tire nor complain of the many duties they must perform for my comfort and happiness. In all this I can see the good Master's hand. Although on some days the sun refuses to shine for me, yet in my optimistic way I feel sure all will be well to-morrow. There are so many blessings to enjoy that I leave behind the shadows along life's path and try to live for the present and the future.

By the help of the merciful Father I feel that I have passed through the crucible, for many doctors and nurses have told me there was no help for me. This I refused to believe, for my faith is not placed in the arm of flesh, and in my patriarchal blessing I have been told that in God's own time and in his appointed way he would give me release from every evil that afflicts me and set me free, that my body may be freed and that my mind may also enjoy that perfect freedom by which I may carry out all the righteous desires of my heart and glorify God my Father. In this blessing much depends upon my faithfulness to be sure; for it also says, "Inasmuch as thou art faithful to this covenant which thou hast made with thy God thou shalt be blessed; blessed beyond all conceptions of thy heart to-day; blessed in this life, and blessed in the life to come," etc. Is it not worth striving for? I certainly think it is, and I most assuredly believe that the Father does not forget his promises to his children if they live faithfully. May he help me to make my life an example.

In the faith,
SISTER PEARLE SWAIN SCOFIELD.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, March 18, 1912.

Dear Herald: We are neither physically nor spiritually dead; thanks be to God for the blessed gospel of his dear Son. I know this work is true, and I wish I could help push it forward to the uttermost ends of the earth.

As a little branch we are all happy over the existing condition among us. God has surely blessed us in many ways, and the promise is to us, if faithful, a great work is to be done here in this place; and as to location, it can not be excelled; four miles from Hamilton, a very good trading town of about twenty-five hundred inhabitants; and Kingston, the county seat, a town of something like seven hundred inhabitants, and other towns and cities not far away.

If any Saints are moved or directed to come this way, there are plenty of homes for sale—from forty to one hundred and sixty acre farms, with prices ranging from sixty to eighty-five dollars and up, according to location and improvements. A very good forty acre farm can be bought, for some one who likes a good location, handy at church.

We are no land agents, but are at all times willing to show anyone the neighborhood and give such help as we are able to give. We came here two years ago and like it well. Brother Coleman Snider, R. F. D. 5, Hamilton, Missouri, is our branch president, and he is an earnest worker.

With the best wishes to all of God's children, and a desire to come up higher,

Yours in the one faith,
O. A. ERICKSON.

CHIPPEWA STATION, MICHIGAN, March 18, 1912.

Dear Saints: We are having good meetings here and are blessed by the Spirit. There have been eleven baptisms since December; some by R. D. Weaver; some by J. W. Burgett, and there are others investigating. This is a grand work. Brother and Sister Gamble have passed through sad trials, losing their granddaughter, Lafern Tops. She was taken sick and a doctor was called. He gave her some powder from which she died in a short time.

We feel glad we came here to live, for here is an opportunity for preaching the word of God and the people seem anxious to hear. Uncle Joseph Shippy preached at the schoolhouse Sunday, to a large crowd, and he expects to soon leave for northwestern Canada. He is getting feeble, but is strong in spirit. We have some disappointments, but the blessings we receive outweigh them all. It does make my heart rejoice when I hear the children sing the songs of Zion. We have eight children here and the two little boys sing the hymns and enjoy them.

Pray for us, that we may be faithful and found doing the Master's will.

Your sister,
MRS. JOHN W. BURGETT.

An Oklahoma Item.

Footprints in the sands of time for the year 1912, in this region show the winding trail of R. E. Grant, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, who was at one time engaged in the work of the church. This unfortunate man is now engaged in fighting the truth and laying up for himself anguish and remorse as his portion when the judgment of God shall be meted out at the last day.

We met him in a ten-night debate at Seiling, in February, upon his own propositions. At this point we are demanding propositions which remove the barriers with which he carefully fortifies his unsteady past. This he will in nowise concede.

In order to protect honest people of the community who might unwittingly become involved in the doings of a man with such a record we published the findings of the church courts against R. E. Grant.

As a "play to the galleries" he takes it to law on a charge of libel; the undersigned gets a free ticket, in company with the sheriff, to the county court, and at present writing is gracefully leaning against a five hundred dollar bond, awaiting trial. The facts in the case will exonerate us if we can get justice.

Those having access to evidence sustaining the facts and findings as to the wickedness of said R. E. Grant will confer a favor upon the (supposed) wretch now in jeopardy by sending certified copies of letters and documents, and sworn depositions of facts in the case at once to the undersigned at Ripley, Oklahoma.

Michigan authorities are specially asked to take notice of above.

Your brother in the gospel, and county court bonds,
J. E. YATES.

News from Branches

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Since our last report the district conference convened in Saint Louis with, we believe, the largest attendance we have ever had. A most profitable and spiritual time was enjoyed, consisting of a business session, Sunday school, prayer service, priesthood meeting, and two preaching services. An encouraging feature of the conference was the taking place of seven ordinations to the priesthood, and of one baptism into the church.

The district missionary work seems to have been a success during the past year. The efforts of the missionaries have been blessed. Brother Sawley, of the missionary force, gave us two good talks on March 24. He feels well in the work, having presented the gospel to many, and successfully convincing some of the truth. We were also favored by Brother R. Etzenhouser lecturing one evening and showing his views of the American Indian and ancient Americans. He also spoke in Belleville and Landsdowne.

Some of our number have gone to General Conference, which has a marked effect on our attendance. We pray that the blessed Spirit will be felt throughout the entire conference, directing all that shall be said and done.

Some have been on the sick list the past few weeks, and while they still need our prayers, they have been perceptibly helped by administration. Sisters R. DeJong and Sarah Cooke have been severely afflicted with la grippe, and Brother and Sister Charles Remington's little girl has had pneumonia. Brother Joseph Tanner, jr., has been confined to his bed because of an injury sustained in stepping from a street car. We are very thankful to have Sister Maude Parrish with us again. She recently fell on the icy street, and injured her spine.

Brother Charles Tanner recently went to Arkansas for his firm, but we are pleased that he has returned. Brother D. W. DeJong has gone to Philadelphia for several months, in the interest of his business. Your sister in Christ,

On the 23d ult. the heaviest snowstorm in forty years set in and when the snowfall had ceased at 4 a. m. Sunday, the 24th, the official figures were twenty-five inches of snow. Traffic and churchgoing were almost stopped.

Sixteen attended the 8 o'clock prayer meeting and three hundred were present at Sunday school. F. A. Smith and R. C. Russell waded through the lofty snowdrifts in order to fill preaching appointments; thus evincing zeal and interest on the part of both preacher and people, and confidence in the great work of the latter days.

On this date also the Saints were called to part with our beloved sister, Minnie Gould, whose remains were laid to rest in Mound Grove on the 26th.

Sunday, the 31st, was filled with the usually happy experiences. Two hundred were present at the early prayer meeting, and a large concourse of old and young, to the number of 929, attended the Sunday school.

To recount the blessed ministrations from the sacred desk, both morning and evening, would be more than the valuable space of this column would permit; hence we will only note the names of the gifted speakers by whom the Saints were made to rejoice in the goodness and watchcare of our heavenly Father. They were J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni; Ralph Farrell, of Boston; Charles B. Woodstock, also of Graceland, in the evening; and F. M. Sheehy, whose labors in the cause of the Master are well known throughout the church.

At the afternoon prayer and testimony session three little buds of promise were blessed under the ministrations of Brethren Greene, Metcalf, Christie, and Bear. A young lad was confirmed by W. H. Garrett and B. J. Scott.

At 9 o'clock Tuesday morning the Zion's Religio-Literary Society convened, and after a prayer meeting full of an earnest and fervent exercise of the mind and heart devoted to the glorious work, the business hour was formally dedicated by President J. A. Gunsolley to the carrying out of a program full of importance and educational interest.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

APRIL 13.

The 9 o'clock prayer meeting was in charge of B. J. Scott and T. J. Jordan. The speaker at 10.45 was J. E. Yates, assisted by C. I. Carpenter.

President F. M. Smith called the assembly to order at 2 p. m. Number 135 was sung. F. M. Sheehy offered prayer. Minutes approved.

The Woman's Auxiliary nominated for members of the Board of Trustees of the Children's Home at Lamoni, Iowa: Sister M. B. Nicholson for one year, Sister L. L. Resseguie for two years, Sister Callie B. Stebbins for three years. The nominations were indorsed.

It was moved that the trustees of the Children's Home elected by the conference on the eleventh, serve, one for three years, one for two years, and one for one year, to be determined by the size of the vote received by each; the one receiving the largest vote to serve the longest term, etc.

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service reported having held three business sessions. There are forty-three local secretaries, and two district organizations; the districts being Kirtland, Ohio, and Northern California. Eleven local societies had been organized during the year. Twelve field workers had labored in the interests of the society. The following departments were added: Home and child welfare, Sister Evan Davis, superintendent; literary and educational department, Sister Vida Smith, superintendent; domestic science department, Sister Bertha Donaldson, superintendent; young womans' department, Sister Pearl Gardner, superintendent. An important event during the year was the formal opening of the Children's Home. Forty-one children have been admitted. The following officers had been elected: Sister B. C. Smith, president; Sister Ruth Smith, vice president; Sister D. J. Krahl, secretary; Sister Letha Tilton, treasurer. The report was approved.

A resolution was moved seeking to appoint a committee to revise the Rules of Order. The resolution was denied.

The following was moved: "Whereas there is a growing disposition in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ to allow playettes and plays in the church, which are gradually taking on the appearance of theaters, and believing they have a tendency to lead our church members away from Christ, be it

"Resolved, That we discourage such entertainments in all branches and churches of said church, and all its auxiliaries."

The resolution was laid on the table.

The following was moved:

"Resolved, That General Conference resolutions numbers 455 and 456 are not intended to be so arbitrary as to compel members of the church to unite with a branch with which they can not meet, or hold any affiliation, but are calculated to correct a custom indulged in by a great many Saints, who change their residence from one branch to another, but never transfer their membership."

The resolution was tabled.

The joint council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric submitted the following report:

"To the General Conference: The joint council of Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric authorize us to report to the conference the following action taken by the council relative to the jurisdiction of mission conferences:

"1st. The mission conferences have no jurisdiction over matters of general church importance—policy, doctrine, or interpretation.

2d. The legislation of such mission conferences shall be confined to matters pertaining to mission concerns; and, only in harmony with and subject to the General Conference action.

3d. Annual reports shall be forwarded to such conferences from the mission officers, districts, and branches not in districts; the ministry, including general appointees, and the local ministry not laboring under district or branch supervision, and the quorums organized in the mission.

"4th. Constitution: All districts, branches not in districts shall be considered integral parts of the mission conference.

"The minister in charge of the mission for the time being shall be the president of the mission and should be elected president of the mission conference unless there be good reasons to the contrary. In the absence of a minister in charge, one shall be chosen in accordance with the rules governing in such cases, viz, the one highest in authority and holding priority of ordination. The secretary shall be appointed from among the elders, who shall take charge of all books and documents of the mission conferences and hold them for the mission; and also attend to the necessary clerical work. The treasurer shall have charge of the finances collected for the use of the mission conferences and pay out the same on order of the conference or its officers, such sums as may be necessary to meet the liabilities.

"5th. The secretary of the mission conference shall report the proceedings to the General Conference through the First Presidency."

The following was read:

"To the General Conference: We are authorized to transmit to the conference the following resolution passed by Joint Council of Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

"Resolved, That we are of the opinion as a Joint Council that the church should see to it that a life membership is obtained in the American Archæological Institute, such membership to be designated by General Conference, and we recommend that such membership be lodged in the Church Archæological Committee."

The report was approved and the resolution adopted.

The following was moved:

"Whereas the organization known as the Leeds District, England has lapsed, be it

"Resolved, That we hereby declare the Leeds District disorganized, and further, that the territory heretofore included in the Leeds District be added to and included in the London, Manchester District."

The resolution was passed.

It was moved that the recommendation by the library commission that all library interests of the church be under the supervision of the commission be indorsed. The recommendation was adopted.

It was moved that the rent charged by the Herald Publishing House for library room in the Herald building be allowed.

The motion was lost.

Number 123 was sung, the benediction was by W. H. Kelley.

At 7.45 the speaker was Daniel Macgregor, assisted by Oscar Anderson.

APRIL 14.

In the upper auditorium, at 8 a. m., a prayer service was held, in charge of John Smith and G. E. Harrington. The regular Sunday school was held at 9.30, in charge of the local authorities. The speaker at 11 was President Joseph Smith, assisted by F. M. Sheehy. At 2.30 Heman C. Smith was the speaker, assisted by Joseph Roberts. At 7.45 J. W. Rushton spoke, assisted by U. W. Greene.

In the lower auditorium at 8 a. m., a prayer meeting was held for the priesthood, the brethren whose ordinations had been authorized by the conference being attended to in the case of those present. At 11 o'clock the speaker was R. C. Evans, assisted by E. L. Kelley. At 2.30 the speaking was by Evan A. Davis, assisted by G. H. Hilliard, at 7.45 S. A. Burgess spoke, W. H. Garrett assisting.

On the South Side at 8 o'clock the prayer service was in charge of J. F. Garver and Richard Bullard. At 9.30 the usual Sunday school was held in charge of the local officers. The preaching at 11 was by F. M. Cooper, assisted by C. E. Harpe. At 2.30 I. M. Smith spoke assisted by H. W. Smith. At 7.45 the speaker was O. R. Miller, assisted by A. C. Silvers.

At the Central Church, Kansas City, at 11 o'clock Peter Anderson was the speaker. At 7.45 M. C. Fisher occupied.

Heaven is like the life of Jesus with all the conflict of human sin left out. Heaven is like the feeding of the multitude in the wilderness, with everybody sure to get ample to eat. Heaven is like the woman sinner from the streets who bathed the feet of Jesus in her tears and wiped them with her hair. I do not want to know more than that. It is peace, joy, victory, triumph—it is life. It is love; it is tireless work—faithful and unselfish service going on for ever. The way to achieve all this is to try to follow Christ today, to-morrow and the day after, through prayer and right living.—Reverend Doctor Henry Van Dyke.

Resolutions.

Whereas, our heavenly Father deemed it wise to call to himself our esteemed brother, Elder Luther R. Devore; and

Whereas, Brother Devore was for a number of years a faithful and devoted member of the First Quorum of Seventy; therefore,

Resolved, That we hereby express our appreciation of his devotion and zeal in the promotion of the cause of truth, and that we extend to his bereaved companion our united sympathy, feeling assured that he has gone to receive a well-earned reward and enter into fields of greater usefulness.

Whereas, it has pleased God to call from our midst our esteemed brother and fellow laborer, Elder John Kaler; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we extend to his bereaved widow and family our united sympathy and express our appreciation for his untiring devotion in the Master's cause, and his loving fidelity to his companion in affliction. As a member of the First Quorum of Seventy he was loyal to the trust imposed, a true soldier of the cross, and it is our conviction that the Master has called him to fields of greater usefulness.

Editors Herald: The above resolutions of condolence were adopted by the First Seventy on April 9, 1912, and I was instructed to place in your hands copies for publication.

Respectfully,
J. F. MINTUN, Secretary.

Notice of Silence.

To whom it may concern; you are hereby notified that C. F. Merrill, priest of the Des Moines, Iowa, Branch, has been silenced for cause. He has refused to surrender his license.

O. SALISBURY, President.

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 1, 1912.

Died.

TOPS.—LaFern Tops, age 2 years, 9 months, and 3 days, granddaughter of Joseph and Louisa Gamble, died in Saginaw, Michigan, of poison administered by mistake for medicine by a doctor. The baby was sick for only a short time and died February 10, 1912. Funeral sermon by J. W. Burgett.

MEFFERD.—Andrew Jackson Mefferd, born at Woodbine, Iowa, July 17, 1858; married to Huldah A. Evans December 20, 1883, by Elder Cadwell of the Latter Day Saints' Church. Died at City Hospital, Greeley, Colorado, February 22, 1912, of cancer; was operated on January 10, 1912. The children are: Ray, of Des Moines, Iowa; Olive, Merritt, Carl, who died in infancy; Samuel, Merle, Fern. Leaves a wife, six children, one grandchild. Spent almost all of his life in Harrison County, Iowa. Funeral from Macey's undertaking parlor. Funeral sermon by Reverend Armstrong, of Gilcrest, Colorado. Interment in Linn Grove Cemetery, at Greeley.

Conan Doyle's New Story.

Something new in romance—so absolutely original that it will thrill the most hardened novel reader! Such is Conan Doyle's The Lost World.

Did you know that in the unexplored wilderness between the Andes and the Amazon there still exist many of the monster animals that walked the earth before man was created? It has remained for Sir Arthur Conan Doyle—and the irascible Professor Challenger—to discover this lost world and take you right into it. How does it feel to be chased by a dinosaur as big as a house, or attacked by a pterodactyl as large as a biplane? You will know before you finish this fascinating story, for the author makes you see and believe. At the same time you learn more about the prehistoric world than a dozen scientific treatises could tell you, for the story makes you live in it.

The action is leisurely at first. Don't let that deceive you. Challenger is a terrific and captivating hero, and when he gets away on his expedition, look out for danger unequalled in modern romance. The story is told with the imagination of Kipling or Jules Verne and the masterly skill of the creator of Sherlock Holmes.

The Lost World will appear exclusively in the Sunday Magazine of The Record Herald, beginning March 24. Tell your friends to read it and enjoy a new sensation.

Grand Opening of Irrigated Gov- ernment Land

The United States government will open 6300 acres of choice irrigated farm land at Powell, Wyoming, on April 22, 1912, on the ten payment plan without interest.

Graduated payments, requiring only a small part of the total, during the first five years, thereby giving the settler a chance to improve his farm before paying very much of the water charge.

A NEW FOLDER telling all about this homestead opening and contained a map of the Shoshone Project, showing lands filed on and lands to be opened on April 22, will be sent free upon request.

Don't fail to send for one.

There is plenty of moisture this year and now is the time to secure a farm. Write to-day!

RANDOM CONFERENCE NOTES.

ATTENDANCE.—The attendance at the General Conference was probably the largest in the history of the church. At the Sunday services every available seat was taken and many were obliged to stand. At the same time many were in attendance at the South Side Church and at the Central Church, of Kansas City. The problem of housing our conventions and conferences is becoming one of some concern. We can sing with conviction, "See our numbers how they swell, how they gather like a cloud." Our fathers, presiding over a conference that might have been seated in the gallery of the church at Independence, would have been astonished had the future been open to them so that they could have seen the swarming hundreds and thousands in attendance at one of our late conferences.

HEEP GOOD JESUS MAN.—A proposition to distribute free Books of Mormon among the Indians was the cause of some discussion, eliciting speeches from Brethren Yates, Layland, Aylor, and others who have labored among the Indians. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that the Indians should be required to pay for the books when able to do so. It appears that some denominations offer gifts and bribes to the Indians to induce them to become church members. A letter from Brother Rees Jenkins indicates that a similar policy is pursued in Jerusalem among poor Jews. Reverting to the Indians, one elder stated that one Indian told him, "Me be heep good Jesus man for three dollars."

THEATER GOING.—The matter of theater going was discussed at some length in the conference, and the church expressed itself quite positively as opposed to the habit. Two lines of objections were urged against the theater—moral and economic.

SUMMER SCHOOL WORK.—One evening was devoted to a discussion of summer school work. Brother U. W. Greene was in charge and Elders Walter W. Smith and W. E. LaRue were the speakers. In New York and Philadelphia these men have built up summer schools that take hundreds of children from the streets and bring them into touch with the church, giving them in some instances the only religious instruction that they ever get. This meeting was fully reported and the report will appear in the HERALD in due time.

RETURNED THE TRIBUTE.—President Joseph Smith resigned from a number of committees and three men were appointed by the conference to draft resolutions of thanks and respect. These were approved by a unanimous standing vote. President Smith then replied with a feeling speech that brought tears to many eyes. It was characteristic of his whole life that he turned the tribute back upon the elders, saying that those who had stood alone against odds and far from home and friends were the ones who deserved praise.

A CONFERENCE ANECDOTE.—Some one commented on the diversity of character and speed among the elders. This drew forth an anecdote from one of the ministry. At a late conference a delegate from the South had just finished speaking in his soft southern dialect, from which all the r's were dropped. Hard on his heels came a Northerner, of Scotch extraction, well known in Canada and the United States, and picked up all of these r's and added many of his own. Said he, "If there is anything worse than a c-r-r-ripple on a c-r-r-rutch, it is a c-r-r-ripple on a c-r-r-rippled c-r-r-rutch."

UNITY.—This conference was one of good fellowship. A good spirit was present. One vote on an important question stood 199 to 200, which might indicate a lack of unity. But if there was such a lack it was in unity of opinion, not in unity of spirit. All questions were discussed with perfect good feeling. Unity of spirit is of primary importance, unity of opinion will follow. ELBERT A. SMITH.

"The man who influenced my life more than any other," said Governor Johnson, at one time, "was a Mr. Donahower, who showed an interest in me, when I was a boy, lent me books, taught me to appreciate good literature, and paid my subscription at the public library. It is the effort that is put forth in behalf of the boy that is most effective and enduring."

A REMARKABLE MANIFESTO.

Paul declared that in the last days perilous times should come. The fulfillment of that prophecy is evident not alone in mechanical contrivances that frequently destroy life in times of peace as well as in times of war, in pestilence, earthquake, and famine, but also in the strained relationships existing between men. Labor and capital at times are arrayed in open warfare in which dynamite and muskets are used; and laborers themselves find themselves set in deadly struggle against fellow laborers, the union man against the non-union man, the striker against the strike breaker. Striking garment workers in Chicago seize garment workers who refuse to strike and disable them by breaking their needle fingers. Teamsters in San Francisco are incapacitated by breaking their wrists with steel bars. Buildings are dynamited in Los Angeles and elsewhere and innocent workers are buried in the ruins. A hostile class sentiment becomes more and more bitter.

In a recent after dinner speech in New York City, Judge Gary said: "I tell you, gentlemen, that there are things being said nowadays which are very similar indeed to things said just before the French Revolution. Unless capitalists, corporations, rich men, powerful men, themselves take a leading part in trying to improve the conditions of humanity, great changes will come, and they will come mighty quickly, and the mob will bring them."—Literary Digest, February 24.

The situation has led to the drafting of a petition or pronouncement that has been referred to by the press as a "Manifesto," addressed to the President of the United States, and issuing from leading educators, economists, and social workers. Among those signing the document are such individuals as Professor Richard T. Ely, Doctor Lyman Abbott, Rabbi Wise, John Collier, and Professors Carver, Ross, Seligman, Patten, Fisher, and many others. We reprint the document from the Chautauquan for March:

The case of the State of California vs. the McNamaras is legally closed.

By confession of their guilt, the trial has been brought to a conclusion swift and indisputable. In all subsequent criminal proceedings involving industrial relations, we trust that the outcome as to guilt or innocence will be as clear and decisive.

But what happens from now on to the McNamaras in San Quentin prison does not concern the American people so profoundly as what happened, is happening, and may happen to workmen who did not and would not use dynamite as a method to secure their ends.

Their case has been before the tribunal of the law. It comes before a larger tribunal—the social conscience of the nation, of which the law is only a partial expression. The courts accept and interpret the progress which society has made; but progress in a democracy implies the people's freedom to criticize and develop the very civilization which the courts conserve.

With our stupendous manufacturing development, the industrial workers assembled in many cities exceed by thousands the entire populations of whole States a generation ago. Our statutes in the main were originally enacted for the different conditions existing before these industrial changes, and naturally such evolution as there has been, has been dominated by the readily mobilized forces and influences controlled by capital. Here, in part, lies the explanation of that serious distrust which has come to be felt by great masses of workers toward the fabric of our law and the structure and control of the machinery through which we apply it.

In order to arrive at the worker's point of view, it is necessary only to review the long list of occupational diseases, the failure of both employers and the state to prevent them or mitigate their effects, the lack of employers' liability laws, the failure to provide adequate safeguards against accidents in dangerous vocations, the attacks upon the constitutionality of laws to shorten the hours of women and of workers in certain trades, the reluctance of legislatures to abolish child labor—it is necessary only to contrast this dead center of the social machinery with the speed at which it acts to prevent picketing and rioting during strikes. The workingman sees the club of the officer, the bayonet of the militia directed against him in the defense of property, and he believes that the hand of the law, strong in the protection of property, often drops listless whenever measures are proposed to lighten labor's heavy burden. Occasional and imperfect expressions of this underlying feeling reach the surface. Those who dismiss them as sporadic assaults upon the judiciary have no appreciation of the depths and breadth of the social situation. There is profound restlessness among large groups of labor who feel that there are no organic ways open through which they can act collectively with respect to the thing that most concerns them—that they are thwarted when they get together for common strength and when, not as mutual benefit societies, but as aggregations of men, they set out to mind their business.

Thinking men and women of the nation must ask themselves: What channels are open to American workmen who, through collective effort, seek to better their conditions?

Are the American people prepared to counsel violence as the method to be employed—force, dynamite, intimidation? The answer has been given at Los Angeles: No, and the country affirms the judgment.

Is the channel of political action open? The answer of the spirit and institutions of the American democracy is—Yes; and in increasing numbers, the workmen of the United States are each year turning to the ballot as a way out.

But are there not channels open for economic action to secure industrial justice? The answer made by great groups of employers and employees who jointly, year in and year out, adjust their interests without disturbance, and settle their differences without bitterness, is: Yes. The answer made by equally powerful industrial groups, of which the structural iron trade is in part a sobering example, is—No.

No: in terms of the labor policy which unrestricted capital has deemed itself justified to employ on grounds of self-protection.

No: in terms of discharge of those workmen who, refusing to rely for fair play and security upon the good nature of foremen and superintendents, have attempted organized action.

No: in terms of spy systems and strike breaking organizations equipped to a man a job and break the backs of local strikes, whether or no their cause be just.

No: in terms of evictions, injunctions, the very instruments of our self-government turned to root out the simplest forms of democratic action.

No: in terms of the economic disfranchisement of vast groups of American wage-earners.

Who is right?

The American people as a whole must think these things through. Too much hangs on them for mere individual conviction to be the last word. We need more light. Mindful, as the undersigned are, of the important duty which the department of justice has before it, we hold that the criminal court is not a sufficient instrument through which the democracy can address itself to the economic struggle. The federal grand juries may well concern themselves with those who have carried dynamite across State boundaries. We want light along a more crucial boundary line—the borderland between industry and democracy. We want light on that larger lawlessness which is beyond the view of the criminal court. This is a matter of public defense in which we, as a people, should if necessary invest as much money as we put into a battleship. We appeal to the Federal Government to create a commission, with as great scientific competence, staff, resources, and power to compel testimony; as the Interstate Commerce Commission:

1. To investigate (and on this point make a preliminary report within six months) conditions of labor during the last six years in the structural iron trade, including in the study the organizations of employers and employees, the methods and purposes of each, and the relations of each to the other.

2. To gauge the breakdown of our machinery of industrial government by tracing the trend of law and judicial decision through state and federal courts with respect to labor causes (the boycott, the picket, the injunction, the strike); and to examine the exact economic and legal status of the union, the union member, the nonunion man, the strike breaker, the tenant of a company house.

3. To investigate the economic and social cost of strikes to employers, to workmen, and to the public.

4. To examine and review the rules and records of trade unions—and employers' associations in their relations to each other; the conditions of the trades in which unions are strong and those in which no unions exist.

5. To study and make report on the scope and methods and resources of federal and state bureaus of labor to the end that they may meet permanently those responsibilities which—through the work of such commission would be more adequately defined.

6. To make special and exhaustive study into the practicability and working principles of schemes of economic government such as the trade legislature in the cloak, suit, and skirt industry, the joint arbitration board—which for seven years controlled the New York building trades, the Wisconsin Industrial Commission, the Canadian Industrial disputes acts, the minimum wage board long established in Australia and recently introduced in England.

To-day, as fifty years ago, a house divided against itself can not stand. We have yet to solve the problems of democracy in its industrial relationships to solve them along democratic lines. On the same vitality, the same idealism, the same constructive justice of the people which stood the stress of Lincoln's time, we ground our confidence in petitioning the President and Congress of the United States to appoint a commission to investigate, study, and consider the grave problems of internal statesmanship herein set forth.

President Taft has already presented to Congress a recommendation that a commission be appointed to investigate the present high cost of living, with power to invite foreign nations to appoint similar commissions to meet for conference in Washington or elsewhere, and another commission to investigate the strained relationships existing between capital and labor, and the general condition of the laboring class.

All who are alive to the situation as it is must sense the fact that the highest intelligence of the race will be needed in dispassionate study of the problems before mankind, if a peaceful solution is to be secured. Yes; the highest type of human intelligence, plus divine direction, is needed.

If the people of the United States are still disposed to maintain that purity of public and private life that the Book of Mormon makes the condition on which divine favor will be continued, we may confidently expect that the same divine wisdom that inspired the men who drafted the Constitution will enable their successors to guide the ship of state through the threatening breakers. Otherwise we may anticipate failure.

There is too much of a disposition among all classes, and among all parties to ignore the basis of successful fellowship and human cooperation laid down by the Master. They still profess to accept Jesus; but they do not accept his teachings. All parties wish to claim him as a man; but they reject every institution which he founded, and many of the principles that he laid down to govern men individually and socially.

CULLED FROM THE PAPERS.

One of the troubles of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints is to prevent the public from confusing them with the Utah Mormons. Although the Reorganized Church was established fifty-two years ago as an alleged protest against the polygamous practices of the followers of Brigham Young, the Saints complain that they constantly are mistaken for the people whose beliefs and practices they profess to dislike the most.

The German emperor has failed to distinguish one from the other, and the Reorganized Saints are suffering from the general edict which the German Government has issued against the operations of Mormon missionaries of all complexions. They say it is because of the old prejudice against the Salt Lake brand of Mormonism.

That prejudice was the subject of a report to the General Conference of the Latter Day Saints in Independence yesterday afternoon. It was by Frederick M. Smith, secretary of the First Presidency. The general conference at Lamoni, Iowa, a year ago appointed him to take steps to have the German prohibitory order removed, if possible, so far as the Reorganized Saints were concerned. In this report yesterday afternoon he said he had gone to Washington, District of Columbia, and had invoked the aid of the Secretary of State in persuading the Germans to give what he considered fairer treatment to the missionaries of his church. The Department of State, he said, had taken favorable action, but so far nothing had been accomplished.—Kansas City Star.

Realizing that his days of active service are practically ended, Joseph Smith resigned his place on several committees and boards at the session in Independence yesterday afternoon. He wishes to conserve his failing strength for the work belonging particularly to the Presidency. Even in that office the great bulk of the work is done by his son, Frederick

M. Smith, the future president of the church. Some of the places resigned by the president yesterday afternoon were his membership on the committee on revision of church history; on the committee to build monuments to the martyred Saints who fell in the early days, among whom were his father, Joseph Smith, the prophet and founder of Mormonism, and his uncle, Hyrum Smith, who on June 27, 1844, were killed by a mob in Nauvoo, Illinois; one on filling vacancies in the board which ordains ministers, and others. In one or two cases the resigned positions were immediately filled by the selection of Frederick M. Smith.—Kansas City Star, April 9, 1912.

A reporter called at the home of Joseph Smith on Short Street soon after his return from the conference. W. R. Dexter, the prophet's secretary, answered that his employer was very busy and could see no one.

Joseph Smith, a man almost blind and deaf, a sufferer, and eighty years old, was busy!! He sat in a parlor with his back to the light, a table piled high with papers beside him. His eyes were closed and his hands clasped in his lap. His third wife sat near the window, one of her three little sons playing at her skirts. The room was simply fitted.

Then something was told of this man's daily work. Joseph Smith, son of the first prophet, is editor-in-chief of the church's organ, the SAINTS' HERALD, Lamoni, Iowa. He seldom misses an editorial contribution weekly. The correspondence that comes to his unassuming door every day would fill a large mailbag. Every letter carrying a personal note is answered by dictation to his secretary. Joseph Smith is president of his church by action as well as word.

The latter day prophet is a good business man. In addition to the regular routine of daily business he has been dictating his memoirs for the past two years. The book is nearly finished. It will be published posthumously by his two sons, Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, it is said.

But these are only a few of the regular tasks that Joseph Smith sets himself to. It is indeed a prodigious business to which a prophet falls heir.—Kansas City Star, April 9, 1912.

An interested group stood around Elder E. C. Briggs, of Lamoni, Iowa. He is an old man with a flowing, patriarchal beard. He was the first missionary sent to Utah in the early '50s by the Reorganized Church. At that time, perhaps, it was like sending coals to Newcastle. Elder Briggs soon was arrested on the streets of Salt Lake City by the Brighamites for distributing a handful of tracts. Sentiment ran high at the time, and he suffered in jail for a long time, it is said.

Yesterday a delegate asked him where the Bible first mentioned the word, "Mormon." The answer was ready and came quick:

"Noah was the first to use the word, but I'll have none of him, for he was a polygamist!"—Kansas City Star.

Gomer T. Griffiths, in charge of the British Isles Mission, said the drama and the motion picture shows were being used extensively in England to prejudice the public against the Saints and hinder missionary work.—Kansas City Times.

"He that helps a child helps humanity with an immediateness that no other help given to a human creature in any other stage of human life can possibly give again."—Phillips Brooks.

Rightness expresses of actions what straightness does of lines, and there can no more be two kinds of right action than there can be two kinds of straight lines.—Herbert Spencer.

Our grand business undoubtedly is, not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand.—Carlyle.

The General Conference

APRIL 15.

The 9 o'clock prayer service was in charge of J. C. Crabb and T. W. Chatburn. The speaker was F. A. Russell, assisted by P. M. Hanson.

At 2 p. m., President E. A. Smith called the assembly to order. Number 54 was sung. R. C. Evans offered prayer. Minutes were approved.

The First Quorum of Seventy reported 12 regular sessions; 69 members; 14 debates; 101 new openings had been made.

Articles of condolence included in the report of the First Seventy, expressive of sympathy to the families of John Kaler and L. R. Devore, deceased, were approved, and the secretary was instructed to furnish copies of said articles to these families.

Action of First Seventy in releasing R. W. Davis from quorum membership, upon his request, was approved.

The trustees of the Children's Home reported having held a meeting at which Heman C. Smith was chosen president, Oscar Anderson secretary, and Joseph Roberts treasurer. Heman C. Smith, Joseph Roberts, and Callie B. Stebbins had been appointed as a committee to draft articles of incorporation.

The Board of Auditors reported having examined the accounts of Graceland College, and to have found same correct in agreement with the statement of the Board of Trustees. Report approved.

The United Order of Enoch reported. E. L. Kelley was chosen president, Ellis Short treasurer, and W. R. Dexter secretary. Monthly meetings and special called meetings had been held. Individuals had been helped in a financial way. A by-law had been added to the articles of incorporation, providing that before a party might become a member of the order a statement must be received from the Bishopric, by him indicating that the law had been complied with as per articles of incorporation. Financial statement of the order was also submitted.

The First Quorum of Seventy recommended the rescinding of General Conference resolution number 550. It was moved that said resolution be rescinded. A substitute was moved that the resolution be reaffirmed. The substitute prevailed.

Hymn 185 was sung, Amos Berve pronounced the benediction.

The speaker at 7.45 was F. J. Ebeling, assisted by F. B. Farr.

APRIL 16.

At 9 o'clock the prayer meeting was in charge of R. M. Elvin and J. E. Wildermuth. The speaker at 10.45 was P. M. Hanson, assisted by C. E. Crumley.

At 2 p. m., President F. M. Smith called the assembly to order. Number 92 was sung, and Ammon White offered prayer. The minutes were approved.

The Quorum of High Priests submitted an additional report. Moroni Traxler had been dropped from the quorum.

The Quorum of Evangelists reported four sessions held. The following was included in the report: "In our opinion no patriarch should give the same person the second blessing unless the first blessing be lost or destroyed, and it be not found on record; and, if possible, the person seeking the second blessing should first apply to the patriarch officiating in the first instance."

The committee on monuments to the martyrs reported. An appeal is to be made to the Saints to erect a suitable monument, and to care for same and grounds, and for the distribution of literature by the keeper. Books are now open for cash or pledges. Twenty thousand dollars are needed to creditably do the work.

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported that B. J. St. John had been expelled from the quorum for transgression, proven and confessed. The report was approved.

The chairman announced that choristers, musicians, and others had met for the organization of a chorus or choir to serve the conference in future years. A. N. Hoxie had been appointed as leader, authorized to choose assistant. Sister B. M. Anderson, H. E. Moler, and A. N. Hoxie had been appointed a committee to draft constitution and by-laws for the choral organization.

A proposed amendment to the Rules of Order seeking to authorize elders' courts to fix penalty in case of guilt, was lost.

The Advisory Board of the Woman's Auxiliary requested that regular conference appointees be provided to organize local societies of the Woman's Auxiliary, working in harmony with the field workers of the society.

Third Quorum of Seventy submitted additional report. Eleven sessions had been held.

Number 258 was sung, J. F. Mintun dismissing.

At 7.45 the speaker was T. C. Kelley, assisted by A. B. Phillips.

APRIL 17.

At 9 o'clock James McKiernan and Columbus Scott were in charge of the prayer service. John Smith was the speaker at 10.45, assisted by C. A. Parkin.

At 2 p. m., President E. A. Smith called the assembly to order. Number 14 was sung and Robert M. Elvin offered prayer. The minutes were approved. The chair was resigned to President F. M. Smith.

On the sixteenth a motion obtained changing the rules of representation by substituting for chapter 17 of the Rules of Order conference resolution 234. By separate motions this action was reconsidered, and the matter was referred to a committee of five for consideration and report to the conference of 1913. It was also provided that the committee consist of one of the First Presidency, one of the Quorum of Twelve, one of the Seventy, one of the High Priests, and the Presiding Bishop. The Presidency were authorized to appoint the remaining members of the committee.

The joint council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, to whom had been referred the matter of the status of an expelled seventy, reported that no satisfactory agreement had been reached. Further time was granted.

The Quorum of Twelve, the First Presidency concurring, recommended that Henry Greenwood, of England, and Josiah E. Matthews, of Columbus, Ohio, be ordained to the office of patriarch. The recommendations were approved and the ordinations provided for.

The First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve concurring, recommended that William Winkworth be ordained to the office of high priest. The recommendation was adopted.

The council of Seven Presidents of Seventy reported 24 sessions held. They recommended that J. F. Petre, P. T. Plumb, and F. L. Sawley be ordained to the office of seventy. Resolutions of condolence; expressive of sympathy extended to the families of J. C. Flapp and J. A. Davis, deceased, were submitted with the report, with request that copies of said resolutions be furnished the families. By separate motion the ordinations recommended were approved, and the resolutions of condolence ordered furnished the families.

R. S. Salyards was chosen to fill the vacancy in the committee on revision of Church History occasioned by the resignation of President Joseph Smith.

The ordinations approved were referred to the First Presidency.

By motion Joseph Smith was sustained as prophet, seer, and revelator to the church.

By motion Joseph Smith, Frederick M. Smith, and Elbert A. Smith were sustained as the Presidency of the Church.

The Quorum of Twelve, the Council of Seven Presidents of Seventy, the various quorums of Seventy, and the Presiding Bishop were sustained.

A statement and recommendation by Bishop E. L. Kelley, after discussion, were referred to the joint council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishop.

Number 21 was sung; T. C. Kelley dismissing.

At 7.45 a meeting was held at which the work of the Order of Enoch was considered. President F.

M. Smith and Bishop E. L. Kelley spoke, and questions were answered by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

APRIL 18.

At 9 a. m., George A. Smith and B. J. Scott were in charge of the prayer meeting.

The speaker at 10.45 was Amos Chase, assisted by George Jenkins.

President F. M. Smith called the meeting to order at 2 p. m. Number 191 was sung, prayer by William Lewis. The minutes were approved.

H. W. Gould, T. J. Elliott, and Andrew St. Louis, the Quorum of High Priests concurring, were by the First Presidency presented for ordination to the office of high priest. The recommendations were approved.

The joint council of First Presidency, Twelve, and Bishop, to whom had been referred on the seventeenth the matter of statement and recommendations of Bishop E. L. Kelley reported, recommending that the matter be referred to the same joint council with power to act. After discussion, said matter was referred to same joint council for consideration and report at 2 p. m., the nineteenth.

Number 134 was sung, the benediction being by J. W. Wight.

At 7.45 the speaker was W. S. Macrae, assisted by E. E. Long.

THE FALLING AWAY FROM PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.--PART 1.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

The readers of church history, after they step down past the apostolic era, following on through the second and third centuries, find themselves at a loss trying to keep in sight of the true church of Christ. That is, to keep in sight of the church as we see it, and read about it in the New Testament, because of the many changes in doctrine, rites, and practices, which was adopted by the churches soon after New Testament times. We are told that by this time the church had passed its formative period, and reached a development that it did not need the help of apostles and prophets, or the outward direction of the Holy Spirit to guide it, like it did in New Testament times, because the church had passed its infancy and grown to manhood, the apostles then ceasing by limitation and being taken out of the way like scaffolding is from a building, when the building is finished, as not needed there any longer, the church now caring for itself, using the pattern in the New Testament without the direct interference of the Holy Spirit, or inspired men.

Jesus said, "If you abide in my doctrine then are ye my disciples indeed"; and again, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me," and he warned us "that every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." True discipleship then, consists in abiding steadfastly in the Christ doctrine, in the way that Jesus planted it, and not in planting something ourselves and calling it Christ's plant. The church of Christ was a divine institution; its rites and doctrine were clearly beyond human amendments, because Christ and the Holy Spirit were sent from heaven as the interpreters of the Divine will to man, and they are the ones pointed out as exercising jurisdiction over its destiny and leading the way. But Peter, John, and Paul warn us of a falling away from primitive Christianity, and they point out the way it was coming. "Let no man deceive you by any means (Paul says) for that day shall not come (the coming of our Lord) except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition" etc. (2 Thessalonians 2: 3.) "Remember ye not that when I was with you, I told you these things." (Verse 5, Ibid.)

Peter says that false teachers would arise in the church and "bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction." (2 Peter 2: 1.)

"Who concerning the truth have erred (Paul says) saying the resurrection is passed already, and overthrown the faith of some." (2 Timothy 2: 18.) "For the time will come, (says Paul,) when they (the Christians) will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (2 Timothy 4: 3, 4.) "For I know (says he) that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock." "Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw disciples after them." (Acts 20: 29, 30.)

"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils"; "forbidding to marry." (1 Timothy 4: 1-3.) This is the prophetic picture of the coming church, after Paul's departure. A church not enduring sound doctrine, a church heaping to themselves teachers with itching ears, and turned to fables, preachers who are grievous wolves, giving heed to seducing spirits, teaching doctrines of devils. Paul's future church was anything but a perfected church, and he could see that it would need divine help. "And God hath set some in the church, first, apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." (1 Corinthians 12: 28.) So

God set apostles and prophets in the church, (not on the outside for staging) but "for the work of the ministry, till we all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Ephesians 4:11-13.)

The New Testament writers saw and wrote of an era that was coming, in which the future church would be left to the mercy of teachers who like wolves would corrupt the Christians with heresies, and those heretics exercising jurisdiction over them without divine help and leading them away from original Christianity, making additions of their own to God's divine plan.

John says, "So hast thou (the church in Pergama) also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate." (Revelation 2:15.) Here we see the workings of an inspired man, who when the revelation was given to John was far away on the Isle of Patmos. John compliments the church at Ephesus, because "thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate." (Ibid. 2:6.)

Do we not see how nice the inspiration worked for good in the primitive church in directing the churches in the right way? Such direction is needed in a divine institution. God must lead the way. But Paul knew that after his death, the Christians would not remain steadfast, but would heap to themselves teachers who would lead the people from part of the truth. The apostasy, or falling away, is plainly of a religious character, a defection from the true religion and worship, a "departing from the faith" (1 Timothy 4:1), or the church going into the wilderness, but not a renunciation of the Christian name, because it would have its seat and power in the great body of Christian worshipers; it is Christianity corrupted, retaining parts of its doctrines, but so marred and mutilated by manism, and paganism, that it lost divine approval. (2 Thessalonians 2:2-7.)

The doctrine of the Nicolaitanes troubled some of the churches, and the resurrection troubled others, some preachers teaching that the resurrection was already past, other preachers forbidding to marry. These are some of the warnings we see concerning the falling away, and soon after the death of the apostles we see the church leaders, warring among themselves, along the very lines pointed out and corrected by Peter, John, and Paul, and what these men predicted would become of the church, Eusebius, a little later on, tells us had already happened, so that church history by the third century is little but an account of this heretic, or that heresy, the church becoming divided along the lines pointed out by the apostles in the New Testament, so that church history, after the first half of the second century, is mainly the history of the apostasy. Eusebius tells us that part of his purpose in writing church history was to describe "the character, times and number of those who, stimulated by the desire of innovation, and advancing to the greatest errors, announced themselves leaders in the propagation of false opinions, like grievous wolves, unmercifully assaulting the flock of Christ." See Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History, page 1. And quoting Hegeippus, who wrote between A. D. 161 and 180, referring to the heresies of his time, says, "of these also, was Simeon, whence sprung the sect of Simonians; also Cleobius, from whom came the Cleobians; also Dositheus, the founder of the Dositheans. From these also sprang the Gorthœonians from Gorthœus, and the Masbothœians, from Masbothœus. Hence also the Menandrians and Marcionites, and Carpocratians, and Valentinians, and Basilidians, and the Saturnilians, every one introducing his own peculiar opinions, one differing from the other. From these sprang false Christs, false prophets, and false apostles, who divided the unity of the church by the introduction of corrupt doctrines against God and against his Christ." (See Eusebius, pp. 145, 146.)

And many other reformers not named here, arose, before and after the above date, who stood for some doctrine or practice not approved of by other Christians. Thus self-appointed leaders, like wolves, scattered the flock of Christ, dividing the churches into hostile camps, each repudiating the others. Some of the above heresies are referred to in apostolic writings, but not by name, which later made progress dividing the churches, and destroying its peace. The reader in looking for a golden era after the apostles' death will be disappointed. Some of the above heresies had able advocates even before Peter, John, and Paul's ministry closed.

Irenæus, bishop of Lyons, France (then Gaul) writing about A. D. 190, says that John directed his gospel against the heresies of the Nicolaitanes and the Cerinthians. See Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 344, both of which heresies taught that Jesus was the son of Joseph by natural generation, which doctrine we see he corrects in John 1:1. The Nicolaitanes are said to have been polygamists; at least they are charged with "gross impurities." See Apostolic Fathers, volume 1, page 102; and the deeds of these Christians, the Lord and the Saints at Ephesus hated. (See Revelation 2:6.) The Cerinthians also taught a carnal and sensual millennium, circumcision, and keeping the Jewish Sabbath. They were Judanizers, and wanted Moses and the law in the church. Cerinthus lived at Ephesus when John did. See Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, page 130. So that John would know what Cerinthus was teaching. This was after John had returned from Patmos.

Some of the first heresies taught that Jesus was but a mere man, which Matthew, John, and Paul correct by teaching that he was God manifest in the flesh. Other heretics taught soul sleeping; others ate meats offered to idols, which is prohibited in Acts 15: 29, and reprov'd in Revelation 2: 14; others taught that the resurrection was past. This heresy is noticed in 2 Timothy 2: 18. Others worship Adam, and these Christians blazed the way for Brigham Young in Adam worship; but some Christians taught that there was no salvation for Adam. What one church taught would be repudiated and even hated by other churches. Some preachers forbade marriage, but other preachers seem to have believed more in marriage, or women, than anything else; others taught that those who married a second time, after losing by death their first wife, were guilty of polygamy in the second degree, but the Nicolaitanes, Carpocrates, Knostics, and Ehiphenes took a different view of Christianity altogether, and advocated the rightfulness of polygamy, or a community of women, although polygamy appears to have been forbidden by Greek and Roman Law. (See Justin Martyr's First Apology, page 20, note 1, and Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 950.) Some Christians refused to pay that part of their taxes which went to the support of heathen temples where idols were worshiped, while other Christians would even eat the very meats offered to those idols. Some Christians taught spiritualism, and would at their meetings call up the spirits of dead prophets; some taught that baptism was the resurrection. The Simonians are said to have had magic art in their meetings, like Simon of Acts 8: 9. Montanes denied the Trinity, but claimed a more perfect discipline than the apostles; woman with them baptized. Paul of Samosata taught that Christ was a mere man, he was a Judaizer. The Encratites condemned marriage. See Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, page 154. These were Docetians, Marcionites, Tatians, and the Saturnians. (Ibid., p. 154.) The Marcionites taught a spiritual wife system, and Marcion is said to have required men to repudiate their wives before he would baptize them or offer them the communion. (See Tertullian's Church History, p. 250.)

The Marcionites taught that Jesus did not have a real body; they denied his birth. (Ibid., p. 250.) Jesus, they said, came from heaven a full grown person, hence they denied his incarnation, and also his resurrection. They rejected most of the New Testament; they abstained from marriage, wine, and flesh, but believed in spiritual wifery. This heresy spread very rapidly from A. D. 130 to A. D. 170, and soon found its way to Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Arabia, Persia, and even other countries. Tertullian, bishop of Carthage, before the year 217, A. D., had written five books against this heresy.

Marcion, Tatian, and Saturnius, three leaders of three different Christian sects, though they differed on other doctrines, agreed that marriage was nothing but corruption and fornication. (See Eusebius, p. 154.) The Tatians taught that there was no salvation for our first parents. (Ibid., p. 154.)

Menander, who was the companion of Simon, of Acts 8th chapter, claimed to be sent from the celestial regions with a special message. His baptism was itself the resurrection. (Tertullian, p. 286.)

The Ebonites taught that Jesus was a mere man; they were Judaizers. The Doretians taught that Christ suffered not in reality, but only in appearance. These Christians agreed with the Tatians that marriage was of the Devil. The Phrygians taught that Montanas was the Paralete (Holy Spirit). Marcellus and his followers denied the Trinity. Apeles taught that Jesus had flesh, but not human flesh, and not born of Mary, but that he came from some star. (See Tertullian, p. 252.)

The Helcesites taught that the soul died with the body; these were soul sleepers. The Artimonites were Unitarians in the Christ nature. The Hermogones believed that matter was the cause of all evil. Serves taught the law and the prophets; he was a Judaizer, and set aside Paul and his epistles as no good. The Nepotites were Judaizers too, and they, like the Cerinthians of Ephesus, taught a carnal and sensual millennium of luxury. The Catharites claimed greater purity than ordinary Christians; they were a holiness people. Basileids taught that Christ did not have a real body, that it was a phantom; he taught that it was Simon of Cyrene who was crucified, and not Jesus. Justin Martyr, about A. D. 142, Irenæus 191, Tertullian 200, and Cyprian about 250, each makes replies to Marcionite doctrines which troubled the churches greatly during their ministry. Justin and Marcion were contemporary ministers. (See Eusebius, p. 127.) Cyprian concludes a reply to the Marcionites like this: "Nor can it be made to appear that they who are baptized among them, can receive remission of sins, and the grace of God, on account of their faith, when their very faith is a lie." (See Life and Times of Cyprian.)

Justin Martyr, in his first apology to the Roman emperor and the Roman senate, calls Marcion the "teacher of another God besides the Creator, and another son besides his Christ, upon whom abundance of people pin their faith (notice that) as the only teacher of the truth, and makes a mock of us without so much as offering us a proof of their own assertions, but are blindly carried off like lambs by a wolf, and made a prey to his wicked doctrines, and to the devils, the contrivers of them." (See p. 71.) Tertullian wrote five books against them,

Eusebius, quoting Irenæus about Marcion says, "who was from Pontus, having succeeded Cerdon, augmented his school by uttering his blasphemies without a blush. But the same Irenæus, having most dexterously unraveled the bottomless abyss of the errors enveloped in the Valentinian heresy, laid bare the wickedness concealed in it, like a serpent lurking in his nest." (See Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, p. 127.)

Dear readers, this is the way the leading ministers were writing about each other in the early Christian ages, commencing with Justin, A. D. 142, down to the time of Eusebius, A. D. 325. They were divided into hostile camps, and that, at the very time we are looking for a church enjoying the blessings of Christian unity, of one body, and one spirit, but instead we find them writing books against each other, and writing apologies to civil governors, and even to the Roman emperor and senate, in which they charge others with apostasy, blasphemy, mutilating the Scriptures, teaching doctrines of devils, immorality, comparing one another to wolves, or venomous reptiles destroying Christ's flock, or to serpents ready to sting, or to poisonous reptiles crawling about ready to destroy the church of God. The church historian can see that the church in the second and third centuries badly needed such divine helps as they had in New Testament times; but instead of looking for divine help, they were trusting either to Moses, or looking for human wisdom, which they found in Plato, Pythagorus, and the Greek poets, each faction led by some self-appointed leader who made war on other Christians. Is this the golden era that we expected to see, when the church had passed its infantile period, and got so strong that it did not need divine help any longer?

Menander, another heretic of another stripe, with a following too, claimed "that he was sent by the supreme and sacred power to make all who received his baptism immortal and incorruptible; in other words his baptism was itself the resurrection, and delivered all who partook of it from liability of death." (See Tertullian, p. 286.)

Of Montanus, another heretic, Eusebius says, "but as the enemy of the church of God (he) is the adversary of all goodness, the promoter of evil, and omits no method of plotting against men; he (Montanus) was active again in causing new heresies to spring up against the church. Some of these crept like venomous reptiles over Asia and Phrygia, pretending that Montanus was the Paraclete." (Holy Spirit.) (See Eusebius, p. 182.)

Helcesites, about A. D. 200 "rejected the apostles altogether." (See Ibid., pp. 239, 240.)

Clement, of Alexandria, about A. D. 200, also refers to certain heretics who were "setting their own authority above the apostles." See Clement, page 128, and this was often the case with heretics. Clement says the Valentine heresy taught that "Jesus bore all things, and had his appetites in subjection, and wrought out for himself Divinity; he ate and drank in a manner peculiar to himself; such was his control over his appetites that the food became not corrupt in him, since he was not subject to corruption." (See Clement, p. 184.) Clement quotes Heracles, the most celebrated disciple of Valentine, as saying that some Christian sects of his time "marked the ears of baptized persons with fire." See Clement, p. 182, note 2. And other heretics are said in another place to have cropped the ears of their members.

The Carpocrates, "held the institution of marriage at variance with the justice of God, who meant all things to be possessed in common; the light of the sun is common to all; sight is common to all; human laws introduced property and consequently injustice interfering with the community intended of God." (Clement, pp. 186, 187.)

The Carpocratians allowed a community of women. (See Clement, p. 269, note 5.)

The Anabaptists, of Germany, in the sixteenth century, under the leadership of Munzer, Stubner, and Storch, held some community views nearly like the carpocrates. These men taught that a magistracy was unlawful in a Christian community, and that all Christians "throwing their possessions into one stock, should live together in that state of equality which becomes members of the same family; that as neither the laws of nature, nor the precepts of the New Testament, had prohibited polygamy, they should use the same liberty as the patriarchs did in this respect." (See Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 77.)

Under the shadows of a cliff
 Crowned with a growth of stately pine,
 An angler moors his rocking skiff,
 And o'er the ripple casts his line,
 And where the darkling current crawls,
 Like thistledown the gay lure falls.
 Then from the depths a silver gleam
 Quick flashes, like a jewel bright,
 Up through the waters of the stream,
 An instant visible to sight—
 As lightning cleaves the somber sky
 The black bass rises to the fly.

Mormon Campaign in Ontario Towns.

An extensive propaganda of Mormonism is being carried on in Toronto, and it is expected that the movement will be launched in London in the near future. Heretofore there have been no noticeable attempts to establish the Mormon faith in eastern Canada, although there are large numbers in Alberta and other western provinces.

It is proposed to establish a new conference in Ontario and the East, with headquarters at Toronto, where there are now six elders of the church carrying on a strenuous campaign. Up to the present the few Mormons in Ontario have been included in the Albany conference, which covers New York State. Several elders have been located in Ontario for some time, carrying on a quiet propaganda in Preston and Brampton, in addition to Toronto.

That branch of the Latter Day Saints, which is generally known as the Mormon Church, and whose adherents are called the Mormons, was founded by Brigham Young in 1844, following the murder of Joseph Smith. The Latter Day Saints, or the Mormons of that date, broke up into two separate factions. Young led his followers to Utah, where the present Mormon Church was firmly established about the year 1852.

IN EAST AND WEST.

The other faction after various tribulations and wanderings, finally established its headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri. A large conference is to be held next week at the latter center. This branch of the Mormon faith called "Josephites" by the Salt Lake Mormons is firmly established in both eastern and western Canada, having over four thousand members, principally located in Ontario and Manitoba. There are a number of churches in leading cities and towns of western Ontario, and the movement in Toronto is well established under Bishop Evans, formerly of this city.

Elder W. I. Fligg, of the local Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ, which is the official name of the Lamoni branch, told The Free Press yesterday that he does not fear the inroads of the Mormons in Ontario.

"Bishop Evans will get after those fellows in Toronto," he said. "Their claim that their church no longer practices polygamy is a straight lie. It is practiced, although not openly. Brigham Young seceded from the original church in 1842 because of the opposition raised to his advocacy of polygamy. The Mormons are apostates from the original church, and the courts have declared that they have no right to the property of the original church because of their innovation of the doctrine of polygamy into the original teachings of the church. These missionaries are very dangerous men. They have been excluded from European countries where they have been carrying on their propaganda, and now they are turning to Canada. It is quite likely that they will come to London, but I do not think they will make much impression here."

NOT LATTER DAY SAINTS.

"They have no right to call themselves Latter Day Saints. They have departed grossly from the original teachings of the church."

To the person who is not familiar with either branch of Mormonism, for each branch accepts the Book of Mormon as its own particular Bible, along with the Christian New Testament, it is difficult to know just what is the true Mormon faith. The Salt Lake church is generally known as the Old Church, and styles itself simply the "Church of Latter Day Saints of Jesus Christ." The Lamoni branch, which alters its official name merely by prefixing the word "Reorganized," claims that it is the original church and that the Utah branch is an apostate organization.

While it is generally believed that the Salt Lake Mormons still believe in and to some extent practice polygamy, the Lamoni branch of Latter Day Saints are everywhere regarded as unusually lawabiding, moral, and Christian people.

Their type of citizenship is very highly regarded both in this city and wherever else they are established in Canada.—London Free Press.

The Princess Theater, Toronto.

It has been some time since we have written from here. The winter season is busy with us. The services in the Princess require a lot of work. This is the eighth season for Bishop Evans in Toronto theaters, and we think it has eclipsed all former ones. For weeks past the house has been well filled; but last Sunday night was a record. The top gallery was packed, and it was with difficulty that the ushers kept the corridors and aisles clear. The police visited us during the service, but were as lenient as the law would permit. They had seen hundreds turning away, and so were willing to allow us to occupy all the space possible.

We regret the warm weather is approaching, when these services must close. It seems too bad to stop in the midst of such interest. We will have to drop about half our audience.

Bishop Evans's sermons this winter have been excellent. They seem to be reaching the people, and winning their sympathy for our church. His book of sermons is accomplishing much good. They are meeting with ready sale, and are going into homes where possibly we could not reach in any other way. The work in general is in good condition here. All the auxiliary societies are active; and we trust they will continue to advance.

A. F. McLEAN.

TORONTO, March 28, 1912.

London, Ontario.

Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, was in the city on business one day of last week. He still holds quite an interest in Toronto.

Bert and Ethel Richardson are the happiest couple in London, and why shouldn't they be? It's daddy and mamma, now.

The meetings of the young people's club are quite interesting. A very warm debate was held at their last session. Another is announced for next meeting. Several new members have been added, and the summer's work is quite promising. Brother George Cambridge is president.

Our Religio is getting a little more active. President James Winegarden is working hard to enlist the young in this department of the church work. The social committee is doing what it can to make the meetings sociable, and the prospects are better now than they have been for some time.

Elder John Shields, patriarch, of Toronto District, who has been laboring in Chatham District, stopped over for a couple of days last week on his way to the Toronto field. He occupied the stand last Sunday morning.

Our service Sunday night was somewhat unusual. Elder Fligg, president, occupied, but before starting his discourse Priest J. Winegarden stepped forward and read a short address to our president, eulogizing the elder for services rendered the members, and included a neat sum whereby he might be able to attend General Conference. He replied suitably, appreciating the gift very much, and expressing the hope to have a good time at the conference. He also said that he wanted to bring back a good report.

Brother Chatman was called to Sarnia the other day by the serious illness of his father.

Of General Interest

Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Abraham Lincoln is one historical character in which there can never be any appreciable diminution of public interest. He is the towering, commanding, and overshadowing figure in our American life—regardless of the fact that it is nearly half a century since the tragic termination of his earthly career. Of whom can it more truthfully be said: "He being dead, yet speaketh"?

What is the secret of Abraham Lincoln's hold upon the popular imagination? The question is one which volumes of paper and printed type might be utilized in answering. We have space for only a thought or two, but that is ungrudgingly given as we approach the anniversary of his birth.

From time to time there is some one to break into print with the query: "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" As a usual thing the question is propounded by a professed admirer of the Great Emancipator, but is one of those controversialists who have a cynical contempt of things religious or is asked by one of those hidebound religionists who believes that entrance into the kingdom of heaven is impossible unless first "belonging to the church."

It is not our purpose to quibble with either class. We simply want to express our conviction to the readers of The Des Moines Capital, that tried by every test, and measured by every standard, Abraham Lincoln was as high a type of the Christian statesman as America has ever seen.

Abraham Lincoln was the human instrumentality in the hands of God for the accomplishment of a mighty purpose. The preparation for that era began years before Lincoln was born. The final steps were being taken when in those lonely melancholy years upon the prairies of southern Indiana and Illinois Lincoln brooded over the wrongs of a down-trodden race by day and watched the stars and thought of God by night.

Abraham Lincoln exemplified throughout his life the teaching of the apostle that "Charity suffereth long and is kind." With what infinite patience did he carry the burdens which the dark days of the Rebellion placed upon him. With what fortitude did he bear the slings and arrows with which a fickle and thoughtless public often bombarded him. With what Christian resignation did he hear his motives constantly impugned. His faith was in the God of the universe, and upon more than one occasion did he express the conviction that the divine purposes could not fail.

Abraham Lincoln was just, but he was also merciful. He recognized both as attributes of Divinity, and ever sought to give them expression, both in his private and official life.

So far as known Abraham Lincoln never belonged to a church. So far as known he never made a specialty of preaching morality, but it is the testimony of history that he lived the law of love for his fellow men and never considered any sacrifice too great—even to the offering of his life itself—to be made in their behalf.

We all admire great intellectualism. We pay the tribute of our enthusiastic acclaim to geniuses. Tom Paine had a great intellect. Edgar Allen Poe had genius. But Abraham Lincoln not only had intellect and genius, but he had a heart and soul and love and sympathy and the virtues which glorify character and make life an uplifting influence for the benefit of all mankind.

When we hear the question asked: "Was Abraham Lincoln a Christian?" we always think of the answer of the late Bishop Charles H. Fowler, whose lecture on the martyr president was for a quarter of a century one of the classics of the American platform:

"When I pass through the shadows, which can not be very far away, I humbly hope first to see the King in his beauty, but if anywhere in the great throng I shall see the stalwart form of Mr. Lincoln I shall know that I have gotten into the right company, for I regard Mr. Lincoln as the best specimen of a Christian man I have ever encountered in public life."

Combined Sectarianism Supports Billy Sunday.

In our issue of August 3, last year, we called attention to the evangelistic work of Billy Sunday. The language used by Mr. Sunday is such that when it was known that he would preach in Wheeling, West Virginia, the city council passed an ordinance imposing a fine upon any person using vile or improper language in public address.

Billy Sunday is now in Wheeling. His first meeting was held February 18. The Wheeling Register, of Monday, February 19, publishes quotations from his opening discourse. His language may suit sectarians and draw crowds, but much of it, in our judgment, is not edifying. The following are some of his better expressions taken from his talk Sunday, the 18th:

"When I heard I was coming to Wheeling, I cut out all my slang. There is a bunch of muts and molly-coddles in this city that are so low down that they would have to reach upwards to reach bottem. Never mind, they'll get all that's coming to them before I get through. Don't think I won't give the dirty dogs what's coming to them. Some of the dirtiest low-down gangs in the country are here in Wheeling. I would rather be a devil in perdition stirring pitch with the rest of my gang, than in the liquor business. Hell will be so full of such people that their feet will stick out of the windows. I am not going to stand by and see the Devil's incubator hatch out his brood. I have never back-pedaled for any gang on God's green earth, and never will."

In his closing appeal to sinners he said:

"Come on you bootlegger, you black-hearted coward, you who have disgraced and defiled this country for years! You personal representatives of the Devil, you have besmirched everything with which you have come in contact! In the name of the Lord God of hosts, I dare you! Are you ready to surrender?"

Such language, then, is a sample of Billy Sunday's preaching after he has "cut out all" his slang. From newspaper reports of his meetings, it would appear that such preaching suits the popular religious world of to-day, therefore, men like Billy Sunday become famous.—Gospel Trumpet.

The Cause of Billy Sunday's Popularity.

The question has been asked: "If Billy Sunday is not doing good, why is his work so attended by evident blessings from God?" Frequently it is cited that thousands are being converted. It is important, therefore, that the foundation for Billy Sunday's popularity should be known. Doubtless the primary reason is this: Billy Sunday is favorable to all the denominations. When he enters a city it is with the understanding that all the sects in the place have contributed to the support of his campaign. He has no indistinctive message, his common slang entertains the people, and his work tends to make sectarianism popular. He is a sort of an auctioneer. After he has interested the people in his form of religion, he leaves the people without instruction in Bible truth, and recommends to them the ministers of the different sects who have supported his campaign.

Why should he not be popular? So long as he continues to build Babylon, Babylon will rejoice. An evidence of Billy Sunday's extreme popularity may be seen in the fact that newspapers publish, almost in detail, the events of his meetings. For instance, Billy Sunday's meetings closed in Canton, Ohio, Sunday, February 11. On Monday the newspaper devoted almost exclusively eight pages out of sixteen in heralding praises to so popular a man. Every sectarian preacher in Canton received his share of eulogy.

The meeting held at Canton cost the city about $25,000. More than half of that amount was a private purse to Billy Sunday for his services. So far as cash is concerned, it pays Mr. Sunday to be popular. Thirteen thousand dollars is not an insignificant sum. Most any preacher of the world would like to be popular enough to make over $2,000 a week. It is reported that 5,654 were converted. These conversions consisted in expressing a desire to be saved, shaking hands with the preacher, or an expressed desire to do better.

Such cooperation with the sects as is indulged in by Billy Sunday will make any speaker of ability popular, whether he has one spark of salvation or not. May the Lord bless faithful, humble ministers of the gospel who esteem the riches of Christ more precious than the popularity of this world.—Gospel Trumpet.

THE TYPICAL BAD BOY.

Away back in my days of school-teaching I formed a great liking for the "bad boy"; and to this day he holds a warm place in my heart. I like to watch the mischievous sparkle in his eye, and little by little draw him out to find his reasons for "doing things." I enjoy studying into his inner self to try and know him.

As a rule he is smart, "bright as a dollar," and active. The smaller boy inevitably looks up to him, and envies him his reputation for daring.

The grown people are constantly on the watch for new tricks, and he, knowing it, generally sees that they are not disappointed. If for any reason he feels a person against him, he immediately lays his plan to annoy him relentlessly; but if he accepts your friendship he will prove his loyalty through thick and thin. Often a great fighter among his kind, he is most gentle with the young or helpless. He it is who asks a reason for things, and analyzes your every move.

You may call him lazy because he does not like to carry coal or chop wood; but it is simply that the task does not appeal to him. You may think him dull at school; but seeing no definite purpose or aim in his studies he declines to work.

There is a pathetic strain to the bad boy's life. Often misunderstood and thwarted, his real self is not allowed to develop until his life is cramped and unnatural.

In one of her articles for the Chicago News, Katharine Reynolds says: "No human being has any business to tamper with children who harbors the notion that bad boys are born. They are not. So much body, so much brain, every babe has. The bad boy is merely the child in whom the soul is wrongly kindled and then so improperly fed that the whole being a little later is consumed in the resulting fires."

In doctoring a patient with tuberculosis the physician orders a change of environment, good, nourishing food, and plenty of fresh air. So would I prescribe for the bad boy. If his school is taxing his nervous system for some reason, give him a vacation for a certain length of time. Feed him with the food that is especially suited to his peculiar needs. By that I mean, look into his nature and find what he craves. His bent may be towards mechanics or natural sciences; take him to visit power houses of electric or steam works and find out the work best suited to him. If we need the raw egg and milk diet of the consumptive, then potatoes and beans will not nourish us to combat with the disease.

A boy once being punished for his seeming cruelty to insects, worms, and so forth, was visited by an aunt who made it a special point to become acquainted with him and found he had a passionate love for studying the smallest types of the animal kingdom. Purchasing a crude outfit of bristol-board, a small magnifying glass, and chloroform, she was soon able to demonstrate the fact to his parents. Deftly she showed him his needs of spelling and arithmetic to continue his favorite study, until when the boy started his fall term of schooling his teacher found no further grounds for complaint.

It is only one of the many instances where the boy is misunderstood and forced into a channel that does not fit his nature.

The very qualities that go to make up the great men of the day are often the traits that, wrongly developed, produce the criminals.

A boy thwarted and misunderstood is often worried into a failure, while if properly handled would have developed into a man of worth, respected and loved.

It is sad, but true nevertheless, that a boy christened as bad will make it a point to carry his early-formed reputation with him through the whole eight grades and even on into manhood, while often if shown the good in him he will labor just as hard to live up to the standard of good.

It is mostly the early training that stamps a child for life. The doctor has no great dread of consumption if taken in the early stages, before the germ is allowed to multiply; but if left until it has spread its destroying effects through the system it becomes fatal.

The bad boy is a morally sick boy with a little germ of disease working in his moral being, but if dealt with wisely and lovingly, building up the good side, allowing it to expand and develop, the germ will be routed out and the disease lose its effect.

A manager in one of the large Chicago houses of business has often told me his method of securing the best work from his men was to encourage their efforts and overlook, as far as possible, their failures.

How often do we mothers fail to notice the efforts and deal with the blunders until the poor child feels it is no use trying to please any longer, and fails utterly?

There are schools of discipline for the wayward boy, and reformatories for the child criminal in plenty, but what the world to-day needs more than all is a few loving, understanding hearts.—Jane Adams Parker in American Motherhood.

What a Wisconsin Mother Did.

A little crossroads village; a chill November night; a wakeful mother waiting the return of her youngest son.

She heard the clock strike twelve, then one, then the half-hour. Where was Harold? He had promised not to be late.

Suddenly the chance remark of a neighbor recurred to her—a report that there was a gambling room in a ruinous building half way up the street. Could Harold be there? She would know. She roused the boy's father, who laughed at her fears, and soon slept again. But the mother could not sleep. After a hasty toilet she stole out, soundlessly, into the dark, lonely street.

A rickety outside stairway led to the room in question. Its boards did not creak beneath her light tread. With a prayer in her heart, she opened the door, and entering, closed it.

There were several tables, and about them only very young men and boys. She bent to scan each face at the first table. Harold was not there. No one moved; no one spoke.

She passed to the next table; the next—and now a painful hush was broken, for Harold rose, and coming to her, put his arms about her, looking into her stricken face.

"Won't you please let me take you home, mother?" he faltered, in a strangely husky tone. She bowed assent, and silently the proprietor opened the door for them.

No word passed between the two, till in their own home, the mother said, "Good-night, my son!"

Next morning the old building displayed the sign, "To let." Said the gambler, "I'm done with this town. I could face Satan easier than that white-cheeked woman with her awful eyes. She came so still I thought she was a ghost."

Sometimes a very little town is the home of a great American mother.—E. M. G. Hawley in American Motherhood.

The Boy—Slang.

Up to the time her Harold was ten years old, Mrs. Barton had been able to keep him from using the rough language that some boys find so essential to their conversation, by words and rank slang. But she was ill for several weeks one summer and when she recovered and renewed acquaintance with the heir of the house, she found that he had acquired a large vocabulary of these burs of speech. She remonstrated, tried to shame her son, but the habit stuck. She decided to try the effect of surprise, an original method of her own.

She made a very wry face as she practiced a little by herself to make certain of success, but was sure she could carry the plan through for the sake of her boy. She found herself ready for action one day about noon. She did not have to wait long, for there was a bang of a screen door, a rush and the sound of a boyish voice.

"Jimminy, mamma, I'm just darned hungry."

"By gum, Harold, the darned old dinner will be ready in just about five minutes, by george."

Her son stood rooted to the spot, with eyes open and mouth agape. She returned his gaze steadily, with just a suspicion of a smile on her lips, and a twinkle in her eyes. The boy turned and disappeared into the dining room. The dinner went off very pleasantly, for Mrs. Barton made a special effort to be entertaining. Toward the last, however, there was a slip.

"By jinks, mamma; this pie is good."

"By jimminy crackorn, I think it is too."

Harold nearly choked with emotion and left the room on a sudden errand. After two or three days of this sort of tactics the young man recovered from his dazed condition sufficiently to say, "How it does sound for you to talk like that, mamma."

"Does it, my son? I am trying to learn to be able to talk with you in your favorite language."

"Well, but it sounds worse for a woman than it does for a boy."

"I don't think so. If it is good for you, why not for me? You know I am something of a 'woman's rights' woman always. I don't believe in being cut off from things I want to do just because I am a woman."

There was some improvement and when it came to where words that "didn't sound well for a woman" were only begun and then choked off, Harold ventured a proposition: "Well, b——I'll stop, if you will. I don't admire that kind of talk myself, after all."—Martha J. Nichols, in American Motherhood.

Letter Department

CHICO, CALIFORNIA, March 4, 1912.

Editors Herald: Chico is one of the growing cities of the Sacramento Valley, at present numbering twelve thousand inhabitants. As a branch we are in the fight to stay, with a good force of local ministry, to present or defend the work.

Brother Charles E. Crumley has been with us during the winter. At present he is attending the district conference in Oakland. Brother C. A. Parkin has also been with us, preaching, and looking after the financial part of the work as well. Brother Sheehy also held a few meetings here during the early part of the winter, and we look forward to good results from the gospel seeds sown by the ones mentioned.

Our Sunday school is prosperous, with Sister Ada Hintz as superintendent, and an able corps of teachers. A number of children of the neighborhood, not of our faith, attend. Thus you see we do not experience the bitter opposition we hear of in some places, which speaks well for the intelligence of the Chico people.

By the way, Chico is an educational center, supporting a state normal, a high school, a business college, and numerous grammar schools. We are fortunate in having a fine climate, good water, and soil that can not be excelled. If any of the Eastern Saints are contemplating coming to California, I would advise them to visit Chico before buying elsewhere. Visiting Saints are always cordially welcomed.

H. A. HINTZ.

BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

Dear Saints: It is with a feeling of pleasure and with sincere love and gratitude toward the Saints, that I relate to you a recent experience. For some time in the past my work has been very unsteady, and my financial condition has been such that it caused me considerable worry. I am very sorry to admit this fact, as it shows plainly a lack of faith on my part.

One day as I glanced through the window of my home, I saw two of the brethren coming up the street. As we comprise a committee of the branch, I thought nothing strange of this; but what was my surprise later to see the whole branch coming like angels of mercy, each having under his arm a bundle, which later I found to be groceries. How greatly does my heart rejoice because of this; for, although I appreciate the gift, the greater appreciation is for the spirit with which it was given. It demonstrates plainly to me that the Saints are not only hearers, but that they are doers of the word.

The Saints spent an enjoyable evening; recitations and hymns were the program, and each countenance was lighted with that divine light which emanates from the One who says: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

E. F. WRIGHT.

HERMISTON, OREGON, March 24, 1912.

Dear Saints: We thought ourselves permanently located in Littleton, a suburban town near Denver, but the possibilities of the electrical business here, though small at present, seemed to justify our buying and moving here. But not the least consideration in our minds was that there was likelihood of at least some honest-hearted souls here, as well as elsewhere, and a hope that we might be the means in the hands of our Master of doing some good.

The nearest branch is, we believe, the one at Condon, Oregon, but being in the interior it is hardly accessible for us, and as business would take us more often to Portland, we intend placing our letters there.

We are at present attending the Methodist Sunday school, Brother Shupe having been invited to teach Bible class on occasion and Sister Shupe is to take charge of juvenile class beginning next Sunday.

We endeavor to bring out some thoughts each Sunday, whether in class or as teachers, that may lead the minds further and deeper than the confines of Methodism.

This is the center of the Government Umatilla irrigation project, a new community, but we find the people of a rather higher than ordinary type of intelligence, very agreeable, and we hope to let our light so shine that some at least may be attracted.

There are only three buildings of church organizations here as yet, namely Methodist, Baptist, and Catholic. We wish that a Reorganized Latter Day Saint might be next.

We shall be glad indeed to have any of the Saints, especially of the traveling ministry, call when passing this way, and make our home their stopping place.

Asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints, as ours are for all, we are,

Your brother and sister in the faith,

LEO AND ADA SHUPE.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, March 26, 1912.

Editor Herald: We were appointed a mission by Brother Fred A. Smith about two years ago. F. G. Pitt was appointed president of the mission and myself vice president. When Brother Pitt was sent to Australia I was left in charge of it, and with the aid of Brother Hemenway have been working diligently; and we are holding meetings in a beautiful little hall which is located on Seventh and B Streets. Have between thirty and forty Saints at present and expect to be organized into a branch soon. We have never had any discord, as we are all of one heart and one mind, and that is to do the Lord's will in building up his kingdom.

We have the usual services on Sunday and all traveling Saints are invited to attend our meetings when in the city.

Your brother in bonds,

JESSE F. RULON.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, February 12, 1912.

Dear Editors Herald: I have been in this church over three years and the more I delve into the gospel, the more dross I find in myself; and the more I desire to be made pure that I may be accounted worthy to receive eternal life, as promised by our Lord and Savior. I know God will fulfill his promise, and it is my desire to come up to the standard he would have me. I know, too, that Jesus is the Son of God.

On the first day of the New Year I felt the desire to obey the promptings of the Spirit, which said, Write. This evening I feel the same, and the song, "I'll do what you want me to do," rings in my ears. I obeyed the Spirit on that first day. This evening I am prompted by the same Spirit to copy it and send to the HERALD.

There is the deepest significance in the words of Jesus,

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." To see God, to me means that spiritual discernment by means of which we live in close and consciously direct relation with the Holy Spirit. The spiritual nature of man must be developed if he would be in communion with God. It is our privilege as well as our duty to achieve a constantly increasing quality of that purity and exaltation of the Spirit resulting in love.

It has been asked, Can one love his enemy? Most certainly we can. When one's own soul enters into intimate communion with God, man enters into a practical understanding of spiritual laws. To love our enemies is as practicable as it is to pay our bills. It is a part of one's own soul's integrity.

One doesn't love the sins of his enemy, but the real man behind the sin, with all his latent possibilities for good; it is him we love. We need not follow after our enemy to love him, but in our hearts we can instill the love, unknown, perhaps, to him. Then one asks, Can we find joy and peace in this? We can but answer yes, if we have learned the beautiful lesson of trust in a higher power. We must look higher than man for joy and peace, for peace cometh from God and Christ alone. We can not find it in the sin-loving sons of men. How poor the most of us prove to be when we take an inventory of the soul's stock. Most of us have lots of bonnets, plenty of dresses, no end of lingers (we women), but how are we off for the things that count when the dry goods and furbelows are forgotten? How about the right kind of love that ennobles, and how about patience, loyalty, and truth?

We are slaves to fashion, and we have such a little time to indulge in frivolities and vanity. What are we going to do when the messenger stands at the door, to bid us pass from the scenes of this worldly conflict? For my part, it frightens me to think of the interest we take in the things that pertain to this perishable life, when we will soon be called to another world, where those things will not be; as does the choice we make of rank and reputation, shams and seemings, dinners, jewels, and fabrics; the importance we attach to bubbles that break before we reach them, the allurements that draw us away from the ideals we started to maintain. The way we content ourselves with the environments of evil and forego the voice which calls us away to partake of the things which shall be wine and honey to our souls. Saints, let us put aside this love for worldly things and pleasures, and seek for the eternal, when the Master shall call us to the better land. For if we live and testify of the things Christ did, we shall be bringing in fruits of the true Spirit. Christ lived and testified of the Father, and we should testify of Christ; for if we testify of Christ we testify of the Father also; for Christ and the Father are one, and we would be one with them. It is written that he who seeth the Son and believeth on him hath eternal life. It is also written that he who speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory, but he that seeketh his glory who sent him, the same is true, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

Praise God from whom all blessings flow, I rejoice in this glorious gospel.

Since writing the above, I have received the following, on the morning of February 13, at 9.30 o'clock: As I stand on a street I see before me a great cloud; now it becomes white as snow, then a golden sunrise hue, then it begins to part, and in the parting of the cloud there were two gates closed. As I stood admiring all this, I saw two personages coming down from on high, amid the clouds; one was an elderly man; the other was Jesus Christ. The elderly man raised his hand, and pointing to the other, said in a sweet voice: "This is my only begotten Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him!" And Saints, to you and all who have not yet obeyed this gospel of latter days, saith the Lord, Whosoever will may come into this glory and receive eternal life, if they will keep my laws and commands and do my will, and receive of my Spirit, as it is written in my books.

A sister in Christ Jesus,
MINNIE M. ROCKHOLD.

1289 WEST TWENTY-SECOND STREET.

EVERY, TEXAS.

Dear Herald: We once had a flourishing branch, known as the Shawnee Branch, but since my father, B. F. Pollard, died four years ago last October, he being a priest, there has been no one to preside or take the lead only as the elders would come in and hold a meeting or be passing through and preach for us. The branch is in a disorganized condition. We have never had any church house or regular place to worship. We have now about twenty or twenty-five Saints in this community who are pretty well settled and we have been trying to keep up the interest the best we could. About twelve miles south of here are forty or fifty Saints scattered around, and no place to worship. This place is on the railroad, about half way between Paris and Texarkana.

Elders E. A. Erwin and P. B. Bussel have been with us a few days recently and preached for us and organized a Sunday school. We have a number of children and young folks that need to be in Sunday school. I think there can be a good work done here in Sunday school. The young folks seem glad that we have one organized and we want to raise our children in the gospel, and are making a special effort now to build a church at this place. My husband, S. N. Kelsoe, has agreed to donate the land to build a church on, also twenty-five dollars of money; some others have agreed to give as much money, and others will give less. We are all poor, but are determined by the help of the Lord to build a church, so that we can have a place to meet and worship the true and living God whom we are earnestly striving to serve, where we can have our children taught the principles of this beautiful gospel, and where we can have a better chance to bring them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord. Having this desire and determination, we appeal to our brothers and sisters far and near who feel able to assist us. Even the smallest amount will be thankfully received. Anyone feeling disposed to contribute any can send it to W. S. Goodman, Avery, Texas.

When an elder comes this way we have preaching at my house and we have not room to accommodate all that come. We are going to build an arbor to hold Sunday school in as soon as the weather will permit.

Your sister,
MATTIE KELSOE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: There is a song in my heart as I look out from my sick bed and behold the beautiful green grass which has so lately been covered with snow. The birds have been singing their beautiful songs, which have taken me back to a time long ago, when life was May and all was gay, and we never thought of a time when we would be brought down upon a bed of affliction by the trials and sorrows of life.

I was taken very sick about Christmas, and have been sick ever since. I was at the Sanitarium for five weeks, where I was kindly cared for by gentle hands. I improved, but am still taking treatment. While there I was administered to several times, as also before I went, and I was helped but not healed. This, however, does not weaken my faith in the work, as I know it is God's work, and that he will do what is best, for he knows better than we. We do not know why the Apostle Paul was not healed; he says he had a thorn in the side and he had besought the Lord thrice to take it away, but the answer was, My grace is sufficient for you; then why should we not be patient? We know the scripture tells of many being healed in olden times and we know, for have been eyewitnesses, that many are healed in the church as restored in these latter days.

What a joy it is to be spoken to by the power of the Spirit, and our souls comforted as no earthly power can do.

I have been blessed many times and in many ways, and to God be all the glory. I ask all who will to remember me in their prayers, that if it is his will I may be restored to health of body and mind.

MRS. HARRIET SEDORIS.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, March 25, 1912.

Editors Herald: For a long time this branch has been suffering from a lack of interest in the work required of individual members. Some seemed content to have their names on the record, but did not aid with their presence, prayers, or means. Others seemed inclined to hide behind some grievance, often more imaginary than real, and make that their excuse for not doing their duty. Yet there remained a little band of faithful workers, who under discouragements, and in the absence of the support they should have received from many whose names were on the record, continued to keep the lights burning, and to importune the Throne of Grace for strength, courage, and humility to do what the Lord would have them do. These are now rejoicing in the evidences appearing that their efforts have not been in vain. Cold and indifferent ones have been made the special objects of prayer, and some of them have already awakened and buckled on the armor and engaged again in the battle of right against wrong. Our meetings recently have been marked by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit until almost everyone has been made to feel the beneficial effects, and to rejoice that they are numbered with the people of God.

We have had but one baptism in the last year, but on yesterday a young man signified his desire to unite with the church. Others seem to be almost ready. One of the most hopeful signs is the interest manifest on the part of some of the young to work among their associates to win them to the gospel. Especially is this true with Brother John F. Martin, who had drifted off into worldliness, but in answer to the prayers of the faithful a few months ago came back and started again, and it does us all good to see the spirituality manifested by him and his zeal to help others of his associates from being drawn into the pitfalls of sin. We hope to be able to report more of the blessings of God to this branch in the near future.

O. J. TARY.

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, March 21, 1912.

Dear Herald: It may not be uninteresting to let the Northern California Saints know how we are progressing here. Notwithstanding that we have had rain, wind, and very cold weather for the last few weeks, we have not been idle; we have kept the gospel car moving along as usual. Although we live about three miles from Lower Lake we face the elements and are on time for all of our meetings. Our Sunday school is becoming very interesting, quite a number of "outsiders" attending.

Brother Mahlon Cannon has worked up quite a good interest, holding cottage meetings; some are investigating and prejudice is melting as frost before the morning sun. His last effort was an explanation of the "two births" in such a plain and convincing manner that even our Methodist friends acknowledged that it was good Bible doctrine.

About two months ago a young man and his sister called at our house and inquired for Belgian hares, learning previously that we raised them for the table. They stated that their father was very sick, suffering from Bright's disease, and thought that the afflicted parent would relish the hare. The family had moved here from Oakland a few months previously and were strangers to us. After a few days my companion felt impressed to call upon the family. She found the sick man very low—in the last stages of that dread disease, and given up by the physicians.

Mrs. Fitch, the patient's wife, and three very bright children—one boy and two girls, the younger nine years of age, constituted the family. Owing to the protracted illness of Mr. Fitch, their finances were very low and the earnings of the son were insufficient to keep the "wolf from the door."

As is usual with Sister Adamson, she introduced the gospel theme and found them willing listeners. When she was preparing to take leave of them, Mr. Fitch insisted that her visits be repeated as often as convenient (they live seven miles from us), as he desired to hear more along gospel lines and be remembered in her prayers. He also expressed a desire to read our church literature. In a few days we drove over and gladdened their hearts by our presence and our charities, telling them more of the plan of salvation. (They were Baptists.) They seemed to drink in our words as the arid plains drink in the welcome rain. Sister Adamson asked permission to introduce Elder Cannon, which was readily granted, and a day or two later took him there in her buggy. The following Sunday Elder Cannon visited the home of Mr. Fitch and delivered a very convincing sermon on the kingdom of God, which satisfied him that our message was true. On leaving, the invalid expressed a desire that we call often, as he said that he felt better each time we were with him.

On conversing with him I found him to be a very well read man—highly educated, broad-minded, and refined. His library spoke for itself; the shelves were well filled with probably two hundred books, and as many more boxed up for want of shelf room. Glancing over the titles I found books on various subjects, such as history, biology, medicine, theology, etc., etc.

One Sunday after our services at Lower Lake, Brother and Sister Cannon, myself and companion again visited our sick neighbor. We found him resting easily after a week of dreadful suffering. He expressed a desire to be baptized, but as his condition forbade taking him out of the house, we were in a quandary what to do.

On March 12 my companion again called on the sick man. She found him suffering excruciating pain in the region of the heart, accompanied with suffocation. He expressed his desire for baptism as soon as possible. Just then it occurred to my companion that we possessed a large wooden bathtub that had been unused for seven years, the dimensions being sufficient to bury a person in baptism easily.

Next Tuesday morning the bathtub was removed from its resting place, and the next day at 9.30 we were on the road with the big bathtub securely tied on the spring wagon. Brother and Sister Cannon and Brother Martin Adamson appeared, and all was ready for the candidate, who was assisted into the tub, and as I was ready, I stepped by his side and laid him in his watery grave. After the removal of the tub and all things set to rights, Elder Cannon attended to the confirmation, promising to return the next day, bringing the oil, and to attend to the administration.

Brother Fitch is a young man, forty-five years of age. There is much before him, and he desires the prayers of all the Saints that if it is the Lord's will, to raise him up, that he may be a profitable servant in his vineyard.

E. F. ADAMSON.

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK, April 2, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: In my letter in the HERALD of March 13 occurs the following errors: Page 257 second column, forth line from the bottom should read: "only that they had looked upon matters differently," instead of "only that he had looked upon matters differently." Also on page 258, first column, twenty-fifth line from top should read: "from Nauvoo westward" instead of "from Nauvoo to Westwood."

Respectfully,

H. N. HANSEN.

KNOX, INDIANA.

Dear Herald: The work here has been slowly advancing. We can see a great improvement in the work, and find that many who were once prejudiced are beginning to see we are not what they thought us to be. Many are coming and finding out for themselves what we really teach; while others still hold themselves aloof, and don't seem to want to learn.

Our Sunday school is much improved, and the number is still slowly increasing. Quite an interest is being taken in the Religio work, and we feel much encouraged. We still have our prayer and social meetings, and sacrament once a month. We gain much strength and encouragement from these meetings, and believe it would be almost impossible to try to get along without them.

About three months ago one of the sisters became discouraged, thinking that our work might not be doing any good. After praying to God for a day and night for a sign if what we were doing was right, and received by the Father, the next morning (Sunday) we were rewarded in prayer meeting with a prophecy given through one of the sisters, who is not so young in the work as some of us. We were given the promise that if we would continue to be faithful and diligent, many should be added to our number. Many words of encouragement were given. Since that time we have not doubted, and feel that the Lord is with us in our work for him.

Brothers J. W. McKnight and C. F. Ellis were with us from February 27 until March 11, in which time they gave us quite a number of excellent talks. There was usually a good number present, and all listened very attentively. We feel that many good thoughts were brought forth, that will later yield a good harvest. Brother Ellis baptized one while here.

Since I last wrote another dear sister has been called upon to pass from this world, Sister Hannah Lohse, on December 24. Her body was returned to earth December 25, 1911. Services were held in the Saints' chapel by Elder J. W. McKnight. The church was filled with people. The sister was operated upon in a Chicago hospital for cancer of the stomach. After undergoing the operation she only lived three days. We miss the dear sister very much, but feel that she is perhaps doing a greater work than she could do here. She was very worthy of the name Saint.

Your sister,

PEARL MALOTT.

WIGAN, LANCASHIRE, ENGLAND, March 18, 1912.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is the right paper in the right place. If every branch would only write a little oftener to the HERALD to let everyone of the other branches know what progress they were making, we could all keep in harmony with each other. It would give a helping hand to the other branches, and set an example to make the same progress. I am sure there is nothing nicer than to read a letter from the different branches.

I feel quite proud to be engaged in this good work of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. At one time I was bitter against this sect but I thank God that I have been brought to a truer light. It was not until I was taught the difference between this church and the Utah people. Since I have been a Latter Day Saint I have learned more of Christ's teachings in six months than I did in my whole life in the Church of England. It was by the aid of Brother W. Spargo, the branch president, and Brother W. H. Chandler, who belongs to the mission staff, for I am sure they are workmen that need not to be ashamed. I hope and trust that God will spare them to do more of his good work for the upbuilding of his kingdom.

Many readers will know that this branch (Wigan) was only reorganized last October, and has been very successful. There have been eight good souls go down into the waters of baptism, and we have many friends interested. As soon as we get a room of our own we shall start a Religio, so as to educate the younger members and put them on a firm foundation, to defend our church, because we shall want the younger ones to take the place of the old when they are worn out, God being their helper. We shall start a Sunday school as well, for I am sure it will be a good nursery to the church.

We have our Sunday nights' meeting in a dining cafe at the top of Walgate, called the Moot Hall Dining Cafe; but we are very thankful for that. The early Christians would have thought the world of a cosy little room like ours, instead of the old cafes they used to meet in.

Brother Chandler has worked very hard for this branch, along with our own members. We are doing splendidly and I am sure there is a great demand for the true light of the gospel in this town. We shall start a summer campaign in due time, and hope to do some good work. If there is any good that I can do for any brother or sister I am at their disposal.

I thank God for the blessings he has bestowed upon me, and I hope that he will continue them.

I hope and trust that all the brothers and sisters who removed to Minneapolis Branch are of good spirit.

JAMES ENTWISTLE, Secretary.

Extracts from Letters.

Brother P. N. Booker, Brewton, Alabama: "I write to let you know I am alive in this glorious work. I am preaching in two churches, one in Mississippi and one in Florida. I can't fill all the calls for preaching. I sometimes get to preach to the Baptist people, and they like to hear me preach, but they say there are such a few of our people. I baptized two last year in Evergreen, Alabama, and one in Mississippi. The work is moving along slowly in this part of the world. I desire the prayers of the Saints, that I may become even stronger in the work."

Brother W. G. Elliott, Owen Sound, Canada: "Your valuable paper brings sorrow and gladness to us. I do enjoy reading the letters of my dear brothers and sisters. Owen Sound has just finished a six-week meeting, conducted by Elder James Pycoc. He baptized twelve into the church and left many more with the gospel before them. How sorrowful it is to see people come in and taste of the good word of God, and then turn their backs upon it. I mean to fight on and on, and by the power of God's Spirit overcome the Devil and his angels, and gain a reward in the kingdom of God. The Church History is a grand work. Every Saint should have it and see the workings of God with his people."

Sister R. C. Steffe, Willoughby, Ohio: "To me the HERALD and Ensign mean a great deal, as I have been a HERALD reader since 1874, and of the Ensign for many years; also Autumn Leaves at their early publishing for the first fifteen years. The past eight years I have been hard of hearing, which causes me to rely on reading the publications, and I have received much information by reading them."

Brother George Elson, Wayne, Nebraska: "I seem to be improving quite fast from my mental disturbance. I have suffered greatly. God knows all. I hope to become free from being distracted in mind, from any cause over which I have no control. I hope I will recover so that my mind will be strong and bright, and be given wisdom from God."

Sister R. A. Ferguson, Bellair, Illinois: "I have tried to keep busy at the Master's work. This latter day work belongs to God and Christ, and the Spirit increases one's faith. After I went into the true church of Christ coffee did not taste right to me and I truly believe it was the Lord's will for me to quit using it and come higher in the sight of God each day. The Saints of Bellair are trying to walk in the light of the gospel and dwell in love and union. Omer Joseph, youngest son of Brother and Sister Edmunds, departed this life March 17; Brother S. J. Harris offered prayer and a few thoughts to the relatives and sympathizing friends. The Saints' Sunday school will reorganize the first Sunday in April."

Sister Anna Culbertson, Springview, Nebraska: "I have often been made to rejoice while reading your pages. I want to thank the sisters for sending me so many postal cards with a word of sympathy for my trial. I appreciate their kindness very much; it is cheering to know that the Lord does remember his people, and I trust that we all may be enabled to put aside everything that is displeasing to him. The Lord has blessed me many times and in many ways, for which I am truly thankful, and it is my earnest desire to overcome all my weaknesses and do all I can for the Master. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may have divine assistance in so doing."

Brother M. W. Mann, Akron, Iowa: "There are no Saints nearer than twelve miles, so the only church there is the United Brethren church. My wife doesn't belong to the church, so I ask the prayers of the Saints that she may learn the truth and come to the Lord in his righteousness, and be faithful the rest of her days here on earth. I have just gotten over an attack of the pneumonia, and I ask the Saints to pray for me."

Brother H. Duncan, Tuttle, Oklahoma: "We are isolated and scarcely ever hear any of the elders preach. Brother W. M. Aylor was here in November and preached for us. There were a few that were interested and would be glad to have him come back and stay longer. We hope the Saints will pray for us that we will live so that our remaining days will be better and nearer in harmony with the commandments of our Master."

News from Branches

Malvern Hill, Kansas City, Kansas.

This branch is striving to stem the tide. For a year we have been looking for our old war veteran, J. S. Roth, to come and hold a series of meetings for us, but the way did not open up for him to do so till the 15th of March. We have had some fine crowds of different denominations in attendance. Several attend who never have been in our church before. Some are ready to obey but are waiting for others. Brother Roth's last sermons were on the kingdom or church, and he certainly gave his hearers something to think about. The elder makes every point very plain and nails it down tight, so there can be no misunderstanding it.

We truly hope that after the gospel seed has been so liberally sown, and the speaker so blessed in his work, that God will give us the increase.

H. J. BOOTMAN.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

APRIL 19.

Albert Carmichael and Joseph Roberts were in charge of the prayer service at nine o'clock. At 10.45 the speaker was T. J. Jordan, assisted by D. E. Tucker.

President F. M. Smith called the assembly to order at 2 p. m., announcing number 131. Ammon White offered prayer. Minutes approved.

In the matter of statement and recommendation of Bishop E. L. Kelley referred to in minutes of the seventeenth and eighteenth, Bishop Kelley stated that in consideration of conditions of illness and physical disability on the part of G. H. Hilliard and the engagement of E. A. Blakeslee in other pursuits he wished to place before the body W. B. Kelley and R. C. Evans to be sustained as counselors to him in the Presiding Bishopric. The joint council to whom this matter had been referred reported as follows:

To the General Conference: We are authorized by the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric to report our action on the nomination of W. B. Kelley as follows:

We have considered the case of W. B. Kelley and have examined many of the rumors in circulation against his character, most of which we found to be without foundation, but we feel at this critical stage of the history of the church men should be selected as counselors to the Presiding Bishop of the church who can immediately command the confidence of the people. Therefore we recommend that in the case of W. B. Kelley, one of the Bishop's nominees to the office of counselor, be not approved, but respectfully ask the Bishop to either present further nominations or retain counselor E. A. Blakeslee for the present.

It was moved that the report of the joint council be adopted.

The following was also submitted:

To the Conference Assembled; Greeting: We beg to present the following as a minority report:

The joint council to which was referred the inquiry and report upon the parties presented by the Bishop as his counselors respectfully report:

That in the case of Brother W. B. Kelley, we have heard and examined the rumors circulated against him, very few of which have been found to have any foundation in fact, and the brother is willing to make his own statement touching these. There has been nothing shown to indicate that he is not fully competent to fill the place or that he is deficient in character, but the circulation of the reports referred to has affected his reputation.

We therefore report the facts to the body for its action upon this selection by the Bishop.

Respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY,
J. F. CURTIS,
W. H. KELLEY.

It was moved that this report of minority number of the joint council be adopted.

W. B. Kelley made a statement.

It was moved that the matter be referred to the President of the church and that he be requested to inquire of the Lord for direction.

The President stated that under existing circumstances he did not feel that he should be requested to inquire of the Lord in the manner suggested.

The motion to refer to the President for inquiry of the Lord was lost.

The report of the joint council recommending that the nomination of W. B. Kelley by Bishop Kelley as a counselor to him in the Presiding Bishopric be not approved was adopted.

The report of minority members of the joint council asking that the nomination of W. B. Kelley by Bishop Kelley as a counselor to him in the Presiding Bishopric be approved, was denied.

President F. M. Smith stated that in the matter of the nomination of R. C. Evans by Bishop E. L. Kelley as a counselor to him in the Presiding Bishopric the joint council had not had time for consideration and report.

It was moved that G. H. Hilliard be released. Moved as a substitute that G. H. Hilliard and E. A. Blakeslee be sustained as counselors to the Presiding Bishop of the church. The substitute prevailed.

Remaining officers, boards and committees excepting the committee in charge of the Saints' Home and Liberty Home, Lamoni, Iowa, were sustained. Bishop Kelley stated that John Smith desired to be released from the homes committee. The Bishop nominated Joseph Roberts and John Midgorden to be associated with Lorenzo Hayer on this committee. The nominations were approved.

A resolution of sorrow on account of the disaster to the Titanic and its passengers and crew and expressive of sympathy to all the bereft was adopted.

Votes of thanks were extended to the reception committee, the musicians assisting during the conference, the press of Kansas City and Independence, the stenographers of the conference, the Bell and Home telephone companies for free phone service.

Representatives of the press present thanked the conference for courtesies extended.

The following appointments made by the First Presidency were read:

Mission number 1, comprising Alberta, Saskatchewan, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Wight in charge.

FREDERICK A. SMITH,
Secretary of the Twelve.

By motion these appointments were approved.
 Minutes read and approved.

On request President Joseph Smith made a brief address.

After singing "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," President F. M. Smith declared the conference closed, to meet at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1913, at 10 a. m., President E. A. Smith dismissed.

It is not growing like a tree
 In bulk doth make men better be;
 In small proportions we just beauties see,
 And in short measures life may perfect be.

Conference Minutes.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Conference of the district was held at Fargo, North Dakota, March 2 and 3, 1912. In the absence of district officers, J. E. Wildermuth called the conference to order. J. E. Wildermuth and J. C. Page were chosen to preside over the conference. The secretary reported having received reports from the following branches: Milroy 37, gain 5; Dunseith 81, gain 1; Fargo 27, gain 1; Star of Hope 59, loss 4. No reports were received from the Clifford, Leeds, Antler, and Lansford branches. Elders reporting: William Sparling, J. Wagoner, Elmer Weddle, Alonzo Whiting, J. C. Page, J. E. Wildermuth. Bishop's agent reported having received from July 1, 1911, to March 1, 1912, $1,990.42; paid out, $1,611.75; on hand, $378.67. The district president and secretary were authorized to issue letters of removal to Ella Harrington and family, from the inactive Lansford Branch to the active Magnolia, Iowa, Branch. Action upon the recommendation of district secretary that certain inactive branches be disorganized was referred to the next conference. Next conference was ordered held at Logan, North Dakota, on Tuesday of the summer reunion. Eva M. Davis, secretary pro tem.

Conference Notice.

Conference of the Southeastern Illinois District will convene with the Tunnel Hill Branch, June 1, 1912, at 10 a. m. This will be a busy time of the year but we hope that as many of the ministry of the district as can will come, and that those who can not come will send in their reports so we can know what all are doing. Branch clerks will please send reports to me at Xenia, Illinois, so I can get them before I start to the conference. Remember to send in your assessments with your reports. A. H. Burroughs, clerk.

Reunion Notice.

The committee appointed by the Southwestern Iowa Reunion Association at their business session of 1911, to which was referred the matter of holding reunion in 1912, have considered same and report: That, Whereas a reunion will be held within our territory at Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 23 to September 1, 1912, it is deemed expedient to not hold one elsewhere in the territory in 1912. This is in accord with the general understanding at the meeting last August, that if a reunion was held at Council Bluffs in 1912 we would join with them for the year or longer if the reunion remained at above place.

Council Bluffs is of very easy access to all points in the Fremont District and we trust the Saints will make a strong effort to attend the meeting in full force. The splendid success of the two former meetings held on the same grounds makes us wish to return to enjoy another. The committee informs us that the same grounds will be used and their arrangements will be as complete as ever. Remember the dates and prepare to attend. T. A. Hougas, for S. Harding, N. L. Mortimore, T. A. Hougas, committee.

Died.

NESSAR.—John Nessar was born June 7, 1844, in Switzerland; left the land of his birth in the year 1861 for the United States. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ near Stewartville, Missouri, in 1880. Was married to Mrs. Sarah E. Jones, April, 1883. To this union four children were born, Mrs. A. L. Myers of 615 Prospect Street, Cameron, Missouri, three having preceded the father to the other shore. Wife and daughter and one grandson remain to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband and father, who departed this life at 6 p. m. March 12, 1912, at Cameron, Missouri. Service in charge of Elder N. V. Sheldon, sermon by Elder Peter Anderson.

HILTON.—Judson Franklin Hilton died at home 2404 Twenty-sixth Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minnesota, February 9, 1912. He was born at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, August 12, 1833. He leaves a wife and one daughter to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. He spent about thirty years as a miller in and near Minneapolis, and later was employed by the Milwaukee Railroad for over twenty years. He accepted the gospel in Minneapolis in 1892; was ordained a priest the same year, and in 1897 was ordained an elder. He was president of the Minneapolis Branch for ten years. Funeral from the Saints' church; sermon by B. S. Lambkin, assisted by Charles Lundeen. Interment was in Lake Wood Cemetery.

NIRK.—Elder William C. Nirk was born at Ingershime, Besigheim, Germany, July 4, 1837, and died at his home in Rhodes, Iowa, March 25, 1912, at 7.30 p. m., aged 75 years, 8 months, and 21 days. His father, Matthew Nirk, was of the Lutheran belief, and came to America in 1871. There were six children in this family, three sons and three daughters, the mother having died in Germany when William C. was but a small boy. William C. grew to manhood in his native land, and came to America in 1854, and located in Ohio, thence to Illinois for a few years, and came to Iowa in 1865. His brother, Andrew Nirk, and Miss Anne Kaufman were united in marriage March 14, 1858, and to this union were born three children. Henry, Mrs. Sarah Cushman, and Mrs. Mary Park. Andrew Nirk died July 10, 1861, making a special request of his brother William C. that he would see that his wife and children were properly cared for. William C. Nirk and Mrs. Anne Nirk were married in June, 1863, and to this union there were born four children as follows: Mrs. Emma Marsh, Mrs. Clara Livingston, John and Charles. Brother William C. Nirk was baptized into Christ January 14, 1868, and was ordained to the eldership three days later. He served as president of the Independent and Rhodes branches, and diligently served the church as president of the Des Moines District for a number of years. Funeral services were held at the Methodist Protestant Church, Rhodes, Iowa, Reverend S. M. Johnston, pastor, reading the lesson, Reverend J. W. Parks, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, offered the opening prayer, and Charles E. Butterworth preached the discourse, and closed the services at the grave. The attendance was large, giving evidence of the high esteem in which our brother was held by all who knew him.

YODER.—Caroline Amanda Yoder was born October 5, 1907, age 4 years, 5 months, 14 days; Hazel Lucile Yoder was born October 25, 1911. Both were children of Sister Agnes and Brother Edward Yoder. They were burned to death at their home at Comins, Michigan, March 19, about seven o'clock a. m. Their mother left them just long enough to go across the road after a pail of water. On returning the house was burning so that the efforts of mother and neighbors were unavailing to rescue them. Funerals in Mennonite church, in charge of Elder E. D. Fultz; sermon by Elder Noel Starks.

MARTIN.—R. E. Martin was born June 16, 1863, at Labette, Missouri; baptized by M. T. Short March 19, 1885, and March 10, 1901, he was ordained priest. Ordained an elder February 25, 1906. He died December 14, 1911. Married Miss Mary E. Taylor, with whom he lived happily for twenty-six years. A loving wife and an adopted daughter live to mourn. Funeral at Presbyterian church; sermon by Elder W. E. Peak. Brother Martin was president of the Martin Coal Company, of Scammon, Kansas, and also of the Scammon Branch, since its organization some seven years ago, and was dearly beloved by all, both within and without the church. He will be missed, but not forgotten.

CARTER.—Charles A. Carter was born June 12, 1866, at Decatur, Macon County, Illinois; was married to Dora Schroeder, December 3, 1908, at Saint Louis, Missouri. To them were born two daughters, and they, with their mother, are left to mourn, as also are his father and three sisters. He and his family came to California for his health. He died March 19, 1912. Funeral March 21; sermon by Elder E. Keeler. He was baptized by Elder English, at Joplin, Missouri.

HUGHES.—Martha Hughes, of Manchester, England, died December 28, 1911; was born August 8, 1844; baptized September 16, 1876. Also her husband, Elder Thomas Hughes, of Manchester, England, died February 13, 1912; was born October 13, 1827; baptized September 17, 1876. This brother and sister had seen much experience in the Utah Church and crossed the plains by wagon.

THOMAS.—Joseph E. Thomas was born at Brigham City, Utah, February 27, 1866; died at his home in Malad, Idaho, March 27, 1912, aged 46 years, 1 month. Said brother was baptized into the Reorganized Church May 4, 1879, by John Lewis. Was married to Margeret Caroline Donoveil, July 22, 1912. He leaves to mourn, a widow and three children, three brother and three sisters. The funeral service was from the home, March 31, Elias Richards in charge; sermon by A. M. Chase. A good brother has gone to his rest.

GANOE.—O. D. Ganoë passed away at his home in Frankfort, Wisconsin, March 19, 1912, of heart trouble. He was born in 1851; he has been a member of the church for eighteen years; a true and faithful Saint has passed to his reward. Sermon by S. E. Livingston. A large concourse of friends and relatives were present to pay their respects to a good man and a respected citizen.

SMITH.—At Indian River, Maine, on March 23, of indigestion, Sister Esther Smith died quite suddenly, being seriously ill but a few hours. Sister Smith was born February 10, 1842, and was baptized April 5, 1895, by Elder U. W. Greene. She has lived a consistent and faithful Christian life. We feel that we can safely say that she has gone to her rest in the paradise of God. Funeral services at her late residence, Elder U. M. Kelley making a few remarks regarding the hope of the gospel.

HARRIS.—Elsie E. Russell was born January 5, 1878, near Bennett, Cedar County, Iowa. In early childhood she moved with her parents to Grinnell, Iowa, where she spent the greater part of her life. In 1906 she went with her mother to Colorado Springs, Colorado. Was married to Don A. Harris on June 12, 1907. Passed away at her home on March 29, 1912, the immediate cause of her death being pneumonia. Besides two baby boys, she leaves a husband, an aged mother, two sisters, and three brothers to share in the sorrow occasioned by her parting. She was baptized into the church when sixteen years of age and has been a devoted and conscientious member all her life. Before the hour of departure came she received the testimony from God that her life was acceptable and that she was recognized as his child. Elsie was not a woman who sought to excel in what many might regard as the great things of life, but ever sought the blessing of God upon the little things undertaken by her. To those who really knew her, her life was a continual benediction. Services were in charge of Elder J. D. Curtis; interment in the Evergreen Cemetery, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

CORNISH.—Sister Lucretia J. Cornish was born April 14, 1836, at Earl Town, Plimpton, Ontario, and moved to Lakeport, Michigan, with her parents when two years of age. Was married to Urius O'Camb February 20, 1856; to them were born eight children; two survive. Her husband having died, she joined the Reorganized Church, baptized by Elder J. J. Cornish, September 6, 1881, and was married to John Cornish, sr. (father of J. J. Cornish), February 20, 1888, who also preceded her to rest. She passed away suddenly at her home near Chippewa Station, Michigan, March 23, 1912. She was a faithful wife; her faith was strong. She leaves of her immediate relatives to mourn, two daughters, Mrs. Louise Gamble, Mrs. Ida Cornish; two sisters, Mrs. A. E. Moyer, Mrs. S. E. Rhoades; one brother, L. D. Whitford; seven grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Funeral services conducted by Priest John Burgett, at the Saints' church at Bass Lake; laid to rest in the Lake Cemetery.

RICHNER.—Sister G. F. Richner was born at Bucklin, Missouri, April 4, 1890; baptized in the fall of 1901; married to G. F. Richner February 24, 1907; died at Jacksonville, Florida, March 29, 1912, after an illness of seventeen weeks. Sermon by Elder Youmans at residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Harlow, at De Queen, Arkansas. Interment in the Redmens Cemetery.

GLOVER.—Ruby Leona Glover was born April 20, 1903, near Cando, North Dakota; died March 10, 1912, near Geli-shone, Alberta, Canada, and was interred in the Geli-shone Cemetery. She being the granddaughter of Brother and Sister Albert Sims, they had been visiting with their grandparents for some time. She and her mother and sister were baptized into the church by J. L. Mortimore January 30, 1912. She has gone and left us to mourn, but what is our loss is her gain, for the good Master knoweth all things.

EVANS.—Edward R. Evans was born in Myrther Tidville Wales, February 6, 1837; united with the church when a boy; married Jennette Phillips in Saint Louis, Missouri, July 16, 1859; to this union were born twelve children, five having preceded him. Died at Boone, Iowa, April 9, 1912, leaving a wife, five daughters, three sons, one adopted son, fourteen grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, one brother and two sisters. Funeral services at Lucas, Iowa. Sermon by Elder John R. Evans, assisted by Elder John J. Watkins.

BRAZIL.—Sister Martha Rebekah Brazil, wife of Brother Charles Brazil, died March 23, 1912. Her husband and seven children survive her. A newborn infant boy of only a few hours passed away only a few hours after her death, and was buried in the same casket. She was baptized by Elder John Harp in 1902 and has continued a firm believer in the angel's message ever since. She was born in Afton, Iowa, September 5, 1877, and is the daughter of Kale and Mary Ridgeway. The father, though very aged, survives her.

NOT AN ADMISSION.

On the day in which the conference sustained the leading quorums of the church a motion to sustain President Joseph Smith as prophet, seer, and revelator was presented and prevailed. Brother Joseph R. Lambert of the patriarchal order was not present, being prevented by illness from taking part in the business deliberations. On the day following at an appropriate time he rose in his place and securing recognition from the presiding officer made a statement as follows:

"I was not present yesterday when President Joseph Smith was sustained as prophet, seer, and revelator. For some years past the First Presidency has been sustained as a quorum. You may know, or you may not, that there is a class of minds in the church who claim that no one can be a seer unless he is in possession of the Urim and Thummim. I, myself, have received a letter from one of our high priests setting forth this claim, and also stating that he had a letter from President Joseph Smith in which he denied ever having claimed to be a seer. Now that the word seer is again used in sustaining the President of the church, and we may be required to defend the record, it seems to be an opportune time to ask for light to be thrown on the situation. This is my purpose in making this statement."

No further notice was taken of the statement of Brother Lambert, neither on that day or the closing day of the conference, President Joseph Smith not choosing to introduce a matter that might result in prolonged discussion, not desirable so near the close of the session.

In order that President Joseph Smith may be properly represented he here presents an extract from a letter written in 1910 and his reply thereto:

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, June 29, 1910.

To begin with, the church claims to have a seer in it at this time. I have been unable to find one in the church. I find that we have no translator as provided in Doctrine and Covenants section 104, paragraph 42. As I see it, no man can be a seer unless he possesses the Urim and Thummim. I do not believe in claiming to have what we have not.

... Now if you can give me any light on the subject of a seer, being in the church at this time, I would be pleased to get it.

President Smith's reply, dated July 5, 1910, is as follows:

It would seem useless for me to express any opinion or make any argument against your positive assertion of your understanding of what a seer is, and that it necessarily requires a man to be in possession of the Urim and Thummim to constitute him a seer.

I understand, that every man possessing the prophetic gift is more or less a seer, foreseeing what is to transpire and being able to warn against or to direct attention to. Joseph Smith continued to be a seer long after he surrendered the Urim and Thummim. I do not understand that the word "translator" necessarily applied to Joseph Smith's successor. The clause to which you refer in section 42 [104:42] seems to be direct, stating that Joseph Smith should be called the translator. He certainly was that up to the time of his death. If the terms, "seer and translator," necessarily require a man to be in possession of the Urim and Thummim can it be said justly, that the church as a whole or any member or members in it are in fault, that the church does not possess the Urim and Thummim, by some of its members, when it certainly lies within the province of Christ as a church builder, to endow some individuals with the requisite qualification, to wit, the Urim and Thummim. The church as a body has not to my knowledge ever declared by revelation,* that any man in it was a seer and translator. Individual preachers may have made such statements, the same as you have made statements in preaching of your specific belief for which you have not assumed that the church was responsible as a body.

We presume that other members of the High Priests' Quorum beside the one who informed Brother Lambert of the supposed admission of President Joseph Smith that he was not a seer, had been informed in a similar way. If such is the case their attention is called to these extracts for the purpose of showing that President Joseph Smith made no such admission as it was stated he had. The time Brother Lambert presented this matter President Smith did not at once recall having had any conversation or correspondence with any of the high priests upon the topic referred to; but in conversation with Brother Lambert subsequent to the ad-journalment of conference he learned who had made the statement, and at once looked up his correspondence, the result of which is here given.

AN ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AT THE CLOSING OF CONFERENCE.

Brother President: I appreciate the privilege of being permitted to address you, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour and the strong interest which has been shown in the labors of the conference.

I foresee for the year an increase of activity and opportunity, and those in the missionary field will meet the opposition which they have met in places with a renewed energy, and I am sorry to add, increased virulence, if it is possible.

We have had no reason in the last year (I am speaking now of those who have general supervision) to find fault with the efforts which have been made to defend the faith. Especially is this true against the opposition which has been started under what has been known as the Anti-Mormon Religious Association, of which one Hans P. Frees is now the moving spirit, and the secretary located somewhere in Kentucky, by the name of R. B. Neal. He is a representative of what is called the Christian organization, and under his auspices R. E. Grant has been moving in the Canadas and in Oklahoma.

The activity of the eldership during the last year has brought its reward. The number baptized shows an increased desire upon the part of many to hear, and their willingness to obey when they have heard the message which we have to bear. I have taken personal interest, so far as it was possible for me to do, in what the eldership have been doing, and my letters to those who have been in the field and who have written me, I presume will bear me witness to this statement which I now make to you. I have felt keenly the opposition which you have been meeting, and I have been pleased with the manly, Christlike spirit which I was made to understand characterized the defenders of the faith. Men who make the profession that we do can not afford to be unkind. We can not afford to be unclean in either body or language. We can not afford to show a perverse, malignant spirit, however earnest we may be in our declamation. For a body of men, composed as this body is, of such great diversity of organism, the unity which finally prevails to a large extent is remarkable; and it shows conclusively that notwithstanding how strong the opposition, in our representation we are not extremely selfish so far as our own opinions may be concerned. Willing that others have their say, we have our own, and when the general cause is conserved we are a unit.

So far as I have been able, under the circumstances, I have tried to labor with my associates and take cognizance of what has been done. I have not spoken much since Thanksgiving Day. I have heard of a good deal of discussion going on in regard to many things, and especially in regard to cooperation and the Order of Enoch. I desire to call your attention to this fact, that the moneys which find their way into the general treasury under the care of the Bishopric come from the great mass of the church by voluntary contributions by individuals under what they believe to be their duty in the law of Christ, by which we profess to be governed. It may not have occurred to you, though I think it should have done and it may have done, that the church has no means of ascertaining absolutely what may be the amount with which the work can be carried on during the year, except from the statement which may be made from the Bishop and his accounts of what may be on hand. And the general expectation (our hope and faith also) is that the income shall be as large according to the necessities of the work, as it has been in the past.

If I remember the statement of the aggregate amount received by the Bishop this year, it was something—a trifle over three hundred thousand dollars. Am I right in my recollection? If so, that represents about five dollars per member of the entire membership of sixty-five thousand. It is fair to presume that there are represented in this sixty-five thousand, about thirteen thousand heads of families, supposed to be bread winners. Five dollars each seems to be a small amount from the membership to find its way into the treasury for general uses. But this does not represent all the moneys that the membership have paid out, for there have been the constant demands of their home work, for the Sunday school work, for the Zion's Religio work; demands for donations to the charitable works of the church taken from time to time, including the college, which has taken the means from people as they were pleased to give. How much the aggregate would be I do not know; but I presume that it would approximate nearly as much as has found its way into the general coffers of the church. It may not be so much.

I have heard echoes of some of the questions which have been asked touching the Order of Enoch and cooperation, and among them, I have heard such remarks as these: Why do not the leaders of the church do something? Why do not the leading men of the church go ahead?

I have wondered whether or not I was one of the leaders of the church—the leading minds and men of the church, and I have wondered wherein I lacked of failing to go ahead—wherein I lacked in doing something. The Presidency, so far as I understood the matter, has not taken any ground against cooperation. I have not. I have always been in favor of cooperation—proper cooperation. I have not entered into the wild schemes of some who have sought my approval and influence; but I have wondered why, when they were finding fault, supposedly, with what they were pleased to term the leading men of the church, they did not themselves do something in the Order of Enoch, the institution organized in good faith, under what we believe to be the word of God, accepted and acted upon as such.

I know of a family (about the average family) who turned into the coffers of the Order of Enoch one hundred dollars, to be used by them at their discretion, without direction or restriction as to its use. If one thousand persons out of the thirteen thousand heads of families, making up the total sum of sixty-five thousand in membership, would do as this family has done (and they were compelled to do it by saving and by sacrificing some of those things which seemed to be necessary) that would put one hundred thousand dollars into the coffers of the Order of Enoch to be used in its benevolent transactions for the help of those who can not help themselves, and ought not to interfere with those who desire to enter into cooperative organization, managed and controlled by themselves.

Why criticize men who are doing the best they know how under their understanding of the word of God? Why stand and find fault with those who are striving earnestly to do what they believe to be right? And why, in common honesty and decency, bring men who are called the leading minds or leading men of the church into supposed contumely under the covert charge that they are not doing anything? Why do it? Why not take up the work that may be opened for you to do? Why do irresponsible men assume to make such (I was going to call them zealots, but I better not do that) make such references to leading minds and leading men without singling them out and stating who they are, and what it is that they are charged with not doing, or what they are charged with doing that is contrary to the good of the people? Why not do that? I am tired of hearing these covert assaults without foundation. I should be much pleased to see men go ahead and accomplish something, for the law itself provides for just such things as that. Men shall of themselves seek to bring to pass much righteousness, for the power is in them, and he that waiteth to be commanded in all things is a slothful servant, and what shall be his reward? A slothful servant's reward.

Now you can easily see how easy it would be for a number of people who are anxious for the Order of Enoch, to proceed to so put themselves in connection with the order so that the order itself could move forward and accomplish something. But, my dear brethren, if you have any men among you who can bore auger holes with a gimlet I wish you would give me their names and let me know where they live. I have been in public contact with the world for over fifty-two years, and this number of years I have been in the service of the church, and I never have found a man yet who could bore an auger hole with a gimlet; but I have seen plenty of men who could bore plenty of holes and let in light through gimlet holes. Plenty of them.

We have mechanics that can bore with a machine a square hole. We have mechanics that can do a great many things; but we have not many that can accomplish making bricks without mud or straw, but some of us seem to be expected to go out and accomplish the making of a tale of bricks when we have no place to garner the straw which may enter into the composition of the tale of bricks which we are to furnish. The Israelites of old, you remember, were obliged in making their bricks to gather the straw that entered into the manufacture of them at that time, from an almost barren field, and do you expect us to continue the work in barren fields and all the time being found fault with, and charged with not going forward, and covert intimations made concerning us in the question, Why do not the leading men of the church do something?

I once heard the remark that thousands of men were waiting, thousands of people were waiting to see something done. I do not know who they may be. But have they done anything themselves to accomplish what they may desire? Have they untied the hands, in accordance with the revelations of God as we have them, of those that were leading them? Have they done that?

We have been doing well, but now do you not know, brethren, that great as the Bishop's faith may be, great as may be his anticipations of what means may be at his command, subject to the demand of the interests of the church, do you know that he can not tell from month to month what the ensuing month may be? And if we who are here who are largely interested in the great work which is going on, sow our distrust upon the efforts that may be made from time to time for the accomplishment of the work that we desire to see done, how long will it take us to reach up to the height of our ambition and find the things that we need accomplish?

We need cooperation, and we need to stand in that cooperation shoulder to shoulder with men of business, with men of means, with poor men, with laboring men, every class of men, from one to the other, of every place, ought to stand together. There ought not to be any insinuation or any intimation or any faultfinding when we go out into our fields of work, after we have met and sustained each other as we have done in this connection, and sow distrust by quiet, sinister remarks concerning this man or that man. Why do we not exercise for each other the confidence that we demand to be placed in ourselves? How can I trust a man who shows a distrust to me? In my association with them I am absolutely compelled to labor in justice to myself and to them under the divine clemency of almighty God. How can I, with the gift of discernment in me, stand side by side with men of whom I know they would desert under peculiar circumstances? How could I do it? And yet, my dear brethren, I have stood face to face with difficulties which required me to know the men by whom I was surrounded and with whom I was associated, and I have been hurt to the quick, knowing that those who have been working with us and with whom I have been associated are frequently found covertly finding fault with us. I am sorry. Let us have done with it. Let us, if we cooperate at all, let us have that confidence, let us have confidence, LET US HAVE CONFIDENCE. That is one thing that we need.

And you may say, "Well, how can we have confidence? How can we?" I will tell you one way that we can have confidence; that is to fill the measure of our own labor just as fairly and as well as we can, and keep our thoughts busy upon it, and let the mistakes of the past that we so much deplore, and which have had their depressing effect over our past, pass into the great sea of forgetfulness, and remember only the bright spots and the good things among our fellows, the things by which we can love, esteem them; those things according to the declaration of the apostle, that are of good report, those things that are lovely and of good report. Let us think upon these things. Do you not know that that is a part of our faith? Let us forget the hurts that have come to us, and labor together, labor together, stand together, understanding things as fairly as we can together. Wherein we differ let that difference be an earnest and honest one, but with due respect to every man of whom we should feel an assurance that he is just as honest, just as earnest, just as upright as we, desiring to serve God and find as good a reward at the end of the commission as ourselves. I like to labor with such men as that. I like to know where they are. I like to feel the clasp of their hand. I know when I feel it they are also willing that other men shall have the same right, the regard, and the esteem of others that they themselves wished and hoped for themselves.

Now I will not burden you. I feel to bid you godspeed in the great work in which we are engaged. And as we stand together on general grounds let us forget, and let us above all things not sow this spirit of dissension and distrust among those by whom we are surrounded, of our associates wherever they may be, and whatever calling they may fill in the church.

I thank you for the consideration that you have shown me in the times that are past. I may not merit it long. Age is creeping along, and I am getting to be an old man. I have not quit trying to grow old gracefully. I am getting along well so far as the growing old is concerned, but the grace is another thing. I feel an assurance of good for the coming year. May the blessing and peace of God abide with these elders the coming year, is my prayer. Amen.

ORDER OF ENOCH MEETING.

The members of the United Order of Enoch held their annual business meeting Saturday in the basement of the stone church. A board of directors was elected for the ensuing year. Frederick M. Smith and D. T. Reece, who were among last year's board of directors, resigned, and the election of the board for this year resulted as follows: E. L. Kelley, chairman; George E. Harrington, B. J. Scott, Richard Bullard, George H. Hilliard, W. B. Kelley, Ellis Short, W. R. Dexter, M. H. Siegfried, J. T. Curtis, A. H. Parsons, and D. J. Krahl. The members elected entirely new were Richard Bullard and M. H. Siegfried.

The board of directors will meet at some time soon which is yet to be determined and elect officers of the organization for the ensuing year.—Independence Examiner.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

HERALDS WANTED.—HERALDS for July, 1903, and April and November, 1904, are desired by Mrs. D. Campbell, Wallaceburg, Ontario. Will those who have such communicate with her?

FIRESIDE TALKS.—The price of No. 213a, Fireside Talks with Our Boys, has been raised from 30 cents to 50 cents. Saints should make this correction in their catalogue.

Example is more powerful than precept; whereof you reprove another be unblamable yourself.—George Washington.

THE FALLING AWAY FROM PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.—PART 2.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

LEGAL PROPERTY.

Legal property has troubled Christians at different times in history; it troubled the Carpocrates, Anabaptists, etc.; but what is legal property? It is, that if a man earns anything, that thing shall be his; and if he earns and saves, and invests his savings, he becomes the owner of the increase. See also Matthew 25: 14-30.

Munzer and his associates tried persuasion in propagating their doctrines, but made poor headway. Later, "In 1525, they put themselves at the head of a numerous army, and declared war against all laws, governments, and magistrates of every kind, under the chimerical pretext that Christ himself was now to take the reins of all governments into his hands: but this seditious crowd was routed and dispersed by the elector of Saxony and other princes, and Munzer, their leader, was put to death."

This is the natural end of a community plan that sets aside legal restraints; they thus become a law unto themselves, and led by a self-appointed boss who becomes bigger than the state, claiming to be acting in Christ's stead, leading the people headlong to destruction. These men held that the church was too good to live under the restraints of the civil magistracy, and civil law, and these were also the views held by some primitive Christians and ancient Jews. That is safe advice which says: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

Marcion taught nearly the same on marriage. He taught "that the earth was created by the Demiurge, (an inferior god) "so they abstained from marriage because they were unwilling to people the world of which the Demiurge was the maker." See Clement, page 162.

Those heretics which forbade marriage were of four different sects, and gave as a reason for so doing, that marriage was not ordained of God, but was the work of the Devil, or some inferior god. The Carpocrates and Epiphanius taught that women shall be "held in common," see Clement, pages 186, 187, thus doing away with a marriage contract; and these would quote Matthew 5: 42 to prove their theory, viz, "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn thou not away." See Clement, page 187, note 1, and page 186, note 5. These Christians believed in "personal liberty" to the limit, or the barnyard morality, not subject to any law, because law, they said, created injustice, but each subject only to their individual freedom. The home with such people would soon disappear and become a boarding house, and the children the property of the church. The Carpocrates "were guilty of the most horrible excesses at their meetings; these excesses appear to have brought the Christian Agapé (the love feast) into disrepute, and to have occasioned their discontinuance." (See ibid., page 187.)

Paul says, "Marriage is honorable in all and the bed undefiled; but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge."—Hebrews 13: 4.

The Marcionites "ascribe marriage to the Demiurge," and the Tatians "ascribe it to the Devil." See Clement, page 269. And for these reasons they forbade marriage. Their doctrine, if carried out, would soon exterminate the race. But the Christians, called Carpocrates, went to the other extreme, and taught that men and women should run loose, without civil restraint, and have the same liberty that the birds and cattle have. The Marcionites believed in spiritual wifery, and in this respect got ahead of Brigham Young. Their spiritual wife, ceremony is in Eusebius, page 127.

There were other Christians that condemned marriage under certain conditions. Paul says: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times (later on) some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils . . . forbidding to marry."—1 Timothy 4: 1-3. "Forbidding to marry" then is one of the marks of the apostasy. These sects were all Christians; remember, no matter what they taught or how they repudiated each other. Some Christians held that law not only created property, but also created sin. See Clement, page 187, note 1. And these quoted Paul to prove it, viz: "I had not known sin but by the law," see Romans 7: 7; so they argued, no law, no sin; better have no law then!

The doctrine of the resurrection, Christ's nature, and the family relation, were some of the rocks upon which the church split in the second century, and which caused great controversies among the leading preachers. What the apostles had written on these subjects, and their warnings against these very heresies, amounted to nothing, because some of those reformers in the second and third centuries outgrew the apostles' doctrine, like children outgrow their clothes, and such men set their own opinions and authority above the apostles. This is what certain early church writers tell us, including Clement, Tertullian, and Eusebius.

Justin Martyr twice from A. D. 142 to A. D. 145, repudiated Marcion in his noted apologies to the Roman emperor and senate, in which he compares Marcion to a church wolf destroying the churches, and Marcion was later called the wolf of Pontus.

Some of these reformers denied Christ's divinity; others denied his humanity, yet others denied both. Some forbade marriage, others believed more in marriage, or women, than anything else; like some Mormons who declare that polygamy is the best part of their religion, or more wives, more glory, and this too, is said to be a new covenant. Go this way gentlemen, to your exaltation, clear past the angels and the gods to the polygamist Elysian fields.

Four primitive Christian sects, viz, Tatians, Marcionites, Saturnians, and Diatessians, were as far apart as the poles on the marriage relation to the Utah Mormons. Those primitive Christian sects abstained from marriage, because it was nothing but corruption and fornication. See Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, page 154. They held that the Devil, or the Demiurge instituted marriage, and that married people were serving the Devil, or the evil powers. But the Mormons place marriage at the head of the list of human attainments, "That marriage relations exist and extend throughout eternity, and without it no man can obtain an exaltation in the celestial kingdom of God." See life of Brigham Young, by E. W. Tullidge, page 395. "And if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned." "Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise according to mine appointment, and he or she shall commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies, and if they commit no murder, wherein they shed innocent blood—yet shall come forth in the first resurrection, and enter their exaltation." See Utah Book of Covenants 132: 26, thus making marriage a vital essential to exaltation. With Mormons it is, Marry or be damned, but with the Marcionites, it is, You'll be damned if you marry.

Some ancients baptized three times; some taught all things common, women too; some had secret signs of membership; others would mark the ears, or brand them with a hot iron; some denied the future resurrection; others taught that the resurrection was the coming forth of a third substance; other preachers taught that baptism (theirs) was itself the resurrection; some Christians taught blood atonement, or that certain sins committed after baptism could only be forgiven by the shedding of the sinner's own blood. See Tertullian, page 168. So that Brigham Young is but following an old time heresy in teaching human blood atonement. Many Christians in the second century, like Brigham, denied the miraculous conception of Jesus; some denied Christ's humanity altogether; others denied his divinity, while others denied both. These last said that Christ was but a phantom. Some Christians were polygamists, or worse, a community of women, while other Christians were repudiating their wives to follow Marcion, who taught that a married life was wrong, that such was serving the Devil; some deified Adam, and these blazed the way for Brigham in Adam worship, but in those days the heathens deified civil rulers, or humanity. See Eusebius, page 39, and Tertullian, page 55.

Tertullian points out in his works how the Christians of his time, (or what was then called the heretics), borrowed doctrines and customs from the heathens; in fact, according to Tertullian, the heathen philosophers were the ancestors of Christian heretics. See Tertullian, page 235. Each of these Christian heretics had a following. Some Jews brought Moses and the law, and also Jewish allegory into the church with them; and some pagan converts brought Plato, Pythagoras, and Greek philosophy with them into the church from paganism, and the more able men in the church, in the last half of the second century, were busy denouncing each other for heresy, and the church became alarmed to find that its chief men were at variance among themselves, and pagans taking advantage of the situation, pointed out that Christianity contradicted itself and could not be divine. Clement, of Alexandria, answered in a way to give the church and Christianity away, by saying that Judaism and philosophy were divided too! See Clement, page 127.

Fleetwood, in his Life of Christ, in commenting on the condition of the church in this century when the above heresies were vexing it, says: "The Christian world of this period was fast forgetting those apostolic cautions and were drifting away into a darkness that might be felt." See page 636.

This drifting away into a darkness that might be felt, was the "falling away," the apostasy; the one body and one spirit doctrine of Paul was now a thing of the past; church leaders were now writing apologies in their own defense, and seeking public recognition for themselves, in which they would brand some other Christians with Wolf, wolf.

THE ORTHODOX CHURCHES.

And what were, and are still called the orthodox churches in the second and third centuries, were also departing from the primitive simplicity of Christian rites, worship, and practices; in fact, the Christians by this time seem to have forgotten that the church belonged to God, and was a divine institution, and not subject to human amendments; they overlooked the fact that Christ and the Holy Spirit were sent from heaven as the interpreters of the divine will to man, and that when Christ ascended to the Father, the Holy Spirit was left in charge of church work, to carry on the gospel dispensation, and the churches themselves without divine instruction began to direct the church by decrees, thus putting the Holy Spirit on the retired list, but retained it as a silent partner. The churches began to improve on the work of the apostles, and the Master, seeking wisdom from paganism, instead of seeking divine light as in New Testament times. They forgot Paul's admonition, viz: "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them."—Romans 16: 17.

That is, no change in doctrine, or the rites of the church; what comes hereafter must agree with what went before, or it would be unconstitutional and should be avoided.

Mosheim says: "In this (second century) many unnecessary ceremonies were added to the Christian worship, the introduction of which was extremely offensive to wise and good men." See Second Century, part 2, chapter 4. We see that the Christians of the second century were doing just what Paul had told them not to do in the first century. Additions were made in the direction of paganism, which were offensive to that class of Christians who believed that the church was a divine institution, customs and ceremonies borrowed from paganism, and their introduction into the church helped them to win converts. Some customs the church leaders at this period invented, which helped the preachers to pre-occupy the people's mind with their religion, and thus hold control over them.

The washing of the hands before prayer, for instance, in water placed at the door of the church, was first suggested to the Christians from the act of Pilate, because he washed his hands before delivering Jesus to the Jews; and the putting off the cloak before prayer, and also the stretching out their arms while at prayer, in imitation of our Lord's arms while on the cross; the kneeling in prayer except on the Lord's day, and Easter, those days they prayed standing. This standing prayer was in commemoration of the Lord's resurrection. They also had a custom of praying with their faces towards the east, for which custom the pagans charged the Christians with being sun worshipers. They had a custom of using cheese with the communion bread. See Tertullian, page 9. And of "mixing water with the communion wine," see Justin Martyr's First Apology, page 93, which custom the church of England still maintains; later the western churches began to withhold the wine from the laity, and the Catholic churches still hold to the custom. This mixing water with the communion wine was adopted because, "When our Lord's side was pierced with a lance, there issued out both water and blood." See Justin's First Apology, page 84, note 1. And at the communion service the deacon was appointed to cry aloud in the assembly, "Let no man be at strife with another." See ibid., page 83, note 1. They also practiced the kiss of peace, and from this kissing practice the Christians became scandalized by the pagans. See Clement, page 61.

In those days they commanded the candidate for baptism "to fast for one or two days before baptism." See Apostolic Fathers, part 2, page 174, also Justin's First Apology, page 74. The new convert was then "anointed." See Clement, page 261. "Was anointed with oil," says Tertullian, page 215. "Then a ring was given to the person baptized," ibid., page 215. Then they had the custom of giving "milk mixed with honey to the newly baptized," see Tertullian, page 239, or "milk mixed with sweet wine," see Clement, page 261. Thus additions were made from time to time. Tertullian speaks of reserving a portion of the consecrated bread and "eating it at home before every meal." He also gives a summary of the forms then practiced at the rite of baptism. The candidate, he says, was "plunged into the water three times, in allusion of the three persons in the Trinity," and after baptism the person was "signed with the sign of the cross," and lastly followed "the imposition of hands." See Tertullian, page 215.

We see from this that Tertullian and the church then were Dunkards. This was about the close of the second century; they then, in baptizing plunged the convert three times into the water; the Dunkards have a good claim to antiquity. We see the custom in the second century.

Paul unites the Christian to Christ in his death, burial, and resurrection. The believer has an experience that corresponds to Christ's death, because the sinner "dies to sin." Christ, when dead, was buried, so "we are buried with him"; Christ was raised from the dead, so "we are raised with him." Thus figuratively we follow Christ to the cross and the grave, but how many times was Christ buried, once or three times? If we are buried in baptism three times, and Christ was buried but once, then we are buried twice without Christ. But let us listen to Tertullian again on this subject. "To deal with this matter briefly, I shall begin with baptism. When we are going to enter the water, but a little before, in the presence of the congregation and under the hands of the president, we solemnly profess that we disown the Devil, his pomp, and his angels; hereupon we are thrice immersed, making a somewhat ampler pledge than the Lord has appointed in the gospel." See Antenicene Fathers, volume 3, page 94, quoted in Form of Baptism by Briney, page 113. Thus Tertullian frankly admits that Christ did not authorize triune immersion. He knew that it was "a somewhat ampler pledge than Christ has appointed in the gospel."

The difference between Tertullian and the Dunkards now is, that he knew that they then were adding to the teachings of Christ, but the Dunkards now do not seem to understand it that way.

Jerome was born A. D. 331, and died at Bethlehem, A. D. 420. He was a great church man and author. On triune immersion he said: "Many of the things which are observed in the churches by tradition, have usurped to themselves the authority of the written law; such as to immerse the head three times in the bath." See Form of Baptism by Briney, pages 186, 187.

Jerome we see, like Tertullian, knew that triune immersion was an addition to the gospel of Christ, a usurpation. There was no law of Christ for it in Jerome's age. If there is any divine authority for it now, it must have come from heaven since A. D. 400; but notwithstanding this the "ancients carefully observed this triune immersion as being so expressive a ceremony of the three persons in the Godhead: inasmuch that by canon's apostolical, either bishop or presbyter, who baptized without it, was deposed from the ministry." See Justin's First Apology, page 75, note 1.

So we see how triune immersion usurped the authority of the "written law." It was by making decrees they thus made it binding on the ministers to baptize three times, and the custom was adopted by the churches because it was so expressive a ceremony of the three persons in the Godhead. "Though this triune immersion, not being of absolute necessity, was laid aside in Spain by the church, that they might not seem to gratify the Arians who made use of it to denote the Persons in the Trinity, to be three distinct substances, and gloried that the Catholics used it to denote the same." See note 1 in Justin's First Apology, page 75. So we see the church made triune immersion binding, and then when the Arians, who disagreed with them on the Trinity, used it as an argument against them, then the church set it aside! This the church can do, Bishop Kenrick says, because Christ gave the church the binding and loosing power. See Kenrick on baptism, page 172. So the church reversed itself on triune immersion. Now when was it infallible? when triune immersion was adopted, or when it turned its back against it?

Jerome says that triune immersion, and many other customs, had then "usurped" to themselves the authority of the written law, and we see that the ministry were made by decrees to observe that custom, or off came their official heads, so that the church made and unmade the gospel plan according to orders from itself, instead of remaining steadfast to the primitive customs.

Justin, in his First Apology to the Roman emperor and senate, gives an account of the Christian rite of baptism, and the incidents leading up to it in this way.

"As many therefore as are persuaded and believe that what we teach is true, and undertake to conform their lives to our doctrine, are instructed to fast and pray, and entreat God the remission of their past sins, we fasting and praying with them. They are then conducted by us to a place where there is water, and there regenerated in the same manner in which we were regenerated, for they are washed in the name of God the Father and of the Holy Spirit." Then Justin alleges in proof of the necessity of this regeneration. John 3: 3.

