CHARACTER SKETCHES OF JESUS.

II.—HIS CONSECRATED PURPOSE AND SELF-SACRIFICE.

Do you think Jesus was poor of necessity, or from choice? Did he confine himself to a "ministerial allowance" most rigorous and dress in a single seamless garment because he had no ability or ambition to get out and earn position and riches?

It was a part of his program, voluntarily undertaken, to consecrate everything to the service of his Father. He required nothing of others that he was unwilling to do himself. He taught no principle that he did not honor.

It was and is a part of his program that his ministry shall forsake the affairs of business and go out upon their mission work, giving their time and strength to building up the kingdom of God and establishing his righteousness. His other disciples, those not of the traveling ministry, men of affairs and business, in a different way accomplish the same end by consecrating of their surplus earnings to the Lord to use in the same great work, as he may direct. The process is different; the principle is the same.

Was it any greater sacrifice for the rich young man to give his actual riches to the Lord than it was for Jesus to sacrifice the potential wealth that he might have had? Is it any harder to-day for the business man to give up his actual dollars than it is for the minister to give up the potential dollars that he might have possessed had he continued in business instead of taking the field? One consecrates his earnings; the other his earning powers.

Jesus gave up the riches that he might have had; he asked the rich young man to give up the riches that he did have. But the young man went away sorrowing, unwilling to do his share, willing that Jesus should do it all. How is it with us to-day?

Early in his career, just about as he was to begin his ministry, the Devil tempted him, showing him the kingdoms of this world and the glory thereof, and affirming that they might be his on conditions. Do you think that those houses and lands and riches and honors had no appeal for Jesus? Would they not appeal to you? We are told that Jesus was like us, and subject to our desires. But he resolutely put the temptation away, and then and there chose to consecrate his life and serve God, in poverty if need be.

Thus it came about that when he died no real estate was left in his name. His personal property consisted of a seamless robe over which the soldiers quarreled. He even went without a home. If we imagine that he would not have appreciated a home, let us read that sad lamentation uttered perhaps at a time when he was melancholy and despondent, as all sensitive minds are at times: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

He slept in the open on occasion, and at times dined on uncooked grains gathered from the fields by the roadside. He demanded no salary and never extracted a promise of a certain sum before going to a particular place to preach. How unlike some of the sectarian clergy who must be assured of a fixed salary of goodly proportions. How unlike others who contract to lecture in any given place a certain number of times against the Latter Day Saints for a certain sum of money.

Like Jesus, many of the ministry early in their careers face this question of renouncing riches. Some indeed are induced to believe that they should plunge into the world and accumulate wealth first, and then take the field. In most cases that is the end of the mission. The dream never materializes.

It is not likely that Jesus disposed of this question once for all, and that the temptation never returned. Probably he met the issue at other times. When the multitude escorted him to the temple, casting palm branches before him and singing his praises, he had but to change his policy and become a temporal ruler with an army fashioned after worldly armies in order to set himself up as king of the Jews. The chance that he might break the Roman bondage and set up a kingdom rivaling in splendor that of David must have occurred to his astute mind. If so, the idea was rejected.

At times he dined with worldly people of influence.

He could easily have used them as stepping-stones to prosperity. Instead he invited them to share his humility in this world and prospective glory in the world to come. No doubt the rich young man would have gladly given him a purple robe and a ring and a house and lot in Jerusalem. He would have considered that within reason; instead, however, of asking for a single personal gift for himself, Jesus asked him to consecrate all to God for the care of the poor and the prosecution of the work,—and that the rich young man considered beyond reason.

The ministry of Jesus was a perpetual sacrifice. His life is one continued exhortation to us to consecrate our lives to the Lord. He asks us to do no more than he did himself, and in many instances, far less. To respond with a half-hearted devotion is possibly worse than to refuse to respond at all.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND PROHIBITION—THE DEALER'S VIEWPOINT.

[Discussing the propaganda for the national prohibition of the manufacture, transportation, and sale of spirituous liquors as a beverage, the National Liquor Dealers' Journal for September 10, as a leading editorial, submits the following. This matter is of especial interest with reference to some of the evils of the liquor traffic, since it is presented from the viewpoint of the dealer.—EDITORS.]

It is always best for normal people to look at things as they are; reality may be obscured to the sick or feeble-minded in certain circumstances, but deception is a poor evidence of friendship; partisanship with blinded eyes only leads the way to ruin; and self-deception is the worst of all. Let us look at things as they are, and in face of the enemy dare to consider and concede his strength. Knowing his plan of battle we can better arrange our forces for his defeat; rightly estimating his strength we can better provide to meet it.

The prohibition fight henceforth will be nationwide; and contemplates writing into the national Constitution a prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages. To accomplish this result will require the ratification of thirty-six out of the forty-eight States of the Union.

Of these nine are already in line through state prohibition—Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina, West Virginia. The last five have been added within a period of six years. In addition to these there are eighteen States in which a major part of the people live in territory made dry by local option, and in which we may be assured prohibition sentiment predominates. If the people in these States who are opposed to the liquor traffic demand it, their legislatures will undoubtedly ratify a national amendment.

The most influential argument against prohibition is that it is not effective; that "prohibition don't prohibit." This is not basic or moral; the fact of failure to enforce is no argument against even the expediency, much less against the moral issue involved.

Ultimately all questions must be settled by moral standards; only in this way can mankind be saved from self-effacement. The liquor traffic can not save itself by declaring that government is incapable of coping with the problem it presents; when the people decide that it must go, it will be banished.

We are not discussing the benefit or justice of prohibition; but its possibility, and its probability in present circumstances. To us there is, "The handwriting on the wall," and its interpretation spells doom.

For this the liquor business is to blame; it seems incapable of learning any lesson of advancement, or any motive but profit. To perpetuate itself, it has formed alliances with the slums that repel all conscientious and patriotic citizens. It deliberately aids the most corrupt political powers, and backs with all of its resources the most unworthy men, the most corrupt and recreant officials. It does not aid the purification of municipal, state, or national administration. Why? Because it has to ask immunity for its own lawlessness.

That this condition is inherently and inevitably necessary we do not believe; but it has come to be a fact, and the public which is to pass on the matter in its final analysis, believes anything bad that anybody can tell it of the liquor business. Why? Let the leaders of the trade answer.

Other lines of business may be as bad or even worse, but it is not so plainly in evidence.

The case of the liquor traffic is called for adjudication by the American people and must be ready for trial. Other cases may be called later, but the one before the court can not be postponed. But as in the past, the men most concerned are playing for postponement, not for acquittal. Is it because they fear the weakness of their defense that they fear to go on trial? Looking the facts in the face is best.

There are billions of property involved, and an industry of great employing and taxpaying ability; but when the people decide that the truth is being told about the alcoholic liquor trade, the money value will not count, for conscience aroused puts the value of a man above all other things.

The writer believes that prohibition is theoretically wrong, but he knows that theories, however well substantiated, may be overthrown by conditions, as has often been done in the world's history.

In this country we have recently swept aside one of the fundamental theories of the framers of our Constitution in going from representative to direct government; we are on the verge of universal instead of male suffrage; and there is a spirit abroad which reckes little of tradition, of precedent, or of vested rights; and of liberty used licentiously and destructively it will work short shift.

Prepare the defense, friends, make your case ready for court, the trial can not be postponed.

BUREAU OF PUBLICITY.

Orders for An Open Letter to the Clergy continue to come in in a way gratifying to those directing the work of distribution. These orders are accompanied by expressions of appreciation. A few extracts from letters received signifying the general feeling in the matter:

H. A. Hintz, Chico, California: "I am very much pleased with this method of reaching the public. It is a big move in the right direction."

Elder B. C. Flint, Evansville, Wisconsin: "I have found several occasions for just such an article in my field."

Mr. and Mrs. O. L. Rockhold, Los Angeles, California: "Inclosed you will find twenty-five cents. Please send me two dozen of the books, An Open Letter to the Clergy. I believe I may be able to give or send these out to some who may not receive them in any other way, and in that way open the minds of the people to the truth."

E. J. Williams, Denver, Colorado: "I am satisfied that the proposed method of reaching the clergy is one of the best that could be devised, and am willing to assist in prosecuting the work in this place."

Fred W. Holman, Seattle, Washington: "The matter was presented at our business meeting the first of the month, and a committee five was appointed to procure the names, as required, and report at our next meeting, which will be held on the first Wednesday in December. We feel confident of a good showing of both names and the necessary funds to accompany."

Robert White, Blue River, Nebraska: "This donation is in behalf of the Blue River Branch. The balance you can use as a committee to scatter the Open Letter. I will say that it is loved by those of the Saints who have read it. Come again, and when I say this I am sure that I voice the sentiment of this branch."

John A. Saxe, San Francisco, California: "We are very much in favor of the project and will do what we can to assist you."

W. R. Smith, Manitowag, Ontario: "I think the project is a good one, and trust it may have the desired effect. Anything I can do to help along in the good work will be cheerfully given."

V. M. Goodrich, Los Angeles, California: "I am inclosing herewith two hundred sixteen names and addresses of clergymen in this city, which include all the confederated churches, or the Ministerial Alliance; only the Catholics and Scientists remain unprovided for."

Egerton K. Evans, Grand Rapids, Michigan: "I heartily indorse the Bureau of Publicity and have taken occasion to boost it in last Glad Tidings."

H. J. Davison, Stockton, California: "I will surely take the matter up and carry it through. I have been trying to compose one for myself to send to the clergy of our city. Glad the movement has been started and hope the brethren will stand with you in more than theory."

William M. Grice: "I think this is a step taken in the right direction, to get our position fairly before the people. May God bless the effort is my prayer."

M. A. Peterson, Omaha, Nebraska: "I have taken the matter up in connection with the good literature committee and think you will soon hear from us."

Joseph W. Lane, Pisgah, Iowa: "I am well pleased with this movement. I think it is the right step in the right direction. . . . I expect to take a trip out in our district, outside of the boundary lines of branches. Then I will get the names and addresses of clergy, which I will forward to you."

W. H. Smart, Joplin, Missouri: "That Open Letter is one of the grandest moves that could be made. I hope success will attend your noble efforts."

L. E. Hills, Bozeman, Montana: "We think the scheme a good one."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION.—On December 10 the committee of one thousand, comprising delegates from every State and Territory in the Union, and representing the Anti-Saloon League of America, marched to the White House at Washington, and on the east steps delivered to Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, and Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson, of Alabama, resolutions which were later on the same day simultaneously submitted by these parties to the House of Representatives and the Senate, the purpose of which, as explained in a recent issue of the HERALD, is to prohibit the manufacture, transportation, and sale within the jurisdiction of the United States Government of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. The text of the resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), that the following amendment of the Constitution be and is hereby proposed to the States to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided by the Constitution.

ARTICLE.

Section 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale, and exportation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are for ever prohibited.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to provide for the manufacture, sale, importation and transportation of intoxicating liquors for sacramental, medicinal, mechanical, pharmaceutical or scientific purposes, or for use in the arts, and have power to enforce this article by all needful legislation.

SECT IMPOTENCY.—The brethren of Alexander Campbell have often called attention to the testimony of Joseph Smith, wherein he said that he had been informed that the creeds and the churches of the day were wrong. Yet no institution has been more bitter in the denunciation of her contemporaries than has the church, and later its factions, instituted under Mr. Campbell. That this continues true is evidenced in their publications and activities upon every hand. As one instance among many we quote from one J. W. Denton in the Firm Foundation, non-progressive, for December 15.

A little truth mixed with tradition and boiled in the pot of superstition, and seasoned with "opinion" and "I think so," fed to the patients with the spoon of hallucination, with "fervent prayer and exhortation," will turn out Methodist, Baptist and many other "ists" and "cists." But one would have to draw wonderfully on his or her imagination to conclude that such mixture would turn out Christians.

AN ARTICLE IN DEFENSE OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

—On several different occasions the HERALD has contained adverse criticisms of Christian Science. One of our readers, a Mr. Newcomer, who holds to the Christian Science faith, has asked the privilege to appear in our columns with an article in defense of his belief. Our elders sometimes crave similar privileges of others under like conditions, but are frequently denied. We have thought best to grant Mr. Newcomer's request, and his article appears in another part of this issue. We will not take the advantage sometimes taken by an editor and reply to this article in this issue, thus placing him at a disadvantage. His article should be weighed upon its merits. It no doubt will provoke a train of profitable thought in the minds of the elders in particular. We suggest that if any wish to take up a further consideration of Christian Science in the HERALD it be on the merits of that question, and not in direct criticism of Mr. Newcomer's article. We would not care to have the matter develop into a personal controversy between Mr. Newcomer and some one or more of our writers. We may suggest in passing that as a rule we have not met with the savage attacks and unfair misrepresentation from Christian Scientists that we have encountered from other denominations. This should be kept in mind. Courtesy should prevail in our treatment of these people, and also of all others, even of those who have maligned us. This of course does not exempt Christian Science doctrines and dogmas from examination and criticism in these pages, and such probably will appear from time to time.

CHILDREN'S HOME STAMPS.—The editors have received from Brother Earnest Webbe, of Cleveland, Ohio, souvenir stamps used by the Saints of that district in the interest of the Children's Home, under the direction of the Woman's Auxiliary, whose field worker is Sister George. It is an adaptation of the Red Cross Sea idea. These stamps are artistically designed and sell for ten cents each, to be attached to correspondence, gifts, or favorite books, just as the Red Cross stamps are used, the money to go to the Children's Home.

ARRIVED IN AUSTRALIA.—We have received a letter from Sydney, Australia, dated December 13, written by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths, announcing the safe arrival of himself and Brother Miller in the Australian field. The letter will appear in full in a later issue. At present we must content ourselves with the following extract:

Brother Walter Jaworth met us at the landing, and we were much pleased to see his smiling face and grasp him by the hand once more. He gave us a grand welcome to our new mission and we felt that we had met a true brother and friend in a strange land and that so far from home. His loving wife and children received us in the same spirit. I was taken to the home of Brother and Sister Gresty, and Brother Miller to be home of our young Brother Victor Seaberg. The next evening the Saints of both branches in this city met in the Balmain church house and gave us a royal welcome to their city and mission and the spirit of good will was manifested toward us in such a way that we felt at home with the Saints and that they were true friends indeed, and what cheered our souls most was the presence of the blessed Spirit of God which brought cheer and comfort to our hearts. They have a great number of young people in both branches and they seem very much interested in the Lord's work and we felt impressed by the Spirit of God that very many of these young people will be a great power for good in this mission in the near future and that it will not be necessary for the church in America to send many missionaries to this mission as the Lord will raise up a ministry from those young men to carry on the work of preaching in Australia, also men to reside, and evangelical ministers, too. They have good Sunday schools here in Sydney. My, but you just ought to hear them sing over here. It will keep the choirs of Lamoni and dependence hustling to get ahead of the choir in the Balmain Branch, which is under the leadership of Brother Thear.

PRESENT REVELATION.

(Sermon by Elder L. G. Holloway at Lamoni, Iowa, November 30. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

I invite your attention to a statement of scripture recorded in the twenty-second chapter of Revelation, the eighteenth and nineteenth verses.

For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

I also desire to connect with this statement one that is recorded in Numbers, that tells something of the character of God. In Numbers 23:19 we find this statement:

God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?

Several years ago, in correspondence with a certain individual concerning that which affects the work of these latter days, this individual invited my attention to this statement of scripture found in the revelation of Saint John. And in doing so it was for the purpose that he might, if possible, show that the teachings of the people known as Latter Day Saints were out of harmony with that which had been revealed in the sacred Scriptures.

In the argument that was used he said to me, How can you believe in modern revelation to-day when you here read recorded in the last book of the Bible, the last chapter of that book, and almost the last verse, that if a man add unto these things, the plagues shall be added to him? And he went on to try to force upon us the thought that God no longer would speak to the human race.

This individual is not alone in presenting this thought. We go out in the religious world to-day, and we find that this is the common interpretation placed upon the language we have read to you from the writings of John.

We find this given by Paul, as recorded in his second letter to Timothy, third chapter, sixteenth and seventeenth verses:

All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

MAN MUST NOT ADD.

In reading this statement from Paul, we recognize the fact that it has its application so far as the gospel is concerned. It certainly and surely affects man in some way. And when we think of that which is recorded here, it ought to make us very careful as to what we say, and what we teach, so far as the work of God is concerned.

We understand from the writings of John that the man who would try to add to the things that God had done, would have added to him the plagues that are found recorded in this book. We certainly would not want to bring upon ourselves the disfavor of God.

And so we are going to take this statement of scripture to-night and analyze it, and discover, if we can, its true application, and see if it can not be otherwise interpreted than in this common way that is prevalent throughout the world. You will notice that in the statement that we have read to you from Numbers, which declares to us the character of God, we are assured that God is not like man, because man is prone to make mistakes. It assures us that God does not repent, and it again holds out to us the beautiful thought that as he has spoken he will make it good.

GOD MAY ADD.

Before I am through I hope to be able to show you clearly that instead of being one of the strong texts against the position occupied by the church of Christ, it is one of the strong texts in our favor. I am willing to admit that, coming as it does from the last book in the Bible, the last chapter in that book, and almost but not quite the last verses of that chapter, upon first glance it looks as if the common interpretation is true, which says that God will no longer speak to the human race. If that be true, I am willing to admit that we have no place in the religious world, so far as an organization is concerned, because we have declared and are upon record as saying that God has again spoken. That the bursting heavens have revealed God to the extent that he has made known to man his will in these latter days.

I am going to take up other texts of scripture to show you that they have the same meaning, and can be applied in the same way with regard to the very first writers of the Bible. If you will go with me to the statement recorded in the writing of Deuteronomy 4:2, you will find a similar declaration, only that it does not say that the plagues will follow, or that man's part shall be taken out of the book of life.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you.

You will notice distinctly that Moses, as the first writer in the Bible, was given to understand that he would not be permitted to add to that which the Lord had commanded him. He says, "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you." Individually, Moses saw the correct application of this statement of the Lord to him, because he continued to write. He did not understand that because the Lord said that you shall not add to that which the Lord had commanded, that he should cease to write; but he continues to write under the spirit of inspiration, that which God gave him that would affect the children of Israel.

So we are at once admonished that not only was it given to John as he wrote on the Isle of Patmos that man should not add thereto, but also it was given to man in the very commencement of time, we might say, that he was not privileged to add to that which God had done.

I am going to venture an assertion here, if you want to call it such, that man has never had the right, never will have the right as long as time shall last, to add to anything that God has done. That does not mean that God can not add, but it shows to us the responsibility that rests upon man.

I am going to turn now to another statement of scripture, recorded in Proverbs 30:5, 6, "Every word of God is pure: he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar."

Also Ecclesiastes 3:14: "I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever; nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it; and God doeth it, that men should fear before him."

I have read these several passages of scripture to show you that I am not selecting one single, isolated passage of the record to prove my point. I have selected one from the close of the Bible, one from the first writer of the Bible, and two from near the center of the Bible to show you that the same advice has been given to man in every age of time. So I believe that you can see that it has something to do with the plan by which salvation may be given to the children of men.

GOSPEL UNCHANGEABLE.

I am going to try to apply it in the gospel sense to-night, and present it in such a way that you may be able to understand how we hold these passages of scripture, and also to present the fact that it must necessarily prove to us the unchangeability of the gospel of Jesus Christ. I desire to call your attention to this important fact, that when the Master came among men he gave us distinctly to understand that the gospel that he presented in the world was not of himself, or that it did not of itself originate with him. He says, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." Again, he gives us to understand that the Father gave him a commandment what he should say and what he should do. He tells us that the very words that came from his lips were directed by God. That he did not move upon his own responsibility alone, but that he came to do the will of the Father who sent him. I call your attention to this thought for the simple reason that I want to impress upon you the idea that God himself was the author of the plan of redemption. And as he is not man, as he is perfect in wisdom, perfect in love, perfect in all his attributes, we believe that anything that would come from his hand would be perfect in every respect.

So, as far as the gospel is concerned, it is the very best that infinite wisdom could devise. Let me emphasize that thought. The gospel was the very best that infinite wisdom could conceive. And being the very best, there could be no additions to it; there could be no subtractions from it; so that we must have the gospel to-day, just as it was in the ages past.

I shall attempt to prove from some of the sacred writings that we are correct when we say that the gospel is the same to-day that it has always been. If you will turn with me to the letter of Paul, written to the Galatian brethren, in the third chapter and fifteenth verse we read: "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto."

Here is a statement of Paul, which, if correct, will enable us to see the character of the gospel. And I believe that we are all agreed to-night that Paul spoke advisedly; and he gives us to understand that even though it be a man's covenant, yet if that covenant be confirmed (notice the word confirmed, because it has an important bearing upon the subject under discussion) yet if it be confirmed no man disannulleth or addeth thereto.

I believe that when we begin to analyze the gospel we find it to be a covenant. It is an agreement entered into between God and man. God agrees to give to humanity the blessing of eternal life, providing humanity is willing to walk in the way that he has given for the benefit of man. And again, if it could be said truly that the gospel was confirmed, then we have this conclusion of Paul's that nothing can be added to it, neither can anything be disannulled, so far as the plan of redemption is concerned.

I think that you all are acquainted with the statement, but I will quote it, as recorded in the writings of Mark, where we have the great commission held out to us. After telling the apostles to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned; and after telling us of certain signs that will follow, we come down to the twentieth verse and there we read a statement that will enable us to understand that the gospel was confirmed. "And they went forth, (that is, the apostles) and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

That proves beyond the possibility of a doubt that the gospel was confirmed. But there is one other statement of scripture that we desire to present along this line, as recorded in the Hebrew letter. In the second chapter of Hebrews, beginning with the third verse, we read:

How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

Here is another declaration of scripture that proves that the gospel was confirmed. I am going to make a declaration here that I want you to notice carefully, that is, anything that meets with the approval of God is perfect. When he told man away back in the beginning of time that everything he had made was good, and very good, or language to that effect, it met with his approval. And so, when he confirms a thing, it certainly proves to us that God recognizes that it is the very best.

THE LAW ADDED.

Says one, "How about the law of Moses? Was not that given by God?" Yes, I am willing to admit that it was. But so far as I know there is not a single passage in the Scriptures to prove that God approved of that law in every sense. It was to serve in a certain time for a certain purpose. And I want to make it clear as we go along, because some think that the gospel was changed. And if that be true, then the effort we shall make to-night will be fruitless.

I read a little further in this third chapter of Galatians, concerning the Mosaic law: "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator."

You notice, it is said that this law was added because of transgressions.

We will turn to another statement, where we have Paul again upon record saying, The gospel was preached unto Abraham as well as unto us. This convinces us that the gospel preceded the law of Moses. I do not know of any better way to show that it was added because of transgression than to call our attention to some things you comprehend already.

For instance, if a man was taken here for some crime and sent to the state penitentiary, you would find in that institution a law that you and I are not governed by. For instance, he would be required to rise at a certain time. He would be under a law that would not permit him to speak to other inmates. Many similar rules might be mentioned. He would be under a law that would be brought into force because of transgression. Now, so far as the people of Moses were concerned, they were under a law that had been added because they transgressed the gospel law. God did not intend that the gospel should be changed, but he gave them a different law.

UNSCRIPTURAL TEACHINGS.

In the world, and I say this in kindness, you will find many different ideas of religion expressed. You will find some ideas of religion that would almost cause you to smile. I am going to mention, in a brief way, a religious institution that exists in one of our Western States, among a little band of people who call themselves "The Saints of the Most High."

They teach that they have added principles; that they have developed beyond the gospel that was taught in the days of Jesus Christ. And in some of these added principles they believe that they have received light that will enable them to go far beyond what you and I can ever attain to. One of these principles that is prevalent in that little organization is the plurality of gods. They tell us that this is one of the advanced principles God has given them. In this idea of religion, as you begin to examine it, you will find that they claim to believe in revelation. I think they are correct in believing in revelation, but the trouble is they have a wrong conception of what revelation is really for. They say revelation is always given to produce entirely new matter. My conception of revelation is this: It is to make clear some principles that have already existed. And so God speaks to humanity that we may know how to act and what to do.

I happened to labor among this class of religionists at one time. In order to learn of some of these exalted principles as they called them, I investigated one of their sacred books called the Spirit Prevalled, which is quite a large volume, about the size of our Bible. In reading in that book I discovered that they hold out the idea that men are to be transported from one planet to another. They are to go from one star to another star. In fact, they claim that they came from one of these planets to this planet. They go from this to another, and they keep on going until they go to one hundred and forty-four thousand different planets. And when they finally get to the one hundred and forty-four thousandth planet they become gods.

I want to go a little further into that, for the simple reason that it helps us to understand what added principles will do for men. On the first planet, or in the first estate, as they call it, they have a wife. They go from there to another planet and they taken another wife, leaving the first wife on the first planet. They go on to another planet and take another wife. And when they finally wind up on the one hundred and forty-four thousandth planet they have one hundred and forty-four thousand wives each. Mormons are not in it at all in comparison with them.

I remember talking with one of the individuals representing that church, and he said, "We do not want the old gospel, because it has become somewhat stale."

THE GOSPEL COMPLETE.

I want to say to you, friends, that if you give me primitive Christianity, give me the church that was in existence in the time of Christ and the apostles, as it was organized then, with all the principles of the gospel, I shall be satisfied.

It will be impossible for me to go into detail and tell you all the beautiful things in that gospel, but I am glad to assure you that if you will give me primitive Christianity my soul will be satisfied. And that is why we refer to these things to-night; to enable you to see what is comprehended in Christianity.

One of the best things we have ever used against the people in the valleys of the mountains, known as Mormons, is the fact that they profess to believe that God is unchangeable, and that the gospel coming from the hand of God was unchangeable in its character; and yet they have taught that there are things that will make men gods.

I am saying this for the reason that I believe we, the people representing the Reorganized Church, have reason to be thankful that we are not placed in the same dilemma they are. They have had to go back on the principle of polygamy and other things that the Reorganized Church has never indorsed, things that were never a part of the gospel. For more than eighty years we have stood upon the same premise, the same platform we stood upon when this church was organized on the sixth day of April, 1830.

I believe the word of God needs no additions. We do not need to add anything to it that was not a part of it in the very beginning of the work of Christ. We do not need to take anything away from it, because we find that in doing so we would remove from the gospel that which brings hope and consolation to the hearts of men.

THE PRINCIPLES.

I want to read you a statement that we are quite familiar with, recorded in the sixth chapter of the Hebrew letter:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

I am going to make a declaration here that may not seem correct to some of you; but I want you to ponder it in your minds. I am going to tell you that these principles here mentioned by Paul, faith in God, repentance from dead works, baptism of the water and the Spirit, laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, are not first principles. They are the principles. We might mention faith as one of the first principles, but when we take all six of them, I am going to say that they comprehend the principles of the doctrine of Christ, which indicates to us that there can be no addition so far as principles are concerned.

We might attempt to go out in the world to-night and start some religious organization. We might do it with all honesty of purpose; but I want to ask you candidly, if you were to take a church as a pattern, what church would you take as the pattern by which you would build? I believe that if there was ever a safe pattern in this world it was the grand organization that was instituted more than nineteen hundred years ago. We believe that we have the same pattern to-night, an organization identically like that one; and we are forced to the conclusion that if we were to start a church on our own volition, which God does not allow men to do, but if we desired a pattern that was approved of God, that church would certainly meet with our approval, or should meet with our approval. And as we examine into the teachings of Christ and his apostles I believe we are safe in saying that the grand truths taught in the past man can teach now, and we are under the necessity of saying with Paul, "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

It seems strange to your speaker, sometimes, that a thing that bears upon it the name of Jesus Christ, men are ready to indorse whether it is like the original church or not. If there has ever been in the history of this world a name that has been used for all kinds of crime, it has been the name of Jesus Christ. I might refer to the conditions that prevail in Utah to-day. They attach the name of Jesus Christ to that which has brought shame and disgrace upon the women of our Nation. And I am safe in saying that to everything you can possibly think of, men have sometimes attached the name of Jesus Christ, so far as religion is concerned.

Men might desire to organize a church without the principle of faith; but we could not meet with the approval of God and do so. Another individual might come along and want to organize a church, and would preach the principle of repentance, but deny baptism. And some might preach only four of these principles, and leave out the others. God would not approve of that which they had done.

I want to tell you, so far as the teaching of the apostles was concerned, they were willing to lay down their lives as a sacrifice for the sake of the religion they taught. And I presume that even the Apostle Paul was called to account and was made to suffer because he preached one of the grandest principles mentioned by him here in the sixth chapter of Hebrews. He was carried before the magistrates because he preached the resurrection of the dead.

Without the resurrection of the dead, we are told that man's hope is vain. And we find that in all the history of the world mortals have been afraid of that which we call death. Were it not for the resurrection of the dead our hearts would certainly be filled with sadness. We could hardly say the parting word, good-bye. But realizing, through the resurrection of the dead as one of the principles of Christianity, that we may finally take the hand of our friend whom we have parted with in life, and be able to greet him on the other side, it brings hope. And so far as any other principle of the gospel is concerned, it brings hope to every man who believes it. The individual who wants to put them off does so at his own peril. I think we should be contented with that which men have had granted to them in the past. And if we do so, we meet with the approval of God.

OFFICERS NEEDED.

Some men have sought to take away some of the officials in the body of Christ. Some have decided that we do not need certain officers. But let me call your attention to the fact that Paul says that one member could not say to the other, "I have no need of thee." And so far as the gospel is concerned, we find that every official is needed to carry out the mind and will of God. The apostles had a work to do. Their work was of such a character that they could not easily be dispensed with. There was need for those men in the official body of Christ. And let me tell you that upon those men were laid great burdens of responsibility. And so long as the need of proselyting exists, we have need of those men who were directed by the inspiration of God, that they may be able to effect good to-day. You take the deacon in the church; he was needed just as much, perhaps, in his place, as the apostle was in his. The bishops were needed; the teacher was needed; the elder was needed; in fact, if you can point out a single officer, placed there by God, that was not needed, I have failed to discover who it was.

We have not added to, so far as your speaker is able to comprehend, neither have we disannulled, or declared of no effect any of the officials that were in the body of Christ. And we take up every part of that gospel, and it was of that character that God could approve of it in every sense of the term.

REVELATION.

I heard a story one time that I am going to relate here, simply to help you understand more about this idea of what the world has said about revelation. The story is something like this. A man was sick, very sick. He felt that he was about to pass over the river. He called his wife into the room, and they talked the matter over, and decided to send for a physician. The physician came, and going into the room where the man was lying, he looked at him and pronounced him dead. He did not make very much of an examination, but announced to the wife that her husband was dead, and went home.

The wife, going into the room, was astonished to find her husband sitting up on the side of the bed. She went to him and said, "Lie down! Lie down; you are dead!"

He said, "Wife, I am not dead."

"Yes you are."

"Why?"

"Because the doctor said so, and he knows better than you do."

I simply relate this to get you to see a point. The world has said to God, "You must not speak." Perhaps not in that language, but that is the spirit of it. They have said that God no longer speaks.

I remember discussing with a man upon this question, who said, "If you have got a revelation in this world it came from Satan himself."

"Why, friend," I said, "you give Satan the opportunity to speak, but would not give that privilege to God."

It is just as consistent for me to say that God does not speak as for the wife to say to the husband, "Lie down. You are dead, for the doctor said so, and he knows better than you do."

God in the past has been of a character that he has the right to speak. But when he does speak it is not for the purpose of changing his decrees; it is to give light to humanity. I do not care what individual in this world tells us that he does not need inspiration, I believe God could give him a little light if he would receive it.

That reminds me of another story. One time there was a lady who had been highly educated. She came back from college and began to tell her friends some of the great advantages she had. She told them that her German and French were fine. She told them that her dancing was simply perfect. And after telling them all of the wonderful things she had learned, she said, "But the wonder is that this little head of mine can contain it all."

The philosopher who was able to measure the distance to the sun, and could tell the times that certain planets would appear hundreds of years hence was certainly a wonderful man. And when he came to the end of his days, he said, "How little I know."

There is a difference between men. Some are willing to say to Jesus Christ, We do not care for more instruction. But I am glad that Latter Day Saints are ready for more instruction. And I hope we will never reach that point where we will say to Jesus Christ, We do not care to hear from you any more.

THE GOSPEL TAUGHT.

We believe in presenting to you the truths of Christianity. We teach that perfect plan of redemption mentioned by the Apostle James where he tells us that he that looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the work, the same shall be blessed in his deeds.

In holding out to you the gospel, we have never had occasion to take from the gospel any principle that was instituted by Jesus Christ. We preach faith, because it is a part of the unchangeable gospel. We preach repentance, because it is a part of that same gospel. In fact, we preach all the principles, because they are a part of the gospel. And let me tell you, friends, that if you take that gospel that was preached by Paul and all those ancient worthies and accept it and carry out the principles of Christianity in your lives, you need never fear for the hereafter.

I have heard it said and you perhaps have heard the same thing, that when we believe in preaching these same principles, we are deceived. They tell you that when you believe in the same kind of organization with apostles, evangelists, bishops, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, that you are deceived. They tell you that when you think you receive the same spiritual communications to-day that men received in the past you are deceived. But we are forced to the conclusion that if we are deceived, (not admitting that we are), if we are deceived, then Satan is using means to deceive us to-day that Jesus Christ once gave for the salvation of man. Do you believe that God would so reverse his order that man will be permitted to be deceived in clinging to that which was originally in existence for the salvation of humanity? I am not prepared to admit that we are. In fact, the men who do not believe in these things are the individuals that are deceived, and not men who cling to these things. And I want to tell you that there can be no deception in that gospel that was taught back there.

And so, in conclusion, let me here say that if there is anything in this world that we need it is primitive Christianity. We believe that we have it. We believe that we have the church as it existed in the days of Jesus Christ, with no additions to it, and with no subtractions from it. And so this statement of John's as he wrote on the Isle of Patmos is for the good of men, that they can recognize when they come in contact with that organization, and may identify themselves with it.

I trust these things may impress your minds with the unchangeability of God and his work, so that when we stand before the great bar of justice in the hereafter, we can realize that we have not followed any cunningly devised fables, but that which has met with the approval of God. And if we have the exact pattern of that church, do you not believe that you can afford to accept it?

AFFIRMATIVE PRESENTATION OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

(See Editor's Note in Editorial Department.)

"Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."—Paul.

Immediately after the negro was no longer an object of merchandise, no longer held in bondage, disallowed privileges of demonstrating possibilities endowed with to prove to the world his claim as a child of God, another war was fostered. Not a war where swords and leaden bullets pierced the hearts of man, breaking family ties and disrupting social progress in almost every conceivable manner. It was a war on man's greatest enemy; subverting slavery of far greater magnitude than that of the negro of the South; a war of love and life saving, delivering fallen man from worshiping false gods many; elevating him to a better understanding of his creation.

HEARS VOICES.

In 1866 Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy discovered what she denominated after a more comprehensive understanding as Christian Science. About the eighth year of her age and for about one year following, voices were heard by her at frequent intervals, calling her name very distinctly. Numerous times these voices were so vivid she would appeal to her mother, thinking it her calling, only to be informed of her mistake. The frequency of these strange incidents was of considerable annoyance to her mother. Chastening seemed of no consequence, as she fervidly affirmed hearing them, and repugnance from mother only further excited her solicitude. She at last answered as to a person unknown as well as unseen; after which she heard them no more.

Born physically diminutive but of unusual intellect, her educational advantages were largely confined to her home, her brother acting as teacher. Physically, she was an invalid and for many years obliged to be helped from place to place within the home. During this time she perused the Bible constantly, it being her only comfort. Pondering and praying for deliverance from her languidness, the search was sweet to her.

Discouragement was unknown to her. After exhausting material methods of nearly every character, she learned of one Quimby, performing many wonderful cures through magnetism. The combined persuasiveness of family and friends was not sufficiently inductive to discourage her. With superhuman efforts, she succeeded in calling at his office. Immediately engaging in conversation with him, the power manifested was seemingly superlative. Beneficial results seemed to immediately follow. Quimby being an unbeliever in God's power to heal, and she an advocator of the most pronounced type, an argument followed. Quimby being uneducated and with no apparent knowledge of science, sarcastically abased any such conclusion, preferring all honor as self-instigated.

A NEW ERA.

As the Star of the East was to the wise men, locating where the child was, so was this likewise to her. It was the dawn of a new era. Returning to friends and family a well woman, demonstrated to them by her climbing a lofty stairway and descending without fatigue, proved a joyful moment to that household.

God did it, was her frequent utterance. To scientifically understand how, so all mankind could be healed, was her constant longing and prevalent thought. Recalling many promises chronicled in the Bible, to receive if asked for without doubt, prompted her to seek quietude in her apartments, and there commune with God as Jesus had taught in that, the greatest sermon ever delivered to man.

Step by step the light appeared. Demonstrations followed among intimate friends. In 1870 she copyrighted her first work. The experiences of Jesus when upon earth manifesting cures (many before they would believe) lucidly presented the importance; and as an immediate acceptance of her cherished expectations could not otherwise be expected, she concluded not to place her publication on the market until the world was apprised of proof.

THE WORK GROWS.

In 1876, after demonstrations supposedly sufficient to convince the most skeptical, the first edition of one thousand was placed on sale. Five years later the first church was organized. The same year a Metaphysical College was erected at Boston. During the following seven years, over four thousand students were taught scientific healing as interpreted, through the help of God, by her.

The effects throughout the land were becoming keenly felt. The wonderful cures were everywhere talked of. Interest was spreading to heretofore unknown quarters. "What must I do to be healed?" was the cry of the sick; and, "What must we do to protect our business and organizations?" the cry of physicians and devout members of other societies.

The stronger the opposition, the deeper the roots seemed to grow. The political as well as the religious press of the country seemed to interest themselves almost universally with the opponents. It seemed to be an iteration of David and the Philistines.

Year after year has it fought its way through the ranks of the enemy; and year after year has it increased its numbers with wonderful celerity. Living witnesses are to be found confirming its curative powers, either personally or for some dear friend, in nearly every hamlet in this as well as other countries of the American Continent, and many other parts of the civilized world. Many of the Sunday schools hold two sessions to accommodate children attending. Wednesday evening meetings are given to experience, testimonials, and remarks on Christian Science. It is at these meetings where Jew and Gentile, millionaire and laborer, white and black are found occupying the same pew, giving testimonies of cures and benefits in every way, becoming God's children.

Church organizations are to be found in every State of this Union, and practically every country of the globe accepting Protestant faith. The annual report ending June 1 shows one church organized every three and one half days. Membership is not encouraged until one is able to demonstrate healing, assuring progress and honesty of purpose. To the thinking, the value of this custom can be easily comprehended.

CURES FOLLOW PREPARATION.

Cures can not be effected through science, only as you have prepared the soil, sown the seed and made honest efforts to cultivate. In other words, pinnacle your faith to God and God only; laying aside all formalities, regardless of former church affiliations, retire to your closet (silent thought) and proceed as stipulated by Jesus in the sermon delivered on the mount. If your course of the past has been the straight and narrow, further light will be opened; if not, a new and glorious era will dawn before you.

This done, you are the qualified recipient for the baptism foretold by John; I baptize with water but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and fire. Your progress then, depends on your willingness to abdicate former gods. If your prayer is for God to heal you and purify you of all ailments and free you from all sin, and you continue making a god of medicine, not loving your neighbor as yourself, think more of man made doctrine than those laid down in that sermon on the mount, better be spending your time otherwise, for God is not mocked.

It is a law of God, confirmed by every act of progress, that advancement is only gained by beginning at the very basis; whether social, spiritual, mechanical, or any other way. It is also a law of God that each individual of mankind has a separate work to do; that ministers, elders, practitioners, apostles, and combined prayers of the most devout availeth nothing, if efforts are not personally made toward progress, and that you can only demonstrate what you understand. Man is the image of God and must individually work with him.

Jesus was the only perfect man the world has ever known.

NONE PERFECT.

John the Baptist, heralded centuries prior to the coming of Jesus by prophets as the one to prepare the way, fulfilled his mission perfectly, and was accredited the honor which no man ever before enjoyed, to baptize the Savior of the world, and perform the last act before Jesus, proclaiming to the world, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. With this apparent understanding, yet, only so short a time after, did he show to the world that he had not perfected his work as required by God, by sending two of his disciples to Jesus, asking him whether he really was the one to come or whether they should look for another, after he had been cast into prison. (Matthew 11:3.)

The apostles, after being commissioned by Jesus and endowed with power to perform nearly everything done by him, constantly with him during his sojourn on earth, at the crucial moment, betrayed, forsook and denied him.

Paul, proclaimed to be the greatest man the world has produced, since Jesus frequently referred to himself as being the prisoner of God; also, that Satan sent a messenger with a thorn to buffet him in the flesh that he might not to become exalted beyond measure.

BASIC PRINCIPLES.

These incidents plainly prove that although God has used you as an instrument to proclaim his works, and speak as never man spoke before, yet, have you your own foundation to build through Jesus by God, by showing your absolute willingness. These are the basic principles of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy. C. S. is the abbreviation of Christian Science; it is also for common sense. Substitute the latter for the former when doubting, and note difference in effect.

JAMES 5: 14.

The words of James 5: 14, if taken literally, and that the stipulated language interpreted verbatim is the only course whereby the sick can be healed and accredited to God, or, in other words, receive credit themselves by God, all other ways being not in accord with his will, is a most dangerous heresy. If that be true, why should we pray to God to heal us? or our friends? or the world in general, that they might be delivered from pain?

Are we to infer, after faithfully praying and holding firmly to the thought that God is truth and that we are his children, doubting not, after broken limbs have been mended perfectly, diseases of every known character completely healed, eyesight restored, fires of burning homes extinguished, disrupted homes made happy, are we to infer that after all this the healed sick would have to be made sick again, send for the elders, purchase oil and thereby be healed in order to receive credit by God? Would we not under such circumstances be making a god of the elders and oil? Thou shalt not have any other gods before me, is the first commandment.

Tens of thousands are daily praising God for cures and other blessings by knowing God's word to be truth and doubting not, as taught by Christian Science. Can Satan cast out Satan?

SPIRITUAL EVOLUTION.

On entering his earthly mission, Jesus well knew that all he could possibly expect was to sow the seed, and as much as possible, let it fall upon good ground. The soil had been prepared by the prophets and John. This is confirmed by his universal statements scores of times; if they would only believe him to be the Son of God they would be saved. He well knew the necessity of understanding before demonstrations could possibly follow, and that was impossible at that age.

The sermon on the mount portrays the basic principle, or ego of Christendom. It is the brief prepared by God through Jesus Christ as a standard for us to follow and labor to attain. A great gulf seemingly existed between believing and understanding, which would require ages to complete. Jesus well knew this. James when writing his book fully comprehended that the people at that age, even if ever so willing, were unable to take up serpents, drink deadly things without injury; but must rely on those more advanced in understanding, until the seed sown by Jesus had taken root more firmly.

This spiritual evolution progressed until, nearing the twentieth century, the world clamored for an understanding. To meet these conditions, God delivered to mankind a woman to fill this mission, specifically foreshadowed in Revelation twelfth chapter. To confirm this statement, read the book, Science and Health, by Mary Baker Eddy, prayerfully searching for truth; after which read the above chapter and your doubts will be expelled.

Paul, addressing the Hebrews:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God. Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment; and this will we do, if God permit.—Hebrews 6.

These words definitely confirm the evolution of spiritual progress as predicated by Mrs. Eddy. The shell of the acorn is of no value after germination, nor hulls surrounding corn or wheat. Prior to regeneration, they were of absolute necessity. They had performed their functions, returning to mother earth.

HEALERS AND HEALING.

These facts confirm the necessity of coworkers to accomplish any great reform. Practitioners engaged in promulgating this great work, number five thousand four hundred. Jesus instructed his apostles before going out, endowed with the power to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils, Freely ye have received, freely give. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses; nor scrip for your journey; neither two coats neither shoes, nor yet staves, for the workman is worthy of his meat. These healers devote their entire time enhancing the cause.

I am not affirming that none of these healers think more of the remuneration than spiritual good. This was the case with Judas in betraying Jesus. God, however, is the judge, and to those who should do such, their effective days would soon be numbered.

Mrs. Eddy does not teach that it is at all necessary to depend on healers, only in extreme cases. Consulting them is entirely at your own option. As was the case when Jesus was trying to get the people only to believe that elders were commissioned, so, likewise are these practitioners commissioned to get people to not only believe but understand. Thousands upon thousands have been completely healed by reading the book, Science and Health, in search of truth, but not when searching with view of criticism. Thousands have also been started on the spiritual road through some marvelous cure through these healers. They arose from the dead after demonstrations and took up the cross. They hold a relative position with the Mother Eagle. Feeding her young until sufficiently strong to spread their wings and fly independently of mother, understandingly through instinct, that a higher power governs.

The complete restoration of the sick from the most helpless invalids, ancestral or otherwise, of every form and character, are confirmed by the tens of thousands from nearly every quarter of the globe. That the means through which they were restored, was by recognizing God, good; and a God of love as the only power existent, doubting not as taught by Jesus Christ when on earth and interpreted by Mary Baker Eddy. This being the case, kindly interpret the following scriptural quotations and draw your own conclusions.

"How can Satan cast out Satan?"—Jesus. "If Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he can not stand, but hath an end."—Jesus. "A good tree can not bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit."—Jesus. "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire."—Jesus. "Wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them."—Jesus.

The annual report of the Mother Church, ending June 1, states that its growth for the year past superseded that of any previous since its organization.

DISQUIETUDE AND UNSCIENTIFIC METHODS.

That an unusual disquietude among churches in almost every corner of the religious world is clearly perceptible, no informed person will attempt to deny. Efforts have been made in almost every way conceivable to forward the movement, interesting men especially to attend church, with only temporary effect. One thousand two hundred churches are unoccupied in the State of Kansas alone, from a recent report. This condition exists in nearly every part of the country.

A report from one of our penitentiaries recently stated that of the hundreds of inmates, all except two had some religious preference; and none denied Jesus being the Son of God. That we have passed the stage of simply believing; that God is demanding more of us, is the logical conclusion.

If ministers would teach religion as scientifically as the successful teacher teaches the child at school, or the architect designs modern sky scrapers, our commercial institutions of the higher class and railroads instigate and conduct their affairs, by beginning at the first commandment, then the strict observance of that specifically stated form of how to pray by Jesus, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, etc., (sermon on the mount), and not be as the Pharisees who considered that social standing, creed, etc., entitled them to special privileges and were not as other men, disharmony in all its phases would be history within a few generations.

Should W. J. Bryan, credited as the greatest orator and a great traveler, enter the penitentiary of his home city, and there proclaim to the inmates with all the vehemence of which he is capable the beauties of the outside world, telling them to climb the wall and get there as soon as possible, it would compare very favorably with the modern ministry in many cases.

THE GREAT GULF.

The great gulf existing between the rich man and Lazarus we all must cross, either in this world or the one to come. The logical conclusion would be to systematically lay the plans by going to God in secret, and wanting truth.

Failure to do this has caused many of our brightest intellects to plunge into disreputable vocations, and to abandon the church because no solace could be found there.

Every act of progress illustrates this principle; a solid chain with broken links or jumping ahead without covering space intervening is impossible. Who would think of erecting a large building, beginning at the middle story? It must be admitted after carefully scrutinizing, that this condition exists; and that the descending rains falling upon them are causing them to fall, and great is the fall thereof.

PROVING JONAH AND THE WHALE.

The habitual silence of the religious press on the subject of Jonah and the whale might lead some to think that Jonah has no friends left. His name is seldom mentioned in the pulpit. But in New York a new magazine is out called The Bible Champion, continuing the more modestly named Bible Student and Teacher, and it begins its championship by throwing down the gauge to Jonah's critics. Professor Luther T. Townsend, LL. D., who has been a professor of theology for forty years and has written over a score of religious works, fills many pages with his proofs, many more than the original story covers in Holy Writ. He remarks that one may well think it "the most vulnerable narrative" in the Bible because of the attacks made on the "historical integrity" of the story. Not only is it discredited, he tells us, but it is regarded by some critics as "quite suitable for the amusement of children, and is labeled 'The Pickwick' and 'The Bigelow Papers' of the Bible." If the story is "wholly fiction," says Professor Townsend, and the church teaches that it is "really historic," then we have a right to laugh at it; but if it is "regarded by man intelligent and scholarly people as veritable history," then the case is different and a reinvestigation is in order.

Beginning at the beginning, he sets out to establish by evidence the historical character of Jonah, and the actual existence of Nineveh, and Jonah's mission and voyage. His reason for doing this is because there have been critics who did "not hesitate to affirm that Nineveh, as well as Jonah, was a myth." Having proved the existence of both the sinful city and the prophet sent to preach repentance to its citizens, Professor Townsend leads us on to see how credible is the recital that on being thrown overboard "a great fish (dagh gadhol) was near the ship, and seized Jonah the moment he struck the water." He stresses the fact that the two Hebrew words just quoted "mean simply a great fish, or sea monster," while the word whale is the translator's word, and he proceeds:

So far, therefore, as the Hebrew and Greek words are concerned, the highest criticism makes it perfectly clear that the fish that swallowed Jonah may have been a whale, a shark, a sea serpent, a sea lion, or any other large monster of the deep. And even if the skeptic insists that in this discussion the word whale should be used, still one need not suffer embarrassment, for while it is true that the right whale has a throat of small size, the sperm whale has a throat sufficiently large to swallow a man without the least difficulty. There is not a shipmaster or a sailor who has been on a whaling voyage who will question the following statement made by one of the crew of a New Bedford, Massachusetts, whale ship, that he, though a man of large build, weighing one hundred and seventy pounds, frequently had passed through the mouth and throat of a dead sperm whale. He says he did this after the head of the whale had been cut off from the body, and when the jaws and smallest part of the throat had been taken on deck.

The writer adds to this the testimony of M. P. Courbet in Cosmos (Paris), who, writing of a scientific expedition of the Prince of Monaco, gives an account of the capture of a monster sperm whale near the Azores, and remarks: "The discoveries of the Prince of Monaco were such as to relieve us of all difficulty in believing the Bible story that a whale could swallow Jonah." Another authority brought forward is M. Joubin, who states, in an article in The Academy of Sciences, that "a sperm whale can easily swallow animals taller and heavier than a man," although Professor Ray Matthews, in a report on the Japanese fisheries, we read, believes that "it was neither a sperm nor a bow head whale that swallowed Jonah, . . . but a right whale, and that Jonah was not taken into the food stomach but into the air chamber of the whale, which was large and commodious enough to serve as a refuge."

Several other authenticated instances of the astonishing swallowing capacity of sea monsters are offered by Professor Townsend, who concludes that "the time is for ever past for anyone to say that whales and sea monsters do not have throats large enough to swallow men." Yet while the skeptical critic may no longer call into question these points of the story, which are "indisputable history," Professor Townsend reminds us that in coming to the record of Jonah's preservation in the whale and his subsequent escape to dry land, we reach parts of the narrative that "cross the line of the nonmiraculous and become supernormal, and in the judgment of many people are on that account altogether untrustworthy." He continues:

But, in reply, one may remind the destructive critic that he should move cautiously, for his own logic may prove as remorseless as that of the believer, for no one knows, or ought to know, better than he, that the whole question of the origin of things is to-day passing into the realm of the supernormal. There is not a naturalist who does not know that science is now pointing her index finger to a time when the entire substance of the earth was nothing but a glowing vapor, and that naturalism knows absolutely nothing as to the origin of that fire stuff. Then there followed the cooling, condensing, and hardening processes, till at length the fire stuff became the earth fitted for life. But there is not a naturalist in the world who at the present time can give a scientific explanation of the origin of the lower forms of life, vegetable or animal.

There remains therefore, Professor Townsend maintains, in the light of the highest criticism, only one logical conclusion, which is this:

The infinite and eternal Author of life must have interposed, or the earth as we see it never would have been, or having been, would have remained for ever desolate; there would have been no first oak to cast upon the earth its shadow, and no first man to walk its surface. But if God could interpose, then the earth could bring forth grass, and herb yielding seed after its kind, and every tree after its kind, the fish and the bird after their kind, and lastly man after his kind.

Hence it follows that the destructive critic, who decided a moment ago to abandon Christianity because its logic required him to believe in miracles, must not only abandon Christianity, but, to be consistent, must abandon himself, that is, must deny his own existence, for the origin of the human race requires supernatural interposition as much as did the preservation of Jonah in the stomach of the sea monster. But the moment such interposition is admitted, that moment riddles are solved and all Bible miracles accounted for.

By such interpositions Israel could pass unharmed through the midst of the sea; Daniel could remain for a night in safety among the lions; Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, could walk unhurt "in the midst of the burning, fiery furnace," and Jonah could remain unharmed for three, or, for that matter, for thirty days in the stomach of a sea monster.

We may condense this part of the argument into two sentences: If God could create Adam, he could save Jonah. He did create Adam; therefore he could save Jonah.

This, then, is the evangelical confession of faith: We believe the Bible narratives and miracles because on scientific grounds they are possible; because they are supported by circumstantial, monumental, and other indisputable proofs, and because there were purposes of sufficient magnitude to justify divine interposition.—The Literary Digest, September 27, 1913.

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

That New Hat and Gown.

Unlike the Israelites in the wilderness, we have not the laws of nature set aside for us. Consequently, instead of our garments lasting the entire time of our wanderings here, they will wear out and must be replaced by new ones. So there can be no harm in the fact that new garments are obtained, providing the old ones have been properly worn and disposed of. But there may be harm in the effect the new hat or gown may have on the wearer, or upon her associates. And what produces that effect? In this instance there must be something wrong in the quality, price, or style of the garment, or in the condition of mind in the persons concerned.

That the question of our apparel is an important one is shown by the fact that the Lord has found it necessary to speak to us concerning it. This is what he has said, "Let your garments be plain and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands." The question naturally arises in our minds, What is meant by the word plain? We consult Webster and find that it means "without beauty; homely."

I once knew a religious sect, some of whose members fulfilled this meaning of plainness to the letter. Not a tuck, not a ruffle, not a collar, nor a belt ever found its way into their wardrobes. Their hats were of the simplest weave of straw and had no trimming save a plain band; and I suppose that was for preserving the shape of the hat and not for trimming. So persistent were they in this manner of dressing they made themselves conspicuous, and were everywhere recognized by their homeliness of dress.

Do you think this is what the Lord meant when he said, "Let your garments be plain"? No, he did not mean that, for he says, "Let their beauty be the work of thine own hands." We know they can not be without beauty and at the same time have beauty.

Consulting Webster again, we find that the word plain means also "without conspicuous embellishment; free from show or pretension; void of extraneous beauty or adornment." According to this meaning, a garment may be plain and yet have some kind of embellishment, providing it is not conspicuous. It must be free from show or pretension. It may have sufficient ornamentation to relieve its hard lines, thus giving it beauty, and yet be within the bounds of plainness. We need not discard all tucks, ruffles, laces or gathers, those things that tend to soften and beautify, thus giving an air of refinement.

Look at the example the Lord has set forth for us in nature. See the beautifully clothed maple tree with its star-shaped leaves; the oak with leaves of glossy firmness. See the delicately formed petals of the rose, the rich velvet of the pansy, or the feathery fronds of the fern. Do you think the Lord wants us to place ourselves all out of harmony with nature?

Yet there is danger of going to the extreme, thus causing needless expense and labor. The mother who spends from one to three hours ironing one elaborate frock for her child must, of necessity, neglect some of the teaching and training so essential to the proper development of the child; and coupled with this neglect of teaching is the ill effect of the overdressing. Poor twentieth century children, starched and gloved into premature, little, old men and women, expected to fill a sphere far too large for them and, like an overpotted plant, they grow all to foliage and no blossoms—the sweet fragrance of childish simplicity all "fashionably trained" out.

Fortunately, children do not all belong to this twentieth century kind. I am glad we have many, very many who do not belong to it. I can see them now, rows and rows of them in the Sunday schools. I can see them with eager, upturned faces, listening to the gospel truths. Their frocks are clean and simple; their faces refined and earnest. They will some day fill the ranks of noble workers in the Master's vineyard. Their struggles upward will not be so hard as the struggle of those who have grown up with the wrong conception of life. They will have higher aims in life than to possess themselves of the latest styled hat or the most elaborate gown.

We have noted at length the effect the style of our garments has upon us. Do we think the quality can have any ill effect? An old lady once started to go down the street with her niece who was richly dressed. As they stepped out of the house, the old lady stopped and took a survey of her companion. "I can not walk with you," she said; "you are too proud." "Oh, no," was the reply; "you are the proud one. I was not thinking of my clothes."

Which one was right?

It is a matter of taste if I prefer a four-dollar hat that will last two seasons to a two dollar hat that looks shabby at the end of the first season. (This paper was written a number of years ago before millinery prices had followed the aeroplane.) It is a question of the heart, if my sister is offered because I choose the better quality; but it is a question of right and wrong, if any hat has for its adornment that which has cost the life of one of God's beautiful creatures. I refer to the cruel and inconsistent practice of wearing birds on the hat—cruel because needless, inconsistent because sanctioned by those who should be the embodiment of tenderness and mercy, the so-called gentler sex.

Surely, you who think to adorn yourselves with the dead bodies of our beautiful songsters know not what you do. You have joined the conspiracy against our feathered friends, and are aiding in their wholesale slaughter. Can you not hear the piteous cries of the bird whose wings have been torn from her body while yet alive; or the last faint chirp of the starving nestlings whose mother has been taken from them while they are yet young, because her plumage is at that time the most beautiful? Can you not see the devastated regions which nature refuses to restore, the regions where lie the great, naked bodies of the snowy herons now fast returning to mother earth? Can you not taste the bitter cup yearly quaffed by once happy songsters? Can you not feel the displeasure of an offended Creator who notes even the sparrow's fall? Surely, surely, you do not know the extent of this wanton destruction of life or you, would not seek to beautify yourselves at such a price.

No wonder we are given the injunction concerning our garments, "Let their beauty be the beauty of the work of thine own hands." Notice that it says "thine own hands," not "mine own hands." If we want beauty, let us create it out of the materials the Lord has given us, and not take that which he has created for another and wiser purpose.

We have said that the subject of our clothing in an important one. It is, but there are things of much more importance. Our clothing, like our food, is merely one of the things necessary to our physical existence. It should occupy no more of our time and thought than is necessary in order that it may serve its twofold purpose, that of giving comfort and refinement.

Some one has said that our garments should be such that another, having seen us and then passed on, could not recall how we were dressed. The reason for this, of course, would be that our clothing was not so plain or untidy, nor yet so elaborate or gaudy, as to be noticeable.

In considering what we should wear, let us always remember that, "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." ETHEL I. SKANK.

Another Reason.

The reading of the article given above suggests to us another reason why we should not indulge ourselves to excess in our love of the beautiful in dress.

In one of the early revelations to this church, the Lord says to his people, "Let every man esteem his brother as himself: for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just. Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine." (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5, 6.)

Again, a little later, the Lord said to the church that he has so provided for men that they might have in abundance those things which are needed for food and raiment, and he added the warning, "But it is not given that one should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin," etc.

We have only to pick up any daily paper, on any day we choose, to perceive, if we are open to conviction, that the world lies under the condemnation of an unequal distribution of that which the Father's hand has provided for all.

One reads on one page that Japan is suffering from one of the worst famines known in many years, that many are starving to death; on another page he reads of the long bread lines of hungry people who were served in many of our large cities on Christmas Day; he turns another page and reads of the passing of a man who left millions to be divided among his fortunate or unfortunate heirs; and on still another page he sees grotesque figures which advertise garments fabulously high priced.

Or, if one wishes to read the church papers, the fact stares at us again from the printed lines that we are not equal, that we are not sharing alike, that the Father's children are not yet one. A missionary must leave his field and turn to work at something to support his family; another writes that his wife can hardly have the plainest necessities; another that he has taken into his home the additional care of several orphan children and does not know how to make the already scant allowance cover the needs of all. On, and on, and on we might extend the list. Who in this church has the right to dress extravagantly when others of the church, children of the same Father, worshippers of the same God, have dire need? Who can do it and look up to heaven and say, "I am just; I esteem my brethren as myself"?

The poor of the church and of the world are crying out, some in subdued moans, some in desperation, and those who have in abundance may not close their hearts against humanity's need; for of each of us will be required an account of his stewardship, of the manner in which he has used the wealth which belongs primarily to God, and of which men are but custodians.

A better time must come; each of us should do his part to hasten its coming. As the women of old in the wilderness gave willingly their mirrors of brass to make the great laver which held the waters of purification, where the priests bathed hands and feet before entering into the holy place to serve God with pure hands, so should women of our time willingly dispense with everything unnecessarily costly, that they may devote the more to the upbuilding of the church and the equalizing of conditions among the people.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN JANUARY.

For our missions and missionaries in all places, especially remembering the Lamanites, that the preaching of the gospel may be with conviction that will lead them to obedience, and that thereafter their lives may demonstrate its purifying, uplifting power.

Remember the mission at Jerusalem, and those who have been sent there, that they may be protected and be successful in winning many converts to the truth, and that the Spirit may abide with them.

Lesson, Doctrine and Covenants 16: 4. Memory verse, Jeremiah 31: 10.

A REQUEST FOR PRAYERS.

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, December 24, 1913.

I again ask for prayers through your paper and also through the Prayer Union.

I have been greatly benefited and counseled by the workings of the Holy Spirit, through which God has shown me my own particular part which is required of me to work my deliverance from the downfall of my health. Pray that our God may overrule and guide me by imparting to me the wisdom I need in carrying out the desires he has given me for good. There is much counsel of which I have need, so that the direction of my own efforts may be such as God would have of me.

My trials have been great in consequence of my ignorance, and, as I have suffered these results, I ask God for his counsel and guidance, increased over what he has already given.

Your brother in the one faith,

GEORGE ELSON.

Sister Ollive Hubbard writes from Olathe, Colorado, requesting prayers for Sister Blower and children, of the California Mesa Branch, who are left alone at the death of companion and father. Sister Blower has been very ill. The eldest child, a girl of ten, is a cripple from paralysis. This child has faith, that through prayer she may be healed. It is requested that she be especially remembered. This family should be presented to the Lord for comfort and healing. Sister Hubbard asks prayers that she may continue faithful.

Sister Stephen Gardner, of Tenants Harbor, Maine, requests prayers that she may be relieved of inflammatory rheumatism, from which she suffers severely. She is isolated and can not secure administration. May the Lord remember and restore her.

Finger Bath for Clean Sacrament Bread.

The tendency of the times is toward daintiness and thoughtfulness in little things, which small events, after all, make up our lives. A bathroom half a century ago was considered a luxury; to-day it is even a workingman's necessity. Tooth brushes, napkins, and finger bowls twenty-five years ago were not considered as imperative as to-day.

The Lord gave us instruction that the wine used in the sacrament should be pure and of our own make, and that the sacrament vessels should be clean. My experience has been that the deacon generally tries to get some sister who has a reputation for neatness to make the wine and furnish the bread. The deacon conscientiously prepares the vessels, the sacrament linen is immaculate, and apparently the most fastidious would have no adverse criticism to offer.

Now come the priests or elders to perform their part. They may have just alighted from a street car after hanging on to a strap, hands rubbing the dirty backs of the seats, catching hold of the handle on which some billions of microbes may have been deposited by many soiled hands; they walk up to the communion table and break the bread. I don't believe any person's hands are absolutely clean ten minutes after they have been washed.

I have seen some elders who realized the untidy condition of their hands pull out their handkerchiefs and use them for a towel in an effort to clean their hands. Sometimes the handkerchiefs are fresh and sometimes they are not. But suppose this little piece of linen were perfectly clean; it has been taken from a pocket in which soiled handkerchiefs innumerable have been deposited, and into which soiled hands have been thrust! Can a handkerchief, under such conditions, ever be clean? And what possible good can a handkerchief do in removing grime from the hands by giving them a little perfunctory rub? Such a procedure always looks to me as if the official was just making a senseless attempt at cleanliness without any practical results whatever.

If every branch would include in its communion service several finger bowls and napkins the officiating minister could bathe his fingers just before the bread is broken, and cleanliness would be assured. Neither cost, time, nor effort affords an excuse for refusing to observe this simple little provision for cleanliness.

Sometimes judgment is not used in breaking the bread—the pieces are too large—necessitating considerable mastication before it is disposed of. The bread should be sent to the church with the crust removed, and the slices cut up into uniform squares, not all the way through, but sufficiently deep so when the elder breaks it the squares will properly separate.

So long as we have any prejudice against the individual communion cup there are persons who should partake of the wine after the others have been served. Brethren with untrimmed mustaches should have some consideration for those who object to drinking the wine after their lip adornment has wandered around the cup. People who have sore mouths, bad teeth, or anything out of harmony with a proper consideration of others' feelings should so seat themselves in the church that they will be served last.

Some will perhaps take exception to these suggestions; but if they were carried out, our communion service would be more in harmony with the thought of cleanliness than at present practiced in many branches.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

PACIFIC OCEAN, October 30, 1913.

ROY, ALABAMA, December 2, 1913.

Editors Herald: As the scenes and experiences of another year are fast coming to a close, while another new year is approaching and will soon be here, I desire to express my sincere thanks from the heart in written testimony through the HERALD, to the giver of all good for excellent health and strength, and for his Spirit in power and assistance in the performance of duty in the work of the ministry in the great mission field.

"If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." For truly, as the apostle says, the Spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God, and the word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. It is this testimony which is given to the faithful servants of God to which they are commanded to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, for by thus heeding the same apostle declares by divine inspiration that "ye do well."

If any man has not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his; but so long as we are his by obedience we will have the Spirit by which he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets, the Spirit that searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God. And by this Spirit we can make a thorough and complete examination of ourselves, and know if our thoughts and desires are pure; for the searchlight of truth is quick and powerful, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

The Palmyra Seer struck the keynote in regard to divine revelation in the beautiful thoughts expressed in simple language as follows: Yea, thus saith the still small voice which whispereth through and pierceth all things, and oftentimes it maketh my bones to quake while it maketh manifest, saying, This is expressive of the word that liveth and abideth for ever, that cometh direct from heaven to the prophets of God, both of former as well as latter days, when they were under the influence of the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire. For truly the bones are made to quake, and they and the heart are made to burn while being moved upon by the Holy Ghost.

We read in Lamentations 1: 13: "From above hath he sent fire into my bones." Also in Jeremiah 23: 29: "Is not my word like as a fire, saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" And also in Jeremiah 20: 9: "But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones."

So we find that the word, which is the light or the intelligence, or revelation that God sendeth to his servants while being filled with, or under the influence of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, is like a burning fire in the hearts and bones of the disciples. Hence we read in Luke 24: 32: "They [the disciples] said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?"

This word is quick and powerful and maketh us truly alive, and actively engaged in every good word and work, causing us to be meek and gentle unto all men. It enableth us to discern the signs of the times in the fulfillment of prophecy. It more fully impresses our minds with the necessity of a full sacrifice and a complete service to God of both body and spirit, day by day, in order that the cleansing and purging process may go on until we become like him, when we shall see him as he is.

The word in the heart and bones as a burning fire will be the means of refining and purifying the Saints and sons of Levi, when Christ comes like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap; when he shall purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

The work of preparation can not be successfully carried on in the church except by a strict obedience to the gospel, which cometh not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. Jesus says, Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. A full and complete preparation or a full reward can not be obtained by obedience to one half or three fourths of the Savior's commands. All things that Jesus has commanded the church to observe must be obeyed in order to make a complete preparation, and that the church become like him in purity.

If we walk in the light (the law is light, Proverbs 6: 23, thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path, Psalm 119: 105) as he is in the light, the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. To walk in the light means to keep his law or word; and then we are promised that the purifying process will be effectual in us. The work of sanctification will then be complete. "Sanctify them through the truth, thy word is truth."—John 17: 17. Not by one word only, but by the whole truth which includes living by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. What a grand thing it would be if the whole church would step forward and press right onward, walking in the light as he is in the light.

Christ suffered for us, leaving us (the Saints) an example, that we should follow his steps. (1 Peter 2: 21.) His steps are marked out plainly in the word or commands he has left here for us to live by; and these commands not only include faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, but many other things, such as prayer, humility, patience, meekness, diligence, virtue, temperance, godliness, charity, brotherly kindness, the love of one another, freedom from covetousness, imparting one to another as the gospel requires, ceasing from idleness, cleanliness, absence of faultfinding, ceasing from all light speeches and from much laughter, for this is sin, and from all lustful desires, from all pride and lightmindedness, and many other things too numerous to mention here.

We are also required to pay all our tithing, together with free-will offerings, in order to help carry on the different parts of the great work of God, that the gospel may be preached to all the world, and Zion be redeemed; that a happy people be gathered out and be fully prepared for the coming of Christ in glory to reign in peace, while Satan, sin, sickness, pain, death, sorrow, and crying will all be banished from that happy abode, when God shall have wiped away all tears from their eyes.

The great work of God is an educational work. It can not be fully and completely accomplished except by a gradual process through faith and obedience, with much prayer and study, under the direct influence of the teaching of the Holy Spirit, with its gifts and blessings: Faith, wisdom, knowledge, healing, prophecy, discernment, tongues, interpretation, together with its precious fruits: love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.

I am laboring here in a new place where there are quite a large number of people who seemingly are much interested in hearing the word. So we are sowing the good seed, with the good Spirit to cheer and to comfort, hoping and trusting that there will be an increase to the church, or family of God.

After the reunion at Dixonville, Florida, Brother Aylor and I labored together in parts of the field, to good effect. At Flomaton, Alabama, we held a meeting and ordained Brother J. L. Mize to the office of elder, whom we think will be an effectual minister for good in his vicinity, if he will be humble, prayerful, and studious.

After Brother Aylor left me I attended the conference of the Alabama District at Owassa, November 8 and 9. A profitable time was spent in the service of the Lord, and good liberty was given in presenting the word, by the writer. During the prayer service I ordained Brother E. C. Shelley to the office of elder, following recommendation by the conference, as well as the branch of which he is a member. If this young brother will continue humble, prayerful, and studious, the Lord will bless him with qualifications that will make him a useful minister to the church in the great army of workers in carrying the gospel to the world.

With a heart full of thanks to God for his great blessings during the year that is now drawing to a close I conclude with a prayer that he may continue to direct in his work, and bless his people everywhere.

In bonds,

F. M. SLOVER.

PITTSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, December 3, 1913.

Editors Herald: My attention was called to a notice in a Pittsburg paper of a convention of the National Reform Association to be held in the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, "Mormonism" to be the topic for discussion. Of course I became interested at once, and set about to see what I could do to have the distinction made between our church and the Utah church. With Brother McDowell as my guide, and no blind one at that, we set out to attend the service in the Emory Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Doctor A. E. Piper is pastor.

He being the one to preside over the convention, I made it a point to see him and place in his hands a copy of Brother E. A. Smith's Open Letter to the Clergy. I asked him to read it and pass it along, which he agreed to do.

Reverend Piper is a broad and fair-minded man, and has made the distinction of the two churches on other occasions. I was somewhat disappointed on attending the convention to learn that he was sick and could not be present. So, determined to make another effort, I wrote a note asking that they please make the distinction between the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints and the Utah Mormons, giving it to one of the ushers to hand to the chairman. As a result, when Professor Oscar F. Davis, chairman of the National Reform Commission, arose to speak, he made a clear, emphatic statement that anything said in this convention should not be construed as referring to the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa.

Toward the close of the session a resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States was passed by a standing vote, all in the building voting except six Utah Mormons, who stood up when the negative vote was taken. They challenged the association for proof of their statements as to polygamy being taught in Utah; then the fun began in earnest.

One of the Utah elders, a Mr. Frank Bacon, recognized me as soon as I got the floor. I presume he knew what was coming. I don't think he had forgotten what happened when I met him last spring at Brother Cozad's.

I saw Professor Davis after the meeting. He said he had made the Mormon question a thorough study, and knew that Brigham Young was the author of polygamy, and its attending crimes. He also stated that any time he could assist us in defending ourselves against Brighamism he would gladly do so. To show him my appreciation of his fairness, I gave him a copy of Doctrines and Dogmas of Utah Mormonism, for which he thanked me again and again. Now I think Professor Oscar Davis is one of the most fair-minded men I have ever met, and worthy of our support, and I commend him to the brethren. His home is in New Richmond, Wisconsin.

I also gave to the associated press reporter a copy of the HERALD containing the Open Letter to the Clergy. He thanked me for it, but of course I did not expect it to be published.

Editors Herald: As I was sending my subscription, I felt impressed to add my testimony. I can say I love this latter-day work dearly. We have been isolated to some extent for the last year, and had been up to three years before that time. I have been in the church over seventeen years.

I have enjoyed the church work at Coldwater, whenever I could get there. The Saints there are good, as they are elsewhere. I could not live without the gospel and all of its goodness. I receive many blessings.

I think the Prayer Union is grand for us isolated ones. I realize that God will answer prayer. I know that prayers have been answered in my behalf and in behalf of my family many times. Oh, that we might be more faithful; that we might receive greater blessings!

Ever your sister in the one true faith,

MRS. H. V. DAVIS.

ENGLISH, INDIANA, December 5, 1913.

Editors Herald: During our debate with Mr. E. G. Denny at Oak Hill, near Birdseye, at the close of the first day's session a Mr. Goodman, of the Campbellites, as he expressed it, came to me and invited me to come to English, as he thought we could do some good there. We promised we would do so, providing our entertainment could be arranged for.

We continued meetings at and near the scene of the debate for nearly two weeks, holding forth in private house with good interest. Finally we received a card from A. F. Colebaugh, saying, "Come to English; your entertainment is provided for." Accordingly, on December 2 Brother Metcalf and I came to this place. Brethren Colebaugh and Helmbrecht secured the opera house. We chalked the sidewalks, and that same night had a large audience of attentive listeners. We can not use the house on Wednesday and Friday nights on account of the picture show. But on Thursday night we were permitted to occupy again, to an increased audience. The people have contributed the hall expense so far. We are hoping for good results. This is the first effort of our people in English so far as we have been able to learn.

The result of the debate at Oak Hill was all we could expect, or that was desired on the part of the Saints. They had been harassed to quite an extent by the Campbellites, and are now rejoicing with a joy plainly manifest on their countenances, especially when any mention is made of the debate.

The underhanded methods used by those people to bring about the debate at the time, and in the way they did proved a boomerang to them. The time and place for debate was set by them, without consulting me. Furthermore, Mr. Denny sent a typewritten copy of propositions into that vicinity with my name forged to them. My name was left blank in the first proposition, (for what reason I can not tell, as they had my name written below), and they induced one of our young brethren to write my name in the blank space. All this was arranged without notifying me and letting me do my own signing.

Hearing it rumored that they had set the time and place for debate, I wrote to inquire about it, and learned only five days prior to the debate that the rumor was true. Fortunately we were only about fifty miles away, and ordering our debating books expressed from Holden, Missouri, to Birdseye, Indiana, we were there and ready for debate at the time and place they had set. Of course we were under no obligations to be there, but for the sake of the work we concluded best to be there. And such it proved to be. But we had Mr. Denny sign up a contract for the debate both as to propositions and as to time and place before witnesses, and that only a few minutes before the debate started.

Mr. Denny is something more of a gentleman in debate than some others we have met. It was a hopeless flounder for him nearly all the way through. At times we really felt sorry for him.

Will all the Saints and friends of the Southern Indiana and Kentucky and Tennessee districts who know of opportunities for preaching the word, and especially in new places, kindly inform the undersigned of the same, addressing me Holden, Missouri, box 144?

Brother Metcalf and I will likely separate soon, so as to be able to do more and reach more places. Brother Metcalf was a great help to me in the debate. We thank the Lord for the plan he has given that can not be gainsaid by the cunning craftiness of men. May he ever keep us humble, and help us to be loyal unto the end.

In gospel bonds,

H. E. MOLER.

News from Missions

Southeastern Illinois.

I visited Brush Creek Branch November 2; held nine meetings. This is one of the oldest branches in the church, organized in the days of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Brother I. A. Morris has presided for a number of years; he is held in high esteem, not only by the Saints of the home branch, but by all in the district. In company with the late Brother G. H. Hilliard, he did faithful service, and their names are household words in the homes of the Saints. Brother William Clemmons is in charge of the branch at present; he is a man of faith and humility; in honor, he prefers his brethren.

November 11 I went to Tunnel Hill Branch; held six meetings; it was wet, gloomy season of weather, which kept several from attending services. Three nights we had no meeting on account of rain; spoke one evening to a small, but attentive audience at the home of the presiding officer, Brother B. F. Kelley, a brother of our missionary, T. C. Kelley. This is one of the oldest branches in the district; it has seen some happy days. At present it is laboring under some disadvantage, as the members are scattered; still the faithful few are doing their part to keep the work moving. Brother B. F. Kelley has the name of always being at his post of duty, which is commendable. May he continue to do so. He has a faithful assistant in Brother P. G. McMahan, a priest.

From this place I went to Parrish Branch, November 17, where I held seven meetings. The attendance and interest were good, considering that the members are so far apart. Brother F. M. Davis, the presiding officer, lives ten miles from the church; still he came one evening and returned home, twenty miles, horseback; he came Sunday also, his wife accompanying him. Brother Robinson, the priest of the branch, attended all the services but one, as did his wife and three little children most of the time; they live six miles from the church. The Saints of the Parrish Branch are alive in the work; the branch is fortunate in having as their shepherd Brother Davis, notwithstanding he lives so far from the church. He has a good understanding of the work, and is a safe man for the place.

The next branch visited was Springerton; it is only about forty miles across the country, but by rail it is fifty-one, and we change cars twice, and stop over one night at Endfield. It required eighteen hours to cover the fifty-one miles. Brother and Sister Remley, the only Saints in that town, made me welcome at their pleasant home at Endfield, which I appreciated. I arrived at Springerton November 25. Brother George Ellis invited me to his home, but in a few days we had to break up housekeeping, as Sister Ellis was called to the bedside of her sick brother in Carthage, Missouri. I was cared for by Brother Frank Bensing and his saintly mother; this aged sister has taken pleasure in caring for the missionaries. I preached seven times. I was fortunate in holding meetings in town, for this was a wet week, roads being very muddy. Brother George Ellis has charge of the branch. It is to be hoped that the coming district conference to convene there will give him some help, for there is good material on the ground; they will find him a good, wise leader, highly respected by Saints, and those not of the faith.

From Springerton I went to the Dryfork Branch, December 1. The church is located north of Jeffersonville five miles in the country. All of the branches that I visited in this district, except Springerton, are from three to twelve miles from the railroad, which makes it unpleasant in wet weather, such as we had nearly all the time I was in the district. Our aged Brother Henry Walker is president of this branch. He was not able to attend any of the seven preaching services. I visited him at his home. He requested me to say that he is still in the faith, and I must add, in the spirit of the work. He was baptized May 28, 1859. I made my home with Brother and Sister Fleeharty, who kindly conveyed me back and forth to church, and accompanied me in visiting several of the Saints. This is the home of Father John Smith and his son William. The latter was in poor health; he is acting priest of the branch. The Saints are very anxious for his recovery. Earnest prayers were offered in his behalf; for the sake of the branch, as well as for that of himself and wife, I hope they will be answered. Father Smith's autobiography would be interesting; I trust he will write it. The grandchildren of Brother F. P. Green, with their families, are in the work, and I am pleased to have met them.

Brother J. D. Shaw, of the Brown Church Mission, which is eight miles west and north of Dryfork Branch, and ten miles south of Brush Creek, came for me Sunday, December 7; so in the afternoon we faced the cold, northwest wind. We held three meetings at their church. There are about twenty members within five miles of the church. Most of them own their farms. In my judgment it would be advisable to organize a branch here. They own the church building. There is material on the ground that can care for the work, if empowered to do so by ordination and choice of the Saints.

I understand that the district president, Brother R. H. Henson, is contemplating taking the matter up with the missionary in charge, Brother J. W. Rushton. The attendance and interest was very good. I regretted that I had to leave, but the appointment was out at the Poplar Creek Branch, which is about eight miles west and north.

Brother Henson conveyed me to his home, where I met his wife and six good-looking sons and daughter, a happy, industrious family. I hope to hear of the boys coming into the church. I preached five times in the church owned by that branch; had a fair-sized audience; this was the last place I visited in the district. I was unable to visit the Bell Aires Branch. Brother Henson is president of Poplar Creek, branch and district. It is said, A prophet is not without honor save in his own land. Brother Henson is an exception, for he is respected in the community by those within and without the fold.

The Southeastern Illinois District has furnished some faithful ministers, who have done much good in that district, and elsewhere, and who are spoken of highly and would meet with a warm reception by Saints and many of the friends. Some, however, have passed on to the other shore. Among these are G. H. Hilliard, F. P. Green, J. R. Henson, deceased; Isaac A. Morris, Henry Walker, M. G. Brown, T. C. Kelley, F. M. Slover, I. M. Smith, W. M. Smith, J. A. Stade, O. R. Miller, L. Moore, H. O. Pritchett; all these first heard the gospel in Southeastern Illinois, and became able, active men. There are others not known to the church at large, who are laboring locally, with credit.

The district will again hold its reunion, time and place to be made known later. A pressing and cordial invitation is extended to Central Illinois and Saint Louis districts to join them. This is by advice of the missionary in charge, Brother Rushton, which I believe is a wise move. The three districts can, if they will unite, have a large reunion, and the expenses will not be much for each of the three districts. I am sure that the Saints of Southeastern Illinois will do their part to make all welcome and feel at home. So let all make arrangements to attend.

Brother S. S. Smith has been quite active in the district, preaching some able sermons. Brethren Moore and Dexter had a good interest near Brown Church; had the tent for a few weeks; many express a desire to have them return. Brother Field's labors were commendable; many were disappointed when he was not returned to this district. The same is true of H. O. Pritchett, Henry Sparling, and others.

If all is well I intend to return to the district early in the new year, and take care of other lines of work.

I wish to thank the Saints one and all for their hospitality and wish all a merry Christmas and a prosperous new year.

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

CAMERON, MISSOURI, Seventh and Harris Streets, December 24, 1913.

Ontario.

I wish all to know that I am still in the faith, and enjoying the blessing of God.

During the winter of 1912-13 I labored at Freesoil and Elm Flatt, in Mason County, and also at Marion, Michigan. At Elm Flatt I baptized seven, and others have been baptized since. A few years ago a minister of another faith delivered a prophecy in Elm Flatt Schoolhouse to the effect that the time would come when no one near that place would confess they had ever been a Latter Day Saint, etc. Well, the prophecy has failed, for there is a nice branch of Saints there now. At Marion, in Osceola County, I preached for two or three weeks, and baptized three fine people; one of whom, Brother Hubbard, has since been ordained an elder.

While here I received news from General Conference to the effect that I was to labor in Ontario for the next conference year. While it was a great disappointment to me, as I felt I could do much for the church in western Michigan, I made arrangements to go to my new field.

I attended the reunion of the Eastern Michigan District at Port Huron in June and enjoyed one grand time. Soon after that I came to Canada and have labored in or near Petrolia, Wallaceburg, Oungah, Chatham, and Blenheim. The Saints in Canada have, with a few exceptions, been very kind to me.

At Ungah I stayed at the home of Brother and Sister D. Thorpe. Their youngest son was suffering with what the doctors called tuberculosis of the bone, in his knee. They told him that he must undergo an operation or lose his limb, and perhaps both; but when I got there I made a companion of the boy, and we had many good talks together. He was walking on crutches, and one night went two miles with me to meeting. I told him God was able to heal him if he would only put his trust in him. He finally told his mother to ask me to administer. I did so, and the Spirit of God was there to bless us. We were all melted to tears.