Then he goes on, "Since at our first birth we were born without our knowledge or consent, in order that we remain the children of necessity and ignorance, but may become the children of choice and knowledge, and may obtain in the water remission of the sins which we have committed, the name of God the Father and the Lord of the universe is pronounced over him who wishes to be regenerated, and has repented of his sins." See Justin's Writings, pages 63, 64.

From this we see that in Justin's time, the convert believed, was persuaded, repented, and then, and not till then, taken to a place of water and baptized in water, in the name of the Trinity, this new birth by water making them the children of God by choice. The rule here excludes infants, and all that can not repent of their sins.

BAPTISM IN GREEK LITERATURE.

"Alexander, happening to be there at the stormy season and accustomed to trust for the most part to fortune, set forward before the swell subsided, and they marched the whole day in water, baptized as far as the waist." See Form of Baptism, by Briney, page 23. (Italics mine.)

This is Strabo's account of Alexander's travels with the Greek army along a narrow beach, in which they waded waist deep in water the whole day.

Polibius, in writing of the travels of the Roman army led by Tiberius says, when crossing the River Tebia, that "they passed through with difficulty, the foot soldiers baptized as far as to the breast." Ibid., page 32. (Italics mine.)

Both of these armies marched in water, the men splashing one another, one army waist deep, and the other breast deep, both historians say that they were baptized as far as to the breast or baptized as far as to the waist, that is, the part of the body that was submerged in the water was baptized, but that part not submerged though wet by the splashing of the water was not baptized. We will read that over again this way. They marched the whole day sprinkled as far as to the waist or they passed through with difficulty the foot soldiers poured as far as to the breast. How will that do?

Tatius, another writer, says, "We, therefore, shifted our position to the more elevated part of the ship, in order that we might lighten that part of the ship that was baptized." Ibid., page 28.

By reason of the wind this ship leaned over to one side, and thus was baptized too deep to be safe, so they changed their position to the more elevated part of the ship. With these writers we see that the extent of submersion was the extent of baptism.

Of General Interest

A Scientific Calendar.

To the Editor of the Sun—Sir: Recent articles in the press tell of an agitation on foot to reform our calendar so that a given date may always fall on the same day of the week, and it is stated that the principal opposition to the reform is religious. I understand that some convention is to meet this summer in Europe to take the matter under advisement. This religious opposition comes from an entire misconception of Scripture. The change would not violate the fourth commandment, but would on the contrary be a return to ancient Hebrew methods of computing time.

Our present difficulty arises from the fact that there is no common divisor of $365\frac{1}{4}$, $29\frac{1}{2}$ and 7, the approximate lengths of the year, month, and week.

The following would be an ideal calendar: Let there be 18 months of 28 days each (364 days); let each year, month, and week begin on Sunday, "the first day of the week"; let the last day of the year be a dies non; or better, be a double Sabbath of forty-eight hours.

By this arrangement the day of the month in any year would always indicate the day of the week. That is, the tenth day of every month would be the second Tuesday of the month, and if one made an engagement for the 19th of any month one would know that it would fall on Thursday. Let the new month be placed between June and July and thus be the keystone of the arch of months and be named "Liberty" in honor of the people, not of some emperor, as were the last two interpolated months, July and August. Leap year could be provided for by another double Sunday, say in the middle of the year. Such a scientific calendar would be as simple and convenient as the decimal system and would practically be a reversion to the old Jewish calendar.

While the Egyptians named the days of their week, the Jews numbered them only, the first day of the week being always the day after the weekly Sabbath. Fifteen different methods of Sabbath counting are known to have existed during the last 4,000 years, including every day of the week, weeks of different and varying length, from six to ten days, and months of various and varying length.

Sabbath keeping appears in history soon after the Babel confusion among all the scattered nations, and when Israel left Egypt there were five known methods of Sabbath counting. The ancient Hebrew calendar was the nearest approach to a scientific calendar of any of which we have any record.

Over 3,600 years ago the Egyptian astronomers adopted the present week of seven days, wholly disassociated from the lunar and solar cycles. The Christian week is exactly like it except that its first day is Sunday, not Friday; both are as unscientific as possible.

The modern Jewish calendar had its origin, not in the Hebrew age beginning with the exodus under Moses and ending with the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus in the year A. D. 70, but probably about the fourth century of our era, after the Jews had recovered from the shock of the destruction of their capital city and their dispersion and attempted annihilation by Titus. It was not until this comparatively modern date that the present Jewish calendar established their Sabbath on Saturday as a fixed day of the week.

It will surprise many to learn that it has been demonstrated cogently that the day called Sunday by the Egyptians was the creation Sabbath, and kept as such during the patriarchal period until lost in the confusion of tongues at Babel; that during the Hebrew period (Moses to Christ) the Sabbath was not a fixed day of the week, but a movable holy day, changing each year, like our Fourth of July, and that in the Christian era it was changed to a fixed day of the week by Jew and Christian, following the custom of their Roman masters.

The Hebrew calendar was founded upon but improved the ancient Egyptian calendar, from which it was taken. On fleeing from Egypt they changed the beginning of their civil year from the autumnal equinox, September 22, to the vernal equinox, March 21. They retained the thirty day month, but instead of adding five days at the end of the year they added three days at the end of the sixth month and two days at the end of the twelfth month. Seven supplementary days, or one week, were added about every twenty-eight years, to provide for our leap years.

On certain fixed days of the year labor had to be done. These days could therefore never fall on the Sabbath day in any year during the Jewish dispensation, for no servile work was to be done on any Sabbath, while these days were to be devoted to butchering, housecleaning, harvesting, etc. (Exodus 12:3, 5, 6, 24; Leviticus 23:5.) Certain fixed days were required to be Sabbath days, including the first, eighth, and fifteenth days of Abib (first month), and the fourth, fifth and twelfth days of Sivan (third month). The fixed days for labor and rest indicated in the Bible enable us to construct a Jewish calendar. Moses placed the showbread on the tables the first day of the second year (Exodus 40:17, 22, 23). This was to be done on every Sabbath day (Leviticus 24:8), and the first day of every eighth month is a Sabbath (Leviticus 23:24), that is, the Sabbaths were on fixed days of the year, not on a fixed day of the week.

Mr. Gamble has demonstrated this fact beyond any controversy, and his book and its chart have been submitted to the most scientific Jewish, Protestant, and Catholic scholars and divines, and all who were skeptical at first finally confirmed his determination, that is, the first day of every week of every year was a Sabbath and every eighth day thereafter was a Sabbath. This very desirable arrangement was accomplished by making the Pentecost (fiftieth day after Abib 15, the Passover) a double Sabbath, or rather a Sabbath of forty-eight hours in length, and then starting a new week, on a new day, thus skipping a day and making fifty-two weeks equal 365 instead of 364 days.

We learn from Leviticus 23:15, 16, 21, that the forty-ninth day after the Passover was a Sabbath. So was the fiftieth day, Pentecost, a "holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein: it shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations."

This fact of a double Sabbath has been overlooked or misunderstood for centuries.

It is well known that every seventh year was a Sabbath year, when the land had rest (Leviticus 25:2-7), but on the forty-ninth and fiftieth years the land had a double Sabbath year—or a two years rest—and on the fiftieth year, the jubilee year, every alienated inheritance reverted to the heirs (Leviticus 25:8-11; 20-22). The analogy between the jubilee or fiftieth year and Pentecost, the fiftieth day, and the double Sabbath and the double Sabbath rest years is complete; and it seems strange that the plain reading of Leviticus 23:15, 16, 21, did not for so long a time reveal the fact that both the forty-ninth and fiftieth days after the Passover constituted a single elongated Sabbath.

Space can not properly be taken to demonstrate fully the following facts:

Dion Cassius (A. D. 155-240) says that the Jews left Egypt on Saturday, the day after the Egyptian Sabbath, or "day of assembly," and we know from Numbers 23: 3, that this departure was on Abib 15.

The first Pentecost (the fiftieth day thereafter) would thus come on the Egyptian Sunday, and the fact of the double Sabbath at Pentecost and the fixing of the Sabbath as the first day of each year would make the Jewish Sabbath come on each day of the modern week in every seven years.

That is, during the first year after the first Pentecost the Sabbaths would fall on Sundays, if the present method of naming days had prevailed; the next year on Mondays, and so on. Every seventh year it would again be on Sunday, and in 1680 years (7x240) it would be on Saturday, i. e., according to the modern reckoning the Sabbath would be on Saturday at the time of the crucifixion. It will be remembered that the Sabbath was never called "Saturday," but the "seventh day."

During the first year, after the first Pentecost (double Sabbath) after the crucifixion, the Christian Sunday and the Jewish Sabbath would coincide.

For two centuries the Christians and Jews with their seven day week and the Romans with their eight day week were struggling for supremacy.

The exact time when the Jews adopted their modern calendar, placing the Sabbath on Saturday as a fixed day of the week and not on fixed days of the year, is uncertain. Some place it in the second century; some place it at a later date (Jewish Enc.) It is well known that the Roman rest day was one day in eight; that Constantine, the first Christian emperor, first legalized the Christian Sabbath in the fourth century when he put it on an equality with the pagan nundinæ. Up to the time of Theodosius the Great, the two week methods were on an equal footing, and the Roman calendars represented both by placing in parallel columns the eight nundinal letters A-H and the seven week letters A-G. Theodosius finally abrogated the Roman week in the fourth century.

It is a noticeable fact that according to the accepted chronology there were just 1,680 years between the Exodus and the Resurrection. One thousand six hundred and eighty divided by 7 gives 240, hence there were 240 septenary revolutions, and under the Jewish system each day of the Egyptian week with its days named would have been called a sabbath day 240 times. The Jews left Egypt on Saturday, the day upon which Pharaoh issued the "emancipation proclamation" through Moses to the Israelites. (Dion Cassius.)

After 1,680 years we find the Sabbath again on Saturday. The death by crucifixion was at 3 o'clock on Friday, the very day and hour on which the blood was placed on the doorposts of Egypt; and after remaining in the tomb over the Sabbath ("the feast of the Passover"), as Moses had remained in the mountain with God, the Savior returned on the Sunday and announced a new Sabbath, as Moses had done before him. The analogy is striking.

After the destruction of Jerusalem in the year 70, the scattering of the weak Christian church, the annihilation of the Jewish nation and the attempted annihilation of the Jewish race, it is not surprising that the scattered Christians should gradually, if not unconsciously, have given up the celebration of the Lord's Day on fixed days of the year and conformed to the customs of the peoples with whom they mingled in celebrating a fixed week day, which they held in commemoration of the Resurrection, the great event in Christian theology.

The persecution of the Christians by the Romans, begun under Nero, continued through many generations; and unfortunately the persecutions of the Jews continued for centuries thereafter, even to this day, not at the hands of the Romans, but of Christians who have forgotten the teachings of the humble Nazarene and the forgiving character of the early martyrs in the primitive church. It is no wonder then that during these trying times the Jews thought more of preserving their lives than of preserving their calendars, that were in the custody of the priests, and that they too after a few centuries unwittingly adopted a fixed weekly Sabbath, forgetting the scientific Sabbath of their fathers.

All students of Jewish theology know that for centuries the first day of the year and consequently the first Sabbath of the year was determined by the priests by observation of the new springtime moon, and that as soon as seen signal fires telegraphed the hour to all parts of Palestine. When the Samaritans from sheer malevolence interfered with these signals by false fires swift messengers were substituted. After the destruction of the city this method of determining the new year was necessarily abolished, and in the course of time more exact astronomy took the place of visual lunar observation; and it was not until after some centuries of dispersion that the Jews gathered themselves together, re-established their ordinances and took a seven day week, forgetting the double Sabbath at Pentecost, and conformed to the Christian method of reckoning time, which in turn had therefore followed in the suite of the eight day fixed week of the Romans.

Of all the calendars, ancient and modern, none is so nearly scientific as that of the ancient Hebrews, and all civilized nations have appreciated the benefits, indeed the absolute necessity, of the Hebrew Sabbaths. Without doubt one day's rest in seven meets the requirements of man, as it meets the requirements of God. In the old Jewish theocracy church and state were one, and the civil and religious laws emanated from the same source.

The thoughts suggested in this letter may startle some; they have startled others. But as already stated, no scientific theologian has doubted Doctor Gamble's demonstration of this argument, after examining it thoroughly.

In reforming the calendar let us reform it scientifically. There can be no improvement upon the old Jewish method except the introduction of a thirteenth month, and let the keystone month of a perfect calendar be named "Liberty."

This change by adding a thirteenth month would have been no particular advantage to the old Hebrews, for they numbered their days, but inasmuch as we have had fixed upon us the old Egyptian method of naming days a simply perfect calendar could be devised as indicated in this letter; and when Jews and Christians alike thoroughly understand the old Jewish method of determining the Sabbath days there can be no religious scruples on the part of either Jew or Gentile in making that change. The same God that fixed a rest day one day in seven also made 365, not 364, days in the year, but he provided for this difference by giving to Moses a scientific method of fixing the day. It was left to the ignorance of His children through long centuries of persecution to forget exact scientific methods and perpetuate their unholy differences by the celebration of different holy days.—Alexander S. Bacon, New York, July 1.

The Clergy in the Wrong Box.

A symbol of all progress is the act of walking—first one foot and then the other. We proceed by alternation of emphasis. We are intent now on this truth, now on that. Thus there is always a neglected truth, and the advance of man consists in bringing it up to an equality with the present interest, and swinging it beyond.

At present, the emphasis in religion is on the side of philanthropy. The church is perpetually busy doing good. Beside the sanctuary stands the parish house, and in this building are carried on all manner of beneficent undertakings. The yearbooks of the active parishes are filled with accounts of these activities, page on page, accompanied by pictures of boys who are learning to use saws and hammers and to set type, and of girls who are learning to cook and to sew. The church maintains a dispensary and a laundry. It has a nursery, a kindergarten, a library, a summer camp, and a boat club.

These things are excellent, but they are not the proper business of the clergy.

In all large cities large parishes are employing increasing number of assistant ministers for the purpose of keeping this philanthropic machinery in motion. Young men come out of theological schools, where they have been taught how to teach religion, to preach the gospel, and to minister to the soul, and are set at tasks which could be done as well by any intelligent layman. These men ought to be occupied with their specialty. They ought to be preaching in mission fields and bringing religion along with civilization into new settlements. They ought to be doing the pioneer service of evangelization. The proportion of energy is altogether out of balance when these young men, in their freshness of spiritual enthusiasm, are assigned to the direction of boys' clubs, the management of reading rooms, and the providing of parochial entertainment. What these parishes need is not a larger staff of clergymen, but a larger company of active laity—employed, if necessary—to do the institutional work. The proper work of the minister is inspirational.

The minister is a specialist, and we look to him for the things which pertain to his specialty. We are jealous of the distractions which tempt him away from his supreme service to the community into undertakings which other people can do quite as well or better. We would have our physician absolutely devoted to the study and practice of medicine. We wish him to read the books of his profession, to be informed as to all that is new and useful in it, to give himself to his patients in particular and to the public health in general. If he is actively interested in politics, attending meetings, making speeches, and serving on committees, and is quite as apt to be found at the city hall as at the hospital, and seems to be more interested in the tariff than in tuberculosis, we are troubled about it. We have the same feeling about our minister.

Jesus made his choice between a ministry to the body and a ministry to the soul. He might have filled his days with the good work of healing; he might have cured ten thousand sick persons. He chose instead to devote himself to ideals. He kept himself quietly and constantly conscious of the divine presence. He emphasized in himself and in others the supreme importance of personality. He said that what we do depends on what we are. He said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself." Thus he began the transformation of the world by sanctifying himself and others. He taught the truth. When he was asked to divide an inheritance between two contending brothers, he refused to touch a penny of it. That was a matter for the lawyers. His part was to declare the everlasting principle, "Take heed, and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

That is the emphasis which is needed in the busy, useful church. The function of the minister is to do the things which belong to his splendid profession. He is to study and to pray; he is to lead the worship of the people; he is to preach; he is to go about on errands of ministry to the sick and sorrowful and sinful. In the midst of a generation occupied with things material he is to uphold ideals and to represent the supreme importance of religion. There are plenty of people to lecture on sociology and to organize philanthropy. The minister's speciality demands all his time and thought. He is to save our souls by building up character that shall be buttressed in principle.

For he that feeds men serveth few;

He serves all who dares be true.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.

Elizabeth Ryerson wandered restlessly about the big, still house, watching the maddeningly deliberate clock and listening for her husband's step. How quiet it was—how breathlessly silent. But to-morrow at this time—perhaps—she smiled happily, picturing to herself the brightness of a child's babbling voice, the music of a child's pattering feet. So many years she had longed for it; even John could not know how her heart and her arms had ached—she caught her breath in a sob. But she believed now that it was God's own good plan that gave her the mother longing with no child of her own to cherish—that she might bring a homeless child to the childless home.

The turning of John's key in the latch sent her running to the door.

"John," she cried, seizing his arm and giving it little shakes of joyful excitement, "she's such a dear. The matron showed me all the children, but there was one—I knew her for mine the minute I saw her."

"Where is she?" demanded Ryerson, looking anxiously about.

Elizabeth shook her head, smiling, the color dancing in her cheeks. "I didn't bring her. I shan't even tell you about her. I've a fancy to take you down to the home and see whom you would choose. To-morrow is Sunday, so you can go. We'll go right after breakfast."

Ryerson looked at her sparkling face appreciatively. "If one poor little waif makes you look so well and happy," he laughed, "I'm ready to adopt the whole asylum if you want it."

Elizabeth waited anxiously in the bare little reception room of the home. John's absence seemed interminably long, though it was really only a few minutes till his returning step sounded in the corridor and his voice talking to a child. She turned breathlessly to the door. He was leading a tiny girl, a fairylike little creature with a sad, lovable little face and wonderful hair which rippled over her shoulders quite to her waist.

Elizabeth caught her in her arms. "I thought you would find her," she cried. She turned to the matron. "May we take her now? To-morrow we will see about the papers."

"Keep her a week or so," suggested the matron, "and be sure you want her."

"Want her!" Elizabeth held the child closer. "She was meant for me—our little Dorothea. That is her name, John, Dorothea, the gift of God."

Even in that first short day the child wound herself around the heartstrings of the new father and mother.

"She is like my own, already," said the mother as she held the little maid in her arms in the twilight. "I could not bear it if we should ever have to give her up."

John carried her upstairs to bed and went back to his paper with a strange new warmth at his heart from the clasp of her arms on his neck and the touch of her childish lips on his.

Elizabeth pinned up the mass of beautiful hair and unfastened the child's dress. She started—looked at the little one closely for a moment—and with a low cry of anguish caught her to her heart. Underneath the sheltering curls a hopeless deformity had lain hidden. The fair child body would never be straight and strong. For the child's sake Elizabeth quickly controlled herself. She undressed her tenderly and held her in her arms till she slept.

John looked up startled at her white face when she re-entered the library.

"John—" she struggled to speak and broke down utterly. Sobbing, she told him the pitiful truth.

With a common impulse they went silently to the child's bedside.

"She needs us all the more," said the woman wistfully.

Dorothea stirred in her sleep and murmured the dear new words she had learned that day: "Mother—father."

"She loves us now," wept the mother. "Oh, how can we give her up!"

"We will not give her up," said the father, firmly. He drew the covers closer with clumsy tenderness. "We will love her all the more and stand between her and the world."

Day by day little Dorothea grew deeper into the hearts which had opened to her. Her sensitive little soul unfolded like a flower in the warmth of the affection lavished upon her. Everything that skill and love could devise was brought to the aid of her frail body.

"But, after all," said Elizabeth, "I believe that it is just being loved that helps her more than anything else."

There was little hope that she would ever be straight and well; but a delicate flush of growing health bloomed in her soft cheeks. Her great dark eyes danced with happiness and her mouth lost its pitiful droop. All the wealth of love pent up in her ardent little heart, unexpressed through the four loveless years of her life, she poured out on the two who were her all. Every night she waited at the gate for "father's car" to round the corner. And John Ryerson, keen-eyed man of the world, was never so absorbed in business affairs, never so interested in animated discussion with other men, that he forgot to wave to the little waiting figure poised ready to dance away at his signal to meet him when he left the car.

"I am so proud," he told his wife, "when people say, 'Is that your little daughter?'"

Elizabeth noted with growing happiness that Dorothea never watched the corner in vain. Tensely anxious at first, she herself watched until the fleeting figure sped down the street. With her woman's wisdom she gave no sign; but as weeks went by and John was never late her heart warmed with a more assured joy. It seemed that the child's tiny hands were pushing back the temptation that had been eating its way into the heart of their home. Almost imperceptibly at first, it had wormed its insidious way into their happiness. But the last year it had grown to fearsome proportions. She had felt the weight of it crushing the love and happiness out of her burdened heart, as more and more frequently she choked over her solitary dinner and waited late for her husband's unsteady step and fumbling key.

"Dorothea," Elizabeth held the child close. "You must always love father a great deal—oh, a very great deal. He needs you."

Dorothea sobered anxiously. "Is father sick, mother?"

"No, dear, quite well. But his soul was sick and you are his gift of God sent to help him."

Dorothea shook her curls uncomprehending. "You mean he needs his little girl to love him?"

"Yes, darling, to love him, always."

But the temptation was not gone. It was only stilled for a time. After many weeks it crept in again. Cautiously it came at first, feeling its way. Then with more assurance it marched boldly in and drove peace and happiness and even love before its relentless advance. More frequently as the weeks went by Dorothea waited at the gate, till the incoming cars were nearly empty and the lights twinkled in the neighboring houses where happy families gathered at the end of a busy day, and still father had not come. Night after night she heard her mother say, "Come, Dorothea, to bed. Father will be late to-night. You can see him in the morning."

Dimly Dorothea comprehended that all was not well. She felt the tension of unhappiness and strained affection about her. Father and mother loved her as dearly as ever; and she loved them, oh, how dearly. She could not tell which one most dearly. But something was wrong. She pondered it deeply in her troubled, childish heart. Perhaps father and mother did not love each other any more. She could not understand how that could be possible. Surely everybody must love mother. Nobody could help loving her. And if something was the matter with father so he had to stay down town late at nights, and looked so tired and worried in the mornings, surely mother would not stop loving him because he was sick or worried. And mother herself had told her she must always love him. Dorothea's heart ached with the sorrowful problem. She said nothing, even to her mother; but the old sad look came back to her eyes and her sensitive mouth drooped pitifully.

The breach between husband and wife widened hopelessly, until only Dorothea's baby hands held them together. But the time came when even they could span the gulf no longer.

"We can't live this way any longer," said Elizabeth dully.

"I know. I can't blame you." Ryerson paced the floor doggedly.

"I have tried," she went on quietly. "Since Dorothea came to us I have tried harder for her sake." Her voice quivered. "So have I," muttered Ryerson under his breath, "and failed again."

He turned abruptly from the room and went upstairs to Dorothea's bedside. Elizabeth followed—hesitating.

Presently he spoke softly. "She goes with you, of course. She needs a mother's care. But I can see her sometimes?" His voice was wistful.

Dorothea stirred in her sleep. "Father," she murmured, "father, dear."

"She loves me, too." His voice broke in a sob.

"She would miss you," said the mother. "She would grieve. She could not understand and it would break her heart."

He nodded speechlessly, touching the soft curls.

"John," she touched his hand tremulously. "We can not grieve her. She is not strong. She will have enough to bear. For her sake shall we try again?"

"Yes," he turned eagerly. "I will do better." He squared his shoulders determinedly and a new resolve blazed in his eyes.

"And I will do my part better," she said gently. "I will help you more."

"And Dorothea will help us both," he added softly. "Dorothea, our gift of God."—Mercy Compton Marsh in Christian Advocate.

Request for Prayers.

I desire an interest in the prayers of the Prayer Union for my brother-in-law, Dan Bush. He is afflicted with what the doctor calls sciatic rheumatism. Has not been able to work for over a month. The doctor tells him it will be a long time before he can work, and he depends on days work for a living. Pray that God will so bless him that he may be brought to see and obey the truth as it is in Christ. Trusting that he may soon recover, if it is God's will.

MRS. A. MELLON.

Brother and Sister J. B. Wildermuth earnestly desire the prayers of the Saints for the healing of their baby daughter Evelyn, less than a year old. Physicians have virtually given her up to die, with lagrippe and its associate complications.

Letter Department

MAPLETON, KANSAS, March 24, 1912.

Saints' Herald: As I peruse your valuable pages I am often reminded of the great blessings God is bestowing on his children, and how willing he is to open the windows of heaven and pour out his blessings on us if we will only let him or keep ourselves in a proper condition so we will be able to receive such blessings.

I have read the HERALD for forty years and over, and find as I grow in years that it is more of a comfort and strength to read the church papers, and I would be at a loss to know how to get along without them. I often feel sad when visiting among Latter Day Saints, not to find the HERALD or Ensign, or any of the church papers. When I ask them why they don't take the church papers they make some frivolous excuse, but on looking around I find their nearest town paper, then a county paper, then perhaps a former home paper and a daily.

Dear Saints, why not cut out at least two of these papers and at least take the HERALD and Ensign, and you will be posted on the movements of the work of God.

To all of our old friends and Saints in Iowa I will say, I often think of you and pray God's blessing upon you. We live two miles south of Mapleton, Kansas, on our little farm, and enjoy it very much.

I have been lifting up my voice in defense of the everlasting gospel several times during the winter, and hope to do more as time rolls on. At one place, sixteen miles west of here, near Bayard, Kansas, I made an opening and then went there again with Brother Everett Hughes, and we awakened quite an interest. Now we have three places in that vicinity where the people are asking us to come and preach for them. Nothing gives me more joy and comfort than to see and speak to people that have never heard the gospel trumpet, as I feel the hastening time has arrived. I ask your prayers, brothers and sisters, that I may be more active in the work and service of God in the future than I have been, and that I may not fail to lift up my voice in defense of his truth wherever opportunity offers.

Dear Saints, I often read requests for the prayers of God's people for the sick and afflicted ones. I believe the best way is to secretly ask God's blessing on them as soon as we read or hear of the request, and then it will not be forgotten.

May all those who have obeyed God's law in its fullness be faithful unto the end.

W. C. Hidy.

MASON TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA.

Dear Herald: There are but a handful of Saints here, but we are trying to let our light shine. Brethren Samuel Brown and Frank L. Shinn were here and preached six good sermons for us. They are both sincere in the Master's work. Brother Brown spoke in prophecy and encouraged us very much. We have had a fairly good attendance but there is much prejudice. They are blind, and do not see the light. I hope and pray that there will be some unite with our little band before long. We are having some arguments on the subject where Isaac sought for his wife as found in the tenth lesson in the Quarterly. I would be glad to have some one explain where Isaac sought for his wife.

We would be glad if some of the elders would come our way, as we need spiritual food. I am thankful for the privilege I have in this glorious gospel. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may prove faithful, so I can see Jesus and he can say, Well done, thou good and faithful one.

Your sister in Christ,

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, April 19, 1912.

Editors Herald: For the benefit of your readers who desire to keep in touch with current events having a bearing on the work of God, either directly or indirectly, I submit the following notes:

On April 2 I had the pleasure of baptizing two more into the fold here. One is an earnest young man who has recently learned of the work, and the other is the daughter of Brother and Sister Yost, of Bridgeport, Ohio.

Wheeling has but recently passed through one of the most remarkable religious movements in its history. The noted evangelist, Reverend Billy Sunday, held forth here for six weeks, speaking in a mammoth tabernacle erected for that purpose, seating about eight thousand people, and that was not large enough on many occasions to hold the people. The managers claim over eight thousand converts were secured through his efforts. The cost of running the campaign was something like thirteen thousand dollars, and the contribution to Mr. Sunday was an even seventeen thousand dollars. Mr. Sunday is indeed a wonderful man. In lecturing on needed moral and civic reforms, he is quite forceful and convincing, and much good will result along this line. In preaching, he combined a great deal of logic and force with some originality, a good deal of slang and roughness that appealed to certain classes, and attracted other people because of the novelty.

He is an expert entertainer, and received much applause from the people. His gospel consisted of faith and repentance. He may have known that the gospel which Paul preached contained more than that, but he evidently felt justified in defying the anathemas pronounced by Paul in his letter to the Galatians on any who should preach another gospel; for he told the people, "You are not saved by baptism, by the church ordinances, nor the sacrament." The essentials of the Sunday gospel are, "Faith and repentance, Hit the sawdust trail, Give me your hand and God your heart." No wonder it is difficult to get converts to the full gospel when an attractive substitute is offered in sugar coating, much more palatable, more attractive, and shorn of all the hardships incident to travel along the straight and narrow way. To those who are content with that, we have no quarrel. But our duty is only made more clear to preach the word, offer salvation only on the terms that Jesus laid down. We can not for the sake of money, popularity, or thousands of converts sacrifice any principle or part of the perfect law of God.

While great fairness was proclaimed by Mr. Sunday to all Christian bodies, and it was generally understood that as converts had their church preferences made out on the cards that were used, the ministers of the respective churches would get them to look after the converts. But it was too much to allow anyone to be turned over to the care of the Latter Day Saints, even though the individual was fully decided on going there. My experience with the Ministerial Association, who were the managers of the Sunday campaign, is set forth in a card of thanks which I had published in two daily papers of Wheeling. We do not complain maliciously, but only pity those who are fulfilling the statement of Christ to certain people, who would not enter the kingdom themselves nor let others, who desired to enter. The truth shines out all the brighter after such experiences.

May all workers in the Master's vineyard redouble their efforts, carry the message of the restored gospel to every honest soul who is seeking for the truth, and in the end win the crown that Paul said awaits all the faithful. Hopefully in the conflict,
O. J. TARY.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the Editor of the Register, Sir: Will you kindly allow me space in your paper to express my thanks to the Ministerial Association of Wheeling for their magnanimous treatment accorded to churches not in their association in connection with the revival just closed. When the early work of holding prayer meetings was started the people of the church to which I belong freely proffered their homes to the committees in charge, and we attended all that we could, and gave assistance and encouragement in every way that we could. As the meetings progressed, and especially after Mr. Sunday gave the broad invitation to the people to come and unite with the church of their choice, no matter what that was; if Catholic he would see that the priest got the cards, the impression was quite general that the cards would be turned over to the proper representatives of the church for which they were intended. Believing this to be true, yet as the meetings drew to a close I called on Reverend Arbuthnot at the tabernacle last Saturday and inquired of him what they purposed doing with the cards that were made out to churches not represented in their association. He informed me that they turned them over to the ministers to call on them and try to persuade them to change their mind and agree to unite with the church he represented, and if such minister could not succeed, and they insisted on going to the church of their choice, that church will have to look after them—we are not doing anything for them. I then told him I simply desired to know, as I had charge of the Latter Day Saints' Church here, and had been told some cards had been made out to that church.

He said to me, "The brethren are inclined to think you are pretty closely allied with the Mormons." I offered to furnish him proof that as to the doctrines generally understood as Mormonism, polygamy, and other kindred evils of Brigham Young and his followers, we are more opposed to than the church he represents, and we have fought them with a stronger array of argument than is furnished by any other church. So, for the information furnished, we extend our thanks, and since we are firm believers in the doctrine of Christ in its entirety, and in the practical application of the precepts he gave; and knowing that he instructed his followers to "Do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you," our duty is clear in this case to pray for these liberal minded ministers of Wheeling. May God bless them.

O. J. TARY, Elder, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, April 1, 1912.

WHARTON, ARKANSAS, March 11, 1912.

Dear Herald: The gospel was preached here last July by Brethren J. T. Riley and J. M. Smith for the first time, which resulted in Brother Riley coming back in February to discuss church propositions with the Campbellites. J. T. Hinds, of Fayetteville, was their speaker, and Brother Riley defended the claims of the Reorganized Church in a very convincing manner, assisted by D. L. Lewis of the Lowell Branch, who acted as moderator.

The Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith were the chief mallets used by Hinds, from start to finish. He denied Alexander Campbell and all church literature as published by the Christian people to be binding upon them as a church. He also rejected the Bible, and as usual played as unfairly as he possibly could. Brother Riley, in his calm manner, urged him to tell who brought the church out of the wilderness, which he utterly failed to do, after acknowledging that the church went into the wilderness. He puts darkness for light and light for darkness in almost every instance.

There were quite a number of people who seemed well pleased with Brother Riley's talk. I am thankful to my heavenly Father that the people of this community have had the gospel preached to them, and I trust the future may bring the sheaves into the kingdom. There is some prejudice here, but some are liberal and willing to investigate. There are only three members living here, those of our own household. We are living in the Spring River District and any of the elders will be made welcome who feel led to come and preach. We live away back in the hills.

I would be glad if some of the missionary force should come this summer and hold a few days of meetings. Brother J. T. Riley please take notice.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may be able to accomplish some good in this part of the vineyard.

REBECCA BOREN.

FLINT, MICHIGAN.

Dear Editor: We have a live branch here and are kept pretty busy if we attend all the services. I believe we are in a generally good condition. We realize that a good, live branch will meet with obstacles, and Satan will try hard to get a foothold. If we never had anything to contend with, as a branch or individuals, it would be because Satan was not worried about us and expected us ere long on his side. I believe that the nearer we live to God the stronger the opposing power will be. We may not be able to see it at first, but there are many ways for him to take advantage of us. He suggests evil thoughts, or discourages us in some way when we are doing the best we can. Many times I have felt discouraged because I feared I did not get the time to read and study along gospel lines as I would like to, as I always have lots of work to do with a large family around and two little girls to care for; and then there would come the comforting thought, "I am trying to care for those God has intrusted to our care, and bring them up in the gospel if it takes all my time," and God does at such times bless me with a degree of his Spirit. I can look back over my life with a feeling of joy and satisfaction, being uncondemned before God that I have done the best I could for them in the gospel. Four of them are in the work and I do not think for one moment that our little tot will not obey when she is old enough. I would not want the reader to think that all the credit belongs to us; not so; we have always lived in a good branch, with a good Sunday school. How thankful we ought to be for such a work!

Last Sunday night at a priesthood meeting several of the branch officers were appointed on duty for Sunday afternoon to administer the sacrament to the sick of our number in different parts of the city. Surely good must have been done, for at the evening service the officers all spoke of their work and of the testimonies of those visited. One said he believed he received good himself, and he intended to impart it to others.

Brother Earl Montgomery is with us again and by his testimony we see his face is still Zionward. We have a nice lot of young Saints here that are taking hold with zeal to help advance God's work. He saw fit to speak to them in commendation and calling Brethren Alex Barrs and Henry Hartzler into the ministry. Sisters Lena Hutchins and Marie Becker have organized a Sunshine Band which I believe will be a great help to those so very young. Last Sunday was their prayer and testimony service; there were twenty-one present and seventeen took part. I know by their talk that the little ones enjoy having a meeting all their own with only a few older ones present.

I am glad to be engaged in a work where there is plenty for all to do and a work I know that God is at the head of. Thirteen years ago I was in this work alone; I greatly desired that Brother Harder would see the need of obeying the gospel, so I prayed earnestly to that end, and God saw fit to deliver a message to me through Elder E. C. Briggs. Five years later he renewed the promise again through Elder John Bailey. How very happy I was; but imagine, dear reader, how much happier I was a few months later when the promise was fulfilled and he was rejoicing in the work. Another time, ten years ago, when near death's door—I had made the necessary arrangements with my family and bade them what I supposed was a last farewell—God showed me that my life's work was not ended by letting me see what my work was to be.

This winter I had great reasons to rejoice in God's work when I would read what a great work Elder O. J. Hawn was doing in Bay Port.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
VADA HARDER.

Daniel 2: 44.

I see in the last HERALD two articles on Daniel 2: 44; both differ widely and neither has expressed my views, so I will ask to be heard.

One of the writers refers to the stone kingdom, and says that it does not mean the United States Government. That may be true in part, but I believe that the little stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands was the church of God and the mountain was this government. They are connected closely; first, the prophecies refer to what was to be in the latter days; no one will deny this. I think I can see that Daniel 2: 44 refers to both the church and the government. Now the godly kingdom represented by the head of gold was to be divided until there were ten divisions of that kingdom and in the days of these kings the God of heaven was to set up a kingdom, and it was to stand for ever. It was only to break in pieces the ten above kingdoms and destroy them, and all other kingdoms that might be set up by human hands.

But one thing that is certain, the stone could not be cut out of the mountain until there was a mountain. It must be remembered that the little stone came out of the mountain and is composed of the same substance or material of which the mountain is composed; hence if the little stone represents an inspired kingdom, so does the mountain represent an inspired kingdom. Thus I believe that this republican government was inspired of God. All three books teach that it is so.

One of the prophets tells us the Lord will establish his house or church in the top of the mountains, meaning the highest and best governments in the known world. We are told that God moved on Columbus and caused him to discover this country; no one will deny this. Then God by his wisdom and power fought the battles of Washington, even sending angels to converse with him.

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10 that this Constitution is composed of just and holy principles, and for this purpose had the Lord established the Constitution of this land by the hands of wise men whom he had raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood. The above proves conclusively that this Government is composed of true principles given by inspiration.

One writer attacks the officers of the law. God says we should select wise and good men to rule in this Government. When the wicked rule the people mourn. There is nothing wrong with principles of this Government; they are holy principles and no Latter Day Saint ought to condemn them and speak evil of that which God has so highly recommended to us. The church and this Government must go hand in hand; it is a wheel in a wheel. What God does he does for ever, so God has set up this republican Government, together with his church, and it will stand for ever. Now if the stone that was cut out of the mountain will fit the place it came from, then it is easy to understand the mountain is not complete without the stone; neither is the stone without the mountain; they must work together, and not conflict, hence we are told that he who keeps the law of God need not break the laws of the land. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.) In section 42 we are advised to turn over such as break the law to the law of the land. We should be strong supporters of this Constitution, for her laws are holy laws; her principles are just and true principles. This is either true or the Book of Doctrine and Covenants fails; which will you say, Latter Day Saints? It is for you to say whether it is false, or some theory which is just a little crooked.

Now let us compare this Government and the church and see if we can not establish how nicely the little stone or church fits the mountain, or this republican Government. First we have the President and his cabinet as the chief officers of the Government; then we have the President Joseph Smith and his counselors as the chief officers of the stone kingdom, corresponding with the chief officers of the republican government or mountain; then we have the United States senators and the State senators called the upper house and the lower house of Congress, working together with the president in making laws and executing them.

We have the Quorum of Twelve and the quorums of seventies, working with the president in receiving and making laws to govern the church; corresponding nicely with the above officers of this Government; then we have the governors of the different States presiding over the States as chief officers laboring together with the three higher classes of United States officers. Then we have the Quorum of High Priests, presided over by a bishop sitting as president over the different districts and branches of the church, working under the direction of the other quorums and in harmony with them, corresponding with the different governors of the United States Government. Then we have the supreme judges in the Government, to whom all can appeal for their rights in litigation; so we have the standing high council in the church, where we can appeal from the lesser courts for redress. Then we have the county officers, such as judges, sheriffs, magistrates, constables in the Government, working in harmony with all the above officers for the advancement of this grand republic. So we have the priests, elders, teachers, and deacons in the little stone kingdom or church working in harmony with all the above officers for the good and advancement of the great latter day work.

This is sufficient to prove that the stone fits right in place in the mountain from whence it came, working with and in harmony with the Constitution of this land, which is a choice land above all other lands. So let us labor together with God for the good of all people. Let us fill the offices both in the church and Government as wise men and women; true and just with our dealings with God and man, till he comes whose right it is to reign and will reign as King of kings and Lord of lords.

As a people we should pray for the rulers of our Government, both of the church and of the Government of the United States. The spirit and body is the soul of man, so is the church and this Government the kingdom of God, referred to in Daniel 2.

Ever laboring for the advancement of the great latter day work born of inspiration in these latter days, KNOBNOSTER, MISSOURI. C. L. SNOW.

Warr-Petty Debate.

The debate of Brother Warr of the Latter Day Saints, and Reverend C. Petty of the Christian (Campbellite) Church, was held April 9, 10, 11, in the courthouse at Bay Minette, Alabama.

The debate came about in this way: Brother Warr being the president of Mobile District and branch attended one of the so-called religious revivals when some one scoffed at him because of the Utah Mormons. For some time the Saints have been persecuted by the co-called Christians there. It became necessary that Brother Warr have a notice put in the Baldwin County Times that he would discuss with those who thought us Utah Mormons, with anyone, or anywhere; that we were not Mormons. The Reverend Petty, of course, like many other brave Mormon eaters, challenged Brother Warr.

The propositions signed were as follows: "Resolved, That the Latter Day Saints' Church has no connection in any way with the Utah Mormon Church, but is entirely a different institution." Brother Warr affirmed; Petty denied.

In Petty's first speech he said there were three factions of Mormons: one in Utah, one at Independence, Missouri, and one at Lamoni, Iowa. He harped on Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. He did so poorly that he had to get a new moderator each night. The writer acted as Brother Warr's moderator.

After the first two nights they signed up new propositions for one more night, as follows: "Resolved, That Joseph Smith is an impostor and the Book of Mormon a fraud." Petty affirmed; Warr denied.

Petty started out as all such fighters do—Joseph Smith a false prophet; no more prophets after Christ. Brother Warr was well prepared to meet him, and met him on every argument; and in his closing speech used the poem of John Wesley on the restoration of the last prophet; also the views of all the reformers on the restoration of the ancient gospel.

The debate closed with good results to our cause. We sold one Book of Mormon and loaned out three or four to some of the prominent men of the city. It did good in many ways, and made friends to the cause.

Appended to this letter is a clipping from the Baldwin County Times concerning the discussion. Brother Warr is a young man of twenty years. He has been a member of the church only seventeen months, and an elder about seven or eight months. He is well able to represent the cause, and is a willing worker.

Yours in bonds,

A. G. MILLER.

THE ANTI-MORMON DEBATE.

While public opinion generally concedes that Rev. A. E. Warr won the debate between himself and Rev. C. Petty, that was to have ended last night, as to the connection between the Latter Day Saints and the Church of Mormons, so much interest was aroused in the discussion that it was decided to continue it one more night. The subject to-night will admit a larger scope for argument, the following having been chosen: "Resolved, That Joseph Smith was an impostor and the Book of Mormon a fraud." The affirmative being taken by Rev. Petty and the negative by Rev. Warr.

News From Missions

West Virginia.

Since the holidays I have spent the most of my time in the eastern part of the district. Brother Frank L. Shinn, a man of middle age, recently ordained an elder, a son of the old veteran, D. L. Shinn, of stern character and with a desire to do something for the Master, has been with me for a while, it being his first experience in missionary work. We enjoyed the experience very much, and he makes a good associate laborer and is determined that this will not be his last.

The much-talked-of debate between the Reverend Bunner of the Christian Church, and Elder Rich of the Mormon Church, commenced on the 4th of March, at Fairmont. We did not know of it till Sunday before it began, so Monday morning Brother Frank L. Shinn and I attended it, to see how it would turn out. The subject for consideration was, "Resolved, That John the Baptist and Jesus Christ were the last prophets that were to come and that the New Testament Scriptures contain enough for the salvation of the human family." Bunner to affirm and Rich to deny. Each one had a moderator, and one chairman, so at it they went. Bunner's speech lasted one hour, trying to prove, last of all, Jesus and John, afteryards Rich trying to disprove the last of all theory for another hour. The first speech was the best.

Four consecutive nights were spent in digging down into the mire of slander and vituperation, to get dirt to throw into the faces of people against Mormonism, and of course Rich defending his position as best he could. Both men seemed to be in a kind of humorous manner throughout. Mr. Bunner did manage to draw the line between the Brighamites and Josephites, for which we felt thankful. He pointed us out to the audience. There was a goodly number of the Mormon elders there, also Mr. Bunner's associates in the persons of the two Misterns McVey, Ira C. Moore, and a number of others whose names I did not learn. We were treated with due respect by both parties, so were glad we were present, and our cause did not suffer or lose anything.

I held a series of meetings at Clarksburg, with good result. Also another week's meetings at Shinnston, in an old Methodist church owned by Mr. Anderson, who kindly granted us the use of it for the time free, except the gas used in heating and lighting. We would have held the fort longer but the Evening Dawn people were going to occupy for a series of meetings for that week.

Last night Senator Cannon delivered his famous lecture on Mormonism as it is to-day. He handled his subject in workmanlike manner, and has good command over his hearers, which made it interesting and instructive. He showed up plainly the criminality of the people. I enjoyed it very much, for I could see by his talk that true Latter Day Saintism had a place in his heart. We managed to get a shake of the ex-senator's hand at the close, telling him we belonged to the Reorganized Church. He expressed himself as glad to meet us. Our cause did not suffer anything by the lecture in the city of Clarksburg.

To-morrow I wend my way to Shinnston, Fairmont, and other points north, until I reach home, in order to get ready for another conference year's missionary work.

Trusting our work will roll on until Zion is redeemed, I am your brother and coloborer, SAMUEL BROWN.

News from Branches

Comins, Michigan.

On October 29 we had the pleasure of seeing a young brother brought into the fold. On December 17 the waters were again troubled and another had enlisted.

In December the ever comforting voice of God was heard through Sister Myrtle Scott, admonishing, cheering, and strengthening. A short time before God's presence was made manifest in a cheering manner through Sister Irene Dimick.

While Brother Yoder was working near Hillman, Sister Yoder was at home with the two children, Caroline, aged four years, and Baby Hazel, aged four months. While Sister Yoder was across the road after a pail of water, flames took possession of the home. She and the neighbors did all in their power to save the sleeping children, but God took them both home to him. The heartbroken mother was cared for by friends.

Hard it is sometimes, indeed, to endure the chastening hand of the almighty God, but "those whom he loveth he chasteneth." We are also told, "The prayer of the righteous man availeth much," so let us pray for one another. WRITER.

Cleveland, Ohio.

Since our last letter from this city we have been visited by Brethren Griffiths, Russell, Miller, Becker, Farnfield, and others. We have had fair attendance, but we are a little body in a great city, with no particular effort at present outside of our one little branch, "but big oaks out of little acorns grow."

We have had a good attendance at morning service, because of better attendance at Sunday school, brought about by a little home department work amongst the members. Here is how work for the Master can be accomplished: Get some one on the home department; they will grow into the work and become a great good, if they realize the greatness of the work and the littleness of themselves. Too many of us want to do big things, and being wrapped up in our own importance accomplish nothing. Many other branches are perhaps in this same stunted condition. If everyone would get a new member for the home department, a great work might be performed,—a united effort accomplished, cooperation with God. All can help; all can rejoice. The superintendent of home department is Sister J. C. Farnfield. With the Lord's help I intend to get her at least one member.

Be Reconciled to God.

The wheels of time move swiftly onward,
 Whether we keep the pace or lag behind;
 Say now, are we pressing upward, godward?
 Do we with gems of truth adorn our minds,
 And thus prepare to meet the All-Divine?

Or do the priceless hours press unimproved;
 Our talents buried deep in negligence and sin;
 Content to stumble on in sin's deep groove,
 Heedless of tares fast springing up within
 Our hearts while we eternal life should win?

Use well the precious moments as they fly;
 Why defer till some convenient time
 To make the peace with Him who dwells on high,
 Who in his love so boundless and sublime,
 Himself a ransom gave truly divine?

To set thee free from sin's corroding chain,
 And give thee power to become his child;
 That thou through him eternal life might gain,
 And through his blood to God be reconciled,
 Washed and made clean from all things that defile.

Oh wilt thou spurn to-day the proffered grace,
 And hug thy soul-destroying chains of sin,
 Since thou must meet thy Maker face to face,
 And the dread record with thy deeds within Unshrived, and hear the sentence passed, "Unclean—"

"Let him be filthy still!" God's just decree,
 List now to Mercy's tender, loving voice,
 Who from the chains of sin would set thee free,
 And make thy wounded heart and soul rejoice,
 Wouldst thou make God's way thy only choice?
 CHARLES DERRY.

Honor dear old mother. Time has scattered the snowy flakes on her brow, plowed deep furrows on her cheek—but is she not beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken, but these are the lips that have kissed many a hot tear from childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest cheeks and lips in the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with the soft radiance of holy love that can never fade. The sands of life are nearly run out, but feeble as she is, she will go farther and reach down lower for you than anyone else upon earth. When the world shall despise and forsake you, when it leaves you by the wayside to die, unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you up in her feeble arms and carry you home and tell you all of your virtues until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured by vices. Love her dearly and cheer her declining years with tender devotion.—Anonymous.

Let the world slide, let the world go;
 A fig for care, and a fig for woe!
 If I can't pay, why I can owe,
 And death makes equal the high and low.

Conférencé Minutes.

MONTANA.—Bozeman, March 2 and 3, 1912, Montana, district conference convened in Saints' chapel, Elder A. J. Moore in charge; T. L. Reese, secretary pro tem. Three branches reported. Bishop's agent's report: On hand, October 10, 1911, $228.85; receipts, $836.49; total $1,065.34; paid out, $1,020.05; balance February 29, 1912, $45.29. Auditing committee reported account correct. Report was adopted. The following rules were adopted: 1. The officers of the district shall consist of a president, first vice president, second vice president, a secretary, assistant secretary, and a treasurer, who shall be elected annually. 2. The conferences of the district will convene as follows: The annual conference on the Saturday before the first Sunday in March, and the semiannual conference on the Saturday before the first Sunday in October. 3. The following shall be recognized as members of the district conferences: Ministers in charge, the missionaries of the district, and all members of the district in good standing. 4. All district and branch presidents and all ministers laboring in the district not under General Conference appointment, are to report their labors as ministers in writing to the annual conferences, forwarding same to the secretary one week prior to the convening of the conference. 5. (a) All branch presidents in the district shall send a spiritual report of their branches, indorsed by vote of the branch, to the annual conference, signed by the president and secretary, which report will include the work of all the branch officers. (b) All branch presidents and district ministers shall send in a report on the blanks provided by the Herald Publishing House, on the following dates: June 30, September 30, December 31, and February 28 to the district president directly and promptly. 6. All ordinations within the district shall be approved by the branch of which the candidate is a member, and the district conference except in case of urgency, when the presidency of the district, with the consent and approval of the minister in charge may order such ordinations and report the same to the conference next ensuing. 7. The Book of Rules shall be the guide of action and the standard of appeal in all the business sessions of the conferences of the district. 8. The secretary of the district shall send a notice to each branch president, to be exhibited in the branch, stating time and place of the conferences, with the order of business, such notice to be issued one month previous to the holding of such conferences. 9. Each branch in the district is requested to take up a collection before each advertised conference to defray the expenses of the district. 10. No member shall be ordained to any office of the priesthood, within the district, who is known to be addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors or tobacco; any officer who is known to indulge in the use of either shall be suspended from duty until due acknowledgement and reformation has been evinced. 11. No alterations or amendments of these rules shall be considered at any conference except notice of the same has been given at the conference previously held (said notice to be signed by two of the members); the proposed alterations or amendments must be carried by a two thirds vote. Nine delegates were chosen to General Conference. T. L. Reese was elected assistant secretary; Jerome Wyckoff, second vice president. Conference adjourned to meet in Deer Lodge, October 5 and 6, 1912. Jerome Wyckoff, secretary.

WESTERN WALES.—Conference convened with the Aberaman Branch February 11 and 12, 1912. J. G. Jenkins, district president, and G. T. Griffiths and R. May were associated in presiding. F. Jones chosen secretary pro tem with F. Simmons as assistant; T. U. Thomas, chorister; James Evans, organist; H. Snook, usher. Minutes of previous conference read and approved with slight amendments. Ministry reporting: E. B. Morgan, T. U. Thomas, J. G. Jenkins, T. J. Picton, J. Thomas, F. Simmonds; also a report from secretary. Statistical reports read from Skewen, Pontyates, Porth, and Aberaman branches. General Recorder wrote complaining of some discrepancies in records of branches and the matter was referred to the district secretary to deal with and report. The question of boundary lines was considered and it was resolved that the presidency appoint a committee to draw out same. F. Jones, J. G. Jenkins, and T. Gould were appointed. E. B. Morgan, T. U. Thomas, and William Lewis were appointed as delegates to the General Conference, with power to cast majority and minority vote. The question was taken up and considered regarding missionaries and length of time they should stay in this country after coming here from America. It was unanimously resolved that in view of the heavy expense incurred by missionaries in traveling to and fro from America, that in the opinion of this conference no appointment should be made for less than three to five years, and the president of the mission was requested to place this before the proper authorities. It was resolved we sustain the local and general church authorities, and a vote of thanks was tendered to the Aberaman Saints for their hospitality. Adjourned to meet at call of district president. The social and preaching services of the conference were bright, and very encouraging. Henry Ellis, secretary, 153 New Road, Skewen, Glamorgan-shire.

EASTERN COLORADO.—Semiannual conference of the district met at Wray, Colorado, March 2, 1912, at 10 a. m., E. F. Shupe, district president in charge. The district secretary being absent, Coral E. Willis was chosen as secretary pro tem, assisted by James Thomas. Reports were received from the following branches: Highland, 23; Trinidad, 50; Durango, 68; Rocky Mountain, 34; Colorado Springs, 119; Denver, 254; Wray, 133. Ministerial reports were read from F. A. Russell, E. J. Clark, J. F. Petre, Samuel Twombly, L. G. Holloway, E. D. Bullard, E. F. Shupe, O. B. Thomas, I. C. Edwards. District president E. F. Shupe presented semiannual report ending February 29, 1912. Report from bishop's agent Charles E. Everett read and approved. A petition was read from the Saints of the California Mesa Mission, requesting the conference to provide for the ordination of Burton H. Blowers to the office of priest and Roy J. Park to the office of deacon. The petition set forth that the above named brethren had been called of God through Brethren Twombly and Hubbard, and as great necessity existed for laborers, they earnestly petitioned the conference to act favorably upon their request, which was done. The following named persons were elected delegates to General Conference: Brethren J. W. Rushton, O. B. Thomas, L. G. Holloway, Samuel Twombly, J. F. Petre, Frank Russell, E. F. Shupe, Glen Broliar; Sisters L. A. Schmutz, Lillie Nudd, Louisa Fishburn, Emma Willis. With regard to the time and place of meeting of the next district conference, the following resolution was adopted: "That when this conference adjourns, it does so subject to the call of the presidency of the district, and that any resolution now upon our district record which would prevent the carrying out of this resolution be hereby rescinded."

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—District semiannual conference convened at Seattle, Washington, February 10, 1912, William Johnson and P. W. Premo presiding, and F. W. Holman at the desk. Branches reporting as follows: Seattle with a membership of 213, no change; New Westminster 36, a gain of 5; Chilliwack 36, no change; Centralia 61, a gain of 8, making a total of 341; adding the enrollment of disorganized branches, Castle Rock, Tacoma, and Nanaimo, numbering 31, 25, and 7 respectively, makes a grand total of 404 for the district, a net gain of 13 for the past six months. Bishop's agent's report (Frank Holmes, Roslyn, Washington,) showed a balance on hand of $197.31, with sufficient receipts after having deducted an expenditure of $878.68 to leave a balance on hand February 6, 1912, amounting to $766.63. Ministers reporting were Elders George W. Thorburn, William Johnson, P. W. Premo, P. T. Plumb, S. P. Cox, Henry Stade, Isaac McMullen, Samuel Pope, and F. W. Holman. Priests: Leonard S. Rhodes and Josiah E. Rhodes; also teacher J. N. Sanders. Motions prevailed that a reunion be held at Centralia, Washington, and the Spokane and Portland districts be invited to join; also designating William Johnson, P. T. Plumb, P. W. Premo, F. W. Holman, and S. P. Cox as a committee on arrangements. A committee for special advertising, consisting of Sisters Jessie and Hattie Ward, Lula and Agnes Fisher, and Brethren Leonard and Amos Rhodes were elected. A petition to the Twelve is ordered, that Elder George Thorburn be returned to this district this year. Election of district officers replaces William Johnson, P. W. Premo, F. W. Holman, and Bertha Emslie as president, vice president, secretary, and member of library board respectively. Owing to the means authorized and employed to select a candidate for the approval of the Bishopric as their agent resident within and for this district, proving unsuccessful, William Johnson was unanimously recommended by the conference for the position. Delegates to General Conference elected were William Johnson, George Thorburn, F. M. Sheehy, Henry Stade, S. P. Cox, Sisters Agnes, Lula and Lizzie Fisher, with power to cast majority and minority vote in case of division. Centralia was designated as the place for holding next conference, the time being left in the hands of the district officers, in conjunction with the reunion committee, for subsequent announcement. Leonard S. Rhodes, of Centralia, was elected book agent, to handle the church publications at the reunion and conference, with a fund amounting to $23.68 to start in with, having been raised by subscription. The subject of "Our attitude toward the Christian world" was ably discussed by different ones, strongly advocating that of promoted acquaintance, friendship, and the living of consistent lives before them, never failing to keep them well and judiciously supplied with tracts and literature pertaining to the work. It is hoped that all of those enrolled upon the records of Castle Rock, Tacoma, and Nanaimo branches, now disorganized, will remember that letters of removal therefrom may be obtained from the undersigned, when desired, by giving name of branch which they wish to unite with. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 4233 Bagley Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Convention Minutes.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN.—Convention of Zion's Religio-Lit-erary Society of Southern Wisconsin was held at Madison, February 24, 1912, President Jasper O. Dutton in charge. Officers for the ensuing year: J. O. Dutton, president; B. G. Flint, vice president; Sylva Dennis, secretary; Ezra Dutton, treasurer; Julia N. Dutton, home class superintendent. The following delegates were appointed to represent the district at General Convention: W. A. McDowell; E. C. Flint, Ira Brown, J. O. Dutton, A. E. Gratz, R. D. Davis. Sylva Dennis, secretary, Madison, Wisconsin.

Conference Notice.

Des Moines district conference will convene at Des Moines, Saturday and Sunday, June 1 and 2, 1912. Annual election of district officers will take place at this conference. Blank priesthood reports will be sent to all branch presidents for each member of their branch holding priesthood. We want reports from all. Ask your branch presidents for your blank. Let all who can, come; bringing the Spirit of the Master with them. E. O. Clark, secretary, 2500 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

Convention Notice.

The joint session of the Sunday school and Religio association of the Massachusetts District will convene in Haverhill, Massachusetts, Grand Army Republic Hall, Court Heights, Saturday, May 11, at 2.30 p. m., continuing over Sunday. Ora Viola Holmes, secretary; Ada Marian Lewis, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Members of Mission No. 1; Greeting: Comprised in the above mission are Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, Canada; and Iowa, Nebraska, the Dakotas and Minnesota. Too large a field likely for us to entirely cover personally, but will try to do that which shall be for the most good to the work of the church.

ASSISTANT MINISTERS.

For our convenience, as well as yours, the following are placed as assistants in charge of the fields designated; Nauvoo and Eastern Iowa districts, James McKiernan; Des Moines District, J. F. Mintun; Lamoni Stake, John Smith; Fremont District, W. E. Haden; Potawattamie District, N. V. Sheldon; Little Sioux and Gallands Grove districts, W. A. Smith; Nebraska, J. R. Sutton; Minnesota, L. Houghton; North Dakota, J. E. Wildermuth; the Canadian provinces, E. E. Long.

To more properly distribute the work in Canada, L. G. Wood and Fred Moser are requested to labor in Alberta, J. W. Peterson, J. J. Cornish, F. Gregory, and J. L. Mortimer, in Saskatchewan, B. L. McKim and William Shakespeare in Manitoba, doing tent work during tent season. Brother Wilson will remain in Winnipeg while Brother Long will travel in all so far as possible. By permission Brother J. C. Crabb will labor a part of the season in Saskatchewan.

FINANCES.

As the missionary force has been quite materially augmented and this mission has received a proportionate increase, we trust that all will make an added effort to increase the tithing and free will offering fund, while the ministry should be anxious to practice economy.

REPORTING.

The Herald Office will furnish you with quarterly report blanks at eight cents per dozen, and these should be filled out and sent to J. W. Wight, Lamoni, Iowa, July 1, October 1, January 1, the first to cover a period of four months, the others three months each. Prior to March, 1913, an annual report and application blank will be forwarded to each personally. Please be prompt, brethren, in reporting. Will every local man kindly report his year's work to the above address, March 1, 1913?

DIFFICULTIES.

Kindly refer all difficulties that require adjustment by the minister in general charge to Gomer T. Griffiths, 185 West Eleventh Avenue, Columbus, Ohio. This is necessary that the health of his associate may have a chance to recuperate. Please confer with him as to the needs and wants of the mission also.

PRESIDENTS.

Presidents of stakes and districts will, as heretofore, send quarterly reports to both the church Presidency and J. W. Wight. Will every one please comply?

Your brethren in Christ,
G. T. GRIFFITHS.
J. W. WIGHT.

To the Saints of Mission Number 2, comprising Kansas, Missouri, Central and Southern Illinois, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, and Louisiana; Greeting: Having been appointed by the General Conference in charge of this field for the coming year we wish to make a few statements concerning the work therein.

We desire the cooperation of all Saints in the mission. You need not be a General Conference appointee to assist in this work. We hope that all holding priesthood will do what they can to open up new places and assist in caring for them. Keep busy during the year, and you will be able to rejoice, and as a result of your work others will rejoice with you.

The church is greatly in need of financial aid in order to meet the obligations it has assumed in caring for the families of the missionaries, and we hope that all who can will assist in this part of the work. Do not neglect this; it is important. But this is not all; neither the most important. This gospel must be lived to be enjoyed. Every part of God's work is important, and no part should be neglected. We have the law and the testimony on our side. We can live the gospel if we try. Everyone can succeed who will. No one should be slothful in the Master's service.

ASSISTANT MISSIONARIES IN CHARGE.

We appoint the following brethren as assistant missionaries in charge:

Lee Quick in charge of that part of Spring River District in Oklahoma, and Eastern Oklahoma District except that part in Arkansas.

R. M. Maloney in charge of Central Oklahoma District.

S. S. Smith in charge of Southeastern Illinois District.

W. M. Aylor in charge of Texas.

J. T. Riley in charge of Arkansas and Louisiana.

J. Arthur Davis in charge of the unorganized territory in Southern Kansas.

George Jenkins in charge of Saint Louis District.

Henry Sparling in charge of Spring River District, except that part in Arkansas and Oklahoma.

R. T. Walters in charge of Northeastern Kansas District.

W. E. Peak in charge of Northwestern Kansas District.

J. W. Paxton in charge of Central Illinois District.

Hubert Case in charge of Western Oklahoma District.

E. L. Henson in charge of Far West District.

W. S. Macrae in charge of Clinton, Missouri, District.

James T. Davis in charge of Southern Missouri District.

REPORTS.

Reports should be made promptly July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. This does not mean the tenth or fifteenth of the month. Send to the Herald Office and secure your blanks for reporting. By agreement all reports should be made to J. F. Curtis, 426 South River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri.

DEBATES.

Do not arrange for debates without consulting those in charge of the field, except in cases of emergency.

We want you to feel free to write to us. If we can assist you, we will gladly do so.

With desires to be helpful in the Master's service, and trusting him for wisdom and strength, praying that his blessings may rest upon all, we remain,

PETER ANDERSON,
419 East Fifth Street, Cameron, Missouri.
J. F. CURTIS,
426 South River Boulevard, Independence, Mo.

To the Officers and Saints of the Eastern Mission; Greeting: By order of the appointing powers I have been placed in general charge of the Eastern Mission for another year, and have thought it advisable to arrange for missionary and local work as follows:

MARITIME PROVINCES.

Elders William Anderson and Oliver Shirk will labor in Nova Scotia during the conference year. They are instructed to immediately enter the field and as early as possible prosecute missionary work using the district tent.

EASTERN MAINE.

Elders J. A. Koehler and J. F. Sheehy will labor as missionaries in this district. We trust that these brethren will take advantage of the numerous opportunities for missionary work.

WESTERN MAINE.

Elder F. J. Ebeling, of the High Priests' Quorum, has been appointed to this district with a view to presiding therein. Elders G. W. Robley and H. A. Koehler will labor as missionaries, Brother Koehler in the eastern part of the district, Brother Robley in the western part of the State. These brethren are instructed to prosecute missionary work so far as possible during the year. Brother J. A. Baker will labor in New Hampshire and Western Maine.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Elder H. O. Smith will make Fall River his objective point; Elder A. B. Phillips, Providence for the present; Elder R. W. Farrell, Boston; Elder J. C. Farnfield is instructed to labor on the Fox Islands, Maine, during the summer months; in the fall and winter Massachusetts District.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA DISTRICT.

Elder W. W. Smith will make Philadelphia his objective point and will have personal oversight of all missionary work in the city. Brother E. B. Hull will labor for the present in the Beacon Light Mission. Brother W. E. LaRue will labor in Greater New York, making Brooklyn his objective point. Elder Tavnor Fischer will labor at Elk Mills and vicinity for the present. Elder T. U. Thomas, Scranton objective point. Brethren Thomas and Fischer will be furnished with a tent, and as early as possible are instructed to prosecute missionary work in Lackawanna County. Brother John Lentell will not reach the field until about July 1, and will then assist in the summer school work.

NEW YORK DISTRICT.

Brethren Alma Booker and R. Etzenhouser are instructed to prosecute missionary work, using the district tent, beginning this work as early in the season as possible. Brother S. W. Tomlinson will make Greenwood an objective point, but prosecute missionary work in Steuben County and throughout the southwestern part of the State. Elder A. E. Stone, as president of the district, will labor among the branches.

We trust that those appointed to missionary work will endeavor to make new openings and establish the gospel in as many new places as possible. All are reminded that the dates for reporting to the missionary in charge are July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. You may secure your blanks from the Herald Office. See to this at once, that when the time for reporting arrives you may have proper blanks therefor. I shall be glad to hear from you personally at least once per month.

SUMMER SCHOOLS.

The success attending summer school work during the past few years has been such that we commend this to all our missionaries. We trust that Brethren Smith, LaRue, and Hull will arrange for this work, and that brethren in the other districts will endeavor so far as possible to prosecute this line of work.

FINANCES.

The Saints will observe that we have the largest number of missionaries ever appointed to this mission. This means a large increase in our annual expenses. We hope that every member will realize that we are colaborers together and that those who toil in the vocations of life will consecrate of their means toward the support of those who are consecrating their time and talent to the advancement of the Lord's work. Let us be fellow laborers together, so that when the Lord shall apportion us our reward we may share in the honor and glory that shall be ours.

Praying that success may attend each one in his work, and that this may be the most successful year of our ministry, I remain,

Your colaborer in the Lord,
ULYSSES W. GREENE.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, 16 Delaware Street.

SPRING RIVER DISTRICT.

Dear Saints: The inexorable hand of authority has again thrown us back to your fertile soils and flowery banks, where the nightingale warbles 'neath the shaded bowers, and the whippoorwill sings his nightly requiem. While our ranks have been somewhat invaded, yet our loyalty has not waned in the least, but with renewed energy we take up the work with you, determined on greater success.

Let every president of branch count his worthies o'er and see to it that every man holding priesthood shall make a record in telling the message we have to bear, and particularly I request that you shall reach out into the dark places to gladden the hearts of the uninitiated. Shun no enemy or fear no danger, yet be kind and considerate to every opinion, manifesting the Christ within. New openings, new branches, and better old ones should be the slogan of the new year. Keep in view the June conference and send your reports to me, not forgetting the reunion, to which every effort will be made for the grandest of all. Keep in mind also the new church at Scammon, on which we are needing much wanted help that we may soon be able to leave it to a rejoicing and grateful branch.

My field address this year will be Pittsburg, Kansas. All letters will receive consideration and be promptly answered. We wish to keep in touch with all the branches and all the workers.

T. W. CHATBURN, District President.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS.

Resolution.

The resolution passed by the recent Lamoni Stake conference, regarding theater going, a copy of which appeared in a recent issue of the HERALD, was concurred in by the Lamoni Branch at their regular meeting, held March 5, 1912.

CYRIL WIGHT, Clerk.

Died.

DOTY.—Earl Clifford Doty, youngest son of John and Catharine Doty, was born at Plano, Illinois, February 12, 1894, and died in Holden, Missouri, February 5, 1912, aged 17 years, 11 months, and 22 days. He was the third child in a family of six children. Baptized October 17, 1904, by Elder James Moler. Two little sisters have preceded him to the great beyond. Interment in Holden cemetery. Memorial sermon by Elder H. E. Moler, assisted by R. O. Self, February 18, 1912.

Died.

CAMPBELL.—At Wallaceburg, Ontario, Raymond B. Campbell, son of Mrs. David Campbell, died on March 13, 1912. He was born in Ronney, Ontario, in 1888; united with the church when nine years old, and was always an active worker in Sunday school and Religio. He had been employed as express agent for some time before death. Funeral service at the Presbyterian church, sermon by Elder James Davis, assisted by Reverend M. C. Tait, of Knox Church. He leaves father and mother, one sister, Myrtle, and three brothers, Lawrence, Clyde, and Darl. He enjoyed the confidence and affection of employers and all acquaintances.

KRAMER.—Jacob Kramer was born August 25, 1858, in Franklin County, Indiana; was married to Esther E. Barmore, near Birdseye, Indiana, December 23, 1890. Four children were born to this union; three sons, Alma, Elza, and Elvin, and one daughter, Nellie. He was baptized and confirmed into the church January 24, 1896, by Elder J. P. Baggerly. He departed this life near Niagara, Kansas, April 21, 1912; his death was caused by cancer of the face, which affliction was of long standing. He was held in high esteem by all who knew him. Sermon by T. J. Hicks, of the Christian faith.

Sermons on Social Service.

Did Jesus preach a social gospel? Oh, I covet that great power of the imagination that will lift you up and carry you back nineteen hundred years into the old Temple. I want you to hear—can you hear it?—that old cry, the rising and the falling of it?

Have you ever heard a mob? I have. There it is, that shout, that long cadence. And there, before the portal of the old Temple, the mass gathers, and before them they press into the Temple the shrinking form of a woman. There are high men of Jerusalem, leaders of society, masters of the game, and behind them the rabble, hungry for blood as of old.

The Master turns, as the record runs, and looks on the Temple floor and writes in the sand. I do not know why he looked at the floor; I do not know why he wrote in the sand. But I know a great many of the helpless women of the underworld. I know them in their bitterness, and I know them in their heartbreak. I know them in their vicious relationships to life, and I know them in their hungering moments after the old vision that is gone for ever. And I have sometimes thought that the Master felt at that moment the conscious sense of shame, the shame for you and me, shame for all of his sex who, through all the ages, have had a share in the downward going of every woman that has ever lost her way.

He writes upon the sand. Some strong, proud man, sure of his own personal rectitude, steps forth and says: "The woman is guilty. The evidence is ample. The law of Moses is that such should be stoned to death. What say you?"

Ah, my friends; what a trial! what a tribunal! what a cause! what a judge! And more than nineteen hundred years of time rings the most tremendous social judgment ever handed down by the greatest judge that ever spoke among men:

"Let the man that is without sin among you cast the first stone."

And you know how the record runs: "They went out, from the greatest even unto the least, leaving no one remaining."

And then: "Woman, doth no man condemn thee?" "No man, Lord."

"Neither do I condemn thee. Go thou and sin no more." Was that judgment for Jerusalem alone, or does it run with vital power and convincing truth to-day in New York

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

- (1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.
- (2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.
- (3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.
- (4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

Ida M. Tarbell's Sharp Rebuke to Unproductive Women.

In an article on "The Irresponsible Woman and the Friendless Child," in the May American Magazine, Ida M. Tarbell says:

"The heaviest burden to-day on productive America, aside from the burden imposed by a vicious industrial system, is that of its nonproductive women. They are the most demanding portion of our society. They spend more money than any other group, are more insistent in their cry for amusement, are more resentful of interruptions of their pleasures and excitements, go to greater extremes of indolence and uneasiness.

"The really serious side to the existence of this parasitical group is that great numbers of other women, not free, forced to produce, accept their standards of life. We hear women, useful women, everywhere talking about the desirability of not being obliged to do anything, commiserating women who must work, commiserating those who have heavy household responsibilities, and by the whole gist of their words and acts influencing those younger and less experienced than themselves to believe that happiness lies in irresponsible living."

Keep Your Friends.

In an article in the May Woman's Home Companion on the compensations that come to those who live away from great centers of population there appears the following sound advice:

"We are idly inclined to think that a real friendship, once begun, ought to survive of its own vitality; but, alas! all beauty in this world, from a rose to a human soul, needs nurture. Nietzsche speaks very scornfully of those who fancy they dare show themselves as they are to their friends. 'For your friends,' he advised, 'wear every adornment.' It is well worth while to save the highest cheer, the brightest thoughts, the gentlest attentions, for the friend. One should always keep some impersonal topics of conversation ready, so that your thoughts together should not huddle down to the sordid atmosphere of narrow spaces. Be not only the sunshine to your friend, but be a broad outlook and a wide view! Love must have space and air to thrive in.

"Human life offers us nothing else so beautiful as real friendship; not love, not prosperity, not fame, are so fair, so precious. So foster it! Let no distrust, no absence, no difference of environment, dim its luster. Let death itself be powerless to rob you of its sweetness! Never break it; never lose it: it is the sweetest touch of mortal life."

The Macmillan Standard Library.

"The Macmillan Standard Library," the first volumes of which were published last week, is to be all that its name implies. In the first place it is to consist of books which have been put to the test of public opinion and have not been found wanting, books in other words which have come to be regarded as standards. In the second place it will cover all the fields of knowledge—literature, religion, biography, history, politics, art, economics, sports, sociology and belles lettres—so that the person who purchases the volumes as they appear will be getting together a library complete and authoritative enough to satisfy the most particular scholar. "The Macmillan Standard Library" will never be finished; it has no fixed bounds. The intention is to include in it all worthy books possible in which there is a sufficient interest to warrant the inclusion. To this end additions will constantly be made. The volumes so far published are: The United States as a World Power, by A. C. Coolidge; What Is Shakespeare, by L. A. Sherman; Socialists at Work, by Robert Hunter, and Rational Living, by Henry Churchill King. The price of the separate volumes, which are bound in attractive blue cloth, is only fifty cents.

And wilt yet order and appoint my lot,

POPULAR CHURCHES TO SCRUTINIZE DOCTRINE.

A PRELIMINARY STEP TOWARD CHURCH UNION.

The 1910 general convention of the Episcopal Church appointed a "commission" on "faith and orders." The object of this commission appears to be to promote the cause of church union. The members of the commission have addressed a circular letter to similar commissions appointed by eighteen Protestant denominations.

This letter, according to the report found in a recent number of the Outlook, contains three significant suggestions. First, they advise the clergy of the various denominations to preach frequently in favor of church union. Second, they advise the clergy and laity to pray for church union. Third, and perhaps most interesting of all, they advise the clergy and laity of the various denominations to study carefully the particular doctrines and forms of church government that distinguish their particular denomination from others, to discover whether or not these differences are vital; and to examine carefully the particular doctrines and forms of government that distinguish other churches from their particular denomination.

This last is the very thing that we, as a church, have always advised people to do. We believe that there should be but one church, a united church, as the apostle expressed it: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." It is all right to preach and pray for a united church. And it is quite proper to study doctrine and church polity carefully, with the desire to eliminate all error and discover all truth. Church union is desirable only as it is formed on a true basis of sound, scriptural doctrine, authority, and church government.

THE POLICY OF PAST YEARS REVERSED.

But this advice is quite the reverse of the policy of former years. Whereas we have always urged the importance of a careful and unprejudiced scrutiny of doctrine, we have always been told by the "orthodox" churches that this should be avoided; that the examination of doctrine led to argument, argument to quarrels, and quarrels to division, hence doctrine should be kept in the background in the interest of unity. The new note is more in accord with the old: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith"; and, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

We wonder how soon these churches will accord us a hearing and examine our doctrine carefully with a view to the discovery of truth. Probably, however, such a contingency did not enter the minds of those who outlined the program of examination. No doubt they would refuse to consider the Latter Day Saint Church as a factor in the proposed church union. But we recall that in some instances the stone that the builders reject becomes the head of the corner.

AUTHORITY; SHALL WE SATISFY OURSELVES WITH AN "IF"?

When we examine ourselves, our doctrine and forms of church government, we discover many things that distinguish us from others. First of all, perhaps, is our position on authority. We do not believe it to be proper for men to elect themselves to serve God and represent him as preachers and priests. Authority is required to fit one to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances, and Jesus said: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you."—John 15:16. Again we are told: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest."—Hebrews 5:4.

We are not satisfied to waive the question, as the Christians (followers of Alexander Campbell) did, when they first confronted it, and said: "We concluded if we had authority to preach, we had authority to baptize. The work then commenced; the preachers baptized one another, and crowds came and were baptized."

BACK TO CATHOLICISM.

There are two ways of claiming authority. The first being that of succession. Jesus said that he had called and ordained certain ministers. The record shows that they called and ordained others, as directed by inspiration and revelation and so on and on, for a time at least. We might assume that this authority continued on by succession, even to the present time. Yet to do so we must suppose that it survived the Dark Ages and the great apostasy that extended over so many centuries. If authority was not lost then, surely there is no possibility of losing it by transgression, or sinking so low in the mire of crime and iniquity that God will withdraw the priesthood. Yet we are told: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God."—2 John 9: 10.

From the Dark Ages the Catholic Church emerged as the sole organized claimant of the priesthood. All Protestant churches are of later date, and if an attempt is made to trace their authority back by succession it will lead them to the Catholic Church. If the Catholic Church had divine authority when she emerged from the Dark Ages, she has it now, and there is no need and has been no need for the existence of any other denomination, but it is logical, and if we are not to push the matter to its logical conclusion why start the examination at all?

John Wesley recognized the lines through which succession must come, for when questioned as to the authority by which he did certain things, he replied: "By the authority of Jesus Christ conveyed by the Archbishop of Canterbury when he laid his hands on me." (See Richard Watson's History.) And where did the Archbishop of Canterbury get his authority? From the Catholic Church. Of Luther it was said: "Luther received his ordination at the hands of the Roman hierarchy, and his ordination, therefore, and that of his Protestant successors is as valid as that of the Romish priesthood at the beginning of the sixteenth century." (See History of Religious Denominations, by Rupp.)

RESTORATION VERSUS SUCCESSION.

We are not satisfied with authority by succession. The second way by which authority might be claimed is by way of restoration. This is our claim. God, through angelic ministration, and by direct revelation, has restored both the Melchisedec and the Aaronic priesthoods, and again conferred authority to preach and administer the ordinances. This idea is generally rejected by the churches, as they unanimously hold that revelation has ceased.

However, if these nineteen churches push their examination of authority to its logical conclusion, they will eventually go back to the dominion of the Catholic Church, from whence they came, or unite with the Latter Day Saint Church in a church union whose authority is found in a restored priesthood. The only other alternative is to conclude that authority does not exist; and that is scarcely an alternative, as we can not suppose that God would leave himself unrepresented in this the most enlightened age of the world. It is not likely that these denominations will care to push their examination to the logical conclusion, so we may expect it to come to nothing, or at most result in a church union whose priesthood will trace its authority back to the Roman Catholic Church, but inconsistently refuses to recognize the spiritual dominion of that church and declines to go back to its fellowship.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL?

We come now to a consideration of those doctrines that are connected with the redemption of man. All denominations will agree with us that preachers should preach the gospel. But what is the gospel? We are told that it is the fact that Jesus is the Son of God and that he died for man. A great many preachers apparently think that when they have announced the death of Jesus on the cross for the redemption of man they have preached the whole gospel. But the fact that Jesus is the Son of God and that he died for man are but great facts underlying the gospel. When we tell the world that Jesus died for man, we merely tell them what God has done for them; the gospel is not complete until it has told them what they must do for God and for each other. That is the first great question that men ask after they believe in the things that God has done for them: "What must we do to be saved?"

Here is where we begin to differ. Some reply, "Believe in Jesus, that is all you need to do." But they already believe in him. What more?

Paul, in the sixth chapter of Hebrews enumerates six principles that he says are the foundation principles of the doctrine of Jesus. Four of these tell men what to do; two of them tell him things that he will experience later on.

THE QUESTION OF BAPTISM.

Probably these nineteen denominations are at an agreement with us on the doctrines of faith toward God and repentance from dead works. But when we approach the doctrine of baptism we find disagreement as to the mode. Historic controversy rages around the interpretation of certain scriptures regarding the mode of baptism. We hold that these scriptures are so plain that controversy is unnecessary; but to make our position more certain, we are told in modern revelation most plainly: "Then shall he immerse him or her in the water."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 21.

Even those who agree with us in the mode of baptism might not agree with us as to its meaning. Some interpret it in one way and some in another; but, so far as we are aware, no one of them accepts the definite statement made by Peter on the day of Pentecost: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2: 38.

Mostly they hold that sins are remitted, we might say automatically, when one accepts Jesus. To baptism they ascribe some meaning not at all closely connected with the remission of sins. But shall the first great sermon of the Christian dispensation to be preached after the disciples had been endowed with power from on high be dismissed in favor of other interpretations presented at later dates by a divided ministry of questioned authority?

THE PROMISE OF THE HOLY GHOST.

On the question of the baptism of the Holy Spirit there is quite as much difference of opinion. Peter went on to say: "And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." This was in accord with Jesus, who had said that men must be born of the water and of the Spirit.

We hold that the Holy Ghost is given now the same as then and that it brings the same gifts and blessings. Some deny the one proposition, and some deny both. Some hold that the Spirit is not given now, and attempt ingeniously to modify the promise that was to "all who are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call," and limit it to those who were near by and the few who heard the call of the Lord under the direct ministry of the original twelve apostles. Others hold that the Spirit is given now but deny that it brings the ancient gifts of tongues, prophecy, healings, wisdom, etc.

LAYING ON OF HANDS.

The laying on of hands is another doctrine so little esteemed to-day that we have never heard it made the subject of a discourse by an "orthodox" Protestant minister. Probably it will not even be considered by these nineteen prospective candidates for church union. Yet Paul, given as an especial light to the Gentiles, named it as one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and Christ himself named it in his last great commission (see Hebrews 6; Mark 16: 18). It was practiced in the apostolic church for the healing of the sick, in ordinations, when blessing children, and for the bestowal of the Holy Ghost (Luke 4: 40; Acts 28: 8; Mark 10: 13-16; Acts 8: 14-19; Acts 13: 1-3).

RESURRECTION AND ETERNAL JUDGMENT.

The fifth principle named by Paul, the resurrection, is spiritualized, and is seldom considered in modern theology; to us it is literal and important. The eternal judgment as a principle is not understood by modern divines. They differ as to when it will occur. And for the most part they consider it merely the division of those who shall be saved from those who shall be lost. They have no understanding of or conception of the different glories awaiting the saved, each man receiving according to his works. Indeed, they repudiate the idea that works figure in salvation; Jesus did it all, and the man who accepts Jesus is saved completely and at once and that is all there is to it. Those who fail to accept him are lost, and that is the end of that—there are no degrees of punishment to fit degrees of crime.

THE WIFE MURDERER WHO WENT TO HEAVEN (?).

This doctrine when applied to concrete cases exposes its own folly. There was the case of Henry Clay Beattie, so widely reported in the newspapers six months ago. He loved Bulah Binford, a woman of the streets, so took his own wife, the mother of his little child, for an automobile ride. At a deserted place he halted the machine, produced a shotgun, and killed her as one might kill a dog.

After being convicted of the crime, after an appeal for a new trial was denied, after the governor had refused to interfere, after every effort to escape had failed, Henry Clay Beattie confessed his crime and accepted Jesus. He received consolation at the hands of a minister (Methodist, if our memory is not at fault) and announced that he was prepared to die in peace, his sins forgiven. The popular idea of salvation would usher him, black-faced and strangling, from the hand of the executioner right into celestial glory and the presence of the angels. But how about his poor wife? She had no time to accept Jesus, supposing that she had not done so. She was given no warning. She must go to hell to share torment equal to that meted out to the vilest sinners. We are left to speculate as to the baby,—when he grows up, will he prefer to be at the last assigned to hell with his gentle, murdered mother, or to heaven with his brutal father?

A MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

Opposed to all this is our philosophy of reward according to works, so plainly stated in the Scriptures. We hold that God has reserved punishments adequate to the deserts of each individual who is lost, and rewards that will exactly correspond to the merits and works of each individual that is saved. (See 1 Corinthians 15: 41, 42; Revelation 20: 12, 13; Revelation 22: 12; Matthew 16: 27.) This philosophy opens up a broad field of knowledge, and gives us a high conception of the wisdom and justice of God. We can not surrender it lightly for the doubtful advantages of an alliance with others who may not accept it.

ORGANIC CHURCH STRUCTURE.

Then there is the subject of church organization. We hold that the church to-day should be an exact reproduction of the church of old, in organic form, having in it apostles, prophets, evangelists, and all the other officers named in the New Testament Scripture (Ephesians 4:11, 14; 1 Corinthians 12:28; and many other passages). Where the duties of these officers are not clearly defined in the Bible we hold that God is prepared to reveal that which is lacking so that their duties may be known.

No one of these other churches is prepared to accept such a position. We are not willing to abandon it, because we are told that God "set" these officers in the church, and we can not admit that the necessity of their existence has lapsed, or that man has a right to remove them, or that God will be pleased to accept a fragmentary imitation of the completely organized and glorious church that Christ said he would build upon the rock of his divine Sonship.

OUR CONCLUSION.

An examination of these things and others that differentiate us from all other churches tends to strengthen us in our position, and does not suggest to us that we can afford to relinquish any of the vital truths for which our fathers stood. Like Luther, we must say: "Here we stand! God help us, we can not do otherwise!"

BEGIN NOW.

The Exponent for May contains the official minutes in full of what was done and passed at the last General Convention.

Do you want to know just what the convention did in the matter of graded lessons? Subscribe now and ask for the May issue, of which there are a limited number.

During the coming year, special helps for teachers and officers will be a leading feature. Every live Sunday school worker should take the Exponent. Fifty cents a year to any address. Special rates to schools.

We want all ministers under conference appointment to have the Exponent and Senior Quarterly free of charge. All we ask in return is that they read them and induce others to subscribe. Our ministry list is revised every June. If ministers want these valuable publications the coming year, they will please make fresh application to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, mentioning their appointment. If we do not hear from you, will take it for granted you do not want them any longer.

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

METHODIST GAIN.—The Methodist Episcopal Church is in general conference at Minneapolis, Minnesota. The following press report may be of interest:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, May 2.—Criticism of the condition which enabled the church to gain "less than two per cent of its membership in the last year" and charges that the church press was being used "as a free forum by the promoters of disaffection" were made in the bishop's report to the quadrennial general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to-day.

The report, known as the "Episcopal Address," was signed by eighteen bishops in this and six bishops in foreign countries, and is regarded as the most important document to come before the conference, as it contains the bishops' recommendations for the future policy of the church.

The report was read by Bishop Earl Cranston, of Washington, District of Columbia. Another section, upon which the bishops have been at work since the general conference at Baltimore will be delivered to-morrow.

"In the last year," said the report "the church has made a net gain of but 55,000, which is less than two per cent as the outcome of the year's activities and the outlay of many millions of dollars. The statistical paradox glares us out of countenance. It shames and humiliates us. What are honors of offices worth in any army that does not win battles? No marvel that some are proposing to reduce the major generals to post duty."

This was a reference to a proposed limiting of the activities to a local district of the bishops whose jurisdiction now is universal.

Among the reasons for the meager growth, as set forth, were a too strict application of the law of the church, demanding that all members who remove from a given community without their church letters be dropped from membership after one year.

"A fair calculation," the report said, "reveals the astounding fact that probably not less than 500,000 members disappeared from our rolls by reckless use of the 'dropping process.'"

"Nevertheless we still face the patent fact that our distinctive doctrines are not being emphasized as they once were, or where preached, are discredited for the time by a gainsaying world drunk with vain philosophies and sated with glutinous indulgence."

THE "TITANIC."—The whole world stands appalled at the wholesale loss of life in the disaster which overtook the White Star Line Steamer Titanic. We were unable to mention the accident when news first came because of lack of space. The HERALD is of course not a newspaper, and the world already knows the harrowing details and incidents of the sinking of this leviathan of the ocean when making her initial voyage. We give elsewhere in this issue a very concise and clear account of the accident and the subsequent events, as taken from that worthy weekly periodical, The Outlook.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."—PART 23.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

WHICH WAS FIRST?

On page 187, Traum flourishes his quill, and drops it onto the sheet with the following:

Further, Mr. Kelley, your church, according to Whitmer, did not have any apostles at the very beginning. It was "regularly organized" on the sixth day of April, 1830, with the elder as the highest officer in the church. This "apostle" business came later. With the church of Christ the apostles were first. In the first church they were indispensable; in the Mormon Church they are purely artificial excrescences on the body of the church. There never has been a time that they have been anything but a fungous growth. They are not indispensable even to the Mormon Church. The elder can baptize, and he can lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and perform every act that is deemed essential by Mormons to induct a "Gentile" into the fold. And, as we shall see before we are through with the priesthood question, there is not even a "mark" of identity between the Mormon Church and the primitive church.

Indeed; "With the church of Christ the apostles were first!" Then they were not apostles until Pentecost, for the Campbellite position has been now, (unless they have been forced therefrom,) that the church did not exist until Pentecost. But, inasmuch as Traum's position is that the apostles were first in Christ's church, and the Bible affirms that "God" set them in, not under, nor around, the church, therefore the church was in existence when Jesus Christ "ordained twelve, and sent them out to preach."—Mark 3: 14. And as Jesus Christ was baptized into the church, and was a member of the same, and an anointed minister of the gospel (Luke 4: 18), it follows that the church was in existence when John the Baptist represented the claims of the same, and that, therefore, Traum better look out, or he will find that the church could be built by an officer lower than "elder"—an Aaronic priest! But does our very profound critic repudiate the progressive development of the kingdom of God? Does he interpret church building as he interprets "world building"? Does he say that God built the church as he built the earth? out of nothing? Let us give the Lord the same opportunity we would ask for ourselves. But the statement is untrue. Both Joseph and Oliver were "apostles." The section in Doctrine and Covenants, from which Traum endeavors to quote, contains the identical language that they were "apostles," in the following English:

The rise of the church of Christ in these last days, being one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh, it being regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month which is called April; which commandments were given to Joseph

Smith, jr., who was called of God, and ordained an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the first elder of this church; and to Oliver Cowdery, who was also called of God, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to be the second elder of this church, and ordained under his hand; and this according to the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be all glory, both now and for ever. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1.

Doctrine and Covenants 103: 1 says:

Behold, there shall be a record kept among you, and in it thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of the church through the will of God the Father, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ; being inspired by the Holy Ghost to lay the foundations thereof, and to build it up unto the most holy faith.

This language is a part of the instruction given the same day the church was organized. In 1829, the Lord informed Oliver Cowdery that he would "speak" unto him, "even as unto Paul mine apostle, for you are called even with that same calling with which he was called."—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3. Did not Elder Traum know this? If not, he has "returned from the investigation," in poor shape for an attack. He does not seem to be aware of the scriptural use of terms. Peter was "an apostle," yet he calls himself "elder," in the fifth chapter of 1 Peter, 1st verse, as follows: "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder and a witness of the sufferings of Jesus Christ." Also the Apostle John, second epistle 1: 1, "The elder unto the elect lady, and her children (the church and its members), whom I love in the truth."

And 3 John 1: 1, "The elder unto the well beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth." Apostles are elders, but elders are not necessarily apostles. Gold is metal, but all metal is not gold. If the elder can do the work of an apostle, then the Apostles Peter and John held an unnecessary office. The apostolic office is a sinecure. If "the elders" now, can perform the work of apostles, "the elders" in the New Testament times, could do the work of the apostles, and hence apostles were not needed in the church of Jesus Christ in New Testament times, and the work of Jesus Christ choosing and ordaining "twelve men" whom he "named apostles" and whom "God set in the church," some of them as "pillars," supporting the structure, was a work of supererogation. What a pity God did not take Elder Traum as one of his chief "counselors" in the building of his church! Elder Traum could have stood up in that grand council, and informed the Almighty that the "elders are the highest in authority," and they could do the work of apostles; that apostles were "a fungous growth," and "purely artificial excrescences on the body of the church"; and of course God would have been brought to terms! But the Bible does not justify the assumption of the critic. It teaches that the apostles' duties are general, and the elders' local. But if true, that the elders can do the work of apostles, then why not reason that the "elder" is not necessary, because the apostle can do all the work of the elder? But Traum should remember, that his vain course of theorizing places God in this dilemma, and makes him responsible for this work of supererogation.

For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts, differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering: or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation. He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity: he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness.

DOES THE OFFICE SURVIVE?

On page 188, Mr. Traum again quotes from Presidency and Priesthood, page 45, and, as usual, disjoints the members of the paragraph. Elder Kelley is arguing concerning the offices of the priesthood existing "with, or without an occupant"; using the office of President of the United States as an illustration in fact. Traum says, "We are not arguing that the office does not remain after the death of the occupant," but wishes to know "the due process of law" by which anyone is called to occupy such vacancy. If Traum admits the fundamental truth that the office does not die, or expire with the death of the officer, or expiration of the term of office, he is admitting that "fungous growths," or "artificial excrescences on the church," are perpetrated, and at the death of that "fungous growth," or "artificial excrescence," can be filled with other growths of like character, and so we have the constitution of God's government,—the gospel, ordained of God, providing for "fungous growths," "artificial excrescences," for the same law that provides for elders provides for all the offices of the government. The Apostle James, and the Patriarch David, are nowhere with this prodigy from Hiram. They taught, "the law of the Lord is perfect." The perfect law, constitution, or covenant of "God, through Christ, was confirmed with an oath." The Almighty said: "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my mouth." The words of this covenant "shall never depart out of thy (Christ's) mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, (the gospel children) from henceforth and for ever."—Isaiah 59: 21. What word did Christ use when he ordained "twelve men"? Mark you, God's "WILL" through Jesus Christ is the constitution or covenant. The office is in the constitution. He named the official office "apostle." Hence the "will" of God, the covenant, provides for the "due process of law" which makes apostles, and God sets them in the church. Diatheke is the original word from which we get the word covenant, and signifies "arrangement, to set, to establish, to constitute"; hence the organization of the church in its full complement of officers, laws, and supernatural endowments, is God's "arrangement," he has "set" the "members in the body as it pleased him," i. e., "according to his will." He has established the order of "organization" and government, and the "arrangement" is never to be abolished "from henceforth and for ever."

Question. How are apostles constituted? Answer. By the unchangeable covenant—constitution—the eternal gospel—the unalterable "will of God." Proof: "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ," how? "By the will of God."—2 Corinthians 1:1. Proof number 2: "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ," how? "By the will of God."—Colossians 1:1. Proof number 3: "Paul called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ," how? "Through the will of God."—1 Corinthians 1:1.

Now it is a maxim in the Christian code, that the concurrent testimony of three is credible, hence we will adduce the testimony of Peter and Christ: "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ," how? "Through the righteousness [will] of God, and our Savior Jesus Christ."—2 Peter 1:1. "I come to do thy will, O God," (Hebrews 10:7) with: "I have manifested thy name unto the men [apostles] which thou gavest me out of the world," also: "I pray for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine."—John 17:6-9. This is quite sufficient to show that the will of God—constitution of the church—provides for apostles. Let us note an item with respect to "secondarily prophets." Are they constituted by the will of God? Peter says: "They came NOT in olden times by the WILL OF MAN."—(2 Peter 1:21), then they came by the will of God. Proof: "Therefore said the wisdom of God, I WILL send them PROPHETS, and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute."—Luke 11:49. Here it is "will" send them. Every proposition or word shall be established, and it is here demonstrated that those officials whose divinely specified and defined names are expressive of office were "set in the church" by the hand, "will" of God—the covenant or constitution.

"A POSITIVE LINE OF THOUGHT."

But as chapter 14, is summarized into eleven propositions, which Traum characterizes as "a positive line of thought," we will consider them, and determine what, if any, value may be attached to them. On page 189, this "positive line of thought" commences as follows:

First: That the apostles of Jesus Christ were never called "officers" from one end of the New Testament to the other. That they served Christ independent of any church government is patent to him who will take pains to inform himself on the question.

Second: That Christ is the head of the church, claiming all authority in heaven and in earth.

Third: That this work had within its intention the evangelization of the world. His promise was that he would be with them even unto the end of the age.

Fourth: That this work has within its intention the evangelization of the world. His promise was that he would be with them even to the end of the age.

Fifth: That the limitations imposed by human mortality would in a few years cause the cessation of the individual labors of the men chosen for that work. So far as the united testimony of history and tradition supplies the facts, we have no reason to believe that any apostle survived the century in which Christianity was born.

Sixth: That in an earlier period of Christ's ministry he said to these same men, whom he later chose for this definite work, that he had ordained them and chosen them that they might bring forth fruit, and that their fruit should remain; which was not true, if their work was swallowed up in a complete and universal apostasy. According to the Mormon position, the fortunes of the church had suffered disaster, so much so that she was lost for centuries before the coming of the Prophet Joseph Smith. But Christ's promise was to these men, not that they should remain, but that their fruit should remain.

Seventh: That the gospel was of such character and based upon such facts that it required witnesses to testify to its underlying facts, and for this specific purpose were these men chosen. Their frequent assertion was, "whereof we are witnesses." Apart from their testimony, there is not a man on earth who can say that Jesus left behind him an open tomb and ascended to glory. Hence their testimony, direct and irrefutable, was indispensable to the establishment and perpetuation of Christianity.

Eighth: Witnessing being their peculiar work, its character was such that it would admit of no substitute, and consequently could have no successor. There is no amount of holy palaver or the "laying on of hands" that is able to make an apostle of a man who has not witnessed the facts upon which the gospel is based. No testimony is valid to the establishment of an objective fact that is borne by one who had not seen the very fact in question. This is so manifest as to require no further elaboration. Paul is no exception.

Ninth: That if we can be assured that the facts in question have been credibly confirmed by the witnesses originally chosen for that purpose, then we will have gained everything that direct communication with the original witnesses might have supplied us. A will once placed on probate, although witnesses who confirmed it are long since dead, will stand as long as the court having jurisdiction in the case is in existence. The New Testament is such a will, in force after the death of the testator and not before, and confirmed by men who were competent to testify, and will stand as long as the court having jurisdiction remains in existence. Hence we read: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them who heard him; God also bearing witness, both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his will?" That scripture contains every essential feature of our plea. It was the Lord who took the initiative; it was the Lord who delegated these men to speak intelligently and advisedly upon the facts in question, and God rendered the further confirmation by signs and wonders, gifts, of the Holy Ghost, according to his will. This was the "seal of their apostleship," and all was for the confirmation of the gospel.

Tenth: That we are warranted in our conclusion that everything was simply confirmatory, ceased by the limitation imposed in the accomplishment of the purpose at hand; and since this, on the one hand, consisted of living men, apostles, who in labor were limited to their lifetime, and on the other of "signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost," these being no longer necessary, ceased, and this being the purpose of their having been given, added reason must be assigned for their continuance beyond the accomplishment of that design.

Eleventh: That apostolic succession of men from the viewpoint of the gospel is absolutely impossible. To make an apostle would require a process not essentially different in this year of grace from that required in the days of the church's establishment. And there is nothing short of the same demonstration which those men made that will show any man to-day entitled to that high station. Since, then, apostolic succession of men is impossible, we are driven to the conclusion that the only succession that will meet the exigencies of the case is the apostolic succession of truth. It is the only conceivable way in which Christ can keep his promise to be with these men to the end of the age, and that in calling them to their work he had decreed that their fruit should remain. And any pretension of any man to this office, and any claim that it has duties which he is capable of performing, or that it is an office that Christ intended should remain in the church, is as wicked as it is presumptuous, and possible only to one who has become a party to a fraud as great as Mormonism is shown to be. And we can but conclude that Kelley has one mark that the "detector" does not have, as also are there some "marks" on the "detector" which Kelley does not have, and a very strong suspicion arises that his apostleship is "man-made and spurious."

This first proposition may be set down as false, in whole and in part. A man sometimes can, by making his affirmations in his own name, without conditions or modifying clauses, succeed in persuading a great many people to take his view in certain given cases. A reliable man may stand up in a crowd and get a certain following by making dogmatic assertion based on his own observation that the moon is made of green cheese, but if he is clumsy about it and begins by saying, "Gentlemen, I have not personally examined this cheese question, but I have a friend who is out a good deal of nights, who hands me a statement, based upon the calculations of his hired man, which goes to show conclusively not only that the moon is made of cheese, but that the color of it is well defined," he need not complain if his audience loses interest in the demonstration. Mr. Traum does not believe that the apostles were officers, and are never so "called from one end of the New Testament to the other." But to establish this first proposition, he has not even evidence of the "hired man," or the "friend." The whole thing is such a species of sophistical quibbling, that it is hardly worthy of the title. We are sorry to say that he is "up against" the word of God so often, but here it is: "It is written in the book of Psalms, let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein, and let another take his office."—Campbell's Translation, Acts 1:20. This term "office" was used by the apostles as expressive of the position, in the church, Matthias should occupy as the successor of Judas.

The Authorized Version in speaking of Judas, says: "his bishopric let another take."—Acts 1: 20. Anderson's translation uses the same term, office. Paul says: "If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work."—1 Timothy 3: 1. The Catholic translation renders Acts 1: 20, "his bishopric let another take." The 25th verse of Acts 1 says: "And they (the apostles) prayed, and said, Thou Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship from which Judas fell," etc. Here is something called "apostleship" from which, or out of which Judas fell. What was it? Webster defines "apostleship" as "the office, or dignity of an apostle."

Webster's ecclesiastical definition of the term office, a charge or trust of a sacred nature conferred by God himself; as, the office of priest in the Old Testament; and that of the apostles in the New Testament." Judas the apostle held a bishopric, and Paul says the position of a bishop is an office. The successor of Judas was to take this bishopric or an office. The Apostle Paul, when writing to the Romans 11: 13 says: "As I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office." How does this compare with Traum's theory that the position of the apostles was that of no office? Alexander Campbell is squarely against him again; in his debate with Bishop Purcell, at Cincinnati, Ohio, he says: "The third testimony on which we rely is Ephesians 4: 11. This passage sums up all the officers or gifts which Jesus gave the church after his ascension into heaven. "And," says Paul, "he gave some apostles, etc."

Again, "They were all co-elders, co-bishops, co-apostles, as respected each other, and as respected all other officers, the apostles were first."—Debate, Campbell and Purcell, page 14. Again, in speaking of the "Christian system," Campbell says: "It establishes the necessary offices for its perpetuity and growth." See Christian System, page 82. "It," the "system," does this.

Thus we array Campbell versus Traum again, and Traum versus the Bible. But Traum says, "The apostles served Christ independent of any church government," and this is patent to him who will "take pains to inform himself." Why, Paul says, "Christ is the head of the church; and he is the Savior of the body, therefore as the church is subject unto Christ," (Ephesians 5: 24,) Traum knocks the primitive apostles out of even membership in the church. Christ was an apostle also. Was he a member of the church? Is he an apostle now? Is he in the church now? Nay, further, the church is "the body of Christ," (Ephesians 1: 23) and if they "served him (Christ) independent of any church government," they were not in "the body of Christ"—the church, and if one can not be in the body of Christ without being a member of "the church," then the apostles were operating outside of Christ, outside the church! Strange, that the "head of the church," would select, and ordain men, and commit to them the "law of the government," the power to execute, and represent the claims of the kingdom, when they were nonmembers of his government! What were these men? A twilight zone between Christ, and his body, the church? Where were they as "officers," operating with respect to the church? They were "in the vine," (Christ) and he enjoined them to "abide in me" (John 15: 4, 5), and were of the number to whom Jesus said: "If you continue in my word you are my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth."—John 8: 32. Traum's theory has the ancient apostles "serving Christ independent" of "the doctrine of Christ," which is the law governing the church, and hence the apostles, "abiding not in the doctrine of Christ, had neither the father nor the Son."—2 John 9-11. On page 187, he had just said: "With the Church of Christ the apostles were first, IN the first church, they were indispensable." But now he has the services of the apostles, independent of the church government." Queer! But it is useless to pursue this objection farther. The same church Traum represents, professes to believe that "apostles and prophets," are the "foundation on which the ancient church was built," (Eph. 2: 20) yet Traum knocks the foundation (so-called) from under the church of Christ, and sets the foundation out in an "independent" position from the building. In the face of Traum's protest, Paul's inspired language is, "Now hath God set IN the church,—not above it, not around it, not under it,—first apostles," etc. As showing the services rendered Christ by the apostles, as being subject to the government of the church, and in direct relationship, the Scriptures teach that the category of supernatural endowments including "apostles" were given "for the perfecting of the Saints," and for "edifying of the body of Christ" (Ephesians 4: 12). And Jesus committed to Peter "the keys of the kingdom of heaven," and taught, "whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant."—Matthew 20: 27. Paul addressing the church at Corinth says: "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake."—2 Corinthians 4: 5.

How could Paul, with his associate apostles, preach Christ Jesus our Lord, and also preach that they were "servants" to the church "for Jesus' sake," and yet "serve" Christ in an "independent" way? What! serve Christ independent of Christ's body, the church? Paul, as well as the other apostles, were moving along in the gospel way, with, and for the churches, and all were subject to Christ as the head of the body. They all were "laborers together with God" (1 Corinthians 3), and subject to the "law of God" which is above all priesthood, and which gave Paul "the care of all the churches for a season," put aim in a "dependent" way, directly, upon the demands and necessities of "all the churches," (local congregations constituting the general government,) so that in 2 Corinthians 11: 28, he says: "Besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches."

Their official duties were both at home, and abroad. Why doesn't our critic read all the epistles to the churches? Has he read: "John to the seven churches in Asia"? "What you see, write in a book, and send it to the churches."—Revelation 1: 4, 11.

We can agree to propositions 2, 3, and 4, but number 5 is partly in accord with Bible teaching, and partly out of harmony with respect to the purposes of God. We can see how that mysterious sunderer of body and spirit called death, lays limiting bands on the ministrations of the gospel in the flesh, but we can not see how, or that it did, hinder that glorious personage to which the revelator was about to render homage (and was forbidden), to minister, even in a cooperative sense, as a "fellow servant," and "one of the brethren, the prophets." If the doctrine of angels "ministering for those who shall be heirs of salvation," is untrue, Paul made a great mistake. Hebrews 1: 14; Revelation 19: 10; 22: 8, 9. This latter quotation cited, gives the statement of the angel, as follows: "I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book." The angel did not say, "I am your servant," but I am your "fellow servant." "Fellow," is defined, 1, an equal in power, rank, and character, or the like. 2, A companion, a comrade, an associate. 3. A sharer, one of a pair, two things used together, a mate. How can one, equal in rank, power, and character to another, be that man's servant? Were the negro slaves, or servants, equal in power, rank, or character to their masters? Paul says, that Epaphras was his "dear fellow prisoner." Did he mean he was his dear prisoner? The angel who ministered to John as his "fellow servant" of Jesus Christ, was on a gospel mission, or he was not. Will Elder Traum inform us which?

The latter part of number 5 is rather sweeping, in that it assumes that Elder Traum has "the united testimony of history and tradition," establishing the fact of the death of every apostle of the primitive church. I don't like the statement, because I read in the gospel given by Saint John:

Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved, following; (which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?) Peter seeing him, saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true.

Elder Traum may perform the task of asking the reliable historian, if there be any, who has written the account, if there be an authoritative one, of the death of John, the Apostle, why Jesus was sent into the world to teach, and bear witness to all truth, and did not correct the mistake of the apostles, when they had received the idea that John was to remain. Instead of correcting it, he makes it more positive by saying, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" It will not do to produce as witnesses of his death, those who themselves did not live till from one hundred to seventeen hundred years after the death they record took place. Such testimony would not be accepted in any court, nor could it have weight with jurors in any trivial case.

THE FALLING AWAY FROM PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.—PART 3.

BY WILLIAM WOODHEAD.

WHAT SOME GREAT PREACHERS SAY ABOUT BAPTISM.

John Wesley says, "We are buried with him, alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." See Wesley's Notes. McKnight (Presbyterian) "He (Christ) submitted to be baptized, that is to be buried under the water by John." See "On the Epistles," page 85.

Edinburgh Encyclopedia: "In the time of the apostles the form of baptism was very simple, the person to be baptized was dipped in a river or vessel with the words Christ had ordered." See Article Baptism.

Van Osterzee (Dutch Reformed): "History teaches that baptism at a very early period degenerated from the primitive simplicity. It was originally administered by immersion." Form of Baptism, page 119.

Mosheim says: "The sacrament of baptism was administered in this century (the first) without the public assemblies, in places appointed and prepared for that purpose, and was performed by an immersion of the whole body in the baptismal font." See his Church History, volume 1, page 46.

Dean Stanley says England lays less stress on its retention of what is undoubtedly the primitive, apostolic, and was until the sixteenth century the universal mode of baptism in Christendom which is still retained throughout the Eastern churches, and which is still in our church as positively enjoined in theory, as it is universally neglected in practice, namely, the Oriental, strange, inconvenient, and to us almost bar- barous practice of immersion. See Form of Baptism by Briney, pages 107, 108, (italics mine).

Doctor Wall looks over the pages of church history for the early practice of affusion baptism and about the most ancient case he cites is Novatian, of A. D. 251. Of Novatian's baptism, the then bishop of Rome says that Novatian was sick "with an obstinate disease and being supposed at the point of death, was baptized by aspersion in the bed on which he lay: if indeed it be proper to say that one like him did receive baptism. But neither, when he recovered from disease did he partake of other things, which the rules of the church prescribe as duty, nor was he sealed (in confirmation) by the bishop. But as he did not obtain this how could he obtain the Holy Spirit." See Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History, by Briney, pages 107, 108, (italics mine).

This is one of Doctor Wall's most ancient cases of baptism by aspersion, and the above is Eusebius's account of it. Novatian was supposed to be at "the point of death," and for that reason was baptized in bed by aspersion, if, says the Bishop of Rome, it be proper to say that one like him did receive baptism.

Why did bishop of Rome, whom Eusebius quotes here, question Novatian's baptism? Why does Eusebius quote this bishop with approval? Why did Novatian not partake of the other things, which the rules of the church prescribed? Why wasn't he confirmed by the bishop like others were? Why make this fuss about aspersion baptism as late as A. D. 251 if this kind of baptism had been the practice for two hundred years? Eusebius had gone through church history with a torchlight in hand, yet he, too, questions aspersion baptism. The facts are it was a new innovation about this time. Vales says "that they who were baptized in their beds (like Novatian was) if they recovered again, should afterwards go to the bishop, that he might supply what was wanting in that baptism." See Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History, page 251, note 1 (italics mine). Something lacking we see about aspersion baptism. They thought first that in case of deathbed repentance it might do, but if the sick person got well it would not do.

Doctor Wall makes out his case that Novatian was so baptized and that Christians approved of it, and so they did, but some Christians approved of spiritual wifery, human sacrifice, Adam God, a community of women. They condemned marriage and adored the cross, but that doesn't prove those things right by any means. The trouble is, they can prove too much about the church by this time. The church was going the wrong way in many things long before Novatian was ever heard of. And Doctor Wall might just as well have proved that Novatian was ordained to the ministry "by men that were drunk,"

Bloomfield (Episcopalian) says, "He (Christ) underwent the rite of baptism by being plunged into the water." See Form of Baptism, page 66 (italics mine).

WHY THE ORDINANCES WERE CHANGED.

Bishop Kenrick (Roman Catholic) says: "The change of discipline which has taken place in regard to baptism should not surprise us: for although the church is but the dispenser of the sacraments, which her divine spouse instituted, she rightfully exercises a discretionary power as to the manner of their administration . . . the power of binding and loosing, which she received from Christ, warrants this exercise of governing wisdom: that the difference of times and places being considered condensation may be used with regard to the mode of administering the sacraments without danger to their integrity." Ibid., page 116. (Italics mine.)

Dean Stanley (Episcopalian) says: "With a few exceptions just mentioned the whole of the western churches have now substituted for the ancient bath, the ceremony of sprinkling a few drops of water on the face, the reason of the change is obvious. . . . Not by any decree of council or Parliament, but by the general consent of Christian liberty, this great change was effected. There is no one who would now go back to the old practice. It had no doubt the sanction of the apostles and their Master. It had the sanction of the venerable churches of the early ages and of sacred countries of the East.

"Baptism by sprinkling was rejected by the whole ancient church (except in the rare case of deathbeds or extreme necessity) as no baptism at all, almost the first exception was the heretic Novatian" (and this was as late as A. D. 251,) "but speaking generally the Christian civilized world has decided against it" (immersion). "It is a striking example of the triumph of common sense and convenience over the bondage of form and custom. Perhaps no greater change has ever taken place in the outward form of Christian ceremony with such general agreement. It is a greater change even than that which the Roman Catholic Church has made in administering of the Lord's supper in the bread without the wine. For that was a change which did not affect the thing that was signified: whereas the change from immersion to sprinkling has set aside the larger part of apostolic language regarding baptism and has altered the very meaning of the word." See Baptism, What It Is, pages 60, 61. (Italics mine.)

as dipping in baptism." See Booth's Pedobaptism, volume 1, page 192 (italics mine).

Doctor Johnson (Episcopalian,) concerning giving of the bread only to the laity, says, "They (Catholics) may think that in what is merely ritual deviation from the mode may be admitted on the ground of convenience, and I think they (the Roman Catholics) are as well warranted to make this alteration as we are to substitute sprinkling in the room of the ancient baptism." See Form of Baptism, by Briney, page 119 (italics mine).

No claim here we see that sprinkling or pouring was ever practiced in the apostolic age. No, no; they just enter a plea of guilty to changing the ordinances. The Master said, "He that entereth not by the door into the sheep fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." (John 10: 1.)

Again he said: "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered, and men gather them and cast them into the fire, and they are burnt."—John 15: 6.

The gospel platform was made in heaven. (John 14: 24.) A great deal is said about political platforms not being binding. No wonder. If God Almighty can not make a gospel platform to please his preachers, one that they can stand on, what can we expect from the politicians? In the commission to preach the gospel to all the world Jesus said, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world." (Matthew 28: 20.) Baptism and the communion are among the things to be observed, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Ibid., 28: 19.)

And of the communion Paul says: "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread: and when he had given thanks, he brake it and said, Take, eat. This is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."—1 Corinthians 11: 23-26. (Italics mine.) Paul says: "Now I praise you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you."—1 Corinthians 11: 2 (italics mine).

We see that the above ordinances had the sanction of the apostles and the Master. Yet these men set their own will above that of their Savior's. He said, "Observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." We say, "All right, dear Lord; we will when it suits our convenience and common sense. But that Oriental, inconvenient, and to us almost barbarous practice of immersion, we just can't stand it."

Yes; but the Oriental had nothing to do with making immersion a religious rite. The gospel plan was made in heaven. It is a message from heaven and not the Orient. Now, if the Lord's commands may be set aside, why did the Father send his Son to this world? If we can set a divine rule aside, and go our own way, the Son need not have come to this world at all. Don't the teachings of these men reflect on the apostles and the Master? What about their common sense? Was the Lord lacking in common sense when John "plunged" him in the Jordan? What about the voice from heaven that approved of that baptism? Why didn't the Lord think about our convenience and common sense when he sent men out with the gospel message, and leave out that strange and to us almost barbarous way of baptizing?

He says, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." The Father, we see, is the author of the gospel plan. Don't we see our ingratitude is rejecting heaven's divine rule, sent to us from the Father? He gave one rule, and one only; men have given us the rest.

Justin Martyr's interpreter, referring to customs used at the rite of baptism, but later than Justin's time says: "The candidate for baptism was placed with his face towards the west, the symbolic representation of the prince of darkness, and then commanded to spit at and renounce the service of his old master, the Devil, and was then interrogated 'Dost thou renounce the world and all its vanities?' Answer, 'I do renounce them.' Next he made an open confession to the bishop." See Justin's First Apology, page 74, note 1.

This spitting at the Devil, with their faces towards the west, and some other customs not noticed here, came to light after Justin's age. The facts are, as different reformers arose they found occasion to change something in Christian doctrines, rites, customs, and practices, and this appears to be the true reason why the New Testament rites are the least in number, the shortest, and the simplest of any. And thus the best adapted to all nations.

Tertullian tells us that the cross was introduced into the worship, "Not that it was imposed by the law of Christ" (notice that, please,) "but introduced by a pious custom as a sensible means to revive their faith, and remind them of the Lord, and to let the heathen world see that they gloried in their crucified Master." See Justin's First Apology, page 68, note 1.

The pagans, too, at this very time used the cross also at their baptisms at their initiatory rites into "the mysteries of Mithria." See Tertullian, pages 217 and 218. And the addition of the cross to Christian worship was but the adoption of a pagan custom. Augustine later on says that "the cross and baptism were never parted." See Justin's First Apology, page 75, note 1. Thus the cross became used as a part of Christian worship without the Lord's or the apostles' approval or consent. Some of the more orthodox preachers appear to have objected to such additions, on the ground that they were borrowed from paganism. See Tertullian, page 207.

Then the church rule enjoined a fast after baptism, because our Lord fasted after his baptism. See Tertullian, page 215. They instituted a fast on Friday because on Friday Christ was crucified. See ibid., 207. And this Friday fast, like the cross, is still with us. And then the church rule instituted a fast on Wednesday, "Because on that day the Jews took council to kill Christ," but then it was "unlawful" to fast on the Lord's day. See Tertullian, page 204. Thus we see how changes, additions, and rites were made and set aside, little by little, until they made an institution which was quite different from the New Testament divine plan, and as heresies grew so did the creeds. Tertullian, Irenæus, and Clement, of the second century, point out how the Christians of their day were then adopting pagan customs. And this is why John Wesley, in his sermon 99, in volume 3, pages 431 to 434, in commenting on the church in the fourth century, said that the Christians then had no more of the Spirit of Christ than the other heathens, because "the church had turned heathen again and had only a dead form left."

There were many kinds of Christians by this time. Some polygamists, or those who held to the community plan, including women, free lovers, anarchists, or those opposed to all civil law, who held that law not only created property but that it also created sin. The Marcionites, a large body of Christians, taught spiritual wifery, but they condemned the marriage relation here, but married here for eternity. Then there were Adam God worshipers, and those that taught human blood atonement. With many Christians Christ was a mere man, the natural son of Joseph, but with many he was God in the flesh, and with others he was neither, but simply a phantom; with others he was a full grown something who came direct from heaven; with others he came from some star, with a body of flesh, but not human flesh. With many he was born of Mary at Bethlehem, but with others he was not born at all. With many he suffered death on the cross, but with others he could not suffer. He could not die, or suffer. He was not crucified at all. It was Simon of Cyrene that was crucified, and not Jesus.

If Jesus were a mere man, as some Christians say, then Christians, like pagans, deified humanity. "But whom say ye that I am?"

Later on, church and state became united, the church dictating to the state, making and unmaking kings; then some of the above customs and rites were abandoned by degrees, the church turning over the enforcement of its commands to the state, and in this way delivered over to the civil magistrates the individual conscience, which clearly belongs to the individual as a free agent and not to the church or state.

Mosheim says: "The public teachers and instructors of the people grievously degenerated from the apostolic character. They seemed to aim at nothing else than to sink the multitude into the most opprobrious ignorance and superstition to efface from their minds all sense of the beauty and excellence of genuine piety, and substitute in the place of religious principles, a blind veneration of the clergy, and a stupid zeal for a senseless round of ridiculous ceremonies. See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, page 138.

These are terrible indictments, to be sure, and if true, confirm the Scriptures on the falling away, or the apostasy.

The papacy came "with a mouth speaking great things"; transubstantiation, the mass, sale of indulgences, the adoration of the mother of Jesus, the invocation of saints, infallibility, the worship of images, celibacy, holy water, the inquisition, the burning of incense, and the burning of heretics to save the soul; some heretics or rebels who were not burnt to death for fear, they cursed to death; all marks of the apostasy.

Jesus said: "This gospel shall be preached in all the world for a witness, and then shall the end come." "This gospel" would be the same gospel when it got over the hills to Bethany that it was at Jerusalem, and the same when it got to Antioch, and the same when it got down to Jericho, and the same old story when it got to Rome; and at Rome Paul left a message for us, viz: "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause division and offenses, contrary to the doctrine which you have learned, and avoid them."—Romans 16:17. And to the Corinthians he said: "Now I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances as I delivered them to you." See 1 Corinthians 11:2. Have we done it? Have we kept the ordinances as the apostle delivered them to the primitive church? No, no. We declare with our own mouths that we have changed the ordinances—God's divine plan, and made it better than it was when it came from heaven, having taken some of the barbarism out of it. "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

The church was a divine institution, and beyond human amendments a human plant grafted on to church ordinances, or rites, and doctrine is but a parasite, and will be rooted up.

BOOK REVIEW.

Seldom does an author picture more vividly and insistently true the result of priestcraft gone mad than does Zane Grey, in Riders of the Purple Sage (Harper & Brothers, net $1.30). The persecution of "Gentiles" and "apostates" by the leaders of Mormonism in Southern Utah as portrayed in the book are entirely in accord with the teachings of the leading men in the dominant church of that period (1871). The shooting, fighting, cattle stealing are unpleasant, but only the natural outcome of the conduct of the men who incited it all.

The personification of the devotion and faithfulness of Mormon women in the person of Jane Witherspoon is exceptionally good and is free from the "streak of yellow" that is so commonly found in the writings on this period of Utah's history. There are pleasant and unpleasant scenes, love and hate, all thrown against a wonderful background. To those who are interested in this phase of Mormonism and who appreciate a bit of stirring fiction we can commend this latest work of Zane Grey.

The Tragedy of the "Titanic": the Disaster.

What was the cause of the terrible and unexampled disaster, the story of which last week filled men and women the world over with sympathy and horror? The answer may be put in a few words: Steaming at high speed in an ice zone after repeated warning. Why, after the disaster, was it inevitable that a large proportion of passengers and crew should perish? Again, in a few words: Because the Titanic, like most ships of her class, carried not merely inadequate, but pitifully insignificant means for preserving life, and was permitted so to do by the negligent laws of Great Britain and the United States. These and the other aspects and lessons of the calamity are discussed elsewhere in this issue. Here we state the facts as they appear from the stories of the survivors. The Titanic, of the White Star Line, the largest, newest, and finest of ocean steamships, sailed from Southampton on her maiden voyage on Wednesday, April 10. Among the encomiums which were published far and wide on this marvel of shipbuilding none was more prominent than that she was "absolutely unsinkable"; and the day after she sank the Line's representative in New York scoffed at the reports because he "knew" that, whatever happened, the Titanic would float! The one great recognized danger to a modern ship is collision, whether with another ship, a derelict, the rocks of a coast, or ice. At this time of year the danger from ice is serious, especially for westbound vessels, which, under the lane system first proposed by Lieutenant Maury, U. S. N., in 1855, take a more northerly route than those eastbound. When ice is reported by other ships or by the Hydrographic Bureau, the westbound vessels should, for safety, keep near the southern limit of the northern lane; moderate speed, the utmost care in navigating, and the closest outlook are obvious requirements. Yet the Titanic, to save time, to make a maiden record, under owner's orders, and in the teeth of warnings, drove, at a speed variously put at from eighteen to twenty-three miles an hour, onto the ice region, and took the risk. On a clear, starlight night, so fine that the Milky Way was noticeably bright, and when there appears to have been no other ice near by than the one berg, at a little after half-past eleven on Sunday night of last week, the vessel struck, nearly, but not quite, bows on. The iceberg was not submerged and invisible, but it is described as from fifty to a hundred feet high. Probably the ship hit a shelf-like projection under water, was lifted up for a moment, and then, as it forced itself forward, its plates beneath the water line were ripped open ("like a great can opener," Colonel Gracie says elsewhere in this issue,) and so many forward compartments were filled that she began to sink by the head. The force of the blow was such that the deck was deeply covered with broken ice. An interview with the quartermaster, who was at the wheel, reported him as saying that the lookout telephoned twice that ice was ahead, the last time just before the ship struck, but that it was impossible to change the course in time to avoid the crash. On board were 2,340 persons; of these 940 made up the force of officers, crew, and servants, 330 were first-class passengers, 320 second class, 750 steerage or third-class. All accounts agree in stating that the shock of the impact was comparatively slight; there was no panic; a passenger tells us that at least one party of card players resumed their game after the collision; probably some of the women passengers were lost because they did not realize the danger and go on deck until it was too late. The commander of the vessel, Captain E. J. Smith, a veteran in the service, went down with his ship. Mr. J. Bruce Ismay, the head of the White Star Line, testified before the Senate's investigating committee that he came away on the last boat, and that he entered it only after a call for more women to go in it met with no response.

AFTER THE COLLISION.

It is easy to criticize what was done by men under the instant stress of impending death and in confusion and night. That there were mistakes made in handling the situation is certain; the lifeboats, which at best could hold but a third of those in peril, were not in all cases full; they were not properly manned, officered, or provisioned, and in some cases even women had to help row; some women who might have been taken off were left behind; some men who were not entitled to precedence were saved; one man is alleged to have forced his way into a boat after flourishing and firing a pistol; there are indications of hurriedness and "happy-go-lucky methods," to quote a passenger's phrase. Yet in the main the conduct of officers and men seems to have been praiseworthy; they enforced the law of the sea, "Women first"; they suppressed some attempts on the part of steerage passengers to rush for the boats; as a rule they enforced the basic law that in the presence of death all men are on a level of humanity. Accounts of the seven hundred survivors differ strangely as to individual incident, but there is abundant evidence of courage, calmness, and unselfishness on the part of passengers; many women refused to leave their husbands, as in the touching case of Mrs. Isador Straus; husbands bore calmly the parting from wives, as in the pathetic incident of Mr. George A. Harder, returning with his bride from their honeymoon trip; Colonel Astor, of New York, says a fellow passenger, helped children, bade his wife farewell calmly, and "no one could have been braver." Of many a man there, notable and unknown, it may be said that he died like a gentleman. Most of those left on board went down with the ship; a few threw themselves overboard, and of these one or two were almost miraculously saved by the boats; there may have been one or more cases of suicide; the rumor that Captain Smith, or the first officer, or both, committed suicide, proved baseless, and the report that the ship's band played "Nearer, My God to Thee," just before the Titanic sank is not confirmed. It is believed that when the water reached the ship's boilers an explosion took place, and sketches drawn from memory on the Carpathia by a passenger of the Titanic represent her as having broken in two before she sank. The time of sinking is placed at 2.20—less than three hours after the vessel struck. The survivors in the boats underwent the most distressing horror of the night when they saw the Titanic with their fellow passengers and those they loved go down before their eyes.

RESCUE AND SUSPENSE.

Again wireless telegraphy has saved many hundred lives, as it did in the Republic disaster. Out into the air in widening circles for hundreds of miles the Titanic's wireless flung its message of appeal (the S. O. S., three dots, two dashes and three dots), and within a few hours the Virginian, from Montreal, the Olympic, the Titanic's twin White Star boat, the Cunarder Carpathia, and other ships were at full speed to the rescue. The Carpathia was the first to arrive, too late to save the doomed people on the Titanic, but in time, thanks to the moderate sea running, to rescue the seven hundred and five persons in boats. They were suffering from cold, exposure, shock, and grief; several died on the homeward voyage. The country, and indeed the world, was almost sick with suspense and dread. The lists of survivors trickled through the wireless, and now and then there was a pathetic personal message, but not until the survivors reached New York Thursday night were many of the important facts made known. Two things should be noted: first, wireless telegraphy should be under stricter control by the Government, and amateurs should be restrained from interference; second, the very existence of wireless makes rescue of survivors in boats possible where it was not possible before, and therefore doubles the emphasis on the need of lifeboats enough to hold every passenger. These facts should be considered by the committee of Congress which is investigating the disaster, and so also should the abuses connected with the dissemination of rumors or fabrications under the guise of wireless dispatches. One such alleged dispatch the day after the disaster caused false hopes throughout the country by asserting positively that the Titanic was being towed stern first to Halifax by the Virginian. The man who was responsible for such a thing ought to be behind prison bars.

NOTABLE MEN LOST.

Among the fourteen hundred men who died on the Titanic many deserve commemoration; but there were three or four whose personal achievements or public services entitle them to special remembrance at this moment. Frank Davis Millet was what may be called an executive artist; he was not only an accomplished and widely known painter, but he was greatly interested in the fostering and developing of the art. His career was an adventure of the spirit. He enlisted as a drummer boy, and for more than a year saw real service in the Civil War. Then he came home and entered Harvard College. His first work after his graduation was a reporter on the Boston Advertiser, and later he became city editor of the Boston Courier. But art was drawing him, and in 1871 he went to Antwerp to study at the Royal Academy, where he won a prize in his first year. This brought him to the attention of Mr. Charles Francis Adams, who was commissioner to the Vienna Exposition for several New York journals, traveled extensively in Hungary, Turkey, Greece, and Italy, spent a winter at Rome and a summer at Capri and at Venice, and painted his first pictures. In 1877 journalism again called him from the palette and the brush and he became the special correspondent of the New York Herald in the Turkish War, doing such admirable work that the London Daily News appointed him in place of its veteran correspondent, Mr. Archibald Forbes. His work was not only effective, but his gallantry was such that he received decorations from the Roumanian and Russian authorities. He was a member of the Fine Arts Jury of the Paris Exposition in 1878, and director of the decorations for the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, one of the most notable and influential ventures in art yet made in this country. During the Spanish War he represented the London Times and the New York Sun in the Philippines, and later published in book form The Expedition to the Philippines. Meanwhile his hand was not only on the pen, but on the brush. He is represented in the courthouse of Newark, New Jersey, in the Baltimore Custom-House, and in other large public buildings by large mural work; and his pictures are found in almost every museum of art in the country. He belonged to many societies, and at the time of his death was an officer of the American Academy at Rome and deeply interested in its welfare. A man of equal distinction, though in another field, was Mr. Isador Straus, one of three brothers who have made for themselves positions of great influence, not only as merchants, but as philanthropists and workers for civic betterment, and as generous-hearted citizen. He began his career in the South, enlisted in the Confederate army at the age of sixteen, served as a clerk in Savannah and afterwards in Liverpool, joined his father's firm in New York in 1865, and, with his brother Nathan, became a member of the well-known firm of R. H. Macy & Co., of New York. Mr. Straus was a man of wide reading and of tireless public spirit. He was a member of many committees and commissions for various public purposes; he was president of the Educational Alliance, which built and manages the People's Palace, one of the best known and most useful of the various institutions in the East Side tenement district of New York; he was a director in various charitable organizations. He was a man who will be sorely missed in the larger life of Greater New York. One of the most affecting incidents of the calamity was the refusal of Mrs. Straus to leave her husband. They had always been lovers and they were standing together when the ship went down. There are many people in all parts of the world who will always remember Major Archibald Butt, the President's Military Secretary, as a man of great courtesy and natural kindness; one who made what might have been a merely ornamental position of serious value by reason of his fidelity; and whose tact, judgment, and knowledge of men made him the honored aide and companion of two Presidents.—The Outlook.

Peru.

Nowhere else in the world will the architect of scholarly taste find as much to interest him as in Cuzco. Bigness, born of contemplation of nature's gigantic handiwork among the Andes, pervades each successive era. The cyclopean masonry of the pre-Incarial builders, the vast and more elaborate structures of the Incas, and the splendid great cathedral and churches of the colonial Spaniard, rise each upon the ruins of the other—all are ancient to our eyes and of absorbing interest to the antiquarian and architect, as well as to those unskilled in the appraisal of such merit.—From "Peru," by Harry Weston VanDyke, in The Chautauquan for February, 1912.

BOY-NAG.

The mother's influence should certainly be at its strongest during the early years of her son's life. And yet it not infrequently is spoiled by the time he has reached the age of fourteen. In talking with the mother of an unsatisfactory son I can see how anxious and thoughtful and truly good she is, and I wonder what can be the reason that her control over him is so slight. Perhaps at this juncture he comes into the room, and in a moment the mystery is solved. Almost before she has greeted him, she charges him with having inked his collar, or smashed his hat, or she assumes that he will be late for breakfast next morning. In short, she "nags" him.

Now the fact must be faced that little boys are often irritating people to live with; and it sometimes happens that the mother's equanimity is imperiled merely by the persistency in little tricks. It is easy to talk of always serenely compelling your son to obey, but if he will drum on the table with his knuckles, or make a noise when the baby is having his regular nap, something must be done and speedily.

The first thing to be sure of is, that if you "nag," you will lose your influence without curing the annoyance, the reason being very often that the boy is laboring to cure himself, and how can you expect him to continue in his effort if you give him no credit for it? Your business is to set yourself to see the beginning of good in him, and it is very probable that these very annoyances are the outcome of a vigorous vitality, one of the most precious endowments anyone can be blessed with.

To "nag" about trifles is very foolish, because you want your powder and shot for other things. As to the general problem, the first thing is to settle what you mean to stop. Make it then a matter of obedience, and come down on the violation of your orders sharply and promptly. The worst "naggers" are those who make offenses out of things perfectly innocent to the child, simply because they exasperate the elders. But "nagging" is more than foolish. It is the indication of a failure of love, and if the mother's love ever fails, whence is the boy to learn the idea of the love of God? Any display of temper by the parent, no matter how keen the exasperation, is a weakening of the bond, and the immediate conquest will be paid for afterward with compound interest. Remember you are training your son to be a man. Before you revile him, think of what you want him to be twenty or thirty years hence. Or, better still, try not to forget that it is for eternal life that you propose to be training him, and ask yourself, in view of that, if these little annoyances ought to upset the balance of your mind. A mother who often ponders on eternity will not "nag."—The Reverend E. Lytton, in American Motherhood.

Any Kind o' Boy.

I don't know whether I was good,—
I meant to be,—I said I would,—
But auntie watched me all the way.
"Now, don't do this—or that!"—she'd say,
Before I had a chance to be
Jus' any kind o' boy, you see!

If she had given me a chance,
I might 'a led her such a dance—
An' been as bad as I knew how,
An' cut up—an' make an awful row!
An' then I might 'a tried
To make her stretch her eyes—as wide—

An' wonder boys could be so good!
I thought o' that—an' thought I would,
But she jus' watched me all the way,
An' "Don't do this—or that!"—she'd say.
I wish I'd had a chance to be
Jus' any kind o' boy, you see!

Request for Prayer.

Brother A. Kippe, Grosslichterfelde, Germany, requests the Saints to pray for his wife, who is afflicted with rheumatism and lies very ill at the hospital.

Letter Department

LITTLE BLUE, MISSOURI, May 1, 1912.

Editor Saints' Herald: Please give me space in your columns to say to the Saints of the Southeastern Illinois District that I expect to start for my field of labor to-morrow, May 2, if not prevented. I do not know where I shall make my headquarters during the year, but for the present, mail addressed to me at Tunnel Hill, Johnson County, Illinois, will reach me all right.

I see by last week's HERALD that the district conference is to meet there June 1. I hope to be present and learn something of the condition of the work throughout the district. It is just twenty years this spring since I was transferred from that district to Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, and hence I shall have to start in almost as a new man, so far as the condition of the work is concerned, and learn where work is most needed.

Hoping for a successful year's work, I am your brother and colaborer for the Master, ISAAC M. SMITH.

ARTHUR, ONTARIO, March 30, 1912.

Editors Herald: As I read the precious pages of the HERALD the thought comes to me, Is there no one alive enough in Arthur to contribute a few lines to the HERALD? and then I feel ashamed of myself to let such a thought enter my head, for we have as good, faithful workers in Arthur as any have. Few, I hear some one say. Yes, few; but thankful the Lord thought of the few when he said, Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them. We realize he has not forgotten his promise; for as a branch we have come through some very hard trials, but even in the darkest hour the Lord saw fit to manifest himself to us, and called two of our young workers into the priesthood, and encouraged our president by saying he was pleased with him as priest of the branch.

Last Sunday, March 24, we had Brother George Buschlen with us. We were pleased. We don't know why it is, but even the songs have sweeter music when Brother Buschlen comes home. We are all hoping for the time to come when Brother George will say as the prodigal son did, I will arise and go home to my father (Arthur).

We had a series of meetings lasting about four weeks in all, around Christmas time, conducted by Elder James Pycok. All who know Brother Pycok know we had the gospel preached in its fullness to us. One of the leading Methodists who attended the meetings said he heard more gospel in one night than he did in all his life elsewhere. Another Methodist, one of the head men, said we had as sure a foundation as any. Another man, a Presbyterian, whose son is a Presbyterian minister, said Brother Pycok knew the Bible; said if Brother Pycok was in the Presbyterian Church he could get two thousand dollars a year. Haven't heard of Brother Jim accepting the Presbyterian faith, however. No one obeyed, but many were reached and good seed sown. What the harvest will be remains to be seen.

We have preaching service, Sunday school, and Religio on Sundays, with prayer meeting on Wednesday night. A few outsiders attend our Sunday school, as well as other meetings; in fact, our Sunday school secretary is an outsider, and a good active worker.

We have made some little improvements in our little church, and with Brother Goulding, our young elder at the helm, along with the other officers, we feel there is a better future.

I nearly forgot to mention that while Brother Shears is trying to light the fire with his fingers half frozen, and doing the rest of that lowly yet holy janitor work, there is a big smile on his face, and no wonder. George Wilbert arrived last Wednesday.

Ever praying for the advancement of this work,

In gospel bonds,

MYRTLE LANDES.

MERIDEN, IOWA.

Editors Herald: In conversation with some, also reading articles written by others, I find a view maintained that all will be saved, even the devils or sons of perdition, which make themselves devils. (2 Nephi 6:3.) I hope that this statement is true, but will what God has revealed to us support the theory?

The writer in search for evidence upon this subject has failed to find any statement for a foundation upon which to maintain the theory. Now do not throw up your hands in horror and say God is too merciful and loving to never forgive, as I have heard some say. I realize I can not fathom the greatness of his love, but I also read that he is just. In God's dealing with man we find the two attributes go side by side, and one can not step out of its path and infringe upon the other. (Alma 19:13.) He that believeth and is baptized will be saved. He that believeth not shall be damned. Both are illustrated in this verse; the mercy by giving the plan by which to be saved; the justice by imposing the punishment for our transgressing the law of salvation. We can not say this is not a just punishment, any more than the death pronounced upon our first parents. It was for their ultimate good that the law of justice had its course after they had transgressed. So those who believe not had better be damned than saved in the condition they are in. In fact, it is an impossibility to save them in their sins. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:8.) So in our study let us remember the law of justice has its place as well as mercy.

Another point we must consider as students is, there is a qualifying clause to about every statement made. Hence we can not take one statement and build up a theory regardless of others referring to the same subject. He that believeth and is baptized will be saved, provided he continues faithful to the end, is the qualifying clause.

Now to the thought of this letter: We read in Doctrine and Covenants 76:4 that the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord are the sons of perdition. Also we read, For all the rest shall be brought forth in the resurrection of the dead. This proves within itself there is no redemption for these by any law so far given, for if there is no resurrection, how can there be redemption? Jacob explains this very nicely in 2 Nephi 6:3, which says, "Oh the wisdom of God! His mercy and grace! For behold, if the flesh should rise no more our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the Devil, to rise no more."

Our spirits have become like unto him and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery like unto himself. But I think I hear some one say, Maybe the Devil will be saved some time, and surely the sons of perdition will be saved too. Yes, we will allow them salvation if the Devil obtains it, but we read there is salvation in no other than the name of Jesus Christ, and if they are saved it will have to be through him. That would necessarily bring us to the thought, Is the atonement of Christ of any worth unto them? We read that according to the justice of God we were forever to be cut off from his presence because of the transgression of our first parents. (Alma 19:12.) Also the mercy of God could not be extended unto us without an infinite atonement. We can readily see by such quotations as this and 2 Nephi 6:2, and many others, there was a necessity for an infinite atonement. In order to bring us back into the presence of God Christ took upon himself our nature (see Hebrews 2:14), and became like unto his brethren in all things. This seems to be one of the principal points of the atonement. He becoming like us.

We have now discovered two points: First, it took an infinite atonement; and second, the infinite being had to become like us in order to redeem us from death. This atonement is extended to all the sons and daughters of Adam in the condition man is in by the first transgression, which brought about the decree of death, but we do not understand it is for any other condition.

Now these sons of perdition had known the power of God. The atonement had had its effect upon them, but according to the justice of God by doing certain things the penalty of second death is pronounced. We find nowhere in the books where there is to be an infinite atonement to redeem those from this second death, so the mercy of God could be extended unto them.

Now we ask the questions, Is death not death? If it took an infinite atonement to redeem man from one death, will it not from another? If Christ had to take upon himself our nature to redeem us from this first death, would he not have to take upon himself the nature of those who have the second death pronounced upon them in order to redeem them from that death? The Scriptures tell us of no other atonement; no provision recorded that I am aware of, so we feel safe in saying that their punishment is for always from what has been revealed to us.

I will now try and answer the quotations used to show they have a chance. In 1 Corinthians 15:22 we read, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Is there not a qualifying clause in this statement? I believe there is. Except the sons of perdition! For as in Adam all die, for by his disobedience came death, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, for by the atonement we are liberated from this death. This verse is only speaking of Adam's sin. The sons of perdition were liberated from this death, but sinned to that extent that death was pronounced upon them for their own transgression. And this verse only liberates man from the death caused by Adam's sin. So we can not apply it unto those who have had the second death pronounced upon them, for the second death is caused by a separate sin entirely.

It is in this life men become the sons of perdition, and it is in this life this second death is pronounced upon them. We read the second death is like the first. If it took an infinite atonement to redeem us from the first, will it not take the same to redeem those from the second? In Revelation 20: 13 we read, "And they were judged every man according to their work." Yes, all but the sons of perdition. But, says one, surely they have done some good and they will be rewarded for it. We will answer that by a parallel case. Surely Adam had done some good before he transgressed, but was ever doomed to destruction had it not been for the atonement. (2 Nephi 6.) We also read that the elders who fail to do their duty may be saved, but their works burnt. We see there might be exceptions to the rule. I understand by reading the statement in Revelation that it is those who come forth by the resurrection who are the ones to be judged according to their works. It can not refer to the sons of perdition, for they have no resurrection. (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.)