Soon after this I took a trip to Traverse City, where, on September 3, Sister Edith Lyle Kapnick and the writer were united in marriage in our church there. Elder James Davis "tied the knot." The Saints had decorated the church very beautifully, and everything passed off nicely. Lyle and I took a trip to Kirtland, Ohio, to see the temple, and enjoyed it very much. We also visited several other places, then came back to Ontario and went to Brother Thorpe's.

The boy (George) was much better. His knee looked much better than when I administered four weeks before. His mother asked him if he wished to be administered to again. "Not until I have been baptized," he replied. So on October 5 we took a trip to Wallaceburg and baptized George and his brother's wife. That night I confirmed them, and was greatly blessed with the Spirit. We feel sure that God has a work for George to do. A few days later I again administered to him, and he has thrown the crutches away and his leg is as well as ever, much to the astonishment of the doctor. All praise be to God.

In Chatham I held a four-week meeting and baptized three nice people. Wife and I stayed at the home of Brother and Sister P. W. Hughes, and were kindly treated. I have an official invitation from the Chatham Branch to return early in the new year and hold another "mission," but owing to conditions I am afraid I must disappoint them. Lyle is home for the holidays just now. She will join me again in the near future. I have been holding meetings here in Blenheim for two weeks, and have met with some success.

I love the work. I know it is true. I earnestly hope to spend all my days to the glory of its author.

R. D. WEAVER.

BLENHIM, ONTARIO, December 5, 1913.

Southeastern Mission.

This year so far has been one of interest and work for me and I have enjoyed it. The first part of the summer I spent in Oklahoma and Texas, working with different ones of the missionaries and sometimes alone. I spent October and November in Alabama and Florida, traveling with Brother F. M. Slover. We attended one reunion in that field, at Dixonville, Alabama. I found this a good ripe field for the gospel. I remember hearing Brother Joseph Smith say, about ten years ago, that the South had been in the past backward in receiving the restored gospel, but in the future we would see it become a fruitful field. It is surely becoming such now.

I find one of the worst drawbacks to work is to get men that will take care of the local interests. Oftentimes we have large branches, with ordained men to look after them, but they don't have a sermon except when a missionary comes along. About all they have between times is the Sunday school, and that oftentimes has one of the sisters as its superintendent. Consequently, the work is not making the advancement it would if the local men were doing their part. It isn't this way everywhere, for we have some local men doing fine. Where these are we see a live branch. What shall we do to remedy this weak place in the gospel work; give some one else the chance to get the crown?

November 29, in company with Brother Ellis Short and wife, we come to Grannis, Arkansas, to answer a call from the Saints at this place to assist in dedicating a church. Brother J. T. Riley had preceded us, and he with others met us and took us to Brother Ed Clinton's, where we made our home while in Grannis. Next day (Sunday) we dedicated the church to the Lord. Brother Riley opened with prayer, Brother Short led in the address, followed by the writer. The church is about thirty-nine by fifty feet, nicely finished, built principally by Brother Ed Clinton. All seemed to enjoy the service. The rain hindered the attendance some.

We followed this dedication with a week meeting. I did all the preaching except one sermon. Sunday, December 7, I baptized nine. We also held a business meeting with the branch, and they sustained E. Youmans as branch president; Jasper Clinton, teacher; C. Waits, deacon; Sister Ed Clinton, clerk. Grannis Branch has now taken on new life. We hope to see good work done by them; they have the equipment to do it. Sister Ethel Clift is one of the school-teachers at this place, and she is a great help to the church work; she is one of our noble workers. The principal of the school, Mr. Pigg, attended our meetings and expressed himself as delighted with our gospel. He invited us to visit the school to make them a talk. We did so, Brother Riley offering prayer.

Our next stop was at Winthrop, Arkansas, where we have a few families of good Saints, but no organization as yet; they are expecting to build soon. From this place we went to Fisher, Arkansas, in the west part of the State. We here have a nice little flock and a branch organized a little over a year old. We ordained Brother C. D. Schell an elder, and he was put in at once as the president of the branch. We are now at Bald Knob, where we have a branch and a neat little church and some faithful Saints. They have no elder, but we hope to supply this need; I think they have the material.

In the gospel conflict,

W. M. AYLOR.

News from Branches

Winnipeg, Manitoba.

I believe that there are a great many who are deeply interested (both in Canada and the United States) in what is being done to advance the work in Winnipeg. In the first place, I believe that we are all being made to feel more glad and hopeful in this place since the arrival of Brother Ward L. Christy. In the first part of his sojourn here Brother Christy, assisted by Brethren Wilson D. Arcy and Pugsley, held meetings two and three nights every week on the Market Square, and certainly created quite an interest in our belief.

When it grew too cold for street preaching, and realizing that he could not get the people to come out to our church in Saint James, we began to fear that some of the labor would be lost. It had been suggested that we rent a hall or theater for one night a week; but as it costs somewhere about fifty dollars to rent one of the theaters for a Sunday afternoon, or seventy-five dollars for a Sunday evening, and there being no money in the treasury that could be applied to that purpose, and there being a debt against the church of about one hundred and eighty-five dollars, we felt that we were in poor condition to commence a winter campaign, with the expense of renting and advertising to be met. And besides, we had borrowed from Brethren Nelson, Wellington, and Wilson, and felt that this money had been owing so long it ought to be paid before we incurred any other debts. But the brethren again came to the front by making us the offer that if we raised the one hundred and eighty-five dollars owing to them they would give it toward defraying the expense of renting and advertising. Well, the money has been raised, the church freed from debt, and the winter campaign commenced.

The Walker Theater was rented for December 7. Brother Christy, assisted by those who could help, billed the town so far as possible. We had an attendance of about twelve hundred. Brother Christy spoke for nearly two hours, clearly defining our position as distinct from that of the Mormon Church in Utah, and all other churches. A collection was taken up. A number of questions were answered. We had the same theater again last Sunday, and again had quite a large attendance; the interest manifested was the very best. The brethren have again rented a theater for next Sunday afternoon.

All are anxious that it will be made possible that these meetings may continue. Praying that the effort now being put forth for the spreading of the truth in this part of the vineyard may be blessed, I remain,

Yours in the one hope,

W. HADATH.

Los Angeles, California.

The annual business meeting was held Wednesday evening, December 17, with a fine attendance. Election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the choice of V. M. Goodrich, president. Good spirit and harmony characterized the entire election, which speaks well for the continued and effective work of the officers of the branch.

Arrangements have been made for opening a new mission service at the home of Brother and Sister Ordway, in Altadena, services to be held afternoons, beginning the first Sunday in the new year, in charge of Elder Fred Adam, in connection with the mission at Hermosa Beach. Interest at the Long Beach Mission continues good. A Religio local was recently organized there with twenty charter members. A Religio local is in prospect at Pomona, where we have a home class under the care of Brother Peter Kaufman, as a result of the meetings held there this summer by Brethren Roy F. Slye and W. A. Brooner. Brother W. A. McDowell recently held a series of meetings at San Bernardino with splendid results.

The committee on publicity are pursuing their work of securing names and addresses of all ministers not only of Los Angeles but all suburban towns, so that the entire district may be "warned." The work proves to be of some magnitude, but meets with the hearty approval of the entire branch. The first installment of names and money have already been sent in. The publicity committee are certainly to be commended on this means of reaching the chosen spiritual guides of the people.

The recent letter from President Frederick M. Smith in relation to more fully organizing the priesthood on the original plan of the school of the prophets is meeting with instant response and renewed interest on the part of the local priesthood. Organization was effected last month and a paper covering the history of the work in the old organization with a resumé of the laws for its government is to be read at the next meeting, looking to active work in this branch. All members of the priesthood, including visiting members, are specially invited to be present at the church the first Monday evening in January, at 7.30.

The church parliamentary club are making fine progress, meetings being held the third Tuesday evening in the month at the church. Only one thing more could be asked, and that is that more would avail themselves of this opportunity to improve along this important line.

An All-Around Newspaper.

It is generally conceded that The Chicago Record-Herald is the great family newspaper of the Central West. What has given it this favored position in the home? The explanation will be found, not in any single feature, but in the all-around excellence of all its departments, so that it appeals alike to men and women, young and old, gay and serious—the whole family.

The superior news-gathering facilities and high-class literary features of The Record-Herald have been the main factors in its wonderful success. Besides the full service of the Associated Press, it receives the foreign cable service of the New York World and Herald. It has its own leased wires to New York and Washington—also correspondents in all large cities. It has its special correspondents in every town of the Central West, who report all important news by telegraph. Complete and reliable market reports and financial news can always be found in its columns, with all other news of the business world. Its sporting department also is of the best.

But man and woman can not live by news alone. The true distinction of The Chicago Record-Herald comes with what it gives over and above the news—in such features as S. E. Kiser's daily column of humor, George Fitch's witty essays, the daily stories and pictures of "Jones's Daily Magazine," the breezy articles by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt and the admirable art talks entitled "Learn One Thing Every Day." This newspaper's criticisms of the drama, music and books are unsurpassed by any in the country. Choicest of all these extra features is the Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald, a real magazine, full of good stories and pictures by the best living authors and artists—a feast of entertainment for the whole family. The Chicago Record-Herald has earned its pre-eminence by solid all-around excellence.

Just Think of It!

One man raised 100 bushels of potatoes from 100 lbs. of seed. Another raised 60 tons of alfalfa on 12 acres of ground. Another raised 1,500 bushels of potatoes on 5 acres of ground. Another gets $200 per month for the milk from 14 cows. Another raised $80 worth of onions from 1-8 acre of ground. Another raised $900 worth of white beans on 9 acres of ground. Another raised $85 worth of cantaloupes on 1-2 acre of ground. And all this happened in the Big Horn Basin in Wyoming.

CHARACTER SKETCHES OF JESUS.

III.—HIS MORAL COURAGE AND HATRED OF EVIL.

It must not be supposed that because Jesus was kind and charitable he feared or hesitated to denounce evil or to rebuke evildoers when necessary.

When called upon to define right and wrong, or to express himself on moral questions, he met the issue fairly and without equivocation. He left no doubt in the minds of his hearers as to his position. His statements were plain and positive and courageous.

He hated evil, and particularly that evil which masqueraded under the cloak of piety. It seemed to him a monstrous thing that men should be unjust, cruel, avaricious, and corrupt, while professing to love and serve God. In his opinion long public prayers could not atone for private iniquity and greed, but rather made the offense much more flagrant. Position and influence could not save such offenders from his condemnation, or influence him one whit in the expression of his clearly thought out and consistently advocated principles of social and individual righteousness and justice.

To the Pharisees he said:

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves that appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them.—Luke 11: 44.

Or as it is recorded by Matthew:

Ye are like unto whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness. Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.—Matthew 23: 27, 28.

He also declared:

They bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.—Matthew 23: 4.

It might have been to his advantage, from the standpoint of diplomacy, for him to have remained silent regarding the methods of these influential people, for they controlled public sentiment to a large extent and were prominent in church and society. It was bad policy, or at least must have seemed so to the cautious minded. But Jesus was guided by principle, rather than by policy; or rather his was the only true policy,—that which conforms to correct principles of justice and eternal truth.

Many times he came in conflict with these people and their false and pernicious views of life and religion, as for instance when they approached him on the marriage question, and he drew a very strict line for their guidance, declaring that the hardness of the hearts of their fathers had been responsible for the lax conditions of their laws in that regard.

Always, however, with every denunciation of evil, there was an invitation to do right. If he pointed out the repulsive features of sin, he also painted the beautiful features of righteousness. For his program was eternally constructive and only incidentally destructive. If he denounced the sinner he also held out to him the promise of forgiveness and love, on condition of repentance and obedience.

The secret of his greatness and his exaltation was found in his intense love of right and his equally intense hatred of wrong. For it is written:

Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.—Hebrews 1: 9.

What a beautiful picture of the Master! What admirable traits! Here is no compromise with evil. Here is no indifferent regard for righteousness. Instead we find deep, intense, godly hatred of and opposition to iniquity in every form; and earnest, pure, clear-flamed love of and devotion to righteousness.

He came to destroy the works of the Devil, which he hated; and to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness, which he loved. The destructive features of his program will end with the final eradication of sin, sickness, poverty, and death; his constructive program will go on for ever and for ever. At last we know of no time in the dim and distant cycles of futurity when works of constructive righteousness shall cease within his eternal and all-embracing kingdom, the increase of whose dominion and power we are told shall have no end.

This was the manner of man that Jesus was when here. No wonder he was hated and maligned and persecuted, as well as feared, by the proponents of evil. They saw in him an enemy and rallied to crush him, and his followers after him. No wonder the noble and pure gathered to his standard and loved and served him, glimpsing in him the Savior of the world and the embodiment of justice and truth.

Thus is he destined to draw after him an increasing multitude of kindred spirits of all ages and lands.

A PROPOSED NAVAL HOLIDAY.

By a majority of three hundred seventeen to eleven the National House of Representatives has adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House of Representatives the declaration of the First Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, the Right Honorable Winston Churchill, that the Government of the United Kingdom is willing and ready to cooperate with other governments to secure for one year a suspension of naval construction programs offers the means of immediate lessening of the enormous burdens of the people and avoiding the waste of investment in war material.

This, we understand, was originated on account of a proposition made by Mr. Churchill before the British Commons to the effect that the nations should observe what has been termed a naval holiday. The nature of this holiday being indicated by the resolution just quoted. Naturally this proposition is viewed in different lights by different people. Those who are in sympathy with the military rule, the rule of force, consider it a menace to the welfare of the nation. This is perhaps well stated in the Scientific American:

The United States Navy is declining. Under the policy of the present administration it is declining at a rate, which, if maintained for the next four years, will place it in the fifth position, below France and Japan, and will reduce the United States from a first-class to a second-class naval power. . . . We commend to the attention of those members of Congress who waste the time of the Nation in foolish talk about the sin of building big guns and ships to carry them, the following indisputable fact, namely, that if, in a couple of years' time when all these ships are completed, the United States Navy should be sent out by this same Congress to meet the dreadnought fleet of Germany in a stand-up fight, it would be doomed, not merely to defeat, but to absolute annihilation. To the small-navy men in Congress, we commend also the consideration that, if they dispatched our fleet to fight either that of France or Japan, we should probably win, but at a cost of loss in ships and damage to those which remained afloat, that would relegate us to the third-rate position occupied by the Russian Navy at the close of the Russo-Japanese war.

Under present conditions the nations vie with each other in a struggle to see which shall be the best prepared for war. An increased armament by any one of them makes it that much more difficult for all the others because they must come up to the new standard. Thus each year the burden becomes greater. Yet any one of the nations naturally hesitates to cease this preparation, because such nation would immediately lapse to an inferior position and might at any time find itself at the mercy of some nation having a superior armament.

This resolution, however, proposes that there shall be an agreement by which all may desist for one year from this increase of armament, by which arrangement they would all find themselves at the end of the year in relatively the same positions as they were at its beginning, with a very great saving for all concerned. Those who favor peace and labor in the interests of peace look on the proposition quite differently from the editor of the Scientific American, and their position is perhaps well stated in The Chautauquan, as follows:

By the enormous and striking majority—three hundred seventeen to eleven—which our national House of Representatives gave in favor of the naval holiday proposal as formulated in the British Commons by Mr. Churchill, the head of the British admiralty, it made a notable demonstration, moral and political, on behalf of peace and progress. A few months ago few would have ventured to predict the passage, without serious opposition, of a resolution so "idealistic." But the idea is steadily and rapidly gaining ground. The premier of Bavaria recently indorsed it in the most positive terms. Premier Asquith of Great Britain has advised the masses and the wage-workers to apply pressure to the governing and military circles in the interest of armament reduction and suspension of new naval construction. The sober statesmen, if they have any outlook and any sympathy with social reform, realize more and more that the rivalry in armaments, in warship building and defense preparations, is the greatest obstacle to economic and social advance, to prosperity and constructive legislation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

RETURN OF JEWS.—The return of the Jews to Palestine goes on in a quiet yet spectacular manner. Only those interested in the study of this movement, those who are alert and observant, fully realize its import. Latter Day Saints, of course, have been watching developments for the past fifty years. The movement is one that they looked forward to for many years during the early history of the church, understanding clearly by the written word and the revelations of later times that such an event was sure to occur in connection with the history of the great restoration, and that it was to follow shortly after the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the restoration of the gospel. The movement back to Jerusalem is attracting men of influence as well as the poorer classes. Brains and wealth are both represented, as will be seen by the following very interesting extract from the Chicago Tribune for January 3, 1914:

Within a week two representative Jews in America announced their intention of going to Palestine to aid in the regeneration and rejuvenation of that country. One of these men is the Yiddish poet, "Yehoash," or Bloomgarden, as his real name is. The other is Nathan Straus, who has gained world-wide fame as a philanthropist. Mr. Straus retires from business to go to Jerusalem. The poet of the Ghetto breaks up a modest home which it took him years to build up in the New World—for he originally came from Russia as an immigrant. These two men of widely different spheres are guided in their march to Jerusalem by the same ideal—Zionsim. . . . This union in the field of ideas between the Ghetto poet and the American millionaire is remarkable and yet easily explained. The persecution of the Jews in some of the countries of Europe—persecutions which finally culminated in massacres and in blood ritual charges—has brought to the fold, so to speak, many Jews who thought that the day of races and nations is about ending and that society in the future will know of no distinctions on account of creed. Zionists the world over are elated over the interest which members of their race, who are themselves free from persecution, are taking in the fate of their weaker and harassed brothers in less enlightened countries.

PUBLICITY IN HAWAII.—Elders M. A. McConley and J. B. Barrett were recently granted space in The Hawaii Herald, published at Hilo, Hawaii, in setting out a brief though comprehensive historical sketch of the rise of the latter-day work, especially with reference to some of the points of difference between the Utah and Reorganized churches. They were given first page with display heading. Introducing the matter submitted by the brethren, the Herald says:

There seems to be some misunderstanding regarding their church; and as many have thought they were connected with the Mormon Church of Utah, known officially as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the elders have requested space to make the matter plain to the people that their church is in no way connected with the Utah Mormon Church, and their beliefs are materially different.

In many places where our elders are awake to the benefits of the public press, we are being treated with consideration and courtesy by press representatives. We are pleased to note that this is true in Hawaii.

GRANT VERSUS YATES.—Latest advices in the case of Grant versus Yates inform us that the new county attorney of the county in which said case was originally brought has stated his determination to dismiss the same. Brother Yates has been preaching to a crowded house in our new church at Ripley, Oklahoma, where this case originated, and where Mr. Grant is reported as having said that the then contemplated church would never be built.

Life is a mission. Every other definition of life is false and leads all who accept it astray. Religion, science, philosophy, though still at variance upon many points, all agree upon this, that every existence is an aim.—Mazzini.

A gentle heart is like ripe fruit, which bends low, that all may pluck it.—Backbone.

The Wanderer's Dream of Home.

I am sitting alone to-night, mother,
Watching the fire's bright glow,
Thinking of the days of delight, mother,
With you in the long ago;
And in fancy I see you again, mother,
As you stood in your cottage door,
Just as lovely as you were then, mother,
And I am your joy once more.

Refrain:

Sweet fancies my memory are thronging
As these scenes quickly pass in review,
And my sad heart aches with a longing
To be at home, dear mother, with you.

In dreams I am oft by your side, mother,
A child as in days of yore,
And we watch the waves as they glide, mother,
Far up on the shell-strewn shore;
But I wake and no longer hear, mother,
The sea in its loud refrain,
And my heart grows sad with the fear, mother,
That we ne'er may meet again.

They tell me your face, once so fair, mother,
Is changed, and your steps are slow;
Your eyes are not bright as they were, mother,
Your hair is white as the snow;
And you mourn for your wayward child, mother,
Who from your loved arms did roam
To cross the great ocean so wild, mother—
But has found no place like home.

Oh, I long for the old home nest, mother,
And to kiss your faded cheek,
To sob on your tender breast, mother,
The love my tongue can not speak;
Though I ne'er may receive your fond kiss, mother,
In this world of sin and care,
In a land that's fairer than this, mother,
Together its joys we'll share.

Psalm of Gratitude.

O my Father, thou that dwellest
In the glorious courts above,
Full of mercy and compassion,
Oh, how priceless is thy love.
Man may leave thee and forsake thee
And may wander far in sin,
Yet thine eye is ever watchful
And thy spirit seeks for him.

O my Father, I have wandered
And sore doubts have tempted me,
Midnight darkness hath enthralled me,
Through the gloom I could not see;
Yet when night has seemed the darkest
And my pathway insecure,
Through the darkness came thy Spirit,
With its aid I shall endure.

Dearest Father, if thou leadest
 All the rough and rugged way,
 Shall the desert bloom with gladness,
 Roses bright make fair the day;
 Though afar my journey lieth,
 Over mountains tread my feet,
 'Mong the great or with the lowly,
 Shall thy Spirit make it sweet.

Father, thou to me hast spoken,
 From on high thy Spirit came,
 Pointing out the path of service,
 And the way to Christlike fame.
 But thy servant is so sinful,
 In this life I need thee most;
 Make me strong and make me faithful—
 O Jehovah, Lord of Hosts.

Feed the Hearts That Hunger.

Do you know a heart that hungers for a word of love and cheer?
 There are many such about us; it may be that one is near;
 Look around you, can't you find one; speak the words that're needed so,
 And your own heart may be strengthened by the help that you bestow.

Or it may be that some one falters on the brink of sin and wrong,
 And a word from you might save him; speak, my brother, and be strong.
 Look around you, oh my brothers; what a world of sin this is!
 If you see that help is needed, give it with a friendly cheer.

Never think kind words are wasted in this wicked world of ours;
 Cast your bread upon the waters, it may come back e'en with showers.
 Coming back we'll surely need them, there are times of sharp distress;
 So, my brothers, e'er give kind words; gift and giver God will bless.

Be Not Afraid.

Be not afraid, young hands! The work
 The world would have you do
 Is measured by the time and strength
 Allotted unto you.

Be not afraid, young eyes! The mists
 That strain the glance of youth
 Freshen the morning rose that crowns
 The sunny hills of truth.

Be not afraid, young lips! The words
 That falter on your tongue
 Strike to the heart of men, because They are so fresh and young.

Be not afraid, young heart! The hope
 When all your dreams begin
 Is strong enough to choose a goal,
 And big enough to win.—Aloysius Call.

A Prayer.

O God, our Eternal Father,
 At thy feet we humbly bow,
 Praying that we may not falter
 And that thou wilt hear us now.

Grant thy Spirit to be with us
 That our hearts may be attune;
 Let thy light shine down upon us
 That with thee we may commune.

That thy plan we can not alter,
 We have known for many years.
 May thy servants seek thy shelter
 And forget their human fears;

For in sorrow did our Savior
 Bleed on Calvary's cruel cross,
 Teaching us through his behavior
 How to purge ourselves of dross.

May the talents in us hidden,
 And by thy pure eye best seen,
 Be developed till they glisten
 In the light of thy dear Son.

We have placed our all before thee,
 Going out into the world
 To proclaim the gospel story
 And thy flag of peace unfurl.

Oh, give strength to all thy servants
 And thy people duly bless
 That they may be perseverant,
 Free the gospel to confess;

So when trouble comes upon us,
 We thy Spirit may receive;
 And the world which now reviles us
 May thy gospel soon believe.

Grant thy people's lives may witness
 They have been and learned of thee,
 That each one may prove his fitness
 To be blessed and loved of thee.

Lord, from trials to be delivered
 We, thy children, do not ask,
 But sufficient faith unwav'ring
 To perform our ev'ry task;

That thy work may not be hindered
 By the crafty works of men;
 That thy people who have slumbered
 May their faith renew again.

All these blessings we are asking
 In the name of thy dear Son,
 That we, in thy Spirit basking,
 May enjoy them, every one.

Give us now from thy rich treasure
 Blessings for our labor, and Glory be to thee for ever
 And to thy dear Son. Amen.

THE PRIEST AND HIS DUTIES.

Read at the reunion of the Sheffield District, England, October 12, 1913.

In considering this subject, perhaps it would be wise to refer to an objection sometimes urged against us, viz: What scriptural authority is there for the existence of this office in Christ's church?

Those who make this objection refer us to Hebrews 7: 11, 12, which says:

If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law), what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed there is made of necessity a change also of the law.

Under the Mosaic law the priest was commanded to offer sacrifices of the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of red heifers, etc., first for himself, and then for the people, for the purifying of the flesh; but under the gospel he is to offer sacrifices of those who by the preaching of the principles of the gospel offer themselves for baptism, in which ordinance he offers them as a living sacrifice for sin.

1 Peter 2: 5 speaks of there being in Christ's church an holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Also verse 9 speaks of "a royal priesthood." Therefore as Paul wrote as recorded in Romans 12: 1, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Why our reasonable service? "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit," even as we shall be if we live worthily. (1 Peter 3: 18.)

Again, the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood is an everlasting order. 1 Chronicles 23: 13 says: "And Aaron was separated, that he should sanctify the most holy things, he and his sons for ever, to burn incense before the Lord, to minister unto him, and to bless in his name for ever." Malachi 2: 7 says: "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they [the people] should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts." Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3 says: "And the Lord confirmed a priesthood also upon Aaron and his seed throughout all their generations, which priesthood also continueth and abideth for ever, with the priesthood which is after the holiest order of God." We also find that our Savior is to "purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." (Malachi 3: 3.)

This is when he comes the second time, "to his temple." So we see the Aaronic priesthood must continue with the Melchisedec priesthood, to the end, as long as priesthood is necessary. See also Numbers 18: 8, 19, 23; Exodus 28: 43; Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8; Revelation 5: 10; 20: 6. So we are in the correct position as a church in the matter of priesthood.

In Book of Mormon times we also find the perpetual principle of the Aaronic priesthood:

And it came to pass that they did appoint priests and teachers throughout all the land, over all the churches. And it came to pass that after Helaman and his brethren had appointed priests and teachers over all the churches, that there arose a dissension among them, and they would not give heed to the words of Helaman and his brethren.—Alma 21: 26, 27.

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did consecrate Jacob and Joseph, that they should be priests and teachers over the land of my people.—2 Nephi 4: 42.

This priesthood was generally regarded by them as a very sacred calling, they believing their responsibilities to the church to be so great that when from time to time they preached to and taught the people, and no heed was taken of the same, they (the priests and teachers) did shake their garments before them, stating that they were free from their blood. (See Jacob 1: 18-20; 2 Nephi 6: 86-88; Exodus 28: 30.)

Paul gave expression to thoughts of this kind to the elders of Ephesus just before his death: "Wherefore, I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." (Acts 20: 26, 27.)

So we see that the Aaronic priesthood is of divine order, and is designed by our Father in heaven to continue for ever; that is, until time shall be no more, or till it shall be counted no more. This is a very wise order, for along with the Melchisedec priesthood it is provided "for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ,"—through this particular office every member is to be edified. Ephesians 4: 12-16; 1 Corinthians 12: 28; Doctrine and Covenants 107: 46; 17: 10.

The Aaronic priests are still called upon to offer sacrifices, of a different kind, but for the selfsame purpose as under the Mosaic law (which was added to the gospel because of transgression, Galatians 3: 19), to take away the sins of those who with contrite hearts and broken spirits, as the result of repentance, offer themselves for baptism; for one of the keys of this priesthood is that of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their parents, lest God, through the operation of the laws of nature, should place a curse upon them. (Malachi 4: 5, 6.) To Elijah this key of the gospel was delivered, and from him to Joseph the Martyr and Oliver Cowdery.

Of John the Baptist we read:

And if ye will receive it, this is Elias, [the Greek for the Hebrew term Elijah], which was for to come.—Matthew 11: 14.

Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come? And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of Man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.—Matthew 17: 11-13.

See also especially Doctrine and Covenants 26: 2, and Church History, volume 1, pages 36-38.

Our Savior showed the necessity of this power in his ministry, when he stated that "The brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death." (Matthew 10: 21.) Peter and Paul also spoke of this condition of affairs to obtain in the latter days, showing again the necessity of such a power to be transmitted to mankind, who yielding themselves to God's service, justify the existence of the Aaronic priesthood.

Every priest of the order of Aaron must be called to the ministry by revelation, as must every other officer in the ministry of Christ's church. (Hebrews 5: 4.) Whilst this passage of holy writ seems to bear special reference to the order of Melchisedec, and the office of high priest in particular, yet the first verse of the same chapter speaks of the Aaronic priest's work under the Mosaic law, and also their duties under the gospel of love and grace. It says, "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins." All Aaronic priests under the Mosaic law were called upon to offer sacrifices for sins, as well as were the high priests. The fourth verse says, "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (See Exodus 28: 1.)

No priest should be ordained except the vote of his branch be first obtained, unless the brother is an isolated member, when it is in the province of the presiding elders, traveling bishops, high counselors, high priests, and elders to ordain. (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 16.) But revelation must first be received, in any case, and if residing where there is a regularly organized branch of the church, the revelation [spiritual direction] should come through the medium of the president of that branch, or receive the consent of the president of the branch of the brother's identification, should be first obtained.

Now, Doctrine and Covenants 116: 1 says that the Lord is going to call men of every race to this office, evidently so that his church may be built up to perfection all over the world. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5 says:

The elders, priests, and teachers of this church are to teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach. And all this shall ye do as I have commanded concerning your teaching, until the fullness of my scriptures are given. And as ye shall lift up your voices by the Comforter, ye shall speak and prophesy as seemeth me good; for, behold, the Comforter knoweth all things, and beareth record of the Father and the Son.

Now this instruction is in keeping with the statement of John the Baptist in his testimony of the Christ, "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." (John 3: 34.) Christ himself says: "Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?" (Matthew 7: 16.) The most important duty of the priest is contained in the above passage from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. "And they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them." We are told to so walk that our counsel may be made effectual by our example. (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.)

Paul said to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." (2 Timothy 2: 15.) And again: "Take heed unto thyself, and to the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt save thyself and them that hear thee." (1 Timothy 4: 16, 17.) So a priest should with full purpose of heart be consecrated to God's service.

We are informed that the power and authority of this priesthood is to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances, the letter of the gospel, the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, agreeably to the covenants and commandments. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 10.) See, also, as before referred to, Church History, volume 1, pages 36-38.

In Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10 we have what might be called a compilation of the priest's duties, except officiating in marriages. In the marriage section, 111: 1, we find that marriage may be solemnized by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest. The passage just referred to reads:

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties: and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.

From these two passages we find that the priest holds the keys of the ministering of angels, to administer in outward ordinances, to preach, teach, that is, to proclaim the good tidings, and then to teach them, to expound (which means to explain, or to make clear to the understanding), to exhort (which means to entreat, or to encourage), and to visit the house of each member, and in this duty his chief point seems to be to exhort them to pray aloud, which evidently refers to their prayers at their family altar, which it seems there should be in every priest's home, for he can not as a servant of God teach others to do what he is not doing himself; and in secret (which means in his own bedroom, or in any place where he may be in his own privacy), so that he, himself, weak creature that he is, may pour out the expression of his individual soul in gratitude and thanks to his Maker, and solicit from him, pleadingly and plaintively, his own individual requirements in whatever direction his whole being may have need.

Prayer is the great means given to us of obtaining life more abundantly, and in it an individual, no matter who he may be, can express his whole soul to his God, as he can to none other.

The priest is also to exhort the Saints to attend to all family duties. This includes teaching their children to pray, nurturing and admonishing them to obedience to all the commandments of God as the Holy Spirit may lead them. What a delightful duty! where the highest and the holiest may participate. It seems that the duties of prayer and attendance at our family duties are about the first to obey as Saints, and while only these two are mentioned, they seem to embrace nearly our whole duty as Saints.

It is the priest's prerogative to ordain brethren to his own office, and also to the other offices in the Aaronic priesthood. It is also his duty to preside over meetings when the presiding elder is not present; that is, when he is branch priest, elected and sustained in that position by his branch. If an assistant or associate priest, he is to take the lead in meetings when the presiding elder and branch priest are not present. If there be more than one assistant priest in a branch, the one holding seniority of election should preside. (Rules of Order and Debate, page 101.)

A priest is eligible to preside over a branch, chosen and sustained by the vote of that branch. (Rules of Order and Debate, chapter 1: 4; Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2.) But he must conduct the meetings even as the elders, "as they are led by the Holy Spirit, according to the commandments and revelations of God." (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 9; Rules of Order and Debate, pp. 100, 101.) It is also his duty, if so chosen, to preside over other priests. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 31.) This appears to be in order either over his quorums, or over assistant or associate priests in a branch. (Rules of Order and Debate, 1: 6.) But the president of the priesthood of Aaron should be a bishop. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8, 40.) Every priest should seek membership in the quorum in his particular district or mission, and attend regularly the sessions of that body, if possible; for by so doing he will obtain further knowledge in his duties.

A priest is also eligible to travel as a missionary if he chooses, and circumstances make it advisable. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 22.) But the priest's work is chiefly local. He can also effectually fulfill appointments.

It is also in order that their stewardships should be provided by the church when so necessary for his services. (Numbers 18: 21-26; Hebrews 7: 5; Doctrine and Covenants 42: 19.) But most of the priests in Book of Mormon times provided their own.

And he, [Alma] also commanded them that the priests whom he had ordained, should labor with their own hands for their support. . . . And the priests were not to depend upon the people for their support; but for their labor they were to receive the grace of God, that they might wax strong in the Spirit, having the knowledge of God, that they might teach with power and authority from God.—Mosiah 9: 57-59.

And when the priests left their labor, to impart the word of God unto the people, the people also left their labors to hear the word of God. And when the priest had imparted unto them the word of God, they all returned again diligently unto their labors; and the priest, not esteeming himself above his hearers; for the preacher was no better than the hearer, neither was the teacher any better than the learner: and thus they were all equal, and they did all labor, every man according to his strength.—Alma 1: 37-39.

Now as to visiting. Where there is more than one priest performing labors for a branch, it seems to me nothing very effectual can be done without proper organization, and the priest of the branch should see to this being effected. It is his duty (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 31). He should, in council with his assistants, systematize the work of visiting, if convenient, into districts. He, along with his associates, should have some itemized system of reporting each visit, a compilation of which items the branch priest should have in hand. In this way he may send the associate or assistants with the qualifications necessary for each particular case (for each individual requires dealing with in a different way) so that the best results may be obtained. He should see that each priest under his charge performs his duty faithfully, and if not, he should exhort him to do so, not upbraiding him, and he himself should be an example unto all in all faithfulness and diligence. By so doing each under his direction may look to him and have confidence in him. Without confidence no real good can be accomplished. Each one should report his labors in an itemized form to the regular business meetings of the branch, and the branch priest should give an additional report of the labors of all. Itemized reports should also be sent to the quorum secretary, as may be required by rule. By this means something effective can be done, and the church receive a complete report.

In administering the sacrament, the priest or priests so engaged should have charge of the emblems, and should see that they are not irreverently used. "If the priest is faithful in his duties, he is of as much use to the church as the president of the church."—Joseph the Martyr, Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 850.

Finally, he should be able to "have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way, for that he (the priest) himself also is compassed with infirmity." (Hebrews 5:2.)

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned if he continues.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:6.

And that servant which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did not commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required."—Luke 12:47, 48.

I pray God we may each and every one learn our duty and do it.

PROPHETS TO-DAY?

Not all of one's time should be occupied in accumulating material comforts, for so to do would be like one seeking shelter and warmth for his head and leaving his feet out of doors; or like one who, in an effort to be well dressed, spent all his means for a very costly hat, and wore it above a soiled and tattered coat; or like the young married couple who only had seventy-five dollars with which to begin their married life, and who paid sixty dollars for a cook stove.

Some people are too impressionable. One important need comes to their minds, and they allow that one thing to consume all their strength of intellect, so that they can not think of a second or third need at all.

In furnishing a house, we need more than a stove; and in clothing the body we need more than a hat. So, to sustain human life, in the most comprehensive sense, we must have food for more than the body alone, for "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." (Job 32:8.)

Man is a dual creature,—body and spirit. We know how to nourish the body and keep it healthy, strong, and beautiful. We feed it bread and meat and such grains, fruits, etc., as the soil yields; but the spiritual can not grow on this kind of nourishment, nor subsist upon it. In order to live spiritually, we must have spiritual food. Wherefore it is written: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matthew 4:4.

Suppose God were to cease to speak; then is our food supply cut off, our spiritual natures must starve, as our bodies would starve under like conditions. We can not chew the same cud of physical food over and over, year after year, and receive nourishment for the body,—there must be a fresh supply each season, newly produced. That the same principle holds true when applied to the spiritual food may be fairly illustrated by the experience of one of the writer's early schoolmates. He came across the hill to the district school, and in due time, learned the multiplication table. Then too much impressed with the teacher's suggestion that he could not get it too well, he learned it again. The next winter he learned it over again, and again, and again, until the whole matter became so confusing to him that he could not recite the easiest tables.

This boy had all the mental food out of the multiplication table the first time he learned it. He had digested and assimilated it, and there was no further nutriment in it. But he kept chewing away at that same thing, and never learned anything else. He forgot what he had learned, also, because progress was left out of his endeavors.

Life is a process, a progression; and the food that sustains it must by process be supplied. Old Mother Earth, the seasons round, from Nature's horn of plenty, distributes to us the things our bodies need; and God, the Father of our spirits, provides, age after age, food for the soul. It proceedeth from the mouth of God.

What hope is here! If we could come upon the shore of this river of "living water," how we would drink and be refreshed! Some of those mysteries that, though oft dismissed, still haunt the mind, might find solution here. With such hopes as these one might be expected at once to seek the "water of life," were he not immediately involved in perplexity as to where to find it, or through what channel to expect it to flow.

The Thames and the Tiber are constant streams. The great Mississippi and the Rhine go on in their course; surely God will keep his ways with no less constancy for it is written, "In him there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning"; and again, "I am the Lord, I change not." These words are from the Bible, and if true, we may expect God to be doing business to-day by the same system he formerly employed. We may expect his word to reach us through the same channel through which it formerly came to the human race.

The record of former times says, "As they sat at the table, the word of the Lord came unto the prophet." (1 Kings 12:20.) The prophet is the channel through which the Lord formerly sent his word. That is the system he first adopted, and as we have seen, when he once chooses a system, he never changes it. He does not need to change, for he chooses, always the best at the first. He knows the best at the beginning, and does not need to experiment with this, that, and the other, before he can tell which is most suitable.

For this reason we may say we were men from the beginning. God knew how to make a man at the start, without having to learn by first making a monkey, and then a better one, and one still better, till finally he learned how to make men. Though it is different with mortals, God does the best thing first, last, and always, and never improves.

So, if we have spiritual life to-day, we must have spiritual food to sustain it, the word proceeding from the mouth of God. It must come from God according to his chosen system, through the prophet. Therefore, prophets are needed to-day. "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily, prophets."—1 Corinthians 12:28.

Reader, are there any prophets in your church? Has any word of God come through them since the Bible was written? There is a church through the offices of which God's word still comes to men. Seek such an one, ask God's direction, and see if you do not find it.

PROMOTION FOLLOWS PREPARATION.

[An address given by H. O. Smith, at Graceland College some years ago.]

It is something new for me to be called upon to address an assembly of college students, and in one way I am not qualified for the task, perhaps, for I did not have the advantages and opportunities for obtaining an education which you have to-day, though I often longed for them, and have often wished that I had had the same opportunities which my children have had. I might have been better qualified for the duties which I am called upon to perform now.

It may be, however, in consequence of this lack of education that I may be able to advise you to-day; for the one who is handicapped in this way can see the need of an education far better, sometimes, than one who is blessed with this help to the duties of life.

Since President Anderson told me last night that I would be expected to address the students this morning, I have had but little time to make any preparation; but I have jotted down a few thoughts, some of them taken from clippings which I have taken from various sources.

I understand from the various workers for the welfare of Graceland College, that one of the aims of the institution is to grant equal opportunities to all, so that the son of the man who is blessed with the things of this world will have no advantage over the son of the man who is not so blessed. To accomplish this end, means have been provided for the poor boy to work his way through the college. It may be that the poor boy still thinks, however, that the fact that he must work his way militates against him in this competition with his more fortunate fellow student; but the results of the past are all upon the side of the boy who has the courage to face obstacles and overcome them. I have a clipping taken from a Minneapolis paper, I think, which is in point, and might be of encouragement to those who may be compelled to work their way through college:

There is no cause for surprise in the showing that the Ottawa University young man who won first rank in the state oratorical contest was a student who had been fighting his own way through school, says the Herald. Men who enjoy the extra facility of hardship have been winning so long that the world will almost concede victory to them. They have been learning to win oratorical contests and contests of every other kind, while learning how to pay tuition and board bills. Adversity has a rough and hard surface, but her polishing qualities are unexcelled when applied to those who have the stuff to take on polish. Look out for the youth in high water trousers, who tends furnaces and runs to his recitations during his earlier years in school. Also have whatever laugh you are expecting to have at him, early.

Perhaps you are complaining because you think that opportunity is passing you by; you may be sticking to your old place, and you think that it is the fault of your employer. You think that he does not appreciate you as he should; you blame your lack of promotion to the prejudice and blindness of those above you; but you do not stop to think that perhaps the blame may lie with yourself. The question you should seriously consider is, Am I prepared for promotion? Am I prepared to step into the shoes of the one above me, and do his work as well as he does, or better?

Past experience, as a rule, does not impress us with the thought that opportunity is blind. If she does not come to you, it is because she has noticed that you are not ready for her; she has noticed that you are not ready for promotion, and she is waiting until you are. You will not be disappointed if you fully prepare yourself for promotion. Only those who disregard the injunction of Saint Paul, and think more highly of themselves than they ought to think are disappointed.

Not long ago I read the story of Wallace Beery. It stated that he was an inconspicuous member of a company supporting a star in a New York theater. His place was in the chorus, where his duties were similar to those of others; but he was what is known as an "understudy," which means that he was studying the part above him, and preparing himself to take the place of the star in an emergency. The time came when he was given the chance to show what was in him. The star got into trouble and was arrested, and the "understudy" had to go on in his place. He had so thoroughly prepared himself that he not only knew the lines, but he understood the stage "business" that belonged to the part. The next day the papers announced the advent of a new "star" in the theatrical firmament. He did even better than the star, but he did not have the advantage of his name and fame.

When the star returned to the cast the "understudy" returned to his place in the chorus. Not many of us would have the courage to do that. Success would have turned our heads, but humbleness is always an accompaniment of greatness. This man had the chance to show what he could do, and he did it so well that his talent would not be unrecognized long. Opportunity had knocked at his door and he was waiting to open it, and he will not have to tarry long in the chorus, but he will soon be a "star" himself, and instead of obscurity and small pay there will come to him fame and a competency.

The lesson that we would have you learn from this is, Are you understudying the part above you, or are you simply contented to do your part in the chorus; and are you doing that with a bad grace because you think that a prejudiced manager is holding you back? If you are doing your part with a bad grace, you are doing it poorly, and you are offering no occasion for anyone to select you for promotion. So long as you are not fitting yourself for better things, your proper place will be in the chorus; and no matter how much you may complain, it is there you will stay. It will not even profit you to change to some other company, because you will start in the chorus there, too, and by the same failure to prepare yourself that kept you back before, you will be kept back there.

That which is true of promotion in the theatrical world and business is true in every other walk and way of life. I have no doubt that you have complained of your teachers here. You have blamed them, perhaps, for the lack of advancement in your studies, when if you had given yourself a careful examination you would have found that the trouble laid in late hours, or a mind fixed too much upon athletics, or other things which bring you pleasure and excitement. Before we blame others for our lack of promotion, let us make a thorough self-examination, and see if we can not find the trouble nearer home.

Our aims have much to do with our progress in this world. We should aim high. Josh Billings says, "He who aims at perfection will probably miss the mark, but he who aims at nothing, is sure to hit it every time." But, while we aim high, let us not forget that high aims are only attained by the mastery of little things, and attention to the details of life. I was in the room of two of the students of Graceland last night, and I noticed that they had for their motto the word dig and it brought to my mind a poem by Louis E. Thayer entitled, "He dug," which I will read, hoping that you may find therein some thought that will inspire you to better effort in your work here:

He wanted a job, and, like everything else,
He wanted a good one, you know;
Where his clothes would not soil and his hands would keep clean,
And the salary mustn't be low.
He asked for a pen, but they gave him a spade,
And he half turned away with a shrug,
But he altered his mind and seizing the spade
He dug.

He worked with a will that is bound to succeed,
And the months and the years went along.
The way it was rough, and the labor was hard,
But his heart he kept filled with a song.
Some jeered him and sneered at the task, but he plugged
Just as hard as he ever could plug;
Their words never seemed to disturb him a bit,
As he dug.

The day came at last when they called for the spade
And gave him a pen in its place;
The joy of achievement was sweet to his taste
And victory shone in his face.
We can't always get what we hope for at first—
Success cuts many queer jigs,
But one thing is sure—a man will succeed—
If he digs.

You may have complained that your teachers have a little too prominently called your attention to the mistakes you have made in your recitations, but don't you know that our progress in life is marked by our ability to see and correct mistakes if we make them? James M. Barrie says:

The life of every man is a dairy in which he means to write one story, and writes another; and his humblest hour is when he compares the volume as it is with what he vowed to make it.

Most of you know that I am a minister; and I want to tell you to-day that I have never made an effort in the pulpit or anywhere else with which I have been entirely satisfied, and I am glad that it is so. When one becomes perfectly satisfied with the efforts he is making, his progress stops; but if in looking over the work he has done he can see where he might have improved, he does better next time, and so makes progress. If we are unable to see the mistakes we are making we should be thankful when we have one who is so interested in our welfare that he will call our attention to them.

I do not feel that my duty is discharged this morning did I not call your attention to your obligation to God in this life, urging you to remember that your progress towards true success will depend upon your recognizing God as a factor therein. We are sometimes inclined in the exuberance of youth to think that we can get along without God, and forget our allegiance to him. It is said of Abraham Lincoln that in his earlier years he scoffed at religion, but in his after life, when the cares of a nation weighed heavily upon him, that he turned to God for help, and was not ashamed to pray. Of him James Creelman has this to say in a recent number of Pearson's:

The careless, foot-free, waggish wood-chopper of New Salem had scoffed at religion, and written a bitter attack on the Bible, which a wiser friend had snatched from his hand and burned. The president-elect, with the cares of a mighty nation in its death throes descending upon his shoulders, stretched his hands childlike to a power greater even than the omnipotent and sovereign people.

And so you will find it. You can not afford to go through the world without God as your friend. Your faith in him will color all your life. Your conceptions of the right will be influenced by his precepts, and your ideals will be high or low as you accept or reject his teachings. Success is not always the attainment of desire, and failure is not always to be measured by your inability to reach your goal. We look upon the masters of finance as successful men, counting success as the world sees it; but who of us would be willing to attain success in the same way that they did? By employing the same means that they did?

"I would not count it failure if in vain
I strove, with earnest self-forgetfulness,
Of some high task fruition to obtain,
But did not win the guerdon of success;
If my poor effort no base thought did know
I would not call it so.

"But if I won it by a selfish might,
Staining endeavor by a servile greed,
By so much as one paltring with the right,
Or by the savor of one wrongful deed,
Then would I count attainment of desire Failure most dire."

A good character is success; a bad character is failure, even if we amass the riches of this world, and have all the comforts which wealth can bring.

Our aim should not be to see how much we can get out of life for a selfish purpose, but absorb only that we might give out to others, so that when we have passed out of this world it might be said of us that the world is better because we have lived. It should not be a question of how much we can impart.

"What is our duty here? To tend
From good to better—thence to best;
Grateful to drink life's cup—then bend

Unmurmuring to our bed of rest;
To pluck the flowers that round us blow,
Scattering our fragrance as we go.

"And so to live, that when the sun
Of our existence sinks in night,
Memorials sweet of mercies done
May shrine our names in memory's light;
And the blest seeds we scattered bloom
A hundred fold in days to come."

Of General Interest

THE COOPERATIVE KINGDOM.

The bacillus of cooperation, abroad in the world, has affected nations in a variety of ways; in some its activity has been directed chiefly to problems of distribution, in others triumphantly applied to financial credit, and in still others to agriculture. In every new country it invades, the social effect differs quite as markedly as the practical application. Denmark and Italy, to select two countries whose conditions are opposed and whose methods in a manner complement each other, have especial success in production, further manufacture, and marketing of the things which are natively grown: three fields in which there is usually much waste and loss from the limitations of the farmer, not always caused by ignorance or inexperience, but often by economic factors which are not clearly understood.

Denmark, using cooperation only in such manner as to separate all the interests of the farmer, helping to maintain his entity, has taken good care to make her citizens individualists on the land and keep them so; the several forms of society, each provided for a single detail, are quite different from the many-purposed collectivist association of Raiffeisen's ideal. Denmark presents to-day the unique example of a government which draws a large part of its sustenance from cooperation. It is well called the Cooperative Kingdom. The country has long been pre-eminent in dairying, and the Danes have specialized with great success, providing England with butter, bacon, and eggs, and reaching out toward a greater export trade. The farmers have also erected a large cooperative beet-sugar factory and a considerable number of cooperative preserving factories. This entire business, including the immense yield of root and grain crops and the export of fine live stock at fancy prices, is carried on by a population no larger than that of Chicago, and in an area two and a half times the size of New Hampshire. Denmark has solved her human problem by means of proper education; she has solved her land problem by means of cooperative mortgage credit and government aid; and, best of all, she has attacked the most troublesome difficulties between the farmer and his market with notable success.—John L. Mathews, in Harper's Magazine for November.

TUNNELING THE ENGLISH CHANNEL.

Tunneling the English Channel has been talked of for generations, and from time to time the scheme seems on the verge of realization, only to be relegated soon after to semioblivion. It is now again occupying the attention of the British Government. On August 5 a deputation representing some ninety members of the House of Commons was received by Mr. Asquith, who, in reply to their advocacy of the undertaking, reviewed the history of the proposal.

As far back as 1874 the idea was approved by the Foreign Office, but from 1883 onward the government has consistently opposed it, mainly on military grounds. It was strongly opposed by Lord Wolseley. From an engineering point of view the project is entirely feasible. Three methods of securing continuous railway communication between England and France have been suggested; viz, a tunnel, which would cost not less than eight million pounds; a bridge, which would cost two million pounds; and a train ferry, which would cost two million pounds.

The real reason for the sentiment prevailing in England against these projects appears to be, to quote the London Times:

A half-articulate feeling, deep-seated in the heart of the nation, instinctively urging it to repel without question what it believes to be an attack on its individuality. It is difficult for Continental peoples to realize the peculiar quality which the possession of an island kingdom breeds in a race. The moral effect of the "continuous road into Europe" would be immediate and striking, but it might also be disastrous.—Scientific American, November 22, 1913.

SCIENCE AND THE EDUCATION OF THE FUTURE.

To the average citizen of to-day science appeals through its manifold application. Its function appears primarily, to some perhaps wholly, utilitarian. Indeed, some hold that science which does not lead to practical application is heresy.

If this be so, it appears at first sight as if science as a subject of study for the young, the adolescent, and the mature, could never offer more than a limited educational discipline. But this is an utterly false conclusion. It arises out of a misconception of the meaning underlying that much-abused word practical. Any thing or action is "practical," which is conducive of benefit to mankind. It is a grossly narrow view which sees benefit only in the production, transportation, and bartering of merchandise—whether this be food, clothing, buildings, materials of construction, or what not—and which reckons scientific pursuits as "practical" only if they can be traced forward to the ultimate production of such merchandise.

The needs of man are not purely material. From time immemorial his mind has hungered for an interpretation of the phenomena of nature about him. Primitive man of the gray dawn of history, and the savage of to-day, peoples space about him with spirits and demons, to whom he ascribes the power of shaping events and destiny. To them he offers supplication to engage their favor and to appease their anger. This, the crudest kind of religion, is at the same time the crudest kind of science. Because it has no obvious relation to the production of merchandise, are we to remain indifferent to the development of this aspect of science? If we could do so without forfeiting all our industrial achievements, would we be willing to go back to that state of scientific ignorance, which would bid us offer human sacrifice to appease a rain god? Would it be "practical" to do so? Men forget that evil comes not only of ill-will, but also of ignorance, and that science brings benefits by clearing our vision—a matter which may be of greater importance than the invention of some "practical" machine or process.

Viewed in this way, science has a high humanitarian value, and its study must rank side by side with that of ancient and modern literature. If anyone still doubts this, after what has been said above, let him ask himself how many works of literature or fiction have had a greater influence upon modern thought in all its phases and throughout the civilized world, than those epoch-making volumes in which Darwin has laid down his classical researches and reflections upon evolution.

In the education of future generations we may well expect that science will be given a more and more important place. This not only because the young must be prepared for the tasks by which they will later in years earn their subsistence, but also because science, when construed broadly, has its lessons for us on many topics of the most vital interest to the life of body and soul. We would not contend that it can ever take the place entirely of literature and art in its formative influence upon character; but it will be a complement to them, a complement for which there is a crying need to-day: Literature and art deal with ideals; science deals with reality. Literature and art point us a way, show us an aim; science teaches us the limitations of our resources and powers, and brings us back to earth—from the world of dreams to the world of action, from the world of purposes to that of accomplishment. It makes us "practical" in the best sense of the word, for "practical" indeed we must be in order to translate our ideals into reality.—Scientific American, November 22, 1913.

Give conscience the right of way in your life, and there will be many whose purpose of righteousness will be strengthened thereby.—Selected.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

The Missionary's Birthday.

For months he had been in his distant field, striving in all faithfulness to do the work intrusted to him by the church and by the higher authority of God. As the holidays approached, there came a letter from home asking if he would be with the little flock at the happy yuletide, and, when that time arrived, events had so shaped themselves that he was at home with wife and children.

A few days after the new year had been ushered in, invitations were quietly circulated among his neighbors and a few others of the Saints, and one Sabbath evening, when he returned after a prolonged series of visits of administration among the aged and sick, he found his home occupied by a happy little company who had come in response to the call to celebrate his birthday.

It was the Sabbath day, and he was a missionary of the Church of Jesus Christ; they who were gathered there held enshrined first in their hearts "the latter-day work." And so, when he had arrived and had welcomed his guests, one of the first acts of the assembly was to stand while one offered to God a prayer of thanksgiving and praise, of supplication for his power and grace to attend his people, and for the divine benediction to be upon the missionaries of the church in general, and upon this particular one whose birthday was being commemorated.

Then there were little impromptu talks by some, several of our own loved hymns, the reading of a poem, the presentation of a birthday remembrance, the partaking of refreshments, pleasant words, parting handclasps, and dispersion to various homes or evening services at the church; a happy, peaceful hour was ended, one dedicated to expressing to a faithful brother our appreciation of his worth. "How pleasant to cherish a brother!"

The Missionary's Tribute to His Wife.

We went to celebrate the missionary's birthday, but the reading of the poem turned the meeting for a time into a celebration of the birthday of his wife; for the verses had been composed by him and dedicated in loving appreciation to his devoted companion on the occasion of her birthday, which occurred while he was still far from home.

The lines that follow here are an extract from the poem, which, though not intended originally for any eye but hers, so well portray the appreciation every man of the church should accord a faithful wife that they may well find a place in this column which belongs to the mothers of the church, many of whom are missionaries' wives:

"Though the miles lay oft between us,
And our lot has been apart,
You have been my boon companion,
Always, ever, near my heart.
And when feeling sad and lonely,
When the clouds seem dark and drear,
I have often found sweet comfort
When I think of you, my dear.

"Ofttimes when I've been discouraged,
And had thought to quit the field,
You have spurred me on to action
By your counsel not to yield.
Were it not for your devotion,
And your sacrificing zeal,

I, perhaps, would not be able
Thus to work for Zion's weal."

The lines preceding this extract had made reference to the time when first they met at a General Conference, to the courtship that followed; they assured her that he would always look with pleasure on the autumn night when they had stood at the altar and had united their fortunes. They ran on to tell her he was proud of her, his devoted, loving wife, that he paid homage to her motherhood. They closed with loving wishes for her happy future in this life and in the one to follow.

We often hear exclaimed concerning some one specially gifted, brilliant, and popular, "Oh, he is great!" As the missionary sat in his newly presented rocker, modestly surprised at the introduction of his poem, but not unwilling that we all should hear the tribute he had paid his wife, he was great, and his greatness grew upon us as we realized the tenderness, the loyalty, the ability in the man to appreciate his wife's sacrifices, her patience, and fortitude. Appreciation of this kind helps the woman to be brave and to meet her duties with happy courage. It builds her up to know that he who stood with her at the altar of marriage in their youth is still fervent in his love, that he is proud of her. Happy is the woman whose husband does not withhold from her that praise which is her just due.

Mother First.

A little daughter, aged six, assisted with pleased alacrity in serving the refreshments of the evening. She went straight to mother first, and her attention was received with smiles and with the mother's pleased comment to the one sitting next to her.

I do not know whether the child had been instructed to do this or not, but the act instantly recalled to mind that the instructor in domestic science in a recent talk on serving said, "Serve mother first."

Mother is coming to her place. Mother is not destined always to be the servant of all, the last of all to be served. Mother is about to be brought from her back seat to a place of honor in the home. A most pitiful letter recently came to this desk from a wife and mother whose experience is far different from that of the happy woman into whose life we have had a glimpse. It is from a desire to lift the ideal of wifehood and motherhood nearer to what it should be that we have ventured to give from real life the beautiful picture of a mutually kind and devoted family circle.

"The Housewife's Hymn."

The mother of a family has something more to do than to receive the homage of husband and children. She has duties and responsibilities of immense importance. It is the intelligent and faithful discharge of these duties that entitles her to the devotion of husband and children.

She must study to conserve the health of her family. She must feed them properly, clothe them aright, keep the home in sanitary condition. She must guide and counsel the children, and encourage her companion.

In the doing of her work, she finds great joy, such as is beautifully expressed in "the housewife's hymn," a portion of which is as follows:

"Thou knowest how they lean to me for life;
Even the strong, brave man who calls me wife—
The father of my flock—must look to me
For blood and sinew and the strength to be.
This, then, the greatest, dearest thing of all—

To know that I may answer to their call;
That thou hast made me mother, friend and mate,
Keeper of life and molder of their fate.
By this I know the universe as thine—
That hearts and homes and people are divine!
Is there a greater gift in all thy store?
My woman's heart is full—I ask no more."

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN JANUARY.

Prayer for our Sunday schools and Religio societies, for the Prayer Union, and for all the auxiliary departments in the church, that each may be blessed in its work for the general uplift.

Lesson, Saint John 15: 1-8. Memory verse, Galatians 6: 9.

A LETTER OF THANKSGIVING.

To the Prayer Union: After reading in recent issues the many calls for prayers for those afflicted, I feel that I should tell you of my experience. In July of the present year, I found a hard lump forming in my left side. I went to a reputable physician in Minot, who upon examination pronounced it a malignant tumor, the forerunner of cancer, and advised immediate operation as the safest way out of my trouble.

I left his office with the intention of returning in a few days for the operation, but somehow everything seemed to work together for the postponement of my plans. After several months of delay the growth became so large and painful that I became alarmed. I have made a practice of reading my Bible every day, opening it haphazard, and one day these lines met my eyes, "He staggered not at the promises of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able also to perform." (Romans 4: 20-22.) Then I read Hebrews 11: 5-7.

I had been told in my blessing that God would also bless me with that faith that would enable me to overcome the obstacles thrown in my pathway. I felt that here was an opportunity to put into effect that faith in God and his promises to his children. I made it a matter of prayer and study every morning and evening for three weeks, and on Thursday afternoons in spiritual meeting with the Prayer Union. I earnestly prayed to God for the blessing of healing and the removal of this growth, if it was his will.

I put down any inclination to doubt and persistently believed that God would hear my prayer and do his will toward me. I can not describe to you the uplifted condition of my whole mind and body during those three weeks of earnest endeavor. I felt health pouring in upon me, the growth after the first week becoming smaller and painless.

In three weeks from the commencement of my season of prayer it was gone. I went to the same physician and told him the circumstances. He said I might consider myself very lucky as not one tumor in a hundred disappeared so. They usually cause years of suffering, or else an operation. This one beset me just five months.

I tell you this in order to help some one else in affliction, for the glory of God, and to testify to his goodness. If you say you have faith in God and his word, exercise that faith. Do not expect all of God and none of yourself. Put your faith to the test, and God will give you a blessing. But you must work and believe.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. W. D. GRAHAM.

Letter Department

TULSA, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: Tulsa is a young and active city of about thirty thousand inhabitants. The wonderful oil and gas products of this region are the powerful backbone of its wealth. Coal deposits of excellent quality are being opened up by Brother Peter Adamson, jr., with his active force of miners.

The coal camp at the mines joining Tulsa on the southeast is quite a village in itself, a good percentage of the population of which is Latter Day Saint. Brother Earl D. Bailey is associated with Brother Adamson in the management of the mines, and the various branches of the bustling little industry. This industry is not so small as the term might imply either, as the company has a lease on several hundred acres of the best coal field, and are preparing to sink a new shaft. Brother Rudd, formerly of Wilburton, I think, is general overseer of the mercantile department. They operate a supply store in connection with the mines. They have a nice little Sunday school established; they are favored with preaching by Brother Davidson and others.

There are also quite a number of Saints residing in the city of Tulsa proper; but they are separated so widely that no point is convenient for a meeting place. They meet regularly, however, and conduct a live little Sunday school. This school not only blesses its attendants, in that they are taught the word of God, but it contributes with unstinted liberality to the various church funds. The Christmas offering of the school last year was something like thirty-five dollars, or over. At one collection for the Christmas offering of this year, more than twenty dollars was contributed.

Peter Adamson and wife, E. G. Nelson and wife, Brother Erter and family, Sister Logan, Sister Fry, Sister Lancaster, Brother Wallace N. Robinson and others might be named as supporters of the school. The latter named brother is so well known throughout the church that all will know it is a fortunate school, whether small or large, which has his assistance.

Brother Robinson's prominent standing in the business circles of Tulsa as proprietor of the most splendid hotel in the city brings him before the community. There is no doubt much curiosity in the minds of those who note his fidelity to a religion which the world thinks is so strange. However, Brother Robinson's masterly ability in every line which receives his attention commands the respect of all, in so much that where many a person under similar circumstances would be ostracized to a certain extent, he is fortunate in not being "queered" at all on account of his religion, but rather is sought after.

The same is true of other Saints at Tulsa, and elsewhere, where they allow their religion to be an everyday working force in their lives, enabling them to look the whole world in the face with the calm consciousness of a superior religion, a holy purpose of heart, and an activity of thought and performance void of offense toward all men.

The voice of prophecy was given some years ago to the effect that the Saints would find favor in the eyes of the people; and we may see that prediction being fulfilled in many places. Discretion which prevents the casting of pearls before swine is a grace which prepares the Lord's people for the favor which the prophecy suggests. So also does wisdom, which gives power to recognize virtue and utilize truth, whether found on Christian or on heathen ground.

Our course may be kept narrow with respect to the "straight and narrow way," but broad with respect to breadth of mind and scope of spiritual vision. The field of truth still unexplored by most of us is quite a broad concern; therefore we can not afford to be narrow.

The mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus is indeed a high mark, and well worthy of pressing toward. Between us and the mark there may be many a slip. And when we have gained what we thought to be the mountain peak we may find it to be only a foothill in comparison to the majestic heights beckoning our best attainment beyond.

Personally, I subscribe myself in fellowship with all Saints, and as many sinners as will go at least part of the way, pressing toward the mark of the high calling indicated by our Lord, and witnessed to by the prophets.

JAMES E. YATES.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, December 5, 1913.

Editors Herald: Reading the article written by Sister Switzer, entitled, "The book that impressed me most," brought to my mind the book that impressed me most. I have been deeply impressed by many good books; I have read many of them. I never cared to read only such books as had good moral lessons. But the books that impressed me most were the three standard books of the church, viz: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, because therein were laid down the laws and commandments of our Lord, and these books brought to me the gospel in its fullness.

I am glad I can say that I rejoice and am thankful for this message of the restored gospel than I can express. My heart is too full to express the joy I feel in this gospel of latter days, the power of God unto salvation. Saints, let us build on the solid rock, so that no tidal wave can wash us away. When we are all willing to consecrate all we have, and all we are to the work of the Master, as did our dear Brother and Sister Lake, and others, what a joy we will know and what love Christ will bestow upon us!

To-day in the Los Angeles Branch the Lord needs a willing worker, a stenographer to take down patriarchal blessings, which God wishes to bestow upon his children, that they may know more fully the field of labor he wishes them to work in. Would that some one might give their evenings to this labor of love.

Very truly your colaborer,

MRS. O. L. ROCKHOLD.

Editors Herald: A storm is raging over this section of the country, to the extent that it is impossible for us to go to the house of the Lord, yet we feel blessed by his Spirit, as we always do when trying to serve him as we should. Our branch seems to be in good spiritual condition at present, though there may be those who do not live up to their privileges. As a people we have been admonished from time to time through the gifts of the gospel. We thank God that he recognizes us as his people.

I remain your brother in Christ,

JAMES GROOMBRIDGE.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, December 8, 1913.

Editors Herald: The latter part of September Brother T. F. Robbins, whom I first met in Calgary, while there two years ago, came to Winnipeg for an operation for cancer, which had lately developed in the lower jaw. He was operated upon by a Doctor McLain of this city. The operation proved to be much more severe than anticipated, as is usually the case with this disease. However, he recovered sufficiently to leave the city for Emmerson, Manitoba, where he was to engage in work at his trade as a painter. Soon after arriving there the wound broke out with an hemorrhage, and continued until he was rushed back here to the Saint Boniface Hospital, where he bled to death the same day.

Notwithstanding that Brother Wilson and I had visited him regularly at the private hospital of Doctors McLain and McEntire, and he was brought to them when dying, they failed to call us or let us know of his condition. At death he was summarily sent to the undertaker's parlors, and not until word reached us from Welland, Ontario, did we know of his sudden return to this city, and of his death.

I have understood that at one time he had a family, but I have failed to get in touch with anyone that could give me information as to the whereabouts of his relatives, if he has any. Neither am I able to report to the branch to which he belongs. A Sister Austin, of Welland, Ontario, has furnished the money to cover the expenses of the burial, which took place from the Gardener Undertaking Parlors on November 7, sermon by the writer.

We are wondering if he had insurance or other effects that he did not have time to represent because of his condition during the last few hours of his life.

We felt keenly the sorrow that a brother should meet with death unsurrounded by any of his relatives and near friends, and that even the Saints who were willing to be with him and do the part of Saints in faith and prayers were deprived of the opportunity. While at the funeral there were no relatives or immediate friends, the little band of Saints here turned out and did all they could to show their respect to one who held membership in the church with them as a brother.

I am hoping that we may have the earnest prayers of all the Saints for the success of the work here, and that the money and effort spent to get the gospel before the people of this northern city may be productive of some lasting good.

I suppose there never was but one other time in the history of Winnipeg when the times were so hard, and there were more men out of work. The mildness of the weather up to the present time has been of great benefit. May the Father of all graciously temper the winds to the shorn lambs, and help the poor people who find it hard to get fuel to keep warm during the long and severe winters that usually come to this country.

With an earnest desire for the success and triumph of the work in all the earth, I am your brother and colaborer in the great cause of right.

Editors Herald: I am striving to do the will of Him who called me into the vineyard. It is not my desire to be classed with the unprofitable servant; to sit with folded hands and do nothing when the harvest is great and the laborers few, and when that great day comes be cast into outer darkness where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. I want to have my work done so when Christ the bridegroom comes I will be as the wise virgins, having oil and being ready.

Dear Saints, watch and be ye also ready, for ye know not the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh. He will come upon some as a thief in the night. I trust that none of the Saints will be found in the condition of the foolish virgins, but that all will have their lamps trimmed and brightly burning. Christ said to his disciples, Ye are the light of the world, if the light becomes darkness, how great is that darkness. Those who have been enlightened by the Holy Spirit and fall away, it is impossible to renew such again unto repentance, therefore it behooves us to live prayerfully and carefully.

I am a priest of our branch, known as the Pleasant Valley Branch. On Saturday, the 6th, I went to McDermott, where I met Brother H. C. Hidy. We had preaching service by the writer. We met with the branch on Sunday and held sacrament service. The Holy Spirit was present to comfort and cheer. Sunday night we had sacrament service at McDermott, at Brother Carpenter's, as he is afflicted and not able to meet with the branch. It was decided to hold a sacrament service at McDermott the first Sunday night of each month. There are several who can not attend the branch meetings.

Editors Herald: The Saints here all seem to be blessed with health and strength, except three who are afflicted. Brother Stafford has had blood poison in his leg. He is very old and it goes hard with him. Sister McKenney who has been ailing for a long time, seems very weak in body, but still firm in the cause. My mother is also ailing, and has been for the past three months.

Oh, dear young brothers and sisters, can we realize, "What is home without a mother?" Oh, how often we say and do those things that we ought not! And oh, how often we would to God that we could recall them. It makes me sad when I look back and see the mistakes I have made. My mother is very weak in mind. Dear Saints, I humbly ask an interest in your prayers that if it is God's will she may be made strong and have a desire to go on in the fight.

My older sister is cooking in our camp. I am not very strong; many times I overdo myself to save mother. I am afflicted at times, and no one but God and myself knows what I suffer. I am willing to suffer if it please God. If it is his will that the affliction be driven from me, I beg an interest in your prayers to this end. I also ask for the three mentioned who are afflicted and all the Saints throughout the broad world.

Elder James Pycok has been laboring in this part of the vineyard since the October conference in Port Elgin. He has baptized three. In October a Reverend Barker of the Baptist Church lectured on "Mormonism," and Elder Pycok replied. It aroused an interest for a time; but it has been so dreadfully muddy that people seemed to lose interest by staying away. Elder Pycok expects to leave here for his home tomorrow. I think that much good can be done here if we Saints live as we ought, and show to the world that we are children of God, and strive to keep the camp fire brightly burning.

I remain a weak sister, striving to overcome the adversary.
NETTIE C. SHEPHERDSON.

VINALHAVEN, MAINE, December 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: There are only a few Saints here, and we are far apart. We have six children, and have organized a Sunday school at our home where every one is welcome. We have Beginner, Primary and Intermediate classes.

Elder F. J. Ebeling was with us a year ago last October. He has just now dropped down in our midst like a ray of sunshine, for a few days. Since his work of a year ago Brother A. Bigg has been holding Sunday evening services at Creeds Cove Schoolhouse, and Sunday school and Religion at Sister Brown's, Pequod. He is a faithful worker for the Master, and is trying to practice what Ezra taught, Though we are one among many there is something helpful for each one to do, however small it may seem. One person may exert a great influence for good.

We need your prayers that we may ever be ready at the call of duty, not looking at anyone's faults so much as our own, and always trying to build up the work instead of tearing down, thus becoming stumblingblocks for others.

Yours for the Master,

MAE BEVERAGE.

DERBY, INDIANA, December 11, 1913.

Editors Herald: Since last writing Brother Pitt and I have conducted an interesting series of meetings at the Saints' chapel near Wirt, Indiana. We had good attendance and attention throughout—better, indeed, than I expected.

The cause there suffered somewhat by the apostasy of Elders M. R. Scott, jr., and William C. Marshall, of the Seventy. I am of the opinion, however, that our loss there has been due not so much to their defection as to our failure to provide proper representatives in their stead. They had for several years had regular appointments. Since then our work in that locality has been very erratic. There is not now a single officer there, hence they really have no branch.

Brother and Sister Pitt are now in Louisville. This will probably be their next point. Wife and I came here on account of a funeral service in memory of a Sister Hyde, late of Illinois.

The day of our arrival Brother Simpson C. Gruver passed away. His illness was brief and his death a surprise to everyone. His words and actions were encouraging to me in the days of my early ministry. In addition to his interest in and knowledge of the church he had been a school-teacher, and was, in general, well qualified to assist young men in the ministry.

We shall not be able to return to Indianapolis until after New Year's.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

DOUGLAS, ARIZONA, December 11, 1913.

Editors Herald: Many of your readers have known of the labors of Elder J. W. Morgan, who was called to rest last Friday, after a severe illness of two or three weeks. About October 1 he moved to his homestead near Douglas, and built a house. He was engaged thus about one month and was getting quite comfortably situated when his suffering became so severe that he consented to go to the home of Brother James Farley, in Bisbee, where he could receive proper care. He grew worse slowly, and was advised by doctors to go to a lower altitude, which he determined to do, but was undecided where to go.

A special prayer meeting was called to seek divine guidance for him, as he had full faith in the Lord revealing in some way the course he should pursue. In response the voice of the Spirit came through Brother David Davis, expressing the great love of God for his children, and commending the action of the Saints in seeking him. Brother Morgan was told that his days were numbered, and that in a few days he would be called home to the paradise of God to receive reward for his labors, which were approved and pleasing to the Lord. The Spirit was present in great power, and all felt to bow to the Master's decree, even to pass through the valley of death if it were his will.

From that on Brother Morgan failed rapidly. Ten days later he was released from his suffering and taken to rest. Two doctors were summoned during his sickness, who pronounced his trouble Bright's disease in the worst form, admitting their inability to do anything for him. He received temporary relief through administrations, which were oft repeated, as one or more elders were with him constantly the last ten days.

He was tenderly laid to rest in the Evergreen Cemetery at Lowell, the 7th inst., after a touching sermon delivered by Elder W. H. Mannering.

The previous Sunday the Saints were greatly edified and strengthened by a powerful testimony borne by him as he sat in his chair and extolled the love of God manifest in the restoration of the gospel and its attendant blessings. He felt to defend the work with his last breath if opportunity offered, and exhorted the Saints to diligence and faithfulness. We feel that a loyal soldier has been honorably released.

Brother Morgan had occupied in the Seventy for some years, being superannuated in 1907 because of ill health. He continued active, having left responsibilities of district and branch presidency last spring to come to Arizona in quest of health. He passed away reconciled to the Master's will.

Editors Herald: I take this way of letting you know how I am getting along. My health is very good just now, but I find that I must be careful and not do too much, as my nerves are not as strong as they were before my breakdown. But I am doing all I can.

We are having splendid interest here in Bay City, and God is blessing our labors. I wish you all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. May God's blessings attend you all is my prayer.

LAWRENCEVILLE, ILLINOIS, December 12, 1913.

Editors Herald: I have no way of speaking to one of the Saints only through the HERALD. I read letters from other Saints, and it encourages me to hear others say they are living a Latter Day Saint. To live a Latter Day Saint means more than to just express the words. It means to keep every precept of God's law.

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints is the only church on earth to-day, so far as I have any knowledge, that claims to have all the officers in the church that Christ left in it when he went away. If his church was restored again it would have to be just as he left it when he went away. If there were only one officer left out it would not be his church.

Now I know the church was restored through Joseph Smith. This was shown to me through the Spirit before I ever came into the church; and I have since had other evidences that it was the true church, which encourage me to go on to perfection. I have never doubted for one moment but what I was right. It is my whole desire to live a Latter Day Saint. The longer I am in the church the more knowledge I have of the work, and the more determined I am to stand for it.

I have not the privilege now of going to my own church. I went to the Methodist Episcopal Church a few nights ago, to hear one of their big guns, as some call him, preach. Well, he was quite large in size; but they had loaded their big gun with bird shot. You know they don't claim that God has anything to do with their preaching. He took his text from the forty-fourth chapter of Isaiah, twentieth verse. He preached so far from that text that he never mentioned it until he was about to close, when he said that if there were one in the house who was feeding his soul on ashes and who wanted to be saved "let him come forward while the choir sings and give me his hand." No one went up, I do not suppose they wanted to be saved. I wouldn't want to risk being saved in that way.

I can hardly wait for the HERALD to read the sermons and letters, and especially the letters from Brother Greene.

ALICE SCOTT.

UTE, IOWA, December 12, 1913.

Editors Herald: I ask the Saints to please write to me. We are isolated and alone. We had to discontinue our church papers because of inability to keep them paid up, and we feel the loss of all the good sermons and articles so much. They mean so much to isolated Saints. A sister at Moorhead sends me HERALDS and Ensigns, also Hopes, and I assure you they are food to hungry souls.

We have moved from town to our place about one mile out in the country. It is more peaceful and quiet here, but very lonely. My husband is away from early morn until dark. He does not have regular work this winter. By careful managing we hope, however, to be provided for. Our rent is paid to January 1, with the privilege of working to pay the balance until spring. Fuel is free for the gathering. We have laid in groceries to last until the first of March, and there surely will be some day work whereby we can keep up our expenses until spring work opens.

We ask an interest in your prayers that we may prove faithful in the cause, and that we may be able to supply the needs of our little ones. All are healthy, and for this we are very thankful.

My faith grows stronger day by day, and God's plan of salvation becomes more beautiful as we understand it better. I feel that the beautiful morn is near at hand.

I saw an article in a daily paper admonishing all churches the world over to observe Peace Sunday, December 21, asking that all services on this day be appropriate to the declaration of peace. How the world will unknowingly fulfill prophecy! When they cry peace, peace, swift destruction cometh upon them. Where in history have we seen such terrible disasters on both land and sea? We read of enormous loss of life upon every hand. Truly we are living in perilous times, with wars and rumors of wars, and earthquakes in divers places. Men and women running to and fro in search of knowledge as well as pleasure, and to what end?

Please write to me. Anything in the way of tracts or sermons will be gladly accepted, and passed on when read.

Your sister in the one faith,

SADIE BURCH.

MOUNDSVILLE, WEST VIRGINIA, December 17, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am glad to tell you that I have derived much benefit and encouragement from reading the HERALD. I have been sorely afflicted for some time, and during that affliction the letters and sermons have been food for my soul. Not being always able to read for myself, my niece, a professional nurse who was caring for me, would read the HERALD, much to the enjoyment of both of us. Especially did we enjoy the letters of Brethren U. W. Greene and G. T. Griffiths, describing their travels. Their description of the places visited seemed so real that I could almost imagine myself there.

I have been a member of the Reorganized Church ever since I was eight years old, but am sorry to say that I failed to live up to all its teachings, and, through the weakness of humanity, at times I merely drifted with the tide. I am thankful that to-day finds me more interested in the work than ever before. It is through faith, prayer and the administration of the elders that I am alive and able to write at all.

I had the privilege last fall of attending the reunion at New Philadelphia, Ohio, which I enjoyed very much. I was thankful indeed to meet and mingle with so many of God's people, and shall never forget the good talks I heard while there.

Soon after returning from the reunion I was taken with a severe illness, a complication of ailments that puzzled the physician, who said I would have to go to the hospital and undergo an operation if I ever wanted to be well. Thinking it would be for the best, I gave my consent and had all things in readiness to go, when the doctor came and informed me that the hospital was full, not a room to be had, and I would have to wait. This was in the evening. That night I became much worse, and in the morning I received evidence from my heavenly Father, that if I were to go to the hospital and take ether I would die; but if I remained at home and was faithful I should get well.

The doctor soon came again and said he had a room for me, and asked if I was ready to go. I told him, "No, I am going to put my trust in the Great Physician." While I give the doctor due credit for his interest in my welfare, and for having done all he could for me, yet when I began to improve he was so surprised that he told me to continue to trust the power, or whatever it was that was helping me. For two weeks I was in a critical condition, given up by the doctor. But I was trusting in the Great Physician, and never gave up. More than once I earnestly prayed that I might soon get relief, either by improved health or death. While I was in the greatest agony of body I would keep repeating these words, "Be strong and of good courage." I receive the greatest relief in body while they were praying for me, or while some one was reading the Psalms for me. I was administered to by a number of elders at different times. O. J. Tary, James Craig and my father, J. B. Wayt, and I always was benefited and blessed with the Holy Spirit. But for some reason, best known by my heavenly Father, I had to suffer again and again.

I am now up and around and feel that I have much to be thankful for. Having lived near a branch of the church nearly all my life, until we moved here with a view to bettering my health, I now miss the Sunday school and church very much. But this does not keep me from serving the Master, who has promised never to leave nor forsake those who will trust him.

It is the earnest desire of my heart to continue faithful to the end of my probation here, and to be instrumental in bringing some soul to see the light and obey the truth. I ask an interest in the prayers of God's children in behalf of my family, that they may be more interested in their souls' salvation, and that we may all gain eternal life.

Your sister in the faith,

FLORA McMILLAN.

LUCERNE, KANSAS, December 19, 1913.

Editors Herald: I have not seen a HERALD for some weeks, but I presume it is still alive. I venture a few lines before Santa Claus comes, and before I visit my little dark-eye who says, "Papa, I love you." The HERALD has not been away from me, but I have been away from the HERALD. I have effected a new opening here, with very gratifying success.

Early last August the writer found it necessary to discontinue a very promising series with rising interest at McCracken, Kansas, and take a trip up into Canada in answer to a call to look after and dispose of the estate of a deceased uncle. While there I had the pleasure of meeting many of my old friends, and some of the old guard who are my children after the common faith. I was glad to be able to assure them that my vim and eagerness to do the line of work for which I came among them in those blessed days is just what it was then.

I appreciated the opportunity of preaching at Viceroy, the home of T. J. Jordan, their district president, who is making himself both heard and felt; also at Ogema, Radville, Disley, Vanscoy; and of delivering an address in the large Adventist tent in the city of Weyburn, in review of a sermon preceding on the Sabbath question.

Some of the Saints have forsaken the prairies and frosts for the brighter sunshine of the farther south; some are moving; some will soon move; some are dead. Of the Weyburn Plains Branch, old Brother Neill, who supported the work with tongue and purse, is gone to his reward. So also is the little prophetess, Clara Fisher, surrounding whose tragic end is a volume of pathos as pathetic as ever was woven with the "warp and woof of mystery and death."

Some of the plainmen whom I baptized have reaped bountifully of earth's harvest, and have enough and to spare. The father of the last named, whom I found with his earnest wife and little bunch in a rude shack of such proportions that we could almost shake hands with each other in the morning without vacating our beds, has now an estate of about $40,000, and lives in a house as good as it is advisable to risk in circumstances so transitory. Others I have met have made a barrel of money.

At Ogema I preached once in the Presbyterian chapel, filling the appointment of the pastor by his request. He became very friendly to me during my business sojourn in the town. When I subsequently endeavored to get the use of the building for special meetings and was hindered by one of his leading parishioners, he came to me and declared his blamelessness in the matter, and gave me to understand that if he had been in control I would have had the church.

On the evening of my landing in that prairie hamlet, on August 14, I witnessed one of the severest storms of my travels. The skating rink was torn to fragments and scattered far and wide. Other disasters occurred, one of which was the killing of two men; they were found under the floor of their shack next morning, one horribly mangled by the flying debris.

On the 11th ult. I came here, responsive to a very persistent request from Elder J. D. Shower to come and deliver a series where he formerly lived, where he had made an opening last winter and where the Elmore-Curtis debate was held last summer. Soon after my arrival I was joined by said brother, who has rendered valuable assistance and has stood nobly by in the storm of opposition as well as in the sunshine of surrender. We have stayed and fed in the homes of non-members from the first, our only dependence in the neighborhood, there being no Saints on the scene for several miles distant. Meetings have been held in two schoolhouses about four miles apart. Until a week ago to-night we occupied in the one. We would have continued there, but Satan found we were gaining too much influence and two of the trustees conspired to close the house against us, when we repaired to the other, where meetings have continued up to the present, to be concluded on the 21st.

Last Sunday there was a grand rift in the clouds when we were able to baptize four married people into the fold as the first fruits of Lucerne, among whom was the postmaster, who is also general merchant, and with whom I have made my home ever since I have been here. Then on Thursday following, day before yesterday, we administered the rite to six more, making ten thus far, all adults but two, and all married people but three. And more than that, we expect to baptize a number more to-morrow. Crowds are flocking to our meetings, and many come early and long before meeting time in order to get a seat.

My earnest and ardent colaborer is overjoyed to witness the realization of his fondest hopes, to see his old acquaintances coming out and rallying round the standard of latter days. And although it has greatly postponed the resumption of my activities at McCracken and Alexander, from whence I have word yesterday they are wanting and waiting. I am nevertheless not sorry that I have honored the long request of Brother Shower to come here. His reputation in the neighborhood has been an excellent substratum upon which to erect our beacon, the light that now shineth in darkness.

And to-day my colaborer pulls away for Lebanon, where he made an opening and baptized one just a few weeks before joining me. An evangelistic Campbellite is on the ground, talking like a veritable Goliath and lecturing against us in the absence of a solitary soul of our ministry to talk back. I finish up here to-morrow, and then follow on Monday to confront the gentleman in person and make him "eat the leek" or run.

Yours, not only for a free press, but a press of freedom,
ALVIN KNISLEY.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 18, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am pleased to report that I am still alive in the spirit of my calling. I go somewhere each Sunday, in company with Brother Abner Lloyd, telling the old, old, gospel story, and that the good Lord is true to his promises, for he is confirming the word with the gifts of his glorious gospel.

Yesterday I baptized a fine young lady, Miss Fay O. Pendelton, whose dear mother was baptized most five years ago by Brother F. G. Christie. About that time Fay united with the Christian Church; but feeling that she had carried that big hump long enough she asked me to remove it, which I did, in the presence of a large gathering of Saints. Her confirmation was under the hands of Abner Lloyd, J. C. Foss, A. J. Layland, and H. B. Sterrett. Her mother said this was the finest confirmation prayer she had ever heard.

I have just learned that Brother Jerome Page's wife is dead, and that he wants me and Brother Lloyd to preach her funeral sermon. She was a dear sister in Christ. She is out of her suffering body, and is now at rest in paradise.

Yours truly,
J. C. Foss.

FULTON, IOWA, December 15, 1913.

Editors Herald: Brother S. H. Fields just closed a two weeks' meeting here. We had good attendance from first to last. The first week was so foggy that we thought we would have to close, still the house was well filled.

None were baptized, but there was such a friendly feeling on the part of both Saints and outsiders that all were loath to leave after every service. Surely there was good done.

I ordered twelve copies of An Open Letter to the Clergy. I have sent out eight of them already, writing each party a personal letter. I will send one to every minister in this county (Jackson) as soon as I can get their addresses. I believe this Open Letter will do good.

Your brother,
JOHN HEIDE.

BIGELOW, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: We are having a fine meeting here. The house is full every night by six-thirty, and by seven it is packed so that there is not standing room. There are a few who are talking of being baptized, and there are many others near the kingdom. I believe there can and will be a good work done here.

There was once a good brother who lived here, Brother Hickey, who did a lot of sowing of the good seed. That was years ago, when D. H. Bays was in this territory, who also sowed gospel seed. After that Brother Silvers and Brother Showers were here and watered it and sowed more. And now we hope the reaping time has come.

Yours in gospel bonds,
J. W. A. BAILEY.

MOUNT VERNON, ILLINOIS, December 29, 1913.

Editors Herald: Though not able to attend our church services very often, we are not sleeping. We enjoy telling others of the gospel, and have some interested.

We have tried hard in the past to secure a place for our elders to preach, but could not do so for more than one or two nights. But we now have the promise of a hall. If some of the elders will write us we could arrange for a time, and probably some good could be done. The population here is about twelve thousand. We surely believe there must be some honest in heart who could be gathered into the fold. We thought that after the conference at Springerton, Illinois, in January, some of the ministry might come here. We hope to hear from some one who will bring the gospel story.

Your sister in the one faith,

DORA LOWRY.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, December 20, 1913.

Editors Herald: We wish to say to those interested in the case at law in Oklahoma, wherein Robert E. Grant instituted proceedings against the writer for publishing in too concise a manner the facts concerning church court proceedings of record, excommunication, etc., that the findings of the superior court are now handed down in our favor.

It may be recalled that the lower court rendered a decision against us, attaching a verdict with considerable emphasis, and that the case was immediately appealed to the superior court of appeals of Oklahoma. Our attorneys now inform us that the superior court has reversed the decision of the lower court.

So if it still be insisted upon that a man is a criminal who has perpetrated the heinous crime of telling the truth and telling it plainly, it now becomes necessary for the prosecution to take up the remanded order for a new trial and proceed (in the interest of the moral welfare of our country) to see to it that those who fearlessly tell the truth shall be adequately punished. For there are critical occasions when special interests do not demand an over-production of that edged article.

But now, in view of the fact that it is but human to err, and with a heart of charity toward our Michigan brother whom God knows has been ensnared in much folly, we will here admit that it might have been a more charitable course upon our part to have left some of the truths concerning the brother's missteps unsaid. And if these lines come to his attention, we wish to convey in words of soberness, calling upon the Lord to witness, that in the heart of this writer there is no malice nor kindred passion toward Robert E. Grant, whom we have regarded as persecutor rather than prosecutor.

May the Lord deal kindly with him, and forgive us if in our zeal to defend the cause we love we have been indiscreet, or have been instrumental in wronging another in any way, is our earnest prayer.

JAMES E. YATES.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, December 19, 1913.

Editors Herald: Hamilton is a fine town of about two thousand inhabitants. It is on the main line of the Burlington, fifty miles east of Saint Joseph, seventy miles northeast of Kansas City. This is a fine country, land gently rolling. We are in the Oakdale Branch, of Far West District; a good, live branch.

There are three farms for sale here at a bargain. We want Saints to buy them.

We are doing well both temporally and spiritually. I have about all the preaching I can do. I visited the Alma Branch recently and held a two-day meeting. While there I was called about twenty miles northeast into Carroll County, I think, to preach the funeral of a young brother by the name of Joseph Craven.

We like this country fine; would like to see the Saints come in and buy these farms I speak of. We are trying to reflect to our neighbors and those in darkness the great light God has revealed. We want to be laborers together with God.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. T. FORD.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, December 18, 1913.

Editors Herald: Having had a few weeks' rest from labor, and taking advantage thereof, I made a flying trip through the Eastern and Central Michigan districts. In the different places where I have visited I have found the Saints in general very much alive to the work; and in no place more so than in the beautiful city of Port Huron. The work was started here a number of years ago; a branch was organized, and under a hard struggle a church was purchased; but many either moved elsewhere or were cut down by death, and the work here began to decline. Confusion and distrust rapidly followed, which resulted finally in the old camp fire's burning only dimly. But within the last three years, through the efforts of the district officers and the selection of this place for the holding of our reunions, etc., a change has taken place. The old spirit of love and Christian fellowship has been revived; union and concerted action are in the lead, and the Spirit of God thrills the hearts of the worshipers as they meet in their devotional exercises, and gladness is pictured on every countenance.

I believe there are only about one hundred and twenty-nine members enrolled on the Port Huron branch record. All of them are working people; yet in their zeal and earnestness for the advancement of the work in this city they have set themselves the task of building a more commodious place of worship—a place more centrally located, that the outsiders might be attracted thereto and the gospel find its way to the enlightenment of the honest in heart. They have, therefore, sold the old building, and are erecting a new one at a cost of five thousand dollars. This new building is fifty-seven by thirty-four feet, having a basement for Religio and Sunday school work, etc., and an upper auditorium for general church service.

As before remarked, the Saints here are poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith. They are making great sacrifice in their struggle to complete their place of worship. They hope to have their church opening about January 11, yet they are lacking in funds to complete and dedicate it. Elder Otto Fetting moved here last April, and has general charge and oversight of the church building.

I also recently visited the Saints in Whittemore and found them earnestly engaged, Elder Summerfield having the work well in hand there. I found Elder O. J. Hawn hammering away in Bay City, with prospects of baptizing some in the near future, and the further prospect of a theological tussle with the Reverend Simms at no very distant day.

Glad to find conditions so favorable where I have been. I expect to be with the Saints in Saint Clair next Sunday, then on to Detroit, thence back to my work, after the opening of the new year.

I wish to say to all my friends throughout the church that I am still in the conflict, and that the hope of the gospel was never brighter, nor its message more cheering to me than it is now. My faith in this great latter-day work remains unshaken. While here on earth I stay, wherever opportunity affords me the privilege, I am always glad to testify that I know this work is God's work, and that he will direct its course until every creature in heaven, on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them shall in triumphal strains exclaim, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Amen!

Very truly and sincerely yours,

WILLARD J. SMITH.

Australia Reached.

After a sojourn of two months on the Society Islands, we finally arrived at our destination, Australia. It was indeed with reluctance that we gave the parting hand to Brother May and wife, Sister Lake, and the native Saints of Papeete. We shall never forget them and their kindness to us during our stay among them. Time and again we were impressed that our heavenly Father loved those people, and that he will ever be mindful of them. There never was a better and a kinder-hearted people in this world. It would be a great blessing to them if some other government had these people under its control. The French are known for their loose morals. If our church were to start a day school there we would be able to save many of our young people from evils that have befallen so many of our young in that country in the past.

We sincerely trust that the Lord will direct in the sending of missionaries to that field the coming spring, as it is a very important mission to which all of the ministry are not adapted. The men who go there must be full of love, and ever keep in mind the scriptural injunction, "Possess your souls in patience." They should go with the understanding that they are to stay for a few years, as it takes about two years to learn the language.

It is not the climate that affects the ministry who go there; it is the poor facilities for traveling from island to island that is hurtful to the health of those who labor there. There is plenty to eat, and they grow the finest fruit in all the world. Of course, whoever goes there will find conditions which will be very trying to the missionaries, but we can not enter any mission without meeting many discouragements; hence we have to put our confidence in God and look to him for divine guidance and support to enable us to do the work well that has been assigned us by the Master and the church.

On the way here we called at Cooks Islands. The people here, in their habits and customs, are similar to the Tahitians. Our next stop was Wellington, New Zealand. We had to stay there three days because of the longshoremen's strike. This gave us the opportunity to call on Brother and Sister Leberz. We had the pleasure of spending one night with them at their home, and truly we enjoyed the visit. They are in the faith and very anxious to have missionaries sent there.

We have only one small branch in all of that country and not one missionary, which does not speak well for our church, in view of the fact that the Utah people have between six and eight thousand members with about fifty missionaries laboring there. They also have thousands of the Maori people in their church. It is to be hoped that the appointing powers will send two able ministers there next April. Wellington is a very beautiful city, and has a lovely harbor, but the weather is a little treacherous, as they have blustering winds at times. The city is built on top of the hills, with the exception of the water front, most of which is made land.

The steamship company transferred us to another fine ship, where we were given first-class accommodations. We surely enjoyed the change. My, you ought to have seen the style in which Brother Miller appeared. He wore his long tail coat and white vest and pranced around on deck like a proud peacock. It goes quite hard with a real American to travel other than first-class as we are not used to anything but first-class in the States.

Brother Walter Haworth met us at the landing in this city. We were much pleased to see his smiling face and to grasp him by the hand once more. He gave us a grand welcome to our new mission, and we felt that we had met a true brother and friend in a strange land, and far from home. His loving wife and children received us in the same spirit. I was taken to the home of Brother and Sister Gresty, and Brother Miller to the home of our young Brother Victor Seaberg.

The next evening the Saints of both branches in this city met in the Balmain church house and gave us a royal welcome to their city and mission. The spirit of good-will was manifested toward us in such a way that we felt at home with the Saints, and that they were true friends indeed. What cheered our souls most was the presence of the blessed Spirit of God, which brought cheer and comfort to our hearts. We have a great number of young people in both branches, and they seem very much interested in the Lord's work; we felt impressed by the Spirit of God that very many of these young people will be a great power for good in this mission in the near future; and that it will not be necessary for the church in America to send many missionaries to this mission, as the Lord will raise up a ministry from those young men to carry on the work of preaching in Australia; also men to preside and men to do evangelical work.

They have good Sunday schools here in Sydney. You should hear them sing over here. It will keep the choirs of Lamoni and Independence hustling to get ahead of the choir in the Balmain Branch, which is under the leadership of Brother Thearle. They have some very notable musicians among them, namely Brother Gresty and his daughter Myra, Brother Parks and others. They rank among the best musicians and composers in Australia. Sister Myra Gresty travels in the profession all the time. She is a great singer and pianist. Thank God, that we have such grand talent in the church. Brother Gresty orchestrates for nearly all the great orchestras and bands in Sydney.

Brethren Miller and Longfield are laboring in and around New Castle, but they will be back here in time to attend the district conference which convenes in this city on the 25th inst., to continue over four days. I have been very busy since I came, preaching, visiting, and attending to many other duties.

Brother Miller and I were vaccinated twice on board ship, as the smallpox has been very much in evidence in Sydney for some months. There are, however, only a few cases here at present. The last vaccination took effect in about four days after my arrival here, and made me very ill. I was very much disappointed because I could not attend the services the first Sabbath I was in the city. It was fortunate for me that I was not taken ill on board ship. Sister Gresty and daughters proved to be up-to-date nurses, and as a consequence of their excellent care I was soon up and about again. I am very much in love with Sydney, which has one of the finest harbors in all the world. The city is almost surrounded with water, which affords a picturesque scenery. It has a population of about six or seven hundred thousand. Sydney is a busy city.

I expect to see Brother C. A. Butterworth, with many others of the brethren at the conference on Christmas Day. The weather is hot here some days. It seems very odd to me to have Christmas in midsummer. My health is fine, and I am feeling splendid in the work. Expect to make a tour of the mission in due time.

Praying our heavenly Father to bless all of his children throughout the world, I am,

Your brother and colaborer in Christ,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA, 623 Darling Street, December 13, 1913.

Montana.

My labors have been principally confined to Deer Lodge Valley, where are located two branches, Deer Lodge, and Warm Springs. Butte and Anaconda, the two largest cities in the State, are located in this valley, but like most large cities, it is hard to get our work started. We have a number of Saints in both cities.

About two months ago Sister Emmons, of Anaconda, opened her house for me to preach in. We held a week's meetings with some interest. The room was small, so by the end of the week Sister Mangum had arranged for us to occupy at her place, it being larger. We held forth there another week, with increased interest, some outsiders out nearly every night. None were baptized, but I feel sure good was done to our own people. My wife was with me, and rendered good help in the services. Being superintendent of normal and home department, she was able to do a little work along that line.

While there we visited among the Saints and outsiders, stopping at night with Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Peterson. They do not belong to the church, but they are kind, good people. May the God of heaven bless them abundantly for their kindness to us. The Lord said that those who feed you and give you money are his disciples. They did all that. They have four children who belong to the church.

Many Saints are moving into Montana and taking up homesteads, so in August I started out to visit some of them. I called first in Bitter Root Valley. This is a long settled country, and the fruit garden of Montana. The gospel has been preached there over twenty years. Some of our best preachers have occupied in the little schoolhouse on the hill. The Johnsons, Thomonders, and Jamisons are old-timers in the gospel work. They always make an elder feel at home.

I stayed with them about a month. We had some good meetings, and baptized four. While there I caught so many trout and white fish that the people became tired eating them. So we get tired even of a good thing.

The first of September I left for the Flat Head Reservation. I took train for Ravalli, took stage from there for Polson, thirty-six miles. I found one family of Saints there, Brother H. Thomason's. He was not at home; he had gone over into Swan Valley to locate a claim. I enjoyed a nice visit with Sister Thomason and family, and held four meetings in their house.

From Polson I took boat on Flat Head Lake for Rollins.

There I found a lady who had been waiting twenty years for an elder to come and baptize her. She had never heard a sermon; she was converted by reading the church papers. I held a few meetings in the schoolhouse with good interest, and the day before I left baptized the sister and left her rejoicing in the angel's message.

From Rollins I went to Kalispell. There I found Brother Ferward, who had not heard a sermon for about seven years. He and his wife are both in the church. They have a family of eleven children, not any in the church. I held a few meetings in the house. My visit was very pleasant to me, and I hope profitable to them.

From Kalispell I came to Great Falls. There I put up with Grandma Catrin. She is over eighty, but her mind is clear and she loves to talk about this latter-day work. I held two cottage meetings on Sunday. There I met Brother and Sister Cudney and Brother and Sister Walker, of Lamoni, also Brother John Price, of Independence, Missouri.

From Great Falls I came home and followed the potato digger for five days. It made me pretty sore, but I earned ten dollars at it. So I was prepared to make another trip.

The fifth and sixth of this month we held our district conference at Deer Lodge. We had a large gathering for this country, and a good spiritual time. A resolution was passed petitioning the General Conference to divide Montana into eastern and western districts. The missionaries present were Peter Anderson, John Moore, W. R. Smith, and the writer.

Your brother in the one faith,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

Upon going over the year upon our books we discover that our report will be lacking the work of several districts and branches in unorganized territory, for the reason that no reports have been received from them during the year.

We would like to hear from the following districts: Chatham, London, England, Southern Indiana, Northwestern Kansas, Spring River, Central Michigan, Eastern Oklahoma, and the following branches not in districts: Jerusalem, Palestine; Bisbee, Arizona; Bald Knob, Sugar Creek, Fisher, Arkansas; Eros, Louisiana; Olive, Evergreen, Nebraska.

We must depend upon you for the information which goes into our annual report to the General Conference, and surely once a year is not too often for you to send in your reports. Let us hear from you now.

Sister Olson was a devout and faithful member of the Reorganized Church; having been baptized at Mission, LaSalle County, Illinois, in 1866. She bore her long and painful illness without a murmur, and her hope of attaining

She leaves three children, Vivian L. Strickland, of Tecumseh, Nebraska, Mary Evangeline Rutledge, of Clayton, New Mexico, and Vincent Strickland, of Greeley, Colorado. Funeral at Lamoni, Iowa, charge of Robert Elvin; sermon by Elbert A. Smith. Sister Strickland merited and received the confidence, respect, and love of the Lamoni Saints.

Century Company Books.

The second volume in the series being published by The Century Company for the Bureau of Social Hygiene, Abraham Flexner's Prostitution in Europe, will be issued January 17. Mr. Flexner is one of the secretaries of the General Education Board, and author of The American College, Medical Education in the United States and Canada, and Medical Education in Europe. Mr. Flexner, on returning from a year's stay in Europe studying medical faculties and hospitals, was requested by Mr. Rockefeller to lay aside educational work long enough to study on the ground the problem of European prostitution and its municipal management. He spent a year in the chief cities of Great Britain and the Continent, and was aided in his investigation by police authorities and private agencies. The resulting volume is declared to be the only first-hand and authoritative presentation of conditions and methods in Europe ever published in English. The book will be issued in England in January, and arrangements have been made for translation into German and French.

The publication of an elaborate, illustrated edition of The Jungle Book, as announced by The Century Company, and the same company's issue of Captains Courageous in a limp red leather edition, calls attention to the constantly and largely increasing sales of Rudyard Kipling's books. In ten years the yearly sales of The Jungle Book, The Second Jungle Book, and Captains Courageous have considerably more than doubled. The new edition of The Jungle Book, which is probably more widely read than any other one book by Kipling, has sixteen full-page illustrations in full color by the well-known English artists, Maurice and Edward Detmold.

Doctor F. S. Chapin, of Smith College, has written a book on Social Evolution, which is intended to give the general reader an elementary survey of the supposed facts and principles involved in the development of human nature out of the raw materials of lower forms of life. The book is published by The Century Company, Union Square, New York.

A Rare Opportunity to Visit California and Tour the Fascinating West

Right now the Burlington Route offers you a rare opportunity to go to that land of perpetual summer, sunlight, beauty and health—glorious California—and through the scenic grandeur and invigorating sunlight of Colorado and Utah too. California is one of the finest places in the world in which to spend the winter. Think of boating, golfing, playing tennis or bathing in the surf, without a single thought of furnace, fires, heavy clothes and wraps, to say nothing of the constant menace of catching cold.

If your neighbor has been there, ask him, he knows. And it doesn't cost a great deal to spend a month there either. Ask him about that also. And it doesn't cost much nowadays to get there. Ask me about that.

Special Personally Conducted tourist car parties. You can save money by taking advantage of this service. It will cost you considerably less but your enjoyment will be just as keen. Now is the time. California is the place, and the Burlington is the way to go. Send for your copy of our folder telling all about the trip and the service to-day—it's worth reading even if you don't go—and let me help you plan and outline the possibilities of the trip.

CHARACTER SKETCHES OF JESUS.

IV.—HIS CHARITY.

Paul gave the best exegesis of charity. But Jesus gave the best demonstration of that chiefest of the graces.

More and more we admire the broad charity of Jesus. He came here and associated with men and women who made mistakes. He consorted with men who erred in many things. He might have remained with the immaculate angels on high. But instead he came down to labor with and among and for men and women who made mistakes,—men and women like you and me.

Yet he seldom upbraided them—excepting the hypocrites. We condemn a man for a single error, sometimes, and would cast him off for ever; but Jesus did not do that way.

Had he been as narrow in his sympathies and as sour in his spirit as some of his professed followers become at times, he would never have carried his mission very far.

He was required to labor among disciples who must have tried his patience at every turn. Yet his charity never failed. He chose to bear with their errors and faults until they had time to discover and overcome those errors and faults with the aid of the Holy Spirit and under the regenerative power of the gospel.

Can we do less, and remain true followers of him? Shall we not bear with the mistakes and faults of our brethren until they have time to correct those errors and faults, even as we expect them to bear with us? If we refuse to do so the parable of the beam and the mote rebukes us.

If the faults of the brethren are of such a nature that they demand immediate action they should be dealt with in the same spirit that characterizes the Master, who corrected with the hand of love and in harmony with justice and reason and law. If criticism is demanded, let us be sure that it is constructive criticism, the kind that will help, and delivered in the spirit that will attract and win, rather than embitter and estrange.

Jesus preferred to look at the good in man. He believed that the good would in the end predominate. He had faith in the power and disposition of men to respond to the gospel when understood. He clearly saw the deficiencies of his followers; but he saw that to which we are sometimes blinded,—their excellencies. He preferred to bide his time, confident in the power of the gospel to work a most radical change.

Therefore, to Peter, whose headstrong nature must have tried him at times, he said: "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren."

Instead of casting Peter off, or talking about his faults behind his back, he prayed for him that his faith might not fail. He bore with Peter, waiting the time when he might become thoroughly converted. His patience, his faith, his charity were well rewarded later when Peter became the apostle of progressive character building and wrote and expounded his great gospel policy of adding virtue to faith, knowledge to virtue, temperance to knowledge, and so on to the perfecting of an active and fruitful Christian character.

The charity of Jesus knew no racial barriers. Men to-day with blind national pride may trample the flags of other people under foot, and hate and kill alien men of other races; but Jesus quietly crossed the line and conversed with the Samaritan woman to whom no Jew would speak a decent word. His last commission to his disciples was to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. It had hardly dawned upon their minds then that Gentiles were human, much less that they might share equally with the Jews the love and blessing of God. Later they learned and announced that God had made of one blood all races upon the face of all the earth, and that in Jesus there was neither Jew nor Gentile, bond nor free.

How slow we are to learn that lesson. The Spirit of Jesus alone will make possible the universal brotherhood of man. By that Spirit he in time will burn away the barriers and obliterate the national boundaries, so that the kingdoms of this earth will become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ, and every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that he is the Lord. Force of arms will not make the nations one. Bayonets separate them; charity unites them.

How refreshing to turn from narrow, partisan strife, and the conflict between warring creeds and denominations, to contemplate the broad charity and sweet spirit of Jesus! Thus we are strengthened and refreshed. Thus do we feel ourselves quickened and encouraged to outgrow the hard shell of selfishness. Thus is our outlook broadened, and thus our sympathies are deepened. We need often to reflect upon this matter, that we may finally come into full accord with his viewpoint.

He who taught that we should forgive all men was put to the test. His theology was tried out under the severest tests. Under the thorny crown, in the judgment hall, beneath the scourge, upon the cruel cross, before the mocking throng, his charity was tried to the uttermost. It was genuine. It was as enduring as eternity. Under the supreme test he was still able to pray, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTE.—The next number in this series will be, "His human sympathy and tenderness."

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

SCHISM IN ANGLICAN CHURCH.—The New York Times in a cablegram from London reports a great controversy in the Church of England, known as the Kikuyu controversy, which had its origin in western Africa during the summer of 1913. It is reported that this dispute threatens to shake the Church of England to its foundation. Leading bishops express a fear that it may be the cause of a breach that can not be healed, resulting in a permanent division. This controversy grew out of the fact that the Moslem faith had been gaining ground in western Africa to such an extent that leading missionaries of the various Protestant denominations came together for a conference in the little town of Kikuyu, in June, 1913. They wished to present a solid front for "Christianity" as opposed to Mohammedanism. Alas, their endeavor to present a solid front resulted in complete failure. While their little conference was harmonious enough in itself, the fact that the bishops of the English Church admitted Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and others to their regular communion service, has precipitated a very fierce contention in their own denomination. A large section of the "Church" takes the position that such an act was altogether wrong and heretical. Others defend the action. The bishop of Zanzibar accused the bishops of Mombasa and Uganda of heresy and sought to impeach them, demanding a formal condemnation by the archbishop of Canterbury. The bishop of Oxford expresses fear that the cohesion of the Church of England is seriously threatened. This event is one more evidence that Protestant churches can not unite on a common basis until they shall all agree to accept the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fullness and permit his word to be the end of controversy. They may get together in little groups in the interests of church union; but where one union is effected, another schism will arise, so that the division will be as great as formerly. In this case the question involved is one of authority and apostolic succession. If the Church of England is correct in her claims of apostolic succession through the Catholic hierarchy, and in her further claim, as we heard it stated some years ago by an able priest of that denomination, to the effect that authority to represent God to-day is vested in the Catholic Church and in the Church of England, and in none other, then those priests are consistent who would exclude Protestant ministers from communion. But if they are in fact, as we believe, in no way superior to Protestant churches in this matter, there is no just ground for the contention. As one bishop says, this dispute may finally determine whether the Church of England shall become Protestant or Catholic.

REDEMPTION OF THE HOLY LAND.—Nathan Straus, the Jewish philanthropist and millionaire who has recently retired from active business in New York City, will devote his time and money to practical work for the redemption of the Holy Land. This work will be carried out under the direction of his son, Nathan Straus, jr. He proposes first to give his attention to securing better sanitation and hygiene in the city of Jerusalem. There is a crying need for such work. A recent card from Elder H. A. Koehler, stationed at that place, says that in this city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants there are neither street cars, telephones, water mains, nor sewers. As a result of unsanitary conditions it is stated that one out of every five of the inhabitants is afflicted with malaria, while there is widespread suffering from rabies and trachoma, the latter a disease of the eye which causes a great amount of suffering and blindness among the Jews. Mr. Straus's attention was first directed to these conditions on the occasion of his visit to Jerusalem in 1911 and 1912. He proposes also to establish health bureaus, one of which we understand is already in operation at Haifa. Trained nurses are now at work in Jerusalem ministering to those who need their attention. Realizing that much of the sickness is attributable to poverty as well as to lack of proper sanitation, he has established soup houses, where the poor may be fed. These, however, he regards as simply palliatives, and proposes more thoroughgoing remedies in the form of industries, so that the people may become self-supporting. He has already established work rooms for the manufacturing of pearl buttons from shells, employing some eighty men and twenty-five girls. These industries are to be enlarged, and he will seek an international market for the product. These intelligent and thoroughgoing methods for the practical industrial redemption of the people there are among the most encouraging signs that we have noted. Men with brains and money are unconsciously serving God, even as Cyrus did, of old. They are preparing the way for the successful return of the Jews and for the complete restoration of the land to prosperity. The Lord in his own due time will show his hand even more directly and will proceed with the complete accomplishment of his designs.

AIRSHIP AT POOL OF SILOAM.—Press reports contain an interesting account of a spectacular visit of a French aviator to Jerusalem on his way to the Nile country. The aviator alighted near the ancient Pool of Siloam. According to the report, the people of the city were astonished to see this strange aerial visitor in the city of David. They came together from all quarters, some of them thinking that another miracle was taking place in the ancient city of miracles. One writer, commenting on this event says, "The old and the new met in Jerusalem on this occasion, and the ages were contrasted."

STRIKE AT CALUMET.—An exceedingly bitter labor war has been in progress between operators and miners in the copper mining district of Calumet, Michigan. If we are to trust press reports, the usual scenes of violence accompanying such strikes have been reenacted at this place, quite foreign to the significance of the name Calumet, anciently applied to the peace pipe of the Indians. Mine owners charge the strikers with violence and allege that mob law reigned supreme until the advent of the militia. Miners retort that certain of their numbers have been assassinated and others fired upon in their houses at night, and that Charles H. Moyer, president of the Western Federation of Miners, was attacked in his room in the hotel at Hancock by some twenty-five men who clubbed him over the head, shot him in the back, dragged him violently to the depot, and caused him to be deported from the State. Mine owners allege that peace and harmony prevailed until the advent of the Western Federation of Miners, whom they look upon as interlopers who came there meddling with affairs that were none of their business. The officials of the federation retort that the miners were laboring under very unsatisfactory conditions, putting in unreasonable hours at very low wages, and among undesirable surroundings; that they came there as representatives of the federation in the interests of labor, organized the men, and insisted that they should be placed on an eight-hour basis, receiving a minimum wage of three dollars for underground workers, together with other demands of similar nature. Recognition of the federation is also demanded, and at present is the crux of the situation. The miners have asked repeatedly that these questions be arbitrated, but the owners retort that they will not arbitrate under any conditions, not even if they were privileged to select all five members of the arbitration board. These events are typical signs of the times, and show how quickly the flames of class hatred may blaze up in any locality, resulting in industrial war, and even in anarchy. Under such conditions violence is almost inevitable on both sides, and it is exceedingly hard at times to tell exactly where justice lies. On general principles, our sympathies are with the laborers, and we see the absolute necessity under present conditions of their being organized, as they are obliged to meet and bargain with thoroughly organized forces. Still, every such clash as this brings to light conduct, methods, and deeds upon both sides that can not be indorsed, and the only ultimate safety that we see for Saints under such conditions, which are liable to become worse and worse, will be found in Zion.

VOLCANIC ERUPTION IN JAPAN.—Under date of January 13 telegraphic communications from Japan reported a terrible volcanic eruption, accompanied by severe earthquake shocks and a tidal wave, which destroyed many lives in the southern part of Japan. The eruption came from the crater of Sakura-Jima. The city of Kogoshina is reported as practically destroyed. This is a city of about sixty thousand people.

CORPORATION WITH A SOUL.—Once in a while in the midst of its strenuous work of reporting wars, murders, scandals, and divorces, the Associated Press finds time to chronicle a very noteworthy deed. Almost universal attention has been attracted to the action of the Ford Motor Car Company, Henry Ford, principal owner, in voluntarily increasing the pay of practically all employees in their automobile factory. The minimum wage, which was formerly $2.35 per day, is now $5 per day. This will be an increase of many millions of dollars in wages, practically all of the employees being benefited, and some of them receiving nearly twice what they formerly received. This action was taken with the consent of the stockholders. These people employ twenty-seven thousand men and have decided to increase their force by about five thousand more. This is a wholesome sign that at least a few corporations are awakening to the need of just and equitable dealings with employees. There are those among them who are no longer content to appropriate enormous profits to be divided among the stockholders. Some of these perhaps are moved by entirely altruistic motives, while others fear an impending storm, and are choosing between this and threatened confiscation.

DESTITUTION IN BULGARIA.—A condition of devastation obtains in Bulgaria as a result of the participation by that country in the recent wars. Bulgaria sacrificed in these wars sixty thousand men killed, and forty thousand wounded. Her growing crops were destroyed or left to be overgrown by weeds. In the midst of the cold of winter hundreds of thousands of her people are suffering from hunger. The queen of Bulgaria has requested the Chicago Examiner to solicit money to help her starving people. The American Red Cross has contributed one hundred thousand dollars to help those injured in the Bulgarian wars.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES.—Giving as a reason "an apparent change in public sentiment," J. P. Morgan and Company announce the withdrawal of members of that firm from the directorates of a number of important corporations, including the chief railroads of the East and the stronger banking and trust companies of the country. Thus are the masters of industry yielding to the pressure brought to bear against the manipulation of the business interests of the country by a few powerful financiers.

AEROPLANE PASSENGER.—The first daily aeroplane passenger and express service in the United States is reported as having opened on January 1 between Tampa and Saint Petersburg, Florida, a distance of eighteen miles. The fare one way is five dollars, with extra charge for baggage. The first flight was made in twenty-three minutes.

MEXICAN WAR.—Latest advices from the Mexican War state that General Villa has driven from their last stand the Huerta forces in northern Mexico. The Constitutionals therefore have control of the entire portion of northern Mexico. Refugees, including Federal soldiers, men, women, and children, waded the Rio Grande River to escape the deadly fire of the victorious Constitutionals. General Zapata is reported as operating close to Mexico City on the south. The way seems open for an advance on the capital.

CHINESE AFFAIRS.—The Chinese Parliament was formally dissolved January 11 by proclamation of the president. This parliament, from a lack of capable leaders and coherent policy, has been impotent from the beginning. Supreme control in affairs of state now rests in the hands of the president and the administrative council, consisting of seventy-one members, made up of governors of provinces, military men, and members of the cabinet. According to the proclamation of the president, the parliament will reconvene in course of time.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

FROM LONDON, CANADA.—By letter from Elder William Fligg, of London, Canada, we learn that he has resigned the presidency of that branch in order to remove to western Canada, where he is to have charge of a store in Readlyn, Saskatchewan. Brother Fligg has served as president of the London Branch for the past twenty years. In order to show their appreciation of his services, the branch officers called upon Brother Fligg as a committee representing the branch and presented him with a valuable token of their saintly regard. We are also in receipt of a clipping from the Free Press, dated January 1, in which it is stated that a deputation of the London townspeople associated with Brother Fligg in the wholesale warehouse where he has been employed for many years waited upon him during the progress of an entertainment in the church and presented him with a token of the esteem in which he is held by nonmembers of the church. Brother Fligg is to be congratulated upon having held the confidence and respect of the community. He writes under date of January 4 to the effect that Brother Curtis had recently visited London and conducted a good work there, resulting in the baptism of ten and a general revival of enthusiasm and spirituality.

NEW WORK FOR SEVENTIES.—The Deseret Evening News for January 12, 1914, contains an interesting comment on the increased membership of the seventies in the Utah Church. They report that the number of quorums now in the church is increased to one hundred eighty-two, and add this statement, "Elder Kimball to-day declared that the chief work of the seventy now is 'home service' work, devoting a large part of their time to ward teaching. In addition to this work, however, the members of the Quorums of Seventy are active in the auxiliary organizations of the church." This, it occurs to us, is quite a departure all along the line from the original design which contemplated an increase of seventies up to the number of seven quorums (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43), and which intended them to be traveling missionaries to go into all the world under the direction of the twelve apostles (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11-13.). Here we find that they have been increased to the number of one hundred eighty-two quorums, and that they stay at home and give their attention almost exclusively to local work.

A STUDY ON BAPTISM.

A statement will make plain to the reader the cause and purpose of this writing. I started to study on the subject of baptism after friends had urged upon me the necessity of baptism by immersion.

There was an argument as to what baptism is for, and how it is to be administered, and whether or not it is a saving ordinance. I had the opinion that it was simply an outward sign of an inward grace, a form used to initiate people into membership in a church. I also said that it did not matter how it was administered, and upheld the form of sprinkling to be as good as any, and that it was not a saving ordinance.

Wishing to convince my friends that they were wrong, I started to study the Bible. As I studied I also prayed that God would teach me and lead me in my study. God was indeed my teacher, leading me to the truths herein set forth. I hope that some who read this may profit by the same, even as I have done by my study.

BAPTISM FOR REMISSION.

The first question to be answered is, What is baptism for?

I found in my study that baptism follows repentance, and for the remission of sins.

We are told in Matthew 3:6 that the people of Jerusalem and all Judea and all around Jordan came to John the Baptist, "And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Again Mark 1:4, John did baptize in the wilderness, and preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Likewise, Luke 3:3, "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for remission of sins."

Thus we find that before Christ came baptism followed repentance and was for the remission of sins. It was for the same purpose after Christ came, as may be shown.

By reading and summing up Matthew 28:19, 20; Mark 16:15-18, and Luke 24:46, 47, we find that Jesus gave commandment to his apostles, those whom he had called and ordained, that they should go forth and preach the gospel to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, preaching repentance, and baptism for remission of sins, baptizing in the name of, or by the authority of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and teaching them, all people, to observe all things that he had commanded them.

Peter, the apostle, in obedience to this commandment preached, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2:38. There are many like instances, did time and space permit their production.

These references show that baptism in those days followed repentance and was for the remission of sins, after Christ came as well as before. And if it was so in those days, it is so to-day.

IMMERSION PROPER MODE.

The second question is, How is baptism to be administered?

This is an important question. Paul in 1 Corinthians 1:13 says, "Is Christ divided?"

It is a serious question, when we see the divisions in the church to-day, and as we look on the manner in which we are taught on the subject of baptism, and indeed on many other important subjects. Some say, "Immersion is the method"; others say, "Immersion is not right, but pouring is the method"; still others say that sprinkling is the correct method. Many say that one method is as good as another; nearly all say that baptism is not necessary; that it is not a saving ordinance. But they say you must be baptized before you join the church, so making it harder for a person to join the church than to enter the kingdom of God. Why should the church, if it is as Jesus said, "the body of Christ," be divided on any point? The truth can not be divided, and the true church of God will never be divided on any point.

Nothing can be divided against itself and stand, so when division crept into the church it did not stand, but fell and ceased to be one body. If you are looking for the truth you will do as Jesus himself said, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." Then take the Bible and learn from it what you seek.

In John 3:57 Jesus himself says to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again."

The meaning here is indeed plain. Born means "to come out of." Jesus said, "born of water." No man can come out of the water and so be born of water unless he is immersed in water, or baptized by immersion.

If it had been as effectual to baptize in any other way as by immersion, the apostles and John the Baptist would most assuredly have baptized in the easiest and quickest manner, especially when there were a great many to baptize. The easiest and quickest way surely is sprinkling; but the Bible shows that they baptized by immersion.

That John the Baptist baptized by immersion is evidenced by the following, Matthew 3:16: "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water." Mark 1:10 tells us the same, "And straightway coming up out of the water." Now Jesus was baptized of John by immersion, for he came up out of the water. He would not have been in the water unless he was immersed; you don't have to go into the water to be sprinkled or poured.

John 3:23, "John was baptizing in Enon because there was much water there." John sought a place where there was much water. What was his purpose, if not that he might have water enough to baptize by immersion? Thus we find that John the Baptist baptized by immersion.

Now let us see how the apostles baptized.

Philip was sent to meet the eunuch, and found him reading the Scriptures; he did not understand what he read; Philip explained it to him, and then preached Christ Jesus unto him. As Philip preached to him they came to some water and the eunuch asked to be baptized. So they, Philip and the eunuch, went down into the water and he, Philip, baptized him. "And they went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him." (Acts 8:38.) Here is a case where in the days of the apostles baptism was by immersion.

Paul tells the reason for immersion or burying in baptism.

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.—Romans 6:3, 4.

If we are buried in baptism, we are immersed, not sprinkled or poured. If we are buried by baptism into death, we are dead to sin, as shown by verse 11 of the same chapter. "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Of course a man can sin after he has been baptized and received great blessings; and his punishment is spoken of in Hebrews 6:4-6.)

If we do walk in newness of life, being dead to sin, we must then reckon ourselves to be alive unto God, through the atonement of Christ.

For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man (or old self) is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin.—Romans 6:5-7.

Paul says in Colossians 2:12, 13:

Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation (or power) of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins and uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses.

"Buried with him," this refers to Jesus Christ. "Buried!" what should we be buried in? Jesus said, "Born of water," and we must be buried in water before we can be born of it. Then we are to be "buried" with him, (Jesus Christ) in water. We are to be "dead unto sin," and "walk in newness of life."

"Also ye are risen with him." This also refers to Jesus Christ. Through faith, with the Spirit of righteousness in us, and being "dead unto sin," we are raised from the dead, with all our sins forgiven and taken away, so that we may truly "walk in newness of life."

The Scriptures show that in both word and deed we must be buried in baptism, or baptized by immersion.

We find in a Bible dictionary "Baptism is a symbolic washing or bathing to signify repentance, and the putting away of sin and sinful things, and the beginning of a new life." Very good; that agrees with what we learned from the Bible itself. It is then a washing or bathing. The person who to wash or bathe simply sprinkles a few drops of water on the head, or pours a little water on the head, is not made clean. It is necessary to at least immerse the body, to wash or bathe to become clean.

We read from an encyclopedia:

Baptism (from the Greek baptizo, from bapto, meaning to immerse or dip) is supposed to have existed with the Jews even before Christ. Baptism became a religious ceremony among Christians. Three modes of administering were adopted: Immersion, pouring, and sprinkling. The question on which the mode is disputed, is upon the meaning of the Greek preposition following the verb, baptizo. Those upholding baptism by immersion as the only valid form, claim that the preposition is in, while the advocates of pouring and sprinkling contend that the preposition is with. The Greek or Eastern Church adopted the mode of immersion, while the Romans or Western Church allowed pouring and sprinkling.

The verb bapto or baptizo means to immerse or dip. The question that causes division is not the verb itself, then, but the preposition following the verb.

Some say that this preposition is in, so making the meaning, to immerse or dip in water. Some say the preposition is with, to immerse or dip with water. If the preposition is in there can be no doubt that the correct mode is immersion. If the preposition is with there is still no doubt that the correct mode is immersion. You can not be immersed or dipped with water without being immersed or dipped in water. So in either instance the correct mode is immersion.

There is another phase to be considered. The language from which this division arises is the Greek language. Now, who would understand that language better, the Greeks or the Romans? I hear you say, The Greeks, of course. We remember that immersion was adopted, or authorized, by the Greek or Eastern Church, said church not allowing any other form or mode. The Greek understands his own language, and immerses. It was the Roman or Western Church which allowed pouring and sprinkling. The churches which sprang from this Roman or Western Church began to disagree on the subject, while the Greek or Eastern Church still baptized by immersion.

Thus we find that from the Bible, the Bible dictionary, and the encyclopedia the only correct mode of baptism is immersion, "to be buried in baptism," to go down into the water and be buried so that we may rise and walk in "newness of life." Baptism can be administered in no other way and harmonize with Bible teachings, and the Bible must be our guide, for Jesus said, John 5:39, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."

A SAVING ORDINANCE.

Now we have come to the third question, Is baptism a saving ordinance?

From what we have just noted, it would seem that if it is for a special purpose (remission of sins), and since there is but one way to properly administer it (immersion), then is baptism necessary, and so is a saving ordinance; but let us search the Scriptures of divine truth and see what that search may bring forth.

We revert again to the words of Jesus, John 3:3, "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God," and verse 5, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." And again verse 7, "Marvel not that I say unto thee, Ye must be born again."

This shows plainly that "Ye must be born again," and "born of water." That "born of water," "born again" mean "buried with him (Christ) by baptism into death"; thus coming forth out of the water we are "born of water," and being "dead to sin," may "walk in newness of life."

Jesus says in Mark 16:16, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," promising that those who first believe and then are baptized shall be saved; not he that is baptized shall be saved—it does not say that—neither does it say, as the churches of the world tell us to-day, that he who believes shall be saved. No; but it does say, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Then to be saved he must more than believe, he must believe and be baptized.

Again, Mark 16:16, "But he that believeth not shall be damned." This does not say that he that is not baptized shall be damned, but, "He that believeth not (whether he be baptized or not) shall be damned." To those who believe, if they would be saved, the condition is that they be baptized. This shows that baptism is a saving ordinance.

One purpose of baptism is to make us of the seed of Abraham (not the seeds, but the seed). See the words of the Apostle Paul, Galatians 3:27-29: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and ye are all one in Christ Jesus. . . . And if ye be Christ's (or in Christ) then (as he is Abraham's seed) are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Or, as many as have been baptized into the body of Christ are one with him, and so are Abraham's seed and heirs.

Is this not plain? Then by Christ's own words, baptism is a saving ordinance; according to the practices and teaching of the apostles, baptism is a saving ordinance. It is the only way to receive remission of sins, and to become one in the body of Christ, and so be of the seed of Abraham, that we may inherit the things which Abraham's seed is to inherit.

CONCLUSION.

The conclusion is that we must first, have faith in God and in Jesus Christ, and believe that he is the Son of the living God; second, heartily repent of our sins; third, be baptized by immersion for the remission of sins in the name of, or by the authority of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

And is this all? No. We can not receive the great blessings offered us in the death of Christ unless we live and labor for them by obeying the principles he laid down as a rule of life. L. GLENN SAGER.

WHY WE BELIEVE THE BIBLE.

The efficacy and truth of Christianity is proven in at least three ways: through personal experience; through the testimony of others; through the logic of sound reasoning. Yet Christianity is the religion of the Bible, and stands or falls with the Bible. Proof that the Bible is true requires evidence, and that evidence is supplied in abundance from newly discovered records of the ancient eastern nations; from the stream of time which flows in the path marked out for it by the God-sent prophets of old; and from the experience of hosts of Bible believers.

The recorded miracles of the New Testament are sometimes cited as evidence of the truth of Christianity; but it must be borne in mind that the miracles must be proved before they themselves can be logically used to prove the sequential proposition. But if we prove the Bible true, we prove Christianity true; and if we prove the truth of Christianity, the actuality of the miracles is also proven.

There is no justification for the loud proclamation of the skeptic that "the prophecies are false, Christianity a delusion, the Bible a pious fraud, and its historical portions mythical and unreliable." Such a verdict ignores the evidence in the case. That evidence is so abundant that we must confine our attention to but a small part of the field which might be covered.

The historical credibility of the Scriptures has been assailed with increasing boldness from century to century, until to-day even the churches are honey-combed with infidelity in respect to the story of the Bible, oftentimes hidden under the paradoxical, if not actually self-antagonistic assumption that the Bible may be interpreted after such a manner as to deny its own story.

But the past hundred years has been remarkable for the discovery and decipherment of monuments and the exploration of Eastern lands, resulting in many unexpected testimonies to the truthfulness of biblical history. These researches and discoveries have been made in several of the principal countries of Bible times, such as Egypt, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Babylonia, and Assyria.

In 1845 Sir Henry Layard began to excavate for the British Museum at Kouyunzick, the site of ancient Nineveh. He succeeded in uncovering the palaces of Sennacherib, Esar-haddon, and Assurbani-pal, the great Assyrian kings mentioned in the biblical narrative. Also he brought to light the terra cotta tablets of the great Nineveh library founded by these kings. Twenty-two thousand of these tablets are now in the British Museum. Through the translation of these records a large part of the history of Babylonia and Assyria is revealed. The biblical accounts of the creation and the deluge are supported by the Assyrian tablets. Ur of the Chaldees, Haran, and other places mentioned in the story of Abraham have been located and found to agree in location, situation, and general features with the biblical account; while the invasions of Palestine by Sennacherib, Chederlaomer, Esar-haddon, and Nebuchadnezzar have been confirmed.

Then there are numerous discoveries in Egypt and Palestine that show their agreement in ancient geographical features with the scriptural history, which we can but barely mention in this short article.

The divine inspiration of the book is confirmed by the repeated and continuing fulfillment of its prophecies. The citations following are prophecies fulfilled, upon any one of which any Latter Day Saint missionary could preach a sermon, and we forbear to comment: Joshua 6: 26; 1 Kings 16: 24; Micah 5: 2; Daniel 12: 4; Nahum 2: 3, 4.

In the light of fact and logic there is no longer need to fear the fool—that is, one devoid of ability to reason soundly—who says in his heart, "There is no God," for the existence of an intelligent Creator is a clearly demonstrated truth, the proof of which lies all around us, in the variety, beauty, and harmony of nature. It may be that man can manufacture artificial flowers, but what human being can create a living rosebush? That act requires a greater intelligence, whom we call God!

Halting only to note that the supreme Intelligence manifested in nature is the Author of Christianity and the God of the Bible, we hasten on to our conclusion that the truth of the Bible and its story is established by the testimony of archæology speaking with quiet but unmistakable voice from the dust of ancient lands; the testimony of archæology is corroborated by the voice of age-old prophecies whose fulfillment the recording hand of the historian has noted; and these irrefutable evidences are continually augmented by the ever-increasing accumulation of the personal testimonies of those who have found the promises "true and faithful."

COMPARISONS.

To make comparisons is not always an agreeable task. It sometimes brings to us a sense of shame and a feeling of humiliation when we are shown to be acting beneath our power and opportunity to do good. It often serves a good purpose to stimulate us to a greater activity in the lines of labor in which we are engaged.

A student in the public school is often stirred to diligence by comparing his card with that of one who has done better in his studies, and not having any better opportunities. The farmer is often stirred to greater diligence by seeing his neighbor with better crops and a more desirable home. The mechanic who compares his work with that of one who has done better than himself finds a stimulant to greater diligence, that he might equal him.

With the hope that our people might be stirred to greater activity in the work that our Lord has committed to our trust, the writer will make some comparisons between ourselves and the Seventh Day Adventist Church. Their membership is about ninety thousand, of which sixty-three thousand nine hundred and seventeen are in the United States. I make my quotations from their official report, the year book of 1912, the reports being for 1910.

Tithing from the United States, $932,519.76; tithing from all other countries, $406,169.89; total, $1,338,689.65.

The number of Sabbath schools maintained is four thousand one hundred and fifty-one, with a membership of one hundred and one thousand one hundred and sixty-one; they contributed to the church funds for missionary purposes to the amount of $138,037.72.

In educational matters we find as follows: Colleges and academies, 86; enrollment of students, 7,169. In addition they have five hundred and ninety-four primary schools. The total amount expended for educational matters, $112,243.78.

The number of sanitariums is 76. The number of publishing houses, thirty-eight. Their literature is published in seventy different languages. The average per capita of the entire membership contributed for evangelistic work is $21.27.

There is a great deal more of very interesting matter concerning their financial matters, but this is enough to serve the purpose that the writer has in view.

The following I glean from the Presiding Bishop's report for 1912. If there are any errors, it is because I do not understand the document, and not because of any intention to misrepresent. It is hardly possible that I can make a mistake of more than a few thousands. Tithes, offerings, surplus, and special consecrations, $171,131.83; contributions to the missionaries, $25,159.54; total, $196,291.37. An average contribution per capita for sixty-eight thousand members, $2.88.

If we had done as well as our Adventist friends we would have contributed $1,446,360. We have one college; did you ever hear any appeals for help? Did you respond? We have one sanitarium. Brother, sister, have you ever responded to the appeals for help? We have three publishing houses, two in the United States and one in Australia. We have no book and stationery store, convenient and of easy access to the public, where our publications are for sale.

This comparison may not be pleasing to our feelings, but it is nevertheless true. What answer will we give to our Lord for our neglect of duty? Surely it can not be because we are ignorant of the law; the ministry and the books have been proclaiming it for eighty-three years.

The last revelation reproves and admonishes us in regard to our unnecessary expenditure of money; and if we all will look into the affairs of our homes we will discover that some of us are wasting a great deal of money. If we waste five cents per week the total amount for one year for sixty-eight thousand members would be $176,800. If we waste ten cents per week it would be $353,600; enough to pay $1,000 apiece to 353 families towards getting them a home; or it would purchase 2,357 acres of farm land at $150 per acre; or homes for 29 families with 80 acres for each family. If we look carefully into our home affairs, will we not find that we are wasting from $5 to $200 per year?

We often hear it said that Zion can not be redeemed—that the land is too high. But at the small pittance of ten cents per week we could give $1,000 per year to twenty-nine families to help them purchase homes, or if it were not needed in that way, it would keep three hundred and fifty-three missionaries in the field, with an allowance of $1,000 for their families.

In gospel bonds,

A READING OPTOPHONE.

A year ago an instrument was developed which enabled a blind person to discover the whereabouts of windows, lights and light objects, by sound. This instrument, known as the optophone, made use of the varying resistances of selenium cells when exposed to light, and made known the presence of light by means of a telephone. The apparatus has since been improved, to the extent that it is now possible for a blind person to read type.

So far the smallest type that may be successfully read is an inch high and it must be photographed white, as a transparency. The letters give various characteristic sounds. As described in the Electrician, "the two vertical strokes of H or M give a chaos of notes, the middle stroke of N gives a falling gamut, the three horizontal strokes of E give a chord, and the curved lines of O and S give characteristic flourishes of sound. The alphabet of capitals can be learned in about an hour, and once learned, the process of reading may become as rapid as that of reading by sight."—Scientific American, November 26, 1913.

REVOLUTIONS OF EARTH DEMONSTRATED.

Houghton, Michigan, December 3—If a whole tram load of ore were dumped into the mouth of one of the deep vertical shafts of the copper country, probably not one piece of it would ever reach bottom, says The Grand Rapids Press, and a person could therefore stand in the bottom of one of these shafts with entire safety while ore was poured in at the top. The marvel of this is not one of the mysteries of caverns or deep holes in the ground, but instead only one of those simple phenomena that prove that although most of us have heard that the earth is round like a ball and rotates on its axis from west to east, few of us hardly realize it.

EXPERIMENTS.

Within a radius of a mile at Calumet are the three deepest shafts in the world, one of them being twenty-eight feet more than a mile deep. Nowhere else in the world is there so splendid a chance to try experiments with falling bodies. Accordingly the physics department of the Michigan College of Mines has availed itself of the opportunity to work out a few of the freaks of nature. One of the experiments consisted in dropping a smooth metal ball two inches in diameter from the center of the shaft, and trying to catch it in a box of clay set in the shaft four thousand two hundred feet down.

Another ball was let loose from the southwest corner of the shaft. The balls were dropped by burning the thread by which they were suspended, so that in starting to fall they would have no side-wise motion. The shaft is 9x30 feet in cross section, and the first of the balls was suspended four feet from the side of the shaft, and the second at a point nine feet from the opposite corner. Neither of them ever reached the box of clay, one of them was never found, and the other one, presumably the one started from the center, was later found by a workman lodged in the timbers on the east side of the shaft eight hundred feet from the surface. Whatever bodies were dropped into the shaft invariably lodged somewhere in the east wall.

EARTH REVOLVES.

This happens simply because the earth is rotating on its axis from west to east. At Calumet a particle on the surface is moving to the east at the rate of about one thousand feet a second; but a particle five thousand feet down the shaft, just keeping even with the particle on the surface, is moving eastward at a rate which is four inches less than the one thousand feet. The ball suspended at the top of the shaft had the one thousand feet a second velocity; it was not only moving eastward at that rate when it started to fall, but continued moving eastward at that rate all the way down the shaft. Meanwhile it dropped to the bottom of the shaft at a rate which would have made it take seventeen and one half seconds for the fall if there had been no resistance of the air to encounter. During this seventeen and one half seconds the particle at the surface, and the ball falling at the same rate, traveled seventeen and one half times four inches, or nearly six feet farther eastward than the particle at the bottom of the shaft.

PLACES TO LODGE.

The ball started from the center of the shaft long before it reached bottom. As a matter of fact, the resistance of the air, at the high speed the ball acquired soon after starting, was sufficient to prevent any further acceleration, and consequently the ball was much longer than seventeen and one half seconds in falling. In fact, only eight hundred feet of fall was required for the ball to make the four feet from the center of the shaft to the east wall, and the other ball must have lodged at some point not much farther down.

Now, if the walls of the shaft were smooth and free from obstructions, no doubt a falling body would rebound from side to side of the shaft and finally reach bottom; but the many timbers in the lining of the shaft, and the levels all the way down, furnish places where a body is sure to lodge, and so, if a load of ore were to be spilled into the shaft near the top, most of it, at least, would later be found clinging to the east wall or stranded on the levels east of the shaft.—Milwaukee Leader, December 3, 1913.

THE PILGRIMAGE TO MECCA.

The pilgrimage to Mecca is still a standing menace to the health of the world, in spite of the sanitary precautions adopted by the various countries concerned, including the Ottoman Empire.

The American consul general at Constantinople quotes statistics collected by the Turkish Sanitary Administration concerning the number of pilgrims who traveled to Mecca via ports of the Red Sea during 1912. There were eighty-three thousand nine hundred ninety-five of these, most of whom came by way of Jeddah, and of this number forty-four thousand six hundred seventy-one had to be subjected to quarantine or other sanitary measures. Statistics of those arriving by the Hedjaz Railway and other overland routes are not given, but it is known that the annual number of pilgrims often exceeds one hundred thousand. In 1912, one hundred ninety-eight vessels were engaged in carrying pilgrims, of which one hundred thirty-four were British, twenty-one Russian, thirteen Dutch, and twenty-nine Ottoman.

As to the origin of the pilgrims, the largest number came from the Far and Middle East, including fifteen thousand from Bombay, nine thousand five hundred from Singapore, and twelve thousand from Batavia. From the Indian Ocean, Gulf of Oman, and Persian Gulf regions came four thousand eight hundred twenty-three; from the Arabian and African coasts of the Red Sea, twenty-two thousand one hundred eight; and from ports on the Mediterranean, six thousand seven hundred forty-one. Finally, three Russian ports contributed ten thousand four hundred seventy-three, of whom seven thousand six hundred ninety-two came from Sebastopol.—Scientific American, December 6, 1913.

Our Development and Opportunities.

"Explain it as we may, a martial strain will urge a man into the front rank of battle sooner than an argument, and a fine anthem excite his devotion more certainly than a logical discourse."—Tuckerman.

And this is our good, new year! For us a door is just opening upon a world full of new opportunities. Nineteen fourteen is bound to witness the greatest advancement of our cause yet in its history. It's bound to come, we say; for the sky is full of portent. We hear all about us the beat of hearts awakening to new desires for service—hearts responsive to the call for consecration and attuned with eager willingness, to the grand chorus of progress which is swelling from the four corners of the earth!

How it has grown—this choir movement! From the small beginning goes radiating outward so many lines of opportunity—so many demands are arising, so many appeals for help are heard that one's breath is fairly taken away. Just this month we are being asked for books on elementary sight reading for children; for a collection of easy songs for use of young peoples' choirs; for a treatise on harmony and the rules governing composition; and, perhaps most ambitious of all, a call for the issuing of a music magazine of our own!

Do you not agree with us that "things are picking up" in our line? How, and when, are all these demands going to be met? You gifted musicians of our church, you to whom has come the opportunity of development along these lines—just please get busy, and consecrate some more of your time, strength, and talent (and perhaps money) to some one of these needs, and see what you can do to help!

The cry constantly seems to be, "Come over into Macedonia and help us!" And, to our mind, no one desire can be so appropriate at this season of the year as the desire and the determination to respond to these calls, and to be of help to as many as possible. Consecrate yourselves anew, then, you musicians. Take a child of some struggling missionary, and give him a free training in piano or voice. Fit him for service. Gather the children together regularly and teach them to sing the "songs of Zion." Organize the young people into choirs or choruses, and fill their lives so full of music and a love of service that evil may be crowded out. Make bands of music to bind them to our church—bands so strong and firm that they will find in them power to resist temptation, as well as an irresistible inspiration to do good.

May the wonderful year opening before us with its clean, white pages find each of us writing the words, "Consecration, Patience, and Progress" upon those pages, and going steadily forward to demonstrate all three!

In the words of our dear Sister Burton, may we recognize that "the Lord is blessing us all according to our capacity to receive and wisely use."

A Safe Confession of Faith.

[We asked President Smith for a New Year's message to the singers and musicians of the church, and are pleased to present the following from him.—EDITOR STAFF.]

One of the best things that a young man or woman can adopt as a basic principle upon which to build their character in life is a short, safe, and true confession of faith and religious belief. One of the shortest and best to be found anywhere in the popular writings of the day can be found in a work of fiction called The Prince of India, written by General Lew Wallace.

It is the confession adopted by Irene, the princess and daughter of a mythical prince, believer in the Christian philosophy in a period of conflict between the Moslem, Mohammedan and Catholic faiths, the latter divided into two parts, the Eastern and the Western, resulting in the wars between these struggling religionists which have continued to disturb the peace of the world up to the present day in the late war between the allied forces with the Bulgarians and the Turks.

The confession of faith is in nine words: "I believe in God and Jesus Christ his Son."

This confession of faith comprises in principle the entire reach of the worship of God, from the earliest history of man to the present hour. It includes the history of the creation of the world,—no matter how many centuries ago this beginning was made,—follows the line of the occupation of the earth by man through every period of existence to the Christian economy, the coming of Christ, the declaration of the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal life in the hereafter.

Young man and young woman, be advised at the earliest moment of your entrance into active life, make this the center of your stable trust in God. With this confession of faith in your heart you may, as stated by the Savior, "Go in and out and find pasture." Let nothing disturb the foundation upon which your faith is built and your salvation is secure.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

The Child and Music.

There is no subject more vital than the education of the children and youth of our land. In such education, no phase is more interesting at the present time than the standing of the so-called cultural studies.

So much attention has been given recently to industrial and manual subjects, that educators everywhere are now sounding a warning against too much of the utilitarian in education, to the serious minimizing of the cultural.

Of all the cultural studies, music, next to reading, is most valuable, and useful. Music has come to be recognized as a real force in the education of the child. It is no longer necessary to plead for its recognition; its place in education is conceded—but great interest is manifested in the manner in which it is to be presented.

In all teaching there are three factors,—the instructor, the subject matter, and the recipient, or learner. In music teaching, we have in times past given much consideration to the teacher; still more to the second, the material; and until recently very little to the third and greatest factor, the child. The Great Teacher pointed out the way when "he took a little child and set him in the midst of them"; so to-day we are trying to consider the child and his development, rather than courses of study or the fads and fancies of the teacher.

Music is a language, and like language must be learned by hearing. A child hears language all about him from birth. When the organs of speech have grown sufficiently strong the child begins to talk, using at first words most significant of physical life, family relations and environments. Speech develops rapidly, until at four he has a vocabulary of perhaps five hundred words, picked up by simply hearing them used in connection with his experience. The music sense awakens later than the language sense, ordinarily at three and a half or four, in musical environments oftentimes at two.

If the child may hear music all about him exactly as he has heard language, he will come to know music and use it in some way to express himself, just as he uses language. In what way may the child express his understanding of the music he hears, or what part of the music may he express?

It is a curious fact that the musical experiences of a child seem to be in part an epitome of the music history of the race. The earliest music was that of the crooning lullaby of the savage mother to her babe, as mothers have used it since the world began. Then came the rude instruments of percussion, the drums or tom-toms. The child takes himself through this stage in his first year with his rattles and his desire to pound with everything he gets in his hands. Then came the horns and pipes, and the child is faithful to the analogy in his whistles and tooting horns.

History next gave us the strings, the lutes, and lyres, and harps and early bowed instruments, which, improved, have come down to us. Now our child will early imitate the sound of singing, and if he may only hear a great deal of the music of the descendants of these primitive instruments, he will try to imitate their rhythmic qualities in bodily expressions.

The folk song and the folk dance grew up together. At first they were one and the same. All song was accompanied with rhythmic bodily expression, hand clapping, etc., and all the dances or rhythmic games were sung. We have kept this relation in the familiar singing games of the kindergartens, rural play parties and the playground, but have lost it in nearly every other direction, save in opera.

There has now come a revival of folk dances, and we are substituting them to great advantage for the old, heavy calisthenics, but these do not go down far enough into the beginnings of child life. Miss Alys Bently, of Washington, District of Columbia, is working out a most beautiful idea in teaching music to very little children, they to translate into motor activity. She has classes of little Montessori children three and a half and four years of age, who have come to recognize instantly over forty different melodies, and interpret immediately into rhythmic expression. When they hear the duck song they are at once ducks. The first note of the bear melody induces the bear walk—a Chopin Nocturn means another thing—Frühlingslied (Henselt) a Spring Song, and all are butterflies—and they march, run, skip, hop, walk, gallop as the music bids. Miss Bently uses only the best music with strong rhythmic quality, and I believe has solved the problem of the music education of the little child in the home before the kindergarten age in the most thoroughly pedagogic and sensible manner yet presented; namely, in the hearing over and over again the classics of great music and the interpretation into motor, rhythmic activity. These are often hummed also or sung with Loo or La.

In the early age of school music, sight reading was the only aim, since the movement grew out of the old-fashioned singing school; but supervisors long since learned that music must first be heard, then analyzed. "Wholes before parts" is an unbreakable law in modern pedagogy. We used to teach notes and staff, bars, measures and note reading in the first grade. Now this method can only be found in a few benighted places.

Everywhere "wholes before parts" is being emphasized and the fact recognized and impressed that the child must hear music, real music itself in great abundance, long before he should be asked to deal with facts or theories about music. If he may so hear good music, express the fundamental element of rhythm with his own body, hum lightly the melodies, in early childhood, long before anyone dreams of his actual study of music, he will bring to this study when the time comes, the same rich heritage of concepts, ideas, familiarity and real use that he took to his study of reading with his vocabulary of five hundred words learned in the home.

The child should bring to his definite music study a real knowledge of at least one hundred selections of good music learned in the home and kindergarten.

To begin to teach a child notes, staff, clef, bars, five finger exercises, scales and chords before he has heard real music is exactly the same thing as it would be to shut a child up in a deaf and dumb asylum from birth, and at six years of age bring him out and present him with a primer and bid him read, never having heard language itself.

A normal child learns to read with amazing rapidity in these later days of improved teaching. He is shown a word or sentence picture of the thing, idea or expression he already knows, only in another form of a concept presented to the eye, which has entered his mind long before through the ear gate.

A child masters the process of learning to read in two or three years, sometimes in one; thereafter he simply enlarges his vocabulary and proceeds to read to learn. In exactly the same way the process of reading music can be taught in half the time we now devote to it; indeed it may be said that we could easily teach all of the technic of music reading in one or two years that we now do in eight, if it may be presented in the same logical way,—first hearing, next using, in bodily rhythmic expression, then singing, and last of all studying the printed form.

Music, good music, should be heard in great abundance by every child; then it is only pleasure to study about the music he already knows.

Theory and technique are easily grasped if the mind is filled with the real image. Any system that does not recognize this is pedagogically and inherently wrong.—Mrs. Frances E. Clark, in Lamoni Chronicle.

Helpful Musical Organization.

A movement of great uplift for this community was inaugurated at a meeting of choir directors and musical enthusiasts in response to a general invitation extended by the district chorister, Albert N. Hoxie, recently appointed by the Thirteenth District Sunday School Association executive officers.

The purpose of this movement is to stimulate the endeavors of local church choirs by a systematic campaign of encouraging young men and women to be more closely identified with the musical activities of their respective churches. Our initial effort will be in the inaugurating of a large chorus, which is open to members of choirs comprising the various denominations.

It is anticipated that with the proper kind of cooperation several hundred singers will be massed under the direction of the district chorister, who will outline a series of musical studies which will be rehearsed with an end in view of an early rendering. This opportunity is afforded to those who are willing to regularly attach themselves to the service of some local church endeavors. If you are a singer and are not a member of a church choir, and are desirous of becoming identified with such a movement, advise us and we are in a position to refer you to musical directors that can use you.

The first rehearsal of the district choir will be held Tuesday, January 6, 1914, at the Saints' church, corner Howard and Ontario Streets. Further information of this choir movement can be obtained from the secretary, Mr. A. Wright, of the Providence Methodist Church, 237 East Westmoreland Street, or from the director, Albert N. Hoxie, 3119 North Sixteenth Street. Phone, Tioga 5800.—The Philadelphia Progress.

Notes of the Staff.

Sister Riggs writes from Berlin, Germany, of the many musical delights she and her daughter are enjoying there. Sister Marie is studying with Mr. L'hivonne with her characteristic conscientiousness and thorough application. May she have health and strength to get the very best results from her present exceptionally fine opportunity for development.

The Christmas Service of story and song called, "In quest of the King," by Meredith, was given at Independence by a chorus of seventy children under fourteen years of age. They were assisted in a few numbers by an octet from the choir. The story was read by Brother D. J. Krahl, superintendent of the Sunday school, and was exceptionally well given, the intense attention of the large audience being his throughout.

Our church chorister made a hurried trip out this way on purpose to outline the work of the big chorus for next April. He arrived in Independence the Saturday after Christmas, and met the local choir in rehearsal both that night and the Monday night following. On Sunday he led the music at both morning and evening sessions, also playing some choice violin selections, being ably accompanied at the piano by his young brother-in-law, John Zimmermann, of Philadelphia. In the afternoon a grand rally of all the choirs in this vicinity occurred, at which Brother Hoxie gave the singers an enthusiastic rehearsal of Gaul's "Holy City," the oratorio which he expects to put on at conference time. A similar rehearsal occurred on Tuesday evening, and the next day Brother Hoxie went to Lamoni, where he expected to perform similar work. Surely our church chorister, sparing neither time nor effort, will richly deserve the big success which is due next April, for his consecration to this work is whole and genuine.

"Music is the harmonious voice of creation; an echo of the invisible world; one note of the divine concord which the entire universe is destined to sound."—Mazzini.

Musical Notes.

It is proposed to erect a fine arts building at the Nation's capital, to be supported by the people generally, which will provide Americans with the best music obtainable. Several sites in Washington that seem to be fitted to the purpose have been noted, and the proposition appears to be receiving increasing support.

By a new rule, music is to become a major course in the high schools throughout the District of Columbia, when requested by those interested. This plan has been urged for years, and its adoption, therefore, is causing considerable satisfaction among the promoters of the idea.

Max Bendix and his brother, it is said, are to arrange to give weekly hearings to young musicians with talent who lack the means of completing their musical education. Those who show exceptional talent are to be given a free education. A later public appearance before New York audiences is included in the plan.

One of America's popular light opera singers, Henry C. Barnabee, is on record with others of the music profession as to the value of good personal habits if one would attain the highest degree of proficiency in this kind of work. He says: "To my lifelong abstinence from tobacco I attribute the preservation of my voice which at seventy-seven is as strong and sonorous to-day throughout its entire register as it ever was."

Within the past few months four piano companies have become bankrupt or have failed. In the case of some of them it has been discovered that piano installment leases have been forged, duplicated, triplicated, or even quadruplicated, in order to obtain loans upon them from the banks and elsewhere. Along with this financial jugglery come forgery and suicide. Banking officials are becoming wary of such paper as collateral for loans. The trade is becoming anxious about the matter, which seems to be practiced more generally than was at first supposed, and suggestions are being made to undertake some way of remedying the situation.

Wisconsin towns, aided by the State University, are trying to establish community music composed of choruses, bands, orchestras, and the like. They are to be organized and directed by competent instructors, and after practicing sufficiently it is intended that they may be open for engagements from time to time. In this way it is hoped to arouse more interest in this class of entertainment, and exert a good influence on the community sufficiently to lessen its desire for certain shows which are believed to be detrimental. This plan ought to work well in other places; it is certainly worth trying.

The study of harmony is of use, not alone to the composer, but also to the performer. One should learn not only to name the chords, but to feel them as well. After a time the natural progressions come readily and the sense of harmony is expressed in individualized soul music. By practice both melodic and harmonic form is more readily sensed and expressed, and thus assists to exquisite interpretations that would otherwise be impossible. A. B. PHILLIPS.

Our Correspondents.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

The choir and Sunday school gave a Christmas cantata on Tuesday evening before Christmas. They had been busy for several weeks preparing for this. On the night it was given our little church was filled with a very appreciative audience. The cantata was "The Holy One of Israel," by E. S. Lorenz. It was given in costume, which made it more impressive. There were over fifty persons in the various parts.

The night after the cantata was Christmas Eve, and the choir gave a selection at the city's Christmas entertainment in the courthouse. Different choirs had been asked to help on the program, and when the call came to us we felt like responding, believing we might both give and receive much good.

It was our first big public appearance, and our chorus of twenty-five voices seemed lost in the mass of people that filled the large rotunda and galleries of the floors above. We sang from the gallery of the second floor. Our selection was the "Unfold ye portals," chorus from Gounod's "Redemption," (in the 1913 Conference Anthem Book). The choir did well. Our twenty-five must have sung like fifty, for that was the number the paper recorded as being in our chorus.

We are beginning to take up special study work on our regular rehearsal nights. We give about fifteen or twenty minutes to the study of voice, expression, phrasing, reading, etc. It will be a big help to choir members. If we wish to qualify we must study. And how very satisfying it is to know that we are making progress. CORRESPONDENT.

✻ FLINT, MICHIGAN, December 28, 1913.

Editor Staff: Just a few notes from this corner of the stage. As we do not wish to play a solo, we will try to blend our efforts with others and produce one great "chord" of sincere appreciation to the editor for the inspiration which has been worked into each appearance of The Staff.

We have been encouraged many times when almost ready to give up, when the HERALD has come to us with its message of music, buoyed up, and given a fresh start.

We now have a good choir started, and it is doing good work under the capable leadership of Sister Myrtle St. Johns. As we have but a very few trained voices, she has been working under difficulties.

We have been having special music at every Sunday evening service, and to-day we gave two fine Christmas anthems. But the choir isn't all we have in the line of music. We have a good little orchestra and with weekly practices and the addition of a trombone and a mandolin, they are doing fine.

We wish more of the young people could be made to see the necessity of advancement along the lines of both vocal and instrumental music. So many seem to think that because they can "carry a tune" or play the piano fairly well, that that is all that is necessary.

We are going to do our best to try to have a large attendance of musicians at our next annual reunion, and sincerely hope our Brother Hoxie may again be with us.

Our prayers are for the advancement of this part of the work, as well as all others.

804 SPENCER STREET.

In bonds,
HOWARD W. HARDER.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—Thank you, Brother Harder! We are pleased to be assured of the interest taken in our work in any and all parts of the field. We congratulate you upon the "live wires" in Eastern Michigan, and trust that the grand new year of opportunity will see many, many of your people studying and working—becoming the trained musicians we can use so wonderfully in our service. Success to you and your patient assistants.]

HEPWORTH, ONTARIO, December 29, 1913.

Editor Staff: I have a copy of the SAINTS' HERALD before me, opened at the page devoted to The Staff. The editor certainly has the work at heart or the question before me would not arise in her mind: "What can we say to help build up, to encourage, or to fill you with enthusiasm?"

I have been encouraged along the line of musical development by reading the articles written by those interested in this grand line of work, and note with pleasure the fact that the Saints are not forgetting that all-important element which is so necessary in order to be able to render the songs of Zion in a manner that would be of most good to all,—that is, singing with the Spirit. Do we know, or can we tell what power is behind a solo or chorus when the soloist or choir enter into the spirit of that number? It may be good from a musical standpoint, but without the Spirit it is empty.

I have noted that sometimes those who have been gifted along musical lines, who have had the environment necessary for the development of that talent, and have taken advantage of that opportunity, after attaining to great ability forget the spirit of a song and put on a number merely musical,—a song nicely sung, but lacking that depth of feeling that comes from entering into the spirit of the song. It is like getting a goodly portion of this world's goods, allowing pride to creep in, and forgetting the Giver. Our talents are given us of God. We should, therefore, develop them (whatever they may be) not forgetting from whence they come. Let us use our talents along the lines of music and of song to the glory of God.

Can we think of the good work being accomplished by the church chorister without feelings of joy, and a desire to go on? I have felt at times that I would like to be where Saints are alive along these lines. But since we can not all occupy where there is the best opportunity for development, let us use the talents we have wherever we may be.

I love good music, but have only of late years made any study of it. I desire to develop along these lines only to serve to the glory of God. May this grand work go on and produce, as the editor fittingly puts it, not unison, but harmony,—not all playing the same part, but all parts bringing forth together that harmony which is the soul of music.

Wishing you success in the work,

GEORGE T. FURNESS.

FEBRUARY READING.—DISCIPLINE THROUGH ACTIVITY.

"Doctor Montessori, leaving one of the houses of childhood in Rome one day, was followed by all of the pupils, forty-five little children, who romped and scattered about the streets and called joyfully to the teacher.

"Passersby, with no notion of the spirit of the Montessori houses of childhood, said to one another, rather scornfully, 'This is a queer school. The children are undisciplined, as wild as woods animals.'

"Doctor Montessori overheard the criticism. She raised her voice gently.

"'I wonder,' she said, 'if you children can return to the home on your tiptoes, without looking backward?'

"The forty-five little pupils turned about instantly, tiptoed to the house without once looking back, and resumed their play."

Doctor Montessori, now on a lecture tour in the United States, herself related this incident in her lecture in Carnegie Hall, New York. In her book, The Montessori Method, she writes on the subject of discipline: "Whoever visits a well-kept school (such as, for instance, the one in Rome directed by my pupil, Anna Maccheroni) is struck by the discipline of the children. There are forty little beings—from three to seven years old—each one intent on his own work; one is going through one of the exercises for the senses; one is doing an arithmetical exercise; one is handling the letters; one is drawing; one is fastening and unfastening the pieces of cloth on one of our little wooden frames; still another is dusting. Some are seated at the tables, some on rugs on the floor. There are muffled sounds of objects lightly moved about, of children tiptoeing. Once in a while comes a cry of joy only partly repressed, 'Teacher! Teacher!' an eager call, 'Look! see what I've done.' But as a rule, there is entire absorption in the work in hand.

"The teacher moves quietly about, goes to any child who calls her, supervising operations in such a way that anyone who needs her finds her at his elbow, and whoever does not need her is not reminded of her existence. Sometimes, hours go by without a word. . . .

"In the midst of such intense interest in work it never happens that quarrels arise over the possession of an object. If one accomplishes something especially fine, his achievement is a source of admiration and joy to others: no heart suffers from another's wealth, but the triumph of one is a delight to all. Very often he finds ready imitators. They all seem happy and satisfied to do what they can, without feeling jealous of the deeds of others. The little fellow of three works peaceably beside the boy of seven, just as he is satisfied with his own height and does not envy the older boy's stature. Everything is growing in the most profound peace."

Dorothy Canfield Fisher, from whose writings we have quoted in previous articles, after reading 'The Montessori Method, laid down the book with the mental comment, "All very well to write about! But, of course, it can't work anything like that in actual practice." After having visited the Montessori schools in Rome, this is what she says: "Doctor Montessori not only expounds to us theoretically this doctrine that the child, properly trained, will spontaneously obey reasonable orders suited to his age with a prompt willingness which grows with his growth, but . . . she shows us children of three or four who willingly obey suggestions suited to their capacities, developing rapidly and surely into children of six or seven whose obedience in all things is a natural and delightful function of their lives."

Replying to the doubt which some have expressed that the system, so successful with Italian children, might not work with American children, Mrs. Fisher cites Miss George's Montessori school at Tarrytown, New York, and says she found in this school "the same happy, unforced interest in the work, the same Montessori atmosphere of spontaneous life, the same utter unconsciousness of visitors, the same astonishing industry.' Except for the difference in language, she might have supposed herself in a school in Rome.

WHAT IS DISCIPLINE?

"The first idea that the child must acquire, in order to be actively disciplined, is that of the difference between good and evil; and the task of the educator lies in seeing that the child does not confound good with immobility, and evil with activity. And all this because our aim is to discipline for activity, for work, for good." How often the child hears the command, "Be good; keep still!" Is it surprising that he receives the impression that to be good is to be inactive?

And this mistake is not limited to the childish mind. Teachers in school and parents at home apparently confuse good with passivity in violation of the law of human growth which causes the child to crave activity. Doctor Montessori says, "A room in which all the children move about usefully, intelligently, and voluntarily, without committing any rough or rude act, would seem to me a classroom very well disciplined indeed."

The influence of this spirit of free activity which pervades the Montessori schoolroom is strikingly portrayed by Miss Carolyn Sherwin Bailey in the story of "Otello the Terrible" in the October Delineator. Otello was a turbulent little spirit, uncontrolled and passionate, who was brought to the school when he was not yet three years old. At first he was disorderly and delighted in interrupting the work and happiness of the other children. Accustomed to punishment, he looked expectantly for a blow or harsh reproof after each misdemeanor, but they did not come.

Here was a child who must be trained away from brutality. He must learn the distinction between right and wrong. No rude act of his passed without the admonition of the directress, "That was wrong, Otello." For a deserving act, he heard the commendation, "That was right."

One morning Otello sat in a little white chair suddenly quiet and thinking. If he wished, he might choose another chair; no one would insist that he stay in one seat. He might go out into the playground; no one would prevent him. Or he might busy himself with some of the materials of the schoolroom such as he saw others using. Going to one of the cabinets, he chose a long, polished wood frame into which fitted ten smooth cylinders of varying diameters. Lifting each by its polished brass knob, he raised it from its place and returned it again. He did this over and over, many times. Then taking them all out at once, he set about the task of replacing them. At times he made mistakes, from which he learned that no amount of force, even of passionate pounding, could fit a large cylinder into a small hole, and from which he ultimately discovered that each cylinder had its proper place in which it fitted perfectly. As the child worked, he was heard to murmur, "Right," when a cylinder slipped smoothly into its own place and to mutter, "Wrong," when it failed to fit.

There came a time when Otello learned a higher meaning of right and wrong. It was when a bright marble fell unnoticed from the pocket of a busy child bending over his work and rolled to the feet of Otello who grasped it covetously and, obeying the first impulse, tried to hide it in his shoe. Perhaps the difficulty he encountered reminded him of previous experiences with misfit cylinders and he reasoned that this act was wrong. Then the observer of the incident saw him "with a rare smile in his eyes," run and return it to its right place, the lap of its owner.

Otello had started on the road to discipline. Doctor Montessori says, "The first dawning of real discipline comes through work. At a given moment it happens that a child becomes keenly interested in a piece of work, showing it by the expression of his face, by his intense attention, by his perseverance in the same exercise. That child has set foot upon the road leading to discipline. . . . Discipline is reached always by indirect means. The end is obtained, not by attacking the mistake and fighting it, but by developing activity in spontaneous work."

Discipline is the mastery of self, and it is attained through activity rightly directed.

SELF-DISCIPLINE.

"A child is a body which grows and a soul which develops." So says Doctor Montessori, who, accepting the teachings of both Pestalozzi and Froebel, that "all growth must come from a voluntary action of the child himself," emphasizes the thought that the acts by which a child grows must be volun- tary. She lays great stress on spontaneity of action. She writes: "We can not know the consequences of suffocating a spontaneous action at the time when the child is just beginning to be active: perhaps we suffocate life itself. . . . We must respect religiously, reverently, these first indications of individuality. . . . To be really helpful to the child it is necessary to avoid the arrest of spontaneous movements and the imposition of arbitrary tasks. It is, of course, understood that here we do not speak of useless or dangerous acts, for these must be suppressed, destroyed. . . . We must, therefore, check in the child whatever offends or annoys others, or whatever tends to rough or ill-bred acts."

Mrs. Fisher, expounding the principles of the Montessori system, says, "An unnecessary restriction in a child's life is a crime." She adds that there are quite enough necessary restrictions to serve as disciplinary forces to the most turbulent nature.

The atmosphere of the Montessori schools is one of freedom. The children work, rest, or play at will, not driven or coerced. But the exercises provided for them are so suited to meet the needs of child nature that the children engage in them with absorbing interest. They hold themselves to their chosen tasks, thus acquiring self-control, patience, and concentration of effort.

Mrs. Fisher gives the following account of an instance in which she observed a little boy in Rome working with a frame of wooden cylinders: "He worked away with a busy, serene, absorbed industry, running his forefinger around the cylinders and then around the holes until he had them all fitted in. Then with no haste, but with no hesitation, he emptied them all out and began over again. He did this so many times that I felt an impatient fatigue at the sight of the laborious little creature, and turned my attention elsewhere. I had counted up to the fourteenth repetition of his feat before I stopped watching, and when I glanced back again, a quarter of an hour later, he was still at it. . . . He was his own supervisor, thanks to the self-corrective nature of the apparatus he was using. If he put a cylinder in the wrong hole, he discovered it himself and was forced to think out for himself what the trouble was."