I have not read any place where the Devil is going to be judged according to their works, and if those make themselves devils by their acts, how can they expect to be judged by their works any more than Satan? I never have read of an atonement made for the Devil and his angels. I admit the statement, "Eternal punishment is God's punishment; endless punishment is God's punishment," for God is eternal and endless. But because we have this passage of scripture can we say it applies to every statement the Lord has made, including the words, "for ever," "everlasting," etc.? I admit in some cases where those words are used there is an end, but it can not apply in this case, and all the passages used to show that the words, for ever, endless, everlasting, have an end is nothing more than a play upon words, so far as this subject is concerned, for the atonement did not reach them.

Because it says, "the end thereof," some say that clearly shows there will be an end. Not any more than it shows there will be no end. It doesn't say there will be an end. I believe it is referring to condition and not time, for we read the end, the width, the height, the depth, and the misery thereof they understand not. If it is referring to time, then it must be referring to dimensions of misery, so we ask, How many yards wide is this misery? How many feet high does it extend? And how many feet down does it run? Now we all know this is not the meaning of the language, so it must be referring to the condition and is figurative language.

This seems to be all the principal statements that are used in opposition to the position taken in this article, so I feel safe in saying there has not been revealed to us any law showing the sons of perdition will be redeemed, but everything to the contrary.

As I said at the start, I have no objection to their being saved if God wills, but the books do not warrant us in teaching any such doctrine.

BURTON L. MCKIM.

RHODES, IOWA, March 31, 1912.

Editors Herald: I have only sad news to write, but believing the sentiment of that beautiful hymn we often sing: "We share our mutual woes, our mutual burdens bear; and often for each other flows the sympathizing tear," I write that the dear Saints may share our great sorrow. Dear old Brother Nirk has left the little flock over whom he has had the oversight for many years. He passed from earth life to the paradise of God at 7:45 on the 25th inst. His last hours were fraught with great suffering; so great that it was a relief to his dear ones, who stood at his bedside and witnessed it when the tired spirit was released. And the next morning as we stood by his bier and looked upon that placid countenance and thought of the joyful greeting on the other shore, and how with all earth's environments removed, and the noble mind restored to its full vigor, and the spirit freed from the poor, weak, diseased body, that has so long hampered him, he could again enter upon the Master's work untrammelled, we could not wish him back. While the tears will flow, they are not for him, but for our own loss, and for the loved ones who must live on without him.

His aged companion bore up bravely, helping to care for him till the end came. All of his children except his son John, who lives in the State of Washington, were present at the funeral, four of whom were at his bedside when he breathed his last. The children, seven in all, had been home in January, when their parents celebrated their forty-ninth wedding anniversary.

The funeral services were held in the Methodist Protestant church on the 28th; Charles Butterworth preaching the sermon from, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Both the Methodist Episcopal and the Methodist Protestant ministers of this place assisted in the pulpit, and a quartet from the Methodist Episcopal choir furnished the music.

For years Brother Nirk acted as president of the Des Moines District, and later as bishop's agent, traveling through the district in cold and heat without remuneration from the church. He was respected by everybody who knew him, and loved as a father by all the Saints. His death leaves the little flock here without a shepherd, and the branch without an officer. His last thought seemed to be fraught with anxiety for the work. Even after he could no longer talk intelligently his incoherent utterances were: "Assemble yourselves together; do not wait for me." We expect to carry out his wishes as best we can.

"As falls the trembling autumn leaves,
Our friends are dropping one by one;
Stern death his victims ne'er relieves,
Though we be left to weep and mourn.
The tender smile, the soul-lit beam,
That once illumed the kindly face,
No more for us will shed its gleam;
It faded at death's cold embrace."

In gospel bonds,
MATTIE HUGHES.

CONDON, OREGON, March 29, 1912.

Editors Herald: I desire to bear my testimony through your paper to the love and power of God made manifest in behalf of my companion. Her health had been failing her the last three years, until she was almost a wreck so far as her nervous system was concerned, and although she had been administered to a number of times by different elders, it seemed that she could get no permanent relief, so we decided to take the advice of our home physician and try surgical treatment. Accordingly she took her departure for Portland, Oregon, on February 7, and went to the Good Samaritan Hospital for an operation. Just prior to starting, she requested administration once more, and Brother W. A.

Goodwin, of Portland, and myself, performed the ordinance. During administration God spoke peace to her soul, and the fear and dread were all taken from her and she was told by the Spirit that she should not suffer any sickness from the anæsthetic, and that she should not suffer any pain after the operation, all of which was truly fulfilled. While she lay on the operating table three and one half hours, and was under the influence of the ether from 10 o'clock a. m. to 5.30 p. m., she had no sickness, and when asked if she was in pain she invariably answered, No.

Now she is at home and improving in health every day, thanks to our heavenly Father. Her case was a great surprise to all connected with the hospital. The surgeon and all the nurses were astonished and could not account for the way in which she came through it all. The attending surgeon stated that he had never experienced such a case in all his practice, and he told her before that she would be very sick and suffer a great deal for twenty-four hours following the operation, as it would be a very severe one. He told me afterwards that he performed four different operations all in one.

I ever praise God for blessings received, and pray him to help his people to so live that the time may soon come when the matchless power of Jesus the Christ may be manifest in the world to that degree that the powers of darkness must perforce give way.

Asking an interest in the prayers of all Saints, and ever praying and working for the final culmination of God's work,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

N. E. AUSTIN.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, April 8, 1912.

Editor Herald: I think the readers of the HERALD would like to hear something of interest concerning the Scranton Branch. Those who are acquainted with the conditions here, as compared with those of six or seven years ago, will readily admit that there has been a marked improvement in the work. Previous to my entering the church, the congregation was very small. The Sunday school at that time, only had three classes. There were no young people here at that time, therefore the work was not very interesting to me. Brother Evan Lewis visited here occasionally while living in Wilkesbarre and was always made good use of. Finally he moved to Scranton, which was quite a help to the work. Brother Samuel Brown was sent to labor here, and did good work. To him we give the credit of introducing the Religio work here. He also was a good Sunday school worker, and was loved by the young people.

Later Brother William Lewis came here, and was given the care of the branch, which to my understanding is the duty of the high priest. Through his administration the branch was raised to a higher condition spiritually. At this time we had no priest, as Brother George Morris was at that time in Wales. Therefore it was necessary that an elder should occupy in this office. Brother William Hawkins was teacher; we had no deacon.

Our president before mentioned was indeed a kind and meek man. His sermons always displayed the love of God. I am sure he has left a warm spot in the hearts of some of the Saints here, as well as friends, and we are not surprised at his call to the patriarchal office.

We have four elders, two priests, two teachers, and a deacon. The men seem well capable of taking care of the work here, and some are able dispensers of the word. The Sunday school is far in advance to-day of what it was at the time before mentioned. The Religio also has its hand in the progress of the work. These two have been the making of the young people. If it were not for these, the young people would not be very much at home. It is the auxiliaries that carry the work along; they have been the means of developing the talent in the young.

We have found a good president in Brother William Hawkins, who by his actions proves that he has the interest of the work at heart. Brother George Morris deserves attention. He has tried to improve the musical talent in the branch, and I believe he has in a measure succeeded, although laboring sometimes under adverse circumstances. He has done all he can for the interest of the young people here. He certainly has the welfare of the young people at heart. Also Sister Alice Morris has been a source of encouragement to the young, and is willing to associate with them, and puts before them the proper example, which can not be unnoticed. Brother Walter Lewis, who is one of our branch teachers, and a good teacher in the auxiliaries, expresses his love for the work, and is always trying to suggest something for its good.

We have meetings every week for the young people, in which prayer is offered, and different subjects are selected to talk upon, such as the good characters of the Bible and Book of Mormon. These meetings, if attended by all the young, would create much sociability, as we have a nice group of young people here. Some of us are likely to stray from the narrow way, but there is truly a tie that binds us together, and I hope that we shall in the future be more desirous of conforming to the will of God.

We had the pleasure of using our new communion set on April 7. The president called upon Brother Lot Bishop to offer the dedication prayer. Brethren William Hawkins and Richard Hawkins officiated at this service. Another item of interest was the presentation of a fine organ to the branch. Brother Clynton Hegelin, the husband of the lately deceased Sister Charlotte Hegelin, made the presentation. We have a considerable sum of money on hand towards building a church, and hope that an extra effort will be made along this line in the future, as our place of meeting at present proves to be very inconvenient, especially that of entertainments and weekday meetings.

Brother Archie Hawkins is president of Religio. The writer is superintendent of the Sunday school, with Brother Walter Lewis as assistant in both. There are others of the young people who are assisting with their musical and vocal talent. I trust that we shall move onward.

Your brother in the one faith,

WILLIAM DAVIES, Branch Historian.

313 SOUTH DECKER COURT.

HILLMAN, MICHIGAN, April 12, 1912.

Dear Editors: I have been a silent reader of the SAINTS' HERALD for over eight years. As a branch we are still marching onward and upward, striving to attain to the heights of perfection. Although we are not many in numbers, yet we feel that if we will put forth an effort to do the will of the Father that he will ever be ready to own and bless us.

Just at present we have no Sabbath school but have prayer meetings, preaching services, and Religio, and we enjoy these services very much. Our Religio is very small, but the few who are interested are all very enthusiastic, and each and every one is striving to gain new members. We are all working together, and our prayers are united that it may become an honor and a glory to God's name. We are living in the last dispensation of time, when the signs which are to follow them that believe are to be fulfilled. We have reached the eleventh hour, the hour in which we must prepare ourselves to meet the Bridegroom if we would be ready when he comes. When we hear that summons, if we are not prepared we will be like the foolish virgins and will be shut out of the presence of the Lamb who for our sakes was slain.

We can not fight the Tempter alone; can not overcome all his evil and wicked devices; and so God, in his tender mercy has said, Get those who are strong to help the weaker ones. Let them have charity, which means love, and be patient, kind, and long-suffering. Those who have drifted with the tide and have wandered from the true fold of God are just as precious in his sight, and he rejoices more over them if they climb from degradation upward once more to the heights of nobility, because of their struggle and triumph, than he does over those who have always kept the narrow path, because they who have wandered from the fold and then once more returned are doubly zealous, more earnest, and are as burnished gold.

Often times a kind and gentle word, spoken in all sincerity and truth, will save a soul from plunging into the downward path, and many long, sad heartaches. Let us perform our duties so faithfully that we may have a part in the world to come.

Your sister in Christ,

MERL V. REA.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Minnie Christianson, Marchants Grove: "There are only a few Saints in this part of the country. We have no branch here, but hope to have some day. Elder Mortimer has been here this winter; we were glad to have him with us. I was baptized while he was here, as were also three of my friends. It is so hard for the scattered Saints to live as they should when our homes are surrounded by so many different sects."

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

Funeral services for O. L. Goodale, who died on the 26th at his home here, were conducted at the church on Sunday at 4.30 p. m. At the close of the sermon by Bishop Hilliard, fifty members of the Odd Fellows' lodge took charge and, after the usual funeral ceremony of the order, the remains of our brother were conveyed to Mound Grove Cemetery.

Among others who have passed away are Sister Minerva Wright, who passed away on the 14th at age of eighty-four years; and Sister Bert E. Page, who passed away at the Sanitarium at the age of twenty-four.

On account of the inclement weather, only 560 attended the Sunday school. Patriarch A. White gave wise counsel to both old and young at the morning service. At the afternoon prayer meeting, at which R. M. Elvin was in charge, Pául Craig was ordained to the office of elder, J. F. Curtis and G. E. Harrington officiating. Several of the elders of the missionary force are still with us, who contemplate going soon to their fields of labor. There were several names mentioned for prayers at the prayer service.

A large number of Saints from Oklahoma were delegates at the conference, which fact contributes to the regretful feeling of our people who heard of the loss of life and property which lately occurred in that State.

Were it not for the blessings we receive from our heavenly Father through the gospel, and the hope that fills our hearts of the bright beyond, the Saints might, indeed, like faithful Jacob of old, bewail the loss of precious ones around us.

We in Independence feel somewhat lonely, since on the 19th inst. the conference of 1912 finally adjourned, and our beloved president, at its close, addressed with such calmness and kindly spirit the ministry who were about to leave for their mission fields. The weather throughout the entire session had been delightful, and although in that large concourse of active laborers adverse and varied opinions were expressed, still peace abounded and a spirit of confidence in the work, and equanimity of purpose pervaded the assembly. The absentees were few, order and mutual respect were at all times visible, and the business sessions, the prayer and preaching services, together with the efforts of the musicians and auxiliaries, all reflected efficiency, and were thoroughly appreciated.

On the Sunday afternoon of the 21st there was a lively prayer and testimony meeting, presided over by President F. M. Smith, and there were two ordinations, two blessings of little ones, and a young miss was confirmed by G. E. Harrington and E. Rannie. A few of the eldership lingered with us, and through their prayers and testimonies we continued to be joyful in the work.

Conference Minutes.

MANCHESTER.—The business sessions of the conference were held in the East Branch meeting rooms on April 6 and 8. The morning service of Sunday was also held in the East rooms, the afternoon and evening meetings in the Lecture Palace, Longsight, Manchester. We had used the Longsight public hall for many years for our conferences, but when we applied for its use for this last occasion we were refused it without explanation. We were surprised that the town hall committee could not discriminate between us and the Utah Mormons, but we are taking action which will prevent any misunderstanding in the future. Bishop R. May was with us and presided over all the business sessions. Other visitors were High Priest J. W. Taylor, Elder J. E. Meredith, president of the Seventh Quorum of Elders, from Birmingham, and High Priest T. Taylor, of Leeds. Patriarch James Baty was associated with Brother May in presiding. Opening session called to order at 6.30 p. m., Saturday. Privilege of the floor was given to all visiting brethren. Cyril Armstrong was appointed usher. A communication from the Warrington Branch, recommending the ordination of Andrew Fleming to the office of priest was referred back to the branch, it not having been voted on by them. Summary of the statistical reports of branches as follows: Total members in 1910, 510; 1911, 493; gain by baptism 7, by letter 8, total 15; loss by removal 25, by expulsion 3, by death 4, total 32; net loss for year 17; 9 ordinations, 3 marriages. Branch spiritual reports were read from South, North, East, Northeast, Farnworth, Wigan, Warrington, Stockport, and Eccles branches. Reports of elders were read from James R. Baty, J. Gailey, T. Brien, G. W. Leggott, D. Hope, William Spargo, I. S. Grundy, W. Worth, H. L. Griffiths, W. H. Greenwood, H. Greenwood, N. J. Weate, James Waugh, G. Towers, W. R. Armstrong, James Spargo, C. H. Barton, S. F. Mather, Joseph Dewsnup, F. Bruton, James Schofield, I. Harper, F. Naden, Ed. Maloney. Priests, G. Gaydon, T. Adams.

On Sunday there were inspiring short sermons by J. W. Taylor, T. Taylor, and J. E. Meredith in the morning service; the afternoon meeting was devoted to testimony. Bishop R. May addressed the evening service, using a chart. At the Monday morning meeting elders' reports were continued from R. Murray and J. Foden. Consideration of the motion to alter rule 11, which reads as follows, was had: "No member shall be ordained to office in the priesthood who uses tobacco or intoxicating drink, and any officer using same shall be suspended." The motion was lost. Motion to alter rule 6b (referring to ordination), was deferred till the next conference. Auditors' report of the accounts of the late bishop's agent was received. The election of district officers resulted as follows: W. H. Greenwood, president; T. Brien and W. R. Armstrong, vice presidents; W. Worth, secretary; Sam Mather, assistant secretary; N. J. Weate, treasurer; James Waugh, auditor for two years. Sunday school superintendent's report read with request for release from office after a service of twenty years. Report was received and a vote of thanks was tendered Brother S. F. Mather for past faithful services. N. J. Weate was elected to the office. J. Foden was reelected musical director of the conference. At a meeting of branch presidents held a week previous to the conference, it was decided to elect a corresponding secretary to take in hand all newspaper correspondence and act authoritatively for the district. This was submitted to the conference for approval. It was resolved, That W. R. Armstrong be elected as corresponding secretary to handle all newspaper correspondence, and all members and officers be instructed to submit correspondence to him for approval prior to forwarding for publication in the local papers. Reports of treasurer and auditors read. Religio report read. At the evening session the action of the town hall committee in refusing us the use of the Longsight Public Hall was considered. After discussion the following prevailed: "Resolved, That we the members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in conference assembled respectfully request the chairman of the town hall committee for the reason why we were refused the Longsight Public Hall for the use of conference services, seeing we have hired these halls for many years without exception being taken to us as a religious body, and that we have no affinity with the so-called Mormons of Utah, and are opposed to their practices; and further, we respectfully request that a deputation be received to explain our views and position." The following deputation was appointed to wait upon them: W. H. Greenwood, H. Greenwood, S. F. Baty, T. Brien, Joseph Dewsnup, G. W. Leggett, W. R. Armstrong, and W. Worth. The committee were instructed to wait upon the Lord Mayor in event of the failure in the efforts with the town hall committee. A motion was made that steps be taken to reunite our district Sunday school with the General Sunday School Association. The matter was left in the hands of the district superintendent of the Sunday school and Sunday school officers. Letters of condolence were authorized to be sent to Brother Hughes and Sister Beswick. G. W. Leggett was put in charge of the outdoor work of the district. The general, mission, and local authorities of the church were sustained. Thanks of the conference were tendered to the catering committee and all who have helped to make the conference a success. A question was raised with reference to the uniting of the local branches into one large branch. It was resolved, That the secretary write the local branches for their views on amalgamation, and report at the next conference. W. H. Greenwood, president; William Worth, Samuel Mather, secretaries.

Conference Notices.

The Clinton, Missouri, district conference will convene with the Wheatland Branch at Wheatland, Missouri, May 25 and 26, 1912. All are urged to be present that find it possible to attend, as officers for the district are to be chosen, and other important business attended to. The Wheatland Branch expect to dedicate their church during the conference. Mail all reports to C. P. Welch, Wheatland, Missouri, so he will get them not later than May 23. All that are expecting to go by train will please write Brother Welch, so the Saints will be prepared with enough conveying vehicles to get you from the railroad to the church, a distance of a few miles. John Noyes, secretary, 1029 North Ash Street, Nevada, Missouri.

Nauvoo district conference will meet at Fort Madison, Iowa, on June 1 and 2, first session at 10 a. m. The Fort Madison church is expected to be dedicated during this conference. C. E. Harpe, president.

The semiannual conference of the Southern Indiana District will convene with the Louisville, Kentucky, Branch on Saturday, May 18, 1912. A good attendance is hoped for. Any information in regard to entertainment during conference may be obtained of John Zahnd, 223 State Street, New Albany, Indiana. All reports should be in the hands of the secretary not later than May 16. John Zahnd, district president; Charles H. Fish, secretary, 645 West Twentieth Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The thirty-third conference of the Central Illinois District will be held at Beardstown, Illinois, June 8 and 9. I hope this will meet with your approval. Walter Daykin, secretary.

Conference of the Spokane District will convene at Sagle, Idaho, on Saturday, June 8, at 10 o'clock a. m. Branch clerks please send reports to the undersigned one week prior to conference, as provided for in district resolution number 6. W. W. Fordham, clerk, South 238 Haven Street, Spokane, Washington.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday school association of Spokane District will meet at Sagle, Idaho, on Friday, June 7, at 7:30 p. m. There will be an entertainment after business session. Mary Buchanan, district clerk.

The Northeastern Illinois district Religio convention will convene at Mission Branch Friday, May 31, 1912, at 10 a. m. Secretaries please see that reports are in on time. Blanche Fairbanks, district secretary, 1528 South Turner Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

The Nodaway district Sunday school convention will meet at the Ross Grove Church on Friday, May 31, 1912, at 2 p. m. Alma Nelson, secretary.

The Southern Indiana Sunday school district convention will convene with the Louisville Branch, at 9:30 a. m., May 18. I trust that all interested in the Sunday school work of the district may be in attendance. John Zahnd, district superintendent, 223 State Street, New Albany, Indiana.

Reunion Notice.

North Dakota reunion will be held at Logan, North Dakota, commencing July 6, 1912. Please notice particularly that the grounds are one mile out of town in a grove. The town is small, with no hotel accommodation whatever, so all must come prepared with tents. There will, however, be the usual arrangements for visiting elders. There will also be a boarding car where meals will be served at twenty cents a meal. Logan is nine miles southeast of Minot, on the Soo Railroad, two trains per day stopping each way. Those coming on the Great Northern change at Minot, which necessitates an all night stopover. Those living on the Northern Pacific can get on the Soo from the east at Valley City, and from the west at Bismark. No special arrangements have been made as yet, but we confidently look for the number of elders from below that usually visit the three points, Minnesota, North Dakota, and Saskatchewan. A very pleasant place to meet. All come who possibly can. Pasture for horses free. William Sparling, district president.

Pastoral.

Having been appointed assistant minister in charge of the State of Texas, I take this opportunity of addressing the ministry, and Saints in this State. Conferring with Brother J. F. Curtis, we decided that to get the best results from our force this year, to divide up as follows:

W. H. Mannering and Charles J. Cady, to work in the southeastern part of the State; B. F. Renfroe and John Nunley, in central and eastern parts; John Harp, Southwestern District; J. W. Morgan and G. R. Kuykendall, southwest, and west to the north line; S. W. Simmons, as appointed, northwestern Texas.

We especially request the missionaries to leave the branches for the local men to take care of, except when they want some special meetings. We want to open new places, where there are scattered members and friends, and be sure and stay long enough to do the work well; two or three sermons will not do the work.

We hope the Saints will let us hear from them and their needs, and will assist us in carrying out these plans. If you can't find the missionaries, make your wants known through the papers. And don't forget this important part of our work, tithes and consecration. The gospel can not be carried on without these. The preacher that does not preach tithing is not fulfilling his mission, and the Saints that do not pay their tithing and offerings are not doing their duty. The bishop's agents will no doubt announce their addresses, so you will know who to send it to. In case you do not know who to pay it to, send direct to Bishop E. L. Kelley, Independence, Missouri.

I have two debates on hand, one in Missouri, and the other in Oklahoma, that will prevent me getting to the field until the last of June. I would like to have the field address of all the missionaries, and hear from any others that want meetings. Address me at Independence, Missouri.

W. M. AYLOR.

Those interested in mission number four, will please observe the following instructions as far as possible:

In the Southeastern Mission Elder F. M. Slover, of Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri, will be my assistant minister in charge. His associates will be Lloyd C. Moore, Swen Swenson, A. G. Miller, and J. W. Dubose.

Elder H. E. Moler, of Holden, Missouri, will be my assistant minister in charge of southern Indiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee, and will be assisted in southern Indiana by Jacob Halb, and in Kentucky and Tennessee by J. R. McLain, J. A. Roberts, S. E. Dixon, and W. S. Shupe.

Elder Samuel Brown, of Stevenson, Ontario, will be assistant minister in charge of the Kirtland District and his associates will be Bishop J. A. Becker, C. Ed. Miller, and Richard Baldwin.

C. Ed. Miller will, during the summer months, be in charge of Kirtland Temple. Richard Baldwin will have Cleveland as his objective point.

Bishop J. A. Becker, R. F. D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio, with his assistants will care for the finances of the Kirtland, Pittsburg, and Ohio districts.

Charles Fry, Pauline Avenue, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, will be assistant minister in charge in the Pittsburg District, having Pittsburg as his objective point, and will be assisted by Leon Burdick.

In the Virginias Elders James McConnaughy and Thomas Mills will labor. Brother McConnaughy, R. F. D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio, being in charge.

Elder N. L. Booker, R. F. D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio, will be my assistant minister in charge of the Ohio District, and will be assisted by Elder J. W. Metcalf.

The missionaries will please be particular to forward to those in assistant charge, their reports on July, October, January, and March 1. All district presidents will please forward to the assistant ministers in charge of their respective districts a copy of the report of labors done in their jurisdiction, on the dates above stated.

The assistant ministers will please notify, in due time, the minister in general charge of all conferences and reunions to be held in their respective fields of labor, that sufficient assistance may be given them, so as to obtain the best possible results.

That we may more fully harmonize our work with the will of the Lord, the local priesthood is admonished to do all that lies in their power to care for the work of the districts and branches, so that the missionary staff may the more freely "push their ministry into other fields," as admonished in Doctrine and Covenants 122:8.

Let us all as a priesthood and membership of the church, demonstrate to the world that we are a "peculiar people, zealous of good works," endeavoring to live by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," refusing, by word or deed, to take part in that which would injure others, but by lives consecrated through prayer, fastings, tithes and offerings prove that while we "are in the world, we are not of the world."

R. C. RUSSELL.

Minister in General Charge.

135 SELKIRK STREET, CHATHAM, ONTARIO.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting: Inasmuch as those in charge have deemed it advisable to appoint the undersigned in charge of the work in the States of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, and Colorado for another year, we take this opportunity of thanking all for the support and hospitality which we received last year and earnestly solicit your cooperation in the year's work that lies before us. In the field as a whole there are many excellent openings, and the prospects appear to be very favorable for a successful year. We would strongly advise the brethren to refrain from unnecessary traveling and concentrate in those places where an interest is in evidence, making the very most of such opportunities as lie immediately to hand by house to house visitation, and judicious tracting, and systematic open-air services. I am impressed with the vast opportunities which this mission affords for work of this kind, and such work can be accomplished both effectively and economically. To unnecessarily travel about the field develops the "wanderlust" and does not produce the results that we desire, and causes unpleasant comment.

We appreciate the fact that we have a most excellent staff of workers, and though far too small to meet all the demands, yet we have every confidence that under the blessing of God it is large enough to accomplish good work.

The brethren will be allocated for labor in the following manner:

COLORADO.

O. B. Thomas and H. E. Winegar in Eastern Colorado paying particular attention to Wray, Fox country, and other points in that section where interest is established.

F. A. Russell and L. G. Holloway will take care of the interest which they developed last year and at the points in Western Nebraska; by mutual arrangements with those in charge of that State these brethren will look after interests which exist in that section of the country.

T. W. Williams will make Denver his headquarters and seek to build up the work there and care for the interests in the surrounding country.

S. Twombly will have oversight of the work in the Delta country, where we trust to revive the branch and possibly organize new branches, if the Lord will.

Brethren Petre and Bozarth will care for the work in Trinidad and the points up to Pueblo, and also cooperate with Brother Twombly in proselyting work in the Delta country.

UTAH.

J. E. Vanderwood will work Ogden and Malad City and the several points lying between and around these places, but giving special attention to Ogden.

M. F. Gowell will give special attention to Provo and vicinity.

A. M. Chase will continue the work in Salt Lake City.

J. M. Stubbart and J. C. Christensen will work in other points where opportunity and circumstances may afford, and I would suggest that the southern portion of the State be carefully worked by these brethren. Brother Chase will afford whatever information he can to assist these brethren in selecting points where interest already exists.

Charles Chase will labor in any place where there may be a call for his services, in open air meetings, house to house visitation, and for work among the young people. Our brother will render excellent service, and by mutual arrangements we trust the brethren will take advantage of the ability our brother possesses in these matters. While waiting for such calls Brother Chase will join Brother Gowell and take up work there with him in tracting, open air preaching, and developing interest among the young people.

IDAHO.

John Davis will labor in and around Boise. Alvin Knisley will develop the work in the Minnedoka Valley. New Madden will cover the same ground as last year. In Idaho these brethren we trust will make their mutual arrangements for laboring together where there may be opportunity or need.

MONTANA.

A. J. Moore and L. E. Hills will cooperate as much as practicable in the southern part of the State, Brother Hills making Bozeman his objective point and concentrating there as much as may be demanded by the needs of the branch. W. P. Bootman and T. E. Fitzwater will work together in the northern portion of the State, working up those places where an interest already prevails and if possible initiating an open air campaign in Great Falls to give our work a commencement there.

Of course throughout the entire field we simply intend these instructions to be general and will leave the brethren to use their judgment and act on their own initiative in case of emergencies arising.

We respectfully ask for the support, moral and financial, of the Saints to be extended to the brethren who are devoting themselves to the work of the ministry, and we would like to urge that all remember the obligations we are under to our heavenly Father to pay our consecrations, tithings, and offerings "as he may prosper us." In this spirit of cooperation and solidarity the work will move forward to its final triumph.

We ask the brethren of the missionary staff to be prompt in reporting. Last year several were very remiss in this matter, and address all correspondence to 701 North Cottage Street, Independence, Missouri.

Faithfully yours,
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 29, 1912.

Correction.

In the issue of the HERALD of April 24, appointments by the First Presidency shows the British Isles, Scandinavia, and Germany in charge of H. N. Hansen. This is erroneous in that the British Isles should have been shown in charge of William H. Greenwood and known as mission number 7; Scandinavia and Germany in charge of H. N. Hansen, mission number 8; Australasia, mission number 9; South Sea Islands, mission number 10; Great Lakes, mission number 11; Palestine number 12.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary First Presidency.

Error.

Brother E. Rannie was appointed to Southern Nebraska— not Northern Nebraska, as shown in list of conference appointments. This was a typographical error.

Died.

ROBERTS.—Letha Holman was born October 11, 1833, at Morgan, Indiana. She joined the Christian Church and lived a faithful member for thirty-seven years. She has been sightless for thirty-eight years. United with the Reorganized Church on October 5, 1898, at Wyandotte, Oklahoma; died April 17, 1912. Funeral service held at Fairland; sermon preached by W. B. Hillen, interment in the Fairland Cemetery. She leaves one son, four daughters, forty-three grandchildren, and fifty-nine great-grandchildren, besides a number of Saints and friends.

NAKAMURA.—Kingie Nakamura was born November 15, 1899, at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and was killed in a runaway on the afternoon of April 12, 1912. He was a convert from one of the mission Sunday schools, having been baptized December 25, 1910, by Elder McConley. It was hoped that he might grow up and help spread the gospel among his own people, Japanese, but the Lord has willed it otherwise. The funeral was conducted from the church, in charge of Elder Waller, after which the remains were cremated at the Nuuanu Crematory.

BENNETT.—Maud Emily Romarty was born September 30, 1879, at Burlington, Kansas. She was married to David Bennett in November, 1903; of this union five children were born, two preceding her to the better land. She was baptized into the church May 23, 1909, by Edward Tucker, who also confirmed her. After a sudden and short illness she died April 28, 1912. A husband and three children, mother and sister, share the sorrow of her premature death. The funeral was held in the church at Armstrong, sermon by J. W. Rushton. A very large gathering of Saints and friends witnessed the affectionate esteem in which Sister Bennett was held.

DUCKWORTH.—Mary J. Duckworth was born January 27, 1835, at Brookville, Cumberland, Nova Scotia; baptized February 1, 1880, at Fall River, Massachusetts; died January 25, 1912. Our aged sister was afflicted with paralysis for a number of years, yet remained patient and cheerful and died in the faith, true to her sacred covenant. Interment at Oak Grove Cemetery, January 27, 1912; funeral service in charge of Elder H. O. Smith, sermon by Elder J. W. Howlett.

SHAFFER.—Wilson J., at Lakeside Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio, March 2, 1912. He was born and raised near Warren, Ohio, was a member of the Reorganized Church. He is survived by wife, one son, and four brothers, Albert, Newton Falls, Ohio; George, Champion; Charles and Horace in Nebraska. Funeral March 5, sermon by Elder R. Baldwin.

MCPHEAK.—Sister Melissa Eliza McPeak passed from earth on April 7, 1912, at her home at Cosmo, Sonoma County, California, at the age of 63 years, 7 months, and 12 days. She leaves a husband of fifty years companionship, five children, three brothers and one sister. Her virtues were praised most by those who knew her best. She was laid to rest on a beautiful knoll in a private cemetery, amid the enchanting mountainous surroundings near the Russian River. The services were held at the grave, consisting of two appropriate songs by a quartet, and a solo. The sermon was by Elder J. M. Terry, to a large gathering of friends and sympathizers.

COOMBS.—Gladys Dorothis, only daughter of Brother and Sister Alma Coombs, of Fall River, Massachusetts. She was born Thanksgiving Day, blessed Christmas Day, and died February 27, 1912. Funeral service in charge of Elder H. O. Smith, on February 28, 1912, sermon by Elder H. W. Howlett.

A butterfly basked on a baby's grave,
 Where a lily had chanced to grow;
 "Why art thou here with thy gaudy dye,
 When she of the blue and sparkling eye
 Must sleep in the churchyard low?"

Then it lightly soared through the sunny air,
 And spoke from its shining track;
 "I was a worm till I won my wings,
 And she whom thou mourn'st like seraph sings.
 Wouldst thou call the blest one back?"

—Sigourney.

PORTER.—Mary A. Turpin was born October 14, 1855, at Lexington, Illinois. She was baptized May 2, 1883, in Shelby County, Iowa, by Elder John Hawley. She was married to William C. Porter, October 25, 1871. To this union eight children were born, all of whom survive her. The family moved from Iowa to Heartwell, Nebraska, about twenty-eight years ago. She lost her companion, by death, August 27, 1890. She remained a widow more than twenty-one years, until called home by the messenger of death, when she passed quietly and peacefully away from the cares and trials of this present life. She was a devoted mother, and did all that lay within her power to bring up her fatherless children in the path of rectitude and right. She departed this life April 10, 1912, aged 56 years, 6 months, and 26 days. Funeral service was held at the family residence, conducted by Elder C. H. Porter. A very large concourse of people were in attendance.

Building Conveniences at Home and Abroad.

In France, in 1911, the cost of living frequently exceeded that in the United States. It was a year of high food prices, to be sure, but so it was with us, for such movements are always theoretically and in these swift days nearly always practically world-wide. In Paris the maintenance cost of the average family was as great as that of the average in New York. Moreover, there never has been any actual "cheapness" whatever in European life over the American. There has been a difference in the mode of life,—based simply and solely on the fact that Americans insist on luxury in living, regardless of the cost, whereas in Europe (until Americans began teaching it our method), price, and never comfort, was the only question asked. Europe was rather slow to learn. Even now there are but two or three steam-heated hotels in London, for example. Even now, after half a century of protest, American travelers find but few Italian, Swiss, or German hotels, apartments or private houses containing anything like the luxuries insisted on by us at home, and hence supplied (and paid for), as a necessary part of every roof-tree. There is hardly a first-class hotel in any city in America above the 20,000 mark which does not have its "rooms with baths." In American cities, for many years, houses minus every sanitary appliance save a sink-spout have been exceptional; nor does Europe yet know the sheer luxury found in workmen's houses such as those in Washington, District of Columbia, for instance, where for $100 a year are given steam heat, hot water, a bath, cemented cellar, and electric light.—From "The cost of living in France," by James Edmund Dunning, in American Review of Reviews for May.

has just been issued, entitled

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

- (1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.
- (2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.
- (3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.
- (4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

DANGEROUS MODERN TEACHINGS.

Not long ago the writer listened to a rather well-known lecturer, author of several books, who in the course of his lecture declared that there is no such thing as a permanent standard of right and wrong—that right and wrong depend absolutely upon circumstances. This is quite in line with the teachings of other well-known lecturers, writers, and professors, who hold that there is no power higher than public sentiment that has a right to say, "Thou shalt," or, "Thou shalt not"; that public sentiment determines right and wrong; and public sentiment of course is shaped by changing conditions, so that the thing which may be wrong in one age is right in another.

According to this reasoning murder may be wrong in one age and right in another. Polygamy may be right at one time and wrong at another. Free love may be just the thing in one era but a heinous crime in another.

It is true that circumstances have a bearing upon particular cases in determining right and wrong. But we hold that there is a supreme, unchanging Lawgiver who has a right to say, "Thou shalt," or, "Thou shalt not." On all of the leading questions involved in human conduct and morals this Lawgiver has expressed himself, and his law does not vary. To teach to the contrary is false and dangerous, and is typical of those who desire to become a "law unto themselves," impatient of divine restraints and commandments.

Convince the average man that there is no supreme lawgiver, that all law is human, and he will soon determine that such being the case he may as well make his own law to govern his own morals—this is the way toward anarchy, each man for himself.

Convince the average man that there are no fixed standards of right and wrong, that circumstances make right and wrong, and he will find it easy in most cases to convince himself that circumstances make the thing right that he desires to do—no matter how repulsive or destructive it may be as judged by the correct standards. This attitude of mind is at the bottom of all this affinity, soul-mate business, of all this cheating in the interest of "business success," and of all this dynamiting and murder in the "interests" of oppressed humanity. These men have recourse to a false philosophy, delude themselves into the belief that circumstances determine right and that the circumstances indicate as the path of duty the very course that they wish to pursue, and make it right. So in the name of right and justice the most loathsome acts are performed and an effort made to justify them. The purblind may be convinced, but God is not mocked or deceived.

The aforementioned lecturer then argued that marriage was of purely economic origin. All that such an assertion means may not be apparent at the first thought. He said that marriage as an institution grew out of private property and inheritance. When man first began to hold private property the next step was to pass it by inheritance to their sons. Thus it became absolutely necessary that a man should know beyond the shadow of a doubt who his sons were. Consequently promiscuity was abandoned and men began to take to themselves wives with whom they might form permanent union and over whom they might as a consequence maintain a sufficiently rigorous watchcare to be certain of their movements and morals.

The lecturer had previously declared for the abolition of private property and inheritance. He did not press the matter to its logical conclusion; but granting his positions to be correct, we can see the finish of marriage. Conceding that marriage is an outgrowth of private property and inheritance, it at once follows that with the abolition of the institutions that created marriage, the institution of marriage will cease. Men no longer caring to pass property to their sons by inheritance, will become indifferent as to the identity of their sons, and society will go back to the condition that prevailed before the origin of private property—namely, promiscuity. All this, if, as urged by the individual to whom we have referred, marriage is of purely economic origin, growing out of private property and inheritance, and the further alleged fact that private property and inheritance are undesirable and vicious institutions that should be abolished at once and are certain to be abolished at some time.

Of course such a theory leaves out of consideration the thought that God instituted marriage before private property was thought of. But this we are told is a fond delusion, one of many cherished by Bible believers but not credited by the really advanced thinkers. God, we are told, had nothing to do with the matter.

Such teaching is vicious and dangerous and tends to cheapen the marriage relationship in the minds of men in an age that already holds marriage too cheaply. To teach that marriage is purely economic in origin and that the conditions that gave it origin are temporary and will very soon cease to exist robs the institution of its sanctity in the minds of those who credit such teaching; and to them, at least, it foreshadows the imminent dissolution of our present marriage system and a return to promiscuity.

The average man who is at all inclined to become immoral or to defy wholesome conventions and restrictions in sexual matters, listening to such a discourse, feels at once that the barriers that have hitherto held him are after all merely human, illogical, transitory, and not worthy of his respect. Convince him that marriage is but an adjunct of changing economic conditions, and in no sense sacred, and he will not care to wait for the passing of these conditions and the coming of that reign of free love that may appeal to his imagination. We know of no surer way to encourage disregard for the sanctity of the home and the marriage relationship. Such teaching leads naturally to free-love, soul-mate, affinity ideals that appeal to the morally decadent but alarm the thoughtful. ELBERT A. SMITH.

TRACING THE ORIGINAL AMERICAN.

In the January number of the World To-Day, a leading magazine, there appeared an article by Franklin Adams, F. R. G. S., editor of the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union, entitled, "Tracing the original American." In the opening part of his article he asserts that scientists are now generally agreed that ancient American civilizations did not originate in America, but came here from some part of the Old World, most probably Asia. We are privileged to reproduce a part of the article, but regret that we can not reproduce the many illustrations that accompany it. Mr. Adams says:

But not in the forest lands, rather on the high, barren plateau of South America, over 12,000 feet above the sea, is the real unsolved mystery—the ruins of Tiahuanacu. If stones could speak, these ruins would reveal a story of deepest interest. The difficulty in solving the mystery is due to the present nature of this region. This city, covering a large area, was built by highly skilled masons, with the use of enormous stones, one weighing 170 tons. Apart from the monoliths of ancient Egypt, there is nothing in any other part of the world to equal them.

The point next in interest to the enormous size of the stones is the excellence of the workmanship. The lines are perfectly straight, the angles accurately drawn, and all surfaces level. The upright monoliths have mortices and projecting ledges to retain the horizontal slabs in place. The carvings are complicated, but accurately designed and executed, affording ample proof of the advanced stage reached by the builders in architectural art. Flights of stone steps, recently discovered, prove that the ancient city, which is now several miles from Lake Titicaca, was once on its shore. Here, indeed, was a great metropolis built in a region where corn can not ripen, nor a dense population be supported; yet the vestiges of the ancient civilization silently proclaim a state of affairs entirely different.

Throughout the highlands of Peru are also found the great megalithic works—among them the hoary fortress of Sacahuana, overlooking Cuzco. This stupendous work differs greatly from the edifices of Tiahuanacu. For here the three lines of massive walls, one thousand feet in length, supporting the terraces and parapets, are composed of stupendous blocks of limestone, closely fitted, though of irregular size and shape. One of the stones is over twenty-seven feet high and fourteen feet wide. The work has remained substantially perfect through the centuries, although no mortar was used, and is, without doubt, the grandest specimen of the "Cyclopean" style in America.

Who built this fortress? Its origin is as unknown as that of Tiahuanacu. The Incas, with their list of over one hundred kings, tracing back 200 years B. C., knew nothing of its builders. It is the second great problem in the Americas for the archaeologist. These megalithic blocks mark the earliest period. Through many changes, the evolution of Andean architecture ends in the well-laid quarry stone of the later Inca edifices. We have long known of the high civilization reached by the Incas, of their perfect communal system, their knowledge of the goldsmith's and weaver's arts, their extensive agricultural system; yet it is the skill shown in the construction of their temples that has impressed itself most strongly upon the world.

Long before the Incas swept down from the highlands to conquer the peoples of the coast valleys, a culture had developed on the Pacific. The pyramids of Chimu, some of which covered an area of five hundred square feet and were one hundred and fifty feet in height, form the most remarkable feature of the ruins of a prehistoric capital.

In Ecuador, there is another riddle to be solved in Manabi. Not far inland from the coast lived a mysterious people. On the apex of their sacred hills have been found the sculptured stone seats of their high priests.

The Southern continent does not possess all the impressive monuments. The same religion fervor found expression in North America in the erecting of temples of worship. These northern edifices, interesting in the strangeness of their architecture, are even more interesting in the story that they tell of vanished races.

In southern Mexico, Guatemala, and Honduras this great civilization was called the Maya. In architecture, in sculpture, and in painting, the Mayas excelled. Their priests were astronomers of no mean ability. They had developed a calendar system and perfected a chronology that, in some characteristics, were superior to our own. Famine, pestilence, and internecine strife were doubtless the causes of the decay that overtook these brilliant builders several centuries before the Spaniards set foot in the New World.

There are over seventy ruined cities in Yucatan alone, absolutely buried in great forests. From the most elevated points all that can be seen are islands of sculptured stones emerging from a veritable ocean of trees.

In western Honduras, a few miles from the border of Guatemala, are the ruins of Copan, the mother city of the Mayas. The hieroglyphic inscriptions on its stonework indicate that Copan was far older than the Mayan settlements of Yucatan, and had probably been abandoned many years before the rise of the more northern cities. The striking absence of tradition relating to such an extensive site as that of Copan can indicate only that its fall and subsequent desolation had outlived the memory of man even in 1530, when Cortes conquered the Aztecs.

Copan was built in a valley a mile and a half wide, surrounded by hills twenty-five hundred feet high. In its center was a great terraced plaza, three hundred feet square, having the appearance of a sunken court, surrounded by tiers of stone seats, on all sides, save one. On the open side of the court was a pyramid twenty feet in height. Looking down from its summit, a great open-air auditorium lies at one's feet, with five great monumental statues like giant sentinels guarding its sacred precincts. The use of the pyramid may for ever remain a mystery. Were the decrees of rulers proclaimed from its summit? Was it the high altar of sacrifice? Who can say?

The most interesting feature of this great plaza is the gigantic sculptured stones, showing on their faces human figures carved in low relief, the clothing and head dress displaying a profusion of ornamentation barbaric in its splendor. The sides and backs of these stones are covered with hieroglyphic inscriptions, the characteristic feature being the Mayan method of recording time. Beginning with a date, an interval is indicated, followed by a second date. This is continued throughout the entire inscription.

While these dates, when compared with those in neighboring cities, prove that Copan is the oldest of the Mayan settlements, they do not enlighten us as to its age, since we are unable to translate this mode of time-reckoning into our chronology.

The greater age of Copan is also proven by the crude technique of its carvings. Later, in the best period of Northern Mayan civilization, sculpture had greatly advanced, and was found in very high relief.

Near the Grand Plaza, a great hieroglyphic stairway was uncovered in 1892 by an expedition from the Peabody Museum of Harvard University. Rising steeply for ninety feet, its steps elaborately sculptured with full-sized human figures occupying its center at regular intervals, this marvelous work of art must have presented a striking appearance in past ages.

Lying to the north of Copan were even more important cities of the Mayan nation. In Guatemala, Quirigua, sixty miles from the Atlantic Ocean, has, because of its wonderful monoliths, become one of the most noted ruins in America. Until recent years it was forest-buried and owing to its obscurity in the jungle, escaped vandalism, that arch-enemy of earth's greatest treasures. Except for the destruction occasioned by the falling of trees and the rending power of their roots, Quirigua would have stood intact for untold ages. Seventy-four acres surrounding the famous plaza, with its eleven stelæ carved in high relief, have been set apart as a park; so one, at least, of the Mayan cities will be carefully preserved.

Probably the largest and certainly the most magnificent of the many cities of ancient Yucatan was Chichén Itza. Over ten square miles are covered with crumbling walls and jungle-ridden courts, and many students claim that this holy city of the Itzas was the most important of all prehistoric America.

Uxmal, also in Yucatan, was occupied almost down to the time of the Spaniards; but in this once great city, teeming with its toiling thousands, "palaces and temples glisten in the sunlight, with never the tread of sandaled foot echoing through their empty courts, nor chant of white-robed priests sacrificing to offended gods. Perchance a bird may flutter through some ruined doorway, chirping for its mate, or a buzzard, circling high, soar above prospective prey. Save these, all else is silent, the pomp and glory for ever departed, and gods and men alike forgotten in the onward sweep of time!"

On the Isthmus of Tehuantepec is the dead city of Palenque, and, as in the case of Copan and Quirigua, we have no knowledge of it as a living town. One of its temples contains the longest continuous inscription as yet discovered in the Americas.

Best known by far of all the New World ruins is Mitla of the Toltecs, in southern Mexico. It has been partially restored, and is now a Mecca for tourists. As its name indicates, Mitla was a ceremonial city for the dead. The ornamentation of its edifices was mosaic work in geometric design. The number of small stones thus employed in one palace alone has been estimated as 200,000. Not long ago the most marvelous of all American riddles was proposed by chance. The ax must be laid aside and the shovel taken in hand, for deeply buried cities are coming to view. Word has just reached us that, within twenty miles of Mexico's capital, extensive ruins, eighteen feet below ground, have been discovered. This discovery was accidental. Professor William Niven, a field archaeologist, while exploring, chanced to step into a cave-in, and the result of investigation proved most startling. A city ten miles long by four miles wide was found, with houses of cemented stone and rooms of uniform height, ornamented with frescoes that show a remarkable development of the color art. It is claimed by authorities in Mexico City that these ruins, with their relics, while bearing a resemblance to those of the Tigris and the Euphrates, are new to archaeology.

This great city lay buried and unsuspected all through the period of Aztec civilization. Its extreme age seems amply proven by geological conditions. Among the relics that have come to light are pottery of a type unlike any heretofore found in Mexico; a goldsmith's outfit; rings and beads of jade; a dental cast of a human mouth, and skulls containing teeth with fillings of cement and turquoise. But the most astounding feature of this discovery is the claim that among the relics are several clay cylinders resembling those of Babylonian civilization. These cylinders, about three inches in length and an inch and a half in diameter, are covered with hieroglyphics, which are now being studied in Mexico City, where an International School of American Archaeology has recently been established. Will they prove the Rosetta Stone of the New World Egypt?

The position of Mr. Adams as Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and editor of the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union gives some weight to his utterances. Students of the Book of Mormon no doubt will be deeply interested in his article. One by one facts come to light supporting the Book of Mormon account of the origin of ancient American civilizations. These facts support and corroborate the statement of the Book of Mormon that those civilizations were extensive and intensive, with great and teeming cities, with diverse religious systems, the true and the false, with priesthoods and temples of worship as well as the busy marts of commerce.

Archæologists like Mr. Adams find the mute relics of these things, but as yet the story of their development is to them largely shrouded in mystery. To us it is an open book; to them it is a sealed book. Yet we can but expect that in time inscriptions will be deciphered and translated that will give more positive and explicit support to the Book of Mormon than even the evidences of the past. The closing paragraphs of this article announce the discovery of a great ruined city only twenty miles from the modern city of Mexico. Relics such as a goldsmith's outfit were unearthed, also human teeth filled with cement and turquoise; and, most interesting of all, clay cylinders inscribed with unknown messages. An effort is being made to read these messages. Sooner or later these or other ancient inscriptions will yield up their secrets. When that day comes we shall have nothing to fear from the revelations that shall be made.

METHODISTS AND AMUSEMENTS.

We quote from current newspapers the following concerning the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Minneapolis:

DROP ANTIDANCING RULE.

UPHOLD ITS ESSENCE.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, May 3.—“The American people are too far advanced longer to be restricted by church rules as to what their amusements shall be. The rule prohibiting dancing, card playing, gambling, and going to theaters, circuses, and horse races therefore should be abolished.”

This is the gist of a report presented to-day to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church by the Board of Bishops.

In recommending this radical change, the twenty-four active bishops stipulated that the church should not be indifferent on these subjects, but that the people should be left to judge for themselves what is right or wrong in amusements, having before them only the injunction of John Wesley which forbade “the taking of such diversions as can not be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus.”

The bishops declared the church reiterated its opposition to theater going and gambling, but the rule in force since 1872 could not fix a point between “the turf and the stock market.”

The bishops' report was delivered by Bishop Earl Cranstons, of Washington, District of Columbia, and it formed the second section of the Episcopal address, the first half of which had been given the day before.

“We would joyfully acclaim the day when every Christian would abstain from the amusements which have been prohibited, but we can't repress our conviction that Wesley dealt more wisely with the danger,” the address says.

“The bishops therefore recommend a return to the consistent treatment of this subject by Wesley and the more earnestly because we are dealing with the American people and the intelligence of the twentieth century.

“As a church we can not approve dancing and theater-going. They are questionable amusements. To us, as to several of our sister churches, they who justify these amusements as consistent with the spiritual life seem to manifest a deplorable lack of spiritual perception.

“Again, we stand unitedly against gambling, and we recognize clearly that it is the same sin in Wall Street that it is in the lowest resort, but we have never ventured legislatively to fix the point where the race track gambler, passing from the turf to the stock market, becomes a respectable business man eligible to church membership, and the chairman of the board of trustees.

“In our absolute helplessness before this question we must continue to allow the world to suspect that the larger the stake and the more recklessness of public weal the gain, the less vicious the crime, provided the winner pays to religion or benevolence.”

The reports stated that 1,356 out of 2,057 district superintendents had declared the amusement paragraph in the church discipline was ineffective.

The bishops further recommended that the church, instead of having two temperance societies, as represented in the Anti-Saloon League and the Methodist Church Temperance Society, have only one, suggesting abolishing the church society; recommended that the church return to the limit of five years for pastorates, as was in force prior to 1900.

Denounced child labor and boycotting in disputes between capital and labor.

Indorse President Taft in his attempts to promote international peace.

Denounced any attempt by any religious bodies to interfere with the civil status of marriage of their members when performed by clergymen of other denominations.

A resolution which declared that the amusement clause in the church rules was “a source of constant agitation and unrest” and which asked for an investigation by the committee on judiciary, was lost. This was taken to mean that the full conference itself desired to act on the proposed change.

An attack on Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson for attending the International Brewers' Congress in Chicago in October, 1911, resulting in the adoption of a resolution condemning him.

After naming President Taft as having been asked to prevent Secretary Wilson's presence at the congress, the resolution declares that “those in authority have forfeited all claim on the future franchise of the Christian and sober manhood of the nation.” Secretary Wilson's explanation of his action was described as “a most frivolous, fallacious and stereotyped excuse.”

DOCTRINES AND DOGMAS OF MORMONISM.—In the first line of the text of this valuable little book, page 212, below the subheading “Hymenial,” the date of the marriage of Henry B. Jacobs to Zina D. Huntington should read March 7, 1841, not 1844. Also on page 223, second line, the figures 1843 have been transposed, so that the date erroneously printed is July 12, 1834, instead of July 12, 1843. Those who own a copy of Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism should at once make these corrections in them. All copies now within our publishing house will be so corrected. In order to understand how these errors can creep into a carefully edited and proof read volume such as the one in which these occur, one must understand not only the various mechanical processes of printing, but also the shortcomings and limited possibilities of the human mind; for while both of these errors are purely mechanical in their conception, one of them was overlooked by all authors, editors, and proof readers through whose hands it passed.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER HENRY GREEN.

HOW AND WHY I BECAME A LATTER DAY SAINT, AND AFTERWARD BECAME A SO-CALLED APOSTATE; LATER UNITED WITH THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Returning home from Sunday school one afternoon in the summer of 1848, through the town of Llanelly, South Wales (where I was born), I saw a crowd of people in the market house, as I passed by, and I went and joined the crowd to learn what was the cause of the gathering of so many together on the Sabbath day, and in such a place. I soon learned that it was the Latter Day Saints' preaching meeting. I had heard in our church and otherwise of such a people, who claimed to be saints; but, oh, how that claim to be a saint while on earth was ridiculed, and considered as being a great sin.

Just as I joined the crowd a young man began to talk, after the preaching was done, in part as follows:

"The majority, if not all of you, know that I was baptized into the Baptist Church about two years ago, and I continued to worship with them until a short time ago. During that time I enjoyed a good conscience towards God and all men, doing what I understood to be my duty in serving the Lord. And I often heard in the church and other places about the false prophets and deceivers that had appeared in our midst and was warned with others not to be deceived by them; that if anyone claims to receive any manifestation from God in these days that he is a liar and a deceiver, etc. I came in contact with a Latter Day Saint elder, who knew where I stood religiously, for he had been a member and a deacon in the same church, and he explained to my satisfaction from the Scriptures that the claim of the Latter Day Saints to spiritual gifts was scriptural. I could not continue as heretofore with a good conscience to worship God in the Baptist Church, and I became a believer in all of the doctrines of Christ and his promises.

"I now testify to you all that a great change has come to me in my experience religiously, and I testify before you this day that the signs follow the believer according to the promise of the Savior, and that the gifts of the Holy Spirit are received and enjoyed by the Latter Day Saints."

What the young man said and the testimony he bore were so impressive that it sounded to me as a revelation from God, and I soon began to read and study the Scriptures, as I had never done before, although I had been for some time a teacher of the Bible class in Sunday school. It was not long before I was convinced that the Bible did not teach infant damnation, election, predestination, and the baptism of only the seed of the church, as I had been taught to believe in the church of my youth, and I left that church with tears, mixed with joy and gladness. In time I got the Book of Mormon, also the Book of Covenants, with other literature published by the Latter Day Saint Church, and I read them all with many prayers, and I became convinced, without a doubt, that the Latter Day Saint Church was "the church."

In July, 1850, I obeyed the command to "be baptized for the remission of sins." I was confirmed and in a short time ordained to the office of priest, and at the quarterly conference that followed I was ordained an elder, and was put in the circuit to go around preaching. Our appointment on Sundays sometimes would be ten miles from home. It was done cheerfully, until in 1853, when the purported revelation on polygamy was published in the church papers. I read it and reread it, and compared it with the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and I came to the conclusion that to accept the revelation I had to discard the teaching of the books and reject the purported revelation. I was not slow to tell some of the brethren about it; some said that I was too narrow-throated to swallow great things, for my exaltation in the "celestial glory."

"Well, brethren," said I, "I shall be satisfied to be as the angels in that world which is to come, when that glory will be revealed."

My faith was not shaken in the divinity of the latter day work, but for a short time I could not help but believe at times that possibly Joseph had given the revelation, though I did not believe the revelation. In a few months after this missionaries came from Utah to Wales, and Elder Thomas Jeremy came to our town and a special meeting was called and held in the chapel, in Llanelly. There was a large gathering from all the branches, to hear the good news from Utah. He began his talk by telling us of vegetables and melons that grew in that country and the many advantages that were there for a poor man to make a living, more than he could possibly have in Wales. But that was insignificant with the privileges of coming in contact and association with the leading men of the church, that we might be taught more perfectly the way of a full salvation, to know more of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; and he said that they in the valleys had come to the knowledge who is God, whom we worship. He said: "I shall not be surprised to see it in print one of these days that they are saying in Salt Lake City, in their prayers, 'Oh, Adam, our Father and God.'" At that time I had already heard that this was coming, and searched the Scriptures and came to the conclusion that I could not with a sincere heart worship a creature, however good the man may have been.

After this I set my heart on coming to the United States, that possibly I might learn something more about the church. I arrived in America in March, 1854, and came straight to the Ohio River to work in the coal mines.

There were many Latter Day Saints along the river, and there was a branch in a place called Minerville. I united with that branch and continued a member in it until late in the summer of 1855, when Elder John Banks, on a mission from Utah, came to visit the Saints and to inform them that they had to be rebaptized, everyone, that the command had come from the headquarters in Salt Lake that the members of the church everywhere had to be rebaptized. I rebelled against it and was not rebaptized. I gave my reasons for it, and Elder Banks agreed to it. Elder Banks and I (in our house, the night before he left for the West) talked together for a long time. I placed before him how I viewed the condition of the church at that time, that the darkness (corruption) that had begun with the Twelve (see Doctrine and Covenants 105) was going gradually down to the whole church, and that I could not follow any further. The brother said: "I know the Latter Day Saint work is of God, and he will bring all things right in his own due time. I am at present a missionary from Utah and I shall fulfill this mission. What I shall do after, I am not able to say now." (He was killed with Joseph Morris not long after that.)

In a few months after Elder Banks left Ohio, he sent me a copy of the Luminary, published in Saint Louis and edited by Erastus Snow. In it was a paragraph (which was marked) written by Eliza Snow in answer to many inquiries. She said: "I am still a virgin, never was the wife of any man." That removed all doubt from my mind concerning the revelation on polygamy; that is, as well as Adam God worship, originated in Utah. It was talked so much about Eliza Snow being a wife of Joseph Smith. A short time after, two men from Beaver Island came to our town, as missionaries under J. J. Strang. They produced their credentials as ministers of the gospel, also a copy of a letter written by Joseph to Strang (or purported to be), by which he appointed Strang to watch over the flock until young Joseph would come to take his father's place at the head of the church, and that Strang had already visited Joseph and ordained him to that office.

In our conversation I told them why I left Brigham's church, and they said it was very wrong and wicked in Brigham having so many wives, etc., and contrary to the Scriptures, and I understood them to mean to say that they did believe in one wife only. They went into the country, so they said, to work a while for the farmers. They returned in about a month to visit us again, and in our conversation at this time one of them said that Brigham had gone over the boundary of the law with his plurality of wives, that seven was the limit, and I became an apostate the second time. The names of these men were Lorenzo Tubbs and Lovell Kidder. They were apparently fine men and very zealous in their faith, but I was left in the cold again.

In the midst of darkness and deception I was sorely tried. I, with thousands of others in the British Isles and scattered abroad, could not indorse and fellowship the various conflicting factions of the Latter Day Saint Church, for they had all departed from the faith. Often at the fireside, in company with those that had received the gospel in my native land, prior to the dark and cloudy day that came upon the church, because of evil-doers, we would speak of the glorious time we had in the early days, when the Spirit of the Lord was so richly enjoyed and the gifts and blessings and wonderful manifestations of the power of God were made known, and hundreds were baptized every month. I am of the opinion that had the Saints in Wales continued in the unity of the faith as delivered by the angel to Joseph the Seer and had rejected the evil abominations of Brighamism that were taught, first privately to those in charge, afterwards published in the Millennial Star, about the year 1853, that the true Latter Day Saint Church would have had the largest following of any church in Wales to-day.

Prior to the doctrine of polygamy being publicly taught in Wales, the church was accused of teaching polygamy secretly, and in reply to this accusation the church in Wales distributed thousands of tracts from door to door, and proclaimed from the public stand that the church of Latter Day Saints could not lawfully teach or sanction the doctrine of polygamy, the law from the church books was cited as authority; wherein it says that one man should have but one wife.

At this time John Taylor was holding a debate in France, when he too had to meet the accusation presented by his opponents accusing the church in Utah of teaching and practicing polygamy. This, I think, was in the year 1851; but in strong terms Elder Taylor denounced the charge as being false, and he read from the Book of Mormon and Book of Covenants wherein the law forbids the teaching of the abomination. To us in Wales this was good news, for Mr. Taylor was a member of the leading quorum, an apostle, and certainly was authority to be relied upon. Strange as it may seem, nevertheless true, this man with others in authority, were guilty of teaching and practicing this evil abomination, and they went to their graves unrepentant.

For a short time after this period the church was not accused of this evil, and the gospel was gathering its hundreds, so that in the little land of Wales there had been baptized over thirty thousand in a few years. But at last false teachers visited our shores from Utah, and very cunningly they did their work. They knew that it would not do to publicly announce faith in polygamy, for the church in Wales had met and settled that question by the law; so they taught it secretly; first to the presidents of the districts and branches. Notwithstanding the law forbade it, it fastened itself in the minds of men that had great influence with the Saints, and they were taught to believe that the priesthood were the living oracles of God and that they (the Saints) were to give heed to their teachings and trust in them. Spiritual gifts were even discouraged; the church was given to understand that they had been fed on milk, but that the time had come to go on to perfection by obeying counsel and asking no questions. Like a wet blanket, Brighamism covered the work in Wales. Thousands got out from under it, and drifted out into the world, like sheep without a shepherd.

In the year 1860 I had the following experience: I dreamed that I was to meet Brother Elias Thomas at a certain place. He was a very dear friend of mine; often we talked about the sad condition of the church, and wondered what was in store for us. The dream was so impressive that the next day I went as directed, and there I met Brother Thomas, and to my joy he had received a similar experience the night before, and was present as directed. We had talked much about the church and were very anxious to learn of its whereabouts. The place where we met was on a hillside near Minersville, Ohio, where there was some timber. We agreed to take the matter to the Lord in prayer and seek for needed light. After doing so a messenger appeared to us, and said, "Send for Isaac Sheen; he will give you needed information." We had never met Brother Sheen, but on inquiry we learned there was a person by that name preaching in the Ohio Valley. We invited him to come to our neighborhood and related to him our experience, and with joy we listened to the words of life and the claims of the Reorganization.

We both were baptized, Brother Thomas and I. I was shortly after ordained an elder and did considerable labor. In 1861 I was appointed by General Conference to go to Wales on a mission; but circumstances were such that I did not go.

And now, in conclusion, being of a sound mind, and realizing that ere long I shall pass on to the spirit world, and shall have to give an account of all my works, I take pleasure in saying that I know that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is recognized of God, and in harmony with the church of the New Testament in organization and doctrine, gifts and blessings, and that all who will do the will of the Lord shall know for themselves of the divinity of the same.

Respectfully,

NETAWAKA, KANSAS.

CHARITY.

Charity being the greatest of the graces of God it is worthy our attention for a moment, and in considering it we desire to draw out a few thoughts that may tend to cultivate the grace a little more in our daily intercourse with those around us. It matters not what our attainments or qualifications may be, if we lack charity we will make failure in our manly structure.

We purpose to deal with the word here as denoting "the pure love of God," and not merely almsgiving. Charity, the apostle says, "preventeth a multitude of sins," and it is obvious that the person who is possessed of the pure love of God will be able not only to prevent but also to overcome a great multitude of sins.

Charity does not condone sin, but it deals mercifully and justly with the victim of sin, and considers the conditions and causes of people's failures; it reaches out to the individual who has faltered, and does not pass judgment hastily and harshly upon the impulse of the moment; it does not condemn unjustly, but patiently looks upon the motive actuating the desire of the heart and metes out love and justice to all.

A person who is possessed of charity will not run without tidings; will not condemn anyone unheard; will not lie in wait to catch men; will not think evil of anyone; and will never be harsh in denunciation. A charitable person is never dogmatic or overbearing, he will never ask for anything he is not ready and willing to grant, and will never insist on others being more perfect than he is. He will never condemn another as guilty of crime because he has been charged with it, but will see that justice is meted out in every case. He will not busy himself about looking for the failings and shortcomings of others, but will look well to his own precept and example; he will remember that other people's errors are only a slight reflection of his own, and will endeavor to lead, and not drive humanity to higher goals.

"Charity suffereth long and is kind." It is obvious, therefore, that unkind deeds are not charitable deeds, therefore if charity crown the life of man it will develop within him the pure love of the divine Master, and will ennoble and uplift the character and life of the individual, and all with whom he comes in touch. The most charitable person that ever graced the footstool of God was he who said: "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." Therefore, if we are charitable we will not try to destroy another with our unkind denunciation, because he has erred, but will seek to save him, and preserve his life from a repetition of his error. And we will not attempt it with harsh, unmerciful, and unkind criticism, but in a spirit of meekness, love, forbearance, kindness, gentleness, and by this means overcome the evils and errors of the individual, melt the stony heart of sin and unbelief, and purge out the dross that is in his nature by kindling within his breast the fire of celestial love.

The nearer we approach unto the Christ life, the greater degree of charity will we exercise in dealing with our fellow men,—the more good will we see in them, and the less need will we have for unkind criticism; but the more will we see the need of kind, gentle, tender words of encouragement, that will tend to stimulate, build up, and emancipate the victim of wrong environment. The greater will be our desire for good; our aspirations will brighten, our love for God and man will increase, and true charity will be operative in all our dealings with our fellow men. We will consider more carefully the motive and incentive, and will be affected less by outward manifestations, but will see more readily the good in all, and by kind words and loving deeds will we lead the way to eternal bliss.

Fraternally,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."—PART 24.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

The Bible teaches that there is such a power in Deity to prolong life, whether Elder Traum recognizes it is another question. But one evidence for this faith is recorded in Isaiah thirty-eighth chapter. The Lord commands Isaiah to warn Hezekiah to "set his house in order," for he "should die and not live." Hezekiah turned his face to the wall and plead his life work to the Lord. "He wept sore." The Lord sent his prophet back again with the message: "Thus saith the Lord, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayers, I have seen thy tears; behold I will add unto thy days fifteen years."—Isaiah 38:1-8. The sun "returned ten degrees," and the shadow of the degrees were turned, "backward," in the sun dial of Ahaz, as a witness that God would perform that which he had promised.

In the tenth chapter of Revelation and eleventh verse, we read the following: "And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."

This gives the Apostle, Seer, and Revelator to the church of New Testament times, a more extended mission than he filled in Asia Minor, A. D. 94-96. Now we can not believe the apostles would have been allowed to entertain the view concerning John had it not been a correct one, nor would Jesus have confirmed a false impression with reference to the this prolongation. What! Accuse Jesus of complicity with deceit? Elijah and others, who were never permitted to taste death, will be living when Jesus comes, though doubtless they will have undergone a change in their conditions of life or life forces. Jesus informs his disciples: "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom."—Matthew 16:28. "Some," means more than one, and less than all, and would be meaningless, if reference was had to the day of Pentecost, as the time when Jesus would come "in his kingdom," for they were all there save Judas, at that time, and his successor was present. We are told by Apostle Paul that a number will be living at that time who will be changed; others, the Bible informs us, whose lives will be prolonged to the "age of a tree," and who, though they should die, will never sleep. Our Eternal Father is the source of life. He can prolong life, or change its conditions. The sixth proposition involves the text recorded in John 15:16, as follows: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you."

In this proposition Traum assumes that the church, or gospel, is the "fruit" these original Twelve were to "bring forth." Instead of the apostles producing the church, just the opposite obtains. Isaiah 66:8 says: "For as soon as Zion (the church) travailed, she brought forth her children." It was through the church "Zion," that God chose the apostles. God set the numbers everyone of them in the body as it pleased him. The apostles could preach the gospel, live the gospel, and enjoy the gospel, but they could not make the gospel, or produce the gospel, but could manifest the fruits of the gospel in their lives. Jesus Christ assumed not to make the church, nor its law. He says: "My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me."—John 7:17. Again, "My kingdom is not of this world."—John 18:36. Its laws were not produced here in this world. Legislation here in this world never originated a gospel ordinance, or a gospel law. "As it is written in the volume of the book, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God."—Hebrews 10:9. "I came not to do mine own will but the will of him who sent me."—John 6:38. The fruit of the gospel borne by the apostles could not be different from the fruit borne by any others of the church. The church of Jesus Christ does not bring forth different sorts of fruit. The apostles were not alone in bringing forth fruit, for "He that abideth in me and I in him the same bringeth forth much fruit."—John 15: 5. Jesus would be no more solicitous for, the fruit of the apostles to remain, than for the fruit of any other "branch" that "abides in him." He sent these apostles out in the world to teach the children of men the peaceable things of the kingdom; to teach with that wisdom that cometh down from above, "which is gentle, full of mercy and good fruits." (James 3: 17.) "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace." (Verse 18.) Paul says the fruit of death is brought forth by "the law," Mosaic, but the Roman brethren had been "married to another, even him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God" (Romans 7: 4, 5), and by this law of God, the gospel, the "aliens" who knew not God, and were "strangers to the commonwealth," could be "created in Christ Jesus unto good works," and thus show forth "good fruits." But the law, the church, was the means, the agency in the hands of God, of producing the good fruits. But suppose we substitute Trau's definition of "fruit" in the text, thus: "He that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much church." Beautiful, isn't it? The fruit produced by the church—the apostles, could "remain," when the church was swept from its original foundation, after the apostles' death. The question of fruit remaining has nothing to do with the apostasy of the church. Every man is accountable to God, individually, for the results of his conduct, or for the fruit borne by him. "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." The apostles' fruits would "remain," be "left," and treasured up in the casket of divine remembrance, to reward the individual men in the day of judgment, along with the fruits of all the prophets, wise men, and seers, with the rank and file of the people of God in every age, as the "works which follow the dead, who have died in the Lord," and yet the "falling away," predicted by Paul (2 Thessalonians 2: 3-10), the "departure from the faith," (1 Timothy 4: 1,) the "denial of the power of godliness," (2 Timothy 3: 1-6,) the "departure from sound doctrine"; the installation of false teachers; the abandonment of "the truth" for fables, "cunningly devised," (2 Timothy 4: 3, 4,) the ushering in of damnable heresies," "denying the Lord," "presumptuous, self-willed," fighting, opposing, speaking against, slandering God's "dignitaries,"—men who fill God's offices,—"forsaken the right way," "gone astray," following "the wages of unrighteousness, "wells without water," "clouds tossed by tempest," "scoffers, willingly ignorant," (2 Peter 2: 1-17; 3: 3-5.) "Antichrists," denying the "unction" that "reveals the Christ," (1 John 2: 18-21,) the appearance of "grievous wolves" "destroying the flock,"—the church,—"drawing away the disciples," "perverse teachings," (Acts 20: 29, 30,) the "kingdom of heaven suffering violence, and the violent taking it by force," (Matthew 11: 12). The "same horn making war against the saints, and prevailed against them" and "wore them out." (Daniel 7: 21, 25,) the "casting down of the truth to the ground," (Daniel 8: 10, 11, 12,) the existence of "the night, where no man could work the works of God," (John 9: 4,) the time when "men slept," "the tares sown," by "Satan," (Matthew 13: 24-26,) the "woman"—church—flying into the wilderness of darkness, (Revelation 12: 6,) breaking the divine "covenant" by her union with the beast, political power, (Isaiah 24: 1-6, Revelation 17: 3,) her consequent apostate condition, and subsequent decoration in the scarlet draperies of "mystery Babylon," (Revelation 17: 4, 5,) be scriptural facts, attested by competent historical testimony, and the observations of mankind.

Trau's illustrious church founder, Alexander Campbell, saw this apostate condition. On page 3 of Preface to Christian System, he says: "While Protestant hatred to the Roman pontiff, and the papacy continued to increase, a secret lust in the bosoms of Protestants for ecclesiastical power and patronage worked in the members of the Protestant popes, who gradually assimilated the new church to the old. Creeds and manuals, synods and councils, soon shackled the minds of men, and the spirit of reformation gradually forsook the Protestant church, or was supplanted by the spirit of the world."

On page 180, Mr. Campbell argues the apostasy as being completed, thus:

If Christians were and may be the happiest people that ever lived, it is because they live under the most gracious institution ever bestowed on men. The meaning of this institution has been buried under the rubbish of human traditions for hundreds of years. It was lost in the Dark Ages, and has never been, till recently, disinterred. Various efforts have been made, and considerable progress attended them; but since the Grand Apostasy was completed, till the present generation, the gospel of Jesus Christ has not been laid open to mankind in its original plainness, simplicity, and majesty. A veil in reading the New Institution has been on the hearts of Christians, as Paul declares it was upon the hearts of the Jews in reading the old Institution towards the close of that economy.

On page 178 of Christian System, his description of the apostasy is given in more graphic language and compact expressions as follows:

Under the present administration of the kingdom of heaven a great apostasy has occurred, as foretold by the apostles. As the church, compared to a city, is called "Mount Zion," Babylon the type, "Mystery Babylon" the antitype is to be destroyed by a Cyrus that knows not God. She is to fall by the sword of infidels, supported by the fierce judgments of God. The "Holy City" is still trodden under foot, and the sanctuary is filled with corruption. It is, indeed, a den of thieves, but strong is the Lord that judges the apostate city. Till that great and notable day of the Lord comes, we can not, from the prophetic word, anticipate a universal return to the original gospel, nor a general restoration of all the institutions of the kingdom of heaven in their primitive character, and consequently, we can not promise ourselves the universal subjugation of the nations to the scepter of Jesus.

From this testimony it is evident that Mr. Campbell did not believe the fruits of the apostles to be "the church," or believing it, did not recognize the text as teaching that it "should remain," but that the intention was to have it remain. In either case, Traum is against Campbell again. We have statements from Campbell, additional, and Scott, Stone, Mathes, Moore, Martin (of seven thunders fame) and many others of Traum's particular affiliation, but they are all too lengthy for insertion here. But a brief excerpt from Reverend J. L. Martin will not be out of place. He says:

The Lord save us from trying to go back to trace up a line of succession from the apostles until now, to prove that we are the true church, because the church was lost as an organization, and not measured by the Bible for twelve hundred and sixty years. . . . No, the true church of Christ went off into the wilderness, and became a corrupt church.—Voice of the Seven Thunders, page 191.

Again:

All the divisions of Christendom that are governed by uninspired men, belong to the same family, and make up the Babylon, and will all go down together.—Ibid; p. 248.

It may not be charitable, but from the evidence adduced from their own lips, and pens, our critic is not in the faith. Campbellism is against itself again.

Elder Traum failed to quote the text on which his number six was based. We append it in full:

Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.—John 15: 16.

The purpose of thus "choosing" and "ordaining" the apostles,—establishing the priesthood in the church,—was to connect the church with the fountain of divine revelation, "that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you." Does Elder Traum accept this conclusion? "The kingdom of God is not in word, but in power."—1 Corinthians 4: 20. For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Romans 14: 17. Has such relationship been transmitted, uninterruptedly, down the ages, and lodged, by succession, in the church Traum represents? Or, in any one, or all of the churches claiming "SUCCESSION OF TRUTH"? He must answer in the negative. Proposition number 7 is equally fallacious in the conclusion reached. That the apostles were made witnesses of what the Campbellites call the "three facts" of the gospel, we will not deny, but should it develop that there is one more fact, which the apostles never witnessed with physical vision, then what? Just this, that apart from the testimony of those who did see it, there is not a man on earth who can say Jesus was ever "born"! They have manufactured the idea of only the "three facts," namely "death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ," and deny the testimony of angels, that affirmed, "We bring you glad tidings of great joy," (Luke 2: 10,) and included within the gospel ("glad tidings") the birth of "Christ the Lord."—Verse 11.

But why did not Elder Traum quote the text that affirms "whereof we are witnesses"? Here it is:

And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.—Acts 5: 32.

In the face of this declaration that "the Holy Ghost" is a witness also, and that God gives it to them that obey him; and in the face of the express teaching of Jesus, that the Holy Ghost "will teach you all things," "shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you," and "shall proceed from the Father," and "shall testify of me,"—in the face of all this, proposition number seven looks like a zero "with the rim knocked off."

The apostles' duties are given by the head of the church in the great commission: "Go ye into all the world, preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16: 16. In Matthew 28: "Go teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." But before they entered upon this work Jesus told them:

But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.—Acts 1: 8.

This statement proves that they were witnesses in the sense Jesus required, until they had received the Holy Ghost; that only by the revelation of God can any man know the Christ. It argues that auricular and optical illusions might be possible, and physical vision did not demonstrate him to be the Christ. This is borne out by the fact that the great majority of those who did (physically) see him remained enemies, and at the same time those who were his disciples, were not simply his disciples by virtue of seeing him. Their knowledge of the Christ came to them by the power of the Holy Ghost, or by revelation from God. Hence Paul affirms: "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12: 3.

Notwithstanding all the association, and intimate terms of fellowship, personal familiarity, and intercourse with Jesus; notwithstanding they witnessed, in the sense of physically seeing the stupendous miracles, the apostles were not qualified as witnesses until "endued with power from on high." As for witnessing the fact of his resurrection, as to the apostles seeing him rise from the dead, Elder Traum fails to inform us which one of the apostles was present. If seeing him rise from the dead qualifies for the office of apostle, the Roman guards stationed at the sepulcher were eminently apostles. They sensed the presence of angels, and in the imperial labarum, experienced that that paled their cheeks with fear, and stretched them lifeless on the ground—"they became as dead men." But when they arose and fled, it was to tell, that true to his words, he had broken the stern empire of death, and encompassed humanity with the light of life, and theirs was the first testimony of the fact, until bribery fastened upon their lips the unfeasible lie, that "his disciples came and stole him away while they slept."

Very early in the ministry of Jesus the following incident occurred:

When Jesus came into the coasts of Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven.—Matthew 16: 13-19.

The idea is established that no man can know Christ, but by the revelation of God. "Flesh and blood can not reveal" this unto man. Christ confirms this same speech in Matthew 11: 27, as follows:

All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

These statements manifest that whenever and wherever the Holy Spirit reveals the Christ, or that "Jesus is the Christ," men are eligible to be chosen, and ordained as special witnesses, for the Holy Spirit is to "testify of Christ," and "take of mine, and manifest it unto you," (John 16). And in this sure testimony, "If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine' (John 7: 17), and need not depend upon the testimony of any other witness than the witness from God to himself, and shall know that "Jesus left behind him an open" and vanquished tomb!

But the dead "give-away" in this, and other of the propositions, Mr. Traum, is, these men were chosen, and ordained, and were apostles before they were witnesses. Hence, if they could be constituted apostles before the facts transpired, witnessing the facts is not indispensable to being apostles afterward. But Jesus Christ made this mistake. Can not this modern inconoclast break up some other parts of the image of Christ? Of one thing we can be assured; that is, our critic will never receive the encomium "We know that thou art a teacher sent from God," as long as he is at variance with the one who was recognized as such, in the language uttered nineteen hundred years ago.

THE QUESTION OF CHURCH UNION.

For some years past there has been considerable agitation in Canada in regard to church union. This eventually resulted in the formulation of a proposal for the organic union of the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Congregational churches. The proposed basis of union received the indorsement of the conferences of these bodies by votes from ten to one to about six to one. The question has been further submitted to a vote of the membership of the churches affected, with the result that the Congregationalists voted eight to one in favor of union, with the Methodist, though yet incomplete, standing ten to one in favor of the amalgamation, and the Presbyterian vote complete is almost three to one in favor of organic union upon the proposed basis.

In spite of these immense majorities in favor of the proposed union it is almost unanimously conceded that the minority in the Presbyterian Church opposed to the move are too strong to permit a satisfactory carrying into effect of the proposals. A majority of at least eighty per cent favoring union is generally regarded as a necessity to its successful working.

On this point Reverend S. D. Chown, general superintendent of the Methodist Church for western Canada, says:

Personally I do not think it would be wise for the three bodies to unite unless a vote of at least eighty per cent is recorded in favor of union. To serve the purpose which the movement has in view there must be substantiated unanimity. In my opinion, unless the vote in favor is at least eighty per cent of the total, union would result in a condition no better than that which exists at the present time. It would mean that while we would have one large church resulting from the union, there would still be outside that a body of the church that have voted strongly against it. There would still be many churches where we want but one.

Though the Methodist and Congregational churches greatly exceeded this eighty per cent majority, it is not likely that any action will be taken to bring about a union of these two until the Presbyterians increase their majority. The responsibility of the present situation rests with the Presbyterian Church, and their final decision will be made at the General Assembly which meets in June.

Chancellor Burwash, of Victoria University, says:

It is extremely unlikely that the Methodist and Congregational churches will essay a union if the Presbyterian Church declines to enter the coalition. Such a course would draw many adherents of the Congregational Church to the Presbyterian. It is likely that a new basis of union will be formulated.

Among the arguments used by those opposed to the proposed basis of union are these: 1. Denominational oneness is not an essential doctrine of the Christian religion. 2. The proposed union would prove destructive of connexionalism, being a movement towards a cold and disintegrating form of congregationalism. 3. The proposed basis presents an ambiguous creed, affording practically no protection from false teaching. 4. To vote for the basis is inconsistent with the covenant made by each minister at his ordination.

Regarding the latter two of these propositions, we quote a clear-cut argument by Reverend D. N. McCamus, a Methodist of London, Ontario, as follows:

To vote for the basis is not consistent with our doctrinal covenant. Every minister is under a sacred promise to "believe and teach all our doctrines." The general conference is prohibited altering, changing or revoking any article of our belief. This covenant exists chiefly for the sake of the people. It is intended to protect our pulpits and colleges from false doctrines. The proposed basis removes that protection, and exposes our people to the preaching of doctrines not in harmony with our standards.

The basis presents to our people an ambiguous creed. It has been said that the nineteen articles of the creed permit the preaching of "the whole gamut of Methodist doctrine." Yes, and also the whole gamut of Presbyterian doctrine and all the doctrines of the Congregational churches for which there is no gamut. The creed was constructed for the very purpose of permitting the preaching of all the varieties of doctrine found in the negotiating churches. It is not a harmonizing of beliefs but a toleration of differences, however great and conflicting. The Congregationalist says that "a definite subscription to a creed is not required." The Presbyterian says: "You must distinguish between the thing and our interpretation of it." "Ambiguity in religion is fraught with more mischief than ambiguity in anything else."

Organic unionists, forced to admit that the creed affords practically no protection from false teaching in our pulpits and colleges, have replied, "It is not orthodoxy that we need but life." This is a statement about as senseless as to say, "It is not pure air, wholesome food, or clean water that we need, but health." We can not secure or nourish true life without sound doctrine.

This effectually exposes one of the great difficulties lying in the way of union of the popular churches, that of finding a creed which will harmonize all beliefs. So far they have succeeded, as Reverend McCamus points out, only in evolving a creed that tolerates great and conflicting differences,—doctrinal differences among a group of organizations which call themselves and one another "orthodox"! How soon shall they become true to name?

The Onset Courier recently used the following letter from Brother James L. Edwards:

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

The Latter Day Saints have come to Onset to stay, and it is only fair to the citizens of the place that they should know something about them.

They are a misunderstood people, and have been ever since the death of the founder of the church, June 27, 1844, when Brigham Young took the lead of a part of the disorganized church, and introduced, contrary to the organic law of said church, the doctrine of polygamy, that damnable heresy and doctrine of devils, and discarded many of the pure principles of the gospel of Christ, and thus made the name of Joseph Smith odious, who in his lifetime discouraged and fought against everything that was not in strict accordance with the pure law of God as found in the Scriptures.

The church remained in a disorganized condition from 1844 to 1860, when it was reorganized with the martyr Joseph Smith's son as president, whose name is also Joseph, who had just come of age, from which time until now they have suffered reproach and scorn, the uninformed classing them with the Mormons or Brighamites, so called, who are unjustly using the name of "Latter Day Saint," to which they have no legal right, as they have departed from the original faith.

The Reorganized Church has no connection with the Utah people, only in sending missionaries amongst them to try and win them back to the original faith, which is nothing more nor less than the pure, simple gospel, as taught by Christ and his apostles.

CURE FOR DROPSY.

By request we republish the following:

Put two heaping tablespoonfuls of cream of tartar into a bowl, pour a pint of boiling water on it, then stir it, and let it settle until it is cold. Drink all the water when going to bed, but leave the sediment in the bottom, and pour more hot water on it to drink the next night. Take a dose of jalap in the morning. It will carry all the water off from the body. Repeat the dose of jalap the second morning.

The Toledo Weekly Blade recently published the following item:

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Please give an account of the church known as the Latter Day Saints.—N. J. F., Belle Center, Ohio.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a continuation of the church which was organized at Fayette, New York, April 6, 1830, with six members. It was an antipolygamist organization and was effected by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and others. Joseph Smith was chosen president. From this time of the organization the church rapidly increased. After the death of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young became his successor. While at Winter Quarters, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, in December, 1847, Young assumed the presidency of the church and led his followers to Salt Lake Valley, where he introduced such doctrines as Adam-God, blood atonement, and polygamy. None of these had been accepted by the church or taught by its authorities during the life of Joseph Smith. In 1851 a number of persons and local organizations, some of whom had stood aloof from all factions, started a movement that resulted in a conference at Beloit, Wisconsin, in June, 1852. This conference renounced all allegiance to Young and others. The church has always been aggressive in its fight against polygamy. The organization has a membership of about fifty thousand. It is prosecuting missionary work throughout the United States, the Canadas, Australia, New Zealand, Society Islands, Sandwich Islands, the British Isles, Scandinavia, and other countries.

Death of Sidney Rigdon's Son.

John W. Rigdon died at Salt Lake City April 6, aged eighty-two years. He was a son of Sidney Rigdon, who at one time in the early history of the Mormon Church was first counselor to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and resided in Nauvoo in the house now known as the "Nimrick place" in the first ward. John Rigdon was baptized in the City of New York, September 8, 1904, and immediately went to Utah, where he has since resided. He devoted much time some years ago to the lecture platform, and was generally recognized as an able writer and speaker. The testimony of John Rigdon concerning his father's relationship to the Book of Mormon was of peculiar interest. Recently he was interviewed as to his knowledge regarding the truth or falsity of a statement made by some parties as to alleged help given by his father, Sidney Rigdon, in assisting the Prophet in writing the Book of Mormon, and as to his knowledge of the Spalding story in connection therewith, and he stated that his father told him on his deathbed that he never knew anything about the Book of Mormon, nor of its translation until he received a bound volume of the book from the hands of Parley P. Pratt.—Nauvoo Independent, April 13, 1912.

"It is well enough, in a way, to advise young men to be industrious, to labor hard and to stick to the task before them, but the generalization of rules may work injury, for you can not lay down regulations that will fit all individual cases.

"What helped me more than anything else at the beginning of my career was a habit which I formed, or possessed naturally, of being willing to do those things which others did not care to undertake, or which they felt were not worth while doing. I endeavored to perform these labors as earnestly and enthusiastically as if I expected to be generously rewarded, and yet there was no such reward in sight.

"I remember a job in my early days which others said could not be done. I undertook the task when failure might have been a serious disappointment and discouragement. I simply took the chance, gave it the best thought and energy that I possessed—and I did not fail. It might have been a case of luck, or perhaps the sun was shining on me that day and my star was in the ascendant that night, but however that may be, the trial and its achievement did me an immense amount of good."—Timothy E. Ole Mammy Cheerful.

"Oh, de Lord am good, an' de skies am bright,
An' my soul is filled wid de heavenly light,
As I trabel on de King's highway!
He supplies my wants, an' He holds my hand—
While he leads me on to de promised land
At de ending ob de King's highway.

"On de King's highway; yes, de King's highway;
Oh, my faith am strong,
An' I sing my song,
As I trabel on de King's highway."

Each note and word of the song rang out clear and sweet, and as musical as a running brook, and harmonized with the beauty and gladness of the spring morning. As the singer, a colored woman, came around a bend in the road, a broom in her left hand and a basket on her right arm, her old face was all aglow with the faith and brightness of which she had just been singing, and was a picture well worth looking at. Hardly had the last note of the song died away, when a young lady standing on the wide porch of an old-fashioned mansion blithely cried out:

"Good-morning, Mammy Cheerful, and three cheers for the 'sweet singer of Israel!' Here is the best and easiest chair about the house waiting to be filled by the dearest old mammy in the world, and you come right up and fill it."

After a warm embrace, the old woman was ensconced in the big, comfortable rocker, a veritable embodiment of contentment and happiness, and ready for the rapid fire of questions she knew she might expect from her beloved foster-child.

"Well, Mammy Cheerful, what brought you here this morning?"

"What brought me here, Miss Annie? Why, bress your heart, 'tain't no secret, an' if 'twas I could trust my honey wid it; 'twas my faithful old feet what brought me."

The old woman's sides shook with merriment and her laughter was as musical as the song of a meadowlark. Miss Annie joined in the laughter heartily and then said:

"I am sure you have some good news; pray tell me what is up."

"Up, dearie? Why eberyting am up; my Lord am up, and love am up, and heaben am up, an' eben de corn my ol' man planted yesterday was up before I left home dis mornin'."

"Planted yesterday and up this morning! Why, mammy, how was that possible?"

"Well, yer see, honey, Uncle Eph thought, what wid de sunshine an' rain, it mought come up in a week or ten days, but he hadn't reckoned on dem pigs a bustin' froo the fence in de night an' givin de corn a lift he hadn't counted on."

Again Miss Annie and her mammy made the whole neighborhood ring with peals of merry laughter.

"I say, Miss Annie, I dun a heap of thinkin' about pigs as I come along dis mornin'. I used to tink dat pigs wid dere curly tails and dere squealin' was de cutest things dat eber was, but I made up my mind that all a pig thinks about is to make a hog of himself while makin' a hog of himself, an' doin' all he can to turn his squeal into a grunt, an' den roll in de mud an' thank goodness dat he's a hog. He don't want to be a man, but jes' a hog, an' it's all right, for dat's his nature. But, honey, dear, can you 'splain to me how a man, born to trabel in 'de King's highway' under de blue sky, an' among de flowers, an' hear de birds sing an' to lie down in green pastures, an' to open de windows ob his soul to let de love shine in, gits tired ob bein' a man, an' goes in de saloon, an' comes out a hog, an' jes' wallers in de mud wid de four legged members ob his family? I dun tol' my ole man, dat I'd rather de pigs bust froo our fence an' make hogs ob demselves out de seed corn, dan to have some boys bust froo de saloon door an' make hogs of demselves. Oh, Miss Annie, yer asked about de good news, an' I's sure got some. De oder day dey voted to make our town dry, an' quit makin' hogs out ob de boys, an' I ain't done much but shout an' sing eber since."

"Oh, Mammy Cheerful, but that is good news! And I understand now why it was your singing, as you came down the road this morning, sounded sweeter than ever. See here, mammy, do you ever get blue?"

"Blue, chile! what for I get blue? Isn't my heavenly Father de King ob kings, an' isn't I his chile? De place fer de blue is in de sky, an' de place fer love is in de heart, an' I keeps de blue an' de love in de place whar dey belong. Dar am two things I couldn't get along without; one ob dem is a broom and de oder is faith. Wid a broom I keeps de dust and dirt out ob my way, an' wid de faith I keeps de cobwebs out ob my sky. Bress the dear Lord for brooms and faith!"

Here the old woman with smiling face sang softly, so softly that it sounded like a humming bird:

"On de King's highway; yes, de King's highway;
Oh, my faith am strong,
An' I sing my song,
As I trabel on de King's highway."

Tears were in the eyes of Miss Annie as the music ceased and very earnestly she said: "Oh, Mammy Cheerful, I wish I had your faith, and I have always wished it ever since I was a child in your arms. You are just the dearest mammy and the best Christian I ever knew. But, forgive me for not sooner asking about your rheumatism. Is it better?"

"Rheumatiz! Well, dar; I dun forgot all about habin' it, fer yer see, honey, I has so many blessings to think about, dat I don't git time to think about little troubles. I has enough twinges for de rheumatiz to remind me dat I is not yet in de promised land, but grace enough to keep me from totin' out a thing like dat, when I's got my soul full ob de love of God. Some folks enjoy bein' misable, an' so trots out dere aches an' pains an' troubles, as dough dey was de greatest tings in de world. No, no, honey dear, what for should I hand yer a weed, when I can gib yer a rose; or a cloud, instead ob a sunbeam; or talk to yer about rheumatiz when I can tell yer about love. I's all right."

"Well, mammy, what have you got in your basket? I am sure it is something nice."

With a chuckle the old woman said:

"So yer done noticed de basket at last, has yer? Well, I's been spectin' to hear yer ask dat question. In dat basket is some ob de nicest an' freshest eggs dat eber a hen laid, or a rooster crowed about. I say, Miss Annie, did yer eber notice how much a rooster is like some men? De rooster does his biggest crowin' when de hen has laid an egg an' some men does dere loudest crowin' ober something dere wife has done. Dar's that lazy fellow ober in our town, Mose Simmons; when some one asked him what he done for a libin' he says, 'My old woman goes out washing,' an' den all day long he holdin' down a chair in front ob de saloon an' tellin' what a smart woman his wife am. An' say, Miss Annie, yer ought to hear dat same Mose shout in revival time; my, my, yer done tink he was de good Lord's chosen disciple, when everybody knows dat all de religion he's got is in his wife's name. But dar, honey, how yer old mammy's tongue does run on! It does my soul good ter see yer, an' I jest couldn't stay away any longer."

"Well, Mammy Cheerful, you are welcome over and over again, and I was hungry to see you and hear your sweet voice once more. I get more help out of your simple, child-like faith and preaching on everyday things than I do out of all the sermons down at the old church, where you held me in your arms the day I was christened. I hope you are going to make me a good long visit, and we will turn those lovely fresh eggs into the nicest things we can make for you to eat."

The eyes of the old woman were swimming with tears, while her old black face shone like a morning sunrise, as she said very softly, "Dear Lord, I wants to thank yer dat I still has a warm place in the heart of my honey lamb, an' dat she don't turn her back on her old black mammy. Miss Annie, I was going back home to-night if my old feet got rested enough after walkin' nine miles dis mornin', but now I'm gwine to stay until to-morrow."

"That's lovely, Mammy Cheerful. If it were not for Uncle Eph, you should never go back. You shall have the best bed in the house, and to-morrow I will send you back in the carriage."

As Miss Annie went into the house she heard the old saint humming:

"On de King's highway; yes, de King's highway;
Oh, my faith am strong,
An' I sing my song,
As I trabel on de King's highway."

Dear Saints: We are among the isolated ones who love the gospel and long for a messenger to help spread the glad tidings in this part of the country. The field is large, but the gospel workers are few. We wish to be placed at once on the home class list with the Sunday school and Religio workers, for my heart's desire is to ever live faithful to God and the gospel. Hopefully, your sister,

Editors Herald: "Who was Melchisedec?" The Lord has made quite clear (to the mind of the writer, at least for the present) in modern revelation that Melchisedec was not Shem, which the following will show clearly, I think: "Esaiaas also lived in the days of Abraham, and was blessed of him, which Abraham received the priesthood from Melchisedec; who received it through the lineage of his fathers, even till Noah."—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 2. (Italics are mine.)

The word fathers, plural, and even till Noah show Melchisedec to have been a more distant relative than son of Noah. This, then, is more sure than "tradition" or any "Bible Dictionary," and if I understand the meaning of the text, for ever precludes the possibility of Melchisedec being the son of Shem, or a direct son of Noah. As to whose son he was I can not say, in the light of the above, but I am in line for more light on this, and all matters of interest.

Editors Herald: We are going to reside in Perry again. If there is an elder anywhere near Ferguson, please call on Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, as they and their two daughters are about ready for baptism. Their daughters are the public school teachers there. Ferguson is close to Marshalltown; also close to Tama. Call very soon, as one of the girls will soon change her place of residence. Mrs. Cunningham said that she once heard a Mr. Kelley debate with a Campbellite and could never forget his sermon, although she was young at the time. The debate occurred in a schoolhouse close to the Cunningham home, and she always believed that Mr. Kelley was right. At present they are Restitutionists, but are not satisfied.

There are others investigating. Their names can be had by writing to me, and stamps will be sent to cover the expense of writing.

NELLIE MARTIN.

EAST PERTH, WESTERN AUSTRALIA, April 3, 1912.

Editors Herald: For the first time since giving obedience to the restored gospel I take this opportunity of writing you. We are in a far country out here, eighteen or nineteen thousand miles away, but nevertheless we are thankful that we enjoy branch privileges as in other parts of this work. You very seldom hear from Western Australia, but we are glad to say that we are all as Saints trying to uphold the gospel banner in this part of the world.

We have been organized as a branch about six or seven years, and never have we received greater help from the Lord than at the present time. We can see his mighty hand is over us, though we are few in number. We have thirty to thirty-three members, but are sorry to say that all do not attend as often as they might. We have a great uphill struggle to keep the work rolling here.

When first preaching on the streets of Perth we used to have some lively discourses, but the people pretty well know us now. We have some very attentive audiences now, and many come regularly to hear us.

We have five Utah missionaries out here, but I can not see for my life how they can stay so long, as they get very little interest on the street. We have set the people on very plain ground as far as the difference between our church and the Utah Mormons. They refuse to debate church rights.

I was baptized into this work in England by Brother Gomer T. Griffiths about 1902, and since giving obedience I can say it has been the happiest part of my life. The Lord has been good to me and I can truthfully say he is a loving Father; he has blessed me far above what I deserve, and now I can see traces of his hand in leading me in days gone by.

We had a pleasant time when Brother F. G. Pitt and wife stayed here. We all felt greatly blessed and strengthened by the spiritual food he imparted and were loth to lose him, but he had to move on to other parts, after promising to return to open our church if ready in time.

We keep the Saints' time occupied as much as possible in the work here. We have prayer and testimony meetings every alternate Sunday; also every Thursday evening; while we have Book of Mormon class on Wednesday one week, and Religio class the next week.

We are expecting Brother Davis when on his way to America to stay six months with us and help us along.

I am anxious every week for the arrival of the HERALDS; they impart much spiritual food, and strengthen my faith in the living God, who alone can save.

I am striving to do the will of the Master, and my aim is to please him. I want to sow to the Spirit at all times, that I may reap life everlasting.

We can see the Lord's approach is near at hand, and how the world is groping in blindness, knowing not whither to go. To see how living humanity is retrograding and going down hill many times saddens my heart, seeing the pitiful plight they are getting into.

May we all as Saints be able to live this life faithfully, doing our best for mankind, so that when we are called home we may receive the reward that is laid up for those who diligently serve him and keep his commandments. I pray that his work will grow and reach the honest in heart, and that the redemption of Zion will soon dawn upon us, that we may all be united and enjoy that perfect bliss that comes from above.

MCPHERSON, KANSAS, May 7, 1912.

To the Scattered Members, and Those of Northwestern Kansas District that have not Sunday School Privileges; Greeting: Dear brothers and sisters, we have all for life enlisted in this latter day work, we trust for no other cause than the uplifting of the brotherhood of man. That this may be accomplished we are all agreed that we "must start right," then keep right. That this may be done let us properly educate our dear little children along gospel lines, so that when they reach the years of accountability they will enter into the "fold," of their own free will, gladly. And if properly instructed and our lives are a living correspondence to that which we teach, they will indeed be wise, and there will be no necessity of them wandering away, neither will they, for they shall know the truth.

Now, I have appointed superintendent of the "home department" work of the Sunday school for the Northwestern Kansas District. Brothers and sisters, let me hear from you; let me tell you what the home class work has done for others, and let me assure you that it will do as much for you and your children. It will put them into the church, where they rightfully belong.

Anyone knowing where we can find those that have not Sunday school privileges, please write me, at McPherson, Kansas.

Yours in the faith,
T. COMER TURPEN.

ATLANTA, MICHIGAN, April 18, 1912.

Editors Herald: A history of the work in this place may be of interest to some. Nine years ago this spring three Saints, Brother Arthur O. Starks and wife, Sister Lilly and Brother Noel S. Starks, with Sister Starks's two nieces, Hazel and Pearl, moved into this region of the swamps and mosquitoes from Antrim County. They united with the Hillman Branch, but soon finding out Elder G. W. Burt and others at Comins, Brother and Sister Hogle moved here temporarily in the fall, moving out in the spring. A prayer meeting was started which, though it has been dropped at times, has been started again as often.

Winter brought another family: the writer, wife and three children. The following spring Brother Burt preached several sermons and two more were added, Brother and Sister Widdis. A year or two later a few more sermons resulted in a neighbor's daughter, Golda Sample, also Walter and Emmitt Widdis and Hazel Ferris being baptized. Several others have been baptized.

Several attempts at organization were made, but on account of the officers being needed in the Hillman and Comins branches, it was not realized. Sunday school and Religio were kept up for some time, and quite an interest at one time on the part of outsiders.

Brother Noel Starks having returned to Antrim County in order to care for his mother and father, after his mother's death and sale of his place here, came back to us, bringing wife and boy with him. This was four years ago. Brother Arthur Starks soon moved to Hillman, selling out to Noel. The next year he left Hillman, moving to Alpena and later to Onaway, where he has done a good work. This left Hillman without an elder, so the writer was asked to assist there, which he did, Comins having two other elders at that time. This continued till last February when Brother E. O. Banks was ordained an elder, and elected president of branch the following evening, February 12, when Brother T. P. Atkinson also was ordained a teacher. South Hillman has a full officership, with Brother Roy Atkinson priest, and Brother R. Moran deacon.

On his return here, Brother Noel Starks united with the Comins Branch, and was ordained a priest over a year ago. He was ordained elder at the two-day meetings held at his home in October of last year, which meetings were well attended and of much spiritual benefit to the Saints. About this time the Lord began to speak to us, through Sister Starks and among other very precious things made known, was the calling of our young brethren, Brother Albert Danks to the office of priest, which was fulfilled April 7, 1912; Brother Percy Pushman to the office of deacon, which took place at Hillman, February 12, 1912, and another young brother not yet ordained.

Thus when we were about discouraged of having a branch organized, the Lord was calling and preparing men to fill offices in it when the time would come. So in the closing of the month of January, receiving intelligence from the Lord, his servants wrote to Brother Goodman, district president, and he and Sister Goodman were soon with us; first at Hillman February 11, 12, and on the 17th organized our branch to be known as the Clear Springs Branch. The officers are Elder Noel S. Starks, president; Sister Jessie Danks, secretary; Albert Danks, priest; Elder A. S. Pushman, acting teacher; Percy Pushman, deacon; Sister Starks, chorister. Number of members, nine.

Since branch organization we have revived Sunday school and Religio studies, and will be glad to see district officers of these auxiliaries any time, to put us in good order. We feel like saying with one of old: we will "attempt great things for God and expect great things of God," being encouraged by his word to us from time to time; and the good times we have had in our meetings of late; in which we have been made to rejoice under very depressing conditions. But we know that the Lord tries his people, and sometimes we have the blues and the writer especially is afraid he does not put forth enough energy in the work. But I think all nine of us are desirous of living so as to be among the number of those John saw who had "washed their robes," etc.

Having been shown that my work now must be more to the world, for as the Lord said, "the harvest truly is great but the laborers few," I am endeavoring to present the gospel to the people of Atlanta and vicinity. In a little, new settlement southwest of here I found some hungry souls, and preached eleven sermons in the schoolhouse, but Satan got the dishonest ones busy and had us shut out. Just now I am renting the town hall, Atlanta, Sunday evenings, and have meetings Sunday afternoons in the Edwards Schoolhouse. Though there are no requests for baptisms, and generally the people are indifferent, yet I want to leave them without excuse.

I remain yours for the work,
A. S. PUSHMAN.

HILLMAN, MICHIGAN, R. F. D. 1, Box 38.

PERRY, IOWA, May 4, 1912.

Editors Herald: I am a very new member of the church and I am prompted to write you through some press notices.

I note that Sister Nellie Martin, formerly of this place but for the present of Ferguson, Iowa, and Doctor Gogwell are the new members of the advisory board from their district of the Children's Home in Des Moines. We congratulate Des Moines on securing her services; she is one of Iowa's best educated women, and is so acknowledged. Her knowledge and memory of the Scriptures are simply overpowering, and her home shelters many notables of fine arts and literature lines. She was once asked in public, "Is there anyone you deem ahead of you in the knowledge of the Scriptures and history?" She replied, "Yes, sir; a full fledged Latter Day Saint preacher; he has authority from on high and can make me feel as a candle compared to the sun. He speaks by inspiration; I depend on my knowledge and memory of books."

It was Sister Martin who brought the gospel message to our family; also several others who are now members of the true church, and this is why we watch with interest her work. I was a stenographer in the city for years; I would often go to churches, feeling I wanted to know the plan of salvation; I would return to my boarding place disappointed, so never joined. After returning to Perry I became Sister Martin's secretary and heard the gospel talked daily in her studio to pupils, friends, callers, agents, and questioners. I have never heard the Latter Day Saint side lose out, so after hearing sermons from Brethren Roth, Clark, Salisbury, Reiste, and others, I was ready to obey and was baptized last spring.

We believe we will soon have a little church here where we may all worship without being obliged to climb a long, dingy stairway.

Yours in the faith,
ALICE ISENHART.

HIGHMORE, SOUTH DAKOTA, April 30, 1912.

Dear Editors Herald: We have been thinking for some time of writing and telling how we appreciate the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. Of all the papers we take and read I believe, of their class, they far excel all others. The articles are most timely and thoroughly written, and are very comprehensive and definite. The review of Traum's Book, Mormonism Against Itself, is surely worth putting into book form. The contributions to the Leaves are surely grand, and as I read them it makes me feel that Joel's prophecy is literally being fulfilled, and that Moses' wish had come true, that all were prophets. As we look upon the world and the sectarian churches we can not but have a feeling of sorrow, because we see so plainly what they are denying themselves. How often we try, and in various ways, to introduce the "angel's message" and to see the ways or means employed to forestall its introduction is a wonder.

In our town we have the Methodist Episcopal, Christian, Congregational, and Catholic; all are quite active. The three first mentioned are quite friendly, and very often one congregation visits another, and have their churches filled. But we never hear a gospel sermon. How fearful they seem. They are aware that I am a Latter Day Saint, but it does not matter how courteous or mild we may be, they will not be drawn into a conversation on religion.

We have lived in Highmore since the 17th of February, we had lived twenty-six miles north of town, and on February 14 our house burned to the ground—only saved a few things. My wife and six little ones were all alone. It burned about 10 o'clock in the morning. I and our two oldest boys were twenty-five miles away. It seemed the last straw. Last year we had in nearly three hundred acres of crop and it was a total failure, and year before not half a crop, with sickness and our house burning simply wiped us of the farm. The Saints at Crescent City, Iowa, remembered us substantially, which encouraged us greatly. They sent us bed clothing and clothes for our children and fifty-three dollars in money. My brother at Modale sent us ten dollars; our Sister J. N. Boyd, of Lenora, Kansas, sent us aid for which we feel very thankful.

I have been sick for over a month with chronic appendicitis, or neuralgia of the bowels, some call it; unable to work. We humbly request the prayers of the Saints that we may recover. It seems so necessary that my life be spared at this time.

Yours in gospel bonds, with a prayer for the redemption of Zion.
C. F. PRATT.

EDMONTON, ALBERTA, CANADA, April 29, 1912.

Editor Herald: I think it was stated by our worthy Prophet, at one time, "Never write until you have something to write, then write." Now I think I have something to write about. The work in this district is looking very bright. Many calls for elders to come and preach for us.

My labors since the first of the year have been as follows: I was sent by the conference at Vanscoy to Shellbrook, to ordain Brother Sims to the office of priest. I remained there for a month or more, preaching every night, and baptized four while there. There is a good interest in that part of the mission, and I believe others are near the kingdom. About the tenth of March, I was requested to come to Edmonton, by the president of the district. I did so, and preached my first sermon on the 17th of March, in a little hall that the few Saints had rented. There were only ten Saints here then, and to-day there are twenty-nine, and some three or four ready for the water.

We have one elder, one priest, and two teachers; and to-day we have one of the best halls in the city for Sundays, from 2 p. m. until 9 p. m. It costs twenty dollars per month, but the collections pay all expenses. There is talk of changing the three-day meeting that was to be at Millet in July, to Edmonton, as a number of Saints are moving away from Millet.

I wish to say to the Saints in general, there was a request put in HERALD and Ensign, asking the Saints for money to help carry on the work in this city. I believe it was to be sent to one George W. Winn, of this city. Now, I notify the Saints not to send any more money to that address. The way it was written, the Saints were all poor. It is a fact they are not millionaires, nor are they in poverty. I am sending tithing to-day to the Bishop's agent from the Saints here; and I expect to be able to send hundreds of dollars of tithing before the close of the year.

Our congregation is getting larger every Sunday. I never canvassed a town or city as I have this. I have distributed thousands of dodgers; went from house to house and placed them right into the houses; and we have canvassed with the notice of our meetings on the corners of the streets, and in the front of hall; also an ad in the papers of this city.

I might say for the benefit of any that might be coming to this city: it is a good place for a working man. We hold our services in the Mechanics Hall on Third Street. Sunday school at half past two in the afternoon, and preaching at half past seven.

Saints, if you have any friends in or near this city, please invite them to come to our meetings, and you will oblige

Your brother in the gospel of Jesus Christ,

J. L. MORTIMER.

BREWTON, ALABAMA, April 14, 1912.

Editors Herald: Thank God I am yet alive in this glorious work. I became a member of this church in 1881, and I have never regretted being in this church. I love the cause of Christ, and do know the work is true. All we have to do is to live up to God's law, and keep his commandments. I request all Saints to pray for me that I may become stronger in the faith. I have two boys seventeen and fifteen years old, both of whom belong to the church.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH BOOKER.

CHERRYVALE, KANSAS, May 4, 1912.

Editors Herald: Seeing Mrs. A. Mellon's request in a late HERALD for prayers for her brother-in-law who was afflicted with sciatic rheumatism, I am sending for publication a receipt for rheumatism that I know to be good for other kinds of rheumatism; and I also know a man who has used it for sciatic rheumatism and he threw away both of his crutches.

RECEIPT FOR SCIATIC RHEUMATISM.

One half pint of alcohol, four ounces turpentine, two ounces, dry measure, cayenne pepper, half ounce gum camphor, half ounce oil of cedar, half ounce oil of sassafras, half ounce oil of pennyroyal, ten drams oil of hemlock. This should be well mixed, letting it stand for twenty-four hours, then filter and it is ready for use. Apply and rub vigorously with the hand until dry; bathe three or four times a day.

This cured as bad a case as I ever knew, one that baffled the best physicians of the country.

Wishing the sufferer much relief, I am,

News from Branches

Chicago, Illinois.

FIRST BRANCH.

Those closely associated with the work in Chicago, especially in our branch, agree in the fact that there has been a marked degree of development during the last two years. It is a very peculiar thing, too, to notice the change of faces during a certain period; new ones come and others go, always a current of old and young bound for different fields, and thus human beings associated with an organization, act very similar to atoms of material, integrating and disintegrating, always radiating a certain force or power.

Another very prominent feature is that the burden of the responsibility has been placed upon young shoulders. We feel very thankful here that the Father has such an efficient and earnest corps of young workers.

At the present time we are enjoying a season of peace and good fellowship, which bids fair to develop to a condition of unity and fruitfulness. A few cases of sickness have come to our attention, but all seem to be doing quite well. Our prayer meetings are not as well attended as they could be, but those who put forth the effort to attend are generally well repaid.

To-day's meeting, being our regular sacrament Sunday, was very well attended, and a good number took an active part in prayer and testimony.

The preaching of late has been done by the local brethren, and we have every reason to feel quite satisfied with their labors.

FRANK F. WIPPER.

1518 SOUTH TRUMBULL AVENUE.

Independence, Missouri.

On the first of May the little children were busy gathering and distributing the perfumed lilacs and wild violets, and scattering sunshine, as usual, everywhere. So after a long and tedious season of wintry and strenuous experiences, now come to our ears the sweet songs of the birds, and upon the senses fall the soft, prophetic breathings of balmy spring.

At the prayer meeting on Wednesday, the first day of May, there was the wonted gathering at the church, and a goodly number of the young were present, who had the opportunity to listen, and to engage in the fervent prayers for the sick, and the many faithful and earnest testimonies borne. Among them, our gifted brother, C. Ed. Miller, in his usually spirited and impressive manner, gave an excellent talk on the subject of Kirtland, its revered and beautiful temple; and he spoke also of the efforts being put forth by the few faithful workers engaged in that historic place.

In the annual conference minutes, as published in the church papers, one may see the evidences of the important and voluminous work done at that great gathering through the devoted labors of the servants of the Master, both of the leading ministry and the missionary force of the church, not excepting the noble women who have with true, consecrated spirit been so engaged.

It may not go into history, all the uplifting and inspiring instruction that was imparted at those meetings, but the recorder may perhaps be able to touch lightly on some of the impressive words spoken. We remember the sermon of Elder F. J. Ebeling, on the evening of the fifteenth, presenting so clearly the high moral standard of the gospel; and how joyful were the Saints to hear our brother say, "Nothing is more clearly perceptible than the greater endowment of the Spirit to the ministry of Jesus Christ." And the speaker gave a fitting tribute to the noble work being done by the church,—the erecting of the homes for the aged, and for the children, the establishing of the Order of Enoch for the welfare of Zion, of the Sanitarium and of Graceland College, for all these institutions, he said, afford opportunities to help in giving true service to the church.

Then how intent were the Saints in listening to the address of Elder W. W. Smith on the evening of April 12, and how we longed that the same devoted and consecrated spirit of the Savior might be diffused among the anxious and aspiring poorer classes, in all the large cities of the Union, as was displayed in the noble work of the vacation summer school of Philadelphia.

But we may say, of a truth the glorious work of the latter days is moving on apace. The Religions continue to be wide-awake, and so, also, is the Sunday school. We have now a mothers' class in the first primary department, presided over by Sister Horton, and the Sunday school executive have decided to devote Friday afternoons to a more extended study of the senior lessons. Another indication of progress among the workers is that there is to be a study class instituted by the Woman's Auxiliary; and, while we indulge the thought of the expansion of our intellectual forces, we hope by consecration of spirit to reach a unity of "faith and hope and love" that is sure to bring the blessing of our heavenly Father.

Although on Saturday, May 4, the Saints were called to bid farewell to the loving presence of Sister L. Crick, and it was a tearful occasion, yet on Sunday the Saints again met and were edified through the word spoken by Elders Elvin and E. C. Briggs.

Notices.

We are trying to locate the following members of our church. Kindly advertise the names in the HERALD for addresses: David L. Bethel, Helen M. Buxton, Walter H. Webb, Lucy Ann Robbins, Lulie C. Pearce, Charles E. Peck, Lydia A. Eccles, formerly members of disorganized branch at Plainville, Massachusetts.

Also please try to find out the date of the death of the following: Thomas L. Greene, Lucinda Fuller, formerly associated with the disorganized branch at Plainville, Massachusetts.

We will thank you for any information regarding the above.

Your brother in Christ,
EDMUND M. BROWN, Branch Clerk.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District; Greeting: Our primary object in writing this notice is to inform you of the change in the bishop's agent's address. You are already informed of the change in the agent. We appeal to you for a continuation of support in this very important branch of the work. You in the branches please honor the subagents and place your tithes and offerings in their hands, taking receipts for the same, the Saints in the scattered condition please send to the following address.

WM. JOHNSON, Bishop's Agent.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, 3618 Evanston Avenue.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Southern Missouri District; Greeting: Having been placed in subcharge of this field, and feeling and seeing the great needs of the work, I call upon one and all to come to the help of the district. Everyone holding the priesthood can do something; and we are anxious to assist them to put on the whole armor of God; and thus fulfill the office whereunto God has called you and the elders ordained you. Let it not be said of us, "You have hidden your Lord's money; Bind the unprofitable servant, and cast him out."

Now, brethren, if any one of you have made up your mind that you can't do anything, you have made it up to a mistake. God never called anyone that he did not give one talent, or more. The church needs your help; the world needs the message that you are called and ordained to preach. God requires your "reasonable service." Will you "render to God the things that are God's"?

We are anxious to hear from all those holding priesthood in the district; and will be glad to assist them in any way that we can. I assure you that you have a godspeed from me to go on, and do all you can to build up the work of the Lord.

Each lay member can do much to advance the cause of Christ; and their work is very essential. Live right, pay your tithing, and thus send the life and light of Christ to the world.

We shall be glad to hear from any who want meetings, and will do all we can to reach you at the proper time.

Saints, remember that we are living in a day "of sacrifice for God's people," and none are excused. "All are called." So let us be "diligent to make our calling and election sure."

Oh! how we love to sing: "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light." And indeed it is, "if we walk in the light as He is in the light."

May success and glory crown all the Israel of God through the blessed name of Christ Jesus our Lord.

In gospel bonds,
WEST PLAINS, MISSOURI, Box 4. J. T. DAVIS.

To the Saints of the Des Moines District; Greeting in the Lord: Another conference year brings with it many old and several new responsibilities, a proper consideration and fulfillment of which will bring reward, but the neglect of which will add to our condemnation.

Those in charge of Mission number 1, or the Lamoni Mission, which includes the Des Moines District, have assigned as a part of my responsibility the looking after the missionary interests of the district, and to look after other interests that fall to the lot of an assistant minister in charge.

Associated with me in the general ministerial work in the district are Brethren S. M. Reiste, and M. M. Turpen, with a part of the labors of Patriarch C. E. Butterworth. Those who have special work for the patriarch will make such arrangements with him, but those desiring special missionary work or tent work may correspond with me, and every request will be given due consideration and attention.

The district has come to the help of the financial arm of the church excellently, especially during the first part of this year, but only a few have done this. Having been requested by the bishop to act as his agent for this district, I am anxious that all may receive a reward, and all meet the conditions as required in the law: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)." By rendering a legal account of your stewardship you are entitled to an especial blessing from God, both of a temporal and spiritual nature, and there will be sufficient in the storehouse of the Lord, so that the prayer oftentimes repeated that "more laborers" may be sent into the vineyard may be answered, and the widows and orphans may have no need but what is satisfied.

Consider well the appointments of the Lord, and give proper respect to each in his place, and let not the feet be misled into wishing or trying to direct and control those who are chosen to be over you in the Lord. By thus working together there will arise no "strife and contention," but all working together will glorify God, and peace like a river unmolested will move to its desired end.

Cases of long standing should be looked after at once by the local officials, according to the law, and thus remove iniquity out of the church, and prune the vine of all dead and cumbersome material, as advised by the Master.

May grace and peace and power be multiplied unto you.

Your coworker in Christ,
J. F. MINTUN, Assistant Minister in Charge.

DES MOINES, IOWA, 1205 Filmore Street.

To the Saints of the Utah District; Greeting: Having been made choice of by the appointing powers this year, in Ogden, Utah, and Malad, Idaho, and intermediate points, I take this means of communicating with you, trusting it will serve as a means to an end in enabling us to better understand your needs.

I expect to be in the field on or before May 10 and will be pleased to hear from all those who may especially desire our services.

Having confidence in the Saints there, and a longing desire to see the work advance, feel sure we will, by a united effort, and the Spirit of divine love, be able to give impetus to the work there.

Earth's shadows shall grow bright as heaven, the while
 A web of glory round thy life is wove.
 —The British Congregationalist.

Considering our holy calling, let us labor as becomes Saints, leaving off the carnal weapons, and taking up the instruments of peace and love, and becoming skilled in their use let us conquer the world thereby. Let us remember that the great and good man is he who will sacrifice the present pleasure for the future good.

I trust, therefore, your hearty cooperation and support will be accorded me, that thereby I may be able to render the best possible service and thus accomplish all that is anticipated.

Mail sent me either at Malad, Idaho, or 1509 Washington Avenue, Ogden, Utah, will reach me, and I will be glad to hear from all who are in need of my services, and especially do I desire to keep in touch with the local workers in that field.

Feeling encouraged in the work, and trusting we will have a pleasant and profitable year with you, I remain,

Your servant for the sake of the truth,

May 1, 1912. J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Greetings and esteem to our fellow workers in the Pacific Slope Mission: The above is composed of British Columbia, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Mexico, and Hawaii.

The General Conference just passed is marked as one of the best ever held by the church. The extension of our work into the increased auxiliaries, employing greater variety of talents, making more room for service, is inspiring "for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

To facilitate and equalize our privileges the following outline is suggested: In British Columbia Daniel Macgregor will be stationed, and as opportunity affords will conduct Sunday school work at such reunions as he may be able to reach.

In Eastern Washington, including the Spokane District, T. C. Kelley and Oscar Case are placed; let T. C. Kelley be considered in charge. In the western part of the State, Brethren Thorburn and Plumb will give special attention to new work, laboring together as much as is possible. Brother Johnson may attend to the duties of the district presidency as heretofore, while P. Premo can be subject to call as needs direct, by the district president. Brother C. E. Crumley may take charge of Southwestern Oregon District, as well as radiate into unorganized territory adjacent. Brother M. H. Cook and Brother A. V. Closson associate according to the needs of Portland District. H. J. Davison in such parts as health may permit. Patriarch E. Keeler accordingly as circumstances permit. Brethren P. M. Hanson and E. A. Davis work the tent in the Southern California District, with view to new openings. D. R. Chambers and J. D. Stead take the tent of the Northern District and operate in the San Joaquin Valley, trying to weld the fragmentary parts of that region. The tent is stored at San Jose, under the care of C. W. Hawkins, 615 Spencer Avenue. Fresno, Madera, Ceres, and Tulare are points to be noticed. Brother Deuel will labor as health allows, following up places already started by him last year, as well as new openings. Mahlon Cannon to continue his labors in Northern California and Southern Oregon. Brethren L. W. Fike and T. J. Sheppard try the "two by two" process for New Mexico, while Brethren Condit and J. E. Kelley may be governed as to their associate work in Arizona by the condition of Brother Kelley's health. In Hawaii let the good work already done by Brethren Waller, McConley, and Barrett continue; Brother Waller having oversight. The uncertain state of things in Mexico at present prohibits Brethren Pender, Mannering, and Cady from entering there. Brother Pender will stay in Iowa until his health recovers sufficiently for active labor. Brethren Mannering and Cady do what they can for the present among the Spanish speaking people along the border of Mexico, so as to keep in use of the language until a more favorable time to continue their work in the Republic of Mexico.

My field address will be 281 Castro Street, San Francisco, California, from which point mail will be forwarded.

Hoping for a continuation of cordial relations and an increase of vigor and wisdom necessary for our duties under the leadership of the Prince of Peace, I am,

Fraternally yours,
 F. M. SHEEHY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 903 Waldo Avenue.

Resolution of Condolence.

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God, the divine ruler of the universe, in his infinite wisdom to remove from our midst, and from the midst of her family, one of our members, Sister Bertha Ellen Davis, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of Oak Hill, though we bow in humble submission to the will of the almighty God, deeply deplore the loss of our honored and respected sister, and extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy at the loss of a wife and mother, and trust the divine Providence will in his compassion soften the bitter grief caused by this affliction; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the bereaved family, and entered upon our minutes, and also a copy be sent to the HERALD for publication.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, May 6, 1912.

Died.

PARKS.—Brother James B. Parks died on May 2, at Kalamazoo, Michigan. He was born in Joliet, March 6, 1861. On September 22, 1892, he married Miss Augusta Neil, who died January 2, 1900, leaving two children, Arthur James and Agnes Margaret. He married the second time at Bangor, Michigan, to Miss Allie Bresley of that place. Besides his widow and children, he leaves his mother, Mrs. Agnes Parks, three brothers and two sisters: Alexander A., William M., Frederick E., and Mrs. Margaret Frederick, and Mrs. Rosa Parks Pitt. He was a member of the Reorganized Church, and was baptized by Elder F. M. Cooper, 1909; confirmed by Elder F. M. Cooper and Elder John Midgorden. Burial at Lawrence, Michigan.

ARMSTRONG.—At Kansas City, April 30, 1912, Brother Archie V. Armstrong, of spinal meningitis. He had moved his family to Kansas City from Atchison only a couple of weeks before; and was engaged in business with J. C. Severin, while in Atchison. He took an active part in church work, and was ordained a priest by S. Twombly and F. Cool. Brother Armstrong leaves a wife and two little daughters to mourn, besides many relatives and friends. He was priest of Atchison Branch, and teacher of senior Bible class at time of his death. Brother Armstrong was born in Bond County, Illinois, July 14, 1882.

TYRRELL.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 30, 1912, Sister Elizabeth M. Tyrrell, aged 74 years, 3 months, and 5 days. A stroke of paralysis came April 20. She was born in Buffalo, New York, in 1838, married A. H. Tyrrell in 1858, and received the gospel in Michigan in 1869, being baptized by Elder E. C. Briggs. Came to Lamoni in 1884, and her husband died in 1909. Her life was one of the best in sincere and true devotion; and in the enduring qualities of heart and soul. Funeral sermon by Brother H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Brother A. S. Cochran.

MINTEER.—Joseph Minteer was born near Cadiz, Ohio, in 1832; died at the home of his son, near Millersburg, Illinois, April 27, 1912, being 79 years, 4 months, and 15 days of age. He joined the Latter Day Saints in 1878, and has been a highly esteemed brother and citizen. Funeral was held from the Presbyterian church in Millersburg, April 29, at 11 a. m., conducted by Elder O. E. Sade, assisted by Elder M. D. Murdock. Burial in the Duncan cemetery.

HOLLI BAUGH.—Brother Alexander Hollibaugh was born in Shenango Township, Mercer County, Pennsylvania, November

23, 1853, and was baptized May 10, 1909, by his brother, Elder Jonathan Hollibaugh. He died May 2, 1912, at Kremis, Pennsylvania. Funeral on Saturday, May 4, 1912, conducted by Leon Burdick, assisted by Lamont McDowell. He was a member of the Baldwin Branch, New Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

Choosing One's Life Work.

While it is impossible for our colleges to make great men out of indifferent raw material, it is possible to assist undergraduates to discover their inherent bent or capacity. Until the student has made such a discovery, the elective system which is now general in our American institutions is something of a farce. . . . It is a common remark among American undergraduates, "I wish I knew what I was fitted for." The college is under deep obligation to serve the nation not merely by presenting a great number of excellent subjects, which, if properly selected will land the young man in positions of leadership and usefulness; but it may and must go beyond this negative education, and assist the student actually to form his life purpose.—From Clayton Sedgwick Cooper's "The American Undergraduate" in the May Century.

Every voluntary transgression argues a real contempt of the legislator's authority; and in such contempt there is found the seed of every sin that can possibly be committed, in opposition to his express command. All the commands of God, whether they be great or small, have no other sanction than that which consists in his divine authority, and this authority is trampled under foot by every petty delinquent, as well as by every daring transgressor. Those which we usually esteem trivial sins are the more dangerous on account of their being less attended to. They are committed without fear, without remorse, and generally without intermission. As there are more ships of war destroyed by worms than by the shot of the enemy, so the multitude of those who destroy themselves through the ordinary sins exceeds the number of those who perish by enormous offenses.—From John William Fletcher's "A Portrait of Saint Paul."

OUR STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE.

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Ephesians 4:13.

It is necessary to have standards by which to measure progress, as well as quantities and values, in the spiritual as well as in the material world. In the material world we have adopted such standards of measurement as the pound, the foot, and the dollar. Men readily admit the importance of these standards—especially of the latter. By it they not only measure their calico and silk, their coal and diamonds, their fire wood and mahogany furniture, but too often themselves as well. They sell themselves or their influence or their vote for a dollar, or for fifty thousand dollars, according to their position, and consider that a good bargain has been made. But while a man may properly use the dollar with which to measure his hogs or his hay, he makes a terrible mistake when he uses it to measure himself. He is using a material standard by which to measure things of the soul. No man should set a monetary value upon his honor.

A DOUBLE STANDARD IN SPIRITUAL THINGS WRONG.

In all things it is important to have a true and unchanging standard.

The law of Moses said:

Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have.—Deuteronomy 25:14, 15.

This language referred to material weights and measures, but will also apply to spiritual standards. There are many homes, professedly Christian, where there are two standards—one derived from Christ, which governs profession, and another acquired from the world, that governs practice. "Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures."

IMPORTANCE OF THE MEASURE INCREASES WITH IMPORTANCE OF THING MEASURED.

The importance of the standard of measurement increases with the value of the thing measured.

When potatoes sold for fifteen cents per bushel the farmers did not give particular attention to the measure; but now when we give ten or twelve times as much for potatoes the grocer weighs them very carefully. If there are one or two medium sized potatoes in the measure more than he thinks we should have he removes them and sells them to some other poor fellow who is trying to meet Twentieth Century prices with a Nineteenth Century income.

When land sold for five dollars an acre, or could be homesteaded, or a rifle might be traded to the Indians for as much territory as one could ride around in a day, men were not very careful to measure land exactly. But now when land sells in Los Angeles or in New York City for $866.55 per square foot, as it did recently at Thirty-fourth Street and Broadway, New York City, it must be measured with a rule that is scientifically exact. The seller will not accept a standard that has thirteen inches to the foot. The buyer will not tolerate a measure that is even a quarter of an inch short. The importance of the standard increases with the importance of the thing measured.

When, therefore, we consider things of eternal import, the growth and development of the human soul, questions of doctrine and morals, right and wrong, the relationship of man to God and to his fellow man, we must concede that it is of the greatest importance to have standards that are exactly correct. We must not have a double standard. We must not have a false standard. But a just and a true standard we must have.

FALSE STANDARDS KILL THE POOR.

It is said that some months ago United States Government inspectors threw into the harbor at New York in a single day twenty tons of false weights and measures that had been taken from the shopkeepers of New York City.

During the month of March Professor G. W. Stewart, who is state superintendent of weights and measures in Iowa, read a paper before the Baconian Club of Iowa City, in which he set forth conditions in five leading Iowa cities, as revealed by government inspection. In one of these cities 33 per cent of the scales tested were incorrect, and the weights false. In another 64 per cent were wrong. The other cities ranged between these two. The amount that customers were cheated varied from six to twenty-eight cents on the dollar. These findings are perhaps typical of the country at large and the world over, excepting that conditions are worse in larger cities; and the very poor who buy in minute quantities suffer most from this kind of fraud.

There is more than dishonesty in this, in its effect upon the very poor. Prices are so extremely high and their income so very low that they are already below the standard of comfortable living, even when they get all that they pay for. And when they are cheated a little on every pound of meat, on every loaf of bread, on every sack of coal, on every pint of milk, it is not their money alone but their life that is taken. Cruelty and murder are added to dishonesty. False standards kill the poor.

It is equally true that the world is full of false standards in spiritual things. The law of God says that as a man sows so also shall he reap. But the world has its own false standard, widely accepted, which says that young men, and old ones too, if we must admit it, must sow their wild oats, and that medical science will find a way to cheat God so that they will not need to reap the harvest.

This is only one among many false standards. It has ruined thousands of young men and women, blighted thousands of homes, and brought needless suffering on many innocent people. False spiritual standards kill the people. They destroy men physically and take from them eternal life.

Jesus was given as the perfect standard by which a man should measure himself and his progress toward perfection; by which he should govern his beliefs and his morals.

THE AGE OF THE "TITANIC."

This is a wonderful age—the age of the automobile, the flying machine, and wireless telegraphy. Our fathers were content with the ox cart. We put the value and speed and power of a hundred ox carts into one automobile, and put one automobile to every twelve persons in a little city like Redlands, California—one to every eighty in an agricultural State like Iowa. It is an inspiring spectacle to see two or three hundred automobiles, or more, in double column formation, parading city streets on a gala day. It is a splendid contrast to the barbaric processions of the days of old when conquering monarchs paraded city streets dragging vanquished monarchs at the tails of their chariots. The one represented the triumph of man over man; the other represents the triumph of man over the forces of nature.

It is an inspiring spectacle to see eight or ten airships in the air at one time performing their daring evolutions; or to see one of these airmen flying at night with his wings tipped with red fire—a great winged, blazing demigod flying in the midst of heaven, challenging the attention of men from below and angels from above,—fitting personification of the spirit of the age that would cut loose from the earth and challenge the very heavens, but still ignores the forces that put one in touch with heaven, and so at the end falls to the earth bruised and broken.

This is the age that builded the Titanic, largest and most palatial vessel ever built, whose hulk from stem to stern would stretch across two ordinary city blocks, and launched her forth across the Atlantic in the face of death, with orders to smash all speed records. Exalted dominion carries with it grave perils. He who holds exalted dominion must be ever vigilant or pay the penalty. So when for a single moment the hand of man relaxed its grasp upon the forces of nature, when for an instant the brain of man relaxed its vigilance, sixteen hundred lives were forfeited in the cold waters of the north Atlantic. But even in this great calamity the spirit of the age asserted itself. Scarcely was the shock felt ere the wireless telegrapher leaped to his keys. The lightnings flashed and crackled from the transmitter of the Titanic into the darkness. And unseen and mysteriously a message flew across the tossing waters until it found the receiver of a friendly vessel, and seven or eight hundred lives were saved as a tribute to the genius of Marconi and Tesla and the spirit of the age.

This is a wonderful age, but with all its tumultuous striving, with all its mentality, and invention, and achievement, and study, and philosophy, it has not produced and can not produce a character that will take the place of Jesus as the standard of human excellence, or a system that will take the place of his gospel as the gauge of human belief and morals.

This age is great in material things. It is not great in spiritual things. It ignores the source of its own greatness, the inspiration of God that always quickens every generation to which is given the opportunity to hear the gospel message. A persistent refusal to accept God will be followed by a withdrawal of light and a lapse into darkness and decay.

"HEAR YE HIM."

It is our highest duty to recognize Jesus as our standard and to preach him to the world. We need no false worldly standards by which to measure our doctrines or ourselves. No greater message can be sounded than the message that was given to Joseph Smith during his first vision that April morning over ninety years ago: "This is my beloved Son. Hear ye him."

The religious world had been saying: "This is Pastor Brown, learned in many languages; hear ye him." Or, "This is Parson Jones, D. D.; hear ye him." Or, "This is Reverend Johnson; hear ye him." But here came a man who sounded the message: "This is Jesus Christ, the Son of God; hear ye him." That was our message, is our message, and should ever continue to be our message. Our doctrines should accord with his doctrines as set forth in his word. Our lives should conform to his life as it was lived among men. In all things we should measure ourselves by him, growing up into his likeness, until we reach the perfect stature of manhood in Christ Jesus.

PUTTING OTHERS IN THE PLACE OF JESUS.

It is a mistake for us to put anyone else in the place of Jesus. We do this sometimes when we wish to do right. We select some good man in whom we have confidence, and think that if we could only be like him we would be satisfied. We make him our model in all things. We do as he does, vote as he votes, and think as he thinks. But there comes a time when the judgment of our hero leads him into error—and we follow him. Or, being human, he is tempted and falls. Then our faith in God and in humanity and in the church is shaken. Our standard is gone. This could not have happened had we made Jesus our standard. He never changes and never errs. Our faith can abide in him, no matter how many men go astray.

Again we make a similar mistake when we wish to do wrong. In this case we select some bad man, and think if we are no worse than he we will be all right. We argue, perhaps, that he is a member of the church, and if he does certain things that are wrong we can do likewise. But God has never said that we shall be rewarded because we are no worse than some one else who is bad. We should resolve to do our duty whether others do theirs or not. Jesus did his duty, that is enough. Like him, we must do ours, if we are to follow him.

In short, we should heed the admonition to grow toward perfection in him, becoming like him in all things, until we acquire the perfect stature of manhood in Christ Jesus, the highest manhood the ages can produce. He is the standard by which we should measure those most important things, belief, conduct, character. In him we have a standard of measurement that is scientifically and scripturally exact.

A DECLINE IN ILLITERACY.

The figures of illiteracy given out by the Census Bureau furnish material for both encouragement and discouragement. They show that during the decade, from 1900 to 1910 there was a decided improvement for the country as a whole, the percentage of illiteracy being reduced from 10.7 to 7.7, but at the same time they reveal the rather disheartening fact that, owing to the heavy influx of foreign immigrants, comparatively little headway is being made in the Eastern States, which have so long prided themselves on being the centers of culture and intellectual illumination for the hinterland. Indeed, Connecticut, that land of steady habits, the home of Yale and many other colleges and educational institutions, has actually retrograded, alone among all the States of the Nation. The loss is slight, but the fact remains that while 5.9 per cent of the population was illiterate in 1900, in 1910 the percentage was 6. Pennsylvania made a little progress, reducing her percentage from 6.1 to 5.9, but New York, which has to bear the brunt of the incoming rush of immigration, remained stationary at 5.5. This showing can not be called a cheerful one in view of the enormous sums now expended for popular education.

The West, which of recent years has been growing much more slowly than the East, makes a much better showing. It is interesting to note that Iowa, which was the only State which declined in population from 1900 to 1910, has the lowest percentage of illiteracy, 1.7. This is because her population is largely rural, there being no big industrial centers. Illinois, Ohio, and Indiana also make excellent showings in view of their large urban populations, their percentages being respectively 3.7, 3.2, and 3.1, all material reductions from 1900.

A discouraging feature of the statistics is revealed by comparison with the figures of some foreign countries, showing how far we have still to progress. Most European nations, of course, make a much worse showing in illiteracy than the United States, but in the most advanced a remarkably high standard of general education has been reached. In Denmark, for instance, the percentage is but two tenths of one per cent, in Sweden and the German Empire three tenths of one per cent, in Switzerland five tenths, in Finland 1.5 per cent, in Scotland 1.6 per cent, England and Wales, 1.8 per cent, etc. It is evident from these figures that we have nothing to boast of. Still it is a consolation to know that we are making progress. The figures for 1900 were better than those for 1890, and doubtless those for 1920 will show an improvement on 1910. With our large negro and foreign population, among whom illiteracy is principally found, the problem promises to be a serious one for many years.—Philadelphia Press.

The Missionary's Wife.

I spend the hours in working, watching, waiting,
While far you roam on mission of the Lord,
The precious truths of Jesus' gospel stating
In righteousness according to his word.
God's peace attend thee,
His loving Spirit ever more be thine.
Oh! may he lend thee
Aid to make thy path with virtue shine.

I hear thy voice when the pale evening shineth
And thy loved presence near me seems to stand
When the blessed sun upon the hills reclineth,
While gentle thoughts of thee like flowers expand.
Good men befriend thee,
May shelter, raiment, and food be thine.
Angels attend thee
Cheering thy spirit with a light divine.

When thy work is over homeward mayest thou hasten
Unto the loving heart waiting for thee.
Great is thy sacrifice, and great thy blessing,
Joyous and thrice happy shall our meeting be.
My love I send thee
Through the long weary distance far away.
Meekly I bend me
Faithful and true, for thy welfare I pray.
—D. H. Smith.

Address of the Missionary's Wife to Her Absent Husband.

Thou hast gone forth, but not to war,
To lift the sword against thy kind,
The image of the Lord to mar
In battle's tumult madly blind,
Thine impulse is a kinder zeal,
God's word thy sword, his trust thy shield.

It is to liberate, not bind,
To bear the purifying ray
Of truth, unto the willful blind
Who walk in darkness in the day.
To preach the gospel, pure and true,
And open joys of hope to view.

God bless thee, though 'tis sad and lone
To wait thine absence from the hearth;
I know that thou art true, mine own,
So in full hope and strength go forth,
Nor would I call thee to our home
Until in honor thou mayest come.

And may the souls you chance to meet
Give aid and shelter to thy form.
Oh! may none evilly entreat
But speak in mildness kind and warm.
So may God's blessing on them pour
Increase their shelter and their store.

God keep thee from the lawless tongue
That seeks to tarnish virtue's name,
That like an asp rare flowers among Poisons and withers up the same.
From treachery's dark hidden power
Oh! may he guard thee every hour.

God keep thee from the ruthless hand
That in the darkness fain would strike,
Because in open strength you stand
Proclaiming liberty and light.
In short, from every evil thing
God keep thee safe, and homeward bring.
—D. H. Smith.

The Saints' Herald.

To the HERALD all success,
Harbinger of righteousness.
Each and every page contains

Some of truth's melodious strains;
Affording comfort to the weak;
Inspiration to the meek.
Nescience also is expelled
Through thy light,—doubt is dispelled.
Science* in exquisite strain,

Heralding the truth amain.
E'en the golden from above—
Righteousness—the power of love.
Ancient truths now teach—Amen—
Liberty to man. So then,
Dear HERALD, come again.

The Arrow and the Song.

I shot an arrow into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For, so swiftly it flew, the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

I breathed a song into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong
That it can follow the flight of song?

Long, long afterward, in an oak
I found the arrow, still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend.
—Longfellow.

Has the pearl less whiteness
Because of its birth?
Has the violet less brightness
For growing near earth?—Moore.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 25.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

SUCCESSORS TO APOSTLES.

Proposition numbered "eighth," is more erroneous and shallow than others. That "apostles as witnesses can have no successors."

If to see Christ after his resurrection, is that which constitutes the apostles witnesses, then the original apostles as witnesses surely had successors. See Acts 1: 20, 24 to 26:

And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen, that he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles. Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and, his bishopric let another take.

Campbell's translation, with the Authorized Version and the Revised, as also Anderson's all render it, "and his office let another take." If they have no successors, how could another take his office? Here is Traum against the Bible again. Alexander Campbell says:

While the college of apostles was necessary, we see that succession was fully carried out. Therefore the chair of Judas the traitor demanded a successor, as well as that of Peter.—Campbell-Purcell Debate, p. 50.

This puts Traum against Alexander Campbell "some more." Nay, I shall bind the rope that hangs this theory still tighter. Elder Traum says:

Witnessing being their (the apostles') peculiar work, its character was such that it would not admit of a substitute, and consequently could have no succession.

Having established the fact that Judas as an apostle did have a successor, and Campbell affirms that "while the college of apostles was necessary, succession was fully carried out"; this being true, the apostolic office includes their commission as inseparably connected; therefore, the successors of Judas, Peter, James, or any others of the twelve, are invested with all the qualifications, powers, and authority of their predecessors; and as the predecessors are admitted to have had the peculiar work of witnessing, therefore witnesses as apostles, or apostles as witnesses have successors. To this we summon Alexander Campbell as witness:

Successors must be successors in full, or they are not successors at all. To illustrate this, Does not the existing President of the United States inherit all the power and authority of George Washington by virtue of constitutional succession? Does he not possess the same power, in all length and breadth, its height and depth, as did his predecessor, from the first to the last? This is true of every constitutional office in the civilized world. All the power which any predecessor can have, belongs to every incumbent: so in the church if it have constitution at all. If the apostles have successors, they have successors in full.—Campbell-Purcell Debate, p. 51.

Now Campbell was called "Apostle of Jesus Christ," November 20, 1900. The Christian Evangelist for December 6, 1900, contains an address delivered by J. S. Lamar, before the Georgia State Convention at Augusta, held on the jubilee anniversary of the introduction of the reformation in that State. In this address, he pronounced this expressive encomium on the founder of the Disciple Church:

Venerable patriarch of the clean heart and of the silver tongue! Faithful servant of God and apostle of Jesus Christ. The world did not know him. The churches whom he lived and labored to bless did not know him. Nor will they know him until, by the grace of God, they meet him before the throne, clothed in white raiment, and with palms in his hands.

If Mr. Campbell was an "apostle of Jesus Christ," he knew he was a "successor in full," to some other apostle. At any rate, his statement that "successors must be successors in full," lays Elder Traum's proposition that "apostles as witnesses can have no successors," to rest beneath the mold. Mr. Campbell did not indorse this proposition of Elder Traum's, for he believed "succession was fully carried out while the college of apostles was necessary." Elder Traum is not in the faith! But we are not quite done with this popular error as yet. It has been the cause of so much obscurity, that we devote a few spaces more to unmask the Campbellite deception.

If making a man a witness to the resurrection of Christ, necessarily makes him an apostle, then, the original twelve were not apostles until after the resurrection was an accomplished fact. Again Traum's theory charges Christ with making a blunder; for we read:

And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles.—Luke 6: 12, 13.

The following chapters give their short commission to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel"—their ministration of the gospel, as apostles with power, and authority adequate to their limited mission, and sometime before the tragedy was enacted on Calvary, and the repose of Christ in the silent tomb; and the destruction of the citadel of death by his resurrection, which to be apostles they must see!

Paul was a successor to one of the original eleven. He says:

Am I not an apostle? Am I not free? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? Are not ye my work in the Lord? If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord.—1 Corinthians 9: 1, 2.

Paul affirms that he is an apostle, and has seen Jesus Christ our Lord. He is a witness then. He is a successor to some other witness or else seeing Jesus Christ is not absolutely indispensable to being an apostle.

But there were other succeeding witnesses to the resurrection of Jesus, and Paul used them as witnesses:

And that he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve: after that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep. After that, he was seen of James; then of all the apostles. And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time.—1 Corinthians 15: 5-8.

"Five hundred brethren,"—witnesses,—to this one proposition, and if because some apostle saw Christ after his resurrection, Traum concludes that no one can be qualified for an apostle without seeing him, then because five hundred brethren saw him, it follows that no one can be one of the brethren without the same privilege!

The Messiahship of Jesus Christ, that he was "God manifest in the flesh," is the great proposition, the great truth, that man can know only by revelation, either before or after the resurrection of Christ:

And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.—1 Timothy 3: 16.

"God was manifest in the flesh." "Thou the Christ, the Son of the living God." "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood has not revealed this unto you, but my Father which is in heaven." (Matthew 16: 17.)

To this proposition the apostles had both successors and predecessors:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.—Isaiah 9: 6.

And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.—Matthew 1: 21-23.

Does Elder Traum deny that the apostles had predecessors, as witnesses to this proposition? Let us see:

To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.—Acts 10: 43.

But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference.—Romans 3: 21, 22.

"The law," and "all the prophets" witnessed the "righteousness of God, by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe." "The righteousness of God without the law," the law, and prophets witnessed!

To these prophetic witnesses, the Apostle Peter appealed, to prove to the Jews, the Messiahship,—"God is with us,"—of Jesus Christ:

Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulcher is with us unto this day, therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.—Acts 2: 29-31.

The power and authority by which these olden prophets witnessed to Jesus Christ is thus set forth by the apostle:

For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.—2 Peter 1: 21.

Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.—1 Peter 1: 11.

From the foregoing scriptural affirmations, this made up theory is stranded, and our Disciple friends will be obliged to harmonize one with another, and all with the Bible.

FIRST RULE OF EVIDENCE DISREGARDED.

Proposition marked "Ninth," is of a piece with those preceding it, and equally faulty. To reply to it would be to ask, How can we, or how can any man or woman, become "assured" that the facts in question have been confirmed by the witness? Is there any other way of confirmation of the gospel than God's way? Traum uses Hebrews 2: 1-4, and argues that as the "great salvation" "spoken by the Lord," was confirmed once "by them who heard him," and that as "God also, bore witness once," "with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost according to his will," therefore, apostles are not necessary in the church! Reader, there is a wee mite of a rule in logic, that our student from Hiram has overlooked. It is this: "The evidence must partake of the nature of the proposition." Can you see the necessary connection existing between the proposition and the evidence he has adduced?

"Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."—1 Thessalonians 1: 5. The assurance or confirmation of the gospel is individual, and to "all whom the Lord our God shall call," upon obedience to the requirements of the gospel (Acts 2: 38), and Paul says with reference to the "gifts," "signs," and "miracles" which witness the truth of the proclamation, that "all of these" are wrought by that "one and selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally, as he will." God's "will" is, to confirm "every man." (1 Corinthians 12: 11.) Alexander Campbell says: "But supernatural facts require supernatural confirmations. Hence when the confirmation of the gospel is spoken of in the apostolic writings, it is resolved into the doings, or works of the Holy Spirit. Demonstrations of the Holy Spirit are the confirmatory proofs of the gospel. When Paul delivered the testimony of God, or the testimony concerning Jesus to the Corinthians, he says, "It was confirmed among them." And if we examine into the confirmation of the testimony as Paul explained it, we shall find that he makes the spiritual gifts, or those extraordinary and miraculous powers which the apostles themselves displayed, and which so many of their converts also possessed, an assurance or confirmation of what he promulgated. (Christian System, pp. 119, 120.) According to Traum's illustrious predecessor, the spiritual gifts or the demonstrations of the Holy Spirit were the "assurance," the "confirmation" of the gospel, the testimony. So the first part of proposition "ninth" is disposed of, on the ground that we can not be "assured" of the credibility of the testimony without demonstration of the Holy Spirit. Hence in Mark 16: 16-20, when Jesus sent his ministry into all the world, these "confirmatory" signs shall follow the believer, "in all the world," of "every creature,"

So then, after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following. Amen.—Mark 16: 19, 20.

This "confirming of the word" continued right along through the first century of the career of the church individually, as "the manifestation of the Spirit given to every man to profit withal," and when we leave the ground that the New Testament history occupies, secular history of the church, "reveals" the fact, that these "confirmative" "signs" followed the faithful child of God up in the second, third, fourth, and fifth centuries, after the apostles were dead. See Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, Saint Cyprian, Eusebius, and others. In the ordinary way, these latter saints in the days of Irenæus, Tertullian, et al, could have had the testimony of the alleged original witnesses confirmed unto them with far better facility, with newer, fresher, and living testimony, than we, the people of nineteen hundred years since, yet the "confirmation" came to them right along. It was never intended that the confirmatory power was ever to leave the church, any more than it was intended that the "Spirit which bears witness with our spirits that we are the sons of God," was to leave the church, or "baptism for the remission of sins." Alexander Campbell says, on this point: "To those desirous to understand this subject, an examination of this first letter to the Corinthians can not fail to be most instructive; for it most clearly, and unequivocally teaches us that the visible, audible, sensible demonstration of the Spirit and of power, was that supernatural attestation of the testimony of Christ which made it credible, so that NO MAN could have acknowledged Jesus of Nazareth to be the Almighty Lord, but by this demonstration of the Holy Spirit. Thus was the testimony confirmed,—thus was Jesus demonstrated to be the only begotten Son of God,—and thus, and thus only, are men enabled to believe in him."—Christian System, pp. 120, 121. This puts the matter in tangible shape, but it also puts Elder Traum in another embarrassing attitude. That God intended the gospel, and its confirmatory power to be coetaneous, coextensive, and coexistent is susceptible of the clearest demonstration. "Confirm" is defined, "to strengthen, settle, establish, ratify, make sure, to continue to perform; to fulfill; accomplish; make good." Hence when the gospel has been received by us, on the ground of its "righteousness," God sends the Holy Spirit on the witness stand of the heart, and this independent and distinct witness confirms the testimony we have received, by "signs following the believer," and that it, the "confirmatory" power, was to continue in and with the church in every age, when the church is true to God, Paul gives indubitable evidence, and authority as follows:

I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; that in everything ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.—1 Corinthians 1: 4-8.

The testimony of Jesus Christ was confirmed in the Corinthians, and the same testimony is to be confirmed to those who receive the testimony in the "time of the end," just before the second coming of Christ in glory.

If it be said that the apostle had no reference to others except the Corinthian saints, or the saints of the first century, and that his promise of confirmation extends no further, then we reply, that the promise is to confirm them twice, for his language is, that "the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you" in past tense, and that "Jesus Christ shall also confirm them in the future, unto the end." This gives the same individuals a re-confirmation." How different the theory of Elder Traum, and the sublime plan of the Father to all the children of the kingdom revealed in the following:

For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.—1 John 5:7-9.

CONFIDENCE.

"In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence, and his children shall have a place of refuge."—Proverbs 14:26.

"But Christ as a Son over his own house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end."—Hebrews 3:6.

"Beloved, if our hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God."—1 John 3:21.

The word confidence is defined by Webster, as follows: "The act of confiding, trusting, or putting faith in, as in the reality of a fact, or the integrity and veracity of another; trust; reliance; belief. Also by the Apostle Paul: "Faith (confidence) is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

Confidence is the cement of society, deprived of which the social fabric would speedily fall into decay and crumble to ruin. Confidence, in a crisis, is salvation. It is strong as death, yet sensitive as the magnet. It can exist to diffuse its blessings only in peace. It dispenses with locks, bolts, and bars. It is expansive as eternity; progressive in its character, when cherished, it gathers strength with age. It originates, plans, builds up, establishes, beautifies, adorns, exalts, delights in order, and upholds legal authorities. It is a living chain that binds the brotherhood of man to the fatherhood of God. Happy the people where confidence reigns supreme, who fully confide in each other. Peace and prosperity attend them. They are one; undivided in aim and destiny. Their lives are calm as a summer eve, their spirits and actions are independent, unfettered, and free. The arts, sciences, and commerce flourish, enriching with their blessings. The virtues prevail with irresistible sway, and spread their genial influences around. Onward progress is sure. None can hinder.

When confidence disappears, green-eyed jealousy, cruel as the grave, assumes its place invariably, with dissimulation, envyings, confusion, strife, violence, wars and murders, rushing in its dark, sinuous train.

Drive confidence from the family, the city, the nation, the institution, or the people, and their inevitable doom is written and sealed as by the finger of God or the hand of fate. The withdrawal of confidence brings evil surmisings, creates dissensions, dissolves society, outrages humanity, chills the warmest feelings, withers the fondest hopes, checks the noblest aspirations, cools the loftiest desires, cramps the most splendid efforts, quenches the most sublime thoughts, destroys the brightest specimens of ingenuity. Cursed are the nations, people, or world, whose confidence is thoroughly destroyed.

If the righteous are to be caught up into the air, and their works do follow them, truly might the Savior ask, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith (confidence) upon the earth?" In view of all these things, shall not the Saints of the latter days increase their faith and confidence? that they may with approval pass their probation creditably, and individually receive the rewarding mandate of their God, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord." Shall we not respect and honor those whom the Lord has called to teach the revelations, as they have so graciously been given to the church? or by reason of our lack of confidence, shall the Lord have to chide us again as he has done so often in the past? As late as the year 1894 he said, "Until my people shall hear and heed those who are set in the church to teach the revelations there will be misunderstanding and confusion among the members."—Doctrine and Covenants 122:1. Continuing this same thought, he says in the 13th paragraph: "The Spirit saith further, The twelve should remain at Lamoni and continue in council with the Presidency and the Bishop and his counselors if practicable, a sufficient time after the adjournment of conference to counsel together, and agree on the things of the law and the general affairs of the church, so that when the traveling council shall separate for their several fields there may be no longer reason for distrust, suspicion, or dissension, and if these officers will so counsel together in the spirit of moderation and mutual forbearance and concession, my law will be more perfectly understood by them and a unity of sentiment and purpose will be reached by them. It is the will of your Lord and your God that this should be done. It should have been done before, but the adversary hath hindered, desiring to prevent the success of my work in the earth."—Doctrine and Covenants 122:13.

Still the need of increased confidence is expressed by the Lord when again he says, "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction."—Doctrine and Covenants 125:14.

Again the Lord spoke as late as 1909, reminding his people of their remissness, in that confidence had more or less become a thing of the past. The Spirit saith further, "The attention of the church is called to the consideration of the revelation, given in answer to earnest supplication, with regard to temporal things. The word has already been given, in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church that the temporalities of the church were to be, under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for; and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations. The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members. I am God, I change not, has been known to the church and the eldership since the coming of the angel with the message of restoration. Under it the church has sought the Lord and received from time to time that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, both of the spiritual and temporal divisions of the work. The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church can not receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart."—Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.

Again the Lord spoke through his servant, Elder Joseph Luff, and part of the communication is as follows, which is very pointed: "Behold, saith the Lord, I have heard and do hear the petitions of those who are called my people. My ear is not heavy, neither is my arm short. My covenant with Israel is not forgotten, nor is my will slow to perform; but to whom shall I speak, and by whom shall my counsel be observed? Behold I am wedded to my covenant and am jealous of my agreement with those who are thereunder. Once I have spoken! yea, twice have I declared that the set time to favor Zion has come; but my army is not yet very great, and their weapons, many of them are yet carnal. Nevertheless my word shall not fail, neither shall my purpose be changed, notwithstanding my people are slow to perceive and the confidence of some has failed."

The latter part of it continues: "Behold, and consider: If my weapons are not sufficient for your faith, shall these things give them increase? or shall ye add that which is carnal to make effective the work for which my Spirit hath been given? Shall I be content while this doth pollute my estate? Behold, the brick that is not burned and the mortar which is not tempered, yea, and the material which I have not selected, shall not find permanent place with that of my choosing, for my fires shall consume and my floods shall overwhelm and men within and without my church shall yet learn that but one pattern hath been given by which ye shall build. If I shall accept your labor, and but one line hath been given by which to measure, and whosoever shall not gauge himself thereby and crucify himself to the world, shall yet be gauged thereby and shall lose his all; for 'whosoever shall fall upon this stone shall be broken, but upon whomsoever it shall fall it shall grind him to powder.' Live ye, therefore, and labor in love, not so much that ye may obtain, but that ye may make effective my law and exemplify my life. In this ye shall find riches and your peace shall not fail, and then I shall have delight in those who not only say but do according to the purpose of my gospel."

Confidence then is something that ought to be carefully cultivated, rigidly watched, and guarded from inroads, so that we may breathe a healthy, moral atmosphere, favorable for the formation, growth, and development tainted of the generous virtues, better feelings, and fullest capabilities of our being. Shall we not love and confide in our God, our brethren, and our sisters, that we may be one in all things, that we may escape all things that shall come to pass, and be accounted worthy to stand at the coming of the Son of Man? JOSEPH ARBER.

LITERATURE.

ITS IMPORTANCE AS A MEANS OF EDUCATION.

Paper presented and read by Brother A. E. Jackson, at Improvement Class, Priestly Road, Birmingham, England.

Everyone is convinced that it is necessary to take food in order to live; it is a demonstrated fact that fire burns, and rain makes one wet; but there are facts quite as important to know and understand that can not so readily be demonstrated, and one of these facts, to my mind, is that a knowledge of literature is necessary to the living of a well-balanced life. Mind you, I do not say that one can not live such a life without it, but it is necessary to read and to understand what one reads before one can be said to grasp the numerous details and intricacies of everyday life and what is going on around us.

The body would soon die if it were not fed, and so would the mind if mental nourishment were withheld from it.

It is not difficult to prove that food for the mind is as essential as food for the body, and what better means have we of acquiring that food than reading some of the best authors? I don't mean all present-day authors, as I believe, in fact, I am sure a great deal of benefit can be and is derived from reading the older books. You all know that a man well-fed bodily and starved mentally, advertises his condition as soon as he opens his mouth.

Reading a book, or books, and immediately forgetting all about them is not much use; none in fact, and this is a point worth remembering. You have no doubt all heard that well-worn dictum of Bacon's, "Read not to contradict or confute, nor to believe or take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider!" This, in a few words, is the advice of the truly great man to whom is attributed most of the works of Shakespeare. (By the way, I am a native of Shakespeare's birthplace, Stratford-on-Avon, and am naturally very fond of his works.)

You will notice that Bacon said, "Not to find talk and discourse." Now I disagree with that, for what is finer and more educative than to pull to pieces, so to speak, any subject that it is thought necessary to bring up for discussion, and so get thoroughly to the very rock bottom of the matter. Take for instance, the questions and answers which are a feature of this class; they are an education in themselves and I, for one, am surprised at the greater knowledge of things spiritual, (and temporal,) which I possess since I became a member. As regards the latter portion of Bacon's remarks; that is, to "weigh and consider"! In order to do this, a certain amount of discretion is necessary, and the question then arises as to what are the best books to read to yield up the desired results. I, and no doubt many of you also, have at one time or another been very fond of reading just for reading's sake; but the time eventually comes when one desires something that is going to be of some use and benefit. When that time comes it is not really a very difficult matter to choose that which will be most instructive, although one will find a most bewildering list on nearly every subject under the sun. Now, I don't propose to reel off a list for your consideration, as tastes differ in this as in many other things, but I should like to know that my few words on the subject have been productive of some good.

I think it was Emerson who said, "Never read a book that is not a year old, and then nothing but famed books"; and again, "Read nothing but what you like." Now I am reading a book that is a good many years old; is also a famed book, and is also one of which I am very fond. There you have a combination of all three, and no doubt Emerson knew what he was talking about. The book I refer to is the Book of Mormon; (this book was presented to me by Brother J. E. Meredith on the morning of my baptism, September 17, 1911). I have read it through once, carefully, and I am on my way through it again, and I shall keep on going at it until I get as good a knowledge of it as some other books I have read. I think it is a splendid book, and taken in conjunction with the Bible, you have two of, or shall I say, the two finest books you can read and find educative and instructive. I consider I was ignorant until I commenced to study these two books, and I am learning more and more every day; and so you see the truth of what I say as to the necessity of discretion.

A gentleman friend told me the other day that he commenced some time ago to attend classes on elocution and literature, and the very first thing the teacher told the class was to study the Bible, as that is the best book in existence; a splendid example of educational worth. Isn't that convincing testimony?

It is not my intention to praise book learning indiscriminately; there are much nobler things than to be rich in the lore of the world; but, be a man ever so well endowed in all the attributes of good character, he will still be the better man by some measure of acquaintance with the treasures of literature.

One naturally asks, At what age should reading seriously be commenced? Those of tender years can not be expected to weigh and consider; it is not to be thought that they could; they read for pleasure, and rightly so. But just as we all put games and so forth behind us when we are well on in the teens, we should then, at that time, read for a different purpose, that is, the culture of the mind, education again!

I am going to quote again, this time from Johnson, who said: "A man should read as inclination leads him, for what he reads as a task will do him little good." I am rather in accord with the latter part of that remark, as it is no doubt a fact that a great many of us find a thing much less interesting when it is in the nature of a task, than when done with a free will. One is apt to treat it with a "don't-care-so-long-as-it-is-done" sort of feeling, and pay less attention than if one's inclination were in that direction. Never skip a preface; it is usually, if not always, the key to the whole book; no matter if the book is on romance, fiction, philosophy, science, or art, the preface is as much a part of the book as a door is part of a house. Besides that, it is unfair to the author. Some prefaces, I know, are painfully long and dry, but I always make a rule of going through with them and it is really surprising what a difference it makes.

Now, a final word. When a subject is to be mastered, have your whole mind entirely free to grapple with it, and try to thrust out all other thoughts.

So then the year is repeating its old story again. We are come once more, thank God, to its most charming chapter. The violets and the mayflowers are as its inscriptions or vignettes. It always makes a pleasant impression on us when we open again at these pages of the book of life.—Goethe.

It's always safe to feel generous when your pocket-book is at home.

ADOLESCENCE; THE GIRL.

A prominent writer on child culture has used these words in reference to the adolescent period: "What one has been is here revealed; what one is to be is here decided."

It is true that the problems pertaining to the girl who is passing through adolescence are less serious or grave as correct habits have been formed or neglected to have been formed in previous years. It is equally true that in the years which follow, a woman's health, happiness, and usefulness may largely depend upon the care and wisdom which were exercised in her behalf during the time which has aptly been termed the "storm and stress period," "the re-making period," "the time of physical, mental, and spiritual new birth." As the horticulturist hangs with keen interest upon the expansion of each new bud of rare variety, so do loving, intelligent parents observe with fascination and secret satisfaction the passing of their daughter through this subtle development of three-fold nature, which delicate process transforms the girl into the woman.

Nor are parents the only ones who are interested in the problems and education of the growing girl. Prominent educators—psychologists, sociologists, eugenists,—men who are interested in the betterment of the human race as a whole, are expressing themselves freely and enthusiastically on the subject.

"Woman is nature's supreme instrument of the future," says Caleb W. Saleeby, of London. "The eugenist is therefore deeply concerned with her education, her psychology, the conditions which permit her to exercise her great natural function of choosing the fathers of the future, the age at which she should marry, and the compatibility between the discharge of her incomparable functions of motherhood and the lesser functions which some women now assume." Sir Francis Galton has expressed the opinion that "there is nothing either in the history of domestic animals or in that of evolution to make us doubt that a race of sane men may be formed, who shall be as much superior, mentally and morally, to the modern European as the modern European is to the lowest of the negro races."

And our own G. Stanley Hall in his chapter on "the education of girls" in his book called Youth declares himself as not alone in his tender declaration of being "more and more passionately in love with woman as she came from the hand of God. . . . She has been an object of adoration all these years because she glorified womanhood by being more generic, nearer the race and richer in love, pity, unselfish devotion and intuition than man. . . . But with all this love and hunger in my heart, I can not help sharing in the growing fear that modern woman, at least in more ways and places than one, is in danger of declining from her orbit; that she is coming to lack just confidence and pride in her sex as such, and is just now in danger of lapsing to mannish ways, methods, and ideals, until her original divinity may become obscured."

When leading scientists are recognizing the possibilities of the development of the human race by means of education, may we as mothers never underestimate or neglect the earnest, intelligent cultivation which is necessary to be given the adolescent girl; let us remember also the excellent advice of a late writer on child culture when she emphasizes the fact that besides the tending and cultivation which are necessary to the boy and girl, they should be left alone a part of the time to grow. The period of adolescence is considered by most writers to be bounded by the ages of twelve and twenty, or even later. The enlargement of the bones and muscles, with a corresponding awkwardness and self-consciousness, the changing of the features, the development of the reproductive organs, are some of the physical changes which occur at the dawn of puberty and the beginning of adolescence. Nor is it strange that with this increased physical growth the vitality should sometimes become low, and weakness, laziness, and dullness ensue; in the normal girl, however, this extreme lassitude is often replaced by periods of unusual activity.

Along with these physical changes there comes too a mental upheaval, and we note indifference, irritableness and crankiness in the temperament of the once amiable girl. These tendencies, too, are often accompanied by acts which afford one glimpses into a character of self-sacrifice, loving helpfulness, and true womanliness; indeed, the various peculiarities incident to adolescence should not ordinarily be considered abnormal. The wise parent will refrain from frequent inquiries which might cause an undue introspection or the attention to be centered upon one's self, since such mistakes have been known to help bring about anemia, hysteria, and in some temperaments despondency amounting almost to melancholia. A happy, wholesome life must be sought for the individual, suitable young companionship encouraged without too great or long continued intimacies, especially of the opposite sex; and good books must be supplied under a wise supervision. Study to make the home pleasant and attractive in every respect, and many of the vexatious questions may be solved if you are successful in these efforts.

Emma V. Fish, who speaks with authority on the subject of Adolescence, has this helpful suggestion: "Girls' love of reading inclines more toward stories of daily life, to descriptive writing, to stories embodying moral precepts, to poetry and to love stories. All these should be encouraged, especially the reading of noble, beautiful poems, for these give healthful range for the imagination and have a refining and elevating influence. Love stories should be allowed only in moderation. Those of the silly, unnatural type which give false ideas of morality and depict sensational happenings should be avoided entirely. But books of healthful tone containing the love element as a natural part of human life are helpful and indeed almost a necessary branch of reading in order that true romantic feeling may be developed in a right and normal way."

In regard to the tendency to brag, the smart age and other disagreeable outcroppings, due to the fact that new powers are at work within, processes of mental growth which are not fully appreciated by the child or even properly understood by the parent in every instance, Miss Fish has hinted that the wise parent will check this conceit by a few "takings down," which will cause this "bumptiousness to ooze out gradually." She insists, however, that self-confidence must not be destroyed, since it is essential to the proper development of a strong character.

There is no reason why a girl or boy should not be told frankly of the physical and mental functions which are disturbing their equilibrium, and a definite understanding and confidential relationship held between parents and the youth; in fact, there is every reason why these explanations should be made intelligently to them, resulting in family councils being held occasionally, and then every effort should be put forth by both sides as regards the proper adjustment in the matter of liberties, ultimate decisions, obedience, etc. Never for a day should a young girl feel that she has not the keenest sympathy of her parents; and yet the humoring of every whim and caprice is not kindness to the girl. She should have had the habit of self-control well established when a child, and the increased necessity for the continuance of it during adolescence is apparent.

Doctor William Lee Howard, in one of his books, has a chapter entitled, "Nerves and the nervous girl." He says, "The nervous force in woman, including the brain, is the last to become fully developed, but it should be the first to be considered in your training. It means self-control, and there is no better evidence of good birth, well-poised personality, and perfect physical health, than control over one's impulses and words. To get self-control you must go at it in the same systematic manner as you do physical exercise."

I presume we have all been impressed with the emphasis which the psychologist lays upon Habit. It is Professor James who tells us that "while between the ages of twenty and thirty is the critical time for the formation of intellectual and professional habits, that the period below twenty is more important still for the fixing of personal habits." We must insist upon the attention to cleanliness of person and dress even in details such as the teeth, nails, etc. The habits of carelessness and slovenliness may follow a person indefinitely. James speaks of the fact that "hardly ever can a youth transferred to the society of his betters unlearn the nasality and other vices of speech bred in him by the associations of his growing years." And we all have observed for ourselves the tremendous effort which is required to reestablish good habits in the way of slang, correct grammar, etc., when once the wrong habit has been established. Parents must not fail to direct the youth so far as possible into habits of right living, right thinking, and right speaking.

According to good authorities among teachers, physicians, and those who work with the young, there are numerous cases of those who drift into habits of evil practices which wise instruction and careful watching would have prevented. Judge Porterfield, of Kansas City, and Judge Lindsey, of Denver, have expressed themselves alike on this subject. Judge Lindsey has said that "countless young people would be saved from lives of shame if the parents themselves would only instruct them properly and protect their morals at the critical, curious age."

Doctor Mary Wood Allen, who devoted years of study to the problems of the youth, urges the importance of this instruction. "Each child should receive from parent or friend the instruction which will make clear the physical significance, so that he may escape the dangers which lie in wait for the unwary and ignorant, and will give him the comprehension of his true value to the race."

Mothers should therefore consider it a duty to first inform themselves if necessary, and then teach their daughters the important physical and moral laws pertaining to sex.

Physicians have repeatedly emphasized the necessity for girls wearing proper and sufficient clothing. The need for a careful protection against damp feet and colds, especially during menstruation, these and other details as to dress and health are, it would seem, too well understood to need emphasis here. Besides guarding against careless habits which will materially affect the health of a girl and later the woman, it is during this impressionable age that a wise mother will endeavor to instill into her daughter both by precept and example the advantages to be derived from good taste in dress and manners. This does not mean that a girl should not wear pretty and becoming clothes, but she should be instructed that neither extravagance in dress nor affectation of manner are the indications of true culture, but that quiet, refined manners, neatness and appropriateness—which is good taste—in dress is a good rule to be followed through life.

This education will, if heeded, allow girls and women many spare hours for self-improvement, recreation, or possibly travel without necessarily interfering with that inexorable law which demands that women must be neatly and becomingly dressed at all times.

An abundance of restful sleep, with fresh air, plenty of work and play, are essential for the girl and young woman. The physical and mental turmoil are best and most naturally calmed and directed by these provisions. Tennis, skating, boating, swimming, all such games may be participated in by the healthy girl, and for those not so strong more quiet games must be provided. It has been urged that the exercise of housework, besides encouraging the housewifely instincts and accomplishments which are always admirable in a girl, are really valuable in affording muscular development and exercise. The wise and tactful mother will manage that a girl does not feel that she is overburdened with labor, but in this working together for the upkeeping of a clean, comfortable, happy, and when practicable a beautiful home, there will come rare opportunities for the exchange of sweet intimacies and confidences, with moments for the impression of valuable moral teachings which otherwise might never be found. Each mother must study the nature of her girl or girls, with its peculiar weaknesses and temptations, and teach and train accordingly. The moral training which a girl receives during these years may result in her living a happy, contented, and useful life, or the opposite.

Let no mother fail to impress her daughter with a dignity and sacred regard for sex and motherhood. Happy are the conditions when the intimacies of childhood have been so extended that intelligent women may impress upon the mothers of the future the knowledge that shall fit them physically and morally for marriage, and to whom children will bring a state of happiness for both husband and wife.

Under present economic conditions, coupled with the fact that this seems to be the era of woman's opportunities, we must not teach the girls that there are not many happy women engaged in business and the professions; but shall we err conspicuously if, as a part of our educational process during these plastic years of adolescence, we shall impress upon the woman of the future the fact that after all "home keeping hearts are happiest"? May the following significant figure, as applied to adolescence, sink deep into our consciousness.

"The flowing stream that meets with frequent obstructions, frets and boils and overflows its banks and does much damage through its impetuosity. The same stream, flowing undisturbed, can be curbed and restrained within bounds by banks which guide its course but do not impede its progress." And if, perchance, because of our watchful, intelligent guidance we shall see our daughters evolve from the pure, delicate budding of girlhood into the perfect flower of true womanhood, what greater reward or happiness can be ours?

Request for Prayer.

We ask the prayer union and the Saints in general who may read this to pray in behalf of our daughter, who is sorely afflicted, that if it is God's will that she may be healed.

E. W. AND ANNA HERRON.

Letter Department

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 12, 1912.

Editors Herald: I will leave for my mission field, Southern Nebraska District, this week, and through your columns I wish to say a few things to the Saints of that field, especially the isolated ones. It is very important that we cooperate so that our efforts will be the more successful in spreading abroad the gospel message. If it has done you good and made the present life more pleasant and desirable, and the hope of the future one filled with brighter hope, it will do the same for others, if they get an opportunity to hear it and accept it.

It is my desire to reach new places, or where little preaching has been done, that the stranger to our faith may become informed and the isolated one encouraged and made stronger in the truth he has accepted. Encourage the missionary by giving him an invitation to come at what you think will be the most favorable and opportune time. I will do my best to respond at the most convenient time, to benefit you and others.

Please don't treat this as a trifling matter; it is important that we be about "our Father's business," and working together with him for the good of others. Address me at Wilber, Nebraska, or as above.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

MOBERLY, MISSOURI, May 13, 1912.

Editors Herald: We are a few here in this part of the vineyard of the Lord, and we are not lost in things of the world, and hope that we may yet leaven some of this part of the world. While we have no branch here, we hope that the time may soon come when we will.

Ever praying for the prosperity of this latter day work.

Your brother,

516 REED.

GEO. W. FREY.

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA, May 12, 1912.

Editors Herald: We enter another year of gospel labor in Minnesota hopefully. The work seems to be moving on comparatively well here. The Minnesota annual reunion will begin June 22 at Clitherall, and we hope for a pleasant time for all who can attend.

In gospel bonds,

L. HOUGHTON.

HONOR, MICHIGAN, May 11, 1912.

Editors Herald: We love to read the news from the fields and branches, and the letters from the brothers and sisters, and thought it would not be amiss to let you know that the work has prospered in these parts the last year. We belong to the Inland Branch. W. D. Ellis has put in good work with the branch, and at Bendon, and has been permitted to see part of the fruits of his labor, having baptized over twenty, and more are convinced of the truth of the work and say they are going to obey. We are about eight miles from the church and have no team, so can not go as we would like to. They have a good Sunday school, and a splendid Religion, and when there is no one to preach they have prayer and social meetings after Sunday school. We are sorry Brother Ellis had to leave for another field, but we pray God's choicest blessings to be his.

Mrs. Williams, whose request for prayers we sent in, has been a neighbor all winter. We have loaned her reading and she has heard a few sermons at our house. She believes and is worthy of our prayers, that if it is God's will she may have strength to go through her trying ordeal and be raised up to health to raise her family. We think if she is spared and has a chance she will obey the gospel call.

Your brother and sister,

D. E. AND M. DUNSHEE.

SWEET LAKE, LOUISIANA, May 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: Will you please spare me room in your valuable paper, as I earnestly desire the prayers of the Saints to aid me to undergo some operations, that if it is the Lord's will I may be spared to raise my children, as I know they need a mother's care, and my desire is to teach them to do good and to love the Lord and obey and keep his laws. If the Lord is willing to spare me I have a full determination to live up to the very best of my understanding; and by the help of the loving Father I hope and pray to hold on to that I have which is good. I have been bedfast eight months and I have learned a great deal I never knew; all because I had never tried to turn away from earthly things.

Dear Saints, if there are any in this condition it is best to turn loose before affliction takes you, and turn all your heart to God with all good works. I am of a broken heart, for I never paid tithing. Now it is sad to think that I have nothing and am anxious to do something and can not. It is an awful sin and a shame to rob God, for what we have is not our own.

Oh, I do pray that everyone who loves the Lord will prove it by his works. Let us all get right, as purely and perfectly as we can; then the good Spirit will come and be with us. I intend to do my very best; pray for me that I may fulfill my promises to God.

JOSIE HELMS.

COLUMBUS, KANSAS, May 12, 1912.

Dear Herald and Readers: While reading your pages and meditating on the condition of the world around us, we breathe a fervent prayer for those who, so wisely, cheerfully, and willingly manage, contribute, and otherwise aid in sending you out to the thousands who do and may receive much strength, comfort, and consolation by an earnest perusal of the subjects, themes, and topics contained in your columns each week. Truly, how ignorant the world at large is in regard to the Christ and his gospel! some honestly, some willfully; but all equally in need of the blessings to be obtained and enjoyed by an earnest and faithful obedience to the great plan of salvation instituted and consummated by God and his Son, Jesus Christ.

My prayer is that we will put forth an effort that will enable us to secure God's aid to a degree that we will be successful standard bearers of the truth; that we may be strong, unyielding, and courageous when storms of trial and temptation threaten to engulf us, and thus be able to let our light shine, and our conduct be a testimony to those about us of the goodness and mercy of God to those who will fear and obey him. In our daily labors among those who do not really believe in Christ and his teachings, we can not fail to note the almost universal and fatal mistake of shirking individual responsibility.

The theory and belief advocated by many that we are governed and controlled by surrounding conditions and circumstances; that we can not do right and have to do wrong, is born of a spirit adverse and converse to the Spirit of him who said, "Follow me; I am the way, the truth, and the life." Let us as Saints and followers of the meek and humble One come out from among the world, that we be not partakers with them of the evils around us, but give more thought and earnest heed to seeking first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness.

Ever praying for his Spirit to lead, direct, and strengthen us, and thus we be able to aid others while saving ourselves.

C. C. RANDALL.

SOUTH HAVEN, MICHIGAN, May 12, 1912.

Editors Herald: There are several churches here, but there are hardly the husks to feed upon when one is looking for the Spirit to guide and direct and encourage along the pathway of life. How I wish I had the chance to go and hear a good sermon this morning! When I think of the grand sermons and prayer meetings I have attended, it makes my heart ache to get where there is a branch of God's people. I am trying to do this, but the things of life seem to hold me back. I have epileptic fits, and they keep me from doing what I would like to do. I am looking, hoping, and praying for God to heal me, and I ask the Saints to remember me in their prayers that I may be healed. My faith in God grows stronger day by day, yet it is hard to keep his commandments and live as one should when away from church privileges which are so beneficial, uplifting, and strengthening.

I hope the time is not far off when I may have the blessing of going where there is a branch.

Ever praying for the Saints, that they may be prayerful, obedient children, I subscribe myself a lonesome brother,

A. R. FRANTZ.

HILLSBORO, IOWA, May 15, 1912.

Editors Herald: We sincerely desire the Saints and prayer union to fast and pray on Sunday, May 26, for my beloved sister, Sarah Prisa. She has been afflicted with nervous prostration, and is growing worse right along. She is a member of the church and but twenty-four years old, and has two little children, and in her worst spells is pleading that God will spare her for her little ones and husband, and she keeps saying that the destroying angel is going to take her. Oh, dear Saints, pray that God will bless and rebuke that evil spirit from her and pray that God will take away all imaginations out of her heart and mind so she will get strong, to fill her mission here on earth, if it be God's will, and I believe it, for she has a great work right in and around her home, and she has only been a member for about three years, and her trials have been many, as her husband was opposed to her coming into the church.

Also pray for my dear mother, who is now taking care of her, to have strength in this another time of trial.

MRS. ZULIAH CLAWSON.

TRINIDAD, COLORADO, May, 1912.

Dear Editor: We now have a branch here in Trinidad, of some fifty-two members, and they are a very thriving little branch. However, there are several absent. We have sessions of Sunday school, Religio, and a sister's aid society, which are all doing nicely. We also have preaching by H. W. Berry. We hope the Lord will continue to bless us, and that we may live humble and prayerful lives, and that we may gain the prize.

Sincerely yours,

121 WEST JOHNSON.

NORA HAMMOND.

MALAD CITY, IDAHO, May 3, 1912.

Editors Herald: Some one may be wondering what has become of the Saints of Malad, or whether we had any real Saints. I will say we have some real Saints that are doing as best they can, and others that seem to be somewhat indifferent; but we hope the good Lord will be merciful with the latter, and that they may see the necessity of serving their Master.

I consider it one of the greatest and grandest privileges given to man to labor with Christ in establishing righteousness upon this sin cursed earth. I realize that when we say to the world that we are followers of Christ and are Latter Day Saints, we must convince them by our good works, for saying and not doing is fruitless. I am sure the work in the West is looking up, and I hope that the present year may be a successful one, for we have lots of good people in this part of the Lord's vineyard. They have been blinded by false leaders, and the eye is a very tender spot; when once closed it must be handled very carefully or it is ruined for ever. That is the condition of these people.

Your brother for the good of the work,

ELIAS E. RICHARDS.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, April 24, 1912.

Dear Editor: I wish to say I know this "angel message" to be of divine origin, and wish to do what I can to advance it. I enjoy reading the HERALD, as it contains subjects that feed the soul. As I can not attend church services, being engaged in car service, I must work when I would like to be at church, my comfort is in this valuable paper, and books of the church. How I wish the Saints would put forth every effort in a financial way to build up Zion.

I was thinking that if the Saints would bank their money with the Bishop instead of the banks of the cities, and let the Bishop use it, and when necessary draw on him, God would be pleased, as a revelation was given to the church to "bring in your surplus to the storehouse, for this is the beginning of tithing."—Doctrine and Covenants 106. In other words, if I have a thousand dollars deposited in some bank, to draw it out and bank it with the church, asking no interest; the Bishop could then buy up all the State of Missouri in a short time. Just think of sixty thousand Saints averaging ten dollars each month to bank with the Bishop! If six hundred thousand dollars were deposited with the church, how much good the Bishop and his counselors could do with it! They could put up a half million dollar plant and give employment to thousands of Saints; we could all be co-workers together and ship the goods produced to all the branches in the world; we could buy and sell among ourselves. I realize that the Bishop is handicapped because the Saints sleep on this all-important question. I suggested this to a brother at a reunion last year, and told him I gave my surplus to the Bishop instead of the bank. He was surprised. He asked, "Can a man do that?" When I told him that he could, he replied, "I thought that when the Bishop got hold of the money I would never see it again." I told him that if he banked it as surplus with the church he could draw it again, but if it was tithes and offerings he could not get it, as that belongs to the Lord. He thought it a grand idea. I feel that my money is safe when deposited with the church, as I know "it will never be thrown down, nor given to another people."

When I receive my pay I give one tenth to the church; that is, one tenth of my salary, not one tenth of my surplus. I read where Jacob made a vow unto the Lord and said, "Of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give one tenth unto thee."—Genesis 28: 20, 22. After my living is taken out of the nine tenths I deposit the surplus, and the Bishop receipts me and marks it surplus. If anything happens to me I know the Bishop will see that my people will get the surplus unless I will it to the church. I know I will not be robbed of it. My heart and soul is in this work. "Where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

A short time ago a brother in the flesh said to me: "Suppose a man was only getting fifty dollars a month, and had a family of three or four and it took all of it to live; how could he pay one tenth to the Lord?"

I replied: "Suppose 'all' the Saints were getting only fifty dollars a month, and it took it all to live; then the ministers' families would have to go hungry. How much better it would be to say to the family that the Lord was hungry all last month; had nothing to eat; now can we not sacrifice a little this month and live on forty-five dollars while the Lord (ministers and their families) and his family live on five? I think we could. Why should we be selfish?"

We are told that this work is a work of sacrifice. I don't wonder that the Lord rebuked the Saints in this age of the world, claiming they had robbed him. (Malachi 3.) I know they rob him; I have done so myself in times past. But henceforth I will keep the celestial law in order to obtain celestial glory. "Man shall live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God," and not by what suits him. "The world is the Lord's and the fullness thereof"; "I am bought with a price"; I am his steward. Picture in your mind a man employing a cashier and bookkeeper and giving him orders to keep his accounts straight, pay all bills, and then for him or her to cheat the employer and hold out or embezzle a thousand or two and buy an automobile. In my opinion he would soon be behind prison bars. Do the Saints want to look through prison bars when they pass beyond, or do they want to be as the "angels of heaven"?

May God awaken the slumbering virgins of modern Israel.
1273 UNION STREET. BENJ. F. PARKS.

CENTRALIA, WASHINGTON, Box 71, May 12, 1912.

Editors Herald: We feel that perhaps the Saints of our district and the Portland District are beginning to look forward to the time when the reunion will be held, as a time when we shall be permitted to enjoy the society of the Saints, hear the word of God, and to feel the purifying influence of his Spirit. We, too, are beginning to feel the spirit of activity urging us to prepare for it by prayer and by doing all that we can to make it a success in spirituality and in numbers, both from within and without the church. Already the young people of our branch are making preparations for it by holding choir practice, by prayer and testimony, and by planning to give it a thorough advertising.

The reunion will be held in Centralia, Washington, beginning August 9, the second Friday in the month, and lasting ten days, or until the 19th. Further announcements concerning board, expenses, location, speakers, tents, etc., will be made from time to time through the HERALD and Ensign by the reunion advertising committee; so watch for them, Saints, and plan to attend.

We wish the Portland District Saints to remember and feel that this is just as much their reunion as it is the Saints' of this district; for they were invited by our last conference, and their last conference voted to accept our invitation. We hope to see the Portland District well represented at the reunion.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

LEONARD S. RHODES, for Advertising Committee.

OWENSVILLE, INDIANA, April 21, 1912.

Editors Herald: We are in good health and enjoying the Spirit of the Master. That would be a blessing for us all if we could only be blessed every day, but while living in a wicked place and having no church privileges at all, there is something tempting us once in a while, trying to overcome us; but thanks be to God, there have never been enough of them to overcome us. We have many trials and temptations in this old clay world, but we ever pray that we may be able to overcome them and be prepared to meet the dear Savior when he sounds his trumpet.

We will be very glad when it gets so we can have an elder come and have meetings here again, as we have not heard any preaching here since Elders Jacob Halb and E. O. Byrne were here last August.

We would have written to some one to come here before now, but we have been surrounded by water for the past six weeks, and it makes it very unpleasant at the present time. Farming here will be very late, and perhaps not very good if the wet weather continues much longer; but we must put our trust in the good Lord that he may provide for us. Let us not be disheartened and pray that the dear Master will be near us and work in our behalf. I bow my head in silent prayer to him as I believe he died for me.

Ever praying for that beautiful home beyond this vale of tears,

Your brother and sister in the one faith,

LEWIS AND MARY J. THOMPSON.

Sociological Conditions in San Francisco.—A Letter from the President of the W. C. T. U.

"For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. . . . And greater things shall ye do, for I go to my Father."

I wish all Saints who read this would set apart the first Sunday in April for a day of fasting and prayer for the homeless working girls of San Francisco, who are trying under adverse circumstances to live pure and honest lives.

The cost of living is so high here that they can scarcely exist on the wage that is paid to them; then, when they are thrown out of employment, an immoral life is the only one open to them.

At the end of the busy season and on Christmas Eve sixty girls were discharged from one shop in this city, and this is only one of hundreds of such places. These girls had been earning $4.50 a week, paying $2 and $2.50 for a room, and dividing the rest between food, clothing, car fare, doctor bills, and a dozen other expenses. Some of them were alone in the world; others were helping a widowed mother to support the younger children. What became of them after their discharge, who can say?

An unwelcome Christmas gift, you will say, but the only one many of them received. In my zeal to assist them I called on a prominent member of an avid society (so-called) and asked for them the articles left over from a bazaar the society had been holding, but her answer was, "What have you done to benefit us? We can dispose of these things in our next sale, or sell them between sales; besides, what do the poor want with pretty cushions and aprons and the like?" Saints, pray that human hearts may be more in touch with human needs. Pray that I may have more strength and courage to meet with such rebuffs.

Some of the so-called Christian churches are almost devoid of human sympathy, and the leaders lack truth and honor, but the greatest mistake of the members lies in their thoughtlessly being overruled by unscrupulous leaders.

A short time ago a woman in this city died at the birth of twin babies, leaving them and three other tots with the father, who soon had the added misfortune of losing his job. Their case was heartrending. I went to the nearest church and asked for a collection to be taken up for the twins. The minister did not object and the members gave liberally, but when the collection was placed before him the true character of the minister asserted itself and he arose and commenced giving reasons why the money should not be given to them, covering from his audience the fact that the money had already been given and could not lawfully be taken away. When after the service a member called his attention to certain false statements he had made in his reasons, he smoothed the matter over by promising to take a collection for the babies the next Sunday, which promise he has been forgetting every Sunday since.

We have received much help in our work from the lectures given by Martin Myer, a Jewish rabbi who understands the situation of white slavery and its causes and remedies. He does not claim Christianity, but like Ben Adam of old, he wants to be placed on record as one who loves his fellow man, and if among our speakers he shall receive according to his works, we may find that, like Ben Adam, the rabbi's name leads all the rest.

Then, too, we have had some oil poured on the troubled waters of selfishness by an evangelist, Gypsy Smith, who does not preach any creed, but opens his Bible to the life of Christ and tells of his love and requirements of us in language so simple and plain that all can understand him. A large skating rink was turned into an auditorium and every afternoon and evening the rink was filled and many were turned away for want of room. He touched thousands who had never cared for the right, or their Bibles, or anything else but money and pleasure; and since he has gone I find he has left a smoothness not felt before. Some of the clubs have taken up and are agitating the question of an eight dollar minimum wage for girls. Pray that it may go through. And pray that the cost of living may not raise in proportion. With this a decent living may be assured and a little saved to carry one through a siege of job hunting.

But after all, this will benefit only the fittest. Many are too delicate to earn it, and for these, dear Saints, let us pray. Have you ever noticed the girl behind the counter and seen the lips smile while the face is drawn with pain? When questioned she will say, "Oh, I'll be all right in a few days, but to-day I can hardly stand on my feet or keep from screaming." What a grand thing it would be for women of the wealthy and middle classes to form a relief committee and announce their willingness to relieve a delicate girl at such periods. Pray that we may have a committee of this kind.

My great desire is to build a large rooming house for homeless and delicate working girls, close to the business centers of San Francisco, where they can get plain, well-ventilated rooms, with plain and wholesome meals, where they will not be turned into the street if they happen to fall sick or lose their job, and where they will be in charge of a refined, respectable matron. Dear Saints, fast and pray on the first Sunday in June (2d), that we may some day realize this wish.

I have spoken of this to our W. C. T. U., but in this society we are as busy as we can be. Our women labored from house to house in the cause of suffrage, and having realized it, are now establishing courses of lectures in different parts of the city, for the purpose of teaching the new citizens their duties and powers for good. Then there is the temperance cause, and we are bound that some day California will be dry; so this work for the girls is a side issue for which we have neither time nor money in the W. C. T. U.

But, Saints, pray that it may be accomplished. Pray fervently June 2 that our girls may be saved. I will not try to advance the question much until after your prayers have ascended. And pray for me that I may be given knowledge and strength and courage. I am no public speaker, and am very timid and weak and poor in purse. Pray that I may find speakers, publishers, money, influence, advice, encouragement, anything needed to accomplish this great work. All can pray, and if any will give advice or other encouragement, address me at 4587 Eighteenth Street, San Francisco, California. If you wish to know the kind of person I am, write to Bishop E. L. Kelley, or Bishop C. A. Parkin of this city, 235 Third Avenue. I am not wholly without honor, save perhaps in my own little Nazareth.

I am vice president of the W. C. T. U. here and treasurer of the Woman's Political Study Club, and you have all met me in an article entitled, "Why does white slavery exist?" as published in the Mothers' Home Column of HERALD for July 19, 1911. This article was read from the HERALD before a meeting of the W. C. T. U., which is composed of members of many churches, orders, clubs, and other societies. Many of our women asked for copies of it, and I collected all the HERALDS of that date that I could obtain from the San Francisco Saints and gave them out, and it was read before all of these audiences that could get a copy. Since then I have not been quite so much alone in this work, but often feel the touch of a shoulder as I lift. And say! that touch is bracing!

MARY BEBBY HAWLEY.

Does Daniel 2:44 Refer to the Church?

In a late HERALD a brother says, "No"; but believing that it does refer to the church, and not having seen any reply to the above article, I would like to present my reasons for so stating.

The article referred to argues that the above quotation means the United States of America; but it seems to me we can hardly accept that definition, for the following reasons: In the first place, the United States is not a kingdom; secondly, we read that the stone was cut out of a mountain, and in looking where this mountain would be we are obliged to go outside of the territory occupied by the image; and as the toes represented the various powers of Europe, we are led to conclude that it is the land of America that is referred to. This, I think, will need no argument to prove; this being so, can we not see that if the text referred to the United States it would be the "mountain" that would strike the image and break it into pieces?

The brother goes on to say that the United States is doing the work. In what way, brother? and why should it?

(Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10 is quoted to prove that the United States is the "kingdom" referred to: "And for this purpose have I established the constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I have raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.")

What purpose? If we read the whole of paragraph ten we see the "purpose" of God in the above action. Notice: "Therefore it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose," etc., etc. Here we see the reason why God inspired men to form this "constitution," and was this not the reason why so much blood was shed; because the principle was not in force? We think so.

Further, the above quotation totally destroys the brother's claim, because the "stone" was cut out of a mountain without hands, whereas the Constitution was established; (cut out) by the hands of wise men raised up by God for this very purpose. The kingdom referred to by Daniel is a heavenly kingdom, set up by God himself, and as the stone might easily be cut out of the mountain without being missed or observed, so the kingdom of heaven cometh not by observation, but nevertheless it shall roll forth and none shall stay it until it has filled the whole earth. This kingdom, we are told, is to break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms, and stand for ever. Surely we can not seriously think that the United States will fill this description. We shall see later, however, that the church can and will accomplish this work.

To try and make his position secure, the brother argues that the church was practically overthrown. Let us see if that is correct. In Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7 we have the Lord saying to the church: "The willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land, and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land." Here we have a promise of blessing to the obedient, and a threat of banishment and cutting off to the rebellious; and although this threat was carried out, involving a large number of the members of the church, yet that did not invalidate the promises made to the obedient. The rebellious were cut off, (performing that operation themselves when they were rebaptized into the church having at its head Brigham Young,) but the obedient, never; and they were entitled to the blessings of which we read in Doctrine and Covenants: "Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain (after the scattering), and are pure in heart, shall return and come to their inheritances, they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy." This seems to be the official view of the church upon the matter. Conference resolution number 5, adopted June 12, 1852, says: "Resolved, That we believe that the church of Christ organized on the sixth day of April, 1830, exists as on that day wherever six or more Saints are organized according to the pattern in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants." So we see that the church (kingdom), was not destroyed, nor given to other people.

The brother says that sometimes Doctrine and Covenants 65 is referred to as proof that the church is the stone cut out without hands, and he quotes, "And from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone cut out of the mountain shall roll forth until it has filled the whole earth." And he says, "If there is anything in this claim, the gospel is the stone." Now what I would like to ask is this: How are we to separate the "gospel" from the "kingdom"? When we speak of the "kingdom" we refer to the organization, consisting of its "king," "officers," "subjects," and "territory," but all this is inanimate with the "gospel," which is the gospel (or good news), of the kingdom, the power whereby it grows, the means whereby it rolls.

The officers go forth "preaching the kingdom of God," and men press into it, and this shall go on until the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth, as the waters cover the deep (Isaiah 11: 9). And as no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost (1 Corinthians 12: 3), we can see that obedience has been rendered to the commands of God whereby this knowledge has been obtained; then shall the kingdoms, and all other forms of human government, of this world, become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever. (Revelation 11: 15.)

We invite the student to carefully note the whole of Doctrine and Covenants 65, to see if this view is not supported. For brevity we quote: "The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto men on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth." I think we are justified in observing that both the kingdom and the gospel are referred to in this quotation. The gospel rolls forth from "thence." Where? we might pause to ask. Doctrine and Covenants 58: 15 answers the question: "For verily the sound must go forth from this place (Independence, Missouri,) into all the world, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth—the gospel must be preached unto every creature, with signs following them that believe, and behold the Son of Man cometh." This is accomplished as (or simultaneously with) the stone or kingdom cut out of the mountain without hands rolls forth until it has filled the earth. The latter part of section 65 supports this view; listen: "Yea, a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord . . . pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth, that the inhabitants may receive it, and be prepared for the day to come in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God, which is set up on the earth; wherefore may the kingdom of God go forth that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth that thy enemies may be subdued, for thine is the honor, power, and glory, for ever and ever, amen." (See also 1 Corinthians 15: 24, 28.)

Surely this can refer to none but the church. This explains why, although Jesus established the kingdom of God on the earth, he taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

That God's Holy Spirit may be ever given to guide us into all truth, is the prayer of your brother,

JOHN BAILEY.

News From Missions

Oklahoma.

Please say to your readers interested in the work of Oklahoma that another year finds the writer in his old district with new helpers; Brethren F. C. Keck, J. E. Hughes, and A. H. Christensen are in the Western District and ready for labor. I am the only one living in the district of the mission force so appointed, so please address me at Kingfisher, Oklahoma, 224 West Wyatt Street. As assistant minister in charge and bishop's agent, I make a special appeal to the Saints to help; the local force can do much if they will try. Brother T. P. Powell, of Calumet, is the district president, and H. F. Durfey, of Ivanhoe, Oklahoma, is the assistant; Sister R. M. Maloney, of Seiling, is the district secretary.

The reunion will be held at Calumet, July 19 to 28. We hope to hear from many of the Saints desiring tents for that meeting. Address A. W. Sanders, Calumet. All come who can; pasture free for horses; plenty of water and shade. The cooperative boarding tent will be run as cheaply as possible; there is an abundance of vegetables, and crops are fine.

The Lamanite camp will be a special attraction, as they are now coming into the church, and many are much interested.

I see by the pastoral letters, that a special appeal is made to the Saints everywhere to come to the rescue on the financial department. As bishop's agent I want to thank the Saints for their liberal help during the hard years, and now that the rain is so profuse and the prospects are so good, please send to the writer as the agent for the Bishop here, and you shall have the receipt by return mail. "Ye are coworkers together with God, ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." We all want to do our humble part, so here is your opportunity.

Your brother and coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

News from Branches

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

It was just before our pastor's departure to conference and we reported our desires that he would return. He himself seemed none too confident of his future assignment, but he was resigned and assured us that they would "probably send us a better man." Then it was that the memorable thing occurred, the thing which we plead in vindication of this anecdote,—for one of these men, gloomily nodding his head, answered, "I don't know; they've been sending us worse ones every time."

Philadelphia, however, fared better than that, for Brother Smith has been returned to us for the ninth consecutive year, and Brother Hull is again to labor here in the mission. His success has been very encouraging: it was on Easter Sunday that he baptized seven into the church—the results of his labors there. The Sunday school, too, is in a thriving condition, and indications are that before long they will have established a branch there; at least we are praying for it.

Our delegation to Independence returned on April 20, some two weeks ago, so that last Sunday was our first sacrament Sunday and we now record another baptism; that is only eight since April 1, but then the year is young yet, and we've only started work.

We are announcing the closing exercises of the North Philadelphia Institute on May 27, and it is going to be one of the red letter days of the year. On Thursday, July 11, our daily vacation bible school opens, and that, too, is to be one of the red letter days of the year. In addition to these there looms before us Children's Day and the district conventions—all red letter days. It might be better to print the whole calendar in ink; then there will be a bright year before us—which shows how optimistic we are here.

MAY 6, 1912.

"JUDGE."

Independence, Missouri.

Among the old and young of the Saints in Independence there seems to be every indication of its being a very busy season this coming year.

The sisters of this branch are a helping force for good in many ways, and we take pleasure in noting the many avenues now opening for usefulness, not only in domestic and civic circles, but also in the consecrated service of the church.

On last evening, the 14th, the Ladies' Aid Society gave an entertainment at the hall, at which refreshments were served, and the usual social features were provided; and again to-day quite a large number of the fifty-five, which is the total membership, are engaged in quilting, for the purpose of helping to liquidate the church debt.

This society, under the faithful leadership of Sister H. O. Smith and an efficient corps of assistants, is prepared to fill orders from anyone for all kinds of plain sewing; also work on comforts and quilts. At the close of the Aid Society meeting on the 8th an afternoon session of the Woman's Auxiliary, with which are now affiliated the Aid Society, the Laurel Club, and others, was held in the upper auditorium for the purpose of electing local and general officers for the ensuing year, and Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, president, with her assistants, forming the executive, were chosen by those present. The plans and objects, in view of the Woman's Auxiliary, with its constitution; and the statement and address made by its noble and efficient president, Sister B. C. Smith, should be well considered by all who are privileged to peruse the church papers, in which these things are fully set forth.

We are glad to learn that so many of our sisters, one of whom is Sister Alvin Knisley, are in full accord with their companions in the missionary field, accompanying, and thus helping them on in the work of the Master, in making more easy the burden, and thus lending cheer and encouragement to the laborer.

There are many families, some with little ones, here, who miss the paternal counsel and care of beloved ones enlisted in the church's strenuous and spiritual warfare, who are faithful to the sacred trust. These are young and devoted mothers and oft seen (like Sister J. W. DuBose, and Sister Lake about to go on her mission to the islands,) in the Sunday school and Religio; and the very young mothers and the older ones toiling at home, all need our sympathy and prayers.

Then there are mothers like Sister George DeTray, president of the Sunshine Band, and Sister Minnie Warnock, one of the vice presidents of the popular and great-souled Humane Society, who are organizers of bands engaged in the betterment of society—who are dispensing sunshine and the Spirit of the loving Savior everywhere.

Sunday, the 12th, was Mother's Day, and it was made one of uplifting and inspiring thought through the efforts of a few who rendered a pleasing little program of song and recitation. Also the usual morning sermon was substituted by a very instructive address by President G. E. Harrington, on the subject, "The wondrous works of God." This was supplemented by an excellent discourse in the evening by Elder R. Etzenhouser.

The participants in the Mother's Day program were Sister Altha Deam, who read, "Rock me to sleep, mother," and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser and R. C. Smith, son of President Joseph Smith, who read poems also appropriate to the occasion. They were fine. The juvenile chorus pieces under the direction of Sister B. M. Anderson were well rendered.

A young mother, only a little over forty years of age, who was well known and beloved in our midst, was recently taken by the grim reaper, death, leaving a companion and family to mourn her departure.

Sister Lydia Tankard's funeral obsequies took place on the 11th at the church, and Brother J. C. Foss preached the sermon before a goodly number of relatives and friends who are left to emulate her many virtues.

The Saints here are desirous of your prayers in behalf of some of our brethren and sisters who are sick and afflicted, and rejoice also in the goodness of our heavenly Father, by which some, having passed through much suffering, are convalescent. Also remember the aged ones.

Your sister in the covenant,

ABBIE A. HORTON.

The Kewanee district Sunday school association will meet in convention at Millersburg, Illinois, May 31, at 10 a. m. Delegates should be elected and credentials forwarded to the undersigned not later than May 27. Those intending to attend the convention should come to Aledo Thursday evening and should notify Brother J. L. Terry, at Millersburg, of your coming. Let all come who can and let us make this convention a success. There will be election of officers. Mira Cady, secretary, Joy, Illinois.

Reunion Notices.

The Kirtland, Pittsburg, Ohio, and West Virginia districts will hold their joint reunion at Kirtland, Ohio, August 15 to 25. The prices governing the reunion will be as follows: Meals; breakfast, 15 cents; dinner, 25 cents; supper, 15 cents. Tents, $2; cots, 50 cents each. Rooms (only a limited number available), $3. These prices for rooms and tents are based on the ten days or fraction thereof. Every effort will be made to care for the transient visitor, but only meager facilities are available for such. Those intending occupying tents must take bedding with them. Transportation from Willoughby to Kirtland, 25 cents each, trunks 25 cents. Advise R. C. Russell, Willoughby, Ohio, R. D. 2, when you expect to arrive and over what road, so a conveyance will be in waiting. Engage your rooms and tents as far in advance of the reunion as possible, from the undersigned, who will cheerfully furnish any information possible. Bishop R. C. Evans, of Canada, is expected to be with us during the gathering. C. Edward Miller, R. D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio.

The reunion of Spring River District will be held in beautiful Lincoln Park, of Pittsburg, Kansas, August 9 to 19 inclusive. Prices of tents, board, and any other information will be published in due time. The committee requests the Saints to make preparation now, to enable them to be in attendance and help to make this year's reunion the best ever held. Otto Hempel, secretary of committee, 407 North Fairview Street.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Kirtland District: Having been appointed associate minister in charge of the above district, I hope to have the cooperation of all, so that success may attend our efforts for the advancement of the Master's cause, so precious to us all, and the salvation of our souls. We are commanded to be diligent in the charge intrusted to our care. It is the desire of your servant to do all in his power for the advancement of Zion's redemption; also hoping to hear from any or all as to where labor can be done. As associates in the warfare, Brethren J. A. Becker, R. Baldwin, and C. Ed. Miller need no recommendation, as they are known to all, and will do all they can for the best interests of the work.

Not forgetting the local officers, I trust to have their assistance when convenient, and I will do what I can to assist them in their work.

Praying that the blessings of the heavenly Father will be with us all, I am yours in gospel bonds,

STEVENSON, ONTARIO.

SAMUEL BROWN.

To the Saints and Friends of Virginia and West Virginia; Greeting: By action of General Conference my field of labor for this year is the Kirtland District; it being considered for the best. As to this, we elders are supposed to be resigned to where our lot is cast, so I trust the change will be for the best interest of the Master's cause. However, when one is associated with Saints and friends for a period of three years there is an attachment to each other in the gospel work so that when the separating time comes it causes a feeling of sadness when we think of our pleasant associations together in worshipping God; the enjoyment of his Spirit, and the fellowship of Saints. When shall we meet again? There is one thing certain: if faithful we shall meet in a better land, where separation will not be known. I trust that we all shall do our duty, so as to be worthy of that rest prepared for the good and the true.

I feel grateful to the Saints and friends for their kindnesses to me during my association with them, and their acts of kindness will be rewarded by the Giver of all good, and shall not be forgotten by me. In conclusion, may the choice blessings of the heavenly Father be theirs to enjoy.

Brother James McConaughy being my successor, I bespeak for him your faith and confidence, trusting that his labors may meet with success in building up the kingdom of God.

I remain as ever your brother and colaborer in gospel bonds,
SAMUEL BROWN.

To the Saints and Friends of the Northern Nebraska District: As I have been appointed to labor in this district outside of the city of Omaha, I take this opportunity to address you, and tell you that as soon as I can arrange to be in the field I will be. I have some temporal matters that demand my attention, and the health of Sister Baker demands that I arrange for her location where her daughter is, before I feel justified in leaving her alone. But I am now in hopes that at least for the present this can be done by the first of June. So that any that would like to have my service, either to make you a visit or to hold a series of meetings in your vicinity, please let me know at once, and as to the time that you would think best for such service. Until June I write me at 2914 North Twenty-fifth Street, Omaha, Nebraska. After that date write me to 700 West Fifth Street, Sioux City, Iowa. Now please do not put this off until to-morrow, but write me at once as to the opportunities, and your needs, and I will try and arrange my plans accordingly. This is the work of God so far as we will permit it to be. And we must cooperate with him and each other, so let me hear from you. If you do not see your way clear just now, write me anyway and let me know where you are and the conditions, and perhaps by so working together we can help each other.

Yours for work and the salvation of the world as far as it is possible for us.
J. M. BAKER.

To the Saints of Eastern Oklahoma; Greeting: I am glad to be associated with you another year. I hope all will feel that we are colaborers together in this great work. We have the same corps of missionaries that we had last year; for which we are glad. The only thing we regret is that we haven't more men, but we have a number of good local men, and feel quite well equipped. Let us as missionaries keep busy. I hope the local men will preach as often as they can without neglecting their business. I hope all the Saints will see to it that their names get on the bishop's books. Make all you can consistently. There is no harm in making money; the wrong is in loving it so well that we will not give the Lord his part; one tenth.

Remember the reunion at Wilburton commences August 2. Let all begin now to get their business in shape so they can go. We are looking forward to this being one of the best reunions we have ever had in the district. Come to Haileyville to the conference. Most all, if not all, did well last year; may we all try to come up higher this year. My home address will be Mapleton, Kansas.
LEE QUICK.

To the Saints of the Pottawattamie District; Greeting: Having been appointed minister in charge of that field, and also being a stranger, I desire the cooperation of all the Saints and friends. The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few, so let us all labor together with our mights so we can accomplish the most good.

I understand there are only three counties in this district, but there is only one other missionary besides myself, so assist us all you can, brethren, and we will do likewise.

I expect to be at the district conference at Carson, which is to be held May 25, at 10.30 a. m., and there we can arrange for the work before us face to face.

May the blessings of heaven rest upon all of us is my earnest prayer.
N. V. SHELDON.

Dear is the work He gives in many a varied way;
Little enough in itself, yet something for every day;
Something by pen for the distant, by hand or voice for the near,
Whether to sooth or teach, whether to aid or to cheer.
—Havergal.

Notice.

To whom it may concern, this is to certify that Elder H. E. C. Muir has been released from mission appointment for the conference year, and Brother Samuel T. Pendleton has been appointed in his place, to labor in the Eastern Michigan District.

Very respectfully,

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

Minister in charge Great Lakes Mission.

The First President concur in the above release and appointment.

Very respectfully,

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

Secretary of the First Presidency.

Two-Day Meetings.

There will be a two-day meeting held at Coleman, Michigan, June 8 and 9; everybody is invited to come. Good speakers will be in attendance. George W. Burt, district president.

The Saints of Uniopolis Branch (Ohio) will hold a two-day meeting on June 15 and 16. They will dedicate their church on the 16th. All are invited. Special invitation is extended to Brn. R. C. Russell and J. A. Becker. We are counting on the elders of the Ohio District, Samuel Brown, C. Ed. Miller and others. J. M. Bartley.

Information Wanted.

We inclose you a list of names of members of the Louisville, Kentucky, Branch. We are unable to get any information pertaining to these parties, as we have written several of them, others we do not know where to locate, but the branch has authorized a committee of three of us to investigate the standing of such members and if no satisfactory information can be gotten on them that the same be dropped from our membership at our regular business meeting the first Thursday night in June. A list of these names is also in the hands of the presiding teacher of the branch. From anyone interested in the membership of any on this list or who can give us the whereabouts of same, we will be glad to receive any information that can be given.

Died.

HOUCK.—Mrs. Maintaima Hohanshelt was born at Hanover, Wisconsin, December 16, 1843; died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. W. Butler, in the town of Rock, March 20, 1912. Was married to George C. Houck in 1859 and in 1863 moved to Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, and in 1866 she united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, and has remained a constant member until her death. To this union were born four children, two boys, and two girls, William H. passed to the beyond in 1896; since that time she has made her home with her children. She always tried to live an honest, Christian life. The elders always found a home with her when in the vicinity of her place. She was baptized by Samuel Ackerly, and confirmed by Samuel Ackerly and Charles Sang, in 1866.

QUIGLEY.—Sister Isabel Quigley, aged 78 years, died March 19, 1912, at her home in Vancouver, British Columbia. She was the youngest daughter of Abraham and Matilda Cosgrove, who in their mature years chose to follow truth as they saw it and were immersed into the Baptist Church, having before been members of the Church of England. With the same love of truth Sister Quigley accepted the message of the restoration, first carried to her by Brother and Sister Burton, and was baptized into the Reorganized Church by H. J.

One impulse from a vernal wood
 May teach you more of man,
 Of moral evil and of good,
 Than all the sages can.—Wordsworth.

Davison in 1893. The gospel authorized by Jesus Christ to be preached won and kept the love and admiration of her whole soul, and truly she felt that she had gained a hundred fold by obedience to it. Now she is realizing the last part of the promise, "life everlasting" for she "endured to the end." Her husband and four children and nine grandchildren are left behind; one child and two grandchildren had gone before. Rich indeed is the heritage left to her family: the memory and influence of her life. Her message to the Saints was "Be faithful."

CAMERON.—Sister Sarah C. Cameron was born December 2, 1853; died April 29, 1912, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. L. Gouldsmith, Nevada, Missouri. She has been sick for a number of years and bore her suffering patiently; was a true Saint to the last. She leaves a husband, two sons, and two daughters to mourn her loss. The funeral was conducted from the house of her daughter. Sermon by Elder F. C. Keck.

HAWKES.—Mrs. Emma Abby Hawkes was born at Machias, Maine, June 10, 1854; died at her home at Anoka, Minnesota, January 25, 1912. She leaves to mourn a husband, two sons, one daughter, seven grandchildren, three brothers and one sister. She was a loving wife and mother, and a faithful worker in the gospel and Sunday school. She came to Minnesota with her parents about 1857. Married to Henry Thomas Hawkes April 21, 1873. They lived in Minneapolis until 1880, then moved to Ottertail County, Minnesota. United with the Reorganized Church in the town of Scambler, Minnesota, July 27, 1890. They came back to Minneapolis in 1893. Funeral from Saints' church, sermon by Elder B. F. Lambkin, assisted by Elder Shakespeare. Interment in Lake-wood Cemetery, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

WILDERMUTH.—At Osterdock, Iowa, Evelyn Mary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Wildermuth, passed away May 5, 1912. She was born June 5, 1911. She remained with her parents just eleven months, when after an illness of three months and five days our heavenly Father, in his mercy and love, took the darling babe to its place* of heavenly rest. Sermon by Elder J. A. Bronson, of Belvidere, Illinois.

PAGE.—Mrs. Minnie May, born January 13, 1889, at Fulton, California; died at Independence, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, April 28, 1912. Her maiden name was Minnie May Scott. She was married to Mr. Bert E. Page, Santa Rosa, California, November 12, 1904, Elder Columbus Scott officiating. To them three children were born, two survive her, Iolene and Iola. The youngest, an infant, passed over on the other side prior to the mother. The husband, two daughters, with the mother, Mrs. Sarah A. Whisler, of Santa Rosa, California, and a sister, Mrs. Laura Brown, of Alameda, California, two brothers, William Scott, of Alameda, and Otto Scott, of Santa Rosa, with other relatives, are the chief mourners. Sister Page united with the Reorganized Church at Santa Rosa, February 20, 1898, baptized by Elder William Newton. At time of death she was a member of the Independence Branch. Services at church in Independence, by George E. Harrington and E. L. Kelley. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MARTIN.—Judson Hector Martin was born in Lake Eunice Township, Decker County, Minnesota, December 28, 1873, and died March 7, 1912, near Troy, Montana, aged 38 years, 2 months, and 10 days, death being caused by injuries received from a blast while working in a mine. He was a son of Doctor T. J. Martin, well known to the Saints of Minnesota. The remains were brought back to Detroit, Minnesota, and laid to rest in the Lake Eunice Cemetery, near the old home. Funeral discourse by L. Houghton. A large number of former neighbors and friends attended the service.

MOOSER.—Samuel Mooser was born in Norway, October 13, 1873; died in the Northwestern Hospital at Moorhead, Minnesota, April 18, 1912. Death was caused by a cancer of the stomach. Brother Mooser came to America in his early years, being left an orphan when quite young, and by faithful industry was able to earn life's necessities. He leaves a wife and five small children to mourn. He heard the gospel only a few years ago, and after investigation soon obeyed it and was a faithful, earnest man till death. He had been called and ordained and did some labor in his office in the Fargo Branch. Funeral service was held at the home in Moorhead, Minnesota, April 21; discourse by L. Houghton. The body was laid to rest in the Riverside Cemetery, Fargo North Dakota.

PLATO.—Jason H. Plato, who died at his home in Berlin Township, April 5, 1912, at the age of 51 years and 23 days, was born in the Township of Bertie, Welland County, Ontario, March 13, 1861. At about the age of twenty years he left the farm where he had lived with his parents and took up railroad work at Niagara Falls, Ontario, where he remained till about four years ago, when he removed with his family to Michigan. He was married in May, 1892, to the wife who survives him. A son and two daughters also mourn the loss of a kind father. He was reared in the faith of the United Brethren Church, and became a member of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints about eighteen years ago, being baptized by Elder John Shields at Niagara Falls, Ontario. In this church he held the office of deacon. Funeral services were conducted at the family residence Sunday, April 7, he being buried in the Hoover Cemetery.

FLETCHER.—Mary A. Miller, born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, June 12, 1837, died April 24, 1912. She was the eldest child of Edward and Clarissa Miller. They moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, where she united with the Latter Day Saints' Church at the early age of eleven years. She was married to Calvin G. Fletcher on September 22, 1854. After the death of her husband in 1900, she moved to Shenandoah, where she died. She leaves to mourn three sisters, Mrs. Clare Eaton, Idaho; Mrs. Hayse, Kansas, and Mrs. Cox of Shenandoah; seven children: Mrs. Bercaw, of Norwich, Mrs. Ida Rice of Riverton, Mrs. Sadie Mace and Oral Fletcher, Kansas, Edward, Henry, and Elmer of Shenandoah; eighteen grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren. Funeral services Sunday, April 28, in the Saints' church, conducted by Elder Baker of Omaha, and J. B. Bartley.

ARMSTRONG.—Archie V. Armstrong passed from this life at his home in Kansas City, Missouri, April 30, 1912, at 7.30 a. m., aged 29 years, 9 months, and 16 days. He was born in Bond County, Illinois, on July 14, 1882. He was baptized on Easter Sunday, 1907. Two years later was ordained a teacher, and the following year ordained a priest. On May 18, 1908, was married to Miss Alice Severin. Three children were born to them, one boy and two girls. The boy preceded his father to the better world, during infancy. Funeral sermon by Elder J. Arthur Davis, of Pittsburg, Kansas, assisted by Reverend Smalley, of the Presbyterian Church. Interment in the Columbus, Kansas, cemetery. His faith in the gospel was strong, and his last testimony was that the work was of God.

Pastoral.

ORDER OF EVANGELISTS AND ALL OTHERS WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Dear Brethren: The conference is a thing of the past and we are now entering upon the important duties of another year. In harmony with the law of progress, which is the only way of safety and success, and which law applies to us as does every other class of ministers in the church, let us ardently hope and trust that with more carefulness, deeper humility, an increased supply of the wisdom which comes down from above, a keener and greater supply of spiritual discernment, more knowledge, more faith, more love; and last, but not least, more gospel inspiration, which comes only from the "one Spirit," even "the Spirit of truth," we may continue our work for another year.

Eight members of the order were present at the late conference, and we certainly had a peaceful and profitable time together. Not only the unity of the Spirit characterized our business sessions, but with one possible exception, so far as I know, unity of belief also. This was encouraging and caused us to wish that all the members of the order could have met with us.

We believe that some steps were taken in the right direction, and that the interchange of thought and experiences had in the prosecution of our work, were truly profitable. A committee was chosen to arrange for a short program to be rendered at our next General Conference; hereafter, the annual reports must be sent to the secretary of the order, instead of the president. His address is, C. E. Butterworth, box 6, Dow City, Iowa. We call special attention to the action had concerning the giving of the second blessing to the same individual, as published in the HERALD, and as will appear again when the minutes are published more fully.

Is it not, dear brethren, the reasonable duty of every patriarch to keep track of all these things for himself, when they have been once published in the SAINTS' HERALD, without having to be notified again and again? We think so.

It seems to have been so ordered that your acting president is left in charge of the Order of Evangelists for another year. During and within the past year, we have noted what to us have been hopeful signs of success in this important department of church work. We are pleased to believe and state that, in our judgment, in a general sense at least, due progress has been made, and we hope at the end of another conference year, we shall have still greater cause for rejoicing.

But be assured, dear brethren, that the enemy of all righteousness is not dead nor sleeping. There is nothing can suit him better, or afford him a stronger guarantee of success, than for one or more of our number (the larger the number the better it will suit him) to make repeated mistakes of such a character that, when made apparent to the Saints, they will bring our work into disrepute.

I do not affirm at this juncture of investigation, that such mistakes have been made, but my own eyes have beheld that which has caused a degree of anxiety and alarm. If it should be discovered, by further investigation, that this anxiety and alarm are not well founded, no one will be more pleased than your president, and he can and will, by the grace of God, rejoice in the fact that a greater gift of prophecy has been given to our brother, or brothers, than to his or their brethren. We can well afford to rejoice in the superior gifts and qualifications of others, but we can not afford to rejoice in that which destroys faith and brings the work of God into disrepute.

In this connection permit me to say, that my previous fears and suspicions have been confirmed, rather than allayed, by information which has been presented to me. Part of this information was official, and all of it came from those who are not only friends to the work, but to those patriarchs who are supposed to be, to some extent, in error.

Right here we wish to say that, in our opinion, it is the duty of the Twelve, and other missionaries in charge (when they know of anything being done or taught, which in their judgment will prove injurious to the cause), to take cognizance of all these things, and when need be, stop or correct the wrong at once. In this respect, patriarchs can be no exception to the rule. But we also believe that so soon as practicable the president of the Order of Evangelists should be made acquainted with the situation and be permitted to cooperate with the missionary in charge in an effort to correct the supposed wrong, or reach a final settlement. The president of the order will be glad to try to do his part, but he is just as willing that others should do their part as he is anxious to perform his own. At the risk of all consequences, he would be glad of a fuller and closer acquaintance with the Twelve in particular, and so far as our work may require it, all other missionaries in charge in general.

Permit me to say to my brethren of the order, what I have said in substance several times before, that in my judgment, and in the judgment of the Order of Evangelists, as witnessed in their indorsement and publication of the "Patriarchate," prophecy is not an essential part of a valid patriarchal blessing. Neither the character nor purpose of a true patriarchal blessing require it. It may, or may not enter into its composition. When the prophetic word is spoken by the patriarch, it should be borne in mind that it is far safer and better to be a slow and true prophet, than a fast and false one. The first confirms and increases true faith in the true God; the second, (with some classes especially,) has a strong tendency to destroy true faith in the living and true God. All true inspiration comes from the Spirit of truth, which is the Spirit of God, and everywhere and always guides "into all truth." So, when predictions clearly fail, we know they have not come from this Spirit.

There is, we know, another side to this question, which must not be overlooked. All individual and gospel promises are conditional. Even though not expressed in the blessing, they apply just the same. Now it is possible, and too frequently occurs, for the individual to fail to observe the necessary conditions, in which case, of course, the promises will fail. But the binding character of gospel conditions will not justify us in accounting for every apparent failure on the grounds of unfaithfulness, when, in fact, we do not know whether the individual has been faithful or unfaithful. Hence, without this knowledge (which is often very difficult to secure), it should be left an open question, unless it can be properly disposed of by evidences of a different character.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER. A new book by J. S. Roth—containing a series of sermons in which the Old Jerusalem Gospel is set forth in an entertaining manner. Bro. Roth has been a successful missionary. By reading these sermons you will readily see wherein was his success.

There is a great lack of ability to interpret patriarchal blessings correctly, proceeding, we think, from a lack of spirituality. Some, too, who are inclined to condemn, interpret very much as the skeptic and infidel interpret the Bible. This we expect from our opponents—for we are accustomed to it—but when indulged in by members of the church, it reflects no credit upon those who do it.

The improper and unwise use made of some parts of their blessings, by some, is responsible for a degree of darkness and misunderstanding. Efforts have been made by here and there an individual, to justify certain practices which were unwise and wrong, in part, if not altogether. As a rule, this is done by using certain parts of the blessing, whereas, the blessing as a whole does not justify the contention of the individual; nor does the part used when interpreted in harmony with the general tenor of the whole document.

It is important, however, that certain facts and truths should not be overlooked. As a rule, to which there are few if any exceptions, we are not plenary inspired. We receive the Spirit by measure, and sometimes the measure is very small, while at other times it is larger. The rule is, too, that the thoughts or sentiments only are given by the Spirit, while we are left to express them in our own language and style of expression. This accounts for the different styles of expression among the ancient prophets and apostles, as exemplified in the Bible and Book of Mormon. All this, too, should teach us the important necessity of making our language as free from ambiguity and misleading words and phrases as possible.

We need not tell you that when we are blessed with a greater degree of the Holy Spirit we can, if we wisely perform our part, express ourselves more clearly and perfectly than when the greater blessing of the Spirit is withheld. But if we fail to comprehend the wide latitude of our agency, and that we are in very deed "workers together with God," we may speak rapidly and carelessly, and at the same time egregiously blunder, even while under the influence of the Spirit. This has been done in the preaching of the word, administration to the sick, the blessing of children, the word of prophecy in the social service, confirmations, ordinations, and, possibly, in the giving of patriarchal blessings. The important lesson before us requires us to learn how to correctly interpret the mind and will of the Spirit, and to properly use the power of agency given to us, as ministers for God.

We are all fallible and, therefore, should be watchful, prayerful, very humble, and pure in thought and act. It is important, too, that we constantly cultivate true faith in the living and true God, and that charity which is "the pure love of Christ." These virtues, with freedom from personal ambition, (this is very important,) are excellent safeguards against harmful mistakes and the perpetuation of those which we unwittingly make. We certainly have a right to ask and expect that the same degree of leniency and charity be extended to us that is, or should be, extended to every other class of ministers in the church.

The president of the Order of Evangelists is satisfied that the prevailing desire among the patriarchs is to honor and magnify their high and holy calling and, so far as possible, avoid imperfection and mistake; nor is he prepared to affirm one single exception to this desire. But it may be well enough to state that, in his opinion, the time to know very much about just what our work will be in the other and better world, has not yet come! and for us to make a special effort—an inspirational effort along this line, is to expose ourselves to the attacks and counterfeit work of the adversary. My thought can be best understood, perhaps, in the light of that wise and true statement made by the Apostle John:

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3: 2.

All the wonderful and soul-cheering revelations, given to this same John on Patmos Isle, are in harmony with this statement.

Dear brethren, it is not necessary that we should continue to make mistakes to the injury of God's work, especially that class of mistakes which has such a strong tendency to destroy confidence in us and faith in God; but when we have made such mistakes (if we should ever be so unfortunate as to make them), let us manfully face them, and not seek to evade by the use of any subterfuge statements.

We know that our work is true and important, and your president is glad to express the hope that due progress will be made during the present conference year. Progress, as applied to us poor mortals, means development in the truth, and the removal of that which is false and imperfect. In other words, progress means more than change, it must be an exchange of error for truth, wrong for right, the imperfect for the perfect.

May the rich blessings of God's wisdom and the inspiration of his Spirit rest upon us all, that we may rejoice and do good, is my prayer.

A New Book

has just been issued, entitled

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

- (1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.
- (2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.
- (3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.
- (4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

TRADITIONS REGARDING ENOCH, THE SEVENTH FROM ADAM.

In the King James Translation of the Bible the Book of Genesis devotes four short verses (Genesis 5:21-24) to the history of Enoch. But the book of Genesis in the Inspired Version gives a very complete history of the man, occupying the greater portion of two long chapters (Genesis 6 and 7. Most of chapter 7 is identical with Doctrine and Covenants 36).

Was the character and work of Enoch such as to justify this extended notice? We believe that this question should be answered affirmatively, and that the record of his life contains some of those plain and precious things that were said to have been taken from the Scriptures, and which have been restored in the Inspired Version through the inspiration of God to Joseph Smith the Martyr.

Brief though the mention of Enoch is as found in the King James Version, it shows him to have been a remarkable man. It is said that he "walked with God: and he was not; for God took him." This is understood to mean that he was in constant close communion with God, and that he did not die, but was translated. This is confirmed in Hebrews, where it is said, "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death . . . for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God."—Hebrews 11:5. Jude also mentions him as one who prophesied of the coming of the Lord with ten thousand of his saints.

Jewish tradition also bears out the idea of the greatness of Enoch and the importance of his work. Furthermore there are certain books in existence that claim to contain the teachings of Enoch, that, though probably distorted and garbled and corrupted by coming down through many generations, may contain some germs of truth founded on the teachings of Enoch as handed down by tradition or in the written word. Certainly in some points these books are in accord with the history of Enoch as found in the Inspired Version.

JEWISH TRADITION REGARDING ENOCH.

In A Dictionary of the Bible, a five-volume work, edited by James Hastings, M. A., D. D., published by Charles Scribner's Sons, in 1905, this comment is found in an article by R. M. Boyd:

In Jewish tradition many fabulous legends gathered around Enoch. He was represented as the inventor of letters, arithmetic, and astronomy, and as the first author. A book containing his visions and prophecies was said to have been preserved by Noah in the ark, and handed down through successive generations."—Vol. 1, p. 705.

The Jews were the natural custodians of traditions handed down from antediluvian times through their progenitors, Abraham and Noah, back even to Enoch. Enoch seems to have had force of character sufficient to impress himself on the memory of his people for many hundreds of years. Tradition usually has a root of truth.

THE BOOK OF ENOCH.

A history of the Book of Enoch may be found in most encyclopedias and bible dictionaries, but the one to which we now wish to refer is the one already mentioned, in which R. H. Charles, professor of Biblical Greek, Trinity College, Dublin, who is recognized as the leading authority on the subject, devotes several pages of volume 1 to an account of the "Book of Enoch" and the "Book of the Secrets of Enoch."

Concerning the first named book the following facts appear: It was accepted alike by Jew and Christian as an inspired and genuine record until the first century A. D. At about that time it was rejected by the Jews because of its reference to a coming Messiah, thus supporting the claims of Christians. With the early fathers and apologists of Christianity it "preserved its high position till about the close of the third century."

Finally it fell into discredit and was lost to the world until a manuscript containing a version in Ethiopic was discovered in Abyssinia by the noted traveler, Bruce, in 1773. This was first translated into modern language by Lawrence in 1821. The original was supposed to have been in Hebrew or Aramaic, from which it passed into Greek, and then into the Ethiopic. This, according to Charles, and other scholars, is the book to which Jude refers (see Jude 14, 15) when he mentions the prophecy of Enoch. Scholars seem to unite in assigning it a date of origin not earlier than two centuries before Christ. But it is quite possible that the book, as it comes to us now through this Ethiopic version, may contain many true traditions of very remote antiquity that came down possibly from Enoch himself, or were taken from books of a very early date, now lost.

According to Mr. Charles, in the Book of Enoch several titles are given to the coming Messiah. We note particularly what he says in the following:

The last title, "The Son of Man," appears for the first time in Jewish literature in Enoch, and is historically the source of the New Testament designation.—Vol. 1, p. 708.

A little further on he says: "Matthew 19: 28, 'When the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory,' is from Enoch 62: 3."

From this we gather that the term, "the Son of Man," as applied to Christ in the New Testament, is first found in Jewish literature in the Book of Enoch; and that Jesus himself quoted from the book in Matthew 19: 28.

It is perhaps more than a coincidence that the term "Son of Man" appears in the record of Enoch in the Inspired Version in at least six different places, as for instance, the following: "And, behold, Enoch saw the day of the coming of the Son of Man, even in the flesh."—Genesis 7: 54.

We now quote from the Dictionary Cyclopedia, volume 13, regarding the Book of Enoch:

The fourth (part) represents Enoch beholding, in prophetic vision, the course of divine Providence till the coming of the Messiah.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, volume 2, page 175, old edition, has this:

The fourth part describes two dream visions shadowing forth the history of man, from his origin to the completion of the Messianic kingdom.

This is quite in accord with the account of Enoch's visions as found in the Inspired Version. The record is too lengthy to quote; but the following extracts will suffice:

And he beheld the spirits that God had created, and he beheld also things which were not visible to the natural eye . . . and he [God] said unto me, [Enoch] Look, and I will show unto thee the world for the space of many generations . . . and Enoch saw Noah also, and his family, that the posterity of all the sons of Noah should be saved with a temporal salvation. . . . Enoch saw the day of the coming of the Son of Man . . . and the Lord showed Enoch all things, even unto the end of the world.

BOOK OF THE SECRETS OF ENOCH.

This book is distinct from the one previously considered, and is not mentioned in encyclopedia and bible dictionaries of early publication, for the reason that it has but recently come to light. Of it R. H. Charles says:

This new fragment of the Enoch literature has only recently come to light through certain manuscripts which were found in Russia and Servia. Although the very knowledge that such a book ever existed was lost for probably twelve hundred years, it was nevertheless much used both by Christians and heretics in the early centuries.—Dictionary of the Bible, vol. 1, p. 709.

It seems that Mr. Charles first learned of the existence of the Slavonic version of this book in 1892, and a translation was completed in 1896. He does not assign it a date of origin beyond the first century before Christ, but the remarks made concerning the Book of Enoch in this connection will apply to the Book of the Secrets of Enoch.

Of it he says:

The book opens with a short account of Enoch as "a very wise man" whom "God loved and received, so that he could see the heavenly abodes, the kingdoms of the wise, great, and never changing God." In chapter 1 two angels appear to Enoch, and bid him to make ready to ascend with them unto heaven.

The account then goes on to tell how he was taken to the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and finally the seventh heaven. He saw the abode of the saved and the place of the damned, and the spirits of those who had rebelled under Lucifer. In the seventh heaven he saw God, and God revealed to him the mysteries of creation.

To quote again directly from Charles: "The corruption of the earth and the deluge are then foretold, and the preservation of Noah."

Enoch was then permitted to return to earth for a short time only, to instruct his sons. He instructed them particularly regarding their "duty to the needy," quite in line with the character of Enoch as revealed in the Inspired Version, as a man who built the city of Zion, in which there were no poor; and one who no doubt would be concerned about the poor and needy that he knew would live after his departure and would need the care and aid of the charitable.

Most of this is strikingly in harmony with the account of Enoch as found in the Inspired Version of the Bible as translated and corrected by Joseph Smith. In this version it is written of Enoch:

And it came to pass, as I journeyed from the land of Cainan by the sea east, I beheld a vision; and lo, the heavens I saw, and the Lord spake with me.—Genesis 6: 44.

And Enoch was high and lifted up, even in the bosom of the Father.—Genesis 6: 31.

That which he saw and heard regarding Noah and others we have already briefly outlined.

CONCLUSION.

We do not wish to be understood as presenting these books as inspired and correct records, worthy of a place in the canon of scripture in their present form. As we have said, scholars do not trace them back to the second century before Christ. In their present corrupted form they probably contain much that is not true. But we are inclined to think that they may be based on true records and correct traditions now lost to the world. And they contain items of truth regarding Enoch that confirm the account of him that is contained in the Inspired Version. Those who have access to good libraries may with profit continue this investigation further. If it is possible for any of the brethren to obtain English translations of these books it will be worth while to read and review them.

Slumber Song.

Sleep, little one! The Twilight folds her gloom
Full tenderly about the slumbering Day,
And all his gilded hours of light and bloom
Like toys are laid away.

Sleep! sleep! The noon-sky's airy cloud of white
Has deepened wide o'er all the starry plain,
And, trailing through the leaves, the skirts of Night
Are wet with driving rain.

But rest thou sweetly, smiling in thy sleep,
With round fists tossed like roses o'er thy head,
And thy glad lips and eyelids kissed with gleams,
Of rapture perfected.

The Gospel for All Nations.

Hark! all ye people, now to me,
Both rich and poor, both bond and free,
While I relate God's plan to save,
And snatch the victory from the grave.

Christ came from heaven to do God's will,
And all his holy laws fulfill,
His chosen servants he sent forth,
To preach the gospel on the earth.

In Hebrews sixth, the way's made plain,
Whereby salvation you may gain,
No other plan has been made known,
For beggar low, or king on throne.

Have faith, repent, and be baptized
In water, so that you may rise
To a new life in Christ our King,
Laying on of hands doth the Spirit bring.

When by the door you've entered in,
Freed from the law and cleansed from sin,
Accept the joys, or chastening rod,
Live by all words that come from God.

So onward to perfection go,
With face to Zion, fear no foe;
Some gospel gift is yours to claim,
Let holy zeal your heart inflame.

In these last days the power is given
To represent the Lord of heaven,
To a living prophet his will's revealed,
And holy office on him sealed.

And no man can this honor take Unto himself, nor preacher make;
The work is God's; 'tis His to call
An Aaron, Peter, James, or Paul.

But in this age, the pastors say,
The gospel gifts are done away;
In former days those things were heeded,
But now they are no longer needed.

To the Ephesians Paul wrote it quite plain,
How long the gifts were to remain;
Not for that age alone to be,
But till in one faith all do agree.

The sects to this have not attained,
Not much unity have they gained,
By infidels they are derided,
Who ask like Paul, Is Christ divided?

But men have made another way,
Believe, and you'll be saved, they say,
Each ordinance they have discounted,
The Pentecostal plan's surmounted.

We are living in a fearful time,
When laws of God, so grand, sublime,
Are set aside by his own creatures,
As out of date, so say the preachers.

Only one church did Jesus place
Upon the earth, to save the race,
And only one he owns to-day,
The one who all his laws obey.

God asks his children, one and all,
To come and reason, hear his call;
Prove all things, to the good hold fast,
That no one lose his crown at last.

"All Roads that Lead to God Are Good."

All roads that lead to God are good,
What matters it, your faith or mine?
Both center at the goal divine
Of love's eternal brotherhood.

The kindly life in house or street,
The life of prayer, and mystic rite,
The student's search for truth and light,
These paths at one great junction meet.

Before the oldest book was writ,
Full many a prehistoric soul
Arrived at this unchanging goal,
Through changeless love that led to it.

What matters that one found his Christ
In rising sun, or burning fire,
If faith within him did not tire,
His longing for the truth sufficed.

Before our modern hell was brought
To edify a modern world,
Full many a hate-filled soul was hurled
In lakes of fire by its own thought.

A thousand creeds have come and gone,
But what is that to you or me?
Creeds are but branches of a tree,
The root of love lives on and on.

Though branch by branch proves withered wood,
The root is warm with precious wine;
Then keep your faith and leave me mine;
All roads that lead to God are good.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

In peace, Love tunes the shepherd's reed;
In war, he mounts the warrior's steed;
In halls, in gay attire is seen,
In hamlet, dancing on the green;
Love rules the court, the camp the grove,
And men below and saints above,
For Love is Heaven, and Heaven is Love.—Scott.

Blessings of the Year.

I count up in this song of cheer
The blessings of a busy year.

A roof so low I lose no strain,
No ripple of the friendly rain;
A chimney where all winter long
The logs give back the wild bird's song.

A field, a neighborly old ground,
Which year by year, without a sound,
Lifts bread to me and roses sweet
From out the dark below my feet.

The tree toad that is first to cheer
With crinkling flute the green o' the year;
The cricket on the garden mound,
Stitching the dark with threads of sound.

The wind that cools my hidden spring
And sets my corn field whispering;
And shades across, to lightly blow
Green ripples down the apple row.

The shy paths darting through the wheat,
Marked by the prints of little feet—
Gray squirrels on their thrifty round,
Crows condescending to the ground.

That leafy hollow that was stirred
A hundred mornings by a bird,
That sang at daybreak on a brier,
Setting the gray of dawn afire.

The lone star and the shadowed hush
That come at evening when the thrush
Ravels the day, so worn and long,
Into the silver of a song.

The tender sorrow, too, that came
To leave me nevermore the same;
The love of memories, and the wild
Light laughter of a little child.

Thoughts of the wonder that awaits
The soul beyond the darkened gates,
That old, old mystery that springs
Deathless, behind the veil of things.

This is my rosary of hours, inwoven of the snows and flowers—

The year that runs from young to old, a glint of green, a glow of gold.—Edwin Markham.

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new.
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you;
A hope for me and a hope for you.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 26.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

A LEGAL QUESTION.

The latter part of this "ninth" proposition has a statement in it of "a will being on probate and witnesses who have confirmed it, being long since dead, the said will stands as long as the court having jurisdiction in the case is in existence." In an abrupt way, What court has jurisdiction in this case? Who are witnesses of the "will" in this case, and when will it cease being probated, or tried? What does the will in this case provide for? In the first place, the principal witness to this "will" or covenant is not dead,—proof:

For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified. Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them.—Hebrews 10: 14-16.

This witness is "set in the church," performing the twofold office of "testifying of Christ," the testator, "on earth" and "bearing record" in heaven. The covenant or constitution of the divine government of God, being ratified by the blood of Jesus, is committed to the world through officers provided for, by the will, appointed to declare the terms of eligibility by the covenanter, God. We arrange the compact as follows:

"The everlasting gospel" is the "everlasting covenant"—the constitution of the kingdom—"the will of God."

As the foundation of the universe is its constitution—the will or word of God is the constitutional law of the universe—"upholding all things by the word of his power" (Hebrews 1: 3), and as the foundation of this Republic is its Constitution, so the foundation of the kingdom (church) of God, is its constitution—the covenant—"the will of God."

And, as in the foundation—Constitution—of this Republic its offices, authorities, and powers are therein expressed, specified, and defined, so in the constitution—covenant—of the kingdom (church) of God, are the offices, authorities, and powers expressed, specified, and defined. And as that constitution—covenant—"will of God"—is unchangeable, it follows that the offices, authorities, powers, and blessings are unchangeable. And if unchangeable, then it logically follows that the same offices, authorities, powers, and blessings "set in the church" of God, through Jesus Christ two thousand years ago, must, must, MUST, be set in the kingdom (church) in this age, or else the constitution—"will of God"—has never been carried out in this age, and "He that knoweth his Master's will, and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes."—Luke 12: 47. Now what is the essential idea of "covenant"? Answer: There are three radical or general ideas connected with "the everlasting covenant,"—"the gospel of our salvation."

First. The Covenanter, the divine personage who originates it.

Second. The stipulated articles of agreement—the instituted propitiation whose blood ratifies and atones.

Third. Covenantees, the parties who accept the stipulated articles—the gospel—the propitiation.

Now, the parts of the covenant are as immutable (unchangeable) as the covenant itself. We then deduce the following:

First. God, the Father, originating the covenant.

Second. Christ, the Son, executing its ratification—the great propitiation.

Third. The Holy Spirit promulgating its terms—law of life in Christ.

Fourth. The Holy Spirit affixing the seal to the heirs in Christ.

Hence in the distribution of official agencies:

The Father originates all.

The Son executes all.

The Holy Spirit consummates all.

First. Eternal "will," belongs to the Father.

Second. The mission of reconciliation, to the Son.

Third. The mission of sanctification, to the Holy Spirit.

So when Jesus set up the kingdom of God in old Judea, the announcement was, "Lo I come to do thy will, O God."—Hebrews 10: 7. "For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."—John 6: 38.

The apostles chosen, are not to be placed in the relation of God, to this constitution. They were not the framers, but the means as provided for, in the constitution, or covenant, of teaching it to the world. They are not the ratifiers of the covenant. The covenant, or constitution, provides for a line of officers, and the blood of Christ ratified, as "a surety" of the covenant, all of its parts and provisions. The Holy Ghost affixing the seal to the heirs in Christ constitutes the church, as a whole, a witness for God. Hence we read, "He that will do the will of my Father shall know of the doctrine."—John 7: 17. Will our critic please inform us of the "due process of law," by which the witnesses, as such are ordained? The angel that ministered to the revelator was a witness; proof:

And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.—Revelation 19: 10.

John saw the souls of them who had suffered martyrdom for this same testimony or witness:

And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.—Revelation 20: 4.

It is most surely an established fact that the members of the church possessed this witness. But Mr. Traum must admit that the record of the will was composed of manuscripts widely scattered, written at different times, added to, by those who subscribed. Yes; Paul says, "A testament is of force after the death of the testator," but how? The apostles were not executors of Christ's will, or testament. Webster defines a testament to be a solemn, authentic instrument in writing by which a person declares his will as to the disposal of his estate and effects after his death. A testament, to be valid, must be made when the testator is of sound mind, and it must be subscribed, witnessed, and published in such manner as the law prescribes. The word executor is defined to be "the person appointed by a testator to execute his will, or to see it carried into effect." We note by these definitions that the will relates to the disposal of his estate or effects after his death, and an executor is one appointed to dispose of his effects. Now I am glad that the Campbellite interpretation of the text is not the standard. Elder Traum's entire blunder is made by adopting the wild theory that the twelve apostles are the executors of the testament or will of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now, is it a fact that the Savior appointed the twelve to dispose of his effects? If so, we must look to them to apportion us our part of the estate, or in other words, we must look to the twelve for the reward of obedience. This will not do. We are informed that Christ Jesus is the executor of his own will. Proof: "And behold I come quickly and my reward is with me, to give to every man as his works shall be."—Revelation 22: 12. "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then shall he reward every man according to his works."—Matthew 16: 27. Here it is shown that Christ himself will judge, reward, and punish. The ministry are empowered simply to publish or declare the terms of eligibility, hence we quote: "And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead."—Acts 10: 42. Christ did not give up the power which the Father had given into his hands. He did not give them power to execute his will—i. e., the instrument. He gave them power to publish his will, and this agrees with the Websterian definition before us, that, the will to fulfill the law, must be published. The human family by nature was not in a condition to receive the reward, or apportionate of his estate, and the conditions of eligibility or of heirship to the estate had to be made known; published to fallen man showing them that they could become sons and daughters of God, by complying with the terms of the covenant—by the laws of adoption, and then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, and if faithful to the end, the estate should be divided, and the "effects" of our Lord bestowed upon his children. Christ appointed the ministry to "subscribe" to, witness, and publish the will, and it is folly to assert that the will or eligibility to its effects could not be published before the legal death of testator. It is in direct contradiction to the Bible which affirms that the gospel—"will" was "preached to Abraham." (Galatians 3: 8; Psalm 105: 8, 16); to the "Israelites in the wilderness" (Hebrews 4: 2), and to the Jews before the crucifixion (Matthew 4: 23; 11: 5; Matthew 24: 14; Mark 1: 1, 4; Mark 6: 12, 13; Mark 3: 14, 15; Luke 4: 18, 19; Luke 9: 1, 6).

When the will is probated, the heirs are entitled to their legacies, and the promises we are entitled to, and one of these promises was the Holy Spirit, the "seal of our adoption" into his family, without which the will can not be confirmed to us. Without which we have no assurance of the final, glorious bequeathment, when he comes to apportion the estate,—to reward every "man as his works shall be."

The Holy Spirit was to "show us things to come," (John 16) and reveal the things of God. It was to be God's seal placed upon us, as his redeemed property, having been "translated from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son," a transfer of allegiance,—a new coin with a different stamp. Receiving it by being cast into the gospel, or apostolic mold, hence the "seal,"—impression, of the authorized government, and passing current, is no counterfeit.

The apostle says, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit by which ye are sealed," and the "heirs," he affirms, are entitled to this seal "until the redemption of the purchased possession," or the resurrection of the dead. It is the "pledge," the "deed," executed by divine authority, of the estate, or inheritance to come by will, or testament, to the legal heirs, when the testator shall come to apportion the same, "every man according to his works." If Elder Traum will comply fully with the terms of that "will," God will do his part. The testimony of Jesus being "the Spirit of prophecy," Paul affirms the privilege of the church in the words: "Ye may all prophesy one by one." Of the faithful ones, in the days of tribulation possessing "the testimony of Jesus," we read:

And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.—Revelation 6: 9.

After the apostles were dead, the "remnant of the church" was "warred against," and their characters are delineated as follows:

And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.—Revelation 12: 17.

The "will" itself, witnesseth against this untenable theory, by providing for continuous living witnesses, wherever and whenever the great tribune court authoritatively constitutes authority of men to proclaim terms of heirship, adoption into the family among which the estate is to be apportioned.

Proposition marked "tenth," is an assumption. Everything was simply confirmatory, ceased by the limitations imposed in the accomplishment of the purpose at hand, assumes that the purpose for which apostles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost were given, was accomplished during the first few years of the existence of the church, whereas the Bible affirms them to be given "for the perfecting of the saints," (not that apostles perfected the law, they had a perfect law, and it provided for apostolic offices, and occupants,) "for the work of the ministry," (apostles regulated the affairs of the church among all nations, baptized, ordained other ministers, and perfected the saints, and educated the body of Christ,) "for the edification, (building up in general,) of the body of Christ. The commission given to the apostles was unlimited succession to office by divine appointment of God himself. The apostolic commission can not exist apart from the office with which it is inseparably connected. If the office expired by an act of limitation, then the commission expired, or run out by an act of limitation, and as a consequence, of eternal certainty, the baptism of the Campbellite Church is without office, authority, and commission. Its foundation is an unauthorized fraud. Campbell says, "Successors must be successors in full," and if the office ceased, their commission ceased with it, and inasmuch as Elder Traum and his church deny immediate and direct revelation from God, calling and authorizing men in the ministry, to-day, therefore their assumption of authority from the written word is a pretentious fraud,—the commission which they claim from the written word having expired with the office.

Again, since the "will" itself provides for the existence of both "apostles on the one hand," and "signs and wonders, and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost on the other hand," it logically follows that where and when the "will" is operative, the provisions of the "will" will be carried out by the court having jurisdiction, and since Elder Traum and the so-called church he represents do not accept of the provisions of the "will," they have declare the court's ruling null and void.

The further fact that Elder Traum can not produce an authoritative codicil to the will, abrogating the previous, original provisions of the "will," it follows that his effort to break the will and testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is an act of rebellion against the court having jurisdiction, who has ruled, "my counsel," "will," "shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure," (Isaiah 46: 10) and "frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad, that confirmeth the word of his servants, and perfrometh the counsel for his messengers."—Isaiah 44: 25, 26. Also, "he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?"—Daniel 4: 35. And "though it be but a man's covenant, if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth or added thereto."—Galatians 3: 15. "Who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."—Ephesians 1: 11. "The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations."—Psalm 33: 11. "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel," constitution or covenant, or "will," "unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1: 8.

In another part of this review, we have proved that the necessity, call, and ordination of apostles are provisions of the "will." The design of God in setting apostles in the church as stated in Ephesians 4, "for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man," (church), is that all? Nay, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," shows that God adapted the officers in the church, as a means to the end to be accomplished, and having once ordained and set in the spiritual government these official means to such end, he will never abrogate the means in the church to bring about the results, the object, the end purposed, any more than he would abrogate the sun, the moon, the stars from heaven's brilliant constellation, when he has ordained, and "set" those orbs, for the end to be accomplished.

Kindness, as a grace, is certainly not sufficiently cultivated, while the self-gravitating, self-contemplating, self-inspecting parts of the spiritual life are cultivated too exclusively.—Frederick William Taber.

SERMON OF F. A. SMITH.

(Delivered at Chicago, Illinois, July 31, 1911. Reported by Mrs. A. Morgan.)

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that teacheth, on teaching; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness. Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality. Bless them which persecute you; bless, and curse not. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits. Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

We have read, this morning, the 12th chapter of Romans, reading the full chapter. One of the most excellent admonitions of the Apostle Paul that we have in all his writings, touching so many of the different features of life and experiences that we have to meet in this life, that it is almost difficult to read it without being conscious of the thought that the apostle was writing to us, so applicable is it to the conditions under which we live, and that's one of the very peculiar and strange features of the statement, the fact that it was made nearly two thousands years ago, and yet finds its application so completely and perfectly in harmony with the conditions that we have to meet to-day; that beyond question stamps it as one of the peculiar instructions of the Apostle Paul that can lay claim to divinity. Now, as a text this morning, I want to call your attention to a statement found in the 6th chapter of Luke, 46th verse: "And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" It is a short one, and I think you can remember it. This little statement, made to the Jewish people, possibly would be extreme, but should have its application, in the fullest sense of the term, to the people to-day; and yet we can readily understand that the thought expressed by the Master is just as true to-day as it was two thousand years ago. It is just as applicable to us as believers now as it was to them. They pride themselves in the thought that they were the children of God, the special children of God, the favored children of God, and of all the people in the wide world they had the best right to call him Father. Under these circumstances, the Master was justified probably in presenting the matter he does in so clear and concise a way. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" If it was improper, if it carried with it the thought that to call upon him and make a profession of his name, to make an attempt to claim that they were God's people at that day, and fail to do the things that God required at their hands, was to bring upon them the disfavor of God, it would be equally true now. I don't care what particular age we may live in, this statement of the Master, so far as the application is concerned, is just as applicable to one age as another; just as true for one people as any other people. As a consequence it would be folly, I think the most of us can concede, for us to call upon the name of Christ and say Lord, Lord, and make a loud pretense or profession of belief in the following of him unless we are willing to keep his commandments and do the things that he says. Now he makes a little further application here when he says, Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like: He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock. But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

Now here are the illustrations that carry both sides of the question, illustrating for us the consequences that must necessarily follow under either condition. In presenting a thought of that description, I am conscious of the fact that we are bringing it directly home to us, and if we can gather from it the lesson God has seemingly sought to instruct these people over there we will probably have gained something in our effort to-day. If we have come prepared to receive some word of encouragement, some word of instruction, some word of correction that we can apply to our lives here that shall help us to better our conditions and improve the situation that we are under, we have accomplished something; we have done good in coming. To fail to do this, to neglect to do it, is simply to put ourselves in the position of the individual that, without a foundation, built his house on the sands. We don't want that. I don't believe there is a soul that is anxious or desirous under any condition to lose the effort he may have put forth here, nor do I think anyone is desirous of building along the pathway of this life, as he shall live, only to have it dashed into destruction because of the fact he so failed in that building to recognize the peculiar requirements of the law essential to its strength and safety.

Our people built a church in a certain place, I shall not give the name, and while they were building it they were told it was necessary to get a permit. The inspector came around, he looked it over carefully and said they must have two supports for that roof, and specified what kind they should be. It was quite an expensive piece of work and they demurred a little bit, and sought to get out of it. "All right," he said, "do just as you please, either put them in or stop your building." They finally had to consent to recognize the peculiar features of the law that demanded that these supports go in, and they put them in. When they made an effort, some time after, to put in an increase of the seating capacity to the building, a gallery, the inspector said, "You can not put any gallery in here. The walls are too light and they won't permit it." Now, as a consequence of their building without proper consultation, without possibly the careful estimate of what they might want to do in the future, they were put to expense, as they thought, to comply with the law; they had to change their plans in consequence, and then could not do with their building what they wanted to do. While the building has not gone to destruction, at the same time because of a failure to recognize these requirements of law, they are not in a position to extend the seating capacity in this building, and if they need the extra room they will have to build a new building. They can not use that any further; and to some extent it means a loss; a failure. There are these same features presenting themselves in the lives we are living. It becomes absolutely necessary for us not only to talk about the things that Jesus has said, to delve deep into the mysteries of these creations and things he has given in the world, but into all the peculiar doctrinal features that may be presenting themselves and may be intensely interesting to us so far as it has to do with the organization and setting up of the church, but there are those peculiar features that teach of the interior workings, if you will allow me to use that expression, in the peculiar consideration of the characters of the individuals that are the component parts of that work, that must be looked after, and to my mind the law of Jesus Christ that is given us in connection with that of the doctrinal features, that relates to our lives, our social life, our association together, our recognition of the rights of each other and of all those things that go to make up the life and character of the individual, are just as essential and necessary to us to study and put into operation as the organic law by which the construction of the church itself was made possible, for as the apostle expresses it, we are all members one of another, and as the Christ has put it in another place, when one suffers they all suffer together. All feel it and can not help it. As much as we might like to throw the consequences or failure of an individual and all its effects and consequences upon the individual, himself or herself as the case may be, and let them suffer those consequences only, we are made conscious of the fact that in a greater or less degree every individual connected with the matter, is and must be affected to a greater or less extent. While it may not affect us individually, so far as our actual individual interests are concerned, as an integral part of the body it does, and just to the extent that we are interested in the body itself, to that extent we must suffer, in consequence of this error. I don't care who the individual is. It may be the humblest member of the church, or one of the most important ones, the fact remains that the scar must remain.

Now, in view of that fact, it becomes evident to everyone of us that there devolves upon us a special and peculiar obligation that requires our recognition of the special application of the laws of God to ourselves. Not your neighbor, nor this brother, nor this sister, but ourselves. I think I am perfectly safe in making the declaration that there is no one so hard to control, that there is no one will give us more trouble, that will be harder to bring into subjection to the divine will, if we study that divine will and attempt to follow it, as that individual we call self, and you know how easy it is to gratify self. It is easier to gratify than to resist, sometimes. It is far more easy to yield to this, that, or the other, and slide along with the tide without any effort on our part, than it is to row against the stream and refuse to do those things that otherwise we might enjoy. Now that very condition confronts us in the work we have to do here. Selfishness is one of the peculiar evils that is contaminating the world, and I don't know but I am safe in making that declaration. It has made itself felt; its influence and effect is being manifested everywhere around us, until we are reaching conditions that are startling; conditions that are actually waking up some of the world, with all their carelessness, to the fact that something must be done to stop it; got to be done. We see it manifesting itself in all sorts of forms and variations. I shall not attempt, this morning, to undertake to illustrate or enumerate them, for when we look around us we see them everywhere. If you travel much on the railroad, you discover there are some of these things making themselves felt. Sometimes a woman, sometimes a man esteem themselves a privileged character. I don't like to say lady and gentleman in this case, because they don't act that way. You will see them coming in and occupying two or three seats, spreading their baggage around, while others are obliged to stand, and they never see them. That's one of the conditions that presents itself. They consider themselves entitled to all the space around them and they make themselves as comfortable as possible, while the rest stand up. That's one little manifestation of selfishness. Anyone who has traveled on the train knows that's true. They will push, jam, and run over anybody to get to their seats and fix themselves comfortably, they and their friends, and let the rest stand up, or push them out, just as they please. Then there's that peculiar disposition; the part of humanity to seek after the things of the world. They are going to have enough to make themselves comfortable and their families, no matter who suffers as a consequence of their getting it. We find that manifesting itself to an alarming extent. They have little downright, genuine humanity, with the sympathy that belongs to it. We see it cropping out in other forms. You take the man with an automobile, and he thinks everybody ought to get out of the way because he has a machine that runs with gasoline or steam, and other people have no business on earth. They ought to get out and give this man a chance. The same thing applies all the way through, until it reaches that position that it shows in our dispositions and creeps out in our feelings toward each other in the church. That's the thing. Everybody ought to see like we do; see out of the same eyes, use the same colored glasses, and we can not see why anybody can oppose us and not see as we do. As a consequence we divide up into factions and get everything in a turmoil. Now, sooner or later, we are going to wake up to the fact that that kind of work isn't going to do. We are going to become conscious of the fact that fighting for our opinions along these lines is going to put our foundation on the sands. It will do it. It has been a detriment in many places and in many ways, and I never forgot the statement made by one of the chief representatives of the church a few years ago; addressing a body of the ministry in a General Conference, he advised them to hold their differences of opinion in good feeling and good humor. That's the point, and that we should not present our opinion and our difference of opinion and seek to establish that to the disparagement of somebody else, because we can not hope to build on the wreck and ruin of some one else we have torn down. But often has it been true that that has been the case, but in this work there are these peculiar features that develop and manifest themselves from time to time of this character that has become alarming, in some cases, and in some instances has really wrought the ruin that some have sought to prevent. In other words, some individuals have been so tenacious of their positions, and determined on their being carried out, that they have brought about the very thing they were afraid was going to be done by the other party,—they have destroyed the work. I have as good a right to my opinion as any other man. He has as good a right to his as I have. We have no right to insist on any man's accepting our opinions regardless of his own feeling, no more than he has. That right doesn't exist. It isn't there. There should be an effort on the part of every individual to recognize the medium ground upon which they can work together, and as the brother said at one time, If you can not agree, lay your disagreement to one side and work along the lines where you do agree until time shall arbitrate the question and decide which was the better. That's been one of the lessons Jesus sought to teach us when here. A lesson that was seemingly hard for the apostles to learn, for we discover that these apostles of the Jewish faith who had come out of the Jewish church were disposed to stand tenaciously along some of the lines they had held as traditional teachings all through their lives, and insisted every man who came into the church must subscribe to these peculiar ideas, while there were others who took the special ground that the old law didn't apply to these individuals, and finally they applied to the general conference that they send these men down to Jerusalem to decide the question before they could go on with their work as missionaries.

But, as a people professing to believe in God and accepting the declaration of Jesus Christ, we are confronted with this thought: Shall we remain in the same ruts that others have fallen into and bring shipwreck because of it? and by so doing fail of that which God has designed we shall occupy? Shall we hold our grudges and our hard feelings, and gratify our selfish desires along different lines until we shall shut ourselves away from that pleasing Spirit of God, and leave us to flounder in the midst of darkness? That's the thought we want to impress upon your minds.

Now, the apostle has given us that idea in his illustration. We should not think more highly than we ought to think of ourselves, but think soberly. If you are going to think soberly, seriously, you are going to find yourself thinking over the conditions that are confronting you, and you may eventually realize that you probably haven't done everything just as the law has directed it. Under these circumstances there arises a difficulty; how can I get back into line? and right there we meet the obstacle that nearly all of us have to meet, and it is nearly always an obstacle too; we don't like to do it. We don't like to yield. It is a difficult thing to say I am wrong. If it were necessary, we could say you are wrong before the whole world. It wouldn't be hard at all. We could say it with all the freedom in the world; but when it comes to saying we ourselves are wrong we can hardly bring ourselves to say it. You would rather allow it and keep still. I know it is a hard thing to do; but if we are going to present our bodies holy, acceptable unto the Lord, we have to come to it. Oh, well, says one, what have our bodies got to do with it? Can you present your body holy and acceptable when you know that you are doing wrong? Can you? Oh, no. Now I see several shake their heads, and I am one. Of course you can not. It is an utter impossibility, and the apostle has presented the thought that that's a part of the duty that devolves upon us. We should present ourselves a living sacrifice.

We talk about sacrifice, and how are we going to make a living sacrifice? It may be possible that it is a sacrifice for some of us to give of our means to the interests of the work. It may be possible that some of us would count the time we have to devote in the interest of this service, whether we have means or not, a sacrifice. We might conclude that to give up our association is a sacrifice. We have to sacrifice the approval of the world and the higher classes of society where we would like to move. We look at different things along this line and count them sacrifices. Some even count it a sacrifice if they have to get up early Sunday morning to go to church at eleven o'clock. Let me ask you to stop a moment; there's one we haven't named; the sacrifice of our own feelings in order to subject ourselves to the law of God itself is the living sacrifice that really calls for sacrifice; to bring ourselves into subjection to that law; to lay aside our feelings and worldly conditions, and eternally keep the brakes on our tongues and expression of what we would like to say becomes a real, living sacrifice, but we should make the effort to keep ourselves in harmony with the divine pattern of Christ, and when the apostle made the declaration to us he made no mistake. He presented the thought that it will be a sacrifice for every individual who attempts it; a sacrifice of selfish interests, of selfish ideas that have a tendency to burden the individual and injure him in his spiritual development that God said was essential to his very existence here and hereafter as the child of God.

Now, in order to do that we have to cultivate,—I say cultivate because it is true—not only the spirit of bringing ourselves into subjection to the spirit of making allowances for the mistakes and errors of others; the disposition to feel for them and become conscious of the thought that there should go out from us a feeling of love and companionship, and a disposition to help instead of kicking down, for that's the tendency of the world to-day, and if a man's down give him a kick and send him farther down. If a woman starts on the downward path she ought to be put out of the way; but that's not the gospel principle, and it requires sacrifice and effort on our part to reach the position where we can exercise that peculiar spirit of grace that reaches out the helping hand and seeks to lift up, to strengthen and help. That's the work of Christ. That means sacrifice, a living sacrifice; that's the thought. When you reach that position, friends, you have something to you.

We are conscious of the fact that everyone of us is confronted with weaknesses. There isn't a single soul but what has some to overcome. I may have a weakness that you don't, and where I have to struggle and fight to maintain my integrity you move along with perfect ease and comfort. Where you are required to fight daily in order to resist that peculiar weakness that you have existing within you and maintain your integrity I have no difficulty whatever. When we reach that point, and recognize the thought that there are individuals who are making fights we know nothing about, and are struggling against conditions that we have never had to meet, then is when our hearts can go out and our sympathies can be made manifest, to some extent, at least, in the interest of the struggling soul that seeks to get out of the depths into which he may have plunged, and live the higher life. You think of it, friends, and you will begin to discover what the apostle meant when he said that we should offer our bodies a living sacrifice. They offer something whenever they make the effort they have to make in keeping in mind all the time that they must keep the physical in subjection; but whatever we may cultivate along that line is sometimes lost because the physical and moral side of the effort has come in and destroyed it. We can not escape that. We can take the most talented person in the world, desired in society everywhere, and let him fail to recognize the moral side and it is only a little while until his talents are absolutely lost and useless to the world. Unless we realize this as part of the gospel of Jesus Christ when made applicable to the human family and keep the physical and moral within the divine lines God has marked out for us, we can not possibly hope to reach the end that we have sought to accomplish, the design of God, and bring ourselves up to the full realization of a man in Christ Jesus. It is simply out of the question for us to do it. We discover this gives an opportunity for individual work, and sometimes it is a difficult one. It is far easier, as I know, by experience, for one to drift with the common tide; far harder for one to take a position and stand against anyone else than it is to say, just wait patiently and let time decide. But as long as we recognize the peculiar features of the work of God, and the principle of unselfishness that makes us willing to be friends, and recognize their efforts as our own, then there comes to us that peculiar condition of helpfulness that enables us to reach out a helping hand, recognizing the weakness, seeing the wrong, yet lending that encouragement to the struggling one that will tend to overcome the evil. That's Christlike, and all the peculiar efforts of this work are to make us like Christ; more like him all the time. Now the apostle goes a little farther. He knew we had to bring ourselves to that condition, and reach that point, but he says it is our reasonable service. Ah, there's a reasonable service. That word reasonable comes in there and ought to reach everyone of us and set us to thinking. It is a reasonable service that we render unto God and to our fellow beings when we bring ourselves into subjection to the divine law, and stand in a position like Christ, so we can manifest and exercise the spirit of forgiveness, being willing to help everyone that needs to be comforted, strengthened, which shall help them to overcome their peculiar weakness and trials. Read the Apostle James's statement where he makes a declaration:

Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath: for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass; for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.—James 1: 18-25.

Now, in this presentation there is a thought or two I want to get before you this morning. He presents an idea or two that is interesting, for he says plainly, "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath: for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Our text says, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" It is in perfect accord, then, with the thought the apostle expresses here, and he carries the idea that if we don't hear and do the word of God we deceive ourselves, to be a hearer of the word and not a doer, etc. Now this application comes to us clearly. I think the most of us, anyway. Now we have an object in looking in the glass. It isn't often that any of us are so handsome that we do it because of the beautiful picture that presents itself; not many of us. That feature doesn't come in. We look in the glass for another purpose. What is it? Well, you may want to see if your face is clean, your dress on straight, if your tie is in front, or down under your ear, or something about the dress or features you want to see. And some of our lady friends hold two glasses, if they want to be real sure about it. Now take, for instance, Sunday evening; along in the evening you will see them begin to look in the glass, examine themselves very closely; when some young lady is looking for a certain young man to make a call the glass is used and there is no mistake about it. She would like to appear, in the presence of that young man, at her best. She wants everything done that she can do to give her the best appearance, and if you were able to watch that young man you would probably see something going on along the same line. There is some primping there, too; oh, yes; the boys have got it as bad as the girls about that time. I am sorry that some of them forget it after they get each other a little bit too quick, but now, what was the object? To make their appearance just as nearly perfect as they could. That's the thought. Suppose the young lady found a black streak down across her face and some of her hair coming down, and had gone on with her fixing and forgotten about it, and when the young man came he would be apt to look at her curiously, and wonder what she meant by going out so careless of her appearance; and if he should tell her her face was dirty she would feel ashamed, wouldn't she? I won't try to express her feelings, but suppose she used her glass and saw that dirty streak, would she be apt to forget it? Would you forget it, girls? Honestly! No; you would go right back to the wash basin and wash your face, and then you would arrange that hair and tuck it in if it took you half an hour. Suppose the young man's tie had got around behind his ear, and some of these stand-up collars can get it that way without much trouble. Suppose he was in a hurry and forgot it until some one called his attention to it, would he not feel mortified over his neglect? Would he forget it? Just as soon as you go away from the glass you forget what kind of a person you are, having accomplished your object in looking in the glass; but if you have forgotten it, it will come to you after a while, or somebody will tell you about it and that will mortify you, and you will feel hurt.

He that looketh into the perfect law of liberty and is a forgetful hearer is like the man who beholdeth himself in a glass, for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.

That's the thought. Now what are we going to meeting for? To study the Scriptures is the object; that we may perfect our characters and make them like Christ's. If there is anyone in the universe that we would like to be at our best before it is the Son of God. Are there black streaks on your character, wrinkles on your morals, and this wrong and that, that you want to get right, and mistakes you discover,—what ought you to do? Whenever we see our character reflected in that perfect law of liberty the thing for us to do is to correct it. That's the the thought right away; correct it. Have it right. That's the only thing to do. In doing that we are perfecting our bodies before God, making them holy, acceptable unto him, which is our reasonable service.

Now I ask you to think over these things, and study them thoughtfully and carefully. Put them into operation in your life, and may all of you realize the peculiar necessity of obeying them! We should forgive all men. It is our business to forgive, and our business to help and encourage, lift up, bind up the brokenhearted, strengthen the weak and help them in the great struggle that lies before them in life. Suppose they do commit an error and fall, should we go away and leave them, and go on and try to feel satisfied that we are all right in doing a thing of that kind? Can we do it and justify ourselves and feel right? I say no, and the more you study the question and think of it the more you will recognize this.

There's that prayer that has been given by our heavenly Father that is sometimes called the Lord's Prayer:

Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name; Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us.

How do they do in heaven? Shall we ever learn that prayer? Think seriously of it, for God's going to forgive us as we forgive the trespasses of those who trespass against us. Just the same way. That's what you are asking for, as you forgive others.

Now, in presenting these thoughts I ask you to think them over; to study carefully and get the text before you. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?" Study yourselves; not your neighbors, yourselves; and decide carefully whether you are calling on him in vain or whether you are doing the things that God says. That's the thought. We must build our own character.

Now I want to impress just this one thought and then I will let you go to dinner. Don't know whether you are hungry or not, but will let you go, anyway.

We are very jealous, sometimes, of our reputations. Very! We are jealous of our character, as we call it; but I am going to ask you to just stop a moment and distinguish between these two. They are not synonymous; they are separate things. Your reputation is what your friends or your enemies may make for you. Your enemies will give you a bad one, and your friends will give you a good one. If you are among friends, your reputation stands well. If you are among those that are enemies they haven't anything good to say of you; your reputation is gone. Your character is what you actually are. What you actually are. Your friends nor enemies can neither make nor destroy your character. There is but one soul in the world who can do that, and that is yourself. You are absolutely the architect of your own character. It is what you do, what you are; that's what your character represents, not what somebody says you are, or thinks you are, whether it is friend or foe. So when you think these things over carefully and begin to study from that standpoint, remember that when we stand before the great judgment bar of God and answer there for the mistakes we have made and the errors committed and the good that we have done here in this world, our characters are the things that are going to count up there, and not our reputations. It will be what we actually are, and I have always thanked God for that thought. It don't make any difference what my friend or enemy thinks of me, God will read my heart: the life itself, the acts, the struggles, the thoughts, the difficulties, and all that. He will know the good desires and intentions and purposes, all will be before him, and I am glad that we can trust him. Put our confidence in that love and leave the great final judgment to the arbitration of time and to himself. I have no fears, so far as that is concerned.

Now, may the Lord bless you; may the influence of his Spirit be with you and help you.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

Perhaps a few lines on the above subject might not be out of place, although possibly no new thoughts may be presented. Our minds revert to the time when Jesus was with his disciples, before his crucifixion, and when going from Bethany to Jerusalem he cursed the fig tree, and the next day when passing the same place the disciples noticed it had withered away. When they questioned the Savior, one answer was, "Have faith in God."

The first principle of the gospel is faith, and that principle develops or grows, as we develop in the Christian life. First, we have faith that there is a God, that he hears and answers prayer; that the Bible is the word of God; and believing these things we in time have faith in the gospel and step forth in obedience to it. Then we find faith is a gift from God, and we constantly grow in faith until in time we are willing to consecrate our lives, if it be necessary, in the service of God. We realize it is from the hand of God that we receive every blessing; we have found there is nothing impossible with him. We have seen marvelous things brought about by having faith in him, and we realize it is the same God that rules the universe now, that created the heavens and the earth in the beginning. We wonder not that the world can not comprehend the birth of Christ, or his resurrection from the dead; neither can they comprehend the restoration of the gospel, or the translation of the Book of Mormon. The simple reason they can not comprehend these things is because they know not God as he is.

I sometimes think, we who have the fullness of the gospel, many of us at least, do not realize the wonderful power of God, and what could be accomplished if we only had faith in him. I believe that in order for us to be under divine favor we must learn his ways, and be willing to walk therein. It is not enough for us to say, "I pray to God and my prayers are answered." Those who have not the fullness of the gospel do that also, but there is a higher plane which we should reach. We should have his Spirit to guide us in our daily walks of life. We should be in such close communion with him that he would help us to overcome all that is not pleasing to him in ourselves.

It is true, the height is not gained in a single bound, but we learn line upon line, precept upon precept. If we were living close to God, seeking to learn his will, if we were proud, he would cause us to see it. If we were not merciful or were impatient, little by little he would cause us to see these things, and help us to overcome.

The carnal mind can not discern things that are spiritual, and that is why we often have faults and can not see them. A brother or sister might tell us of these things, but unless we were living humbly before God, we would probably be in the spirit of the fault, and could not see it. But when we have learned to be guided by the Spirit of God, and we are impressed or shown that something is not pleasing unto him, then asking for his help, we can overcome.

In the exercise of faith the evil power is usually at hand to try to defeat the purposes of God. How often, when we are sick and trying to exercise faith in God, some one will say, "Why don't you do something?" I remember at one time those words were spoken to me, but I am thankful my faith failed not. I trusted in the Lord and was healed. Something seems to constantly try to keep us from being humble. We are persuaded to absent ourselves from church and from prayer services, to fast only once in a great while when the church calls a fast, to not pray too often, but if we would live very close to God for a while, then cease to do these things, we world lives. If we could only remember how we are called to come up higher, to be more humble, we would rejoice indeed in the gospel work. May we all increase in faith in God.

Baby.

Miss him? Why, heaven bless yer, Bill,
There warn't a corner in my heart
That 'ere baby didn't fill.

Now that he's gone an' we're apart,
The nights is long an' days seem bleak,
An' lumps keep comin' in my throat
That choke me so I k'n hardly speak;
I'm restless, too, as yer kin note.

I know his mother's pinin' 'way,
But won't give in when I'm aroun'
An' I spruce up when she 'pears gay
To try to keep her feelin's down.
He's better off, yer say? Yer' right,
The God that give him he knows best?—
But, Bill, I sorter wish't he might Hev left him in his little nest.

A teeny nest it was; yer know
I made it 'jes afore he cum;
'Twarn't much at fust in way of show,
So mother had to fix it some;
Couldn't tell 'xactly what she done,
But, with a few ribbins here an' there,
An' other things, there warn't a one
Of them 'ere cribs as could compare.

I'm rough an' all that sort o' thing,
 But when, as over him I'd kneel,
 He'd crow while I was whispering
 Some baby talk to him, I'd feel
 Jes' like a little child again—
 Fer then, his eyes would search me through
 An' 'pear to grieve at every sin
 They seen I'd done, and still might do.

From somewhar in a golden land
 I'm sure he's lookin' still at me,
 An' tryin' with his baby hand
 To p'int the way, to make me see.
 Mebbe—perhaps, it wouldn't annoy
 The Master, if I asked of him
 To take an' put me near the boy
 An' never let me stray from him.

The Molding of Character.

There is no thing truly great in the world but man, and nothing great in man but the unseen something that he calls his soul. The thing that makes man great is something that can not be thrown into a scale and weighed by the pound. There shall come a time when the keepers of man's physical temple shall tremble; when his shattered shell shall crumble and his days on earth be numbered, "for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." The man who gave utterance to the truths of the text is no narrow-minded fanatic. He sums up in a few masterful phrases the strain and tumult of life's struggle. He gives to the world a creed of life to be lived by those who recognize God and are seeking a more enduring realm than that of sense and sight.

The great outcome of a man's life is not a title to gold and acres. It is character which he acquires and carries with him. If the unseen is eternal, then with reference to man his greatest concern ought to be for the culture and the formation of his character. The same man who declared the truth of this lesson said also, "Let every man take heed how he buildeth." Genius alone will not make a man great. His character is most symmetrical whose head and heart are in equipoise. What we need is not less intellect and more heart, but more of both.

"Let knowledge grow from more to more,
 But more of knowledge in us dwell,
 That mind and heart according well
 May make one music as before,
 But vaster."

In this age of Shylock exactness we have come to place a commercial value on culture, and have made of men's brains a marketable commodity. But wisdom does not consist alone in shelved facts which can be sold by the yard to the customer. One may be skilled in the realms of learning and yet have missed that education of the heart, that discipline of character, which makes him a full-orbed man in the sight of God. The symmetrically developed man is the one with both sight and insight. He knows that wisdom and philosophy are understanding, but he knows also that neither will meet the requirements of human nature, nor satisfy the longings of the human soul.

Study books, study science, study philosophy, study nature, study man, study God, but keep before you the truth that the seen is temporal but the unseen eternal.—Reverend William F. Hovis.

Request for Prayer.

We desire the prayers of the Saints for the healing of our baby, which is less than three months old. His name is Harmon. The physicians seem to do him very little good.

Your brother and sister in the one faith,
 C. H. DRISCHE, Chilton, Texas.

Letter Department

PERYEAR, TENNESSEE, May 13, 1912.

Editors Herald: At this time many are moving Zionward and seeking places where there is less opposition. Very frequently some who go up to Zion return about as swiftly as they went, feeling disappointed because things were different than had been expected.

People make the towns and cities; the towns and cities are just what the people make them; nothing better nor worse.

When we think of moving to Zion, let us examine ourselves and see if we would benefit the place and the people that we expect to benefit us. Zion, the pure in heart; are we that? If so, it might be well for us to seek that kind, by looking "for the beautiful and the true."

Let us see if we can't make our surroundings like unto Zion, and what Zion means, by living clean and holy lives, thus assisting others, by precept and example, to come up higher. Letting our light shine before men, that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

If we would, before going to Zion, be sure that we are equal to what we expect to find there, we would not fail to find that which we seek; and thus we would be satisfied to remain there, and save ourselves and others much bitter disappointment. We forget that we can have a little Zion right here in our home and branch if we choose to do so. Anywhere the pure in heart exists, whether they be few or many, there Zion can be realized. Let us come together and try for a season to make our abode a Zion, and if it proves to be good, let's continue, by the help of God, and "hold fast to it."

Let our daily lives be "living epistles, read of all men," putting away all malice, hatred, envy, jealousy, that bring strife and confusion among the Saints of God, by loving one another, praying for all men, and "letting brotherly love continue."

Those of us, have never truly repented, that hold to one or more "pet sins," such as chewing, smoking, drinking whisky, that lead to public drunkenness and disgrace. Swearing when angry, bringing reproach on the church of Christ, backbiting, speaking evil of one another to outsiders, tattlers, etc.

Some have expressed themselves that it was no one's business but the one involved in bad habits when he was guilty of any of the above, but I fail to see it like that. Most all the above-mentioned sins are against our civil law. If a man is even caught spitting "tobacco juice" on the floors or walls of many of our public buildings he is fined. Then, shall we permit the house of God to be used in a way that we would not have a public building used? In this age, if any person swears, or gets drunk publicly, he is fined, because it is against our civil and moral laws, and detrimental to good citizenship.

What shall we say, then? Swearing and drunkenness are against the law of Christ. "Swear not at all," "Be temperate in all things," are the words of inspiration, commandments given to govern the people of God, to help them come to a full knowledge of the truth.

Now, will the watchman on the walls of Zion see the commandments of the great Lawgiver broken, and refuse to declare the whole counsel of God?

We are taught that "all scripture given by inspiration, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction," etc. Yes; we as Latter Day Saints believe that and aim to "live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God."

Do we accept the last phrase? If so, let us abide by the law Christ has given us, and each of us keep the law of God as well as the laws of the land. Let us not hide behind some pitiful excuse, and cry aloud, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Each of us, as rational men and women, are accountable to the laws of the land, if we transgress them; the officers of the civil laws are held accountable if they fail to execute the law under which they are bound.

No law was ever greater than the law of God, no lawgiver greater than Christ. Each of us, as subjects of his law, are, and shall be held accountable for all we do, or do not do, under "the perfect law of liberty." The officers of this lawful kingdom shall be held accountable at the judgment bar of God for failing to execute the law of God. Each of us shall give an account of our stewardship before the "Judge of the whole earth," whose judgment is true and just.

Let us make our tabernacle clean, and live as God would have us live. We have an influence over others, either for good or bad; let that influence from now on be for good, by keeping ourselves from unlawful acts, treading the straight and narrow way, and we will be helping others by our example. Some one must be a leader; it's easier to follow than to lead; therefore there are many followers and few leaders.

Be sure you are leading in the right way, or else you will fall into the ditch, and all your followers with you. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate. For strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth to life, and few there be that find it." Let each of us strive to be one of the few mentioned here.

Too many of us are baptized without repentance; have hands laid upon us, our names enrolled on the branch record, and "continue in sin," in the same old path we trod aforetime, and expect the elders to preach for us, to think for us, to pray for us, and let us enjoy our "pet sins," expecting to be blessed with God's choicest blessings which are only promised to the faithful.

Saints where are you at and what are you doing? You are either marching onward or going backward. Now let us examine ourselves and see if we are in the faith. If ye continue in my words ye are my disciples indeed; ye shall know the truth; and the truth shall make you free. If we judge ourselves we shall not be judged. Let's not grow weary of well doing. He that endureth till the end, the same shall be saved.

May we all so live that we may be counted worthy of eternal life at the end of our race, have a right to the tree of life, and enter through the gates into the city.

Yours in the gospel,

LOUISE A. WALL.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICHIGAN, May 17, 1912.

Editors Herald: This morning I wish to let your readers know that the Saints in Traverse City are striving to do their Master's will. We have been greatly blessed as a branch. The Lord at times has spoken words of cheer and consolation to us.

Some few years ago we were spoken to by the power of His Spirit saying: If we would but be faithful, many would come into the fold. Our church would be filled. We have lived to see this fulfilled. Many have been added and others are very near.

We have had Brethren F. S. Brackenbury and R. D. Weaver with us for the past few weeks. They have been greatly blessed of God and have preached some wonderful sermons.

They have made many friends with those outside and much prejudice has been removed, one being baptized and others seem very much interested.

Before leaving the city, while in conversation with a man outside the church as yet, but very much interested, Brother Weaver told him that the Evil One would do all in his power to keep him from obeying and would try to make him believe there was not anything in this latter day work. He replied it would take more than Satan to make him believe that this work was not of God.

I thank God for the power that was given while preaching the word, so that this man, though an outsider, could not but feel that work was of God. Though the brethren have gone on their way, we feel much good has been accomplished.

May God bless these brethren, that they may continue the good work and bring many into the fold.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's people,

In gospel bonds,

MRS. N. KAPNICK.

ALPENA, MICHIGAN, May 5, 1912.

Editors Herald: In the last Sunday school Quarterly, in lesson one, the statement is made that, according to Genesis 7: 64, Inspired Translation, those spirits who received the gospel in the prison when Christ presented it there, arose at the time of his resurrection.

I don't understand it that way, as I fail to see where they received baptism for the remission of sins. I understand the saints who rose with him to be saints who had obeyed the gospel at some time from Noah to the resurrection; however, if I am wrong I would be glad to be put right. Will you please answer through the columns of the HERALD? You may publish this if you wish, along with your answer. I am very young in the work and anxious to learn.

S. W. RUDD.

PANAMA, OKLAHOMA, May 14, 1912.

Dear Herald: I have been reading the church papers. I was thinking of the Saints that did not have the privilege of attending church that some have. While myself and wife are among those who live where there is no church, we are blessed much by reading the church papers. Wife is bedfast; afflicted with fever, and no elders to call in to administer to her, but we can ask the heavenly Father to remove the cause if it be his will.