Mrs. Fisher also says: "The child in the Casa dei Bambini advances from one scientifically graded stage of mental self-control to the next, from the buttoning-frames to the geometric insets, from these to their use in drawing and the control of the pencil, and then on into the mastery of the alphabet, always with a greater and greater control of the processes of his mind.

"The control of the processes of his body are learned in the same analyzed gradual progression from the easy to the difficult. He learns in the "lesson of silence" how to do nothing with his body, an accomplishment which his fidgety elders have never acquired; he learns in all the sensory exercises the complete control of his five servants, his senses; and in moving freely about the furniture suited to his size, in handling things small enough for him to manage, in transferring objects from one place to another, he learns how to go deftly through all the ordinary operations of everyday life. This physical adroitness has a vitally close relation to discipline of all sorts."

An example of physical adroitness, of freedom, and of self-control was a little boy of four and a half years, of whom Doctor Montessori tells. He was serving at the luncheon hour. "Every time he set the tureen down on a table so that the little guests might help themselves, he gave a hop, and a skip, then took up the tureen again to carry it to another table, repressing himself to a sober walk. In spite of his desire to play, he never left his task before he had passed soup to all the tables, and he never forgot the vigilance necessary to control his actions."

"The child disciplined by such methods is no longer the child he was at first, who knows how to be good passively, but he is an individual who has made himself better, who has overcome the usual limits of his age, who has made a great step forward, who has conquered his future in his present.

"He has, therefore, enlarged his dominion. He will not need to have some one always at hand to tell him vainly, 'Be quiet! Be good!' The goodness he has conquered can not be summed up by inertia: his goodness is now all made up of action. As a matter of fact, good people are those who advance towards the good—that good which is made up of their own self-development and of external acts of order and usefulness. . . . Work develops the child spiritually; but the child with a fuller spiritual development works better, and his improved work delights him,—hence he continues to develop spiritually. Discipline is, therefore, not a fact but a path, a path in following which the child grasps the abstract conception of goodness with an exactitude which is fairly scientific."—The Montessori Method.

Our object in giving this insight into the principles of the Montessori system is that the spirit of them may be put into practice in dealing with little children in the home, for the laws that govern child development apply equally in the home and in the school.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am willing to let the church know, and all the world for that matter, just where I stand after these many (or few) years of experience and study of the religious question. Before knowing aught of this church I had expended no little thought and study on the subject of religion, and had tried many if not "all things," in the spirit of Paul's exhortation, (1 Thessalonians 5:21) but no church could I "hold fast" to. I could find no church of Christ. I determined to let go of all churches of men, and see where God would lead me.

That declaration of independence I have never been sorry for, nor any declaration of independence based upon truth, righteousness, scripture, or the natural rights and liberties of men. I determined when investigating this latter-day work, its history of apostasy, of men departing from God and the faith, that no man as man should lead me; that I would follow no man, great or small, high or low, only as he followed and represented Christ. By the records of both former and latter days; by my own observations and experiences; by an examination of my own self, and a realization of my own fallibility, etc., I have been prepared for deviations, and differences of men, spiritual wickedness or imperfection in high places. I know that no man is absolutely safe, or sane in himself in all things; that the measure of a man's love for Christ and the truth, even every word of God as represented in teaching and conduct, is the measure of his leadership, or right and qualification to lead men to Christ; and I never took or understood that I took in coming into this church any obligation to follow any man even one step away from Christ. Here is where I stand after my twenty-four years of experience in this church; after my contact with Utah Mormonism at its fountain head; after all my contact with philosophies and systems of men, old and new.

The gospel as revealed through Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon is true. The Bible is true. The Inspired Translation vindicates its name to my spiritual perception; and the Doctrine and Covenants is as great and grand and as necessary a part of the structure of religion as any other book, or as any can be. It gives the inhabitants of Zion a right to "judge all things pertaining to Zion." The safety of the church is guaranteed by this provision. In no other way can it be assured. Every member of the body must or should learn and know his own duty and relationship to other members, as also something of the duties of other members of the church body with which he is in relation.

The difference between ourselves and the Utah Church is, briefly stated, that the said church repudiates what once was its legal tender, its standard of value, as a standard of living or action, that is, the books aforesaid; and has vainly exalted, or consented to the exaltation of man. Faith in God is ruled out where his written law is thus nullified.

The Reorganized Church stands for the three books as they were and as they are, as against all which opposes and nullifies; as against those who have risen to "draw away [from the written law] disciples after them," or who may do so.

The difference between ourselves and other churches is that other churches as churches never have been converted to the Bible. They are opposed to the principle of revelation in operation. The only way we know of the principle of revelation as producing the Bible is by its present operation in giving to the church the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, and to individuals according to their need and faith "that every man [who will] may profit withal."

Section 132 of the Utah Doctrine and Covenants is fiat money, issued for the purpose of repudiating real money, i. e., the original latter-day gospel and revelation. No Utah Mormon can accept the original latter-day revelation and section 132, added to the Utah Doctrine and Covenants in 1876. If he accepts the original, including the discarded marriage section, 109 in first editions, there is no room for section 132, Utah Edition, or Brighamism as reflected in it. This section 132 is license, not liberty. The original revelation is liberty, and denunciation of license.

I have seen nothing, nor have I had any experience to shake my faith in God as measured by these three books. Upon these I stand with both feet. They safeguard my liberty, and the liberty of the church. I am jealous with a godly jealousy of any encroachment upon the constitutional law of the church or kingdom. It is the one thing I bow to, and try to bend to. I do not know what the future may bring forth. I know what has been, and what may be to those who do not take heed and pray always lest they fall into temptations. (Doctrine and Covenants 17:6.) I have no mental reservations as to the present. I unqualifiedly accept the legal tender of the church—the Bible, Book of Mormon and Book of Doctrine and Covenants (Lamoni editions of the latter two).

Whenever anyone attempts to repudiate any of this legal tender there will be a parting of the ways so far as I am concerned. I have no "man's person in admiration because of advantage." I am sufficiently familiar with the records that I do not expect to be caught napping, or found sleeping on my rights. I expect to assert them for the work's sake whenever it becomes necessary to do so. I desire myself to be judged by a just judgment as to whether I am in the faith or not. If the books can be made to show me that I am not, gladly will I be shown, and bow to the verdict. If they vindicate me, I shall know that I have heeded them. For exparte vindication or condemnation I care not. I took nothing for granted in coming into this church. I do not expect now to surrender my agency or my God-given and legally based liberty. I want to be held to the standard. I expect to hold others to it whenever or wherever I see a defection. I have implicit confidence in the "records" upon which the Reorganized Church is based. "There is no unrighteousness in them." (Doctrine and Covenants 67:2.)

I have suffered in this church experience only as I have been neglectful of the written word and direction of the Spirit in harmony. My desire is to keep the whole law and accelerate its operation in Zion. In my weak and limited way I have contended for principle since I professed religion in the _____ Church I am still "contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints," as the means and the only means of salvation. I am skeptical of improvements upon the gospel. I am zealous in regard to the perfection and sufficiency of the gospel. If we had exhausted the application of the gospel we would have Zion. We must press on until we thoroughly comprehend the gospel, the revelations given to the church, and have brought ourselves in subjection to them. We need to insist upon our own individual compliance with the law and commandments; make ourselves do right. We can then lead others, or will then be in a position to lead others.

The church to have saving quality must catch up with itself. It should be all in practice that it is in theory or profession. What the body needs most is not more revelations, but more will or capacity to receive revelations and profit by those already given. There was a great amount of vanity and unbelief in the old church. Are we secure? Do we love the law, the written word, enough? Do we obey it to the extent of our ability? Are we making the sacrifices, not that others do, or have, but that the law warrants us in making—of tithes, surplus, consecrations, and offerings?

Zion will never be redeemed by a people who do not pay tithes, surplus, consecrations, and offerings. If Zion is our objective, sacrifice, not speculation is the means. Letting go of this world will gain us the better. We must insist upon keeping the law ourselves. We have been admonished in regard to selfishness and the use of means as a church and as individuals for that which is not essential.

Representatives of this church are justified more in insisting that this church keep the law than those of other churches who have not covenanted to do so. It is of value in the sight of God when we covenant to obey him. It is of greater value when we do it. The elders should "see that the law is kept." I am one of them. We should make ourselves do right, or compel ourselves into line. We can not compel others. We have to count on a fight in the church to see that the law is kept. "Where there is no vision, the people perish, but he that keepeth the law, happy is he." We have nothing to fear from the operation of the law; we have everything to gain, from our viewpoint. There is no such thing as climbing up some other way in order to gain happiness or heaven. We can not steal a march on justice or righteousness. They will not slumber or sleep. While we sleep they will march on.

It seems to me that there must be a judgment in the church before we will know, or before it will be known which is the church "clear as the moon, fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." "Judgment must begin at the house of God." If we do not insist upon being judged according to the law, that our condition may be known, and that we ourselves may know it, it will be established anyway. It will have to be. This is especially demanded or needed here and in the regions round about in order that it may be determined as to who is worthy to abide. Who desires to remain that is unworthy, and thus invite condemnation and wrath? Who that is not square with the law can have satisfaction of conscience and inspiration of God?

It is "according to the law that every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 72:3.) How can the Bishop act in his office as a judge to make the law operative, or hasten its operation, unless the people are willing to be judged and manifest their willingness by making their inventories, thus providing the Bishop a basis of judgment? There should not only be a willingness but an anxiety to hasten the operation of the law. I do not know how others feel, but I appreciate the idea and the necessity of judgment according to the law. There is a demand within me for it, that I may have a decision rendered as to whether I am a Latter Day Saint, and worthy to be a part of Zion or not. If not, I will either make amends or renounce profession, or move beyond the borders.

The unofficial, uninspired, and unscriptural judgments of men with reference to spiritual things are not to be desired. They are to no purpose. The judgments of the law and of God are vital to the establishing of Zion. If the proper officers can not be inspired or endowed with the "spirit of judgment," and the people are not willing that they shall be, or to "try the Lord" through his servants, there is no way to redeem Zion.

"Zion shall be redeemed with judgment and her converts with righteousness." (Isaiah 1:27.) The sooner we face the issue the better it will be for us.

Those who make their inventories as the law requires, if they do it understandingly, do it with a willingness and a desire to be judged and to place the Bishop in a position to judge, and even to say and arrange in due time who shall be added to and who shall be taken from, or who has "part or lot in the matter." May the Lord inspire his servants upon whom responsibilities rest, and his people, that they may be willing to obey the law, and support those who are called to execute it.

This is our hope for Zion and salvation, and where we stand, believing that we are in the faith, or within its boundaries in our thoughts, which we offer for approval, or disapproval, if the "books" will disapprove or correct them.

With good will to all in the passing of the old year, and the incoming of the new, and better year, I trust, for all who read.

Yours in Christ,
M. F. GOWELL.

WILLOUGHBY, OHIO.

Editors Herald: On Thursday evening, December 4, a goodly gathering of the Saints of the quiet village of Kirtland with stealthy step and hushed voices betook their way to the home of Brother and Sister John H. Lake and proceeded to surprise the dear old couple, the event being in honor of Brother Lake's eighty-fourth birthday. Our knock for admittance was answered by Brother Lake himself, and the pleasant greeting, happy smile, and hearty handshake tendered each one as they entered the rapidly filling rooms told us we were thrice welcome and our coming not in vain. Sister Lake, equally pleased, met us in her usual quiet, happy way. After much laughter and hearty congratulations that another birthday found them still in our midst, the evening was delightfully spent in the good, old-fashioned, Latter Day Saint way.

We sang a few of the new songs and many of the old ones, in which we were careful to include Brother Lake's favorites. Brother Lewis and family gave several Welsh selections. The local brethren gave short talks, some telling of their first experience in meeting Brother Lake, others paying tribute to his worthy life, his fitting example,—a man against whom the finger of scorn can not be pointed. To each of these Brother Lake responded in a happy way, sometimes with a hint to the young who were present in numbers, sometimes with a bit of advice to the older ones, or a personal experience in the gospel warfare, of which he never wearies. At a fitting interval refreshments were served.

On departing all united in repeating the Lord's prayer, at Brother Lake's request, he following with a most fervent prayer and blessing for all. After our good-night salutations, which included the hope to find him with us next year, we went away under the influence of the quiet strains of "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," each one feeling it had been an evening never to be forgotten because of "that peace that passeth understanding" that had come into our midst.

Brother Lake is so well and favorably known to the church that we need not recite here a history of his work. He was baptized December 13, 1860, by John Shippy, and ordained a deacon the same day. From then on he occupied the offices of elder, seventy, apostle, and patriarch, giving his entire time to the church, freely, asking no recompense other than a clear conscience before God and man of duty well performed. For the past five years he has traveled little, owing to his advanced age.

To-day his step is not so firm as when the writer first knew him in her girlhood days. His eyes, a little faded, though unaided by glasses, still flash forth their old-time light. His voice, if sometimes a little faint, carries the same conviction that has led hundreds into the fold. His heart is filled with the glad thought of a life of loving service rendered. He anxiously awaits the hope of the great reward and feels that it can not be far distant. His faith is unshaken, his hope undimmed. While that untimely death in the far-off South Sea Islands has added its burden to the weight of years, his abiding faith in God did not for one moment forsake him, although Charles was the last of seven children. His greatest hope now of earthly things is for the safe return of "Bertie," Charles's wife. He hopes to remain until she comes, although he is ready for the call, come when it may.

"Father Lake," as he is known here, in and out of the church, has been a resident of Kirtland for twenty-six years. We have no more honored citizen. He is quietly spending his last years in this the first place of the Lord's planting in these last days, under the shadow of the old temple, within whose walls he loves to worship. He loves to walk the quiet streets; the hills and the river are his friends. To all these he feels akin; all whisper to him of days past, wherein history was made, and the great work was started in which he feels he has aided a little, in which really he has done much. Here he waits, calm and serene, loved by all, both Saints and those not so classified. When the call comes no worthier pioneer, no braver soldier will have laid down his arms and answered, "Here."

Brother Lake wishes to send this message to his old friends in former fields of labor: Of his associates all along the line, dear friends all, none are forgotten. He can not hope to meet all again in this life. To such as he may not meet here he sends a cheerful, loving farewell, until they meet again on the other shore.

Editors Herald: Brother and Sister Pitt have come and are about ready to go. It is hardly necessary to say that wife and I and the Saints here have enjoyed their visit. Brother Pitt has preached for a week, and has also done considerable visiting. He has given fifteen or twenty patriarchal blessings. Sister Pitt has done good work as scribe, organist, and companion in visiting.

Brother Pitt was the second minister to occupy in the Saints' church here. I had the pleasure of preaching the first sermon. The building is now nearing completion, and, best of all, will be nearly paid for when it is done.

I have had the satisfaction of being a listener during the late meetings. Brother Pitt did all the preaching. I preferred this because he is new and I am old, so far as this point is concerned.

To-morrow morning Brother and Sister Pitt and Sister Barmore and I start up the Ohio River by boat to Louisville. From there the first two will go to Joliet, Illinois, for Christmas, while wife and I will go to Oakland City, Indiana, to enjoy the Yuletide with one of my sisters.

To-day is my spiritual birthday. Twenty-six years ago I became a member of the church.

A. C. BARMORE.

VALLEY CENTER, MICHIGAN, December 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to report that the work is progressing very favorably here. The old saying, "Every knock is a boost," is being verified at present. Early last fall Elder Grice preached in Brown City, considerable interest being aroused. The wrath of our local sectarian clergy was also aroused and developed into a flame of abusive slander, which was poured into the ears of a large congregation in the Methodist Episcopal church on the evenings of December 9, 10, and 11, by one Samuel Linge, pastor of said church.

True to the old style of attack by such men, he announced the first evening that he would not debate, giving as a reason that he only debated once in his life and that time his carnal nature caused him to say things that he would not care to repeat. Mr. Linge, filled with an inclination to persecute, but lacking in oratorical ability, read from a book which he claimed was written by one S. J. S. Davis, a local Methodist Episcopal preacher, adding a few "homemade" slurs. This book was couched in language so obscene that what little modesty Mr. Linge did possess led him to announce that he did not want any children under fourteen years of age to attend the second evening.

Elder Grice having left some time before, was sent for and came immediately, arriving in time to hear part of reading on the last night. Having other engagements, he could not stay to reply. However, we decided that such an outrageous attack should be replied to without delay, and putting our decision into action, we kept the wires hot in search of some one until we finally "landed" R. C. Russell. Although this is not his mission, yet he showed his old-time spirit of being "Johnnie on the spot" when occasion requires. He had to drive twenty-two miles after midnight in order to be here for action on Sunday.

After attending our prayer meeting at Valley Center at 10 a. m., he drove to Brown City and preached at 2.30 and 7.30 p. m., continuing to address a crowded house every evening until Sunday, the 21st. A question box was placed at the door each evening, which was highly appreciated by the congregation.

Owing to the approach of Christmas, Brother Russell left this morning for his home in Chatham, Ontario, taking with him the good wishes of the Saints as well as of a host of outsiders. We believe that his efforts here will be the means of doing much good, and that many have heard the gospel story who could not have been reached in any other way.

We would ask the prayers of the Saints, that we may live in such a manner as to invoke the Savior's blessings in such a degree that the world may see by our works that it is really good to be a Saint in latter days.

Yours in gospel bonds,

MORT MORTIMER.

[The following is handed the editors, same being a letter to Brother H. A. Stebbins, Lamoni, Iowa.—EDITORS.]

With us everything is as usual, excepting the sickness and death of my oldest sister's oldest child, a boy of nineteen years. I have needed to be at Porsgrund for some time in order to attend him while sick, and to conduct his funeral. At first he was said to have nerve rheumatism, but it afterwards proved to be a cancerous tumor, and no human help could avail. When the real trouble was found it had such an effect on him that there was a complete change in his life, and I had the privilege of baptizing him on August 21. He died on December 5. It was a hard blow for my sister. Her husband died thirteen years ago of a similar disease. In answer to prayer the Lord often eased the boy's pain and gave him rest.

The gospel work is not moving fast, but a few are interested and five persons have been baptized in Norway this year. Sometimes we become discouraged, yet we are trying to do the best we can. We need capable local workers to instruct and cheer the Saints when I am away in other parts. Also there are openings for preaching which can not be occupied until other ministers come.

I need to visit America to get encouraged and to learn more, but it can not be now. When we read of the good meetings had over there, we long to be among the American Saints, and wish we could have such meetings here. But I am thankful for the aid of the Holy Spirit received here in Norway and Denmark, and wish only to be faithful to the trust given me.

My family are well, and the children are growing finely. The two oldest boys are in school, and the next one, John, will commence, while Francis will go over to the high school, or what they call here the middle school. We have often thought of returning to America to live, but how can we?

No one is here to take my place, and we can not let the work go down. So I will have to stay here yet longer.

Texas.

I arrived here in my old home town after an absence of nearly four months. My labors this year have included much of the territory of Texas. I was first appointed to Southwestern Texas, but by request of the missionary in charge, Brother Aylor, my labors have extended further.

Immediately after the conference at Lamoni, Iowa, I began my labors in northwestern Texas, in company with Brother S. W. Simmons, whom I found to be a very congenial companion. After preaching awhile at Odell, Texas, where I have a sister and family, my brother-in-law, M. Crowover, and a few others securing the schoolhouse there for us, in company with Brother S. W. Simmons I went to the extreme northwestern portion of Texas, into the Panhandle, Ochiltree County, where we lifted the gospel ensign. Brother Simmons has a brother and family living there who nobly supported us. The best people of the county were our friends.

Our Christian brethren were somewhat on the warpath, and began to call for a debate. So, after some correspondence with Brother Aylor, we signed up for a debate with them. At this juncture they suddenly run short of debaters who had time to do their work. So, after baptizing two nice young people there, one a nephew of Brother Simmons, and a little neighbor girl of Brother Simmons' relatives, we lingered for two weeks or more, preaching near there. As the debater failed to show up we left, Brother Simmons stopping in southern Oklahoma, while I made my way to southwestern Texas. The debate was finally held, Brethren Case and Simmons meeting the enemy.

After laboring some in southwestern Texas, I was again challenged for debate. My man again failed to meet me. I held a meeting at the place and time set for debate, causing much interest. I then left for Dallas, where for one week I labored before obtaining a place to preach. I finally secured a vacant place from the city, most favorably located, just west of the fair grounds, and right at the car line. I made three trips to see the mayor and commissioners of the city before I secured this place. We finally began open-air meetings.

In the meantime a lady, not a member of the church, who was going to leave for San Antonio, offered to give her house and lot, valued at about twelve hundred dollars, to some church. There were a number of applicants from different churches. One of our sisters, who was acquainted with the lady, also saw her, receiving some encouragement that we might secure the place. She then reported the same to myself and two other Saints. We had prayer, impugning our heavenly Father for divine favor in the matter, which we certainly obtained. In company with the sister already mentioned I later called on the lady, made arrangements, and on the following day went to a lawyer's office, where she made out the deed to the church. We accompanied her to the night train for San Antonio, where she called on my parents.

Needless to say, I put the house to immediate use. We tore down the partition between two rooms and at once began meetings there. It would require too much space to tell all that was accomplished there; suffice it to say, three fine young people were baptized, a number of outsiders were deeply interested, and the foundation was laid for the accomplishment of much good.

The Saints, including those at Vickery, seven miles from there on the interurban line, and also at Elam Station, a few miles the other way, most valiantly and loyally supported me; it was sad, indeed, to finally part from them. However, I promised them I would return again.

I then labored at Hearne, where I found more valiant Saints. It is always hard to tell such good-bye. I there baptized three more young ladies.

After laboring some not far from there, I went to Houston, where I found several more brethren. I was most royally entertained while among them. Here I met Brethren Maloney, Nunley and Jesse Simmons. While there I received a call from Odell, across the State. My brother-in-law desired me, in company with Brethren Aylor and S. W. Simmons, to hold a meeting. The other brethren failed to show up, so I held the meeting, assisted by my brother-in-law. We feel that much good was accomplished. We occupied in the Methodist Episcopal church. The town paper was very liberal with us, giving us a write-up during the meeting. To-day another clipping comes to us, which is very encouraging. The business men of the town attended well. The Dallas newspapers also gave us a good write-up.

I arrived here on the 23d of last month, and have been enjoying a few days with my parents in old San Antonio, in the meantime occupying the pulpits here.

With kind regards to all Saints and friends, I am,

Your brother,

GLAUD R. KUYKENDALL.

Omaha, Nebraska.

The following officers were elected at our recent branch business meeting: President, M. A. Peterson; priests, H. A. Scott, W. E. Stoff, A. E. Stoff, W. N. Hill, W. T. Lowe; teachers, C. M. Hollenbeck, R. W. Scott, J. C. Horne; deacons, S. E. Marmoy, T. A. Hicks and C. C. Coffeen; clerk, W. E. Stoff; chorister, Paul N. Craig; organist, Mrs. Paul N. Craig; member library board, David Lewis; book agent, T. A. Hicks.

We have recently been highly favored in having an opportunity to attend the Roberson Travelogues, and learn of the beauties and interesting facts regarding our own beloved America, as well as the foreign lands, by lecture, stationary and moving pictures. How our hearts should respond in gratitude to our Creator that we are permitted to live in this wonderful age of progress and invention, since the gospel has been restored to earth.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

We are anticipating a feast of good things in the celebration of our fiftieth anniversary, or jubilee, which will take place February 4, continuing about fifteen days. Brethren Heman C. Smith, J. W. Rushton, and either Brother Fred M. or Brother Elbert A. Smith, or both, are expected to be here, and we hope for good results.

Our district conference was quite a success, both spiritually and socially, a large number being in attendance. The Spirit was manifested in the way of a song of encouragement and admonition to the Saints, coming through Brother Archibald. We felt indeed to rejoice when we realized that God was watching over us, and was mindful of our present condition. Our district president, Brother Archibald, spoke to the conference in the morning and Brother Guthrie in the evening. The ladies' aid society had a supper and bazaar the last week in November, and, as is usual when they do anything, it was a success.

We have had six baptisms since last report, three by Brother Beaird. One promising young boy was baptized last Sunday, one of our little Sunday school workers; being the only one of his family in the church, he will need our prayers. Another young man was formerly of the Catholic faith. Thus the work moves on.

Your sister in Christ,
ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Communication from President of the Twelve.

I hereby give notice that per resolution adopted by the Quorum of Twelve at their last sitting the quorum will meet in the Order of Enoch building, per courtesy of the Board of the Order, Independence, Missouri, March 18, at 10 a. m.

Whoever may have business requiring the consideration and action of the quorum will please forward same to J. W. Rushton, 701 North Cottage Street, Independence, Missouri. (Let all communications be in ink.)

In view of the responsibility resting upon these brethren and the importance of the business they are expected to transact in the interests of the church, such as appointing missionaries in all the world and many other items of equal interest in the cause of the Master, we feel desirous of soliciting the prayers and sympathy of all, that our Father will bestow upon these ministers his divine power to qualify them for the peculiar duty and arduous work that has been committed to them by God and the church.

SUGGESTIONS.

It has been impressed upon my mind, and very forcibly for some months, that the hastening time is upon us as a church; and by reason of the many demands made upon us for preachers in all parts of the world the suggestion has been made to me that the appointing authorities should call for volunteers from among the young men of the church, having authority to preach as priests and elders. At the same time it was propounded to me, "Why can not many of these young men who have gained valuable experience in the several branches of auxiliary work volunteer their services to the church for a period of two or three years in the active mission fields before they assume the responsibilities of family life?"

When we consider that young men in the world in many countries give several years in the army service it seems to be an ideal within our reach to arouse the enthusiasm of young men to show their love for God and the good of humanity by consecrating two or three years of their life in the effort to save souls and seek to establish the kingdom of God.

Not only would such service be acceptable to God and of immeasurable benefit to the church, but such experience would be of great service to the men themselves in widening their sympathies, giving them a most unique opportunity to understand life and human nature by direct contact, and at the same time very helpfully assist such men in finding their place in church service; it would, furthermore, develop good men as missionaries, and also executive and pastoral ministers.

We recommend the consideration of this matter to our young men, and pray God will arouse in them a great desire to respond to the church's need. This call of the Savior, viz: "The harvest is great and the laborers are few," was never truer than it is to-day.

Among the most desirable qualifications for such ministerial service as contemplated are the following: First, to have a passion for souls and the service of God; second, an upright life; third, humility and a disposition to learn; fourth, the cultivation of spirituality by constant prayer.

While we do not specialize on education, we nevertheless recommend that all who can take advantage of every opportunity to educate themselves, not only in the grammar schools and the high schools, but by a careful and systematic course of reading at home.

Those who will respond to this call are invited to apply to the secretary, J. W. Rushton, for an application blank, filling in and returning not later than March 31.

Praying that the coming conference will be the best ever held, that the spirit of peace and good will may predominate in all things, that God's will can be fulfilled in all things,

I am your brother and colaborer,

Financial Report of Elders for Year 1913.

Following is list of ministry whose reports have been received by Presiding Bishop's office to date, January 16, 1914:

Church Secretary.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Delegate credential blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, have been sent to presidents or secretaries of the various stakes, districts, and branches not in districts. Such officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their organization at the General Conference of 1914 to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that the report of the committee on credentials may be made up and printed before the opening of the conference, as required by conference action. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those yet to be appointed immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of body appointing, with name of such organization, place and date of conference or business meeting, is sufficient; separate, individual credentials to delegates are not necessary. Please insert "Total membership" in all cases; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every one hundred members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled as members of other districts, may be included in the enrollment of membership.

The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference.

Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as delegates of districts. But when the membership of such branch exceeds one hundred it shall be entitled to one delegate for each one hundred members.

Take notice, that fractions of one hundred, except in cases where branches not in districts number less than one hundred, are not to be enumerated in the appointment of delegates.

For further information concerning representation, choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Rules of Order, Chapter 17.

It should be remembered that the General Conference of 1913 amended the Rules of Representation to provide that the basis of representation shall be one delegate for every one hundred members. R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

"Journal of History."

The January number of the Journal contains a descriptive and illustrated trip to Nauvoo, accompanied by a map and the location of the chief historical points noted. Autobiography of Charles Derry and the biographies of Alexander H. Smith and Joseph F. Burton are continued. The Histories of the Seventy, and Presidents of Seventy, by James F. Mintun, historian of the Seventy, are also continued.

The opening chapters of the work in the territory now contained in Lamoni Stake, dating back to 1846, by Duncan Campbell, Stake Historian, are in this number. This interesting history will be continued during the year.

New features will be presented, of which the following are a part: Account of the recent movements of the Indians in organizing a general "Society of American Indians," irrespective of tribal relations. This is one of the most important movements of the times, and one in which Latter Day Saints have much interest; an article by Professor Herbert S. Salisbury on genealogy, tracing several of the prominent families of the church to families of distinction and respectability in the Old World, thus disproving the allegation that this people were of low origin. This will be illustrated by coats of arms and portraits of persons. Every defender of the faith should read this article.

In addition to these, thrilling and instructive accounts of travels in foreign lands, and among historic scenes in America, including a descriptive and illustrated visit to Plymouth, the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, will be a special feature. From the standpoint of instruction and entertainment no better investment of one dollar can be made than by sending it to the Board of Publication, Lamoni, Iowa, for the Journal of History for 1914.

A GLIMPSE OF THE FIELD.

We are in receipt of that which gives us rather pleasing glimpses of the work in the field, having received letters from different parts and having conversed with traveling ministers both of the general and district fields, and all is very encouraging.

Meeting one of these on the 7th inst. we learned that he had in his restricted field baptized thirty-three thus far in the conference year. At one place, being shut out from the schoolhouses, a reaction had set in and the result is to be a church building in that locality. This is in western Iowa.

In conversation with another from the South we learn that there has been a personal activity among the local brethren; and quite a number of baptisms have been performed. From another from not so far away we learned that in a discussion the spirit of the attack made upon our faith evidenced such a distinct disregard for anything like true Christian courtesy and deportment that the supporters of those who procured the champion to attack us were disgusted, and our brother who defended the faith was permitted to show specifically that the champion was not only deficient in courtesy but convicted him of absolute falsity of statement in his attack.

By advices reaching us by letter we learn that Bishop R. C. Evans continues his services at the Princess Theater in Toronto, Ontario, under the administration of the branch at that point, and that these efforts are productive of good results. While perhaps a majority of the hearers are constant attendants, there is always a fair percentage of new hearers at each successive session. The meetings so far have proved to be a success, according to the purpose of their beginning.

Elder J. F. Curtis, of the Twelve, held a series of meetings at London, Ontario, resulting in a number of baptisms, the reviving of the work, and seemingly an infusion of a new spirit there. Another minister, in answer to a question by the senior editor, reported sixty-four baptisms in his district, and that was some weeks ago.

And so is the report all along the line. Let the good work go on, say we.

The advocacy of the gospel of the Son of God as held by us through the spirit of revelation does not give us the spirit of heresy hunting, but it does give to us as advocates of the true Christian philosophy of the gospel of the Son of God, as shown in the New Testament Scriptures, the disposition and spirit of proper defense, which disposition and spirit attended the administrations of the Apostle Paul when because of the influence of the falsity of the worship which he saw at Athens, where he found the altar erected to the unknown god he said, "I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. . . . Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship him declare I unto you."

CHARACTER SKETCHES OF JESUS.

V.—HIS HUMAN SYMPATHY AND TENDERNESS.

Early in his career we find Jesus at Cana mingling with the guests at a wedding. He was no austere God who would refuse to weep with those who wept or smile with those who rejoiced. No doubt he rejoiced with the happy bride and bridegroom,—and later he borrowed a simile from that or some other like occasion, and compared himself to the bridegroom and his church to the bride. Perhaps his eyes moistened, observing the half-concealed distress of the parents whose children were about to enter upon new relationships that might eclipse the old. And here it was that he performed his first miracle.

We see him shortly thereafter entering the city of Nain. As he drew near the city his attention was attracted to that melancholy spectacle that with its black shadow so frequently subdues the spirit of man—a funeral procession. He learned that the dead man was an only son of his mother,—“and she was a widow.” His heart went out to that woman.

He saw her life's story: Her husband taken away by death, her affections concentrated upon that only son, while she watched him gradually grow into the beloved image of his father,—and then all ruined and lost, herself plunged into bitterest gloom by his untimely death.

Had Jesus passed by unmoved he would not have been Jesus. With him was pity allied with power. We read, "He had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not."

He commanded the young man to arise, and he that was dead sat up and began to speak. The light of heaven broke in upon that city, and they all began to glorify God. But we imagine that the eyes of Jesus lingered most upon the reunited mother and son. Her radiant face to him typified the joy of humanity redeemed from death and sorrow by the message that he had come to bring and the sacrifice that he had come to make.

Almost immediately, as events are narrated by Luke, came the ambassadors from John, saying, "Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?"

Jesus did not reply, "I have one hundred thousand communicants, the finest church building in Jerusalem, and draw the largest salary of any living preacher."

Instead he pointed to those things that demonstrated the nature of his work, his deep sympathy with sickness and poverty and sorrow. "Tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached."

Continuing his mission, he moved among the cities and villages, teaching in the synagogues, preaching the gospel of the kingdom, healing the sick and afflicted. His great heart opened more and more to human needs. The sorrows of man in the individual and in the mass aroused his tender sympathy. We are told: "But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd."

Thank God, it is written that he had compassion. The proud and the high passed by with averted faces; but Jesus had compassion. Ignorant, depraved, oppressed, ragged, dirty humanity in the mass may move us with contempt and loathing. And we murmur, "Poor fools!" But where we have contempt, Jesus had compassion.

In this way he came in contact with humanity. He was a guest at their weddings, he wept at their funerals, he sensed their oppression and their needs. He looked into the hearts of individuals and he comprehended the multitudes. He knew and understood the rabble, the publican, the Pharisee, the outcast woman, the loving John, the impetuous Peter,—he had no need that any should tell him what was in man.

Out of it was born his great invitation to the oppressed, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest to your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

His human sympathy and his tender heart are revealed in numberless ways, between Cana's wedding and the hour when he stood by the well and talked to the woman of Samaria. It was characteristic, too, that upon the cross, himself tormented by thirst and pain, he should find time and strength to console the dying and repentant thief. He who had gone about everywhere doing good found it in him to do one more individual act of love and kindness, even in the last extremity.

Well may humanity learn to repeat the words, "I've found a friend in Jesus." In times of trouble every man turns to some friend for sympathy. Strongest, wisest, most tender of friends is Jesus of Nazareth.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

AFTER EFFECTS OF BALKAN WAR.—In a pamphlet issued by the American Association for International Conciliation, Alfred H. Fried reviews the lessons taught by the Balkan War. In a recent issue we recounted the disastrous results in Bulgaria, famine, sickness, and poverty, as the after effects of that great conflict. Mr. Fried also recounts some effects it has had indirectly upon other nations. He reports that the Balkan War has induced Germany to raise the peace footing of her army to nine hundred thousand men, and to impose upon herself extraordinary expenditures to the amount of three hundred million dollars. It has caused France to make the extraordinary expenditure of a billion dollars to increase the army and navy, and to reestablish the two years' service period. The Austro-Hungarian war minister has asked for about two hundred forty million dollars for military expenditures made necessary by the Balkan War, and for a permanent increase of the budget and the increase of the peace footing of the standing army by eighty thousand men. All of this gives point to the pleadings of the commissions.

PEACE TREATIES.—In a recent issue we noted the proposition of Mr. Churchill before the British Commons that the various nations take a naval holiday, refraining from increasing their armament during one year, and the hearty acquiescence in this proposition by the United States Congress. In this connection we notice the efforts of Secretary Bryan, who is perfecting treaties with various nations designed to assure a period of investigation and inquiry into the nature of disputes before declaration of war. In these treaties the contracting parties agree that all disputes between them of whatever nature which diplomacy shall fail to adjust shall be submitted to an international commission for investigation and report. They also agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such an investigation and pending such report. The commission is to be a standing body, consisting in each instance of a member named by each of the two countries entering into the agreement, to be selected from its own citizens, and one from an outside country, the two governments to choose a fifth member by common agreement. This commission may occupy an entire year in the consideration of the difficulties, but not longer unless the two governments agree to an extension of time. It is then to report back to the two governments its findings as to the nature of the disagreement, and the justice of the contention, together with such recommendations as may be deemed wise. The design is to prevent hasty and ill-advised precipitation of armed conflict. The treaties are to be valid for a period of five years, after which they are to continue indefinitely in force unless one or the other of the contracting governments gives twelve months' notice. We understand that more than thirty governments have indicated their willingness to sign such agreements with the United States. Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, also supplements Mr. Churchill's proposition with one to the effect that the representatives of all nations be invited to hold a conference to discuss plans of agreement for a general lessening of the cost of preparation for war.

ACTIVITY AMONG QUAKERS.—The Quakers are objecting to the uses that are being made of their name in the trades, and are taking steps to secure the passage of state legislation intended to prohibit the employment of the name of any religious body to promote the sale of foods, drinks, or wearing apparel. They do not care to have the reputation for honesty which they have acquired exploited by the manufacturers of breakfast foods and other commodities. They are also reported as having entered upon an agitation which they term a "second abolition movement." They were prominent in the anti-slavery agitation of former days, and now they propose to attack white slavery and contract prison labor, which in some States is virtually slavery. It is said that both liberal and orthodox Friends have united in this crusade.

PROSPERITY OF POSTAL DEPARTMENT.—The post office department of the United States reports a surplus of nearly four million dollars. Under its management the parcel post is giving excellent satisfaction and is constantly increasing in usefulness. In March the service will be extended to books and other publications not now included. The parcel post service is paying its way and yielding a profit. The postal savings bank is also successful. The number of depositors reported at the end of the last fiscal year was three hundred thirty-one thousand, the aggregate of the deposits being thirty-four million dollars. This amount represents many little private hoards that have in this way been restored to circulation, thus benefiting the general community, while encouraging thrift among those who can save only small amounts.

JAPAN AMERICAN AFFAIRS.—By statement made to the parliament in Japan and cabled to the Japanese embassy in Washington on January 21, Japan reopened the matter of difference between that country and the United States over the alien land ownership law of California. The statement rejects as unsatisfactory the efforts of this country to settle the controversy, and points out that Japan has decided to consider some new way out of the difficulty. The press states that it is the understanding at Washington that this Japanese proposition contemplates a new treaty, to permanently settle the issues between the two countries by defining precisely the rights of Japanese in America and of Americans in Japan.

WORLD CONTROL BUSINESS.—Stating that "private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable," in a personally delivered message, President Wilson on the 20th instant laid before the United States Congress recommendations for the regulation of what is known as big business. These recommendations include prohibition of interlocking directorates; conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission power to superintend and regulate the financing of railroads; defining "hurtful restraints of trade" by explicit legislation supplementary to the Sherman Law; the creation of a commission to aid the courts and to act as a clearing house of information in helping business to conform with law; punishment of individuals responsible for unlawful business practices; prohibition of holding companies; and the restriction of the voting power of individual stockholders. On the 22d instant the first measure to carry into effect the legislation suggested in the President's message was introduced in the House. This bill, approved by President Wilson, would carry out the plan for an interstate commerce commission. Further measures already prepared by the judiciary subcommittee for submission to the full committee are prohibition of interlocking directorates; definition of the terms of the Sherman antitrust act; and a trade relations measure designed to prohibit "cut-throat" competition.

STRIKES, STRIFE, AND INVESTIGATION.—The Houghton County, Michigan, grand jury has returned indictments against thirty-nine members of the Western Federation of Labor, including Charles H. Moyer, president. These men are charged with conspiring to prevent nonunion men working in the mines, during the strike at Calumet, Michigan, referred to in our issue of last week. No indictments were returned against anyone implicated in the deportation of Mr. Moyer. Seven members of the grand jury are said to be employees of mine companies or dependent concerns. The bitterness incident to this strike and the developments therefrom continues. A bitter strife has also arisen in connection with a strike in the Colorado coal fields, which reached its sharpest point on the 22d, when state cavalymen and strikers came together in a clash in which one striker was cut by a saber and one of the troopers suffered a broken rib. Members of the crowd threw bottles, stones, and other missiles at the soldiers before being dispersed. About twenty persons, including eight women, were arrested. Congressional investigation of these strikes was agreed to upon the 22d, by a caucus of House Democrats.

FAMINE IN JAPAN.—Already burdened to the limit by the cost of the Russo-Japanese War, crop failures have left millions of people in Japan at the point of starvation. This condition is aggravated by the horrors of volcanic eruptions, earthquakes, and tidal waves. For the relief of these sufferers President Wilson has issued the following appeal:

Our sister nation of Japan is suffering from two very serious disasters. The failure of crops in the northeastern part of that country has brought hundreds of thousands of persons face to face with the terrible misery of slow starvation, and in the southwestern island of Kyushu a sudden great volcanic eruption has carried death and desolation to large numbers in a thickly populated district. I appeal to the humanity of our American people that they may give expression of their sympathy for the suffering and distress of so many of their fellow men by generous contributions for their aid. Such contributions can be made to the local Red Cross treasurers or sent directly to the American Red Cross, Washington, District of Columbia.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—President Huerta has repudiated the interest on the national debt of two hundred fifty million dollars for the past six months. The passing of the interest on this bonded debt, most of which is held abroad, has led some of the European governments to urge the United States to bring pressure to bear on the dictator. Huerta's reason for defaulting interest on the national debt is that it is better that the money be used for the pacification of the country. There are those who believe that the move also is taken with a view to compelling action by the United States.

MEXICAN WAR.—General Villa, at last report, was in the midst of preparations for an advance southward. He is said to have in his command fifteen thousand men and expects to unite these with ten thousand under General Carranza.

SAFETY AT SEA.—The revision committee of the international conference on safety at sea has practically concluded its labors. This conference comprises delegates from the United States, Great Britain, Belgium, France, the Netherlands, Russia, Denmark, Germany, Norway, Spain, Canada, and New Zealand. A universal signal of distress has been agreed upon, and America is to have control of wireless operators entering and leaving American ports. Ships must slow down during a fog or other dangerous conditions. A ship before sailing must have a certificate issued at the wharf showing that it is properly equipped for life saving. December 14 is the time limit set for the acceptance of the agreement by the various countries concerned. If approved this treaty will go into effect July 1, 1915.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ELDER DAVIS SECURES HEARING.—The Providence, Rhode Island, Evening Bulletin, January 7, contains an interesting account of the monthly meeting of the Men's Club of the Arlington Baptist Church, before which Elder James W. Davis, pastor of the Reorganized Church in Providence, appeared and gave an interesting talk on the subject of "Mormonism." He is reported as having given considerable historical information regarding the history of the church, beginning with the birth of Joseph Smith. He also set forth the division of the church into factions, and the true succession, together with the origin of polygamy. We congratulate Elder Davis on securing his hearing, and are pleased to learn that the Baptist people of Providence are sufficiently fair-minded and liberal to give our people such an opportunity to set forth our own position.

NORTH DAKOTA AND PUBLICITY.—By action of its recent convention the North Dakota District Sunday School Association undertakes to furnish each clergyman of North Dakota with a copy of An Open Letter to the Clergy. Notice elsewhere in this issue will acquaint members of the North Dakota District with the plan, and will inform them as to how they may help.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men.—Proverbs of Solomon.

CHOOSE YE WHOM YE WILL SERVE.

Now therefore fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and truth: and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; and serve ye the Lord. And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served, that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose lands ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.—Joshua 24: 14, 15.

Israel was prone to wander. As we look back upon their record, unconscious of the time covered by a few pages of the history, it seems that the people of Israel have scarcely been reconciled to God until their feet are turned away from the temple and they are in forbidden paths, bowing down to strange gods. Constantly had the old prophets to cry out warnings, recall the people from their errors, and destroy false gods and their shrines. Left only momentarily to themselves, the people wandered, like sheep, away from the fold. Moses, coming down from the mount where he communed with God, found his people bowing to a golden calf; and Joshua, despite the wondrous manifestations of God's protecting care for his people, found strange gods among the Israelites almost before the sounds of their last conquering battle had died away.

And so the vigorous old leader, calling his people together, had once more to recount before them the blessings of deliverance, and to call upon them to renew their covenant. Their hearts warmed once more by memory of God's blessings and their great deliverance, they will have none other God but him, so they declare. "Put away the strange gods which are among you," cried Joshua, "and incline your heart unto the Lord God of Israel."

If we are disposed to blame those people, let us be reminded how quickly we as individuals are prone to wander and how often we are under the necessity of choosing anew whom we will serve. Community characteristics are individual propensities written large. And though the Lord's supper in which we renew our covenant with God is celebrated among us once each month, yet few there are who do not find the month has been plenty long enough to discover byways diverging from the straight road, the existence of which we had not known; and we are glad that the divine meal calls us anew to renewed watchfulness and closer allegiance with the source of our spiritual strength.

No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and mammon.—Matthew 6: 24.

His servants ye are to whom ye obey.—Romans 6: 16.

As Jesus was going toward Jerusalem, near the time when he made his triumphal entry into the Jewish capital, a woman came worshipping him, and indicating that she had a special favor to ask of him. With the woman were her two sons. Jesus saying, "What wilt thou?" turned to her to listen to her request. She would that her two sons might be promised seats of honor in Jesus' kingdom. Rank and honor in those days were frequently indicated by order of seating on festive occasions.

The form of the request put by her, taken with the answer by Jesus, "Ye know not what ye ask," indicates that the woman, who was undoubtedly one of his followers, had, in listening to his discourses about the kingdom he came to establish, formed the idea shared by many of his followers, some of his twelve disciples included, that the time of Israel's political deliverance drew near and that Jesus was the Prince of the house of David who would wrest Palestine from Rome and restore the Jewish throne to its former brilliant rank and power. Position in the new kingdom would then be by Jesus' appointment. The good woman, desiring the best for her sons, and having the usual mother's faith in their ability to fill worthily any position, would see them at Jesus' side in the chief places of honor in the new kingdom.

They were quite willing to go through the hardships of the struggle necessary to establish the kingdom. "Are ye able," said Jesus, "to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" They say unto him, "We are able." Then, while he recognized their zeal, their willingness to serve him at the cost of suffering, and while promising them they should have ample opportunity to share his baptism of sorrow and agony, he gently but firmly called attention to their error of belief as to the form of his kingdom, by saying, "But to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father."

How indignant the other apostles grew when they learned of the presumption of the mother of Zebedee's children in seeking for them preferment in the new kingdom. Such positions of honor should go to them. They had left all to follow their Master, had gone through trials and tribulations, had been scorned and rebuffed, had hungered and suffered in his service; and to think that this woman should ask for her sons the positions of honor and respect filled them "with indignation against the two brethren." But Jesus called the indignant disciples to him and said:

Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matthew 20: 25-28.

Ah, once more Jesus tries to press the lesson into the minds and hearts of his disciples that not by position or authority is greatness to be measured in his kingdom, but by service. The one, therefore, who will seek honor for himself, must forget self in improving the thousands of opportunities to work for others. But how soon and completely this lesson was forgotten by the apostles can be seen by looking in upon them at their last supper with the Master, when we see them quarreling over who should be greatest in the kingdom.

The genealogy of Jesus as given in the Scriptures touching it indicates that he was of royal descent. We know, too, that he was entitled to rank among the priests or rabbis, that class who have been termed the religious syndicate of Palestine. Had he so chosen he could have lived a life of comparative ease among the men of the temple. But as a youth he had at the side of Joseph worked as a carpenter. Carpentry and masonry were two of the most respected and honorable of trades in his time. As a carpenter he was not of the proletariat, but rather of the middle classes. This work as a youth and the associate of Joseph was of distinct service. Had he chosen, as before stated, a life of comparative ease could have been his; but he chose rather to serve his fellow men.

At his baptism he chose to comply with the law and thus serve as an example to his followers. And when at John's hands he had received the ordinance of baptism, there followed his great triune temptation, the crowning feature and crucial test of which came when before his mental or physical vision (or both) there passed in review the principalities and powers of the world, and there came to him the knowledge that should he choose to bend his energies in this direction there should come to him great power and brilliant honor, his choice again lay on the side of service. He renounced the opportunity to become a great political reformer to whom great honor might attach, in order that he might become the great moral teacher, sacrificing apparent present good so far as he was concerned, that his fellow men might enjoy future better. True to his previous record, service was his guiding star.

And can it not be said that he chose his disciples from the bourgeoisie? From a life active in serving selfish interests, he called them to a life of service to others. To the sturdy and well-established fishermen he called, Follow me and become fishers of men. Imbued by his throbbing spirit of service they left their nets and boats and a comfortable business to engage in service to man, though they realized that the emoluments would be small.

Rulers came to him secretly. A revolution had long been expected. Were he the prince they expected, he would need men and means to overthrow Romish arms; and they wanted to know his plans. But he told them rather of a spiritual kingdom, whose bulwarks built up within the soul would become impregnable to even armed hosts.

When the hour of his entry into Jerusalem came, though seated on the beast of royalty there gleamed not in his hand the sword as emblematic of bloody power; but the palm of peace waved over the heads of his hosts, armed only with the word of God, and who shouted not battle cries but sang songs of peace.

His last meal with his disciples abounds in the lessons of service. By humble example was the power of service instilled into their hearts. His last instructions were of service; and with his dying breath, the people and the misguided ones constantly in his mind, he uttered a prayer for forgiveness.

Most men love wealth for the power it brings, some for the wealth itself. But it is wealth's power to serve selfish interests which makes it so desired. And this desire for wealth for selfish ends is so rampant that a man's success in life is too frequently measured by the wealth he has accumulated. But if Christ's life be the standard, then the criterion of wealth is erroneous. Christ died a poor man. He would be called a pauper to-day, a vagrant. He did not despise wealth, but he saw a higher standard. His teachings were not to shun wealth, but to shun the love of wealth per se. It is not people's wealth which is likely to hinder their spirituality, but their attitude towards it. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." When we seek first that kingdom, then our means as well as our powers are towards its establishment.

Service to God was the burden of Christ's message; but it is manifest by serving others,—summed up in one word, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Measured by such a standard Christ's life and work stand out with startling brilliance, and he is revealed as one of the most successful of men. Measured by the criterion of wealth he was a failure.

Are our lives squared by the false standard of wealth, or the Christly standard of service? Are we serving mammon or God?

THE CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS.

There are many subjects that we like to think and talk about, that are not clearly explained in the word of God. We may understand some things about those subjects, but it is well for us to remember that it is not best to be too positive, nor to criticize too harshly those who differ with us. Considering the conclusions that other students have made, and their reasons for thus deciding, may be helpful to us.

CHURCH IN WILDERNESS.

The church has not yet decided many questions concerning this subject. Since we are interested in the matter, it may not be unprofitable for us to present, with others, a few thoughts in connection with the discussion incident to our efforts to come at a proper understanding of the Scriptures in this connection.

The woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.—Revelation 12: 6.

In the seventh verse we are told that "the woman" "was the church of God." (Inspired Version.) The woman here symbolizes the church. What she did represents what the church would do. Her varied conditions represent the conditions through which the church would pass. It is not easy to understand just what each condition of the woman represents in the church. But it is clear that each change in the appearance of the woman or in her location means a change in the church. The woman did not cease to exist, nor did she die when she went into the wilderness, although her appearance and location were greatly changed. She had been delivered of "the man child," and "was given two wings of a great eagle," and had departed from the place where she stood when the "moon" was "under her feet." Yet with all these changes she lived and was "fed" and "nourished" for "a thousand and two hundred and threescore days" in "the wilderness."

CHURCH RETURNS FROM THE WILDERNESS.

As the "woman" lived, ate, and performed the functions of life, she represents the church, as a living, acting entity, performing the functions of such condition. The most important function of the church is to save souls. Although, as represented by the woman, the church would be greatly changed, there was "a place prepared of God" suitable for her changed condition, where she would "be nourished" and cared for, till the time should come for her return from "the wilderness." This time came in 1830 when she again made her appearance and soon reached the condition and position she occupied at first.

By reading the description or account of her coming out of "the wilderness," we may have a better understanding of what is meant by her journey "into the wilderness." In Doctrine and Covenants 5: 3 we find that:

To none else will I grant this power, to receive this same testimony, among this generation, in this, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness; clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners.

* This was given a short time before the church was organized. The Lord was preparing material for its organization, and some were about ready for baptism and ordination. So this condition of the church was referred to as "the beginning of the rising up and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness." It had not yet risen up to come "out of the wilderness"; but it was "beginning" to do so. This simply means that the Lord was preparing to organize his church, which he did, April 6, 1830.

A short time after this the Lord said:

And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, even as many as will believe in me, and hearken unto my voice.—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2.

The church was in "the wilderness" before it was organized, and remained in this unorganized condition until it was organized in 1830. Then is the time it came out. The organizing of the church brought it out of the wilderness; therefore we conclude that the disorganizing of the church was the going into the wilderness. The going into the wilderness is a term used to describe the disorganization of the church, and the term coming out of the wilderness means the organization of the church. These two conditions of the church are thus described by these two terms.

CHURCH IN DISORGANIZED FORM.

This is the condition the church was in for "twelve hundred and sixty years." It was composed of all the honest and true of earth. They are the ones referred to in the above quotation as the "elect" that shall be "gathered" into the organized church. They are the "few" referred to when the Lord said:

And my vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and there is none which doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of priestcrafts, all having corrupt minds.—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 1.

These few "which doeth good," are accepted by the Lord (Acts 10: 35), although they are deceived "in many instances" by those who practice "priestcraft," for these "have corrupt minds."

This class which composes the church in its unorganized form is also referred to in 2 Nephi 12: 16, 17:

They wear stiff necks and high heads; yea, and because of pride, and wickedness, and abominations, and whoredoms, they have all gone astray, save it be a few, who are the humble followers of Christ; nevertheless, they are led, that in many instances they do err, because they are taught by the precepts of men.

Although these "few" who "doeth good," and are considered by the Almighty as "the humble followers of Christ," are surrounded by wickedness, and taught by men of "corrupt minds," so that "in many instances they do err," yet they have the light of Christ enlightening their minds, so that they can follow him to that extent that they are accepted by him.

These "humble followers of Christ" were in the "churches of men," where "priestcraft" ruled and men of "corrupt minds" taught "by the precepts of men." This does not describe the condition that "the humble followers of Christ" are in who have entered the church or kingdom (John 3:5) in its organized form, in which you will find the officers and teachers as described in 1 Corinthians 12:1-28; Ephesians 4:8-13.

Did you ever ask yourself the question, How much better am I doing with all the advantages of the organized church than these "followers of Christ" out of the organized church?

This class is referred to as "my sheep." Christ says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." (John 13:27.) Again, Doctrine and Covenants 34:3, "And there are none that doeth good except those who are ready to receive the fullness of my gospel which I have sent forth unto this generation."

These are those who are called "Israel" (Doctrine and Covenants 34:6; 38:7), and "all Israel shall be saved," (Romans 11:26), whether they hear the fullness of the gospel and have the privilege of entering the church (John 3:5) in its organized form or not.

THE TWO CHURCHES.

All those "that doeth good," and "the humble followers of Christ," are in the church of Christ, that is referred to in the following:

Behold there are save two churches only: the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the Devil; wherefore, whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church, which is the mother of abominations; and she is the whore of all the earth.—1 Nephi 3:220-223. See also Alma 3:64, 65; 2 Nephi 1:122-125.

The "two churches" here refer to the conditions that all mankind are in. Those who are one of "the few" "that doeth good" and are ready to obey "the fullness of the gospel" when they understand it, are in "the church of the Lamb of God," or his kingdom in its unorganized form. Or if they have heard the fullness of the gospel and obeyed it and are living as Saints should do, they are in the organized portion of the church, or kingdom, which includes only a part of "the church of the Lamb of God."

Those not in that class are in the "church of the Devil," whether their names are recorded on a church book or not; whether they belong to an organization or not. They may have their names recorded as members in good standing, and be so reported, and yet be members of "the church of the Devil."

People may be of the "fold" of the Devil, with the Devil as their shepherd, (Book of Mormon 218:6), and belong to any organization on earth, or to no organization; or they may be in the "fold" or "church of the Lamb," and belong to any organization or to none.

CHURCH IN UNORGANIZED FORM.

The Lord tells us what will be the future condition of those who belong to "the church in the wilderness" or in its unorganized form:

The heavens were opened upon us, and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God, and the glory thereof, whether in the body or out I can not tell. I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son. I saw the beautiful streets of that kingdom, which had the appearance of being paved with gold. I saw Fathers Adam and Abraham and my father and mother, my brother Alvin, that has long since slept, and marveled how it was that he had obtained an inheritance in the kingdom, seeing that he had departed this life before the Lord had set his hand to gather Israel the second time, and had not been baptized for the remission of sins.

Thus came the voice of the Lord unto me, saying: "All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desires of their hearts." (Italics mine)—Church History, vol. 2, p. 16.

I read the above quotation when I was a young man, and it brought satisfaction to my soul. I knew that the "desires" of my heart were to serve God before I understood the gospel. Had I been deprived of the privilege of hearing the gospel, as thousands are, I could not see the justice of God in depriving me of celestial glory. But this vision presents the justice of God in such a way that we feel to praise him. "All who" die "without a knowledge of" the gospel, "who would have received it," shall be saved in "the celestial kingdom of God," although they "had not been baptized for the remission of sins."

These are Christ's and are referred to as Saints in 1 Nephi 3:230. These "saints of the church of the Lamb . . . were scattered upon all the face of the earth." When the gospel was restored the cry went forth to those "saints" that "were scattered upon all the face of the earth." "Come out of her (churches of men and the world in general) my people." (Revelation 18:4.) And "my people" will hear and obey. Are we doing all we can to enable them to hear?

CHURCH IN ORGANIZED FORM.

Those who hear the gospel in its fullness have an opportunity of reaching a spiritual development in this life that can not be obtained otherwise. They have the opportunity of being taught and assisted by the officers that God has placed in the church "for the perfecting of the Saints." These officers will be inspired or directed by the Lord to give such advice and instructions as may be needed. When we give heed to their decisions and directions, we show our faith in God's plan, and the Lord will direct us through them according to his plan. We will not be taught "by the precepts of men" nor be led into "error" by "priestcraft, all having corrupt minds." But if we reject his chosen officers (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 5) we reject him, whether we are members of his organized church or not. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 16.)

The Lord refers to the organized church as "the only true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.)

We wish to call special attention to the fact that this church is the only one that the Lord is "well pleased" with. If the qualifying word well were left out, the thought would be expressed that no other church on earth pleased the Lord. But with it included degree is expressed, which means that he may be pleased with other churches, but that this is the only one with which he is "well pleased."

It is hard to believe that God directed the organization of our Government, which we all accept, and not believe that he directed in the reformation which crystalized into the Lutheran, Presbyterian, Methodist, and other churches. We all recognize the great good these churches have done, and we believe that all good comes from God. In these various churches are found the "few humble followers of Christ"; that are heirs of "celestial glory," who are "doing good." Many of them are in the ministry, "sent forth" to do the work they are doing, just as Sidney Rigdon "was sent forth even as John, to prepare the way before me," (Doctrine and Covenants 34: 2), and "knew it not." God helped him and enabled him to teach much that was true, and to influence men to repent and live better lives. So the Lord has and does work with many other men. Millions have been helped by these churches, and they are advancing civilization and righteousness.

VOICES.

"There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification."
—1 Corinthians 14: 10.

A variety of voices, sounds, and combinations of sounds greet the ear in this world. All signify something—each has its meaning. Becoming accustomed to these voices, we learn to interpret them with little difficulty, and readily distinguish the difference between the voice of moaning and the voice of glee, between the voices of love and the voices of hatred, between discord and harmony, between musical solemnity and tuneful hilarity.

But there are still other voices, and no less significant than these mentioned, which may be heard and understood, yet not by the hearing of the ear. There is a voice which speaks with such wonderful penetrating power that the ear with all its aptitude is not needed to receive the message; even though a man were deaf he can hear that voice without hindrance. It is not the perfection of the physical ear which qualifies one for hearing messages delivered by the most significant voice ever heard, for the Master said: Some having ears to hear, hear not.

This marvelous voice may speak even to the souls of those who hear during the quiet rest period which we call sleep; thus, while the ear with all its faculties is given to repose, holy voices may speak the marvels of eternity—and man may hear, if he will.

For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man [some men] perceiveth it not. In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction.—Job 33: 14-16.

We read that the voice of the Lord hath spoken to the prophets at various times. Some suppose that his voice was to these prophets like a man's voice which might be heard in the ear. And they think within themselves, How blessed to have lived in those days when God spake to men.

The instances where God has in person spoken to men as with a man's voice may be rare; but the instances when the no less instructive and altogether as accurate voice of God by his Holy Spirit has spoken are not rare, and this voice may be heard by us with as much assurance as when God spoke to Abraham.

"After these things the word of the Lord came to Abram in a vision. . . . And when the sun was going down, a deep sleep fell upon Abram."—Genesis 15:1, 12. It was then that the voice of the Lord spake to Abraham and said: "Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs," etc.

How strange it seems that so many in seeking to know God chase after outward demonstrations, acclaiming throngs and the like, and refuse to believe that the quiet voice of inspiration which formerly revealed him, and which gave instruction to the prophets may also give as positive a revelation now.

The voice of God is indeed a "hidden manna" which the world hath not discovered.

Many religious demonstrations furnish "a great strong wind" similar to the wind mentioned in 1 Kings 19, but the book says: The Lord was not in the wind. Then, in the demonstrations calculated to arrest the attention and capture the senses, after the wind comes a great earthquake: But the Lord was not in the earthquake. Finally, with consummate audacity and with much smoke, these misled and misleading religious demonstrators proclaim a burning and claim it to be the fire of the Holy Ghost; but the book says: After the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire. Then spake a still small voice, and this was the voice of the Lord.

Notice that it was a still voice; therefore, if heard at all, it must be heard by other means than through the ear. It was also a small voice—not by force or demonstration intruding itself upon the senses, but yet discoverable and important, for, "it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entrance of the cave"; and there the voice of the Lord God of hosts revealed his will to the prophet.

The same still small voice is spoken of again in the New Testament Scriptures, and in contrast with the demonstrations which were made before the gaze of ancient Israel when the mountain trembled at the personal presence of God, we read: "For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words." (Hebrews 12: 18, 19.) We then are not come unto a "voice of words." No, it is the still small voice again speaking from heaven.

See that ye refuse not him that speaketh: For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall we not escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven.—Hebrews 12: 25.

Ye are come to mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels.—Hebrews 12: 22.

Are all these voiceless? No; "are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" (Hebrews 1: 14.)

Our greatest need from heavenly ministrations is revelation. This these heavenly messengers supply by taking the things of the Father and showing them unto us, and showing things to come. (John 16: 13.)

We are come, then, not to the "voice of words," but to the voice that without so crude a vehicle as words maketh intelligence manifest. Contact and communion with angels! Audience with "spirits of just men made perfect"! Read Hebrews 12; and note a striking example in Revelation 22: 8, 9, of a Holy Spirit taking the things of the Father and showing them unto John.

This angel, this spirit of a just man made perfect, had communicated many things, a most wonderful revelation of the will of God, and of things to come; this being strictly in the line of his work as an individual representative part of the great Holy Spirit forces, which constitute the third matchless and holy department of the heavenly Trinity. For it was the specific duty of that incomparable Holy Spirit, and of worthies made perfect to lead and guide into all truth, and to minister to heirs of salvation, and to show things to come.

When this Holy Spirit angel had made known the wonderful revelation recorded in the book, John fell down at the feet of the angel to worship. Then spake that angel spirit of a just man made perfect, and said to John: "See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God."

The identity of that messenger would perhaps not have been established had it not been necessary in order to prevent John from worshipping him. The message from God is of greater importance than the messenger. God alone is worthy of worship.

The voices which God employs to instruct and plead with his people are: The still small voice which speaketh from heaven, either in waking hours or by visions of the night; angelic ministration; the voices of his preachers here on earth, for by the foolishness of preaching he has designed to save those who believe. The voice of the written word has also in every age been an important agent in making eternal truth manifest. "Bless the Lord, ye his angels, that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word."—Psalm 103: 20.

Then last of all comes the voice of the tempest, of lightnings, earthquakes, and of woe unto all who will hearken unto no other kind of voice.

For the day cometh that the Lord shall utter his voice out of heaven; the heavens shall shake and the earth shall tremble, and the trump of God shall sound both long and loud, and shall say to the sleeping nations: Ye saints arise and live: Ye sinners stay and sleep until I shall call again. . . . And again, the Lord shall utter his voice out of heaven, saying: Hearken, O ye nations of the earth, and hear the words of that God who made you. . . . How oft have I called upon you by the mouth of my servants, and by the ministering of angels, and by mine own voice, and by the voice of thunderings, and by the voice of lightnings, and by the voice of tempests, and by the voice of earthquakes, and great hailstorms, and by the voice of famines and pestilences of every kind, and by the great sound of a trump, and by the voice of judgment, and by the voice of mercy all the day long, and by the voice of glory and honor, and the riches of eternal life, and would have saved you with an everlasting salvation, but ye would not?—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 5, 6.

In perfect agreement with this testimony Paul testifies as we read in Hebrews 12, "Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven."

We conclude with the words of the Psalmist (Psalm 95: 6-8), and the Lord's invitation as found in Revelation 3: 20.

Oh come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our maker. For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart.

Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

Above every confusion of strange sounds in this world may we discern the loving still small voice, and make our happiness secure by opening the door to welcome the heavenly guest. JAMES E. YATES.

NEW WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW.

AS EXPLAINED BY LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR WAGNER OF NEW YORK.

Much has already been said in a general way about our new Workmen's Compensation Law. The ordinary employee and the ordinary employer, however, have a few practical questions to ask.

What workmen will be insured?

What injuries will be compensated?

What amount will be paid in compensation?

How, when and where will the compensation be paid?

What assurance is provided that compensation will in fact be paid?

What must the employer do to comply with the law?

What must the employee do and how are his rights protected?

Section 2 of the new law names forty-two groups of occupations which are denominated as hazardous. As a general definition, employees in hazardous occupations are all manual laborers who are obliged to use some degree of physical strength in their employment, and who, according to common experience, are liable to meet with injuries in their work. The enumeration in the forty-two groups includes railway workers, machinists, telephone and telegraph linemen and other operators, builders and construction workers, dredgers, longshoremen, excavators, mill hands, miners, masons, iron and steel workers, painters, plumbers, carpenters, plasterers, engineers, and all ordinary members of the laboring community.

All such workmen must be insured by their employers.

Under the common law only such injuries as result from the negligence or willful act of the master could be the basis of a cause of action. If the employee was guilty of fault, contributing in the least degree to the injury, he could not recover; if the injury happened by reason of a risk which was inherent in the business or obvious to the employee his recovery was also barred; if the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant, the suit of the employee in that instance also was dismissed.

Under the compensation law these elements, which militated against the employee, are not now entertained to his disadvantage. Any injury resulting from violence or from disease or infection, resulting from an accident sustained by the workingman while he is engaged in the ordinary pursuit of his occupation, will be compensated, no matter whether caused by his own negligence or the negligence of the employer, unless due to the employee's willful intention or to intoxication. Provision is made for the immediate treatment and attendance, medical and otherwise, to the injured employee, and the supply to him of medicine, hospital service and the like. If the employer failed to provide the same, the injured employee may do so at the expense of the employer.

What amount of compensation will be paid?

To those who drafted the law the most practicable method of computing compensation seemed to be to strike an average weekly wage as the basis. Generally it may be said that the employee's annual wage is three hundred times the amount which he earned in a single day. Working on this basis, the law provides for a graduated scale of compensation, according to the nature and duration of the injuries sustained by the employee considered in conjunction with his weekly earning capacity. Thus, if a workingman has received a daily wage of $4 his annual wage under the law is regarded as $1,200, and his weekly earning would be one fifty-second of $1,200, or $23.08. Most compensation laws now in operation allow an award running from fifty per cent to sixty-six and two thirds per cent of the wages of the injured workman. This law is one of the most liberal. It allows two thirds of the average wage, computed as above, during a period of time dependent on the injury.

In case the employee sustains injuries which will incapacitate him totally and permanently, such as the loss of both hands or both feet or both eyes or any two of such members, he shall receive sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of his average weekly wages during the continuance of his disability.

The workman who received $4 per day, and who is totally and permanently disabled, would, therefore, receive a compensation during the continuance of his disability of two thirds of $23.08, or $15.38 per week. In case the injury is total, but of limited duration, he shall receive the same sum as long as the disability endures in its totality. For partial disability there is a proportioned scale of compensation. For the loss of an index finger the injured employee shall receive two thirds of his weekly wage for forty-six weeks. For the loss of a thumb, for sixty weeks; for the loss of a hand, two hundred and forty-four weeks; for the loss of a leg, two hundred and eighty-eight weeks. The word loss in this connection does not necessarily mean amputation, but the permanent loss of the use of any such member is construed as a loss thereof.

Where the disability incurred is merely partial in its extent and temporary in its duration, so that during the continuance of it the injured employee will be able to engage in work, he shall receive two thirds of the difference between his earning capacity, while suffering the disability, and his average weekly wage computed according to this law. In the illustration above mentioned, where the average wage was $23.08 a week, an employee who after injury earned $15 per week would be allowed as compensation two thirds of $8.08 per week during the time of his disability. But there is a limitation of $3,500 on the amount that he may receive.

If the injury sustained causes the death of the employee, his dependents receive a death benefit. The widow (or dependent husband) shall be entitled to thirty per cent of the average wages of the deceased, during the continuation of widowhood. But if she or he remarry, she or he shall be entitled to a gross sum equal to the amount of compensation which she or he would receive during a period of two years.

In addition there shall be allowed to each child of the deceased, under eighteen years of age, ten per cent of the average wages, until he reaches the age of eighteen years; if there be no widow or dependent widower, each child will be awarded fifteen per cent. Under the death benefit the total amount to be paid to the dependents of the deceased shall not exceed sixty-six and two thirds per cent. Among dependents are listed also parents, grandchildren, grandparents, brothers and sisters, if in the opinion of the commission they were actually dependent upon the deceased workman. The upper limit of wages to be used in computing death benefits shall be $100 per month. In case of compensation for disability as distinguished from death benefits, no award shall exceed $20 per week, if due to the loss of a hand, arm, foot, leg, or eye, and if due to any other cause not more than $15.

As soon as an employee meets with injury he should, under the law, give notice to his employer, and to the Workmen's Compensation Commission. He is required to give this notice within ten days after the injury, and the right to compensation is absolutely barred unless a claim is filed within one year. Such notice, in case of his death, will contain in ordinary language the time, place, nature and cause of the injury. If any valid reason be shown, the commission may excuse the failure of the employee to give notice.

After the giving of such notice the injured workman must, on the request of the commission, submit to a physical examination.

For the first fourteen days after the injuries are received no compensation other than medical aid shall be paid. This provision was made to prevent what has been termed "malingering," or the intentional injury of the workman to himself for the purpose of collecting compensation. After the expiration of this period of fourteen days the employee may present his claim for compensation to the commission, which has full power to determine all questions in connection with any claim. It may make necessary investigation and order hearings.

Within thirty days, however, the commission must either allow or reject the claim. If the award is made in favor of the employee, the insurer of the employer must transmit to the commission the sum allowed the employee, and the commission itself will pay directly to the employee the sum so received. In case the commission decides against the employee or the employer, either party is allowed an appeal to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in most cases.

Thus the employee is given almost immediate relief and spared the expense, delay, and annoyance of a common law litigation.

Every employer must insure by one of four methods. If he proves his financial ability to the satisfaction of the commission he may carry his own insurance; he may subscribe to a casualty company in much the same way as employers at present are insured; he may, with other employers, form a mutual insurance association or join such an association already formed; finally, he may insure in the new State Fund which is created by the law, the custodian of which fund is the State Treasurer. No matter what method of insurance the employer may adopt, the employee shall not be obliged to deal with the insurance company or with the employer, but with the commission directly and alone.

But suppose the employer refuses to insure? In the first place, if an employer failed to secure compensation for his employees, the employee may have recourse to the remedies of the common law in lieu of compensation if he chooses. This is not, by any means, relegating the workingman to his present position, for the employer will be deprived of the defenses by which, in my opinion, ninety per cent of accident cases are to-day determined in favor of the employer. The employer may not avail himself of the defense of contributory negligence, nor may he plead that the injury was caused by the fault of a fellow servant, nor that the employee assumed the risk which caused the injury. It is quite probable that no employer will take the chances of facing litigation with such odds against him.

If the employer fails to pay within ten days after an award is made, the employee may have the commission, in the name of the people of the State, institute a suit to recover the compensation which he would be allowed under this law, together with an added penalty of fifty per cent of the accumulated amount due. The penalty goes into the State Fund.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

The Call to Action.

As we seat ourselves to the task of filling the Column for this issue, a feeling of helplessness almost appalls us, a feeling arising from the vast amount of material upon vital subjects which confronts us. The field in which women may legitimately occupy is very great, and sometimes there seems but little opportunity to qualify for it. It is to be hoped that the readers of our church literature read also some of the splendid literature of the outside world, and are at least observant of the great movements that are tending onward and upward to a better civilization.

We are aware that the wheat and the tares are growing together in the field, which is the world; that there is much in the world that is tending in a downward direction. Evidences of this are very pronounced. But there is also in the world much wheat, much golden grain, ripening for the Master's reaping. We see signs of his coming in the ripening harvest, both of good and of evil.

There are men and women in the world of the spirit of Edwin Markham, who calls to those of leisure to rouse themselves from their sheltered content by the warm hearth and go forth to some field of labor, to some battle in humanity's cause. He cries out:

"Are you sheltered, curled up and content by the world's warm fire?

Then I say that your soul is in danger!"

He points out to us that down in the mire are children of God, and that we are in danger of spiritual blight if we can permit them to remain there without effort on our part to lift them up. Knowing that every good cause meets opposition from the forces that would hold men down, the poet encourages us with the thought that if we peer into the past we shall find swinging on the gibbet of persecution the martyrs of the past who are the heroes of to-day. He closes the poem with this stanza:

"So rouse from your perilous ease: to your Sword and your shield;

Your ease is the ease of the cattle.

Hark, hark, where the bugles are calling!

Out to some field—

Out to some battle!"

The Story of the Aigrette.

The Ladies' Home Journal has on one of the first pages of its latest issue an article above which there appear these headlines: "This is not a pretty story, but it should be read and remembered by every woman."

It is the story of the "aigrette," as it is called. The story, very interestingly and pathetically told, informs us that the aigrette is the plumage of the white heron's mating time, that it appears at that season when she is most attractive to her mate and continues to grow while the eggs are laid and the young are hatched, reaching its greatest beauty about the time when the young come from the shells. It is at this time that the aigrette has its greatest commercial value, the live plumage, torn from the living bird being worth very much more than the dead feathers that are picked up from the ground in the vicinity of the nest.

We read: "It is the custom to shoot the mother birds while the young are in the nests. A few of the feathers of the American egret—or large white heron—can be picked up in the morning about the breeding places, but these 'dead feathers' are only worth three dollars an ounce, while the 'live feathers' are worth fifteen dollars an ounce. My work had led me into every part of Venezuela and Colombia where these birds are found, and I have never discovered or heard tell of any breeding places that were guarded simply for the purpose of gathering the feathers from the ground. The story is absolutely without foundation and has simply been put forth for commercial reasons. The natives of the country, who do virtually all the hunting for feathers, are most cruel and brutal. I have frequently seen them pull the plumes from the wounded birds, leaving the crippled creatures to die from starvation, unable to respond to the starving cries of their young. I have known them to tie and prop up wounded birds on the marsh where they would attract the attention of other birds flying by. These unfortunate decoys are kept in that position until they die of their wounds or from the attacks of insects. I have seen the terrible red ants of that country actually eating out the eyes of the mangled yet still living birds."

The article in the Journal gives us to understand that human murder has even been resorted to at times by those whose bird-butcher business was interfered with. It gives the names of two men, game wardens of certain districts on the coast of Florida, who lost their lives by assassination while in the pursuit of their duties, which called upon them to protect the birds of their territory.

Associated with the article is a statement of an act recently passed by the United States Government which prohibits the importation into the country from foreign lands of all "aigrettes, egret plumes, or so-called white osprey plumes, and the feathers, quills, heads, wings, tails, skins or parts of skins of wild birds, either raw or manufactured, and not for scientific or educational purposes." All such feathers are now seized at the United States port, whether imported for sale or worn. The following States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Vermont, Ohio, Louisiana, Washington, Oregon and California, prohibit the sale of aigrettes.

The Journal adds that it is now a singularly appropriate time for the women of America to make this prohibition universal throughout the country by their refusal to buy or wear these feathers, and to insist that the legislatures of their States shall join those of other States and pass prohibition laws stopping this cruel butchering of the beautiful mother birds.

In connection with the above, it may be well for us to remember that the Lord has said to us in latter-day revelation, "Woe unto him that wasteth flesh or that sheddeth blood and hath no need."

SUBJECTS FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN FEBRUARY.

Prayers for the church, its priesthood and members, that all may earnestly engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality revealed in the revelations to the church. Pray that each member of the church may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but to regard the reputation of a brother or sister as he regards his own. Pray that greater power may be had in the healing of the sick.

Lesson, Revelation 22: 12-17. Memory text, 2 Corinthians 11: 3.

Prayer Union.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sister Stella Winslow writes from Claremore, Oklahoma, asking the prayers of the Union in behalf of her sister, Unice Winslow, who hurt her shoulder nearly three years ago and is still troubled by the injury received. At times she finds it difficult to do her housework. Her general health also is poor, and it is desired that she may improve so as to be able to perform her duties without suffering, which she has not been able to do for some time. The letter closes thus: "We have faith in the prayers of the Union, and desire to live worthy to receive the blessing."

Another letter is from Sister Rosalia Watwus, who desires to have her name placed before the Union, that the dear Lord may be besought to bless her with his Holy Spirit, and that he may take away the darkness which is troubling her, that she may be distressed no more by it. This letter contains the appeal: "Dear sisters, do not forget a sister in distress. My prayers are with you all for the upbuilding of the work of the Lord in all its different branches."

Another troubled sister who withholds her name asks the Prayer Union to pray for her boy, who has a good heart but has been led away from the path of right and right doing by the influence of evil companions. He is at an age past her control. She is greatly distressed over his future and the possible consequences of his reckless ways. She sincerely begs the interest of the sisters' prayers, that God in his mercy may rescue her boy. The three last words of this letter are italicized, and indicate the heavy burden upon the heart of the mother who makes the plea in his behalf. There is no question of her having prayed much. May the prayers of sympathetic Saints be added to hers, and may all the suffering ones who seek relief at the Father's hand be comforted and strengthened to finish the race and the labor of life in peace.

Sister J. R. Fry writes from Missouri Valley, asking the prayers of the Union in behalf of her sick companion, that the Lord may have mercy upon him and restore him to health and enable him to care for his family. There are five little ones in this home who greatly need their father's care. May God look upon them in tender mercy, and upon the mother upon whom heavy burdens of care are resting, and may our prayers be united in asking blessing upon them, that comfort and healing may be administered to them through the power of the heavenly Father.

Sister Dora Gore of Peryear, Tennessee, earnestly requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be relieved from an affliction which rests heavily upon her, and from which she has been suffering for three years. She is unable to do her work, or even to be up much of late. She desires to be restored that she may live to raise her two little ones "in the way the Lord would have them go."

Be sincere; others noting your sincerity will give their confidences and be likewise sincere with you.—Byron Williams.

Keep going—keep going—keep going. That is the voice of conscience in the souls of the truly great.—System.

Letter Department

KINGFISHER, OKLAHOMA, December 31, 1913.

Editors Herald: I wish to thank those who so kindly assisted in the Christmas tree for the Lamanites at Calumet, by sending things to put on the tree. The tree was a success; it was simply beautiful. It stood near the center of the district tent, covered with beautiful decorations and laden with presents, surrounded by three hundred Indians, Brother and Sister Christensen, Brother and Sister Sanders, Brother Henry Hershey, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jarvil, Mrs. Wilcox (the field matron) and the writer. A very pleasant and profitable evening was spent. The weather was very bad, or we would have had many more Indians.

The work among them is moving along very well, though we have been too busy among the white people to do much for them; but Reuben and Philip have done some effectual work among them and they appreciate it.

Our new church at Eagle City is nearly completed, and we are proud of it and the work there, under the management of a number of earnest young people. We also have another good band of earnest workers who have taken courage after a good meeting we held at Reeding. We baptized four. They now have a splendid Sunday school and many friends, as well as some opposers of the work. We went from there to the first altar of prayer erected in the State, at old Matthewson, where Brother J. R. Lambert planted the work about twenty years ago and gathered the first fruits of mission work in Oklahoma, Brother and Sister Aylor and others being some of the first. That first branch is still in working order, under the leadership of Brother H. K. Rowland. The good Spirit is still there to encourage and bless. We have another good band of workers at Calumet under the leadership of Brother A. W. Sanders.

This is the last day of the old year. We hope to do more for the work in the coming year. We need the cooperation of the many instead of the few. If all would do their duty there would be no church debt, and the world would soon be warned. We have some noble, willing workers. We solicit all to take hold and work with a will the coming year.

As bishop's agent, I wish to call attention to the fact that my address is Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

HUBERT CASE.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, December 31, 1913.

Editors Herald: Brethren Stone, McKim, and Ebeling were with us at our June conference, the last named on his way to the coast. Brother Chase with his wife and daughter arrived at Niagara Falls, June 12, leaving the twenty-fifth with Brother McKim to engage in tent work. After one or two trying setbacks, having one of their tents burned down, necessitating a new one, which was promptly purchased by first aid, they got to more satisfactory tent work, and finally, by permission of the chiefs who were friendly, in spite of strenuous objections on the part of their Baptist teachers, pitched their gospel tent on the Tuscarora Indian Reservation, near Lewiston. They were treated with the utmost kindness and hospitality. The Indian is a good friend if treated right, and likes to see fair play. They were attentive as an audience, and some of the brightest ones will undoubtedly some day submit to baptism. Brother Chase is wise in not urging it.

We took some trips by team to the reservation the fourteenth and twenty-first of September. The second time we stayed for the evening service and came home in the dark and rain.

Sister Chase and daughter Alice are settled in Ithaca for the winter, and Alice is hard at her books at Cornell, to become a full-fledged "grad" next June. Just now they are spending the holidays with Brother Chase and the son who has been in Buffalo some weeks. Brother McKim is trying to do his part in this field. He is a studious chap, and will have plenty stored up none can take from him, except as he wishes to impart. Before Brother Booker left us in March, there was held a short series of meetings, which no doubt helped in encouraging the Saints.

In February we were favored by Brother R. Etzenhouser giving us some lectures with his lantern. In April Brother J. T. Thompson, while doing some revival work on the other side of the river, was invited to speak for us. He gave us a fine discourse on "God's plan of equality." The twenty-eighth of May our Ladies' Aid held a strawberry festival at our home and cleared a nice sum, the young ladies assisting.

On Halloween we held our first supper in the basement of the chapel. The men, whose chairman was Brother George Landes, worked faithfully to get the place in fit condition. It looked good to us. Since then the furnace committee have turned in their hard earned funds, and we have a nice new furnace installed. By the efforts of the branch improvement committee, we have a new walk laid in front of the church. The branch will to-morrow pay off one hundred dollars on the principal of our chapel debt, the amount paid every six months since the chapel was built. Our Ladies' Aid has done a good turn every time a payment was due.

In June the Oneida Community Limited, in whose employ are my husband and three more of our branch officers, gave their men a picnic to Oneida, New York, near Syracuse, by special train, meeting all expenses of the three hundred seventy-three men. They expect to move their plant from here to Oneida or thereabouts in about six months, where the rest of their interests and property are. My husband was on the grub committee, in fact almost the whole responsibility of it was left to him, so he awarded our Ladies' Aid the contract of putting up lunches, helping us by buying the necessities at wholesale. A nice crowd turned out to help us at the critical time; the boxes were on their way to the train by twelve o'clock the night before the boys left, and we thereby cleared over seventy-five dollars. How was that?

When Thanksgiving came we made another venture, not with an object of making money, though we came out ahead by one dollar, which we turned over to the missionary fund. The branch appointed a committee of four, who figured, consulted, and concluded about how much each family would need to be taxed, and all who could came to the church (our new basement) for a Thanksgiving reunion dinner; yes, and supper, too. A committee provided a program, which was rendered before supper. Then a nice, big crowd of Saints repaired to the upper auditorium and enjoyed a good spiritual prayer meeting.

Funds for advertising are being raised prior to special work to be done by Brother Chase during the month of January. He planned to help strengthen us on all lines rather than devote the whole week to preaching services, which plan we think a good and wise one.

Buffalo Branch is located in a more desirable place on Vermont Street, 373 we believe is the number. One drawback is the two flights of stairs. They still have building or buying in view as soon as expedient.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor to our home, coming as it does with precious truths and encouraging letters. We hardly know what we would do without it; many times our hearts have been cheered and comforted by reading its valuable pages.

This year just ended has been the greatest year in my life. Although baptized when a boy of about ten years, and being now nearly fifty years of age, I feel that this year I have done more than in any other for the Master who has done so much for me.

All of us as a family, with the exception of one boy, are striving to do our duty in the church. How our hearts have ached, how sad we have felt at times when we think of our wayward boy. How earnestly we have pleaded with him, but all seemingly to no avail. We have fasted and prayed on his behalf that God through his Spirit might strive with him that he may yet do what is right.

We have a nice little church building at Scranton, seating about one hundred and sixty-five. Some of the Saints are striving by sacrifice to pay for this church; and I notice that those who do so are the ones who are advancing, and seem to enjoy attending the meetings.

The preaching meetings are fairly well attended. We have some very spiritual sermons by our esteemed pastor, T. U. Thomas. He is doing a good work at Scranton. He is an all round worker, teaches in the Sunday school and Religio. attends the singing school, and helps in every way. We hope he may labor a few years at Scranton.

My desire is that the work of our Master may prosper and flourish, that the honest may be gathered in and that his Saints may come up higher until we all reach the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

I often think of the sacrifice some of our missionaries are making for the spread of the gospel, leaving home and loved ones to carry the glad tidings and tell the joyful news.

I hope to remain faithful and true to that which God has committed to my trust, and when Christ comes to meet him with a smile and receive the reward of the faithful.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,

LOT BISHOP.

SARNIA, ONTARIO, January 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: As a few of God's creation we are striving to keep the camp fire blazing in this place. This is a very hard place for Latter Day Saints to work in. There is a church on almost every corner, and they preach, teach, and practice everything but the true gospel. There are about thirty Saints here. We hold Sunday school and preaching services and prayer meetings in a private house. We are so thankful we have the privilege to do so. We also hold our sacrament service the second Sunday in each month. God always blesses us when we do our part. He has never forsaken us in either sickness or health.

In the way of testimony, I must truthfully say that God has in the year just past and gone raised me from my bed of affliction when three doctors told me that I must go at once to the hospital and undergo an operation. I am thankful that we have a greater Physician, one who never fails us and one who is able to raise us as it were from the dead. My earnest desires are that God will give me strength to conquer every foe, that I may live in a manner which is pleasing to my heavenly Father.

We are thankful that God has never left us to fight the battle alone. He has sent assistance from Port Huron. Elder C. C. Whitford comes to help us. We have Elder Clatworthy, and many times Elder Johnston comes from Courtright. These servants are always welcome here.

Our hearts have been sad, as death has claimed one of our number, Ruth Isabell Darrack, Sister Darrack's oldest child. She was three years and five months old. She died on the third of December. We do not know why this little bud of promise was taken from us, but this we do know, that God has taken only what he has given.

Wishing all a happy New Year, I am,

Your sister in the one gospel,

MRS. J. J. PARROTT.

ALTOONA, IOWA, January 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: I do not want to miss one number of the HERALD or Ensign. They contain all the preaching I have. I want to keep in line with those of like faith. There are no Saints near where I live, and I have no opportunity to attend the branch to which I belong.

My companion does not belong to any church, and does not think it necessary for me to attend, if it is, I can go to church (Christian) nearer home. But that does not satisfy me. I am too old to walk six miles, consequently have to remain at home. But I rejoice in this latter-day work, for I know it is of God. I strive to do my duty from day to day as I understand it. The Lord blesses me abundantly. I have trials that are hard to bear. I go to the Lord humbly and in fervent prayer, asking for blessings, and he never denies.

My husband was seriously injured yesterday, and was suffering severe pain, having had his foot crushed. It made my heart ache to see him in so much agony. I made it a subject of prayer, asking the Lord to ease the pain that he might have rest and ease to his shattered nerves. He rested after that, and his foot was much better. My heart went out to God in thankfulness. When I read the letters of my brothers and sisters telling of their blessings in answer to prayer I can believe that they are true.

I have been in this work over sixty-five years, and am still rejoicing in the truth, the gospel of the Son of God. I desire to live faithful the rest of my days, that I may receive the crown of righteousness.

ROUTE 3, box 28.

Editors Herald: It affords me much joy to read the HERALD. I have been in the church about two years, and am very glad to live in these last days when the gospel of Jesus Christ has been brought to earth again. I was baptized by U. W. Greene in the River Manasquan, New Jersey, September 2, 1911, while at the reunion of the New York and Philadelphia District. I know I am in the work of God. He made it known unto me while there. I am nineteen years old.

I am the only one of our family in the church. I hope to live faithful to the end. I have been wonderfully blessed. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may love my Father who is in heaven, and that I may be humble and keep his commandments.

Brother T. U. Thomas, of Sharon, Pennsylvania, is with us now, and is doing much good in the cause of the Master.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN JENKINS.

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA, January 2, 1914.

Editors Herald: We sometimes hear it said that the whole church is sleeping. If this be the case, there are certainly some very busy somnambulists in it, who do not only walk in their sleep, but talk and work also. A church that is intelligent enough to receive revelations from the Lord, build publishing houses and college, old folks' homes, children's home, sanitarium, boarding houses, temples, church buildings, etc., in their sleep, ought certainly to be able to make things move when they wake up.

It will be a surprise to quite a number of the Saints, and especially the ministry who have imagined that they have left homes and families and loved ones, and traversed hills and vales, lakes and rivers, hot and burning desert sands, broad and briny deeps, suffered all kinds of hardships, and made all kinds of sacrifices, to wake up some time and find that they have only been dreaming. Oh, what a nightmare! But then they can draw some consolation from the remembrance of the many times that they were comforted and blessed by the holy and divine Spirit of God that came to them in their dreams, while they thought they were working for the Master.

We have a noble little band of sleepers or somnambulists, or Saints, or whatever you have a mind to call them, here in San Jose. They are working together in unity and harmony, and enjoy meeting in their new church, which they have erected for the service of God.

Sister Hattie Burgess, as superintendent of the Sunday school, and Sister Minnie Bates, as president of the Religio, with their noble bands of helpers are striving to make the work a success in this place. The branch officers, from deacon to president, are working harmoniously. I would not forget the choir. The pastor says he can not find words to express his appreciation of the help they are giving him in his work. They are trying to comply with the revelation to the church in regard to the song service.

Do we have any trials? Of course we have trials, plenty of them. There is where we get our experience; and the experience enables us to bear with one another, and feel for one another, and brings about that brotherly love, sociability and oneness that characterizes the true Saints of God. Trial is the furnace in which we are purified; and we all want to be purified so that we can dwell with the Saints in Zion.

There have been six baptized in our new church building in less than a year. Most of them are getting started on the right foot, keeping the whole law of liberty, paying their tithing from the start, helping with branch expenses, and paying on church and college debts. They are rejoicing in the Spirit and the light that has come to them through the gospel.

The Saints here are looking forward to and making preparations for the district conference that is to be held here in the spring. They are anticipating a joyous time.

Sister C. A. Beebe and daughter, and Sister F. W. Houghton, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, are spending the winter here in San Jose. Sister Houghton is also a daughter of Sister Beebe. They seem to be enjoying our climate. We are having a model winter. The mercury rose to sixty-four degrees above zero during the Christmas season.

Sister Peacock, also residing in the East, is spending the winter here. They were a little bit surprised to see ripe blackberries on the vines at Christmas time.

Let us not become discouraged and give up the fight, but let our watchword be, On to victory.

Your brother in the conflict, with the armor on,

C. W. HAWKINS.

WABASH, INDIANA, December 30, 1913.

Editors Herald: I wish to tell how the Lord remembers his children. There are only four isolated Saints here. Brother William Dowker and Brother Clyde Ellis came here four weeks ago and preached for us. Brother Ellis stayed three weeks. Oh, what good sermons! It encouraged us so much. We hope these brethren can come again soon, as some are eager to hear more.

I know this work is of God. While I have done many things that I should not have done, yet I hope the good Lord will forgive me. I want to do more this new year than I ever did before. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may stand firm for the truth.

My husband was a member of the United Brethren Church here, and I was treasurer of the aid society for six years. When my husband wanted to introduce his preacher to Brethren Dowker and Ellis he wouldn't speak to them. Mr. Quinn says he is done with him.

Your sister in Christ,
SUSAN QUINN.

HOOKER, OKLAHOMA, December 27, 1913.

Editors Herald: In reading the HERALD I find that very many are blessed in having a minister visit their isolated districts, and in hearing once more the dear old gospel of Christ. If any of the Saints should happen this way we wish them to stop and visit us. There are only a few Saints in this neighborhood. I am longing and patiently waiting, also trying to do what I can by letting neighbors read my Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants and the few tracts I have. I am having some difficulty in bringing some to understand through my humble way of explaining, but have others thinking. I believe an elder could do good. Wish to add that Hooker is on the Rock Island, almost on a straight line from Kansas City to Dalhart, Texas.

Hoping and praying that the Lord will bless all his people and give the ministry added strength to do his work, I again ask that if any come this way they call, I am

Yours in truth,
ROY COMYERS.

CRUMLYN HOUSE, LLANSAMLET, WALES, December 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: Your ever interesting pages come to greet and cheer many who through circumstances are debarred from associations such as are enjoyed by those who have the privilege of being near to a good live branch of Saints. We moved to this place two months ago, where many years ago there was a branch known as Morriston, or Llansamlet. Some of the then members emigrated to the United States, others moved elsewhere, and for a period of about ten years or more no meetings of any kind were held, the branch continuing in name only. Brother E. B. Morgan was the chief instrument in reviving the work, which continued with good interest for six years.

As several of our members were resident at a place called Skewen, I moved there with my family with a view to building up a good, strong branch, and we labored to that end. In a short time some moved away a distance, and the work failed to receive proper support, financially or otherwise. So, after continuing the burden of carrying on the work for some time, with the assistance Brother Fred Jones and one or two others were able to give, we were compelled to give up the place of worship the Saints had rented, and discontinue meetings there. The branch has now been further removed and the name changed to Neath, where the Saints resident have rented a small place of worship. The prospects are brightening, if the district can assist in retaining the Neath chapel.

I read with much interest Brother T. Jones's letter in the HERALD. I have no hesitation in asserting that Brother Thomas ought to have been retained on our field staff.

The work is low in Western Wales, with little real gospel life or energy left. The last conference of the district held at Aberaman was the best and most spiritual one that has convened in the district for some years, and was characterized by the absence of anyone or anything of a jarring nature. All was peace, harmony, and unity, and the few present partook of that Spirit which binds our hearts in Saintlike love.

Brother Meredith, of Birmingham, was present, and it was good to listen to his interesting and edifying talks. Brethren J. Evans, T. Jones, and A. Y. Jones were present from the Eastern District, and all were made to rejoice in a glorious outpouring of God's Spirit. The promises made to the Saints were all of a very encouraging nature.

It is pleasant and reviving to hear of the many testimonies and experiences of others through your pages, which to my mind are more interesting than ever. I was struck with the letter and testimony of Sister Pitt in the issue of December 3. I well remember when Brother F. G. Pitt was here on a mission in 1897 or 1898. I then told him he would have to return to this side again. The late Brother A. N. Bishop was about sailing to the United States and I predicted he would return here within two years, which prediction had a literal fulfillment.

In the years 1896 and 1897 we had the same experiences here which others had in some other parts of the church in regard to administrations, which experiences were in harmony with the word given through our beloved President, to the effect that prophesying, over the sick had been a source of trouble among the people.

The Open Letter to the Clergy by Brother E. A. Smith is fine, and all his editorials more than up-to-date. I do not say this flatteringly, but I do hope Brother Elbert will be kept humble to occupy the position he is so well qualified to fill. We recently had the pleasure of a visit from our mission president, Brother W. H. Greenwood. We are looking forward to having another district conference in February, when we trust it will be convenient for both him and Brother May to be present.

I trust that the way will open that we may again be able to revive the work in this place, and that meantime the scattered ones will be encouraged to continue battling on for the spread of truth. All the powers of men and devils have tried to prevail against the work here for the last few years, and there are few left with the gospel fire burning. May God speed the right, is my prayer.

Your brother in hope,
HENRY ELLIS.

GEORGETOWN, INDIANA, December 23, 1913.

Editors Herald: In company with J. W. Metcalf we held a twelve-day meeting at the Routh Schoolhouse, near Corydon, where we had a good interest, notwithstanding several meetings were going on all around us. Four persons were baptized, and others no doubt will follow soon.

Brother Metcalf has gone to Louisville. I am now at Byrnsville, where I expect to remain over Christmas.

Conditions seem to be improving at Byrnsville. Three were baptized here during the summer by Brother E. O. Byrn.

Editors Herald: After uniting with the church I saw wisdom in taking the HERALD to keep in touch with the movements of the church along all lines. I have read the many articles with interest; none have escaped my notice.

To-day, while reading Brother Savage's article, I wondered why the elders sent into that mid-pacific mission were not equipped with some of the instruments and articles used by mariners who sail the trackless sea with ease, knowing their position at all times. It is not necessary to have a chronometer to be nearly correct. The system of dead-reckoning can be easily acquired; this with some judgment will give a man nearly a correct position.

Again, our men might be equipped with a chart of the Pacific Ocean, embracing the Island Mission, a sextant, and a nautical almanac, all of which could be bought for a small sum. With such an equipment a man could get his exact latitude any day when the heavens were clear. The longitude could be obtained by the dead-reckoning system, assisted by the latitude. These applied to the chart would give the position of the ship, and course and distance to the place of destination. If I am not able to make myself understood in writing, I could face to face, for I know whereof I speak, having been master of seagoing vessels for sixteen years.

One one of my passages from Gregorytown, West Indies Islands to Baltimore, Maryland, I paid strict attention to dead-reckoning. When arriving off the Virginia Capes the position by dead-reckoning and time sights were very near alike.

I can imagine the thoughts of Brother Savage and his crew of native braves, when that tempest came upon them with nothing but a chip compared with the very large ships that sail the broad expanse of the Pacific Ocean. What if they had been to windward of Hereheretue, not knowing their position or how to steer to avoid it. They would have landed ahead of time, but not in as healthy a condition as they did later on.

All the above articles could be purchased for a small sum of money, and they could be kept there for the missionaries. Or some man could be educated along nautical lines and in turn educate some of those natives, so that those passages could be made with less unnecessary worry of mind and loss of time.

I can imagine the difference between some of those passages, and those when Brother Burton was out there, because I know what he would do, with his practical knowledge, in determining his position, course, and distance by the various methods of navigation.

How nice it must have been before the earth was divided, and how nice it will be when this world will be blessed by and by. We are looking by the eye of faith, and see it not far in the future.

In gospel bonds,
GEORGE H. KNOWLTON.

MOUNT PLEASANT, SOUTH BRISBANE,
QUEENSLAND, December 12, 1913.

Editors Herald: I give my testimony with reference to being led into the church, thinking it might encourage some forlorn and shipwrecked wanderer.

In April I was seeking baptism of the Plymouth Brethren, but through some disagreement they refused me, the cause being about some one taking the sacrament, not being baptized. I fell in company with a young man, a son of one of the brethren,—who was preparing himself for baptism into the Baptist Church in Ipswich, and who wanted me to be baptized with him. I did not promise to do so, but told him I would wait till I saw the brethren. So on the night of April 18, 1913, the friend and I at parting for the night, made a promise that we would both pray God for guidance which way I should go, or into which church I should be baptized, and that we would meet on the next night.

I knelt down at my bedside and prayed to God to guide me into the fold whither he would have me go. I met my friend at the appointed place, and the first words he said were, "We won't go up there to-night," meaning the Baptist minister's house. He went across the street and he introduced me to Brother Frank Edgeworth, of Ipswich, a total stranger to me.

Brother Edgeworth and I conversed about the churches and their positions. He told me about the Reorganized Church, of which I had never before heard. He told me of the doctrine and invited me to his home. I went. A few nights after he read to me from the Church History, and loaned me the Doctrine and Covenants. On May 3 we went to Brisbane and I was baptized on the 4th.

I knew my prayers had been answered. About a month after being baptized I prayed to God to take me into his service. This prayer has been answered. I was called and went to Brisbane, leaving work and all in Ipswich. I secured work in Brisbane in a few days. I was ordained a teacher on October 14, and was elected as presiding teacher there December 9.

I would like the Saints in Lamoni and elsewhere to pray that I may become strong in the faith.

Your brother in Christ,
REINHOLD CARL THEODOR SCHULZE.

EAST PHARSALIA, NEW YORK, December 28, 1913.

Editors Herald: The celebration of the birth of Christ our Lord this Christmastide was a grand success, if it is followed by the Saints heaping coals of fire upon the heads of individuals about us. We helped the Congregational people with their Christmas program and they in turn helped us. They had a fine evening and a fair attendance; we had a very stormy evening and a good attendance—over sixty as against about twenty last year. How is that?

The Baptist people had their entertainment the next night, so certain of the Saints, including the writer, attended their exercises, which were not as good as usual. A man who resides near by was called upon for remarks. While going up on the rostrum he purposely fell headlong. Gathering himself up he took a brush broom from his pocket and brushed his clothing, making some remark about his apparel.

He told what he called a "love story," which was enough to make respectable people blush with shame. He then made remarks about the "Mormons," such as, "We don't need any Joe Smith or his followers around here." He gave the dates of birth and marriage of the Prophet, and undertook to represent that he walked the plank at Afton, cast out devils as big as woodchucks and that the people seeing them ran away, etc. Then more of his "love story." On the whole it was disgusting indeed. Several people left the room until he was through with his remarks.

When the entertainment was over the people seemed to be thinking of "home, sweet home" rather than visiting, save a few who came to the Saints to offer an apology. The next day one Baptist expressed himself thus, "I have been to their church and have been used well, and now to have them come to our church and be insulted that way is disgusting."

Disgusting as it was, I can only praise God that it was so, and that the Saints were there to hear it. I believe it has been the means of breaking down much prejudice; and that if the Saints are faithful they will see that God is able to make the wrath of man to praise him, and will see his promises fulfilled.

So as we strive to bear with patience the tongue of slander which is lashing the Saints from time to time, we take comfort in the thought that "it is darkest near to dawn." Paul started on his mission of imprisoning the Saints; God changed his mission. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

There seems to be no work here for missionaries at present, except among the Saints. The Saints must do the work among the people. Will they do it? We trust they will, and that God will add his blessing.

Hoping for the welfare of the cause of Zion, I am
Your brother in Christ,

F. H. RATHBUN.

LITTLE SIOUX, IOWA, December 28, 1913.

Editors Herald: Looking back over my past life, I can see where I have made many mistakes. I was baptized into the church when eight years old, but refused to move forward when the Spirit of God directed me. By refusing, the Spirit was withdrawn from me, and I was left alone in this wicked world. But in due time the Lord saw fit to put out his loving hand and to bestow his kind Spirit to lead and direct me back into the family and fold of God, for which I feel to thank and praise his holy name. I can truthfully say that I have seen more joy, peace, and comfort since renewing my covenant with my God than I ever saw in all the pleasures of the world. The reason why I write this is that others may profit by my experience.

I would say to the young in the church, when moved upon by the Spirit, Do not say no, but go forth and help do all you can to forward this great work, for it is the work of God. Pray for me that I may ever be found faithful, and always ready to lend a helping hand in this great and glorious work that we all love so much.

Your brother in Christ,
CHARLES CRABB.

SCRANTON, KANSAS, December 30, 1913.

Editors Herald: I wish you a very happy New Year, and that our heavenly Father may bless you with greater blessings than ever before. This is wishing you much, for the HERALD comes laden with good things every week to feed the hungry souls of men. Editorials and articles give us food for thought, and make us glad when we peruse the pages.

We see the church is making headway in spite of all adverse powers that are contending against the principles of truth and righteousness. Progress is our watchword. If we want to gain the crown we must progress.

Our testimonies of twenty or thirty years' standing are not food for to-day. The same Spirit that bore us witness then must be revived all along our lives. It is that daily testimony that builds our characters, finally to be approved of God.

Love is the abiding principle of righteousness; and when moved by faith to establish love, then we place ourselves in condition for God to work with us, and not until then can our labor be accepted of God. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life.

To believe in Christ we must believe in all the holy counsel he reveals to us. In this counsel he commands us to love one another. If ye love me ye will keep my commandments. The man that knows not love, knows not God, for God is love. Love is the abiding principle. Where should the love begin? In our homes. Home is not sweet home without love. Love brings contentment and happiness and make us a joyful class of people. And God only recognizes us as his people when we love one another. This is his commandment, and to keep his commandments is life everlasting.

As this is the beginning of another year, if possible let us strive to do more for the cause of truth than ever before. There is room for improvement. Then let us improve and use all the talents we have received, in the Spirit of love and wisdom, that we might be profitable servants, remembering at all times that the unprofitable are cast out into outer darkness.

May God bless you all this year, that it may be a profitable year to our God.

JAMES BAILLIE.

Extracts from Letters.

Writing of a bazaar and dinner given by the Des Moines, Iowa, Ladies' Aid, Sister Mary Smith, Des Moines, says: "Our dining hall was filled with hungry guests. We had supper to finish up the food. After we had figured up the money we had made we found we had a hundred and fifty dollars."

W. G. Kimball, Toledo, Ohio: "The Toledo Saints held their two-day meeting November 8 and 9. An enjoyable time was had. A raging blizzard did not disturb us in our spiritual feast, nor hinder two precious souls from being buried in the waters of baptism. We look forward to other similar meetings in the near future, when we expect to entertain the district conference. The work is opening up here and quite a number are interested in the gospel message."

Australia.

We are just on the eve of departure for New South Wales, to attend their district conference at Christmas. This gathering is the largest of the kind in the southern hemisphere, and is the only one that has a mission session, which was introduced about three years ago with a view to paving the way for a mission conference.

The church work in Australia moves slowly onward. We have seemingly reached that period in our history when more permanent phases of the great movement are necessarily manifesting themselves. I refer to the teaching of the young in the auxiliary societies and aids, or helps of the church. There is also a movement on foot to establish libraries of all good books, with the literary works of the church as a kind of nucleus. These movements within the church can not be too highly commended, as they are in harmony with the Spirit's admonition, and, furthermore, with the consensus of human experience and testimony upon growth in all the past ages.

Interest amongst outsiders is hard to create; especially is it difficult to add membership to old branches, half of the membership of which are either scattered or dead spiritually. The city branches seem to need the assistance of a missionary all the time to keep them progressing. There being no high priests to do that work, the seventies are anchored and tied to these branches, thus preventing the prosecution of missionary work in new fields.

There seems to be a great need of high priests for this field, and also a few more seventies of our own people, who will not need to run to and fro to America at such expense to the church. There are numbers of young men now almost if not altogether fitted—saving in experience—for this work. We are expecting some benefit to come to the missionary work here through the efforts of Brethren Griffiths and Miller. The former, especially, in his capacity as president of that important quorum, the Twelve, should give us some eye openers in mission work in general, and in procedure along all lines.

We shall all be sorry to part with Brother C. A. Butterworth, if he departs for America as contemplated. He is quite an Australian now, in everything save the right of citizenship; and it will perhaps be difficult in the future for the church to find an apostle who will settle here and care for the work as assiduously as he has done. He has grown gray-headed in the mission, and has witnessed great development during his stewardship. I am sure all wish him well, wherever he may go.

Australia is a great field for mission activity, as it is a great and growing country, with no state church, and equality for all creeds under the law. There is a great deal of prejudice against everything "Mormon," and that one word no doubt hinders our progress considerably. If we could suddenly wake up with a new name, and no history of the Brighamite order to eternally meet, the church would speed along as of yore; but as a consequence of the apostasy we have a seeming odium which is hard to remove. This absorbs too much of our time and effort to permit the necessary activity for rapid development.

However, there must be a stumblingstone in every age. It was the term Christian in early ages; in this age it is Mormon. Isaiah said they would make a man an offender for a word. Are we not seeing the fulfillment of this prophecy?

Hoping to be able through His grace, to continue faithful until the end, and to see Zion flourish on the hills in a redeemed condition, I am

News from Branches

Cleveland, Ohio.

Cleveland Branch has made a fresh start to forge ahead, with Elder T. A. McNeil, our newly-elected president, in the lead.

Arrangements are being made for taking care of the visitors at the district convention to be held here this spring.

Sunday evening a priesthood meeting was held, with seventeen in attendance. It was arranged to have regular and more frequent meetings of the priesthood for study and progress.

When you come to Cleveland, take Wade Park car and stop at seven hundred fifteen.

Buffalo, New York.

At the annual business meeting of the branch the following officers were elected: William Brothers, president; Frederick Harper, priest; Charles Koehler, teacher; Daniel Joy, deacon; Anna Brothers, organist and secretary; Sister Georgia Spinnett, librarian and chorister; Frederick Harper, book agent; Lydia M. Weegar, correspondent. A fine spirit and harmony prevailed. We hope much good may be accomplished the coming year. We were pleased to have with us three of our missionaries, Brethren Hanson, Stone, and McKim.

The work in this city is moving along nicely. We have a good live Sunday school, under the supervision of Sister Spinnett, with a good working force of officers and teachers. We have also a splendid Religio, for which we feel indebted to the efforts of Brother Koehler, president, and his co-workers.

Quite a number of our active workers have moved elsewhere during the past year, but others have moved in; so we hope to go on accomplishing the work intrusted to our care.

It is with sadness that we record the death of one of our little Sunday school members, Marion Koehler, daughter of Charles and Charlotte Koehler. She passed away January 15, after a very short illness. Our hearts go out in love and sympathy to the bereaved family. CORRESPONDENT.

"Nothing great is lightly won;
Nothing won is lost.
Every good deed nobly done
Will repay the cost."

February Century.

The midwinter fiction number is the February expression of "the new spirit of the century." This issue contains seven short stories, including "The temple of the countless gods," a modern Japanese romance by John Luther Long, author of "Madam Butterfly"; "The last war in the world," a story of the future by H. G. Wells. The latter is a flight of the imagination and a vigorous protest against war.

"The Mexican Menace," by W. Morgan Shuster, author of "The strangling of Persia"; and "Racial consequences of immigration," one of Professor Edward A. Ross's important series; and "The boy who goes wrong," by H. Addington Bruce, are among the more serious articles. Percy Mack-aye's bird masque "Sanctuary" is the leader of the poetic contributions; and ten pages are devoted to the comic section, "In lighter vein."

Book Reviews.

HAZEL.—This is the title of a recent juvenile by Mary White Ovington, author of Half a Man. In this work, published by Crisis Publishing Company, 26 Versey Street, New York, at one dollar, the author very cleverly presents the simple story of a little negro girl of the North who in a visit to Alabama in quest of health learns for the first time of the social disadvantages of her people. The story is written especially for negro children, out of the richness of the author's experience among them, though it can but appeal to every child. A touch of the South is given the simple story, together with a suggestion of the need of the patient teaching of the negro race. While the story deals almost exclusively with negro characters, yet these are portrayed in a manner so masterly, the characters being introduced so unintrusively that even the prejudices of the most fastidious in the matter of segregation can hardly be provoked. This little volume is invaluable as a means of touching the hearts of the children of both races, the one with the need of restraint and dignity under the chafings and disadvantages of a race, the other with a need of consideration and helpfulness for those who, if of a darker hue, yet with hearts of feeling and with ambitions for achievement and longings for place.

PRAYER, WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT DOES, by Reverend Samuel McComb, D. D., offered by Harper Brothers, New York, at fifty cents, is a neat and attractive little volume of thirty-eight pages. In this little book Doctor McComb notes the passing of the past generation of deadening materialism and the revival of the belief in prayer. Prayer is defined as a communion with a Deity of personal attributes, operating in the world of facts as a patent force against sin and disease, calculated to develop a better self. To be effective, prayer must arise from a sincerity unfolding spiritual development, and must be positive in character.

SOME FIRST STEPS IN HUMAN PROGRESS.—This is the title of a book issued by the Chautauqua Press, written by Professor Frederick Starr of the University of Chicago. It recounts the first steps supposed to have been taken by men in fire-making, food-getting, hunting, cultivating plants, domesticating animals, metal working, manufacturing of weapons, basketry, pottery, ornaments, boats, sledges, etc.; also the origin of gesture, speech, writing, marriage, custom, and law, together with a treatise upon anthropology. There is an interesting chapter on customs and laws which gives an account of forms of government among the American Indians in both North and South America, which can not fail to be interesting to Latter Day Saints. And while they may not indorse the chapter on the origin of religion, (which traces the conception of the soul to ideas first dawning in the mind of man as the result of dreams in which he became convinced that he possessed a spirit, owing to the fact that in dream his personality seemed to leave the body) still the book as a whole will be valuable to those who want to get in touch with present-day ideas held by scientists along these lines. Chautauqua Press, Chautauqua, New York, cloth bound, $1, postpaid.

PEANUT.—Albert Bigelow Paine, the biographer of Mark Twain understands boys is proved by his 'Hollow Tree' books by Harper Brothers, Franklin Square, New York. We quote the following review of this book: "Wholesomeness and vitality of sentiment are the qualities which Albert Bigelow Paine has put into his story of a boy's faithfulness, Peanut, in larger measure than most writers who keenly appreciate the child-spirit are able to do. That the biographer of Mark Twain understands boys is proved by his 'Hollow Tree' books—those sole rivals of Uncle Remus. This new book is the story of a boy, has, besides sympathy and story-telling skill, a sincerity and truth to nature that makes the appeal of the little story singularly sound and strong. It is not hard to believe that the events of the story really occurred. All the more appealing is the tale because it quite naturally contrasts real pathos with the kind one finds when one goes out to look for it. The mingling of good cheer and good sense in this story is eminently characteristic of the American Christmas spirit."

THE MAN WITH THE IRON HAND.—This is the title of a very interesting story by John Carl Parish, in which he presents the history of the advent of the white man into the great Mississippi Valley. He gives an account of the adventure of Father Marquette and Joliet, and of the explorer, LaSalle, and others, and their experiences among the Indian tribes along the entire course of the Mississippi River. This book is published by Houghton Mifflin Company, New York. From the title page of the book we quote the following from the pen of Benjamin F. Shambaugh. "Let us picture in imagination the history of the Great Valley of the Mississippi as a splendid drama enacted upon a giant stage which reaches from the Alleghanies to the Rockies and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, and through which the Father of Waters sweeps majestically. Let us people this stage with real men and women—picturesque red men and no less interesting white men, Indians, Spaniards, Frenchmen, Englishmen, explorers, warriors, priests, voyageurs, coureurs de bois, fur traders, and settlers. Let the scenes be set about the lakes, along the rivers, among the hills, on the plains, and in the forests. Then, viewing this pageant of the past, let us write the true tales of the great valleys as we write romance—with life, action, and color—that this history of our great valley may live."

Dear Sirs:

We have just received your preliminary shipment of our Poultry House Bulletin. After a hasty glance at it I call it a fine job of printing. It is a delight to open up a lot of bulletins like these. I hope that a closer inspection will not reveal any flies in the ointment in the way of errors in proof reading. However, perfection in bulletin making is a thing always hoped for but rarely gained.

Very truly yours,

CHARACTER SKETCHES OF JESUS.

VI. AS A FRIEND.

While the angels waited for the arrival of the exact hour of a certain great event, they busied themselves condensing the wisdom and poetry and love of the ages into a Christmas greeting, and this was the result, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." It is the best wish that can be uttered at any season. The man who glorifies God and has peace and cherishes good will toward men is fortunate, whatever else he may lack. This happy condition can follow only a very close intimacy with the One whose birth was celebrated by the utterance of the words quoted.

It has long been evident to us, as a church, that the religious world has made a mistake in its attitude toward Christ. Their mistake is this: they have fancied it possible to get close to him while ignoring parts of his gospel law. They have taken a certain statement that Paul made, "I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified," to mean, "I am determined to know nothing but Christ and nothing about him save that he was crucified"; whereas, Paul was clearly determined to know all about Christ, and his doctrine, including the fact that he was crucified for all men.

No man can limit himself as some have done and get any meaning out of the life and death of Christ. The fact that men have died is not of itself important to us, but the thing they died for—that counts. The death of Christ has meaning as we learn what he died for. Whatever else it may have stood for, his death was the seal of his testimony. His testimony had been borne both in word and in deed, so that men seeing and hearing him, saw and heard the word of God manifest in the flesh.

To know Christ and him crucified does not preclude us from teaching, and so far as it is his will, practicing everything that he said and did from the time of his baptism until the time when the clouds of glory received him. We are just as free to tell people that they must be baptized as Jesus was baptized, as we are to tell them that they must believe, because both were a part of his testimony, sealed by his blood.

But while many make this mistake, we fear that at times some make the opposite mistake, and set great store on certain important ordinances and doctrines, but do not at the same time get close enough to Christ himself. We need to realize Christ as a personal friend, one that is very close and dear.

Sometimes you have called on some elder to administer to you in time of sickness. While he was doing so you felt that he pitied you and wanted to help you. But unless you felt also that one stood by his side that loved you more than he, and pitied you more than he, and above all was more able than he to help you, you have not learned all that you should have learned from that administration.

In fact, if you have looked at any friend and prized his love and have not seen that he was but a type of your Great Friend, you did not get all that you should have gotten out of that splendid gift of friendship.

Jesus suffered for you and did for you more than any other friend can do. He fought your fight in the Garden of Gethsemane.

Do not think that he was less brave than other men who have faced death unmoved, simply because he shrank from it, and suffered, and sweat great drops of blood.

It was not death alone that he faced. But then every enemy that you have in all the realms of hell came against him and fought with him for your soul.

The Prince of the power of this world came: "that he might find something in him." Darkness settled over him and he was put to the rack and the torture, and the Devil searched him in every nerve and fiber that he might find something of his own there, that he might claim at least a partial dominion over the Savior.

As he hung upon the cross before helpless friends and among bitter enemies, he felt forsaken even of God; but he did not flinch—he died with forgiveness on his lips and in his heart.

Think what that meant! Had he railed upon his enemies and cursed them, every man from then till now might have said, "You may preach your gospel of love and forgiveness, but the Son of God himself could not live it."

But our great Friend did live it, and we can trust him, because he can feel for us in the hour of our deepest darkness, when the Devil is searching us and we need a friend to hold our hand.

Can you see him? Can you feel the tender gaze of his loving eyes? Can you discern the lineaments of his most beautiful face? God, quicken our vision, that we may know Christ!

There is an old song that many love, and it is not spoiled for us because some Salvation Army lassie has sung it by the wayside:

"I've found a friend in Jesus, he's everything to me,
He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul;
The Lily of the Valley, in him alone I see
All I need to cleanse and make me fully whole.
In sorrow he's my comfort, in trouble he's my stay;
He tells me every care on him to roll;
He's the Lily of the Valley, the Bright and Morning Star,
He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A NOTE ON COSMOGONY.

From a letter received from Brother Ephraim A. Webb, of Birmingham, England, we excerpt the following concerning the creation and cosmogony of the world. It is evident that Brother Webb is not forgetting what the Apostle Paul has written concerning "science falsely so-called." His statement is clear and comprehensive, showing that from his reading after scientific writers as to the age of the world, he has not lost his faith in the simple statement of the genesis of the world, as stated in the first chapter of the history in the Mosaic relation, and is prepared to give due note to what he may study, believing that with his faith in Christ securely grounded he may "go in and out and find pasture."

Our history of the beginning of the world is by no means damaged or destroyed by the supposition of the wise men who translated under the ministration of King James, and those chronologists whose work appears in the margin of the Bible in Christendom. Our relation simply states: "In the beginning God created the world." The faith of the genuine believer in Christ as founded in the revelations which have come to us direct is not disturbed by the labored efforts of scientists who, as shown by their writings, in many instances have accepted results as causes, and have industriously labored therefrom to build up a theory that the Mosaic relation is incorrect and misleading, as the age of the world is more than the six or seven thousand years supposed to be shown in the chronology of the Bible; for it is a matter of indifference whether it was four thousand, six thousand, or six hundred thousand years before Christ that the foundations of the world were laid and God spake into being all things which made the occupation of that created world a place for the habitation of man and the carrying on of the great divine work which deity had set for himself.

Brethren, let us not be shaken or disturbed in our faith in God, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit.

I have some relatives who are confirmed agnostics and evolutionists. I have given much study to that masterly delusion, viz, evolution. Yes, that marvelous accidental power "vidi law and design," that incomprehensible power that myriads of epochs ago turned a chaos into a cosmos.

A question was put to me the other day, viz, That during the twenty thousand years prior to the birth of Jesus Christ there had existed one billion five hundred million of human beings upon this earth; that the Christian God had neglected that great, great host, and during the last two thousand years had been looking up his favorites and publishing salvation.

My answer was that many of the important historical records were destroyed or lost in the destruction of the archives of King Solomon's temple; that many important records were destroyed by fire in the pagan persecutions under the Roman Cæsars; that the library of Alexandria in Egypt was burned; that I knew a translation containing the required information; that in the prehistoric antediluvian age, the gospel was preached, and practiced; and that in that long epoch the gospel was the ruling law of life, as well as the spirit and genius of evolution.

As a counter question I asked if he thought that the nebular or chaotic matter constituting our earth came into cosmic existence by accident a quintillion of ages ago, and was peculiarly formed by the energy of evolution. The answer was Yes, without doubt. I asked if he believed in science. He said that science was the only method of arriving at correct conclusions in all branches of knowledge. I answered that science was the generalized discovered laws of nature or of any branch of practical knowledge. Would he inform me by what means and when the physical laws commenced to rule and order the cosmos. Seeing that evolution ran the chaos epoch by accident, how was it that evolution took up method and adopted law to rule the cosmos in preference to accident. I said that a law was an attribute of intelligence, either human or physical, and that therein is displayed the power or wisdom of the Christian God.

I believe that law either revealed or manifest in matter and energy is the infallible power of truth ruling the universe. I am thankful that a good portion of my education consists in the knowledge of scientific experience which fortifies my judgment against infidelity and the delusion of unsound philosophy.

Added knowledge will harm no one. The more you are the more you get. In the words of David Harum, "Them as has, gets."—Backbone.

CURRENT EVENTS.*SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

TWENTIETH CENTURY RELIGION.—About five years ago Doctor Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard College, published his views on the religion of the future, in which he took the position that the religion of the future, whatever it might be, would not be a religion of authority. Now he comes out with a new pronouncement entitled, "Twentieth Century Christianity." This is issued in pamphlet form by the American Unitarian Association, 25 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts, for free distribution. In the opening paragraphs of this pamphlet Doctor Eliot arbitrarily consigns all believers in the biblical account of creation to the ranks of the ignorant, if not the imbecile. He says:

No thinking person now accepts as anything but primitive myth or fanciful poetry the story of the Garden of Eden, or the portrait of God in the second chapter of Genesis as a being who formed man out of the dust of the ground, as a child fashions an image out of snow or clay.

Perhaps, however, the last clause will still save those who believe in the opening chapters of Genesis, but do not necessarily think of God as molding man in exactly the same way as children would mold a snow man. Concerning the Deity himself he says: "The Creator is for modern man a sleepless, active energy and will." He tells us that God is no longer thought of as a ruler or leader or the Lord of hosts. Taken altogether the impression is left that God is a very impersonal force. Even more radical and possibly more interesting than these pronouncements by Doctor Eliot are the statements made by Doctor Thomas Van Ness, pastor of the second church, (Unitarian), Boston, as quoted in the Literary Digest, January 24, 1914. Doctor Van Ness says:

The story of Jesus arising from the dead is but one of the childlike conceptions which have no basis in fact. It is one of those beautiful ideas that have grown up like Santa Claus, that had a value once, but for which there is no longer need. Doctor Eliot is right when he says that men have no longer faith in miracles or magic.

Like Doctor Eliot he argues that there is a conflict between liberty and authority and that the church of the future will prefer liberty. It may be perfectly true that the churches of the future will prefer liberty to authority,—or rather liberty without authority. But liberty with authority is the true Christian ideal. There can be no question that Jesus gave to the priesthood and to the church very great authority in spiritual matters. But at the same time this authority was to be exercised under the gospel law, which is known as the "perfect law of liberty." The rights of the people are amply conserved under the gospel rules. There is no conflict between authority and liberty in the church of Christ, and no necessity to choose between the two; because both are essential and vital parts of the gospel economy.

FARMERS BANKS.—Bills have been introduced in Congress providing for farmers banks and long term farm loans. This measure would establish in the treasury department a bureau of farm land banks under the direction of a commission, and make provision for the formation of such banks in any State, under federal charter and supervision. Any group of farmers within a State might organize cooperative farm land banks with power to issue bonds to raise funds from distant money markets for farm development. Operation of the individual banks would be confined within state lines. These banks would be strictly prohibited from doing "city business." Loans to farmers would not exceed fifty per cent of the value of improved land, nor extend more than thirty-five years. No institution could begin business without a foundation capital and double liability provided for national banks.

ALASKA RAILROAD.—The Senate on January 24, by a vote of forty-six to sixteen passed a bill for a one-thousand-mile, government-owned railway in Alaska. This bill appropriates one million dollars to begin the work and provides for an issue of forty million dollar bonds. The money may be used in purchasing existing as well as in constructing new lines. The President is empowered to select the route from tide water to any point in the interior. A redemption fund is to be provided either from the sale of public lands or from the sale of coal or other minerals. On completion of the road the Government may either operate or lease it to a private company.

PANAMA GOVERNMENT.—On January 27 President Wilson signed an executive order to put into operation on April 1 a permanent government for the Panama Canal zone, and naming Colonel George W. Goethals as the first civil governor. This permanent zone government eliminates the commission which is now in charge. Members of the commission are to be retained, however, until the opening of the canal, as a committee in charge of the arrangements for the celebration incident to said opening, though without administrative functions.

STRIKE INVESTIGATION.—The first steps in the congressional investigation of the Colorado and Michigan strikes were taken on January 28 when the House Mines Committee was called together to decide upon plans. Specifically, the investigation is to determine whether postal service has been interfered with, whether immigration laws have been violated, whether there are agreements in restraint of trade, and whether peonage exists.

MEXICAN WAR.—General Villa continues his preparations to invade the Huerta territory to the south. It seems, however, that he must first take Torreon, strongly garrisoned. His march upon the capital would then require the maintaining of a long line of communications through uncertain territory. These may be the reasons why he is cautious and slow in his advance.

LABOR SUGGESTS LEGISLATION.—The United Mine Workers Association in national convention at Indianapolis, Indiana, on January 22, passed resolutions favoring government ownership of coal mines and of all public utilities; urging the passage by Congress of an old age pension law; and recommending the formation of a political labor party. On the 26th resolutions were passed indorsing the initiative, referendum and recall, and the removal from judges of the power to declare legislative enactments unconstitutional.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—Watchful waiting continues to be the attitude of the United States in the Mexican situation. General Huerta still urges his ability to maintain himself in power, but revenue is harder and harder to gather, and supporters are falling away from him. France has protested against the suspension of payment of interest on the Mexican national debt, at the same time making it plain that she will not exercise her privilege of forced collection from Mexican customs duties. This leaves the control of the Mexican situation entirely to the United States.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

TOLERATION.—We are in receipt of a copy of Church and Home, January 17, 1914, published at Omaha, Nebraska, edited by T. J. Mackay, All Saints' Directory, Omaha. We are pleased indeed to quote from this periodical the following:

By a curious coincidence the same mail last week brought to my desk an appeal for sympathy and toleration for the Jew, by Rabbi Mayer of Cincinnati, Ohio, and a like appeal from President Elbert A. Smith of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, whose headquarters are in Lamoni, Iowa.

Rabbi Meyer eloquently pleads for his race. He proves from their history that they are truly a "world people," tolerant of other's creeds, and leaders in all the great moral and philanthropic movements of the day.

President Smith asks that their church be not confounded with the polygamous Mormon Church of Utah, which is known as the "Latter Day Saint Church of Utah." The latter is the old polygamous church of Brigham Young, the former the "Reorganized (anti-polygamous) Church of Latter Day Saints."

We have met many of these Latter Day Saints, some of them good friends and have always found them strictly honest, and honorable in all their dealings. If the church which can produce such men as we have known is to be judged by its fruits, it certainly is entitled to respect.

RETURNS FROM PUBLICITY WORK.—The Bureau of Publicity is in receipt of a communication from the pastor of the First Congregational Church of one of our largest cities which contains the following sentiment: "Thank you for the Open Letter to the Clergy. It is certainly very fine in spirit and matter and confirms my convictions. Yours for increasing spirit of toleration and unity."

OPEN LETTER TO JOSEPH F. SMITH.—We are in receipt of an open letter written by Apostle Peter Anderson and addressed to Joseph F. Smith, president of the Utah Church. This letter deals with the question of the plans that Joseph Smith the Martyr and the Saints in general had in mind just prior to his death regarding the future location of the Saints. It shows that at that time and for some time after his death the Saints fully expected to remain in Nauvoo, and that when finally the exodus was taken up toward the west, their intention was to locate in California. This letter is marked number one, so we judge that there are others to follow, along other lines of disagreement between the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church.

CHURCH WELCOMES.—To The Star: A communication in the "Public Mind" from "W. H. G." tells of the welcome extended by the Hyde Park Christian Church to the lonely, the unfortunate, and all those in need of comfort. The members of that church certainly have cause to feel proud of its welcome to the outcast and the sinner. I want to tell "W. H. G." of another church near him that extends just such a welcome, where the moneyless man is just as well received as the millionaire. I refer to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, of Independence, Missouri. God bless this church and its practical Christians. Not a member but an Admirer.—From "Seeking the Public Mind" column of Kansas City Star, of January 25, 1914.

NEWS FROM TAHITI.—The editors are in receipt of letter from Brother J. Charles May, written from Tahiti, January 2, 1914. He is rejoicing in the bright prospects which seem to be opening up in that mission. He reports that the mission has been greatly benefited through the visits of Brethren Pitt, Griffiths, and Miller. Two hundred have been baptized during the past year, Brother May himself having baptized eighty. His letter is accompanied by a lengthy and extremely interesting report of mission news, which will appear in the next issue of the HERALD.

FAITH AND BELIEF SYNONYMOUS.

WHY MAKE A DISTINCTION WHERE THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE?—NUMBER 1.

I believe I am prepared to appreciate carefulness of thought and expression. I also admire true independence and originality. But it should be borne in mind that the only true purpose of all these efforts is to be right. The only proper end to be sought and secured is truth. The most important thing for us to do, as ministers for God, is to see to it that our teaching and practice are in harmony with God's word and Spirit. Without this harmony our apparent carefulness, independence, and originality in thought and expression, together with our nice efforts to discriminate, are vain. For, when we are in harmony with God we are right; but when in conflict with God we are wrong.

FAITH AND BELIEF.

From statements seen occasionally in the church papers, and from remarks made by some of our elders, when preaching, etc., we learn that some of our ministers (how many we can not tell) continue to affirm that faith is somewhat different from, and superior to, the principle of belief. Is this correct? We think not. Is there any proper ground upon which this oft-repeated claim can be founded? We think not.

DEFINITIONS.

Faith. n . . . (Latin fides, faith, belief from fidery, to trust).

1. Belief: the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another, resting solely and implicitly on his authority and veracity; reliance on testimony.

2. The assent of the mind to the statement or proposition of another, on the ground of the manifest truth of what he utters; firm and earnest belief on probable evidence of any kind, especially in regard to important moral truth.

"Faith, that is, fidelity,—the fealty of the finite will and understanding to the reason."—Coleridge.

3. (Theologically) (a) The belief in the historic truthfulness of the scripture narrative and the supernatural and speculative faith. (b) The belief in the facts and truth of the Scriptures, with a practical love of them; especially, that affectionate belief in the person and work of Christ which affects the character and life, and makes a man a true Christian, called a practical, evangelical, or saving faith.

Without faith it is impossible to please God.—Hebrews 11: 6.

The faith of the gospel is that emotion of the mind which is called "trust" or "confidence" exercised toward the moral character of God, and particularly of the Savior.—Dwight.

4. That which is believed on any subject, whether in science, politics, or religion; especially (theologically) a system of religious belief of any kind; as, the Jewish or Mohammedan faith; and especially the system of truth taught by Christ; as, the Christian faith; also, the creed or belief of a Christian society or church.

Belief. n (From believe, q. v.)

1. Assent to a proposition or affirmation, or the acceptance of a fact as real or certain, without immediate personal knowledge; reliance upon word or testimony; partial assurance without positive knowledge or absolute certainty; persuasion; conviction; confidence; as, belief of a witness; the belief of our senses.

Belief admits of all degrees, from the slightest suspicion, to the fullest assurance.—Reid.

2. (Theologically) A firm persuasion of the truths of religion; faith.

No man can attain [to] belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth.—Hooker.

3. The thing believed; the object of belief.

Superstitious prophecies are not only the belief of fools, but the talk sometimes of wise men.—Bacon.

4. A tenet, or the body of tenets, held by the advocates of any class of views, doctrine; opinion.

In the heat of persecution to which Christian belief was subject upon its first promulgation.—Hooker.

5. Persuasion or assurance, on probable and not demonstrative evidence.—Webster.

Webster's first definition of believe is as follows:

To have a firm persuasion; to have a belief approaching to certainty; to exercise belief or faith;—often followed by in or on.

Ye believe in God, believe also in me.—John 14: 1.

With the heart man believeth unto righteousness.—Romans 10: 10.

I should have said of this last definition, it is Webster's first definition of the intransitive verb believe. The definition of the transitive makes the matter still plainer; but this is sufficient.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."—Hebrews 11: 1.

The marginal translation is, "The ground or confidence of things hoped for"; and the Inspired Version reads, "The assurance of things hoped for," etc.

From the above definitions, it may easily be seen that our contention, as herein set forth, is in complete harmony with Webster's definitions of faith and belief; and these definitions are in harmony with the one cited in Hebrews 11: 1.

In defining faith, Webster freely uses the word belief, and in defining belief, he uses the word faith, in the same effectual and unambiguous manner. Besides this, the definitions given, when reference is had to faith or belief, as a principle applied to God, Christ, or men; or to any system of doctrine, whether it be religion, politics, or science, as objects of our faith, or belief, plainly show that the principle is one and the same.

SYNONYMOUS AND INTERCHANGEABLE.

Faith and belief, as used in scripture parlance, are two different terms used to represent the same principle. Were it not so, and faith is superior to and different from belief, then, we ask, (considering the order of the gospel), Where shall we locate belief?

We are committed as to the order of the six principles enumerated in Hebrews 6: 1, 2; so the first possible place we can now find for belief, is that following "eternal judgment." It must have some place in the divine plan, for, surely, no one will be so rash as to deny that belief is an important principle of the gospel plan, in view of what is written in the sacred books of the church.

But if we place belief directly after eternal judgment, we shall have to do some revising of our faith, at least, which though not extensive, will be very important. In this case one part of our long stated belief must receive the addition of belief in something like the following wording:

We believe that these ordinances are: First, faith in God and the Lord Jesus Christ. Second, repentance. Third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. Fourth, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost; Fifth, we believe in the resurrection of the body; that the dead in Christ will rise first, and that the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired. Sixth, we believe in the doctrine of eternal judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded or punished, according to the degree of good or evil they shall have done; Seventh, we also believe in the principle of belief in God the eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

This is sufficiently absurd to carry with it its own refutation. Admit that faith and belief are synonymous and all is plain and easy; make them two distinct principles, and we are at once thrown into difficulties from which we will never be able to extricate ourselves.

But let us appeal directly to what is written in the sacred books of the church, for these are our standard. Do not forget that our leading contention is that the books use these terms, faith and belief, synonymously and interchangeably. We will place the quoted passages in parallel columns, so they may be more readily understood.

FAITH.

And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God.—Mark 11: 22.

But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Hebrews 11: 6.

Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and

BELIEF.

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.—John 14: 1.

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek.—Romans 1: 16.

For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall rejoice in hope of the glory of God.—Romans 5: 1, 2.

But to him that seeketh not to be justified by the law of works, but believeth on him who justifieth not the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness.—Romans 4: 5. Inspired Translation.

The above scriptures need no comment, for their meaning is so apparent that they may be easily understood by the intelligent reader. But what does the word of the restored gospel say to us? As from the Bible, so also will it be from the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. We can give only a few of the many passages, equally plain on this point, which might be adduced.

And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto me, saying, Blessed art thou Nephi, because of thy faith, for thou hast sought me diligently, with lowliness of heart.—1 Nephi 1: 53.

And then Alma cried unto the Lord, saying, O Lord our God, have mercy on this man, and heal him according to his faith which is in Christ.—Alma 10: 99.

For we believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who created heaven and earth, and all things, who shall come down among the children of men.—Mosiah 2: 4.

And it came to pass that Alma said unto him, taking him by the hand, Believest thou in the power of Christ unto salvation? And he answered and said, Yea, I believe all the words that thou hast taught. And Alma said, If thou believest in the redemption of Christ, thou canst be healed. And he said, Yea, I believe according to thy words.—Alma 2: 95-98.

The passages from the Doctrine and Covenants we will place under a different subheading. We might rest our case right here, for if the two terms are synonymous, they may properly be used interchangeably; but our position, as a whole, will appear to better advantage, and be more easily understood by all classes of readers, by an additional array of testimony from the sacred books of the church.

BELIEF WILL SECURE THE FULL REWARD.

If, as we believe, by true belief we can secure all that can be acquired by true faith, then we must admit, either that the two terms are synonymous, or that we have on our hands a principle of the divine plan, which, up to the present date, we have utterly failed to recognize and enumerate as one of the fundamentals of the gospel. For if belief will do for us all that faith can do, it must be as fundamental as faith.

First, we will determine, if we can, what estimate the great and perfect teacher placed upon belief.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.—John 5: 24.

Jesus saith unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?—John 11: 25, 26.

And he said unto them [his eleven apostles], Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 15-18.

It would seem that these strong, comprehensive, and grand statements of the Lord Jesus on the subject of belief would be enough to satisfy all parties concerned; but we are not yet through.

If it still be claimed, as it now is, that there is a fine and complete development of Christian character secured by faith that can not be had through belief alone, we ask, Where are the grounds for such a claim? Where can we find any scripture to support it? Do not the scriptures under this sub-heading directly promise, or imply, the fullest degree of gospel development to all who truly believe? We think so.

The restored gospel, as we have it in the Book of Mormon and the later revelations, is in complete harmony with the evidence we have presented from the Bible.

For behold, thus saith Jesus Christ, the Son of God, unto his disciples who should tarry; yea, and also to all his disciples, in the hearing of the multitude, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover; and whosoever shall believe in my name, doubting nothing, unto him will I confirm all my words, even unto the ends of the earth.—Mormon 4: 85-88.

In Doctrine and Covenants 83: 10, 11, we have a record of the same commission, given to the ministry of this church in 1832. Thus we have the greatest commission that was ever given to the sons of men, given in localities widely separated from each other; and in the case of the first and last, the dates are nearly two thousand years apart. More than this, in each case named, the commission was given by the "messenger of the covenant," even Jesus Christ, the Son of God. In each case, too, belief, not faith (if the two are different), is the leading condition upon which all the precious promises are made.

In view of these facts and considerations, we do not wonder that Jesus, our best authority, once said: "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth."—Mark 9: 23.

To tell us that these things are secured through faith, is simply and only conceding the correctness of our position, namely, that faith and belief are synonymous.

The apostles were repeatedly requested to answer the all-important question (put in different forms, and under different conditions), What must I do to be saved? Here is the answer given by Paul and Silas: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."—Acts 16: 31.

FULLEST AND BEST DEVELOPMENT SECURED.

It will be admitted, we trust, that what God requires us to believe and do, will result in the best and fullest development of Christian character; hence the wonderful significance and pertinent application of the scriptures already presented; and there are many others like unto them.

Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.—John 6: 28, 29.

Important question, indeed, with an equally important, plain, and comprehensive reply.

Father, I pray thee that thou wilt give the Holy Ghost unto all them that shall believe on their words. Father, thou hast given them the Holy Ghost, because they believe in me, and thou seest that they believe in me, because thou hearest them, and they pray unto me; and they pray unto me because I am with them. And now Father, I pray thee for them, and also for all those who shall believe on their words, that they may believe in me, that I may be in them as thou, Father, art in me, that we may be one.—Book of Nephi 9: 21-23.

Is this the way of true and complete development? Can faith accomplish better results than what are herein indicated for all the true disciples of Christ, through belief? We think not.

In Doctrine and Covenants 46: 5, belief is given a place next to knowledge, and the promise of eternal life is based on belief in Christ. It reads as follows:

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful.

In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12, a class of individuals is mentioned who "have not hope of a glorious resurrection." Now, in the light of the scriptures adduced, the reason why these have no hope of a glorious resurrection is because they do not believe in Christ. "All things are possible to him that believeth," said Jesus.

In Doctrine and Covenants 76:5, we read as follows:

And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial.

The persons herein described are said to be of "the church of the Firstborn," who in the presence of God and Christ are crowned with celestial glory. What is there that can be secured by faith, that is higher and better than this?

CONCLUSION.

Belief is a prerequisite to baptism. The eunuch requested baptism at the hands of Philip. Philip replied: "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." They both went down into the water, and Philip baptized him. (Acts 8:35-38.)

Through belief eternal life is secured—even celestial glory. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," Jesus said. Again, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

If this is salvation, what is condemnation? Plainly, when the light of truth is made manifest, our condemnation is not to believe.

He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.—Jesus.

Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.—Paul.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.—Jesus.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?—Jesus.

Speaking of those who shall come forth "in the resurrection of the just," as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 76:5, the Lord says:

They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, . . . and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by that Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true.

In this article I have emphasized faith and belief, with some other words found in the quotations made, for the sole purpose of calling special attention to them.

Between the two terms faith and belief, we have found no proper grounds for discriminating against belief. Therefore we ask: Why make a distinction where there is no difference?

THE INNER LIFE.

Character must be grown; there is absolutely no other way to produce it. All growth is from within; so the exterior of man merely reveals that which is within. That which we think and meditate upon, inwardly, we become outwardly. We grow into the likeness of the things we contemplate. Thoughts are forces, and it is well to remember that all our actions are preceded by thoughts. We think a thing and that thought takes form, it crystallizes into action; that act repeated becomes a habit, and our habits aggregated become the sum total of our life, our character.

As plants grow from seeds, so do life and character grow from thoughts; in other words, our thoughts are the seeds, the causes, that grow, that bring about or develop our character and our destiny. Every seed must and does produce its own plant, and each plant in turn grows, produces its floescence and fruitage; so in like manner each thought will take form in our lives, and the floescence or fruitage of our lives will simply be the legitimate outgrowth of our thoughts.

LIKE ATTRACTS LIKE.

It is well to remember that like will attract like; that which is good attracts good to it, or, on the other hand, is attracted to that which is good. This law holds good in nature, since from the same flower from which the bee extracts the honey, the spider extracts his poison; each attracts to himself that which is suitable for him, or that which corresponds with his makeup. The lily draws its life, strength, beauty, and fragrance from the elements around it, the earth and air; it attracts to itself that which is pure because it is pure in itself. Alongside of this lily grows a poisonous, noxious weed; it, too, draws from the earth and air, the elements around it, its poisonous substance, because it draws only that from the elements which corresponds with its nature.

CHRIST THE HOPE OF GLORY.

Paul in writing to the saints of his time said: "Christ in you, the hope of glory." If we think thoughts that are foreign to Christ we will remain apart from Christ, worlds without end, no matter how much formality we may have gone through, or how many outward ordinances we may have observed. It is not that which we apply to the exterior that affects the life of man; it is that which enters into the inner recesses of the heart; it is that which is planted in the form of thought that shapes and molds the lives of men. Before Christ by his love can dwell in us we must have our thought forces arrested. We must think Christ; we must think love. As we think we are. As we continue to think, so will we continue to remain. We sometimes sing the old familiar hymn:

Jesus thou art all compassion,
Great and boundless love thou art.
Fix in us thy humble dwelling,
Enter every human heart.

I say, we sometimes sing this, and immediately we shut the door of our heart and prevent his entering. If we desire this prayer (for the verse is a prayer) to be realized there are at least a few things to be observed by us: We must learn to think compassionately and lovingly; we must make our hearts fit receptacles for the indwelling of the Christ Spirit. If we plant the kind of thought seeds that Christ planted we will draw from the elements that which will feed and stimulate them, and they will develop, grow, unfold, and bear fruit; and the fruit that is borne will be Christlike, because Christ will dwell within and the Spirit of Christ will actualize the life, it will become one with him.

So it may be seen readily that Paul was correct when he said: "Christ in you, the hope of glory." There can be no hope of glory without its proper prerequisites. If Christ be in us, glory one day will crown us; but if we are lacking the Christ within we may seek in vain the glory without.

CHRIST GLORIFIED IN US.

When we can say with Christ: "I seek not mine own glory, but the glory of him that sent me," then may we attain unto glory ourselves, but not before. When Christ said: "Cleanse first that which is within the cup and the platter, that the outside may be clean also," he uttered a divine truth, one suited to all time. Because as is the inner so is the outer.

If the thoughts of the heart be corrupt the outer life will be alike corrupt; but if the thoughts of the heart be pure and chaste, the life externally will approach nearer unto the divine ideal. If we expect to partake of the glory of God our inner life must be renovated, completely cleansed. We must purify our hearts by love and obedience to truth. We must meditate on that which is pure and true, think only on that which is ennobling and uplifting, and gradually, little by little, by slow degrees at first, we will grow, unfold, bloom, and ripen into the fruitage of good deeds. Our inner life will be reflected outwardly; it will crystallize in word and deed, and glory will crown the brow of him who has made conquest of self, and who has enthroned Christ in his life.

It is this inner life that Christ had in mind when he said to his disciples: "The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment." He then bade them consider the lilies how they grow, and here is a lesson for us: The lily, so pure, beautiful, and fragrant, does not partake of the evil around it; it draws from nature only that which is pure, beautiful, and fragrant. In like manner, if we grow as the lilies, we too will draw from without only that which is pure, beautiful, and fragrant, and thus we will unfold from within and our floescence or fruitage, as the case may be, will be the purity, beauty, and fragrance of Christ. Our glory will be the glory of Christ because we will have grown into his complete likeness, we will be one with him.

Is not this life worth while? Shall we, then, unitedly work to this end that Christ may be glorified in us? As for me I will be satisfied when I awake with his likeness.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE CELEBRATION.

[The American committee for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Ghent and the past century of peace between English speaking nations furnish the press with the following statement, signed by said committee, including Secretary Bryan, Ex-President Taft, and other leading citizens.—EDITORS.]

On Christmas Eve, 1814, Messieurs John Quincy Adams, James A. Bayard, Henry Clay, Albert Gallatin and Jonathan Russell, on behalf of the United States, and Lord Gambier, Doctor Adams and Henry Gouldburn, esquire, on behalf of Great Britain, signed the Treaty of Ghent, which ended the war between the two countries.

Shortly thereafter Mr. John Quincy Adams expressed the hope, so wonderfully realized, that the peace thus restored should be enduring, saying, "May the gates of the temple of Janus closed here never be opened during the century."

A few months later peace societies sprang into being in both America and England; and within three years, by formal agreement, the boundary line between the United States and Canada became a mere political limitation, like the peaceful boundaries that separate the States of the American Union, instead of a series of fortifications between two nations mutually distrustful of one another.

Believing that the blessings that have followed in the train of the peace thus established can not better be brought to the attention of the world at large than by a fitting celebration, the American Committee at its initial meeting, held four years ago, formulated a plan for this purpose. The proposal was soon thereafter laid before the peoples of Great Britain and the self-governing colonies of the British Empire.

The American Committee was animated by a patriotic impulse and the belief that through an adequate world-wide celebration of a century of peace great good would be accomplished towards the rational settlement of international disputes. And it hoped and hopes to effect this through the creation of a sentiment which shall educate the peoples of the world to regard forbearance and mutual understanding as virtues to be cultivated by governments and nations, as well as by individuals.

The committee also considered that through the association of the peoples of many nationalities in a common commemoration necessarily there would result increased acquaintance, friendship, and mutual understanding which are essential to permanent peace.

Therefore, the undersigned, a special committee acting for the American Committee, a body whose many thousand members are representative of every section of the United States, of every walk in life, and of every profession and calling, and of the different elements from which our population is drawn, invite and urge cooperation throughout the United States, and the active, sympathetic interest of the citizens or subjects of all countries.

It is sincerely hoped that all will take part with the American Committee, or with similar committees in other lands in the preparation and execution of an adequate and fitting program that shall signalize, as no other occurrence in the past would enable us to do, the realization of Mr. Adams's prophetic wish that the twentieth century might find the peace still unbroken.

That our country has been such an active factor in this wonderful achievement prompts us to celebrate the event—for peace as well as war is an event between nations—and arouses the hope that the hundred years which have passed since the Treaty of Ghent was signed on Christmas Eve, 1814, may be not only the precursor of a perpetual peace between Great Britain and the United States, but the promise of a broadening era of enduring peace between all nations.

EDUCATING THE PUBLIC ON FIRE PREVENTION.

In connection with the educational campaign I had some fifty thousand placards, containing "Fire Don'ts," distributed where they would do most good. Some of these fire-prevention "don'ts" read as follows:

Don't block the fire escapes; you may need them yourself to-night.

Don't leave everything to the landlord; inspect your own house from cellar to garret and locate all exits.

Don't throw cigars or cigarettes out of windows. They drop on awnings and set them afire.

Don't allow children to play with matches.

Don't use matches or candles in dark closets or cellars.

Don't keep matches except in a tin box with cover attached.

Don't toss away a match unless completely extinguished, and then toss it into a metal or porcelain receptacle.

Don't fill lamps or oil stoves while lighted.

Don't use kerosene oil in lighting fires.

Don't use naphtha or gasoline for cleaning purposes where there are open lights or fires.

Don't put hot ashes on a dumb-waiter.

Don't accumulate old beds and bedding or other trash in cellars.

Don't allow delivery boys to tie back the dumb-waiter door in cellars; by this means fires have spread throughout buildings.

Don't neglect to have the chimney flue cleaned once a year. You are responsible, not your landlord.

I frequently see these placards in service still. They have become a part of the household furniture.

Our educational campaign did not stop with the business men and the housewives. We sought out the children. We have been teaching children in the public schools that they must not regard fire as a plaything. Now and then I get a letter from a schoolboy telling me that he and his playmates have organized juvenile fire-prevention squads and asking what they can do to spread the fire-prevention propaganda. I invariably encourage such youthful enthusiasts. All these things are contributory factors in fire-proofing a city.—From "Fire-Proofing a City," by Joseph Johnson, Fire Commissioner of New York, in the American Review of Reviews for December.

THE RELIGIOUS ATTITUDE TOWARD SOCIAL REFORM.

Much has been said and written in the last decade regarding the duties and opportunities of the churches in connection with the social and economic reform movements of the day. Efforts have been made to bring the churches and the working classes into more intimate and friendly relations. Earnest thinkers have sought to enlist the church organizations in certain definite reform campaigns.

Evidence of the success of these various efforts and discussions is by no means hard to find. We shall refer here to two remarkable and significant documents that have come from the religious world with reference to the great social reform movements of our period. The Episcopal General Convention which met in New York City recently, adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, the moral and spiritual welfare of the people demands that the highest possible standard of living should everywhere be maintained, and that all conduct of industry should emphasize the search for such higher and more humane forms of organization as will genuinely elicit the personal initiative and self-respect of the workman and give him a personal definite stake at the system of production to which his life is given, and,

Whereas, injustice and disproportionate inequality as well as misunderstanding, prejudice and mutual distrust as between employer and employee are widespread in our social and industrial life to-day:

Therefore, be it resolved that we, the members of the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, do hereby affirm that the church stands for the ideal of social justice and that it demands the achievement of a social order in which the social cause of poverty and the gross human waste of the present order shall be eliminated, and in which every member shall have a just return for what he produces, a free opportunity for self-development and a fair share in all the gains of progress. And since such a social order can only be achieved progressively by the efforts of men and women who in the spirit of Christ put the common welfare above private gain, the church calls upon every communicant, clerical and lay, seriously to take part in the study of the complex conditions under which we are called upon to live, and so to act that the present prejudice and injustice may be supplanted by mutual understanding, sympathy and just dealing, and the ideal of a thoroughgoing democracy may be fully realized in our land.

In Great Britain the religious organization called the Counsel for Christian Witness on Social Questions put forth a manifesto marked by deep spiritual fervor and firm grasp of principle. The manifesto is signed by the bishops of London, Oxford, Lincoln, and other cities, by eminent non-conformist ministers and a large number of devout and eminent lay workers in the religious field. Its central proposition is that "the first charge upon industry is adequate remuneration for the worker." This is an indorsement of the modern living wage principle. Charity, the manifesto, says, at its best is no substitute for justice, and the world is full of injustice and inequality that result from a neglect of the principle just formulated. The evils of white slavery and undeserved poverty are vividly sketched, and Christian churches are urged to use their power and influence on the side of economic and social reform that aims at equal opportunity, equity and industrial justice. Men and women are warned in the document "against maxims and standards that are really due to selfishness and ignorance."

There has been considerable comment in England on this manifesto. Some pronounce it a little vague and too general to be of practical importance to religious men who wish to live in accordance with their duty. Others, more sympathetic, point out that, after all, the spirit is everything, and that the manifesto is designed to repudiate an attitude and encourage a noble and better one, rather than to lay down specific rules as to wage paying or business management. The London Nation, the leading liberal weekly in England, says this of the manifesto:

It is not only of great importance in the history of the development of opinion, it is of great practical importance as well. As industry is conducted to-day, a vast number of Christians have the power of displaying their Christianity. The Limited Liability Acts, in destroying the old patriarchal employer, have brought in the rank and file of Christian investors as employers, and this appeal to them to accept the sacrifices involved as a principle based on their religion is therefore a very real and direct invitation to all the Christians among the shareholders of railway companies, industrial and commercial companies, cooperative societies, and the other businesses that employ the wage earners of the country.—The Chautauquan, January 10, 1914.

SEA ROUTES TO SIBERIA.

From time to time the Scientific American has recorded the attempts that are being made to establish regular sea routes to the Arctic coast of Siberia from the European side and also by way of Bering Strait. On August 6 Doctor Nansen left Vardo, Norway, in the steamer Korrek, for the mouth of the Yenisei River. A Russian government cargo is to be carried to the Yenisei and a private mercantile cargo on the return voyage.

As we have previously reported, the Russian authorities recently established wireless stations on the Yugor and Kara Straits to notify vessels whenever these entrances to Kara Sea are free from ice. According to the reports thus received, the Korrek will pass through one of the straits mentioned, or through Matyushin Strait, or will circumnavigate Nova Zembla. It is hoped that Doctor Nansen will obtain some tidings of the missing Bruisloff expedition, which undertook last year to make the north-east passage by way of Bering Strait.—Scientific American, November 29, 1913.

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

Commonplace Things.

A commonplace life, we say and we sigh;
But why should we sigh as we say?
The commonplace sun in the commonplace sky
Makes up the commonplace day.
And the moon and the stars are commonplace things,
And the flower that blooms and the bird that sings.
But dark were the world and sad our lot
If the flowers failed and the sun shone not;
And God who studies each separate soul,
Of the commonplace lives makes his beautiful whole.

The Everyday Woman.

Katharine Kirkwood, writing in the Mother's Magazine, remarks that it is a very commonplace thing to be a mother, but that it is also a very great privilege for God to allow mother-women to work with him, shaping, developing, educating the little ones into quickening, thinking, reasoning men and women.

She contrasts the everyday woman, busy with her commonplace work, who sometimes forgets her many blessings and opportunities as she reads of the accomplishments of women in the big, outside world and fails to realize that brilliancy and praise and world-glory are no rivals in the heart of a true woman in contrast with the sweet appeal of helpless infancy with its possibility of development into strong, wholesome, good manhood or womanhood.

She tells of a conversation in which three women figured, one a childless woman who was a well-known educator, foremost in all movements for the betterment of childlife, the other, the mother of an only daughter. They were speaking of a third woman, a mutual friend, the mother of six fine children.

The woman with the only daughter exclaimed, "Oh, how wonderful to be a mother of such a family! How I have longed for more than the one!" Then the childless woman, possessed of beauty, personal charm, brilliance, and fame, laid a hand on her friend's shoulder and said: "But just think! What if you didn't have any?"

The article from which we have quoted closes: "Oh, little mother-woman in your humble home, surrounded by your healthy, happy children, be glad you are as God made you, for you have found the ideal. We need the rare, orchid people to lighten up the world's highways, but think how many dismal places there would be if there were no modest-violet, everyday people to brighten and make sweet the byways of life's garden."

The Childless Ones.

There is a poem which opens with the line,

"Let me come in where you sit weeping."

Then follows in verse the pathetic picture of the parents of a little child weeping together over their loss. The closing lines are:

"How sadder than yourselves am I
Who have no little child to die."

We join with this bit of pathos the statement of an astounding fact that "most of the great educators have been by no means parents of large families, and a large proportion of them have been childless. . . . It was not an inhabitant of a malarial district, driven to desperation by the state of things, who discovered the crime of the mosquito. That discovery was made by men working in laboratories not in the least incommoded by malaria. Hundreds of generations of devoted mothers, ready and willing to give the last drop of their blood for their children's welfare, never discovered that unscalded milk-bottles are like prussic acid to babies. Childless workers in white laboratory aprons, standing over test-tubes, have revolutionized the physical hygiene of infancy and brought down the death rate of babies beyond anything ever dreamed of by our parents."

The woman of scientific preparation who to-day stands in the public mind as "the greatest woman educator of history," is childless, but with a heart full of love for childhood and with a great conception of its infinite possibilities. At the head of the United States Bureau of Childhood is a childless woman whose influence is reaching out over the Nation in the interests of childhood in general. Judge Ben Lindsey, the noted friend of childhood and youth, has only recently married and says the "newsies" have two champions now where before they had one. Jane Addams, the settlement worker of Chicago, whose activities have made her a national figure, is a childless woman. So is Ida Tarbell, who tells us in her book, The Business of Being a Woman, that woman's natural place is in the home, and her natural work the rearing of her children.

But the people we have referred to, though childless, are active in the interest of the children of other people, God's children, and so the children of us all. The only people really childless are those who have no children in their hearts, and such truly are to be pitied.

So we should give honor to the mother, obscure in her home though she may be, but blessed in her children of whom the Psalmist said, "Lo, children are a heritage of the Lord"; and we should not withhold our approbation from those other workers who toil in the interest of childhood, be it in the chemical laboratory, in the schoolroom, in the settlement work of our cities, or on the judicial bench; and one of the latest developments of one of our large cities is the appointment of a childless woman as judge of the girls' court.

Honor and approbation to the lover of childhood, who labors to foster and develop its possibilities, be she whom she may, and let her work where she may.

The Silver Crown.

How sweet, comforting, and encouraging an influence a mother may be in her home, and how great a work she may do to set the little feet in the paths of peace is well illustrated in the Golden Now in an incident that evidently is from real life.

The little ones of a certain family were recovering from whooping cough and were inclined to be cross and fretful. One evening, after they were all in bed, the mother sat wondering what she could do to help the children and to influence them to control their tendency to peevishness.

As her eyes cast about her, they fell upon a bright bit of tin foil which suggested an idea to her upon which she quickly acted. She made of it a little silver crown left open at the back so that it might admit of adjustment to any little head of her flock.

Next morning she showed it to them, promising that each little child who had been good all day should have his turn in wearing the lovely crown before going to bed. It was hung up where all could see it and mother and auntie placed themselves under the same test and open to the same privilege of wearing the crown.

The narrator states that the plan was a great success, and that the interest in wearing the little crown was so great that the children were loath to give it up even when they had fully recovered from their illness. They still loved the ceremony of wearing the little crown at night.

The mother used the fact that her children loved her as an incentive to be good. She would not wear the crown when her children had been naughty, saying, "No, mother can't wear the crown because one of her children has been naughty."

How great a principle is expressed in this simple illustration, for a mother is honored and her motherhood is glorified by children whose conduct crowns her with renown!

In the Girls' Court.

In contrast to the home-picture, in which a gentle mother led her children along with loving earnestness in those ways of goodness which shall bring them at last to the time when they shall wear the crown which the righteous Judge shall give, we have another and very different picture in which there presides one of those childless women who are giving their womanliness with all the earnestness of motherliness to delinquent girls who have never had the chance to be good, whose young feet have gone early in the ways that lead downward.

A visitor to the Girls' Court tells us that when she entered the room she was impressed with a certain brightness which was not sunshine itself, for it was in the heart of a great city where sunshine is scarce. But there was a happy simulation of sunshine, resulting from a combination of the soft tinting of the walls, a rug spread before the judge's desk "to soften the way for young feet already bruised on the highway of life," a fern stirring softly in the window, and a "winsome, brown-eyed woman" in the judge's seat.

Before this kind and sympathetic woman were brought the girls whose cases were to be disposed of that day. There was Nellie, not naturally bad but easily led, whose little, bent mother sat near. Nellie was her mother's only support, a fact of which the gentle judge reminded her as she offered her another chance before sending her to an institution of correction, as she would be compelled to do, should Nellie continue to disobey her mother and go out at night with vicious company.

There was the little colored girl who had been repeatedly before the court and who must finally be remanded to the industrial school. There was Marie, dainty and attractive, a girl of the middle class, brought in by a weeping father, a girl without a mother or young companions in the home, whose love of pleasure was leading her into the dangerous resorts of a city, a girl already guilty of serious departures from rectitude.

There was Kathryn who would be a mother at fourteen, who had run away from the institution to which the court had assigned her. She was not sent back with rigid severity, but was transferred to another with special equipment where she would have the care she needed, and be happy, too. "For," said the judge, "it is very important that things be made bright and pleasant for her."

There was Florence, quick-tempered, headstrong, unwilling to be "bossed," who was disobedient to her profligate mother, stayed out at night, ran about with bad company; a girl whose father was dead and who worked in a factory so she "could be with other girls and have some fun." After a first impulsive outburst of rebellion, the patient judge succeeded in gaining this girl's consent to be placed in a good home to do housework.

And there was Elsie, mentally deficient, whose mother's blows and harshness, were driving her to the streets and their allurements. The judge must deal with this mother as well as with the girl she sought to reclaim, reminding her that the law demands that parents shall treat their children kindly.

This is a glimpse at the work of a childless woman, appointed to the work of mothering hundreds of girls who need more than anything else the loving and intelligent counsel of a mother. We hear her saying out of the depths of her womanly charity: "Most of them have never had a chance, poor little things. . . . They're not really bad, only ignorant and untaught. They're just like all other children, except that their environment is different. The girl who is innately vicious is very rare in my experience."

May we not say with all reverence of this woman with her great heart of kindness, "More are the children of her that was desolate than the children of the married wife"? Is not her work as great and as good?

CROSS TIMBERS, MISSOURI, December 30, 1913.

Editors Herald: I heard of this work first through a family of Saints who moved here several years ago. After they had been here some time elders would come occasionally and hold meetings. Only a few would come and listen, as they were only known as "Mormons."

This family and my own were always friends. We began attending the meetings. We gave strict attention. In the year 1911 Brother A. T. Higdon, of Fort Scott, Kansas was holding a meeting and we attended. Many times during these meetings I was made to tremble under the influence of the Spirit. Five were baptized. I was present at the confirmation meeting, at which time the Spirit rested upon me in power, urging me to obey. The Spirit was with all, the whole audience being in tears.

When I returned home at night during these meetings I would lie awake and study, hoping sometime I would have the opportunity to show my willingness to obey. I had consulted with mother and she had said that I would be thought less of if I joined the church, as many had spoken evil against this work. This made no difference to me, as all followers of Christ were persecuted.

Last February Brother Higdon and Brother O. D. Shirk, of Independence, Missouri, were holding a meeting at Mulberry. One night a sister gave her hand for baptism. As I stood there I softly repeated to myself, "I have grieved the Spirit long enough; I will from henceforth serve my Lord." I went forward. I was only fifteen years of age, and not a one of the family belonged to any church. I knew it would be a trial for one so young as I. But God has told us we would not be tempted above what we could bear, and I have found his words true.

The next evening a small crowd gathered at the water, where the ordinance of baptism was to be administered. I was accompanied by two of my sisters. When I had reached the place a few soft voices sang, "Jesus I my cross have taken, all to leave and follow thee." How sweet that song sounded to me. Brother Higdon had cut the ice. Sister and I were buried with Christ in baptism. The confirmation meeting was held that same evening at Mulberry. There we received the Comforter, which will ever guide the true and faithful.

The elders stayed for some time, helping in every way they could on a new church, hauling logs and working on the house. Brother Higdon was appointed one of the committee. By the help of the few Saints and three who did not belong to the church, my father included, this church was completed. They all worked hard. During this time services were held. Four more were baptized on March 23, one being my sister. This was a great comfort to me. My father believes, but has not yet obeyed. I am rejoicing in this great latter-day work.

We have prayer meeting at the new church each Wednesday night, and Sunday school on Sunday. Will the Saints remember this little band. We are few in number, but strong in faith. My prayers are always for those who are earnest workers, and striving to gain life everlasting.

In consideration of the trials and temptations we are to endure in this life, let us live so that when no earthly power can assist us we may be worthy to ask of God a blessing. Let us all be faithful and prayerful, so that when stones are cast in our pathway they may prove only stepping-stones to a more spiritual life.

Few visitors come to our Sunday school, and the people do not seem to care about coming to our house of worship, or to associate with us. But we love one another, and try to do as our Lord Jesus Christ has commanded: Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. Let us ask God to give us strength to go on in his way, do his will and keep his commandments. Thus may we be arrayed in a robe of righteousness. Then when time is no longer we may hear that voice, Well done thou good and faithful servant. I want to be among the many to hear these words.

We have service each third Sunday, conducted by Brother Harry Parton, of Wheatland, Missouri. We have rejoiced in the Spirit with him. Again I ask that you remember me in your prayers. My love be with you all.