We have just moved here, and of course I had to tell what church we belonged to. The cry that arose was, "Mormon," and for that reason we have no friends. Bless the good Lord, we can stand by ourselves by standing on God's promises. We do not feel a bit discouraged. If we will keep faithful to the end we will come out conquerors. My prayer is that the isolated Saints will have many blessings come to them.

I will ask the Saints to pray for my wife that she will be healed if it is God's will. Your brother in the true gospel,

FRANK NORTH.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICHIGAN, April 20, 1912.

Dear Herald: I am still alive and trying to do my Master's will. Having enjoyed some wonderful blessings of late, and realizing that when one member in the body rejoices all rejoice with him, I feel that I should give them the benefit of my experience.

I was baptized into the church June 29, 1907, by Elder George M. Shippy, and soon after I received a testimony that the work was indeed true. I tried hard to live as a Saint should and often while enjoying blessings from my heavenly Father I would exclaim in the ecstasy of my soul, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord; I'll be what you want me to be."

On October 28, 1907, I received my patriarchal blessing under the hands of J. J. Bailey. The Lord reminded me of my promise, and told me that if I would be true in keeping my covenant, great would be my blessings; and that under the influence of the Spirit I would have an experience like one of old when he said, "Whether in the body or out of the body I know not, God knoweth." I was also told to prepare myself for a life of usefulness; that if faithful I would be a power to discern between right and wrong.

On April 5, 1908, God spoke to me in the gift of tongues, calling me to the office of priest. I was at once ordained and my work as a minister for Christ began. I met with some discouragements, and I felt that I would never be of any worth to the church.

Elder C. C. Whitford, of Port Huron, was in our neighborhood, and went with us to prayer meeting, and while there he arose and spoke to me by revelation. I was told that if faithful there was a great work for me to do, and many beautiful promises were made to me. No sooner had he stopped talking than the Spirit returned to him and he repeated what he had said nearly word for word, and so I felt sure that God had chosen me to do a work for him, and I was very happy indeed.

I tell this to show how God makes promises to his people, and how Satan will try to overcome those to whom the promises are made.

In June, 1910, Elder J. W. Wight asked me to go on a mission to Wisconsin, and I told him I would go. I fully intended to go, but when I got home and told my parents they felt they could not spare their boy. The time came when they wished I had gone, as I now feel sure God wanted me to do. The more I thought of leaving home, the dearer it became. My courage failed, and I remained at home, forgetting the promise I had made that I would go where God wanted me to go. Brother Wight wrote me a nice letter, telling me that delays were dangerous, and that he felt sure I should enter the work as a missionary.

We must always remember the promises we make our heavenly Father, and try to keep them, for if we do not we must suffer for our disobedience.

In the winter of 1911 I went to Otter Lake, Michigan, and preached for some time, and in this spring I was called back. I baptized three noble people. One, Brother Edward Jones, had been in the Catholic Church all his life. Never will I forget how happy I was as I led them into the water. My soul was filled with joy to know that I had opened the door of the kingdom of God and admitted three precious souls. I earnestly prayed they might be the first of many.

But soon I was taken sick, and Satan tried to overcome me. His power is not limited in these latter days. Some tell us he is bound now, but if that is true I do not want to be near when he is let loose. In my boyhood I was led into many things that boys should never know, and now Satan held up my sins that had been committed before I knew the gospel. Like David of old, "my sins were ever before my face," turn where I would. Satan is a great artist, and he painted my past in brilliant colors and held it up for me to look at, day and night. What I suffered no one but God in heaven knows. Often I would wander to the woods and beg for death that I might not be a disgrace to the work I loved dearer than life. Some one told me to drown my sorrows in drink, but I told them, "Never." Sleep fled from me, and I fully believed that my soul was lost for ever. Only those who have passed through like trials can understand the anguish of my soul. Some may think it only fancy, but I know that Satan can make one suffer more than words can express, when he has a purpose in view.

One night about a week after my trial I threw myself down on my bed and exclaimed, "O, Father, give me that peace of mind that I have enjoyed for four long years in the church." A voice spoke to me as plainly as a voice could speak, and it was the sweetest voice I ever heard: "Know ye not that the blood of my Son was shed for the sins of such as you? Know ye not that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repents than over ninety and nine who have no need of repentance? I have seen you in your sin; I have seen you in your sorrow; I have seen you in wickedness; I have seen you in tears; I spared you before for a purpose; I spare you again."

Some will not believe that I heard that voice, but I testify before God that I did; and some have received a witness of the Spirit that my testimony is true. It would seem that a blessing so wonderful should have given relief at once, but no sooner had the blessing come than Satan redoubled his efforts. To make things worse, I was taken down with that dread disease, diphtheria. I suffered physically and mentally, but my faith in the work never failed—God had spoken. I learned that a true Saint is one that is a friend in time of need. There was a two-day meeting at Valley Center, nine miles away, and my father was there. He was sent for and Elder O. J. Hawn was impressed to go with him. Laying hands upon my fevered head, he earnestly plead that God would send me peace. In the morning Brother Hawn administered again. God, who is rich in mercy, heard his prayer and I suffered no more physical pain. He carried the news back to Valley, and the Saints there remembered me. Brother Etzenhouser made a special prayer in my behalf. I also want to mention the kindness of Elders William Davis, William Grice, C. C. Whitford, and F. S. Brackenbury, of South Boardman, who stood by me for weeks, cheering me on.

The weary months passed till October came, and with it conference at Marlette. While there Brother F. A. Smith, of Lamoni, took me unto himself, and if ever a father talked to a child, he did to me. He encouraged me much, and finally asked me to take a field. When I thought of my condition I earnestly prayed that I might know regarding the matter, and on the night of the 12th of November, 1911, a voice spoke to me in a dream: "If you humble yourself in the depths of humility there is a great work for you to do." I tried to be humble. I came to western Michigan with the idea in mind of doing all I could in the Master's work.

I began preaching in a little town called Orono, and I removed much prejudice and made many friends; so much so that on my return there in January they made me a present of a fine suit of clothes and other clothing.

Though Satan opposed I kept on trying to tell the gospel story. Once I started for home, but God ordered otherwise, and I stopped off the train at Lake Station. Brother J. W. Burgett met me. It was a great surprise to us both. When Brother Burgett awoke that morning something told him to go to Lake. I went with him, and we began holding meetings in a schoolhouse. Brother and Sister Burgett were kindness personified. I stayed there about six weeks and preached night about with Brother Burgett. I baptized seven as a result, and I think he baptized four.

I returned to Orono and preached for some time. Baptized two there and left many interested. Brother Brackenbury joined me and we have been together ever since. He has been a father to me and when I would give up he was always ready to lend a helping hand, telling me the time would come when I would look back and say that trial was the greatest blessing of my life. I would reply, "You may think so, Brother Fred, but I don't. I can't." Then he would say, "I know it; and so will you." Many were the prayers offered in my behalf, and the Spirit often bore testimony that all would yet be well.

Time wore on till we reached South Boardman, and there on March 31, God came to my relief. Brother James Davis had been laboring in Canada and God told him if he would return home before going to General Conference he would bless him. He came home; then to Traverse City. He was asked to stay over Sunday and tie the fatal knot for a brother and sister, but again he was impressed to return to South Boardman. He came, and on Sunday, in a priesthood meeting of the church, the long hoped for blessing was given.

I had been fasting for some time, and God in his mercy spoke to me through Brother Davis in the gift of tongues—the grandest gift I ever heard. While we were yet upon our knees in prayer, the gift came to Brother Davis, and arising to his feet, he spoke to Brother John Hanson and told him regarding matters he had prayed over; then he started toward me, and as I heard him coming I felt my prayers were being answered. Laying his hand upon my head, he spoke to me in the gift for a few minutes, then passed on to where Brother Brackenbury was kneeling, and spoke to him; then to the priesthood in general. When he had ceased speaking in the tongue, some of us prayed again, and the interpretation was given. It was wonderful beyond description. When he had told Brother Hanson the desires of his heart he came to me just as he had done while speaking in the tongue, and again laying his hand on my head, he spoke to me. The import of it is as follows: "Verily, Thus saith the Spirit unto my servant, R. D. Weaver, Your fastings and your prayers have come up before me, and behold the angels of heaven have rejoiced over you. Inasmuch as you have been troubled over your sins and transgressions of the past, I say unto you that as they were committed before ye knew my gospel they are forgiven you; but Satan has desired to have you that he might sift you and overcome you, knowing that there is a great work for you to do; but be encouraged, for the time is near when those thoughts will be taken out of your mind and you shall become a polished shaft in my hand for the accomplishment of much good, and will bring many into the fold." It confirmed the promises made years before to me through Elders Whitford and Bailey.

I am happy in the gospel work, and am trying to magnify my calling as a representative of the grandest work that was ever given to man to defend.

I baptized one here Sunday, making ten since I came into this field, and fourteen in all in a few weeks over a year.

In conclusion let me say that by experience I know that there is no trial so great that God can not bring us out of it if we are faithful and do our duty as Saints should. I was given to know once while preaching that all who will finally wear the crown will have their Gethsemane to pass through; their cross to carry, and their Calvary to climb, but after the clouds pass over the sun shines brighter than ever before. I have heard people say, "I am my own boss; I will do as I want to"; but the answer comes back to us from God, "Ye are not your own; you were bought with a price."

I wish to express my gratitude to all the dear Saints who have befriended me in my hour of trial. Words can not express my love for them, and I sincerely hope that by God's help I may be able to at least partially repay them some time.

I love God and Christ more to-day than ever before, and I thank them with all my soul for having permitted me to suffer in order to make a better man of myself. My all is on the altar of this work, and I can truly sing, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord; I'll be what you want me to be." It is nearly six months since I left home, and I have no desire to return, but would rather stay in my field and labor for the Master.

I am returned to Western Michigan for another year, and I hope to accomplish much good. I have never yet asked the Bishop for help, and I can say with the disciples of old, when asked if they had lacked anything, they replied, "Nothing, Lord." At one time I did not have a cent in my pocket, but I had enough to eat, and I was content, and ere long I had plenty.

When I started this letter I said I would send a few lines, but I think that you will think that my conception of the word few is far greater than that of Peter.

Praying God to bless all his Saints, I remain,

Your brother in bonds of love,

R. D. WEAVER.

BISBEE, ARIZONA, May 13, 1912.

Editors Herald: Since the Saints have seen fit to make me their secretary I am going to write about the branch here. Our branch is not fully organized yet. Brother T. W. Davis is our priest; also our president. The writer is teacher, and brother John Farley is deacon. Elder D. W. Davis, late of Seattle, is staying here; he is a very spiritual man. He is also a good worker and has never yet, so far as I know, refused to do anything that he has been asked to do, and he has decided to bring his family here, which will add to our numbers very materially, and our gain will be Seattle's loss.

Brother Duthridge, late of Inman, Nebraska, is also visiting here. He is sick and has come here in the hope of regaining his health. He is the guest of the branch. He has been with us over three Sundays. He was administered to in our sacrament service last Sunday, and was told that he would be healed if faithful. Let us pray that he will be faithful. He is improving. The Lord is surely blessing him spiritually and physically. Truly God's Spirit is brooding over this branch.

We are enjoying the fruits of the Spirit—every Latter Day Saint knows what they are, and we are trying to exercise charity, which Saint Paul says is greatest of all. We have not always been thus. It was prophesied to us long ago that Satan would try and overthrow the work here. Thanks be to God, the Saints have gained the victory; the large, black cloud has lifted; the light of God's love has broken through. Our last two sacrament services were meetings long to be remembered.

We have also a Sunday school here, and a corps of officers that we are proud of. Our school has always been good, but lately it has improved very much. Brother D. L. Evans is the teacher that we have reelected for the senior grade. If there is a better one in the church we would like to see him.

Brother James Farley is our superintendent. We also have a Religio. Sister Hannah Farley is our president, and is certainly a power for good. She has more power over this branch than any other one person that I know of, and I pray that God will bless her with the Spirit of wisdom so that she may be enabled to so rule over this part of the work as to meet with his smile and approbation.

I try to do the little things that the Lord has for me to do with as good a grace as I can. I was ordained to the office of teacher on March 5, 1911, and have tried to preach in the church seven times. The Saints gave me their attention, and if I ever do make out to be a preacher there will be whole lots of credit due the Saints of Bisbee, for the manner in which they listened to my feeble efforts and encouraged me all the time. I gave a fifteen minute talk on one of our principal streets on March 3, 1912; not a very great deal for a whole year, but then we had two missionaries here part of the time, one elder and two priests. I have been an instrument in God's hands in bringing three into the fold. My sister was first. Of course Brother Knisley was the one to really bring her in, as I did very little talking, but she saw by my life from day to day that I was not what I used to be; then I got married and my wife came into the church. My partner that I work with also came into the church and is now back in Sweden trying to convert his family of six. Several more are investigating. Thus the good work goes on.

Praying the good work may go on and that God will bless the work in this part of the vineyard, I remain your brother and servant for Jesus' sake, HENRY GOLDIE.

PORTERVILLE, CALIFORNIA, May 13, 1912.

Kind Brethren: Inclosed find funeral notice of our dearly beloved mother and your sister in the church. We wish to thank the Saints through the columns of the HERALD. We tried very hard to get her minister from Tulare to administer the last loving words for her but could not reach him. He called on her some weeks previous. Although she is missed in our home, we know she is at rest in the great beyond. She has always enjoyed the HERALD and we wish to thank all for kind remembrances.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. CHAS. KEENE.

HIGBEE, MISSOURI, May 22, 1912.

Editors Herald: I am now engaged in a heated debate at this place with R. G. Edwards, of Parsons, Kansas. The debate is to last twelve nights. I am affirming for the first six nights that Joseph Smith was an inspired prophet of God. Edwards then is to affirm for six nights that his church is the identical church as described in the New Testament, in organization, doctrine, faith, and practice.

I am getting along finely, so far. The first difficulty I have run against was that the prophecy on the Rebellion had been eliminated from the last edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. I was sorry to find it so. Mr. Edwards has one, and is making quite an ado about it, I don't think it should have been left out. Of course we understand it is no doctrine of the church, and really did not have any place in the Doctrine and Covenants, but it has been in for some time and has been a great help to us, and has not hurt us any by being in the Doctrine and Covenants. Now it furnishes our opponents a club by its being left out; they say we have changed it again. We had this thing to fight all the time; that is, changes. I want to enter my protest against the prophecy on the Rebellion being left out, and hope you will continue to put it in the back part of the book. I have sent in an order for a new Doctrine and Covenants, but have not received it as yet. I hope if you can't bind it in that you will paste it in, and hereafter continue to put it in as you have been doing.

I am to be here ten days yet, then I soon take up another debate at Wagoner, Oklahoma. I believe that I did not say Mr. Edwards was of the non-progressive wing of the Campbellite Church. The Mr. Wilkinson that I am to meet in Oklahoma is of the same church.

I am in the conflict and not hunting debates, but the Lord is standing by me in defense of his church and the people see we have something good.

Your brother in the conflict,

W. M. AYLOR.

The Century Company will publish soon Social Life in the Insect World, a compilation, translated from the French by Bernard Miall, from the work of J. H. Fabre, the noted French entomologist. The book will be called Social Life in the Insect World, and will be lavishly illustrated.

News from Branches

San Bernardino, California.

Elder Charles Crumley, who for over two years was pastor of the church at this place, and whose family has been located here for a number of years, has disposed of his household effects, and Thursday, May 9, he and Sister Crumley went to Los Angeles. From there they will go to Brother Crumley's mission field in Oregon, by way of San Francisco. Brother Crumley preached a farewell sermon Wednesday evening before his departure. Both he and his wife left some very warm friends who will long remember their good deeds.

Sunday morning, May 12, Bishop and Sister Parkin, of San Francisco, were unexpected but welcomed visitors at the church. They were on their way home from General Conference. Brother Parkin was pressed into service and gave us a good, common-sense sermon.

Patriarch E. E. Keeler and wife spent some time with the branch of late. Brother Keeler gave a number of blessings and preached several sermons. His labors here seemed to result in good to many of the Saints. The patriarch may be a revivalist in more ways than one.

The sermon Sunday evening, May 12, was by Elder Elbert A. Smith, on the subject of "The gathering." The first part of the sermon was devoted to the historical phases of the subject, the gathering under Enoch, under Moses, under Ezra and others, the attitude of Jesus, the gathering of the church in Jerusalem, and modern Zion. The last part of the discourse was devoted to the logical side of the question and the religious values of the doctrine. The sermon was advertised by a three-foot picture of the late General Conference assembly, which worked in very well as an illustration of the "return" of scattered modern Israel.

Brother A. E. Jones, pastor of the branch, and W. Boren, priest of the branch, held services in Redlands Sunday afternoon. They were accompanied by a number of the Saints from San Bernardino, who assisted in the song service. At the same time Brother George Wixom was in Hemet, preaching Saturday evening and Sunday forenoon and evening. He, too, was accompanied by a small but active delegation who assisted in the song service. In this way lay members may often help the local ministry or the missionary in making new openings.

At a recent prayer service fifty-two were present and a very spiritual meeting was had. This indicates an improved spiritual condition, and we trust that there will be still further improvement.

REPORTER.

Independence, Missouri.

By means of the church, its ordinances, its ministry, and the written word, is being fulfilled the prophecy that the sticks of Judah and Ephraim shall grow together to the confounding of false doctrines, the laying down of contentions, establishing peace, and a knowledge of Israel and of God's covenants, and all this to take place in the latter days. So, too, its auxiliaries are rooting out the weeds of false instruction and the mothers with the children are being trained to supplant the haphazard methods of the past with the culture of a newer civilization.

There are great opportunities opening up for the young here, as well as elsewhere. The elders and the Saints generally have been earnestly enlisted in their welfare. Days are set apart for their entertainment, teachers of the Religion and Sunday school meet from time to time for study of the lesson in order to get in touch with the children, and even the hours set apart for sermons and regular prayer meetings are given up to them.

On Sunday, the 19th, in the first primary department, the attendance was 165, and the total attendance of the school was 902, with a collection of $15.69. Sister Tessie Weston gave a very clear and interesting review of the primary lesson. The seniors have given up their wonted place in the upper room and will occupy in the basement in the future, while the juniors, second primaries, and intermediates will meet for school upstairs.

The morning sermon, based on a text found in John 17, also Galatians, was preached by Elder F. M. Sheehy. Our brother's comments on Christ's memorable prayer, that his followers might be kept "in unity and truth" were impressive, and there was a large audience present to listen to them. Said he, "The operation of the Spirit and the influence of the light of God always develops a contentment of soul."

Elder J. W. Rushton spoke in the evening with his usual vim and earnestness, upon the words of the Savior, "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." The attendance was not as good as usual.

At 4.15 the Woman's Auxiliary (department of home and child welfare) held its regular meeting in the upper room, about forty being present. Prayer was offered and the reading and discussion of the subject in hand, "The boy," were entered into. The remaining portion of time was given to business and election of officers. Those elected were Mrs. D. J. Krahl, president; Mrs. B. C. Smith, vice president; Mrs. Abbie A. Horton, secretary; Mrs. S. L. Weed, treasurer; Mrs. Madge Siegfried, chorister; Mrs. Pearl Gardner, pianist.

The afternoon prayer meeting was given over to the missionaries and Brethren Dowker, Craig, Shower, Pender, and A. V. Closson spoke with much feeling concerning their experiences and future labors in the gospel.

Brother and Sister W. S. Pender will leave on Friday, the 24th, for Columbus, Iowa, where they will probably remain for the summer. Although physical conditions may sometimes tend to hinder them, through a firm trust in God's power to strengthen, they are valiant in many ways in the Master's service.

They say Brother F. M. Smith added much to the pleasure of the occasion at the Religio entertainment Tuesday evening by giving an interesting talk to the young people on the subject of modern fashions and customs, and (what pleased them) he was quite humorously inclined.

On the 20th on the fair grounds, the ministers, high school faculty, and board of education took part in a ball game; but our athletes, ministerial or otherwise, were not in it.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our regular sacrament service was presided over by Brethren Elliott and Archibald, assisted by Brethren Reeves and Rhoades. Timely remarks were made by Brother Archibald.

The priesthood meeting was held the afternoon of May 19.

During the past month the speakers were Brethren Elliott, Reeves, DeKaster, Tanner, S. A. Burgess, and Curtis.

We were pleased indeed to have Apostle Curtis with us and listen to the instruction as delivered by him. He has been kept very busy doing work throughout the district. Two new branches were organized, one at O'Fallon, and one at Alton, Illinois. We wish them success.

On the morning of May 12, our pastor, Brother T. J. Elliott, was ordained a high priest under the hands of Brethren Curtis and Barraclough.

The little babe of Brother and Sister A. P. Burgess was blessed May 12, by Brethren S. A. Burgess and Curtis, and given the name of Archibald Roston.

We regret to report the sad death of Sister John Davis.

Her funeral sermon was preached by Brother Tanner. Brother John Davis, and his five motherless little ones, have our sincere sympathy in this sore hour of trial.

Our faithful Brother W. R. Cowlishaw met with a painful accident last Saturday when his wagon was struck by an electric street car and overturned, and his foot and ankle badly crushed. We trust the blessing of our heavenly Father will be with him to restore him again.

The Sunday school and Religio are doing nicely. The Sunday school normal class had its first examination May 19, and the Religio will receive theirs May 26.

Your sister in Christ,

Convention Minutes.

PITTSBURG.—District Sunday school association met in mass convention in Boylan's Hall, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, March 1, 1912, Superintendent J. A. Jaques in charge. Five schools reported. A letter was read from secretary, L. A. Serig, who has faithfully served the district in that capacity continually since it was organized in 1900, asking to be relieved for the next year. A vote of thanks was extended for his services. The officers elected for the following year were: J. A. Jaques, superintendent; Charles Fry, assistant superintendent; Samuel A. Martin, secretary-treasurer; Matthew W. Liston, home department superintendent; and L. F. P. Curry, member of library board. Seventeen delegates were elected to the General Convention, whose work has been done. Samuel A. Martin, secretary.

PITTSBURG.—At the Pittsburg district conference, March 3, 1912, Apostle R. C. Russell called the Religio members together for the purpose of considering the organization of the district. An organization was effected, comprising the Wheeling, West Virginia, and Steubenville, Ohio, locals, to be known as the Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the Pittsburg District. The following officers were elected: Matthew W. Liston, president; John Collin, vice president; Samuel A. Martin, secretary-treasurer; C. H. Thomas, home department superintendent; and John G. Pace, member library board. Owing to one of the locals having no charter, our district was not reported at the General Convention, but the matter is being attended to. Samuel A. Martin, secretary, Route 1, Bridgeport, Ohio.

Conference Notices.

The conference of the Eastern Maine District will convene at West Kennebec, June 22, 1912, at 2.30 p. m. N. M. Wilson, clerk.

Conference of the Northeastern Missouri District will convene at Higbee, Missouri, June 1, 1912, at 10 a. m. Let all come who possibly can, as you will have the privilege of attending the closing sessions of the debate between Brother Aylor, and Elder Edwards of the Church of Christ. Send your reports to William Chapman, Higbee, Missouri, R. F. D. 3. William Chapman, secretary.

The Eastern Michigan district conference will convene at Port Huron, Michigan, June 22 and 23. Local brethren and branch presidents please be prompt and have your reports in the secretary's hands by June 15, and oblige. William M. Grice, president.

There will be a stake conference held in Lamoni, Iowa, Saturday and Sunday, June 8 and 9, 1912. Saturday prayer service at 9 a. m.; business session 10 a. m. John Smith.

This is to advise that the Western New York District will hold their semiannual conference at Niagara Falls, New York, on Saturday and Sunday, June 8 and 9. Lila B. Schofield, secretary.

Utah district conference will convene at Malad, Idaho, Saturday morning, June 8, at 10.30 a. m. This date is fixed after consulting with Apostle J. W. Rushton, who will be present. It is presumed that Idaho summer rates will be in force, and a good attendance is expected and desired. M. F. Gowell, in behalf of the district presidency.

Convention Notices.

The Religio convention of Little Sioux District will meet in Sioux City Thursday evening, May 30, 1912. Mrs. Perry Mann, secretary.

The Religio association of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District meets at Galien, Michigan, on Friday, June 7, 1912. The full day will be given in the interest of the work in this district. Election of officers for the year. Also institute work. The program formulated by the president and vice president is of interest to every Religian in the district. Mrs. Elsie Lockerby, secretary, Coldwater, Michigan.

Officers and members of Eastern Michigan District auxiliaries, take notice that on June 14 to 23 will be held our annual reunion at Port Huron, at which we expect to have the best institute work Eastern Michigan has seen. Come praying for the Holy Spirit, and that we may be blessed with a profitable time. Remember your note books and pencils. On June 13 every Religio president of the district should be present, for we expect to organize the Eastern Michigan Religio Presidents Association. Remember our goal, 750 members by October, 1912. William F. Sage, president Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

The Sunday school convention of the Eastern Iowa District will convene at Muscatine, Iowa, Friday, June 14, 1912, at 2 p. m., in the Saints' church, corner Ninth and Poplar Streets. We hope to have representatives from each school present as we desire to take up the subject of getting the district up to a better grade, also teacher's training and normal work. Come prepared to take part. We need you. Each local secretary is also urged to get report sent in promptly. Communications may be sent to district superintendent, C. G. Dykes, box 420, Muscatine, Iowa. Melvina Dykes, district secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The joint reunion of the Kewanee, Eastern Iowa, and Nauvoo districts will be held in Prospect Park, Moline, Illinois, August 15 to 26, 1912. Begin now to prepare to come and bring a portion of the Master's Spirit with you and we will surely have a time of rejoicing together. O. E. Sade, J. B. Wildermuth, advertising committee.

The Saints of the Northern Minnesota District will hold their annual reunion at Clitherall, Minnesota, beginning June 22, 1912, and lasting over two Sundays. We expect to have one of our patriarchs present; one or both of our ministers in charge; also other speakers. Board will be furnished to a limited number at $3.50 a week, or fifteen cents for meals only. Those wishing to board themselves will find suitable accommodations. In either case notify committee before hand. A. W. Whiting, Clitherall; O. E. Tucker, Clitherall; Lester Whiteing, Henning, Minnesota, committee.

By a resolution of the Eastern Michigan district conference held at Marlette, Michigan, October, 1911, provision was made for a reunion to be held at Port Huron, Michigan, beginning June 14, and closing June 23, of this present year. It was further provided that the district conference be held during the last Saturday and Sunday of reunion, which will bring it June 22 and 23, and in consequence of which we wish do hereby notify ministers and branch secretaries to have all reports, together with delegate credentials, in the hands of district secretary not later than June 10. Please do not hold them until arriving at conference; and branch secretaries will please exercise more care in making out branch reports. Some received at last conference were almost impossible of solution. Hoping that all will readily respond and thus facilitate the work of the secretary. F. O. Benedict, secretary, Applegate, Michigan; R. F. Day.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Saint Louis District: Greeting: Having been appointed minister in charge of the above district I earnestly solicit your cooperation that the work may move on toward the accomplishment of the work designed of the Lord.

Let us all, both the ministry of the missionary and local forces, minister together with the laity and see that we do all we can to make this one of the most successful years in building up the kingdom of God.

I ask that all the local ministers feel free to move out to effect new openings where it is possible, and we will come to your assistance as much as possible. And to all the Saints, Where you know of any place that missionary work can be done, let us know; we will do the best we can to come to your help.

Dear Saints, let us not forget to render unto the Lord that which is his; remembering that the missionaries leave their homes and loved ones in order that the honest in heart may be gathered into the family of God. Thus having faith in the promises of God that their families would be provided for. In order that this may be done it will be necessary for each one of us to see that we pay our tithing and offerings to the Lord as Saints of God, and that we do not fall behind in this part of the work.

To the church appointees I would say, Let us labor diligently to accomplish all we can in building up the work, for by so doing we encourage the laity to press forward to do all they can.

We pray God's blessings on all. My home address is Independence, Missouri, 1129 South Noland Street.

Your colaborer in the Lord's work,
 GEORGE JENKINS.

SCANDINAVIA AND GERMANY.

As the authorities of the church have seen fit to place me in charge of this field, I desire to bring myself in touch with all parties either directly or indirectly concerned in the work here, that the year's labor may be arranged to the best possible advantage. I wish to hear from the brethren appointed to labor here, unless already on the way, how soon we may look for them? Shall also be pleased if any are in possession of information that can be of help to the work, if they will write me without delay.

We need your support and your prayers, and trust we may in truth be laborers together in the Master's cause. I wish also to remind you that our mission paper, Sandhedens Banner, published monthly, and to subscribers in America, at seventy-five cents per year, needs your patronage and support.

Yours in the interest of truth,

H. N. HANSEN.

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK, Blaagaardsgade 16 D.

To the Saints, Friends, and Ministry of Mission No. 11, "The Great Lakes Mission," Comprising Northern Illinois, Northern Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ontario, and Quebec; Greeting: We have been a little slow in getting out a pastoral letter this spring, owing to some combinations that have come up which we thought best to have untangled so far as we could before putting out a letter of this kind. But the hope is that we will not have any of these things bother us during the rest of the year, and while our record for last year was very good, we would like to have it better this year; in fact we would like to see this the banner year for this mission. Lose no opportunity that comes to you to make a new opening, unless there are serious causes that prevent. Once more let me urge upon you to be very careful not to leave a good interest for any trivial reason; be sure your work has all been done that you feel can be done at that time before you leave. Some mistakes have been made in the past along this line, no doubt, but we should profit by some of the mistakes we make, or that we see others make.

As a missionary force we crave the hearty cooperation of all the local ministry; there is plenty of room for both and to spare; so there should be no conflict nor jealousy on the part of either. I wish to urge every elder and priest who are not directly engaged in the care of branch work, to put out appointments in the vicinity of their homes and get out every Sunday and fill them. In this way you can do a great deal of good and reach many that would not come under the sound of the gospel in any other way. All such work should be reported to the minister in charge the same as any other missionary work.

All reports should be made the same as heretofore, on July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1, the last one mentioned should be for the whole year. These reports should be in my hands by the 10th of the several months named, without fail. Brethren, there is little excuse for any of you forgetting these reports or the time of reporting, and you should not neglect it. I hope you will remember this so I will not have to call attention to it again this year. District presidents will please take notice, and report at the same time the missionaries do. I hope that the district presidents will be more prompt than last year.

I desire to keep in touch with all the missionaries and to the end that I may do so I want everyone to write at least every two weeks and let me know where you are and what you are doing; and in case of an emergency arising I can find you without too much delay.

It has been necessary to make a few changes since conference in order to meet the conditions that arose.

Brother A. E. Burr will labor in the Northern Michigan District instead of the Western District.

Brother Samuel T. Pendleton will labor in the Eastern Michigan District in the place of Brother H. E. C. Muir, who, because of home conditions, has been released for the conference year.

Brother David E. Dowker will labor in the city of Chicago and its suburbs.

Brother S. O. Foss will labor in the Manitoulin Island and western Ontario, including the Soo's.

Brother James Pycok will labor in eastern Ontario, where he labored last year, until directed otherwise.

Brother Otto Fetting will labor in the Central Michigan District, in the stead of Brother David D. Smith, who has been released for cause.

If any other changes become necessary they will be made from time to time as the emergency may require.

I will not appoint any assistants in charge unless the work shall demand it. So all reports should be sent direct to me.

In case of debates arising, consult with the minister in charge whenever it is possible; if an emergency arises, in humility and prayer meet it and do the best you can.

Make the opening of new places the special work, but seek to make the opening permanent if possible, so that we can work the point again if an interest should be awakened.

Don't run from place to place when there is no necessity, nor idle your time around home, or some place where you like to stay, but where you can accomplish nothing, lest you injure your influence; for thereby you destroy your usefulness, to an extent at least. Acquit yourselves like men of God that need not to be ashamed.

We solicit the hearty cooperation of the Saints everywhere; assist the missionary whenever you can in means and moral support, and don't forget the local man who is striving to do all he can to spread the good news, but let us be workers together for the great cause in which we are engaged, for it is the great hope of the world to-day.

After some thought and consultation I have decided to make the headquarters of the mission, for this year, in the city of Chicago, Illinois, and after June 1 my field address will be 1609 Walnut Street, Chicago, Illinois, unless further notice is given. My home address is Lamoni, Iowa, and all mail sent to that address will find me in due time.

May the Lord abundantly bless you in all your labors and association in the interests of his work.

Your brother and colaborer,

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

Minister in Charge.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 20, 1912.

CLERGY RATES—TRANS-CONTINENTAL AND CANADIAN NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

Attention is called to extension of clergy rates into North-west Canadian territory and elsewhere, by the Trans-Continental Clergy Bureau. Particulars are given in circulars of instruction issued by said bureau, to be pasted in clergy credential books issued for the present year.

In addition to the foregoing, the following is published:

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, May 20, 1912.

Died.

KEENE.—At Porterville, California. Mrs. Martha Keene was born in Oxfordshire, England, December 28, 1821, came to America 62 years ago. During ensuing years made her home successively in New York, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, and Colorado. Four children survive: Charles Keene, Mrs. Ida Cooper, of Illinois; Mrs. Lena Lynch, of Illinois; and Mrs. Eliza Atkin of South Dakota; grandchildren, Miss Bertha Keene, Mrs. Pearl Gibler, Mrs. Vena Walker of Wyoming, and Bert Keene. Funeral services from the McCabe chapel, May 6, Reverend George Steed officiating. The body was sent to Greenview, Illinois, for interment in the cemetery beside her husband.

JOHNSON.—John Johnson was born October 23, 1834, at Lancashire, England; married December 29, 1858, to Margaret Houghton; emigrated to America in 1865. To them were born ten children, six of which have preceded the father in death. He united with the Christian Church in 1859 and continued until in 1888 he united with the Reorganized Church, being baptized November 3, 1888, by Elder C. St. Clair. He was ordained an elder September 15, 1889. Has been a member of the I. O. O. F. Died at his home in Holden, Missouri, April 12, 1912. He leaves to mourn, wife, one son, three daughters, and eleven grandchildren, besides a host of friends. He loved the gospel and his long life in this vicinity has won the respect and esteem of all, as was shown by the large crowd at the funeral. Sermon by H. E. Moler, assisted by F. C. Scarcliff and Walter W. Smith. Interment in the Holden Cemetery.

MAYER.—Sister Elizabeth Mayer died April 2, 1912, at her home in Hiteman, Iowa, of heart disease, aged 69 years. She was born in Hanley, England, in 1843; married Fergus Mayer July 17, 1860. She obeyed the gospel at What Cheer, Iowa, being baptized and confirmed a member of the church, by Elder Nathaniel Miller, September 15, 1889. There was a short address given at the residence, Wednesday, April 3, by Elder E. J. Giles, then the remains was prepared for shipment to Lucas, Iowa, where the funeral sermon was preached in the Saints' church, by Brother E. B. Morgan. Interment in the Lucas Cemetery by the side of her beloved husband, who preceded her in death seven years. She leaves five children to mourn her death.

THOMPSON.—Lora E. Rust was born in Oquawka, Illinois, May 26, 1876; died May 14, 1912, in Gladstone, Illinois; united in marriage July 4, 1902, to Theodore Thompson. One son, Clifford, was born to this union. She leaves a husband, son, aged father and mother, three sisters and two brothers to mourn. Funeral services held in the Methodist church at Gladstone, conducted by O. E. Sade, assisted by Reverend French. Interment in the South Henderson Cemetery.

THOMAS.—Sister Elmyra Thomas passed from earth life on May 12, 1912, at the ripe age of 81 years, 22 days. She was buried at Sonoma, California, May 17, on a beautiful mountain side. Two sons and three daughters remain to mourn a good and faithful mother. Funeral sermon by Elder J. M. Terry, at the undertaking parlors in Sonoma.

A Remarkable Prophecy Came True.

In the June American Magazine there is reproduced an extract from a conversation held in 1827 by Goethe the great German poet and a friend of his, in which Goethe made the following extraordinary prophecies:

"It may be foreseen that the United States, with its decided predilection to the West, will, in thirty or forty years, have occupied, and peopled the large tract of land beyond the Rocky Mountains. It may, furthermore, be foreseen that along the whole coast of the Pacific Ocean, where nature has already formed the most capacious and secure harbors, important commercial towns will gradually arise, for the furtherance of a great intercourse between China and the East Indies and the United States. In such a case, it would not only be desirable, but almost necessary, that a more rapid communication should be maintained between the eastern and western shores of North America, both by merchant ships and men-of-war, than has hitherto been possible with the tedious, disagreeable and expensive voyage round Cape Horn. I therefore repeat, that it is absolutely indispensable for the United States to effect a passage from the Mexican Gulf to the Pacific Ocean; and I am certain they will do it.

"Would that I might live to see it!—but I shall not. I should like to see another thing—a junction, of the Danube and the Rhine. But this undertaking is so gigantic that I have doubts of its completion, particularly when I consider our German resources. And thirdly, and lastly, I should wish to see England in possession of a canal through the Isthmus of Suez.

"Would I could live to see these three great works! It would be well worth the trouble to last some fifty years more for the very purpose."

To serve God joyously is to help to purify and increase the good of the world.—R. J. Campbell.

FINDING HOMES FOR ORPHANED AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

James said that pure religion and undefiled included visiting the fatherless and the widows in their affliction. He also said that it included keeping one's self unspotted from the vices of the world. The King James Version has it "unspotted from the world." The Inspired Version is more liberal, as well as more exact, and renders it "unspotted from the vices of the world." We may yet learn some good lessons from the world; but we are to keep clear of its vices.

If we are to accept the definition of religion that James laid down, we must admit that some whom we might proudly term "worldly," or at least "sectarian," are performing one of the functions of religion; i. e., caring for destitute and fatherless children.

Some months ago a certain Catholic institution brought a car load of orphaned children from New York to Colorado, and in a very few days all of them were placed in private homes. At a Chautauqua in Missouri last summer representatives of a certain children's home brought three little children to an afternoon session, and homes were found for all of them before the meeting closed for the afternoon; and many more could have been placed, so many were eager to take them.

We quote now a vivid little story from The Outlook, May 11, 1912, written by a regular correspondent, "The Spectator":

In the office of the side street hotel in a western town the Spectator saw two score men and women. The prairie town was as excited as if a convention were in session. The Spectator asked a farmer-looking man the reason.

"Them children," he explained. "There's fourteen of 'em. They come from New York last evening, and are goin' to be give away."

Over in the corner were the little folks, comfortably dressed, chubby-faced, and hearty. The buxom matron in charge was tying hoods, fixing stockings, and buttoning coats. The children were wiggling restlessly, and it kept the matron busy. They had been on the cars three days, and landed out in the middle of Kansas, where everything was so strange. No trolley cars, no skyscrapers, no noise—only wide sweeps of open plain, clear sunny skies, and the village set amid wheat farms and stock ranches. A notice in the county paper had brought from long distances those curious to see what city orphans looked like or eager to secure a child for a childless home.

Some suspicion was with it all. To these Westerners it seemed unreasonable that really good children would be brought so far west.

But they were good children. "If I didn't have a family, I'd like that boy," enthusiastically exclaimed an onlooker. "See him scrap with his brother—he's all right." Then there was a round-faced, red-cheeked, two-year-old girl over whom the women hovered as if she were a priceless jewel.

"Better round 'em up, madam," broke in my former acquaintance. The matron took her flock in tow and began what proved to be a triumphal procession to the "opry-house." Business men came to their doors; men and women hurried to join the parade.

The hall was filled when the Spectator reached it. Three hundred interested persons had their attention fixed on the stage, and no show troupe ever had such intense attention as did the fourteen somewhat frightened kiddies who sat in a row behind the footlights. In the eyes of many women was a glisten of tears; somehow it seemed to them, unused to such scenes, almost like an auction block.

But that passed away when the smiling matron rose to explain. She told about the work of the New York's Children's Aid Society, of its twelve thousand children, of its hospitals, of its convalescents' homes, of its work through past years. She mentioned that one of its wards is now governor of a leading western State; that a mayor of a large western city is another; that business men of prominence had thus found homes in childhood. She pleaded the necessity of placing the little ones in good families, and outlined the conditions under which they must be taken. A local committee, seven business men and a physician, was present.

If the grown-ups who looked over the children thought it was a prize drawing—and some of them seemed to have that idea—they were speedily disabused of it by the energetic and positive matron.

"I want that boy," declared one blustering, assertive man.

"Do you own your home?" came the question.

"Yes, and it's a good one; furnace, bath, hardwood floors and—"

"Never mind about the description," broke in the business-like matron. "To what church do you go?"

"Well—well, I don't go much, but my wife does." The man was a little abashed.

"I am afraid it would be hard work for your wife and this child to carry you into heaven. No, you can not have the boy." The little fellow was sent to a farm nine miles from the city.

The farmers had the first choice—as they seem to have of everything in Kansas. The matron believed it better for the children to be on farms than to be loafing around town.

Curious were the comments of the people in the hall.

Mothers told of their trials in bringing up children. Elderly folk whose families had grown and departed from the home nest expressed their loneliness. Homes where death had taken away a loved one were revealed, the sorrowing parents' grief renewed by the sight of possibilities for relieving their lonesomeness.

Somehow a sort of hysteria pervaded the feminine portion of the little town. In groups the women talked over the event, and many parents with more children of their own than they could give full care, or without means for caring for any, impetuously applied for one of the little strangers. But the matron had been through such experience, and firmly refused all such appeals.

"Do not think that you can come here and get a chore boy," she warned the farmers. "These children will be visited once a year, and if they are not sent to school and taught and properly cared for as they should be, we shall take them away."

In the end the people of the community who had thought they would be conferring a favor on the children woke up to the fact that, instead, a favor was to be conferred upon themselves, so searching were the regulations.

The children themselves were overwhelmed by the excitement. At first it was something of a lark. But when each child was surrounded by a half dozen strange women and men, all talking and plucking at the child's garments in a hurried way, it brought nervousness.

Then there were brothers and sisters—four of the party were from one family. As the groups were separated and the smaller ones saw brother or sister taken away by a stranger, the tears flowed. One large boy, whose baby sister was given to a farmer's wife, sat at the edge of the stage and sobbed piteously. But it came out all right. The baby sister, too, cried all night, and the next day the big-hearted farmer drove to town and took the boy. It was difficult to tell which was happier—the farmer or the children. . . .

"I suppose you will bring another party here soon," the Spectator suggested. "There seems to be room for many more."

"No, not now," was the matron's response. "It will be better for these people to think that it is a privilege to have the children than that it should become too common an occurrence."

Maybe she was right. Certainly the day's unusual events had brought a new ideal of service to the community, and had wakened it to better things.

Charitable institutions, churches, and students of sociology, after long study and costly experimenting, have reached the practically unanimous conclusion that it is best whenever possible to place orphaned and destitute children in private homes rather than in institutions. As President Frederick M. Smith said at the late conference, "There is only one thing that can replace a broken home, and that is another home."

No institution, however good, can take the place of a home. In institutions children are "institutionalized"; and those who have observed claim that they can tell an "institutionalized" child wherever they see him. He is not like the normal child who grows up in a private home. He will always lack some of the experiences that should help him later when he comes to be a home maker himself. How can one make a home who has not lived in one?

Of course strict inquiry must be made as to the character of the home that opens its door to the waif. It must be a good home—and one that wants a son or a daughter; not a servant. An oversight with occasional visits must be maintained by some responsible person to see that the child has been properly placed. But experience has taught these men and women that it is not difficult to find scores and hundreds of homes, good homes, where children will be welcomed. The appeal of the child is almost irresistible.

And there is another phase of the question. If there are children needing homes, there are also homes needing children. The highest philanthropy, and the best Christianity, will bring the two together. We know of numbers of cases in the church where childless homes have been greatly benefited, given new life and joy by the adoption of a little child. It was a blessing to the child, but not less so to the home. A single act brought dual blessing.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE LAW OF SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children.—Ephesians 4: 13, 14.

Some people hold that conversion is instantaneous. That as soon as one accepts Jesus he becomes absolutely sanctified, perfect, and unable to sin. Others, while not claiming any such perfection for themselves, seem to demand it of others, and are shocked and grieved to discover that there are still some petty faults in those who have entered the church.

Both classes ignore the divine and natural law of growth. Jesus said that men must be "born again," that they must become "as little children." Little children do not grow to the full stature of manhood in a single day. They acquire stature and substance by slow process; and from their parents and teachers and from experience they gradually accumulate knowledge, which is stored in the convolutions of expanding brains. That is nature's way, and God's way in spiritual things is consonant,—“line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little,” till we reach the “measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ” and are henceforth “no more children.”

Jesus stated the law of growth thus: “First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.”—Mark 5: 27.

Paul recognized the law of progression, for he said: “Therefore leaving [not leaving, Inspired Version] the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection.”—Hebrews 6: 1.

Peter takes up the theme, and borrowing a simile from the schoolroom, presents the matter as one of addition, a gradual bringing together in one's own character those traits that are preeminently Christian: "And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity."—2 Peter 1: 5-7.

Again we read of gradual transformation, from glory to glory: "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."—2 Corinthians 3: 18.

It is a good thing for us to remember that there was a time when we were not perfect, no matter what our present status may be, and most of us need not congratulate ourselves that we are perfect now. Such a thought makes us more patient with others who are not yet perfect.

Paul says: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things."—1 Corinthians 13: 11.

It will do us good to remember that we were once children, for then we can bear more patiently with those who are still children, with those who are to-day where we were yesterday.

A group of boys were engaged in a clod fight. They were hiding behind trees and around corners and in the loft of an old barn. Occasionally a head would appear around a corner and immediately would become the target for a fusillade of clods. They were having a hilarious and noisy time. A man watching them laughed heartily at their antics. His wife frowned and said: "I do not see anything in that to laugh at."

The man replied: "It reminds me of the time when I was a boy and engaged in cob fights. Many a cob was broken over my poor head."

The wife retorted: "Well, I do not see anything in that to laugh at, either."

Of course she did not. She had never been a boy. He would have discovered nothing amusing in a doll party. He had never been a girl. We appreciate and understand the things through which we have passed. When we remember that we were once children we can appreciate the joys and sorrows of childhood. When we remember that we were once children in the church, children spiritually, we can sympathize with those who are still children spiritually, and bear with their mistakes and help them in their trials.

But God deliver us from the man who does not realize that he ever did make mistakes, who thinks that he is perfect now and has always been perfect. These are the bigots who burn heretics at the stake.

This, however, is not a plea for those who are born into the church and then refuse to grow up. If there is anything pathetic in the world it is the spectacle of a child that has never grown up—whose mind has never enlarged, whose dwarfed and twisted body has never developed. If there is anything worse, it is the spectacle of a man born into the kingdom of God years ago who has never grown up; who is still playing with the habits and vices and pleasures and corruptions that amused him forty years ago, things that he should have put away long ago, as Paul did, and become a man in Christ Jesus.

May God help us to grow up.

"But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A WORD OF CAUTION REGARDING CANDIDATES TO THE POSITION OF "THE ONE MIGHTY AND STRONG."

Shortly after the late General Conference a certain brother remarked to us: "I am rather surprised to find a number of our men who are aspiring to very high position. I was astonished when certain of them confided in me that they were the 'one mighty and strong' who is to set the Lord's house in order."

Probably the number who entertain and announce such ideas is comparatively very small, and does not include leading or representative men. Yet it has come to our notice that certain ones do hold such opinions of themselves and their future work, and a word of caution along this line may not be out of order.

In the first place, it must be evident that all but one of these men are deceived, at the best, with a strong probability that all of them are deceived. It is very clear that not all of them are to do this great work. Granting that one of them may be so called, all the others are mistaken. And we are not prepared to admit that even one of them is so called, for the individual called of God to do such a great work would be discreet enough and in possession of sufficient saving common sense to keep his own counsel and wait for God to move in the matter and reveal in proper ways the one so called. A man who can not rule his own tongue and keep his own secret is not the one "mighty and strong."

It is always very unwise for one to advertise the fact that he is to be called to some high place in the church. Such a course subjects the individual to the suspicion that he is ambitious and self-seeking, if no other harm results, and may even subject the call, when it comes, if it ever does come, to the suspicion that it is not genuine. The Lord knows his church and every individual in it, and in his own due time can and will announce his choice of men to fill particular positions. In the meantime let us maintain our silence and attend to the work immediately at hand, not worrying unduly about imaginary duties that wait dimly in the unformed future.

It is suggested that some of those who are laboring under the hallucination that they are "Baurak Ale" or "Baneemy" may be victims of demoniacal influences. This may be true in some cases, because we know of at least one individual who while claiming to be the one "mighty and strong" is personally so weak that he yields himself to habits that are forbidden in the Doctrine and Covenants and to very low forms of vice, bearing in his own person the refutation of his claim to might and strength and divine calling. But there may be others of purity of character and undoubted integrity concerning whom it will be charitable to suppose that they are victims of auto-suggestion.

It is possible for one to brood over a certain idea until he becomes dominated by it and is in fact a monomaniac. Constant dwelling on one theme and upon one plan of operation may at last lead one to believe that it is the only solution to existing problems, and that he is the one divinely appointed to put it into execution; and so he may come to identify himself with some prophetic character that is to appear in time and do great things. Scores of persons have become possessed of the idea that they were to be one of the two "witnesses" mentioned in Revelation who are to be murdered and lie in the streets of Jerusalem. It is needless to say that along this road of suggestion and auto-suggestion lies the way toward insanity. It is a dangerous path.

As before stated, most or all of these aspirants to the position of the one "mighty and strong" are deceived, for in the nature of the case only one can occupy that position. It may do those individuals good to stop and ask themselves seriously if it is not possible, yes probable, that they are the ones who are mistaken. And if they are wise they will put such exalted ambitions out of mind, or in the parlance of the street "forget it," and go on with the work that is to be done to-day, no matter how humble. If God has a greater work for them to do, by and by he will reveal it in due time so that the church will know beyond doubt concerning their calling.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

To work; to help and be helped; to learn sympathy through suffering; to learn faith by perplexity; to reach truth through wonder—behold! this is what it is to prosper, this is what it is to live.—Phillips Brooks.

"In quietness and confidence shall be your strength," is the verse that has come to me with wonderful sweetness this morning. It tells me that I must put my whole trust for salvation and for service in the absolutely free, full and wholly unmerited mercy of God. Although I have long professed to know this to be so, still I find myself, even yet, thinking now and then of this or that thing which I must do in order to make sure of my acceptance with God.

For myself, at any rate, "Be still and know that I am God" is about the hardest lesson for me to learn. I hope to learn it, now that I am strong and well, and without waiting to be laid upon the sick bed where quietly trusting would be all that I could possibly do.—Aphion, in Christian Intelligencer.

A name always comes to have so much in it that no man can rightly be indifferent to what goes into his name. Some names are so crowded to the brim with kindly deeds and sound counsel and clean living that a mention of them quickens the best there is in us, and creates an inspiring mental picture. Other names, when mentioned, give rise to very different emotions, because what has gone into those names in the making is so unworthy. What does your name suggest, what kind of a picture does it bring to the mind of friends and neighbors? The kind of living that goes into the making of a name, whether we will or not, is the kind of living that the name will quicken in others.—S. S. Times.

Thy face toward the untrodden ways.
Open thine eyes to see
The good in store for thee—
New love, new thought, new service too
For him who daily maketh thy life new—
Nor think thou aught is lost
Or left behind upon the silent coast
Of thy spent years;
Give o'er thy faithless fears.
Whate'er of real good—
Of thought or deed or holier mood—
Thy life hath known,
Abideth still thine own
And hath within significance
Of more than time's inheritance.
Thy good is prophecy
Of better still to be.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 27.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

The last, and "eleventh" proposition militates as much against the apostles of the primitive church, as it does against any possible successors. The "demonstration" which Traum so vauntingly refers to as being given by Paul, seems to have been woefully lacking revelation in the Bible, with reference to Andrew, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew, Lebbaeus, Simon the Canaanite, Matthias, and others. According to Traum they were not apostles, for he affirms that "there is nothing short of the same demonstration which these men (the original twelve) made, that will show any man to-day entitled to that high station. Then these men whom Jesus chose, and ordained, and called apostles, were not apostles. Jesus, and the men who recorded that they were such, made a mistake. Traum can not find where these men, of the twelve, ever gave the "demonstration" he refers to; and we now submit to Mr. Traum the conclusion to which he is driven, that if these men were ordained to "bring forth fruit, and the fruits of the church were such 'demonstrations' as peace, joy, righteousness in the Holy Ghost, miracles, signs, gifts, and wonders, and their fruits," "demonstrations," were to remain, he has placed the millstone around the neck of his assumptions that will sink them to the bottom, beyond the power of rising or resuscitation.

"The process" by which men are constituted apostles in this year of grace is no different than in the days of the church's establishment, and if the Campbellites could "restore the church, or build it anew on apostolic foundations," February, 1828, (see Hayden's History, page 128,) "at Austintown, Ohio," without a process essentially the same as was required in the days of the church's first establishment, they could do something Jesus Christ did not dare to do. And as they, the Campbellites, affirm that they did "restore the church, or built it anew, on apostolic foundations," and left out the first class of officers with all others called of God, which Jesus chose, and whom "God set in the church," it follows that when they affirm they have "restored" the church, "built it anew, on apostolic foundations," they have falsified in this claim, and prove by their own logic that they do not believe in any "process," by which the church was established by the Son of God. And any "process" adopted by this church defended by Traum, in its establishment or progress not in accordance with process adopted by the Christ in the establishment and progress of the apostolic church, "is as wicked as it is presumptuous, and possible only to one who is a party to as great a fraud" and conspiracy against the last "will and testament" of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, as the Campbellites are shown to be.

Elder Traum's italicized conclusion of "eleventh," is a "roorback." If the "apostolic succession of men" is impossible, then on the same ground the succession of "elders," evangelists, deacons, or any other or all of the New Testament officers is impossible, for the same little adverb, "till," in Ephesians 4: 13, limits the existence, the continuation of one class of officers just where it does another class, and limits all classes of officers where it limits one. If it limits apostles, prophets, and other general officers to the church's establishment, it limits evangelists, elders, bishops, etc., to the church's first establishment. This being true, they all expired by an "act of limitation"; they are therefore, all intransmissible; none were therefore transmitted into the so-called Disciple Church of recent date. This being the legitimate result of the above premises, it is absolutely without any of the original and divine officers. A sheer skeleton,—a nondescript. Again, inasmuch as the validity of all acts depends upon official authority, and the church defended by Elder Traum, being excluded from all authority, is it not tangible, and plain, therefore, that all of their acts in imitation of the primitive, or New Testament ministers, are in and of themselves null and void? It is, therefore, a batch of daring assumptions, equalled only by the "man of sin," exalting itself above God!

Again, to decide upon the character of an organization, it is essential to first ascertain in whom the sovereignty resides. A. Campbell says: "The community, the church, the multitude of the faithful are the fountain of official power. This power descends from the body itself, not from its servants." All officers, then, are filled by the voice and ordination of the people. Vox populi vox dei? No, no; deity is not recognized as the supreme "fountain of power," the church, the multitude of the faithful are the "fountain of power." (See Christian System, page 84, article 19.) Just how the church defended by Traum can get God fitted into the structure is difficult to determine. Inasmuch as there are only two sources of supreme authority, or power, first the people or king, second the body or head, and in all the variously constructed, and specific forms of government, whether we refer to a democratic, republican, aristocratic, kingly, or elective monarchy, there can be but two classes of supreme authority,—the inner or ecclesiastical, called the spiritual; the outer, civil, called the political. Political administrative authority is conventional, and delegated, derived immediately from the body politic,—such is human authority on the principle ascending. The spiritual administrative authority is conferred immediately by the head, or king, on the principle descending. Now notice the organic law embodied in the genus Campbellism,—that which he promulgates is that by which Traum, and all others of the species, organize, that all offices in the church are filled by the voice and ordination of the people, the community of the faithful, “the church” is the “fountain of power,” the supreme power is vested in the body. The administrative authority originates in the body. The “call,” selection, and ordination originate from the body, the voice of the body alone. Thus the body creates its own organization. The principle is political, the organization is, therefore, political, a politico-ecclesiastical organization. Where now is the head of the church, with this organic law of Campbell’s evicting him? Is it any wonder they oppose the Lord’s plan of church government?

Time and oft, in debate, have they endeavored to stand on the statement “that all the primitive classes of officers set in the church by the Lord,—the head of the body,—are still occupying the offices to which they were chosen.” Then if this be true there are no offices to fill. All being filled, the present pretended ministry of the so-called Christian Church are all out of office,—divested of all authority. Then I respectfully suggest that they “hold off,” and permit the original class,—the only ones in office,—to perform the specific work assigned them. Nay, further, the present ministry, in pretension, are not only excluded from all the divine offices by their own admitted premises, they never can entertain the most distant hope of ever being inducted into any, they can never get in, for up comes the key principle, that “the primitive ministers have no successors in office.” Locks them out, tous ionan tou ionon!

Nay, more; until they go and be inducted by the original class of administrators, the only ones having official authority, they can by no logic in all the universe demonstrate that they are yet in the church of Jesus Christ, and as they assert that the primitive officers are not with them now, personally, therefore they can never get in, on their own hypothesis.

“The succession of truth,” says Traum, “is the only succession that will meet the exigencies of the case.” But, we ask, what has truth succeeded? Has it succeeded itself? Does he mean the “will” has been defeated? If he means by “truth,” the “word of God” (John 17: 17), Mr. Campbell is against him. In the Christian System, page 80, that “the meaning of this [Christian] institution has been buried under the rubbish of human tradition for hundreds of years. It was lost in the Dark Ages, and has never been till recently disinterred.” Again, “the gospel of Jesus Christ has not been laid open to mankind in its original plainness, simplicity, and majesty” since “the grand apostasy was completed.” But if the truth, the constitutional law of the kingdom of God, has been perpetuating itself independent of its own provisions of administrative authority, it has been woefully ignored by the society which A. Campbell founded, for he left the direct line of succession when he broke off from the Presbyterians and Baptists, and originated an additional apostasy. Besides all this, the current reformation under Campbell, Scott, and Stone claims to be “the restoration of the apostles’ teaching and practice in all things; in faith, conversion, baptism, the office of the Holy Spirit, church order, summarily everything authorized by Jesus Christ the author and finisher of the Christian religion.”—History of the Disciples, Hayden, p. 21.

The pillars of this movement assuredly recognize their work as being a recovery of truth from the wreck of primitive ruins, and the terms “restore,” “restored,” and “restoration,” of the primitive order, arrangement, etc., are applied to their work over fifteen times in this one (Hayden’s) history! Had a succession of truth met the gaze of those men who claimed to have emerged from the great, the completed apostasy, they would have seen the regularly organized institution with a crown of twelve stars, and the brilliant halo of divine revelation encircling its brow, with full complement of divinely commissioned officers, the machinery perfectly adjusted with the belt of priesthood authority connecting it with the motor power above, moving under the operation of the Holy Spirit, conquering and to conquer; such a living photograph of the body of Christ, with members set to do duty by the Author and Finisher thereof, before which Cæsar’s household in imperial Rome bowed, and maritime cities and provinces yielded their allegiance. Had this occurred as an accompaniment of the succession of truth (and this is just what would have come), then the work of these pioneer “restorers” would have been unnecessary! But the efforts of Campbell, Stone, Scott, et al., with characterizations attaching to their work, all back of Elder Traum’s day, make his assertions look queer indeed. These men did not share the opinion of Elder Traum, that “succession of truth,” from the apostles’ time, was a truth. “God shall send them strong delusion,” says the apostle, “that they should believe a lie,” as Satan’s power overshadowed the world, with “all decievableness of unrighteousness.” (2 Thessalonians 2: 10, 11.) “For by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.”—Revelation 18: 23. So Mr. Campbell concluded as follows:

But the root of all the corruptions of Christianity was the incorporating with it the opinions and speculations of Egyptian and Indian philosophy. All the systems flourishing upon the earth when Jesus was born were, with the exception of the Jewish (and that we all know, was much corrupted), mere systems of abstract opinions and speculations. Grecian and Roman, as well as the eastern philosophy, had filled all the reasoning part of society with the most airbuilt and visionary schemes about matter and mind, creation and providence. Conversions from these ranks, from all the sects of philosophers, polluted, finally polluted, the Christian sanctuary. So that Christianity became with them a science, a fit subject of speculation as much as any of the doctrines of Plato or Socrates. From these unhallowed commixtures sprang the creed systems of ancient and modern times, so that finally almost every vestige of the ancient simplicity and the true genius of Christianity disappeared, and various schemes of sectarian and philosophic Christianity succeeded and supplanted it.—Debate, "Evidences of Christianity," p. 369.

The woman which went into apostasy—"the wilderness," was labeled, "mystery Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and the abomination of the earth." (Revelation 17: 5.) Mr. Campbell calls her "the apostate church," and "she had changed even the Bible itself," and "the entire diction of the Christian institution." He said "her head was the man of sin who seated himself in the temple [church] of God." He called both her and her daughters "an adulterous brood, who had transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant"; he accused this brood of "forming alliance with the governments of the earth," predicted that "God would judge them, and deliver them over to the burning flame!" See Christian System, also Christian Baptism, page 13.

Walter Scott says, of the churches which sprang from her: "They have destroyed the body of Christ. They have put the visible church out of existence. . . . They are branches without either a root or a stock." See Union of Christians, by W. Scott. According to these leaders, her daughters are those churches organized by men who came out of her communion. A. Campbell came out of the Presbyterian Church, attached himself to the Baptists, but in so doing simply abandoned one of the daughters to keep company with her sister, but both of the same parentage. He seceded from the Baptist Church, and all the authority he had to start the Disciple machinery agoing, was that he inherited from the two daughters, who in turn received all they possessed from their notable mother. He left the daughters, and presented to the world a granddaughter—the Disciple Church. Barton W. Stone says: "While the various sects retain their jarring creeds—their different yokes—their various standards—their party names, and especially their sectarian spirit, and unbelieving members, is it possible that any bond could make them one, according to the prayer of Jesus? Yet in Babylon,—yet in the great city of confusion. . . . Some may boast that they have clean escaped from the city of abominations. I fear I have not seen any of this happy number."—Barton Stone's work. What is the difficulty in Traum's case? Does he believe the "field notes" left him by these men who claimed to "run the original survey," and who affirmed that their work "saw at its end and sought nothing less than the deorganization of sect, and the reorganization of the saints on the new covenant, in the express terms and conditions divinely set forth in the Holy Scriptures?"—Hayden's History, pp. 128, 158. Or, is now like the popes of Rome, one interprets ex cathedra, to be followed by another, whose ex cathedra is used to damn the testimony of his predecessor?

"DETECTOR."

Pages 193 to 199, Elder Traum devotes to expressions of horror, because Elder Blair has stated that the Bible as the word of God was "fragmentary," and being compelled to admit the same fact, from the teachings of the Bible with reference to something like twenty-two books mentioned, but not compiled in its collections, and the emphatic statement of John 21: 25, that "there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written, every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written." Traum concludes "Kelley's detector" is imperfect. If this conclusion is legitimate, that the detector, or standard, the Bible is imperfect because that "detector," standard mentions other parts, books, prophecies, revelations, from the same source as the detector itself, then on the same principle of reasoning, the standard silver dollar that we have in circulation is imperfect as a standard, or detector, as it argues the existence of large quantities of the same metal in the mine or in the mint. According to this logic, when David affirms that "the law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul" (Psalm 19: 7), a thousand years before Christ, he told an untruth, because all the fragments that composed the perfect standard at that time were not in existence, as all that part of the Old Testament, with the whole of New Testament subsequently, were added. But Traum thinks there is conflict between Elders Kelley and Blair, one saying the Bible is fragmentary on the subject of "evidences of the priesthood," and the other that in the Bible the duties of officers are laid down "and defined." Now this conflict exists only in his imagination. One is speaking of the officers of the New Testament church, and the other of priesthood authority in all ages of the world. Besides, those "rules" that are in the New Testament pertaining to the priesthood, and the "duties" of officers under the priesthood, are the subjects discussed by those men. Our critic ought to know that the technical arraignment of men as to the use of terms employed, can be carried into the New Testament, and this idea of "making a man an offender for a word," is a subject of Hebrew prophecy. In the first Corinthian letter the Apostle Paul, in delivering strict discipline regarding the Lord's Supper, says:

And if any man hunger, let him eat at home: that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come.—1 Corinthians 11: 34.

Elder Traum has not seen the process, "the due process of law," by which Paul "set in order," the Corinthian church. This part of Paul's responsibility to the local congregation, in his service to Christ, not "independent," and by virtue of his priesthood authority, has not come down to us in the Bible. This is just what we want, the how he set it in order. But when we look over the writings of Apostle Peter, he seems to recognize that he had more than Paul. That God has "given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness," yet his brother apostle was concerned, "lest that by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

"These are more than private views publicly expressed; they are the pronouncements of the church upon the subjects treated." "Evidently Paul has not been convinced by the evidence that is so clear to Peter." We may profit by the apostle's statement recorded in 2 Peter 3: 15, 16:

even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction.

Elder Traum states an unwarranted conclusion on page 196, i. e., "having eliminated the book which they have used as the detector they bring their converts at last to an acceptance of the doctrine of the completeness of continuous revelation." Ah, no; by the acceptance of, and abiding in, the New Testament doctrine, "the converts" prove that when Jesus said:

He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. Judas saith unto him, (not Iscariot) Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.—John 14: 21-23, that he spake the truth. Not eliminating the detector but by using as "the man of counsel," and abiding thereby. But does Elder Traum remember the time his illustrious predecessor discouraged the people by discrediting the version known as "the authorized"? In chapter 27, section 5, page 90, Christian System, Mr. Campbell says: "So negligent, too, has the kingdom of Christ been on some of these points ('Expediency' is the title of the chapter), that she has not at this hour a received copy of the Living Oracles. We American and English people have a received version by authority of a king, but we have not a received original, by authority of any king or government, civil or ecclesiastic. A startling fact, truly! But who dares to deny it?"

In Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, page 230, W. T. Moore furnishes a paper on "The turbulent period." He says, on this point: "They felt that the Authorized Version, though incomparable in many respects, was, nevertheless, in some important particulars, far from what it ought to be. Mr. Campbell had himself taught them to discredit King James's Version, as he had published a version made by George Campbell, Philip Doddridge, and others." This translation, it is averred, "was a disappointment to the brotherhood," but it reveals a cause as to Campbell "eliminating" the Authorized Version. If there is an iota of grace on the point of Elder Traum's pen, it flows poorly, from the fountain that directed this stream of mind away from "mother's Bible."

AN APPEAL TO YOUNG MEN; ESPECIALLY TO THOSE OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH.

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him."—Genesis 1: 28.

Young man, pause for a moment. In your feverish pursuit of the pleasures and vanities of the world, in your inordinate desire to gratify passion, in your mad endeavor to still the call of the carnal, and to satisfy the cravings of an insatiable lust, have you stopped to consider what and who you are? You are that physical organism which has responded to the creative touch of the finger of the Almighty. You are that spiritual being who has enjoyed the communion of angels in the presence of God and his Only Begotten. You, body and spirit, are that inimitable creation into whom he breathed the breath of life—fashioned in his likeness—think! Formed in his own image! That divine spirit force that made you a living soul gave you also power of physical and mental action whereby cometh the agency of man.

The inexpressible wonders of that physical organism, as much as the finite mind has been able to comprehend, are open to your scrutiny. They are unfolded in the pages of science. Poor as they are in comparison to the Infinite, they are not to be despised. Yet in all your research, be mindful of the fact that science is but the result of the conclusions of man, and that to err is human, while inspiration and revelation is the revelation of the divine mind of God to man. Then let the books of divine law, past and present, be your guide, the standard by which to weigh truth and what is claimed to be truth.

That which is the word of God is true. Conform science then to divine truth as revealed in the law, and if she has uncovered a new principle it can not conflict, for truth, from whatever source obtained, can not contradict itself. In this lies our only safeguard. The opposite course leads to error, darkness, and infidelity. The marvels of that spiritual man are contained in holy writ, past and present, and reaching into the future, the final destiny of the soul. Drink deep of the true fountains, remembering also that "every good and perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of Light, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." A knowledge of self in the physical as well as the moral is one of the essentials to fit yourself for life's work. Pope says, in his essay on man, "The proper study of mankind is man." Study then to know yourself. Ignorance has ever been the cloak of vice. But let us move along in our analysis.

And God said, Let them have dominion over the fish of the sea and over the fowls of the air and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over everything that creepeth and crawleth upon the earth.—Genesis 1:26.

Young man, you are the reflection of the divine spark that gave you life. You are the crown of his creation. To you he has given dominion over every creature that breathes the breath of life. You have been given the preeminence. You are the lord of creation. Have you ever thought of yourself as a king, as a ruler? Consider the beauty and grandeur of that life which is subject to you. "Consider the lilies of the field; they toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." The lily buds and blooms and spreads its fragrance, sheds its seed and dies. The law governing its growth and reproduction we do not understand. We know that all things in nature have their times and their seasons, their days and their years, but why, we know not, save that God so willed it. They move in harmony with his immutable laws. The flowers, the trees, the animals, the birds, even the heavens honor the laws of God, and live up to the measure of their creation. Man alone, king of all, disobeys, and by that very favor wherein he gained his preeminence. By his agency he falls and breaks God's laws, the very thing that may make him purer than the lily, sturdier than the oak, stronger than the lion, as constant as the stars. It is sad to think that while "the heavens declare the glory of God and the earth showeth his handiwork," man, poor, weak, ungrateful man, the paragon of his creation, is the only one that disobeys his laws, and that, by the very gift in which he excelled the others, the knowledge between good and evil. Yet the same God who made him king has fixed the law for disobedience: "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Young man, where do you stand? I have tried to show you who and what you are, as I believe God looks upon you; and the more nearly you can be taught to look upon yourself as God looks upon you, the nearer you will be to perfection, and to a solution of the mysteries of life and of self. I have tried to awaken you to a sense of your responsibility, to a realization of the sublimity and grandeur of your calling. If your responsibilities are so great and your calling is so high, will it not be required at your hands? Has God made you his steward in vain? If you are unworthy in the things which he has intrusted to your charge, you will indeed reap as you have sown. It is the law of life, "The wage of sin is death." Among the most sacred things placed in your care is the body with which God has clothed your spirit. You are its guardian, the keeper of God's tabernacle, for "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—1 Corinthians 3:16, 17.

What more sacred trust could be imposed upon you? To abuse that trust will subject you to the inevitable law of compensation both in this life and in the life to come. Physical debauchery breeds moral degeneracy and vice versa. The law works both ways. No one can engage in vices without paying the penalty, physically and spiritually. Sin as well as virtue has its own reward. As the body is sanctified by the spirit which is pure, so it is corrupted by that spirit which is vicious. It is the flesh that calls to the carnal in man, and if the spirit yields, it is subjected to the will of the flesh, and not the flesh to the will of the spirit, for the flesh is mortal but the spirit is divine. We learn that Christ fully succeeded in subjecting the flesh to the will of the spirit, and the more nearly we come to this example the nearer we are to him. "To be carnally minded is death, to be spiritually minded is life everlasting."

When the spirit took up its abode in our earthly tabernacle, it was pure and innocent, and we are responsible if we let the flesh or the carnal dominate. We, then, body and spirit, which is the soul of man, are responsible not only for the care of the body, but also for that of the spirit. In this, then, lies the evil of physical vice, because it subjects the spirit to spiritual corruption, to the will of the flesh. The flesh itself must suffer temporal death though the spirit be pure, but it will be again quickened and the spirit restored. No matter how pure the body, it must die; no matter how corrupt, it must perish; but the spirit, never. Consequently, in the warring between the flesh and the spirit, which takes place in all human beings, unless the spirit dominate it is lost. From this it is easy to see why we have been given such strict commandment to care for our bodies.

Bearing this in mind, young man, examine yourself. Which has the ascendancy in you? When you disregard the laws of health and of God, you are responding to the call of the flesh and corrupting the spirit. The desire for the use of tobacco, especially cigarettes, of strong drinks and of all other excesses is the same deceptive call; but of all vices of man, lust destroys the most. Evil and vicious thoughts even though they may not be put into action, corrupt the soul. Jesus said, "He that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, hath already committed adultery with her in his heart." There are thousands of young men who would not degrade themselves in act who are corrupting the spirit by mental indulgence. Young man, this means you. When you stand on the corners, in the public assemblies, even in the house dedicated to God, greedily devouring the figure of a pure girl, with lust in your eyes and evil in your heart, remember it has been spoken in holy writ, "As a man thinketh so is he." Few wrong acts have ever been done save they were prompted by wrong thoughts. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Are you indulging your passions in act as well as in thought, corrupting both the body and the spirit? Have you a father? Fear to look into his honest face. Have you a mother? Her pure love and gentle teaching is a mockery to you. Have you a sister? Think how you have betrayed some one else's sister, and have the same respect for her as you would for your own. I say this at the risk of provoking a smile from those of more mature age. Is there one who more than others has grown dearer to you in life? Be ashamed to look into her innocent eyes unless your own life has been as pure as you know hers to be. "A white life for two," man as well as woman, is the watchword of purity. We have attempted to show you that you should try to look upon yourself as God would wish you to be. Do you think that he would make any distinction?

Are you contemplating marriage? What right have you to ask any woman to become the mother of your children if you have not kept yourself for her and her alone? You would demand that in her. Where is your consistency? Have you analyzed the love that you pretend to bear for her? Is it pure, sweet, and abiding, the affinity of the soul? or is it a body worship, begotten of the flesh, not of the spirit, the child of passion? If it is the latter, then you have no right to sacrifice her. Marriage is not legalized prostitution. The purest love that ever existed will be blasted and will wither and die if prostituted on the altar of an insatiable lust. This has been the cause of more divorces than all others combined if the truth were known.

Young man, even though your life has been above reproach, seek the counsel of God. Place yourself in his hands. Let him guide and direct. Trust him and abide. What matters it though pain, sorrow, and disappointment be your lot? You are not building for time, but for eternity. What matters it what may become of the flesh, if the spirit abides in grace? It may be God's way that through suffering you might be sanctified and celestialized. Be willing to say, "His will and not mine be done." If you are living a pure life, you have the right to God's care and love, and you may be sure that it is best. How can you in your ignorance judge the way in which that love and that care should be exercised? Remember:

"My times are in Thy hands,
Why should I doubt or fear?
My Father's hand will never cause
His child a needless tear."

Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.—Hebrews 11: 6.

Men in the past have even excused themselves for political and domestic abuse of woman because God said to Eve, Genesis 3: 16, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." This was the curse placed upon woman because she sinned. In the beginning it was not designed that man should rule over woman. She was to be his helpmeet. "And the Lord said it was not good that man should be alone; I shall make him a helpmeet for him."—Genesis 2: 18. The making of woman the weaker vessel, does not justify man in extending his lordship to social abuse. At best it was a sin that gave him even the opportunity. This brings us to the purpose of creation, the reproduction of life, the faculty which is the most abused of all the gifts of God to man. That it was the divine command, the following surely testifies: "And God blessed them, and God said unto them, 'Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth.'"—Genesis 1: 28.

If man is the crown of God's creations, the power to procreate is man's crowning glory. It is God given. It is a sacred privilege. Young man, God has made you his agent. He has transmitted to you a portion of his power. You are acting for him. Instead of forming every man from the dust, he has allowed for the continuation of the miracle in you that you might beget sons and daughters after his own likeness, that you might sow the seed for the body in which he shall place the spirit waiting for its tabernacle of clay. It is the most sacred, yet made the most common, of all God's gifts to man. It is a part of God's Spirit; that Spirit which is in all things, and over all things, and round about all things. It is in the flowers, the trees, the grass, in all that has life, "Whose seed is in itself." Yet we can not understand it. Life has always been a solemn mystery to man. Science has tried for ages to explain the phenomenon, but it is as powerless as a withered reed. It is a part of God, by his Spirit, and we shall never understand it until that blessed time shall come when "we shall comprehend even God." Then we shall "know as we are known," and see as we are seen, we will be in the presence of God and his holy angels, "to whom be praise and honor and glory for ever."

The desire to procreate is natural and sacred. It is nothing to be ashamed of. You are not responsible for its presence in you for God placed it there; but you are responsible for the manner in which you use it. It is its abuse that changes it from a blessing to a curse. God gave us food and the desire to eat when hungry, but we overeat and die of dyspepsia. He gave us grain, but men distill it and become beasts. So the misuse of this function makes men beasts, and if persisted in it brings death. This precious force can not be squandered without causing physical and moral corruption. It should be governed and subjected to the will; yes, the flesh to the spirit, if you please, as mentioned before, provided the spirit itself has not become corrupt by abuse.

It is not our purpose to write at length on this subject at this time. It is too expansive, and this article is already becoming somewhat lengthy. Suffice it to say that the indulgence of this power should be sacred to the marriage vow. Unprincipled physicians sometimes advise young men to seek the companionship of lewd women in order to still the cravings of passion, telling them that it is as reasonable to gratify the desire when it calls as it is to eat when one is hungry, or to drink when one is thirsty. Young man, let me say this, Take the advice of no man, no matter how well educated he may be, who seeks to influence you to do wrong, to do what is condemned in the sacred books. I mentioned in the beginning that the books were the only safe standard. Jesus said: "Thou shalt not commit adultery," and we are also commanded not to commit fornication. Yield to the advice of no man who would influence you to the contrary. It has been proven that incontinency and not continency is the detriment to health and happiness.

It is best to get an understanding of self so that you may know how to govern self, but let it be through the proper channels. Our educational systems are sadly lacking in this respect. Parents are backward in speaking upon these delicate subjects to their children. Tradition, which has ever been the enemy of progress, has frowned upon it. Consequently much sorrow and misery has resulted because of ignorance. If you are in trouble go to a reputable Christian physician. If you belong to the church, or even if not, we would recommend that you consult our Church Physician, Elder Joseph Luff, of Independence, Missouri. Answer no advertisements. The intention is to scare you out of your money. It isn't medicine you need; it is backbone and exercise.

Some of the things mentioned here may provoke a smile from those whose hair has begun to silver, but we have tried to place ourselves in the position of the young man between fifteen and twenty-five, and to advise in those things which come close to home, and in which, from our knowledge of boys, we know they may be interested. We desire to say that The Social Purity Committee, of which Brother C. B. Woodstock, of Lamoni, Iowa, is president, has literature for distribution at a nominal price, subject to the inspection of all parents. The writer will with pleasure give any private advice along lines of social purity that he is able to impart.

In conclusion, let us all remember the purpose of our being here. Let us all stand together in the grand effort to purify the people of God. Let us cleanse the inner vessel. "Zion is the pure in heart." "None but the pure can enter there." May God hasten the day when the "watchmen upon the towers may sing for joy," because Zion is pure. Let us be clean. The key to it all is clean living and pure thinking. "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my God, and my Redeemer." R. V. HOPKINS.

THE INFINITE AND THE INFINITESIMAL.

The Creator and his works, representing the infinite in our thought; man and his puny works, though illuminated by the reflected light of the Creator, must appear as the infinitesimal.

Professor R. W. Wood, Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, while engaged in the construction of a reflecting telescope of liquid mercury, having brought it to such a degree of perfection that it reflected and magnified the heavenly bodies in such a way as to cause their enlarged images to appear in numbers in a pit, that had been an old well, was visited by an old inhabitant of the town, who, looking down into the pit that seemed to be filled with hundreds of star images, they being the reflection of a part of the milky way; after hearing some explanation by the professor, who told him that they were suns like ours, he replied, "You don't say so. And have they earths and things going around them, and are they all inhabited?" And being answered, that "it was very likely," and that "people think that they are inhabited," he scratched his head and said with a restful smile, "Well, do you know, I dunno as it makes much difference after all whether Taft or Bryan is elected."

This serves to show us momentarily, as by a lightning flash, the awakening of thought long dormant in the mind of the old man, a sudden realization of the smallness of human affairs; and if the record of the relapse, in the same mind, back to some mundane interest, could also be recorded, it might reasonably have occurred within a very few minutes, under the influence of the immediate environment of this man.

It is the purpose here to protract the thought, and the realization attending it, and to attempt to show that which stands as the most potent factor, as the principal means, crushing the realization, and causing such thought to lie dormant in our minds.

If we look inward to ourselves and intensely search for our inmost weaknesses, the frailty of our individual powers, the smallness of our individual accomplishments, taking them up and gathering them in one, from the time of our youth to the present day, we will look very small, even to ourselves; if we will look to the stars in the "milky way" and catch from them the inspiration of our thought of the infinite; and from them look to the sum total of our best achievements, and cull from them the deeds and words that are by comparison as enduring in their nature as the stars we have just looked upon, our best achievements will look very, very small, even to us.

Then look again to him who made the stars and all the heavenly hosts of wonders, and the wonders in the earth beneath us, the wonders of life, the wonders of death, and immortality; listen to the words of inspiration, the revelations of the latter days, the prophets of old who have told of the things to be revealed as the last of the scroll is unrolled in the sight of men; again look to our little self and see how small we are.

If we should stand upon the seashore, and take up one grain of sand, name it the wisest, most noble, and most prudent, the most wealthy of mankind, then drop it with its fellows on the beach before the oncoming wave, see how like its smaller and misshapen fellows, it is tossed about before the power of the Eternal Majesty that caused the waves to roll. Think of the sands of many seas, of many earths like this, of countless millions of moving globes; how very small are we.

We are told that the day is close at hand, when He who holds the keys of death, who has broken its bands, and will set the captives free, will come in the clouds of heaven, bringing with him thousands, the fruits of his righteousness, to meet other thousands on this earth, to be with him in his triumph.

If we were one of those who come with him, or one of those who were worthy to meet him, our littleness would disappear, for he has said that his own are to be one with him, as he and the Father are one; if we were at oneness with the majesty of the Creator, and found worthy to know the mysteries of the universe and the power by which all things were made, then how great our importance.

Not having that oneness, we surely could not imagine ourselves as being ready for the glories that are to be revealed; therefore, we must turn from the exalted view to see ourselves in the reflected light, as an atom of his creation that by comparison becomes infinitesimal.

So it seems that the question of oneness becomes paramount to all others, and when we remember that to us in this day comes the dispensation of the fullness of times, the day of his preparation, the question of oneness overshadows all others; for as individuals, we are so very small, in the sum of all his creations; and so very great are we in the oneness with him, and with each other, and with those others that he will bring with him when he comes in his glory, that it becomes evident, in view of the very great work that they who live in this dispensation are required to do, that oneness becomes the great essential. Again, when we bring ourselves to realize that the work of his preparation is of such a nature that it can not be done without oneness, we can ask, and answer, each one for himself, the question, Are we doing his work?

Bringing ourselves back into that mental attitude whereby we can see ourselves as individuals, in our infinitesimal smallness, we can then behold the grandeur of the plan of the infinite One, and ask, What is it that we must do, in this great dispensation, not as individuals, but as one with our Great Head?—for we have received the knowledge of our Redeemer, and his commandments to us as individuals are plain.

We naturally go to the books in which the will of our Creator is placed before us;—in both the stick of Joseph and the stick of Judah, and in the revelations of the last days, is found our answer. The answer is in all our houses, in our hands, and within sight of our eyes continually; and the voice is calling now, as it has called to Israel of old: "How often would I have gathered you, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but you would not."

In the answer to the question, as to what we must do collectively, we find that Zion must be built and flourish on the hills; that there must be no poor among the people, that his people shall be in equality one with another, and so on, giving all the attributes of Zion and her stakes; and we know the time is here to do these things, for the Lord has authorized the Order of Enoch, as a means of his own to bring about a portion of his work. How much nearer to the accomplishment of these things are we now than formerly? Are the cries of the poor heard in Zion and her stakes? Are they who call themselves his people acting as one in temporal things and affairs, or are they acting as individuals in these things? For these things that are required to be done, by his people, collectively, are temporal things.

If we are not doing his work in the collective sense, then we are far from oneness; are we approaching oneness? As one we partake of the emblems of his body broken and his blood shed for us, and covenant to remember him until he comes. Outside the place of meeting the cries of the poor go up to him, along with the testimonies of his goodness and his love. Strange sounds to enter into his ears; mingling with the sight of shivering, hungry children, and the dull faces, and hanging jaws of their parents; slaving away their lives, fulfilling the edict of the Eternal One; "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread"; hungry, because the bread they toil for is transformed into finery, the food of pride; in the hands of those who "toil not, neither do they spin"; and above all sits the beast of the land, threatening in his power; and there is no place of refuge. Yet we quote the words, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof"; and, "there is enough and to spare"; and he has shown us how we can obtain this abundance; and the way may be summed up in the commandment to be one. To be one in temporal things is not so easy as to come to the unity of the faith.

If we are not fast approaching that oneness that will make us a part of the infinite, there must be a cause for it, as no effect can appear without a corresponding cause; or, if there are a number of causes, there must be a principal cause, from which the others radiate.

When we can realize our littleness, our infinitesimal smallness in our individual capacity, we are better qualified to see the cause of our slow progress toward oneness. We might assign many causes; selfishness, for instance.

In a case of panic, in a crowded house, as when a fire breaks out, and strong men trample little children under foot, and weaker men and women too, and even strike down those who impede their progress to personal safety, we can see selfishness illustrated, and with it unreasoning fear of personal loss; a fear that overshadows all considerations of mercy, that shrouds all sense of suffering in others under a pall of frenzy to claim their own, their precious own, to the exclusion of the rights of others who in the mad rush are not strong enough to claim and hold their own.

If this should prove to be a parallel to conditions in the financial world, then it might be said that individuals in the temporal affairs of business will push and crowd and trample upon the weak, because they have the strength to do so, and the selfishness to urge them on, and yet, there still remains a need of clearer incentive, a more powerful cause than selfishness, to make them show the callousness, the deafness, the blindness, to the condition of the weak, the deafness to their cries, the indifference to their visible suffering.

A great, a most overwhelming frenzy it must be, a sort of madness, to stupefy even the natural sense of pity that is inherent even in the brute creation, not to mention the love of Christ that is claimed by some who do these things in the financial world.

What then is it that governs all movements in all temporal things? What makes one work from sun to sun in grime and sweat? Another sit and frown and figure in an office? and lie and cheat, and plan, until at eventide, bedecked in costly clothes, he goes, unheeding pinched faces and bare feet, past hovels of poverty and ragged beds of sickness, to mingle with, and regard with jealousy, the proud associates of his class; not knowing that he is one of the infinitesimal things of creation, not thinking or caring that he has left Lazarus to die along the way, and within the reach of his hand.

Then crossing by, and all alone, gazing with wistful eyes in the direction of the pomp and style to which the one has gone, he of the sweat and grime bemoans his fate, and in his covetousness treads on the helpless ones, with all unseeing eyes, and hears not their despairing cries nor extends his strong arm to help them up.

What is this thing that goads them on? that makes them chose their separate ways, and all alone contend against the infinite? and be content to be an atom, a single failing speck of human flesh and blood? When in the union of brain and brawn, they could raise the fallen, cheer the faint, and redeem that which was lost; becoming one with God and Christ, who made this earth and all that in it is, and who can give to all his own that which they need, if they are one; but "if ye are not one ye are not mine"; and so the promise fails by disobedience?

What is it stands most in the way? It must be a most mighty thing, a symbol of satanic power, a vapor of the pit; to stupefy and clog our brains, and hide the love of God; can John be right in what he saw? Is it the image of the beast? Are we now living in that age of power so universal that men worship at this shrine, and offer up their service to him who causes all to bow till he place his mark upon them?

And can this image of wondrous power be likened to an idol? and shall we offer up to it the poor, the weak, the feeble? Must we bow to stocks and stones, and yokes of bondage wear, or will we take, like free-born men, the words of Christ and God, and in his way, and his alone, rise up in strength, and sacrifice to the one Eternal all our self and all our wealth, to prove his righteous purpose, to earn from him his favor great, and make a place of safety and stand therein, while in the world and all around the things that can be shaken shall reel and fall and broken lie, with all the power of Satan?

Then if we knew that single thing that at the bottom lies, and we could call it by name, would we then come to oneness? or, would we still with wistful eyes go on until we perish? Would this great lure still draw us on? or would we stop and tremble, and then in full repentance cry, "Lord, we will give our money"?

As individuals, how infinitesimal we seem; as seen collectively, how near the infinite; how great the glories that shall be ours, as we approach to oneness.

Awake! ye saints of God, awake;
Call on the Lord in mighty pray'r,
That he will Zion's bondage break,
And bring to naught the fowler's snare.

He will regard his people's cry—
The widow's tear—the orphan's moan;
The blood of those who slaughtered lie,
Pleads not in vain before his throne.

Then let your souls be stayed on God;
A glorious scene is drawing nigh;
Though tempests gather like a flood,
The storm, though fierce, will soon pass by.

Awake to union and be one,
Or, saith the Lord, ye are not mine;
Yea, like the Father and the Son,
Let all the Saints in union join.

C. W. CHAPPELOW.

DEWEY, OKLAHOMA.

With fluttering heart and trembling hand
I brought my little gift and laid
It down upon God's holy altar.
I had so prayed that, touched by his Almighty hand—his dear pierced hand—
It might become a holy thing
Meet for his service. And now I Watched for that dear hand to take it up.
My little faith would scarce believe
That his omniscient eye would Notice take of gift so small, so Mean, as mine. When lo! it was Returned, so changed, so beautified,
I clasped it to my heart with tears
Of joy. It came so multiplied,
So radiant with his love, I marveled
That I should have withheld it from His hand so long. The gift was naught.
But God's dear hand upon the gift was all.

Denies Immortality of Individual Souls.

Doctor Max Verworm, professor of physiology in the University of Bonn, addressing a large audience at Columbia University yesterday afternoon denied the immortality of the individual soul, declaring that the soul was no more immortal than the body, for which death was one of the conditions of life.

"One may hold any idea that one will upon the relations of the mind and body," he declared, "but so much is wholly true; every act of consciousness is intimately dependent upon the vital processes in certain cells of the cortex of the cerebrum. Innumerable facts testify to this and thence comes the answer. If even a single condition of a complex phenomenon fails, the phenomenon itself ceases. The phenomenon of human consciousness ceases with the life of the cerebral cells. But the life of these cells is extraordinarily frail. Even the stoppage of the blood for a few seconds suffices to paralyze them and completely to inhibit consciousness. These facts have been experimentally confirmed upon men. Hence our individual soul is no more mortal than our individual body."

This, the speaker thought, was a desirable end. He continued:

"If, with the silencing of the heart, consciousness passes away and the happiness and the sorrow of the world cease, then living man is relieved of the fear, the feeling of uncertainty, which a mournful faith in a reward for good and evil must awaken in every man. Hell and purgatory and other inventions of a gloomy fancy ought to give place to more noble incentives in modern culture. The thought of the existence of death ought not to and can not arouse feelings of fear. At most the thought of dying, when it is accompanied by pain and suffering, would do so. But energetic mankind will conquer this fear. At all events our education ought to tend toward this. Reacting to pain and feeling fear in the face of suffering are indeed wholly physiological properties. They are provisions developed in the struggle for existence as important means for maintaining the life of the organism.

"We should endeavor by every means to free mankind from the paralyzing fear of death. Here the education of the child can accomplish much. It is fundamentally wrong, by the mein, the tears, and the lamentation of the mourners to picture death before the children as something full of anguish and mystery and horror. We should rather accustom ourselves to receive it as something self-evident. Then the anguish of death would disappear. He who has no fear of dying and no fear of death can accomplish what the coward never can."

Professor Verworm first undertook to throw out the "casual point of view," as he called it, the view which seeks to explain everything by a cause and to find the cause of every phenomenon. This view, he said, had been displaced by the concept of "conditions." What was usually seized upon as a cause was merely one of many conditions. Scientific research to-day was not concerned with finding a cause, but was only satisfied with an explanation of an event or a situation when all conditions had been discovered. This would rule out views of the universe which had existed since prehistoric times and still influenced the ideas of many thinkers. The last development of the causal view was the philosophy of "vitalism" which stopped at the explanation that vital phenomena were the result of vital force. In contrast with these methods, Professor Verworm pointed to the modern biological method of seeking to ascertain the conditions of life, which included a study of the internal and external conditions of life. The external conditions, he said, had been ascertained to an astonishing degree. He continued:

"On the other hand, the internal conditions which are present within the living organism as accessible to analysis with much greater difficulty and only indirectly, for there exists here an almost hopeless complication. This is still further increased by the fact that all innumerable individual factors, which are dependent in the closest degree on one another and upon the external vital conditions, are undergoing a continual change. Nothing is constant and uninterrupted but the change itself; nothing is hard and fast; everything is shifting, and all the relations of the individual parts to one another and to external agencies are changing throughout the whole of life.

"Nevertheless, physiological research has succeeded in discovering the characteristics of a large number of the fundamental internal conditions of life, and at the present time, when, after a period of relative stagnation, physical and chemical research has received a new and powerful incentive, it is a delight to see a constantly deeper insight into the mechanism of the internal vital conditions being revealed by physico-chemical methods.

"We do not yet know the exact chemical structure of many of the substances found in the cell. We do not yet know their approximate quantitative relations, even for a single given moment in the life of a single cell. And we do not know the arrangement in space of the various substances in a living cell. If an engineer lacks but one part of a complicated machine, he can not possibly put the machine together. For similar reasons, we can not at present pretend to make living substances artificially in a laboratory, and all attempts to manufacture synthetically even the simplest organism have ever been in vain. But we may affirm this: If we could once succeed—and this would be possible by a single stroke—in assembling in their proper quantitative relations and positions and with the proper motion of their smallest particles, all the substances that an amœba contains at a given moment, and if at the same moment we could surround this artificial amœba with the natural external conditions of its life, the artificial system would live like the natural amœba. This picture means nothing more than that the life in a given organism is determined simply by the sum of its internal and external vital conditions. Wherever all these conditions are realized there is life for that specific form of organism; and all its general and special vital performances can happen, such as its nutrition and respiration, its production of matter and energy, and if it were one of the higher organisms, even its sensations and feelings, its thinking and willing for its life is identical with the sum of the conditioning factors.

"In order to understand death we must analyze development; not as is usually done, from a merely morphological standpoint, by determining the unbroken sequences of changes in form which an organism undergoes; but physiologically, by studying the changes in the metabolism of the cells which occur during life. So far scarcely a beginning has been made here.

"Let us consider first the simplest organism, the cell. Let us suppose that we have before us a cell in which the destruction and construction of the living substance are continually and fully balanced, and every disturbance in the quantitative relations of the active substances, brought about by transitory external stimuli, is always automatically compensated at all times. Then there would be no agency to act as a condition of death, and the death of such a cell could be brought about only through changes in the external conditions of life; in other words, through fatal action of external agencies. But as a matter of fact such cells do not exist, either as independent organisms or within our bodies. All living substance changes so long as it lives. All living substance develops. This is the internal factor which is the condition of death. Development contains the germ of death.

"Continual destruction and continual construction, that is life. Without life there is no death; and, too, there is no life without death. The old impressive song of the monk of Saint Gall, 'Media vita in morte sumus,' has a much deeper significance than the author anticipated. All life must die and all life is death.

"And wherever and whenever, upon any heavenly body in the universe, the conditions for the origin of life appear anew, there living substance is formed out of lifeless substance, and wherever and whenever the conditions of life cease there also living substance returns to lifeless forms. 'Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return.' This is true of all living substance, from the one-celled amœba to the most gifted man."

CHURCHES GAIN MEMBERS.

SENTIMENT IS FAVORABLE, BUT INCREASE IS SMALL AND UNSATISFACTORY.

Membership of all the churches of the United States increased by 594,366, last year, according to statistics prepared and made public yesterday by Doctor H. K. Carroll, formerly director of the religious census.

This is less than three fourths of one per cent of the country's entire population, and is only one and seven tenths per cent increase over the country's church membership for 1910.

"The increase can not be considered at all satisfactory," said Doctor Carroll, yesterday. "It shows that the greater part of this country's population are not church members. The body of ministers, one of whose principal duties is obviously to secure converts, is increasing. The number of churches is increasing also, and so, presumably, is the number of devout lay workers whose desire it is to win converts.

"The average net increase in membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church last year was less than two for each of its churches. The average increase in membership of the Northern Presbyterian Church is a little over one for each church. The average increase in membership in the Protestant Episcopal Church is a little over two for each church.

"In short, either the losses by death, removal, exclusion, etc., from this country's churches are much larger than formerly, or the ingathering through revivals, Sunday schools, etc., is smaller. The net increase of church members in this country for the decade ended with 1910 was about 786,000 a year."

The increase in membership in the various denominations in the last eleven years is shown in the following tables:

"Bevier, Missouri; Appeal."

Elder Gomer Griffiths, general missionary, delivered two illustrated lectures on Palestine and especially Jerusalem and vicinity, at the Bevier Latter Day Saints' church last Monday and Tuesday nights.

Elder Griffiths has been engaged in mission work for said church in the Holy Land, from where he returned last March to attend the world's conference of said church at Independence, Missouri, and his lecture dealt with his personal experiences and impressions of the people and country, and the views shown by him were taken by him and coworkers while there, and he appeared in several of the views shown, one representing him baptizing converts in the River Jordan. The views covered a large number of places in Jerusalem and other portions of the country made sacred through connection with the life of the Christ on earth. He is an interesting speaker and secured the close attention of the large congregation present. The building was well filled each night. The singing of hymns appropriate in sentiment and connected with several of the views shown, added much to the effectiveness of the lectures.—May 3, 1912.

Sect Gaining Fast.

BATTLE CREEK, MICHIGAN, April 27.—At to-day's sessions of the Seventh Day Adventist conference for Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, and Wisconsin, it was said that since its start, sixty-seven years ago, the Adventist Church has doubled its membership every ten years, and to-day it is supporting large numbers of missionaries in foreign countries. It was asserted that the organization is giving fifteen times more per capita for the support of its foreign mission work than are the members of any other denomination.

The Adventists have mission stations in fifty-seven foreign lands to-day. At present the Adventists conduct seventy-four sanitariums throughout the world, representing a valuation of $3,368,041.

To-day practically no business was done, the delegates attending church and Sabbath school at the big tabernacle, where Elder A. G. Daniels, of Washington, D. C., preached. As in previous meetings, Elder Daniels asserted that the second coming of Christ was near.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Save the Children.

Beautiful the children's faces,
Spite of all that mars and sears,
To my inmost heart appealing,
Calling forth love's tenderest feeling,
Steeping all my soul with tears.

Eloquent the children's faces—
Poverty's lean look, which saith,
"Save us, save us! Woe surrounds us,
Little knowledge sore confounds us!
Life is but a lingering death!"

"Give us light amid our darkness;
Let us know the good from ill;
Hate us not for all our blindness;
Love us, lead us, show us kindness—
You can make us what you will.

"We are willing; we are ready;
We would learn if you would teach;
We have hearts that yearn towards duty;
We have minds alive to beauty.
Souls that any height may reach!

"Raise us by your Christian knowledge;
Consecrate to God our powers;
Let us take our proper station;
We, the rising generation,
Let us stamp the age as ours!

"We shall be what you will make us—
Make us wise and make us good!
Make us strong in time of trial,
Teach us temperance, self-denial,
Patience, kindness, fortitude!"—Selected.

Is Home Influence Declining?

Much has been said of the horrors of the white slave trade, which has become a national peril, and which requires the strong hand of the law to deal with it. National indignation has been strongly aroused by the recent disclosures of the committee of investigation, and much as we may shrink from the publicity of it, we can not ignore the fact that the home, once so sacred, is now threatened by this monster of iniquity that spares not high or low, rich or poor in search of his victims. We feel a great wave of pity as we think, "Can nothing be done?" There must be a responsibility attached somewhere. It is to home training we must look for better conditions. "The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world."

There is a laxity in connection with the training of the children of the present day that is partly responsible. They are not taught obedience in the home. They are not taught to respect any authority. They are not taught to reverence God and all sacred things, and especially to be reverent in the house of God, "to be modest in language, behavior and dress." The child that is not taught reverence and obedience in the home will grow up to despise the authority of God. Over-indulgence by parents and a lack of restraint is the beginning of many evils.

Modern conditions also have something to do with the lack of reserve noticeable among the young people. The free and easy way of getting acquainted with strangers on boats and cars, is a very dangerous thing. Parents should have a close supervision of the whereabouts of their children, their associates, and their reading. Remember a book is a close companion. Children should not be allowed indiscriminate choice of reading. One bad book may be the cause of the ruin of your child. Temptation also may come in the form of those "lovely" auto rides, and the girl who is supposed by her mother to be visiting a girl friend may be speeding miles away in an auto, perhaps in questionable company, and the deception thus begun may bear other and more bitter fruit.

The mother should not neglect to warn her girls of the pitfalls that are laid at the feet of the unwary, and to guard the purity of their good name as a priceless jewel.

The love of dress is often fostered from babyhood by fond but foolish parents. The little tot is decked in a brilliant array of ribbons and beautiful clothes, and poses for admiration and compliments and soon expects them as something the child has a right to. The child's vanity is fed and pampered until the little autocrat feels he is "monarch of all he surveys," and we are compelled to long for the good old days of our grandmother when obedience was enforced and was the rule and not the exception. Display and extravagance are the curse of the age. Rome became weakened and enervated because of love of luxury and extravagance, and in consequence fell a prey to her enemies.

Both mental and physical degeneration follow an age of self-indulgence and luxury. History repeats itself, and the fate of Rome will be the fate of any nation that follows the same course.

The ridiculous fashions of the present day are an indication of a decay in morals. Then whither are we drifting? The five cent theaters are taking the place of the evenings at home, and home is becoming only a place to eat and sleep in, and the theaters are building the characters of our children. The children of to-day will be the men and women of the future and to them will be intrusted the affairs of the nation, and the results will be according to the training they are getting now.

There is a constant craving for novelty which is being fed by every form of amusement, and the influence of home training is giving way before the mad rush for pleasure and love of the sensational. There is a strong undercurrent at work to destroy home influence, and the destruction of the home is determined upon. There are a thousand alluring temptations to tempt the young. Satan knows his business and does not indulge in idleness. We can not fold our arms and think "All is well. I can sit at ease. The Sunday school and church will take care of my child." Vain thought. The destroyer is abroad and your child may be the one that will be sucked into the whirlpool next. Vigilance, diligence, and faithfulness alone will conquer the foe who "becomes more daring, knowing well the latter day."

Requests for Prayer.

I ask the prayer union, and the Saints in general who may read this, to pray in behalf of my daughter, Mrs. Davis, who is sorely demented in mind, that if it is God's will she may be healed. S. I. Lindsey, Omaha, Nebraska.

LEAVENWORTH, INDIANA, May 23, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: The conference of the Southern Indiana District, held with the Louisville Branch, at Highland Park, Kentucky, the 18th and 19th inst., though not largely attended was a success; said by a number to be the best ever yet attended in this district.

Arriving in this field on the 8th inst., we find there is plenty to do. Brother Jacob Halb, the only appointee exclusively to Southern Indiana, is faithfully at work. We will assist him all we can.

We came to this place on yesterdav to remain about one week. Expect to attend the Foundry Hill conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee District, to convene June 1.

We had about one week's meeting at Littles, Indiana, with increasing interest, till the bad, rainy weather came. Plenty of work to do, but the workers are few.

In gospel work,

H. E. MOLER.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 27, 1912.

Dear Saints' Herald: To the Saints of the Lamoni, Cleveland, and Kirtland branches we wish to say we truly are grateful for your many tokens of kindness shown us in our sad bereavement, in the loss of a loving wife and mother; and the many floral tributes from Cleveland and Kirtland Saints, and friends outside the church of both places, and especially the Lamoni Saints, who did so much for the comfort of my companion and the little children, showing truly the Zionic spirit that is resident in the Saints there.

No tongue can tell the sad ending of a hopeful, happy residence in your midst; but, dear Saints of Lamoni, many happy thoughts shall dwell in my memory of the love shown me by you, and if it ever be possible for me again to move to your town, it will be with a knowledge that I go among God's people, who are living in the main to do unto others as they wish to be done by. I doubt if ever any community of people anywhere else on this earthly plane could have endeared themselves to us as the Lamoni Saints have done.

In conclusion, I keenly sense the fact of my inability to fully frame language commensurate in thanksgiving and appreciation, but so far as a stammering tongue can express the sentiments of my mind, and the affection of an aching heart, it shall articulate that sound to God, to richly reward you all in his own way and time. We again tender our heartfelt thanks to all of you.

Yours in the faith,

EBEN MILLER AND FAMILY.

RIPLEY, OKLAHOMA, May 28, 1912.

Editors Herald: R. E. Grant wins his case against the writer here in the county courthouse to-day. Suit was brought for publishing his record. Religious virulence was a prominent factor in securing the jury verdict. There was a great deal of splurge about "Mormonism" and the revelations of Joseph Smith mouthed roundly out by the lawyers. This all has its weight, and with some minds is heavier than evidence.

The verdict is three months in prison, and two hundred and fifty dollars fine. We shall endeavor to secure a new trial, but whatever may come we are not disturbed in mind over any ills or reverses which may come as a result of having conscientiously and truthfully defended the gospel of Christ against satanic onslaughts.

Yours truly,
JAMES E. YATES.

PUNKSUTAWNEY, PENNSYLVANIA, May 28, 1912.

Editors Herald: I wish to tell the Saints of the Virginias that, I having been appointed as associate minister in charge of that district, I wish to have the cooperation of all, so that success may attend our efforts in advancing the work we all love so well, and that other honest souls may be made partakers with us in this grand and glorious work.

I am now in this place, preaching on the streets, with bitter opposition from the Y. M. C. A., and a reverend by the name of Hewett who rose up and opposed me the first night I spoke on the street, belching forth a tirade of abuse against the church, Book of Mormon, and Joseph Smith. He said that he had been in the West among our people, and that they were a low class of people; that the Book of Mormon taught a most damnable doctrine; that Joseph Smith was the meanest man that God ever let wear boots. I challenged him to affirm his church on church propositions, and that Joseph Smith was an impostor, and the Book of Mormon a fraud. He refused to debate at all. I then challenged him to get an honorable representative of his church to affirm and I would furnish a representative of this church, and let the public hear both sides. This he also refused to do. The next evening he came out with an article in the paper stating how he had protected the citizens from awful deception. He also stated that the street corner preacher made no answer.

I got a sister to answer it as a spectator, who had heard it all. She stated that the street corner preacher did answer him and challenged him to public discussion, which he flatly refused to do. The sister signed her communication, "Justice." The next day he came out with a lengthy article and told how he was trying to protect the mothers and girls of the city from such deception. He advised me to hunt other fields of labor, in a threatening way.

I then wrote an article in answer to that and took it to the editor, but he refused to publish it, saying that the minister was a citizen of their city and I a stranger, and the sympathy of the people was in favor of the local man and against me. I told him that was all the more reason I should be heard, but to no avail. All that we can do is to continue on the streets in the face of all the opposition. Perhaps by the help of God's Holy Spirit we may be able to plant some good seed in the hearts of some honest souls, that will in God's own due time bring forth fruit.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may not become discouraged in these trying times, but may continue faithful till the battle is over and the victory won. I am unlearned; having scarcely any schooling, and these men come to me with either Hebrew, Greek, or Latin, and Bible school learning, and I have no way of meeting them but by the assistance of God's Holy Spirit, which, thank God, is better than all man's wisdom.

This is not my field. I came here by request and consent of the minister in charge, R. C. Russell. I will leave here the first of next week for my field, Virginia. I desire to hear from all Saints who want preaching; especially where new openings can be made, or those recently made, so we can follow up the good work begun.

Brother Mills, of Columbus, will be associated with me for a while, and we will try while he is with me to meet all the demands we can. Let me hear from you as soon as possible. My address for the present will be my home address, Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. 2, from where mail will be forwarded to me.

May God bless all of his Saints and work everywhere, that all may live, love, and labor together that Zion may soon be redeemed, and that his people may be gathered together under his special blessing, protection, and care, is my prayer.

Your brother in bonds,
JAS. MCCONNAUGHY.

THE DALLES, OREGON, May 22, 1912.

Dear Herald Readers and Saints: I sometimes think that we as a people have the greatest reason to be exalted; to be the most contented and happy. People in the world come very far short, as a rule, in doing what is very plainly commanded in the Scriptures. It is our duty to do as the most enlightened people in the world ought to do. There may be many in the church who are continually making sacrifices, going perhaps far beyond their means to aid in sending the gospel to those who are in spiritual darkness, but I am inclined to believe that there is a certain amount of indifference among some of our people. There are many in the church, I suppose, who have pleasant homes where want is never felt, and where peace is apparently sure and certain from day to day, and that they little realize what there may be in the places where others dwell. It is not so hard to feel the need of temporal things if we are surrounded by kind relatives and friends, but when we are alone from day to day and have no chance to break the monotony, either by communion with Saints or relatives, it is a very discouraging situation.

I long for church privileges. I would love to have my boys enjoy the company of happy, young Saints. I know life would seem much more complete to them. I have often wondered if there were many in the church who have the heartsick longing to be with the Saints that I have. I can not any longer be contented away from the church. Therefore I have concluded that as we can not move from here we will try to have some of the elders come to The Dalles. I think as my husband is so well known here that there could be a place found in which to carry on meetings. There are people in this neighborhood who have expressed a wish to hear some preaching. There are elders at Hood River, but they are obliged to keep busy at work to make a living for their families.

I would like to have a letter from some of the missionaries who could come here and spend a little time. After the work is started we could have elders from nearby occasionally, and in time we might have a branch built up.

We live five and a half miles south of The Dalles. In coming you will pass a grape vineyard, and Grim's Cherry Park.

Hoping to hear from some one who is willing to come,
MRS. M. DAWSON.

Report of Second Annual Series of Meetings at Webb City, Missouri.

I suppose many are waiting to hear of the failure or success of the second annual series of meetings which were held at this place, from April 21 to May 5. We are much pleased to inform you that the result is a great success for Webb City.

Brother T. W. Williams was secured again this year to place the "grand old message" before the people, and he did so in the same old easy way that is characteristic of him.

The musical feature of the series was in charge of Brother Hale W. Smith, assisted by Sister Frances White, of Lamoni, Iowa, as soloist. The solos and duets were enjoyed by all, and their efforts will be remembered by all who attended the meetings.

Our meetings were well attended and much interest was manifest during the entire series, increasing until the close. Many outside people expressed their regrets that we had to close so soon.

A vast amount of good was wrought in the way of removing prejudice and instructing the people not acquainted with our work. In fact, it appears that nearly the last vestige of prejudice has been eliminated from the ranks of our fair city.

Since the meetings closed we have been overwhelmed, as it were, with compliments and questions as to when they were to return. We think much good is derived in holding these annual meetings, in which special effort is put forth.

One prominent lady said, "He certainly told me lots of things that were according to my way of believing." Another said, "If Mr. Williams would come back here I believe he could convert the town." Still another said, "You would have to enlarge your church if he comes back again."

As before, we had our "tract" distribution and "question card" act, the latter of which brought forth much information and some mirth.

As before, our advertising was quite extensive. We received the hearty cooperation of the newspapers, and especially of the Webb City Register, whose editor gave us about a column synopsis each day.

We had the support of outside people from start to finish, who contributed quite liberally toward meeting the expenses of the series. Several outside people said they would contribute quite liberally if Brother Williams would have his sermons printed in book form. Two people said they were sorry they ever heard Brother Williams preach, as they knew their church would never look right again to them. One prominent lady said she never knew she was a Latter Day Saint before, and wanted to know if she could join us on her old baptism. Those who attended, of outside people, were mostly of those who have no affiliations with other churches.

We desire to continue our annual effort and we know that if God's blessings continue to follow us as in the past two years, we will continue to grow, and a great future awaits this part of his heritage.

The committee on arrangements was F. L. Freeman, chairman; O. L. Bradford, treasurer; C. H. Hobart, assistant secretary; Frank H. Cowen, secretary.

In bonds of love,
FRANK H. COWEN, Secretary.

A man's ingress into the world is naked and bare,
His progress through the world is trouble and care;
His egress out of the world is, nobody knows where.
If we do well here, we shall do well there;
I can tell you no more if I preach a whole year.

—John Edwin (1749-1790).

Conference Minutes.

PITTSBURG.—District conference convened at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, March 2, 1912, R. C. Russell and Charles Fry presiding. Statistical reports from branches received, giving present number as follows: Steubenville 55, Fayette City 81, Fairview 79, Pittsburg 181, Wheeling 218; total 614. Reports received from Elders D. E. Tucker, L. D. Ullom, O. J. Tary and O. L. Martin; also from District President Charles Fry, priests' quorum of the Pittsburg District, and from president of Pittsburg Branch. The secretary-treasurer was empowered to call on the branches for funds when necessary. Bishop J. A. Becker reported total receipts from tithing and offerings $968.72; disbursements, $953.75; deficit January 1, 1911, $172.55; deficit January 1, 1912, $157.58. Bishop Becker also reported verbally for the reunion committee, stating that there is about $192.00 in cash and $300.00, approximately of property on hand. A committee of three was named to meet with similar committees from other districts interested, to draft a constitution and by-laws for the government of the joint reunion of the Ohio, Kirtland, West Virginia, and Pittsburg districts. Charles Fry, Sister Betty Liston, and L. F. P. Curry were named as such committee, with Matthew Liston as alternate. After remarks as to the uses to which Kirtland Temple was sometimes put, a resolution was adopted for presentation to General Conference protesting against the practice of allowing the temple to be used for secular purposes. Delegates to General Conference were elected and their credentials ordered forwarded to the Church Secretary. These delegates were instructed to support the amendment to the Book of Rules as published in HERALD for February 16, 1912. Subject to the approval of the Wheeling Branch, it was provided that Myron E. Thomas be ordained to the office of elder. Votes of thanks were given to various ones assisting in the arrangements for conference. Elections resulted as follows: District president, Charles Fry; first vice president, O. J. Tary; second vice president, A. H. D. Edwards; secretary-treasurer, L. F. P. Curry; other district officers were sustained in order. C. B. Keck, Cleveland, Ohio, was added to the committee for auditing Bishop J. A. Becker's accounts. R. C. Russell and Ebenezer Miller occupied during preaching services. Prayer and sacrament service in charge of O. J. Tary, Charles Fry, and Ebenezer Curry. Collections amounting to $20.51 were distributed among the missionaries. Invitation of Wheeling Branch accepted to hold next conference at that point. Session adjourned subject to call of the district president, who was given authority to appoint time of next meeting. L. F. P. Curry, district secretary.

Convention Minutes.

INDEPENDENCE.—Stake Religio convention convened at Second Kansas City, Saturday, May 18, at 2 p. m., and continued until 4 p. m. Sunday. The reports of officers and various committees indicate the work is progressing throughout the stake, with two or three exceptions. The numerical gain for the year was one hundred, making the total membership now twenty-one hundred. The election of officers resulted in W. A. Bushnell being chosen president; J. A. Gardner, vice president; Carlotta Hartnell, secretary; B. J. Scott, treasurer; Louise Palfrey-Sheldon, librarian, Sister Arthur Allen, home class superintendent. A recommendation made by Brother Bushnell, looking to the appointment of a Religio missionary or field worker to devote entire time in the stake, was referred to the executive committee with power to act. A letter protesting against the ordinance lately passed permitting smoking on street cars was authorized to be sent to the mayor of Kansas City. A resolution making users of narcotics—tobacco and intoxicating liquors—ineligible to hold office in the stake, and urging locals to adopt the same rule was referred to the executive committee for report and expression of opinion at next convention. The Sunday morning and afternoon sessions were occupied by institute workers—good literature, home department and relief work being discussed in the morning, and the lookout, social, program and normal departments being presented in the afternoon, together with a review of the year's progress of the society by the retiring president. The convention throughout was marked by a good feeling and all present seemed anxious for the right to prevail, regardless of personal opinions. J. F. Rudd and M. H. Siegfried.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Northern Wisconsin District will meet in connection with the reunion, June 29, 30. All branches and officers please see that all reports are on hand. Mail same to A. L. Whiteaker, in care of reunion. Leroy Colbert, district secretary.

Spring River District will meet for conference June 22, at Purcell, Missouri. Mollie Davis, secretary, 115 West Jefferson Avenue, Pittsburg, Kansas.

The Saint Louis district conference will convene at Lansdowne Branch, East Saint Louis, Illinois, Saturday and Sunday, June 22, 23, 1912. Matters of importance to the entire district will come up, and we desire the cooperation of the membership of the district, so please make an extra effort to be present. There will be the election of officers for the ensuing six months, and other matters of interest. R. Archibald, district president; C. J. Remington, district secretary.

The Northern Michigan district conference will meet at East Jordan Saturday and Sunday, June 22 and 23. Social service at 8.30 Saturday morning, business session at 10. Meals served at ten cents. Missionaries and children under ten years, meals free. Beds furnished free. Branches see that reports are sent to secretary early, at East Jordan. F. A. Smith is expected to be present. J. C. Goodman, president; C. N. Burtch, secretary.

District conference of the Mobile District will convene at Theodore, Alabama, June 22, at 10 o'clock a. m. Election of officers and other matters of importance will come before us, so let us come together in the proper spirit, in order to obtain best results. A. E. Warr, president.

Convention Notices.

Religio and Sunday school conventions of Northern Michigan will convene at East Jordan, Friday, June 21. Social service at 8.30 a. m., Religio business session at 10; at 1.30 Sunday school business session will convene; at night an entertainment. Locals see that credentials are prepared and sent. A. E. Starks, C. N. Burtch, district presidents and superintendents.

Spring River district Sunday school convention will be held at Purcell, Missouri, June 22. We expect to hold institute sessions. Mollie Davis, superintendent.

Mobile Sunday school and Religio convention will convene on Friday, June 21, at 3 p. m. All Sunday school and Religio workers should attend. A. E. Warr, district president.

Fremont district Sunday schools and Religios will meet in joint convention at Tabor, Iowa, June 21 and 22, 1912. On Friday evening at 8 o'clock a joint program will be given; Saturday at 9 a. m. joint business session. Following the business session about one to one and one half hours will be devoted to normal work in which special attention will be given to reports and reporting. Local officers are requested to attend this convention and take part in the discussions. Lorena Leeka, president of Religio; C. W. Forney, superintendent Sunday schools.

Reunion Notice.

The fourth annual reunion of the Northern Wisconsin District will convene June 22 to 30 in the beautiful grove on the banks of Lake Chetek. All buildings and grounds are electric lighted, and the lake abounds in fish which are easily captured, and our facilities for frying them nice and brown are unsurpassed. Come one and all! Prices are as follows: Transportation by boat from depot, free; tents 10 by 12 feet, $1.50; 12 by 14, $2; floors in tents no extra cost; cots 25 cents; double springs 50 cents. (Bring tick—no cost for straw to fill them.) Meals served in dining hall at 15 cents for those camping who buy meal tickets—one half price for children taking plates at the table under ten years of age. Those having no tickets will have to pay 20 cents. Some of the speakers will be J. O. Dutton, W. A. McDowell, L. O. Willdermuth, A. L. Whiteaker, and local men. One speaker from a distance will be had. We hope to get Heman C. Smith. Leroy Colbert, secretary.

Southern Indiana district reunion will begin Saturday, August 31, at 2.30 p. m., ending Sunday, September 8, at 8.30 p. m. The place for the holding of this reunion will be at Wirt, Indiana, with the Union Branch, at the Union Church, in the beautiful Locust Grove. This will be a lovely place to spend a week of recreation as well as labor in the Master's cause. Work will be provided for the auxiliaries of the church, such as the Religio work, Sunday school work, and home department work. It will take about one hundred dollars to get everything ready in good shape for the reunion, and as the committee has been empowered by the conference to raise this money, we have decided on this means of procedure: that each one of the willing workers that reads this notice will raise two dollars in some way and mail it to me, stating in your letter that this is a special donation for the reunion work. I have confidence that each one of the willing workers will raise their two dollars between now and the first of July, and I will look with interest to see who will be the first to answer the summons. Let us make this a big reunion and a good one because we are interested in it. John Zahnd, chairman of committee.

Notice to Elders of Michigan and Northern Indiana.

To the Elders of Michigan and Northern Indiana; Greeting: Having been directed to organize a quorum of elders for the territory named above, we have decided on the 22d of June, 1912, 2 p. m., as the time to effect such organization, and hereby give notice that we desire as many present as possible. Those who can not be there in person can send their names, with the items of their ordination, etc., and we can have them enrolled with those present as charter members.

Address all such items to F. A. Smith, 57 Selden Avenue, Detroit, Michigan, in care of Arthur Allen.

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

Minister in charge of Great Lakes Mission.

Bishop's Agent's Appeal.

To the Saints of Southern Missouri District: Another conference year has begun, and the missionaries are in the field, while their families are left at home to bear the burden alone.

We have more missionaries in this district this year, but they also have a larger territory to cover than formerly; and in order that they may succeed in their labors, it becomes the duty of every Saint to help sustain them and their families. The proper way to do this is to pay your tithes and send your free-will offerings to the bishop's agent. And while it is the duty of everyone to assist the elder on his way, "when in need of assistance," this is not tithing, and you get no credit on the agent's book for it. We have already had calls for assistance, but unless you all help, we are powerless to meet the demand. So be diligent and all help to send the gospel message to every corner of this district. I would like to see everyone's name on the bishop's book, and when this is done we may be sure that the Lord will bless us as a people, both spiritually and temporally. The district officials are thinking of holding a reunion sometime in July, and if they do, and it is possible for me to go, I'll be there, and would like to meet all the Saints and write out tithing receipts for them whether the amount be large or small. You can remit direct to the undersigned by post office order or check, or any other way most convenient to you. Every Saint may consider this a personal appeal to examine themselves, whether they are in the faith.

BEENJ. PEARSON, Bishop's Agent.

TIGRIS, MISSOURI, May 27, 1912.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the British Isles Mission; Greeting: The General Conference of April, 1912, having placed me in charge of the above-named mission, I hereby notify you that the following brethren have been placed in charge of the districts herein named: Roderick May, London District; J. W. Taylor, Birmingham District; J. W. Leggott, Manchester District; Thomas Taylor, Leeds District; Charles Cousins, Sheffield District; John G. Jenkins, Eastern Wales District; Thomas Jones, Western Wales District.

Brethren, please note that your quarterly reports are due me on July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Be on time so that I may be able to report the progress of the work according to instructions. Kindly note, Bishop May is always ready to receipt your tithing. The expenses of the mission must be met. Faith alone will not pay the bills; therefore give as the Lord has blessed you. We want you to pray for us, and your prayers will be effective, if you will pay all you can. Let us therefore be up and doing and there will be no question about our success.

W. H. GREENWOOD, Missionary in Charge.

Dear Saints of the Southern Nebraska District; Greeting: Another conference year is before us, and the laborers are few for our district, while the calls are many for work that ought to be done. We feel to thank the Saints for the assistance they have rendered in the past, and we feel assured that you will respond to the calls that are within your reach now; the Religio, the Sunday school, the Woman's Auxillary are all helps to carry on the great work of the Lord. May the blessings of our heavenly Father attend you in all your labors of love, and I feel that you will have his smiles and approval in all that you may do for the upbuilding of the cause of truth.

Let us all put forth an extra effort this year and see what we can do for the cause we all love. We know we are living in a momentous age, when activity and vigilance seem to be necessary in our work. Let us be watchful and prayerful and careful and we will succeed, with the help of the Master.

To all the workers and members of our district, let us do what we can that it may be said of us as one of old, She did what she could. And to all the branch presidents of the district, let us encourage and help the local ministry to move out and preach and make appointments and fill them in the country round about; and missions can be established in the cities and towns, that the work may spread abroad in this way. We can all do something for the uplifting of humanity. Let the good seed be sown and the Lord will give the increase.

With love and good wishes to all, I am as ever your brother and colaborer in the cause of Christ,

W. M. SELF, District President.

To the Saints and Friends of the Kewanee District; Greeting: I am pleased to be again associated with you for another year, and realizing the magnitude of the work, and its needs, I trust we shall all feel that we are coworkers together with God, in his glorious cause. And to the end that we may be useful, we wish to solicit the cooperation of any and all who know of any places where there would be an opportunity of making an opening where we could preach the word to those yet in darkness. I shall be pleased to hear from any as to their needs, especially where the work can be opened up in new places. My field address will be 2130 Fifth Avenue, Moline, Illinois; home address Independence, Missouri. Mail addressed to either place will reach me.

I do most certainly appreciate the kindnesses shown me the past years of my sojourn in your midst, and pray the Giver of all good gifts, to abundantly bless and reward all. In conclusion, may we be successful, that we shall be worthy of heaven's choicest blessings.

JOSEPH ARBER.

MOLINE, ILLINOIS, May 24, 1912.

To the Priesthood and Membership of Southern Indiana and Kentucky and Tennessee Districts; Greeting: Having again been placed in charge of the territory included in the above-named districts, as assistant minister, we feel the weight of that responsibility, and ask the assistance and cooperation of every Latter Day Saint in this field.

Brethren J. R. McClain, J. A. Roberts, W. S. Shupe, and

Ed Dickson have, by appointment, been assigned to the Kentucky and Tennessee District, thus furnishing a better supply of ministers than usual. Brother Jacob Halb has been assigned to the Southern Indiana District, the only one appointed exclusively to this district.

These brethren will all occupy as opportunity may afford, and as wisdom may direct from time to time, as to arrangement and division of the work.

We ask the local ministry to do all in their power to honor their calling by lifting up their voices to proclaim the word at every available opportunity.

Will the Saints and friends please inform us of opportunities for preaching, and especially where new openings may be made. Address me at Holden, Missouri, box 396, or at 223 State Street, New Albany, Indiana.

Praying that much good may be done during the present conference year,

H. E. MOLER.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI.

Dear Saints and Friends of the Oklahoma District: Having been appointed by the church to labor in the above-named district, I desire your assistance and support in the best way possible. I may not be able, however, to suggest to the acceptance or satisfaction of all just what the best way is, but we do most earnestly solicit a friendly and Christlike response in our efforts to forward and maintain the Lord's work.

It is impossible for the ministers of Christ to build up the work of God and make it successful unless they have the moral and spiritual support of the members.

We suggest a careful study, (by reading and prayer) of the word of God as found in the books of the church. For convenience or explanation I might refer to the law, or gospel, as having three different departments; one as important as the other. First, the legal or initiatory rites and ordinances. Second, the spiritual requirements and response to duty in the development of character. Third, the temporal or financial necessities. There are no nonessentials in the gospel plan. Our mission and appointment by the church is to save men, or teach them the plan of salvation. This we hope to do, and are asking for your cooperation. It would be a failure for anyone to teach well and not practice well. I am conscious that "it is a good divine that follows his own teaching," and that "it is easier to teach twenty what is best to be done than to be one of the twenty to follow one's own instruction."

Practical Christianity is what is needed to-day in the church, and not so much unkind criticism of others. If others do not do as you think they should, your only safety is in dealing with them as the law of Christ requires, and not seek to injure them by circulating damaging reports. If anyone should suppose that they are gaining faster along the way to "perfection's abode," let them give evidence of advancement by the manifestation of charity for those who have "not yet found the road"; otherwise their claims will be doubted. I hope we may be patient and kind to each other; seeking only to build up and not tear down.

With these suggestions you may conclude in part what our line of work will be. We no doubt have all made mistakes in the past—we may again—but we are hopeful of improvement.

I am not well acquainted with the needs of the work in the various places in the district; therefore would kindly urge prompt response, by letter, from all who desire preaching. After hearing from you we can better arrange our work and tell when we can visit you.

Central Oklahoma District is that portion of Oklahoma lying between the 96th and the 98th meridian. You can easily locate yourself on the map. Write to-day. Address me at Seiling, Oklahoma.

Our gospel is worthy of confidence, and our very best efforts. By devotion and consecration to its service we are sure of success and triumph into the kingdom of God.

Brother James Yates, of Ripley, Oklahoma, is associated with me in this field. He is the president of the district and we hope to labor together most of the time as circumstances will permit.

Our effort will be to properly represent the Christ in the field assigned to us. We beg your cooperation and the blessings of the Lord. May the love of God and his Spirit be with you all.

In gospel bonds,
R. M. MALONEY.

Notice to Religians.

The executive committee of Zion's Religio-Literary Society has again appointed the undersigned superintendent of the Gospel Literature Bureau for the ensuing year.

Last year we were able to do but little except to get reports from a small minority of the workers, owing to the fact that the appointment was received so late. However, the reports we did receive would indicate that some of the local workers at least were alert in the performance of their duties. It may be that all were busy in the discharge of the obligations incumbent upon them, but in the absence of any report we are unable to ascertain what they have accomplished.

We are desirous of communicating at once with all gospel literature superintendents, and good literature committees in locals outside of districts. Some are not known to us, and in some instances gospel literature superintendents have not been appointed. In cases of this kind, the executive committee of the district where the vacancy exists should see to it at an early date that some competent person is appointed, and this information communicated to the writer.

Our work this year should show some advancement at least. Possibly not in the number of pieces of literature distributed, or the number of subscriptions taken to the church publications, but in the effectiveness of the distribution and the benefits attained from the perusal and study of the papers already taken. In other words, let us make use of what we already possess, and the increase will be more easily cared for.

Your especial attention is invited to the first paragraph of Leaflet of Instruction, No. 3. Comparatively few of our people are in possession of the church publications and works, and fewer still make any pretense of reading or studying them. In the estimation of the writer, the first great opportunity open to the gospel literature worker is, to promote the circulation of church literature amongst our own people, and the proper study of the same.

This branch of the Religio work affords an excellent opportunity for every member to render service. There is no department in the organization that is more deserving of your faithful support. Will you help?

Reports should be made semiannually, January and July. Report blanks and Leaflets of Instruction furnished on application.

Still in the light,
HARVEY SANDY, Superintendent.

Notices.

Sunday school secretaries of the Central Nebraska District will please remember to send quarterly reports to me at once. The schools are reporting every three months, so please send your reports at once to F. S. Gatenby, district secretary, Orchard, Nebraska.

Official photographs of the late General Conference may be had by sending to Hale W. Smith, 103 Pendleton Avenue, Independence, Missouri. The only official photograph of the General Conference ever taken, showing the people in panoramic view. In front are arranged the leading quorums of the church. President Smith will be seen sitting about the middle of front row. The Quorum of Twelve and Quorums of Seventy to his right. To his left the Quorum of High Priests.

Photos are in two sizes: 10 inches by 36 inches for $1.50; 10 inches by 24 inches for $1.25; postpaid from Independence. Photos will be mailed in separate tubes.

These photos are by far the best ever taken. Nearly every person can be seen with the naked eye. Profits from sale of photos go to the general church. We recommend the larger size, as it is much clearer than the smaller size. Order direct from church agent, as above.

Resolution of Condolence.

Whereas, it has pleased almighty God, the divine and supreme ruler of the universe, in his infinite wisdom to permit the removal from our class, and from the Star of Bethlehem Sunday School, after but a few months association, and from the midst of her family, our highly esteemed sister, Margaret Miller, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the teacher and members of class number 4, though we bow in humble submission to the loss sustained by the death of our sister, nevertheless we confess our dependence and hope in the wise provisions made by the Creator for all that have trust and confidence in him; feel that it is well with our departed sister, for the evidence vouchsafed unto us of her acceptance, and worthiness to enter into the rest chamber of the Lord, there to abide till the call shall come for the great reunion of the faithful of all the families of Israel.

We adopt this tribute of respect for the memory of the departed, and tender to her bereaved husband and children this expression of condolence and heartfelt sympathy, and trust that divine Providence will in his compassion soften the bitterness of this parting, and by the gentle wooing of the Holy Spirit shall bring to, all consecrating willingness to say: "Lord, thy will be done."

Resolved, That we ask the school to concur in this action of the class; and that a copy be forwarded to Brother Eben Miller and family; also, that the preamble and resolutions be published in the HERALD.

ROBT M. ELVIN, Teacher,
MRS. MARY J. GARNER, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 26, 1912.

This was concurred in by the school.

Died.

AMES.—Sophronia W. Ames was born at Deer Isle, Maine, June 17, 1838; baptized June 21, 1903, by John W. Ames, to whom she was married August 24, 1903; he having passed away in August, 1911. Since coming into the faith the sister has been a faithful, consecrated member; and in her last painful sickness was a patient, resigned sufferer, fully resigned to the Master's will, and patiently waiting the time to be called to join the loved ones gone before.

MOORE.—Robert H. Moore was born May 10, 1824, in Howard County, Missouri. Died May 25, 1912. Funeral at the grave by M. M. Turpen.

NUTTER.—Veral Corene, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Nutter, of Blucher, Saskatchewan. She was born December 28, 1911; died May 24, 1912. Laid to rest in the Floral Cemetery May 26, 1912. Funeral services held at Floral Methodist church. Sermon by Elder J. A. Beckman.

PEIDT.—Samuel Peidt died March 31, 1912, at his home near Cheviot, Saskatchewan, aged 80 years. He was a member of the Baptist Church. Interment at Floral Cemetery, April 2, 1912. Services were conducted at the home of his son, Chris Peidt, in charge of Brother J. W. Diggle. Sermon by Elder J. A. Beckman.

BATE.—John Grafton Bate was born in Brock Township, Ontario, April 16, 1851; died suddenly at his daughter's, Cameron, on May 13, 1912, of heart failure, aged 61 years, 27 days. Was baptized September 7, 1884, by Elder J. H. Lake; was ordained a teacher November 2, 1902. He leaves to mourn a widow and seven children. Funeral at Eden Cemetery; sermon by Elder James Pycock. He was one of the first to receive the gospel in eastern Ontario, and continued to bear testimony of its divinity to the end.

SISTER ELIZABETH J. BLAIR.

Sister Elizabeth J. Blair, affectionately known by thousands as Grandma or Mother Blair, passed to her reward at one o'clock p. m., Saturday, June 8, at the home of her son, Brother David H. Blair, in Kansas City, Missouri, after a lingering illness of about two months. Sister Blair's history is almost contemporaneous with that of the Reorganization; her husband, President William W. Blair, having been one of its earliest missionaries. She attended the Amboy Conference in 1860, and her faith and interest have never failed or faltered during the many years President Blair was an active church worker nor since, during the many years of her widowhood. Particulars concerning her life and death will be given in a later issue. We reserve further editorial appreciation for the pen of our Senior Editor, who for so many years was associated with Sister Blair's husband in ministerial, editorial, and presidency capacity.

THREE GREAT MEETINGS.

Three of the larger sectarian churches have lately held important conferences. We give a brief review of the meetings from The Outlook.

THE PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY.

The long and gradually losing struggle within the Presbyterian Church against the modernizing of theology makes the assembly's approval of a new catechism of more interest than usually attaches to such an event. In 1902 the assembly approved a "Brief Statement of the Reformed Faith," presented as the working theology of the church by the committee on the revision of the Westminster Confession. Of this, when finally adopted in 1903, The Outlook said, "It virtually supplants the old Calvinism." This is equally true of the "Intermediate Catechism" now approved. The famous "Shorter Catechism," which it virtually and inevitably supplants, taught the Calvinism of the Confession in terms suited, as supposed, to the young people of the seventeenth century. Of this the "Intermediate" retains no vestige. All speculative and scholastic teaching is cut out, such as creation "out of nothing in the space of six days," the fall of all mankind in Adam "under the wrath and curse of God," the election of "some to everlasting life," the mystery of the "effectual calling," justification, adoption, sanctification, and the glorifying of the elect. The moderation of it appears in its first question, "What de we most need to know?" as its substitute for "What is the chief end of man?" The thirty-seven questions and answers of the "Shorter" on the Ten Commandments are condensed into three, and room is made for New Testament principles and precepts concerning the kingdom of God, and duties toward the church, the home, our country and other countries. Catechetical instruction has unhappily fallen into neglect. Those who discern its advantages are here provided with a remarkably attractive means for its revival, brief, comprehensive, simple, lucid, practical. The assembly week was devoted to denominational interests and enterprises. Three and a quarter millions are asked for next year's work. The annual increase of membership is but one and three tenths per cent. Increased evangelistic effort is intended. The home field shows that the rural religions "have become sources of moral peril to the Nation." In city and suburban churches the situation is pronounced "not at all satisfactory." The Sunday school lesson papers, having roused some antagonism from those who are suspicious of "heresy," have been put in control of a committee of supervision. In this respect the Presbyterians seem less willing to welcome freedom of utterance than the Methodists, whose action on this same point we report below. Meeting this year at Louisville, the assembly voted to meet next year at Atlanta. This move is thought to bring appreciably nearer the reunion of the Northern and Southern Presbyterians, sundered by the Civil War.

IMPORTANT DECISIONS OF THE METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Methodist General Conference, which has been in session in Minneapolis, has reached three important conclusions. The first relates to what might be called the management of the church. In the past the arrangement for supervision by the bishops has been such that it has often happened that the bishop who has authority under certain circumstances might be resident at a point distant from the territory affected, while the bishop residing in the territory affected is without authority there. By the action of the conference a provisional arrangement has been made that is distinctly a new departure and is regarded as definitely progressive, so that the direct supervision will be exercised by the resident bishop for at least ten months in the year. This change will be welcomed by all who, without regard to denominational affiliations, regard it as important that the church increase its efficiency. The second decision is a negative one. It retains in the Book of Discipline of the church the paragraph regarding "doubtful amusements." This paragraph places a ban upon certain specified amusements, such as dancing and card-playing. For a number of years there has been a growing feeling, expressed in this year's address by the bishops, as well as that of four years ago, and repeatedly expressed during the past eight years in many utterances by leading men of the church, both laymen and clergymen, that the decision with regard to such amusements should be made, not by statutory prohibitions of the church, but by the conscience of the individual. By a majority of seventy-nine in a total vote of eight hundred the paragraph was retained, but the tendency of opinion in the church is indicated by the fact that the majority this year for the retention was very much narrower than that eight years ago. It seems inevitable that before long the Methodist Church will return to the fine and comprehensive statement in the General Rules given to it by John Wesley admonishing its members "to take only such diversions as can be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus." The third decision put a termination by an overwhelming majority, to the effort to restrict liberty in editing of the Sunday school publications of the church. The report through which this decision was reached, while counseling caution in these restless times, commended honesty in the recognition of the results of biblical criticism; and it enthusiastically approved the general course of the editor, Doctor J. T. McFarland, who has been the subject of severe criticism from a very few who have been unable to agree to modern methods and interpretation. This decision is an indication of the real progressive spirit in the Methodist Church, a spirit which is one of its great sources of strength.

BAPTISTS IN CONVENTION.

If the plans launched at the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines, May 22-29, are carried out with the energy and optimism which marked their inception, the Baptists are standing at the beginning of a new era in the prosecution of the cause of Christian education. Baptist institutions of learning in the West and Middle West are feeling the tremendous pressure of the competition of the great state universities. Baptist colleges are numerous and widely scattered through the West; but for the most part they are small and greatly hampered by lack of funds and equipment. Hence the questions insistently asked at Des Moines—What is the need of denominational colleges? and, What is the appeal which they can make with convincing force to their constituency? The facts revealed at the convention seemed to indicate that Baptists are behind the other great denominations both in educational facilities and in the number of the youth within their ranks who avail themselves of these. Startled by the figures into a new activity, the Northern Baptist Convention has accepted definitely and vigorously the duty of furnishing to those for whom it is responsible an adequate and distinctly Christian education. A radical and far-reaching program is proposed, beginning, under the direction of a permanent commission on religious and moral education, in the home and Sunday school and extending to every institution of learning which bears the denominational name. The Baptist Education Society had become identified with the Education Board of the convention, money has been voted for a preliminary survey of the situation and for the employment of an educational leader as secretary, and it is proposed from this beginning to assume increasing responsibility as a denomination for the advancement of the cause of an education which shall be infused with a definitely religious spirit. The demand for efficiency and scientific management applied to the missionary agencies of the denomination, leading to the correlation of all missionary forces at home and abroad, the avoiding of waste and reduplication, was prominent in the convention. Democracy in religion is finding strong expression among Baptists, and "insurgency" in the West exercised the controlling influence in the formulation of the policies of the missionary societies. A forward movement calling for the raising of three million dollars this year for the missionary interests of the denomination was instituted with enthusiasm. The spirit of progress was expressed in a new plan of comity and cooperation between the Northern and Southern Conventions which promises well for the future.

THE SALVATION OF THE RACE.

The question of salvation, we think, is by all conceded to be the most important consideration of any age or people. All have considered it to a greater or less extent and have reached conclusions based upon, what seemed to them, the evidences at hand.

These conclusions have differed as to what salvation is, who shall enjoy it, when and by what means it shall be effected.

As Latter Day Saints we differ from all others on this important question, and found our belief on a larger field of evidence than do others. It is surprising, however, to find among us various answers given to the above questions.

Having given some attention to this matter I have decided to write my thoughts and perchance others may give theirs, and by an exchange of views light may be increased.

WHAT IS SALVATION?

Webster says it is: "The act of saving; preservation from destruction, danger, or great calamity. In theology, the redemption of man from the bondage of sin and liability to eternal death, and the conferring on him everlasting happiness. This is the great salvation."

By this it will be seen that there are two phases to salvation: 1, Deliverance from sin and death; 2, Ushering the one so delivered into eternal happiness.

With this agrees the word of God: "He shall save his people from their sins."—Matthew 1: 21. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction."—Hosea 13: 14. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil."—1 John 3: 8.

The work of Satan has ever been to sow sin, death, and misery; the work of Christ "to make an end of sins, to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness."—Daniel 9: 24.

Besides this cleansing from sin, redeeming from the grave, and bringing about a condition of righteousness, the Lord in his matchless goodness has provided for us the everlasting happiness of enjoying a reward laid up for every good deed performed. (Romans 2: 6; Psalm 62: 12; Matthew 16: 27; Revelation 20: 13.) Surely this is wonderful mercy, remarkable forethought and provision for the future!

In the cleansing from sin all share alike who receive it. The blackest criminal and the most upright man come out from the cleansing flood alike clean, the former transgressions being completely pardoned in both cases. But not so in the allotment of rewards.

Then the upright man receives recognition for every right thing done; while he who wasted his time, though now forgiven for it, has little or nothing to his credit. How just and beautiful are all the dealings of God with man!