Your sister in the one true church,

OTHELLA O'BRYAN.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, January 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am always more than glad when I see a letter from the Islands in either of our publications. I read each one as a hungry person would devour a good meal, and am reluctant to stop when the writer of it does. I want to read more; for I still have a lively interest in that mission, it having been our home for nine years. My love for that people does not wane, no more than does my desire for the return of those who had been severed from the church.

You can imagine, therefore, with what interest I read Bro. Griffiths's letter containing the joyful news of their return. I assure you it was with heartfelt gratitude. Much labor and many prayers have been offered for them, and for their return. The waiting has not been in vain. God has wrought in it his own purpose, and when the time was fully ripe for their return he sent the right man to reclaim them, one holding the proper office and authority for dealing with the natives—who have a reverential awe for an apostle—and clothed upon with the Spirit and power of his high calling. I with all others do exceedingly rejoice in the great work accomplished. The Lord having told him before the very words to say to that people is evidence that he was sent to do that work.

It may not be known to the readers in general that these people seceded from the church while there was no American missionary with them. This departure took place between May, 1905, and July, 1906. They did not sever themselves from the church because they thought the church was wrong, or not of God, but because they believed that they had received greater light in spiritual things, and had reached a place in advance of the church, at least in the Islands.

Upon the return of the missionaries, Elders Burton and Lake, in July, 1906, they found them so far separated from the church that they did not occupy the same house of worship. The seceding brethren had built for themselves houses in several of the islands and held their meetings by themselves. This was not so, however, in Papeete. The missionaries labored with the erring ones from the time of their arrival in the mission in July until the ensuing April with little success, but their timely arrival prevented a larger number from joining with them.

It was at conference of 1907 that action was taken. Oh, how reluctant was the missionary in charge, Elder Burton, to take that action. At two different times during the conference time the missionaries were closeted in a room in the missionary house with a few of the leaders of the "pupu," pleading and praying with them to give up the "pupu" and take their places in the branch again. Both times they were almost persuaded to return. They would not promise, but said they would talk with the others. Both times the others, their wives included, won them back again. Then after all had given their names to be severed from the church, Joseph adjourned conference till the next day to give them time to repent of their decision and return if they would. One brother and his wife withdrew their names, and even then not one was cut off until he or she stood up in conference and publicly confessed his allegiance to the "pupu" and asked to be severed from the church. Their names were then taken up and dealt with individually.

I assure you it was a sad day. Many of them were of our best members, being most alive in the work, and were our best friends also. When it was all over the writer went to Teuira, a good man, one whom we had great hopes for in the work. We clasped hands while the tears streamed down both faces. After remaining thus for a few moments weeping, I said, "Teuira, I know you have not gone from us because of any ill will, but because you think you have received greater light." He bowed his head while I continued, "But some spirit has deceived you." He shook his head. I said, "You can not see it now, but I hope and pray that you will some time, and I want you to promise me that when you find that you have been mistaken, you will come back to the church again."

To this he said he would if ever he saw that they were not right, but that he never expected to see that time. Now, after these years of waiting and praying, the time has come, and I thank God that I have lived to learn of it, and that none strayed away to other organizations. Teueterau once said to Joseph when talking of the matter, "Yes, they are all after us. But, Joseph, don't you be afraid, we are not going with any of them. We are going to stay right where we are."

While thinking of the matter a few days ago a gleam of light came to me, in which I could see that the departure from the church and the return again has brought to pass what seemed almost a necessity for the good of the work among them. It has broken down a strong wall of what we might call pride, but with them it was a national attribute, as near as I can word the thought, and has put them on what they would call a level with the white man.

To illustrate: Elder Burton was talking with one of our brethren regarding their return by rebaptism. The brother looked up at him in a very peculiar way and replied, "To be rebaptized might do for a white man, but a native, never!"

But the grace of God has been sufficient to accomplish that work; a work that will be a lasting benefit to coming generations. As Brother Griffiths has said, the work will be on a better foundation than ever before. What a joy it would be to me to clasp their dark, friendly hands in a warm welcome home.

I was glad, too, to read Brother Miller's letter. Glad that he wrote up things as they were, and gave a view of the dark side of the mission as well as of the bright.

I think sometimes of the missionary women who went to the islands resolving that whatever the conditions might be there should be no complaints written home. I did not have to endure anything like what those other sisters have had to go through who were so dreadfully seasick, yet all have suffered some; and have been nearly starved while traveling on those small boats. No matter what should be written, it but poorly conveys the situation, since the force of foul odors on an empty stomach in a little, overheated den where there is no ventilation can not be expressed, any more than can the aching of bones when lying for days on boards with a piece of canvas stretched across them.

It was absolutely necessary upon one occasion for Brother and Sister Lake to stop short of their journey's end to save their lives. Brother Charles in writing of it to Joseph spoke of their escape from that dreadful vessel as "getting out of hell."

All have been a brave band of missionary workers. Each, when hearing of what her predecessors suffered and endured, was determined not to be outdone in bravery (I am speaking of others, not myself), but I think Sister Savage is the bravest of all, to voluntarily persist in the endeavor to find Hereheretua in that little boat at the risk of being lost at sea as so many are, or engulfed in the angry waves.

It is not so very unusual for boats to be upset. The islanders are such good swimmers they swim around gathering up what they can of their floating property while others right the boat. They climb in again without any ado. At one time when a boat was upset there were, besides the men, several women and children and a pig aboard. A shark immediately made his appearance among them, and, fortunately for the people, poor piggy was the victim.

It is good to remember that in all the terrifying experiences and narrow escapes, the loving Father has always cared for and preserved his missionaries, so that none have been lost by what is called accident, which is a comforting thought for all future missionaries to lay hold upon. E. B. BURTON.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, January 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: I came here December 27 by invitation of E. T. Lucas to hold a week's meetings. Although the house has not been filled with people, yet all present have felt the good Spirit of the Master. I have been wonderfully blessed in setting forth the claims of the restored gospel. Brother Lucas has nobly met the Utah elders on the streets of this city, and thousands here know the difference between the two churches. We have several attending our meetings who are near the kingdom.

I go home on Monday morning, leaving all feeling much better than I found them. I labored hard a few years ago to build up this branch. Some who were active then are now sleeping beneath the sod; others have moved away.

I am yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, January 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: On the first Sunday in the new year we had a good attendance at both morning and evening services. Brother W. M. Self occupied in the evening, after nine precious souls had been confirmed, the baptisms having occurred at 3 p. m. These are the first to come in by baptism since we moved into our new building. Next Sunday Brethren F. A. Smith and J. W. Wight will begin a series of meetings, which we hope and trust may be the means of bringing more precious souls to see the glorious light of this everlasting gospel.

May the Lord bless all efforts to spread the truth is my desire. My heart goes out especially to the young of God's children, that they may not be overcome nor shirk from letting their lights shine out before the world. Oh, may they be faithful and loyal to the cause which they have espoused.

Your humble coworker,

A. A. GAYLORD.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, January 7, 1914.

Editors Herald: For the benefit of those who might be interested, I will say that I wrote to the secretary of State of Ohio relative to the law bearing upon the use of public schools for religious purposes. He forwarded my correspondence to the Honorable Frank W. Miller, Superintendent of Public Instruction, who very courteously answered, inclosing certain clippings from the statutes governing, a verbatim copy of which is as follows:

"House Bill No. 41.

"To provide for, aid, and encourage the civic, social and moral development of the local communities throughout the State.

"Section 1. That upon application of any responsible organization, or of a group of at least seven citizens, all school grounds and schoolhouses, as well as all other buildings under the supervision and control of the State, or buildings maintained by taxation under the laws of Ohio, shall be available for use as social centers for the entertainment and education of the people, including the adult and youthful population, and for the discussion of all topics tending to the development of personal character and of civic welfare. Such occupation, however, should not seriously infringe upon the original and necessary uses of such properties. Those in charge of such buildings shall prescribe such rules and regulations for their occupancy and use as herein provided as will secure a fair, reasonable and impartial use of the same."

By acquainting our people with the law as herein set forth, many schoolhouses throughout the State may be secured for religious purposes which have hitherto been closed against us because of a lack of knowledge of the law governing.

Mr. Miller underscored all from and including the words entertainment to welfare.

Respectfully submitted,

R. C. RUSSELL.

BIGELOW, MISSOURI.

I baptized six at this place about ten days ago, and I expect to baptize that many more this afternoon. Two weeks ago we organized a Sunday school here. The enrollment is sixty-four. These people are all young in the work, but are making a fine start. I always try to place the books and papers in the homes; in that way they may keep in touch with the church.

Ever praying for the success of the work of God, I am as ever,

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. W. A. BAILEY.

Editors Herald: The HERALD has been in our home ever since I can remember. It was first taken by Grandmother Gibbs, then by my mother, Martha Carrington, and since she has been called home we have continued to take it. We gain much strength and spiritual help from its pages. We also take other church publications. We have enjoyed much the autobiographies of Brother A. H. Smith and Brother Joseph Burton, and have felt as we read of their noble, generous, loving personalities, a desire to have known them personally. We hope to so live that we may meet them in the better world, together with the many others of whom we read and have known. Brother W. S. Pender was surely one of God's faithful workers. We would like to correspond with his wife.

The work here seems to be moving slowly, though we have an earnest little band of workers. We can report no great addition in numbers, but those who have covenanted seem most faithful.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. C. C. HOAGUE.

ONAWAY, MICHIGAN, January 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: In perusing the pages of the HERALD at different times I have become interested in the news from the Swedish mission. I have been touched by the severe trials that the ministry are called to pass through, and have thought a word from even a weak Saint might strengthen them.

In reading Brother Okerlind's letter in the HERALD of Deember 31, I longed to help them financially. Not being able to do so at present, I took the matter to the Lord in prayer. As I prayed the Spirit rested upon me, and I remember what God had done for Elijah, and how when the brook dried up he led him to the home of the poor widow, who when she divided with him her small store came not to want and hunger as many of her neighbors did.

So will it ever be with the true followers of Christ, for his hand is not shortened; he is waiting to pour out blessings upon his people so soon as they will prepare themselves to receive.

May great faith be given God's missionaries wherever they are sent, is my prayer.

Your sister,
C. J. L.

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON, January 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the letters, articles, sermons, etc., in the HERALD. I have been in Vancouver four years. The Saints who are regular attendants are very spiritual, and we receive many blessings. Brother I. McMullen is our elder. He is a good, faithful servant of the Master, always on duty. The Lord blesses him many times with the gifts of the Spirit.

About a year ago Sister Quigley was not able to come to prayer meeting, so we took the meeting to her place. She had been in doubt for many years because she had not seen any great miracles. She was spoken to through Brother McMullen and was told that before she died the Lord would show to her what she so long desired, and that she would be shown the true church. Some months later she was taken very sick. The Lord had not yet revealed anything to her. Her demise was expected, and one night the family thought she had passed away. She rallied, however, and manifested surprise in that the Lord had sent her back again. She had been seemingly in the other world, and was shown that the Reorganized Church was the Church of Christ. She passed away the second and again the third time and saw the same thing. She then died, knowing that she died in the faith, and was accepted by Christ.

Six months ago we held our reunion sacrament meeting in New Westminster, at which time I was called to the office of priest.

A dear sister is leaving Vancouver. She came and asked me to pray for her husband that the Lord would bring him to accept the truth. She is worthy of our prayers. I ask you all to pray for them.

Your brother in Christ,
W. J. C. REED.

NINETTE, MANITOBA, January 9, 1914.

Editors Herald: I would like to know if there are any Saints in this part of the country. My husband does not belong to the church. He is not opposed, however, and makes the elders at home at our house. If any happen this way we will be glad to entertain them.

My maiden name was Didama Sellers. My first husband was W. F. Fry. After he died I married James W. Brown.

MRS. J. W. BROWN.

MARSHALL, MISSOURI, January 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am here holding meetings in Brother George Thayer's house. This part of the stake is a hard place to work in, especially at this time of year. But I believe this would be a good place for tent work. We have no church building to hold services in, and there are only a few Saints here. It would be too burdensome on them to hire a hall in which to preach. The missionary who goes without purse or scrip can not rent one either. So we have to be content to preach to the few who can get in a small cottage. The house in which we are holding forth is packed every night with attentive listeners, and we have been blessed with good liberty in presenting the word. I am pleased to say that I find Brother George Thayer and his two married sons and their families good, upright, honorable Latter Day Saints, such as are an honor to the cause of Christ. May the Lord bless and prosper them.

Dear Saints, let me ask you, Are you satisfied with yourselves? Are you satisfied you are doing the best you can in your work, that you are making the most of your time? Are you confident that your conduct toward your family, your friends, your neighbors, your employer, can not be improved upon? Look yourselves straight in the eye in your mind's looking glass, and ask yourselves whether it is what people say about you or what you are that hurts. Analyze your own conduct in all matters. Put yourselves in the place of others and try to see your actions through their eyes. Imagine that you are your employer instead of yourselves. Answer honestly whether if he knew as much about you as you know about yourselves he would discharge you or would raise your wages. If you do this conscientiously perhaps there are many things you would do differently.

Remember this, too, that the opinion others have of you is based to an extent upon your opinion of yourself. Are you self-respecting? Others will respect you. Are you truthful? The world will believe you. Are you honest? Everyone will trust you. But weigh yourselves frequently. Be certain that your own opinion of yourselves is justified. Be satisfied with yourselves.

If you knew the great need of volunteers to carry this work on to victory; if you knew the thousands of honest people not only in foreign lands but also here in our own country, who have never heard the angel's message, whose souls are just as precious in the sight of God as our own, you certainly would make a stronger effort along temporal lines.

Dear Saints, let us work while it is called to-day, for the night will come when no man can work. Time is rolling on, night will soon close in upon those who are found unworthy, while those who have kept the faith will inherit that city where neither the light of sun nor moon will be necessary, for the glory of God will lighten it, and the Lamb will be the light thereof.

Hopefully, your brother in Christ,
J. E. BOZARTH.

KIDDER, MISSOURI, January 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: Besides my father's family and myself there are no other Saints here. I am trying to remain true to the faith. My husband does not belong to our church. I hope and pray that he will yet be one of the children of God. I have been blessed many times and my prayers have been answered.

May God's blessings rest on all the Saints everywhere. I ask the prayers of all that I may remain faithful. My prayers are for the Saints of God.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. JOHN DILLENAN.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, January 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am a boy thirteen years of age. I belong to the church. I was baptized August 4, 1913, by Brother Hardin, while he and Brother Brown were here last summer. I go to school every day, and am in the sixth grade. I like to go to Sunday school, though we have none here. I hope some day we will, for I know we could all be better boys if we had the Sunday school to help us along. I am going to try to be as good as I can, so God will take care of me, and so that I may have a nice home with him when he comes again.

I hope Brother Brown and Brother Hardin will see my letter, for I always had a warm spot for them, and missed them greatly after they left here. I hope they will visit us again.

I wish the Saints to pray for me that I may be a good boy, and do the Master's will; I remember them all in my prayers.

In gospel bonds,

MYRON GRAHAM.

WELLAND, ONTARIO, January 12, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have very much enjoyed the letters in the HERALD since obeying the gospel some fifteen months ago. I wish in turn to write for others of the good work going on in Welland. Some work was done here a few years ago, but for some reason it died out. The work was started here again, through the efforts of our late Brother T. J. Robbins. Brother Robbins came to Welland the last of May, 1912, and at once began looking for Saints. He found one, Sister Maginnis. He then met and became acquainted with me, and presented the gospel to me. After thorough investigation I obeyed, being baptized and confirmed by Elder F. C. Mesle, November 17, 1912.

When Brother Robbins began talking to me about the gospel I wondered when I had heard it before, and one morning it came to me that thirteen years before this Sister Dellas Perry had told me about it. I also heard two sermons by William Place. I did not meet with another Saint until I met Brother Robbins. These were both present at my baptism.

My blessing tells me I have enjoyed a measure of the Spirit and have been sustained through various trials, temptations, and afflictions. My blessing also tells me that if faithful I shall forget the sorrows of the past because of the glorious anticipations of the future, and that my testimony shall be, I know I shall have part with Christ in the first resurrection.

Since this blessing I have met with the deepest affliction of my life, one which at times has almost overwhelmed me, but praise be to God, by whose divine aid I have been able as promised to hold on to the rod of iron. When my sorrow came upon me, only for this blessed gospel I could not have borne it.

After my baptism I opened my home for the elders to come at any time to hold meetings. For some time the meetings were all held there, but as we advanced other places were found more central, and Brother and Sister Taylor gave their house for the services. The first sermon was preached by Elder F. C. Mesle at my home December 17, 1912. By this time we had found three more Saints, Elder Alma Booker visited us to administer to Sister Maginnis who had been given up by the doctor because of heart trouble. She was healed at once, and has been well ever since, and attending the meetings. Our next visit was from Brother J. Thompson; he held two meetings. His sermons were very helpful, and we were very sorry to part with him. In June we had our first sacrament service. Some time before this we heard of Brother and Sister Baldwin and family of four, all in the church, adding six more Saints to our circle. We felt to rejoice, for they are all good singers, and Brother Baldwin presides at the organ. In the early part of June, Brother and Sister Taylor with their family of little ones moved here from Fonthill. We were glad to welcome them, and they have proved to be good workers. Their little daughter was one of the eight precious souls whom Brother Place has led into the waters of baptism here.

In June Elder Place organized a Sunday school and Religio. We are very much encouraged by the work being done by both of these bodies. We have been somewhat handicapped for a regular place to hold our preaching service, but the Lord has been mindful of us, so that we have never lacked for a place. We are thankful now to have a fine hall which we have rented for a year. It is all we could wish for. Elder Place comes to us every Sunday. We hold our prayer service at the different homes on Sunday evening, and enjoy the sweet influence of the Spirit.

Elder Arthur Leverton was with us for two weeks in August. We had three services a week and two on Sunday. We all secured our blessings, according to which if faithful our people here are to be heard from in the future. It seems that the Adversary is on our track, for as soon as we get a place for service and outsiders begin to come in we have to move. But we hope now to occupy our present hall for a long time, or until we become strong enough to build. We are looking forward to being organized in the near future.

In the death of our Brother T. J. Robbins we lost a faithful worker, one who was always ready to do his part to advance the cause. Brother Robbins was called home on November 2, in Winnipeg, where he had gone for a few weeks on important business. After reaching Winnipeg it became necessary for him to undergo a very critical operation. A special prayer meeting was called, and he was administered to by Elder Ward Christy, who was with him a great deal of the time during his illness. Brother Robbins recovered so far as to be able to leave the hospital and expected to return to Welland in a very short time; but, alas, severe hemorrhages set in and the Lord mercifully relieved him. It was said of him by the people who were with him during the last days of his life that he left a living testimony. May it bear fruit. We feel that Brother Robbins was used of the Lord to start the work here, and was then called up higher. May we as a monument to his memory and in gratitude to our Lord for his life among us, continue to build up the work here.

May God keep us all strong for the battle, as a united family ever ready to testify of his goodness. The most of us here are only babes as yet, and need nourishing.

Your sister in the one faith,

CAPITOLA B. AUSTIN.

Extracts from Letters.

J. C. Crabb, South Edmonton, Alberta: "Church work here is moving along smoothly. The Saints are well, and feel well spiritually. Fine winter weather, with three inches of snow, and running from two to thirty degrees above zero. Expect to stay here until further orders from headquarters."

L. G. Holloway, Macgregor, Iowa: "Am preaching every evening to fine audiences of interested listeners in a school-house five miles out in the country. Drive out each evening. Nearly all the people located in the immediate vicinity of the schoolhouse are our friends, but here in town the 'heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing.' The preachers are up in arms, and doing all they can to kill our interest. There is strong talk of debate. There have been threats already of a mob, but I am losing no sleep over the matter. Everything seems to be at fever heat, and I do not know what the outcome will be. This is a new opening, and those who are coming out are loyal friends."

Keep your head cool and your heart warm. The one who lets his head get hot and his feet cold is in a bad way.—Backbone.

Sweden.

I am trying to raise the gospel standard here. Since I last wrote I have labored in this city mostly, yet I have done some labor at three other places. I preached out in the woods all summer, and succeeded in interesting some in that way, who could not be reached otherwise.

I am now preaching in a little hall belonging to the temperance people, in one end of the town. Some few are yet interested, and no doubt will accept the work in the spring-time. I have sold four Books of Mormon lately and loaned several. I have also distributed a good many tracts, and am loaning and selling the Voice of Warning to many. I hope the results will be good.

We have a very nice Sunday school at this place, with sometimes twenty or more in attendance. During my mission work here I have endeavored to instruct the children in Sunday school; as a result I have baptized four children of the Saints, two boys and two girls, who will soon be growing into men and women.

Here, as well as at all other places where the message of light is making its way, the enemy of all righteousness is making a desperate fight. The divines in the State Church and others are diligently warning the people under their control not to attend our meetings and to have nothing whatever to do with us. Their influence is felt all over the country, yet some few dare to come out anyway.

The authorities in the State Church have, with the sanction of the "riksdag," employed a man to rout out the "Mormons." This same body appropriated ten thousand crowns last year and eight thousand crowns the year before to enlighten (?) the people all over the country by way of lectures, articles in the daily papers, etc. A man by the name of Aslev, who has resided in Utah for some time, is, of course, just the man, and knows all about the "Mormons."

The last great act of the State Church was to get a very slanderous and malicious article in the almanac that goes into every home and is read by everybody. While the article in question tells some things about the Utah people which are true and very offensive, yet it attacks the character of Joseph Smith, and ridicules the Book of Mormon. For this reason it seems to be necessary to make reply, that we may have something to place in the hands of those with whom we come in contact.

I have also had in my mind for some time to open up the work in Malmo, the third city in the State, with ninety-three thousand inhabitants. But it takes money to pay hall rent, advertise, pay for room and board, and the Bishop can not very well supply us with this extra amount.

In this connection I desire to remind our Scandinavian Saints and others who are interested in this mission of the opportunity that is before us. The Lord has said that we are laborers together with him in saving souls; he also says that one human soul is worth as much as the whole world, or words to that effect, and the opportunity is extended to all to work out our salvation. We missionaries are doing all we can, offering all our time and as much means as we can spare. Each one may receive for himself a reward, when the sure rewards are meted out to the faithful ones, by doing a part of the Lord's work here in this life. If you can not preach, you can sacrifice a few cents, a dollar, or more for this mission, so that we can be able to open up the work in Malmo, and also make reply to those who try to slander the man that gave his life for the work we all love.

Sister Hanna Lawrence, Bjorneborg, Worml, Sweden, is bishop's agent here, and all money should be sent to her.

With love and best wishes to all, I remain

Your brother in gospel bonds,

C. A. SWENSON.

Des Moines, Iowa.

We have been over most of the district (so far as branches are concerned) and find that the work is moving along nicely. One new branch has been organized at Nevada, Iowa.

In company with Brother David J. Williams we pitched the gospel tent at Boone on June 14 and commenced our first united effort in the district, which was a success in most every way. We baptized three. On July 21 we shipped the tent to Nevada, where we held forth for two weeks, baptizing four. We were compelled to leave a fine interest there in order to get the district tent to Rhodes for reunion work, where a pleasant time was had by the little band of Saints who camped there, August 15 to 24. After the reunion we conducted tent services in Des Moines in company with Brethren D. J. Williams and J. M. Baker until October 7, with just fair attendance and interest.

On November 16 the Nevada Saints held their opening day services in their new church. Saints gathered in from all parts of the district. Brother J. W. Wight came from Lamoni and delivered the opening address.

On December 30 we started a series of meetings at Rhodes, in the opera house. Brother Williams came in a few days, and on January 4 Brother L. G. Holloway stopped on his way to eastern Iowa, preaching for us one week. Brother Williams and the writer closed the meetings there January 15 after baptizing five. We feel exceptionally good over our last effort, as we baptized some of the best people in the town, one of them ex-mayor and a lawyer. We do not wish to take all the credit of converting him, however, as he has listened to the gospel story for years. So the old saying is true, one sows, another waters, and another comes along and reaps. The Saints of Rhodes have secured a public place for worship, and are thinking of building a church. I might add that this little town is the old home of Brethren I. N. and D. C. White.

On August 24 the young people of the district were organized into a society called the Des Moines District Doers. They are doing in various ways, furnishing programs for special services throughout the district, helping at conventions, etc. To say they are enthusiastic is putting it mildly. As a result of this organization considerable musical talent is being developed. They are boosting for the next district reunion, which is to be held at Rhodes, August 21 to 30. We feel sure that by organizing the young will be brought closer together and will furnish their own entertainment instead of going into the world for it. If this is done we shall feel that our work is not in vain, as we realize that the young of to-day will be the backbone of the work of to-morrow.

Brother Williams and the writer have made a special effort in all our meetings during the past year to reach the young, and we feel to thank God that he has blessed us in doing this very thing. There is a noble band of young people in this district, and we feel quite sure they will be heard from in years to come.

May God help us in all our battles for truth.

Your brother in the gospel;

J. L. PARKER.

News from Branches

Los Angeles, California.

A series of special meetings is in progress at the church. It was decided by unanimous vote of the branch to invite Evangelist McDowell to hold meetings for ten days, beginning Wednesday January 7, and closing Sunday, January 18. Brother McDowell spoke the first five days, and this week is alternating with Brother V. M. Goodrich. Excellent interest is evident. We have a good attendance, with a number of nonmembers. The preaching has been of a very high order, lucid, powerful presentations of the gospel and its adaptation to humanity, in a logical, convincing, and persuasive manner. Much good will undoubtedly ensue. A number are ready for patriarchal blessings, but difficulty is had in finding a stenographer. Probably Sister Bessie Bemis of San Bernardino will solve the difficulty by coming over in the near future.

Brother George H. Wixom was a visitor last Sunday, attending the meetings at Long Beach with Pastor Goodrich and the writer, where he formally organized the home class Sunday school into a regular school with a membership of about twenty-five and a full corps of officers, with Sister Mary C. Packard as superintendent.

Brother Ray T. Knowlton has been placed in charge of the mission at Hermosa Beach, and Brother Peter Kaufman in charge of the mission recently organized at Montebello. Election at Santa Ana resulted in the choice of F. W. Burton as president. At Garden Grove, Nathaniel Carmichael was elected president. San Diego reelected the former president.

An extremely enjoyable session of the priesthood was held at the regular meeting, January 5. The local ranks were swelled by the presence of Nathaniel Carmichael, F. W. Burton, H. C. Powell, J. W. Inman, and Brother Dickey from Garden Grove and Santa Ana. A paper was read giving quite a complete history of the School of the Prophets. The good influence of the Holy Spirit was present and seemed to manifest the pleasure of the Father in the efforts. The subject for next meeting is an address by Brother McDowell on the Order of Patriarchs. All the priesthood in the district, resident and visiting, are invited to attend these meetings.

Apropos of the marine disturbances which have been so widely noted in the press lately and attributed to causes within the earth, an occurrence was noted at the baptisms at Long Beach last Sunday which evidenced a power that did not come from "within" the earth, and exerted a comforting influence on the little body of Saints gathered at the ocean's edge.

Although not perceived at the time by the actual participants in the ordinance, it is vouched for by the pastor, Brother V. M. Goodrich, and others whose testimony is not to be impeached, that as the elder and candidate approached the line of breakers seeking the proper depth for immersion, the breakers ceased entirely, so that only beautiful, smooth, gentle undulations were on the bosom of the deep until the baptism was accomplished, when the breakers resumed and the resultant waves followed the parties to the shore. The phenomenon was remarked by the brethren, and more particularly so when the second candidate, a little girl, was led out. It is recorded in the pastor's diary that their hearts were thrilled to the point of exclamation at the love of God when the very same action of the waves was witnessed, as an evidence that God is the same as of old.

The ocean never did look so beautifully peaceful, and the pure, clear sheen of the water purling up on the sands did seem most like the entrance to a new and celestial world. To God be the thanks and praise.

Lamoni, Iowa.

On Sunday, the twenty-fifth, the morning and evening services, usually occupied with preaching, were devoted to Sunday school and Religio work, the former occupying the eleven o'clock hour, and the latter at half past seven.

Even though these societies are quite prosperous, especially the Sunday school, the officers felt that a feature of this kind might prove of educational interest and be inspirational in effect. Their surmise seems to have been a good one.

Those who work in these branches of church work know how difficult it is to properly present working plans and ideals, discuss ways and means—in short, to reach the heart of the general public in the ordinary, crowded-for-time session at the regular hours. Even on occasions like this, only a few departments can be represented, but it is an improvement.

The work of the school in its general aspects was presented in a very brief way by Superintendent George W. Blair, the service having been opened with congregational singing, led by the young people's chorus, in charge of Mrs. W. J. Mather the Sunday school chorister. This feature was made still stronger by the accompaniment of the Sunday school orchestra, a sixteen-piece band under the leadership of J. H. Anthony. The opening prayer was by First Assistant Superintendent W. B. Paul. Another appreciated musical number was a vocal solo by Aileen Brackenbury, one of the intermediates.

Mrs. Anna Salyards, superintendent of the primary department, represented both that department and the beginner, giving definite suggestions whereby mothers could cooperate with officers and teachers in the momentous field of child training. We shall likely hear more of this later.

Mrs. Nellie Prall, superintendent of the junior department, told how that and the intermediate department were conducted, weaving interesting details into her narrative.

The library interests of the community, especially the Sunday school, were briefly touched on by E. D. Moore, the local librarian. He sought to show the necessity for cooperation of parents and library workers, giving as one reason the tendency of writers and publishers to cater to a morbid public taste for the suggestive or profane in literature.

At the evening session there were speeches by S. A. Burgess and J. A. Gunsolley. The former touched rather briefly on the object and benefits of the Religio, speaking from some twenty years of active experience. J. A. Gunsolley outlined some of the points urged for and against the merging of the Sunday school and Religio. We mention in his behalf that he did not take sides on the question. We were promised that the question would be discussed in a debate at the Religio the following Friday evening.

Here again the Sunday school orchestra did excellent work and more of it than in the morning. Miss Laura B. Kelley and Miss Anna May Morgan, both of Graceland's musical faculty, rendered a piano and vocal solo, respectively. Other features of the program were in charge of local Religio workers.

In spite of the heavy fall of snow in the forenoon, the attendance was excellent at both meetings. Many commendatory comments have been heard, and the plan seemed to meet with general favor, as it has always done in the past.

E. D. MOORE.

Rhodes, Iowa.

The little branch at this place has been kept alive by a few faithful Saints who have not neglected the assembling of themselves together from time to time; who in the face of discouragements and opposing forces have kept up a little Sunday school and Religio at a private house. We are glad to say that recently our little branch has taken on new life. We have great hopes of better and brighter days in the future.

The Saints here procured the use of the opera hall, and on December 30 Elder J. L. Parker began a series of meetings, being joined by Elder D. J. Williams the following Thursday. We had expected Elder J. W. Wight also, but owing to physical disability he did not come, but sent Elder L. G. Holloway, who arrived Saturday night and remained over two Sundays, rendering valuable assistance. The attendance and interest were good. The preaching was of a high order, devoid of criticism upon the faith of any, and appealing strongly to the intelligent, thinking mind.

At the close of two weeks five precious souls were buried with Christ in the watery grave. Four of these we had invited to assist us in the music during the meetings.

Some of the Saints who once resided at this place will be pleased to learn that H. M. Weeks and daughter were among the number baptized. Brother Weeks is an old resident of this place, and quite a prominent man, having been justice of the peace and notary public for years. Both he and his daughter were prominent workers in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The other three are fine young people. Cora and Roy Shevill, brother and sister, were workers in the Protestant Episcopal Church, but not members. The other, Otto Richeson, is a young married man, son-in-law of Brother R. M. Sanders.

We can only feel sympathy for those who are losing these noble workers from their ranks, yet at the same time our hearts are lifted to God in thanksgiving to see them take this advance step. We feel that their usefulness has just begun in the true sense of the term, for they have now entered upon that straight and narrow way that will bring to them clearer vision, and broader and grander conceptions of God and his work than they otherwise could have had. And by making use of the means before them and preparing themselves for active service they may bring many precious sheaves with them when they enter the celestial glory of God.

The Saints have rented a hall for a year and will fit it up for services; so we will not be so handicapped in the future. We hope to have a church to worship in soon.

We believe there are others here near the kingdom. May God help them to make a wise decision.

In gospel bonds,

MATTIE HUGHES.

SECOND BRANCH.

Independence Second Branch numbers about three hundred, and is noted for its zeal and faithful living. Though poor in this world's goods, yet rich in faith, it never loses sight of the prize of the high calling in Christ.

The branch is the proud owner of a very comfortable place of worship, a brick building, with a seating capacity of about five hundred in the auditorium, and about three hundred fifty in the basement. This building is paid for, and has been dedicated for some time. While only a child, this branch leads some older ones in securing a place of worship. The success of the building of the church was largely due to the efforts of Brother J. T. Curtis, and many others.

Stebbins, assisted by John Smith.

LAKE.—Martha Gordon Lake was born in Scotland, August 22, 1836; died at Kirtland, Ohio, January 18, 1914. With her parents she came to this country when quite young, settling in Allegheny, Pennsylvania. She married Thomas Woods, at Allegheny, Pennsylvania, July 26, 1854. H. Kelley, April 10, 1887. She moved to Kirtland in 1889, where she continued to reside until her death. Sister Lake's parents were baptized in Scotland by the first elders sent to Europe by the early church. They died in the faith, her mother having died at Kirtland. The wealthy McCutcheon of Allegheny was her uncle. With other wealthy relatives she was offered place and social position if she would renounce her religion. But she esteemed her faith of greater value to her than the riches of this world. The wife of Doctor Talmage, the famous English preacher, was a first cousin.

He was baptized August 4, 1913, near Derby, Indiana, by J. R. McLain. Funeral by D. H. Baggerly.

CUMMINGS.—Elizabeth Cummings was born November 25, 1839; died January 12, 1914. She married Francis Marion Cummings in 1858. She leaves three sons, Hiram, Edward and Samuel, two daughters, Harriet Isabel and Mrs. Joseph R. Connor. She was baptized August 29, 1901, by M. R. Scott, jr., near Derby, Indiana. Funeral by D. H. Baggerly.

"Miracles of Science."

Doctor Henry Smith Williams's new book, Miracles of Science, offers a collection of facts and ideas that will convey a new conception of what scientific endeavor has accomplished within the last decade. The book has just been published by the Harpers.

As a popular work Miracles of Science, which takes up the record where Doctor Williams's Story of the Nineteenth Century Science left it, has the eminent virtue of inclusiveness, giving an impressive general view of the whole period with which it deals. Astronomy, medicine, eugenics, gyroscopic appliances, and hydroaeroplanes all fall within the scope of the book. And the author's exposition is equally clear, whether he is explaining the newest conception of the luminiferous ether or describing the workings of the new Diesel engine. A highly readable style, excellent judgment as to the amount of detail or illustration that will best serve the ends of lucidity, and finally an evident distaste for superficiality, are characteristics that lift his book above the common level. In it freedom from the least suspicion of crankiness, or even that of preoccupation with one science or with one point of view which sometimes results in over-emphasis, coexists with an enthusiasm equal to that of the specialist or the doctrinaire.

Doctor Williams explains the new "planetesimal" hypothesis fully, according to the present state of knowledge, and shows how the new theory does away with many difficulties of the old. He next surveys the progress that has been made in charting the universe and in determining the "proper motions" of even the most distant stars. Then follows the fascinating story of those experiments involving radioactivity which have led to a complete revision of the whole theory of atoms, suggesting new views regarding even the nature of gravitation; and this leads up to the strange yet probable theory of Reynolds and others, that matter is really made up of "holes in the ether," and that the earth and all material bodies moving through space are like bubbles in a stream of water.

In the chapter called "Juggling with life," the seemingly miraculous exploits in the biological field of such men as Jacques Loeb are described—how an unfertilized egg has been made to develop; how an individual organism has been split into several parts which went on living independently, and many other matters of like nature, including the process, as practical as it is theoretically interesting, by which Professor Nuttall is able to identify the blood of man and of the different species of animals. In the chapter on "The creation of species," Professor William Patten's theory of the descent of man—a theory that is generally recognized as a most important contribution to the science of evolution—is plainly and persuasively set forth.

Mendelism and the laws of heredity are explained; and one may learn just what practical rules the eugenists have been able to lay down. Similarly in the part of the book devoted to microbes, "vaccine therapy," and the banishing of the great plagues, one may learn just what has, and what has not been accomplished in combating such diseases as cancer and tuberculosis. Other subjects taken up are the gyroscope-compass, photographs by wires and by wireless, "audible light," airships, and aeroplanes. Even if one were more or less familiar with all the facts one would enjoy reading and would want to possess an epitome so full and so entertaining as this by Doctor Williams.

The Best Family Newspaper.

One of the problems that confront the conscientious homemaker is the wise choice of a daily newspaper. The ideal family newspaper must be clean, free from vulgarity and sensationalism, yet must offer something of interest to every member of the household, besides printing the latest news of the whole world in reliable and attractive form. A large contract, you will say. Yes, but an increasing number of readers seem to be convinced that The Chicago Record-Herald fairly comes up to the specifications. This great daily has a secure place in thousands of hearts and homes hereabouts, and it has won this position by years of unflinching excellence.

Business and professional men have long regarded The Record-Herald as the best paper for their own reading, because of its splendid news service and the reliability of its financial, agricultural and market reports. Young men perhaps find its greatest attraction to its excellent sporting department, covering the whole range of the world's sports. Wives and mothers emphatically prefer The Record-Herald on account of its feminine departments—its daily recipes and menus, its daily fashion hints, the "People's Institute of Domestic Economy" and the many good things in the illustrated Woman's Section in the Sunday paper. Children enjoy the clean comic supplement and the bright stories for boys and girls every Sunday. A daily horoscope is one of the latest novelties. And all the family together can enjoy Mr. Kiser's humor and verse. French's cartoons and other daily features outside of the news columns.

The Chicago Record-Herald has every right to call itself the best all-around family newspaper in the West.

We have just received your preliminary shipment of our Poultry House Bulletin. After a hasty glance at it I call it a fine job of printing. It is a delight to open up a lot of bulletins like these. ### SCIENCE AND MIRACLES.

Under the caption, "The church and miracles," and over the signature of one J. G. Schwalm, the following, appearing in the Rock Mountain News for December 10, 1913, is strikingly suggestive of the influence of science so-called and higher criticism upon religious thought in certain quarters:

It is a question of considerable interest and wide discussion as to what position the modern man should take with regard to the miracles of the Bible. Recently there have been reported in The News various sermons dealing with this question. The Reverend Doctor Morse of the First Baptist Church pointed out the shady side of the story of the flood, and asked whether there ever was a real ark. The Reverend Doctor Tanner explained away all miracles in connection with the feeding of the five thousand; and Doctor Law said that belief in the miraculous birth of Jesus was not essential to being a Christian.

Lyman Abbott, the reverend and exceptionally learned and popular editor of the Outlook in an article headed, "Democracy around the world," makes the following statements: "I do not believe in natural depravity. . . . Our common language repudiates the notion that depravity is natural. . . . I am an evolutionist. I believe that creation is growth, not manufacture. The worlds are made out of star-dust; the animal creation out of protoplasm; man out of the animal creation. The tigerish temper, the hoggish greed, the rhinoceros' insensibility are rags of the cast off garments of man's rudimentary condition. They were natural to him before he was a man. They are unnatural to him now that he has become a man. . . . With the scientist, I think highly of the present dignity and future destiny of man."

In our physical geographies we explain the origin of the seas, mountains, rivers, soils, continents and oceans on a basis that is entirely natural. In geology we explain the development of rocky layers of sedimentation and their fossil contents without so much as thinking of a miracle. Astronomy takes the star dust and by the simplest process—the process by which a drop of rain is formed, makes worlds out of it. We insist on scientific farming and never think of praying for rain. All of which is a very good reason why intelligent ministers and people class the Bible traditions with other literature of the same time and nature, which no one pretends is anything but the doll and toy play of the childhood of the race.

It took two hundred years to convince the church that Copernicus had discovered something. Perhaps it will not take quite so long for the church to discover that Darwin discovered something.

Only the other evening I heard the names of Darwin, Huxley, Spencer, Wallace and Tyndal mentioned very favorably from a Methodist pulpit. It was the first time in my life and it was a great sermon. There was a spirit of pride and satisfaction in that meeting that was as different from the ordinary "salvation" meeting as a school is from a prison. If ministers would preach more science and less faith much good could be accomplished. Religious faith may consist of the most horrible falsehoods, but scientific knowledge is an ever-present help.

This failure to harmonize the conclusions of science with the miracles of the Bible story of the creation and subsequent events results in discrediting the Bible narrative. Accepting the conclusions of science as final and unalterable and considering themselves possessed of all light and truth as represented by the Bible, these critics set aside the God of miracles to accept—if they accept one at all—a god determined by the limitations of finite research and comprehension.

It is well to remember that it took scientists a long time to learn that the earth is round; that yellow fever is carried by the mosquito; that bleeding patients already weakened from a lack of red blood is an improper treatment, and a hundred other things understood by the ordinary schoolboy of today. It is well to remember also that man yet comprehends only in the most limited sense the great forces of nature, to say nothing of the infinite power which sets them in operation. When we know all about these forces and this power then and not till then will we be in a position to set out conclusions final and definite with reference to science and the miracles of the God of the Bible.

It does not become churchmen to disregard the truths that scientists have demonstrated. It is not fitting for scientists to ridicule the faith of churchmen. Science and the church are both indispensable. The church can not successfully cope with social disorder—poverty and filth and disease and sin—without the cooperation of science. Science can not make of degenerate manhood a thing of beauty and society a wholesome order without the vitalizing and moralizing influences of the faith of the church—a faith deep-seated in a God of power and of potent influence in the affairs of men and of the physical universe.

Scientists who ridicule the faith of the church assume to know all, and therefore to know that the miracles of the Bible exist in tradition only and not of a fact. Reached from this assumption their conclusions are as valueless as their assumption is baseless. Churchmen who from their lack of comprehending God can not answer the criticisms of science and who seek to discredit the Bible narrative make impossible their further development toward God and the broadening of their conceptions with reference to his miraculous power. Churchmen or scientists who hold their minds open to truth and light from whatever source will come eventually to the facts with reference to science and God. And when they do they will have discovered that true science is none other than a great force at work carrying forward the purposes of an infinite order, directed from the beginning by a divine Being of all power.

The sane and safe course for Latter Day Saints is couched in the instruction:

Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom.—Proverbs 4: 7.

Seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study and also by faith.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

Science as well as all other legitimate fields of human thought and experience are open to us. If we enter this field and seek diligently both by study and by faith we may advance in learning. And during the days of our research we may possess our souls with wisdom. As we learn wisdom we align ourselves with neither the scientist who ridicules the faith or belittles the brains of the churchman, nor with the churchman who looks upon science as a field foreign and opposed to the church; but moving along under the serenity of our profession we "go in and out and find pasture," finally coming to learning, approximating God.

LECTURES AT CONFERENCE.

Two of the brethren have consented to deliver courses of lectures, with suggestive readings, at the coming General Conference. These lectures are for those holding the priesthood only, and will be given each morning at eight o'clock in the basement of the church, the lectures to alternate, the first one being given on Tuesday, April 7. It is requested that all those of the ministry attending conference make special efforts to attend these lectures, as we hope to make this a permanent feature of the conference if the results of the present courses indicate the demand exists for others. The courses offered will be in Homiletics and Comparative Religions, the former being given by Brother Walter W. Smith, the latter by Brother S. A. Burgess. Further announcements will be made concerning the courses on the first day of conference.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary First Presidency.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF LINES.—A committee appointed by Postmaster General Burleson has reported to the United States Senate strongly in favor of government ownership and control of telephone and telegraph lines, and wireless systems. Under their proposal the Government would not purchase real estate owned by the various companies, but would find room for switchboards and accessories in post offices or in buildings leased for that purpose. This is designed to reduce the cost of purchasing telephone properties, which was originally estimated at about nine hundred million dollars. The following are the suggestions offered by the committee:

1. That Congress declare a government monopoly over all telegraph, telephone and radio communication and such other means for the transmission of intelligence as may hereafter develop.

2. That Congress acquire by purchase at appraised value the commercial telephone network, except the farmer lines.

3. That Congress authorize the Postmaster General to issue, in his discretion and under such regulations as he may prescribe, revocable licenses for the operation by private individuals, associations, companies and corporations of the telegraph service and such parts of the telephone service as may not be acquired by the Government.

The committee further suggests that the service be extended to obscure localities not now served, and that rates be equalized.

CONFUCIANISM CHINA STATE RELIGION.—A bill prescribing Confucianism as the state religion of the Chinese Republic has been passed by the administrative council which takes the place of the parliament recently dissolved by President Yuan Shi-Kai. It is said that religious tolerance will be extended toward professors of other religions, in harmony with existing treaties with other nations. Representatives of Christianity, Mohammedanism, and Buddhism opposed the adoption of this order, but were not successful in their opposition. Confucianism is more a system of ethics and morals than a religion. It enjoins reverence for parents, and by merging the individual in the family and the family in the state makes the state the supreme object of consideration. Confucius taught many of the virtues but abstained from any extended consideration of such questions as the immortality of the soul, the existence and nature of deity. Concerning the latter question it is said that one of his maxims was, "Respect the gods, but have as little as possible to do with them." He taught the golden rule in a negative form, "What ye would not that others should do unto you, do ye not unto them." The action of the administrative council was taken on the recommendation of the president; and it is thought that the whole move is of purely political significance and indicates the desire of the president to strengthen his position with the masses of the Chinese people.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.—Reverend Charles F. Aked has by the Presbyterian Ministerial Association of San Francisco been asked to resign as president of the Church Federation of that city, and chairman of the executive committee. This action by the Presbyterian ministry is provoked by the position taken by Reverend Aked with reference to the immaculate conception, and set forth in a sermon delivered by him at the First Congregational Church of San Francisco. The expression complained of is as follows:

My conclusion upon this question is that the faith of Mark and John and James and Paul is good enough for me. It is good enough for any Christian. These men say nothing about Jesus having come into the world in a miraculous way. I prefer to stand with them. What do we mean by saying he was divine? It is a question of quantity and not of quality. There is divinity in us, but so much more in him that I prefer to call him divine. Perhaps it would be better to speak of the divineness of man and the divinity of Christ.

Reverend Aked came into prominence on resigning some time ago the pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Church in New York City, attended by the Rockefellers and other millionaires, because said church refused to meet his request for a $500,000 edifice to which the poor of New York might be welcomed. He has expressed his intention to resign the presidency of the San Francisco federation.

BOTTLE VERSUS BOOK.—Two parliamentary commissions recently met in Saint Petersburg, one dealing with the printing and publishing of books and newspapers, the other with the production and sale of vodka. The deliberations of these commissions revealed the fact that in Russia every facility is furnished by law for the sale and distribution of vodka, a government monopoly, while at the same time crippling restrictions are placed upon the public sale and circulation of literature of every kind, from the daily paper to the bound volume of fiction, history, or science. Printing shops may be opened only in towns of five thousand inhabitants and upwards, and may be closed on the slightest provocation, or at the whim of some petty authority, the property being confiscated and publications discontinued. On the other hand, wine shops may be opened anywhere, and their closing is all but impossible. The Duma undertook to regulate the sale of vodka, but these efforts were obstructed by the Council of State. The Duma took the position that wine shops might be closed by a board of aldermen; the Council said no. The Duma contended that they might be closed by a majority of the inhabitants; the Council insisted upon a two thirds majority, the vote to be restricted to men. The Duma then endeavored to confine wine selling to villages having a self-government; the Council authorizes its sale anywhere. It is of interest to note that nineteen of the Council of State are distillers. Discussing the situation in the Kievskaja Mysl, Alexander Yablonsky says:

Vodka and literary products both need a market. But, unfortunately, the bottle has a great advantage over the book in this respect also. The Commission on the Press prohibits boys under seventeen from selling newspapers; while the clerks in wine shops are informed that no excuses for a lack of supply of vodka will be accepted, not even storms, inundations, or earthquakes. Vodka must be on hand everywhere, and woe to the man who is found without a supply. In a word, the press is prosecuted for being distributed, while the distribution of vodka is made compulsory.

It is no doubt the purpose of the Russian Government in the one instance to realize a revenue from the sale of vodka, and in the other to keep the people in ignorance in order to prevent democratic institutions and democratic forms of government. Their course certainly makes for ignorance; whether it will succeed in holding the people under the present monarchical government time will tell.

MESSAGE ACROSS ATLANTIC.—The first wireless message to cross the Atlantic was recently sent by Emperor William, of Germany, to President Wilson, covering a distance of 4,062 miles, from Hanover to the New Jersey coast. This marks a signal triumph in the progress of the wireless method of communication.

ADMINISTRATION AND SUFFRAGE.—The present administration at Washington has declared itself upon the question of woman's suffrage by taking the position that the franchise should be controlled by the several States, in harmony with the principal of local self-government as held to by the party now in power. President Wilson in addressing a committee of working women who visited the White House last week declined to commit his party, since woman suffrage had not been championed in the party platform. Both in caucus and by its leaders upon the floor of the House this party has declared itself as indicated.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—The embargo on munitions of war has been lifted. It is urged by the administration that this action is taken not to favor the Constitutionals, but rather because of changed conditions. The embargo was placed upon arms and ammunition in March, 1912, during the revolution against President Madero, and with the idea of aiding in the suppression of said revolution and helping to maintain constitutional government in Mexico. The situation now is reversed, according to the viewpoint of the Washington administration, and there is no constitutional government in Mexico. By lifting the embargo it is maintained that Mexico is left free to settle her own affairs, which condition it is hoped will bring about soon a constitutional administration in the city of Mexico. Many arms and much ammunition stored along the border are being hurriedly carried to the constitutional forces in northern Mexico. This will strengthen their hands for the attack upon Torreon and Mexico City.

REBELLION IN PERU.—Guillermo Billinghurst, president of Peru, was taken prisoner on the 4th inst. as the result of a military revolution. He was removed to Callao, from which port he will be sent into exile in a foreign country. General Enrique Varela, premier and minister of war, was killed. The revolt is due principally to dissatisfaction over President Billinghurst's efforts to place the finances of the country on a sound basis. To do this the president urged the strictest economy throughout the public service, particularly with reference to the salaries of office holders and to estimates. This pruning of salaries and estimates proved unpopular, and to overcome it the rebellion was instigated.

MEXICAN WAR.—Mazatlan, an important seacoast town on the western coast of Mexico, is reported to have been captured by the Constitutionalist forces. Mazatlan is the home of many rich Spaniards and Mexicans, who it is thought will be forced to contribute to the Constitutionalist cause. It is a port from which much shipping is done. This is the first seaport to come into possession of the Constitutionals. Its possession will no doubt be decidedly to their advantage.

BUREAU OF PUBLICITY.

Starr Corless, Coldwater, Michigan: "The Open Letter to the Clergy I am sure will be productive of much good. It is right to the point. We will do all we can to help the good work along."

C. W. Hawkins, San Jose, California: "I think this a grand move."

Stewart Lamont, Chatham, Ontario: "Two of these letters are for the editors of our daily papers, who have promised to publish same. The movement is a good one, and all should help in it."

E. O. Clark, Des Moines, Iowa: "Inclosed please find money order to amount of $5.65, sent me as the contribution of the Boone Branch of the Saints for mailing out Open Letter. With best wishes for the bureau and all connected with it."

A minister of the Congregational Church having a pastorate in California, writes as follows: "Yours of the 14th instant with Open Letter to the Clergy is at hand. I have read it with interest, and am glad to get light upon the work of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. If you are ever in these parts, I shall be glad to see you."

W. N. Robinson, Tulsa, Oklahoma: "I note with pleasure the information of the letters being sent out by the Bureau of Publicity. I take pleasure in appending herewith a list of names of all the pastors of the city and those in charge of religious work."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BUTTERWORTH TO CONFERENCE.—Letter from Brother C. A. Butterworth, of Australia, informs us that he is making preparations to be in attendance at the coming General Conference. This letter indicates the present hopeful condition of the Australian Mission. It will appear next week.

SUGGESTION FOR QUORUMS.—We are in receipt of circular number one from Brother E. A. Thomas, secretary of the Kirtland Quorum of Priests, in which is set forth a plan by which the quorum is to furnish its members with information with reference to various features of church work. Loose leaf binders are supplied the members. When one desires information on any given point he may write the quorum editor who has access to several libraries. Securing the facts or data requested, the editor furnishes them not only to the one inquiring, but also to each member of the quorum, in a form to be inserted in the binder. We call attention to this method for the benefit of other quorums who might adapt it to their work.

THE TWO DYINGS.

I can remember, once ere I was dead,
The sorrow and the prayer and bitter cry
When they that loved me stood around the bed,
Knowing that I should die.

They need not so have grieved their souls for me,
Grouped statue-like to count my failing breath;
Only one thought strove faintly, bitterly,
With the kind drug of Death:

How once upon a time, unwept, unknown,
Unhelped by pitying sigh or murmured prayer,
My youth died in slow agony alone,
With none to watch or care.

—Margaret Widdemer in Everybody's, June, 1913.

KINGDOM OF GOD, KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, CHURCH OF GOD SYNONYMOUS.

WHY MAKE A DISTINCTION WHEN THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE?—NUMBER 2.

In number 1 it was our effort to show that the standard books of the church use the terms faith and belief synonymously and interchangeably. In number 2 we will make the same claim for the phrases kingdom of God, kingdom of heaven, and church of God, with all the different phrases used to designate the church.

WHAT IS THE CORRECT POSITION?

There are some who claim that there is a marked distinction between the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven. Others think they see a clear distinction between the kingdom of God (represented by the two phrases, we presume,) and the church of God.

Our position may be stated as follows: The kingdom of God, in its imperfect condition, was located on the earth in the days of Jesus Christ and his apostles. By imperfect we mean in the sense of the moral and spiritual condition of its citizens, and because of its incompleteness. In one sense, the kingdom can never be perfect until it is complete. In another and very important sense, it can never become perfect until all its citizens become righteous, in a gospel sense. We believe that this same kingdom is now located on the earth, by virtue of the beginning of the great restoration which was to precede the second advent of the Lord Jesus, in power and glory.

The kingdom of God or kingdom of heaven, also exists in heaven, incomplete, but perfect in the moral and spiritual condition of its inmates. Either one of these two phrases, kingdom of God and kingdom of heaven, properly apply to the kingdom on the earth, or in heaven, or to both, when they shall have been united in one. They are so used in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants. If we use the phrases, church of God or church of Jesus Christ, they refer to the same divine institution, whether it is located on earth or in heaven.

When reference is had to the kingdom of heaven, located on the earth, it is, in fact, the kingdom or church militant; but when reference is had to the kingdom in heaven, it is the kingdom triumphant. And when the two shall have been united in one, it will be not only the kingdom triumphant, in a limited sense, (that is, for those who have actually secured a glorious triumph) but the kingdom triumphant and complete. Precisely the same is true of a proper application of these terms to the church.

SYNONYMOUS AND INTERCHANGEABLE.

From a comprehensive examination of Bible statements, made by those who were properly authorized and qualified to represent the church and kingdom of God, together with later statements found in the revelations of Jesus Christ concerning the restored church and gospel, we reach the conclusion that the expressions kingdom of God, kingdom of heaven, and the different phrases applied to the church of God, are synonymous, and may be properly used interchangeably. Indeed, they are so used.

Matthew, in recording the parables of Jesus, uses the expression, kingdom of heaven, at least ten times: In chapter thirteen, seven times; chapter twenty-five, twice; and in chapter nineteen, once. From this last citation I quote as follows:

Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.—Verses 23, 24.

We quote this for the purpose of showing that Matthew understood the two phrases (kingdom of God and kingdom of heaven) to mean the same thing; for, as these verses show, he uses them interchangeably.

Mark, Luke, and John use kingdom of God. Paul, too, seems to have preferred this manner of expression. But I call special attention to the fact that Mark and Luke apply the phrase to the very same parables where Matthew uses the kingdom of heaven.

What should be our conclusion on this testimony? Did Jesus use one of these expressions only? If so, either these two writers, or Matthew, was guilty of ignoring the language of Jesus. It can not be that they forgot it, for the phrase is a short one, and was repeated many times. And, by the way, we can not accuse Matthew of ignoring the language of Jesus, for he uses the kingdom of God at least three times.

The proper conclusion, therefore, is easily reached. Jesus evidently used both phrases, and because of this the sacred writers understood the two phrases to be synonymous and interchangeable, hence each one used them, or one of them, according to his taste or preference.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS THE CHURCH.

The kingdom of heaven or the kingdom of God, whichever you prefer, is God's church, whether located on earth or in heaven; whether existing in its imperfect condition (that is, in part), or in its completeness and perfection. Why not, since the church is a divine institution, the purpose of which is the salvation of God's people?

"And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."—Acts 2: 47.

We are not at liberty to presume that the Lord would place men and women in a church that was human in its origin and character in order that they might be saved! Further, God places the people in his church because of their belief in him and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and their obedience to the gospel. And the gospel (please note it well) is the law of the church, and the law of the kingdom of God.

In Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, we have a record of the law given for the government of the church till Christ shall come in glory. In paragraph 5, the "elders, priests, and teachers" are commanded to preach the principles of Christ's gospel "which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon." And in 58: 5, we read, "Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom."

This shows, without further reference, that the law of the church is the gospel law, referred to by James as "the perfect law of liberty." (James 1: 25.) This is the law which governs the kingdom of God, therefore the kingdom of God and the church are synonymous.

And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people.—Matthew 4: 23.

Mark gives it as follows: "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God."—Mark 1: 14.

The same law, we discover, belongs to the kingdom of heaven, kingdom of God, and the church.

But to return to the church as a divine institution.

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.—Ephesians 5: 25-27.

And upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 18.

We purposely emphasize my because it shows that the church belongs to the Son of God; and if so, it is in fact the church of Jesus Christ. If Jesus Christ was the builder of the primitive church, and if he died for it, that it might become a pure church, "without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," then surely the church he built and for which he died is divine. And if, as we believe, the church has been restored to earth in these last days, it is still as divine as it ever was.

The writer believes that "the church of God," (eklesia, that which is called out"), has existed, and may exist, either in an organized or unorganized condition. In its broadest sense it embraces all the forces of righteousness and truth which, when received and properly used, never fail to improve the condition of those who receive them. So, men and women who believe in God, love the truth, and diligently seek after righteousness are a portion of God's church, and in all the ages of the past he has not failed to extend to them his special watchcare and love.

These forces of righteousness and truth referred to constitute a part, yes, an important part of the divine plan, called the gospel. And while we may be in advance of them, if equally faithful and diligent, because we have come in contact with a greater light, and although they may yet be in "the wilderness," they do, nevertheless, constitute a part of God's church and kingdom.

Another reason for believing that the kingdom of God is the church, is seen in the fact that a large number of the parables of Jesus given to illustrate the true character of the kingdom of heaven describe the work and condition of the church from its incipency till it reaches perfection. It has a small beginning here on the earth, but grows or develops into a condition of magnitude and perfection. For a time the elements of wickedness and imperfection are in the kingdom, and are quite prominent; but at the time of the end these are all eliminated and the righteous are left in peaceable possession.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—Jesus.

In proof of this position read all the parables of Matthew 13, and a number of the same as given by Mark and Luke. For instance, we take the parable of the mustard seed. From such a small beginning we have the mustard tree, in which the fowls of heaven find a place to lodge. Again, we notice the parable of the net cast into the sea, which gathers of all kinds, but when drawn to shore the good are put into vessels, while the bad are cast away.

So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.—Jesus.

This growth of the kingdom of God, which finds its explanation in the development of the church of God on earth, is made very plain by another parable of Jesus:

And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.—Mark 4: 26-29.

This is so plain that it requires no comment; and is a hard hit on the theory that the kingdom of God will have no existence on earth till established by Jesus Christ when he shall come in power and great glory.

Without reasonable doubt, this is the kingdom

(church) for which Jesus lived and died; the one which he said he would build on the true foundation. But it should be borne in mind that he builds through human instrumentalities of his own choice, who are required to follow closely the directions which he shall and will give, as the great Master Builder. Hence the following plain and precious instruction:

Wherefore, seek not the things of this world; but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things (temporal blessing) shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6: 38, Inspired Version.

CHURCH OF GOD IN HEAVEN.

Just as the kingdom of God is now located on earth and in heaven, and will remain there till the time of perfection and triumph, so it is with the church; for the terms of designation are identical.

It will be admitted, we believe, that the family of God are those who obey the gospel and become his church. The faithful ones, who have finished their work of preparation and scored a victory, become members of the church triumphant, while those who remain here are members of the church militant. The connection is so close between the two parts of the one church that the perfect record of our work and standing, while here, is kept in heaven.

But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the Firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.—Hebrews 12: 22-24.

By reference to Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7 we learn that Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon saw the church of the Firstborn located in heaven. The passage reads as follows:

And thus we saw the glory of the celestial, which excels in all things; where God, even the Father, reigns upon his throne for ever and ever, before whose throne all things bow in humble reverence and give him glory for ever and ever. They who dwell in his presence are the church of the Firstborn; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received of his fullness and of his grace; and he makes them equal in power, and in might, and in dominion.

Thus we still further prove the synonymous and interchangeable meaning of the different phrases, used to designate that divine institution ordained (together with its divine law) for the salvation of God's children. So it is evident, we think, that when we become members of "the church of God," we become members of "the kingdom of God"; and when we become members of the kingdom of God we become members of his church.

GOD'S PLAN.

We are mortal, weak, and, sometimes, quite easily discouraged. All this and much more concerning our limited and needy condition God knows. For this reason, and because of his love for man, his wisdom and power, it is his plan to bring his children in as close and direct contact as is practicable with all that he has ordained for their timely and eternal good. In this wondrous effort God manifests his great condescension.

At the very foundation of this work lies the atonement of Christ. Christ does not remain in heaven, but God sends him down here among us, to be one of us, to meet the ills and trials of life as we have to meet them, that he may demonstrate how the battles of life should be fought, and what may be secured through a childlike and perfect obedience to the divine plan. God was willing to send Christ because of his love for us, and Christ was willing to come because of the same love. (John 3: 16-19; 2 John 4: 9, 10; John 10: 11, 17, 18.)

The gospel is God's plan for the salvation of the human family, and it is, as we have already seen, the law of the church and kingdom of God. (1 Corinthians 15: 1, 2; Romans 1: 16; 2 Corinthians 4: 3, 4.) This gospel, "the gospel of our salvation," "the perfect law of liberty," together with the kingdom or church to which it belongs, are not kept in heaven, but are brought right here, where men are commissioned to preach the gospel to all people, and build up the kingdom of God among men. Note it carefully that the authoritative declaration of the gospel is closely connected with the building up of the church and kingdom of God on earth.

Then said Jesus unto them, The law and the prophets testify of me; yea, and all the prophets who have written, even unto John, have foretold of these days. Since that time, the kingdom of God is preached, and every man who seeketh truth presseth into it.—Luke 16: 17, 18, Inspired Version.

Herein is described the contact that God intended between the divine plan and the people. Hence we read: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God" (Mark 1: 1); and Matthew tells us that when John began to preach, he said to the people, "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Matthew 3: 2.)

At one time Jesus answered this question:

And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here; or, Lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.—Luke 17: 20, 21.

The marginal translation is, "among you," and the Inspired Version, "For behold, the kingdom of God has already come unto you." (Luke 17: 20, 21.)

Jesus, "the messenger of the covenant," commenced his ministry in this way:

Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1: 14, 15.

So we can not wonder that Paul wrote to the Colossian saints, "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." (Colossians 1:13.) Nor can we wonder that Jesus should say to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) We are further instructed by reading in Acts 8 that "Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them"; that "when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women"; that when the apostles heard of the work being done at Samaria, they sent Peter and John down there to assist Philip in his work. They prayed for these new converts, and they laid on hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost. (Verses 5, 12-17.)

Under the restored gospel and church the same plan of the unchangeable God is made manifest. God does not take us to heaven that we may be made acquainted with his gospel, church, and kingdom, but he brings them from heaven to earth. After all, the kingdom of God on earth is a transfer of authority, power, righteousness and peace, from heaven to earth. It is, therefore, perfectly consistent that we should pray and work in harmony with our prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven"; for the transfer will not have been fully accomplished until the kingdom above shall have been fully united with the kingdom below. When this has been fully accomplished, and not till then, will God's will be fully done on earth as it is now done in heaven.

But to return:

And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, even as many as will believe in me, and hearken unto my voice; yea, verily, verily I say unto you, that the field is white already to harvest; wherefore, thrust in your sickles, and reap with all your might, mind, and strength. Open your mouths and they shall be filled; and you shall become even as Nephi of old, who journeyed from Jerusalem in the wilderness; yea, open your mouths and spare not, and you shall be laden with sheaves upon your backs, for lo, I am with you; yea, open your mouths and they shall be filled, saying, Repent, repent and prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; [italics mine] yea, repent and be baptized everyone of you, for the remission of your sins; yea, be baptized even by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost.—Doctrine and Covenants 32:2.

In Doctrine and Covenants 39:5, we have the following: "Wherefore, go forth, crying with a loud voice, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." This "kingdom of heaven," which was "at hand," in the days of John, Jesus, and in our own day, will finally be united with that part of the kingdom which is now in heaven. Then will the kingdom be established on earth, in its completeness, no more to be thrown down. I quote again:

Hearken, and lo, a voice as of one from on high, who is mighty and powerful, whose going forth is unto the ends of the earth; yea, whose voice is unto men, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. The keys of the kingdom of God are committed unto man on the earth, and from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth, until it has filled the whole earth; yea, a voice crying, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, prepare ye the supper of the Lamb, make ready for the Bridegroom; pray unto the Lord; call upon his holy name; make known his wonderful works among the people, call upon the Lord, that his kingdom may go forth upon the earth; that the inhabitants thereof may receive it, and be prepared for the days to come, in the which the Son of Man shall come down in heaven, clothed in the brightness of his glory, to meet the kingdom of God which is set up on the earth; wherefore, may the kingdom of God go forth, that the kingdom of heaven may come, that thou, O God, may be glorified in heaven, so on earth, that thy enemies may be subdued; for thine is the honor, power, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 65.

Then will be fulfilled the statement of Daniel:

And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.—Daniel 7:27.

A CONVERTED JEW.

JEWISH IDEAS ON HELL, BAPTISM, GATHERING, ETC.

A few weeks ago while I was at Hood River, Oregon, a converted Jew was advertised to hold special services there. I attended two of these services. There were several things he said about his people, the Jews, that interested me. I introduced myself to him, and requested an interview. He willingly consented, so with Brother H. W. Chapman I called on him the next day. We were kindly received. During the interview some things were brought out that I believe will be of interest to many of the Saints.

I asked him as to the Jewish idea of hell; as to the prophecies in Deuteronomy 30:1-5; Jeremiah 16:14-17; Jeremiah 23:7, 8; Jeremiah 30:11-18; Jeremiah 31:35, 36; Isaiah 32; Ezekiel 38 and 39, and other texts. I asked if the Jews believed these were yet to be literally fulfilled. I asked what they understood Gog and Magog of Ezekiel 38 to mean. I asked what he knew of baptism and when it originated. We also talked about the gathering of the Jews and many other things that I can not here write fully.

As to the Jewish idea of hell, he answered that the word rendered hell in the King James version and hades in the Revised Version was sheol in Hebrew, and was understood to be the place where the spirits or souls of the dead were kept between death and the resurrection; that the Jews believed that there were two compartments, one for the good, the other for the bad; that the word rendered variously as pit, prison, and hell was in the Hebrew scriptures rendered sheol. As to the position taken by soul sleepers and some others that the word hell meant grave, he said that the word for grave in Hebrew could only properly mean grave.

As to the prophecies referred to and the gathering of the Jews, he said in part that the Jews accepted only a literal rendering of those prophecies; that they looked forward to the time when they would be the leading nation of the world. He believed that that time would come. He said that the Jews believed that a Messiah would be raised up, and that they would be gathered to their home land. Reference was made to Isaiah 11:15 where in connection with the gathering of Israel we read, "And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian Sea." He said that this was now being fulfilled; that by a gradual rising of the ground in that region the tongue of the Egyptian Sea was disappearing, and was now so shallow that it could be waded.

What most interested us in this connection was what he said about the present condition of doubt in the minds of the orthodox Jews with reference to Jesus, that is, whether or not he was the Messiah. He said that after Jesus was crucified the high priest Caiaphas investigated the matter, and was convinced of his resurrection; that at that time he wrote to the Sanhedrin as follows: Sanhedrin 89 by Saphu 2-7: To you masters of Israel, etc. If this strange personage is from God and should prove to be the Savior we have looked for so long and I have been the means of crucifying him, I have no further offerings to make for sin. If he proves to be the ruler that we are looking for his glory will increase, such are the teachings of the prophets.

The above is taken from the Jerusalem Talmud. He says that this with their sufferings and persecutions is causing the Jews to wonder if their fathers did not make a mistake when they crucified Jesus; and that of late when the orthodox Jews meet in their synagogues on Friday evenings, with their faces turned toward Jerusalem and their hats on their heads, they offer the following prayer: Jehovah, turn again our captivity, remember our sorrows and gather us again to the home land which thou didst give unto our Father Abraham. For our sins we are scattered and punished. Pardon our iniquity. If he who came were the ruler promised, and we in blindness rejected him, pardon our iniquity and send the Messiah to restore the kingdom to Israel, to reign on the throne of David, that we may accept him and be delivered from our sorrows. Hear us, oh thou holy and just One.

As I heard him repeat this prayer I thought of Zechariah 12:10: "And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced," etc. It seemed to me that another link was being added to the chain of evidence supporting the latter-day prophecies; that the time was nearing when their prayers would be answered; that when fully realizing their mistake they would mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son; that those who are to-day rejecting him by accepting false teachings would have their time of sorrow. I felt to pray that we of latter-day Israel would be prepared for the events that seem to be hastening, even nearer than we realize.

With regard to Gog and Magog, he said that Ezekiel 38 and 39 to be understood should be read in connection with Zechariah 12:1-4, Zechariah 14:1-9, Matthew 24:14-30, Revelation 14:14-20, Revelation 19:17-21; that Gog meant the chief or ruling prince, Magog his land; that the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal could be positively indentified as the ruler of Russia; that Moscow, the former capital of European Russia, is taken from Meshech, Tobolask in Asiatic Russia from Tubal; that the chief prince of those places could be no other than the ruler of Russia; and that as the Russians were the last to persecute Israel it was consistent with divine justice as well as prophecy that they would be the leaders in the last mad attempt to exterminate Israel after they were gathered to the home land.

With regard to the origin of baptism he said that so far back as they have Jewish history baptism was practiced by immersion only, that at the coming of John the Baptist he only practiced what was well known to the Jews. He referred to a book containing the letters of Herod to the emperor of Rome, in one of which he gives his reasons for beheading John the Baptist. In this letter he claims that John the Baptist was trying to do away with circumcision, and had baptism answer for it.

This man was Doctor Elwood Lyon, educated in medicine, law, and theology.

A WARNING.

A New York paper one morning last week reported (in two cases with names and places) three cases of attempted drugging of young women by the use of the hypodermic needle. In one case the girl, who had been married only a week, was watching moving pictures in a well-known theater. The seat next her was vacant, and presently it was taken by a young man. In picking up a wrap which she had dropped to the floor the young woman felt a sharp sting in her right hand. She presently began to feel faint and went to the retiring-room, which she was fortunate enough to reach before fainting. In another and precisely similar case the young woman got up to go out, and the man beside her told the usher that she was his wife and that he would look out for her. Fortunately the helpless girl's sister came down the aisle at the same moment. The Outlook has no opportunity of verifying these stories. They may be mere pieces of fiction in which too many American newspapers indulge; but they are in line with similar stories from many sources.

Things have come to such a pass, owing to the devices of the infamous scoundrels, men and women, who are engaged in the white slave traffic, that a young woman can trust no one whom she does not know. These horrible creatures assume all sorts of guises. They even wear the robes of nuns and Sisters of Charity; they feign illness; they ask to be taken to houses in cabs and helped up the steps, and then, when the door closes, the unfortunate, kind-hearted girl who has helped is in the worst of all traps and exposed to a peril infinitely more dreadful than death.

Not long ago a young woman traveling on a train was spoken to by an elderly man. She refused to answer him, but he persisted. Presently he went away, and then, rejoining her, said: "You will get off with me at the next station. I have explained to the conductor that you are my daughter, and that you are out of your mind. Any resistance you make will confirm the statement." The girl fortunately had a clear head. She made no reply, but presently left her seat, went to an old gentleman in the car, explained the circumstances to him, and found that he had already heard the statement of the man who had insulted her. She then asked if he would do her the kindness to get off at the next station and stand by her until she could telephone to her father and get his answer. Fortunately this request was granted; and the girl was saved by her clearness of mind.

As things now are a young woman can accept no advances, can enter no carriage with any woman, however the woman may appear to be suffering, can not for a moment go inside the door of any strange house. The infamous creatures who prey on young women have made it dangerous for girls and women to be helpful to strangers. All that a woman can do under such circumstances is to summon a policeman. —The Outlook, December 13, 1914.

PROTECTING BIRDS FROM MILLINERY TRADE.

A remarkable victory for the cause of wild-life conservation is that which was won last summer by the inclusion in Schedule N of the new tariff bill of what has been quite properly called the "Hornaday Bill," which now prohibits the importation into this country of all foreign wild birds' plumage except for scientific or educational purposes,—or, in other words, excludes such plumage for use in millinery. As far as I am aware, the first serious proposal ever made in this country to protect the birds of the world from the feather trade was put forth by Doctor Hornaday in November, 1911, in his printed "Program," and in the following words: "Stop all killing of insectivorous birds for food, and of all birds for millinery purposes."

The section of the tariff bill which has this purpose was written by Doctor Hornaday, acting for the New York Zoological Society, but in the very aggressive campaign in support of it, particularly during June, July, and August, 1913, Doctor Hornaday and Mr. T. Gilbert Pearson, secretary of the National Association of Audubon Societies, worked in close cooperation. The plumage importers and milliners opposed this measure in the Senate with the utmost stubbornness, and also with alarming success, right up to the very eleventh hour of their opportunity. Doctor Hornaday's measure was passed by the House without change and without opposition, but in the Senate, as the result of pressure brought to bear upon the "Subcommittee on Schedule N" of the Senate Finance Committee, it was almost completely emasculated.

Meanwhile Doctor Hornaday and Mr. Pearson had flooded the country with detailed information and appeals for support; and in consequence of this all Senators were deluged by letters from constituents who demanded the passage of the measure. Probably the most effective appeals in support of the measure were those which came from the women of the country, whom Doctor Hornaday and Mr. Pearson reached directly through their various clubs and societies. The upshot of it all was that on September 2, after a three-hour fight, the Senate Democratic caucus reversed the action of the Finance Committee, and restored to the bill the clause which the Zoological Society had submitted.—From "A champion of wild life," by George Gladden, in the American Review of Reviews for December.

ANCIENT NAVAHO RECORDS.

PHILADELPHIA, December 12.—Records which it is claimed upset all the theories of government experts regarding the origin of the Navaho Indians and show a complete diary of the leading events in the life of that tribe for one thousand nine hundred years are on the way from Arizona to the University of Pennsylvania museum, according to an announcement made here to-night.

The discovery was due to children of Shewank, present chief of the Navahos, who persuaded their father to allow the records to be made public for the benefit of science, the announcement stated. Anemone Shewank, a graduate of the Indian school at Carlisle, is now in Philadelphia arranging with Professor G. B. Gordon, of the university museum, for the compilation and translation of the records. Her brother, to whom the leadership of her tribe will descend upon the death of her father, is also a graduate of an eastern university.

The knowledge of the futile attempts made by ethnologists to trace the origin of the American Indian, it is said, prompted the Shewanks to intercede with their people for the publication of the Navaho records, which have been secretly preserved in prehistoric structures in the West for generations.

The records are carved on stone, burned on bark, molded in pottery and drawn on the skins and parchments with human blood, Indian inks and charcoal.

One of the remarkable features of the records is the reference to three distinct races on the continent of North America one thousand years or more ago. These people, according to the characters with which they are perpetuated, were of entirely different blood and antecedents, and their customs and habits of life were at great variance. Just where the three peoples were, and their possible origin is expected to be discovered by the experts who are to examine the records.—Kansas City Journal, December 13, 1913.

PLUNDER IN HIGH SALARIES.

Graft is not confined to politics. There is graft in business, especially in corporate business. One of the dangerous and demoralizing forms of this graft is the unearned fancy salary. The Hughes insurance investigation, among other things, brought about a drastic reduction of salaries in the insurance field, and yet there is more efficiency or method in life insurance to-day than there was formerly. The Panama Canal has also furnished proof of the truth that genius and ability are not monopolized by those who are willing to pay tremendous salaries out of the pockets of consumers or stockholders.

According to Mr. Mellen, the former head of the much-manipulated and exploited New Haven and Hartford Railroad, no corporation should pay more than twenty-five thousand dollars a year to any officer, as no man is worth more, and no one will work harder for twice or thrice that amount. Mr. Mellen's statements have, of course, been attacked by men who receive fancy salaries and have persuaded themselves that they are worthy of their hire, if not indispensable. But while here and there an exceptional man may be worth more, the simple truth is that high salaries are generally fixed without reference to merits or needs. They are fixed by friendly directors, who often expect favors in return—especially if they are dummy directors who fail to direct—while the real owners of the great corporations, the stockholders, have no control and no veto power.

It is refreshing to find that the leading newspapers are in sympathy with the demand for some control of corporate salaries and disposed to ridicule the pretensions of the self-styled Napoleons of industry and commerce. We quote an editorial from a conservative paper, the New York Tribune:

Mr. Mellen has put his finger on one of the great abuses of corporation development in this country. Railroads, insurance companies and other great corporations have set the precedent of overpaying the men at the top, giving them in many instances salaries entirely out of keeping with the value of their work.

Few salaries beyond twenty-five thousand dollars represent work done or expected to be done. Officials with enormous salaries quickly come to believe in the fictitious value put on their services, and then their usefulness is over. Spending a salary of fifty to one hundred thousand dollars engrosses so much of a man's time and interest that he is likely to turn more and more into a figurehead, living on the work of his subordinates.

The fact that a corporation's income is large does not justify it in wasting money in excessive merely-for-show salaries. Overpay takes away the incentive to do genuine work, and in the end hurts the corporation instead of benefiting it. It would probably be a good thing if as Mr. Mellen suggests, some reasonable limit were to be put on the compensation which custom has foolishly approved for the heads of the larger corporations.

Several editorials of similar tenor and tone from other great papers might be reproduced did not space limits forbid. Graft in salaries is as pernicious as graft in another form. To pay without reference to the actual value of services, or to the supply of skill and ability, is to plunder the owners and the public. To plunder the public is to encourage plunder in other forms—within or without the law. Bad examples are more potent than good preaching of honesty and thrift and social service.

Unearned salaries cause many envious men to get rich by trickery, cunning, sharp practice, fraud.

Nothing is more imperatively needed in the United States than a movement for plain living and high thinking, for reward on the basis of strict merit, for healthy idealism in business and professional life. A reduction of unearned salaries at the top would tend to produce a better feeling in the lower strata. Nothing is so bad for a society as a sense of injustice, of special privilege successfully defended by cant and sophistry, of plunder under forms of law and business ethics.—The Chautauquan, January 10, 1914.

THE PROGRESS OF EUGENICS.

During the past twenty-seven months more than two thousand four hundred persons have exchanged letters with the Eugenics Record Office of Cold Spring Harbor, New York, on matters concerning some phase of eugenical studies. Up to January 20, 1913, there were ten thousand and fifty surname trait cards in the files of the office. These are for use in locating all persons of the same surname with the same trait—as for example, all the Smiths with Huntington's Chorea. There were also ten thousand fifty trait surname cards in the files. These enabled the students to find all the data in the office on a given trait, classified according to surnames (the maiden names of married women are always used when available.)

There are now eight thousand six hundred fifty-five trait-locality cards. These enable one to locate readily all the data in the files of the office on mechanical geniuses in Connecticut, or any town or city of that State, or on feeble-mindedness in Rockland County, New York, and so on. There are also eight thousand six hundred fifty-five locality-trait cards, which collection performs, as its name indicates, the function of tracing the history of traits possessed by the families of a given locality. It is a sort of inventory of the blood of the community. Then there are the surname locality cards, and the locality-surname cards both numbering eight thousand one hundred fifty. The first constitutes a directory of the geographical distribution of a given family, and the second serves as a directory of family names of a given community.

On January 22, 1913, there were on file in the Eugenics Record Office seventy-seven requests in which intelligent persons asked for instructions for making a study of the eugenical fitness of a contemplated marriage, all of which letters were received within a space of four months.

Of late the subject of eugenics has become a popular one for newspaper discussion. Unfortunately the American reporter does not trouble himself to find out the truth concerning the aims and methods of eugenical study. Anything even remotely related to sex hygiene, infant mortality, birthmarks, baby culture, sex control, prenatal influence, or to the care, "cure" or treatment of defectives, is given a heading entitled "eugenics"—this or that. Some day they will learn that it is only one of the sciences devoted to the promotion of human welfare.

Eugenics is no more concerned with defectives than with genius. Both are legitimate objects of eugenical study. Eugenics does not seek to undo or to modify one's traits—that is a task for the educator—but it does seek to prevent in the future eugenically unfit matings. It is not—as one paper recently called it—"the latest social upheaval." It does not propose to undermine the existing social and moral order, or to destroy love; but its program does call for the eugenical education of the intelligent classes, and for the intelligent management of defectives.—Scientific American, December 13, 1913.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

Saint Valentine's Day.

"The custom of sending valentines can, without doubt, be traced, in origin, to a practice among the ancient Romans. At the feast of Lupercalia, which was held on the 15th of February, in honor of the great god Pan, the names of all the virgin daughters of Rome were put in a box and drawn therefrom by the young men, and each youth was bound to offer a gift to the maiden who fell to his lot, and to make her his partner during the time of the feast. This custom became allied to the name of Saint Valentine, probably, only through a coincidence in dates.

"Saint Valentine was a bishop of Rome during the third century. He was of a most amiable nature and possessed remarkable gifts of eloquence, and was so very successful in converting the pagan Romans to Christianity that he incurred the displeasure of the emperor and was martyred by his order February 14, A. D. 270. When the saint came to be placed in the calendar, his name was given to the day of his death and this was made a festival to offset that of the Lupercalia, and an effort was made to substitute the names of saints for those of girls in the lottery but, naturally, without success.

History tells us that the pagan festival of Lupercalia was suppressed in 496 A. D., on account of the gross excesses it gave rise to during its celebrations.

The Gift of True Love.

It was Valentine's Day, the schoolroom had just been emptied of its fifty little occupants, and the young teacher had turned back to the desk when a little boy climbed to the platform and, clinging with one hand to the edge of the desk, shoved a little card valentine forward, at the same time looking up with his beautiful, shining brown eyes, up into a face that smiled down upon him in appreciation of his gift of love. A few months later and the little form of the child lay cold and still, the brown eyes closed for ever, and the young teacher dropped her tears beside him; but the little valentine was one of her treasures for more than thirty years. On the back of it was written "Sacred to the memory of Bertie Long. 'To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die.'" The child and his gift of love live still in memory, imperishable.