This latter feature of salvation—the bestowal of rewards—makes gradation in the eternal world necessary. The obedience of man to his Maker and the conduct of man to his fellows is so varied that God would of necessity have to prepare a multitude of conditions in the eternal world to reward every man “according to his works.”

And that is just what he has done. Jesus said, “In my Father’s house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.”—John 14:2. Many mansions are in his Father’s house, but a special place is to be prepared for those who are his faithful disciples here. With this agrees Paul’s declaration, “As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits: afterwards they that are Christ’s at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he hath delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power.”

Three orders are given here:

1. “Christ the first fruits” (and James says to the church, “We should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures”).
2. They who are Christ’s at his coming.
3. They who are ready at the end.

This thought is more fully explained later in the chapter: “There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead.”

We now feel prepared to answer the question, What is salvation? It is a cleansing from sin, a redemption from the grave, and a bestowal of everlasting rewards in accordance with our works in life: these rewards to be distributed in three general glories, and varied in the third according to the merits of the individuals occupying therein.

WHO SHALL BE SAVED?

At the birth of Christ the angel choir sang of his mission work: “I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people,” a prediction which is still largely unfulfilled, comparatively few people having received the glad message and partaken of the joy of salvation.

At the close of his life Jesus declared: “And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.”—John 12:32. The only condition on which this promise hinged was, “if I be lifted up from the earth,” referring to his death on the cross. The condition was faithfully met by the Master of men, leaving the drawing of “all men unto” him an assured fact.

Thus the opening and closing scenes of the Savior’s life were marked by the proclamation of the salvation of the race.

Again we read “that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.” (Philippians 2:10; Romans 4:11; Isaiah 45:23.) After all that God has done and sacrificed for the salvation of man, what glory could he possibly experience at their confession of Christ unless it were in the accomplishment of that for which he had labored,—their salvation. Especially does this seem apparent when we read: “Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways and live?”—Ezekiel 18:23.

In the beautiful vision of heavenly things presented to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon in these last days, God said, “This is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father hath put into his power and made by him, who glorifies the Father and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him: wherefore he saves all except them.”

From these texts we learn that:

The good tidings of salvation will be to all people.
All men will be drawn unto Christ.

Every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus is the Lord, to the glory of God.

Some shall fall away after they have received the gift of eternal life and finally shall be lost.

All the rest shall be saved.

Our answer to the question of salvation is, therefore, All except those who forfeit the gift of eternal life after having received it, shall be saved.

WHEN AND WHERE SHALL MEN RECEIVE THE MESSAGE OF SALVATION?

These are the questions over which most of the stumbling occurs; but we think God has made it all very plain in his word, and our hearts rejoice that he has been pleased to reveal so much and that the harmony of the scripture is so complete. Surely none but God could express himself to so many different conditions of men in so varied language yet the whole produce a harmonious blend. Nothing appeals to our understanding as greater evidence of the inspiration of our books than does this.

When and where we receive the gospel is very important, for it largely determines when we shall rise from the dead and where we shall occupy in the eternal world. It will therefore be necessary to consider the glories separately in deciding the question.

THE TIME AND PLACE TO GAIN CELESTIAL GLORY.

This is so well understood among the Saints that a few texts are all that will be necessary. We could not think of canvassing the ground thoroughly, for the books being written to and by the instrumentality of the heirs of this kingdom are full of promises and instructions to them.

In the vision recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 76, God says of those who shall have celestial glory:

And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandment which he has given, that by keeping the commandments, they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power, and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true; they are they who are the church of the Firstborn.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

And further:

The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, . . . and the righteous shall inherit it: for notwithstanding they die they shall rise again a spiritual body: they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same even a fullness. . . . The face of the Lord shall be unveiled: and the saints that are upon earth who are alive, shall be quickened, and be caught up to meet him. And they who have slept in their graves, shall come forth; for their graves shall be opened, and they also shall be caught up to meet him in the midst of the pillar of heaven: they are Christ's first fruits: they who shall descend with him first, and they who are on the earth and in their graves, who are first caught up to meet him; and all this by the voice of the sounding of the trump of the angel of God.

Paul tells us how we may know if we are ready for the kingdom:

But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.—Romans 8: 11.

And latter day revelation says, "This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom, which glory is that of the church of the Firstborn."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2.

From these passages we learn:

We who here obey the principles of the gospel—faith, repentance, baptism, and the laying on of hands, and receive the Holy Spirit, continuing faithful unto death, receive celestial glory.

The Holy Spirit dwelling in us is the promise of that glory.

It will resurrect us to that glory.

It is a portion of celestial glory and at the resurrection we shall receive a fullness.

The saints who are alive shall be caught up with those who died in Christ.

Of the glory of this kingdom we read:

they are they into whose hands the Father has given all things; they are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fullness, and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedec, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the only begotten Son; wherefore, as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God; wherefore all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present or things to come, all are theirs, and they are Christ's and Christ is God's; and they shall overcome all things; wherefore let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet; these shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ for ever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 5.

TERRESTRIAL SALVATION, ITS RECEPTION.

In the consideration of this glory and the preparation therefor the difference of opinion commences, some holding that the resurrection occurs first and their acceptance of the gospel follows during the millennium. We think for many reasons this position can not be sustained.

In the first place the very suggestion of "glory," "reward," must be preceded by the idea of purification from sin, else the reward could not be enjoyed. Salvation is a condition as well as a place and the condition must be attained before the place is obtained. Just as well send the primary department into high school as consign uncleansed people to glory, whether that glory be celestial, terrestrial, or telestial: their condition would contradict the place and confusion ensue. We only endure the presence of heavenly beings and heavenly things here by becoming like them through the operation of the Spirit received through obedience to the gospel. By parity of reasoning will it not be so in the world to come, where the presence of the Son is enjoyed in one glory (terrestrial) and angels and the Holy Ghost in the other (the star glory)?

In section 85 of Doctrine and Covenants we have an account of trumps to be blown by angels, recording different events in the order in which they shall occur.

Commencing with the 27th paragraph we read of the dead in Christ arising at the sounding of the first trump.

And after this another trump shall sound, which is the second trump; and then cometh the redemption of those who are Christ's at his coming; who have received their part in that prison which is prepared for them that they might receive the gospel, and be judged according to men in the flesh.

This refers to the terrestrial order, and they are called "Christ's at his coming," because they have obeyed the gospel and are ready to enter their reward at his coming. They could not become "Christ's" in any other way, for "Know ye not that as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ . . . and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed." For this very purpose were they consigned to "that prison which is prepared for them that they might receive the gospel." Why should God prepare a prison for a work and then call forth the prisoners before the work were accomplished?

But it is said the heathen nations are to be redeemed during the millennium and are to have part in the first resurrection.

We see no reason why a dead heathen could not be taught the gospel in the spirit land as well as one who was not a heathen; but the evidence that they who died heathens shall be resurrected such is sadly lacking. We have seen by the sounding of the first and second trumps that there is a space between the resurrection of the church of the Firstborn and that of them who are "Christ's at his coming," though both have part in the first resurrection. We are not told how long this period will be, but, as Christ comes with the blowing of the first trump, the second trump, which calls forth those of the moon glory, must sound some time during the millennium; and let us not forget that "the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul." Hence the expression, "Then shall the heathen nations be redeemed," may refer to their rising from the dead. But it must not be concluded that they are heathens, necessarily, at their resurrection, any more than that they are organized "nations" at that time, if indeed it refers to those who have passed away at all, which I think is quite doubtful. It probably refers to the living who have survived the judgments incident to the coming of our Lord and have not been reached by the gospel previous to his advent.

We are informed that the terrestrial inhabitants receive the gospel through the ministration of the celestial. This is exemplified by the Savior's preaching and opening the way to the spirits in prison, and commissioning his ministry to do the same works that he did.

Further information is gleaned from Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6, where a resurrection to each of the three glories is referred to as follows:

Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory shall then receive of the same even a fullness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same even a fullness; and also they who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory shall then receive of the same even a fullness.

In each case a portion is received first and at the resurrection a fullness of the same. The saints are now enjoying their "portion," as will be seen by the use of the present tense, "ye who are quickened by a portion of celestial glory,"—hence we may inquire, What is it that we receive which is a foretaste of our future glory, the earnest of our inheritance?

"This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life, even the glory of the celestial kingdom."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2.

We are convinced, therefore, that the Spirit received through obedience to the gospel is the "portion" referred to, so far as it relates to the celestial order, at least.

But how is it with those of the terrestrial order? They also receive a "portion" before the fullness is obtained. What is the portion in their case?

We have learned that a prison has been prepared that they might receive the gospel; obedience to which will win for them the gift of the Holy Ghost, the "portion" of their future glory, and thus prepare them to be "Christ's at his coming." The gospel is the same, no matter where administered, but it seems to be the conditions under which it is received that determine the reward to be obtained.

The fullness which these sons of terrestrial glory shall enjoy in the eternal world is to "receive" of the presence of the Son but not of the fullness of the Father." Think what that means,—the presence of the Son! What power enables them to endure his glorified presence? The unregenerate Paul became blind and helpless before such glory. There is one power, and one only, that can qualify anyone to abide it, and that is the power of the Holy Ghost. Hence we conclude that the "portion" enjoyed before their resurrection is the gift of the Holy Ghost received through obedience to the gospel in the spirit land.

In the foregoing examination of scripture the following points may be noted:

1. A certain class shall be termed "Christ's at his coming."
2. In order to be "Christ's" they must previously have been "baptized into Christ."
3. A prison has been prepared for the purpose of ministering the gospel to them.
4. They of the celestial order do the ministering.
5. They shall have part in the first resurrection.
6. They shall rise a little later than the church of the Firstborn.
7. They had been quickened previously by a portion of terrestrial glory.
8. They shall then receive a fullness of the same.

9. Which fullness means a receiving of the presence of the Son but not of the fullness of the Father.

SALVATION OF TELESTIAL SPIRITS.

We now reach the last stage of salvation, where the great mass of humanity occupy "as innumerable as the stars in the firmament of heaven, or as the sand upon the seashore."

Again we encounter differences of opinion regarding the time and place of salvation. But what saith the scriptures? How readeest thou?

In Doctrine and Covenants 85: 27 we read of the dead in Christ arising at the sounding of the first trump. The next paragraph tells of those "who are Christ's at his coming," arising at the call of the second trump, and the next reads:

And again, another trump shall sound, which is the third trump: and then cometh the spirits of men who are to be judged, and found under condemnation: and these are the rest of the dead, and they live not again until the thousand years are ended, neither again until the end of the earth.

What means this marshaling of spirits who are still under condemnation? Not a resurrection, for we are told they shall not live again till the thousand years are ended. What then? A grand review for a gala day of the millennium? We think not; God does not treat his creatures that way. What then? Is it not a change in their condition in the world beneath? They have suffered "the wrath of God on the earth" and have "suffered the vengeance of eternal fire"; they have "been cast down to hell" and are suffering "the wrath of Almighty God" for their sins, nevertheless they are "prisoners of hope" for whom Christ died. A change must come to them some time, for they are many of the "all men" whom Jesus said he would draw unto him.

Notice, this trumpet blows just after the one which called forth the terrestrial spirits out of "that prison which is prepared for them that they might receive the gospel." A vacant educational prison beneath, therefore, would be the result of the blowing of the second trump. When the third trump blows "then cometh the spirits . . . of those found under condemnation." Cometh where? Evidently where they shall receive the gospel, as will be seen in paragraph 31, which reads,

And another trump shall sound which is the fifth trump, which is the fifth angel who committeth the everlasting gospel, flying through the midst of heaven unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people; and this shall be the sound of his trump, saying to all people, both in heaven and in earth and that are under the earth; for every ear shall hear it and every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess, while they hear the sound of the trump, saying, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come.

There can be no mistaking this language. The spirits in prison, under the earth, are called forth somewhere by the blowing of the third trumpet and the blowing of the fifth trumpet commits the gospel unto them and they receive it and confess while the trumpet is still blowing.

Now when does the fifth trumpet blow? During the millennium, while the first two glories are enjoying the presence of their Savior. What better time could be chosen in all the ages of eternity to save the hosts beneath than while Christ is presiding over his people, developing and perfecting them, and the nations living outside of Zion are being converted so that "the earth" is filled "with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea"? Then, as never before, could baptism for the dead be engaged in, and angels and redeemed men carry the message of eternal life to their suffering fellows below.

There is a reference in paragraph 39 regarding a class of spirits for whom the fourth trumpet blows, who also are to remain to the end and are then to be found "filthy still." This paragraph entirely loses its force unless those spirits of the third trumpet are cleansed before the end; for if both are to be filthy still when resurrected, there is simply a distinction without a difference. But we have seen better things for the spirits of the third trumpet and will deal more fully with those of the fourth trumpet in a latter part of this article.

God has made things very plain, however, regarding the redemption of the telestial spirits. Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7 says:

These are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fullness of times, when Christ shall have subdued all enemies under his feet, and shall have perfected his work, when he shall deliver up the kingdom and present it unto the Father spotless, saying: I have overcome and have trodden the winepress alone, even the winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God.

Let us examine this for a moment:

They suffer the wrath of God.

They continue to suffer until the fullness of times.

At which time Christ shall have subdued all enemies.

He shall have perfected his work.

He shall deliver them up the kingdom and present it to the Father spotless.

We would ask, What stains were on the kingdom? The stains of sin are the only ones that could ever mar it in the sight of God; hence sin must be obliterated before the spotless, finished work is presented to the Father.

But when is this finished work accomplished? when shall the kingdom be spotless?

Doctrine and Covenants 85: 31, as we have seen, tells of committing the gospel to those who need it. The next paragraph says of Babylon—which is wickedness (see Doctrine and Covenants 108: 4)—"She is fallen, is fallen!" and the next, the 33d, declares, "And again, another angel shall sound his trump, which is the seventh angel, saying: It is finished, it is finished! the Lamb of God hath overcome, and trodden the winepress alone; even the winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God."

What beautiful order: First the committing of the gospel, followed by the downfall of wickedness, and then the finished work of the Savior proclaimed!

This seventh trump also sounds during the millennium, as will be seen in the paragraphs following which gave a description of millennial transactions and of the great battle which is the last event recorded to occur before the second resurrection.

Paul, speaking of this time, says, "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom of God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

What a remarkable statement! "Then cometh the end," the last resurrection, for that is the subject he is dealing with, when he shall have (some time previously) delivered up the kingdom and put down all rule, etc., and, listen! "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Sin and all its obnoxious attendants have been overcome, everlasting righteousness has been brought in, all men have been drawn to Christ, he has destroyed the works of the Devil and redeemed the last redeemable man; he has truly "trodden the winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God alone," for God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance, but he can look upon Christ, who takes the place of the repentant sinner, and for his sake forgive the sins of those who come to him through Christ. But the end has been reached; the last pleading suppliant has made his appearance, Christ has pleaded his cause, and he has been washed from his sins by obedience to the gospel.

One enemy alone remains unconquered and that enemy is death. It still holds in its awful grasp the myriad hordes of earth. Shall it also be met and overcome? Ah, yes; thrice before the Savior of men has proved that he is "the resurrection and the life" by wrenching from the hands of death those who had obeyed the first four principles of the gospel and were ready for the fifth, the resurrection. He will conquer this time also, for he has prepared another people and "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." "Death shall be swallowed up" in the "victory" of the resurrection.

We wish to call attention again to the fact that as the celestial and terrestrial heirs received a portion of their glory first, and a fullness at the resurrection, so with the celestial inhabitants. They, too, receive a portion previously.

We think that we have shown that the "portion" adorning the first two kingdoms is the Holy Spirit obtained through their acceptance of the message of life.

How will it be with the celestial spirits? To them, as well as to the terrestrial, is the gospel committed in the intermediate state, and they accept it. A reception of the gospel is invariably followed by the gift of the Holy Ghost.

We are told that celestial beings shall receive the gospel through the ministration of the terrestrial, and the administration of angels, and that their glory shall be an enjoyment of the Holy Spirit in the eternal world, but "where God and Christ are they can not come, worlds without end."

What other conclusion can we arrive at, in the light of these facts, than that the "portion" spoken of is the degree of the Holy Spirit received when they are born of water and of the Spirit in the prison house, and that the "fullness" is the greater portion bestowed at the resurrection, enabling them to endure and enjoy celestial glory?

THE SONS OF PERDITION.

There is one class left. They who have been saved from the pollutions of the world and lost again, through their own willful transgressions.

Of them scripture says,

It is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.—Hebrews 6: 4-6.

These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.—Jude 12, 13.

For if, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.—2 Peter 2: 20, 21.

All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. . . . Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.—Matthew 12: 31, 32.

Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the Devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father:

having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

These are spoken of in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 30 as they who at the end, "shall remain filthy still."

Also in 85: 8 where it says,

That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, or judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still.

Many passages also in the Book of Mormon refer to this class, the only ones who shall be condemned in the judgment.

THE LAST RESURRECTION.

This is generally termed the second resurrection, though in point of order it is really the fourth:

The first: All the righteous from Adam to Christ arose with the Savior. See Alma 19: 50; Matthew 27: 52, 53.

The next two at Christ's second coming, near together, and termed "the first resurrection," at which the saints and "they who are Christ's at his coming" arise.

The fourth, or last, at the end of time. The various degrees of star glory, of the "many mansions" of the Father arise in this order. Whether these shall resurrect simultaneously and be judged together, a great unclassified mass; or whether, as in the first resurrection, they shall be called up, a mansion or grade at a time, we are not told, but personally I believe "order is the first law of heaven."

This last resurrection differs from all former ones in that both just and unjust arise.

Some have questioned whether the sons of perdition shall be resurrected, but we think this is a mistake. It seems evident that all the dead shall arise. We have seen that all the children of men in heaven, earth, and under the earth have heard and accepted the gospel before the last resurrection. There is only one class left unredeemed, the sons of perdition. Now if we can ascertain that wicked people shall be resurrected, we prove that the sons of perdition shall be brought forth, for they are the only ones remaining who are wicked.

The passage over which the chief doubt has arisen is found in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4 where God says that the sons of perdition "are the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath, for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and glory of the Lamb."

From this the conclusion is drawn that the sons of perdition will never be resurrected. In the scripture under consideration God is speaking of the condemnation of the sons of perdition; and refers to the redemption of the rest of mankind, the final touch to which is given in a glorious resurrection, an ushering into life and happiness, in which they shall realize that "the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul," for by it they are redeemed from the power of the Devil, as well as the grave; and he is showing that the sons of perdition are the only ones who will not be thus raised, for all the rest are to be brought forth from suffering and "redeemed from the Devil" through the triumph and glory of the Lamb; but in the case of these there will be no redemption from the power of the Devil; for they shall still be associated with him; there will be no cessation of suffering, for they are to be sent back into it; they will receive their bodies through the resurrection, but there is no triumph nor glory to the Lamb in it, for he says he will be ashamed to confess them before his Father, and it were better for them never to have been born.

Another line of evidence that the wicked who are raised are the fallen saints, is found in the sentence pronounced upon them at the judgment. God says of the sons of perdition, "These are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power." (Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.)

We can, therefore, know for a surety whenever we read of this sentence being pronounced on any people, that they are of that kind.

In this connection let us consider the following:

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.—Revelation 20: 12-15.

This text is quite comprehensive. All the dead stand before God. The grave and hell alike are desolated. Two classes are represented; the righteous and the wicked. The righteous have their names written in the book of life. Others lacking this qualification are condemned to the lake of fire, which is the second death, where only the sons of perdition go.

The scripture is replete with reference to the complete annihilation of death and the tomb through the resurrection from the dead. From earliest ages the destruction of the grave has been proclaimed, and in latter days we have the declaration that,

Before the earth shall pass away, Michael, mine archangel, shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore I will say unto them, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7.

This seems conclusive. The Lord forestalls doubt on the question by not only announcing that "all the dead" shall awake, but emphasizes it by reaffirming, "yea, even all." And then he proceeds to classify them, the righteous and the wicked. And he reveals the sentence to be pronounced: The righteous on the right hand received into eternal life, and the wicked on the left, sent away into the lake of fire with the Devil and his angels.

This same scene is portrayed in Matthew 25: 31-45 as sheep and goats, the same separation made and the same decisions rendered, proving it to refer to the same event.

Additional evidence, if such is needed, is found in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6, where God, after telling of the resurrection of the celestial, terrestrial, and telestial orders of beings, which include all the saved of the human family, says,

And they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.

In all of these texts the inference is clear: The righteous are they who have obeyed the gospel, the law of righteousness, and having their names written in the Lamb's book of life, are received into a condition of life and happiness.

The wicked are they who have failed to merit a place in the kingdom of glory, not even abiding the law of the telestial kingdom, hence they must "abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory." And the punishment inflicted proves them to be none other than the sons of perdition—the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power.

HOW ARE THEY SAVED?

We have followed step by step the mighty river of Salvation as it flowed from the mountain peaks of Celestial Glory, adown' the hills of Terrestrial Excellency, through the valleys of Telestial Verdure, past the deltas of Resurrection and Judgment, into the great ocean of Eternal Life, bearing triumphantly on its swelling bosom all the sons and daughters of Adam, except those who forsook the ark of safety after embarking.

But by what means was this great work effected?

Paul says of the gospel, "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." (Romans 1: 16.) And to the Galatian brethren he is even more emphatic: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As I said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." (Galatians 1: 8, 9.)

This is strong language, but in perfect accord with that of Jesus, "The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting."

Of the perpetuity of this system Peter says, "The word of the Lord endureth for ever, and this is the word by which the gospel is preached unto you."

From these scriptures we find that:

In the gospel the power of God unto salvation is revealed.

Angels or men preaching any other terms of salvation are under the curse of God.

The Father is the author of it.

Life everlasting is its purpose and result.

As Latter Day Saints we "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," and will admit of no change in the plan of salvation.

With regard to what that plan is we can not go into details, but its six prominent principles are "faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment."

Our sectarian friends do not see the necessity of all of these and sometimes disarrange them, placing them thus: Baptism, followed by faith and repentance. But we insist that this will not do; things must be left just as God gave them or salvation will not result. God's course is "one eternal round," and his work, the chief of which is the plan of salvation, can not be frustrated, and any attempt on the part of man to disarrange or disannul only brings disaster to himself, the eternal principles of God remain just as firm as ever.

Let us apply this philosophy then to the salvation of men in their different orders.

Celestial inhabitants, we have seen, passed through the six stations on their way to eternal glory, and they passed them in their regular order.

Terrestrial spirits were not called forth from their prison house until they were "Christ's," hence had obeyed the first four principles, before the door of the resurrection opened to admit them to the bar of judgment and their reward.

Telestial heirs had a like experience. Before one soul was raised from the dead the "angel that committeth the gospel" blew his trumpet and "every ear heard, every knee bowed, and every tongue confessed." Then the victorious Savior presented a spotless kingdom to his Father, and then, but not till then, did they reach the principles of the resurrection and eternal judgment.

Brethren, the foundation of God standeth sure, and that foundation is the gospel, the rock upon which, if any man build, he shall never be removed.

Let us not attempt to disturb his plan, for he who is saved in any glory must pass along the narrow way, which way is pillared by six mighty principles, each in its own place and order, and absolutely necessary in that place; and can not be ignored or displaced. They are there as the eternal pillars of heaven and can not be removed.

Even the sons of perdition are no exception to the rule. There seems to be no reaching the judgment except along the one road that leads to it. These people pass safely the first four principles and are then robbed of all the benefits accruing, and reach the next two in abject poverty, meeting the Judge in shame and disgrace because they have wasted his substance and lost the rich treasures he committed to their care.

I trust we shall all endure unto the end and receive our crown in the celestial kingdom.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."---PART 28.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

PROPHECY OF ENOCH.

One more criticism urged by Elder Traum, on page 198, and we conclude this department of priesthood. Elder Traum says:

The "Book of Enoch," for instance, must have been a very ancient book, and, such being the case, since Nephi went back to Jerusalem and killed Laban in effecting possession of the "plates," which plates contained "also the prophecies of the holy prophets from the beginning," it is sad to think what bad luck the Almighty had with that book. It should not be incredible to the Mormon of average gullibility to believe that Enoch never wrote it at all, but that Jude got his information as to what Enoch said, by "revelation." And the same reasoning should satisfy a like character of the source from whence Paul drew his "unrecorded" quotation. And, generally speaking, what is the use of any book, for since God communicates directly with the Saints, it would save much clerical work to be freed from the writing of the book as well as from the added expense of publishing it. Certainly God added nothing that was worth the time and effort when he gave the "Bible of the Western Continent," and it is unquestionably true that the Mormons have given the world nothing new except their priesthood. As we have seen, using the New Testament as the "detector," it egregiously fails at not less than seven points; and when we take the Book of Mormon as the "detector," it shows that "the inhabitants of ancient America" never dreamed of the arrangement that was made between Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, and which they sought to palm off on the world as a divinely inspired ministry. It was Joseph Smith, and not the New Testament, nor yet the Book of Mormon, who said that there "are in the church two priesthoods; namely, the Melchisedec and Aaronic, including the Levitical." Hence at the very foundation of all these vast pretensions the Mormons come to the doctrine of continuous revelation. It was upon this, and not upon any Bible, whether of the Eastern or of the Western Continent, that the Mormon priesthood rests, and certainly it is no more stable than the foundation that underlies it.

As to the prophecy of Enoch, for aught our critic knows, or anyone else, that prophecy may be in the untranslated portions of the plates that were given into the hands of the angel. Mr. Traum, had he made himself acquainted with facts in the case, would have learned that only a portion of the plates were translated by Mr. Smith. The remainder were to come forth in "the acceptable time of the Lord." In John's revelation, he sees a book come forth in seven distinct portions, and no one in heaven or on earth, or under the earth, could break the seals, but the "Lion of the tribe of Judah,"—Jesus Christ. (See Revelation 5: 1-10.) This will doubtless give Elder Traum amplified opportunity to wield his pen in "scorching," and in waging "war," which he says "is hell," against Urim and Thummim, and "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," as he inspires some one to "unseal" the language in which it is written.

A possibility may exist, that the prophecy of Enoch referred to by Jude, was communicated to the latter by revelation, but if so, it was a practical exhibition of apostolic faith to receive divine revelation, and the uncertainty in the critic's mind, by the absence of all evidence, to him, on the question, emphasizes the fact that he fails in performing the injunction of this same Apostle Jude recorded in verse 3, to "contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the Saints." But this revelation to Jude does not account for the epistle he wrote, and referred to in that 3d verse, as well as the subject matter of the 9th verse, where he says, "Satan disputed with Michael, the archangel, about the body of Moses." Nor will it account for Paul writing to Timothy, second letter 2: 8, of "Jannes and Jambres withstanding Moses." Neither will it account for Paul's epistle to the Corinthians which he said he wrote, and referred to it, in what we have as 1 Corinthians 5: 9. Neither will it account for his epistle written to the Laodiceans; Colossians 4: 16. It will not explain why we have not in the Authorized Version the "many biographies of Christ written before Luke wrote his, see Luke 1: 1. It will not account for the "book" which the Lord told Daniel should "be sealed until the time of the end," Daniel 12: 4, 9. It will not account for the "book" written by the Prophet Jeremiah. (Jeremiah 36: 32.) It will not account for the book "written to Ephraim," (Hosea 8: 12), with nineteen other "books" mentioned in the Bible, all of which are not in the Bible.

Can Elder Traum account for this fact? Jesus Christ taught: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matthew 4: 4. Our opponent is up against Christ when he argues that the Almighty is confined to cold type, in the limited district of Canaan. His equanimity is wonderfully disturbed over the claim of authority from God, and his attack strikes the organic polity of the government of God in the days when he confessedly admits the regime was under his direct jurisdiction, just as bitterly vindictive as it strikes the work now. God by his wisdom, and power blundered in the work of eternal redemption, by instituting something then, that will not reach the necessities of man now, he certainly has not bettered the situation, nor commanded the confidence of his creature in his eternal rectitude, by closing the door between, and withdrawing from the stage upon which he originally played to man's necessities. His promise is yea and amen, in Christ, to keep in touch with the institution he sent into the world, called the church, to save the "lost," and he affirmed he would do so by the revelations of "the Comforter"—the Holy Ghost:

"But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost whom the Father will send will teach you" (John 14: 26), and, "he shall take of mine, and show it unto you (16: 15). "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." Hence, as the New Testament church believed in the principle of immediate and divine revelation, the church of to-day laying claim to identity should be committed to the doctrine. Indeed, the principle of divine revelation was a characteristic of the religion of heaven for a period of four thousand years, and until the gross apostasy was inaugurated. It is indispensably necessary for the establishment of the church, and the calling of officers therein. Noah was called by revelation from God to be a preacher of righteousness, and to build an ark. Abraham, Lot, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph were called by revelation to perform their work. Moses and Aaron were called to the priest's office by immediate revelation. Twelve men and seventy elders were called by revelation to assist Moses. Joshua was appointed by the word of the Lord through Moses to be his successor in leading Israel. The successors of Aaron were called to the priesthood by revelation. The judges of Israel were called by vision, by angel and by the inspiration of the Spirit. Samuel was called by the voice of the Lord; and all officers, wise men, and prophets, down to the days of Malachi, were called by new revelation. The calling of officers under the Christian dispensation continued the same: John, the harbinger, was called by the Spirit of prophecy as manifested through the angel Gabriel. Jesus was called by his Father, and appointed a priest and an apostle for ever after the order of Melchisedec. And he being an apostle, called others to the same office, and said unto them: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you."—John 15. When Judas fell by transgression the apostles did not appoint another to fill his bishopric, but they called upon the Lord to show which man he wanted (Acts 1: 15-26). Barnabas and Paul were both called and set apart to the work of the ministry by revelation through prophets and teachers (Acts 13: 1-4; 14: 14). The elders of the church at Ephesus were called by the revelation of the Holy Ghost: "Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers."—Acts 20: 28. Timothy was called and appointed "by prophecy and the laying on of hands." 1 Timothy 4: 14. Titus was called and set apart by an inspired apostle (Paul), and Paul declares: "No man taketh this honor unto himself [the honor of the ministry] but he that is called of God as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5: 4. Without immediate and direct revelation, every office in the church would necessarily become vacant. Those who held office at the time revelation would cease would occupy during their life in the church, unless through transgression they should be deprived legally. If revelation ceased in the first century, it is not likely that any of the officers then holding authority would be alive a century afterward, and as they would have no authority to ordain others without new revelation, when they died, the authority (power) upon the earth would necessarily become extinct! Hence the church could no more continue its existence upon the earth than a body could live without the spirit.

"THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS."

In the matter of following Elder Traum, and noting his criticisms of the revelations of God under this head, we supplement with an argument on the nature of God, as deducted from the Bible, or rather the laws of his nature as have been exercised for forty-one hundred years of recorded Bible history.

God is a personage of Spirit, power, and glory; and Jesus Christ was the express "image of his person":

Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high.—Hebrews 1: 3.

Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.—Philemon 2: 6, 8.

The absurdity that God made "man in his own image" and yet has no image, is apparent.

In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins: who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature.

He is not destitute of regular form; lacks no symmetry of dimension; is not deformed; has beauty of proportion:

And the Father himself which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape.—John 5: 37.

Man created in God's "image," Paul affirms:

For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device.—Acts 17: 28, 29.

First, argue from the eternal laws of his nature that continued revelation from God is an absolute certainty under the unchangeable conditions revealed in his law for the guidance of man. The idea of creation is essential to that of Creator; he creates that he may govern that which he creates.

Second, he governs either by intelligence, or non-intelligence. That he does not govern by non-intelligence is evident, for where there is no intelligence there is no order, and where there is no order there is no government.

For government, there must be order, and for order there must be intelligence, and for intelligence there must be communication. The revelation of intelligence, therefore, being an indispensable necessity to government, as he does now govern by intelligence,—the communication of intelligence being a law of his nature, revelation from God is, therefore, a logical certainty.

I said, Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom. But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.—Job 32: 7, 8.

But, there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days. Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these.—Daniel 2:28.

And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?—Daniel 4: 35.

Does he "rule" according to his will among the inhabitants of the earth without revelation? If so, he rules in heaven without communication, for "he doeth according to his will" in both places!

Every intelligent being who governs must exercise the laws of his nature; seeing, hearing, communication. To say that God exists without exercising the laws of his nature, is to say he has eyes, but sees not; ears, but hears not; vocal organs, but speaks not; intelligence, but reveals not. It is equivalent to saying God possesses qualities,—an infinity of fullness,—of wisdom, power, benevolence, holiness, joy, happiness, and love, but does not exercise the laws of impartation! For any being to cease to exercise the laws of his nature is to cease to exist. Such an idea in relation to God is an absurdity. It is argued that "direct inspiration of the Holy Spirit ceased with the death of the apostles." Let us look at the statement in the light of logic and reason! It is an illogical conclusion, having no premises as a basis of sound inductive reasoning. First, it is identical with saying the gospel reached a finality at the death of the apostles, as the commission was given and confined "to them alone." Alexander Campbell says: "For by every rule of interpretation, I must apply every item of the commission to the apostles; because it addresses them only."—Debate, Purcell-Campbell, p. 52.

And as assumed, it ceased to be preached by inspiration at their death. Then, if inspiration ceased, the gospel ceased to be preached,—for it never was preached without inspiration—and if the gospel ceased to be preached, men ceased to believe the gospel, and as a logical conclusion, the promise of the Father, that he would give the Holy Spirit, has failed!

Second, the gospel and its promises being unchangeable, God and his "will" being unchangeable, therefore, it never was the will of God, that direct inspiration of God, and supernatural gifts should ever cease, when the gospel is ministered by his authority. Inspiration and gifts stand inseparably connected as cause and effect. There is no arrangement of the relative order of elements in any science more intimately linked; no system of dependencies more closely blended.

Third, as the cessation of the five sensitive powers of man would prove the cessation of the modus operandi of the spirit of man; as the cessation of the tributary streams prove the exhaustion of the fountain; as the cessation of the circle of rays prove the sun to have lost his fair properties of light, heat, and attraction; so the cessation of gifts and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit prove the cessation of the Holy Spirit, which is direct inspiration!

Earth has not anything to show more fair;
Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
A sight so touching in its majesty;
The city now doth like a garment wear
The beauty of the morning; silent bare,
Ships, towers, domes, theaters and temples lie
Open unto the fields, and to the sky—
All bright and glittering in the smokeless air

IN THESE THE LATTER DAYS.

Never has there been a time in the world's history when theories for the physical, mental, moral, political, economic, spiritual, and eternal freedom and salvation of man were as rife as they are to-day. The Prohibitionist, the Socialist, the single tax man, the physical culturist, the food faddist, the Christian Scientist, the psychologist, the spiritist, the anarchist, and all the other thousands of "ists," day after day; in schools, public halls and churches, on the street corners, in the homes, everywhere are propounding their myriads of remedies for the recognized ills of mankind.

Then, with the idea in mind that it is the sick who welcome the physician, accompanied by the fact that all these theorists are finding a welcome among men and are daily gaining converts, we are forced to a recognition of the fact that something is materially wrong.

It does not take a pessimist or a cynic to realize that the world is facing a crisis; for it is not only the cranks and extremists who are concerned in this medley of theories, but big men with big minds and hearts are devoting their lives in trying to establish habits, laws, and doctrines for the relief of humanity's distresses.

A prominent weekly of recent date bears the following:

"The world seems to be upset. Agitation, unrest, and distrust prevail. Kingdoms are being uprooted, monarchies undermined, while rankest socialism seeks its day. Great labor disturbances with loss of life are chronicled on both sides of the ocean. Bombs and dynamite do their fearful work. Lynchings, north and south, of innocent and guilty are reported. Mobs gather at slightest provocation and defy the authorities. The divorce courts are working overtime. Legislative bodies are debauched by demagogues; and rankest municipal corruption is widespread. The theaters are crowded while the pews of the church are empty; and religion is at its lowest ebb. Under what sign of the zodiac are we living?"

This editor stands amazed at the things that have come to be events of our everyday life. His statements are not unsupported. The tenor of human thought and experience on every hand confirm his word.

The man of wealth and social prominence looks with indifference on the sorrows and sufferings of the poor and seeks him only when in need of his services. The man of poverty and social exile looks with hatred upon the idle, luxurious rich, and seeks him only when necessity brings the slave to his master. The man of mediocre affluence looks with covetous heart upon the ease and independence of the rich, and upon the poor with repugnance, tempered by an assumed good fellowship, due to the fact that if he is ever to mount to the position he covets, he must do so upon the backs of the poor, bent to bear his weight.

The few honest-hearted thinkers who deplore these conditions, recognize that the world is all agog, that hatred and selfishness reign absolute where love and altruism should prevail. And so these few, to whatever class they belong have striven with theories of every description, to regulate and remedy the social inequality of man.

Why do they not succeed? And why will they not succeed? Not because they are not honest in their desire for success. Not because they are all actuated by selfish and improper motives. Doubtless many of them are truly striving to serve humanity; are striving to point you and me to the best way of thinking and living. And yet they fail. And yet they shall fail, for the simple reason that one and all have striven to put out the fire by throwing water at the smoke; to slay the enemy by shooting at his flag; to kill the oak by plucking out its leaves; to establish social equality and spiritual development by legislation and by an adjustment of externals instead of thorough education and an adherence to fundamentals.

By education, we do not mean the education of the head alone. We do not mean the modern, collegiate education, that fills the minds of men and women with two facts and three doubts; that is breeding the race of skeptics and infidels by its science which science has its foundation laid in baldest assumption.

When we say education, we mean the kind that makes for growth and development; that calls forth the harmonious development of all the powers and capabilities resident in us. To arrive at a condition of perfection in this kind of development, we must become possessed of an understanding of all the laws of life and relative values.

There is an important law in this universe known as the law of mathematics, which any man must understand thoroughly if he is to be completely educated. But there is also in this universe a law that is known as the law of love; and this law rates ten thousand times higher in the scale of importance than does the law of mathematics. That man who is incomparable in his understanding of the law of mathematics, though he be greatly endowed with worldly wisdom, and praised for his much learning, yet, if he knows not the law of love, he is ten thousand times lower in the scale of true education than the poor, common laborer who has learned to govern and control his life by the law of love, though he knows not that the sum of two and two is four.

Yes, Christian Scientists, tell me of the wonderful healing faith. But teach me first to have faith in God, in a personal God, who has a personal interest in each of his children and who is capable of loving and being loved; unto whom I may go in my hour of need, confident that my plea is being heard by some one who can sympathize and who has power to meet my needs.

Yes, psychologists, tell me of the wonders of the human mind. Teach me the strange things about thought and imagination. Teach me the marvelous power of hypnotic suggestion. But tell me first of Him whose mind is absolutely divine; whose suggestions are eternally true; and obedience to whose commands will bring me everlasting life.

Tell me, Socialists, of the possibilities resident in the principle of cooperation. Aye, go further. Tell me that the best possible social system is that in which the individual shall labor for his fellows as well as for himself; where each shall bear his reasonable share of the burdens of all. Teach me to love my neighbor as myself and to serve him accordingly; but forget not the first and greatest commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind."

Teach me, single tax man, that the earth is God's and that to him and his creatures am I responsible for my use of it. But forget not that so is the "fullness thereof." Though we delve in the everlasting hills and bring forth the precious things of coal and iron and gold and silver; though we sow and reap and gather into barns; though we toil and moil day after day in factory and workshop, yet all we accomplish is to change the form a little of the things that God has loaned us. And still "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." Thus I am as fully responsible to him for the way in which I use that which I have "produced" (if you please) as I am for the use of the land from which I produced it.

If, as Henry George has declared, "a voluntary communism is the highest form of social life"; and if, as Henry George has declared, "the thing which prevents it in the world is the lack of an intense religious faith, let us unite for the intensification of faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ, that the highest possible form of social life may be ours to experience.

Reformers, all of you, of whatever name or kind, bring to us an understanding of that which will soften our sin-hardened hearts and then our toil-hardened hands will soon find relief. Spread the glad tidings of great joy that shall fill men's hearts with kindness and altruism and brotherhood, which are the manifestations of charity (the true love of God) and life's problems and difficulties will be crowded out by the establishment of the celestial kingdom of God, and the fulfillment of the promise, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

IN PLACE OF THE MATERIALISTIC.

Canadians of to-day, like other nationalities; are tending too much towards the materialistic, which, though quite essential to the welfare of the people, should not become the sole phase of our life and the only occupation of our thoughts. Rather should we develop breadth of intellect by cultivating ability to think along lines not merely earthly. Let us think of the beautiful, the true, and even the religious.

Ah, here is room for great minds to find profitable activity,—in the religious phase of life, the widest field of thought open to the mind of man; a sphere comprehending all things, and hence unbounded.

But this wideness, this boundlessness, is uncomprehended by minds that run only in the materialistic groove. Have we not all seen the man who rails at the strictness of the religious, laments their narrowness of mind, and glories in his own broadmindedness? It may be that his breadth of mind is to be properly measured by the number and extent of the questionable pursuits, pleasures, or views of life he allows and the degree of the religious, the moral, and the truly beautiful that he excludes from the range of his thoughts.

Sometimes we think that such an one's idea of broadmindedness requires him to permit his mind to run aimlessly through the fields of thought uncurbed and unguided, thinking a firm rein upon the mind and the guidance of its activities and expressions by the principles of religion to be narrowness. But there remains this; if you would quickly traverse the breadth of a continent, directness of purpose must replace aimlessness, your course must be guided, your way must be narrow: if in the short span of life you would place within your mental grasp the widest array of the purest and brightest truths from all the vast domain of human thought you must largely exclude the questionable, though it may give breadth in the estimation of the worldly, and directly, carefully, and unswervingly guide your mental course through the unquestioned realms of the truly useful, the morally beautiful, and the intelligently religious.

In this way it can be assured to us that we shall not become unequally developed in mind or character, thus becoming more perfect citizens for either a heavenly or an earthly state. A perfect citizenship requires æsthetic, artistic, and religious elements in the place of much that at present is materialistic.

R. J. FARTHING.

"The evidences of Christianity, to be effective, must be looked for in present experiences, not in past history, for the simple reason that past history itself must first be proved before it can become proof to the present generation. If the miracles of Christ are relied upon to prove the truth of Christianity, the miracles must first be proved; if his resurrection is relied upon, the resurrection must first be demonstrated. But generally he who is skeptical about Christianity is still more skeptical about the miracles and the resurrection. The witness to Christianity must be a living witness, whose testimony can be heard and who can be cross examined."—Outlook.

A FEW NOTES.

The sale of liquor of any kind is prohibited in Canadian militia training camps. Canteens were abolished last year. Instead of having but one training camp next year the Canadian Department of Militia will conduct fourteen of them, three in Ontario, two in each of the provinces of Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia, while New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Alberta will have one each. Looks as if the military spirit might be growing.

London Saints to Have New Church.

London is to have another church, which will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000, if plans, at present in abeyance, by the Latter Day Saints of the city, are carried out. They contemplate the erection of a modern, one-story brick church, forty by one hundred feet, to be erected on the site of the present church. The branch in this city is composed of three hundred members, all of whom are anxious to have a new church. Elder Fligg is head of the London Branch. The present church is of red brick and is situated between King and York Streets, on Maitland.—Free Press.

The Two Mysteries.

We know not what it is, dear, this sleep so deep and still;
The folded hands, the awful calm, the cheek so pale and still;
The lids that will not live again, though we may call and call;
The strange white solitude of peace that settles over all.

We know not what it means, dear, this desolate heart and pain;

This dread to take our daily way and walk in it again.

We know not to what other sphere the loved who leave us go,
Nor why we're left to wander still, nor why we do not know.

But this we know: our loved and dead, if they should come this day,

And ask us "What is life?" not one of us could say.

Life is a mystery as deep as ever death could be;

Yet, oh! how sweet it is to us, this life we live and see!

Then might they say, these vanished ones—and blessed is the thought:

"So death is sweet to us, beloved! though we may tell you naught.

We may not tell it to the quick, this mystery of death;

Ye may not tell us, if ye would, the mystery of breath."

The child who enters life comes not with knowledge or intent;

Those who enter death must go as little children sent.

Nothing is known! but I believe that God is overhead;

And as life is to the living, so death is to the dead.

At the End of the Day.

Men hurry past him in the street,

And yield him no regard at all;

Where those whose pride is great compete

He has a place obscure and small;

He humbly serves as best he may

Where giants battle for success,

But at the end of every day

He hurries home to happiness.

Where traffic roars and walls are high

He earns the pittance he receives,

And few men would be gladdened by

The little triumph he achieves.

Denied the talents of the great,

He hurries home when night arrives,

To a blissful potentate

Among the ones for whom he strives.

Men wonder why his look is glad,

Since he is poor and underpaid;

Obscure, hard-pressed and cheaply clad,

He goes to duty, undismayed;

With common gifts, he envies none

The glories of supreme success,

For when the day's hard work is done

He hurries home to happiness.

Finding Time for Reading.

Many men say they can not find time for reading books. They are too busy. The only reading time they have is odds and ends of time. If they could have evenings or a few consecutive hours each day, they would be glad to read books. All they can do, they say, is to read newspapers and magazines. But if they can find time for this, that time is equally available for reading books. It does not require a kind of time for reading books which is different from the kind that does for periodicals and newspapers. If a man has ten minutes or thirty minutes, why can he not read a book as well as a newspaper? It simply involves his having a book at hand at the time. No man who reads newspapers can plead want of time as an excuse from reading books.

The only time that many men have for reading is the time that other men give to newspapers. The man who spends a quarter or half an hour coming down town to his work in the city, or an hour, more or less, in coming in from the suburbs, the man who can each day get a fraction of an hour free at lunch time or in the morning or evening, the man who can only seize a quarter of an hour before retiring at night, can read many good books in the course of the year. One average suburban traveler computed that he had in the course of the year four hundred and fifty hours for reading on his way to and from work. That is forty-five days of solid ten hours each, or more than two months of solid work under an eight hour a day law, or one sixth of the year. Yet thousands of men like this man complain that they have no time to read books.—Association Men.

Letter Department

BANKS, ARKANSAS, June 1, 1912.

Dear Herald: I feel very sad and lonely. My husband died a year ago this month. There are no Saints here. I carry the mail. I get forty-five dollars a month. My route is from Banks, Arkansas, to Gravelridge—twelve miles. I don't know whether any of you have ever ridden on the roads of Arkansas or not, but if you have you can sympathize with me. I have a large family and have to do something to support them.

As I was going along the other day there was a man said, "Ma'am, what are you out here in this wilderness for?" I told him I was cast out like Nephi and I was going to the promised land. I gave him a HERALD and some other papers and went on my way rejoicing. He has called for more, and I told him to give them to his neighbors. I think he did.

There seems to be a lot of people here that have never heard a Latter Day Saint preach. I wish if some of the elders could, they would come here. I would take care of them the best I could. If any of you read this letter that know me, I think you will be glad to preach for me. I have a farm of thirty-six acres. If Brethren Sparling, Plumb, and Sawley read this, they will know where to come if they come to Arkansas. We have lots of milk and honey here. The cows pasture on the range and the bees sip the flowers.

May we all meet in the promised land.

I remain ever praying and a believer in the gospel in its fullness.

Your sister,

VIOLA JONES.

Dear Herald: I thank God for the intelligence and understanding he has blessed me with, to enable me to comprehend the truthfulness of the latter day work. Having been a member for a considerable number of years, and never having seen any correspondence in the HERALD from this part of the Lord's vineyard, I thought I would just remind the Saints that we are still in the land of the living, and still keeping the work of the Lord afloat here. Although we are subject to a great deal of prejudice by our Christian friends, nevertheless we are endeavoring always to be ready to give a reason for the hope that is within us; and, as the Apostle Paul said, when he was before Ananias, the chief priest: "But this we confess unto them, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship we the God of our fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets."

I may just relate an instance which the writer and two other brethren of this branch had a short time ago. We were invited to a young men's bible class, and at the close of the service the teacher asked if anyone present would choose a subject for the following week. Seeing none of their own class seemed desirous of selecting one, one of our brethren, Brother S. H. Hope, now our branch priest, asked them if they would be willing to study the subject, "Is baptism by immersion essential to salvation?" They seemed willing, and consented to study the subject, but later in the week we were informed by one of their members that they had changed the subject into a prayer meeting. On hearing this we came to the conclusion that it was a little bit too much of sound doctrine.

I am glad that we are members of a society which I think will stand the keenest scientific investigation, and is ever ready to stand by that sound doctrine which the Apostle Paul spoke about to Titus.

In one of your recent issues, I read with remarkable interest the article from the pen of Brother Miller on social purity. If we Saints could only live up to the standard as recorded in the article, what a glorious people we should be.

If Elder Thomas Mills, who is laboring in Virginia, happens to see these few lines, may I inform him that my father, Brother John Spargo, died in November last, he having been a faithful member for thirty years.

Our branch is in a fair condition, but like many other branches, we have a few members who have grown careless and indifferent towards their soul's salvation. We have for our branch president Elder Joseph Harper, who has been a valiant worker for the cause of our Master for about twenty-five years, and we have also another valiant worker in Elder David Hope, who has been busy for the cause for about twenty-seven years.

Your brother,

JAMES SPARGO.

Editors Herald: I receive pleasure as well as instruction by reading the HERALD and other church publications. I was quite interested in the articles concerning the final destiny of the extreme wicked, some thinking they would be redeemed some time. One writer closed his article with the sentence, "Let the wandering boy return." It seems to me to be a question, not whether God will let them return, but as to whether they want to return. That is, do they have any desire to reform or advance to a higher spiritual or mental condition?

As I understand this subject, all created beings commence to develop mentally, and while in this growing condition can be trained to a great extent in either a right or wrong direction; but ultimately they become so fixed in their habits and desires that they will not want to change. Therefore, those who cultivate good thoughts and ways will develop a good character that will become so fixed that all sin will become abhorrent to them, and in whatever proportion we allow evil to mix in, we hinder the perfect development of the good. Those who go down to the lowest depths of sin and refuse to do better will some time become so hardened in sin that there will be no impulse for good remaining, so that it is impossible to appeal to any desire or tendency for good, as everything in that line has been completely obliterated. Everything good will be so distasteful to them that it will be impossible for them to even desire to do better; therefore they will have to go away by themselves, where their own wicked passions and habits will be a source of perpetual torment,—not necessarily torture,—for in speaking of this class, God says, "Never at any time have I said they would return, but all my judgments are not given unto man."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 8.

By this I understand that, although they have gotten into that condition from which it is impossible to return, yet even then he has judgments or plans whereby he will give them suggestions that will at least make their condition more endurable. God does not punish except temporarily, and for our good, but those who refuse to receive any good from any source, are subject to the natural punishment of their own degradation, from which the Lord would be glad to have them return if they only would. But they, having crucified unto themselves the Son of God afresh, it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance, they having nothing but hatred for anything good.

Yours in the gospel,

PETER M. HINDS.

Editor Herald: On page 529, under the heading "Pastoral," written by me, in second line where it reads, "appointed minister in charge," should be assistant minister in charge. This may have been my mistake in leaving off the word assistant; I do not know. Thanks for a correction of the same.

To All Whom It May Concern: In the SAINTS' HERALD my appointment reads Northeastern Illinois District; as also in Ensign, and on my letter of appointment. It should have been Northeastern Missouri District.

HIGBEE, MISSOURI, June 3, 1912.

Editors Herald: The Edwards-Aylor debate closed the night of May 31. There was a very good attendance all the way through, except on one night when it rained. Edwards represented the non-progressive wing of the Church of Christ (so called by them). But I believe it should be Anti-Christ. Brave fellows, they, in their own estimation. Proposition: Joseph Smith an inspired prophet of God. They framed up this proposition themselves. "The Church of Christ, with which I, R. G. Edwards, stand identified, is the identical church of the New Testament in origin, organization, faith, doctrine, and practice."

He came about as near proving his proposition as a man could come to proving that a cabbage stalk is a steamboat. His cause faltered and the majority of the people could and did see it. Claimed the church he represented had no connection or affiliation whatever and never did have with that church styling themselves the Christian Church, and having a publishing house in Saint Louis. Claimed that Alexander Campbell was not the founder of any church, neither did he establish any church, but from the evidence produced from the books of both wings of the church by Brother Aylor, people could see that Mr. Campbell did find something, and that it was not a saloon either. They could also see that it was not established at Pentecost, but in Pennsylvania, and

Mr. Edwards thought it was Pentecost because it commenced with a P.

His stock of trade against the Reorganized Church was the same old spurious stories reiterated by all of their men. Joseph Smith a false prophet, and taught polygamy, and the Book of Mormon was a fraud. He presented nothing new, except one thing: When the mob attacked the Carthage Jail and bursted in the door where Joseph, Hyrum, and others were incarcerated, Joseph thrust a six-shooter out at the door and fired four shots, bringing down his man every shot, hence died with blood on his hands.

Of all the stories I ever heard told about Joseph Smith firing an old pepper-box pistol while in jail, this is the biggest: "Four shots and brought down his man every pop." What a brave prisoner he was; and what a good marksman! What a pity they martyred him! According to that lie he would have made one of the bravest soldiers ever pulled a trigger. There was only one shot fired from within the jail from that old pistol, and how do they know who fired it? Whether Richards, Taylor, Hyrum, Joseph, or some one else? Fie on such folly. Hard up for evidence to prove that Joseph Smith was a false prophet.

How will these men feel when they have to meet all these lies they have told on Joseph Smith in the day of judgment?

To the scattered Saints in Northeastern Missouri District comprising about nineteen counties: Secure a place for meeting in a house or out of doors, and write D. E. Tucker, Higbee, Missouri, or W. B. Richards, Bevier, Missouri, and we will respond to the call as soon as possible.

Your colaborer,

D. E. TUCKER.

PLEASANTON, IOWA, June 3, 1912.

Editors Herald: Am very glad to say I'm not among the isolated ones any more. God continues blessings upon me, but I realize the power of Satan is everywhere present and I earnestly desire the prayers of God's people that I may be even more greatly blessed, and that this branch of the church may come up higher; that we all may be among those who have their lamps trimmed and burning when Jesus appears.

Glad to see the article on faith. Why is it that Saints can not have more faith in the Great Physician instead of depending on substitutes? People say to me that great faith in God is not given to every man. Is it not because they do not live near enough to God to obtain it? or am I wrong?

Saints, again I plead with you to remember us in your prayers.

A sister,

CLARA MCNEIL.

SAINT MARYS, ONTARIO, May 28, 1912.

Editors Herald: The last time I wrote to your columns I was on the Cockburn Island in 1910 and there have been many sad experiences that I have been called to pass through since then. I have thought at times that it would be impossible to bear up under the strain of the many trials I was called upon to endure. Had it not been for the goodness of God in giving kind words of encouragement and pointing out the path of duty I would have gone down in the struggle; but, thanks and praise to his holy name, he has enabled me to continue in the work, although I was forced to discontinue missionary work for the year 1911.

A good work has been accomplished here in the branch, long standing difficulties have been adjusted, a Religio has been organized and is making progress, regular Sunday evening services are being held, and through the assistance of our esteemed Brother G. M. Shipley, now of Detroit, we have increased the value of our church property to the extent of sixteen hundred dollars. It was almost in ruins, and is now a beautiful structure, and not one dollar of debt on it. Friends have been made to the cause, three have been baptized and we are gradually gaining the respect and good will of the people.

We have a number of church books in circulation and there is a growing demand for more. This has all been accomplished in one year, which under the conditions which existed at the time, at first seemed impossible. The problem that confronts us now is, Shall all this advancement fall back into the old rut of a do-nothing policy that existed in the past? or shall it go on as we see it? That depends largely on the missionary arm of the church.

Saint Marys requires persistent labor. It is a growing industrial town and is likely to double its population in a few years. It has many advantages, from its situation and from its natural resources. It is connected by two railways with the largest towns and cities in western Ontario. Many large and flourishing industries are in operation, others in course of construction, and by-laws being submitted to give the right for others to locate here. If the church could see its way clear to place a missionary pastor from abroad over the work here we believe much good would be accomplished.

G. C. TOMLINSON.

KINGSTON, MISSOURI, June 3, 1912.

Editors Herald: From this old historic ground I write that I had the pleasure of listening to a splendid lecture, accompanied by sliding pictures, delivered by R. Etzenhouser in the Cameron church on the 17th of May. The church was packed with interested listeners, and all seemed to enjoy it.

On the 19th Brothers Johnson and Atkinson took the writer three miles east of Cameron to fill a new appointment for them. The congregation was small but very attentive. I was told that the Saints had preached there in years gone by, but it is new again to them. The brethren intend to keep up the appointment.

On the 20th I visited Brother Franklin's at Kidder. On the 22d Brother Coleman Snider met me in Hamilton and took me to Oak Grove Branch, where I also met a Latter Day Saint welcome from all the Saints. That branch is in splendid condition. Brother Ford and his noble family, formerly of Iowa, have recently located there and that will be a grand help to the branch, for Elder Ford is a rustler and he and all the family are good musicians; so also are Brother and Sister Snider. I preached for them on Wednesday night; also Sunday at 11 a. m., and at 8 p. m., with fine liberty. A goodly degree of the Spirit was present. I think we will hear from the work being done in that branch with such honest workers as Brethren Snider and Ford at the helm.

As the farmers are very busy now they requested me to come back and hold meetings in the fall. I hope to be able to do so.

On the 28th Brother Snider took me to the old historic Kingston Branch. I began preaching on the same evening and am still at it, with varying crowds, ranging from twenty-five to forty-six, white and colored folks. The doctor and wife, the county clerk and wife, the sheriff, and others, gave attention and interest. The colored preacher was out one evening.

On last Sunday, just as Sunday school was fairly started by Sister John Baker, the superintendent (they live two and a half miles in the country), a lad came running into the church saying, "Mr. Baker's house is on fire." A neighbor who came by the house saw the fire and hurried to the next house and phoned to central and gave the fire call. A boy was sent to the church to notify Brother Baker. The sheriff was one of the first ones to hear the call and soon grabbed a lot of fire extinguishers, jumped into his automobile and called to five or six men to jump in, and made two and a half miles in about three minutes. They were soon fighting the flames and others soon arrived to assist. Brother and Sister Baker jumped into their buggy, but the horse was no match for the automobile. The neighbors got nearly all out that was on the first floor, and by heroic effort, by placing wet carpets on the roof and sides of the new house about thirty feet off, it was saved. Another warning against the careless use of lamps and matches. I have often wondered that there were not more houses burned than there are, for I have often seen children, and older folks, too, strike a match, light the lamp, then give the match a fling regardless of where it might light on the floor, or perhaps on the carpet, or in some clothing. But the mistake is always seen when it is too late. It is like the old habit, as with the gasoline stove.

The Saints here are many of them growing old. Brother Ford promised to be with them at least once a month. When I close here I will go to old Far West; then home to see what Uncle Sam will do for me on the new pension bill. God bless his people.

In bonds,

J. S. ROTH.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

The history of Independence Branch for the last decade, which we have endeavored faithfully to write, though it be perhaps imperfect in way of detail, contains an item of much import to Saints just now.

On January 24, 1906, George H. Hulmes, the father of this branch, and beloved first president of the Independence Stake, passed peacefully away, and on Sunday, the 28th, a farewell and loving tribute was, by Elder Joseph Luff, paid to his memory. He had left for others to enjoy a cheery, delightful residence, (once occupied by a happy, hospitable family,) which had been established and improved by his supervision and artistic skill.

This lovely place has since passed into other hands, and is now set apart as a home place for about forty girls by the Council of Women's Clubs and the county court. It will be a benevolent institution, and is called "Girls' Home." Thus, being full of ideal advantages, the entire project seems to be a fitting tribute to the life work of our beloved brother, who was so thoroughly devoted to a love of the beautiful, the good, and the true.

The work of the Lord continues to go on from within as well as without and during the past two weeks, while enjoying a continuance of good weather (with now and then a change by way of spring showers and showers not so spring like), the Saints have been privileged to hear sermons and lectures full of excellent counsel. Those occupying the pulpit have been Brethren Joseph Luff, R. F. Slye, Bishop Kelley, and M. H. Siegfried.

On Tuesday afternoon, the 4th, about one hundred of the sisters of the auxiliary work met to listen to an instructive lecture on "Nervousness and self-control" by Miss Jennie Weed, a sister of long experience as a trained nurse.

Educational classes and clubs, interested in various important studies, are also holding sessions from time to time.

The night meetings are well patronized. On Tuesday, 28th ult., about one hundred and fifty children, under the instruction of Sister Anderson, gave a fine musicale in which the boys and girls exhibited skill and talent, both in vocal and instrumental performance.

At the business meeting of the 3d inst., three were received by letter; Brother John Luff, our faithful branch recorder, resigned and was succeeded by Brother L. H. Haas. Committee reports and other statistical matter was attended to, and all business was transacted with dispatch.

On Sunday, the 2d, the little primaries were prompt in their attendance at Sunday school, 172 being present; the total number at the session being 896. Afternoon meeting being a sacrament service, an immense body of Saints, old and young, attended, also one especially, (whom the brethren always greet with solicitude and a feeling of love) was present morning and afternoon. It frequently, of late, has been possible for Brother Joseph to be present. Also there were three children blessed and confirmation of three was performed,—two children and Brother Joseph E. Jennings, formerly of Iowa.

Two marriage ceremonies have lately taken place, Brother Charles J. Spurlock with Sister Rosa R. Thompson, and also a son of Bishop Bullard with Sister Pooler; all of Independence. The Saints wish them much joy and many happy days of usefulness in our midst.

On Decoration Day many repaired to the cemeteries here, and while several of the Saints went to Mound Grove, others repaired to the city grounds, where the veterans' graves were decorated by old soldiers of the Union.

"Fold up the banners! Smelt the guns!
Love rules. Her gentler purpose runs.

A mighty mother turns in tears
The pages of her battle years
Lamenting all her fallen sons."

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Machias, Maine.

Just one year ago this month I left my home at Fall River, Massachusetts, on my first trip as a missionary. My field of labor was the Maritime Provinces. Many enjoyable hours were spent in active work with our noble, well-known brother, Daniel Macgregor. I felt with him I was making some progress, but since then I have been alone, and don't seem so "lively."

Many friends were made in Nova Scotia who will not be forgotten for their kindness to me. A work was started there by Sister Macgregor which she terms the "sleeping giant," the home department. By reports we all know that she, with the help of Ralph and Boyd Johnson, of Amherst, Nova Scotia, awoke the "giant."

I left the Provinces early in July for the eastern reunion. From there I was sent to Machias by Brother U. W. Greene. Here I have been trying ever since to present the angel's message to the people, and as well trying to assist the few Saints to live so that the life of our Lord might be exemplified in our lives. Our meetings here have not been what we would like to call well attended. I have found here many true and loyal Saints. We are all working with our might and bringing our "mites" to finishing the interior of our church building. Our Sunday school is getting in line with progress. The Religio, we are sorry to say, is halting between two opinions: whether to give up or keep up the struggle of "Onward and Upward." We must not be personal or we could give reasons for such conditions.

On the 9th of last October I started a normal class with twenty members and such an interest! I was overjoyed with the results of their study when on the 25th of February eighteen scholars took their examinations. I was more pleased when the report of their examinations came back to find that eight had attained the highest rank, one hundred per cent, and the lowest average being ninety per cent.

Just now we are arranging for district conference which convenes here June 22. I take this opportunity of sending my best regards to all the Saints and friends of the Massachusetts District. The Machias weekly paper has consented to print the announcement of our regular services each week. So we are trying in every way to reach the people.

Your brother and coworker,

JOHN FRENCH SHEEHY.

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN MAINE.—Conference of the Western Maine District convened May 24, 1912, at 2 p. m. with the Stonington Branch. U. W. Greene presided, assisted by George Knowlton and Henry Eaton. Reports from Stonington, Mountainville, and Little Deer Isle were read. Report of bishop's agent read and approved, showing a balance of $79.61. The preaching was done by F. J. Ebeling, J. C. Farnfield, and U. W. Greene. An excellent prayer meeting at 9 a. m. F. J. Ebeling was elected district president for the next six months, associated with him are George Knowlton and H. H. Eaton. Adjourned to meet with the Little Deer Isle Branch, August 24, 1912. W. A. Small, secretary.

POTTAWATTAMIE.—District conference met at Carson, Iowa, May 25 and 26, 1912. President J. A. Hansen in the chair, assisted by N. V. Sheldon. A report on credentials prepared by the secretary was approved and the delegates seated. All branches reported: Boomer 66; Carson 43, gain 2; Crescent 150; Fontanelle 35; Hazel Dell 64, gain 3; North Star 133, loss 3; Wheeler 43. Ministry reporting: Joshua Carlile, 7 blessings; J. P. Carlile, P. T. Andersen, baptized 2; Hans Petersen, J. A. Hansen, C. B. Bardsley, D. Parrish, J. C. Lapworth, A. Davidson, S. Harding. Priests: J. P. Christensen, E. D. Blair, H. N. Pierce, J. N. Campbell, D. E. Butler, C. C. Larsen, George E. Whitehead. Teacher J. C. Adams. The bishop's agent reported, Balance on hand, $721.25; received, $492; total, $1,213.25; paid Bishop Kelley, $400; ministry, $76.93; ministers' families, $141; aid, $40; total, $657.93; balance on hand, $555.32. Collections received from branches for expense of Scott and Lentell to General Conference; Boomer $2, Carson $2.25, Council Bluffs $11.23, Crescent $2, Hazel Dell $6.70, North Star $2, total $26.18. District treasurer reported receiving from former treasurer $4.71; paid bill of reunion committee $1.40; balance on hand $3.31. District secretary reported branch enrollment 870, net gain 2. Summary of ministry report is: 7 patriarchal blessings, 76 sermons, 2 baptisms, 4 confirmations, 2 marriages, 6 children blessed, 77 sick administered to, 46 official visits. The secretary presented a bill for office expense of $1.20. A collection was taken to meet this, which resulted in $4.50 being raised, the difference was turned into the district treasury. A motion was adopted confirming the choice of delegates to the General Conference to members enrolled on the Pottawattamie district records. The remaining services having been provided for by the presidency on authority of the assembly, the conference adjourned to meet at Hazel Dell, Iowa, September 28, 1912, at 10.30 a. m. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

Conference Notices.

The Far West district conference will convene with the Stewartsville Branch, June 22 and 23. We will be pleased to have all reports in the hands of the secretary one week prior to the convening of conference. Charles P. Paul, secretary, Timme T. Hinderks, president.

The Idaho district conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will convene with the Hagerman Branch, Hagerman, Idaho, on the 6th day of July, 1912, as per district rules governing thereon. Resignation of district president will incur the need of a new district president. Branches should fully empower delegates by sending credentials to the district secretary. These credentials should reach their destination by July 1 at the very latest. Please do not confuse matters by being dilatory in making these up. A simple notice authorizing certain ones to act for the branch and signed by the branch president and secretary will be sufficient. Mail all reports of labors, etc., to Mrs. T. B. Jackson, General Delivery, Boise, Idaho. Please do not send your reports elsewhere, and be sure they reach Boise not later than July 1. Mrs. T. B. Jackson, district secretary.

Convention Notices.

Sunday school convention of Minnesota District will convene at Clitherall, June 26. A session of institute work will be held. Do you know anything about normal work or circulating libraries? If so, come prepared to shed light upon those subjects. P. W. Martin, superintendent.

Idaho district Sunday school association will convene at Hagerman, Idaho, July 5, at 2 p. m. Schools should elect their delegates and forward credentials and reports to the undersigned not later than July 1. Mrs. Wilma M. Jarrett, secretary, General Delivery Boise, Idaho.

Reunion Notices.

The Kentucky and Tennessee District will hold its annual reunion near Cottage Grove, Tennessee, beginning July 20, and closing July 29, 1912. A beautiful grove has been selected one fourth mile from the church, on the farm of Brother Hendrix. As our custom has been in the past, let all who can come self-sustaining. Bring your tents, covered wagons, etc. A large vacant house, with lower and upper stories, on the grounds, can be used by the campers. Feed stuff for stock will be provided by the committee. Plenty of good water for man and beast. Bishop Kelley is expected to be in attendance, and a number of other good speakers. Let all come who can and help to make the reunion the best we have had. J. R. McClain, Fulton, Kentucky.

The Millet Branch will hold their three-day reunion at Millet, Alberta, on the last three days of June, 28, 29, and 30. Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, T. J. Jordan, and others of the ministry are expected to be here. Board free: have quarters for sleeping, but not sufficient bedding, so each one kindly bring bedding if possible. The committee requests the Saints to make preparation now, to enable them to be in attendance and help make this year's reunion a success. Ira I. Benham, secretary of committee.

Conference and Joint Reunion.

Seattle and British Columbia District will hold its annual reunion at Centralia, Washington, August 9 to 19 to which the Portland District has accepted invitation; the Spokane District also having been invited. A business session of the district Religio society will be held at 10 a. m. on the 9th, which will be followed by a like session of the Sunday school association at 2 p. m. On the morning of the 10th, at 10 o'clock, district conference will convene. Said sessions will constitute the formal opening of the reunion. Branch clerks will receive blanks from the undersigned in ample time to make reports for six months ending July 31. Further particulars pertaining to location, accommodations, and expenses in detail will be extensively advertised by the regular advertising committee. Watch for it! It is earnestly desired that both adjoining districts will be well and fully represented, whereby an opportunity may be embraced for spending a summer's vacation to the best possible advantage and spiritual enjoyment by all. Frederick W. Holman, district secretary, 4233 Bagley Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Massachusetts District and Eastern Saints.

I am now ready to divide up the land at our Onset Reunion Grounds into lots. Saints desiring to obtain lots will please write me immediately at 7 Miner Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts. Prices furnished on application. I expect to have several cottages erected for this summer's use.

M. C. FISHER.

Notices.

In harmony with the action of the late General Conference which provided for the appointment of a committee of five to consider revision of rules of representation, the committee to be composed of one of the First Presidency, one of the Quorum of Twelve, one of the Quorums of Seventy, one from the High Priests' Quorum, and the Presiding Bishop, the appointments to be made by the First Presidency; the First Presidency desire to announce that after due consideration they have agreed on the appointment of F. M. Smith of the First Presidency, F. M. Sheehy of the Twelve, H. O. Smith of the Seventy, J. A. Tanner of the High Priests, who with Bishop E. L. Kelley will comprise the committee on rules of representation.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary First Presidency.

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder William Newton to the Rocky Mountain Mission, the authorities concerned concurring in the appointment.

Bishop R. Bullard, of the Independence Stake, will spend three months in Colorado, Utah, and Idaho, laboring in the financial interests of the work, as per arrangement by the Presiding Bishopric, the First Presidency, and minister in charge. We respectfully ask for Brother Bullard the hearty support of the Saints in the above-mentioned States.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary of First Presidency.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Western Maine District; Greeting: Having been chosen at your last conference to be your presiding officer, I take this means to salute you and earnestly ask your hearty cooperation. I already discover excellent opportunities to accomplish much good. Let us all do our best to push the work forward. You will greatly assist me by letting me know as soon as possible, the needs of your branches throughout the district.

I learn there are a lot of scattered members in the district. You will render much service by writing me of the chances for preaching.

I want to be kept busy every day, so kindly do all you can to move the work along. Remember your tithes and offerings. My permanent address is Stonington, Maine.

F. J. EBELING, District President.

I have been called on to labor as district president of the Ohio District. A letter sent to Creola, Ohio, will always find me if I be needed by any of the branches or any members in the district. Please notify me so I can make my arrangements to give you such assistance as I can. I hope that all the branches will see to it that they have their reports sent to me promptly at the end of each quarter. We want a report from every man that holds the priesthood, so we can know just what they are doing.

Now brethren, don't fail to do your duty along the line of responsibility. Address me at Creola, Ohio.

I am as ever your brother in gospel bonds,
J. W. METCALF.

NELSONVILLE, OHIO, June 4, 1912.

To the Saints of Northwest Canada; Greeting: We have entered upon another conference year in our gospel work which bids fair to be one of activity. Prospects are more encouraging than one year ago. Our missionary force has been increased and some are already in the field hard at work. It is the diligent worker that reaps the reward, both here and hereafter. We desire the cooperation of all the Saints, especially the isolated. As our aim and object as a missionary force is to plant the work in new places, we wish to make a special appeal to the isolated, and any others, to report to us any opportunity to present the message of life, and so far as possible we will respond to the call. For the present my field address will be 169 Langside Street, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. All branch and district affairs should be reported to Brother T. J. Jordan, Sedley, Saskatchewan.

There are wonderful opportunities in this country to make money, and the temptation to get our share of the spoils is great. The Lord has commended the honorable accumulation of worldly goods; but let us not forget that he requires a proper application of our temporal riches as a means to an end in securing the true riches of eternal life. Laying up treasures in heaven is paramount to everything else, and should have our first attention.

In gospel bonds,
E. E. LONG.

To the Saints of Central Illinois; Greeting: Having been assigned this field this year, I take this method of addressing you. This district is entirely new to me at the present, and hence it will greatly assist me if you will write me from your respective places the needs of the work there, and especially those of you who are isolated from branch association. Let us all be willing to put forth every effort in our power this year for the advancement and spread of the work in this district, whether working in the ministry or toiling in affairs of life. God has made it possible that we can all be workers together with him for the spread of his work.

Let us remember the Lord in tithes and offerings, that the work may not be hindered. See that our names are enrolled upon the bishop's agent's book; and if we thus comply with the financial law the Lord has promised to greatly bless us.

Let us see to it that these things are done and not leave the other undone, and I feel sure the heavenly Father will greatly bless us this year in our work.

Those desiring to write me, my addresses till further notice will be: Field address, 1019 Monroe Street, Beardstown, Illinois; Home address, Holden, Missouri.

In gospel bonds,
 J. W. PAXTON.

As I have been placed in charge of the Spring River District, I desire to see a hearty cooperation among all the members and especially among the ministry and local priesthood. There are great opportunities for all to labor together for the building up of the work. Let us each see to it that we perform our part. If any of the isolated Saints living where they can obtain a schoolhouse or church will let their wants be known to the undersigned we will gladly come to their assistance. Any Saints, or anyone knowing the address of any Saints in Lawrence County, Missouri, please send me the addresses, as we desire to work that part of our field. Don't forget your tithes and offerings to the Bishop and also remember the ministry; it takes money to travel and buy clothes and pay car fare.

I wish you to remember that our district tent has to be replaced with a new one before we can do any tent work, so let each branch president see what each branch can give—we need it now. Money sent to Mollie Davis, the "Jots Man," or the writer will receive a quick response. Don't neglect this. Don't wait. We shall need it for the reunion and for preaching now. Letters will always find me at my field address.
 HENRY SPARLING.

Note of Appreciation.

Brother Eben Miller wishes to express in this way his sincere thanks and deep appreciation for kindnesses shown by the Saints and friends at Lamoni during the sickness and passing away of his companion, Sister Margaret Miller. Brother Miller has taken his family to Cleveland, Ohio. He has suffered a breakdown of nervous force and has been quite sick.

God it not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have showed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister.—Hebrews 6: 10.

Died.

BOOKER.—Hattie Booker was born in Conecuh County, Alabama, October 20, 1865; married to R. B. Booker December 24, 1879, to whom were born twelve children, five of whom preceded her to the other side. She was baptized February 8, 1882, by A. J. Cato, died in Montgomery Hospital April 2, 1912. Her continuous example of patient endurance will long be remembered. She leaves to mourn, husband, three sons, four daughters, twenty-two grandchildren, and a host of friends and relatives. Laid to rest in the old family cemetery. Service by J. J. Hawkins.

A precious one from us is gone
 Whose voice we loved is stilled;
 A place is vacant in our home
 Which never can be filled.

ANDERSON.—Edwin Anderson was born in Missouri, July 24, 1848. Moved to Iowa with his parents when a child and from there to Clitherall when about twenty years of age. Married Emma L. Whiting April 5, 1870, baptized by Elder Thomas Nutt, March 5, 1884; ordained a priest at Bemidji, by I. N. Roberts, and ordained an elder June 21, 1903, at Clitherall, by F. A. Smith and T. C. Kelley. Died at his home near Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, Canada, May 23, 1912, leaving a wife, nine children, (two having preceded him to the better land,) and sixteen grandchildren. A good man gone to rest.

He giveth his beloved rest;
 I may not murmur or repine,
 Because that now among the blest
 There dwells one more loved one of mine.

STUBBART.—At Lamoni, Iowa, May A. Brown Stubbart, April 30, 1912, aged 49 years, 8 months. She was born at Durand, Wisconsin, August 30, 1862; she was baptized into Christ by Elder R. C. Elvin, May 24, 1878; was married to James M. Stubbart November 10, 1879. To them were born three sons and three daughters; one died in infancy. Husband, mother, and five children remain to mourn. Funeral at Lamoni, in charge of Elder John Smith, sermon by Elder C. Scott, May 2, 1912. Her rest is glorious.

KNAPP.—The unnamed son of Alvin and May Knapp was born in Boyd County, Nebraska, April 20, 1911, and died at the Greer Sanitarium, Lamoni, Iowa, June 5, 1912, at the age of 1 year, 1 month, and 16 days; this little bud was but loaned for a season; he was a grandson of Sister Sybilla Zenor, and a great grandson of Sister James Anderson. Funeral service held at place of death June 6, 1912, in charge of Elder John Smith, and sermon from Matthew 19: 14, by Elbert Robert M. Elvin. Interment will be in Monowi Cemetery, Nebraska.

DANIELSON.—Miss Sophia Danielson was born June 11, 1841, near Stavanger, Norway. Was baptized into the church September 15, 1888, at Mission, Illinois, by Elder Thomas Hougas. She died May 30, 1912, at her home near Stavanger, Illinois. She leaves to mourn her departure three sisters. Her father, mother, two brothers and one sister have passed on before; she also leaves many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Her funeral services were held at the Mission church on Sunday, June 2, Elder J. O. Dutton in charge; memorial address delivered by Elder Charles H. Burr.

MOORE.—The deceased, Elder A. B. Moore, was born in Georgetown, Ohio, December 13, 1829. He was married to Miss Celia A. Young July 5, 1849. To this union were born eleven children. The widow and nine of the children survive to mourn their loss. Mr. Moore united with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints when a boy, at Nauvoo, Illinois, cast his lot with the Reorganization in 1867, and was ordained an elder the same year, preaching from that time locally in Idaho and Montana and was president of the Montana District in an early day. Elder Moore took up active missionary work in 1888 and traveled, preaching the gospel of Christ in Texas, Oklahoma, Montana and Oregon. He died about 7 p. m. May 26, 1912, at the home of his son, A. J. Moore, Reese Creek, Montana, at the ripe age of 82 years, 5 months, and 15 days. Just before passing away he requested administration (as in James 5: 14), and at the close of the prayers he fell asleep in Christ. Interment in Reese Creek Cemetery. Sermon by Elder L. E. Hills, of Bozeman.

COOPER.—William Elmer Cooper passed peacefully away in the home of his parents, Brother and Sister Louis Cooper, of Santa Rosa, California, on the morning of May 22, 1912, at the age of fifty years and two months. His last words were: "I am growing dizzy, but I can see a bright light ahead." Elmer was a kind and dutiful son; ever kind, especially to the sick, many of whom he has nursed back to health. He was the first of a family of seven children to be taken. The strongest of all went first. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon, the services being in the undertaking chapel, which was filled with sympathizing friends and relatives. The floral display was most beautiful and profuse. The sermon was by Elder J. M. Terry.

MILLER.—Sister Margaret Gillespie Miller, beloved wife of Elder Ebenezer Miller, died at her home in Lamoni, Iowa, on Thursday, May 23, 1912, and was buried in the cemetery at Kirtland on Sunday, May 26, where lie her father, mother, and two children. Sister Miller with her family had but recently moved to Lamoni from Cleveland, Ohio. Her death after a short illness came with a terrible shock to her family and many friends. Sister Miller was born in Durham, England, and was 46 years of age at the time of her death. She leaves a husband, six children, three brothers, and three sisters to mourn. Sister Miller was always a faithful and consistent Saint, a devoted, affectionate wife, a loving mother, a kind and considerate neighbor. Loved most by those who knew her best. The large attendance of Saints and friends at the funeral was a fitting tribute to the memory of our departed sister. Funeral in charge of Bishop J. A. Becker; sermon by Elder L. W. Powell.

Quaker Civilization in America.

Nowadays the Friends have kept their high ideals, but have lost their individuality. What remains of their old prepotence is almost intangible: a reserve which keeps emotional experiences locked behind the lips of their descendants, a reliance upon intuitive belief, a distrust of the efficacy of form. But there is an abiding memorial to the Quaker civilization in America in the country districts where the society most flourished. There they have left the imprint of their peculiar spirit as clearly as upon the faces of their children. —From Henry Seidl Canby's The People Called Quakers, in the June Century.

Suppose Your Baby is a Mark Twain or an Edison or a Lincoln.

Kathleen Norris, writing a story in the June Woman's Home Companion, makes two of her characters carry on the following conversation:

"If we women stuck to our jobs with the intelligence and perseverance with which our husbands are obliged to stick to theirs," said Mrs. Burgoyne thoughtfully, "we'd feel terribly abused. But it seems to me we don't begin to know how overwhelmingly important we are."

"But you can hire a lot of it done as well as you can do it yourself," protested the doctor's wife, unconvinced.

"Well, can you? That's the point. Suppose, for instance, Mrs. Brown, you and I knew that one of those children down there was a Lincoln, or a Thomas Edison, or a Mark Twain, how much would we feel to blame for turning that child over to a nurse, while we raced to the club to hear a paper on the "Childhood of Napoleon."

"But lots and lots of children disappoint their parents bitterly," said Mrs. Brown vigorously.

"Well, we expect angels, I suppose," Mrs. Burgoyne agreed thoughtfully. "We don't want our boys to marry little fluffy-headed dolls, or to become firemen when we've planned their careers at the bar. And there's the horror of the first suspicion of bad company, and of smoking, and of drinking!" she sighed. "Still, it's just that much more done for the world," she added hopefully, "or attempted, at least, than guarding the valuable life of a Pomeranian, or going to New York for new furs."

has just been issued, entitled

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

(1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.

(2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.

(3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.

(4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

Colorado is a Wonderful Place for Children

I don't know any other place where children are so benefited from a few weeks of outdoor life, as they are in Colorado. The summer life out there is about as ideal as can be imagined, and you can live there nowadays so comfortably, and at such moderate cost. There are scores of nice, clean, wholesome boarding houses and ranch houses in Colorado where the rates are from $10 to $15 a week, and where you can live well and comfortably. Then, of course, there are elaborate, modern hotels for those who require more.

If you know of anyone who is going to Colorado, ask them to come in and get a copy of our folder, telling all about where to go, what to see, etc. It is easy to go to Colorado—only-one-night-on-the-road—and the trains are so comfortable and modern that the trip out and back is really a great part of the pleasure of it all.

Summer Tourist Tickets on sale daily until September 30.

LAMONI, IOWA, JUNE 19, 1912

NUMBER 25

Editorial

A TRIBUTE TO SISTER ELIZABETH BLAIR.

At the conference which met at Independence, Missouri, April 6, 1910, known as the Jubilee year, there were nine persons on the conference platform who were at the conference at Amboy, Illinois, April, 1860. The two most conspicuous among these were Elder E. C. Briggs and Sister Elizabeth Blair, the widow of Elder William Wallace Blair, who fell at his post of duty, April 18, 1896, while en route home from the conference at Kirtland, Ohio. Of the latter of these two personages, Sister Elizabeth Blair, we write.

Sister Blair with her husband became interested in the latter day work during the interregnum between the death of the Prophet and Patriarch and the Reorganization, and they were among those with whom the Reorganization began. Among the women who have taken part in what is known as the latter day work Sister Blair was for some reasons one of the most noted and estimable. Her husband, called to the ministry, set aside business calling and worldly interests, and entered the field at once in the labors of which he continued till his death. With equal resignation to divine will and with unflinching fortitude, Sister Blair took up the role of patience and self-sacrifice which the life of a minister's wife demands, and during the years of constant labor which his calling imposed upon him, Sister Blair bore her share of deprivation, with herself and her growing family, and with equally constant fortitude and patience maintained the dignity of her womanhood and her position, with the utmost fidelity and unyielding and unflinching faith in the promises of God. Wherever the family was located, from 1851 to the date of the departure of her husband, Sister Blair kept open house for all whom duty or inclination brought within the province of the home influence. In her house and at her table and in her heart there was ever room and welcome. Through every vicissitude of trial and sickness in the family, or among the neighbors, she was always the same constant, alert, willing, ready and capable minister for good. Anything within the reach of her resources necessary to these ministrations was ever forthcoming.

She early became associated with the auxiliaries known as the Prayer Union and the Mite Society. She undertook with unhesitating devotion the duties of presiding over the work of the Mite Society, and largely through her influence, aided by strong and able coworkers, the society became known as an instrument for good, both in the public enterprises of the church and in the ministration of the local charities that come within the province of such society.

It will be left for whoever may write her biographical sketch to enumerate the various works originating with and carried out by the Mite Society. We have not at our command the data upon which to make this record. It is within our province, however, to pay this tribute of respect to a woman whose character and fitness for the position in life which she occupied were not only remarkable, but were of such a nature as to make her worthy of the sincerest esteem and personal and social regard.

In her work she seems to have left nothing to chance, but where anything occurred demanding attention her motto was, "It is not safe to move without knowledge. I will myself make inquiry," her idea seeming to be, "I want to know for myself." In this spirit she made her inquiries kindly and with pertinacity which were eminently successful in justifying the efforts of the society. With our long acquaintance with the sisters' aid society, known as the Mite Society, we have no recollection of there having been a failure of correct understanding or a miscarriage of judgment, for the want of proper investigation upon the part of its officers; and from more than a quarter of a century of acquaintance with and nearness to the activities of the Mite Society we can pay this tribute of trustworthiness. These quiet, unobtrusive laborers, their meetings for association were not schools for scandal, but were occasions for cheerful cooperation and encouragement in noble perseverance in the Christian faith.

Sister Elizabeth Blair's thought and the aims and purposes of her life were identified with the church which resulted from the devotion of an honest, truthloving people who sought to know where the truth was and studiously sought to serve its interests wherever it was found and their fields of labor lay. Sister Blair was of noble, cheerful spirit, a wise counselor, both in her home and her church work, of unflinching courage, and of such spiritual susceptibilities as seemed to mark her as one who in intent and purpose lived near to God. She was esteemed, honored, and loved as a living representative of what the gospel could and would do for one who lived in its influence.

Of her we may repeat the apostle's words (Paul to the Romans), "For the spirit of the law of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

CURRENT EVENTS.

THE SITUATION IN SAN DIEGO.

The prediction made by the Apostle Paul that in the last days troublesome times should come has been amply verified from decade to decade during the past half century or more and is yet being verified by new and peculiar developments. Present industrial and social conditions bring new issues not dreamed of a generation ago, issues that seem to have no satisfactory peaceful solution; and any community may at any time find itself confronting a situation with which organized society seems unable to cope.

A case in point is the situation in San Diego, California. The troubles there grew out of a small beginning. At the instigation of some of the merchants, the city council passed an ordinance forbidding the holding of street meetings within a certain area in the business section. Street corners where the Socialists, Salvation Army, and Industrial Workers of the World had formerly held forth were included in the forbidden territory.

Failing to secure the repeal of this ordinance, those against whom it was levied, particularly the Industrial Workers of the World, began to resist it and were promptly arrested and lodged in jail. Vexed at the resistance, the city council later extended the ordinance to include the streets of the entire city, and the members of the I. W. W. (said by General Otis to mean "I Won't Work") began what they termed the "war for free speech" that has been going on for months in a formerly peaceful city, situated at the extreme southwestern part of the United States, and having no reason previously to look upon itself as a prospective vortex of labor troubles.

Scores and hundreds of I. W. W.'s began to march upon the city from Los Angeles, San Francisco, and other points, determined to force a hearing upon the streets. The jails were soon filled and it became apparent that such methods could not stop the invasion. Meanwhile the citizens, merchants, and others, supposedly staid, sober, business men, many of them at least semireligious, and probably most of them orderly and humanitarian by habit, reverted to methods of a past generation and formed a "vigilance committee" that, armed with revolvers and repeating rifles, began the work of clearing up the situation according to their understanding of that which was required. Incoming invaders were met at the county line and warned to retrace their steps. Those already on the ground were intimidated and violently handled.

The noted female anarchist, Emma Goldman, one of whose wild speeches it is alleged fired the brain of the man who assassinated President McKinley, appeared upon the scene but was not permitted to remain in town over night. Her manager, Ben Reitman, was escorted by an armed body of citizens to a place remote from the city, where he was stripped and covered with tar and sage brush. It is alleged that he was compelled to kiss the stars and stripes, a performance that no doubt failed to cause an accession of love in his heart for the flag, and the letters I. W. W. were burned on his naked back with the lighted end of a cigar. He was then turned loose to make his way to Los Angeles as best he could sans shirt, sans trousers.

The courts are at present occupied day and night with cases growing out of the trouble. The governor of the State has considered the situation and a commissioner appointed by him has investigated the affair, and in his report condemns both sides very severely. Members of the I. W. W. he regards as enemies of law and order and the Constitution, while the "vigilantes" he affirms were even worse in their resort to violent and inhuman methods. One writer comments on the strange fact that the citizens in their detestation of anarchy resorted to the methods of anarchists; while the members of the I. W. W., who stand for "direct methods," which term means all that a brutal phrase might possibly convey, felt aggrieved and injured when "direct methods" were applied to them. All of which shows that men are inconsistent creatures; and the whole affair reminds us that under a thin veneer of civilization men are still savage.

Just how the organized forces of modern society could have successfully met the situation in San Diego is a matter that will probably be considered at length by state legislators and many who are not legislators. It is a problem that in one form or another may at any time now be forced upon any community.

DISCONTENT IN ENGLAND.

Passing from "San Diego-on-the-Pacific" (but not at all pacific) to the far distant realm of "Merrie England," we discover a condition that is not productive of merriment, if we are to trust the private letters coming from church members and the reports contained in newspapers and magazines. Here, too, the troubles are industrial. One terrible crisis was recently averted by the passage of the Minimum Wage Act, which provided that wages of miners should in no case fall below a certain sum, which sum is to be fixed in accordance with the provisions of the bill.

But the trouble seems not to be permanently settled. From the Daily Mail and Empire, of Toronto, Canada, we quote the following:

LONDON, Monday, May 13.—The Daily Mail this morning announces that it is opening an inquiry into the labor unrest. It is aiming to ascertain the causes of the present brooding and discontent in the social and economic system which has been made evident by the repeated strikes, the supposed settlement of which proves that the grounds for deciding them are not real and only sow the seeds for a future dispute.

The first contribution to the inquiry is an article by the novelist, Hubert G. Wells, the keynote of which is the existence of profound distrust among the workers. Mr. Wells describes the present social disturbance as dangerous. The discontent, he says, is deep and increasing; perhaps it is the initial phase of a real and irreparable class war. "In the year since the Coronation," says Mr. Wells, "we have moved very rapidly indeed from the assurance of extreme social stability towards the recognition of a spreading disorganization."

"It is idle," says Mr. Wells, "to pretend any longer that these labor troubles are a mere matter of the give and take of economic adjustment. It is not an adjustment that is in progress; new and strange agencies are at work; forces for which the word revolutionary is too faithfully appropriate. Nothing is being done to allay these forces; everything conspires to exasperate them."

Mr. Wells goes on to remark on the change in the outlook of the new generation of workmen compared with their fathers.

Mr. Wells says the new workman has put the whole social system upon trial and seems to give an adverse verdict against it. The writer says:

"He looks far beyond the conflict of the interests of the employer and the employed. He criticizes the good intentions of the whole system of governing and of influential people; not only their good intentions, but their ability.

"These are the new conditions," says Mr. Wells, "and the middle-aged elderly gentlemen who are dealing with a crisis on the supposition that their vast experience with labor questions in the 70's and 80's will furnish valuable guidance in the present issue are merely bringing the gun powder of misapprehension to the revolutionary force. The workman of the new generation is full of distrust, which is the most demoralizing of social influences, a distrust so profound that it ceases not only to believe in the employer, but in the law, in the Parliament, as a means to that tolerable life which he desires.

"The central fact of all the present trouble," says Mr. Wells, "in this distrust. There is only one way in which our present drift towards revolution or revolutionary disorder can be arrested and that is by restoring the confidence of the alienated millions who visibly are now changing from loyalty to the crown, from simple patriotism, from habitual industry, to a more effective expression of deepening resentment."

METHODIST BISHOPS EXPRESS THEMSELVES.

Having troubles of our own we can well sympathize with our British brethren. Returning to America, we glance in at the conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, recently held in Minneapolis, and find that they, too, were forced to recognize that Paul correctly characterized latter day tendencies. From the quadrennial address of the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, signed by all the bishops, and read by Bishop Cranstons, we extract the following:

We live in an age in which the vast enterprises essential to the progress of the world require the association of men of large means under corporate management. Out of this necessity has grown serious wrong and consequent resistance.

Organized capital stands indicted at the bar of public judgment for the gravest crimes against the common welfare. Among the counts in that indictment are these:

1. Conspiring to advance prices on the staple commodities indispensable to the life, well-being, and progress of the people.
2. Resorting to the adulteration of foods, fabrics, and materials in order to increase profits already excessive.
3. Destroying the competition in trade through which relief might be expected under normal conditions.
4. Suborning legislation, and thus robbing the people of the first orderly recourse of the weak against the strong.

These are sins against humanity. If God hates any sin above another, it must be the robbery of the poor and defenseless.

If these were the utterances of some irresponsible fanatic we might well hesitate to reproduce them. But they come from such a dignified and conservative body of men as the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church. We begin to suspect that the trouble in San Diego lay deeper than a city ordinance forbidding free speech or the stubborn perversity of anarchists or near-anarchists whose desire to talk always increases with every attempt to restrain them. And so with the troubles in England and at every point in the United States. They are all the result of underlying forces and movements keenly felt but perhaps only dimly understood. To some the trouble and the solution may seem perfectly understood and easily explained. These are most noisy in their explanation and probably most dangerous in policy. One thing seems clear to us, and that is that we are entering upon an era of strange developments that in their unfolding confirm the statements of the prophets. Though professedly Christian we have been doing business on a pagan basis, utterly disregarding cardinal precepts of the law of Christ, in honor of whom we term our modern nations Christian (pity it is that we do not further honor by a complete obedience to his law). The solution of the problem must include a return to the sound philosophy of money making found in the Book of Mormon (Jacob 2) and the philosophy of surplus distribution found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. ELBERT A. SMITH.

His Message.

We know he is coming,
To gather his own;
And, if we are faithful and true,
We'll dwell in that glory
Prepared for his Saints;
He is looking for others like you.

Then let us be ready,
When he shall appear;
In clouds of great glory he'll come;
The earth it will tremble,
The Saints will arise,
And dwell in his glory at home.

Then fear not his coming;
He loves us so well,
His blessings he'll give when he comes.
Be faithful and true
And all will be well;
This message is given to you.

Words and Deeds.

"I love the Lord," we oft repeat
As in the chapels where we meet
We rise and with eyes filled with tears
Tell of his goodness through the years
Of toil and strife, when misery
Has been our lot, our company.
We tell, perhaps, of happiness,
When God ans'ring our prayers doth bless.

"Great is the Lord," he who was raised,
Also, "and greatly to be praised,"
We sing with fervor, unrestrained,
His greatness is in song proclaimed.
His meekness, kindness, patience, love,
His sacrifice ('twas far above
All man has done or man could do)
Prove him supreme who died for you.

We chant his praises, laud his name,
Endeavor to increase his fame
By words—Ah! Yes, by words alone;
But not by words did Christ atone
For our transgression. No! Man's need
Of redemption, required the deed
That caused our Savior agony
Unparalleled in history.

He died that we might hope to be
With him throughout eternity;
If, by obedience to his law,
We prove ourselves worth dying for.
Then lift your hearts in words of praise,
Proclaim his deeds in wondrous ways,
But don't forget while worshipping,
To do his will in everything.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 29.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

There are about two hundred and ten revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that were given to the church through the ministrations of the Martyr, Joseph Smith, jr., claiming to be the commandments of God, given "unto his servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding, and inasmuch as they erred, it might be made known; and inasmuch as they sought wisdom, they might be instructed; and inasmuch as they sinned, they might be chastened, that they might repent; and inasmuch as they were humble they might be made strong, and blessed from on high, and receive knowledge from time to time, . . . also those to whom these commandments were given might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and to bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5. These purposes are plain. Trau can not object to the idea of God recognizing that "simplicity" was needed in teaching the "babes," the "children," in the establishment of the church in Palestine, by the Babe of Bethlehem. So after eighteen hundred years of darkness, spiritual blindness, during which time the light of divine revelation was withdrawn, because of apostasy, and tradition, superstition and error, had molded men's spiritual attitude toward God, in the reestablishment of his church, he would adapt himself in speech to men's "understanding," and in doctrine to their "weakness." And that God should, so to speak, permit a child to be born, as the church, and send this infant out in the world to take care of itself in this period of the world's history, is as unreasonable as it is wickedly presumptive, and completely out of joint with the methods of the church's establishment anciently. Those who have so strenuously, and boastingly contended for "the restoration of the ancient order" of things, should eliminate one hundred per cent of ridicule and bigotry from their institutions before they attack, and see how much they have left that is meritorious enough to keep sweet!

Mistakes of men will occur, and this is the ground of revelation from God. Fallible man, if he were perfect and infallible, would need no instruction from God. This being true, the comment applied to our critic is not very complimentary from a gospel viewpoint, as he has set himself forward to teach God. The early saints of the ancient church made mistakes, but Jesus promised them a divine teacher in his absence, that would unfold to their understandings, the "things of God." It is not a wonderful thing that inexperienced men and women should make mistakes in trying to perform the work of God. It is not strange that Harris and others of whom Traum writes so derisively should have imperfect views, so early in the commencement of the work. Whoever will read the New Testament will find the disciples of Christ laboring under error, possessing imperfect ideas with regard to Christ's mission. When Christ informed them that he was to be taken and crucified, they did not understand him. At another time they wanted to call down fire from heaven, and consume their enemies as Elias did, but Christ reproved them, saying, "Ye know not what spirit ye are of." At another time, they were for fighting. They also inquired of him, after his resurrection, if he would at that time "restore the kingdom to Israel." Indeed the apostles, with all who accepted Christ, believed he would be placed on the throne of David in Jerusalem, and they should be exalted near his presence, and with this worldly idea of self interest, they made an attempt to place him on the throne by force. Alexander Campbell presents the matter in the following form, and we commend a perusal of the same to Mr. Traum:

But with regard to the testimony of the twelve original witnesses, I have to remark, that not one of them understood for years either the nature or design of the mission of Jesus. This fact, if correctly understood, and applied, is of immense importance to the Christian public in correcting some mistakes into which they have fallen, and it gives very great additional weight to the testimony of the apostles, respecting the capital item in the Record, viz: the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. They all, without exception, expected the Messiah would found an earthly kingdom, and reign over it for ever. Their imaginations pictured out to them the mighty conquests, and illustrious victories they would achieve under him. Even the most gifted saints who departed not from the temple, when they first saw the wonderful child moved by the Holy Spirit, as it spake in the ancient prophets (not always understood by them whose tongues uttered its suggestions) expressed their joy and hopes in such strains as indicated expectations similar to those of his disciples—"that we," said they, "being delivered from our enemies, might worship him without fear all the days of our lives." They, one and all, expected an all-conquering king, in the person of Jesus. Hence so much of the war spirit in some of the apostles, and so much worldly ambition in the mother of Zebedee's sons. Let my two sons, said she, sit, Good Master, one on your right, and the other on your left, when you ascend the throne. A crucified Messiah was as far from her thoughts, as the day of judgment is now from the anticipations of Mr. Owen. Not a man or woman on earth, till within a few days of the event, could understand or brook the idea of the crucifixion of Jesus.

I do not say that the apostles were quite disinterested in leaving their occupations to follow Jesus. This diminishes naught from their testimony. They expected he was able to reward them; and that he would reward them. They looked for something in this world when they first set out as volunteers in his cause.—Evidences of Christianity, p. 289.

We have no apology for the Almighty; he has authorized no one to apologize for him; but we can see the necessity for a grander instructor in the things of the kingdom than is Elder Traum. He has opened his assault on the Doctrine and Covenants by repeating the work of angel's visitation to Joseph, as he assaulted the Book of Mormon and we replied to all essential criticisms on these points in previous review. But it is characteristic in our critic to so pervert statements that to me it is a "batch" of perversity, and to notice all would be to extend this review indefinitely. He follows the lead of David Whitmer, thereby confessing his own native criticisms are indefensible, and touches nothing legitimate, thereby confessing our position unassailable. Just in the position of the ox, half jumped over the fence, utterly worthless for aggressive or defensive purposes. But why he relies on David Whitmer's testimony after the latter was sour and darkened by standing aloof from active fellowship with the church, after his ambition to stand at the head of church affairs had pushed him out from the cooperation of his brethren, and then utterly repudiate and blackmail his testimony as a witness to the Book of Mormon, is a dilemma from which he alone must extricate himself. The position, however, is just as legitimate as that assumed by the ancient enemies of the Christian Church, who used the bullets molded by those "who went out from among them," because they were not content to have Jesus of Nazareth rule over them. As the skeptics in olden times charged the Saints with "altering the sacred writings" to suit their doctrine, so do the modern skeptics charge Latter Day Saints, and with no better show of reason. It may be retorted that if we do not receive the testimony of David Whitmer concerning the Book of Commandments, "away goes one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon." Does it follow that because Whitmer's statements regarding the Book of Commandments are at variance with the established facts of church history, his testimony of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, given fifty years before, is false? It is plain to the casual reader of Whitmer's Address, from which Traum draws all his inspiration on this subject of Doctrine and Covenants, that David Whitmer interprets the law and doctrines of the church in such a manner as to divest the leading factors in the church organization of responsibility and authority, with a view (Korah, Dathan, and Abiram like) of assuming it himself, and after his defection, manifested a disposition to greatly injure the character and reputation of Joseph Smith, if not to destroy it.

On pages 206 and 207 Elder Traum reproduces David Whitmer's objection by citing the revelation in the Book of Commandments, and comparing it with the same in Doctrine and Covenants, on the bestowal of the gift, one gift to translate upon Joseph. In order to perspicuity, we ask our publisher to arrange the matter of revelation in parallel columns that we may note the force of his objection:

I, the Lord, am God, and I have given these things (the plates) unto my servant Joseph, and I have commanded him that he should stand as a witness of these things (the plates); nevertheless I have caused him that he should enter into a covenant with me that he should not show them except I command him, and he has no power over them (the plates) except I grant it unto him. And he has a gift to translate the book, and I have commanded him that he shall pretend to no other gift, for I will grant him no other gift.

I, the Lord, am God, and I have given these things to you, my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and I have commanded you, that you should stand as a witness of these things; and I have caused that you should not show them except to those persons to whom I command you; and you have no power over them except I grant it unto you. And you have a gift to translate the plates, and this is the first gift, that I have bestowed upon you, and I have commanded you that you should pretend to no other gift until my purpose is fulfilled in this; for I will grant you no other gift until it is finished.

The revelations called "The Book of Commandments," were referred to in the same sense that John's revelations are referred to before. They were written: "What you see, write in a book, and send it to the churches."—Revelation 1: 11; also 22: 18. They were referred to in 1831, in revelations given in that year. "The Book of Commandments" was not published until 1833.

Church History, volume 1, page 249, says:

Our council was continued on the first of May, when it was ordered that three thousand copies of "The Book of Commandments" be printed the first edition; that William W. Phelps, Oliver Cowdery, and John Whitmer be appointed to review, and prepare such revelations as shall be deemed proper for publication, for the press, and print them as soon as possible at Independence, Missouri; "Published by W. W. Phelps & Company." It was also ordered, "that W. W. Phelps correct, and print the hymns which had been selected by Emma Smith, in fulfillment of the revelation."

Thus it will be seen that provisions were made for the publication of the revelations called "The Book of Commandments." Church History, page 578, says:

Some work was done on them, but the issue was never completed, the press and office being destroyed while the work was being done. The most of those that were printed were destroyed by the mob. Some of them were preserved by individuals, who picked up the scattered sheets, and a few copies of the unfinished work are still in existence.

Be it remembered that the first publication of the revelations in the Evening and Morning Star, and Book of Commandments, was pronounced faulty by Oliver Cowdery, who was not only one of the publishing committee of that work, but was one of the publishing committee of the Doctrine and Covenants, as published in 1835. He was one of the stewards also of the revelations. In the Evening and Morning Star, published by him, he says:

There are many typographical errors in both volumes, and especially in the last, which we shall endeavor carefully to correct, as well as principle, if we discover any. It is also proper for us to say, that in the first fourteen numbers, in the revelations, are many errors typographical, and others occasioned by transcribing manuscript; but as we shall have access to the originals, we shall endeavor to make proper corrections.—Evening and Morning Star, vol. 2, p. 384.

The first fourteen numbers of the Star were published at Independence, Missouri, and edited by W. W. Phelps. When the press was destroyed, the publication was transferred to Kirtland, Ohio, and edited by Oliver Cowdery, where the first fourteen numbers were reprinted.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 580.

Oliver Cowdery states:

We have again inserted the Articles and Covenants according to our promise in a previous number for the benefit of our brethren abroad, who have not the first number of the first volume. As there were some errors which had got into them by transcribing, we have since obtained the original copy and made the necessary correction.—Evening and Morning Star, vol. 2, p. 196.

The Reorganized Church has put this entire dispute, raised by Whitmer, before the people, in the real facts, without comment, and as Whitmer was not one of the publishing committee of the Book of Commandments, nor was he one of the committee of "stewards," who were custodians of the revelations, how could he know so much more than those men who had the work directly in hand? As has been stated, the Book of Commandments was never completed, as to the printing. The mob put an end to the work; the scattered forms, or a few of them, were gathered up, and bound into books. The book ends abruptly in the midst of a revelation given September, 1831. The Book of Commandments was never indorsed by the church, no conference, quorum, council, or assembly, ever accepted it; no leading man of the church, in those early days, ever indorsed it so far as the correctness of the printing of the revelations was concerned. But in August, 1835, after the typographical errors, and errors by transcription of manuscripts, were eliminated with reference to the original of those revelations, and a committee, of which Oliver Cowdery was one, was appointed by and in a General Assembly of the quorums of the church to attend to the matter, the Doctrine and Covenants was accepted, and acknowledged as the doctrine and covenants of the faith of the church by unanimous vote. The testimony of the Twelve was read, as witnesses to the revelations given to the church, and they testify:

We feel willing to bear testimony to all the world of mankind, to every creature upon the face of all the earth, and upon the islands of the sea, that the Lord has borne record to our souls, through the Holy Ghost shed forth upon us, that these commandments were given by inspiration of God, and are profitable for all men, and are verily true.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 574.

John Whitmer, one of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, bore record or testified to the truthfulness, with W. W. Phelps, of the Doctrine and Covenants, as did Oliver Cowdery. David Whitmer did not publish his testimony concerning "The Book of Commandments" until Oliver Cowdery had passed from the scenes of this life. But as to the divinity of the Book of Mormon, its truthfulness is no more dependent upon the testimony of man, or of David Whitmer, than is the divine authenticity of the Christian religion dependent upon the testimony of James or Peter. That men should testify to that which they know to be truth, is proper, and eminently so in the establishment of truth in their respective times.

Yes, the Book of Commandments says, on page 10, "I will grant unto you no other gift." Now if this is correct, why did David Whitmer recognize, accept, and officiate in work to which he was called, with Oliver Cowdery and Martin Harris, by another gift Joseph possessed, namely, "revelation"? Here is certainly another "gift" by which David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery and Martin Harris were called to be the three special witnesses to the mission of Joseph Smith as a seer; as also to the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and in this call of these men as witnesses surely some other gift was exercised beside the gift to translate! How is this, Elder Traum, if you will defend the Whitmer theory, you have adopted to fight the Saints with? David Whitmer and the other witnesses have given their testimony to the world that when they obeyed that revelation to Joseph the Seer, when he exercised a gift other than "the gift to translate," which gift he could not have exercised had he not possessed it, they have solemnly affirmed that in obedience to the revelation they obtained the promised blessings of God and were honored as witnesses of Joseph Smith's mission. Mr. Traum, you are hoist again with your own petard. The testimony of those men convicts you, condemns both the theory and revelation as it is in the faulty Book of Commandments, as Joseph, Oliver, John Whitmer, and the General Assemblies said of it. Corrected by the original it reads:

And you have a gift to translate the plates, and this is the first gift that I bestowed upon you, and I have commanded that you should pretend to no other gift until my purpose is fulfilled in this; for I will grant unto you no other gift until it is finished.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

This is in exact accord with the historic facts in the case, as testified. It is also in fulfillment of the statements in the "sealed book" unsealed concerning the unlearned man who should be instrumental in translating it. In 2 Nephi 11: 18, we read that "the Lord shall say unto him to whom I shall deliver the book," etc. Here is a definite affirmation that he shall receive revelation, the "gift" of revelation; and the subsequent fulfillment, as attested by the three special witnesses, and borne out by history, in the voice of angels in divine ministry, the voice of God, and Jesus his Son, all prove that the revelation in Book of Commandments was a typographical error, as well as error by transcribing manuscripts, and the corrected one in Doctrine and Covenants is true. By the foregoing facts of church history, and an additional one to the effect that provision was made before the church was organized for an officer called president of the high priesthood, (or presiding elder) which provision was made by divine revelation, and is found in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 17, and although in the first number of the original issue of Evening and Morning Star, that section was substantially as it appears in the Book of Commandments, but in the reprint it appears substantially in harmony with the Doctrine and Covenants, the errors being eliminated by comparison with "original copies," we say all these established facts prove the theory Traum has adopted to be false, and his conclusion that Joseph Smith changed, or had others change, the revelations to make room for what he calls the "hierarchy," is thereby swept away, and his little cob house totters to ruin.

On page 210, our critic finds fault with section 9, paragraphs 3 and 4, but he manufactures the fault by garbling the quotation,—leaving out (as usual) words, phrases, and sentences which are explanatory. The quotation proper reads as follows:

Behold, you have not understood; you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask me; but, behold, I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right, and if it is right, I will cause that your bosom shall burn within you; therefore, you shall feel that it is right; but if it be not right, you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought, that shall cause you to forget the thing which is wrong; therefore, you can not write that which is sacred, save it be given you from me.

Now, if you had known this, you could have translated; nevertheless, it is not expedient that you should translate now. Behold, it was expedient when you commenced, but you feared, and the time is past, and it is not expedient now; for, do you not behold that I have given unto my servant Joseph sufficient strength, whereby it is made up, and neither of you have I condemned?—Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3, 4.

Traum quotes this passage thus:

But behold I say unto you, you must study it out in your own mind; then you must ask me if it is right, and if it is right, I will cause your bosom to burn within you; therefore you shall feel that it is right; but if it be not right, you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought, that shall cause you to forget the thing which is wrong.

Now if you had known this, you could have translated; nevertheless it is not expedient that you should translate now. Behold, it was expedient when you commenced, and the time is past, and it is not expedient now; for do you not behold that I have given my servant Joseph sufficient strength, whereby it is made up, and neither of you have I condemned.

Oliver Cowdery was called to write for Joseph, and in translating, the first paragraph of this section informs us that the Lord told him he did not translate according to that which he (Cowdery) had desired, and he dropped the work of translation and resumed writing for Joseph. And because the translating was different than he expected, he began to "fear" and "did not continue as he commenced," the Lord took "the privilege away." Like the Apostle Peter, when Jesus walked upon the wave, "Lord if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water." Jesus said, "Come"; Peter started out right, but he "didn't continue as he commenced." Like Oliver, he began to be "afraid," and the privilege of walking on the water was "taken away" from him. Had he continued, as he commenced, Jesus would not have said, "Oh thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?"—Matthew 14: 28-31. It was never "expedient," that we can learn, to renew this "privilege," to Peter. As to the method the Lord speaks of, in paragraph 3, of witnessing the "right," or the wrong of the translating, that is, "if it be right, I will cause that your bosom shall burn within you," if not, no such feeling, but "a stupor," it is in perfect unison with the principle of divine revelation in the Bible which our critic would have us think he believes. See the following:

And behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs. And they talked together of all these things which had happened. And it came to pass, that while they communed together, and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them. But their eyes were holden, that they should not know him. . . . And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went: and he made as though he would have gone further. But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them. And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him: and he vanished out of their sight. And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?—Luke 24: 13-32.

To ridicule the burning in the bosoms of these men is to ridicule the works of God. The disciples of old say: "Did not our heart burn within us . . . while he opened to us the scriptures?" Of course, it would not do for Elder Traum, and his fellows, to teach that the element or property of "fire," warmth, is associated with the substance known as Holy Spirit, which dwells with heavenly beings, for that would remind them of "cloven tongues like as of fire" accompanying the pentecostal shower. (See Exodus 14: 19; also 23: 20.) David says: "My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue."—Psalm 39: 3. Jeremiah says: "But his word was in my heart; as a burning fire shut up in my bones."—Jeremiah 20: 9.

John the Baptist baptized in water, and promised the people thus baptized that Jesus would follow up and baptize them "with the Holy Ghost and with fire." (Matthew 3: 11.) See Daniel 10: 6; Revelation 1: 14. As to the idea of God causing a "stupor" to seize the spiritual, or the intellectual, or even the physical, why should our delicate critic see anything to ridicule, or make sport of, in it, as he has scriptural evidence on this point? The "pillar of cloud" was "light" to the Israelites, but "blackness," "darkness" to the Egyptians. In Daniel 10: 7, we read, "And I Daniel alone saw the vision: for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them so that they fled to hide themselves." The Bible is prolific in evidences of the Lord "pouring out" the spirit of "deep sleep" on men. (To be continued.)

BE PURE IN HEART.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."
—Matthew 5: 8.

The ultimatum of the Christian religion is a hope of a complete life, with complete joy, and never ending happiness in the kingdom of our God, to reign with the sanctified throng throughout the countless ages, to behold the matchless brightness of his countenance and be comfortable therein. This is faith-inspiring, and stimulating to the soul; but before it can be attained and realized, one must make the development necessary to insure an abundant entrance to that hallowed condition.

Our text informs us that only the pure in heart shall be admitted in that kingdom; that they alone shall be permitted to behold His august majesty and presence; and they alone shall become partakers of his excellent benefits. Therefore, if we ever expect to attain unto, and realize the blessedness of a dwelling place in the presence of the great Jehovah, a preparation is necessary; absolutely essential is it that we become pure in heart, that we purge out every lustful, covetous, selfish, and sinful desire, and cultivate the noble, good, virtuous, loving, meek, temperate, and submissive spirit of kindness. We must center our thoughts and aspirations upon the beautiful, sublime, and elevating deeds of the Christ; seek that which tends to renovate and purify, develop that serenity of thought that will take form in deeds of love, and unceasing kindness, and thus crystallize into a pure life, which is the legitimate outgrowth of the pure thoughts of a pure heart.

Thought is the underlying force, i. e., preceding every conscious act there must be and is a conscious thought; thought then takes form in action; action repeated becomes habit, and habit culminates in character. Thus pure thoughts will make a pure heart; a pure heart must and will develop a pure life, and a pure life being made up of godlike characteristics, necessarily becomes one with God—hence qualified to make its abode with him.

The best and only successful way to rid the mind and heart of evil and impure thoughts and acts is to keep it well filled with good ones; our thoughts are the seeds which grow into our very being, and their fruitage is our character, so the acts of life reveal the very thoughts and intents of the heart.

Let us for a moment draw your attention to a flower garden; the soil is rich, mellow, and fertile; that soil must and will bring forth; if it is properly cultivated and planted it will produce an abundant growth of elegant flowers, that will beautify the spot, charm and gladden the heart of man, while they completely permeate the air with their fragrance, and the birds and bees will gather their nectar and convert it into the song of joy, and the sweet, sustaining honey in the honeycomb. But if that soil is not properly cultivated and planted it will bring forth, nevertheless; but its fruitage may be a prolific growth of obnoxious weeds, to annoy and grieve the heart of man; there will be no nectar there, and the soil will have yielded her strength in vain; and let it be observed that the weeds will draw as much nutriment and strength from the soil, if not more, than the flowers will; so where the obnoxious weeds have grown the soil has been impaired and is less susceptible of bringing forth flowers thereafter.

This garden is the mind, and if let run wild will produce the abundant harvest of obnoxious weeds, will become impaired, and will fail to bring forth the fruits of righteousness as a result thereof. But if it be properly cultivated, fertilized, and planted, it will bring forth the good seeds of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, and meekness, unto perfection; whose beauty will command admiration, and whose fragrance will so completely fill the moral and social atmosphere that all will be charmed and made glad thereby, and their nectar shall sweeten the note of the singer, and the substance of the busy worker.

To have this garden yield its greatest strength, and produce the most beautiful and fragrant flowers, it must be entirely free from weeds, and should the weeds spring up they must be rooted up and removed while they are small, which may be easily and readily done; but if permitted to grow until matured they will not only require strength to root them up, but will also destroy the flowers along with them and mar the ground from which they are taken.

So with the mind, every impure and evil thought should be at once and for ever banished. If we expect to become purified they must be, for literally, necessarily, and scientifically true is it that, "As he thinketh in his heart so is he." The predominating thought will materialize in the predominating action, therefore if the thought is pure, the heart will be pure, and as a result the conversation will be pure, for "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

So the reason why the pure in heart alone shall see God is obvious in that "Every word of God is pure," and before the heart can become pure the thoughts must first be purified. The words of God are only the expression of his purity; so when the thoughts are pure the heart becomes one with the Infinite. The character being an outgrowth of the thoughts of the heart, it becomes one with God, fully developed and rounded out in the knowledge of truth.

The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy.

So to become socially, morally, and physically, clean and pure is to be fitted for a dwelling place with God.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

THE UNSEEN BATTLE GROUND.

There is in every human heart a battle field (though it is unseen by any eye but God's), where two contending forces meet and struggle, each striving for supremacy. This conflict is waged between righteousness and the powers of darkness, or between our spiritual and our carnal natures; for each one of us, it seems, possesses a dual nature—that is, we each have within us two distinct natures. The one is evil, the other good. Saint Paul speaks of this when he says, "The flesh and the spirit are contrary the one to the other, and war one with the other." It is through divine assistance alone that we are enabled to keep within the narrow way that leads to life everlasting.

The young people of the present day seem to be especially in the front ranks in this mighty conflict. Perhaps it is because they have, or seem to have, an abnormal desire for amusement and pleasure, which leads them into temptations of various kinds, unperceived by themselves, perhaps. Often they go up town in an evening with no thought of wrongdoing at the time, but there they meet with other young people of both sexes; some perhaps, who have been defeated themselves in their encounter with the Tempter, therefore they are anxious to lead others astray; and to help such in their evil designs, there is on every hand that greatest of all legal abominations, the omnipresent "bar," with open doors, and with many seductive allurements to beguile the unwary.

'Tis then that a conflict begins within the breasts of those callow youths. Conscience (that unerring monitor that God has placed within the heart), is now speaking in low and pleading tones, saying: "Walk not in the way of sinners; sit not in the seat of the scornful." Ah, that our people would heed this voice of warning from within, and would turn aside to look carefully for the hidden sting that is ever lurking in forbidden pleasures.

No doubt the battle is a fierce one for many, and requires an Herculean will power to resist the influences and environments that surround them; but in this conflict strength is always the victor; by this I do not mean physical strength or human prowess, but the strength of the Lord made manifest in us; or as the Apostle Paul expresses this, "To be strong with might, by His Spirit." Although at times contestants in this fight for truth and righteousness meet with temporary defeat, yet in the end they will witness a sudden and complete routing of the Adversary, and his certain and final defeat, "for truth is mighty and must prevail."

I am writing this especially to the young Saints, and would like to ask you, What does it matter if some one speaks of you as "goody, goody," and makes sneering references to "mother's apron string"? Nothing matters very much except to do right. Do we fully realize what the apostle meant by saying, "I count these things as dross that I may win Christ"? What an incentive this is to us in the present day! To press on to the end; to endure all things, if need be, that can befall us in this transitory life, if we, too, may win Christ.

Everyone esteems a manly man, or a womanly woman; those with firmness, and with independence of character, and courage to stand by their honest convictions of what is right; even one's enemies and traducers will respect this in others, although they may not copy them. Those qualities of mind and heart, honesty, industry, temperance, truthfulness, brotherly kindness, etc., are sure to meet with recognition and appreciation in time, and your influence is far-reaching, and is much greater than you have any idea of. You can be, if you wish, a beautiful example of trust and fidelity that will be a power for good in this life, and perhaps also throughout eternity.

An honorable man and a Christian knows that courage and loyalty to our divine Lord is a duty and privilege to be kept sacred within the shrine of the heart. This is the power that helps us to withstand scorn and depreciation of sacred things from unbelievers. Still we need to be firmly rooted and grounded in the faith; for we can not help but encounter many censoring and ill tempered words and looks of those who despise the truth. This is the time for Saints to be on their guard, keeping their own tempers well under control, being calm and kind to all. Remember that, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his own spirit than he that taketh a city."

The secret of this victory is this, Let Christ take full possession of your hearts; "to triumph in you, the hope of glory." This, dear Saints, is your privilege through humble, watchful prayer. This will give you a sweet foretaste of the glory soon to be revealed on earth. This life is a school where we are being fitted for a higher destiny. Here a loving Father is preparing us for a higher sphere of usefulness in the great "millennial reign." Ah, that we would bear this fact continually in our minds, and bend all our energies to prepare ourselves for the glorious events there awaiting us.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF W. M. AYLOR.

The Aylors were among the first settlers of Old Virginia. My father, Clinton Aylor, emigrated from there to Missouri in 1856; settled in Saint Louis. My mother, Nancy Rodecker, with her folks, came from Pennsylvania about this time, and they settled there. There is where my parents met, and were married in 1861. They then moved to Montgomery County, Missouri, where they still live. During the troublesome times of the war, they took a vacation from Missouri, went over into Illinois for a few months. While there I was born, January 9, 1864. I am the second child. Have one brother and four sisters. My brother is the only one of the family with me in this church.

I went to western Kansas in 1886; settled near Leota; resided there three years. During that time I met my wife, Louie E. Stanton. She, with her folks, had formerly come from Indiana. We were married November 10, 1889. The same year I filed on a homestead in Oklahoma, near Kingfisher. There we spent the first five years of our married life. Our first house was made out of sod, covered with shingles, plastered and floored.

While living here, we first heard the restored gospel. Later, in this house, the first branch of Oklahoma was organized. Elder J. R. Lambert was the first to bring the gospel to us, and on December 1, 1891, we, with several others, were baptized. This was a stronghold for the Christian Church (Campbellites); and they made it very disagreeable for us for a while. But we have lived to see them quit the field at that place, and our work continue to prosper. I think more than fifty have been baptized at that place.

When this gospel found us, we cared but very little for religion, such as we had been used to hearing and seeing. Louie had been raised a Quaker; I a Methodist, but united with the Presbyterian Church when about twenty.

I think we appreciated this sod house in Oklahoma more than any we have had since. We did all the work. And when we moved into it, with about fifteen dollars worth of furniture, we were happy. Here is where we put in every spare moment reading church books, and papers, posting ourselves on the gospel work. The next year we paid our first tithing. We counted up what we thought we were worth, and found we owed thirty-five dollars. We had just about that amount of money and no more in sight, in a new country, and on a new place. But we thought that belonged to the Lord, so sent it to Bishop Kelley, and got our first tithing receipt. We felt good that we had paid it. To show that the Lord will take care of his children, if they will do what he says, in a few weeks we received one hundred and fifty dollars that we had not expected. We have tried to comply with this law all along since; and the Lord has blessed and prospered us.

I was called to the ministry through Elder C. R. Duncan. Was ordained an elder in the spring of 1898, at Independence, Missouri, General Conference, by Elders J. R. Lambert and James Caffall. Was ordained a seventy, at the same place, 1901, by Elders I. N. Roberts and J. C. Foss. When I was called to field work, we moved from Oklahoma to Independence, Missouri, where we now have our home. I spent the first eight years of my missionary work in Oklahoma. In 1908 I was appointed to the State of Texas, where I am now laboring. It has always been a sore trial for me to leave home and go out to preach; but when pressing forward in the line of duty, the Lord has blessed me, and given me great encouragement.

I well remember my twelfth effort. It was at a district conference, Oak Grove, Oklahoma. I was appointed to preach Sunday night. There were several of the missionaries there, as well as quite a few Saints. I commenced to pray, and worry about having to occupy before that crowd. We went home with Sister Knowles, but I did not eat any supper. A while before the crowd started out for the church, I took my grip and went ahead. I wanted to be alone in my trouble, but soon found I was not alone. While walking along, praying and worrying about what I would say, and would I make a failure? and what shall I preach about? a voice spoke to me as clear as anything I ever heard, "You are going in the spirit and power of Elias." I was astonished, and wondered, What does this mean? I walked along thinking about that for a time. Then my mind went back to my subject, and the voice spoke again, and repeated the same words, and did so twice more before I ended my journey. The house was filled. They opened the service, and introduced me as the speaker. I walked into the stand, and as I did so I was completely baptized with the Spirit, and it remained with me all through the sermon. I used for my text, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheeps' clothing." The Saints told me I answered a man that had used that same text, over a year before, against us at that place. Some of the same people that had heard him were there that night.

I was at one time called to administer to Sister Anna Rowland, of Mathewson, Oklahoma. She had what the doctors pronounced consumption of the bowels. She had gotten so low the doctors said her bowels were dead and some of them had passed from her. The morning before I got there, a specialist had been called from Oklahoma City. He pronounced her case hopeless. Said no power on earth could save her, and that she would not live over thirty-six hours. I prayed, administered the oil, had one of the sisters to anoint her bowels, laid my hands on her and prayed. The peaceful influence of the Spirit was there, and she went to sleep. A few hours later, I retired to a quiet place, and there again laid the case before the Lord. This same voice of the Spirit bore witness to me that she would get well, and she did, and to-day is one of the best workers in Oklahoma.

After we moved to Independence, we had lived there about three years; I had always dreaded to preach in Independence, and had refused to occupy. One time, when I was home from my field, I attended prayer meeting on Wednesday night. Soon after the meeting opened, the voice of the Spirit spoke to me, and said, "You will be called upon to preach here Sunday night," and with it came an outline of the subject I was to use. I said nothing to anyone about this, but prepared to occupy as directed. Time went on until Saturday noon. No one had said anything to me about occupying. About this time there was a call at the door. I answered it, and found Brother John White there. He said, "Say, did Brother Hulmes tell you that we had decided we wanted you to preach here Sunday night?"

I said, "No."

He said, "Thought maybe I had better stop and see you; that maybe he had intended me to look after that."

It was no surprise to me. I occupied as directed, to my satisfaction. These are a few of my experiences I have had in this work.

I have held six debates with the non-progressive wing of the Christian Church (better known as Campbellites). My first was with Elder Goodwin, of McGee, Indian Territory, June 10, 1903, for three sessions, and he quit the field. Next with Evangelist Al Foster, at Teriton, Oklahoma, July 6, 1904. This lasted twelve sessions. This was the opening of the work at that place. We have a branch there now of about forty members. July 31, 1906, I met G. T. Searcy, of McLoud, Oklahoma. Eight sessions were held in the opera house. December 4, 1907, I met J. K. Crumley, in a twelve-session debate at Holdenville, Oklahoma. January 14, 1908, A. W. Young, at Davidson, Oklahoma, nine sessions. June 3, 1908, Early Arcenaux, at San Antonio, Texas, for sixteen sessions. This man lost his voice the last session. Quite a few, not of our faith, remarked, "The Lord stopped his vile mouth."

I think it is safe to say in all of these debates we made material gains for the church, and the Lord stood by me, and his work was taken care of. I want it understood I do not pose as a debater, and do not seek for them; but when necessary to defend, I am willing to take my part of it. I do not take any honor to myself; I consider I am a poor, weak instrument, for the Lord to use to preach and to defend his work. But by the good lives of the Saints, they fasting and praying with me, the Lord took care of us, and bore witness that he approved of us.

I have baptized one hundred and thirty. Am still in the conflict. Hope to hold on and endure to the end.

THE GREATEST DYNAMIC IN THE WORLD IS LOVE.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, . . ."—Galatians 5:22.

Every individual should concern himself, or herself, as the case may be, about the conditions of life, ascertaining if possible how to best meet its demands and cope with the predominating forces thereof, everyone should know how best to fortify himself against the encroachments of evil, and also how to best enjoy the liberties and privileges granted in this life. To do this, and be successful, one should make a scientific study of the predominating forces surrounding one's life, and their opposites, and so far as possible acquaint himself with the laws governing.

One can with profit look into the lives of others, and profit either by their failures or successes; it is helpful indeed, for one to read the biographies of great men; become conversant with their lives, environment, aspirations, and achievement.

If we expect to wield an influence for good in the world, we must learn how to best direct the forces of nature to that end. I say the forces of nature because nature has endowed us with certain powers, and our use or abuse of them determines our success or failure as the case may be.

It will be discovered, however, by the careful student, that man is composed of a dual nature, and that there are two powers constantly at work within him, and to the degree that he yields to either of these forces, to that degree he severs himself from the other.

We will call those two forces of nature the animal and the divine. The animal nature is resident, and predominates in all the lower forms of life, viz; the gratification of self and selfish interests, at the expense and to the exclusion of others. The divine nature is that of love, that which causes one to conserve the interests of the race even though it be at his own expense; that which enables us to subdue the animal nature and subordinate it to the service of others. Love then becomes the predominating factor in the acquiring and developing of the divine nature; it has always been an attribute of great men, and they who have wielded the greatest influence, and become the greatest factors for good in the world are those who have possessed the greatest amount of love.

The highest type of the divine nature that has ever graced the world was manifested in the Christ life; his precept is: "All things whatsoever you would that men should do to you; do ye even so to them." It was he who said: "Greater love than this hath no man, that a man lay down his life for his friends." To the soldiers he said: "Do violence to no man." To Simon the Pharisee he said of the woman who anointed his feet: "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little."

Love, that great dynamic, will melt the heart of stone, subdue the evil nature of man, and mold it into a life of virtue and serenity. It will lift one above the lower elements of life, transform his character into the likeness of the divine Master, and make him one with the infinite. Paul, in writing to the saints at Ephesus, expresses it thus: "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." It is apparent by this that our love determines our relation with the divine, it is through love that we are able to become one with God, for God is love, as is made clear in the words of the beloved disciple: "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

The bare claim then of dwelling in God availeth but little; the mere fact of nominal church membership will be of no profit, if the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, is not found manifesting itself in the life and actions of the individual, the cold logic of facts are that he is not in touch with God, has not received of his Spirit because the fruit is wanting. Then if we are void of love we are also void of the Spirit of God, and as a result our influence and power is of necessity limited because we are only exercising the animal nature, which of necessity is and must be inferior to the divine mind.

Love is always gentle and mild. Take the Christ character for example; he ruled by love, not force. He was not harsh in judgment; did not bring railing accusation against his fellow men, but in the spirit of meekness applied the forces of love and drew men to him by its magnetic power and influence.

The only power that God delegates to man is the power of love; the power of coercion is not of God, and the only compulsory feature of the gospel is that mankind will be compelled to reap the fruits of their doing and God will be the executor of that law,—not man. God is love,—love does not force, it invites; love does not compel, it draws. Christ exemplifies this when he says: "Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled that thus it must be?" He could have summoned a force that would have caused the world to stand in fear and awe; yes, he could have taken the throne by force, but what then? He would have defeated his own purpose. Christ purposes to rule by love; his reign will be a reign of love, and he has bidden his servants to execute his laws in love.

We read: "No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long suffering, by gentleness, and meekness, and by love unfeigned; by kindness and pure knowledge, which shall greatly enlarge the soul without hypocrisy, and without guile, reproofing betimes with sharpness, when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and then showing forth afterwards an increase of love toward him whom thou hast reproofed, lest he esteem thee to be his enemy; that he may know that thy faithfulness is stronger than the cords of death; let thy bowels also be full of charity towards all men, and to the household of faith, and let virtue garnish thy thoughts unceasingly, then shall thy confidence wax strong in the presence of God, and the doctrine of the priesthood shall distill upon thy soul as the dews from heaven. The Holy Ghost shall be thy constant companion, and thy scepter an unchanging scepter of righteousness and truth, and thy dominion shall be an everlasting dominion, and without compulsory means it shall flow unto thee for ever and ever."

Love alone can accomplish this,—no other power can rule supreme, love is the finished product, the terminating feature of the graces of God, and in the language of James Allen: "No suffering can result from that love which is so absolutely pure that it seeks nothing for itself."

"No suffering can result from that love which is so absolutely pure that it seeks nothing for itself."

Again he says: "And whosoever comes to this love is not turned away comfortless, is not pierced with anguish nor surrounded with gloom; and is never deserted in the dark hour of trial."

He further continues: "And this inward realization of holy love is none other than the love of Christ that is so much talked about and so little comprehended. The love that not only saves the soul from sin, but lifts it also above the power of temptation."

The individual that has so fully attained unto, and received of the divine love that he desires nothing but truth, will succeed in instilling within all those with whom he comes in contact in life a desire for better things. And if the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, is not found in the life of the individual who claims communion with God, we can only conclude he is not in touch with the divine, he has not entered that condition of at-one-ment with the infinite.

James Allen says: "You say that you have tasted of salvation in the love of Christ. Are you saved from your temper, your irritability, your vanity, your personal dislikes, your judgment and condemnation of others? If not, from what are you saved, and wherein have you realized the transforming love of Christ?"

"He who has realized the love that is divine has become a new man, and has ceased to be swayed and dominated by the old elements of self. He is known for his patience, his purity, his self-control, his deep charity of heart, and his unalterable sweetness."

These are the fruits of the Spirit, the outgrowth of divine love, and the one who is possessed of them is so in tune with the infinite that he is able to live in that abiding presence from day to day, is able to build for himself a haven of rest, and partake of the sweet influences of his majestic power.

I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
 I would be pure, for there are those who care;
 I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
 I would be brave, for there is much to dare.
 I would be friend of all—the foe—the friendless;
 I would be giving, and forget the gift;
 I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
 I would look up—and laugh—and love—and lift.

No evil can enter where love is enthroned, no sorrow can mar the peace nor blight the hope of him whose life is a development of true love, no immoral vice can tempt true love to do wrong, and no amount of wealth can buy or bribe the fidelity of true love.

Love, then, is the greatest dynamic in the world, it will do more to regenerate and save the race than any other power or means that can be employed, simply because there is more God in love than any other dynamic that can be brought to bear in the hearts and lives of humanity, and he who has acquired it is as a sheltering palm in a weary desert, and as the refreshing dew to a drooping flower.

This love is for you, it is for me, it is for all God's creation, and his majestic light will crown the brow, and adorn the lives and deeds of all those who become partakers thereof; by it we may become saviors on Mount Zion, drawing humanity by the magnetic power of love to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world.

World Power Versus World Poverty.

The "increased cost of living" is being discussed at this time by all classes and conditions of men. Economists, philosophers, statesmen, politicians, demagogues and doctrinaires—all are writing and talking, more or less convincingly on this vital topic.

To the writer, one of the plain people, it seems strange that none of these "most potent and grave seignors" have spoken a word, or written a line, on what to him seems the keystone of this arch on which the cost of reasonable and comfortable living has been raised beyond the reach of the mechanic and the laborer.

In arguing whether or not the trusts, the labor unions, the over-production of gold, or any one of the several other factors which enter into the increased cost of conducting our twentieth century life, is the crux of the matter, the unanticipated enlargement of taxation for, and extraordinary waste of, armament expenditures seems to have been wholly overlooked.

The student of political economy is taught, as a fundamental, that whatever is not usefully expended, is wasted. Consider then the prodigal waste of the world-wide preparation for war which, with the right kind of statesmanship need never come.

Twelve years ago our American Commonwealth stepped from the small circle of isolated friendship into the great arena of the world's armed peace. No good American citizen can fail to be proud of her influential position in the world to-day, but no Christian citizen can fail to condemn the poor use that is being made of her splendid opportunity.

We have, during the last twenty years, increased our naval expenditures alone, over 600 per cent; while in the same period the population has increased but 35 per cent.

At the present time 72 per cent of our total revenues is used for war purposes—and this in time of peace—and apparently we have by no means reached the limit, for each year this insatiable Oliver is calling for more.

The citizens of "this enlightened Democracy of Freedom" are beginning to question if they are much better off than the bureaucratic bond slaves of the old world; both are being slowly crushed to death or desperation by this ever increasing burden of phantom war.

We are building a fleet of "Dreadnoughts" which cost $10,000,000 each, and at the same time are condemning to the junk heap, $50,000,000 worth of vessels which were, less than two decades ago, "Dreadnoughts" of that period.

COST OF FIRING ONE BIG GUN.

A workman labors three years to earn as much money as it costs to load and fire once, one big gun. The second time it is fired, sufficient money goes up in smoke to build this same workman a house, which under present conditions he could not hope to acquire until after years of penurious saving and self-sacrificing denial. The third time the war dragon belches forth its death-dealing breath, the workman's ambitious son's four years' college course is dissipated into thin air.

A "Dreadnought" is built, and the value of all the land and buildings that Harvard University has acquired in two hundred and fifty years, with Hampton and Tuskegee thrown in, is incorporated with a floating machine which, in fifteen years, may go on the scrap heap, if it does not go to the bottom of the sea meanwhile. Expensive junk this.

Panama Canal, a work of world-wide beneficence, will cost, when completed, $300,000,000—a staggering sum to contemplate—but, if present plans are carried out, this Nation will spend nearly four times that amount, in the next ten years, for construction and maintenance of the Navy alone.

The increase in appropriation for the Army and Navy by our Government since the Spanish war,—the increase notice—would, if it had been spent for such purposes, have completed all the river and harbor improvements at present contemplated; or if used in drainage, irrigation, reforestation, road-building, inland water-ways, or any one or several of the plans which would redound to the credit of the Nation and the prosperity of the people, would have accomplished so much that one might well have thought the millennium at hand.

This feverish preparation for war is world-wide which is a strong proof that it is the cause of the world-wide increase in living costs. Ours are not the only "statesmen" in the world.

MILITARISM THE FOE OF EDUCATION.

The yearly expenditure of seven of the European governments for war insurance (or assurance) is sufficient to teach every child under fourteen years of age in those countries, a trade, and give every man over sixty-five a pension. Let English government officials who are struggling with the problems of the unemployed, and old-age pensions, think on these things.

J. J. Hill's advice to build one battleship less each year and establish one hundred agricultural colleges, if acted on, would send more men back to the soil and give us once more the abundance of food which Old Mother Earth has so bountifully provided in the past, and can easily provide again. Fewer human beings would delve in darkness to find the black metal of brutal war, and more could live and labor in the light of God's sunshine, with the honest sweat sparkling on their foreheads, in place of the grimy damp of death-foreboding war.

Sir Edward Gray said, in the House of Commons, some time ago, that all thinking men recognize the fact that the enormous expenditures on armaments, is "a satire on modern civilization." Let those who have been placed in the seats of the mighty in this country, where civilization has farthest advanced in governmental affairs, take warning. The giant is arousing from his lethargy; his awakening breathing is already portentous of tumult and turmoil of turnouts and turnovers. This democracy to live, must be "a government of the people, by the people and for the people." The people are fast coming to see that it has a God-given mission to promulgate peace, not to foster war.

No further analysis is needed, but what could not a logician prove with a few of these figures, if he should consider in addition the number of men who are segregated from all useful employment, many of them lured from the farm, by highly-colored lithographs, and tempting tales of foreign travel. Thousands of these sturdy workers fed and clothed from the public treasury, but adding nothing to it! Of the enormous waste of precious fuel, while the poor dwellers of our urban centers are shivering for lack of the God-given but man-monopolized carbon! And again, if the trained machinists and unskilled sailors were being utilized to build labor-saving machinery, instead of labor destroyers; and if the trained engineers and line officers were using their nation-given education in constructing roads, bridges and canals, or and thus "unharnessing man"—then indeed we might talk of "brotherhood" as nearer a reality, and not theorize so much about the brotherhood of the dim and distant future.—Arthur W. Glines, in Our Dumb Animals.

Request for Prayer.

Sister Sadie Burch, Ute, Iowa, desires prayers that she may recover from serious bowel trouble. The doctors say she can not live, and unless God interposes the sister fears she can not long survive. While she has no fear of death she feels her family needs her, and she therefore desires to remain for a time.

Letter Department

DUNLAP, IOWA, May 29, 1912.

Dear Saints: In reading the letter from Sister Mary Beeby Hawley, of May 22, whom I have a faint recollection of seeing when a small child, I was impressed with the idea of writing a few lines to your columns. I think we should give this subject our greatest thoughts, for it is one of the greatest questions to deal with. I would that the sisters of our church would become more interested in discussing such questions of importance at our social gatherings, and help to lay a foundation for a better government than the one which now exists.

I believe, and I base my ideas on communications, that the majority of our church members in the rural districts have not studied the changes taking place in the conditions surrounding us; or if they have noticed it, have not delved deep enough to discover the cause; for there is always a cause for an effect. The majority of our members belong to the working class; thus, under the present form of government, it takes the greatest part of their time to maintain a living; so much so that very little time is left for study. Under the present profit-making system, under which we live, we can not expect much else except crime and poverty. If we had time to trace it back we could show that poverty is the cause of the greatest percentage of the so-called crime, which in reality is not so much of a crime as that which is practiced which forces people to become criminals under the law. If we would do away with crime we must do away with the profit-making system which fosters crime, poverty, and ignorance. You readily perceive there is a premium on crime and it is placed there by the capitalist class, which is a product of the profit-making system. When we institute a government which guarantees to the worker the full product of his or her labor, then, and not until then, shall we be able to exterminate crime. As the present condition came into existence gradually, so must it gradually depart, for the working class must be educated to the fact that through the skillful use of the ballot, which is their most effectual weapon, will they be able to obtain the right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

I am a great believer in the efficacy of prayer. I believe, yea, I know much good can be accomplished through fasting and prayer, and I think the sister's plea a timely one. Yet, when we have fasted and prayed, let us not suppose our duty is ended, for "faith without works is dead"; but let us be ever on the watch tower, grasping every opportunity to lay a better foundation for future conditions, and let each and everyone, especially our more favored sisters of California and other States where equal suffrage exists, when casting your vote on the fifth of November next, make it a point to crush out the power which has ruined the homes, blighted the innocent, and brought naught but sorrow and suffering to the working class. I do not believe we can do our whole duty as Christians and neglect to take part in making the laws which govern our homes.

Governments are supposed to be instituted for the protection of the homes, but are they always? Are our homes protected when our daughters and wives are forced by starvation into a life of shame? A government that protects its subjects will furnish them employment. You may say, "I would starve rather than become a victim of 'white slavery!'" But are you sure you would? Have you seen your children born into the world with the prospect of a bright future before them, then all of a sudden, for some unaccountable reason, seen them dashed upon the rocks, so to speak, to be washed out by the waves of vice into the sea of disapprobation? Or have you been forced by some occult reason to live in the slums and your children surrounded by circumstances from which they may never arise, but will very soon crush out the last spark of life? I say, under these conditions would not the mother nature arise and say, "I will make a sacrifice for my children and let God be my judge." Such was the pitiable condition of one in our capital city of Des Moines not long since. When a poor mother, whose husband was sentenced to a term in the penitentiary was left (her home was protected by the Government) with seven little children begging for bread, of course she was not permitted to beg, so she made a sacrifice for those who were dearer than all else in the world to her; but where was the pity for her? She had not kind friends to help her, neither by word or deed, but she was brought into the courthouse, crouched beneath the club of a burly policeman. A doctor, seeing the situation, gave up his profession to teach the world the brotherhood of man and to overthrow this system that ruins the homes and defiles the innocent.

"White slavery" is one of the worst products of the profit-making system. Take away the profit and who would indulge in the low, debasing traffic? We are often met with the argument that it is necessary to maintain a condition of this kind, in order to protect our daughters; but, dear readers, it is not necessary. Would you be willing to sacrifice your fair daughter in order to protect some one else? If you would not, then it is evident proof that it is not necessary, for if we are loyal citizens we will do our best to meet necessary obligations.

I believe there are many good people outside the church, as well as in the church, who are inspired to do a good work for the benefit of mankind. All truth and all good is of God, so if anyone advocates a good work, as in the case of the W. C. T. U., let us not stand back from giving them a helping hand just because our church is not the author of it. Let us do our best to bring about a happy condition wherein every man shall love his neighbor as himself. Then and not till then can we hope to go on to perfection.

Ever praying for the brotherhood of man and his redemption, I am yours in Christ,

ELLEN CRANDELL PENNELL.

AVERY, TEXAS, May 24, 1912.

Editors Herald: When I read the many letters and hear the testimonies of the Saints it fills my soul with joy, for I know this great latter day work is of the Lord. One night when I was on my bed the Spirit rested on me and I was made to know how the church went into the wilderness in the former days. I saw how the angel restored it to earth again, with the fullness of the gospel. This was just a few nights before I was baptized, and I was made to see my hope beyond this life; that if I would live faithfully, I would receive great knowledge of this work and would be instrumental in the Lord's hands in bringing many to the knowledge of the truth. But I sorrow to say I have not done my duty as I should, so I am far behind what I ought to be, but I pray that I may come up higher and live more faithfully than I ever have. I want the prayers of all the Saints. I think the Saints are the dearest people on earth.

Your brother,

E. H. BIUS.

RIDGETOWN, ONTARIO, June 4, 1912.

Editors Saints' Herald: Being a recent subscriber, I have read very little of your literature, although I always read other church papers; but I desire to show my appreciation of what I have read, and tell you what has been happening here in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Elder Shields came here before Christmas and announced meetings and had fairly good attendance. The Evangelist minister came a few times, but could only say he had heard the truth.

We as Saints were called to part with one of our faithful members, in the person of Sister Benjamin St. John. She had been a long sufferer, but a patient one during her trials, and we feel to know the heavenly Father called a loved one to rest. She was an active member in all sections of branch work, wherever duty demanded her.

We have a good sized branch here, but are terribly scattered, and there is not much interest. Our president is a faithful Saint but lives at some distance, and is not able to be with us often.

My husband and I have both belonged to the church since childhood; we are both trying to do the Master's will, although temptations always seem ready to overthrow one.

My husband is president of Zion's Religio-Literary work here and feels it a great responsibility to undertake the position, but nevertheless is trying, with the favors of mercy, to perform his duty. Asking all Saints to remember us here in this part of the mission campaign, and praying for the welfare of Zion,

I am your sister,

SISTER NOAH SHAW.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, May 29, 1912.

Editor Saints' Herald: In justice to many members of the church scattered throughout the country who have been made to unduly suffer through unwarranted statements made through the columns of HERALD by contributors, to the effect that the Socialists stand for violence and a disrespect of the ideals of government, I am submitting the following action taken by the national convention of the Socialist Party, held at Indianapolis, Indiana, May 12 to 19, inclusive.

I have hitherto refrained from saying anything along this line, but believe that common justice demands that this article appear so that no member of the church shall be either persecuted, ostracised, or considered weak in mind or in the faith simply because he may cast his lot with the Socialist movement.

Here is the action: "Any member of the party who opposes political action or advocates sabbatage or other methods of violence as a weapon of the working class to aid in its emancipation shall be expelled from membership in the party."

Very truly yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

COLEMAN, MICHIGAN, June 10, 1912.

Dear Herald: Since writing my last letter I went to a place called Bendon and preached two weeks and baptized six fine people. One night the Saints of Traverse City came down, and as we had announced ahead that we would have special music the house was filled to the doors. God poured out his Spirit upon me and for one hour and seventeen minutes I held the crowd while I preached on the prophetic calling of Joseph. It was certainly a great blessing to me. At one time I asked that all the Saints who knew this work to be true would stand on their feet. Instantly the Saints arose in a body. It was very impressive. The report soon reached my ears that the reason Weaver could preach so well was because he was drunk.

Well, I am now on my way to attend the reunion at Port Huron. I stopped off here to attend a two-day meeting. We have had a fine time. I will return to my field in a short time.

My address for the year will be, 131 East Eighth Street, Traverse City, Michigan.

In bonds,

R. D. WEAVER.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, June 7, 1912.

Editors Herald: Sister Mary Bean, of Los Angeles, California, has very earnestly requested me to write you in regard to her testimony of the beautiful gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of his tender love and care, which he has so mercifully overshadowed her with ever since she came into his blessed kingdom. Also, in regard to some of the glorious and marvelous manifestations which he has so graciously bestowed upon her.

She does not feel satisfied with the thought of only expressing her thankfulness in the testimony meetings to God, for his glorious light of truth as it has come to her in this life, but she wishes to express her gratitude to her heavenly Father, and to the world, through your columns.

Some years ago, while she was staying with Brother and Sister VanFleet, at Downey, California, she received a marvelous manifestation, and she has ever since praised the Lord for it. On the eve of December 29, 1911, soon after retiring, and before closing her eyes for sleep, a very bright and beautiful star appeared in her room, and remained in her room all during the night, even until dawn. It did not remain in the same location, but would occasionally move; the room was filled with a soft halo of light, sleep had flown from her eyes, so she continued to watch the star until the morning dawned; then it disappeared. The blessed influence of the Spirit, which accompanied its presence, filled her enraptured soul to the extent that when she arose for the duties of the day, she felt no fatigue from loss of sleep, nor from duties performed the day previous, and the influence of the Spirit remained with her for several days. "And the stars also giveth their light as they roll upon their wings, in their glory . . . and any man who hath seen any, or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 12.

She desires that her testimony in regard to the loving kindness and goodness of God, and the truthfulness of his blessed gospel, may not only be recorded in heaven, but on earth as well.

SYLVESTER H. GARNER.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Ellen Sherard Adair writes from Arnett, Oklahoma: "Not long since I had the pleasure of meeting Sister Sylvia Webb, a dear lady who is now past eighty years of age, is in full possession of her mental faculties, does her own housework, tends her garden, and milks her cow. She is a granddaughter of Alpheus Cutler, and daughter of Thaddeus Cutler. I had heard of her, and being isolated and knowing she was also, and for this reason feeling sure of a welcome, I mounted a heavily loaded farm wagon which was to be taken to Gage, and rode to her home, some five miles away, taking along a few Autumn Leaves; and as I must wait until the wagon returned from Gage, which was twelve miles farther on, we spent most of the day together. Although she has been in this country twenty-two years, among Indians and anything most but Saints, yet her love for the gospel is strong. She was reared at Nauvoo, and she says every part of the old town is dear to her in memory. She was speaking of Emma and Lucy Smith, how she loved them as a child, and I arose and took up an Autumn Leaves and turned to Lucy Smith's picture and held it toward her, and she exclaimed, 'Oh! it's Lucy's picture; the dearest woman.' Her eyes would fill with tears and her lips quiver when she talked of the times when the Prophet was assassinated, and how she has longed for the companionship of the Saints for many years. I am quite sure it is no fault of hers she has remained here. The last time she ever met in conference with the Saints was at Council Bluffs, and she said: 'Alex's little Freddie was such a sweet little boy then. Did he live to be a man?' I sent her his picture in Autumn Leaves since, taken with H. O. Smith. She longs yet to see Independence; also, to see Joseph once more in this life. She has a son, Byron, in whose yard her house is built. He is a highly respected man among his neighbors and his estimable wife is also much respected. He says he holds the people of his mother's faith in very high esteem, and when one has come his way has always made him welcome. She said as the day was drawing to a close: 'What a happy day! What a happy day! I have been so lonely since father was taken, two years ago.' He was a physician, and I only know his name as Doctor Webb. If there are any of the old sisters or brethren living who remember this sister and would care to write her I am sure it would be a far greater pleasure to her to receive such a letter than you could realize unless you have experienced the loneliness which she now feels. Her address is Gage, Oklahoma."

Brother I. N. White writes that he has returned from California and will be at home, 1006 West Maple Street, Independence, Missouri. His health had been very unsatisfactory for some six weeks, but since his return he has been slowly recovering. He was hopeful of good results.

Sister Mary Booker, Pine Barren, Florida: "I have been in this latter day work ever since I was eight years old, and now I am fifteen. We are striving to be about our Master's work. I have not the privilege of reporting great progress and bright prospects for the work, yet have no reason to feel discouraged. I ask the prayers of all the Saints."

News From Missions

Australia.

Having just read letters from different writers to your columns, the thought occurred to me that a few lines from us, in this far off land, might be welcome. We are at this writing in Tuncurry, a pleasant little village on the seashore. It is beautifully located, and we are enjoying many pleasant outings. We are located at Sister Wright's, well known to many of the American missionaries, as well as throughout the church here, as a kind and hospitable sister, and we are enjoying a little rest, as well as trying to do what we can to advance the work here. Brother Stanley Wright has a motor launch, and he has taken us out many times and given us a pleasant time. We came here more than a month ago, and remained two weeks; then we left for Sister Ina Smith Wright's home, about twenty miles distant, to Avalon. We reached there safely, and were of course delighted to meet Sister Ina and her interesting family. Elder Pitt having been acquainted with her in Independence, their visit was thoroughly enjoyed, and he was pleased to see her looking so well. Sister Ina is a daughter of our late patriarch, Alexander H. Smith. We spent a couple of weeks with them in their pleasant home in the Bush. It is located about a mile back from the main road and the house is picturesquely located on a little bluff. We are inclosing a couple of views that Elder Pitt took of their home and one of the family.

The morning came for our departure, and after the farewells, we left by carriage for Bullahdelah, where the reunion was to be. We reached there after a pleasant drive of forty miles. Elder Jones, president of the district, and Sister Jones, called for us, and we had plenty of room for our luggage, as the large van would easily have seated six passengers.

We thoroughly enjoyed the trip overland. The day was clear and just cool enough to be pleasant, and the air so exhilarating that we all felt very much refreshed as we journeyed on our way. We stopped at Coolingoolook and had a delicious dinner, served us by Sister McGinnis, who with her husband always makes the Saints feel at home. We rested here a couple of hours, and about three o'clock continued on our way. Occasionally we would get out and climb the hills, in order to lighten the load for the horses.

We did this one time, the last hill, and left behind us Brothers Jones and Anderson, who also were of the party, driving behind us, to give the horses a drink, and we walked and walked and waited for them to come along, but not a sound could we hear of their approach. Finally, after an hour and a half had passed, we became slightly worried, as it was growing dark, and we were yet ten miles from Bullahdelah, and in the Bush where the dingoes might appear at any time. Finally we heard voices, and in a short time they drove up. We inquired as to the trouble and Elder Jones said that they had only been talking, and the time had passed so quickly they had not realized that they were so long in coming. Well, it proved one thing conclusively to us, and that was that the men of our party could outdo the ladies talking.

We reached Bullahdelah about half past eight and were kindly cared for by Brother and Sister B. Burdekin, where we remained until our departure for Tuncurry. The reunion was a great success, both spiritually and socially. A large attendance was present at the opening service, and as the meetings continued, the little church, which, by the way, is a credit to the Saints of Bullahdelah, was taxed to its seating capacity. The weather was perfect, the first pleasant weather enjoyed at reunion time for years, we were told. Elder Pitt was kept very busy giving blessings, and in preaching and other duties. Elders Barmore, Jones, Robertson, and Davis all did their duty in making the reunion a successful one. Our genial Bishop Lewis was present and performing his duty in looking after the finances of the church.

The last evening was spent in a social entertainment, music and readings being the order of the evening. It was to be an impromptu program, and realizing we might be called upon at any minute, I had composed a little poem during the afternoon, mentioning the elders present and other events, which I read in the evening. All who were called upon did their part nicely, and the evening passed very pleasantly, and the reunion closed, all feeling well repaid for the efforts made in attending. We did not leave until a week later, as we had not time to finish our work during the reunion.

Bullahdelah is a beautifully located little lumber camp, we would call it. It is in the valley, with the high alum mountain at one side. We were told that this is the only alum mountain now in the world. There are two mills where the great logs are brought by bullock teams of twenty to twenty-four large bullocks in each team. They are so well trained by the drivers that it is very interesting to one who has not seen these sights before. We took a few snapshots, and include one where the writer is in charge for a few minutes only.

The roads are in excellent condition for driving now, as the rain has settled the dust, and we could not help admiring the panorama of beauty as we came last Monday from Bullahdelah to Avalon. The thousands of acres of great gum or eucalyptus trees, with the white bark looking so pretty, on both sides of the road, give a very picturesque appearance. The task of clearing all these thousands of acres, however, seems a hopeless one.

We left Coolingolook during the afternoon, and the weather seemed very promising, but about four o'clock the rain came, and not having prepared properly for the change, we arrived at Avalon in the dark, rain, and mud. It was an exciting time for us, alone, on strange roads, in the dark, and it pouring rain, but we finally reached Brother Ted Wright's and were made welcome for the night.

Next day we left for Tuncurry, accompanied by Sister Aletha Williams, of Newcastle, and after remaining a couple of days, returned to Avalon for our luggage, and spent the last eve with Sister Ina Wright and family. Brethren Davis and Robertson also spent the night there, and we had a happy time together.

We are now in Tuncurry, and hope to do some good before leaving next Thursday, for our long drive overland of two hundred miles, to Nambucca. Elders Davis and Robertson had planned to accompany us on their wheels, but Elder Davis thinks he can accomplish more good, perhaps, by leaving for his new field of labor, West Australia. We had so many urgent requests to call at different places where the Saints are isolated, that Elder Pitt decided to drive overland, and in that way we could do so.

All of the Saints wish to be remembered to the American missionaries who have labored here in times past. We are both feeling well, and happy in having the privilege of doing a little for the Master. We have just learned of the wreck of the Titanic, and it frightens me when I think of the long water voyage we have to take in order to get home, but we trust that He who hath so kindly cared for us all the way, will be with us to protect on the long voyage home.

Your sister in the gospel,

ROSA PARKS PITT.

TUNCURRY, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA, April 29.

Central Oklahoma.

We are pleased to report that the activity against the church in this locality, though nominally successful in a suit at law against the writer, is far from being a successful stroke against the gospel interests. Persecution helps to put the truth in a growing condition. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."—2 Timothy 3: 12, 13. So, though directly under the hammer of persecution, which even invokes the law of the land and distorts the same to gain it ends, we hope not to be found among the number mentioned by Christ as "having no root of themselves, but endureth for a while; for where tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by are offended."

All the odium of the term Mormon and Mormon preacher, was used to revile us in the court room and in the press, and it was obvious to every person hearing the evidence that the state officials were standing as champions of a guilty man against an innocent one. But as the Christ has said: "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my name's sake"; for the sake of the truth, we can well afford to occupy the position indicated by the Apostle Paul in 2 Corinthians 12: 10: "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions."

The religious forces of combative distinction in this place have been bending every energy to retake what was lost to them in the debate last summer with Brother Aylor. This movement at law against the writer was in pursuit of that high ambition, and we are now informed that three of the six jurors who sat upon the case are attendants upon the services of the Christian Church.

This was our opposing church, and of course such a circumstance would subject us to an unlimited amount of prejudice. In the arguments for the new trial which were made before the court yesterday, it developed that two of the jurors tried to inflict a penalty to the extreme limit of the law—a year in prison and a thousand dollars fine. And what for? For publishing facts which every man of them could not fail to perceive were true.

Our motion for a new trial was denied by the judge, who stated as his opinion that even if it were proven that there had been an infraction of the law, that the penalty of three months and two hundred and fifty dollars which the jury imposed, was in his judgment excessive; but he considered the opinion of six men of greater weight than one, so the verdict would stand. This puts us subject to the deliberation of the State Court of Appeals. This court may pass a final decision or order a new trial. In the meanwhile we shall actively continue our mission work. Elder R. M. Maloney is assisting in a meeting here at the seat of war, at the present time, and every indication leads us to believe that whatever disposition the enemy may make of the present captive, we shall be able to turn the whole circumstance to the spread of the gospel and to the glory of God.

JAMES E. YATES.

RIPLEY, OKLAHOMA, June 8, 1912.

As a sort of addendum to the letter mailed to your columns yesterday, we state that at the evening meeting we have begun receiving applications for baptism. If no more than this shall follow as the result of the publicity gained by the attack and persecution of our enemies, who shall say our defense of the truth at the peril of imprisonment has been in vain?

Conference Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.—The business session of the Little Sioux district conference opened at 10.30 a. m. at the Saints' chapel in Sioux City on the first day of June. J. W. Wight was called on to preside and selected as his associates the district presidency, Sidney Pitt and S. B. Kibler. The opening prayer was offered by Charles Derry. The district clerk was chosen as the clerk of the conference, S. B. Kibler in charge of the music, and J. L. Parker as press committee. The courtesy of the floor, with right to sustain motions, were accorded all visiting members. The minutes of the previous conference were read and stood approved. District President Sidney Pitt reported that the spiritual conditions existing in the district were on the whole better than at last reporting; had not visited all the branches, but as many as the severe weather and roads would permit; found no cause for discouragement but much to encourage. The new system of reporting seemed not to be well understood, hence had not received the reports from many of the branches. Partial reports read from Pisgah, Biglers Grove, Woodbine, Sioux City, Little Sioux, and Persia. All branches held regular services on Sunday and prayer services on Wednesday evenings; sacrament services once each month. All branches maintained Sunday schools and all but one had Religio services. Representatives from all the branches reported spiritual conditions on upward tendency, needing, however, more labor and more visiting by branch officers. The bishop's agent, A. M. Fryando, reported receipts from tithes and offerings from February 1 to June 1 of $922.75; on hand from previous reporting, $111.40; total cash, $1,034.15; paid to elders' families and for aid, $463; remitted to Bishop Kelley, $350; balance on hand, $221.15. Statistical reports from the branches showed a present membership of 1,998 as against 2,010 as per previous corrected report. The Missouri Valley building committee was not represented and sent no report. The committee was discharged. Election of officers for the coming year were made on open ballot. Sidney Pitt, sr., as president of the district, received a unanimous vote and chose as his associates J. W. Lane and S. B. Kibler, who in turn were sustained by the conference; James D. Stuart was sustained without opposition as district clerk; W. R. Adams as member of the district library board, and A. M. Fryando as bishop's agent. A petition was read from the committee of the joint reunions asking permission to hold the 1913 reunion at Missouri Valley, which is in the Little Sioux District, stating that the citizens of Missouri Valley had offered favorable concessions and the Missouri Valley Saints had also extended the invitation. The final disposition of this matter was adopted as follows: Resolved, That the Little Sioux District invite the consolidated reunion districts to join with the Little Sioux District in holding their reunion in 1913 in the Little Sioux District, and pledging the influence of the district with the next reunion to hold the same in Missouri Valley. The report of the joint sessions of the Religio and Sunday school convention was read and ordered spread on the minutes of this conference. Biglers Grove and Pisgah branches each invited the next session of the conference to meet with them. Biglers Grove received the larger vote and by consent the choice was made unanimous. The time was left with the district presidency to decide, and October 5 and 6 was chosen as the time. The district tent was left with the district presidency and assistant minister in charge to use at their discretion with permission granted them to loan the same to the reunion committee at Magnolia and the Biglers Grove Branch for use at the next district conference.

J. W. Wight, J. M. Baker, Charles Derry, and W. A. Smith were the speakers of the conference on Saturday evening and Sunday. James D. Stuart, district clerk.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—The semiannual conference convened with the Louisville, Kentucky, Branch, May 18, at 2 p. m. Elders H. E. Moler and John Zahnd presided over the conference. Charles H. Fish and Effie Miller were the secretaries; Sisters Myers and Breeden, organists; H. E. Moler, chorister. The local deacons acted as ushers. The press committee consisted of John Zahnd, Charles H. Fish, and E. O. Byrn. The following branches reported: Hope, gain 8; Byrnville, gain 5; Union, gain 2; New Albany, gain 7; Louisville, loss 8; Indianapolis, gain 3. The conference declared the Woodside Branch, Clay City, disorganized. The matter of the Leavenworth Branch was referred to the assistant minister in charge and the district president for investigation and action as deemed wise. The bishop's agent reported as follows: Balance on hand, January 1, 1911, $41.90; receipts for year, $444.02; total, $485.92; expenditures for year, $455.45; balance on hand January 1, 1912, $30.47. The district treasurer reported total receipts from collections, $9.54; total expenses, $7.65; balance on hand, $1.89. The following ministers reported: Elders: H. E. Moler, Jacob Halb, John Zahnd, Peter A. Flinn, Charles H. Fish, E. O. Byrn. Priests: D. H. Baggerly, William N. Hanner, Henry Oliver, H. D. Byrne, G. B. Miller. Teachers: C. Oliver, James E. Warne, C. N. Mayman. Deacons: James Oliver, James Eulitt. On motion the president and vice president of the district were authorized to silence any of the local priesthood found using tobacco or failing to report for six consecutive months without cause. On motion the conference approved the choice of John Zahnd as first counselor to L. F. P. Curry, president of the Kirtland Quorum of Elders. George H. Ferguson was recommended by Louisville Branch for ordination to the office of elder. Brother Ferguson asked for further time to consider the matter, and the ordination was provided for, subject to his consent to accept. Motion prevailed that when this conference adjourns it does so to meet at Indianapolis, Indiana, on the third Saturday in October, at 9.30 a. m. The following officers were elected for the year: President, John Zahnd; vice president, E. O. Byrn; secretary, Charles H. Fish; treasurer, Henry Oliver. It was voted to hold the annual reunion at Wirt, Indiana, (Union Branch), commencing Saturday, August 31, at 2.30 p. m., and closing Sunday, September 8, at 3.30 p. m.; and the reunion committee were authorized to raise funds to finance the reunion. The conference requested the missionary in charge to furnish more missionary labor for the district. A vote of thanks was extended to the Louisville Branch for their kindness in entertaining visitors to the conference. A vote of thanks was also extended to the press of Louisville and New Albany for courtesies extended. Jacob Halb, John Zahnd, and H. E. Moler were the speakers at the preaching services. At the social service on Sunday afternoon John Zahnd was ordained as first counselor to L. F. P. Curry, under the hands of H. E. Moler and Jacob Halb. The entire session of the conference showed a marked degree of growth among the membership, and a decided spirit of unity. Charles H. Fish, district secretary.

DES MOINES.—District conference assembled at Des Moines, Iowa, June 1 and 2, 1912. Officers were elected for ensuing year as follows: President, Orman Salisbury; assistants, E. O. Clark and Clement Malcor; secretary, E. O. Clark; member of library board, Hattie Clark; J. F. Mintun was sustained as bishop's agent. Ministerial reports were read from the following brethren: Seventy: J. F. Mintun. Patriarch: C. E. Butterworth. High priest: M. M. Turpen. Elders: O. Salisbury, J. E. Laughlin, Clement Malcor, E. O. Clark, C. B. Brown, Joseph Knox, Henry Pratt. Priests: Henry Castings, H. T. Watson, W. T. Maitland. Teachers: William McBirnie, Joseph Daugherty. Deacon: Fred Chandler. Bishop's agent reported: On hand January 1, 1912, $389.97; received since, $921.28; total, $1,311.20; paid out, $990.29, leaving balance on hand of $320.91. Statistical reports: Clear Creek, 37, loss 2; Rhodes 68, loss 1; Oskaloosa 57, loss 2; Des Moines 398, loss 4; Boone 99, gain 11; Des Moines Valley 125, no change; Fraser 40, no change. It was moved and carried that from this date forward our district conferences meet in mass convention and that all previous motions or resolutions conflicting herewith be rescinded. E. O. Clark, secretary, 2500 Logan Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.—Conference convened with the Foundry Hill Branch, June 1, 1912, with district president, J. R. McClain, in the chair, assisted by H. E. Moler, who was also chosen organist; J. A. Roberts, chorister. Statistical reports from Farmington, Liberty Hill, and Foundry Hill read and adopted. Elders reporting: J. R. McClain, H. E. Moler, W. L. McClain, S. E. Dickson, Fred Moser, J. A. Roberts, W. S. Shupe. Priest: J. R. Shupe. Teachers: J. T. Little, G. E. Jones, J. R. Cook. Deacons: E. M. Seaton, Frank Roberts. Bishop's agent's report read and approved, as follows: Received since last report, $210.95; paid out, $212.29; balance due agent, $1.34. S. E. Dickson was elected secretary. Preaching by J. A. Roberts, H. E. Moler, J. R. McClain, S. E. Dickson. Conference adjourned to meet with the Oakland Saints at the call of the district president. S. E. Dickson, secretary.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.—District met in conference at Decatur, Nebraska, June 8, 1912. Opened with a very good prayer meeting, and the business sessions were peaceful and we trust profitable. While we were somewhat disappointed that we did not have either of our ministers in charge nor Brother Sutton with us, we believe good was done. The president of the district was chosen to preside, the secretary of the district was sustained as secretary of the conference, and both were given privilege to choose assistants. Paul N. Craig was chosen chorister, with privilege to choose his assistant, and the music was made a very helpful part of the conference. Resolutions were adopted to bring about a better system of the priesthood reporting. We believe this will prove very valuable to the district. There came a resolution from the Little Sioux District inviting the Western Iowa and the Eastern Nebraska Reunion Association to meet with the Little Sioux reunion at Missouri Valley in 1913. This was referred to the reunion committee, with power to act, in conjunction with the Little Sioux reunion committee when it is appointed. There was a very good report made by the priesthood of the district, showing considerable activity upon their part. The next conference was appointed to meet at Blair, Nebraska, the time was left to the officers of the district. The preaching was done by J. L. Parker, H. S. Lytle, R. O. Mann, and Paul N. Craig. The conventions preceding the conference were of such a character that they were a great help. J. W. Wight at the Little Sioux conference announced that the eldership of the State of Nebraska and western Iowa so far as it is possible will be requested to meet at the reunion at Council Bluffs from August 23 to September 1. So we hope the entire priesthood of our district will remember this, as it is expected at this reunion there will be effected the organizations of the quorums so far as it is possible. This report is sent by the president of district as per request of the secretary.

Convention Minutes.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.—District Sunday school association convened at Mission, Illinois, May 31, 1912, at 3.55 p. m. The general routine business was transacted. Provision for a field worker for the joint reunion of the Northeastern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin districts, to be held at Belvidere, Illinois, was made. Adjourned to meet the day previous to next district conference, at call of district officers. La June Howard, secretary.

Conference Notices.

The North Dakota district conference will convene July 9, 1912, at Logan, North Dakota, during time of reunion. J. W. Darling, district secretary.

To the Saints of the Central Nebraska District; Greeting: The next district conference will convene with the Clearwater Branch at Clearwater, Nebraska, August 3 and 4, 1912. We are going to have the district tent and are going to try and arrange for either Brother J. W. Wight or Brother Griffiths; also a patriarch; and we expect Brother J. R. Sutton and others. So, Saints, try and arrange matters so as to attend and assist in the transaction of the business and enjoy a spiritual feast, that the work in the district may be strengthened by reason of the effort. Branch clerks have your reports to me in due time and as correctly as possible. F. S. Gatenby, district secretary, Orchard, Nebraska.

Those expecting to attend the Idaho District Sunday school convention and conference to convene at Hagerman, July 5, 6, 7, should notify J. E. Condit, of Bliss or William F. Glouner, of Hagerman, when they will be at Bliss, so there will be a team there to meet them. Silas D. Condit, clerk of Hagerman Branch.

Convention Notices.

The Sunday school convention will convene at Clearwater, Nebraska, August 2, 1912, at 10 o'clock sharp. Please remember the date and time. We earnestly request every Sunday school to be represented that we be able to so discharge all matters of business properly. Please have your Sunday school reports to me in due time. All trains will be met by a committee wearing a bow of blue ribbon. F. S. Gatenby, district secretary, Orchard, Nebraska.

Reunion Notices.

The Clinton district reunion will be held in the City Park, Rich Hill, Missouri, August 23, to September 1. We expect a large attendance, and will arrange to reduce the cost to a minimum. W. S. Macrae, Knobnoster, Missouri.

The reunion of the Alabama district will be held at Pleasant Hill, near McKenzie, Alabama, beginning Friday, July 26, 1912, at 10 a. m.; the missionaries and all who can are invited to attend. Those who get off the train at Garland will be conveyed out by Brother W. A. Odom and D. B. Sellers if notified. Those at McKenzie by brethren there. J. R. Harper, district president.

Reunion of Southern Wisconsin and Northern Illinois districts will be held August 23 to September 2, at Belvidere, Illinois. The grounds are on the Kiswaukee River, six blocks west of the Northwestern Railroad depot. Those coming by street car should get off at Cherry Street, which is only one block from the grounds. Single meals will be 20 cents each. Tents: 10 by 12 wall, $2.25; 12 by 14, $2.50; cottage, 10 by 15, $2.75; 12 by 14, $3; 12 by 19, $3.95. Those wanting rooms should notify J. A. Daer, 28 Buchanan Street, Belvidere. We expect the general minister in charge, and missionaries in charge of both districts. Tent orders must be sent to J. O. Dutton, Evansville, Wisconsin, box 76, by August 15. J. O. Dutton, corresponding secretary.

Lamoni Stake reunion will be held at the usual place, south of Lamoni, July 26 to August 4, 1912. Meals will be served on the ground. Those desiring tents place their order with the secretary at least one week before the meeting opens. Good speakers will be secured. If further information is desired, address Joseph Roberts, secretary, Lamoni, Iowa.

Church Secretary.

GENERAL CONFERENCE MINUTES.

The Minutes of the General Conference of 1912 were written up and put into type immediately after the adjournment of the session; however, heavy demands upon the presses of the publishing department, I am informed, will delay issue of the usual Minute-Supplement to the HERALD until July 4. We have done our level best to get the work out promptly.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Notices.

To District Presidents: The First Presidency desire to receive regular reports from all district presidents at least once each quarter, and oftener if the district presidents so desire. Please let us have your reports promptly, sending them in as nearly as possible on the following dates: July 1, October 1, January 1, and April 1.

Respectfully,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary.

To the Aaronic Priesthood of the Kentucky and Tennessee District; also the Southern Indiana District: According to previous notice given in the church papers, I wish to organize the various orders of the Aaronic priesthood into quorums. You will therefore please attend your earliest district reunion, that you may all be duly enrolled.

R. C. RUSSELL, Minister in General Charge.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Nebraska; Greeting: We would say to you as the Master of the vineyard once said to those among whom he labored; we come among you, "not to be ministered unto, but to minister," and to freely and unreservedly give our best talent in labor for the advancement of the cause we all should love more dearly than this mortal life.

Our quota of ministers is about the same as last year, excepting one district of the State, that of Western Nebraska and Black Hills, which has one additional this year. We are pleased to have this addition in missionary force in that territory because there seems to be more new openings of easy access in that country than any other portion of the State. I would suggest to the brethren in that field, as well as in other portions of the State, to hold the ground already gained by new openings, and don't try to make too many new openings that could only at best receive but a very small amount of labor, and being left and possibly not visited again for a year, the effort made is lost by reason of long absence, and the work of the adversary.

We have this fact clearly demonstrated in this State, that wherever work has been done to the extent that organization has been made possible, there the work presents a feature of permanency that does not adhere, outside of such organization.

We are pleased to note that valuable accessions are being made to the local ministerial force in several places by reason of ministers moving into our field from other localities. We trust that we shall be able to properly utilize this force by cooperating with the presidents of the several districts and endeavoring to give these local men every possible advantage to do labor. It certainly is apparent to those who will observe that wherever our local ministers are moving out on the line of their duty, and in the spirit of Christlike love, the Saints are enjoying more spiritual blessings, and the numerical strength is being encouragingly augmented. One feature I have noticed among some of the Saints that should not be, is carelessness in regard to family worship. Dear Saints, how can we expect our children to grow up in the spirit of the work we profess to love, if we permit by carelessness the family altar to go down, and even when an elder is present fail to ask him to offer prayer, either night or morning? The strength of our work should be made manifest in the home, and the spirit of godliness that radiates from the home circle. We hear a great deal about living our religion. I would say, let us live the religion of Jesus Christ, and if our religion is faulty let us correct it. If we as Saints are fully converted and imbued with the spirit of the work of Christ, we will do all we can to help move it along by paying our tithing and making our consecrations, as the law of Christ demands.

I can cheerfully commend my brethren to you all, dear Saints; they are men of God. Render them what assistance you can to make the work of Christ effective in your several localities.

In bonds,
 J. R. SUTTON.

FRANKLIN, NEBRASKA, June 11, 1912.

To the Saints in Arkansas and Louisiana; Dear Saints and Friends: As I have been sent to labor among you for another year, I would like to have the hearty cooperation of all the Saints in the field, that we may work together for the up-building of this great latter day work, and as I have again been appointed as assistant minister in charge, I would like to ask the local ministers to give us all the help they can in the field. I want them to feel free to do all they can in moving out in the field and open up the work in new places, and if you need any help from the missionary, just let us know and we will help you out all we can. Let me say to the scattered Saints, if you want any preaching where you live and can find a place to have preaching, just let us know and let us all remember that it takes more than good looks for a missionary to ride on the train. Let us as Saints try to assist in a financial way that the gospel may be sent to the different parts of the world, to those who may be hungering for the true gospel.

To those who have tithing to pay (and we should all pay tithes): I am bishop's agent and can accept you for any amount that you may want to pay; so don't wait till some future time but send it now and I will send your receipt by return mail. Address me at Fairland, Oklahoma, and it will reach me all right.

I hope we may all work as-coworkers together with God for the accomplishment of his work. I also hope that this may be the most successful year for the work that this field has ever known, and that the Spirit of the Master may attend our efforts in trying to build up his kingdom.

I am your brother in gospel bonds,

J. T. RILEY.

A Card of Thanks.

I wish to express my thanks to those who contributed so liberally at Elder Etzenhouser's lectures, with the understanding that we were to have a lantern to take with us to the islands. We are now well fitted out with just what we need, and we believe that we can make of it an excellent means of education, as well as furnishing the natives with innocent amusement and diversion, and I can bespeak for them their most earnest appreciation of your kindness.

C. H. LAKE.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 7, 1912.

Married.

BROWN—BRABY.—At the home of Brother and Sister Joseph Braby, near Oland, Harrison County, Missouri, on Sunday, June 9, 1912, Brother Israel G. Brown and Sister Minnie R. Braby were united in marriage, Elder R. S. Salyards officiating. The ceremony was witnessed by a goodly gathering of relatives and friends who brought substantial tributes of affection to bride and groom. These young people, active workers in the Oland Branch, will prove a substantial help to the branch at Des Moines, where they will make their home. The best wishes of many attend them.

Died.

WILLIAMS.—Floyd Ernest, infant son of Brother Rolland J. and Sister Ollie Williams, of Purcell, Missouri, was born April 21, 1911; blessed April 25, 1911; died June 4, 1912. Funeral at the home in charge of Elder W. B. Mullin. Sermon by Elder A. C. Silvers.

WICKS.—Benjamin F. Wicks was born December 14, 1824, near Jamestown, New York, being the seventh son of John and Abigail Wicks. Married Miss Christiana Klock, December 24, 1853. The following year came to western Iowa, and were among the early pioneers of what is now Crawford County. United with the Latter Day Saints' Church in 1866, and was ever faithful to the covenant. Served the church in the capacity of elder for many years; his work being mostly in his home branch at Deloit, Iowa. Two daughters were born to this union; Annie, the younger, died in early girlhood. He and his wife removed to Independence, Missouri, nearly five years ago, and have since resided with their remaining daughter, Mrs. William McKim and family of that place. Died June 3, 1912, at the age of 88 years, 4 months, and 19 days. Funeral service at the home in charge of Elders Harrington and Garrett. Burial in Mound Grove Cemetery.

FRANKLIN.—Evelyn Grace, infant daughter of Nephi C. and Margaret Annie Franklin. She was born July 6, 1911, at Kansas City, Kansas, and was blessed at Armstrong by Elders Joseph Harrington and D. E. Tucker, October 15. It was with almost tragic suddenness that death called her April 30, 1912, leaving the parents and four brothers to mourn her departure. The funeral took place May 1, the remains being interred in the Woodland Cemetery, J. W. Rushton officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Isador Straus.

We wish to have the final story of Mr. and Mrs. Isador Straus put on record in these columns. Colonel Gracie heard them discussing the matter between themselves, and agreeing that if they must die they would die together. So when the officers urged Mrs. Straus to enter the lifeboat she refused to leave her husband. She said: "We have lived together all these years, and I will not leave you now." No persuasion could move her. Then, says a survivor, Mr. Stengel, the officers tried to make an exception in favor of Mr. Straus. "We told him," says Mr. Stengel, "that no one objected to an old gentleman like him going in the boat. But he said he would not leave till the other men did." Their story will go down the ages. It has been the subject already of hundreds of poems.—New York Independent.

During the past decade there has been a growing tendency away from the brief, "scrappy" selections that have been offered to children in school readers. With the aim of giving the children in grammar schools a carefully made selection of literature of tried and proved worth, Houghton Mifflin Company have recently issued a series of four readers entitled "Selections from the Riverside Literature Series." This Series has long maintained its supremacy as a source of supply of standard reading for schools of all grades. From the more than two hundred and thirty volumes in this Series selections were taken that had been found by long experience to have the greatest value for each of the grammar grades, and these selections, after being carefully edited and arranged for oral reading, were bound in the four volumes that make up this series of readers. In these books will be found a happy combination of traditional literature with selections from the more modern writers, such as Joel Chandler Harris, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, and Sarah Orne Jewett. School systems that use these books, either as basal readers or for supplementary use, may rest assured that their pupils have the choicest examples of English literature for reading and study.

Help for the Hard Drinker.

Charles B. Towns, author of "The injury of tobacco," recently published in The Century, has written for the June Century of "Help for the hard drinker," presenting graphically the curse of the increasing use of alcohol and offering a definite program for saving the man worth while. Mr. Towns is a well-known authority on the treatment of alcohol and drug habits.

I take Thy hand, and fears grow still;
Behold Thy face, and doubts remove;
Who would not yield his wavering will
To perfect truth and boundless love?
—S. Johnson.

The will is free;
Strong is the soul, and wise and beautiful;
The seeds of God-like power are in us still;
Gods are we, bards, saints, heroes, if we will!
—Matthew Arnold.

A New Book

has just been issued, entitled

Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism

By Elder J. D. Stead

THERE ARE REASONS for publishing this book.

- (1) The only way to render a JUST judgment is to know the FACTS.
- (2) To get the FACTS don't go to the enemies of the Utah church. This is not fair nor just; go to the authorized publications of this church, and let them tell you what they believe.
- (3) You can not get access to these publications for the reason that many of them are out of print and hard to find.
- (4) The author of this new book has spent years as a missionary among the Mormons, and has patiently and carefully culled extracts from these old publications, thus giving you

A Whole Library of Information in One Book

The greatest care has been taken to make this book reliable.

The quotations in it are all testified to as being correct, and finally the proof readers testify that to the best of their belief the quotations are all correct. We have had this done so that you would feel secure in using the many evidences therein contained. Order No. 1a, price.....$1.50

An Easy Trip Through Yellowstone Park

What can wipe out the weariness of a hard winter like a good vacation trip? And nowhere else in all the world are there so many curious and awe-inspiring sights as in Yellowstone National Park.

The journey to the entrance itself via the Burlington Route is full of pleasure and once inside, you are in a world of wonders. Your tour of the Park may be made by stage-coach with stops at perfectly appointed hotels, or if you care for tent life you can spend a glorious week in camping out. Day after day is filled with eye-delighting geysers, mountain vistas that stretch to heaven, rocks the color of a sunset, and strange tumbling rivers that plunge thousands of feet in thundering falls. You will come home made over in mind and body.

Your trip will be all the more enjoyable if you will let me help you plan it and get your copy of our folder. Begin your plans early. Come in and talk over the trip you want to take, or write J. Francis, General Passenger Agent, Chicago—a postal will do.

THE SHUT DOOR.

We present the following poem by Sister Vida E. Smith, the wife of Historian Heman C. Smith, because of its merit as a poem and peculiar beauty of thoughts expressed. We beg the pardon of the HERALD readers for assuming to publish anything of so peculiarly a personal nature, but we believe the merit of the article warrants our so doing.

THE SHUT DOOR.

So Life's open door has been closed here, for you,
And you may not see as you longed so to do,
The wonderful things that the busy world did;
For her wheels and her banners from you will be hid.
But the sound of her song and the victor's loud shout,
And Nature's sweet fragrance are not all shut out.
You can feel the vibrations as millions march by
For sympathy is both the ear and the eye.
And you know the sweets of the true winner's race,
You can meet this black stroke with a great soul's proud grace.
For it shuts you into a place all ablaze
With the glorious light of sweet virtuous days,
Where are dear faces beaming with smiles that you knew,
And fresh mornings shining with sparkling wet dew;
Or storm clouds, swift drifting in grandeur so gray
O'er the quiet of many a rain washed day.
Yes, the door went shut—did the blindness win?
If so, what is this that its portals shut in;
Gardens and rivers and prairies green;
Cities as fair as have ever been seen;
Mountains and seas, and hills that are glad;
Lakes, all serene, and cataracts mad;
Art's splendid triumphs on canvas, in stone,
And over them all the sunlight is thrown.
Or maybe, enchanting they lie in the light
Called silver and pale,—the glory of night,
Or sleeping 'neath stars, or at rest in the zone
That lieth half shadowed, where night is begun,
After day has gone out with the triumphant sun,
Where thought flows as soft as still waters run.
This door shut the light out? That could not be,
For the light that was never on land or sea,
Falls ever and always in God-blessed rays,
On the highlands and lowlands of busier days
Whence good men go back, to the heritage won,
By the words they have said and the deeds they have done.
But best of all the treasures they bought
With noblesse of purpose and richness of thought;
The hearts fondly cherished and voices most sweet;
And all beautiful places that knew their glad feet.

The door shut you out? Ah, the door shut you in,
To a realm that the shadows on eyes can not win,
Where on prisms of memory, golden lights fall
Deflecting some blessing you sudden recall
That seemed to have passed, now it comforts the heart.
Such blessings may hide, but they never depart.

Ah, the shadow that fell on the blest outer sight
Fell not on a kingdom of darkness or night,
For the angel of love called to Memory's guard,
"Up, up, lead this knight to deserved reward."
While many stand shamed lest the dust may be blown
From the dark, hidden places their manhood has known,
Over beautiful highways and byways you've trod,
You again walk with gladness before man and God,
Unchallenged, erect in the fields of your past,
You wander or rest where your life lot was cast.
All the day has been spent in a love lighted fight,
Now, "though it be evening, it still shall be light."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

HANS P. FREECE.—We are pleased to note in a recent New York newspaper account of the International Council for Women for Christian and Patriotic Service, that Mr. Hans P. Freece calls especial attention to the Reorganized Church and its stand against polygamy. This evidence of fair-mindedness is encouraging. Mr. Freece in his fight against the evils of Utah Mormonism can well afford to call attention to our position. He is the gainer, because it is an evidence of his earnestness. Miss Mason, however, president of the council, seems to be surrounded with an atmosphere of prejudice which prevents any differentiation. If in her recent statements in regard to "business colleges in Massachusetts" where Mormonism is being taught, as she claims, she refers to schools being managed by the Fisher brothers, her mind must certainly be laboring under "strong delusions."

BROTHER O. R. MILLER.—Recent issues of Fort Madison papers contain good notices of work being done in that city by Elder O. R. Miller. A list of subjects to be handled by Brother Miller and differences between organizations were given. It is publicity of a kind that counts. The brother is to be congratulated on getting such fair treatment.

HANSON-BURR DEBATE.—From the Fallbrook Enterprise (California) for June 7, we note that Reverend Eugene Burr, of the Christian Church, and Brother Paul M. Hanson had arranged for a series of debates, seven propositions being set out in their articles of agreement. They were to begin Monday, June 10, at the Baptist church, Fallbrook.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

Editors Herald: I inclose a song given by the Spirit through my mother, Sister S. V. Bailey. I thought you might care to use it. This was sung many years ago at the old church southwest of Lamoni, across from where Charles Moon now lives.

CARA BAILEY BRAND.

LANSING, MICHIGAN, 1017 West Main.

Dear Saints, you are weak, you are mortal,
Then list while the Spirit is near,
For not till you enter yon portal
Will all to your vision be clear.

Chorus:

Then let blessed charity rule you,
That nothing your peace here shall mar;
Let the Spirit like a halo of glory
Always be your bright guiding star.

Be faithful, be kind to each other;
Be earnest in striving for good;
And then, when life's battle is over
You'll feel that you've done what you could.

And then when this work is triumphant
You'll have no more need for your tears;
The former as well as the latter
Shall meet when the Savior appears.

"Away."

(Riley's tribute to his brother, who died for his country.)

The touches of his hands have strayed
To simple things: Where the violets grew Blue as the eyes they were likened to,
I can not say, and I will not say
That he is dead—he is just away!
With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand,
He has wandered into an unknown land.
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there.
And you—Oh, you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return—
Think of him faring on as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here;
And loyal still, as he gave the blows
Of his warrior-strength to his country's foes,
Mild and gentle, as he was brave—
When the sweetest love of his life he gave
As reverently as his lips have prayed;
When the little brown thrush that harshly chirred
Was dear to him as the mocking bird.
And he pitied as much as a man in pain
A writhing honey bee wet with rain—
Think of him still as the same, I say;
He is not dead—he is just away.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

SUMMER SCHOOL WORK.

Speech of Walter W. Smith on Daily Vacation, or Summer School Work, Independence, Missouri, April 12, 1912.

I esteem it an honor to be asked to take part in this evening's exercises, and hope that my remarks may inspire others to further investigate the opportunities for good in this summer school work. I appreciate very much the remarks of the brother just preceding me [W. E. LaRue], and know they are born of experience.

ELDER WALTER W. SMITH.

A great many people have said to me, "We haven't any teachers for such a school. We couldn't have a vacation school; we have no college students nor anybody at all that is teaching or going to school, and of course we could not think of running a school without teachers; and it would seem foolish to start a school without trained help." This would seem discouraging indeed, if it were not for the fact that this work is not of the character that requires such a high order of training. It requires a high order of service, but you can quite believe me, when I tell you a few of our experiences as well as those already related by Brother LaRue, that it is not a matter of pedagogy of the head, but pedagogy of the heart almost exclusively. It is not a matter of telling the boy or girl so much, as it is a matter of loving them much, as the following incident will show.

On the first day of our school, among those who came was a boy about twelve years old whose name was Walter. It fell to the lot of Brother John Potts to care for this boy during the industrial period. Hardly had they begun work when some disagreement arose between him and his neighbor, whereupon this Walter grasped his opponent by the hair and called him a name I could not begin to suggest to you. Brother Potts reached over and unloosed his grasp on the other fellow's hair, and suggested that that was a new name for the fellow, but that he wouldn't advise him to use it any more around there. Of course, according to the rule we tried to enforce in the school, we would have had to take that boy and throw him out in the street. This was exactly what his previous experience had led him to expect, and he was ready for it with some more names. This time he would have called us all by a new name. His father had used that kind of persuasion with him, so it seems. He had felt mostly kicks and licks all his life and was fully prepared to meet them here. The fuss was settled and the trouble passed for a season, but before the day was over we were obliged to take him gently but firmly and put him outside and lock the door. The next morning he showed up again and it was thought by some of the teachers that in the interest of discipline he should be left out. Brother Potts said we would try him once more. He stayed a little longer and with less trouble, but before the morning was over we had to once more firmly but gently put him out. This time he gathered up a crowd of rowdy fellows and made trouble for us outside, and followed Brethren Potts and Zimmermann and threw bricks and stones at them, and when they had gotten on the car, threw stones at the car.

Next morning as they were coming to the school they saw this young fellow a long way off. Now they did not run to meet him, nor did they fall on his neck, but they did not run away from him. This boy had not often been forgiven; if so he did not know of it; he acted like nobody had been a friend to him, and did not seem to understand friendship. As they drew nearer and nearer to the church the intervening space between them diminished to the width of the street, when Brother Potts called to him to "come over." He was afraid to do it; he thought he would get a thrashing, but Brother Potts said, "Come on, I will leave it to John (John Zimmermann) I will not touch you." After a while he came over and walked between them to school. That fellow was won from that morning and was our champion from then on. If anybody looked cross-eyed at the church he was ready to lick him for it. This work is simply a matter of loving people into the church.

At first everybody was afraid they could no do it, but all learned better with experience. Anybody who loves God, and is willing to work for his name's sake, and is willing to love the children, if they love them very much, they can succeed. That is the principal qualification in this work. And right here I would like to say that our success in this work in Philadelphia has been due mainly to the very excellent help we have had from the various Saints, many of them young folks, who have sacrificed their summer vacations to assist in this labor of love for the children. I feel sure there are many others who would do the same if the opportunity was offered them.

This work includes boys and girls between the ages of four and fourteen (fourteen is the age at which the children may go to work in Pennsylvania, and we had very few over that age) and children of this age are exceedingly wiggly. That is normal. If they were still we might well be alarmed, and I am heartily in accord with what Brother Greene has just said about the church being made for the use of the people. We have had some trouble in Philadelphia getting the people to see that the church was just made for use. They seemed afraid of knocking off some of the paint, and afraid of wearing a hole in the carpet, but we succeeded in convincing most of them that if we wore the carpet out that was really what it was made for. That the church was made for the people and their use, and not the people for the church. Our churches and our people ought to be freely given to the Lord in the service of his children.

No boy or girl will seek you out and sit down for an hour or two and let you talk to them. People who do not know us except from hearsay are not likely to seek the truth from our hands. The public is against the truth to start with. But we have a message that will interest anyone who cares for truth and right, if we can but get an audience; once the opening is made the field is largely ours. This is the mission of the vacation school work; when we have done good to the children the parents feel obligated in return, and the doors are opened frequently to the message. We have simply invented something to interest the boy and girl while we express, in actions largely, our love for them. So while the boy is weaving the hammock you can sit down and show him how, or while the girl is doing her embroidery she needs showing, and by and by there comes a time when it is done wrong or becomes too difficult, and you must take it out and correct it; then is the time for you to work and let them do the talking, they will tell you all about the family, about the father or mother, where they go to church, or why they don't go at all, where they go to Sunday school, or why they quit, and if you just keep your wits about you and tend to your business, by the time the school is out you will know pretty well about the people who send their children; the religious feeling in the neighborhood, the general sentiment of the people, as well as a lot of valuable information that no elder under the sun could ever gather by tracting or visiting. So that when you go later to visit in your neighborhood you may have a lot of data like this: "So-and-so lives here. They used to be Lutheran till they moved; now they sometimes go to the Methodist Church, but like the Presbyterians," etc. "So-and-so lives here. The father is Baptist, the mother is Methodist, the children do not go to Sunday school at all," etc. You know where all the children go to Sunday school and church, and are assured that when they have a fuss and get discouraged or mad they will come to your Sunday school and church. You have made friends of the children. You have a powerful defense in every home; you have some one in every home that loves you and will deny any criticism made church step as early as seven o'clock. By the time the school opens they are all there waiting. We register every child daily, so we keep track of who really does come. Just before we opened the doors every day we called all the teachers together and bowed down before the Lord in prayer and asked for the things so needful, patience, grace, and strength to endure and do well the work before us, so that every day before we opened the school we laid it all in the hand of our Father who careth for us all and asked him to make it a success. Then we opened the doors and seated the children to the strains of a good rousing march. As soon as all had gotten their seats the whole school would rise at the sound of the rising chords from the piano, and we sang some such hymn as we opened with to-night, "Onward Christian soldiers," or "We march, we march to victory," or "I love to tell the story." against either you or the church, simply on the ground that anyone who would do so much for them could not be so evil. They know us, and that's half the battle; and they believe in us, and that's the other half. Then if we do not do more than help the children we have done much; these people are God's children, and we as his Saints owe it to him and to them to help them; what we tell them and what we show them how to do is of worth in itself, of course. We sing good songs and tell true stories and show them how to make useful articles.

The following is the program of each day's work for the whole six weeks in the Philadelphia school. The school is announced to start at nine in the morning and close at noon. Each one of the teachers and helpers should be there at least fifteen minutes before nine, and some of the workers must be there earlier—better half past eight. The children come early. Sometimes I have found a boy or girl sitting on the one offered a short invocation, all standing, closing with the Lord's prayer. We then read a selection of scripture in concert. We taught them several such pieces as the twenty-third Psalm, the Beatitudes, the one hundredth Psalm, etc. Then we sang another hymn, "God make my life a little light," or, "Father, hear thy little children," etc. We then gave the children a two-minute habit talk on such subjects as "Clean hands, clean faces, clean hearts," "Say thank you, and If you please, and the reason for it," etc. We then had the Flag Salute, using the one approved by the National Flag Association for the public schools. With the retiring of the flag, the kindergarten (those under seven years of age) marched out to a separate room for their work. By this time it was about twenty-five minutes after nine. We then taught the children (the older ones only were left with us) some songs, "My heart's in the Highland,"

"The merry wind," "Jack Frost," "The Woodpecker," etc.

At about fifteen minutes to ten we began the bible story and spent some twenty minutes in story telling. We told a series of stories, beginning with Adam and Eve and ending with the ascension of our Savior. You would hardly think you could interest a boy in a bible story, but it can be done—it was done. Sister Margaret Macgregor told stories for us one season that reached the highest point of efficiency in story telling I have seen. She did it so well that boys who had to work in the neighboring grocery stores made it a point to get away from the store at this period to hear these stories. They would leave the push carts at the curb and run in, just to hear the bible story; it was the only thing they took in. They could only be away for a short time, and preferred to hear the story to something else. Just think of three hundred or four hundred boys and girls listening breathlessly to a story of God's wonders with the patriarchs and apostles; this in itself was worth the trouble for the school.

Play followed story telling. We took the children to a public school yard near by, in fact just across the street. There we taught the children some practical games and made them play fairly. I think that play is one of the most important activities of childhood, and should by all means be directed; if you just let children run wild to play, mischief is the fruit very often. I can recollect some of the play when I was a boy, and I wonder if it is not often the same or worse now. A boy with a glove, one with a ball, and another with a bat, form a fine nucleus for a ball team, and will soon attract enough players to start a game. If these are allowed to play without direction or restraint, the boy with the glove, ball, or bat will dictate the terms of the game, and if these are not acceded to will break up the game. If put out fairly it is still at his will whether he will go out or not. "I am not out; I'll quit; I won't go out," he says, and such play is dangerous to morals; it is a preparation to ignore all moral and legal restraint in later life. But if taught the rules of the game and directed in the play and compelled to play fairly, it is a preparation for their place in society.

At half past ten we began the industrial period that we have already said much about. It is the place where we let the boys and girls pour out to us what we have just tried to put into them, with the addition of what they know along the lines of their own history and feelings. We have not in mind to do so much work, or to teach a trade, but to find employment for the children, employment that will attract them and hold them while we are loving them into shape. We did a great variety of work for the boys. we made hammocks, baskets, mats, balls, horselines, and a great number of other things,—anything we could get material for, that would interest boys; and for girls we sewed, embroidered, crocheted, wove mats, baskets, belts, beads, and did many other things, such as any handy woman or girl might invent. The kindergarten work consisted of stories, games, paper cutting, and paper folding, hand work, etc., just such work as is done in the kindergarten that could be provided for in our schools.

Here are a few samples of the things we made in our school. These were made by the boys and girls during the industrial period just referred to, while we are getting near to them. I want to tell you a few stories about the ones that made them. Some of these things I want you to pass back through the audience. Just see how far they will go, and the last one that gets an article can have it. (Here a dozen or more models were distributed in the audience.)

Here is a piece of embroidery. I can not give it away, but I want you to see it. This is the work of a twelve-year-old girl. She came the first year we had the school. I did not see her again until the next year. The second year she came and brought her brother, who afterwards made a hammock. I said, "Alma, I have not seen you for a year. I am glad to see you again." She asked me to call and see her mother, and later I did. I found her mother was a Catholic in religion, but the house was rather mixed up on the matter of religion, as the father was a Lutheran, and the children were attending a Presbyterian Sunday school when they went anywhere. About six months after the second year's work, something happened in the Sunday school to which the children went, and they stopped. And knowing us, they visited our Sunday school one day. Now the only way they knew us was through the vacation school. Well, they came to visit our Sunday school. I asked if they might not come all the time, and the mother said, "Certainly, you are more interested in them than anyone else." So they came. This is Alma's embroidery work, but more important by far is the result. Alma brought her two older sisters and her brother. I have since baptized the three girls. One of them teaches a class in the Sunday school, and also teaches a class in the night school, and Alma is now in the teacher training class in the Sunday school, preparing to teach others, and so the good work progresses.

Here is another piece of work. This work was done by one of three sisters won to the church through the vacation school. The church converted these girls, and their mother later, but we had never an opportunity of speaking to them till we were introduced to them in the vacation school. One of these girls sings now in the choir and plays at the mission Sunday school sometimes, and is secretary of the Religio Society in Philadelphia.

This work was done by Mary, one of our vacation school girls. She lived just across the street from us for years, but we were never able to make any progress religiously with her family. They were very stanch Presbyterians. Mary wanted her sister to come and see the exhibition, but she positively refused. She would not even look in at a window. But Mary was our stanch friend, and later joined the Sunday school, and before the third year we had baptized her and her brother, and the sister who would not come to the exhibition and the whole family are with us in spirit. And so I might go on all the evening telling you much the same kind of stories. Almost all who come are favorably impressed. Some, to be sure, are not so soon or so easily impressed, but we are better known in these homes.

At the close of the vacation school we exhibited all the work done during the entire six weeks. Every piece of work was retained until after the closing exercises and distributed to the children the next day; this maintained the interest until the very last and gave us an opportunity to invite the parents of the children to see their work. We gave a program just the same as we had every day and added in place of the bible story the addresses to the parents and children. Last year our new church was just finished in time for the school work, and we had about seven hundred people in to the exercises, and afterwards we arranged for those who desired to pass through the basement and gymnasium and view the exhibition of the work, and more than one thousand two hundred people passed through to see the exhibit.

There were some German people who could not speak English, and to these we introduced our German Saints, and to the French we introduced our French Saints, and we tried to entertain all who came. This we have done each year. I can assure you that it is as Brother LaRue has said, a common thing to be accosted on the street by children of all ages as "Brother Smith," screaming it out as far as they can see you, and by this you know that one is your friend, and it is a good thing to have a friend in a family. The boy will come, so will the girls, and most everybody will follow the children; first the child, then one or both parents, and lastly the whole family.

I can not begin to tell you all there is to be said about this work. Those who are interested should secure the Syllabus and Suggestions for Use in Daily Vacation Bible Schools, a book containing all the plans, songs, music, and many helpful suggestions about work and play, etc. These may be had from Doctor R. G. Boville, 40 Bible House, New York City, for one dollar. I thank you for the continued interest you have manifested.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM AGAINST ITSELF."--PART 30.

BY S. W. L. SCOTT.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

With reference to the one hundred and sixteen pages of the translation of the Book of Mormon which Martin Harris was permitted to take, and which was lost, of which circumstance the Campbellites have continuously had the laugh up their sleeves, permit us to say that if they will read the account of Nephi making two sets of plates, follow up the history, too lengthy for insertion here, they will discover that in the abridgment made by Mormon, he did not use the precious record commenced in Nephi's day, and transmitted to successors till about 200 years B. C., or to the reign of King Benjamin. Upon the one set of plates Nephi "received commandment," that the ministerial, prophetic, and the plain and more precious parts of them, should be written upon "these plates," and the things written kept for the instruction of "my people who should possess the land." He also says, mark it, "And also, for other wise purposes, which purposes are known unto the Lord; wherefore, I Nephi did make a record upon the other plates which gives an account, or which gives a greater account of the wars and contentions, and destructions of my people. And this have I done and commanded my people what they should do, after I am gone, and that these plates should be handed down from one generation to another, or from one prophet to another, until further commandment of the Lord. And an account of my making these plates shall be given hereafter; and then, behold, I proceed according to that which I have spoken, and this I do, that the more sacred things may be kept for the knowledge of my people."—Book of Mormon, pp. 43, 44. The second set of plates is made, and he is now writing upon them, and he will "give an account" of making them "hereafter." Where does he give the account? A record of the account is found on pages 65 and 66, paragraphs 5 and 6. "And thirty years had passed away from the time we left Jerusalem. And I Nephi had kept the records upon my plates, which I had made of my people, thus far. And it came to pass that the Lord God said unto me, Make other plates, and thou shalt engraven many things upon them which are good in my sight, for the profit of thy people. Wherefore, I Nephi, to be obedient to the commandments of the Lord, went and made these plates upon which I have engraven these things. And I engraved that which is pleasing unto God. And if my people are pleased with the things of God, they will be pleased with mine engravings which are upon these plates. And if my people desire to know the more particular part of the history of my people, they must search mine other plates. And it sufficeth me to say, that forty years had passed away, and we had already had wars, and contentions with our brethren." By succession the records came into the hands of Jacob, Nephi's brother. From him we obtain the following:

For behold, it came to pass that fifty and five years had passed away, from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem; wherefore, Nephi gave me, Jacob, a commandment concerning the small plates, upon which these things are engraven. And he gave me, Jacob, a commandment that I should write upon these plates, a few of the things which I considered to be most precious: that I should not touch, save it were lightly, concerning the history of this people, which are called the people of Nephi. For he said that the history of his people should be engraven upon his other plates, and that I should preserve these plates, and hand them down unto my seed, from generation to generation. And if there were preaching which was sacred, or revelation which was great, or prophesying, that I should engraven the heads of them upon these plates, and touch upon them as much as it were possible, for Christ's sake, and for the sake of our people: for because of faith and great anxiety, it truly had been made manifest unto us concerning our people, what things should happen unto them.—Book of Mormon, p. 123, Palmyra edition.

From Jacob, the records pass into the hands of his "son, Enos"; from Enos into the keeping of his son Jarom; from Jarom into the keeping of his son Omni; from Omni, who has no sons, into the charge of King Benjamin. From the days of King Benjamin, Mormon made up his abridged record from the record called "more precious," or "more sacred," and what he himself wrote. Not only does he use the "more sacred" record, but takes the plates on which the record is engraven and puts them with his other plates, to carefully preserve them. Hence he says:

But behold, I shall take these plates, which contain these prophesyings and revelations, and put them with the remainder of my record, for they are choice unto me; and I know they will be choice unto my brethren. And I do this for a wise purpose; for thus it whispereth me, according to the workings of the Spirit of the Lord which is in me.—Words of Mormon, p. 152, Palmyra edition.

Remember that Mormon and his son Moroni lived in the fourth century of the Christian era, and were the last custodians of these records (plates) before they were hid up, and committed to the care of the Lord. Mormon made an abridgment of the entire record, completed by Moroni, and they named it the "Book of Mormon."

According to Mormon's account, when he was making the abridgment down to the days of King Benjamin's reign, about 200 years B. C., he "searched" the records committed to him, and found this "more sacred," "more important" record, and he used it to finish out his account, and put the plates containing it with the other plates, as he said in the foregoing quotation. Now listen: More than nine hundred years previous to this, God commanded Nephi to record the "ministerial," the "prophecies," the more plain and precious parts of them, upon "these" identical plates, and says they should be kept for the instruction of my people who should possess the land, and also for other wise purposes, known to the Lord. And when Mormon received them to make up his abridged record from, he says, "I know they will be choice unto my brethren. And I do this [make up my record from the revelations and prophecies] for a wise purpose, for thus it whispereth me according to the workings of the Spirit of the Lord which is in me." What is the sequel to this? The plates were sealed, and deposited according to the commandments of God, "hidden by Moroni's hand," to come forth unto the interpretation thereof, in the due time of the Lord. After being buried for fourteen hundred years, the heavens burst asunder revealing angels in white raiment, announcing the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began (Acts 3: 21.) A young and inexperienced youth in western New York lifts up his soul in supplication to God, and is answered by a bright messenger from the old homestead of eternity, the palace royal of the universe, where heaven's eternal King sits enthroned amid unending glory, and ineffable and serene joy. In a conduit of light he announces, "I am Moroni!" The very being who completed the records, and concealed them one thousand four hundred years before! There is more design in this than accident. More truth than fiction. More harmonious and existing facts than "a made-up yarn." More of concentration and concatenation of real events, in connecting the beginning with the end. Time passes along; the plates are secured. The translation of one hundred and sixteen pages is a fact, falling into hands of enemies and the failure to recover the "one hundred and sixteen pages of foolscap," is a fact. Those who sought to overthrow the purposes of God, feel they have now "trapped" the Almighty. He informs them who are chosen to bring forth these things, that the enemy had changed the wording. The Lord tells Joseph not to translate the same account over again. The enemy proposed to test the inspiration of the work. But the inspiration in Nephi twenty-three hundred and ninety-four years before, which said that the "ministries, and the prophecies, the more plain and precious parts" should be written on the second set of plates was for "wise purposes known unto the Lord," and the inspiration in Mormon over fourteen hundred years before, who said, "I take these plates [of Nephi] which contain these prophesyings and revelations and put them with the remainder of my records for they are choice unto my brethren. And I do this for a wise purpose, for thus it whispereth me according to the workings of the Spirit of the Lord which is in me." How does the inspiration in these men so long ago stand vindicated? The Lord answers the question as follows:

And now, verily I say unto you, that an account of those things that you have written, which have gone out of your hands, are engraven upon the plates of Nephi; yea, and you remember, it was said in those writings, that a more particular account was given of these things upon the plates of Nephi. And now, because the account which is engraven upon the plates of Nephi, is more particular concerning the things, which in my wisdom I would bring to the knowledge of the people in this account, therefore, you shall translate the engravings which are on the plates of Nephi, down even till you come to the reign of King Benjamin, or until you come to that which you have translated, which you have retained, and behold, you shall publish it as the record of Nephi, and thus I will confound those who have altered my words. I will not suffer that they shall destroy my work; yea, I will show unto them that my wisdom is greater than the cunning of the Devil. Behold, they have only got a part, or an abridgment of the account of Nephi. Behold, there are many things engraven on the plates of Nephi, which do throw greater views upon my gospel; therefore, it is wisdom in me, that you should translate this first part of the engravings of Nephi, and send forth in this work. And, behold, all the remainder of this work, does contain all those parts of my gospel which my holy prophets, yea, and also my disciples, desired in their prayers, should come forth unto this people. And I said unto them, that it should be granted unto them according to their faith in their prayers; yea, and this was their faith, that my gospel which I gave unto them, that they might preach in their days, might come unto their brethren, the Lamanites, and also, all that had become Lamanites, because of their dissensions.—Doctrine and Covenants 9: 8-10.

Further comment will not render the matter stronger, unless it would be to say, that had not the one hundred and sixteen pages been lost, the translation of the Book of Mormon would have been open to just criticism, serious in its nature, and this all may see.

But we commend an instance from the Bible for Mr. Traum's consideration, and close the point. Bible believers can not consistently find fault, as the Book of books records a parallel. It is related in the thirty-sixth chapter of Jeremiah that his prophecy was reduced to ashes, burned by Jehoiakim, king of Judah, and that it was restored by inspiration, and was more full and complete than the original one, burned by the king. The record is stated thus:

Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.—Jeremiah 36: 32.

Not one word is said charging Martin Harris with complicity with Satan to alter the one hundred and sixteen pages of the translation. Harris was reprovved for violating his obligation, as he had placed himself under solemn covenant to Joseph, to show the manuscript to none, other than his own wife, his brother, his father and mother, and a Mrs. Cobb, a sister to his wife. But when he gained possession of the manuscript, through zeal, anxiety to promulge the record, or for other reasons, he took the liberty to show it unto others, contrary to his obligations. After his rebuke, he humbled himself in sorrow and contrition of spirit. Joseph was also reprovved for trusting in man, and for repeatedly entreating the Lord for his consent after having been denied. He lost his gift for a time, and the Urim and Thummim was taken from him, as also the plates, for a season. He was greatly troubled by this punishment, but they were restored to him again. See History of the Church, volume 1, pages 23, 24, and 25. Martin Harris being rebuked by the Lord for his breach of trust militates not against him being chosen as a witness, and to perform the work God had outlined for him, any more than the several rebukes administered by Christ to Peter militate against his testimony of the divinity of Christ and the work God had chosen him to do. On one occasion Jesus said to him: "Get thee behind me Satan, for thou art an offense unto me: for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men."—Matthew 16: 23. This was just after the divine revelation from God was given him revealing the Messiahship of Christ. On another occasion Jesus told him that "Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat." Elder Traum takes to task revelation recorded in Section 6 of Doctrine and Covenants. The Apostle John to tarry. "Translated from parchment, written, and hid up by himself." We have treated upon this question in reply to one of Elder Traum's propositions under the subject of the Mormon priesthood. We only notice it in connection now with criticisms on the Doctrine and Covenants.

On page 213, Elder Traum thus expatiates:

Assuming that it was correctly translated in the first instance, and as it was published in the Book of Commandments, we can hardly see why the Lord found it necessary, when the same "revelation" was printed in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, to use one hundred and ten words more to tell it the second time. The wonder may be in part explained when we consider that the Lord only followed his own precedent in failing to make himself clear in the New Testament, and upon second thought more fully explained himself in the Book of Mormon.

As intimated above, this "revelation" played its part. It became the foundation of that "yarn" which Smith and Cowdery told about John the Baptist in the woods in May of 1829. This was the time that John the Baptist conferred the keys of the Aaronic priesthood, and commanded them to baptize each other.

We have given historic data as to the Book of Commandments being faulty and why, and that when the church recovered from mob violence, and those to whom the revelations were in charge, compared with the originals, the Book of Commandments and gave us the corrected Doctrine and Covenants of 1835. But assuming that it was correctly translated in the Book of Commandments and that there were one hundred and ten words more in the Doctrine and Covenants will not give the grounds which Elder Traum assumes as to Bible precedent, nor justify his wild conclusion. We submit two texts from the Bible, and solicit an explanation. One is Isaiah's original delivery, and the other a purported copy of the same thus:

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Isaiah 40: 1-5.

Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance, for the remission of sins; as it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God.—Luke 3: 2-6.

The prophecy applied to John the Baptist, in the original as here given, consists of one hundred and eighteen words in Isaiah. The same prophecy written in Luke, consists of only fifty-seven words, a difference of sixty-one words. In the language of Elder Traum: "Assuming that it was correctly written in Luke, we can hardly see why the Lord found it necessary to use sixty-one words more, in telling it the first time, than what he used in telling it the second time." Yes, but if some one would compare this quotation from Luke with the original in Isaiah, (as was done in the case of the revelations printed in the Book of Commandments unfinished, and scattered by the mob,) and give us the harmonized copy of it, Luke would conform to the original words of Isaiah, and both would give us a reading of one hundred and eighteen words each, and exactly the same. Perhaps the Lord thought he explained himself too fully in Isaiah and improved in "brevity," as he progressed!

But what connection exists between the fact of John, the apostle, tarrying, and "the foundation of the yarn which Smith and Cowdery told about John the Baptist appearing to them in May, 1829, in the woods," no one but Traum can see. The whole mass entering into the criticism is a misapprehension. If he means that John the apostle's tarrying was a necessity to John Baptist's ministration, then on the same grounds, Peter and James should have tarried for the same reason, for John Baptist ministered under the direction of the three. By the way, Elder Traum, we wonder if, according to your method of criticism, the story of Elijah's translation, or tarrying with that prophetic statement in Malachi 4: 5, "I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord," became the foundation of that "yarn" which Peter, James and John told about Elias and Moses appearing to them in the top of a mountain, when Christ "received from God the Father, honor and glory." (2 Peter 1: 16-18.) And Peter, James, and John were enraptured, as "Moses and Elias" talked.

On pages 213 and 214 Elder Traum seeks to array Joseph and David Whitmer in conflict with each other as follows:

"It was on the 15th day of May, 1829, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger. . . . After a few days we commenced to reason out of the Scriptures with our acquaintances and our friends as we happened to meet them. About this time my brother Samuel Smith came to visit us. . . . He, however, was not easily persuaded of these things. . . . He retired to the woods. . . . The result was that he obtained revelations sufficient to convince him of the truth of our assertions to him, and on the 15th day of the same month in which we were baptized and ordained, Oliver Cowdery baptized him."

Attention is called to the prophet's own testimony that he, Oliver Cowdery and Samuel Smith were all baptized the same day. This is not generally known, as Whitmer claims the distinction of having been the third person baptized under the new dispensation. He says:

"In June, 1829, the Lord called Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris and myself as the three witnesses to behold the vision of the angel, as recorded in the fore part of the Book of Mormon, and to bear testimony to the world that the Book of Mormon is true. . . . In this month (June, 1829,) I was baptized and ordained an elder in the church of Christ by Brother Joseph Smith. Previous to this, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery had baptized, confirmed and ordained each other to the office of elder in the church of Christ. I was the third person baptized into the church."

The confusion here arises from Traum's unfair method of dropping out (as usual) the explanatory clauses and sentences. Joseph Smith doesn't intimate that David Whitmer was baptized May 15, 1829, because contrary to facts, and David himself concedes his baptism taking place in June, 1829. The Journal of History says, volume 3, page 301, "In June David Whitmer was baptized in Seneca Lake, by Joseph Smith. Hyrum Smith and Peter Whitmer, jr., were baptized at the same time." He might have been the "third person" baptized that day, but after forty-eight years, from the time he "withdrew" from the church, being as he says "called out," to the time of writing his "Address," his memory is proved to have been "faulty." Elder Traum quotes: "It was on the 15th day of May, 1829, that we were baptized, and ordained under the hand of the messenger." He then leaves out of the account two hundred and seventy-four words, in direct succession, all of which modify Traum's italicized, "After a few days, we commenced to reason out of the Scriptures," etc. "A few days after" what? The answer to this, is just what the tame critic has dropped out. Joseph had been rehearsing the persecutions manifested in the neighborhood, the threats of mobocracy from time to time, by professors of religion, and the protection afforded by providence raising up friends to the Saints, all of this, before May 15, 1829, and then drops back to the date mentioned and proceeds with his history. Who couldn't find fault by adopting such unchristian methods of bringing a system into disrepute? Right here, allow me to advise the reader of Mormonism Against Itself, to look after the author's purported extracts, quotations, etc., or they are likely to plunge you into embarrassing conditions. Besides this, Oliver Cowdery baptized Samuel Smith, while Joseph baptized David Whitmer. In the History of the Church, we find Joseph's own words as to the time of David Whitmer's baptism, as follows: "We found the people of Seneca County in general friendly, and disposed to inquire into the truth of these strange matters which now began to be noised abroad. Many opened their houses to us in order that we might have an opportunity of meeting with our friends for the purpose of instruction and explanation. We met with many from time to time, who were willing to hear us, and wishful to find out the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and apparently willing to obey the gospel when once fairly convinced and satisfied in their own minds; and in this same month of June, my brother Hyrum Smith, David Whitmer, and Peter Whitmer, jr., were baptized in Seneca Lake, the two former by myself, the latter by Oliver Cowdery."—Volume 1, pages 44, 45. The facts in this case, then, are before us, established by the Journal of History and the History of the Church, that in the month of May, 1829, Joseph, Oliver, and Samuel were baptized, and in the month of June, 1829, Hyrum, David, and Peter Whitmer, jr., were baptized. David Whitmer's memory was poor, and Traum's little criticism is poorer. The blunders in Whitmer's Address make his work very unreliable upon which to base a criticism that will stand.

It should not hurt any man's religion to correctly understand the religion of some other man, unless his own be of a kind that will not bear comparison.—J. W. Peterson.

John Kemble wrote out "Hamlet" thirty times, and said on quitting the stage, "I am now beginning to understand my art."

THE SOCIAL PURITY BOARD.

At the late General Convention and General Conference, the committee of seven, appointed a year previously by the Religio to take charge of the social purity movement among the men of the church, met and reported through the chairman and secretary. The following resolution was adopted by the General Conference, Sunday school and Religio:

"Resolved, That we recommend to the General Religio Association the appointment of one member to act in conjunction with a member of the General Sunday School Association, and one from the General Conference, if approved, to form a working committee to be known as the Social Purity Board whose work shall be the meeting of men's problems relating to social purity."

This action placed the work before the Saints in its proper light, being indorsed by the church and its auxiliaries. The firm progress of the movement, and the hearty support given it by men and women of a thinking temperament, indicate that nothing spasmodic either prompted or followed the work. It is not an easy problem to solve, because we are living in the infancy of such education, and men are both superstitious and disinclined to sacrifice; but right will triumph eventually.

One peculiar and sad feature about it is, that the man who tries to qualify himself to handle the subject intelligently, is often called either crank, fanatic, or extremist; when, in reality, he is probably only a specialist. The aim of the worker is to help every father to be a specialist along lines of purity. And right here, too, another misunderstanding exists: the words social purity create a prejudice in the mind of some men, who think that rights are to be invaded, delicate subjects laid bare, suggestions thrown out, and a general havoc created by unwise advocates. I would like to say to such persons, that it matters not what their experiences may have been in the past relative to such things, the work of the Social Purity Board is for no such purposes; but like many other movements, has been misunderstood, and in a few cases, misrepresented.

Members of the board appreciate the responsibility that has been imposed upon them, and for this reason, if for no other, would be careful for the welfare of its future moves. Only such men as are competent to discharge such duty are authorized by the board to lecture on the subject of social purity, and no literature is passed that has not been examined and indorsed by the board. It is not true that knowledge alone qualifies one to be a worker along these lines, for there are physicians who would make poor instructors and poorer lecturers. One essential is a pure mind, and another is a willingness, at least, to live what is taught. Members of the board have listened patiently to the many cautions and the much free advice (both good and bad) given; but they are still conscious that "talk is cheap," and in order to accomplish much, there must be cooperation of men whose hearts are tender and whose interest and confidence in the boys is never waning.

To keep inviolate the standard of our undertaking, and to present our views, aims, and attitudes, we are issuing this statement, in the HERALD and the Ensign:

1. We hold ourselves responsible for only such helpers, lecturers, and literature as shall be indorsed by the board. We feel that the number of persons who will impose itself upon the public and talk of matters indelicate, is small; but we do not encourage any person to represent the board until he has been authorized.

2. We hope to place in the hand of every reading Saint (that is, the parents and the sons) such literature as teaches laws and rules concerning the health of the man and his son. It will take several years to accomplish this task, because we have insufficient money; but from such persons as are interested in a movement of this nature we solicit financial support.

3. We are keeping an itemized account of all moneys expended, as was done by the committee of seven, and a proper report to the proper authorities will be made at the end of each year. We trust that it will hardly be necessary in the future for anyone to question, "What use is made of the money?"

4. The board has not fully decided whether it will organize certain under boards, in large districts and in stakes, or simply appoint such assistants as are competent to look after the interests of the work. It has divided the territory, to a certain extent, and in the near future will give notice of persons and territories.

5. We urge upon men everywhere to study along the lines of social and sexual purity, or cleanliness, that they may discover things that will be of profit to themselves and to others. Our literature is for sale. It will be possible to distribute free only to such persons as are not able to pay for it. Let no one forget that to publish one booklet would cost from ten to twenty dollars, and when they purchase the same for five or ten cents, they are getting the benefit of a large edition price, but this does not lessen the value of the book. In oldtime, when Bibles were written, they were so valuable that it was necessary to literally chain them to the pulpit.

6. Parties interested in the subject had better write to the officer nearest their address: C. B. Woodstock, chairman, Lamoni, Iowa; R. W. Farrell, secretary-treasurer, 29 Jaques Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts; J. F. Garver, Lamoni, Iowa.

THE ADOLESCENT BOY.

The adolescent period is that time which comes between childhood and manhood; that is, it connects the two periods, and contains that mysterious moment when the boy ceases to be a child and begins to be a man. In normal cases, about ten years are required to complete the transformation, beginning at fifteen and ending at twenty-five. Who has been so dull that he has not observed the dawning of this interesting time in the boy's life? Noticed the appearance of down on the upper lip, and the passing of the thin tone of voice? And heard the fond mother remark, with a ring of sadness and joy in her voice, "Our boy is becoming a man."

And right here is where the mistake is made—too many persons try to make a man out of a boy; they are not willing to let him grow as God intended. No one disputes the fact that a boy is a bundle of well-nigh infinite possibilities. It logically follows that the task of instruction is largely the father's, but in practice the reverse often follows; the father has no time, or no ability, or else he lacks in interest, and upon the burdened mother falls this entire responsibility.

Ernest Hamlin Abbott has written a book on the training of parents. It is only too true that this side of the question has been sadly neglected, and when it is mentioned, there is a flurry of arms, a big report, and silence. When the smoke of ridicule and resistance has cleared away, there the parent stands, just as ignorant as before, and desirous of remaining so. The extremely sad part of it all is, the poor child receives the brunt of the blow. The fruit of certain kinds of sowing is now being seen. The reaction from child neglect is taking place. Educators are turning their attention to the subject, and books by the hundreds, touching on the different phases of child life are now published. I do not feel competent to criticize any of the books that I have read. It seems to me that such as Children and the Home, by Hunter; Building Your Boy, by Wayne; Boy-Life, by Fiske; The Training of Parents, by Abbott, should be read by every parent.

Mr. Abbott, who evidently has made a careful study of the subject, has given the following outline as the five periods in the adolescent life of the male:

1st. The "Root and Grub" stage, which runs from one to five years, usually culminating in the third year. The characteristic feature of this age is the mouth as criterion of everything. Its favorite play and game is the biting and tasting plays. 2d. At four to twelve, the boy passes into the hunting and capture stage. He fears strangers, but builds in his mind a sort of hero worship; is indifferent to pain, and perhaps for this reason does not understand that he is cruel when hurting animals, insects, birds, etc. His favorite games are, such as allow stealth, stalking, ambush, hide and seek, black man, pursuit and attack, Indians, and such like. The 3d stage is pastoral. Some boys enter into the spirit of this life when only seven years of age. The boy manifests fondness for pets; desires to have something "for his own." We see him feeding pets, building huts, and digging caves, etc. From this condition of mind, he merges into the agricultural life, if he has the opportunity. This age runs between the twelfth and the sixteenth years. He develops foresight, and has a passion for gardening. His favorite pastime is watching weather signs; gardening, digging up seeds "to see if they are growing!" And then he enters into what we might call the practical stage,—the shop and commercial. It may begin when he is but fourteen years of age. Mr. Abbott gives the duration period fourteen to forty, and the culmination eighteen to twenty. Pay is demanded for services—there are no free errands. The sense of responsibility makes itself felt. The commercial grades run about as follows: Swapping, selling, trading, exchanging, bargaining,—and in this line, according to his ability, education, and opportunity, he becomes expert or ordinary.

More and more, too, is being recognized to-day, the necessity of getting down to the boy's level rather than trying to lift him to man's level. It is not a pleasant sight to see an old head on young shoulders. The child can not understand man's ways; we can understand his; man has been a child, but the child never has been a man.

And so he comes before us, a little bunch of pink loveliness, bringing sunshine into the home and awaking to never-dying consciousness maternal and paternal love. The first smile! The first cool! The waving hands that act like fairy wands, enticing the babe to sleep! The first word! The first step—only to be followed by others, heavenward or hellward, as the case may be. And the father and mother catch the inspiration of the moment, and feel tenderer, holier, more determined to "make good," for the boy's sake, if for no other reason; but, alas, how soon the resolutions are forgotten, the humdrum of life's existence seems to crowd them to one side, and, before they know it, the infant of to-day becomes the man of to-morrow, perhaps, untrained, uncultured, unfitted for fatherhood because not developed in manhood; all the tenderness in him crushed out by harsh treatment; the sense of moral distinction blunted, and an idea of God perverted,—for from the father a child should get its intellectual and spiritual conception of God.

It was Mr. Spencer who said: "By no method of alchemy can we get golden conduct out of leaden instincts; but instincts can be changed; fresh grafts can be introduced upon the stock; the whole tree can be trained in a new direction."

But can the tree be trained when it has passed the stage of adolescence; when the limbs are mature, and the time of response is past? In all civilized lands, criminal statistics show two sad and significant facts: First, that there is a marked increase of crime at the age of twelve to fourteen, not in crime of one, but of all kinds, and that this increase continues for a number of years. Adolescence is preeminently the criminal age, when most first commitments occur and most vicious careers begin. Second, and sad as it may seem, but nevertheless true, juvenile delinquents seem to be increasing, and crime is more and more precocious. This is the testimony of all men who have given the matter careful attention and investigation.

And this fact, so evident that I need not even cite the first instance, impresses us with the solemn responsibility that rests upon fathers and mothers who have adolescent boys (and girls). It is not to be inferred that the training period does not arrive till the child is fourteen years old. We might almost lay down, as a rule of procedure, that training should begin in extreme infancy; and right at this period the trouble begins, for persons who are not trained themselves often do the wrong thing. (And if I might be permitted to say it here, the very men and women who scoff at the insinuation that they need instruction concerning the rearing of children, are the very persons who are most needy of such knowledge.)

To illustrate: A man erects a large board dam to hold back the water that runs down the hillside. This water is used to flood his cranberry bog, in the fall. In due course of time these timbers become water-soaked, and in the spring, when the freshet is on and driftwood of all descriptions is floating to the sea, the top of this dam becomes clogged and the extra pressure of water forces little holes through the cracks. The unwise farmer or miller rushes out and begins to stop each hole as it appears, only to see them burst out in other places. In the meantime the water is creeping higher, and the man is working harder, but the effect is bound to be disaster.

That pent-up dam is an adolescent boy; the farmer is the father or mother, and instead of clearing away legitimate channels through which could pass surplus energy, the parent is trying to prevent manifestations of life and growth, and the result is larger holes, loss of splendid energy, confusion, disappointment, and despair. When we know what the curriculum is in thousands of homes, it is not surprising that there are so many juvenile courts and reformatories—which do not reform, only check temporarily.

On this point, Wayne says, "The marvel is that so many of these boys grow up into clean, wholesome men. It would be a weighty addition to philosophy and science to know why they succeeded as they do."

The early adolescent age, is the age of misunderstanding. Very few persons seem to understand the boy of fifteen. He is extremely sensitive, and if he is quiet because he is hurt in heart, father says that the boy is sulky, stubborn; if he sheds a tear or two, the word childish is heard, and if he asks to go fishing he is called lazy. The young fellow does not even understand himself; but if he is a normal boy he knows that somewhere in his consciousness there is a voice speaking to him and saying, "You are all right, Dick, even if no one does understand you."

It does not do for him to speak of this silent message that has been whispered to him, for people would say, as many said to Joseph Smith, "It is all of the Devil." It is not that the child is egotistical more than the adult; youth is frank; discretion (and in some cases, hypocrisy) has not developed. Impulsiveness is a normal trait of early adolescence; secretiveness is abnormal; and blackness rests on that day when the boy ceases to confide in his parents. He then goes into the world for sympathy, and learns the answers to life's different problems from disinterested acquaintances. The father has lost the great opportunity afforded him by nature, that of receiving from his son the inspiration that comes from youth, the freshness and zest of young life. As trees receive back expended life from the leaves that fall to earth, so may fathers regain enthusiasm, and all else that the word stands for, by associating with their children. This fact is verified by the lives of men who love children and live with them and play with them—such men never grow old in spirit.

That father who looks upon his son as another mouth to be fed, as another care, or burden, to be regretted; or who thinks of his offspring as one of Tennyson's characters thought of his sweetheart, as "a little better than his dog, and somewhat dearer than his horse,"—such a father is a misfit; he isn't even a decent heathen; and it is not to be wondered at that when the boy grows up he looks on his father as a boss to be dreaded, and perhaps to be respected, but hardly to be loved.

In Morro's middle period of adolescence, from sixteen to twenty, the psychic changes predominate. There is great and frequent alternation of mood from grave to gay, extreme exaggeration, little power of resistance, etc. This fact is recognized by the wise judge, and the parent might well take notice. It is readily determined, by a moment's talk with the down-and-out, that the first drink is taken in that age between fifteen and twenty-five. This is the adolescent period. The crucial age. The time when the boy goes down the line; breaks loose and becomes the driftwood of society; the slum degenerates; the flotsam and jetsam.

The cause of balkiness is a noble-looking horse has never been determined. Some men have said that the poor brute when young had been abused by a human brute. And when we have seen men whipping such animals, how often has the thought forced itself home to us, Are the many hardened criminals, now serving long sentences in the state prisons, criminals being punished in thousands of ways, the result of blunders and neglects? Society will have a great deal to answer for in the judgment day. And are not men waking up to the situation? Are they not providing playgrounds, schools, books, teachers, personal instruction, etc.? The old method of handling men—beating them to make them good—is being left behind; and more and more it is being felt, that hate is the most destructive and love the most constructive force in the world.

The child forms habits unconsciously. One of the quickest methods to develop a wrong habit in early childhood is to allow a boy to have his own way in wrongdoing. Take truancy. The little boy runs from school. His mother allows him to remain at home. She says, "He is so little! He gets tired of study! He wants to see his mamma!" Well, if this is the case, the trouble began before the boy went to school. If too little, why send him to school? If too weak for long lessons, why does the teacher give them? If the whole system needs adjusting, let adjustment begin at once. The little child and his mother are a part of society; and it makes no difference from what angle we view the question, we discover the need of more careful study of the whole question of boy development, boy training, boy science.

But to conclude the thought. This little act of truancy must not be regarded as less grave than some bigger crime, because it is thus that every criminal career may begin, and at this juncture, the effort of the parent must be brought to bear to prevent the evolution from this little act into the habitual class of crime. "Great oaks from little acorns grow." After all, it is not so much with the normal boy that we have to deal. For this reason, fathers say, "You ought to have a son like mine; then you would think differently." Perhaps, to this remark, the following reply is sufficient: "If your boy has had the proper training, and has grown up into a disobedient, wayward degenerate, then there is nothing in child-training; nothing in the effort to correct; and the Arab's idea of 'kismet' (fate) is right." But do we believe this?

The boy is king in his sphere; his rights should be respected. From infancy to puberty, is the reign of acquisitiveness. We find his pockets the storehouse of all kinds of Yankee notions. Nails, strings, buttons, whistles, pencils, and green apples in their season (paradoxically). The acquisitive instincts should normally develop into the habit of thrift. Then, for a few years he reigns under the influence of productive and destructive instincts. A jackknife is in order, and the hands itch to cut and hew and fashion. It is the whittling and whistling age. (The man we sometimes see at the country store, whittling and humming and loafing, has never left this part of his adolescent days.) In the old country schoolhouse, of blessed memory, there are the tell-tale seats. We, know where the fifteen-year-old boys sat. Names are carved, holes are bored, and in the grove yonder, on the old moss-covered trees, are the initials of boy friends whose hands have long since crumbled back to mother dust. Whittier has expressed it thus:

"Within, the master's desk is seen,
Deep scarred by raps official;
The warping floor, the battered seats,
The jackknife's carved initial."

Mr. Fiske tells us that "this is the tribal period of the gang, in which the productive and destructive instincts are in the balance. If the latter wins, the goal is the juvenile court; if the former wins, the next stage comes rapidly, as the productive instinct grows naturally into the constructive, and the goal may be the shop or any useful career."

Prior to early adolescence we have infancy, childhood, and boyhood. Between thirteen and fifteen, the boy, now attending grammar school, dreams of heroes and prides himself on his ability to keep military step, and hold his own with the other fellow, in doing stunts; but more important is the fact that at this age he is very susceptible to good and evil influences, for this is the stage of imitation of leaders. Manliness is struggling to develop normally, and the parent should take advantage of the exceptionally favorable time in which to develop personal loyalty and obedience. But, without doubt, the hardest period to manage, is the middle adolescent, when, as is too well known, the young man is struggling against the world, flesh, and the Devil. Many young fellows who are in reality older, belong to this class. If the parents have been coarse and brutal, paying no attention to the moral training of the young man, and his heart is a bit out of normal, he constitutes the hoodlum gang and often a mother's tears or father's blows do very little good. Continual nagging makes him ugly to the very marrow. If he is struggling after self-reliance (and at this age boys are working at this very problem), it is always best to help and not hinder him. Restless as seaweed on a rock; obstinate, self-conscious, and egotistical, the river of his life is nearing the ocean of manhood; hundreds of little streams have helped to swell the current of his existence; the channel is deeper and the flowing tide more powerful. What if, occasionally, it does overflow its banks? Will not the bright days of summer come and dry up the surplus water? 'Tis folly to attempt to "dam up" the rapidly rushing river—dykes may be erected, levees made strong, but the onrushing stream must find its home in the mighty ocean, to fulfill the purposes of the Creator.

Have you seen him? Did your heart beat glad at the sight of an old straw hat with the sun streaming through on the face of a brown-cheeked lad, coming home with three brook trout, a homemade fishing rod, and an appetite invisible but mighty? And later in life see him off to school; mistranslating Vergil, to make the girls laugh; walking home with two sets of books under his arm? Hear him talking of trips, to be made, around the world; of hunting and trapping; of baseball. And, last, have you seen his love for the sister who understands him, his mistaken love affair, his first trip away from home to work, and his hasty return, the shock at the news of his mother's death, from which he never fully recovered, and many other things showing depth of feeling you would hardly have suspected? Then you have seen the Adolescent Boy—and there is no other!

Editors Herald: The inclosed letter reached me yesterday, having been somewhat delayed. It might be a good idea to publish it in the HERALD as a warning to others. Will say that I have no acquaintance whatever with the party named. I have never been in Holland, from whence he came to England. I left Europe for the United States in July last. Had this party come from me, as stated, I should have given him a written statement of introduction to Brother Judd. Saints should beware of such scoundrels. Ask them some searching questions and require certain proofs of their being members of the church before letting them have money.

I am sorry that the party should use my name in connection with this scene, and that Brother Judd should be taken advantage of in that way. Hope he will pardon the delay of answer, as the letter reached me only yesterday.

PETER ANDERSON.

Editors Herald: I wish to draw the attention of church members in general to a man visiting me on March 21, purporting to have been sent to me for help financially from a brother in the Scandinavian Mission. He had a general knowledge of church matters respecting the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah faction. He presents his card as M. Kassel, of Essen; is a German, and speaks English indistinctly; know the names of many of the traveling ministry, etc. He borrowed money with the promise to return it the next day, having failed to return the same within twenty-one days.

I wish to warn other members of one who may further try to obtain money which can be put to better use than to help dishonest persons.

Dear Herald: As I have been a reader for some time, I thought some might be glad to hear how the work is progressing here in this active city. We have had Elder Christy with us for three or four months and we appreciate his work among us very much. He was very cordial and willing to help in all departments of the work and we were very sorry to have him leave. Our loss will be some others' gain. After he left there was quite an attack on our faith by a Presbyterian minister by the name of Shearer. His attack came out in the morning papers under large heading, "Mormon imposition," without historical foundation, and they had boys out on the street crying it. Just sensational I suppose. While the few Saints here scattered in different parts of the city were feeling quite badly, not knowing which way to turn, Elder Daniel Macgregor stepped in on the scene.

One of the opera houses was engaged, we paying twenty dollars for one night. When the crowd began to gather the doors were not opened. Some of the brethren managed to force one of the back doors open, and they soon found a way to open the others. Elder Macgregor addressed a full house for two hours. I think he did much good. There are several inquiring already. So the work moves on.

Editors Herald: Our semiannual conference and Sunday school convention, of the Spokane District, has just closed. It convened at Sagle, Idaho, in the Saints' new chapel, with a large attendance and good spiritual meetings. Elders George W. Thorburn, T. C. Kelley, and Oscar Case were present. Two were baptized. We feel the Lord is pleased with the work in that branch this last winter, and the sacrifices the Saints have made are accepted. They have their church building completed and paid for. The building is of brick and nicely furnished; and being the only church building in the village, the Saints have a golden opportunity. The membership consists of the best people of the vicinity. There is much good can be done if the Saints are faithful.

The Saints in Spokane are trying to keep the gospel banner afloat; there have been a few baptisms this winter, and others are investigating the gospel plan, yet we realize Satan is not bound and tries to creep in to scatter the flock. Prejudice is gradually giving way. The people who thought Union Park would be disgraced by the building of the Saints' Church in that vicinity are realizing their mistake, and some have since been baptized. Those who are men and women, when they come in contact with the gospel must let it entirely alone or they are sure to be convinced of its truthfulness; and will see how far below the standard, the word of God, that the so-called churches are teaching.

We are still hopeful and ever praying for the advancement of the cause of truth here as well as elsewhere. Our greatest need at present time is local help.

I am sure the work in the West is advancing. I hope the present year may be a successful one; there are many good people here, who have been blinded by false leaders. I realize when we say to the world that we are followers of the Christ and Latter Day Saints, we must convince them by our good works, for saying and not doing is fruitless.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

CEDAR SPRINGS, MISSOURI, June 12, 1912.

Editors Herald: We had a pleasant and profitable time at the district conference at Wheatland on May 25 and 26. All the missionaries of the district were in attendance, though there were but few of the Saints from other places on account of the busy season of the year. Wheatland is also rather inaccessible for the western part of the district where most of the Saints live.

The Saints at Wheatland seem to be alive to their best interests and greatly encouraged by the assembling of the conference there. Brother James Moler went from the conference to Lewis Station, and thence to Clinton. Brethren Macrae and Higdon remained at Wheatland to continue meeting another week, and at the close baptized three young people. From there they transferred to Walker, where they are now occupying on the street with a good hearing.

Brother Moorman and myself wended our way from Wheatland to Collins, where we occupied for a week on the street, and over Sunday at Vine Hill Schoolhouse, with more or less success. Several at Collins thanked us for what they had heard us say, and will not soon forget. However, many of them seemed afraid to get near enough to hear what we had to offer. Perfect love had not cast out all fear with them yet.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The Saints at Collins are certainly making progress, and their numbers are being added to betimes. Since an humble servant of the Master dropped in there less than two years ago and found the work at a standstill, it had taken new impetus, quite a number have been added to the fold until there is now a small army moving Zionward; many of them just as pure as the lilies. Some are laboring under difficulties, but God will give them strength.

They speak highly of the labor of Brother Higdon and Brother Bozarth here, not forgetting the associate efforts of Sister Jessie Higdon who has inspired the young people with new zeal. Come again, Sister Jessie; your visit here will always be a bright spot in the memory of the young people, and we avow the same at Wheatland and wherever you may go.

The little flock at Vine Hill is still practically without a shepherd, and we are now looking forward to the coming of District President James Moler.

Brother Moorman and I are now holding forth at the little hamlet of Cedar Springs. We have seats arranged in the yard of M. D. Bronson. When it is too cold or wet we go into the house. Brother Moorman can make lots of good sounding noise on his horn and Sister Dolly presides at the organ, so we make Zion's Praises ring. Our attendance and interest is on the increase, and we are hopeful for results. The Saints are coming down from Coal Hill and helping what they can, which we greatly appreciate.

Hopefully, I am your brother,

C. J. PETERS.

COLTON, CALIFORNIA, June 9, 1912.

Dear Herald: I was pleased to read in Brother Fred Best's letter in Ensign for May 30, that Elder Frank Burton's first administration to the sick had been recognized of God to the healing of the one administered to, Sister Walker, of Santa Ana, but who formerly belonged to the Newport Branch. It was gratifying indeed to know that God was setting his seal to the work of this recently ordained elder, our son Frank. How I hoped, and silently prayed, that the same power with God to heal that was his father's to enjoy and that brought relief to so many afflicted ones, fairly snatching some from the jaws of death, might now rest upon the son.

It was this same Sister Walker that was spoken to in tongues by Frank Burton's mother the first time she exercised that gift. It was in a prayer meeting in a dwelling house in the Newport Branch, then in "Gospel Swamp."

Preparations had to be made for a full house, for the Saints came from far and near in those days to attend the prayer meetings, knowing that the blessings of God would be showered upon them. There were no dull prayer meetings in the Newport Branch in those happy days. Chairs were arranged in two rows all around the room. Frank's mother sat on one of the back rows, and Sister Walker was the third or fourth one to her left, on the same row of chairs. The room was filled with the Spirit of God from the very opening of the meeting. There was no lingering; as soon as one speaker would sit down another was on his feet. Elder Burton and another had spoken in tongues, and given the interpretation. Sister Burton was much wrought upon, but not knowing that it was the gift of tongues resting upon her she tried to keep her seat. But ere long she was upon her feet, speaking in a language not her own. As she commenced speaking she closed her eyes and glided, rather than walked, between those rows of chairs, being impelled by the power of the Spirit, for she knew not to whom she was going, nor did she open her eyes to see; and she knew not till afterwards that the person in front of whom she stopped, and on whose head her hand rested, was Sister Walker. Three times she raised her hand and let it fall again gently on the head, suiting the accent of the words to the fall of the hand, which when interpreted were "Pray, pray, pray," and glided smoothly back to her place again. Elder Burton gave the interpretation, then sang in tongues.

Among the many spiritual prayer meetings of that season, that one stood out in bold relief, or rather fastened itself upon the memory of the Saints; and how vividly now, after the vicissitudes, the joys and sorrows of so many years, does that prayer meeting unveil itself to the mental vision, and we see that man of God so filled with the Spirit, imparting to others, in tongues, interpretations, prophecy, counsel, and admonition, all leading to the better life.

How sweet those seasons of communion with God! It was prophesied in those days that the Saints of that branch would be scattered, but that they should return again. And oh, may the return be in spirituality as well as literally.

E. B. BURTON.

Jots by the Wayside.

After two months of hard labor, bruised, weary and worn, we have finished the woodwork of the Scammon church. At this writing we are at Vera, Oklahoma, awaiting to-morrow, Children's Day, June 16.

This is the place where four years ago our worthy Brother Quick found a lonely family of Saints, Brother Shoemaker's, and with the true missionary spirit went to work, obtained the schoolhouse under some difficulties, and began telling the "old, old story," for six long weeks. He "hung like a dog to a root," baptizing twenty-one, organizing them into a full-fledged branch known as the Vera Branch.

I would that this picture could hang on the walls of memory, and other missionaries pursue the same course instead of flitting from branch to branch, accomplishing but little good. There are a hundred towns and hundreds of square miles of territory in this district of twenty-two counties that have not heard, and ever and anon solitary members are crying for the tribunes of God; but for fear of having pessimistic views we return to the Scammon church. A noble, sacrificing little band of Saints whom we have learned to love because of their untiring efforts and faithful integrity. Poor, hard working, and hard headed coal miners whose persistency is equalled only by their determined efforts to do, are now in possession of a neat little church twenty-eight by forty-six feet, eighteen-foot ceiling, bell tower and steeple—worth twelve hundred dollars—completed, for the moderate sum of six hundred dollars, cash outlay for material. The labor was all donated willingly and kindly for the love of the church. Please note our astonishment when on yesterday we heard the story that we built the church on contract and were receiving compensation. We are under contract to the church to work for its best interests every day and everywhere, but no other contract stipulating wages of any kind or character, or any compensation save the desire to hear the "well done" when we shall make answer.

All the churches we have built—six in number—were under the same contract, but then that was only one of the little lies that come from opposers and amount to but little.

Our conference is coming on June 22. Reunion is already beginning to shape up. Presidents of branches are all doing well. Of the two missionaries we have, one is at Joplin, the other Weir City, preaching.

Down East.—Number 2.

This is a continued but belated account of my trip to the Eastern Mission in 1911. It was not completed earlier for the reason that some, and among them even some of the leading missionaries, have referred in skeptical and sarcastic terms to my account of having seen seven whales off the coast of Jonesport, Maine; while they worked along that coast for years and never saw such a sight! One doubting apostle is enough, but more than one may be explainable by the theory that these latter times are to be characterized by scoffers. However, if a favoring providence assembled those monsters of the deep for the edification of the writer, why should less favored mortals jealously ridicule? Let them be very good, and they also may see signs and wonders.

Some kindly have intimated that they would be interested in the completion of my narrative; this, with a gift of codfish, sardines, etc., from Jonesport, by the hand of Brother Gus Koehler, delegate to conference, places me under renewed obligations to respond. What a comfort that those codfish were not sent C. O. D!

I left Stonington, Maine, July 31, by steamer for Boston via Rockland, where connection was made with the steamer from Bangor. Captain George Knowlton, also en route to the New England reunion, accompanied and pointed out features of interest. The view of sea, shore, islands, and general points, including beautiful homes and varied craft, enlivened by dwellers and visitors, the latter dressed in sailor costume, well tanned and enjoying themselves to the full, was very pleasing. I doubt if the scenery from Jonesport to Rockland and Portland can be surpassed, if equalled. At Bangor we anchored among a fleet of yachts with variegated lights, the shore, including the Samoset House, a popular resort, electric lighted, adding to the brilliancy of the scene.

The steamer Belfast for Boston was crowded with tourists, all staterooms taken, and we were obliged to bunk below decks. The early evening voyage was very pleasant, hotels, camps, and cottages along shore saluting the steamer, which answered with whistle and searchlight. I spent a few hours with the watch on the quarter-deck and noted his keenness of sight in picking up buoys and other guides to the pilot, who found them with searchlight. The whole process was very interesting to a landlubber. Brother Knowlton knew every ledge, spar, buoy, lighthouse, reef, and channel along this coast, and he was an interesting lecturer as we resumed the morning vigil past Cape Ann, Thatchers Island, and the lights of other points enroute into Boston Harbor. Navigation is a science, highly developed, which one appreciates as he faces its dangers.

Brother Knowlton reminded me that his father, a navigator, had repeatedly warned him to beware of two things—the Devil and the coast of Cape Cod; the latter a very dangerous coast, the grave of many vessels; the former already quite fully commented upon by many.

I spent the day in Boston, visiting the Old Statehouse, with its lion and unicorn, still standing from royalist times; the spot where was shed the first blood of the Revolution, marked by tablet; Old South and Old North churches; the Common; Bunker Hill; King's Chapel; the old burial grounds where lie the remains of Paul Revere, Samuel Adams, James Otis, the parents of Franklin, etc.; Cambridge; Harvard College; home of Longfellow; the Old Elm where Washington took command of the army; the new buildings of Harvard College, including the stadium, of white stone, built according to the model and dimensions of the Roman Coliseum; the Boston Public Library with its celebrated mural paintings; Revolutionary relics and sites are many here; one can not include them all. They bring one face to face with early history and its characters and are instructive and impressive. As one sees and reads more concerning our colonial and revolutionary history he is impressed with the conviction that the men and women prominent in the founding of this Government were moved by as lofty sentiments and enjoyed the same inspiration as those who under God established this gospel dispensation; that both causes were the same in spirit, the one the counterpart of and as holy as the other.

Arrived at Onset, Massachusetts, August 1, on the grounds of the reunion. Onset is a well-known watering place on Buzzards Bay. It is a beautiful place and contiguous to other attractive resorts on the bay—Woods Hall, Marthas Vineyard, etc. Gray Gables, the home of Ex-president Cleveland, may be seen, near by. Tourists crowd the place, coming by rail, auto, and vessel. Our people have a tract of about forty acres, with sea bathing, which was much enjoyed. The grounds are to be greatly improved and doubtless will become a delightful resort of Eastern Saints and friends.

I enjoyed association with Saints here; there were over one hundred and twenty tents, people from New England and Canada, also from Iowa and Missouri—the Greenes, Bonds, Leekas, Fishers, Phillipases, Macgregors, Farrells, Sinclairs, Richs, Brethren Robley, H. O. Smith, Cushman, Fox, Brown, and many others—it would be difficult to name all the nice people met there. The preaching, prayer, and other services were interesting; the Lord blessed the people in a marked degree by the influences of his Holy Spirit.

Many young people were present; they work hard in shop, office, and factory, and annually make the reunion their vacation time; largely on that account the afternoons are devoted mostly to recreation. It was comforting to note the young men going often into the woods at five o'clock in the morning to hold seasons of prayer. Their recreations were innocent, well conducted, and generally commended. The evening gatherings after the tent service, for song, recitation, and fun were good. My tender years helped me and I was admitted into the circle of the young people, where I enjoyed myself. Why not? "Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph"; "Let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth." It is out of date, or ought to be, to be everlastingly talking about "trials and tribulations" and moping over the doleful category of those who enjoy being miserable. Our religion ought to make us happy, withal we do meet with disciplinary circumstances and conditions.

Brother Greene deserves credit for his interest and special efforts in behalf of the young people and they reciprocate his good offices. So far as I could discern, it seems to be his policy to develop them by organizing them or promoting their organization into Young Men's and Young People's Associations having in view their close affiliation with the church—providing for study and recreations under favorable environments. In some places they affectionately call him "Daddy." The results of his policy of encouragement are mutually beneficial and promise well for the work. I enjoyed the spiritual and social communion.

We had several trips on Buzzards Bay and witnessed a yacht race, the many white sails with blue sea and sky and winding shore with beautiful homes presenting attractive scenes. An auto trip was also a feature. But the pestiferous mosquito was a decided nuisance; he beat out the celebrated Jersey species, as the latter did not materialize at Manasquan. Doctor Sinclair and others, I understand, are scheming with a view to ultimate extinction of the pest in the vicinity of Onset. If all the money spent for Japanese fire-sticks and citrus oil in vain efforts to suppress the evil genus were expended in the good work, the thing might be done. 'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished.

From Onset I went to Plymouth, the historic home of the Pilgrim Fathers; remaining two days and preaching once in the Saints' Chapel. I visited the historic spots—Plymouth Rock, Burial Hill, the National Monument, Pilgrim Hall, etc. In the hall many relics of the Pilgrims reverently are enshrined and preserved—swords and utensils belonging to Captain Miles Standish, Governor Bradford, William Brewster; and deeds, pewter ware, spinning wheels, and other things belonging to Peregrine White, born on the Mayflower in 1620, John Alden, Friscilla, etc., were in evidence. The collection is very large and remarkably interesting.

My mother's ancestor, Thomas Savery, was the first constable of Plymouth—possibly one of the beagles in the church in those early times when one had to sit awake during a three hours' sermon or be punched in the ribs with a sharp stick should one become drowsy; and possibly a busy man in his general duties, no doubt including the rounding up of all strays; so not having the distinction of the wicked wealth of this mad world, I determined to claim all that was coming to me along the line of Puritan blood, notwithstanding it is written that "the true American needs no ancestors!" I found the gravestone of one of his descendants with an old-time inscription. Many quaint inscriptions adorn the tombstones; on Governor William Bradford's monument is the significant admonition, in Latin, "Do not basely relinquish what the Fathers with difficulty attained." "Here lies ye body," frequently meets the eye. Tablets mark the early fort and lookout. Looking across to Provincetown, the point of Cape Cod, I could see Uncle Sam's battleships in grim array as they participated in the naval maneuvers in that deep water. Another monument to the Pilgrims stands at Provincetown; and at Duxbury, across the harbor, stands one in memory of Captain Miles Standish.

The Pilgrims first landed at Provincetown, but finding the point very sandy, sent out a party to explore, which spent their first Sunday and held religious services, the first in the New World, on Clark's Island, off Plymouth harbor, where Elder Brewster is said to have preached his first sermon, on Pulpit Rock, a piece of which, given me by Sister Leland, I brought as a relic for Graceland's museum. Landing later at Plymouth, the Mayflower was brought in, hence Plymouth Rock and its history. It was the original intention of the Pilgrims to land near the present site of New York City.

I visited the "National Monument to the Forefathers," "erected by a grateful people in remembrance of their labors, sacrifices, and sufferings for the cause of civil and religious liberty." It is located on an eminence, is eighty-one feet high, and said to be the largest and finest piece of granite statuary in the world. "The plan of the principal pedestal is octagonal, with four small and four large faces; from the small faces project four buttresses or wing pedestals. On the main pedestal stands a figure of Faith. One foot rests upon Forefather's Rock; in her left hand she holds a Bible; with the right uplifted she points to heaven. Looking downward, as to those she is addressing, she seems to call them to trust in a higher power. On each of the four smaller or wing pedestals is a seated figure; they are emblematic of the principles upon which the Pilgrims proposed to found their commonwealth. The first is Morality, holding the Decalogue in her left, and the scroll of Revelation in her right hand; her look is upward toward the impersonation of the Spirit of Religion above; in a niche, on one side of her throne, is a prophet, and in the other one of the evangelists. The second of these figures is Law: on one side Justice; on the other Mercy. The third is Education: on one side Wisdom, ripe with years; on the other Youth, led by Experience. The fourth figure is Freedom; on one side Peace rests under its protection; on the other Tyranny is overthrown by its powers. Upon the faces of these projecting pedestals are alto-reliefs, representing scenes from the history of the Pilgrims—the Departure from Delfthaven; the Signing of the Social Compact; the Landing at Plymouth; and the First Treaty with the Indians. . . . The right and left panels contain the names of those who came over in the Mayflower."

Portraits of the Pilgrims show them to have been a sturdy and determined lot of people. Their sermons, some of them preserved, were on such subjects as "The natural degeneracy of mankind," "Election," "Free grace," etc. We read of Increase Mather, I think it was, "who at his ordination to the ministry, preached three hours and prayed an hour and a half"! Religion with them was a hard and fast matter of business. But they left the strain of their determined, uncompromising spirit in our national institutions and in the blood.

Elder Brewster's spring, from which I drank, is hygienically equipped with bubbling fountain. The city is a beautiful place and is visited by swarms of tourists, summer and winter. Our work ought to be well represented there—the inspiration of the spiritual crown the planting of the temporal, that complete liberty may be established and developed in the old commonwealth. Brethren Leland, Nickerson, Douglas, and all are doing the best they can to keep the fire burning.

Returning to Boston I was chaperoned by Brother R. W. Farrell, who kindly conducted me to many places of interest. Together we went by trolley to Concord and Lexington, and this visit I appreciated as much as any I had been privileged to make. Concord is a beautiful place, the site of a people with elegant homes, who keep up the general place in a manner befitting its surroundings. It has an air of old-time pride in its patriotic and literary history in keeping with what it stands for. At Concord Bridge stands a monument erected in grateful memory of Liberty, on which are inscribed the well-known lines of Emerson's hymn, sung at its dedication April 19, 1836:

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
Here once the embattled farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world.

A monument to the British dead is inscribed with dedicatory tablet. The bridge is a replica in cement of the original structure, and across it stands a bronze statue of the Minuteman, alert in attitude, in farmer costume, gun in hand. Over-arching all are splendid trees, one planted by Emerson, which shade the quiet, peaceful spot, and one feels the reverence due to it as he visits this patriotic shrine and rejoices in the liberty which God planted here for the race of mankind. Adjoining the monument sites is the farm on which is located Hawthorne's Old Manse, a colonial, frame dwelling, large and quite well preserved, the place where he wrote Mosses from an Old Manse and other productions. Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, where lie Emerson, the Alcott sisters, and other celebrities, and the homes of Emerson, of the Alcotts, and another home of Hawthorne were pointed out. The Daughters of the American Revolution are installed in the latter home of Hawthorne. There are also numbers of quaint colonial homes, old and well preserved; a colonial church, not unlike the temple at Kirtland; and the building in which John Hancock organized the Massachusetts Colonial Assembly, which did so much to further the cause of the Revolution. Not far away is Walden, the home of Thoreau. I secured relics from a number of these places for Graceland.

A two-day visit to the home of Brother and Sister E. H. Fisher, at their summer cottage on the beach, near Quincy, where I met again Brother and Sister Oliver Leeka, of Independence, was very enjoyable, with its social features, sea bathing, and general good time, including a brief trip to Nantasket Beach. However, having boasted of immunity to seasickness, here I met my Waterloo; for a very generous spread, which included fresh mackerel, roasted clams eaten in melted butter, ice cream, and other dainties got the best of me for one day. The clam, in his spirit of independence, shares the traditions of the forefathers, and seems to delight in getting away with the Westerner, especially if disposed to make light of the traditions and powers of the deep and dark blue sea. However, the man who could remain ill after such a reception and amid such surroundings would hardly find a welcome on the shining shore; so I rallied and kept going and in a few days Richard was himself again, not sighing for a horse, but for another good sail on the heaving sea.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 14, 1912.

News From Missions

Western Iowa.

I arrived here the 12th, coming from Coalville, six miles south of Fort Dodge, where the district conference of the Gallands Grove District was held, together with the Sunday school and Zion's Religio-Literary Society conventions were held, June 6, 7, 8, and 9, Brethren J. W. Wight and C. J. Hunt in charge. They were largely attended, a splendid representation of young Saints attending and participating. It was quite unusual to me, as a member of the Reorganized Church; yet, all the sessions of conventions and conference went by without a negative vote being sustained.

The Holy Spirit was present to cheer and comfort with its aid, to a highly sensible degree, to the joy and encouragement of Saints. The work of the conference and conventions was a push from start to finish, beginning with the first session on Thursday evening, the 6th, and including business, prayer, and preaching services, fifteen sessions were held, concluding with Sunday evening; and the interest manifested at the opening continued to the close. Mallard, Deloit, Dow City, Cherokee, with other points in the district, were represented.

It was supposed at first that Elder John W. Wight, minister in charge, would not be able to attend, owing to the fact that his sister living near Moorhead, Iowa, was seriously ill; but he came Saturday morning and remained to the close. It seemed evident the auxiliary organizations are alive and mean to press onward in Sunday school and Religio work.

In the Sunday social service the Saints were cheered by fervent prayers and testimonies, and the gifts of tongues and interpretation in beautiful song, saying the faithful efforts of His Saints are acceptable.

Bishop C. J. Hunt was elected to succeed himself as president of the district, and his wife, Sister Etta Hunt, was chosen district secretary. Each authorized to nominate assistants.

Elders J. W. Wight, C. E. Butterworth, C. J. Hunt, W. A. Smith, Samuel Jordison, A. R. Crippen, William A. Carroll, Shrove, and C. Scott; Priests William Jordison, John Jordison, and perhaps others; a number of teachers, Mann, Carmichael, Ray, Dixon, with other officers; present. Nor must we forget Brother Orman Salisbury, of Des Moines, was present most of the time, and served as requested.

The bishop's financial report went to show that the Saints of the district are alive to the interests of the work; and why should not the man of business, to whom the Lord has given talents to make money, send the Lord's part of that money out to do missionary work and save souls? Send his part to bless the aged, poor, and needy? What else would you do with God's part of that he gives you as his steward, ability to accumulate? You would not think for a moment of using for your personal use that which might be in your hands that rightly belongs to your brother, your neighbor! No. Why not reason about that which we handle that belongs to the Lord? Are you interested in the eternal welfare of the other children of your heavenly Father? Why can not all the Saints be educated, morally and spiritually, up to that grand level, so that their highest incentive, a power that moves their hearts and intelligences, would be to help save souls? Could we not all, if not all able to go and preach, send out in the Lord's way, his part of what he gives us, to accomplish the saving of his other children? Let us all study our own hearts in connection with our contemplations of everlasting life, Zion and eternal glory.

Brother Brewster, well known for many years to Saints of this district, now "gathered" to Far West, Missouri, was at conference to encourage us to be faithful.

Brother James Bullard, too, was attending to show that he was yet in the faith, and Brother Juergens, to cheer us with song. We feel quite encouraged to be in attendance at such a spiritual and spirited conference, to usher us in upon the work of another conference year in the Lord's great harvest.

What will the harvest be?

While our great world is a swirling surge, all racing for a goal never to be reached, a great uncertain competitive race on for higher ground as it sees, will Zion stand still and fail to "come up" to that "higher" moral, spiritual, and glorious plane as seen for her in prophetic statement, and set forth in latter day revelation? Will we?

"Ye shall see that my law is kept," says the Master to his Saints. "Be faithful," "I, the Lord, require the heart and a willing mind." Now that we have been fishing so long, is it about time that "many hunters" be sent forth? Is the "time" now at hand when the Lord "will hasten" his work?

May the Father have the opportunity to pour out on Zion the "blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." (See Malachi 3: 8-11.) Let us be up and doing while it is called to-day; it will be too late to-morrow. May blessings crown Zion, from her God that reigneth.

Your colaborer,

C. SCOTT.

MALLARD, IOWA, June 13, 1912.

Papeete.

We have returned from our mission conference which was held in Rairoa, and are pleased to report that there was a very large attendance, and a spirit of unity was manifest, in the work of the Religio, and the Sunday school, and the conference in general. There were more than five hundred Saints there, also more than two hundred outsiders, which in all numbered about eight hundred people. Twelve branches were represented. The dedicational service of the new chapel in Rairoa was well directed and everyone attending rejoiced, and we feel encouraged. The chapel is a credit to the church in this mission and is well built upon a stone foundation with concrete floor and steps, and is one of the largest churches we have in the mission. After all debts were paid there remained one hundred and twenty dollars, which was turned over to the branch of Taronia to assist in the building of the new chapel here at Papeete. The Religio and Sunday school rally programs were special features of the conferences and there were over two hundred numbers on said program.

Each day of the gathering was opened up with an early morning prayer service which was well attended and we feel that the Lord hearkened to our daily petitions. There were over eight hundred Religio and Sunday school quarterlies distributed at the conference; they had been written in the Tahitian language by Brother and Sister Lake and printed by us at the mission house in Papeete. We feel greatly encouraged in the work here and receive many evidences of the assistance of the Lord in the discharging of our duties toward the advancement of his work among this people of Lamanitish descent.

We feel well physically and thank the Lord for his tender watchcare over us while isolated from loved ones and former associates, whom we feel often remember us in their prayers. May the Lord hasten his work, and the nations of the earth receive the glad tidings of great joy through which shall be brought about the redemption of Zion, and the great gathering of the Saints which will bring joy to the hearts of the faithful. It is our desire that through our labors there may be a few at least from this mission counted worthy of participation in that great event. To that end we desire to consecrate our talents, though few they may be. We remain as ever, coworkers in the gospel of Christ.

Your brother in Christ,

J. CHARLES MAY.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, May 31, 1912.

Maine.

I left Providence May 2, for my field of labor, but first answered a call from Connecticut to administer to Sister Christine Crandall. We gathered together the few Saints there at Brother Whipple's, and held a sacrament service at which the Spirit was present in a marked degree. I had made appointment to meet with the Saints in Attleboro at their evening service, so had to leave at once in order to be on time.

We had a splendid meeting at Attleboro and I do not know of a more united branch anywhere than these good people. Next day at Boston I met our missionary in charge and was made at home by Sister Greene. Brother and Sister Rich smiled and were so good I remained there at night.

Sunday morning found me in Haverhill where I preached a number of times through the week and remained over the next Sunday to attend the Sunday school convention. The convention was a decided success, and all seemed to be happy that gathered in the growing city. The writer baptized two during the convention and left next morning for Maine. I remained in Portland for a few hours but the weather was bad, and prospects not very bright just then, so moved on to Brunswick, where I was met by Earl, a son of Brother Bert Austin. We have five members of the church in Brunswick: Brother W. B. Young and wife and Brother Austin, wife and daughter. Between Brunswick and Lewiston, in the town of Durhany, is situated the famous "Shiloh" of Frank Sandford. It is builded on quite a large hill and from its position presents a very striking if not beautiful appearance. It is wonderful what power this man had and still has, over these people. Notwithstanding the many erratic and, as the United States court decided, criminal things, Mr. Sandford has done most of the people at "Shiloh" believe him to be the Elijah that was to come. The people are very conservative and do not seem inclined to talk. Mr. Holland, the present governor and leader at "Shiloh," seems to be the brains of the movement there now. He is a hard man to approach and is not inclined to talk to strangers, and in fact I did not see him talk to his own people; and, stranger still, they do not seem to talk to each other. I should say from my observations while there on two occasions, that when their leader, Frank Sandford, comes back to "Shiloh" (if he ever does) he will find some wonderful changes. From a human as well as from a divine standpoint, "Sandfordism" is doomed.

I held a few services at Durham, but stormy weather and some other things prevented much in the way of gospel work being done; however, I enjoyed my stay and felt well spiritually while there.

Yesterday I came to Dixfield and walked over from the village to Brother E. Holman's. Twenty years ago I preached my first sermon as a missionary in this place. The hall in which I preached is no more, and many of the people have also been removed by death and other causes. However, some of the old-time Saints remain. The babies then, have grown to manhood and womanhood now, but the old mountains are in the same place and the same beautiful, restful valleys invite repose. The Androscoggin turns and twists and rushes as it did, no doubt, when the ancestors of the American Indians walked these shores, and sent their arrows flying after the deer. It is a good place to get religion, but it seems to be also a good place to get several other things beside spirituality. Hopefully,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

Sunday, the 9th, was Children's Day; and in the morning about one hundred and fifty of the first primary department occupied the choir seats. At the evening hour a mixed chorus of the intermediates took part. The evening entertainment consisted of vocal and instrumental numbers; also music and speeches by those of the seniors who had been specially invited to assist the children. The children did excellent work and the efforts of the orchestra, and both decorators and directors were appreciated by a large audience present.

The presenting of twenty-six diplomas to the graduates of the cradle roll furnished a scene of unique loveliness; and a fitting climax of the day's performance was the baptism and confirmation of eighteen children, members of the Sunday school.

Our beloved Brother I. N. White, who has lately returned from California, offered the invocation at the opening of the exercises; Elder B. J. Scott at the close. The baptismal ceremonies were in charge of President G. E. Harrington and Superintendent D. J. Krahl.

The evening of the 14th was the appointed time for another occasion of profit and pleasure to the younger members of the church. The entertainment consisted of a lecture, accompanied with stereopticon views of the famous passion play under the direction of Brother J. Gardner, president of the Religio, and Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, who ably read the lecture, and the description of the views.

By way of a few news items we may note that the cheering report comes from the Sanitarium that our brother, Doctor Frank Criley, also Sister Jessie Stewart, who have been under kindly treatment there of late are convalescent; also our Sister Jeanette Kelley is at her home nearly recovered from a prolonged and serious illness. Our beloved Brother Carl Lewis (who is frequently remembered in prayer services), who is quite severely afflicted, is remaining at his home and hopes are entertained by the Saints for his recovery also.

Brother and Sister J. W. Dubose left for the South; our sister to spend a month or so at her father's home in Bevier, Kentucky; and Brother Dubose journeyed in the same direction, but to other points, on the route to his mission field.

Sister Nancy Givens started out on a much needed outing for her health; making Warrensburg, Missouri, her objective point.

Brother George Bushweit, and Sister Mabel Green, and their sister, Mrs. Pansy Stultz, grandchildren of Brother George Horton, with their four little ones, took train a few days ago for Chicago.

Sister Juliette, and husband, Doctor T. E. Sutton, started from this city on the 11th for Tampa, Florida, their future home. Sister Sutton's son Howard will go there later on. Sister Jarrad also will soon go on a visiting trip to Nebraska.

On the 8th inst. Sister Elizabeth Blair passed away at the home of her son David Blair in Kansas City, Missouri. This is sad news, received by many who have in days past been the recipients of our beloved sister's hospitality, and who have enjoyed many a happy and restful hour at her pleasant home in Illinois during the days of her revered husband's labors in gospel work.

At the morning prayer meeting of Sunday, the 16th, Brother Ammon White presided, and gave excellent instruction. The attendance at Sunday school was 816, and of the first primaries, 101. These little tots are a band of active, earnest workers, and Sister R. Etzenhouser, superintendent, spares no pains in the direction of their songs and devotional exercises, marches and birthday offerings; and they form a very attractive as well as enthusiastic department every Sunday, bringing out many interested visitors to the Sunday school.

Brother Joseph gave excellent words of counsel at the morning hour, and Brother W. H. Garrett at the evening service.

On Monday evening a fine cantata was given by the combined choirs of the Kansas City Central church and the Latter Day Saint church here. At the third lecture of Sister Jennie Weed, on Tuesday, the 18th, about forty were present. These lectures are well worth hearing. Her subject was home care of contagious diseases.

Our sister talked of the necessity of sanitary conditions; told of the only safe way to disinfect the utensils used in the sick room, and also gave excellent suggestions for the treatment of scarlet and typhoid fevers, pneumonia and diphtheria. She also gave a list of don'ts: "Don't say on entering the patient's room, 'Well, how are you?' Don't whisper to those present. Don't show too much sympathy, and say, 'Oh, how bad you look!' but say, 'Now I am going to give you some medicine'; then go ahead."

Conference Minutes.

NODAWAY.—Conference convened with the Ross Grove Branch, at the Pleasant Hope Church, Saturday, June 1, at 10 o'clock a. m. The conference was organized as follows: T. A. Ivie to preside, and he at once invited Peter Anderson to assist him; W. B. Torrance, secretary; Verna Ross, organist; W. Ross, chorister. Minutes of last conference read and approved. By motion the delegate system was dispensed with during the sitting of this conference and all were given voice and vote. Statistical reports were read: Guilford 96; Sweet Home 46, loss 4; Ross Grove 49, loss 2. The order of written reports was dispensed with and the following reported verbally: Apostle Peter Anderson. High priest: T. A. Ivie. Elders: E. S. Fannon, R. K. Ross, J. W. Powell. Priests: W. T. Ross, Alec Jensen, W. B. Torrance. Teachers: R. P. Anderson, John Rowlett, Alma Hawley. Deacons: Alma Nelson, W. S. Bond. Bishop's agent, J. T. Ford, reported as follows: Balance on hand February 3, 1912, $358.50; received to March 4, 1912, $272; total, $630.50; expenditures, 362; balance on hand March 4, 1912, $268.50. W. B. Torrance, bishop's agent, reported: Received of former bishop's agent, March 4, 1912, $268.50; received since from others, $125; total $393.50; expenditures, $239; balance on hand May 31, 1912, $154.50. By motion the report was accepted. W. B. Torrance presented to the conference a written resignation, asking to be released from the auditing committee, which by motion was granted. By motion the chair was authorized to appoint some one to fill the vacancy caused by said resignation. W. T. Ross was accordingly appointed. Committee on sale of Rising Hope Church, composed of district president and bishop's agent, reported through Brother Ivie, the building sold to Arthur Hailey for $40. By motion the report was accepted and the committee continued until the transfer is completed. J. T. Ford presented treasurer's report, which was read, showing a balance on hand of thirty-six cents. By motion the report was accepted, and treasurer released, and W. B. Torrance was elected treasurer in Brother Ford's place. By motion the appointment of W. B. Torrance as bishop's agent for Nodaway District, by Bishop E. L. Kelley, was indorsed. The following motion was filed with the secretary and read to the conference to be considered at the next district conference: "Resolved, That we as a district do away with the delegate system in our conferences." Signed by W. T. Ross and R. P. Anderson. The secretary asked that the rule of branches, committees, and ministry reports being forwarded to secretary prior to the sitting of conference be hereafter enforced. Moved and carried that the auxiliaries of the district file a report with the secretary to be read at our conferences. Peter Anderson occupied a few minutes in talking on the subject, "Knowledge is power." After this the conference indulged in asking the speaker a few questions. The following was moved and carried: That we elect a musical director for the district. W. T. Ross was elected as such officer. The auditing committee reported bishop's agent's books and report correct. The district historian, E. S. Fannon reported verbally. District library board presented a written report, which was read and accepted. Preaching during conference was done by Peter Anderson and Joseph W. Powell. Two were baptized by R. K. Ross and confirmed, and two babies were blessed. A real good time was had by all. Conference adjourned to meet at Guilford, October 19, 1912.

SPOKANE.—District conference convened at Sagle, Idaho, June 8, 1912, with Oscar Case, George Thorburn, and T. C. Kelley, presiding. Statistical reports were read as follows: Spokane 295, Sagle 55, Columbia River 29, Roslyn 28, Ellensburg 13, total 410. Ministerial reports were read from the following: O. Case, G. W. Wilcox, Frank Holmes, George Johnston, W. F. Yates, J. F. Turnbow, L. W. Silver, W. W. Fordham, J. M. Puckett, G. S. Wightman. Reports were read stating spiritual condition of the Spokane and Columbia River branches. On motion an invitation from Seattle District, to attend reunion at Centralia, was accepted. Petition from Roslyn Branch read and referred to a committee composed of W. W. Fordham, Oscar Case, and T. C. Kelley, with power to act. Article 5 of resolutions governing district was amended to correspond with General Conference resolution 312, relative to ordaining elders in organized districts. Resolution from Columbia River Branch regarding difficulties there was read, and on motion was referred to minister in charge and district president. The following officers were elected for one year: Oscar Case, president; T. C. Kelley, vice president; W. W. Fordham, secretary; Robert McDole, member of auditing committee three years. Inspiring sermons were preached by George Thorburn and T. C. Kelley. Spokane was selected for next conference in December. W. W. Fordham, clerk, S. 238 Haven Street, Spokane Washington.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—District conference convened with the Galien Branch Saturday, June 8, in Saints' church at 10 o'clock, with District President G. A. Smith in the chair. Missionary in charge, F. A. Smith, was placed in charge of the conference, to be assisted by the presidency of the district. Branches reporting were: Alto, Belding, Buchanan, Capitol City, Clear Lake, Coldwater, Galien, Grand Rapids, Hartford, Knox, and Sparta. There were fourteen of the Melchisedec priesthood present, besides several of the lesser priesthood and a goodly number of the Saints. Ministry reporting were: S. W. L. Scott, F. T. Field, S. Stroh, N. A. Hill, Starr Corless, J. W. McKnight baptized 3, Clyde F. Ellis baptized 6, S. A. Barss baptized 3, G. A. Smith, Francis Earl, J. W. Keifer, E. N. Burt baptized 5, J. Dexter baptized 1, E. K. Evans. The name of Norman Gray, of Grand Rapids, was presented for ordination to the office of deacon. The district president was authorized to appoint two-day meetings with the branches wherever wanted for the coming fall. Several administrations were attended to; one babe blessed; four baptisms. A motion was passed that the various branches should sustain the district president financially when he visits them. Preaching was done by F. A. Smith, R. Etzenhouser, G. A. Smith, S. W. L. Scott, and a very spiritual prayer service was held on Sunday morning. All ministerial reports were very encouraging, especially the reports of F. A. Smith and G. A. Smith, as to the general outlook of the work; and the sweet, peaceful influence of the Spirit was felt all through the conference. All were encouraged to push ahead and seek to advance the cause of Christ. Conference adjourned to meet with the Coldwater Branch at the call of district president. W. P. Buckley, district secretary.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—District conference called to order by district president, Frank Izatt, June 8, 1912, at Beardstown, Illinois. J. F. Curtis was chosen to preside; Brother Paxton to assist. Statistical branch reports: Taylorville 130, Beardstown 78, Pana 70. Missionaries reporting: Elder Paxton. Local officers reporting: Elder Frank Izatt; Priest S. J. Bartlett. The officers elected were Frank Izatt, president; Walter Daykin, secretary; Martin Bolt, treasurer. Program for conference: Prayer service Saturday evening at 7:30; at 8:30 preaching by Frank Izatt; prayer service at 8 Sunday morning; at 9:30 Sunday school; at 11 o'clock preaching by J. F. Curtis. Shortly after preaching Sister Fulk and Sister Katherine Davis were baptized. Before social service at 2:30 Sister Davis was confirmed. At 2:30 prayer service, in which sacrament was administered, Charles Davis was ordained an elder by J. F. Curtis and Brother Paxton, and R. L. Fulk was ordained a priest by Brother Paxton and J. F. Curtis. Next conference to be held at Pana, Illinois, October 12 and 13. Preaching at 8 Sunday evening by J. F. Curtis. Walter Daykin, secretary, 1000 East Cleveland Street, Taylorville, Illinois.

NORTHWESTERN KANSAS.—Conference convened at the home of J. A. Teeters, at Alexander, Kansas, March 23, 1912, at 2:30 p. m., District President J. A. Teeters in the chair; W. E. Peak secretary pro tem. Branch reports: Homestead. Elders reporting: W. E. Peak, S. J. Madden, J. A. Teeters. Bishop's agent reported. G. Keiffer and Heman Thompson were appointed auditing committee and found reports correct. Delegates to General Conference were appointed. Time and place for next conference left to district president. W. E. Peak, secretary pro tem.

WESTERN WALES.—Annual conference of the Western Wales District convened with the Skewen Branch on May 25 and 26, 1912. Business session commenced Saturday at 8 p. m. under the presidency of James G. Jenkins, district president. Motion unanimously prevailed that Bishop R. May be associated with the president. There was a brief address by the district president; also an instructive address by Bishop R. May. Minutes approved. Reports read from J. G. Jenkins, district president; T. J. Picton, vice president; Elders Ed Williams, H. Ellis, David Thomas, (verbal). Priests: F. J. Jones, F. Simmons. Branches reporting: Aberaman and Skewen. All reports accepted as read. District secretary's bill of expenses read and the same ordered paid. Following officers were elected for the ensuing year; John G. Jenkins, president; Thomas J. Picton, vice president; F. Simmons, secretary; John Pugsley, treasurer. The conference was not attended this year the same as usual; neither was the financial part as good, but owing to the recent coal strike which affected most all, everything was as good as conditions would allow. The following resolutions were passed: That we sustain by our faith and prayers the president of the British Isles Mission. That we sustain Bishop R. May as bishop of the British Isles Mission. That we sustain by our faith and prayers and support the district officers, elected, That this conference adjourn to the call of district officers. F. Simmons, secretary, Byrn Amburg, Twyn-Y-Pandy, Pontrydyfen, Port Talbot, Glamorganshire, England.

Convention Minutes.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—District Religio convention convened at Beardstown with Fred Reynolds in the chair and Roy Davis secretary. Minutes of previous session approved. Credentials read and accepted. The assembly was turned into a mass convention. Local reports of Beardstown and Taylorville accepted. Officers reports read and accepted. The First collection in January and July, of the three branches, are to be turned over to the library board. Five books were voted to be stricken from the district library, on account of being damaged so as to not be permissible to lend out. It was voted that each of the locals take up a collection for the district treasury of Religio. J. W. Paxton was called on by the chairman, for a talk on the Religio. Adjourned. Roy Davis, secretary.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—District Sunday school convention was held at Beardstown, Illinois, June 8, 1912. Three schools reported. G. L. Hartsell, assistant superintendent, in the chair. The usual routine business was transacted. Nellie Sharrock, district superintendent, resigned, and George L. Hartsell was chosen superintendent. William Jones was chosen assistant superintendent. At 9:30 Sunday morning Sabbath school in charge of district officers. Walter Daykin, secretary, 1000 East Cleveland Street, Taylorville, Illinois.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Religio convention met May 31, 1912, at 8 p. m., with the Mission Branch. The reports of the officers and locals were read. E. M. Wildermuth was elected as home department superintendent. Meeting adjourned subject to call of president. Blanche Fairbanks, district secretary, 1528 South Turner Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Conference Notices.

Texas Central conference will meet with the Philadelphia Branch, of Falls County, about three miles north of Reagan, July 20, at 10 a. m. Let all of the branches in the district send in a report, that all may see the progress in the work. There will be a reunion to follow the conference. All who can, come prepared to camp and stay all through meeting. S. R. Hay, district president.

Convention Notices.

Western Maine Sunday school association will hold a convention at Stonington July 20 and 21. We urge as many to be present as possible. An interesting program is in progress of perfection. We desire to give an impetus to the Sunday school work through this convention. President Frederick M. Smith and wife are expected to be present. F. J. Ebeling, district superintendent.