A busy mother was interrupted at her work by the abrupt entrance of her young son, who came to her with impetuous haste, asking if she had been to the post office that day. When she answered that she had not, he inquired with evident solicitude if she intended to go. The walk was a long one and the mother was so busy she thought she could not go that day, but the boy was urgent and finally told her he thought he had seen a letter in the box. Thinking it might be from her husband who was far from home on a prolonged absence, the mother finally pacified the child by telling him she would go down town in the afternoon and would call at the post office.

When she neared the office, she found her little boy expectant and eager, apparently waiting for her. With difficulty they made their way into the crowded office and took their place in the waiting line of people. To the impatient child the time seemed very long before his mother could stand at the delivery window and receive the letter he had said he believed to be in the box. Once he left her side and making his way through the crowd, as only a little boy could, he stood on tiptoe and looked into the box; then he returned and announced in a stage whisper, "Yes, mother; it's there." And mother smiled and nodded, thinking it was from father.

But it wasn't, and though it was not, mother continued to smile, and the glow of joy that thrilled her heart when she looked on the childish scrawl upon the envelope and again when she looked within and found a little white valentine, with a few little touches of gold and pretty color, and in the center a little scroll with the simple words, "Think of me still"—the joy that thrilled her at that moment never died away till her faithful heart ceased to beat. When she was gone, they found the valentine in her Bible. Upon it was written, "Eddie's valentine to his mother," and upon the inside, "From my dear little boy."

You may send a valentine to a girl of your acquaintance and she may receive it in one of various ways; but, if you send a valentine to your mother, there is but one way in which she will receive it. The girl may give it a passing smile, even a disdainful smile, but your mother will smile the happy smile of love that is glad in your love.

But sometimes the girl to whom you send your valentine smiles that way, too. It was in the early dusk of the evening of Saint Valentine's Day years ago when a youth might have been seen wending his way along a hedge-lined road of the country. He carried in his hand a small parcel evidently dainty and precious in his estimation, should one judge from the careful manner in which he handled it. It was his first and only love valentine. He had sent many a comic valentine in jest, but this was very different. He was carrying it in person to a girl who was enshrined in his heart, a girl to whom he gave reverence, a girl to whom he would give his most faithful love and sturdy loyalty if she would receive it. And she did, prizing devotion, and loyalty, and honest and kind love above the more showy external attractions of others who sought her.

Take a Second Look.

"I am not one of those who do not believe in love at first sight, but I believe in taking a second look."

Thus writes a wise man. In contrast to his sentiment we offer the following:

"I did but see thee passing by,
And lo! I'll love thee till I die."

This inscription is from a valentine and is characteristic of the sentiments often expressed upon those purported messengers of love. When we look into it, we find something of a similarity between the principle involved here and that involved in the selection of partners in the celebration of the ancient festival in honor of Pan. Both savor strongly of chance mating, an error to be avoided.

In the feast of Lupercalia, the young man drew a young woman's name from a box, and she became his partner throughout the feast, throughout its riotous orgies and its degenerating rites. Should one act upon the principle expressed in the rhyme: "I did but see thee passing by, and lo! I'll love thee till I die," would he not be perilously near the danger of chance mating?

Can one know from a first meeting that there is a reasonable basis for love? For love, to be a successful venture, must have a good foundation. Acquaintance must reveal traits, qualities, and powers that are not to be seen at a single glance or at a first meeting. Too often have young people, both young men and young women, found that marriage had taken place without sufficient acquaintance, that concealed faults lay beneath a pleasing exterior, as cruel and destructive rocks or shoals may lie beneath a smooth surface of water. Too often has the marriage bark been wrecked on the hidden objectionable things that hasty courtship did not discover.

Young people will do well to take the advice of the wise man and "take a second look."

What Is Love?

The question is a very old one, and one very often propounded. It is also answered in many different ways.

One writer tells us that it is a beautiful necessity of our nature to love something good. Another asks, "If a man loves a woman for her beauty, does he love her?" Then, answering his own question, he reasons that this is not love; for, if the woman's beauty should be destroyed by smallpox, the man's love, based upon her beauty, would cease. He reasons likewise that, if a man loves a woman for her intellect, that also might cease, should her intellect be destroyed. Might the reasoning be carried farther and it be concluded that, if a man loved a woman for her virtue and goodness, his love might cease, should she cease to be virtuous and good?

Love must have a good foundation, and that foundation must maintain its integrity. The man and the woman who unite their fortunes must be virtuous and worthy in the beginning and that virtue and worth must continue after marriage in order to result in success.

Another writer says: "The desire to be beloved is ever restless and unsatisfied; but the love that flows out upon others is a perpetual wellspring from on high." True love seeks ways in which to express its love. It desires to give joy; it wishes to serve; it lays down its life for others.

In a well-known publication recently there appeared a story from real life in which there were two suitors for the hand of a young lady who could not decide which one she loved or whether she loved either of them. So long as they lavished attentions upon her, she could not decide, and it was only when one of them suffered an injury that threatened to cripple him for life that she discovered within herself a desire to spend her life with him and serve him. She discovered in her own heart that "wellspring" of love that flowed out to him in the wish to comfort, to help, to serve.

Love should be based upon something deeper than external charms. Love believes it is more blessed to give than to receive.

MINDEN CITY, MICHIGAN, December 22, 1913.

Dear Sisters of the Church: I hope all have read the letter written by Sister Emma L. Anderson in the Home Column of HERALD of October 15 and that it did each one as much good as it did me. I read it with tears of joy, glad that there was one sister who believes as I do in regard to dress.

The question has been many, many times in my mind, How plain and inexpensive should our garments be? I have studied much over it and have also prayed, but as yet have not reached the understanding I would like to have. I like plain, neat garments. I sew for myself and two little girls and find it a great task and trial to study out so many styles. I always look for something plain, and at the same time it worries me to think that perhaps I make them too plain.

I always want to do the right and hope you will all pray for me that the dear Lord will direct me in proper channels in all things and give me strength to do as he would have me do. I am doing all I can at the present. I have a great desire to overcome my weaknesses and do more for the great cause of Christ. I hope the day is not far distant when we shall understand more clearly whatever is not now plain to us. I am longing for the day when peace like a river shall flow, and love and unity shall abound. The gospel grows dearer to me each day.

The Lord has done much for me and mine. He has heard our prayers, and we are thankful for his Spirit from time to time, which causes us to rejoice. Since beginning this letter, I have read Ethel I. Skank's letter, and it truly seems good. I hope the Lord may direct others to write on similar subjects, which will be food for those who are seeking to know and do right in the matter of our attire.

I love the Home Column. Your sister,
LENA HENRY.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN FEBRUARY.

Pray for our missions and missionaries in all places, that the preaching of the gospel may be with conviction that will lead them to obedience and that thereafter their lives may demonstrate its purifying, uplifting power.

Remember the mission at Jerusalem and those missionaries there, that they may be protected and be successful in winning many converts to the truth, and that the Spirit may abide with the converts.

Lesson, Hosea 6:1-3. Memory text, Zephaniah 3:13.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

We are requested to present for prayers the names of Sister Ella G. Carpenter and her daughter, Mrs. Mabel Ard, of Mulhall, Oklahoma. They are both widows and very feeble and needy.

Mrs. Ard is recovering from a bad fall in which she suffered broken bones. She is still on crutches and can work but little, though we are assured she is ambitious to do what she can. It is a pitiable condition when one afflicted is not able through adverse circumstances to give nature full opportunity to do the work of healing. May the Lord bless these needy sisters.

Prayers are also asked for Miss Madge Rudeck and her father and mother. Miss Rudeck is suffering from rheumatic fever and heart weakness. Her father suffers much pain and many sleepless nights from rheumatism and other ailments. The mother needs special strength to enable her to bear up under the burdens occasioned by this sickness in her family. May this family receive the blessings of health and comfort.

Sister Lilian M. Tailleir requests prayers for Sister Roberts, of Dayton, Nevada. This sister with other infirmities has poor eyesight.

Brother H. M. Aebli, of Richville, Minnesota, asks prayers in behalf of his companion who is in poor health and who seems to have a cancer of the breast. This sister is undertaking a fast of fifteen days, at the end of which time she is to make special prayer for her deliverance.

Letter Department

GRANNIS, ARKANSAS, January 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Grannis Branch was organized some time in November, 1900, if memory serves me correctly, at which time Elder Earl D. Bailey was appointed as president and Brother P. D. Batson, now deceased, as teacher. The work progressed nicely for a time, and soon others were called to the priesthood and chosen by the branch to assist in carrying on the work, which for a time bade fair to become firmly established. It was soon manifested by the Spirit, however, that all the Saints would be called upon to undergo severe trials, and that many would be scattered, but few remaining; that the branch would pass through many dark and cloudy days. But that if the Saints were faithful the Lord would in his own due time revive his work, and we should yet be comforted.

The writer has been privileged to be associated with the branch during all these years, and has witnessed the many struggles through which it has passed. At present wife and I are the only ones of the original number who still remain in the immediate vicinity of the branch. Many of the most trying times of our life have been passed through at Grannis, but through it all we have never lost sight of the precious promise that we should yet be comforted. Our faith in the ultimate triumph of the Lord's work has never wavered; and even now we fancy we can see the dawning of a better day.

Apparently the tide has changed, and though we see many dangerous rocks ahead, we are pleased to say that there is a better spirit prevailing now than there has been for a number of years. The first Sunday after Thanksgiving Brethren Ellis Short, W. M. Aylor, and J. T. Riley were with us, at which time the new church house was dedicated, Brethren Aylor and Riley remaining to hold services the following week. Brother Aylor did most of the preaching. His efforts were well received. We did not hear a single criticism. Though none were apparently fully persuaded as a result of the meetings, we were pleased to witness the baptism by Brother Aylor of nine of those who were already believing. Since that, Elder James Smith held a series of meetings, closing last Wednesday, and four more were added to the church, being baptized by Brother Smith.

We must not forget to mention also that Elder John Harp and wife were with us for a few days last September. Brother Harp retains his old-time zeal for the work, and has an efficient helper in the person of Sister Harp. He did some fine preaching, and we feel that the work was benefited by their coming. All the above-named brethren are efficient laborers, and we were pleased to have them with us.

The writer has been the presiding officer of the Grannis Branch for some years, and our experience has been that as a rule the standing ministry are loyal and self-sacrificing men, doing all they can for the work, consistent with the surrounding circumstances and their temporal conditions. Whenever circumstances would admit of it we have had regular meetings. The Sunday school has been well supported. For years the writer and family have been in regular attendance at all the services, the Sunday school included, save the last two years, during which time we have been privileged to attend the Sunday school but little, owing to conditions that we could not overcome, which are well known to the Saints.

We are endeavoring to hold ourselves in readiness to do all the work for the branch that we can, all that the Saints desire at our hands, so far as may be consistent with our temporal condition, and we presume that this sentiment is pretty generally voiced by the standing ministry in all the world. Some local men are in a position to devote a goodly portion of their time to the work, and where this is the case the work is generally well taken care of; while others who are just as willing, perhaps, are not financially able to make the necessary sacrifice that is required by the branch, hence the work suffers to that extent.

Hopefully yours,

E. YOUMANS.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, January 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: To say we are busy is to put it mildly, since every moment of our time is occupied, and still work to be done had we more time. However, there is nothing more enjoyable to the writer than real work.

We are hopeful of being able to accomplish more in the way of good in getting the real vital truths of the restored gospel before the people in the near future than we have heretofore been able to do. We sense the fact that the present, the eternal now is the only time we have; that it is in the now that we must accomplish if we accomplish at all. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." And sensing the importance of the present, we are endeavoring to utilize it in the best possible way.

At the beginning of another year we are encouraged; we breathe deeply the spirit of optimism, and therefore have no reason to feel depressed, knowing well that nothing but success can follow true, earnest labor and Christlike service. We also feel assured that no harm can befall those who are followers of and who are practicing that which is good.

We are endeavoring to enable the people to see that Christianity, sainthood, means ultimately more than mere external show, or formality; that all growth must necessarily be from within, out; and that we can never evolve that which has not first been involved; that, therefore, before we can grow into a saintly character we must first have the seeds of divine love implanted within our hearts and minds. In the language of another: "To be a Christian is to be a follower of the teachings of Jesus, the Christ; to live in harmony with the same laws he lived in harmony with: in brief, to live his life." And that life is the complete life, wherein there is true joy, true happiness, and true blessedness. Eternal and perpetual peace is the legitimate outgrowth of such a life; and it is only by acquiring the Christ character here that we may be permitted to dwell with him hereafter.

We have some noble young people here in the city who stand as a beacon light, whose lives are living epistles, declaring silently the life of the divine Master. We are made glad at heart to see our young in tune with the higher laws of life, reflecting in example and conversation the powers of the gospel of peace.

We believe we can see a brighter day dawning for this field, and are frank to confess that we are of the opinion that if those who are sent to labor here will do so in the spirit of the Master, doing all in meekness and love, the time will not be far distant when the message will reach the better class of people here and draw them towards God.

So we stand confronting the problems of to-day. The failures of yesterday are past; why longer grieve over them? The possibilities of to-morrow may never come; why worry about them? The duties of the now, the opportunities and possibilities of to-day are ours. Let us utilize the time; let us improve the golden moments of to-day; let us purge away the sin and dross of to-day; let us put on the life of Christ to-day, and let the sunlight of God's love illuminate our entire being, soul and body, to-day.

If we will do this, each succeeding day will bring to us new joys, new possibilities, and new life. If we fail to live and be to-day, we will also fail to be to-morrow. So, as we enter upon the duties of the new year, the best year of our life, let us be wise stewards, utilizing the things at hand, making the best possible use of the now, and giving our all for the needs of to-day, that our profession of sainthood may be founded in fact and not in theory only.

CALDWELL, TEXAS, January 12, 1914.

Editor Herald: I just read an article in the HERALD of the 7th inst., upon the subject of cleanliness in the administration of the sacrament, or the Lord's supper. I offer a few thoughts along the same line.

Cleanliness is a part of godliness, therefore we, as God's servants, ought by all means to be clean, inside and outside. I, too, believe that the wine and bread used should be clean, and should be put in, and on clean vessels, covered with a clean towel until used or until it is blessed. I believe the bread should be checked, as Brother Miller said; that the elder or priest who administers it should have a pair of clean linen gloves on his hands when he breaks the bread; that each participant should provide himself with a small, clean glass vessel; that will hold about one ounce; that the priest or elder should carry the wine that has been blessed in a vessel and fill each participant's vessel.

In this way there would be little or no danger of any of the members eating or drinking microbes, or filth of any kind. It seems to me that no member of the church should object to these ideas.

I am yours for cleanliness on both the inside and outside.
ROUTE 3, BOX 61. E. W. NUNLEY.

TWINING, MICHIGAN, January 13, 1914.

Editors Herald: Since last writing the HERALD, about three months ago, I have moved from Alpena to Whittemore. Truly the hand of God has been with us. I have been laboring in Whittemore and Twining. In the latter place I have had good interest.

I have been holding meetings in a private house, Brother Morgan's, and have had a good attendance. I have had the pleasure of leading twenty-two precious souls into the waters of baptism. Others are ready for baptism next Sunday, with more honest souls investigating. Elder Somerfield is working with me, confirming those whom I baptize. Truly God has a people in this place. We have now about forty members here. We have no church or branch organized as yet; but we hope for these soon.

The most of our membership here are young men and women. It does my heart good to see the young taking hold of the gospel work, as I am young myself. Of course we meet opposition, even in this place, but it only strengthens us in our fight for eternal salvation. I want to live in such a way that I may be able to say like one of old, I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, and now is there laid up for me a crown of righteousness.

Hoping you will remember us in your prayers that we may continue in the good work for our heavenly Father, I am as ever,
E. M. ORTON.

RIGHTON, MISSISSIPPI, January 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: So far as I have any knowledge, last Sunday was the first time we have had an opportunity to publicly present our position to the people of this thriving little sawmill town. Brother Albert E. Warr came over and spoke twice, afternoon and evening, to one hundred or more attentive listeners, some taking notes.

We had our meeting well advertised. The writer succeeded in getting announcements of our services in the local paper; handbills were distributed freely. In view of the fact that we are so much misunderstood and so generally confused with the Mormons of Utah, we feel very much encouraged with the attendance, and feel sure that much misunderstanding has been cleared up and some prejudice removed. Brother Warr showed some of the leading differences, using his chart. His remarks were very instructive and to the point.

This place has a population of some two thousand people. The writer feels sure that if this opening is followed up it will be a good field for tent work. There is no building available for our use except the moving picture theater, and it is occupied nightly except on Sundays. As long as it remains under the present management it is open for our use on Sundays; I have been assured of this by the manager since our meeting last Sunday.

Ever praying for the success of this great latter-day work,
I remain,
Hopefully,

J. A. VICKREY.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, January 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Los Angeles Saints have just closed a series of meetings, Brother McDowell having ministered the precious words, the bread of life. It was indeed food for the souls there to receive it. Although we had almost continuous rain for five days, still a goodly number were in attendance each evening. A feeling of good fellowship prevailed.

Yesterday, the 18th, we had a family reunion, a family table being spread. Unity prevailed. In spite of the rain that kept those who desired baptism away, the day was enjoyed by all present. At prayer we were all especially blessed by the Spirit of prophecy, through Brother McDowell. All seemed to receive the message, and expressed a desire to come up higher. Some felt that which they could not express. While told by the Spirit of the Lord that some would go into darkness, each prayed in his heart that it might not be him. God hears the silent prayer and oftentimes answers openly.

Saints, God is not willing that one soul shall be lost, but it is only by constant prayer and the keeping of all the commandments that we can be saved. We must love our neighbors as ourselves. Who are our neighbors? Those we love the best and not our enemies? No, for Jesus said, Love your enemies, do good to those who hate you and pray for those who despitefully use you and persecute you. I am trying to do this. It is hard sometimes, yet we must all learn to do these things if we hope to receive salvation.

I thank God for this plan of salvation, and that through it I am learning to be a true Saint. I do love those who hate me and despitefully use me more than others, for the pity of the Lord comes over me; through my own faults, also I can see and pity others. I know that all need to receive the Spirit. Revelation impressed me greatly when coming into this faith. The gifts of God given severally as he sees fit have always been a delight to me. I realize the need of them in the church.

Saints, receive ye the prophets. For has not God told you that in the last days he would pour out his Spirit upon all flesh? That your sons and your daughters should prophesy, your old men dream dreams, your young men see visions? Did he not say that upon his servants and upon his handmaidens he would pour out of his Spirit and that they should prophesy?

Let us all faithfully watch and pray that we may not be found outside of the fold, for some there are who shall see the handwriting on the wall if they are not watchful and prayerful. The time is nearer perhaps than some may think for the coming of the Son of God. We must be ready to crown him our king, at the time appointed.

We rejoice in the interest the young of this branch are taking, especially the young men. The young shall be among those who stand shoulder to shoulder with the servants of God who bear the banner of the Lord. Some will come with the Lord, when the Saints shall arise and meet the Lord in his glory.

My prayer is that we may all be found ready at the call of the Master. Pray for me that I may diligently continue to perform the duties that my Lord has given me.

Your sister in truth,

MINNIE ROCKHOLD.

234 EAST TWENTY-THIRD STREET.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, January 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: Elder John Harp has just returned to his field of labor after an absence of two months on account of sickness. He contracted malaria in Oklahoma last summer and has never gotten it out of his system.

August 7 I left San Antonio for Avery, Texas, where I was met by Elder Harp. From there we went to Dalby Springs to attend a reunion which lasted ten days.

The next place we visited was a ranch about ten miles north of Avery. We went by invitation of Brother Akins who was then a Brighamite. He had attended the reunion where he had heard the difference explained and he saw that he had gotten into the wrong church. Being anxious to hear more of our teachings and also desiring that his family hear he invited us to go out and spend a few days, which we did, enjoying our visit with them very much. They had an organ and quite a number of young people who took part in the singing, the writer acting as organist. Notwithstanding Elder Harp had a hot fever every day, he preached every night and twice on Sunday. The result was that six were baptized. He also organized a Sunday school. I forgot to say that he baptized three at Avery the day before he went out there.

We then went to Grannis, Arkansas, where we found some noble Saints who were doing all they could to keep the camp fire blazing. We remained in Arkansas about six weeks, visiting different points. We found many good Saints. We held a week's meeting at a place called Davis Mines. There are only a few Saints there with Brother and Sister Lee Davis. They are fine people.

We went from there to a place called Galena, where we stopped for a few days with Brother and Sister Noah Fish, holding services for a few nights. We were met there by Brother J. W. Jackson and conducted to his home, where we remained about two weeks. Elder Harp preached until he was taken so seriously ill that he had to desist for about four nights. During that time he was delirious most of the time. We shall ever remember the kind hospitality shown us by Brother and Sister Jackson. They not only cared for us while we were there, but Brother Jackson conveyed us with his wagon and team back to Grannis, Arkansas, a distance of twenty miles, but which seemed a great deal farther, as we were all day making the trip on account of the rough country. We were pretty well jolted up when we reached our destination, but I felt worse on Brother Jackson's account than I did on our own, as he had to make the trip back again the next day.

We only remained a few days at Grannis this time, as Elder Harp was still feeling poorly. We came back to Avery, stopping only one night, then on home.

Our branch at San Antonio seems to be left pretty much to itself. Some Sundays we do not even have a preacher. I hope the appointing authorities will take pity on us this year and send us a high priest or some one who can be stationed here. Our Sunday school under the leadership of Sister Elma Neal is getting along nicely. We also have a good Religio. So you see that we are not all dead.

Ever praying for the final redemption of Zion, I am,
Your sister in the one faith,

RUTH HARP.

KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN, January 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: I came here Wednesday, January 7, in company with Brother Clyde Ellis. We held meeting that night and there has been something doing every night since then but one. Sunday, January 11, we organized a Sunday school with eighteen live members. On Sunday the 18th I had the privilege of leading five little boys into the icy waters of the Kalamazoo River. Courage was displayed on the part of the boys, the youngest one eight and the oldest eleven. Others are near the kingdom, and we trust ere we leave we will be able to open the door for them.

Brother Ellis left me Saturday, the 17th, for points south. I expect to leave here the first of the week for Coloma, where some are waiting to hear the angel message. There is no branch here now, but everything points that way for the future if all are faithful.

Trusting and praying for the welfare of Zion and the accomplishment of God's work, I am,

Your humble servant and brother,

B. H. DOTY.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, January 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: In reading the HERALD each week I derive much benefit. It is indeed food to the soul.

I never read a request for prayers, and especially from the afflicted ones, without immediately getting down on my knees and asking the Lord's divine help. My heart goes out to the sick and afflicted, the troubled and tried, the wayward and indifferent.

I have also been greatly benefited by the home prayer meeting, and am confident that if the Saints who have the opportunity would just set apart one hour each Thursday they would receive great blessings, not only for themselves but for others, and the work in general.

My heart is grieved many times, to see the condition in which some of God's people are living. They are losing sight of the golden opportunities which confront them. We have enlisted in the Lord's army, and should all be valiant soldiers. I love this work with all my heart, and there is nothing I would not do for its advancement. I am determined by the help of God to be a zealous worker in the great cause in which I am engaged. While I have lived in Kansas City only ten months I have observed a great change here in several ways, the greatest improvement being more spiritual mindedness. We, of course, must give our loyal pastor, Brother J. A. Tanner, a great deal of credit for his hard and faithful labors.

My earnest prayer to the heavenly Father is that we may all improve, intellectually and spiritually and not let any idle moments pass by unnoticed.

Yours in the one faith,

MRS. GLENN A. SCOTT.

CAINSVILLE, MISSOURI, January 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: We have been here a little over three months. We have tried to locate members of the church, but have failed thus far to find any. There was a branch here some years ago, but the members have died or left the place. There being a coal mine here I thought perhaps some of the brethren might locate at this place. If any can I would like to meet them.

I have tried to secure one of the churches but have failed. Some thought it would not do to let me use their church. I suppose they fear that they might lose some of their flock. The Christian church is unoccupied every other Sunday, yet they will not let us use it when they do not.

The greater part of the people have already learned my belief. A member of the Christian Church has tried hard to convince me that I am wrong, and that the Book of Mormon is not divine. He says that the 29th chapter of Isaiah reads that the words of the book should be taken by men to one learned, and that Martin Harris was only one, therefore this could not have fulfilled the prophecy. He further stated that in Matthew 15: 7-9 Christ was referring to Isaiah 29, and that the prophecy was fulfilled in his day. I showed that the Book of Mormon came in fulfillment of prophecy, that if it were not true the King James Bible was not true. I further urged that if the Latter Day Saint Church was not the true church it was not on the earth.

I shall have to wait till spring opens so some of the elders from Lamoni may bring the tent, as this in in the Lamoni Stake. I feel that there is a work to be done here, and that there are people to be gathered into the fold. There will have to be more persecution than there has been to discourage wife and myself with this latter-day work.

We have our regular family prayer every day, and feel that God blesses us with his Holy Spirit. One night last week after having our family worship and retiring for the night I fell into a sound slumber. The Spirit enraptured me. I was in a social meeting in a large room where there was a large gathering of Saints. As each one took their part in the services the Spirit was poured out on the assembly in such abundance that every one was weeping. Brother Cyril E. Wight arose behind me and sang in the Spirit a verse of a beautiful hymn in a sweet, melodious voice. His wife took up the tune and sang another verse under the sweet, calm Spirit. I cried out, "O Lord, it is enough, it is enough," and awoke. I told my wife of the vision with tears of joy coursing down my cheeks.

I wish some of the good brethren could come here and help get the work started. Houses are scarce and rent high. One should write and get work before coming here. I hope to see my dream fulfilled. May God bless his people. Saints, when it goes well with you remember us at the throne of grace.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
JACOB WALTENBAUGH.

News from Missions

South Sea Islands.

Many things have transpired in this mission since the last mission conference in April, which have brought both tears of sorrow and rejoicing.

During the month following conference the writer baptized eighteen men, women, and children. Brother and Sister Frederick G. Pitt, and his wife, who had been with us since February 7, left us on May 3, on their way to America. Our brother and his wife labored diligently while in this mission. The natives will ever remember them, and their minds will oft reflect to our patriarch's visit here. Many of the natives who failed to get their blessings when Brother Alexander Smith was here availed themselves of the opportunity of receiving them from Brother Pitt, and they seem to appreciate them to a great extent.

When we left the island of Hao the latter part of April, we left Brother and Sister Charles H. Lake there. They intended to remain in that part of the mission for a few months. The latter part of July news reached us that Brother Lake had died June 15 upon the island of Amanu.

Brother Lake, mission president, was greatly respected and loved by all in this mission. Because of untiring efforts put forth to elevate the native Saints to a higher spiritual standing, he stands high in the estimation of the whole mission. He was diligent to the end. He was very weak several weeks before he died, and could not speak very loud or stand long. Notwithstanding this, however, he preached from his chair while a native elder acted as spokesman for him. This is an evidence of his great desire to labor diligently in the service of the Master. In his death, the mission has lost one who was congenial and agreeable with all with whom he labored, for which reason his loss is severely felt. His wife still remains in the mission. Although she has met with many trials since returning to this mission, she is as yet laboring actively in the interests of the great latter-day work, in the sister's Prayer Union, the Religio, and the Sunday school work. She may leave for America some time in February. The natives greatly desire that she remain in the mission.

The island mission is greatly rejoicing over the visit of our brethren, Gomer T. Griffiths and C. Ed Miller, who arrived here the last day of August, and remained until October 27. Though their stay was for only eight weeks, they saw a great deal of the mission, not only visiting the Saints in Tahiti, but in the diving islands as well, where our brethren from all over the islands had gathered to dive for pearl shells. The Saints greatly rejoiced in meeting with Brother Griffiths, who was the first apostle they had seen since T. W. Smith was here in the eighties. Brother Smith and Brother Griffiths are the only apostles of the restored church who have visited these islands.

Our trip to the diving islands was not so bad, but we were almost refused a passage back, and had to put up with many inconveniences, sleeping upon the hatch at night, with no place to rest in daytime; and when it rained we slept among the freight below. We were treated like anything but human beings. The bunks were all filled up with French passengers. This same boat has now been out of commission for several weeks, and is in harbor under repairs at the present time.

Upon our return from the islands we were greeted by many of the native Saints from several of the upper islands, Kaukura, Rairoa, Niau, Makatea, and Tikahau. Those who had gathered from Kaukura were mainly of the pupu people; that is, those who were cut off from the church in the time of Brother Burton. Through Brother Griffiths' request they had gathered here to meet with us, the object on our part being to admonish them to heed the action of the church and return through repentance and baptism.

After meeting with them several times, upon our return from the islands, they seemed to hesitate somewhat in receiving the admonition of Brother Griffiths until one Sunday he felt impressed to call four of their leaders, one by one, into the missionary house, at which he gave them timely advice as directed by the Spirit, giving them a message to carry to their people, which they agreed to present to them the following day. The Wednesday following their leaders came to the missionary house with the news that they had decided to receive the admonition.

They delivered their message with the spirit of humility, and with tears streaming down their faces. The Spirit of the Master, the spirit of unity, melted our hearts, and we, like our brethren, could hardly speak, we were so full of rejoicing. This was evidence to us that our brother had truly been directed to journey Tahiti-wards on his way to Australia. We thought of the many years this trouble had been pending, with our brethren still outside the fold, and how long Brethren Burton and Lake had labored prayerfully and patiently with these wayward brethren, who finally accepted the admonition of the Saints to them.

Brethren Burton and Lake, who have gone to their rest, deserve great credit for their patience and labors with these people. The writer has also striven to soften their hearts by carrying the gospel message to them at their branch, with the thought that the time would come when they would return. Brother Savage has also labored with them, and Brother Pitt visited them while here and admonished them, and is deserving of great credit for his untiring efforts with them.

The Sunday following was set apart for the baptisms. The district of Tahiti met at Taronia that day. Words fail me in expressing the great scene which took place as Brother Griffiths led thirty souls into the waters of baptism. It was a beautiful and an eventful day, truly an eventful day for this mission. The beach was lined with natives. The Spirit of the Master was there to bless. It was a great feast. From the beginning to the end it seemed to the writer more like a vision. The Saints wept upon the return of the "prodigals," and they fell upon one another's necks. In short, it was a day we shall not soon forget.

The mission which in a sense had so long been divided against itself, had this day been brought into unity through the one Spirit. Until late at night, when the Saints departed for their several branches, we were reminded continuously of the statement of David, Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! We also thought, Could our Brethren Burton and Lake have only been with us to share in this great feast, how great their rejoicing would have been.

One week following, the branch where our brethren lived was reorganized, which we believe was directed by the Master, after which sacrament was observed. We left them rejoicing greatly as we journeyed homeward along the beautiful beach road.

December 28, Brethren Griffiths and Miller left us at the wharf on the voyage to Australia. A farewell meeting had been held at the branch in Tarona. A number of the Saints also assembled at the wharf to bid our brethren godspeed. We waved our handkerchiefs until we lost sight of each other, with the sad thought that it might be years before we should again see the cheerful countenances of our brethren. The natives often express their great joy because of the visit of our brethren to this mission, and refer frequently to their admonitions, also texts and illustrations used by them, and many remember them verbatim as delivered.

I was advised by Brother Griffiths to take a trip throughout the various islands upon which the remaining members of the pupu people live, to labor with them, carrying with me an epistle he had written before he left. So I left Papeete with Tapu, one of the pupu leaders, who had been baptized and reordained by Brother Griffiths. We left for Tikahau November 6, where eleven of the pupu people lived, including one of their leaders. We arrived at the pass into the lagoon of said island on the evening of the 7th, anchoring at the pass until morning. Several small boats were anchored at the pass waiting for favorable winds for sailing to Tahiti. Upon one of the boats were two of the pupu people bound for Tahiti. After meeting them they agreed to sail back to the city inside of the lagoon for the Sunday services. We reached said city at ten o'clock, and found the Saints busy making dried cocoanuts. They were pleasantly surprised in learning that we had arrived.

We were informed by the men in charge of the schooner that it would leave at five o'clock that evening, Saturday. It would have been impossible to have finished our work before Sunday noon, for which reason I and the native elder with me trusted that the Lord would open up some way by which the boat would remain there until Sunday noon at least. It was a trading schooner with a gasoline engine. A middle-aged white man was in charge, an unbeliever.

At four o'clock the flag for departure was hoisted. The writer felt greatly discouraged, as did the native missionary, because of the fact that this boat was to visit all of the islands upon which the pupu people were located; also other islands where we would meet with the Saints. I met the man in charge of the schooner and told him that I was sorry that he was going to leave so soon, and that I had hoped they would remain until the next day (Sunday) noon, so that I could continue with them to the end of their voyage. He said that so far as he was concerned he would like to accommodate me, but that a representative of the firm was aboard and was very anxious to spend Sunday in Rairoa, the next island. I then saw the man referred to. He would not agree to hold the schooner. As I was commencing to unload my baggage this man called me and told me that he had decided to accommodate me, and would hold the boat until I was done with my work. I thanked him and praised the Lord for this blessing.

That night I met with the pupu people, and presented the epistle of Brother Griffiths to them, and all except two of the eleven accepted the same. After requesting the Saints to pray for the two remaining ones, we retired for the night. Baptism had been appointed for 7.30 o'clock in the morning. I made it a point to meet with the two parties who had refused to receive the message to them, at which time one consented. The other, Teuira, who was one of the real leaders of that trouble, would not give me any satisfaction. We assembled at the assembly house built of cocoanut branches and leaves, and I asked all of those who desired to be baptized to arise. The whole assembly was greatly and pleasantly surprised and wept with joy as the leader who had refused the night before was the first to arise to his feet. Others followed, until the entire eleven arose. These eleven souls were planted beneath the waters of the lagoon. The Spirit of the Master was again with us in great power, and we had a glorious season throughout the confirmations and reordinations, after which I told them that I felt that we should praise the Lord and rejoice exceedingly, and that I thought it wisdom to devote the hour to a season of prayer and thanksgiving and testimony.

The Saints, little expecting that I would be there, had been preparing to have a feast among themselves that Sunday, and at eleven o'clock we were pleasantly surprised with the announcement that the feast was ready. The writer was reminded of the great feast prepared for the prodigal son upon his return. The white men in charge of the schooner were invited to the feast, and we sat down to a table spread with roast pig, roast beef, chicken roasted and fried, bacon and eggs, fish, crab, canned peas, corn, other canned foods, water-cocoanut, cocoa, pickles, bananas, etc. The Tikahau Saints stretched a large canvas overhead just outside our native feast-house, and sang songs of rejoicing while we partook of the great feast spread before us. Our friends from the schooner enjoyed it very much; they told me that they had never enjoyed a native feast as they had this one, and expressed their pleasure for having remained there until Sunday noon.

We bade the Saints farewell at one o'clock the same day, and left for Rairoa, where we arrived that evening. Tuesday morning we left the island of Rairoa for Manihi, where I met with the Saints and held meetings two evenings. We were here presented with some money which they said was a token of their love for us; also received six dollars to assist in paying traveling expenses. Our newly returned brother of the pupu people who accompanied me was received with outstretched arms in all branches which we visited.

At this island we met a sailboat on its way to Tahiti, the captain of which handed me a letter from the island which we were bound for, which stated that the Saints there were anxiously waiting for me, and that the following Saturday there was to be a great marriage ceremony observed in the afternoon at which twenty people were to be married. This letter also informed me that the Saints were in hopes that I would reach their island for that Sunday. The Saints from three islands had gathered there for that day. It was early Saturday morning when we left Manihi, and we were headed for Apataki. It was the supercargo's intention to go into the harbor at Apataki and spend Sunday there, and leave there for Kaukura, Monday. The native missionary who accompanied me said, "If we could only be in Kaukura tomorrow!" While it seemed very improbable, I told him that I felt confident that we would be there; that it was the Lord's desire, but that I knew not how we would get there.

I immediately thought of the Savior's admonition, "Ask and ye shall receive," and with it came a great desire to make a proposition to the supercargo. I told him that I was greatly desirous of reaching Kaukura for the Sunday services; that I was sure that the parties which he desired to meet in Apataki were at the island attending the big marriage feast; that if he would consent to pass Apataki and go direct to Kaukura we would arrive there by four o'clock; and that if he found that his parties were in Apataki that I would agree to pay for the benzine consumed in returning to Apataki, which would have amounted to several dollars. He said that he had intended to remain in Apataki over Sunday on business, and for the reason that it was a good place to anchor, but that on my own terms he would agree to accommodate me, and he informed me to instruct the captain to change our course for Kaukura. Our native missionary waited patiently to hear the news, and when he saw that the vessel's course had been changed and we were heading for Kaukura he said, as far as I can remember, "O te maitai rahi o te Atua; ua pahonohia tataua pure," which means, "How merciful is God; he hath answered our prayers." At four o'clock that evening (Saturday) we arrived at the island of Kaukura, and found that the people of the island of Apataki whom the supercargo wanted to see at the island we had passed were all in Kaukura, so the schooner did not return to that island, and the boat had saved one or two day's time by accommodating us.

I had arrived just in time to see the windup of the marriage ceremony. It was a beautiful and a unique sight, and the writer will not soon forget their costumes. The men all had on black frock-tail coats, and the women all had on white dresses, neatly made. They all wore shoes, which is not a native custom. This was the greatest marriage feast I have ever witnessed. As I entered the large assembly house the Saints, including the ten brides and the ten grooms, arose and greeted us with a song of welcome, prayer, and an address, to which the writer responded with a short address. On Sunday I preached at the morning hour, after which I and Pori, a native elder, led twenty-eight souls into the great Pacific.

Twelve of those were from among the pupu people, and sixteen were men, women, and children who requested baptism. Twenty-five of the number asked me to baptize them; the native elder baptized three. The Saints of Kaukura also rejoiced upon the return of our brethren and because of the new members which had been added to the church.

Three days later, three natives, Pori, Tapu, and Taihia, and I left the island of Kaukura upon a small sailboat about twenty-five feet long, and set sail for the islands of Arutua and Apataki. We arrived in Arutua, Thursday, and the next day the writer led six of the pupu people into the lagoon, where they were baptized into the church. At night I preached to the Saints.

It had been over ten years since any of the American missionaries had visited this branch. Our native brother, Tapu, in showing me around the island pointed out the house where Brother and Sister Devore lived when they were there over fifteen years ago. They often refer to the good work done by Brother and Sister Devore. Our brother also pointed to the place where the church formerly stood and said, That is the place where Brother Joseph Burton was blessed upon one occasion when he spoke the Tahitian language perfectly, as though with the tongue of a native. He said that it occurred just a few years after Brother Burton first arrived here, and that he had never heard Brother Burton speak the native language so fluently and beautifully before or since.

The next morning we set sail for Apataki. Reaching there in the evening (Saturday), we held services then and in the morning, at which time six parties gave their names for baptism and were baptized. There are no pupu people on this island. The next day we left for Kaukura. In all our travels from Tahiti to Kaukura, also to the other small islands, the wind was fair and it was not necessary to tack.

From this account of our trip there are many evidences of the Lord's assistance. The schooner was held over until our work was finished at one island; the ship's course was changed at another time; favorable winds were given us while upon the small sailboat; and thus did the Lord assist his servants in straightening up the difficulties which had long been a hindrance to this mission.

Upon returning to Kaukura we baptized thirteen more, all adults. A small boat came and carried me to the island of Niau. While waiting there for a boat to return to Tahiti, I again immersed eight souls in the waters of the lagoon, and tried to build up the branch there to the best of my ability. Upon awakening one morning I heard the natives calling out, "E aahi! E aahi!" "A boat! A boat!" upon which I was permitted to return to Tahiti in good time to spend Christmas with my wife and children, also the Saints of the district in Tahiti, who gathered at the branch in Taronā.

The Saints are rejoicing very much because of the success of my trip, which lasted one month and a half, during which time seventy-four people were baptized, thirty-one of whom were of the pupu people. Of the forty-three others, several were Protestants, Catholics, and Mormons. We are pleased to report that during this year there have been over two hundred baptisms. The writer has been privileged to lead eighty souls into the waters of baptism since the April mission conference.

One day while baptizing some of the pupu people I was forcibly reminded of a prophecy delivered to me through Brother B. J. Scott, of Independence, one Wednesday evening shortly before entering into the missionary field. At this time I was greatly troubled, whether to enter into the missionary work or not. I was admonished to enter the field, and was told that the Lord would bless me and that I would be an instrument in his hands in bringing many back into the church who had gone astray in a dark and cloudy day. I had thought that this had reference to the Utah people, which may be, but it has occurred to me that it could well apply to the work I have done during the past two months. These native Saints who have recently returned into the fold were overcome in a dark and cloudy day, and the Lord has used the writer as an instrument in his hands in assisting our apostle in his labors with them in Tahiti, and in carrying his message to the remaining ones of the Tuamotuan Islands, where the writer baptized over thirty of them.

There have been sixty of the pupu people baptized to date, and the seven remaining ones will follow as soon as we meet them, for which reason the native Saints are greatly rejoicing and for which the name of Brother Griffiths will be handed down from year to year in honor and respect by the natives in the history of this mission, even as has the name of Brother Thomas W. Smith for years past.

The native brethren who have been rebaptized and reordained during the past few months are laboring diligently, which assures us that the coming year will be one of activity throughout the island mission.

Brother Hinman W. Savage, wife and baby have returned to Tahiti after a long sojourn upon the isolated island of Hereheretue. They are enjoying good health. We trust the Lord's blessings unto us both physically and spiritually may continue. We rejoice daily in the service of the Master.

I was pleased to be permitted to spend Christmas with wife and family, who were much surprised upon my return from the upper islands about one week before Christmas.

May the Lord bless this mission, that it may enjoy spiritual growth; that spiritual advancement may accompany the present growth numerically; and may he so bless his church throughout the earth that Zion's redemption may speedily come to pass, is the sincere prayer of

Your brother and Christ's servant,

J. CHARLES MAY.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Northern Wisconsin District: As bishop's agent of this district I feel impressed to write a few lines to let you know of the financial condition of the district. At the end of this month we are behind $176.32. So far this month I have only received $1 tithing. We are trying to support two families, Brother Flint's family receiving $38, and Brother Whiteaker's $27, a total of $65 per month.

Are any of us to be held accountable for the neglect of these families? Is our conscience clear? Are we doing the Lord's will along this line? In John 3:20 we read: For if our hearts condemn us, God is greater than our hearts, and knoweth all things. This money should be paid each month, that these families stand not in need.

There are many who intend to pay their tithing, but they are putting it off for a more convenient time. Isn't that about the same as the person who understands the necessity of baptism but puts it off till a more convenient time? How many of us can say with a clear heart, I have paid my all? Can we say we have kept the law by paying a few dollars and one tenth of our belongings in order to comply with the law. I think that is the only way the Lord would accept us. Doctrine and Covenants 64:5. "Behold now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man) and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned."

Now, dear Saints, let us examine ourselves and see if we are living in harmony with the law. Let us do our part, so that those who are depending on us will not suffer. Let us do our part to supply their needs.

Your brother in Christ,

NALMER JOHNSON.

A Harper Book.

It is perhaps not generally known that Sir Oliver Lodge, whose recent speech at the meeting of the British Association was so eagerly awaited, is the author of what may be called a catechism for those who desire to combine the best of religious and scientific beliefs. Like catechisms of theologies, "The Substance of Faith Allied with Science" is arranged in questions and answers. "What is the significance of the 'Communion of Saints?'" is one question, and the answer is,

"Higher and holier beings must possess, in fuller fruition, those privileges of communion which are already foreshadowed by our own faculties of language, of sympathy, and of mutual aid; and as we find that man's power of friendly help is not confined to his fellows, but extends to other animals, so may we conceive ourselves part of a mighty Fellowship of love and service." ### JESUS ON THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN. PART I.

The kingdom of God cometh not with observation (marginal rendition: "The kingdom of God cometh not with outward show").—Luke 17:20.

In speaking of the kingdom of God, Jesus at one time said:

So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.—Mark 4:26-29.

FIRST THE BLADE AND THEN THE EAR.

This expression, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear, suggests a solution to an apparent conflict in the biblical use of the terms kingdom of heaven, or kingdom of God.

To some it appears that these terms are always synonymous with the church, and they are inclined to limit them in application to the church as it has its organic form on earth. To others it does not appear that these terms are synonymous with the church, and they apply them to something yet future and much larger than the church as it is at present constituted.

It is apparent that Jesus at times used the expression, the kingdom, in reference to his church as it existed in its organic form on earth and among men. At other times he used it apparently in reference to something yet future, something greater than the world had ever yet seen. The key is found in this expression, First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

Jesus said, plainly, "The kingdom of God has already come unto you." (Inspired Translation.) And yet he taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come." The solution is found in this expression, "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

The blade of corn just breaking through the soil is corn, in one stage of development; but it is not the corn that it will be when the ear sets, or when finally the full corn is matured and the harvest is at hand. Thus a farmer though fully conscious that he has a splendid crop of corn just breaking through the soil, from the seed, may yet pray for a good crop of corn to come, having in mind the time of harvest,—the time of full fruition.

The kingdom was among the people when Christ was here, but only in one stage of its development, and not in the stage that he had in mind, when he prayed, "Thy kingdom come"; not by any means in the stage of development that it will reach in the time of perfect fruition, just before the harvest of the world, when it will be like the full corn in the ear, and the will of God will be done on earth as it is now done in heaven.

So far as we can judge, if the kingdom had an objective presentation on earth in the time of Christ, that presentation was found in the church. Probably all will concede that the kingdom had at least a partial presentation in the organic form of the church. And the same will hold good to-day. But the church is not and was not by any means all that the kingdom will be by and by when the period of the full corn in the ear arrives.

Thus we can see that one not enrolled as a member of the church, perhaps not aware of its existence, might be helping to bring about conditions favorable to the coming of the kingdom in its perfection. In that work he might enjoy a great degree of the Spirit of Him who lighteneth every man that cometh into the world. Indeed, we believe that there are institutions and forces, as well as many individuals, engaged in such a work at the present time. Such a conception of God's universal work in the world does not rob the church of her dignity and power in her own field of service, as the direct representative of God in the work of salvation.

Thus it appears to the writer that one man may speak of the kingdom, having in mind the perfect stage toward which many forces are working but which is yet to appear, typified by the full corn in the ear, and in doing so refer to something vastly greater than is yet in sight in the church. Another man may use the term, having in mind some stage of development in the period of growth and development typified by the blade, and refer to the church in its organic form, as it exists now. There is not necessarily a conflict between the two; but a conflict may appear to exist if they do not pause to explain their conception of the kingdom. On the other hand, there may be those whose conception of the kingdom would not even include the church, and others whose conception would be limited to the comparatively small organization and the comparatively few members constituting the organized church as it exists on earth at the present moment. Between these two conceptions of course there could be no agreement. In any event any study of the question is incomplete that omits Christ's presentation of the ideal of growth from small and unobserved beginnings to a splendid, world-embracing kingdom of peace, order, righteousness, and equity.

LIFE AND GROWTH.

In this comparison of the blade of corn two great characteristics of the kingdom of God are indicated—life and growth. The kingdom is not manufactured; it grows. It does not come into the world a completed institution. It has a very small beginning and then develops until the complete fruition comes.

This has been strikingly true in the history of God's work among men. The little blade of corn growing up out of the soil is not observed by the world. No one can see it grow. It is of no apparent consequence. Thus comes the kingdom—"without observation," or "outward show." Jesus called around him twelve men, obscure men, some of them uneducated men. With the exception of a few jealous Jewish priests, the great world at large gave no attention to this beginning. A legion of Roman soldiers marching down the streets of Jerusalem would probably have attracted more attention than Jesus and the Twelve apostles, excepting perhaps at those rare intervals when the multitude thronged him, attracted by some miracles. But even then the multitude were Jews, parts of a little obscure nation subjugated by Rome. The great world of Rome, Greece, Egypt, Assyria, gave him no heed. This was just the blade springing up.

So far as this has application to the church, history repeats itself in this age. The world gave little heed to six people meeting in this New World in the nineteenth century under divine direction to organize the church, nor did the world pay great heed to the restored gospel.

But a characteristic of the kingdom is growth. Remember that. The church is alive. All branches of the church should remember that. Let every little branch remember it—in Denver, Omaha, Boston, San Francisco, London, everywhere. If the members of a branch grow discouraged and sit down and say,

"The work is going all to pieces. The branch is dying," of course it will die.

Any institution that affirms that it is dying will die.

But any institution that is conscious of life, and affirms life, will live and grow.

If the members of any branch will get to work and cooperate they will grow, and nothing in the world can stop them. If they are members of the true vine, they will grow, for growth is a characteristic of the true vine, as of the blade of corn. Both illustrations suggest life and growth. Only as they sever themselves from the vine can they wither and die. If they maintain their connection with Christ and do their part they will grow. Every branch that does its part will grow, surely in spirituality, possibly in numbers.

Church members should be optimistic and affirm growth and improvement to themselves and among themselves. For the kingdom will surely grow.

The full culmination of this growth will come when Jesus returns to earth bringing the redeemed of all ages with him; the kingdom of God on earth is small compared to the kingdom of God in heaven. But when the two come together in that blessed time the fullness of the kingdom on earth that started out so unpretentiously and without outward show will be realized. In that day, as suggested by our text, the Lord will put in his sickle, for the harvest time will be at hand; "When the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in his sickle, because the harvest is come." Thus Jesus says it is with the kingdom of God: First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear, and then the harvest.

THE MUSTARD SEED.

Jesus uses another comparison:

Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? Or with what comparison shall we compare it? It is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth: but when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.—Mark 4: 31, 32.

Here are the same characteristics of life and growth; the same small beginnings; the same lack of outward show; the same unobserved advent. For the kingdom of God "cometh without observation."

There are many seeds more pretentious than the little mustard seed. Melon seeds and pumpkin seeds are hundreds of times larger and more puffed up. But when the mustard plant is grown, as it developed in the land where Jesus lived, it is a great tree. Thus there are many organizations of men in the world much larger than the church of Jesus Christ—churches, parties, orders, institutions, and leagues. They make more outward demonstration and show; but in the end it will be the kingdom of God that will grow and fill the whole earth.

THE LEAVEN.

Still another comparison is made:

The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.—Matthew 13: 33.

Here we have the same qualities of life and growth. But as before, they are hidden, unobserved, without ostentation or outward display.

Leaven (yeast) is a living growth. It can propagate and reproduce itself indefinitely, and has done so in the world for centuries past, yet mostly while hidden.

We will not discuss the nature of the three measures of meal. The character of the leaven is what concerns us, for Jesus said that the kingdom of heaven was like this leaven hidden in the meal. People do not see the leaven, it is hidden in the meal or flour. It is not observed. But it is at work, imparting life, so that the loaf is leavened, and rises, as we express it. Thus it is with the kingdom. Its workings are hidden from the world. They do not observe it. Their eyes are on other things. If it were dynamite, rending things to pieces, and making a loud report, they would take notice; but it is like the leaven, more beneficent, and more powerful in its way than dynamite, because it is alive, but working silently, yet always working until it leavens the whole lump.

These parables should be of a nature to encourage the Saints when some one may point the finger of scorn at them and say that their work is insignificant; that they are not doing anything. They should remember that Jesus said that the kingdom should appear in just that way to the world.

Take courage and cooperate with God and progress will be inevitable. Cast out all pessimism. Cease to be despondent. Let cheer and activity take the place of lethargy and inactivity. Growth naturally follows activity. Cease to deny and negate; learn to affirm. The church is growing; it will continue to grow. It is advancing; it will continue to advance. Shall we remain with it and grow? Or shall we permit ourselves to become separated, and wither and die?

WIRELESS LIGHTING.—The latest in wireless operation is wireless lighting, due to the tireless efforts of Marconi, who announces that he is able to light a lamp by wireless power at a distance of six miles. He hopes that this successful experiment will prove the forerunner of the use of wireless for lighting streets and lighting and heating houses.

COSTLY SPOILS.—Greece is putting out a one hundred million dollar five per cent loan at eighty-seven and three fourths. The spoils of the late war were costly even to the Balkan state securing the lion's share.

IRISH HOME RULE.—The gravity of conditions in the United Kingdom incident to the Irish home rule policy of the government and the party in power were emphasized at the opening of Parliament on the 10th. In a speech from the throne King George recognized the seriousness of the situation; Premier Asquith in a conciliatory speech admitted the possibility of "rebellion and bloodshed"; Tory leaders talked of civil war, of drilling and arming in Ulster, and of defiance of the Imperial Government. It is reported that in Ulster one hundred thousand men have been enrolled and are prepared for war; that volunteer nursing corps have been organized; and that a pension fund has been provided for the families of men who may fall in the possible conflict. Recognizing the seriousness of the situation, the government on December 5 prohibited the importation of arms and ammunition into Ireland. It will be remembered that Ulster, Protestant, objects to home rule in connection with the balance of Ireland, Catholic. King George in his remarks expressed the hope of Americans with reference to the situation when he said:

I regret that the efforts which have been made to arrive at a solution by agreement of the problems connected with the government of Ireland have so far not succeeded. In a matter in which the hopes and fears of so many of my subjects are keenly concerned, and which, unless handled now with foresight and judgment and in a spirit of mutual concession, threatens grave future difficulties, it is my most earnest wish that the good will and cooperation of men of all parties and creeds may heal the dissension and lay the foundations of a lasting settlement.

NEW ENGLAND EARTHQUAKE.—The most severe New England earthquake on record centered in New York State on the 10th, and was felt generally throughout New England, lower eastern Canada, parts of New Jersey, and eastern Pennsylvania. At Albany pictures were shaken from the walls and at Binghamton a laborer was killed by the caving in of a trench in which he was working. In other parts of the state the falling of chimneys, the swaying of houses, and the destruction of fragile objects are reported.

PANAMA TOLLS.—President Wilson has come out emphatically against the Panama toll exemption for American coastwise shipping as provided in the action of Congress, and in favor of a bill now before Congress to repeal the former action. This position on the exemption seems to have brought out a cordial and general response. President Wilson's attitude in the matter is presented in a letter to William L. Marbury, in which he is reported as having said:

With regard to the question of canal tolls my opinion is very clear. The exemption constitutes a mistaken policy from every point of view. It is economically unjust; as a matter of fact, it benefits for the present, at any rate, only a monopoly; and it seems to me in clear violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—General Villa declares that he has no ambition to become president; that he has never been in anything but the fullest accord with General Carranza; that he is a fighting man only, and is fighting for the liberation of his country, not to elevate himself. He has strenuously endeavored to restore business in Chihuahua. The Constitutionalists claim to have plenty of money. Chihuahua, a city of thirty-five thousand, is assuming the dignity of a capital. One of the actions of the new government is a decree declaring counterfeit after February 10 the currency issued under the Diaz regime. The free and unlimited coinage of silver is offered as a means of providing money. A mint has been established to coin money bearing the Constitutionalist stamp. The new government will exact a percentage of the output of the ore that has been mined at the Chihuahua mines during the military operations.

SCIENCE AND PREHISTORIC AMERICANS.—A recent expedition from the Smithsonian Institution to Eastern Siberia has confirmed among scientists the results of the Morris K. Jessup expedition as to the resemblance between the natives of Siberia and the American Indians. There seems now to be practical unanimity among scientists that America was peopled from Asia by way of Bering Strait. As to the time there is no definite criterion. It is held to be likely that it was following or at least in the decline of the glacial period from the northern part of the continent.

TRANSPORTATION ABUSES.—Indictments for rebating were found by the Federal Grand Jury at Chicago on January 31 against the Pennsylvania, the Panhandle, or Pittsburg, Chicago and Saint Louis, and the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad companies, and Swift and Company. The indictment charges Swift and Company with having obtained concessions from the Ann Arbor Railroad Company. The Pennsylvania Railroad is charged with granting rebates of two dollars a car on grain shipments to a grain company and flour mill concern, the Chicago Northwestern with favoring a coal concern.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

CHURCH OPENING AT DES MOINES.—The Saints of Des Moines, Iowa, have disposed of their church building, Fourteenth and Lyon, and have purchased the Pilgrim Congregational Church, 717 East Twelfth Street. This latter site is an excellent location, within two blocks of the State Capitol building. The church is a frame building, commodious and well equipped. It has been redecorated. With some other improvements it will be in first-class condition, and will furnish the Des Moines Branch a delightful home. The formal opening occurred on February 8, the assistant editor of the HERALD being present to give the address at 11 o'clock, and to participate in the other services of the day. A goodly number of the Saints were in attendance, and a most excellent spirit characterized the various services. Those present seemed united in the determination to press onward in the work of the Master.

LIBERAL MENTION.—The conventions and conference of the Eastern Michigan District received very liberal mention in the Flint Daily Journal of February 7. The entire program of the conventions appeared, together with a full statement of the services. In many localities where our people are awake to the advantages of publicity, newspaper men are willing to furnish space for the same.

OPPOSED TO PERSECUTION.—The pastor of the First Baptist Church in one of the large cities of California, on receipt of the Open Letter to the Clergy, writes the Publicity Bureau as follows:

I thank you for the letter and pamphlet, An Open Letter to the Clergy. I will give the pamphlet careful and candid reading, and can assure you that I am wholly opposed to anything like religious persecution or oppression.

GROSS MISREPRESENTATION.—We are informed of the work of one Miss Schwartz, lecturer on "Mormonism" for the Methodist Episcopal Church, Ida Grove (Iowa) District, in which the church is grossly misrepresented. At Anthon, Iowa, she is said to have stated that the Reorganized Church was the same as the Utah Church, only the meanness of the Reorganization was covered up. When asked for evidence to sustain this accusation, after the close of the lecture, as we understand, she said that one H. O. Hayer, a member of the church and the husband of two wives, was now at Lamoni attending Graceland College and studying for the ministry. This woman's accusation concerning the "meanness" of the Reorganization is as groundless as is her statement with reference to H. O. Hayer. No such man is now at Lamoni, nor has he ever been at Lamoni, to say nothing of his preparation for the ministry and his two wives. Such work shows either crass ignorance, or malicious misrepresentation, or both.

Forward.

Come, come ye loyal children,
Gird on your conquering sword!
March boldly unto battle,
Fight manfully for our Lord.
Christ hath his orders given,
Let us faithful be.
Soon our reward we'll enter,
Glory eternally.

CHORUS:

Sabbath school go forward,
Saints of latter days,
Shout aloud his praises.
Glory to his name!

See the church of Zion,
Beautiful she stands,
God her great commander,
Christ with outstretched hands.
Holy Spirit guide us
Unto Zion's land!
Glory! Hallelujah!
Marching hand in hand.

CHORUS.

Children bear your burdens,
Watch and fight and pray,
Victory shines before us,
We must not delay.
With our strong commander,
Boldly meet our foes,
Onward, forward, upward,
Hand in hand we go.

CHORUS.

LONDON, CANADA.

O. W. CAMBRIDGE.

Supplication.

Now, oh Lord, our gracious Father,
I do humbly seek thy face;
And in Jesus' name I ask thee,
May I supplicate thy grace?
I am weak, and prone to wander;
From thy precepts often stray;
And I feel that I'm unworthy
Even now to kneel and pray.

Righteous Father, may I ask thee
For a token of thy love?
Oh, do thou be pleased to answer,
From thy heav'nly courts above.
Only wilt thou deign to tell me,
In thine own appointed way,
Am I worthy of thy blessing?
Dost thou hear me while I pray?

Lord, remember thy weak servant;
Help me to my mission fill.
Give me grace that I may serve thee,
And perform thy righteous will.
May thy blessed Spirit guide me
In the straight and narrow way,
And its ever hallowed presence
All my doubts and fears allay.

Oh, do thou be pleased to pardon
All my errors, day by day;
And from worldly, vain ambition,
Help me now to turn away.
And that I may keep thy precepts,
And be loyal, just, and true,
Give me, then, thy grace sufficient,
And my labors I'll pursue.

I have called thee into service,
Be thou faithful to thy trust;
I will give thee thy due portion
With the ransomed and the just.
Look ye now upon the harvest,
See the lab'ers but a few;
Thrust ye in thy trusted sickle,
And thy diligence renew.

I have called my many servants
In this wicked latter day.
Many now are standing idle;
Some have fallen by the way.
Be ye steadfast in my service;
Leave thy worldly cares to me;
I will multiply thy blessings,
And my glory thou shalt see.

E. E. LONG.

If I Should Die To-night.

If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face
Before they laid it in its resting place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would soothe it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress,
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night.

If I should die to-night,
My friends would call to mind, with loving thought
Some kindly deed the icy hands had wrought;
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said,
Errands on which the willing feet had sped,
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words would all be put aside,
And so, I should be loved and mourned to-night.

If I should die to-night,
Even hearts estranged would turn once to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully;
The eyes that chilled me with averted glance
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften in the old, familiar way;
For who could war with dumb, unconscious clay?
So I might rest, forgiven of all, to-night.

Oh, friend, I pray to-night,
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow—
The way is lonely; let me feel them now,
Think gently of me; I am travel worn;
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn,
Forgive, oh hearts estranged, forgive, I plead,
When dreamless rest is mine I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night.

THE BIBLE.

THE NAME.

The word Bible comes to us from the Greek. The original word was biblos, which meant literally bark of papyrus, or paper. Biblia is the plural of the diminutive biblion, and means literally little books. It was the ordinary word for book, whether a distinct treatise, or a subdivision of a treatise was meant, and was so used long before its application to the Jewish Scriptures. In fact, the term used by the early church in referring to our present Bible had more of the significance of "The Old Covenant" and "The New Covenant." Testamentum and Instrumentum were most frequently used in Latin, hence the Old and New Testament. Later the neuter plural, Biblia, came to be considered and treated as a feminine singular, so that ta biblia meant the Book, or the Bible; but this was not the case until near the time of the Reformation. The word is found in practically all the languages of western Europe. It was often referred to as "ta biblia ta agia," literally "The Holy Books," and it is in this sense that the word Bible is now most generally used, not only as referring to our book, but also to the sacred writings of other nations.

The Old Testament was divided into the "Law" or "Torah," referring to the first five books; the Prophets, and the Psalms. The word scripture, a term of less general use, was applied to the whole of the Old Testament. Considering its composition and the literal significance of biblia, it can readily be seen how the word Bible came to be used in referring to the book, as a collection of smaller tracts or booklets.

THE CANON; OLD TESTAMENT.

We have no authentic history of the Old Testament canon. The popular idea has been that Ezra practically closed the canon and rewrote the books. But this tradition seems to have no foundation in antiquity. According to 2 Esdras 14:20-26 and 38:48, Ezra wrote the twenty-four books of the Old Testament, but he also wrote seventy apocryphal books, which were esoteric and which he placed on a higher basis than the twenty-four of the Old Testament. This assumption has not been justified by either ancient or modern criticism and analysis. The first trace of the idea that Ezra closed the canon appears about the thirteenth century A. D., though by the middle of the sixteenth century the legend had become fairly established. But in the light of present criticism it appears as only a legend.

The ancient classification gave twenty-four books to the Old Testament.

1. The Law of Torah, consisting of the five books in the Pentateuch: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy.

2. The Prophets: a. Joshua, Judges, Samuel and Kings—four books. b. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve minor prophets—four books.

3. The "Writings" or "Hagiographa": a. The poetical books, Psalms, Proverbs, and Job—three books. b. The Megilloth (rolls) to be read at the sacred services; Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes and Esther—five books. c. Daniel, Ezra and Nehemiah (as one book), Chronicles—three books.

Samuel, Chronicles, Kings and Ezra and Nehemiah were not divided until the sixteenth century A. D. These twenty-four books were the recognized Hebrew canon, except that the latter prophets and Hagiographa were not always arranged in the same order. But books were never transferred from one group to another, and the canon always included the books given. In the third to the first century B. C. the Hebrew arrangement was disregarded by the Septuagint, which rearranged the historical books, Genesis to Esther, then the poetical books, Job to the Psalm of Psalms, then the prophetic books from Isaiah to Malachi. The Apocrypha was interspersed throughout and was classified within this arrangement, which latter arrangement is also followed in the Vulgate. The reformers separated the books, those for which there was no Hebrew original (that is the Apocrypha) from the rest of the books, and placed them at the end of the Old Testament, but retained the same order as they occupied in the Septuagint, and that they now occupy in English. Luke 24:44 refers to the old classification in "the law, the prophets, and the Psalms."

WHY CANONICAL.

It is certain that the Old Testament canon could not have taken its present form until after the last of the canon was fixed, i. e., until a late century B. C. However that may be, it is generally considered and recognized that those books having the greatest inspirational force were the ones which were retained in the canon. While there may be a few included which some critics do not consider superior to some books omitted, there is nothing omitted to compare with far the greater part of that which has been included. The test of the Old Testament canon was the inspirational or "God power" back of it. (Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, 2:569-588.) "Canon" really means simply those that have come up to the test, or mark. The other books simply do not measure up to the standard.

TEXTS.

So far as the Hebrew texts of Old Testament are concerned, we have none at present which date back prior to the ninth century A. D. Still, critical students are practically agreed that this text has not been changed since the second century A. D. It is significant that all the texts which we possess are Masoretic. Ancient Hebrew formerly was in round characters, not the square letters, which are now used, and had no vowel signs, but was purely consonantal. Furthermore, the characters were written, one after another, without intermission. The Masoretic text consists therefore of at least two parts, the consonants of the ancient text and the vowel signs and diacritical marks, which have been added. The consonantal part is complete, but ambiguous. The secondary part is not complete, and standing alone is without meaning, but gives significance to the ancient characters. The Masora includes also notes in the nature of an index.

The Septuagint text in Greek was originally prepared in the second century B. C., and students of to-day contend that if we could restore the ancient text of the Septuagint we could from this secure the ancient Hebrew of the second century B. C. The manuscripts we have now date back, as stated, to the ninth century A. D., but the text was fixed about 132 A. D., and very few changes have been made since then.

There are many versions in Samaritan, Arabic, Greek, Syrian, and Latin, and these are also of very great value in attempting to ascertain the original text.

Critics and students are agreed that considerable modifications were made from time to time in the first few centuries before and after the Christian era, and some even change the sense. We find in the Old Testament itself, reference to quite a number of books which we have not at present. We can not be sure as to the value of books which are now entirely lost, but it seems remarkable, considering all the circumstances, that the books of the Bible should have been as well preserved as they have been; and with as few serious alterations, so far as students generally have been able to discover. That is, the Bible can not safely be thrown away as a whole merely because these changes have been made, as the body and essentials have been largely preserved and handed down to this age.

NEW TESTAMENT.

After the death of Christ the early Christians were looking so anxiously and so earnestly for his coming, that no thought was given at first to the preparation of a definite literature. In fact, we may say of the New Testament that it was not produced in an effort to prepare a Christian literature, but developed as the needs of the times required. If anything, this should rather add to its value.

The earliest of the gospels is usually referred to as a Hebrew text called "Q" and accredited to Matthew; this has now been lost, but is considered to have been the foundation of the Greek text of the gospel according to Matthew, and also of Luke. Mark is the oldest of the texts of the gospel which we now possess. Tradition states that it was written by Mark largely from the dictation of the Apostle Peter, though it was not written or presented to the world until after the death of Peter. It is dated about 60 or 70 A. D. That Luke wrote both the gospel of Saint Luke and the Acts is the opinion of English scholars and many others.

Other gospels besides those which have come down were written, but those which we have were considered, both by the early scholars and by modern critics, to be the most worthy of preservation. They include the sayings of our Lord rather than an effort to historically set forth his life, so that they reveal rather his character and moral and religious ideals than the mere facts of history. John's gospel was written much later and because of a contest with certain of the Greek Christians.

The Pauline epistles were the earliest of the Christian writings; earlier, in fact, than any of the gospels. Although there is criticism as to a few of the Pauline epistles, it is directed to the matter of authorship, not to that of value. While some of the German scholars are exceedingly critical, those of the English school, who are men of equal ability, consider that the differences in style and in manner of treatment may safely be referred to the wide scholarship of the Apostle Paul and his ability to treat different situations and circumstances in a radically different manner.

The catholic epistles or general epistles, include those by Peter, James, John and Jude, (although Second and Third John are not general epistles, and Second Peter is of questionable authenticity). The writings of John form practically one roll and are the latest writings now included in the New Testament, with the exception of Second Peter.

As to authenticity, most of the letters of Saint Paul are considered authentic by all. It is rather surprising that so many of them should have been preserved. Copies were made, and first one church and then another accumulated quite a number of his epistles. As early as 140 A. D. ten of the Pauline epistles were held by Marcion. Polycarp and Ignatius had all thirteen, though we can safely date the collection of the epistles a generation earlier, that is, about 100 A. D. Irenæus assumed that there were four authentic gospels and no more. A few rejected the gospel according to Saint John, but long before 185 A. D. the four gospels were accepted.

The discrimination as to what books should be admitted was based on the idea that they were received by supernatural power, that the books were written by men inspired by the Holy Spirit and were consciously the word of God. This is also plainly marked in the epistles. Paul recognized that he was not always in the Spirit, yet wrote directly by the Spirit and made the affirmative claim of inspiration for much of his writings. Later writers do not claim to have the inspiration that the apostles had. Critics to-day consider that Second Peter and Jude are not quite up to the standard in real religious value, and question if they are really superior to First Clement and Ignatius; but broadly speaking the judgment of the early church has been indorsed by the opinion of students to-day, that those books which are of true inspirational value have been included, and others omitted.

The process of development of the New Testament was, first the individual writings, then the collection of writings, and finally the sacred volume. The collection was substantially complete at a very early date, and it is rather significant that the text of both the New Testament and the Old Testament should show, first inspirational value, and then acceptance by the church. Distinctly it is a revelation received by one having authority, received from a divine source, presented to the church, and by the church adopted as the word of God, and so placed in the sacred volume. This is significant, as it shows emphatically that the canon neither of the Old Testament nor of the New Testament was ever closed by divine authority, but was only closed by the church, and was so closed because the church received no other inspirational writings of equal value.

If we wish a parallel to-day, we might remark that when in Utah in 1903 an aged member of that church who had resided in Nauvoo during the life of Joseph Smith, jr., remarked, "Strange, strange, how the church needed so many revelations for fourteen years and now hasn't needed any revelations for more than sixty years." When a body of people does not receive anything else of equal inspirational value, they have nothing more to include, and automatically the canon closes. It was so with the Jewish church; it was so with the early Christian church; and it is so to-day in Utah. There appears no evidence but that the Jewish church still looked for further revelation. The early Christian church still believed in the possibility of revelation, and did not close the canon till 399 A. D.; but nothing more was received because the church had placed itself beyond the pale, and not because the Father was unwilling or unable to speak to his children. So in Utah to-day they still believe in the possibility of revelations, but for more than sixty years nothing has been received.

The fixing of the text gradually proceeded. The Apocalypse of John was one of the latest of the books to be included. By the end of the second century there was a list of the sacred books of the New Covenant, including the four gospels, the Acts, thirteen epistles of Saint Paul, and two epistles of John, Jude, and the Apocalypse of John and of Peter. Hebrew, John III, and Peter I and II were accepted by some. That the list was nearly universal is shown by the fragrant of Muraton, by Tatius, Theophilus, Irenæus, Clement, Alexander, Tertullian, and others. The gospels, Acts and thirteen epistles of Saint Paul all had. First Peter and First John nearly all the churches possessed. The Apocalypse of John was received in the west and Hebrew and James in the east. The list is not infallible, but the mistakes have been unimportant. (William Sunday—article on the Bible, Eleventh Edition—Britannica, p. 877.)

It was not until much later that the Apocalypse of Saint John was received in the east and was universally received in the west, so the present arrangement of the books is usually dated from the Council of Carthage A. D. 399. Even when the Apocalypse had been included, it was not placed universally at the end of the book until the date last given. This is important as showing how accidental indeed is the position of Revelation 22: 18 and 19. As has long been pointed out, these verses refer and can only refer to the book of Revelation alone; since that book was not placed in its present position till the close of the fourth century. Second, it denies to man the right to add to or take from the word of God. Other scriptures show that it can not refer to the godhead. Third, historically there was no such idea in the early church that the canon of scripture would be closed for ever. In the light of Bible analysis, in the light of history, and in the light of modern criticism, to attempt to apply these verses so as to deny present revelation, or any further word from God, would appear to show one either grossly ignorant or deliberately misleading.

THE TEXT OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

The earliest text we have of the New Testament is a fragment of the fourth gospel, reaching back to the third century. Of the fourth century we have two manuscripts of the New Testament and four other fragments of the gospels; of the fifth century, we have two of the New Testament and fifteen incomplete manuscripts; and of the sixth century, one manuscript of the New Testament and thirty-four fragments. The total number of manuscripts up to the sixteenth century is something like seventeen or eighteen hundred. The older manuscripts, those before the thirteenth century, are on parchment, while the later manuscripts, those after the fourteenth century, are on papyrus. Those before the ninth century are uncial, those later than the tenth are minuscule. There are said to be one hundred and twenty-nine uncial manuscripts of the New Testament; but to make that number fragments are probably included. In the uncial manuscripts, THE LETTERS ARE WRITTEN CLOSE TOGETHER WITHOUT ANY SPACE FOR WORDS, (as in the foregoing):

The uncial "manuscript" refers only to those written in the Greek language. The most important are:

(a) The Codex Vaticanus, which is an uncial of the fourth century, and originally included the whole Bible, (now parts of Hebrew, all of Timothy I and II, Titus, Philemon, and the Apocalypse are missing). The text has been "corrected" by two scribes, one of the fourth and the other probably of the eleventh century, and was re-inked probably in the fifteenth century, as it was not publicly known until later than that date.

(b) The Codex Sinaiticus, which also belongs to the fourth century. It originally contained the whole Bible and still contains the complete New Testament. It was corrected in the tenth century, and was found in the eighteenth century in the monastery of Saint Catherine on Mount Sinai.

(c) The Codex Alexandria, which belongs to the fifth century, as does also Codex Ephraem. The former is the earliest edition of the western text. Of the latter, only two thirds of the New Testament and a small part of the Old Testament remain.

(d) Codex Beza belongs to the fourth century, and is probably found in an earlier Greek or Latin text. There are many old versions in Syrian, Egyptian, and Latin, but they present quite a number of variations and no conclusive work has yet been done to secure the original text. They are, however, of great value in criticizing the manuscripts, though some of the versions, which means all copies in any other language than that of the original author, are more ancient than the manuscripts.

FURTHER OF CANON.

Not only was the Old Testament accepted by the Jews, and the New Testament as a whole accepted by the early Christian church, but the separate portions of the Old Testament were accepted by the Israelites, by that people to whom they were given as being inspired, before they were accepted and considered law. The same is true of the New Testament, though we may not in each case be able to show the formal vote in the same sense as to-day.

And Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do. And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel, and he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace offerings of oxen unto the Lord. And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people; and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words.—Exodus 24: 3-8.

And the king sent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah and of Jerusalem. And the king went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, both small and great: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant which was found in the house of the Lord. And the king stood by a pillar, and made a covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments and his testimonies and his statutes with all their heart and all their soul, to perform the words of this covenant that were written in this book: and all the people stood to the covenant.—2 Kings 23: 1-3.

The law was promulgated by the people, and by the king for the people, as binding on themselves, hence it was canonical, that is, authoritative; and it was so because its divine origin was recognized and had been accepted by the people.

The laws of Moses were issued in the name of God. The lawgiver spoke as the oracle of God and was accepted by the people. It is true, we find Hammurabi affirming that he also receives his laws from God; but, nevertheless, does that destroy the substantial truth? Does it not rather confirm the tradition, that the first great law was so given and should always be so given? The Spirit both in prophecy and the law was recognized as being the creative force, and other works were less authoritative, as not so obviously spiritual and divine. Prophecy was the test of canonical quality. Spiritual experience was the proof not merely subjective psychological phenomena, but the real, mighty influence from the living God. Paul did not imagine nor claim his power as his own, but from above. The fire that was in the mother church was borne to Antioch, and to Damascus by the missionary labors of Paul. He did not create the enthusiasm, but the necessity was upon him, and, like the prophets of old, he spoke as the Spirit of Christ moved him. (1 Corinthians 9: 16.)

He does not undervalue, but speaks as the expression of a mighty force, which possessed his whole soul and body. (Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, p. 572.)

Inspiration was recognized as the evidence of the indwelling deity in man. We no longer suppose or impart infallibility to every chance utterance, for we know the divine impulse and human expression are so inextricably fused that we can rarely if ever arrive at infallibility in the absolute sense. But it was the recognition of this quality of inspiration in those earlier writings made the test between what was canonical and what was not. Even if the early church should have erred in including one or two books not possessing that high quality, we have nothing at present of equal merit which should have been included and is not.

THE MODERNIST CHALLENGE.

And so the Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, volume 2, page 576 replies to the Modernist's challenge.

Why should our science, (that is, the science of the New Testament theology) deal with these writings, and only with these? Answer is, Because they alone belong to Canon. But that answer is not satisfactory. When we strike out the doctrine of inspiration, the dogmatic conception of the canon can no longer be maintained. No New Testament writing was born with the predicate "canonical." The proposition, "a writing is canonical," only means that after the fact it was so declared to be by the leading authorities of the church between the second and fourth centuries in the first instance—perhaps after all kinds of vacillations in their decision. Whoever then accepts the conception of the canon as valid, thereby submits to the authority of the bishops and theologians of those centuries. We do not so bow in other matters. One is not, therefore, called upon to deny that the ancient church in its New Testament brought together on the whole, that which was also the oldest, and, therefore, in a documentary sense, the most important, not only of the literature that is known to us, but of all that was in circulation at the time, and that it formed a collection that is deserving of all praise. Hence we make the test literary instead of religious.—W. Wrede, Work and Method of So-called New Testament Theology.

REPLY TO MODERNIST'S CHALLENGE.

It is true that no book of the New Testament or of the Old was born with the predicate "canonical," but we are prepared to maintain that all the books, both of the Old and New Testament, no doubt with considerable differences of degree, were born with qualities which caused them to be labeled "canonical," in other words, with the marks that are summoned up under the word inspiration. We have shown the sacred character, and this is the common principle through the whole Bible, different from all other literature of the kind,—the peculiar energy and intensity of the God consciousness of its writers. We do not claim that the judgment of the Jewish or Christian churches was infallible, but sufficiently nearly so for practical purposes. In the Prophets we can see the mind of the prophet working back of the writing. Not so with Moses, as with him it went deeper. The Psalms are exceptionally fine in their God consciousness, the unwavering consciousness with which they assume their own commission from God.—Davidson, Old Testament Prophecy, p. 11. Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, pp. 577, 578.

Is it credible that God has held communication with men? Is this true, that God speaks to and through men? So far as biblical criticism is concerned, the Israelites so affirmed, the Jewish nations so declared, the early church so claimed, and modern criticism confirms.

AS LITERATURE.

If space permitted, we might discuss at considerable length modern criticism of both the Old and New Testaments as literature, but at present we are more concerned with giving the results of research in a concise way. It is significant how generally the inspirational value is recognized, and also the value of the Bible as a "World book."

A world book is one which can be read and enjoyed by persons of uncultivated and immature mind, and grows in meaning and power with the growing mind. Such a statement is preeminently true of our Bible, a book which even the unlearned may learn to love, and yet the most learned find it ever full of new and hidden mysteries.—Educational Review, November, 1893.

The Bible is remarkable not only from the manner in which it has been received by Christians, but also because agnostics have been compelled to acknowledge its literary worth. There is but little in English literature which is not concerned to a greater or less extent with the Bible. Among the great books of the world, even such works as Sakuntala, the Iliad, Odyssey, Inferno, and those of Shakespeare, and Goethe are considered not alone by pious ministers of the gospel or devout Christian scholars, but also by atheists as inferior to the Bible.

What a book! Great and wide like the world, rooted in the abyss of creation and rising into the blue mysteries of heaven . . . sunrise and sunset, promise and fulfillment, birth and death, the whole drama of mankind, all that is in this book . . . it is the book of books, Biblia. . . What a great book! Stranger still than its contents is for me this style, in which every word is, so to say, a product of nature, like a tree, a flower, like the sea, the stars, like man himself. That sprouts, that flows, that sparkles, that smiles, one does not know how, one does not know why, one finds it altogether quite natural. In Homer, the other great book, the style is a product of art, and the material always, as in the Bible, is taken from reality, yet it shapes itself into a poetic form, as though recast in the melting pot of the human spirit; it is refined by a spiritual process which we call art. In the Bible there is not the least trace of art; that is the style of a memorandum book into which the absolute spirit, as if without any individual assistance, entered the daily incidents with the same actual truthfulness with which we write our washing list. This style admits no criticism whatever, one can only state its effects on our heart and soul.—Heinrich Heine.

Heinrich Heine was not a Christian in any sense of the word, but rather an infidel whose satire and wit spared nothing, but before this book of books even his wit was silent.

The Bible, then, as literature, stands in a class of its own. As a religious book it also is easily of first rank among the religious writings of the world, and the religious writings of the world have been the books that live. It is so because of the inspiration or divine consciousness. It can in no sense, then, be a bar to the reception as from God of other writings by men similarly inspired, but such writings must of necessity expect to stand or fall by the test.

The simple language of the Bible can not be improved upon. It is such a kind as to approve itself to rational beings. The answer is affirmative. The assumption of divinity is reasonable. In the Bible there is a variety, intensity and purity of religious life without a parallel in other literatures of the world. It bears its own eternal evidence to the student be he theologian or atheist. That is why we say inspiration. We know no other explanation for it than the special action of this Spirit of God. It is the same Spirit, but diversity of workings. Not confined to one channel, but permeating all the forces of life. We classify the kinds of working, but that in the Bible is the highest and most powerful we know. . . . Our attitude should not be that of doubt, but that of a more scientific, that is of a more accurate apprehension and assimilation of the divine truth as set forth in the Bible.—Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, vol. 2, p. 578.

So it is truly said:

The chief enemy of the Bible is ignorance of it. Doubts and suspicion do not arise from people reading this book. But they are communicated from outside to those who are not acquainted with the Bible. Had they ever experienced any of the comfort and gladness which the pious reader can draw from its pages they would be of a different opinion.

Some, to rob the Bible of value, point out other religious books, but that is true only in a limited extent. "The Bible does not need to dispute its position with the book of any other religion." (The Bible in the Church, by Professor Dobschütz; Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, vol. 2, p. 615.) The above is rather strong language, and yet it is that of all scholars and students. With its principles we can most heartily agree. "It is the high inspiration enjoyed by its writers, which gives it its value." The logic of the situation points most strongly to the possibility of men being so inspired in other ages and other times, and in this age and this time, and if so, that such inspired writings created through the power of that "God consciousness" in man may safely and should be associated with the sacred word. Gulicar said, "This portion of universal literature (i. e., the Bible) is the most influential book that ever existed."

Professor Harnock says:

It is enough to reflect upon the Bible as the book of the ancient world, the book of the Middle Ages, and though not perhaps in the market-place . . . the book of modern times. . . . Where does Homer stand compared with the Bible? Where Vedas or Quar'an? The Bible is inexhaustible, each succeeding period has viewed some new aspect of it. . . . Whenever a single individual, . . . layman or theologian has been able to draw fresh and full out of the Bible, and present to others what he has thus obtained, the inward life of Christendom has been raised to a higher level.—Harnock Reden und Aufsätze.

CHURCH AND GOSPEL UNCHANGEABLE.

Christ does not change, neither does the plan of salvation instituted for the redemption of mankind. This plan is unchangeable. The Scriptures teach that God's ways are equal, that he changes not. (Ezekiel 18: 25-29; Malachi 3: 6.) This being true, if he has ordained a plan and system, and an order for its administration at any time, then that is his plan to-day. Otherwise he has changed his once declared system. Furthermore, we have no indication in the revealed law of any such change.