The North Dakota Sunday school convention will convene at Lagon, North Dakota, on July 10; the day following the district conference at the Lagon reunion. All interested in Sunday school work are urged to attend. Ellen Graham, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The annual reunion meeting of the Little Sioux, Iowa, District will be held at Magnolia, September 6 and close Sunday, September 15. Magnolia is a historic town, beautifully situated on blue grass timbered hills, seven miles from Logan, the county seat of Harrison County. Logan is thirty-two miles from Council Bluffs and Omaha on the main lines of the Chicago and Northwestern and Illinois Central railways, and Magnolia is reached from there by automobile transfer at a cost of not to exceed fifty cents. The town has granted the free use of Washington Park for camping grounds. This is an ideal location, plenty of shade and grass, well lighted with electricity, and has an abundance of pure cold water. The Saints will conduct the dining hall, where meals will be served at cost. Long distance and free local telephone service on the grounds, free straw for bedding, and fuel for cooking. Home board and lodging at low cost for those who desire it, and good accommodations for teams in barn or pasture at low cost. The canvas tabernacle will comfortably seat fifteen hundred people and will be well lighted by electricity. Convenient rest tent and sanitary closets and garbage service provided. Camp rules, well enforced, will give you quiet and peaceful rest. Last year there were one hundred and fifteen tents on the ground; this year, on account of pleased patrons, a larger attendance is expected. Tents, bed-springs and cots will be rented and set up at wholesale cost and every effort made to make your stay enjoyable. Arrangements for program and speakers not yet complete, but Brethren S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, and Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, Canada, have promised to be with us. Address inquiries to the secretary, James D. Stuart, Magnolia, Iowa. 26-2t

Northeastern Kansas district reunion will be held at Blue Rapids, Kansas, August 30 to September 8, 1912. The grounds are ideal, being high and dry on the banks of the beautiful Blue River. Brother Peter Anderson, of the Twelve, and many able ministers will be present to dispense the gospel message. Three-foot wall tents will be $2. A cooperative boarding tent will be in charge of the Aid Society and will furnish meals at not to exceed twenty cents. Plan to be with us and enjoy a spiritual feast. The auxiliaries will hold a daily session every afternoon in charge of our efficient field worker, Sister Flo McNichols. Some of the interesting topics that will be considered at these sessions are: "Modes and methods," "Routine and ruts," "Sunday school review," "Secretary's report, and of what should it consist," "Religio programs," "An afternoon of archæology," "Parliamentary drill," "Surface vs. undercurrents." These afternoon meetings will belong to everyone present and all will be expected to bring with them energy, life, and "much good spirit," that we may be benefited by thus coming together. District conference will convene in the assembly tent on the reunion grounds at 10.30 a. m., August 31. Reservation for tents should be sent to B. F. Jackson, Blue Rapids, Kansas. Frank G. Hedrick, B. F. Jackson, Charles Davis, committee.

The joint reunion of the Seattle, British Columbia, and Portland Oregon districts, will be held at Centralia, Washington, beginning August 9 and lasting ten days. A very cordial invitation is extended to the Spokane District to join with us. When buying your tickets ask for a receipt, as the committee expect to get reduced rates. Tents 12 by 14 feet will rent for five dollars for the ten days; smaller ones in proportion. Place your orders with S. P. Cox, 1009 South Tower Avenue, Centralia, who will also furnish all other information necessary, or address Hattie Ward, secretary for advertising committee. Let us try to attend and make the reunion a success.

The Massachusetts District will hold their annual reunion at Onset, Massachusetts, beginning July 27, 1912, and continuing two weeks. Prices of tents, cots, meals, etc., will be announced later. A cordial invitation is extended to Saints and friends to come and enjoy the reunion. M. H. Barnes, Copicut Road, Fall River, Massachusetts, chairman; John Heap, Orange Street, Attleboro, Massachusetts, Manager of tent and cot department; H. W. Howlett, Washington Avenue, Pottersville, Massachusetts, secretary of reunion committee.

There will be held in the Saskatchewan District this year five reunions and one conference, on the following dates: Commencing at Millet, Alberta, June 28, 29, and 30; Ribstone, Alberta, July 5, 6, and 7; Vanscoy, Saskatchewan, July 12, 13, and 14; conference will convene with the Disley Branch, in the town of Disley, Saskatchewan, July 18, 19, 20, and 21; reunion at Goodwater, Saskatchewan, July 26, 27, and 28; reunion at Viceroy, Saskatchewan, August 2, 3, and 4. The Saints at each of the above points have promised a warm reception. Let us put forth every effort to be present, at least in one, if not more, of these gatherings. Rates will be announced later to Disley via the Canadian Northern Railway for district conference. Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths will be with us at each of these meetings. T. J. Jordan, president, Lewvan, Saskatchewan.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT IN AND FOR THE EASTERN TERRITORY, OR DISTRICT, OF OREGON.

To the Saints and Friends in Gospel Work, Eastern Oregon: Please take notice that upon the change and removal of A. J. Moore from missionary labor in Eastern Oregon, H. E. Merryman, of Enterprise, Oregon, has been duly appointed bishop's agent of the Presiding Bishopric of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in and for said territory.

We take pleasure in commending Brother H. E. Merryman to the Saints in and for the territory named, and we speak for him your earnest consideration and help. If you are not near his home address, Enterprise, Oregon, you can write to him, and especially if it is easier to write to him and get in communication than it is to do so with the Presiding Bishop's office either at Independence, Missouri, or Lamoni, Iowa.

We trust that all will be interested in helping along the Master's work in this part of Oregon. Let us show our faith by our works. All should so let their light shine that their good works may be seen and known by others, and thus many be led to glorify our heavenly Father.

The Bishopric takes occasion herewith to commend Brother A. J. Moore for his work in the past in this district. We trust the Lord may bless and prosper him in his missionary work in other fields.

Commending each one to the mercy and blessing of the Lord, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric, and confidant of the success of his work.

Very respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Information Desired.

The Second Kansas City Branch desires to locate the absent members of the branch, in order that the records might be in better shape. Some of the members have not been heard from for many years. The list is as follows: William J. Morton, Rosa S. Morton, Percy Ellen Davis, Annie Mansell, Emit T. McKnight, Daisy A. McKnight, F. W. Boldt, Augusta G. Boldt, John B. Mayer, Adelia H. McKnight, Nancy Ann Rickman, Earl H. Babcock, Clarence Babcock, Caroline M. Schultz, Mary F. Gates, Myrtle B. Stewart, Harry W. Walker, James H. Churchill, Anna C. Omans, Sarah J. Harris, Wiley A. Coberly, George Chick, John H. Winchester, O. D. Holmes, Harry E. Hayman, Clara B. Hayman, Abbie M. Chapman, May Dick, Grace Shaw, Francis M. Lowe, Ida M. Lowe, Ernest F. Brace, Oliver Gunderson, Anna Gunderson, John W. Johnson, Bertha G. West, Emma Medarias, Pansy B. McLain, Frank H. Vollmer, Elizabeth Vollmer. Any information in regard to whereabouts of the above-mentioned individuals will be gratefully received and acknowledged. Mrs. Margaret Cleveland, secretary of Second Kansas City Branch, 1316 Circle Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

Missouri Home Colony Movement.

Having inquired into the work of this movement and considered the matter with Brother R. B. Trowbridge, and the practicability of such a work at the present time, I offer this statement to those who may have become interested and canvassed the matter in the past.

It was abandoned upon the initiative of Brother Trowbridge himself, not, as he has stated to me, on account of a lack of merit, but that the developments which were occurring made the continuance undesirable to the church and its members, and in consultation with the undersigned Brother Trowbridge abandoned it at his own option, desiring to work always in harmony with the body, and whatever loss there has been he suffered it himself and willingly. We think, then, no criticism should attach in any way.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 17, 1912.

Notices.

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Elder James Baty, sr., to the British Isles Mission, the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and minister in charge concurring in the appointment.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,
FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Southern Kansas Mission; Greeting: It has been arranged that Brother Roy F. Slye take the oversight of the church work in this mission, this mission year. It is unworked ground, comparatively speaking. There are quite a number of Saints scattered over the field, conditions affording more work than can be done by two men in one year. However, we would like to do all the good we can in the best way, and it will take money to move our work on.

We need a tent for this district. Can you help us get one? This is a splendid country, large towns and cities that need the gospel. Saints, remember God requires one tenth of all our increase as tithing. I have the right to receipt you; send all you can to my address.

Write me when you think it would be best to come to your post. Make all the arrangements you can for a good meeting, and the Lord will help us if we do our best.

All the money sent me will be receipted for; if for tent so state; if for tithing, so state. Let me hear from those in the mission soon, so we can plan our work for the best.

Truly in bonds,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

PITTSBURG, KANSAS, 103 East Adams Avenue.

Resolutions.

The following resolutions were submitted by a committee appointed by the Star of Bethlehem Sunday School and were adopted by that body on Sunday, June 16, 1912.

"We extol her virtues as wife, mother, teacher, and friend, and recall her meeting of hardships as the wife of a pioneer missionary in the Reorganization, as a zealous volunteer in church and Sunday school activities, and a conscientious child of faith in all her many and varied experiences, as encouraging examples to us of what a "spirit touched with holy fire and fed by kind and good desire" may accomplish in this life, while the effects of such a life go on and on until eternity alone reveals their magnitude.

Died.

LEASURE.—Sister Bertha V. Leasure, daughter of Seth and Seneth Jones, and wife of David N. Leasure, was born in Wesley, Will County, Illinois, January 6, 1873. Died June 13, 1912, aged 39 years, 5 months, 6 days. She leaves a husband, two sons, and one daughter to mourn the loss of a kind wife and loving mother, together with mother, father, sister, and two brothers. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at an early age and remained steadfast in the faith until called away from this realm of physical activities. Funeral services were conducted from the home of the parents, near Ritchey, Illinois, by Elder James F. Keir.

NORRON.—Susan M. Norton, faithful Saint and honored citizen of Jonesport, Maine, died June 8, 1912. She was born August 16, 1831; baptized in her youth by President Joseph Smith. Her home had always been "the home" of the elders. Her last words concerning the church were: "I have lived the faith, I am ready to die in it, and willing to be judged by it." Six children, all of whom have "called her blessed," survive her: Isabelle McNichols, Lowell Norton, Eliza Chaney, Charles M. Norton, Ferdinand L. Norton, and Evengeline Doyle; also fourteen grandchildren. She expressed particular appreciation of the sacrifices of Sister Ada Norton in caring for her during her long illness. Special mention is due her son, Ferdinand, for years of devotion and service. All who knew her loved her. Sermon by J. A. Koehler.

CRAWFORD.—J. A. Crawford was born November 10, 1840, at Buffalo, Missouri; was married to Sarah Reynolds March 27, 1862; was baptized into the Latter Day Saints' church November 1, 1899; died May 30, 1912, aged 71 years, 6 months, 20 days. He leaves to mourn a loving wife, one son, and three daughters, eighteen grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. The funeral was held in the Latter Day Saints' church at Fairland, Oklahoma, J. T. Riley in charge, sermon by Lee Quick.

WHITTIER.—Mrs. Ada Wellington Whittier died at her home in Monte Vista, Colorado, May 26, 1912, and her body was laid beside that of her father, Elder Thomas Wellington, in the Monte Vista cemetery. Sister Whittier was born January 29, 1880, in Jefferson County, Iowa, and with parents moved near Lamoni in 1884, where she spent her girlhood. Early in the spring of 1902 was married to Joseph Whittier. Of their children one little daughter preceded her to paradise. In 1906 Sister Ada was baptized into the Reorganized Church. Compelled to live apart from the people of her faith, she was happy in her hope. For six years and six months she struggled bravely against lung trouble. She died with a bright hope in the gospel of Christ. Husband, two little sons, a widowed mother, three sisters, and three brothers remain to treasure her memory.

DENIO.—Sister Melvina L. Denio received the gospel in 1887, being baptized by Elder H. A. Stebbins, and lived a consistent life until death ended her suffering at Lamoni, Iowa, June 14, 1912, at the age of 41 years, 1 month, 5 days. The patience that she manifested in her sickness was truly commendable. She leaves to mourn, a widowed mother, three brothers, and three half brothers. Funeral Sunday, June 16. Prayer at the house by Elder A. S. Cochran; sermon by Elder John Smith; prayer at the grave by Elder H. A. Stebbins.

BROWNING.—Sister Mary A. Browning, born October, 1839, Fairfield County, Ohio, died at Kansas City, Missouri, June 14, 1912, at the age of 72 years, 8 months, and 10 days. She was baptized August, 1903, by Elder W. W. Smith, at Kings-ton, Missouri. Four sons and three daughters survive. Her remains were brought to Cameron, Missouri, where services were held in the Saints' church, in charge of Hale W. Smith, sermon by William Lewis. Laid to rest in the Mirable Cemetery, twelve miles south of Cameron, by the side of her husband, who preceded her fourteen years. She died, as she lived, strong in the faith and in the spirit of the work.

Decide on a Colorado Vacation

You have often thought about going out to Colorado, but somehow always put it off. Why not make sure of going this summer? No doubt you feel the need of a complete change and rest occasionally. Most everybody does. To sit just taking long breaths of that magnificent air, and basking in Colorado's peculiar brand of sunshine is to invite new life. Then, of course, there are all sorts of outdoor pleasures to interest those disposed to activity. I'd like to have you go this year and see what a fine time you will have and how well you will feel for the outing. There are places in Colorado that Europe would give a million dollars to get, but the Old World can't have them—they're yours to enjoy here in this country. Your trip to Colorado will be nothing but pleasure from the very start if you select the right road to go on. There are no more comfortable trains in the world than those in the Burlington service to Colorado. Come in and tell me about the particular kind of a trip you have in mind and let me arrange the details for you, or write J. Francis, General Passenger Agent, 226 W. Adams St., Chicago.

A LESSON OF DISASTER.

It may be a little late for us to refer to the awful tragedy of fate of the monster steamer, the Titanic, which went to destruction by crashing into an iceberg on the north route from England to America, sinking some sixteen hundred people to a grave in the icy waters of that north sea.

But our purpose is this. The fact that this monster vessel, over one sixth of a mile long and large in proportion, carrying nearly three thousand persons across the mighty ocean, poorly appointed and running at a fearful rate in a sea exposed to the additional danger of icebergs which strewed the path the steamer was pursuing, the appointments of this ship being inadequate for the care and protection of its passengers and crew, in case of that which threatened wreck and destruction by the elements, brought to the notice of the countries between which there are lines of transportation by sea that a strange carelessness has prevailed for years and a penurious saving of money in failing to provide proper and adequate means for saving life in case of disaster.

The lesson which was taught by the loss of the Titanic, both in property value and in the loss of life, is accentuated by the fact that there went down with that ship men of note, such as John Jacob Astor, wealthy citizen and business man of New York; Isador Straus, also a wealthy business man and benefactor of the race, whose wife refused to leave him and perished with him; William T. Stead, the celebrated author and journalist, at one time the publisher and editor of a magazine known as The Truth; celebrated painter (Millet), and a noted officer of the United States Army, Major Butt, who was also associated with President Taft as his aide de camp. These men were passengers on this "positively unsinkable" vessel, and yet they went down with the captain and many of the crew and the other sixteen hundred passengers, for which there was not adequate means of escape from drowning.

We do not write these names with the idea that their bodies were any more sacred than the poorest of the passengers on that mighty ship; but the lesson taught by the tremendous loss of life is accentuated by the fact that these noted persons were on board and went to death with the commonest passengers of the Old World, and stokers and the crew as well as the captain. The celebrity of these men, their well-known citizenship, and manner and form of life, and the aim which they had in view, will have more effect in causing those transportation companies to rectify the wrongs which have been existing than does the death of all the others who perished in the same catastrophe. The world loves its own and these men were of the business world, and noted, and their names in connection with this disaster will have a great effect in helping the nations to make adequate laws for the purpose of conserving human life of those who go down to the sea in ships.

A GOOD WAY TO SUCCEED.

The following train of thought is suggested to us in connection with the work of the United Order of Enoch. There are in the Independence Stake some five thousand members of the church, and in the branch about 2,500. Assuming that all that has been said by many in regard to willingness to sacrifice by consecration, and to do what the Lord seems to have commanded in reference to temporalities and the organization of the Order of Enoch is meritorious and marks the honest believer.

It is suggested that if out of the five hundred families composing the Independence Stake fifty would be willing and able to put into the treasury of the Order of Enoch with a bond and covenant that could not be broken, the sum of one hundred dollars each there would be five thousand dollars for the order to apply in their work in helping those who need help and comply with the requisition of the revelation authorizing the organization of the order. If one hundred should thus be willing and able to consecrate it would make the sum of ten thousand dollars, which would be a guarantee for considerable to be done by the order. It should be borne in mind that consecration is but a part of the law of tithing, the law of tithing being the only rule of law by which the funds of the Saints may be paid into the church treasury, as authorized by the various energies of the church in testimony of the work. The law of consecration is one phase of the law and to be effective of its best spiritual result consecration must be the result of sacrifice, not of the needs of the individual, but of his wants. There is a wide difference between one's necessities and one's wants, and the Lord has wisely said that needs and wants should be supplied, if the wants were just. This requirement of justness is made up of several qualifications which it is not needful for us to enumerate in this article.

There are in the church sixty-five thousand members. Using the same form of computation, five to the family, would give thirteen thousand heads of families, or breadwinners. Assuming that these breadwinners are conscious of their duty so far as the work is concerned, and willing to do, applying the same rule as before, it ought to be that there should be a thousand out of the thirteen thousand who would be willing and are able to consecrate the same amount, which would give a nucleus of working power to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars. We offer it as a suggestion with the inquiry: Is it not practicable that there should be this comparatively small number out of the entire membership who would have the courage to place at the disposal of the working body of the Order of Enoch what they have thus to consecrate, without direction or restriction as to its use, leaving the officers who are chosen to look after the work to apply the means as they shall discover it to be necessary, at their discretion? We give this as a suggestion.

The Order of Enoch is not a stock company in which money is to be invested with a view to its employment to the end of dividends to the individual donating, but as an aggregation of men and means for purely beneficiary use in the way pointed out in the revelation in which the Order of Enoch is named in the Book of Covenants and in the revelation authorizing its organization at the present time.

President Brigham Young assumed the direction of the church affairs at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, acting in the charge of the temporal affairs of the church as trustee in trust for the church. He continued in office, reaching Salt Lake Valley in 1847. His stewardship as this trustee in trust he held until his death, which occurred in 1877; giving him thirty years of occupation of the role of trustee in trust in Utah. After his death it was found that his will disposed of nearly two million dollars worth of wealth, the larger portion of which was devised to the various members of his family, some nineteen wives and forty-seven children. This gives to each family a mother and two and one half children for the average. In his will there was no mention made directly of the funds, or property, which he held as trustee in trust for the church, and what property, public utilities, the church had an undisputed claim to were ceded to the church by the executors of the will, under the clause providing for the payment of his just debts, though the creditors were not named.

John Alexander Dowie, whose name has become famous by reason of his founding what was called Zion City not a great ways from Chicago, in fourteen years of a brilliant career in which he published and scattered millions of copies of his Leaves of Healing, carried on a wonderful work of propagandism as far as outward appearances were concerned, and gathered to his church funds by request or demand of his followers something over five million dollars. According to his own statement five per cent of all that was paid into the church treasury became his private purse, and the accumulations of moneys and properties rated his personal fortune at his death to something like one million dollars. Many thousands more were tied up at Zion City in manufacturing plants and industries of various kinds, some of which are being conducted up to the present time.

Our reason for mentioning these items of money accumulation is this. The present President of the Reorganized Church has been serving as its presiding officer for nearly fifty-two years. During that entire time he has never asked the church as a body for money to carry on personal business ventures of any kind. He has been content to labor as others have labored and the church has never exacted moneys from those entering into the church as a prerequisite for their being taken into fellowship, and provision is made in the articles of government of the church to the effect that the church has no right nor power to put persons in jeopardy of personal liberty or deprive them of their property, but leaves matters of church donation entirely to the will and good pleasure of the membership. It is not out of place, however, for the President to make the suggestion to the membership of the church that in a call upon them, even though it may be made in a personal way at the present time, to consecrate of their means for the accomplishment of the work which is required by the direction to organize the Order of Enoch and the amount which is named by us as the extreme limit of this suggestion, one hundred thousand dollars, when compared with the amounts of money which have been raised by those posing as spiritual leaders assuming gigantic proportions, it seems to us the modest demand found in this suggestion is perfectly fair and just, and that we are not traversing outside our spiritual duty to bring the practical part of these suggestions directly home to the Saints themselves.

Think of it, dear brother; think of it; an order directed to be organized among us in a state to accomplish a work necessary to be done, and the great desires and expectations constantly expressed as to the great benefits which are to result from the labors of this order, and yet there are so few apparently among those who express a willingness and have acknowledged devotion to the cause of God, who are offering the working sacrifices by which the work is to be accomplished. Let us see whether this year of activity may not be blessed beyond the years of the past in rousing this spirit of devotion and consecration which we have named in this article.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE ON JOSEPH SMITH.

Robert J. Burdette is very well known in the United States as a humorist. He first attracted notice through the medium of the Burlington Hawk-Eye, of Burlington, Iowa, and later through other publications. At a still later date he turned from humor to religion, or perhaps carried his humor with him into religious work, and entered the Baptist ministry, and became more famous in a way because of the very expensive church edifice erected in Los Angeles, California, for his use.

But it seems that he has never forgotten his old love for journalism, and regularly contributes to the Los Angeles Times, under the caption, "Sayings of Burdette, the genial philosopher." The fate that sooner or later leads most public men to write or speak upon the character of Joseph Smith, thus unwittingly fulfilling the prophecy that his name should be had for good or evil among all men, has led this preacher-humorist-philosopher to express himself on that theme in the Los Angeles Times for June 1, 1912. From his article we quote the following:

Away back in York State, in the little town of Manchester, in what was then Ontario County, now Wayne, in the year of our Lord 1820, a country boy named Joseph Smith, in his fifteenth year, "got religion." More than that, religion got him. The fact that although he was an uneducated lad so far as school education goes, he had a conscience, and a most independent one, and a strong mind which he used to do his own thinking, was apparent in his conversion. He was converted in a union revival. Then when it came to shepherding the maverick, he was confused by the variety of brands with which they sought to mark him. Baptist watermarks, Presbyterian blue lines, and the Methodist Epworth bar, all urged upon him as the "right and only" in the controversial spirit of the times, only confused the youth. There came repeatedly into his thought the passage in the epistle of James, 1: 5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

DARKNESS AND LIGHT.

The young convert went into the solitude of the woods and prayed. As he began, "Thick darkness gathered about me," he tells. "I was seized upon by some power which entirely overcame me, and had such astonishing influence over me as to bind my tongue so that I could not speak." But he exerted all his powers to call upon God to deliver him, and as he did so, "I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. It had no sooner appeared than I found myself delivered from the power of the enemy which had held me bound. When the light rested upon me, I saw two personages, whose brightness and glory defy all description, standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said (pointing to the other): 'This is my beloved Son, hear Him.'"

The young convert was emboldened to ask the heavenly vision concerning his perplexity about the churches, and received the not very kindly or generous reply that the creeds of all the rest of us church folk "were an abomination in His sight; that those professors were all corrupt, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

"YOUR YOUNG MEN SHALL SEE VISIONS."

The vision is as much entitled to respectful credence as were those of Jeanne d'Arc or Emmanuel Swedenborg. The revelation, however, only added a new proof that in modern visions God can be as spiteful as any of his human creatures, when he permits them to interpret his will.

PRECONCEIVED VISIONS.

I once knew a good Baptist missionary who had many revelations from heaven. Whenever there was any difference between the board and this missionary—who was a saint if ever there was one, she never prolonged the difference into a dispute. She sought the nearest solitude and had a revelation. She never failed to receive one. In a little while she would come back, sweet, serene, radiant.

It is a singular fact, admitted by the seer herself, that it was invariably revealed to her that she was right and the board was wrong.

Who could withstand such a revelation?

I never could understand why it never occurred to the board to have revelations. Maybe there were too many of them to agree on the one they wanted.

STORMS OF PERSECUTION.

Joseph Smith was at once the target of a storm of incredulity, ridicule, reviling and persecution. He went through the fires as bravely as had many other prophets before him. From the day of his vision to the hour of his cruel assassination in the jail at Carthage, Illinois, one June morning in 1844, he went through persecutions and discouragements sufficient to have compelled any man to abandon his faith, had he not been sustained by a supreme belief in himself and his calling. Say of him what you will, he was a man of extraordinary genius and high courage, with an invincible faith in what he firmly believed to be a divine mission. To thousands of intelligent people he is still "The Prophet," honored, believed, and beloved. Even his enemies have invested him with the title of "The Mohammed of America."

It takes some courage to speak well, even moderately so, of an individual who has few friends and many enemies in the public world; so we must conclude that Mr. Burdette's reputation for courage is merited. The strength of his article is somewhat marred by its conclusion, in which he holds forth the idea that the material development of Utah is a natural outcome of the visions of Joseph Smith and is more wonderful than anything spiritual seen in any of his manifestations. If the material development of Salt Lake City and Mormon Utah is an outcome of Joseph Smith's vision, the moral decadence of Mormon Utah that has vexed this Nation for so many years is also a legitimate outgrowth of that vision. But the fact is that the life and teachings of Joseph Smith are in no way responsible for Utah. He taught neither commercialism nor polygamy. Such credit as there may be for the material development of Mormon Utah, and such blame as there may be for the moral tone of Mormon Utah, must be given to Brigham Young, who began the policy that made him a polygamist and a millionaire and has made his successors as spiritual leaders polygamists and millionaires.

The lifelong vision of Joseph Smith contemplated something quite different: namely, a community, developed industrially, it is true, but in which temporal equality and justice should prevail. A community that could not possibly produce a few multi-millionaire church leaders and a mass of people composed of the moderately well to do and the extremely poor. And a community that because of keeping the laws of God would have "no need to break the laws of the land"; in which each man should "love his own wife with all his heart and cleave unto her and none else."

This part of Joseph Smith's religious policy escaped the notice of Mr. Burdette. Had he discovered it his tribute might have been made even more enthusiastic and yet have remained well within the realm of truth.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ELDER RICHARD BALDWIN.—Brother E. A. Webbe, in sending us an account of the work in Cleveland, Ohio, favors us with copies of a unique folder announcing Brother Baldwin's efforts in that city. The brother makes a special appeal to mill workers as follows:

"As I then worked in the molding floor of the steel mill, I now work in the greater molds of human hearts and minds—for the Spirit of God is waiting to flow therein once the bars are let down."

The folder contains an excellent picture of the brother in an evangelistic attitude. We believe we see Brother Webbe's fine, artistic mind behind this piece of advertising.

A loving act does more good than a long exhortation. What the world needs is not more good talkers, but more good Samaritans.

My Prayer.

I do not trouble God with small requests,
I earn, not ask my daily bread;
'Tis for my toiling hands to keep
The sheltering roof above my head—
I do not weary God with such behests.

For if each day I am to beg and whine
About his knees for food and drink,
Why did he give me strength and skill,
Why have I power to plan and think—
Why am I different from the browsing kine?

When he placed me erect and taught me speech,
When he gave me a hand and not a claw,
He therewith, and for ages, laid
Upon my soul the steadfast law
Of self-dependence and of onward reach.

And so I do not trouble him with small requests,
Begging each day a crust of bread,
Waiting for him, by miracle,
To keep the roof-tree o'er my head—
I do not weary God with such behests.

And yet I pray.

Yea, in my heart is one unceasing prayer
And on my lips a never-dying song—
That God will teach me how to make My daily choice 'twixt right and wrong
That I may play life's game, and play it fair!
—Sara Beaumont Kennedy.

Kneeling in Prayer.

When depressed, and discouraged, I seek a retreat,
All alone, for communion, at God's mercy seat,
Heaven's gates seem to open, while I'm pleading there,
I get glimpses of glory, when kneeling in prayer.

Could I compass all nations, by sea and by land,
And partake of the pleasures the world can command,
They'd be tasteless, and worthless, not fit to compare
With the sweet hallowed season, when kneeling in prayer.

I will follow the footsteps of Jesus my king,
And glad tributes of service to him will I bring,
For I know when the tempter my soul would ensnare,
He will give strength to conquer when kneeling in prayer.

Ever blest be the dawning of that joyous day
When my sins by baptism were all washed away,
Now, on One who is mighty, I'll cast every care,
And praise him for his goodness, when kneeling in prayer.

THE SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST.

The sin against the Holy Ghost is something that has agitated the minds of many, and many have ceased to strive further, thinking they have committed the unpardonable sin, and are doomed to inherit eternal damnation. In Luke 12: 8-10, Jesus speaks to his disciples, not to those outside the pale of the church:

Also I say unto you, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the angels of God: but he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God. And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him: but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven.

I opine that this is the sin John had reference to when he said,

If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it.—1 John 5: 16.

If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive.—John 14: 15, 16, 17.

Here it is made very plain that the world (outside of the church) could not receive the Holy Ghost. Listen to our blessed Lord again:

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you [his disciples, not the world,] from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15: 26.

See Matthew 16: 16, 17, 18; also Matthew 11: 27.

And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.—Acts 5: 32.

Compare with Acts 8: 12, 17; also Acts 19: 6. These scriptures show clearly that the Holy Ghost was given only to those who rendered obedience to the gospel, by the authority vested in the administrator, and had no reference to those wicked Pharisees Christ upbraided in Matthew 12: 31.

We will now consider this unpardonable sin, and the only ones that can sin against the Holy Ghost.

For, if, after they (the only truly converted children of God) have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.—2 Peter 2: 20.

When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first.—Luke 11: 24, 25, 26.

For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins.—Hebrews 10: 26.

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance.—Hebrews 6: 4-6.

For behold, if ye deny the Holy Ghost, when it once has had place in you, and ye know that ye deny it; behold, this is a sin which is unpardonable.—Book of Mormon, Alma 19: 8.

Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born, for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the Devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb, who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made. . . . who glorifies the Father and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition who deny the Son after the Father has revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, . . . to reign with the Devil and his angels.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

The foregoing scriptures teach that one must believe in God and his Son, repent, and be baptized, receive the laying on of hands by an authorized and commissioned minister of Christ, and receive or be partakers of the heavenly gift,—the Holy Ghost; sense and feel its powerful influence, revealing to them the divinity of Jesus the Christ, that he is the Son of God, and after the receiving of this knowledge turn back into the beggarly elements of the world, and deny the work of God. This would be denying personal knowledge, hence committing the unpardonable sin.

For instance; let one take a lump of sugar in his mouth: he tastes it, he knows it is sweet. Why? Because he had previously tasted quinine and it was bitter. Now, if after tasting and knowing of a truth that sugar is sweet, he would deny it, this would be sinning against personal knowledge. In like manner, the child of God commits the unpardonable sin, according to my understanding of the Scriptures, and this those could not do who had not rendered obedience to the gospel; had not received the gift of the Holy Ghost; had not tasted its powerful influence. To whom the Father had not revealed the divinity of his Son, hence they did not know him; and could not commit the unpardonable sin.

Our Lord said, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established." Hence we have produced the three standard books—Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, in support of this article and pray it shall have the desired effect for good.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ANDREW HAMPTON JOHNSON.

Editors Herald: Because of the remarkable experience he has passed through, and the blessings he has received from God, we are to the church and to the world by duty bound to contribute to them this brief autobiography of this God-favored man, which we believe will be interesting to all, especially to those with whom he may be acquainted. We trust it will meet with your approval. C. E. BOZARTH.

I am a descendant of Captain Edward Johnson, who with Governor John Winthrop, in 1620, emigrated from England across the "Sea of Darkness" to America in those eleven small vessels, one of which was the Mayflower, bearing a colony of over seven hundred Puritans. My great-great-grandfather, David Johnson, was numbered among the brave patriots who offered their lives for liberty's cause in the first great battle of the Revolutionary War.

There might be several brave and daring adventures mentioned that were made by my ancestors, but we must pass on, after mentioning one of the old relics, a memorial of 1803 that is in my possession at present. This is a letter written by my grandmother, Ruth Johnson, at Simpronius, New York, to her father-in-law, Josiah Johnson, at Buckland, Massachusetts. The contents of the letter give an account of their moving trip from Massachusetts to New York, and it is dated July 5, 1803, which date reminds us of the Louisianian Purchase, made by Thomas Jefferson from Napoleon, and causes our mind's eye to see the wildness of the forest, the incomplete postal system, and that of transportation, as well as the old-time pursuits of happiness.

In 1822 my grandfather, Rufus, and his family, consisting of himself and wife with five boys, of whom Handorus D. Johnson, my father, was the youngest, moved to Hamilton County, Illinois, where I was born February 6, 1844.

In these early years of the country's development the chances of a country boy for an education were poor. The country was so thinly populated that all things worked to a disadvantage. Between long intervals short sessions of school would be held in a neighboring log cabin, rudely built and furnished. The furniture probably consisting of homemade benches made from split logs with four pegs placed in the round side.

I was numbered with those boys who, at every opportunity, took their "old blue-backed spellers" and started to such a school. When there from day to day, I tried to master each task assigned me, and through these efforts I was able to acquire a common country boy's education for my time.

The same may be said of church privileges of these early days. As I was zealous in school, I was also mindful of my religious duties. It was not at school that I learned my sweetest and dearest lessons, but rather under the shelter of my father's roof and at my mother's knee. It was there I learned the grandeur of honesty, justice, righteousness, and obedience to parents and God. It is to them I am much indebted and very thankful. They taught first by example, then by precept. Thus I was able to instill within my mind those grand principles which I have carried with me into manhood.

Let us take a retrospective view of the country in my boyhood days. All was forest, and the deer were seen running past the cabin doors. All stock ran at will in the timber. There was scarcely a fence to be seen in the country through. It happened that my father owned one hundred and sixty acres of such land, and it was on that land where I learned to work, helping to clear the timber from the land. I worked at this all the time, only when the weather was unfavorable, and then I was permitted to attend school. You might guess by this that I was glad to see the snow fall.

In the spring of 1863 I had grown to be a young man, and had assumed the duties of one depending upon himself. I had planted a large tobacco crop on some land given me by my father to cultivate.

August 16, 1863, I was united in the bonds of matrimony with Miss Mary Jane Burnett, who is yet living and has been with me these forty-nine years and shared with me my trials and joys. The greatest peace, joy, and consolation to us has been the gospel message that came to us, and we still rejoice in the hope of eternal life which was begotten within us through this message.

The first disappointment met with by this newly wedded couple was probably the August frost which came Saturday night, August 22, 1863. When we awoke Sunday morning we were vexed with the happenings of the night. All vegetation was almost or totally ruined; not excluding this valued tobacco crop in which was trusted a financial assistance to one beginning in life. In southern Illinois this frost distinguished this year from all others before or after, and made it known as "the year of the August frost."

A few more years found me a matured man, owning my own property, getting along moderately well in life and rearing a family. As a result of being reared by upright and honest parents, there was instilled within my very nature the correct principles of manhood, and a longing disposition to do what was right and to pursue my duty toward God. I was therefore in constant search for the precepts and paths of our Savior.

There was a general religious instinct which predominated all through our respective family which had a tendency to favor Christianity. Under such environments, associated with the great fact that I was tutoring a family and seeing the necessity of making a change for the better, I united with the Christian Church when about thirty years of age, believing that it came nearer than any other to filling the description of Christ's church as set forth by holy record, for I had not yet heard of that church that fully filled the "measure."

After joining the Christian Church to live as a loyal member I performed my duty as I understood it, not forgetting at all times to ask for divine guidance. As time passed, and as I made a more thorough study of the Scriptures, I became dissatisfied with the doctrine of this church, which caused to be introduced in the conversations between myself and wife subjects questioning the doctrines of that church. There could have been no better time for the "true doctrine" to meet due respect and consideration, should it be encountered by me. As divine ruling would have it, my cousin, Aaron Burlison, who played with me as a favorite chum in childhood days, had returned home with his wife from a lengthy separation and brought with them and ushered into this appropriate place the gospel as restored through Joseph Smith. Aaron was receiving fulfillment of the promises of the gospel, and wanted me to share his blessings with him, and gave me the promise recorded in John 7:17: "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself."

At first, through prejudice toward the Christian Church, I held to its dogmas. Yet I took this promise for its "full face value," for before Aaron and his wife had accomplished their purpose they had succeeded in getting me and my wife interested in a deeper investigation. They left books and tracts for us to read, among which was the Book of Mormon. I chose this book for the main subject of my investigation. I read it through, and from the very beginning the Spirit of inspiration accompanied my study, announcing the divinity and confirming the truthfulness of its statements.

While connected with secular labor, I was more closely related to spiritual conditions. I went about in my labor, hauling rails all day for my neighbor, John Summers, in deep meditation, thinking what action to take. Previously I had investigated the Latter Day Saints' doctrine and had almost decided that it was true and in harmony with the Scriptures, by the best evidences to be procured by reading. But I would have God dictate in this matter, for human reasoning was not sufficient. I stayed all night with this neighbor, and was escorted to a lone room to sleep by myself. After retiring to bed, but before going to sleep, I betook myself to fervent prayer, earnestly asking God with great faith to make known to me the right way, promising to act as I was directed, even though it took my life.

It was to the occurrence of this night that I am much indebted for a safe guidance into the "straight and narrow way." I was wrapped in holy vision—joy and peace ran through my veins. A great power was resting upon me. Such happiness had never been mine before. As the Spirit dwelt with me I saw the different denominations of the so-called Christians represented in several groups, some of which seemed to be leaning against man for their leader; while some were leaning against each other; and others against wooden posts or stakes which seemed almost ready to give away. None of these had anything higher than their own heads to lean against.

The scene changed now; I was standing some distance from this throng of people with my back to them, ready to step upon a most beautiful elevated circle of ground, which seemed higher than my head, which circle had a beam running from its center to heaven, or the throne of God. There were other small rods extending from this main beam to a near distance around the circle. This beam seemed to form a connecting link between heaven and earth, which was wrought out by our Savior and Lord who accomplished that which will bring us so near to our Father in heaven, and who will give us the Holy Spirit with the promised gifts and blessings, provided we accept him and come to this place and obey him. The small rods seemed only to lead us to the place where we may be affected by the main beam.

As the different scenes passed before me, explanatory scriptures were born in my mind, which with the heaven-sent feeling that pervaded my being, gave me that assurance of the divinity of this heavenly transpiring which can not be denied, and caused my heart to leap with unbounded joy and my eyes to break forth in tears of gratitude.

One of the above-mentioned passages may be found in Hebrews 1:14, which reads: "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" This was manifested in the vision. The God of love had sent a ministering angel to minister to me and to lead my steps aright. This belief is held out by my patriarchal blessing. It says that angels were placed over me as guardians to care for me and to guide my footsteps in life.

I was now ready to answer this all-important question as to what church to join. On my return home I related my night's experience to my wife, concluding by saying, "I am now ready to join the Latter Day Saint Church."

In a short time Brethren G. H. Hilliard and I. A. Morris came into our neighborhood to hold a series of meetings, and at this first opportunity I was baptized and confirmed by G. H. Hilliard, August 27, 1885, at Parrish, Illinois.

I may say that from this time until now I have tried to execute my duty as I understood it. I have tried to be loyal to God, and have tried to place myself in a condition before him that I would be entitled to his guidance and blessings. Never for one moment have I doubted this latter day work; I hope to continue faithful to the end.

Some few years later, while the work in that part of the country was yet in its infancy, the Saints, though few in number, erected a house of worship. I tried to do my part of this work, or at least as much as I felt able, and only wish I could have done more.

June 6, 1887, I was ordained to the office of teacher at Parrish, Illinois, under the hands of I. M. Smith and G. H. Hilliard, after which time it fell to my lot to care for the branch, in which position I occupied a few years. Later, January 17, 1894, God saw fit to call me to greater and higher responsibilities, those of a priest. I was ordained by Emsley Curtis and I. A. Morris. I have labored in this calling till the present time.

In April, 1905, I moved to Missouri, and with full purpose of heart I responded to the call of the "gathering," and have tried to make it Zion indeed.

I now reside in Warrensburg, and am still in the harness. Though age is slowly claiming her rights, I desire to continue faithful while time shall last with me, and be accounted worthy of the reward of the godly. My hopes and prayers are with this work and people.

Hopefully,

A. H. JOHNSON.

THE FUNCTION OF PRESIDING.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This paper was read by Elder George E. Harrington, president of the Independence Stake, before the priesthood of the Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri, and by them submitted to the SAINTS' HERALD for publication. It will be found instructive and educational. Probably in the main all will agree with the positions taken. There may, however, be some points concerning which some may entertain other ideas. If so, and they desire to express them through the HERALD, they should formulate them affirmatively, from their own viewpoint, and not in reply to this article,—a good rule which we have often recommended to avoid prolonged discussion. This paper will be followed by one on "Executive ability," written by Elder S. A. Burgess, and taking up the function of presiding from an entirely different angle, that of the man who is an executive, able to direct affairs, cooperating with those under his direction so as to use their brains and ability to the best advantage in secular and religious work.

WHAT IS IT TO PRESIDE?

To preside is to care for the interests, special or general, of a number of persons, for a time, according to appointment, election, and agreement.

According to church organizations there are provisions made for presiding officers over branches and districts, involving active oversight over meetings of congregations for various purposes. These officers have discretionary powers in appointments, being restricted in their liberties by actions of the body or bodies over whom they preside.

PRESIDING OVER A PRAYER MEETING.

To preside acceptably one must conform to whatever regulations those bodies make, who request the services of those whom they may choose to preside over them. Hence, to preside over a branch would require an understanding of the needs of the organization over which one were called to preside, the liberties of the body, and his own liberties, and to act in conformity therewith. The same would apply to one presiding over a stake or district.

To preside over a prayer meeting acceptably, one should be present on time, that the service may be opened promptly, and should be in a prayerful condition. He should be capable of directing, so that equal opportunity may be had by all. He should take note of criticisms, that such be discouraged, insist upon an avoidance of discussions, and refuse to encourage accusations against any. He should be capable of discerning spirits, and where there is good reason to rebuke an evil spirit, do so. But it is questionable if any but an elder will have power over an evil spirit.

BUSINESS SESSIONS AND OTHER MEETINGS.

In presiding over other religious services be sure you are aware of what is to transpire as previously arranged for; if announcements are to be made, their character, and the propriety of their being made. Keep a watchful eye upon the members, keep order, direct in ventilation if necessary; make announcements, or provide for their being made, be orderly, be clean in person, tidy in dress; particularly is it proper to attend sacrament services with clean face and hands.

Presiding over a business meeting necessitates a familiarity with parliamentary practices, church Rules of Order, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants (see Rules of Order, section 162), and General Conference Resolutions. A knowledge of the relationship of ranking officers in the church, what is regarded as proper courtesy to all.

The presiding officer should make himself heard, and be where he can see and hear all that is going on. He should be orderly himself; and should not express his opinion upon any subject under discussion (except by request of the body), and should avoid indicating how he would like the body to vote. He should restrain members from indulging in incriminating language, keep the members from exceeding their privileges, and be governed by the authorities acknowledged by the church.

If his rulings are objected to, he should advise those objecting to appeal from his decisions, and defend his rulings if he desires to. He can suggest anything that will aid the assembly in doing what it wishes, consistent with its liberties; and may order unruly members from the building if they are unwilling to conform to proper order, or are violating the rules of order. He may request the absence of members if matters of a personal character are to be considered, and should himself be obedient to the commands of the assembly, acting simply as its servant. (Rules of Order, pp. 9, 10, 11.)

WHO CAN PRESIDE?

He who presides over a meeting of any kind does so by virtue of that right being extended to him by such assembly or body of people, except general church officers, who can preside as occasion requires, or by courtesy. (Rules of Order, pp. 11 and 12, pars. 3, 4, 5, 6.)

In the rules laid down in these paragraphs, we find in all meetings where no organization exists, the highest in authority presides, preference being given to the eldest in rank [priority of ordination], secondarily to the eldest in years. A branch must have one ordained officer to preside, either an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, and such officer must be elected by vote at a regular or special meeting called for that purpose.

There is no provision in the law for anyone presiding in a religious assembly except such one be an officer. There may be no reasonable objection offered to a lay member taking charge of a prayer meeting, by action of those present, if no officer be present.

The presumption in the law is that where there is an elder present, if not disqualified, he should be called to preside. However, it should not be understood that he may take such privilege except by invitation of those present. In branch meetings where the presiding officer, if an elder, is absent, the next one elected, the priest, has intrusted to him the responsibility of presiding, and even if elders are present it is optional with him to choose one of such or himself conduct the meeting. But while he has such right, it is obviously good taste to prefer others to himself.

WHAT IS THE JURISDICTION OF A BRANCH PRESIDENT OR PRESIDENCY?

The responsibility imposed upon a branch president is that of having general oversight over the membership. It matters not where a member may be or what are his affiliations with other bodies or auxiliaries, he is still under the supervision and care of said officer. The president is the chief counselor of the membership where questions exist involving the morality and spirituality of the members. It would be his province to pass upon such and the members' privilege to secure his opinion and advice, logically becoming to them the highest authority in the branch. But if doubt should exist in regard to the judgment expressed by him, the members should be at liberty to counsel with still higher authorities, and the branch president should encourage such procedure, under those circumstances.

He should direct all other officers in the branch, learning of the needs of the membership through these agencies and by personal observation, exercising the function of preaching, calling attention to the law of God as a means to remedy the defects of human character, and aid in its development. Wherein the body is suffering, it should be his duty and privilege to put into operation such agencies as will bring relief, whether it be physical suffering brought about by disease or lack of the necessities of life, or mental distress. As far as it is possible he should seek to remove the cause, encourage and make possible within reasonable limits a proper secular education, be a guide in morals and spiritual life.

DOES HE LOSE HIS PRESIDENCY WHEN ASKING OTHERS TO PRESIDE? TO WHAT EXTENT IS HE RELIEVED OF HIS RESPONSIBILITY?

His responsibility continues in and through all his actions, and, if necessary, he may correct errors committed by one temporarily intrusted with a share of the responsibility placed upon him. He is supposed to see and understand the necessities of the people and administer, or see that there is administered, all that is essential for their general welfare and protection.

He may preside over all meetings of a branch, but he is not required to. He is to be assisted as necessity arises, according to his judgment.

He may offer suggestions to auxiliary societies, may restrain them in carrying out any performances thought to be injurious to the body's spiritual welfare. Such suggestions and objections should be carefully considered, and if not acceptable to such auxiliary society appeal may be made to the branch. But until such appeal be heard, the auxiliary society so affected should be governed by the regulation of the president.

It would not be his privilege to attempt to force legislation in their assemblies. There should be a close association of all auxiliaries with the president of a branch, that a clear understanding of the work of each may be had, that all may work together harmoniously. A means to this end would be for these auxiliaries to report to the president at regular intervals, that their needs and purposes may be known to him, that he may say what in his judgment should be encouraged and where help or restraint is needful.

The relation to the officers in a branch should be one of cordiality, good will, and cooperation. Counsel should be had in all important matters or cases to be handled, and in the absence of law, the judgment of the presiding officers should prevail, leaving him to carry the responsibility for success or failure, except it be regarded as extremely dangerous to the body's interest. There is but one president of a branch provided for in the law (in a stake, provision is made for two counselors who act with him or in his stead, doing so as occasion requires, acting as assistants, assuming temporary responsibility in a limited way); all other officers of a branch, though elected to serve the body, should do so with that understanding, acting in line with the direction of such presiding officer or officers.

If friction should occur by reason of differences of opinion, such matters should be submitted to higher authority. However, if action be necessary, the presiding officer should not be hindered by objection or protest, but should feel at liberty to proceed in harmony with his judgment, subject to discipline, if necessary. (It is a question as to whether a presiding officer can be interfered with by one holding lesser responsibility, and further, what procedure should be taken under such circumstances and how soon it can become effective to prevent action by such officer.) It may be by complaint to a higher official in law points; the president of a district, member of the Twelve, or Presidency of the church. It may be by reference to the branch, where the matter can be legally acted upon by the branch. In such case the will of the branch controls the president as well as other officers.

There must be a head in all organization, and proper recognition of the head is a necessity for success, as well as a proper recognition of the rights of all. It should be considered a safe rule, where there is an absence of law governing, that the highest officer's judgment should prevail, subject to action of the body having jurisdiction.

STAKE AND DISTRICT PRESIDENTS.

The duty and privileges of a district or stake president and his associates should be the opening up of channels for increased activities in all lines calculated to develop the body; like a spiritual visitor, meeting with and talking with all branches, finding the good things in all and recommending them everywhere to help lead the body to a healthy spiritual state. He should study the existing conditions of all, and introduces such means as are deemed advisable to improve, keeping alive the officers by furnishing them food for thought, aiding them in their difficulties, responding to such demands as it is possible, so that a full measure of time may be given to all. He should know the law, should be capable of rendering assistance in all ways needed, should be regarded as having the privilege of calling meetings at such times as are necessary to present matters regarded to be important to the membership. His requests should be duly considered. His decisions should be respected, subject to conference approval or disapproval. He should preside over conferences and be acquainted with the needs of all and receive reports from all branches and auxiliaries, by which he will ascertain the true condition and suggest what in his judgment would be profitable to engage their time and energy. He should be intrusted with the ministry, who, not presiding, are willing to labor as circumstances permit.

The standard books of the church, the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Rules of Order, and Conference Resolutions should govern those who preside. The judgment of the officials having jurisdiction, in the interim between legislative meetings or councils or courts, should stand in the absence of church rules. Rules that are approved in other organizations bearing upon cases in hand may be acceptable.

RECOGNITION OF HIGHER AUTHORITY.

If the President of the church should appear in a meeting he has jurisdiction and can assume control if he chooses, but to assume such responsibility there must be clearly manifested the existence of irregularity or misrepresentation of the policy or teachings of the church. And while this is his privilege and extreme prerogative, to arbitrarily and without great wisdom assume the right, would endanger his influence over the body and might subject him to criticism and disrespect. However, the officers in the various locations where branch or district organizations exist, recognizing the delicacy of the situation where such officer is present, ought to show proper courtesy and extend an invitation to said officer, asking him to preside. This would also be true if members of the Quorum of Twelve or district presidents were present. However, there seems to be in stake organization a counterbalancing authority, for in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14, 15, we have the following: "The standing high councils at the stakes of Zion, form a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the Quorum of the Presidency or to the traveling high council." "The high council in Zion forms a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the councils of the Twelve at the stakes of Zion."

I presume to say that in case a presiding officer in a stake should object to views sought to be foisted upon the church by either the Presidency or the Twelve, that the councils of high priests in the stakes of Zion, if agreeing in their decisions, would balance the decisions of either the Presidency or the Twelve. Query, If such a condition should obtain, to what tribunal could proper appeal be made for settlement? It is further questioned whether or not members of the Quorum of Twelve have jurisdiction over the membership of the stake. See Joseph Smith's statement as found in the History of the Church, vol. 1, p. 560, reading as follows, "That the Twelve will have no right to go into Zion or any of her stakes and there undertake to regulate affairs thereof where there is a standing high council."

SHOULD A LAY MEMBER PRESIDE?

A lay member may preside over some meetings where no elected officer of a branch is present, a prayer meeting, a preaching service, or over any of the meetings of any auxiliary society; but it is questionable if he could preside over a business meeting. However, it is very improbable that any such exigency should occur, where no officer of a branch could be present. It might be a safer plan to adjourn such a meeting.

THE AUTHORITY OF SCRIPTURE.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—We present below a digest of a sermon preached by Elder T. W. Williams, at Webb City, Missouri, during the series of meetings held by him there after the adjournment of conference this last spring. We venture the insertion of it in the HERALD, that the readers of the HERALD may see the views expressed by Brother Williams as printed in the Webb City Register, a daily paper which published daily a digest of the sermon preached the evening before. It has been thought that Brother Williams in his expression of views spoke derogatorily of the character and the authenticity of the Scriptures. It will be seen by this digest that he gives full credit to the authority of the Word of God as being sufficient to lead us and help us to reach the salvation promised by the Savior.

Mr. Williams read the following quotation from Lowell:

"Slowly, the bible of the race is writ,
And not on paper leaves nor leaves of stone;
Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it,
Texts of despair or hope, of joy or moan,
While swings the sea, while mists the mountain's shroud,
While thunder's surges bursts on cliffs of cloud,
Still at the prophet's feet the nations sit.

He said, "The Bible is one of the greatest books of the ages. It is an effect rather than a cause. The Bible came out of religion rather than religion out of the Bible. Men thought before they wrote. Back of the Bible is religion; back of religion, life. Life is the principal factor in civilization. This book shows us the kind of religion men possessed. Their religion was an evolution. The Old Testament is the race creed of the Jews. It portrays their lusts, superstitions, passions. The Bible is an authority on some things, but not an absolute authority on anything. The revelations of God are continuous and cumulative. The Bible is not infallible. It is not inerrant. It contains God's word, but it is not wholly the word of God. It needs no handicap. We should treat it as we would any other book. Its divine truths need no human protection. If the book is true it will bear investigation. If it will not bear investigation it is not true.

No statement is true because it is found in the Bible. It would be better to say statements are in the Bible because they are true. The writers of the book do not claim to be infallible. They never conceived that succeeding generations would make their writing law. In studying the book we should understand Oriental customs, their powers of embellishment, and superlative colorings in recital, as well as imaginative capabilities and particularly when studying the historical part of the book make due allowance therefor. We should consider the time, place, and persons of every recital.

The Bible measures the capacity of men. They wrote of God as he appeared to them. The Bible presents God to us through human eyes and human minds. Some of the writers were nearer to God than others.

The Bible does not claim to be a complete and inerrant portrayal of the mind of God.

It is written in human vernacular. It contains much of God and more of man. The traditional stories found in the Bible are not articles of faith and should be taken for what they are worth. Why parley with men over the story of Jonah and the whale, Samson and the foxes, Joshua and the sun? We should not weary our minds therewith. These stories have nothing whatever to do with our salvation. It is enough for us to know that the Bible contains the highest standard of morals; that in the person of Jesus is disclosed the most complete representation of a perfect life; that the Sermon on the Mount is divine; that in spite of its human limitations and partial conceptions of God, still from its pages we can gather a sufficiently accurate conception of God to lead us to him.

Of General Interest

AGAINST RASH JUDGMENT.

It is good for every man to fortify himself on his weak side; and if he loves his peace, he must not be inquisitive and hearken to talebearers; for the man that is overcurious to hear and see everything multiplies troubles for himself; for a man does not feel what he does not know. He that is listening after private discourse and what people say of him shall never be at peace.

Many things are innocent in themselves, yet are made injurious by misconstruction. Wherefore, some things we are to muse upon; others to laugh at; and still others to pardon. Or, if we can not avoid the sense of indignity, let us shun the open profession of it; for many probable things prove false, and a short time will make evidence of the undoubted truth.

We are prone to believe many things which we are unwilling to hear, and so we conclude, and take up a prejudice before we can judge.

Never condemn a friend unheard, or without letting him know his accuser. It is a common thing to say, "Do not tell that you had it from me; for if you do I will deny it and never tell you anything again." By such means friends are set together by the ears, and the informer slips his neck out of the collar. Admit no stories upon these terms, for it is unjust to believe in private and be angry openly.

He that delivers himself up to guess and conjecture runs a great hazard; for there can be no suspicion without some probable grounds; so without much candor and simplicity, and making the best of everything, there is no living in society with mankind.

Some of the things that offend us we have by report; others we see or hear. In the first case, let us not be too credulous. Some people frame stories that may deceive us; others tell us what they hear, and are deceived themselves; some make it theirs to do ill offices; others do them only to receive thanks. There are some that would part the dearest friends in the world; others love to do mischief and stand aloof to see what comes of it. If it be a small matter, I would have witnesses; but if it be a greater, I would have it upon oath, and allow time to the accused, and counsel too, and hear it over and over again.

SENECA.

Is There a Roman Peril?

"When I was in America nine years ago," says the Rev. R. J. Campbell, pastor of the City Temple, London, "I noticed that Roman Catholicism enjoyed a much greater amount of consideration than it was accustomed to in Great Britain, but in the intervening period it seems to have gained enormously in America, so much so that evidences of its power confront one on every hand. This is a thing that seems to need accounting for."

The evidences of Roman Catholic growth of which Mr. Campbell speaks, and of the apprehension aroused by it, have been emphasized during the past few weeks in many ways, and chiefly in the formation of a society called "The Guardians of Liberty." This new organization is supported by Lieutenant-General Nelson A. Miles, Major-General D. E. Sickles, Rear-Admiral G. W. Baird, and former Congressman Charles D. Haines, of New York. . . .

The organization of "The Guardians of Liberty" is clearly one of many efforts now being made in America to ward off what is regarded by some as the Roman Catholic "peril."

While, as a general thing, observes a writer in the Philadelphia Presbyterian, churches are not called on to interfere with each other's affairs, there are questions that affect all Christian bodies. Just now, he continues, the pressure and demands of Roman Catholicism concern all Protestants. He cites a dictum of Archbishop Ireland to the effect that the church can never come into its own until there are more Roman Catholics in Congress. He says: "With President after President distributing offices right and left to the Roman Catholic Church, with an ex-President proclaiming openly that there is no reason why we should not have a Roman Catholic President, with both great political parties working on the same line for votes, we can not wonder that the Roman body looks to the time when they will control both the secular and religious affairs of the Nation." All their organizations, he tries to show, are combining to this end. "In several States they have succeeded in making a new holiday in honor of Columbus. They are now trying to make it (and, it is said, Saint Patrick's Day) national holidays." Of nine judges in the sturdy old Puritan State of Massachusetts, "eight are said to be Romanists."—Current Literature.

What Is Humane Education?

It is the education of the heart as well as of the mind, the education that gives boys and girls a brighter outlook on life and a broader understanding of its meanings. It has its beginning in kindness to the dumb beasts about you, and its fulfillment in a civic condition the beauty of which we can not yet grasp. Humane education hopes, in time, to bring about a state where there will be a minimum of crime, of degeneracy, and of wretchedness.

It seems a far cry, does it not, from being kind to animals to developing so perfect a state as one would be in which there is a total absence of present-day crimes?

How are we to bridge the space, and what is the connection?

To begin with, every boy and every girl pictures himself or herself growing into a brave and noble man or woman. Bravery and nobility have their foundation in kindness, in gentleness and in mercy. The cry of the humane educators is, "Justice for the helpless, succor for the suffering, consideration for the weak, compassion for the unfortunate, and kindness as the corner stone of character."

KINDNESS TO ANIMALS COMES FIRST.

Can you develop these traits without being kind to the animals? No. Why? Because there is nothing more absolutely dependent upon you than are these "silent martyrs of civilization." We have tamed the animal to our use, and in taming him have made him forget the way he fought in the wilds for his food and his shelter and his rights. If we deny him these, he does without. Wild, he maintained his own rights; tamed to our uses, he is abjectly dependent.

The boys and girls who forget this dependence and neglect the animals about them, will forget every other obligation of dependent humanity. The child who is kind to an animal, because the animal is helpless, is going to grow into manhood or womanhood thoughtful of all that is helpless. The child brought up with a disregard of the feelings of the most pathetic of all things—a something unable to speak for itself—will grow into a selfish man or woman just as surely as he grows up at all.

Statistics have proved that not one criminal out of a hundred ever knew what it was to have a pet. And we all know that from one criminal many may come.

It was a study of criminal conditions which gave the greatest impetus to humane education.

Those great pioneers who were striving for the betterment of the world looked into the criminal records and determined to educate instead of to punish. They saw that the criminal descendants of one woman, the famous Jukes family, had cost the country, in seventy-five years, over one million dollars. They realized that every murder committed might have been avoided by education. They planned and they worked, and their work is spreading fast over the country, and will spread faster when boys and girls realize the beauty of the pledge of the humane workers, "Kindness, justice, mercy to every living creature."

UNCONSCIOUS REFORMERS.

You probably never thought, when you laughed at the boy who was kind to a cat, or a dog, or a horse, that that boy was unconsciously working with the great reformers of the age. You probably never thought about it at all, and you doubtless still do not see the connection between the great scope of the work of humane education and the seemingly small matter of treating animals kindly. The connection will become clearer and clearer to you as you keep in mind, first, that all education begins with the simplest and lowest, thence working upward, and that the teaching of kindness to animals is the alphabet of humane education; and, second, that the care of animals is the first practical lesson that can be given children.

At all hours of the day the streets are filled with passing animals. Have you ever paused a moment to think what these animals are doing for you, the heavy loads they are bearing, the long trips they are taking, the earning power they have for their masters? And then, do you recall that the animal, alone of all working creatures, receives no wages for his labor, sometimes not even good food nor proper physical care?

THE VISION GROWS WIDER.

If you notice this and think of this, your eyes begin to open, your mind to broaden. The things of the streets have some meaning for you now. You find yourself, as you walk, forgetting your own personal plans and selfish ambitions because there is something passing that is holding your attention.

You are learning, you are awakening.

As you grow older, the habit that was formed by noting the need of dumb beasts will be a part of your nature. Your opened eyes will see the suffering of little children in the crowded streets, and the need of the aged and infirm who cross your daily path.

The consciousness of your duty to the weak began when you felt your duty to the animals, and it has grown until now, that you are older and more responsible, you are no longer willing to sit idly by, wrapped in that most smotheringly selfish of robes, "It is none of my business." You know that it is your business, because you know that all that is helpless needs the aid of the strong, and that there will be helplessness until there is less ignorance, and that ignorance can be conquered only by education, and that the ignorance which causes suffering is the ignorance that humane education is putting a stop to.

THE COMMERCIAL SIDE.

"All sickly sentiment," you will hear some few people say. Perhaps these people do not know the commercial side of the story, and that more is wasted every year through inhumanity than is lost in wars and pestilence. We are told that hundreds of millions of dollars are annually wasted in our good United States because of cruelty to children and to animals.

Is this done purposely?

Certainly not.

It is done through ignorance; ignorance, not only of the fundamental principle of humanity, but ignorance of the fundamental principles of political economics.

We hear much talk, in these days, of "conservation." The saving of the Nation's resources is a vital question of the hour. This means the saving, not only of our forests, but of our little, helpless children and our more helpless animals. The child who is cared for makes a good citizen; the animal that is cared for gives better work.

SOMETHING BETTER THAN LAWS.

There are ignorant parents of children and ignorant owners of animals. Laws are being daily enforced to give these children and these animals their dues. We do not always want, however, to be enforcing laws; we want to teach the parent and the owner so that the punishment which law inflicts will be unnecessary. That is the reason of humane education.

One of our brilliant writers on this subject has said: "Advanced educators recognize three forms of education: the education of the past, the present, and the future—the education of the heart. Heart education or humane education—they are the same thing—is based on the recognition that the spirit of life is universal, and the form it takes, human or dumb, varies not in kind, but in expression or degree."

We want to have our share in this education of the heart. We want our lives broadened by it. We can not, when we are too young, take an active part in the work that deals with the delinquent parent, and, consequently, the wayward child; but we can do our part, no matter how young we are, by giving succor to the thing that is more helpless than we are, the dumb beasts whom our own civilization has made dependent.

HUMANE SOCIETIES POINT THE WAY.

In almost all cities the humane societies show us how we can do this work, and nearly all of these societies have their junior auxiliaries in one form or another, particularly in "Bands of Mercy." We doubt if there is a boy or girl who, having once felt the broadening effect of becoming interested in the needs of the teeming life about them, ever relinquish such interest.

It is not necessary to "meddle," as so many people will tell you. It is not necessary to do more than just your own individual share in remembering the creed of the humane educators, "Kindness, justice, mercy to every living creature."

If you remember this, you will be kind to each dumb thing that crosses your path, and if you are kind to the lowest thing that is helpless, it can not but follow that you will be kind to whatever helpless thing comes your way, be it suffering child or an aged man. Nor can you speak roughly in your home when you have remembered to speak kindly to the beasts in the street.

Nor must we think that humane education is all for the "good of the other fellow," for there is nothing that will react with quite so much benefit to your own heart and soul as your bearing in mind always that "God made all the creatures, and gave them our love and our fear,

To give sign we and they are his children, one family here."

—Louise De St. Hubert Guyol, in Young People's Weekly.

Request for Prayer.

Sister Celia W. Lull, Bozeman Montana, writes: "I beg of you who feel so disposed to fast for me on Sunday, July 7, and pray that I may be healed of tuberculosis of the lungs. I have three children to raise and have been very ill for nearly three years. I am much reduced in flesh and strength and am sure I am beyond human aid, but God the Father can restore me. His will, not mine, be done."

Letter Department

LANG, SASKATCHEWAN, June 20, 1912.

Dear Herald: Will some of the Saints living near Vanscoy or Saskatoon, or any place within a few miles of these places, write me about the land there? We want to buy land. We have one hundred and sixty acres in South Dakota we would like to trade in on a place, with the balance crop payment. Would like to get one half section anyway. Anyone who has land for sale or knows of any will please write me. I would also like to hear from some one in or near the Goose Lake country.

Your sister,

MRS. EFFIE J. DENTON.

LUCEDALE, MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Editor: I am very much afflicted with my right side. I ask the faithful Saints to pray for me that if it is the Father's will I may recover from my affliction. I am not afraid to pass over to my spiritual paradise, for I have many dear ones, of whom my mother is one, who await my arrival over there. For the sake of the Master's cause and for what good I may be to his purposes, I wish to remain. I know he chastens those whom he loves, and he is chastening me. My trials make me believe that I am doing the best I can to keep his commandments. After all, whatever he will do to me is only for the best.

I hardly ever see an elder; if I did I would have him administer to me.

It would please me to meet with the faithful of Zion.

Your sister in the one faith,

DORA BOOKER.

BEMIDJI, MINNESOTA.

Dear Herald: We have three meetings every Sunday. No one but those who have been deprived of the pleasure of Latter Day Saint preaching and social services for years and are starving for such association as you are supposed to enjoy in a branch of Saints, can appreciate the pleasure and enjoyment we receive from those meetings. I would not miss them, even as they are, for anything the world can afford, and there is room for improvement yet. Still the world has attractions for some of us, and there are those who would leave our little branch, or any other for that matter, and take the pleasures (?) of the world in preference to the sacrifices (?) of a little band of Saints. But we are aware that we will have to be tried as by fire, and if we survive the trial we will love Jesus all the more and sacrifices will be but pleasures. Few appreciate the sacrifices that were made for us, and the little pleasures of the world that we think we miss or might attain if—appear very bright at a distance. But what is this world without the glorious gospel?

Can we not show to our neighbors and associates by our conversation and adherence to the commands of the Word of Wisdom that we are not precisely as the people of the world? Would it be necessary to tell of our belief before people would know of our peculiarity if we would live up to what God has told us is his wish; although not commanded always? There are those who do not so much as know what the Doctrine and Covenants says on subjects that are or should be of vital importance to us as Saints, much less trying to put what is there into practice. I have heard remarks made by outsiders in regard to a certain thing that we fail to do that the Book of Covenants instructs us on, and it hurts me much more for any reflection to fall upon the church in any way than it would for remarks made about myself. I do not know why, but I do not care what people may say to me or about me if it is not a reflection on the church.

Can we as Saints value truth too highly? Should anyone bearing the name of Saint be so careless or thoughtless as to even pervert the truth in any shape or form, or under any consideration? There are so many ways that we sin unconsciously and where we can not seem to do as we should without adding such a thing as that to the list, when if it is simply a habit, which by a little care and watchfulness could be prevented; that is, if we desire to do so. We are being constantly watched and commented upon by friends and associates outside the church, and if we make a mistake intentionally or innocently it is recorded, to probably be used against the church. It is not ourselves such will hurt particularly, as we will probably say that it is none of their business. If that was all it would not amount to much, being only one among so many, but it is the church that suffers, for that is the first thought or statement, if we make mistakes. We should persist in the truth against all opposition, although we will be called down for it by those who condone such a habit; but we will most certainly have the approval of our heavenly Father. If we please God we please man, or rather if we always please man, can we please God? There are so many things we can dispense with that are not right in the sight of God, and so many, very many ways we sin that it seems to me we should profit by everything that we can and not commit the same thing twice. If we can not profit by what we may experience by and through others, we may never attain to the perfection, or near it, that Christ desires.

I very much desire the prayers of God's children. I know the prayers of the righteous avail much. Ever praying for the welfare of God's cause, LUCY WILLIAMS.

SEVERANCE, KANSAS, June 3, 1912.

Dear Herald Editors and Readers: We wish to bear testimony of the many blessings our heavenly Father has bestowed upon us. Although our paths lie in rough places, working by the month, and with no church privileges or social friendships, robbed by poverty of the many helpful things of life, and not in possession of the benefits of the many useful departments of church work designed by the Father for the benefit of his children, yet he has heard and answered us many times, when we were in distress and persecuted by tyrants, many of which exist, in spite of our high civilization and just laws.

In times of sickness and discouragement he has been ever ready to answer and relieve us. In 1911 we were quarantined seven weeks with the smallpox in its most violent form, including three other persons who were sharing our home. We were all stricken except our eldest son, who had been vaccinated. But by the help of our heavenly Father we were all restored to health and strength, although it took all the savings of a year of hard work and then only by the kindness of friends and neighbors, most of whom were almost strangers, (although we had lived among them for three years) were we able to receive the necessities of life. Groceries, clothing, fuel, and medicine were brought and left where we could receive it, and by the blessings of the telephone we kept in touch with the kind-hearted doctor, ever ready with advice and sympathy, and so we have but one visit of the doctor to pay for.

Dear parents, see that your children are vaccinated before attending public school, making them immune from the dreadful disease. Many parents are with vaccination like many of us are about having them baptized. We neglect them until the germs of sin have destroyed the golden opportunity. Children ought to be baptized when they are eight years of age; but baptism, like vaccination, has to take to bring results. The law of each case has to be obeyed. Some parents claim they fear vaccination worse than smallpox, and some claim they fear hasty baptism for children worse than delay. Each is right, in a way; if the proper conditions are not respected, neither is effective and may result in harm. But place the blame where it belongs; if your child is vaccinated and you do not give him the proper care the fault is yours and not that of the vaccine. The chances for such a child having the smallpox would be even worse. Consider a vaccinated person seriously sick, even if it does not seem so; do not let him be exposed, and do not let careless or curious persons meddle with the dressing. Keep the wound dressed regularly, and the arm protected by the sleeve.

If your child is not baptized at eight years of age, and is without proper instruction or understanding, the fault is with you and not with the plan of salvation. After baptism, as after vaccination, the child should have your careful, prayerful attention until he understands his new responsibilities that help him to be a useful member of the church.

Of seven children the fourth will be old enough next September, and we have tried in our weak way to instruct them in the principles of the gospel; but they have never had the opportunity to be baptized, although they have a desire to be. Our two youngest children have not been blessed because we have not seen an elder of the church for the last five years.

We feel a great responsibility resting upon us as parents, and ask an interest in your prayers that we may be faithful.

There are many kind-hearted people in this pleasure-loving, selfish community, and we hope to see the gospel preached here to give the hope of eternal life to them that are honest in heart.

Your brother and sister in the faith,
S. FRANK AND MYRTLE A. ROBERTSON.

MARICOPA, CALIFORNIA, June 9, 1912.

Editor Saints' Herald: In reading over letters of Saints, both the ones isolated and those who are permitted to mingle their voices with those striving to serve the Master, I feel it our duty to tell of the Savior's goodness to us. He has blessed our little ones in time of affliction. They were all, numbering three; sick with whooping cough at one time,—our baby being two weeks old, and the Lord, he only knows how we pleaded with him to spare her to us, praying his will be done, and she is now three months old, with perfect health.

Our next youngest child was taken ill June 4 with a high fever, having pains in her back and head, almost throwing her into convulsions. My companion called me home from work in the evening, at about 9 o'clock. She had given her consecrated oil, so I rubbed her head with oil, also had prayer for her. The following day she was up and playing around with her sister.

What would we do without the Lord's watchcare over us? I would be the most miserable of all beings if it were not for the privilege of going to him in secret and public prayer.

We have our organ, and as we sing over some of the old hymns, there comes over me a longing to be with the Saints of God. We are at present in the oil field of California, amongst worldly people, but they are as a rule very honest. I am not without trials or temptation, but as my strength is in the Savior's hand, I know he will help us to overcome, and by overcoming we gain strength ten fold.

I will ask the prayers of all, that God will speed the time when we may gather sufficient to see our way clear to be in a branch of the Saints, and that I put forth every effort to do the Master's will.

Let us be faithful, that when the Savior comes to gather his flock, our names may be on the roll call, and we be waiting with the proud answer, "I."

BROTHER AND SISTER T. E. MCKEE.

CASH, MICHIGAN.

Editor of the Herald: On the first Sunday of the month of roses and brides, even June, the people of Jehovah were gathered together in the place with the name which always makes the storekeeper glad, that is, Cash.

There was rejoicing in the camp because it was not only the decision time and the starting off on the narrow way, but it was also Children's Day, upon which day nine precious lambs, who had learned concerning the great Shepherd in the Sunday school, were led into the waters of baptism by Elders Willard J. Smith and Otto Fetting.

The meetings were very well attended, but the wet weather prevented many from being there. Beautiful words of instruction and encouragement were given by Elders William Grice, Willard J. Smith, Otto Fetting, and Goheen.

The district Religio president was here on Friday and gave a talk in the interest of Religio work, showing its many benefits. There is interest shown, but wisdom directed that no organization should be started until fall. There is a fine crowd of young people in this neighborhood, who are just in need of the Religio. Some of the people at Applegate say they will have a Religio started now before Cash does.

The children's program was finely carried out and showed the amount of energy put in by all to make a success.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Down East.—No. 3.

Returning to Boston August 18, I went to Fall River, speaking once in the Saints' church to a nice congregation; I also visited at New Bedford, Fairhaven, and Acushnet. This country and other parts of New England are being inundated with a flood of Portuguese mixed with African blood, from the West Indies, which practically creates a local race question.

From Fall River, where I was well cared for by Brother and Sister John Gilbert, I went to Providence, staying with Brother G. H. Gates and preaching in the Saints' chapel. I took dinner with that prince of chefs, Brother E. A. Fox, who is also known as a capable chaperon—those especially interested, take notice. From Providence, in company with Sister Bond and Brother H. O. Smith, I took boat down Narragansett Bay for Newport, the home of the four hundred and celebrated as a watering place. We were joined here by Brother M. H. Bond and the party spent the day in sight-seeing, at the beach, the cliff walk, the shore drive, etc. They returned to Providence and I remained until about 9 o'clock. During the trip on the steamer we passed the palatial home of Senator Aldrich, the Naval Training Station, and a number of Uncle Sam's cruisers, destroyers, and torpedo boats. The city was gay with residents, tourists, naval officers, and jackies on shore leave, and with illuminated yachts in the harbor presented a striking scene. Out Bellevue Avenue and along the shore are the homes of the very wealthy, the Vanderbilts, etc., who live in grand palaces adorned with magnificent grounds, the finest homes in America—unless the place be rivaled by the homes of the same people at Bar Harbor. The two places are the greatest in point of scenic beauty and luxurious adornment I ever saw. Wealth literally is squandered here in lavish luxury until it suggests an embarrassment of riches. Here again is a lesson indicating the necessity of a better system, the institution and administration of equality. It is coming, and the extravagance of these people in their wanton disregard of common rights and developing suffering is tending to hasten the day when there will be a better adjustment of conditions and a more equal sharing of the rights intended for "all mankind."

Taking the Fall River steamer for New York I arrived there in the morning, and by the courtesy of Brethren Nicoll and Audet, made a few days' inspection of the metropolis. I had not been in New York and the East since removing from Pittsburg to the West in 1888, and I availed myself of the opportunity to study the growth and general conditions prevailing therein, so far as time would permit, and to my advantage in better understanding of social and general conditions. The city is crowded to the extreme, and while it has a dash and swing all its own, it is undesirable as a residence place, on the whole. The old-time best residence districts are being invaded by the foreigner, and the crowded tenements and side streets reveal a sweltering mass of humanity crowded into insanitary and vice-producing quarters. From all I could observe and learn, vice and crime are rapidly on the increase in all such districts, if not in many others. The public institutions and the shipping and business districts were briefly visited, including Wall Street, the Stock Exchange, the Bronx, and other divisions. The subway runs passengers under city and river at a speed of forty miles an hour; other subways are being built to meet pressing demands. New York is a great place—for the man who has money.

Left New York August 27, steamer via Sandy Hook for Highlands, thence by train to Manasquan, New Jersey, to attend the reunion of the New York and Philadelphia District, at a point about two miles from the open ocean on a tidewater river. Here I met Saints from Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Scranton, etc., the Zimmermanns, Potts, McQuires, LaRues, Smiths, and others, including Brethren E. L. Kelley, Greene, Robley, Anderson, Angus, Hull, Hoxie, et al. It rained, harder and steadier than I ever saw it rain before, and kept it up until Thursday, but in it all the crowd was remarkably cheerful and met and got what good there was to be had from the services. The preaching and prayer meetings were of a high order; the Lord blessed the people.

Here again the young people were in evidence and their interest and general bearing were commendable. Again I was taken into their social conclaves and enjoyed about all they had in their extensive program. Making a speech in their gathering I unwittingly used their charm-word "absolutely," and by it I was hailed, dubbed, and duly received into fraternal fellowship, and suppose I will never hear the last of it, for I am yet receiving mail addressed "Captain Absolutely" at Lamoni. Bathing, sailing, crabbing, canoeing—and being dumped overboard—were among the luxuries of enjoyment. Captain Hoxie, a very celebrated and expert yachtsman invited me to sail in a boat well loaded with water, which reaching a point where the full force of the gale struck her, turned over and took me with others head-over-heels into the water. This explanation is due that readers may understand certain highly adorned tales which have appeared in the HERALD and which may appear elsewhere, in print or in recital. Bishop Kelley was wise enough to decline the opportunity of a sail, hence escaped and kept dry. However, there was not a dry eye in camp when we came ashore!

The Manasquan reunion closed its social features with a big bonfire and general good time, on Saturday night, at "the point." Speeches, recitations, songs, sandwiches, and Jersey watermelons were some of the features of that occasion. Everybody was present—after the evening meeting, and the innocent fun was much enjoyed. A moonlight sail closed the day's exercises.

I came to the city of Philadelphia with the party from that city, numbers of others accompanying us, where we had a visit of some days at the home of Bishop Zimmermann. Brethren Greene, Kelley, Fox, Brown, and Potts were members of the house party, which lasted the better part of a week.

I found a living congregation, real, live people, the church doubled in capacity by a late addition, and a united body pressing the good work to the front under the leadership of Brethren W. W. Smith and John Zimmermann. Their "summer school" had developed a widely-extended interest in our work and prospects were excellent for still greater growth in the Quaker City. The church is well located, in the midst of an industrial population, and has a good standing generally in the minds of the general public. Brooklyn, under Brother LaRue and others, is also prosecuting the summer school work to advantage. It is the intention of the Philadelphia Saints to add other features that will prove helpful to the people and thus tend to draw them to the church. It is a good work and has brought and will bring results. A young men's association, with recreation grounds, controlled by our people, is also a commendable and necessary addition. People must have recreation and our congregations will do well to supply it under proper direction and management. We are learning the wisdom of a maintained interest in "all things that pertain to life and godliness"—a comprehensive field for legitimate operation.

I was taken to the leading points of public interest—Independence Hall, with its relics of revolutionary times, including the Liberty Bell, Carpenter's Hall, the Betsey Ross house, tomb of Franklin, Old Swede's Church, 1770; the United States Mint, Wanamaker's store, City Hall, Fairmount Park, etc., and last but not least, a trip "up in the clouds," around, and down again: Ugh, that awful dip! The modern Quakers have more thrilling stunts than their forefathers ever dreamed of!

I returned home via Washington, Pittsburg, Cleveland, and Chicago. At Washington I was kindly entertained by Brother William Froyd, under whose kindly direction I made a fair tour of the city, including a trip to Alexandria and Mount Vernon. I visited the various sites and departments, including the Washington Monument, the National Museum, Medical Museum, the Capitol, the National Library of Congress, Arlington, the home of Robert E. Lee and now the National Cemetery; Alexandria, lying between the city and Mount Vernon. The city of Washington should be visited by every lover of his country. It is magnificent in adornment of massive buildings, statuary, and other works of interest and of art. Uncle Sam is spending millions upon it with a view to making it the finest capital in the world. No overhead wires are permitted, all transportation and other electrical equipment being underground, the city being kept very clean, etc. The city was laid out by Washington and Major L'Enfant, an engineer of the French Army. The finest view is from the top of the Washington Monument. Descriptive powers are too meager to more than mention various points of interest. The Union Depot, the Capitol, the general department buildings are all worthy of note. However, the Library of Congress building is worthy of special note and in itself would repay a trip to the capital. It is said to be the most beautiful, the most magnificent structure in the country. Every species of fine building material has been included and every school of art and sculpture drawn upon to make this building a thing of beauty and a perpetual delight. Tribute has been laid upon the best in mythology, art, literature, and history to enrich it and make it a national shrine for international pilgrims. The writer has feared that he did not fully appreciate some phases of the schools of art; but when he studied this building he was obliged to confess wonder and something more than astonishment. Weeks could be spent with profit in studying it alone, minus its literary treasures.

From Washington I went to Mount Vernon, via Alexandria, stopping over at the latter place to visit Christ Church, where Washington worshiped and of which he was a vestryman. His pew remains undisturbed, also the chandelier which he presented to it. The home of Lord Fairfax, with its old style brick walls, Washington's lodge room with its relics, and other points of interest are preserved. Washington is everything in that country, and the sentiment of his life and the relics around which gather his personality and history bring him into nearer perspective to the tourist.

Mount Vernon is a fine estate, situated high above the Potomac, well preserved, rich in its historic relics and setting, beautiful in everything. The home and the tomb of Washington are worthy a pilgrimage of anybody. They serve to remind the American of the crowning glories of his country: I made the return trip to the city by steamer up the Potomac. During my stay I remained with Brother Froyd, on the Virginia side, thus getting a glimpse of the Old Dominion, with its Jim-Crow cars and southern features. I met many people in the city with whom I talked concerning the faith, and to whom I sent literature. Indeed, this was a feature of my travels; for I constantly seemed to get into converse with intelligent people who gave me a kindly and interested attention and whom I believe could be reached by the truth were they in position to hear our message. Many whom we little regard as ready for our work are prepared to receive intelligent and consistent presentation, as it is our duty and privilege to make of it. Would that we had strong congregations of excellent people diffused among the cities and hamlets of the entire country! It is to be hoped that at no distant day we shall be suitably and strongly represented at the seat of the national Government. The perversion of the faith ought not to be better known than the truth of it; we are yet a feeble few, but the promise is that we shall in time be well and widely known and understood.

From Washington I came to Pittsburg, where I remained about two days with Brother Charles Fry and family. It was a matter of regret that I could not spend a Sunday in my old home city. I enjoyed the association with Brother and Sister Fry.

Thence to Cleveland, where I visited relatives and met with the Saints on Sunday, speaking three times that day, including once in the public park. I enjoyed liberty, found a united band of workers, with the local men actively at work in branch and among the public. The outlook seemed promising.

A trip to Kirtland, where I lived in 1884, and where my eldest daughter lies, was greatly appreciated. The Temple, the old cemetery, and my former home were visited, with many feelings stirred and not without comfort. I found former friends and associates resident here, Brother C. Ed Miller in charge of Temple and hotel. Enjoyed a pleasant and spiritual season with Brother and Sister J. H. Lake. Those saintly worthies were in feeble health, but rich in spirit, awaiting the end which for them can be but full of glory. Among other things which the good Spirit there declared was this, of interest to the membership in general: That the house of the Lord, at Kirtland, was reserved and that in it there would be bestowed upon the church a greater blessing than any which the church had received since the days of the early blessing; that some present would bear witness of this declaration when fulfilled. We understood it to refer to an endowment of the Reorganization. I could but feel that the Lord would build up Kirtland and make it a place where his people would gather in larger numbers; some future good seems to be implied concerning its selection, not the past alone.

From Cleveland to Chicago, where I met with the Saints on the West Side and enjoyed addressing them in a peculiar and gratifying experience. They impressed me, with their neat little chapel, as destined to advance the interests of the work in that great city.

I returned home via Iowa City, where I visited my younger son, at the State University, and there found that it is well that parents get in touch with the schools and the faculties of schools their children attend. The public has a duty to its public institutions which largely is neglected. It is helpful to the student and encouraging to his preceptors to manifest an interest in the work being done and the conditions obtaining.

At Des Moines I visited my elder son, employed in the city. I reached Lamoni, my home, on September 25, gratified to find family well, and enriched by my experiences, benefited by my trip and my labors, and in better form throughout to continue in my work as a representative of the body, after a close application to office work with but little variation for a period of about twenty-four years. I preached about fifty sermons and performed other work during my stay. The people "down East" are a success, and I hope to meet them again; as I trust it shall be my good fortune to also meet the Saints of the great West.

"Avoid the Use of Tobacco; It Is Not Good for Man."

The above is the word of the Lord to the church, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, sections 86 and 119. In their zeal and anxiety to have only those that are free from the use of tobacco to hold the priesthood, some branches and districts have passed resolutions forbidding to ordain any who use tobacco to any office in the priesthood.

In view of the fact that men have been called to the various offices in the priesthood, from the deacon to the apostle, and ordained, and their official acts approved of by the Lord, who at the time were not free from the use of tobacco, and some of them not informed (at the time of their ordination) about the Word of Wisdom and the revelation in section 119, it is unwise and reflects upon the wisdom of God in calling men to labor in his vineyard, when we pass resolutions forbidding to ordain to any office those who are called by him. If the Lord was to be governed by the wisdom and opinions of men in calling to his vineyard, he would make slow progress, and if he should wait until we reach the standard of perfection that many think we ought to have before being called and ordained, there would not be very many ordinations.

It is characteristic of man to dictate to the Lord, and because of this weakness it is claimed that man was created last. Had he been created first, he would have all the time dictated to the Creator in the creation. See the case of Ananias and Saul, when the Lord said to Ananias, "Go to Saul and lay hands upon him that he may be healed, for behold he prayeth and fasteth three days and nights." Ananias said, "Lord, I have heard much of this man; how much evil he hath done to thy Saints and he hath authority from the chief priest to bind all that call on thy name." But the Lord said, "Go thy way, for he is a chosen vessel unto me to bear my name before the Gentiles and kings and the children of Israel."

The Lord knew Saul better than Ananias did. If Ananias had had his way, he would not have gone near Saul. "He is now blind; good enough for him; let him alone!" Saul was baptized and tarried certain days with the disciples at Damascus, and straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues. (See ninth of Acts.) How true the saying of the Lord, "Your ways are not my ways."

In a certain branch a brother was called to the office of priest through the missionary in charge, (one of the Twelve). He declined to accept the call on the ground that he was not worthy. The brother missionary said, "I know that the Lord wants you to work in that office."

"Well," he replied, "you may think so, but pardon me for saying that I believe it is you and not the Lord that is calling, for had you known me as well as the Lord does, you would change your mind."

"Well, what is it that you are doing that makes you feel your unworthiness so much?"

"I use tobacco."

"Can't you stop using it?"

"I have tried."

"Well; others have been called to high and responsible positions that use the weed, but afterward they quit it."

"Well; there is something else that I do that I ought not to do, and as long as I do so I do not believe the Lord will call me."

"Well; what is it?"

"When I heard the gospel and obeyed it I was a drinking man; spent much time and money in the saloon. I quit for a while and then I got to taking one glass of beer a day. I did not do as many professors of religion do; that is, send my little boy or girl to the saloon for the beer, or go into the back door. I went in the front door, drank the glass of beer, and went home. Many of my old chums would urge me to drink with them, but I refused, and later they wished me success in my Christian work. They thought I had made great improvement and often said that I was no hypocrite. Still, I feel I ought not to be ordained."

"Listen; you are called, It is up to you as to whether you shall live a life that you shall not only be called, but chosen."

"What do you mean?"

"Jesus said; 'Many are called, but few are chosen.'—Matthew 22: 14."

"Has that not reference to those who hear the gospel and do not obey, consequently they are not chosen, and shall not have eternal life?"

"Yes; that is the popular idea; but I can not agree with it, for the saying is, that 'many are called,' not all; but in the preaching all are called to hear and to obey. In Doctrine and Covenants 92: 1 we have light on the matter, 'But behold, verily I say unto you, there are many who have been ordained among you whom I have called, but few of them are chosen.' They who are not chosen have sinned a very grievous sin that they are walking in darkness at noonday.' Noonday is when the sun is in its strength. We sin a very grievous sin when the Lord in his mercy and love calls us to labor in his vineyard, when we were so weak and imperfect, having habits that were unwise and unclean. If we continue to live lives that are not worthy of his approval or of imitation, we then sin a very grievous sin. Notice what the Lord says to his servants, who are walking at noonday, (in the light) or ought to be: 'Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation; avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.' When we fail to comply with the above, although we are called and ordained, then the church is justified in not sustaining us in our office and calling, and if we continue to be unclean or not magnify our calling, we shall not be chosen."

"You have given me light, and I will accept the ordination, and shall try to overcome, by the grace of God, all habits that are displeasing with him." This brother was later ordained an elder and was president of the branch and a spiritual worker.

Much care should be exercised in not supporting those called, who may be striving to get in line of their duty and to overcome unclean habits, for hasty moves will have a tendency to do harm. Be patient and kind with the erring and weak ones; remember that the Lord, who has been so merciful to us, expects that we should be so to one another.

I am pleased to see the progress the church is making in presenting a clean body of ministers and membership; but do not step too far by adopting resolutions that will hinder the ordination of those called, for when the Lord directs or calls we should give heed.

It is no sign that a man has not been called when he fails to develop and magnify his calling. Jesus called Judas, but he fell. Others have done likewise. See that we do not do so or cause others to become discouraged by hasty resolutions. More good has been accomplished by example and education than by hasty resolution (compulsion), for there is no honor to a person who does something because he has to. The Lord wants men to do good because they want to. Volunteers are what the Lord wants.

To admire what is admirable, to adore what is adorable, to follow what is noble, to remember any such examples that have crossed our earthly pilgrimage, that have brightened its darkness and cheered its dullness—this keeps alive before us the ideal of human nature and the essence of the divine nature. The good thoughts, the good deeds, the good memories, of those who have been the salt and the light of the earth, do not perish with their departure. They live on still, and those who have wrought them live in them.—Selected.

News From Missions

Texas.

After General Conference I labored in Latimer County, Oklahoma, until the 7th of this month. I had some good meetings while in Latimer County. Brother J. N. Simmons and I held a few days meeting near the little town of Blocker, on the Fort Smith and Western Railroad. This is a new place where Brother Simmons had preached a few times and baptized a noble man and his wife; Brother and Sister Gagees. We had fine crowds out and a fine interest. We anticipate going back there soon and renewing the effort.

On the 7th of this month I left that county for northeastern Texas. I began my work at Avery by uniting Brother J. E. Kelsey and Sister Ora Kelsoe in the bonds of matrimony. They are indeed a fine couple, and have a bright future; and we believe will be of great use to the church. Brother Kelsey is a fine machinist and has a nice home in Wilburton, Oklahoma, where he will take his bride in a few days. Sister Ora is a fine school-teacher, and an accomplished young lady.

We began meeting at Avery on the morning of the 9th with quite a good many to listen to the angel's message. The crowd increased every evening. We continued meetings until the evening of the 16th; that evening at 3 o'clock I led two into the waters of baptism, Frank Pollard and Mrs. Sorrels. When I led Frank into the water a beautiful light shone around the pool and that evening while we were having a grand prayer meeting, the Spirit being with us in great power, a sister rose up to bear her testimony. She stated that while the light was around the pool she saw a great work that the young brother, Frank, would do.

There is a great demand for work around this country. There are many noble Saints scattered over this part of the field who would make fine workers in the church if they only had a chance.

Last Sunday I superintended the Sunday school at ten o'clock, preached at eleven, baptized at three, and at four had confirmation. The Lord's supper and prayer meeting began at eight. When the day's work was done I felt like I could not do any more for a week. Next morning I arose from my bed and prepared to take a trip to another place, eighteen miles away, where I will begin meetings to-morrow evening.

I am in the work for life. Zion will soon be redeemed, and our Savior will come; and if I don't do my part of the work I will miss my reward.

Ever praying we will enjoy the Spirit in great power this year, to accomplish our work, and that thousands may be brought into the kingdom, and that we will all soon be in Zion.

Your brother,
E. A. ERWIN.

New York City; Borough of Brooklyn.

Brother John H. Hanson, of South Boardman, Michigan, gave us a pleasant call while en route to his mission to Sweden. He stayed with us for one week and preached one evening in the Swedish language to the Swedish people, there being a number in the vicinity of the church.

Arrangements are being completed for the opening of our annual Daily Vacation Bible School. The opening date is set for Monday, July 15. We are hoping the school will be successful, even above what it was last year.

In a recent publication in this city the following figures are given, showing the birth rate per 1,000 population during three years. Jewish 54.90; Italian 50.47; Negro 26.65; American 6.95. It is estimated that outside the city of New York the figures the country over stand 2.7 children born to American mothers to 4.4 of immigrant mothers. These facts are rather alarming to some who are wondering what the future will bring forth under such conditions. Another published statement says of conditions in this great city, "Almost everybody sleeps under a roof he does not own; there in a recent year 204,119 men went into jail; 7,486 were picked up for vagrancy; 53,741 applied at the municipal house for shelter; 10,000 girls began to lead disreputable lives, while 50,000 continued the life they had begun; 800 men and women committed suicide and an appalling addition was made to the 150,000 forgotten graves in the Potter's Field."

In company with some of the brethren here we visited the meeting places of the Mormons in this city. In the borough of Brooklyn they meet at 879 Gates Avenue, in a lodge hall. Here we found an audience consisting of about one dozen, most of whom were young men, missionaries just sent out in the field from points adjacent to Utah. In Manhattan we found their meeting place to be in a lodge room at 151 West One Hundred Twenty-fifth Street. Upon the occasion that we were there we heard no less a personage than Apostle Heber J. Grant. This is the man whom some of the readers of this paper will remember as having asked me some ponderous questions at a conference meeting in London, England, a few years ago. I think it very likely that he remembered me and also my answers to his queries. Nearly all present at this meeting were from the vicinity of Utah, and children, "even to the third and fourth generation of the Mormons." Many young men and women are here for educational purposes and at the close of the meeting it was announced that on the following Monday night they would celebrate by holding a dance. One elder introduced as the president of a conference, said, "As I was reading the Prophet Isaiah the other day where he says, 'Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life.'" Again he remarked, "As Paul says, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness,' etc."

Perhaps they make no pretension to knowing much about the Bible, as is evident, but they do assert that they know "that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God," also, "Brigham Young and his successors," including the present incumbent. With this statement they always conclude their testimony, and they marvel that while we believe in the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, we do not lay it down as an essential truth that man must believe in order that he may be saved. It is most too much like Mohammedanism which used the cry, "There is no God but Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet."

One of these people said that "Joseph Smith was the greatest man that ever lived, save Jesus only." They are making claims for him that no doubt would have humiliated him if such had been mentioned in his presence while he was living. No doubt he would have reminded them that his mission was to point men to the Lamb of God rather than to himself. Once the Mormon intrenches himself behind his testimony (?) he is prepared to believe all that is in any way connected with the history of the people—polygamy and all without question. As I once remarked to a young elder, saying, "Do you believe Adam to be your God?"

He answered, "Why, I never heard of such a thing!"

But, said I, "Brigham Young said, He is our Father and our God and the only God with whom we have to do."

"Well," said he, "if Brigham Young said it, it is the truth, and I bear my testimony to you that Brigham Young was a prophet of God, and if he said that Adam is God I know it is true." Needless to say, the world will not be seriously affected by such testimony.

A new book is just off the press entitled, Mormonism; the Islam of America, by Bruce Kinney, D. D., of Topeka, Kansas. For several years he claims to have been superintendent of Baptist Home Missions in Utah. Fleming H. Revell Company are the publishers of the book. In his preface the author states that the book is not aimed at the Reorganized Church. He says the Reorganized Church rejects the polygamy doctrine, and its membership is made up generally of good, law-abiding citizens. He begins his book by an effort to besmirch the character of Joseph Smith—telling that he was indolent and that the whole family was visionary and otherwise faulty. He acknowledges his indebtedness to such men as W. A. Linn, Reverend J. D. Nutting, and M. T. Lamb, all of whom have exploited their wisdom in written documents and books upon the subject. Mr. Kinney does not add any new light upon the subject, and many of his conclusions are incorrect, as are those from whom he has copied.

Our Sunday school last Sunday registered an attendance of ninety-one, it being an increase over the corresponding date of last year of about forty. Our annual picnic was held in the beautiful Prospect Park on June 15. We also held a strawberry festival in the basement of the church, for the benefit of our vacation school, on the evening of June 18.

Anyone who may read this letter having relatives or friends in this city, or any who may know of persons living here who are members or interested in the church, are requested to send the names and addresses of all such to the undersigned and I will call on them and try to persuade them to attend our services.

The writer met with an accident on the 15th inst., being struck by a street car. In these crowded thoroughfares it is a wonder more do not suffer injury. I will not attempt to explain the details of the accident here; suffice it to say I am fortunate in escaping with my life.

I have been unable to officiate in the pulpit the last two Sundays, but hope to be entirely well in a short time.

Brother Thomas Lester and Miss Margaret M. Allen were joined together in the bonds of holy matrimony, by the writer, at his residence on June 22.

Bishop John Zimmermann, of Philadelphia, and his counselors, Brethren A. D. Angus and B. R. McGuire, occupied the pulpit here on the 23d inst., making explanation of the temporal laws of the church. A good interest was manifest in the meetings.

We are arranging for an entertainment to be given by the children on Friday evening, July 12, under the auspices of the Vacation and Sunday schools and for the social benefit of both.

Brother H. O. Smith gave us a pleasant call en route to his post of service at Fall River, Massachusetts.

The Evening Sun, of June 15, and The Sunday Sun, of June 23, contain articles announcing, "War on Mormons declared," "Worldwide attack on Mormonism planned." The latter article is profusely illustrated with pictures of Joseph F. Smith, the Utah Tabernacle, Tithing House, and the cartoon of a young elder giving a tract to a young lady at the door. This "war" is to be carried on by the International Council of Women, with headquarters in this city. Our church here in Brooklyn is referred to in one of the articles—the statement is made that we do not believe in polygamy—even for that we are not much flattered.

As time goes on the people seem to be getting a better understanding of who and what we are and those who know us generally have no war to wage; anyway we are behind a good fortress.

W. E. LARUE.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, 1331 Park Place, June 24, 1912.

Cleveland, Ohio.

We send you a few lines to let you know that the campaign is well under way in Cleveland, Ohio, with Brother Richard Baldwin leading the van and the local ministry rallying about him loyally. Street preaching in order on three nights of the week and the customary park service on Sunday afternoons.

We are meeting the men from the mills and inviting them by handbills to come out and hear Brother Baldwin, who has been blessed in delivering the angel's message. We are hopeful to believe that this summer's work will result in adding some new workers to the local work and that as a consequence we shall receive new impetus in the aggressive phase of the Master's cause.

As an instance of our work locally: To-day's congregation at Wade Park numbered about two hundred strangers and a score of our own branch: compare this audience with that which followed of the fashionable East End churches with their five hundred or so listeners out of a combined membership of fifteen popular churches; they had their orchestra of ten pieces and a quartet and eight pastors of the Ministerial Association in evidence! Thus with quite a flourish they opened their season of park services; but let us see into the motive of this ministerial activity among the "hired" shepherds! From a critical examination of the past few years we have learned this, that the "union service" has been conducted with much blowing of the ram's horn at the outset each year, followed by dispensing with one or more of their regular Sunday services, which means fifteen pastors leave off their work to let one do it at the park, and as the season gets started they so much prefer one another in honor that they are conspicuous by their absence, ditto the choirs, orchestras, and quartets, until we find their "substitutes" pleading for "some one in the audience to please come forward and play the organ" (they have even condescended to use instruments and talent of the lowly local Saints, for which we think none the less of them, and we are proud to say the help was cheerfully given).

On one occasion of a recent season we heard one of their speakers announce himself as being a stranger in the city but a pastor from a prominent Chicago church who had exchanged pulpits with a Cleveland reverend, and had been invited to occupy in the park; he stated his embarrassment at standing in a strange place without one of the local pastors to present him to this congregation! Think of that for popular religion, and be glad that the gospel of the latter days has such loyal exponents among the eldership—as we have with us.

News from Branches

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Brethren Archibald and Dowker had charge of our monthly sacrament service June 2, and the Spirit's influence was enjoyed.

On the morning of June 9 Brother C. J. Remington baptized five little ones into the fold, all of the Oak Hill Branch.

At our regular branch election Brother R. Archibald was elected president, G. S. Trowbridge presiding priest, George Reeves presiding teacher, W. R. Cowlshaw deacon, G. S. Trowbridge secretary, A. W. Smith librarian, the undersigned correspondent.

The district conference convened in Lansdowne June 22 and 23. The same officers were reelected to represent the district for the ensuing term. A very busy day was spent. Services were reported to have been arranged for almost every hour during the day, and a most pleasant and spiritual time was enjoyed by the very large attendance. Among the many impressive features were fourteen baptisms, fourteen ordinations, nineteen confirmations, and one child blessed. Conference adjourned to meet in Belleville, Illinois, in September.

Our Saint Louis Sunday school held a bazaar and light lunch the evening of June 18, for the benefit of our Christmas offering. Notwithstanding very rainy weather, a fair attendance was present, and a fair sum realized.

Brethren Jenkins and Sawley have been holding nightly services here and we trust they will be blessed in their efforts for good.

Your sister in Christ,
2739 GREER AVENUE.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Burlington, Iowa.

Though the Burlington Branch has not reported for some time, it is not because interest has lagged. The attendance at the regular services has been good of late, and we are hoping will not be decreased by the approaching warm weather.

There have been a few changes in the congregation since our last report. Brother J. E. Jarvis, who served long and faithfully as branch clerk, is now permanently located in Chicago, which necessitated a change in that office at our last election.

Brother Fred Wright and family have recently moved to Burlington from DeKalb, Illinois, making a welcome addition of four to our ranks.

The Sunday school has grown considerably in proportions during the past few months,—we think largely through the efforts of our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister F. M. Cooper. Sister Cooper, since her election as home department superintendent in January, has secured a membership of over twenty in that department, while the attendance of the main school has been ranging from sixty to seventy-four or seventy-five. With all officers and teachers standing faithfully at their posts of duty, we feel that good work is being done, and are bending every effort to continue it. Children's Day was observed Sunday, June 23. The program was not elaborate, but the parts were well rendered, and after a fitting address to the children by Brother Cooper, he administered the ordinance of baptism to four of the children who had given their names,—Vida and Earl Kaestner, Lois Kunz, and Frances Duke. The confirmation took place in the evening, and also the blessing of one child, which we had expected to include in the morning's program, but which was, by request of the parents, postponed till the evening service.

Our primary teacher, who has been doing excellent work with her flock of twelve or fifteen, is now visiting in Rock Island, and reports visiting the East Moline Sunday school and having been invited to take an active part in the exercises. She wrote that she hoped to succeed, as she wanted to boost the Burlington school. Success to the Burlington boosters, wherever they may be!

The Religio has been holding its own, with some little fluctuation in attendance. Three classes have been maintained part of the time, and we hope will be regularly.

Conference Minutes.

LAMONI.—Thirty-fourth conference of Lamoni Stake was held at Lamoni, Iowa, June 8 and 9, being presided over by the stake presidency. Statistical reports were received from the following branches: Centerville, Evergreen, Graceland, Greenville, Hiteman, Lamoni, Leon, Lucas, Pleasanton, Ward, Andover, Lone Rock, and Oland. Branches not reporting were Davis City, Allendale, and Pawnee. Ministerial reports were received from the following brethren: John Smith, R. S. Salyards, J. F. Garver, J. R. Evans, G. R. Wells, M. M. Turpen, J. R. Lambert, J. A. Gunsolley, H. A. Stebbins, R. M. Elvin, Price McPeak, and Jesse Roberts. Reports were received from the Second Quorum of Teachers, Third Quorum of Priests, and Fifth Quorum of Elders. Report of the Stake Bishopric showed: Balance on hand January 1, 1912, $1,979.33; received since from various sources, $3,800.45; paid out for various purposes, $3,642.91; leaving a balance on hand June 1, 1912, $2,136.87. The stake historian reported considerable work done in his department of the work, showing the progress and development of the work in the stake. Upon recommendation of the stake high council, it was resolved that hereafter the stake hold two conferences each year, instead of three as has been our rule in the past. On account of removal from our vicinity, H. H. Gold resigned as secretary of the stake and C. I. Carpenter was elected to fill the vacancy. Upon recommendation of the stake high council, Eli Hayer was ordained a member of the stake high council by W. H. Kelley, John Smith, and Albert Carmichael. Upon request of the Third Quorum of Priests, J. W. Barr was ordained first counselor to the president of the quorum, by John Smith, W. H. Kelley, and Albert Carmichael; and Cyril E. Wight was ordained second counselor by A. Carmichael, John Smith, and W. H. Kelley. The time and place of holding the next conference were referred to the stake presidency. Preaching was by M. M. Turpen and C. E. Willey. The spirit of peace prevailed in all the sessions, which were enjoyed by those attending.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—District conference convened at Mission Branch, June 1, 1912. Conference called to order by the president of the district, C. H. Burr; he and L. O. Wildermuth were chosen to preside. Statistical reports were read from the following branches: Belvidere, Plano, Unity, Mission, First Chicago, Central Chicago, West Pullman, and Wilmington. Ministry reporting: C. H. Burr, and L. O. Wildermuth. Branch officers reporting: Thomas Hougas and Earl D. Rogers. District treasurer, W. E. Williamson, reported: Balance and receipts, $31.01; expenditures, $25.42; balance on hand, $5.59. Plano was chosen as the place to hold the next conference; the time was left to the district presidency. William Darmon and James F. Keir were chosen to fill the vacancies caused by the appointment of J. A. Tanner to another field and the resignation of Milo Ewing on the reunion committee. Bishop's agent, James F. Keir, reported balance on hand last report, $814.80; receipts, $2,292.68; expenditures, $2,706.75; balance on hand, $400.73. Jasper O. Dutton, Evansville, Wisconsin, box 76, was elected president of the district, with Jott Bronson as associate. W. E. Williamson elected secretary and treasurer; C. B. Hartshorn, librarian; O. O. Randall district chorister, with power to choose assistant; W. E. Williamson, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

SPOKANE.—District Sunday school association convened at Saints' church at 2.30 p. m. Reports were received from the following Sunday schools in Idaho: Valley 12 members, Sagle 52, Bluett 45, Spokane Sunday School in Washington 93 members. Ellensburg and Roslyn Sunday schools did not report. On motion Sister Emma Bell was elected superintendent of the home department. Interesting and instructive talks were made by Elders G. W. Thorburn and Oscar Case on Sunday school work, and along the lines of institute work. On motion the chair appointed Oscar Case, Carl Potter, and Verna Simmons as the program committee for the next convention, with instructions to take up the subject of institute work. The evening session consisted of the reading of the Sunday School Outlook by Brother Oscar Case and a program rendered by the Sagle Sunday School. Moved that we stand adjourned to meet at 10 a. m. the day previous to our next district conference. Carried. Mary Buchanan, district secretary.

Oh, the blessing it is to have a friend to whom we can speak fearlessly on any subject; with one whom one's deepest, as well as one's most foolish thoughts come out simply and safely. Oh! the comfort, the inexpressible comfort of feeling safe with a person, having neither to weigh thoughts nor measure words, but pouring them all right out just as they come, chaff and grain together, certain that a faithful hand will take and sift them, keep what is worth keeping, and then, with the breath of kindness, blow the rest away.—Dinah Mulock Craik.

Conference Notices.

District conference of the Portland District will convene at Vancouver, Washington, August 10, 1912, at 10 a. m. This date has been decided upon for the convenience of those who want to attend both the district conference and the joint reunion of the Seattle and British Columbia and the Portland districts. We would like to see the district well represented at both. M. H. Cook, president.

Convention Notices.

Far West district Sunday school and Religio convention will be held Saturday and Sunday, July 20 and 21, 1912, at Stewartsville, Missouri. All secretaries must please see that reports and proper credentials are sent in, if possible, by July 7, 1912. Miss Violet Wilke, district secretary, 420 North Seventeenth Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society of the Saskatchewan District will be held at Disley, Saskatchewan, July 18, 1912. At 10 a. m. song and social service; 11 o'clock organization and reports from officers; 2 o'clock, business meeting and election of officers; 4 o'clock, parliamentary drill; preaching in the evening. The meeting will be held at the Disley Branch. Committees will meet all trains. Everybody welcome. Mae Williams, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The Eastern Oklahoma reunion will be held from August 2 to 12, 1912, at Wilburton, Oklahoma. All that can are invited to attend. The committee will try and make you welcome. Come prepared to camp on the grounds just west of town, at Dagnan Park; plenty of good water and shade. Let us try and make this reunion a grand success. Apostle J. F. Curtis and other good speakers will be with us. Anyone desiring tents write H. R. Harder, chairman of the reunion committee. Lee Quick, J. W. A. Bailey.

A reunion will be held with Sunnyvale Branch, at Viceroy, Saskatchewan, beginning August 2 and continuing till August 4. Pasture for horses and lodging room for visitors will be provided free; visitors to bring bedding and straw ticks. Viceroy is at the end of the Weyburn extension of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, about seventy-five miles west of Weyburn; buy tickets at Weyburn for Viceroy if possible, if not visitors will be met at Ogema. All come who possibly can. E. R. Davis, secretary of committee.

Eastern Nebraska and Western Iowa Reunion Association will meet at Council Bluffs, Iowa, at what is known as Walnut Grove, from August 23 to September 1, 1912. Street car runs to grounds. Tents can be rented as follows: 10 by 12, 3-ft. wall tent, $1.50; 12 by 14, 3-ft. wall tent, $2; 14 by 16, 3-ft. 6 in. wall tent, $3.50; 10 by 13, 5-ft. wall tent, $4; 10 by 14, 6-ft. wall tent, $4.50; 12 by 14, 6-ft. wall tent, $4.50. Cots, 50 cents each; chairs, 15 cents; blankets, 25 cents a pair; pillows, 15 cents a pair. Twenty-five cents additional will be charged for setting up tents, if ordered set up, when tents are ordered. All orders to be sent to J. M. Baker, 700 West Fifth Street, Sioux City, Iowa, before August 20. Money must accompany order, as the rent of tents must be paid before tents can be secured. Branch presidents please see that this notice is presented to all your membership. J. M. Baker, for committee.

The Bishopric.

AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of the Spokane District, Greeting: I want to congratulate all who have honored the law of Christ pertaining to temporal things. We ought to be all sufficiently interested in the work, and in cooperating with the Master, to do what is required by it. The elders' families must be supplied with means from the tithe receipts, so do not forget to send in yours, much or little, as it all helps. Is your faith and love for God and his work sufficient to move you to obedience? If not, "faith without works is dead, being alone." Is your name written in the tithe book for the amount due your Creator? We preach an everlasting gospel and an unchangeable God, hence in every age and dispensation the law of tithes is taught, so it is for the gospel extension we plead, that we may comply with God's law and by obedience be rewarded in the day of judgment. Let us make up our minds to pay the tenth of our increase to the Lord, so we can reasonably expect his blessings. "Prove me herewith." Ask yourself what that means. How can you prove the truth or correctness of anything if you never try? Here is a statement: "I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3. When is the Lord bound? "Prove me herewith." Do you believe it? If so, your duty is clear.

Would you rather have all that comes into your hands and have no promise from the Lord, or pay the tenth with a consistent life in other things and have all the promises God has made to his people? We must not withhold because we find it needs effort and diligence on our part, nor because of the need of sacrifice, because the Lord says, "Gather my saints together unto me; those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50:5. We must work out our salvation according to the pattern, not some other way. "All the world and they that dwell therein are mine," the Lord says, and we especially are. If we are the Saints of God, let us wake up, if we have been asleep to our privileges and duties. We are no better than others unless we do better. Some people think because they are Saints they are all right. We are right when we keep his commandments. Do you think God ever gave an unnecessary commandment?

Real Saints must prove themselves by works and make a reasonable effort to do what the law says. Sometimes we can't see just how things are coming out, so we wait. You may wait too long and let the chance go by, like those foolish virgins did, and when you want to do it's too late. Let us have faith in God and his promises.

W. W. FORDHAM.

Spokane, Washington, S. 238 Haven Street, June 20.

To the Saints of the Saskatchewan District, Greeting: As I can not come and talk to you all personally, I thought if I would write to the HERALD, you would all have a chance to read and so hear from your humble servant. I am glad that many in the district have sustained the Bishopric and thereby done their duty to the Lord, for which he will bless you and has blessed you. Yet there are others who have done very little or nothing, and the Lord has also blessed you. Now, to all such let me say, if you appreciate these blessings, please show it by paying your tithing; that will be showing your faith by your works. Then, when you have done your duty to the Lord and stand in need of his special blessing you can ask for such with a clear conscience, knowing that you have kept your part of the covenant, and he will bless you accordingly.

Hope I may be able to meet you all in the near future.

Yours in the gospel of Christ,

J. A. BECKMAN, Bishop's Agent.

NUTANA, SASKATCHEWAN, June 18, 1912.

Notices.

Saints of the Western Kansas District, Brothers and Sisters: I would like to ask you to turn your offering over to the treasurer. Also it was voted that each Saint of said district should pay twenty cents into the treasury. This not only seems an offering but a duty to all Saints who are able. As it is now tent season, we could use our tent. We have a tent but no funds to use it with, so if you will kindly send your offering it will help the work greatly.

Yours in bonds,

PORTIS, KANSAS.

ALLEN E. PALMER.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Nauvoo District, Greeting: Having been assigned to labor among you another year, we trust each one who has named the name of Christ will see to it that they heed the admonition of the Lord to come up higher. Let each branch president see that he gets his report in on July 1, October 1, January 1, and April 1. Please read Elder F. M. Smith's notice from the First Presidency. How can we send in a report if the branch presidents fail to report? Please be prompt. Let us have a report from each local man in the district holding the priesthood, no matter how little you do report. Hy home address is Lamoni, Iowa. Please send reports as promptly as possible.

We have two new men this year. The Saints did excellently last year along the line of tithing, but this year brings new conditions and new experiences, so let each one see that he has his name on the books of Bishop George P. Lambert for the amount they owe their heavenly Father. Address Brother Lambert at Ferris, Illinois, R. F. D. 1.

Died.

ALLBRIGHT.—Emery Fred Allbright, son of Wiley and Etta Allbright, was born June 8, 1897, in the city of San Antonio, Texas; baptized October 9, 1910. He was thrown from a moving train between his home and Del Rio, Texas, and fatally injured May 4, 1912. He was picked up by another train crew that passed shortly after, and died before they could reach medical aid. His last words were those of love and devotion to his mother, asking that she might be notified. He was the only boy, and worked early and late, never faltering, to help support his mother and three sisters younger than himself. He was kind, loving, and obedient in his home, and was loved by all who knew him, and leaves a sweet memory to those who mourn for him. Funeral services were conducted by Elder John Harp. He was laid to rest amid the cries and sobs of loved ones and friends in a beautiful spot where the branches of a spreading cedar shade his little grave. His death cast a gloom over the entire community in which he was reared.

"There is no flock, however watched and tended,
 But one dead lamb is there;
 There is no fireside, howso'er defended,
 But has one vacant chair.

"He is not dead, the child of our affection,
 But gone into that school
 Where he no longer needs our poor protection,
 And Christ himself doth rule.

"In that great cloister's stillness and seclusion
 By guardian angels led,
 Safe from temptation, safe from sin's pollution
 He lives, whom we call dead.

"Day after day we think what he is doing
 In those bright realms of air;
 Year after year his tender steps pursuing Behold he's grown more fair."

BOYER.—Brother George W. Boyer died at Toledo, Ohio, June 9, 1912. Born November-9, 1866, at Washington Township, Michigan; baptized by J. Grainger, December 27, 1908. Funeral sermon preached at undertaker's rooms, on Broadway Street, and services conducted by Elder Samuel Brown. His wife died some years ago. He leaves to mourn one girl ten years old, one brother and two sisters.

BROWN.—William Riley Brown was born May 10, 1833, at Binghamton, New York, being the first son of William and Lydia Brown. He moved with his parents to Ohio when quite young. He was baptized into the old church when about fifteen years of age, near Cleveland; came to Iowa in 1860; was baptized into the Reorganization in June, 1862; enlisted in the Union Army in 1863, and served nearly three years in the Civil War. While in the service he contracted the disease that was the final cause of his death. Married Nancy Ann Marshall in 1875, who, together with four brothers and four sisters, survive him. He died at the Soldiers' Home at Marshalltown, June 17, 1912, aged 79 years, 1 month, and 7 days. Funeral at Oskaloosa, June 19, 1912, conducted by Reverend J. D. Guthrie. Interment in the Forest Cemetery.

BRADLEY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, June 17, 1912, John R. Bradley, aged 71 years, 3 months, and 7 days. He was born in Lincolnshire, England, in 1841; came to America in 1849, and married in 1867, in Jones County, Iowa. He is survived by his wife and five sons and daughters, all of whom were present at his funeral. He was baptized in 1878 by J. S. Patterson and continued in the gospel faith; he lived an honorable life. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by A. S. Cochran and R. M. Elvin.

BARRY.—John D. Barry, after an illness of eighteen months passed away peacefully at his home in Berkeley, California, June 11, 1912, at the early age of 28 years, 6 months, 12 days. Sister Maud Peat Barry is left as his bereaved wife with two children; one brother also survives him. Funeral services at the home on June 13, J. M. Terry preaching the sermon. The remains were cremated.

NESSER.—Sister Sarah Elizabeth Ray Nesser, born March 7, 1849, in Indiana; married to John Nesser, April 10, 1883; four children were born, three daughters and one son; three have died, leaving one daughter, Mrs. Ora Myers and her son to mourn the loss of a kind and faithful mother. Sister Nesser died April 20, 1912, at the home of her daughter at Cameron, Missouri. She was baptized in Stewartsville, Missouri, 1881. Services in charge of N. V. Sheldon, at the Saints' church; sermon by William Lewis. She was laid to rest in the Cameron cemetery by the side of her husband, who preceded her thirty-nine days. They were both faithful members and took pleasure in speaking in favor of the faith.

Isn't Your Vacation Just About Due?

I don't think there ever was a time when so many people were thinking about and planning vacations as right now. There seems to be something in the air which makes everybody long to pack up and go away awhile.

The tourist fares are very attractive this summer, too. There are rates to the West, rates to the North and rates to the East. Liberal stopover privileges and long limits.

I wish you would come in and see me when you are planning your trip; tell me where and about when you want to go and I'll give you a good deal of help. It's my job with the Burlington Route to see that all travelers are well taken care of. I'll gladly answer your questions, tell you when reduced rates start and take most of the detail off your mind.

THE NAME OF THE CHURCH.

Shakespeare propounds the question: "What is in a name?" He then affirms: "That which we call a rose, by any other name would smell as sweet."

That may be true regarding the rose. A change of name would not rob it of its perfume or beauty. Yet there is or should be an eternal fitness in all things. If we were to apply the term "Skunk Cabbage" to a beautiful Gold of Ophir rose it would be both inappropriate and offensive. In like manner many of our people object when the name Mormon is applied to the church. It is to them both inappropriate and offensive. In its best sense it stands for a man, one of the writers of the Book of Mormon, or for the Book itself; and the church is in no sense a man-made church to be called after the man Mormon, nor is it founded on the Book of Mormon, to be called after the book. In its worst sense it suggests an institution in the West with which we do not care to be in any way confused.

Some one has said, "A nickname is the heaviest stone the Devil can cast at a man."

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST.

The official title of the church is "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." The most important and vital part of that title is, "The Church of Jesus Christ."

Some people affirm that Jesus never established a church. To them he is a great social reformer, not a church builder. But he himself said: "Upon this rock I will build my church." And the Scriptures show that he did fulfill this promise.

Some have thought that the church should be called "The Church of God," because that term appears twice in the New Testament. They quote the language: "To feed the church of God" (Acts 20:28); but if the entire passage is read it explains itself, "The church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Jesus is the one who has purchased the church with his own blood. It is his; the church being the bride, the Lamb's wife.

In the Book of Mormon the principle is laid down that those who belong to the church should take upon them the name of Christ, and those who will not do so are not his. In the Book of Alma (chapter 21) it is said that the true believers were known as "Christians" among those who did not belong to the church, but they themselves took upon them the name of Christ, or as stated in Mosiah (chapter 9), were called the church of Christ. It is fitting and right that as a recognition of his divinity the church should bear the name of the one who said he would build it, our Savior, our Redeemer, our Lord, even Jesus Christ, the only name "under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." While the disciples of the church in Jerusalem called themselves after Christ, thus taking upon them the name of Christ, they did not call themselves "Christians." As is the case of the church on this continent, that was a name given by nonbelievers, not adopted by the church, and first applied to them in Antioch (see Acts 11:26).

The term "Church of Jesus Christ" is more definite, appropriate, and biblical than the name "Christian Church."

SAINTS.

At the annual dinner of the New England Society, 1889, Henry L. Wayland facetiously defined the word saint: "A man with convictions, who has been dead one hundred years; canonized now, cannonaded while living."

It is generally supposed that to be a saint one must be dead. If that were true we could not qualify—not yet—we will all qualify presently. But we know of nothing to indicate that God recognizes "deadness" as a necessary adjunct of sainthood. The saints addressed in the New Testament were all living saints, only in the sense that they were dead to sin.

So far as convictions and cannonading are concerned we may qualify. A certain eccentric British inventor some years ago invented a gun that would fire either round or three-cornered projectiles. When applying for the patent he specified that the round bullets were to be used in killing Christians while the three-cornered ones were for Mohammedans. He thought that anything was good enough for Mohammedans, but some consideration should be shown toward Christians. Latter Day Saints, being regarded as legitimate prey, there being no "closed season" for them, and no commonly accepted rules of fair sport to be observed in their extermination, have been fired at with all kinds of projectiles, round, square, and three-cornered, ranging from the little BB's fired by little D. D's, to the enormous fourteen-inch mud balls exploded by Clark Braden and others, and the more deadly leaden pellets that helped to fill that old well with murdered Saints at the Haun's Mill Massacre.

The fact is, that the word saint does not mean a perfect and glorified individual who has long been dead and is now canonized. It was applied to members of the Church of Jesus Christ in all ages of the world. One has but to glance through the New Testament to discover how often it was applied to living members of the church. "To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints."—Romans 1:7. "To the saints which are at Ephesus."—Ephesians 1:1. "To thy saints at Jerusalem."—Acts 9:13. So it runs, not only in the New Testament but also in the Old Testament, the name appearing nearly one hundred times.

Paul puts it thus: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone."—Ephesians 2:19, 20.

Not wishing to be foreigners and strangers, we accept our fellowship with "the saints," and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, and accept Jesus Christ as the chief corner stone.

While the church is known as the Church of Jesus Christ, the members are called Saints, as of old; they never having been termed Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, what not, in the days of the apostles, but rather saints.

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

The term Latter Day Saints would be appropriate in these days in any event, to distinguish the Saints of to-day from the saints of former days. These are certainly "latter" days, as compared with the "former times." But the term has a deeper significance, expressing our belief that these are the last days, the days immediately preceding the second coming of Christ and the destruction of the wicked.

Those who do not accept this view should read Paul's characterization of the "last days," found in 2 Timothy 3:1-6; and the predictions made by others of the prophets and Jesus himself regarding the signs of the last days.

As the budding fig tree indicates the approach of summer, and the color of the evening sky gives promise of the weather to be, or the dawning of light in the east presages the approach of day, so do the signs of the times speak to those who can understand them. Others, with eyes upon the ground, hasten on, thinking that as things have continued "since the fathers fell asleep," so they shall continue, refusing to heed any warning until swift destruction comes upon them.

The trend of events in the political, industrial, and religious world, the unfolding of affairs, the character of the people, the signs of the times, all confirm us in the belief that these are the "latter days" spoken of so often by the prophets. So we may regard the term "Latter Day Saints" as explanatory, qualifying the vital part of the title, "The Church of Jesus Christ," in such a way as to designate the character of the membership and the dispensation or period of time.

"REORGANIZED."

Lest we be accused of dodging a part of the issue, we will briefly notice the one remaining portion of the name, the prefix, "Reorganized,"—"The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

In view of the fact that the church became disorganized during the Dark Ages, and was restored and reorganized in these last days, there is nothing inappropriate in the use of the term; but of course it has another significance, acquired from the fact that there most surely was an apostasy and departure from the faith, with a corresponding disintegration of the church organization during the years 1844 to 1852.

Probably our friends in Utah will be the only ones to seriously challenge our use of the prefix, "Reorganized," as they have done, stating that it in itself is a "give away," showing us not to be the original church. To the contrary, the term "reorganized" indicates that it is composed of the original elements of the old. They themselves have claimed to reorganize the church, so that the debate should not be over the necessity of reorganization, but as to which is indeed composed of the original elements of the old.

They began to teach reorganization very soon after the death of Joseph Smith the Martyr.

Parley P. Pratt claimed that he received from some spiritual source the following instruction, only a very short time after the death of Joseph Smith:

Go and say unto my people in Nauvoo, that they shall continue to pursue their daily duties and take care of themselves, and make no movement in church government to reorganize or alter anything until the return of the remainder of the Quorum of the Twelve.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 371.

Some time thereafter, as early as December 23,

1847, at Winter Quarters, Brigham Young and his associates issued a general epistle in which they said:

We now, having it in contemplation soon to reorganize the church according to the pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch, feel that it will be the privilege of the Twelve, ere long, to spread abroad among the nations.—Millennial Star, vol. 10, p. 86.

This work of reorganizing was carried forward in the various quorums, from the First Presidency down, so far as it could be carried among those who followed Brigham Young. Parley P. Pratt says:

February 12, [1848].—I met in council with the First Presidency and members of the Twelve, in which certain vacancies in our quorum were filled. We were then instructed to assist in reorganizing the different quorums here, and in establishing righteousness.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 407.

Nor was this work confined to the membership in Utah. Under date of August 28, 1851, Parley P. Pratt wrote from San Francisco to Brigham Young, concerning the church at that place:

We have rebaptized many of them, and have reorganized the church.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 432.

Brigham Young carried this work so far that he caused himself, his fellow officers, and the membership in his following to be rebaptized, reconfirmed, and reordained, after they had reached the Salt Lake Valley. The following is from Wilford Woodruff, at one time president of their church:

We soon repaired to the water, and President Young went down into the water and baptized all of his brethren of the Twelve present. He then confirmed us, and sealed upon us our apostleship and all the keys, powers, and blessings belonging to that office. Brother Heber C. Kimball baptized and confirmed President Brigham Young. . . . On the next day (Sunday, August 8) the whole camp of Israel renewed their covenants before the Lord by baptism.—Life of Brigham Young; or, Utah and Her Founders, pp. 180, 182.

It is not our purpose in this editorial to raise or discuss the much mooted question of succession; but simply to explain and defend to a certain class of objectors our use of the word "reorganized." Necessity has made it a legitimate part of the title. Both leading claimants to the successorship in the latter day work have admitted the need of reorganization. It is too late to dispute that need. We are perfectly satisfied as to which is indeed a reorganization of the elements of the old church and doctrine, and which is an attempted amalgamation of some parts of the old doctrine with new, strange, and antagonistic doctrines, with a membership and priesthood dating back only to a new baptism and new ordination.

Briefly to recapitulate: First, the church on earth having at one or more times during the history of the world lapsed into a disorganized condition, as prophets predicted, it is perfectly proper and logical to speak of the church to-day as having been "reorganized." Second, the members of the church are recognized by the Lord in his inspired record as saints, and the era in which we live being the last days, and the approach of our Lord and Savior drawing near, it is perfectly proper and logical to speak of the members of the church as "Latter Day Saints." Third, the church having been built upon the rock by Jesus Christ, and having been purchased by him with his own blood, it is perfectly proper and logical to call it "The Church of Jesus Christ." Hence we must conclude that the name in its entirety is logical and scriptural. ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

MEMORIAL SERVICE.—An interesting memorial service was held at Independence on Thursday evening, June 27, in honor of the sixty-eighth anniversary of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Those taking part as shown by a program sent us, were Brethren E. C. Briggs, E. L. Kelley, M. H. Siegfried, F. M. Smith, Sister F. M. Smith, and President Joseph Smith.

PRACTICAL PAPERS.—A feature of Autumn Leaves for July is an article by Sister Vida E. Smith on the subject, "The young woman who must make her own way in the world." This is one of a series of "practical papers" of like nature running during the entire year. Parents should place this kind of reading within reach of their children. Another interesting feature of this number is a "travel sketch," an account of a missionary trip through the great State of Montana, by Elder D. R. Baldwin, profusely illustrated. Inez Smith also continues her Biography of Alexander Hale Smith; and the Editor's Corner has another "John Howard Story."

AN IMPORTANT AND INTERESTING SERIES OF ARTICLES.—We expect next week to begin the publication of a series of articles on "Dealing with the erring," prepared by Elder Charles Fry, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. There will be eight of these papers, the subjects arranged in logical order. The subjects in their order are: "Offenses," "Labor," "Repentance," "Confession," "F o r g i v e n e s s," "Charges," "Trial," "Penalty." Our readers are all invited to give this series a careful reading.

POINTED.—Brother LaRue writes the following crisp letter to the New York Evening Sun:

"WAR ON MORMONS.

"To the Editor of The Evening Sun; Sir: I notice by statements which appear in The Evening Sun that a 'war on Mormonism' has been decreed by the International Council of Women, and further that a 'worldwide attack on Mormonism' is planned.'

"I observe that your informant incidentally refers to my church, located at Park Place and Schenectady Avenue, and to myself as its pastor as being a 'branch of the Mormon Church.' Permit me to say that while the official name of our church is 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' it does not recognize the name 'Mormon' as applied to our church as an official name. In other words, people may call us by any name they may choose but they will never call us 'Mormons' by our consent. Not that the word 'Mormon' is a bad word, but it is commonly accepted as synonymous for polygamy and polygamists.

"Your informant very correctly and properly states that my church rejects the polygamy or 'plural marriage' doctrine. In such a concession to us I do not feel flattered, for no true Latter Day Saint—in other words no true observer of the teachings given to the world by Joseph Smith, jr., ever believed in polygamy. It is the plain perversion of his teachings by the scoundrel Brigham Young and others that has brought shame and disgrace upon that which is the cleanest, holiest, and purest religion in the world.

"Some, who know much better, for purely prejudicial reasons will class my church with the Mormons of Utah, while in fact it has not the least thing in the world to do with them and does not hesitate to announce its unyielding opposition to their corrupt teachings.

"WILLIAM E. LARUE."

BROTHER LARUE AGAIN.—This brother again deserves attention because of his success in securing recognition in the papers of greater New York. The Brooklyn Daily Eagle for July 1 contains a review of the brother's sermon of the previous Sunday. It was the anniversary sermon on the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, and was a splendid exposition of our position and defense of the Martyr.

CHILDREN'S HOME.—We call special attention to the article concerning the Children's Home in this issue by Bishop Joseph Roberts, of the board of directors of the institution.

DELOIT ANNIVERSARY.—We are in receipt of an illustrated post card advertising a semicentennial celebration. This branch was organized July 5, 1862, and has a most interesting history. The special services are announced for July 12 to 14. Elders Heman C. Smith, Charles Derry, and C. E. Butterworth are to be the principal speakers.

A new definition of friend was given by a Manchester schoolboy the other day in an essay: "A friend is a person who knows all about you, and likes you just the same." If there is anything more to be said on the subject we can't imagine what it may be.—Century Magazine.

Life's Purpose.

There is no doubt that we are here

To do the work God wishes done;

For some wise purpose, have no fear,

God put life's breath in every one.

We are not born haphazardly

To drift like chips upon the seas,

It matters not what task is mine,

Nor what the work you're called to do—

Behind it is the will divine

That governs things for me and you.

Each of us now is at his post

Exactly where he's needed most.

He who is delving in the ditch

As much God's soldier is as he

Who passes by; immensely rich,

And gives large sums to charity.

The humble and the great 'are just Fulfilling God's especial trust.

And so, contented with our work,

Along life's road we ought to plod,

Fulfilling God's especial trust.

Our sin is in deserting God.

We ought not willingly to rest

Until we're sure we've done our best.

Address to the Ocean.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue ocean—roll!

Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain;

Man marks the earth with ruin—his control

Stops with the shore;—upon the watery plain

The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain

A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,

When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,

He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan;

Without a grave, unknell'd, uncoffin'd, and unknown.

—Lord Byron.

If on this path which leads from dark to light,

You meet one soul who knows and understands,

Who sees the work you mean to do, demands

That you live up to what in love's clear sight

You're meant to be—what matters else beside?

Others may chance along your road, and praise,

Or scoff and scorn, then go their various ways—

Your one soul stays, content but to abide.

Not critic, but appreciating friend,

Whose loyal faith is like a lambent fire

To touch with flame the slumbering desire

In each of us to shape life to some end.—Selected.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL WORK.

An address delivered at Independence, Missouri, April 12, 1912, by William E. LaRue, of New York City.

Extracts from the constitution of the Daily Vacation Bible School Association:

Object: "The object of the association shall be to promote the welfare of children of all races by developing church and college ministry to them, by bringing together in mutual service, idle children, idle churches and idle students, by establishing to this end Daily Vacation Bible Schools in every community and in every communion, by securing the service of students fitted to this ministry and scholarship funds for their support, and in general by doing all things necessary for the furtherance of these objects."

As I understand the object of this meeting, it is, that you may be able to get some idea, in the few remarks that we may make, of the purpose and the scope and the results of the Daily Vacation Bible School work. That you may understand it from the very foundation, we will explain that it came into existence because of three different conditions, that everywhere exist in the hot summer season of the year. Not only are these conditions found in the large cities, but they exist everywhere throughout the country. These conditions might be summarized as follows:

Idle children; idle churches; idle college students.

With that suggestion you may say, But our churches are not idle during the summer time. My experience has been, and I think it will be attested by a great many of us in this audience, that as a rule, the courage of the churchgoer wanes, during the hot and oppressive season in summertime, so that the activities around about the church are nothing like what they are in the winter time.

The Daily Vacation Bible School Association came into existence with the idea of creating an activity where it was found that these three points of inactivity were centered, and to serve as a helping ministry to thousands and tens of thousands of little children that are scattered broadcast on the streets. In the public schools the subject of religion is not taught, and it is thought to be a practical thing, that during the summer season these little children could be gathered together in our churches and taught helpful lessons, by college students especially, and by others as they might be able to give their time to that work, and thus impart to those little minds principles and truths that have a bearing on every phase of life; physical, moral, and spiritual. Thus you will see the scope of the school is very broad in its application, and it is very far-reaching in its effects.

We are going to save the best wine until the last of the feast to-night. Brother Walter W. Smith, as has been stated, is the pioneer mover in this church, in this work. Twelve months ago I knew nothing whatever about it. So, I am going to tell my experience in connection with it.

When I went to New York, last year, some of the brethren there said, "Can we have a vacation school here, Brother LaRue?" I said, "I know nothing about it." They suggested that I had better get on the train, and run over to Philadelphia, and have a talk with Brother Smith; so I did. And he sat down there one hot day last summer, and talked to me the whole forenoon about this school, and told me, if I would just have the grit and courage to do it, I could move out in Brooklyn, and organize and conduct a successful school. I got a great deal of inspiration from my talk with him that day. I went back to New York, went over to Manhattan to the national officers of this institution, and they told me about how successful Brother Smith's schools had been in the years previous, and said if I could have a school anything like as successful as his had been, they would be only too glad to render me any help possible to make the school a success.

So, I was encouraged to try, and went back to Brooklyn, and we had a meeting of the church, and talked about the question. Can we meet the expense? Can we find teachers who will conduct this department, and that department? We began to look around. The people in the church began to get interested. We began to look for somebody to take charge of the industrial work in the school, somebody for the musical department of the school, somebody to superintend the kindergarten, and I want to say our efforts were very liberally rewarded, and we had a staff that we picked up, members of the church there, that was second to none in the whole city of New York. There was not a college student among them. Just some good people with good hearts, ready to do something for the little children in that neighborhood. Then we got a big sign and put on the church announcing, "Daily Vacation Bible School, opens here on the 10th of July, bible stories told, good singing, weaving hammocks, making baskets," etc.

The children used to go by the church to look at that sign and read it, and they saw there an invitation to all of them to come. Some of the doubting Thomases said, "Oh, you will not get any Catholics to come, they won't come, but the boys and girls looked at that sign, "weaving hammocks and making baskets," and on the appointed day of registration they came. And the first one to come was a Catholic lady with two little Catholic girls, the first ones to put their names on the register, and before we got through we had 156 Roman Catholics enrolled in our school.

One day while busy at our work, these children all around, a dozen of them asking me at once for a needle or some twine, or for some paper, or, Cut this string, Mr. LaRue; Tie this knot, Mr. LaRue, I heard one little girl say to another, "This is the first time in my life I was ever in another church besides the Catholic church." Never was in another church in her life. I thought to myself, If the Daily Vacation Bible School has served no other purpose in the world, it has served to bring all those children out from that creedbound condition, which is almost impossible to break into, and has brought them for once in their lives into another church, and thus helped to create the spirit of tolerance and liberality and broadmindedness. We had a little bit of difficulty with some of the people, owing to the fact that the Catholic priest came right down from the church which was in the neighborhood, and took some of the boys by their coat collars and marched them home to their mothers, and plead with them not to let them come back. But the boys would sneak in the back door. We had something they wanted.

One of the little boys said to me, one day we were finishing up some hammocks, and while we were there sweating and working, and trying to tie those knots, "Mr. LaRue, I am not going to go to confession any more. I want to tell you, Old Father —, (meaning the priest) is getting too fresh."

One little girl said to me one day, "Mr. LaRue, what kind of a church is this, anyway? It isn't a Catholic church, is it?"

I said, "No."

"Well, then, is it a Presbyterian?"

"No, it isn't a Presbyterian church."

"Well," said she, "what kind of a church is it?"

I said, "Did you read the sign outside which says, 'Church of Jesus Christ'?"

She said, "Well, what kind of a church is his church?"

I said, "I am just going to tell you what kind of a church his church is: You know when Jesus was to stand up and tell those children morning after morning stories from the Bible; there they sat with eyes and ears open, listening to every word I said, and they would talk about the things I would tell them in those stories, and it touched my heart as much as anything I ever did in the ministry of this church.

Just to illustrate to you how we would tell the bible stories. We will say, for instance, the subject is, The parable of the good Samaritan. We will have some boys and girls that will act out this story. Who will act it out? we ask. Up goes every hand. Well, I can't take all of the boys, not all the girls, but we pick out some of the boys and girls that behave the very best, and the ones that do the best are the ones we choose.

Our own church and school, Park Place and Schenectady Avenue, Brooklyn, New York.

here, he went about among the people doing good. That is just what we are trying to do for you. We are trying to do good toward you. Do you think we are accomplishing it?"

"Why, certainly you are," she said.

Then I added, "That is the kind of a church it is." And that brings to our attention the fact, that the Church of Jesus Christ is a great social organization, and its work is to minister to that social need that is found especially among little children. We should not feel as some did in the time of the Master,—like the apostles who forbade them to come into the presence of the Master. He said, "Forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." I want to tell you that because of my work there in New York my heart has been made more tender; and I never ministered to anybody in my life the service of which was more of a pleasure than it was for me

Now, the first thing, a man went down to Jericho, and he fell among thieves. I want to find that man. Well, one boy goes down to the back door. Now, I want a couple of thieves; at least a couple to act like thieves; so they go down and hide under the seat. Here comes their man, up jump the thieves, and act like they had half killed him, and he falls wounded in the way. Then along comes the priest, and passes by.

The boy comes along, imitating him; he never did such a thing before, but he will come along with that proud air, dignified, and stiffnecked, and turns his head and looks at him, and just passes by. Then comes along the Levite, and sees the wounded man; but he just passes by. Pretty soon here will come along the good Samaritan. He will see him. He will have compassion. He picks him up and carries him to the inn. Here we get a couple of girls and boys to be inn keepers, and they put bandages around his head and bind up his wounds and care for him. And there is a lesson impressed upon the minds of those children that time will never be able to efface from their memory; worked right out there in living characters; worked out by them, and observed by the others in the room.

Another way we would tell bible stories. Ideas had to come pretty quick, sometimes, and this is the idea that struck me this time. I took three timbers 2 by 4, and nailed to the floor of the church, making a square inclosure; then we got three or four barrels of sand and dumped it in, smoothed it off, and we could draw a map of Palestine, the rivers and the mountains, and tell the story of the Garden of Eden. While I was telling these stories, some of the children tried to climb on my back, some lay down to see, and I don't believe they will ever forget those things impressed upon them there.

Now, as stated by Brother Greene, the enrollment of the school was 312. Of these 156 were Catholics, 114 Protestants, 25 Latter Day Saints, and 17 were Hebrews. Every day brought in new faces. I would take a basket and go out down the street and come to a bunch of boys, and would say, "Good morning, boys." They would look up at me and I would inquire, "Say, would you boys like to learn how to make a basket like this?"

They would ask, "Where do you go to make that?"

"Up here at the church where you see the sign and the big flag; you come up and we will teach you how to make a basket, and when you get through we will give it to you."

Well, we made 47 large hammocks, that would hold up the biggest man in this audience, and we had them strung up in the church, and the raffia work, with all the different colorings on display.

Mrs. Boville, wife of Doctor Boville, the head of the Daily Vacation Bible School Association, said we had the prettiest room of all the schools of the kind in the whole city of New York. That our building was the prettiest decorated building of all.

Then we had our teachers' conference, the teachers of all the twenty-seven different schools in New York would get together, in the Church of Incarnation in Manhattan, and would talk over the work, and how to manage, and how to interest the children, and what to do to keep up the interest.

They have a few schools of this kind in Kansas City, so that if you people here in Independence or Kansas City make up your minds you want to run this kind of a school you have only to get in touch with these people in Kansas City and they will no doubt join heartily with you. This is a work for people of all creeds, or no creed. I am proud to say that out of the twenty-seven schools in New York our school held the tenth place, and it was our first season. It was a great deal better than some of the schools that had been running for three or four summers, and we got very hearty commendation and approval of the officers of the association.

This work, we feel, is an indirect means to be employed by the church for reaching little children.

As I go around about the church in Brooklyn, it is very common to hear some friendly little voice call, "Hello, Mr. LaRue; hello," and a happy smile is on the face of the child that salutes me. It has overcome a great deal of prejudice, and some have come to church, and there is not a greater factor, a greater power working to combat the prejudice the people have against our church in the neighborhood than this very thing of the bible school work. A gentleman of the Catholic Church, a very strong Catholic, came to our meeting the night of our commencement. He said, "I am a Catholic, but I most heartily approve of this work. You have kept the children off the streets, and have taught them many things necessary and useful."

For instance, here is a little verse of a song, they learned:

"Hearts like doors can ope with ease,
To very, very little keys;
And don't forget that two are these,
I thank you, sir! and, If you please!"

The children sing it over and over and they remember it. They remember that it is proper to say, "Thank you, sir," and "If you please."