Are there different plans formulated to-day? Did Christ introduce these? If he did not, who did? These are legitimate questions that naturally arise in a reflecting mind. They are entitled to answer. Can it be truthfully said that the plan has been changed? No. Faith has ceased among the children of men. Unshaken faith in the divine plan of salvation as taught by the Savior himself when here in the flesh has ceased to be. If the same system taught by Christ were taught to-day, would it save the souls of men? We answer yes; the same law, if kept now, will produce the same results as if kept then. For the best results we must teach and obey that perfect law.

James said that faith without works is dead, being alone. Works, or obedience, must accompany the teaching of the law and faith. We will find in the true church all the miraculous power and all the spiritual blessings (the sick healed, the blind made to see, the lame made to walk) enjoyed by the primitive church. Do we find such in the popular churches of to-day? If not, can we call them the true church of Christ? If we find only deacons and elders as church officers to officiate in the ordinances of the gospel, and carry on the ministry, have we found the church of Christ? This was not Paul's idea; he says (1 Corinthians 12): "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." This was the church of Jesus Christ in Paul's day.

This is still the church. If you find a church without the Spirit the body is dead. The church is the body of Christ. The Scriptures teach that Christ is unchangeable, man is the one who is subject to change. God is not a man that he should lie, neither the son of man that he should repent. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken and shall he not make it good? Every word God has spoken is true and must be obeyed. When you find the true church you will find a living body, with a full set of officers, working under the authority of the priesthood of God. Beware of man-made churches.

LIQUOR DEALERS SEEK PROTECTION.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, December 15.—The National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association which has its headquarters in the United Bank Building in this city is now engaged in raising an enormous slush fund to be used to stem the tide of prohibition which is sweeping all over the country.

The liquor dealers, driven to bay, evidently propose to literally buy their way out of the situation, for the sums of money that they propose to raise will aggregate something like five million dollars per year.

George F. Ditereale, chairman of the executive committee of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association and J. Walter Frieburg, chairman of the executive committee of the Committee Protective Bureau, have just issued a joint circular to the trade appealing for signatures to an ironclad agreement of which the following is the text:

On December 1, 1913, and on the first day of each month thereafter, we hereby agree to pay unto the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, for use of its Protective Bureau, on all goods manufactured or sold by us during the previous month according to the following schedule:

1. Distillers shall pay one cent per bushel on every bushel mashed for the production of spirits, alcohol, high wines, corn whisky and gin, and an equivalent if produced from molasses.
2. Distillers shall pay five cents per barrel on withdrawals of rye whisky, bourbon whisky and rum, and ten cents per barrel on brandies.
3. Manufacturers of cordials and wines shall pay five cents per barrel—case goods in proportion.
4. Wholesale liquor dealers and importers of wine and liquors shall pay one tenth of one per cent on their sales. In case of distillers who are also distributors, sales of double stamp goods produced in distilleries owned exclusively by them, and which are assessed under sections 1 and 2 are excluded.
5. Brokers shall pay one cent per barrel on sales of goods in bond and two cents per barrel on sales of tax-paid goods.
6. Allied trades shall pay according to a schedule to be established by the executive committee of the Protective Bureau.

Date.....

Sign firm name here.....

A very little mathematical calculation shows the enormous proportions of the funds which would be accumulated under the plan if the greater proportion of the members of the trade should sign up. The funds accumulated in such a case could not be less than five million dollars per year. What a lot of newspapers, broken-down politicians and the like such a fund could purchase.

In sending out these circular appeals, lists of subscribers are also sent out and "corrected lists will be issued from time to time." The accompanying veiled threat closes the appeal:

If your name is not on this list, by signing it now it will appear in the next one. In addition to this, the national office will be able to answer affirmatively the questions received by letter and telephone from various firms as to whether or not you are contributors.

Wholesalers are asked to use their traveling men as recruiting agents for signatures to the compact that they "may bear their just proportion of the burden."—The New Republic, December 26, 1913.

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

The Conference.

The first month of the new year already passed into history! Already gone beyond our control or improvement! But we have the now—and indeed now is a day of preparation—to us "Zionites," at any rate.

One note in the great symphony about us is being struck more and more frequently—more and more insistently. It is the word Conference! We hear it in the Sunday school music, in the prayer and preaching service. The business meetings this week were full of it. We even hear it in our homes, in the activity of the wall paper dealers, and house furnishings in general. Soon we shall see it in the air, being beaten out of rugs, shaken out of curtains, rubbed into shining windows, or brushed over fresh surfaces in the form of transforming color! But most of all for the singers, is it heard on Sunday afternoons when they gather together and sing and plan for the big music of April!

The choirs of the two cities rally once each month for united effort, the local choir pegging away faithfully in the interims. Here's all success and encouragement! Things are in preparation, the paths are being made smooth, difficulties are vanishing before the persistent efforts of our courageous. So make your own preparations for coming to conference, you singers of Israel. Plan for it; bend your will steadily to that end, and be here to answer when the roll is called.

By the way, our general director will be making his announcement concerning the uniform wearing of white by the ladies of the big chorus for the evening when the Holy City will be given, and possibly for all the Sunday services also. So, while planning your conference sewing don't fail to figure on a white dress. It will be an asset later on in the warm weather, and will aid materially in April to give a distinct value to our work.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Conference Choir Outlook.

Our recent western trip was filled with joyous experiences. Passing through Saint Louis, en route for Independence, we found Brother Ed C. Bell awaiting our arrival. A hurried chat revealed his continued activities in the musical department of our work. Our Saint Louis choir has long enjoyed a well-earned reputation for good work, and we hope to see all of these trained singers in the big conference choir this year.

At Independence, we had real song-fests. The enthusiasm and deep desire for perfect work were good to behold, and enabled us to do more than merely superficial work, which latter is the case where attention is not fully given. We dug deep and had a good time in the digging. Kansas City responded to the rally call, as also did the Independence South Side, and our forces were much augmented by their attendance.

So, with these three combined choirs, the big choruses of the Holy City were inspiring, and the "Amens," and "Allelujahs" began to carry real victory in their tones as each difficult passage was mastered by these tireless workers.

At Lamoni, in spite of vacations, fine skating, and New Year's parties, the singers turned out in goodly numbers. Their effort showed a worthy desire not to lower the standard of efficiency so gloriously earned and maintained throughout the last General Conference. In the two rehearsals held we nearly covered the 1914 series of anthems, which was good work. We had a good time together, and found the relations so pleasantly established last April still warm and friendly.

The meeting with so many of our noble workers gives us a world of new incentive to plan other things, things out of the ordinary, and we rejoice that so many are realizing and improving the opportunities to be found in this department. The interest seems to be growing by leaps and bounds.

Now let each and all make an effort to come to General Conference, and taste the joy of consecrated service. In the meantime, fill out the remainder of the conference year with one continuous round of helpfulness.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

District and stake choristers, will you kindly send to me at once, brief, snappy accounts of your work for the past year? I desire to embody the same in my annual report to the conference.

To all the ladies who will sing in the conference choir: Please arrange to wear white dresses on special occasions. Announcements as to these affairs will be made later.

Watch for the next issue of the Staff. It will contain final and important instructions relative to the conference choir work.

ALBERT N. HOXIE, JR.

Anthem Series.

We hardly anticipated that the 1914 anthem series would meet with such hearty and general approval. The expressions of good will that have been our lot to receive give us added encouragement, and we are beginning to feel that we are in real touch with the needs of most of the choirs throughout the country. We are but waiting to learn the needs of an even more simple anthem book for small choirs, at which time it will be published. We will attend to this as well as other matters that are just as pressing so soon as we can get the necessary statistics for a sure foundation to build upon.

The list of subscribers for 1914 series to date is so large that we can not publish it, but, for your encouragement, we are going to mention the largest users of our work for this year: Independence, Missouri, Kansas City, Missouri, Lamoni, Iowa, Omaha, Nebraska, Council Bluffs, Iowa, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Brooklyn, New York, Saint Louis, Missouri, are among our very largest users, having ordered fifteen copies or over, while Los Angeles, California, Ottumwa, Iowa, Troy, Kansas, Magnolia, Iowa, Berkeley, California, New Philadelphia, Barbortown, Willoughby, and Cleveland, Ohio, have ordered from six to fourteen copies. The orders from the last four towns are mainly due to the splendid activity of District Chorister Bishop Becker, whose enthusiastic letters and generous orders denote the kind of activity that tends toward success. We could mention many more, who have been workers from the beginning, and whose interest in the work is manifested in more ways than one.

We do not anticipate issuing a second edition of the 1914 series, as we could not do so for less than eighty-five cents per copy. If you intend to use more of these books in the near future we would suggest that you send us your order at once, as the supply is becoming rapidly exhausted.

The Power of Music.

(Read by Miss Florence Burgess before joint convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society and Sunday School, at Saint Louis, Missouri, December 13, 1913.)

Of what good to talk of the power of music? A succession of tones, making an air or tune; other tones to chord with these, producing harmony; the whole rendered in a certain time or rhythm. How can this simple combination of three things, air, harmony, and rhythm, have any special power? Yet they say that it has.

The classical myth has it that Orpheus, with his lyre, moved men and beasts, trees and rocks. "He accompanies the Argonauts in their expedition, and the power of his music wards off all mishaps and disasters, rocking monsters to sleep and stopping cliffs in their downward rush." Some of those ancients must have sensed its power, or such a myth would never have originated. We have the word of the poet Congreve for it that "Music has charms to soothe the savage breast." And we all know Shakespeare's very stern opinion of "The man that hath no music in himself,

Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds."

But if you have not felt it, their words or my words are of small avail.

You may have heard musicians who could play the most majestic composition ever written (play the notes, I mean) with about as much breadth and power as they would feel in embroidering a piece of fancy work. Oh, we would not be too harsh with them. We would not quite agree with the man who was asked, after a showy number at a concert, "What do you think of his execution?" and replied, "I'm in favor of it." No, we would let them live, but we do hold a distinct grievance against those players, however brilliant technically, who somehow fail to "touch the spot."

So, if you have not felt it, words can not explain. But if you have felt it, you will know that music means expression, outlet, for emotion. It expresses the vague longings which one hardly could express in words. I like the sentiment of the heroine of "The Rosary," when she says, "I do hate singing before that sort of audience. It is like giving them your soul to look at, and you don't want them to see it. To my mind, music is the most revealing thing in the world."

Second, music means cheerfulness. You know how people, sometimes, when worried or fearful, whistle or sing to keep up their courage. Some say, "I am saddest when I sing," and Bill Nye adds, "So are those who hear me; they are sadder even than I am." But you must not be too sad when you sing. If you are entirely grief-stricken, you are apt to break down; and even if only depressed, or tired, you are apt to sing flat. If, however, you can overcome your sadness enough to make the attempt, then singing will increase your cheerfulness, for it has been said, "Singing directly develops those qualities that lift the mind and heart up from the ground."

Again, music means youth. Some years ago I heard a man who was getting old in years, and who had long been a devotee of this art, say that music had kept him young. He is still living. He still loves music. I hope he still feels young.

Also, music means health. Take singing, for instance. Did you ever hear of a vocal teacher who did not harp upon deep breathing and breath control? And is not deep breathing the very foundation of health?

I once read of the idea of a hospital where certain ailments were to be treated by music. Nervous patients would be treated by "the loud, compelling strains of Wagner." It would be worth trying. I should like to be carried completely out of myself by those "compelling strains." I should like to be lifted on the wings of Verdi's exquisite tunefulness; or sung to sleep by the sweet gentle airs of Mendelssohn; or stimulated by the delicate, capricious playfulness of Madame Chaminade.

Then, too, music means gracefulness. I read of a photographer who always had music going on during sittings. He found that in this way the usual stiffness is eliminated; that in the atmosphere of music people unconsciously fall into graceful positions. Would that more photographers would try this plan, instead of telling us to "look pleasant"!

We have seen, then, that music means expression, means cheerfulness, means youth, health, and bodily grace. But best of all—or perhaps including all these others—some one has said, "Music washes away from the soul the dust of everyday life." There has been much said about music. There was never anything better said than that. It refreshes the soul!

I once heard of a busy mother, who, at the end of her active day, after the last child was put to bed, would sit down at the organ to play a few hymns. Her own mother would remonstrate, saying, "Aren't you tired?" And she would answer, "Oh, mother, this rests me."

Ah, she knew! Far better than the frivolous, fashionable one who goes to the concert or opera because it is the correct thing to be seen there, and her name will be in the paper among those present. If that other should attend these events, and hear grand orchestral effect and beautiful voice, how her being would respond! After the endless succession of household tasks, so valuable for developing patience—after "the dust of everyday life"—"This rests me." This refreshes me." Yes, she understood. She knew, in some degree, the power of music.

Work Brings Success.

To-day, perhaps, more than at any other time in the history of the world, do the people realize that music is one of the great essentials, not alone because of its magnitude in a commercial sense (and when we consider the thousands spent annually for buildings, operas, concerts, etc., we realize that it is one of the great interests of to-day) but as one of the most intellectual and uplifting forces of civilization.

We have had, at certain periods of history, during the development of music, a renaissance, an awakening; for music, like all other material forces, has been influenced by the political and social conditions of the country.

So we are awakening to the realization that an education along musical lines is absolutely indispensable. Even parents, who, during their generation, had no knowledge whatever of that art, deem it very necessary that their children have every advantage which they were not so fortunate as to possess.

We, as progressive members of an organization, must have (making them for ourselves if necessary) opportunities to develop in our knowledge of music. In view of the fact that the general choir movement is so vitally in existence, we should realize more than ever the importance of a musical education for our young people, that they may have the same opportunities to progress along this line that the many other boys and girls of our age have.

Always those of the vocal profession have been studying the science of the voice, in order to improve and perfect it; and, to-day, they realize that the singer must be developed, not alone in the range and power of his voice, but in every way—from the physical, mental, and emotional standpoints.

The question has often been asked—and more insistently of late, "Can anything be done with one who is not naturally a singer, by way of improvement, as well as developing natural gifts?" Decidedly yes! The old theory that only those possessing marked "talent" might hope to succeed in their study of music is long since relegated to the past, with all such old-fashioned, unprogressive notions. Many instances may be cited where students with a mediocre amount of so-called "talent," but a grim determination to work, have made for themselves a name in the world of music.

Some of our students at Graceland were very much amused and greatly encouraged when Mr. Edward Baxter Perry was with us, by his relating a little incident of the "Master" L'Abbe Liszt, who when questioned on the subject of only "talented" pupils succeeding in their work, replied angrily: "Talent! Away with talent! Work! Work hard! and you are bound to succeed."

ANNA MAE MORGAN.

Notes of the Staff.

From January 18 to February 1, inclusive, special services were held in Independence, by Brethren J. W. Rushton and F. A. Smith. The local choir responded nobly to the extra duties imposed upon it, giving a fine anthem number every evening, and furnishing special music throughout, in the form of solo, duets, quartets, etc. The Sunday school orchestra assisted on occasions, as well as did some outside talent. At the 7.15 song service large crowds would be present, joining in the singing with an enthusiasm which gave a splendid dominating note to each service.

The Independence Sunday school orchestra, under the direction of Brother Charles Eaton, gave a concert at Central Church in Kansas City, on January 27. They gave some fine numbers, which were well received. They were assisted by Sister Pearl Crick and Sister Doris Anderson, each of whom appeared in double number solos.

We are very glad to extend a hearty welcome to "The F Clef," the new music column in the Glad Tidings, published at Grand Rapids, Michigan. The department is edited by Brother S. W. L. Scott, whose salutatory appears in the November issue. The column is very bright and sparkling, and contains a joyous note of life and enthusiasm which is contagious and which will not fail to prove an uplift and inspiration to all who read. Here's unbounded success to you, Brother Leonard! May your fine ability but increase with each opportunity, so well improved, until the note of your personality and influence be heard most triumphantly in the grand symphony from Israel's united singers!

First, the type of music popular with the opera goers of to-day is fundamentally inimical to all repose, elegance, and real beauty of style. It can only be sung explosively, rudely, and indeed almost brutally. Every number in it contains phrases calling for violent attack and forced production. This music makes no appeal to the esthetic perception. It reaches out no communication to the finer emotions. Its chief purpose is an unhealthy excitement of the nerve-centers, a swift and violent assault upon the sensuous organism of the hearer. Its effect upon men and women is not unlike that produced by pouring raw whisky into the throat. One would hardly expect an epicure to fine wines to enjoy such a sensation.— Literary Digest, January 10, 1914.

In the HERALD for September 17, 1913, appears in the Staff column, a "Song of Gladness," which we had believed was written by President Joseph Smith. We learn, however, that it came from the pen of Brother Joseph Luff, and we take pleasure in making this correction of our error.

A RESOLUTION.

I am only one
But still I am one.
I can not do everything,
But still I can do something.
And because I can not do everything
I will not refuse to do something That I can do!—Edward Everett Hale.

Musical Notes.

A prize of one hundred dollars is offered for the best organ composition by an American composer, through the American Guild of Organists. Particulars of the contest may be obtained from Mr. J. H. Brewer, 88 South Oxford Street, Brooklyn, New York. The inquirer should inclose a stamped envelope. Contest closes March 15.

A prize of fifty dollars is also offered for the best musical setting to a new Bowdoin College song. Those interested may write Professor E. H. Trass, Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine. Manuscripts must be submitted by April 1.

The three things to be mastered in interpreting music are lucidly set forth in a late number of the Etude, as follows: (1) Comparative length of notes. (2) Comparative degrees of power. (3) Comparative degrees of speed. Not all notes should be played exactly as they are written. By observing these three principles, the most attractive rendition results.

Boston has just completed her first series of the Annual Winter Musical Concerts with splendid success; and another is expected to be commenced soon, which will complete the season. These are all free to residents, but tickets must be obtained for admission.

The contest over the will of the late Joseph Pulitzer resulted in an award of $700,000 to the Philharmonic Orchestra, as he designed, for the benefit of popular concerts in New York.

It is claimed that radium is effecting wonderful cures in certain cases of vocal difficulty. In several instances abnormal growths have entirely disappeared, after a brief treatment, so that the vocal chords were restored to their proper condition.

What is the difference between sacred and secular music? is just now the subject of considerable discussion in English musical circles, particularly in the English Church. It is thought that a more definite distinction should be made. It is charged in one of the leading English musical monthlies that some of the smaller churches there render many a composition, "whose tinsel vulgarity hardly entitles it to a category with the rag-time scraps of the pantomime and music halls." For this the clergy is being blamed, in that they crave "bright" music. It is suggested that a collection of sacred music should be made and edited by a musician thoroughly competent for such work, and published in a convenient form, as a corrective of the evil. Incidentally, it is charged that the American standard is many degrees lower than is that of the English. If their music is not fit to be listed with "rag-time scraps," we are wondering what classification they consider ours should have. We should probably not agree with the English judgment of American music, if this is representative of it, but the principle involved in the discussion is worthy our serious thought. It will not be questioned by our most competent musicians that some of the compositions we have been using in our church services are not altogether appropriate for such occasions, and should be excluded from our repertoire of distinctive church music. A. B. P.

Our Correspondence.

Editor Staff: The Staff does not seem to be in need of any word of encouragement, yet I will say I like it. I have read it with interest, and from the first thought it a pleasing addition to the HERALD, something the same as a solo, or duet in the midst of a business meeting.

To my mind, it is a good idea to let all the readers know what efforts are being put forth in the line of music, the interest taken in that line, and the success that is crowning those efforts. Activity is contagious. The knowledge of the efforts of one or more for the uplifting of humanity will stimulate another to a greater diligence in his own line.

Besides, if there could be any greater incentive to attend General Conference than conference itself, it is the desire to hear the swelling tones of that grand choir as they fill the house and thrill the hearts of those present. And what could be more appropriate in connection with the sacred occasion where the business of the kingdom of God is being transacted, and Jesus the Master is the invisible head, than music, rich, deep, and sweet, wafting the thoughts and drawing the feelings upward, and peradventure bringing the angels nearer. E. B.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, February 1, 1914.

Sister Anderson: I wish to subscribe myself to be in hearty accord with the systematic movement that is now in progress to develop latent musical talent, which we have in the church, and to promulgate greater efficiency of music and song in its relation to church service.

Since the church has seen fit to dignify this branch of the service by appointing a general chorister much progress has been made, and under the splendid management of Brother Hoxie we can look for a continued enthusiastic upbuilding. As I come to realize more and more the value of a well-drilled choir in this great work, in the support that it gives the pulpit by "calling in" the mind of the congregation from the cares and distraction of the world, and so attuning it to the great Master Mind, that the congregation as well as the preacher may be inspired, I, and my associates as well, feel spurred on to greater efforts along musical lines.

In the building up of a choir, one of the main essentials is a high degree of spirituality or individual consecration. The voices may be of just ordinary timbre, and even be few in number, but if they sing with the Spirit of God in their hearts, wonderful results will be obtained. The reason is found in the fact that God says, "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me;" and to sing with his Spirit as the interpreting power is to sing the religion of Jesus Christ into the souls of those who hear.

Under the able leadership of Brother Paul Craig, the Omaha choir is progressing rapidly. A splendid interest is manifested, which is enlivened by the fact that a musical concert is to be given here about the 1st. of April.

Again assuring you of my interest in the welfare of this department, and praying that all those who are musically inclined will unselfishly put their shoulder to the wheel, and with an eye single to the glory of God help roll along this department of the work, I am,

Yours very truly,
ROLAND W. SCOTT.

MARCH READING—The Development of Independence.

UNFOLDING LIFE.

"Be you young or be you old, there's nothin' sets you thinkin' like a seed."

How may a seed set us thinking on the subject of unfolding life and the development of independence? Mrs. William Starr Dana, in a book called Plants and Their Children, writes instructively of the unfolding of plant life. We glean from the book the introduction of this reading.

All seeds need care and wrapping up till they are ripe. A bright, smooth apple may be compared to a jewel case, and what precious jewels could be laid away more carefully than these apple seeds? What jewel case could boast a more beautiful outside than the red-cheeked apple? These ripe, brown seeds are precious because in each of them lies locked up the germ of life, which, loosed from its prison, may grow, an independent being in the sphere of plant life.

"Seeds, like birds and babies, outgrow their surroundings, and need more room." In an effort to give to young plants the fullest opportunity to develop the life within them, nature makes use of various agencies to distribute seeds. People, animals, birds, winds, and waters are carriers of seeds. Some seeds are winged, some have sails, and some, when fully matured, are expelled from the pod with a snap that carries them some distance from home. They are really shot out into the world to begin their independent existence. "This habit may at first seem to you somewhat unmotherly, but if you stop to think about it, you will see that really the parent plant is doing its best for its little ones. If they should fall directly upon the ground beneath, their chances in life would be few." The soil would not furnish the necessary support for them all.

Not only every plant, but every animal which is born upon the earth must maintain an existence for itself. By the simple division of cells by budding, by the deposit of seeds or eggs, in the lower forms of life the individual existence is begun.

In the lower orders of animal life there is no love, but in the higher forms, where we see some manifestations of love, we see also the parent recognizing the necessity of putting the young upon their own resources when the proper stage of development has been reached. And so the mother bird pushes her timid young from the nest when they ought to fly away; the hen pecks her chicks when the brooding period is over; and the house cat cuffs her kittens when they come to her for sustenance after they can live apart from her.

Most helpless of all creatures that come into the world is the little child. Deepest of all love for offspring is that of the human parent. And yet the wisest and most loving parents realize that the time must come when their children must reply upon themselves, if life is to yield to them its best. Our fields of Indian corn, standing straight and strong, helping to feed the hungry world, are a good illustration of the sturdy maturity into which children should develop, and of the service they should render to needy humanity.

Nature affords also an opposite example. It is that of the parasite, which, fastening itself upon other organisms, draws from them the strength their powers have gained. There is a strange plant called the "dodder." When a seed, it lies on the ground like other plants and sends a root down into the earth, but, unlike other plants, it does not send out any leaves.

It sends upward a slender, golden stem which sways about in the air as if searching for something. Its movements are like those of a blind man feeling with his hands for support. This is what the plant does. It feels about until it finds a plant fitted to give it what it needs. Then it puts out a root into the juicy stem of its new-found support. When firmly rooted it grows vigorously, fastening more roots into the stem of its victim. When quite at home and perfectly sure of its board, it withers away where it is joined to its earth root. Soon it breaks off entirely from this root and draws every bit of its nourishment from the plant or plants in which it is rooted.

When the dodder happens to fasten itself upon some wild plant, little harm is done. But, unfortunately, it is very partial to plants that are useful to men, and then it must be regarded as an enemy. Linen is made from the flax plant, and this flax plant is one of the favorite victims of the dodder. Sometimes it will attack and starve to death whole fields of flax.

Among human plants, men and women, boys and girls, there are those not unlike the dodder, which blooms in beauty, but to the detriment of the plant from whose life-forces it draws. There are those who seek the pleasure, the beauty, the ease, the enjoyment of life at the expense of others, avoiding their share of its work. It is the duty of those who have the care of children to help them to become masters of their own powers, and to feel the pleasure of using those powers, of being useful members of society.

William Howard Taft is quoted as saying: "The best thing you can give a young man is a good education and that sort of ambition which will lead him to carve out his own career and to make his own position in the world of men and events. This is no less true with regard to the girls of the country." Perhaps it was the realization that woman has frequently been regarded as a parasite and charged with making marriage a means of support that led the President to say in the same interview: "I wish that every girl in the world were so situated that she would not think it necessary for her to marry unless she really wanted to. . . . I believe the most important education possible is that kind which may be called industrial vocational education, the kind which puts young men and young women in a position from which they can, by their own efforts, work themselves to independence."

WHO ARE THE INDEPENDENT?

Our servants are not our dependents. Rather it is we who are dependent upon them. Doctor Montessori says: "We often believe ourselves to be independent simply because no one commands us, and because we command others; but the nobleman who needs to call a servant to his aid is really a dependent through his own inferiority. The paralytic who can not take off his boots because of a pathological fact, and the prince who dare not take them off because of a social fact, are in reality reduced to the same condition."

In a series of very readable articles written by the Princess Eulalia of Spain and published in the current issues of the Delineator, the Infanta depicts her life at the court of Spain. She enumerates its restrictions and constant surveillance, with its intolerable lack of activity; she refers to many of the royalty as figureheads who have never been allowed to think, or see, or know anything for themselves, and to restraints which were like impassable walls of isolation, and ignorance, and inexperience. Of the time when she was hedged about with these restrictions and surrounded by obsequious servants and by persons of the nobility who manifested no activity, either of body or mind, she exclaims, "Those endless, idle, unhappy days!"

She writes of the many who envy the splendid confinement of royalty, but says of herself that she envied those who must work for a living. She says: "It seemed to me the happiest, the most exciting thing to be in such a struggle, among people who had to work and make their way, always busy and interested in something, and never shut up in idleness to be bored."

THE EMBRYO MAN.

It is the fiat of God concerning the human family that a man shall "leave his father and his mother." He is to leave the home in which he had birth and was nurtured; he is to create a new home in which his children are to be nurtured; but between the time of his birth and the forming of the new home are years for preparation, which should be years of increasing independence.

At birth the child is absolutely dependent. The weaned child has made a step toward independence, but, since he is not able to walk, and can not wash and dress himself, can not talk and make known his wants, and can not do a large number of other things which would render him free from the assistance of others, he is still largely dependent for his very existence; he is not free; his life-force is undeveloped.

Miss Ellen Yale Stevens suggests that many fond parents and nurses love the very helplessness of little children and delight to serve it, thereby prolonging it uselessly and wrongfully. Doctor Montessori believes that a child whose activities have been properly directed should be to a great extent independent and free by the age of three.

It is easier for the mother of a child to be his nurse than to be his educator; it is easier for her to feed, wash, and dress him than to teach him to do those things for himself. But the child who does not act will not learn how. When we do for a child instead of helping him to do for himself, we are thwarting a deep-rooted and valuable instinct. "The child's cry, 'I want to do it myself,' is the natural expression of an activity which should be developed, not repressed."

It is important to note that the child is not to be left to haphazard development. His activities are to be wisely directed. "The mother who feeds her child without making the least effort to teach him to hold the spoon for himself and to try to find his mouth with it, who does not at least invite the child to look and see how she eats, offends the fundamental human dignity of her son,—she treats him as if he were a doll, when he is instead a man confided by nature to her care."

"In reality he who is served is limited in his independence. The concept of the dignity of the man of the future will be, 'I do not wish to be served, because I am not an impotent.'"

In the Casa dei Bambini the children enter a path of self-discipline which, if pursued, will make them masters of themselves, able to cooperate with others in the work of the world. They are encouraged to learn for themselves through the use of their senses; to see, to feel, to hear, to think, to know, to form judgments, to reach decisions. The buttoning, lacing, and tying exercises soon result in their being able to dress themselves. Other exercises give them physical poise, so that they become able to walk steadily and to carry things safely. This is a degree of physical independence.

In an exercise called "the lesson of silence," they learn to hold in check their powers of activity; in other words, they learn to be quiet. The following is a description of the silence game:

One may be moving about between the groups of busy children, or sitting watching their lively animation, or listening to the cheerful hum of their voices, when one feels that a hush has fallen over all. A quick glance around shows that the children have stopped playing as well as talking, and are sitting motionless at their tables, their eyes on the blackboard where, in large letters, is written the word "Silence." Even the little ones who can not read follow the example of the older ones, and not only sit motionless, but look fixedly at the magic word. The directress is visible now, standing by the blackboard, calmly waiting. The silence becomes deeper and deeper. To untrained ears it seems absolute, but an occasional faint gesture or warning smile from the directress shows that a little hand has moved almost but not quite inaudibly, or a chair has creaked. The peace of this hush lasts minute after minute. The children sit quiet, their busy brains lulled into repose. Then a real veil of twilight falls; the directress goes quietly about from window to window, closing the shutters; the children bow their heads upon their clasped hands and wait. The directress steps through the door into the next room and a slow voice, faint and clear, comes floating back, calling a child's name. The one called lifts her head, opens her eyes, rises as silently as a little spirit, and with a glowing face tiptoes out of the room, flinging herself joyously into the waiting arms. Child after child is called until a happy group is clustered about the teacher. Then the game ends as informally as it began. The teacher comes back into the room; the shutters are opened; the mystic word is erased from the board; the children smile at each other and begin again to busy themselves, perhaps more gently, more quietly than before. (From The Montessori Mother.)

In explaining the object of this game of silence Doctor Montessori says: "The perfect immobility, the attention alert to catch the sound of the names whispered from a distance, the carefully coordinated movements executed so as not to strike against chair or table, so as barely to touch the floor with the feet—all this is a most efficacious preparation for the task of setting in order the whole personality."

We see in the principles of the Montessori method the purpose of educating the whole child, of making him master of himself, both through those exercises which indulge his instinct for activity and through those which cultivate his power of self-restraint. They seek to free him early from the "prison of babyishness," and very early in life to set his feet in the path which will lead him to capable, independent manhood.

The author of the method conceives an ideal civilization in which there shall be no menial servants but in which all shall work, in which there shall be cooperation, for from the first the children are taught to consider the collective interests and not individual ones only. Justly may Doctor Montessori be referred to as "the greatest woman educator in history"; for the system she is suggesting to the world for the education of children leads to an independence, not only physical, but so spiritual in character as to be termed by those who have studied deeply into it, a religion.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN FEBRUARY.

Pray for all the auxiliary departments of the church; pray for the Prayer Union, that all these may help to bring about the exalted condition of purity and righteousness which God demands and expects of his people. Pray for the sick and afflicted.

Lesson, 1 Corinthians 10: 1-11. Memory text, 1 Peter 2: 5.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

There comes to us a letter written in the trembling hand of age and feebleness which tells us that the writer is afflicted, that she has suffered from la grippe, followed by erysipelas which is settled in the ankles. The writer says, "So far as I can see it will leave me lame, so far as medical aid is concerned. So my mind runs back to the many blessings I have received in the past and I desire the prayers of the church in my behalf, that our heavenly Father may bless me with health in my old days. I will be eighty years old the twenty-fifth day of March." May the Saints remember this aged and afflicted sister. Her name is Mary Dorothy, and her membership is with the Farmington, Iowa, Branch, but she writes from Tempe, Arizona.

Prayers are asked for Sister Aimee D. Holmes, who left Spokane, Washington, for Portland, Oregon, in February, and upon whom rests heavily the hand of affliction.

Brother B. F. Morris, of Lebanon, Oregon, requests prayers. He has been bedfast and painfully afflicted.

Letter Department

PARKMAN, OKLAHOMA, January 25, 1914.

Editors Herald: We have been isolated from the Saints for eight years, though we have not forgotten them, nor God who has been so merciful to us.

We moved here last September. There is one family living five miles from us. This is a rough and sandy country, but there is some good land in places. We have a very good place, and would be well suited if it was not so far to market, about fifteen miles.

The Holiness people have been holding meetings in Harmon for the last three weeks; they have about eighty converts. I have attended a good many of their meetings. They preach some truth, and leave much unpreached; they even ridicule some of the principles of the gospel.

It did me much good to listen to them. Seeing them so zealous and their young members so valiant in bearing their testimony set me to searching the Scriptures and praying earnestly for light and the understanding of the truth. In so doing I have been greatly blessed.

I had become very neglectful of my duty; in fact, was nearly spiritually dead; but now, thank God, I can truthfully say that I know there is a God who hears and answers prayer. And I am going to try by his help to serve him the rest of my days. I feel my weakness, knowing how I have failed to continue in the truth. So I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may continue faithful and live so that my family and my neighbors may be led to the truth.

I would like to have one of the elders visit us. I think they could get a hearing here. I will do what I can to help get the truth before the people. Brother Baker wrote some time ago, wanting to know where we live; I answered his letter, but have not heard from him since. I received Brother Barmore's letter, but neglected to answer it.

Hoping that some one will write to us or come and visit us,
Your brother in the faith,

G. L. SWEET.

DUNKLEY, COLORADO, January 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been a constant reader of the HERALD since I was fourteen years of age, and have been made to rejoice many times by the light of the gospel shining through its pages. When the fires of the angel's message have been burning low, or the hand of discouragement has been over me, I have sought its pages and have there found solace. We have but to read it to find we are not the only ones who suffer. We can there find in the trials of others, as well as in their successes, a strength to meet our own battles. Since I have received so much strength through reading the experiences of others, I feel like I ought to give something in return.

I can remember that when I was baptized my greatest ambition was to seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness. Money did not count only as a means to that end. This ambition remained with me for several years, served to carry me over many difficulties, and finally brought me to Graceland College.

After spending a couple of years there I took up a subject that I was hardly prepared for by experience or study. The same thing happened to me that I know now has happened to hundreds of others. This field of study became the great object in my mind, everything must be judged by it. The mind was everything in those days. I realized where such ideas were leading me. My old ambition was gone. I tried to regain it, but could not arouse a spark. The fire had gone out, entirely, it seemed to me.

While it has taken several years to regain my old ideals and to adjust my old ideas to the new, I can thank God for the experience. Only those who have been shut out entirely from the presence of the Holy Spirit, and who have been without the Spirit of Christ's work can fully appreciate its presence.

The last year and a half although it has held more disappointments than any other, has been the most enjoyable period in my life. Place yourself in God's hands, follow where he leads, forget self, and help some one else each day to a more noble way of living, and you will be giving joy to many instead of to none.

Christ says the Saints are the light of the world. I have often wondered if we are true to the name. Are we going to light the way for others, or are we going to follow? There were several years that I was willing to follow while some one else held the light; but that time is past, thank God! We have proved in the last year and a half that if we will live near enough to God in word and deed we can in truth be that light.

Why not be a leader in the community in which you live in a social, intellectual, and spiritual way? Doesn't God expect you to be that? He not only expects it but demands it of us, if we are to redeem Zion. If you are not a leader who is to blame? Study how Christ became a leader, and then stand by that standard set up by him. Begin by putting yourself in God's hands; purify yourself of evil habits, and evil thoughts. Remember that it is not the big things that count so much toward making that light shine out, as the little things that require sacrifice on your part, things that you can see to do every day if you let the Holy Spirit lead you. You may think there is no honor in doing this; that such things can not help make you a leader. Have you ever tried it?

I know of a family, not of our faith, living in a certain neighborhood where hardly another family professes religion. They were not afraid to talk religion to anyone; they did not dance, swear, nor drink, and did not think much of people who did. There was no Sunday school in that community, so they tried to organize one. But the people wouldn't lead. Why not? One expressed himself in this way: "That man using tobacco as he does, and not half providing for his family when he could without trouble, is a fine (?) example for the children to follow."

I wonder if any of these things are hindering us from being a light to the world?

Yours for the truth,
G. G. BUELL.

Australia.

Our annual conference of the New South Wales District has just closed. We had four days of peace and enjoyment with the Saints from various parts of the mission. The presence of Brethren Griffiths and Miller, and brethren from other States, made quite an addition to our ordinary gatherings, and was very encouraging to all assembled.

The presence of Brother Griffiths in this mission, with his executive ability and simplicity of expounding the duties of every officer in the church, will be a great help to us all in getting into the places God has ordained we should occupy. This, of course, should be a great help to the mission, for in union and order there should be strength and prosperity.

The outlook for the future is encouraging in many ways. We are having occasional talks and instruction on the financial law, which has increased our income considerably. There are quite a number of young brethren who are anxious to enter the harvest field when the way is clear. The Lord is pointing out good men for different branches of the work, who will be set apart when conditions are more favorable. There must be a spirit of faith, trust, and sacrifice manifest on the part of his children if they would enter and occupy. Without humility and love success will never be ours.

The world is full of pleasures and attractions to lead away the children of light from the path of duty; and unless we leave all these behind and meditate upon God's works and ways our yield of good fruit will be very meager indeed. The opening of a new year should be full of good and noble aspirations, and every thought should be upon ways and means to carry them out, that we may be colaborers with Christ for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

Brother Griffiths is of the opinion that I should attend the coming General Conference, and arrangements are being made to this end. Unless something comes in the way I will be present.

I have never felt that my work was finished in this far-off land, and I wish to continue until the Lord who sent me here directs my leaving. I would hesitate to go even now were it not for meeting with my quorum. I feel that I need the assistance and counsel that Brother Griffiths is able to impart, and now must leave just as he arrives, when I hoped to have at least a year to show him around the field.

There are bright scenes before us, and we hope greater progress for the coming years than there has been in the past. The brethren who just arrived will be a good help to the mission, and we welcome anyone who will assist us.

Wishing you all a bright and happy year, I am

Yours in the faith,
C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

Central Illinois.

This is my second year to labor in the Central Illinois District. Last year I believe was the most successful year I have ever spent in the missionary field. The forepart of the present year was not so successful, owing to some existing conditions not favorable to missionary work. I believe, however, that the work is moving upward here. We have succeeded in making some new openings, which from all appearances promise fair to good results in the near future.

I am at present in company with Brother R. L. Fulk, holding forth in this place. We have had excellent results. I have done much hard though pleasant labor in this place in the past two years. Now the fruits of these labors, as well as the fruits of those who have labored years ago in this part of the vineyard, have begun to be gathered; not without opposition, however.

About Christmas time Brother and Sister Curry, from Sincarte, wrote asking me to come as soon as possible, as there were some who desired baptism. So New Year's morning I left my home and loved ones, stopping over night in Saint Louis with Brother and Sister McKeit. I went to Beardstown; preached there Sunday night, and on January 5 began meetings in Brother Curry's residence. The Baptist people had been holding meetings there for three weeks, and after Brother Fulk and I arrived they thought best to continue another week, which they did; no good results seemed to follow their efforts, however.

On Sunday, the 18th, I baptized eight fine people, all adults and most all heads of families, some being leading members of the Baptist faith. This, of course, was pretty strong, and raised the Baptist spirit to a very high pitch. Much talk was participated in, which only seemed to arouse a greater interest. When on Tuesday, the 27th, Brother Fulk led a young man and his wife into the water, it seemed to be more than they could stand. That night some one proceeded to throw brickbats against the house where we were preaching.

We had closed the meetings that night. But when so much commotion was raised I immediately announced that meetings would continue for a couple of nights. As a result three more were baptized. The amusing feature of the stone throwing is this: They evidently saw that their spiritual structure was going, hence they would not need their church building much longer, as it was afterward discovered that a part of the bricks used in the throwing contest were taken out of the foundation of the Baptist church building.

We have now a membership of twenty-two in Sincarte. We have a Sunday school organized, a good prayer meeting, and an energetic band who are indeed glad they are Latter Day Saints. So the good work moves on in Central Illinois District. I expect from here to visit Quincy and New Canton.

In conclusion will say that I am still in the conflict. My faith is increasing, and I am trying to magnify my office and calling as a minister for Christ.

In gospel bonds,
J. W. PAXTON.

SINCARTE, ILLINOIS, January 30, 1914.

Southern Nebraska.

The writer spent the month of January at Nebraska City, Union, in the vicinity of Brother George Everett's near Union, and at Plattsmouth, in all of which places he was kindly cared for, and enjoyed his work.

At Union Sister James Taylor procured for me the use of the Baptist church for Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, and as the pastor, Elder William Taylor, had to be at another point the Sunday following, he kindly consented to my continuing my effort Sunday morning and evening. While there the pastor and his choir kindly did the singing, and at the Sunday services in the absence of their minister the choir conducted the song service. The Baptist people and perhaps some others at Union gave me a kind and attentive hearing, for which I thanked them at the close of my meetings. I left a good feeling with those who attended my services, so far as the writer was able to judge, though I preached the whole truth so far as I had time to do so.

Sister Butterworth's health has been poor most of the conference year, which has caused the writer and his companion much anxiety in his absence. Those of the missionary force who labor under similar circumstances will know how to sympathize with us. However, the family feel very thankful to God that she is still able to be about; and we pray for her full recovery.

Having failed in finding more work within the reach of our means, either by phone or by letter, the writer returned home to await future developments. If any of the Saints or officers of the Southern Nebraska District know of any work desired that may properly be done by the writer, and will kindly notify him to that effect at Dow City, Iowa, he will try to look after it as soon as possible.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

The weary, lonely days wherein the angel of peace called from our side the loved one who ministered to our happiness here have gone into the misty past, and again we take up the pen to resume the duty of recording a few items that recur to our mind as interesting to all.

The special afternoon and evening meetings held during the last two weeks of January drew together interested audiences, and the efforts of Brethren John W. Rushton and F. A. Smith, as they discoursed on subjects pertaining to the lessons of everyday life were highly appreciated.

The Saints here continue as of yore to be diligent and active in their several vocations, the young being as a rule studious and alert in Sunday school and Religio work, while the older ones are by their faith and prayers upholding and sustaining every forward movement, and rejoicing in the progressive spirit actuating from within and without every good work done in the name of the Master at this "the center place."

On Sunday the several meetings held at the Stone Church were well attended, beginning with the eight o'clock morning prayer service. A young lady, Miss Mae Malone, who resides on Kansas Street, was baptized at the noon hour. The total attendance at Sunday school was eight hundred and eight, the beginners numbering sixty-one.

The talent displayed by the Sunday school orchestra is of a high order, as is also that of the juvenile orchestra. We must commend, too, the efficient and faithful labors of a large corps of officers, teachers and helpers of the various societies, clubs, and classes organized as helps in the branch. Sister Audentia Anderson still skillfully wields the baton in the church choir, and to hear the grand and solemn strains of melody poured forth upon the listening ear is a joy indeed.

At the morning service interesting talks upon the subject of the scout movement were given by Superintendent D. J. Krahl and Ex-scout Master Brother Hands.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The protracted effort here by F. A. Smith and J. W. Wight is coming along nicely. Good audiences greet them, not only in number but in interest. Both are all that one could ask for.

The sermons are soul cheering; not only for one class, but for all. I feel that great and lasting good has and will be done. It is not uncommon to hear Saints and nonmembers say, "That was simply fine; I never heard it so good before." It seems that the Spirit of God is causing an awakening among the Saints. We need this awakening or we would not receive it.

Surely it is time for the Saints of God to move as co-laborers with the Father, so that this good and great work may prosper. God has placed in our hands his glorious work for all mankind. Shall we say by our actions that we do not want it, and by the same tell him to hand it to some one else? It seems to me that the time is ripe and at our doors for great sacrifice that the will of God may be done. Then the thought comes to me, Will we as a body make a great effort to be in favor with the greatest Friend mankind ever had?

Brother Smith left Monday morning for Independence, Missouri; Brother Wight is alone now. The marriage question and the Book of Mormon are the themes now. The interest seems greater. Many questions are being asked. Brother Wight is master so far. Some of the Utah people out every night.

As ever yours,

JANUARY 27, 1914.

Chicago, Illinois.

CENTRAL BRANCH.

On the evening of January 26 Brother Curtis gave us a sermon which to all appearance was pleasing to everybody. The meeting was well attended by the Saints, and we enjoyed the goodly presence of the Holy Spirit. Several of the West Side Saints were with us. Brother Dutton addressed us on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday nights. The attendance was fair; if the Saints knew what they were missing there surely would have been more there to enjoy the feast, as did those who were present. We must be more dutiful and not let trifling things keep us from God's house.

It was given in prophecy at the district conference that the Lord was well pleased with most of his people. It is for each one to examine himself and find out whether or not he is one with whom the Lord is pleased.

Neglecting to take advantage of the privilege of meeting as frequently as possible with the Saints surely has a tendency to draw our minds from heavenly to worldly things. So let us all rally to the house of the Lord every time opportunity offers, that we may have that great oneness and unity which is the command of our heavenly Father.

In gospel bonds,

C. L. WAINWRIGHT.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

I wish again to address the Saints of this district, as there is so much required and so little given, in comparison with the abundance that our heavenly Father has bestowed upon his believing children. We have a membership of four hundred; there are only two hundred names on the tithing book. Where are the other two hundred?

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 106 that the Lord requires all of our surplus properties as a consecration, and one tenth of all our interest annually; this to be a standing law for ever; and they who fail to keep this law shall not be found worthy to remain in Zion; given with the promise that he who is tithed shall not be burned. The Lord has promised to open the windows of heaven and pour out blessings upon us. Will we take God at his word? Will we rely upon his promises? Will we keep his commandments? If so, then let us hear from the two hundred silent ones; it is not too late.

Now, dear Saints, we have some calls for aid from the poor, and scarcely enough funds to pay the family allowances. What will we do? The Lord's work depends largely upon his Saints. We wish to make an appeal to each one to give something for the Lord's storehouse. Let us make up our minds to give one tenth of our increase to the Lord so we can reasonably expect his blessings.

But, says one, "I am in the faith." About how much? Enough to call upon the Lord in times of trouble and sickness, but with faith weak when we think of the law of tithing and offerings that the Lord has commanded us to keep? We are sure he will hold us just as responsible for the performance of this as any other command he has given. We will have this law to meet somewhere, sometime; it would be far better for us to meet it here, do our duty, and have the blessing of God to help us along. Real Saints must prove themselves, make a reasonable effort to do what the law says. Sometimes we can not see just how things are coming out, so we wait. We may wait too long and let the chance go by, and when we want to do our part it will be too late.

We wish to thank all who have honored the law in temporal matters. We hope many others will see the necessity of doing their part to help along the Master's work. We are patiently waiting to hear from the silent ones or any others who can spare an offering.

Your colaborer,

W. W. FORDHAM.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven Street.

The above property is on the main line of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway, in Meade County, Kansas. Would sell at the above named price, two thousand dollars, first payment, balance long time at six per cent. Act quickly. Address SAINTS' HERALD.

Explanation.

Whereas some have thought that my recent notice of the change of place of the Southern Missouri district conference was not explicit enough, I submit the following reasons: It was practically understood at our last conference when Dagonia was chosen as the place of next conference that the district president would visit that place and find out whether it would be possible to hold a spring conference there, as some doubted if the place could be reached at that season without great inconvenience and delay on account of freshets in the mountain streams. On investigation this appeared to be very apparent; also some of the members were not sure that even they could attend for the same reason, hence they would prefer a conference at some other time of the year. Upon consultation it was decided to take the second choice, and meet at Springfield, February 28 and March 1.

BENJAMIN PEARSON, Secretary.

February Review.

The February issue of The North American Review opens with a comprehensive article by the editor under the title "The diplomats of democracy," which reviews the present situation throughout the service. In the editorial department he discusses various matters of timely interest, such as "The President's message," "Helping the administration," "Hetch, Hetchey, again," and "All's well with Carabao." The remaining table of contents is customarily varied. Major-General William H. Carter, United States of America, one of the greatest military authorities, has an able paper on "Intervention," and ex-Ambassador David Jayne Hill contributes a statesman's view of "The foundation of the state." Some interesting aspects of "Regulation by commission" are considered by Samuel O. Dunn, and a novel point of view will be found in J. Kendrick Kinney's, "A scholar's view of Mr. Bryan." The former chairman of the Isthmian Commission, Theodore P. Shonts, tells of the achievements of "The railroad men at Panama." Calvin Dill Wilson writes of "The Great Stakes in Church Unity," and the verse of the number is by William R. Benet—"The good counsel." The literary essays prove very attractive. Richard T. Holbrook, professor of Romance Language at Byrn Mawr College, makes some interesting observations on the tenacity of tradition in "Also, why not say 'Yes'?" Helen Sard Hughes treats of the development of the quest of both the masculine and feminine idealist "In the wake of the ideal," and a Hindu scholar, Doctor A. R. Sarath-Roy, presents a view likely to awaken comment in "Rudyard Kipling seen through Hindu eyes." Louise Collier Willcox's essay is on "The awakening"; Lawrence Gilman reviews the notable happenings in recent "Music and drama," and F. M. Colby, in "The book of the month," travels his usual analytical way through Mrs. Wharton's The Custom of the Country. The number concludes with the departments New Books Reviewed, and Letters to the Editor.

JESUS ON THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.— PART II.

A TREASURY OF THINGS NEW AND OLD.

Then said he unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.—Matthew 13:52.

In every well-established family there are cherished treasures and heirlooms of a past generation. If the family is one of refinement and culture, these treasures may well be of considerable interest and beauty; perhaps of great intrinsic value. We recall visiting one home where the man, one of the Saints, had formerly been a citizen of a European nation, and by birth held the rank of count in that country. He could still claim his rank, if he chose to return; but, like Moses of old, he prefers the reproach of Jesus to the riches and honor of Egypt. From his treasure this man brought forth rare old objects of artistic virtue for us to admire—beautiful, hand-carved articles of ivory from old European countries, and similar family relics of old days. There were also in this home, as in all our homes, things new, of modern interest and production.

Jesus says that it is that way with the kingdom of heaven. Its treasury is full of things new and old, and every well-instructed scribe or teacher in the kingdom is like this householder and can go to this treasury and bring forth thing of worth, both ancient and modern.

Of course this is so. To the kingdom are intrusted the revelations and divine truths of all past ages. We have the word of God as it came to Adam; the beautiful story of the city of Enoch; the account of Noah and his escape from a world-calamity; the history of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; the law given to Moses; the songs of David and the proverbs of Solomon; the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah; the writings of the apostles; the story of the Brother of Jared; the history of Lehi and his children; the sermon on the mount and the other teachings of Jesus.

But this is not all; we also have things new: the revelations of God to his people in this age. For from year to year and from time to time he reveals himself, in harmony with his statement that he would give line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. So while we may bring forth the rare treasures of past ages, we also cherish the divine truths revealed in this age. No other people can so justly claim the application of this statement of Jesus. There is a beauty and a truth in it that can be understood only by those who believe in and receive modern revelation.

THE NET CAST INTO THE SEA.

Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind: which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.—Matthew 13:47, 48.

While the treasury of divine truth that comes from God contains nothing that is bad; the kingdom in the ingathering of members secures some who are very undesirable and some who are of very little worth, along with many who are, as Jesus said, worthy to be called the salt of the earth.

There are some who become very much discouraged when they see one or two members of the church who are doing wrong. They forget that a church should be judged by those who conform to its teaching, not by those who violate its rules. So they feel like leaving the church themselves. But Jesus said that the kingdom of heaven was like a net cast into the sea; it gathers of all kinds. It was so in his day. Even among the twelve apostles there was one that he himself declared was a devil.

Watch men drawing in a net from the sea. Among the good fish secured there is one of formidable appearance that they tell you is a "scorpion fish." Yes, the church gets a scorpion fish once in a while, too. Another hideous monster is pronounced a devil fish. And the church has had her devil fish, as well. Then there may be a great many little sardines, for this is a net that gathers of all kinds. And the church has had a great many little sardines. But then there are many splendid fish, the most choice harvest of the great deep.

And when the net is drawn ashore the sorting begins. It is true that Jesus says that the final, complete separation will take place at the end of the world, when the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just. But it is equally true that scarcely is the haul made until the severing process begins. For there are in the church those officers and laws that are calculated to deal with offenders and cast them out. When devil fish are detected they are cast out. But the church to-day must judge men almost entirely by actions. And men do not always reveal themselves openly in overt acts so that the church can deal with them. But in the final day of separation Jesus will judge the heart, and the process of sifting will be complete and thorough.

Why should we leave the church when we see one or two bad members? Why go out into the world, which is full of hypocrites, and adulterers, and vile men of all kinds, with whom we must dwell for ever, if we leave the church now to escape one or two hypocrites who have come in with the gathering? Stay with the church; it will be completely purged by and by. Do your part to make the purging as complete as possible now.

BUILDING UP THE KINGDOM.

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6:33.

This is a text that evidently has not always been properly applied. The writer has heard it used as the foundation for a sermon in which the thought was that the words were addressed to unconverted persons. They were to study the Bible, find out just how the church was organized, with apostles, prophets, etc.; just what it taught, faith, repentance, baptism, etc., and then go out and hunt diligently until they had found the church that had all these things, and then they might know that they had found the kingdom. The writer himself has used this text in that way, but does so no more. For while this might be a very excellent thing for unconverted men to do, that is not the meaning of this particular text, for it was not addressed to unconverted men. Jesus was talking to his disciples.

The meaning of the text, as used here, and it is the same in wording as used by Jacob in his sermon in the Book of Mormon, evidently is not to hunt for the kingdom, for it had already come unto them; but rather that they were to seek to promote its interests. The true meaning is brought out more clearly in the Inspired Version, where it is rendered: "But seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness."

How many of our people are making it their first care to build up the kingdom? Says one, "We must work in order to live. Our work demands our attention." That is granted. But what do you live for? To have a good time? Or to do God's will and build up his kingdom? If the latter, you can still obey this commandment; for you work to live, and you live to obey God's law, conform to his will, and help to build up his kingdom. That is your object in living and working.

OBTAINING CITIZENSHIP IN THE KINGDOM.

Ye must be born again. . . . Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God. . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3.

Here Jesus states the conditions on which one may become a citizen of the kingdom. A foreigner and stranger can not become a citizen of the United States without observing legal requirements. He does not obtain citizenship by merely professing it. And so with the kingdom of God. Men get into it by observing the laws governing entrance. Jesus says they get into it by being born again,—born of the water and of the Spirit.

Thus the manner of adoption, the way of obtaining citizenship is quite clearly outlined. Those who receive his word gladly obey, as of old. Those who are but half converted may doubt and quibble and seek some other way. But the man who keeps the commandment of Jesus is the man who loves Jesus. It is not those who say, Lord, Lord, but those who do the will of God who become his children and obtain his blessings.

IS THE KINGDOM OF GOD IN THE HEART?

And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, Lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you.—Luke 17:20, 21.

Perhaps no single passage of scripture is more misunderstood by the world in general than the one just quoted. It is taken to mean that the kingdom of God is inside of one, in the heart.

But when we read scripture we should consider the words, and ask ourselves first who utters them. There are words in the Bible that come from men, others that come from Satan, and others that come from God. In this case Jesus is talking. We can accept his statements. We should ask ourselves next, To whom are the words addressed? These questions help us to get at the meaning. In this case Jesus was speaking to the Pharisees. He called them hypocrites, as did John the Baptist. It is inconceivable that he meant that the kingdom was in their hearts. Strange that men have overlooked that very plain fact. The words must have some other meaning.

A better meaning is conveyed by the marginal reading: "The kingdom of God is among you." The kingdom was there among them; but it was not within them.

The Inspired Version has the best rendition: "The kingdom of God has already come unto you." The kingdom was right there, in their midst; but not in their hearts. This version gives a direct answer to a direct question. The Pharisees said: "When shall the kingdom of God come?" Jesus answered: "The kingdom of God has already come."

Men do not get the kingdom into them. Men get into the kingdom. Jesus compared the kingdom to a net. As another has said: The net does not get into the fish; the fish gets into the net.

It is true that some of the attributes of the kingdom may get into the hearts of men. Paul said: "The kingdom of heaven is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Romans 14:17.) These attributes are in the hearts of the children of the kingdom. But Paul was not making a catalogue of the things of the kingdom, and there are other things that can not get into the heart. So while some of the attributes of the kingdom may be in the hearts of men, men themselves are in the kingdom, for it is an institution into which they can enter.

MEN GO INTO THE KINGDOM.

But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.—Matthew 23: 13.

The kingdom was there among them. But the Pharisees would not go in themselves, and by persecution and misrepresentation they kept others from going in. It was an institution into which men went, for Jesus spoke of men pressing into the kingdom.

The rendition of the Inspired Version: "The kingdom of God has come unto you," is in harmony with that other statement: "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of heaven has come unto you."—Matthew 12: 38.

HIS KINGDOM NOT OF THIS WORLD.

When Jesus was arraigned before Pilate he said: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight."—John 18: 36.

Jesus admitted that he had a kingdom; but it was not of this world. All other kingdoms rest upon a material basis, they depend upon force. The army and navy and treasury are back of them. But the kingdom of heaven has a different basis. Jesus was not king of Rome, or of Judea, or of Egypt, or of Babylon; but he had a kingdom. He is not king of England, or of Germany, or of the United States; but he has a kingdom.

His kingdom was not of this world; but it was in this world,—a part of it at least, as were a certain number of his subjects. He prayed not that they might be taken out of the world; but that they might be kept from the vices of the world. His kingdom, as he expresses it elsewhere, so far as his church was concerned, was in the world but not of the world. So his servants did not fight. It is true that the great kingdom triumphant, composed of all the redeemed of all ages, is over on the other side; but the kingdom militant, composed of living men, is here. This explains why Jesus, though he had said, "The kingdom of God has come unto you," still taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come." His kingdom militant was to pray for the coming of the kingdom triumphant, when the will of God shall be done upon earth as it is done in heaven. That prayer will never cease until it is fulfilled. ### CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

RECOGNIZING PERU.—Secretary Bryan announces that he has instructed Minister McMillan to confer the recognition of the United States upon the revolutionary government of Peru. The supporters of this new government assert that it has come into power as a defender of constitutionalism as against alleged attacks upon the constitution by President Billingshurst.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—President Huerta has offered to pay the expenses of a number of press correspondents who might be sent to Mexico to write uncensored reports of the situation. This offer has been accepted by a number of important newspapers in different countries. Protests by Charge O'Shaughnessy against attacks by Mexican press on President Wilson have called from President Huerta the assurance that said attacks will not be repeated. General Villa announces an early advance against Torreon, which he expects to capture without difficulty.

RELIGIOUS FANATICS GIVE TROUBLE.—The people commonly known as Holy Rollers who labor under the impression that they have received the Pentecostal shower and speak in unknown tongues are creating considerable excitement in different parts of the country. Report states that in Union and Jackson counties, Illinois, civil authorities are given no end of trouble in connection with the all-night sessions of these people. One Elder Ellis, a preacher, is said to be in jail under a charge of assault with intent to kill, for having undertaken to beat a devil out of one Noah Hickman, which devil Ellis said he caught from Hickman. The Holiness people seem affected in the same way. The lynching of four Holiness fanatics in Jasper County, Illinois, is said to have been prevented on the 17th only by prompt and fearless action on the part of Sheriff Pippin. These men had been found guilty and fined one hundred dollars each for beating two small boys to "rid them of devils." The beating was done at a meeting when the lads, ten and twelve years old, failed to say and do things they were told to do, and which they could not remember, the zealots mentioned acting under the suggestion that the boys were possessed of devils.

ALASKAN RAILROAD.—The Alaskan railroad bill authorizing the construction of a railroad from the coast to the coal fields of Alaska, in a form differing in some minor points from the bill passed by the Senate on January 27, was on the 18th instant passed by the House by a vote of two hundred and thirty to eighty-seven. These bills were to be taken up at once in conference between the two houses with a view to an agreement to be sent to the President, who has signified his intention to sign the bill to be agreed upon.

STUDY SOUTH AMERICAN CONDITIONS.—With a view to spreading in the United States a wider knowledge of South American life and conditions a personally conducted visit to South America will be arranged for under the direction of the Association for International Conciliation to be participated in by representative teachers, both men and women, selected from different parts of the United States. Those who make this trip will leave New York toward the end of June and will go by steamer to Brazil, thence by railway to Montevideo, by boat across the River La Plata to Buenos Aires, thence by the trans-Andean railway to Santiago and Chile, returning up the west coast of South America by boat to the port of Callao, from which Lima will be visited and then north to Panama, returning to New York early in September. This trip is planned in the hope that the teachers who make it will become centers of information in their respective communities concerning South American life, history, and conditions.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AT PERRY, IOWA.—Brother E. E. Long reports a good meeting at Perry, Iowa, with increasing interest. The two daily papers of the city grant space for short articles each day, which opportunity Brother Long is improving in a way that draws people to the meetings.

DEDICATION AT TOPEKA.—On Sunday morning, February 8, during the conference of the Northeastern Kansas District, the church at Topeka was dedicated. The sermon was preached by Bishop E. L. Kelley, the dedicatory prayer being offered by Brother Joseph Arber. A spirit of peace and good will prevailed. It is said that the spirituality and general good fellowship characterizing the conventions and conference surpassed that of any similar occasion in the district.

CONFERENCE CREDENTIALS.—The church Secretary, R. S. Salyards, requests that we call attention to the matter of credential reports. It is necessary that these reports be sent to the Secretary immediately on the appointment of the delegates, in order that the report of the credentials committee may be published before the convening of the conference.

A CASE OF SLANDER.—In our issue of February 18 we mentioned the matter of a misrepresentation of our work by one Miss Schwartz, lecturer. Further and more definite information is to the effect that this woman, in stating that the Reorganized Church covered up meanness as gross as that of the Utah Church, said openly and during the lecture that one Eli Hayer, not H. O. Hayer as formerly reported, a member of the Reorganized Church and the husband of two wives, is now at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, studying for the ministry. Our Brother Eli Hayer is known throughout the church, having once occupied in the Seventy, now a member of the High Council of the Lamoni Stake. As is well known, he has never had but one wife, with whom he now lives in the same block with one of the HERALD editors, and directly across the street from another. He has never attended college in Lamoni or anywhere else. This turns what seemed a matter of misrepresentation into a clear case of slander of the worst kind.

IN CORRECTION.—In the HERALD of February 11, on page one hundred thirty-one we reproduced an item from the Kansas City Journal for December 13, 1913, in which it was stated that certain ancient Navaho records were to be translated under an arrangement between representatives of the Navaho Indians and Professor G. B. Gordon of the University of Pennsylvania. Brother Charles Fry, editor of Zion's Ensign, sends a letter received by himself in reply to an inquiry made of Professor Gordon in which the professor says: "There is no truth in the newspaper reports to which you refer." We try to exercise care in matters of this kind. It should be remembered, however, that such items are presented for what they are worth, and can be absolutely relied upon only when verified. We regret this instance, and hasten to offer the correction.

We barter life for pottage; sell true bliss
For wealth or power, for pleasure or renown:
Thus, Esau-like, our Father's blessing miss,
Then wash with fruitless tears our idle crown.

A REVIEW OF SIR OLIVER LODGE'S ADDRESS.

We consider first of all the occasion of this address. It was the presidential address delivered at the opening of the British Association for the advancement of science, held in Birmingham, September 10, 1913. This gathering is spoken of as "the Parliament of Science." Its authority and importance is recognized as universal, not local or provincial. In this gathering were over two thousand people representing the latest, deepest, and truest in the scientific realm,—an audience of experts in every department of learning, men who watch with vigilant scrutiny and patient reverence origins, developments, completions, and dissolutions of the universal phenomena above, around, and beneath.

AN ILLUSTRIOUS ASSEMBLY.

These are men who by the aid of astronomical instruments tread the pathway of the stars, watch the nebulae in the process of becoming worlds, others as they pursue the silvery way of glory and power; and again, others in which the light of life has died away. By their accuracy in calculation, these men deal in figures of such immensity that the layman is bewildered and incapable of sensing their meaning; men whose knowledge of chemistry and skill in the use of the spectroscope and the camera and balance is so complete that sizes, weights, and even constituents of the greatest and the smallest can be identified and catalogued in defiance of distances and sizes; men whose knowledge of the infinitesimal is as wonderful as is the knowledge of the ponderous and the magnitudinous; who can see worlds in drops of water, and recognize the existence of such small bodies that it takes seven thousand times the number of people on this globe to bring one within the zone of recognition, as in the case of "neon," one of the inert gases of the atmosphere; whose sense of fineness is so acute that they can speak of one drop of water containing more molecules than the Atlantic Ocean contains drops, fifty million evaporating in less than a second of time; whose familiarity with cosmic forces and processes is so intimate that they see miracles (to the layman), performed constantly which overshadow the Bible account immeasurably; a congregation of people who have been trained to ignore nothing because it was small, nor to be appalled by anything because it is big; whose ears are trained to catch the pulsations of time in the heart of the universe with an accuracy equalling the physician's who by his stethoscope can count the beats of the human heart; two thousand wizards and magicians who sit in the school of Nature with quiet and watchful dignity.

A few names will impress us with the quality of the authority and influence represented in that gathering in support of the great array the imagination has conjured up; Madame Currie; Lord Rayleigh, better known as Sir E. Ray Lankester; the Senior President of the Association; Sir David Gill; Sir William Ramsay; Doctor Bonney; Sir Francis Waller; and Sir Joseph Larmor. Here the accumulated intellect of the ages was suspending its activities in its diversified tasks to sit with quiet and critical tenseness while the sum-total of results was marshaled and reviewed by the master mind of the time.

THE ADDRESS.

Now listen with reverence to the latest seer and prophet who has learned to spell out word by word and sentence by sentence the message of the divine as it is revealed in the "time-vesture of matter." Who is the speaker? Sir Oliver Lodge, Fellow of the Royal Society, Doctor of Science, Doctor of Literature, and Chancellor of the University of Birmingham; a name to conjure with in the realm of science to-day. Read up the encyclopedias of any repute and there learn the value of such addresses as the one under review. It is seen at a glance that such a speaker before such an assembly and on such an occasion carries a value which in the highest degree is of great weight. Sir Oliver is impressed with this consciousness and so states it in the following passages:

I am speaking ex cathedra, as one of the representatives of orthodox science. . . . I can not help but remember that an utterance from this chair, is no ephemeral production, for it remains to be criticized by generations yet unborn, whose knowledge must inevitably be fuller and wider than our own.

Therefore, when such an utterance is made to apply to any phase of our life, our attention is arrested and our deepest concern commanded.

Coming immediately to the address itself, it is very helpful to summarize and thus see what science really has to say about some of those things which most deeply concern us and that phase of life with which we as religious people are the most concerned.

First, the text: "Natura non vincitur nisi parendo," "Nature can only be conquered by obeying her," has a very familiar sound to religious people. Dominion is the result of faithful service. He who is faithful in that which is little shall be made ruler over much, is a combination of the Christ's sayings which implies the same principle.

Second, the diagnosis of the chief characteristic of our age is singularly suggestive, "Rapid progress, combined with fundamental skepticism." Not a very happy state. "Haste with uncertainty." Does it not imply warning? If we are in doubt, or if we are ignorant, is it wise to be in a hurry? Consequently when a man of science informs us that the chief characteristic of our age is haste with uncertainty, it is disconcerting in the extreme.

The matter is not left in doubt by the speaker to the location of the trouble, for he says that he is not referring to skepticism of theology,—“that controversy is practically in abeyance.” The warfare is internecine; the “scientific allies are waging more or less invigorating warfare among themselves, with philosophers joining in.” In this state of purgation within, science herself is undergoing disciplining, and therefore her word in the nature of things is not the last word upon controverted questions, and with a magnanimous generosity Professor Lodge says, “Thus old theological bitterness is mitigated, and a temporizing policy is either advocated or instinctively adopted.”

THE CONFLICT.

Speaking of science, Sir Oliver points out that in physiology the conflict rages around vitalism; in chemistry, the debate concerns atomic structure; and in biology, the dispute is on the laws of inheritance: “Besides these sectional debates there is in progress a critical examination of the ‘foundations of science’; and a kind of ‘philosophic skepticism in the ascendancy, resulting in a mistrust of purely intellectual processes, and in a recognition of the limited scope of science.’”

In other words, science is following the lead of theology in that, instead of assuming to possess the truth a priori, and proceeding to argue “from the truth,” with more chaste and humble mien is seeking to approach the truth. Instead of the strident note of possession, it is the anxious tone of quest. Nothing is settled, and all things are in a state of unrest and flux; “in education, in economic and political science, and in sociology old standards are mistrusted and curricula is being overhauled and revolutionary ideas are being promulgated.” These attitudes while not pleasant to the easy-going and self-satisfied, are very full of promise to those who are still disciples of the truth.

THE MISTAKE OF SCIENCE.

Third. In this address science admits that she has made the common mistake of all humanity; she has been deceived by appearances because she has not looked deeply enough nor has she been patient enough:

Scientific men are hostile to superstition, and rightly so, for a great many popular superstitions are both annoying and contemptible; yet occasionally the term may be wrongly applied to practices of which the theory is unknown. To a superficial observer some of the practices of biologists themselves must appear grossly superstitious.

For example, the oiling of a pond to combat malaria; or the insistence of the United States Government that every discarded can in the region of the Panama Canal shall have a hole punched in it to keep off disease; or the burning of soil to make it extra fertile, or the using of poisons for the same purpose. Surely these methods are to appearances just as superstitious and more so than is the ritualism of the Christian church in baptism, etc.

What appears to be quite certain is that there can be no terrestrial manifestation of life without matter. Hence naturally they say, or they approve of such sayings, as, “I discern in matter the promise and potency of all forms of life.” Of all terrestrial manifestations of life, certainly. How else could it manifest itself save through matter? “I detect nothing in the organism but the laws of chemistry and physics,” it is said. Very well; naturally enough. That is what they are after; they are studying the physical and chemical aspects or manifestations of life. But life itself—life and mind and consciousness—they are not studying, and they exclude them from their purview. Matter is what appeals to our senses here and now. . . . Everything beyond that belongs to another region, and must be reached by other methods. To explain the physical in terms of physics and chemistry is simply impossible; hence there is a tendency to deny its existence, save as epiphenomenon. But all such philosophizing is unjustified, and is really bad metaphysics.

So if ever in their enthusiasm scientific workers go too far and say that things they exclude from their study have no existence in the universe, we must appeal against them to direct experience. We ourselves are the laboratory in which men of science, psychologists, and others make experiments. They can formulate our processes of digestion, and the material concomitants of willing, of sensation, of thinking; but the hidden, guiding entities they do not touch.

There is always a danger of error in interpreting experience, or in drawing inferences from it; but in a matter of bare fact, based on our own first-hand experience, we are able to give a verdict. We may be mistaken as to the nature of what we see. Stars may look to us like bright specks in a dome, but the fact that we see them admits of no doubt. So also consciousness and will are realities of which we are directly aware, just as directly as we are aware of force and motion.

Fourth. Growing out of this position naturally the speaker deals with agnosticism. He says some very trenchant things regarding the legitimacy of doubt. While it is interesting to note that the criticisms are directed against what is called “scientific doubt,” yet it is equally applicable to doubt of all kinds.

Science should not deal in negations. Denial is no more infallible than assertion. “To doubt everything or to believe everything are two equally convenient solutions; both dispense with the necessity of reflection.” If any philosopher tells you that you do not exist, or that the external world does not exist, or that you are an automaton without free will, that all your actions are determined by outside causes, and that you are not responsible, then appeal must be made to twelve average men, unsophisticated by special studies. This is not an appeal to the mob as against the philosopher, it is appeal to the experience of untold ages as against the studies of a generation. How consciousness became associated with matter, how life exerts guidance over chemical and physical forces, how mechanical motions are translated into sensations, all these things are puzzling and demand long study. But the fact that these things are so admits of no doubt; and difficulty of explanation is no proof against them. The extreme school of biologists ought to say if they were consistent, there is nothing but chemistry and physics at work anywhere.

Well, they account for things up to a point; they account in part for the color of a sunset, for the majesty of a mountain peak, for the glory of animate existence. But do they account for our own feeling of joy and exaltation, for our sense of beauty, for the manifest beauty existing throughout nature? Do not these things suggest something higher and nobler? When we examine each parti-colored pinnule in a peacock's tail, or hair in a zebra's hide, and realize that the varying shades on each are so placed as to contribute to the general design and pattern, it becomes exceedingly difficult to explain how this organized cooperation of parts, this harmonious distribution of pigment cells, has come about on merely mechanical principles. It would be as easy to explain the sprouting of the cantilevers of the Forth Bridge from its piers, or the flocking of the stones of the Nile Dam by chemotaxis.

Flowers attract insects for fertilization; and fruit tempts animals to eat it in order to carry seeds. But these explanations can not be final. We have still to explain the insects. So much beauty can not be necessary merely to attract their attention. We have further to explain this competitive striving towards life. Why do things struggle to exist? Surely the effort must have some significance, the development of some aim. We thus reach the problem of existence itself, and the meaning of evolution. Our brain, which by some means yet to be discovered connects us with the rest of the material world, has been thought partially to disconnect us from the mental and spiritual realm, to which we really belong, but from which for a time and for practical purposes we are isolated.

Doubt and denial therefore are not always manifestations of superior intelligence, but oftener a lazy way of getting rid of problems and difficulties which mean work and time and care.

It is not scientific in the highest sense to conclude there is no God because he can not be materialized or described in terms of matter, any more than it is a true statement of values to allege that all values must be stated in terms of size, weight, or price; or that Mr. A. J. Balfour's definition of science is authentic when he said that "science depends on measurement, and things not measurable are therefore excluded, or tend to be excluded from its attention."

Science herself is obliged to make heavy drafts upon faith, and in order to account for many phenomena in the physical world "postulates the existence of ether," just as in the moral world we postulate the existence of conscience, and as in the spiritual realm the religionist postulates the existence of "God."

THE LOOM OF TIME.

Fifth. The admission of science that man is the maker of his destiny to a large extent is very significant in these days when so much is said of determinism, economic, and otherwise, so the following lines offer fruitful matter for deep and meditative thought:

I see the whole of material existence as a steady passage from past to future, only the single instant which we call the present being actual. Existence is like the output from a loom. The pattern, the design for the weaving, is in some sort "there" already; but whereas our looms are mere machines, once the guiding cards have been fed into them, the Loom of Time is complicated by a multitude of free agents who can modify the web, making the product more beautiful or more ugly according as they are in harmony or disharmony with the general scheme. I venture to maintain that manifest imperfections are thus accounted for, and that freedom could be given on no other terms, nor at any less cost. The ability thus to work for weal or woe is no illusion, it is a reality, a responsible power which conscious agents possess; wherefore the resulting fabric is not something preordained and inexorable, though by wide knowledge of character it may be inferred. Nothing is inexorable except the uniform progress of time; the cloth must be woven, but the pattern is not wholly fixed and mechanically calculable.

Either we are immortal beings or we are not. We may not know our destiny, but we must have a destiny of some sort. Science may not be able to reveal human destiny, but it certainly should not obscure it. I am one of those who think that the methods of science are not so limited in their scope as has been thought; that they can be applied much more widely, and that the psychic region can be studied and brought under law, too. Allow us anyhow to make the attempt. Give us a fair field. Let those who prefer the materialistic hypothesis by all means develop their thesis as far as they can; but let us try what we can do in the psychical region, and see which wins.

AN IMMORTAL DESTINY.

The existence of the pattern, the plan, or "the divine providence which shapes our ends," is admitted by a contemplative religion as well as by this latest advocate of free will, who speaks in the name of science, and reminds us of the deeply and carefully phrased essays of the late, lamented Professor William James on this subject, in opposition to a school of German psychologists who repudiate this quality in human experience.

Then it is to be noted that science is recognizing the possibility of an immortal destiny and pleads to have a fair field to make its investigation and to push its realm into the psychic and spiritual, while encouraging the materialists to push their inquiries to the ultimate; and "God defends the right."

Is it not refreshing to read the statements of such a liberal-minded man of such high intellectualism, yet pleading for a toleration at the hands of his scientific brethren?

PERSONALITY BEYOND DEATH.

Finally, two of the most important features to the religious world are the statements made in reference to the two fundamental elements in religion, the immortality of the soul and the probability of divine communication to man:

Although I am speaking ex cathedra, as one of the representatives of orthodox science, I will not shrink from a personal note summarizing the result on my own mind of thirty years' experience of psychical research, begun without predilection—indeed with the usual hostile prejudice. This is not the place to enter into details or to discuss facts scorned by orthodox science, but I can not help remembering that an utterance from this chair is no ephemeral production, for it remains to be criticized by generations yet unborn, whose knowledge must inevitably be fuller and wider than our own. Your president, therefore, should not be completely bound by the shackles of present-day orthodoxy, nor limited to beliefs fashionable at the time. In justice to myself and my coworkers I must risk annoying my present hearers, not only by leaving on record our conviction that occurrences now regarded as occult can be examined and reduced to order by the methods of science carefully and persistently applied, but by going further and saying, with the utmost brevity, that already the facts so examined have convinced me that memory and affection are not limited to that association with matter by which alone they can manifest themselves here and now, and that personality persists beyond bodily death.

The evidence to my mind goes to prove that discarnate intelligence, under certain conditions, may interact with us on the material side, thus indirectly coming within our scientific ken; and that gradually we may hope to attain some understanding of the nature of a larger, perhaps ethereal existence, and the conditions regulating intercourse across the chasm. A body of responsible investigators has even now landed on the treacherous but promising shores of a new continent.

To have the consent of such men to the abiding dream of humanity that our life does not go out behind the heavy banks of death, that the ravages of this black angel of sorrow do not destroy personality, and that science has already a small band of accredited investigators upon the shores of this new continent is indeed worthy of our notice, and may be accepted as a splendid vindication of the Christian's hope:

THE TRANSCENDENT GOD.

Yes, and there is more to say than that. The methods of science are not the only way, though they are our way, of arriving at truth. By one path alone one can not arrive at so great a secret. Many scientific men still feel in pugnacious mood towards theology, because of the exaggerated dogmatism which our predecessors encountered and overcame in the past. They had to struggle for freedom to find truth in their own way; but the struggle was a miserable necessity, and has left some evil effects. And one of them is this lack of sympathy, this occasional hostility, to other more spiritual forms of truth. We can not really and seriously suppose that truth began to arrive on this planet a few centuries ago. The pre-scientific insight of genius—of poets and prophets and saints—was of supreme value, and the access of those inspired seers to the heart of the universe was profound.

Now at last we of the new era have been victorious. Let us not fall into the old mistake of thinking that ours is the only way of exploring the multifarious depths of the universe, and that all others are worthless and mistaken. The universe is a larger thing than we have any conception of, and no one method of search will exhaust its treasures.

Men and brethren, we are trustees of the truth of the physical universe as scientifically explored: let us be faithful to our trust. Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity, and in the reality of things. It is not surprising that by our methods we fail to grasp it: the actions of the Deity make no appeal to any special sense, only a universal appeal; and our methods are, as we know, incompetent to detect complete uniformity. There is a principle of relativity here, and unless we encounter flaw or jar or change, nothing in us responds; we are deaf and blind, therefore, to the immanent grandeur around us, unless we have insight enough to appreciate the whole, and to recognize in the woven fabric of existence, flowing steadily from the loom in an infinite progress towards perfection, the ever-growing garment of a transcendent God.

These closing sentences of what will be in coming time regarded as one of the most important addresses ever given in the name of science are very fine, and the splendid breadth and reverence, and the deep sense of responsibility are a fitting climax to the wonderful way in which this master-mind of the president leads his hearers along the radiant pathway of truth.

May we be pardoned for applying in a new way one of the Old Testament scriptures which has been regarded as a monopoly of the Latter Day Saints for two generations:

"Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven.

The ways of God to man are being vindicated by things in heaven and things in earth; and, while God bends down from his high and holy habitation, man is thrusting his hands up through the clouds and beginning to grip the hand of God; and now it is admitted that from two ways our knowledge of the truth is coming, from above as well as from beneath, from God as well as men; and now it is advised by the leading scientists that science must not think she has "the only way," but in "the garment of our existence" we find the "transcendent God." The quotations used are from the London Daily Telegraph, September 11, 1913, and a supplement of the Christian Commonwealth. J. W. RUSHTON.

Better than praise and better than gold,
And better than rank, by a thousand fold,
Is the bloom of health with a mind at rest,
And peace at home as a loving guest,
To have a heart that is warm within,
To live a life unstained by sin,
To dare the right with a courage bold,
Is better than hoarding piles of gold.

SPIRITUAL DEGENERACY.

(Written by and read before the Northern Illinois Quorum of Elders meeting by James F. Keir, at Belvidere, Illinois, August 27, 1913.)

There are some subjects which propriety or prudishness bar from the pulpit, with the result that existing evils which are most destructive to spiritual life continue uncondemned, and we believe in many cases sanctioned as permissible. I believe that in the quorum meeting, where none but the male sex are in attendance, these questions can be handled with profit both to ourselves and the great kingdom of God that we represent. I refer to the sexual relation and its excesses.

In the wonderful plan or law of God he has given us a means by which we may carry out his wise designs and continue our species, that the earth might answer the end of its creation. This law has its proper and legitimate use, but its abuse constitutes sin.

Sin, we are told, is a violation of law. Every sin is the abuse of a blessing. God ordained that man should be nourished by food, the eating of which brings him pleasure as well as strength, but to be gluttonous and to gormandize places us on a level with the less enlightened of God's creation, and we become sinners, for we violate law. God has given us eyes to see, ears to hear, feet to walk, all of which are of inestimable value and great blessings to mankind. With these we can glorify God,—reading his word with these eyes, listening to only the pure and the good with these ears, permitting these feet to carry us only into such places as will please our Master. On the other hand, how sadly these blessings can be abused, by using the eyes to read obscene literature, lending our ears to the vile story-teller or to Madam Gossip, walking with these feet into the dens of hell, such as the modern places of amusement, the dance hall, the pool room, and the saloon. So it is with the procreative functions of man; they have their proper use, but without proper education and the exercise of restraint the tendency of the natural man is to allow too much latitude for the gratification of desire, which by and by spells LUST.

There are a great many things that destroy spirituality: pride, envy, hatred, ambition, greed. We may have all of the above thoroughly mastered. It would not require the possession of all of these weaknesses to destroy our spirituality; but any one of them will work devastation unless we conquer it. So, likewise, will the consciousness that we are not exercising proper restraint as husbands sap the vitalizing forces of the Spirit of God. Paul has said that if our own hearts condemn us, God is greater than our hearts; that is to say that he, too, will condemn us. The consequences of the lack of proper restraint are far-reaching.

How much persuasive power could you exercise over a fallen brother in trying to help him to rise out of the drunkard's ditch by pointing him to the Savior as the one who is able to help us to overcome every besetting sin, and to urge upon him that Christ is all in all, if you yourself knew that you had a hidden evil that you were the servant of? Would not your words, like the Australian boomerang, return to you with an empty sound?

As a father, you have a son who now begins to reach the years in life when he must know of the existing evils or else possibly be ensnared by them because as a father you have failed to do your duty. If you recognize that you are a slave to the very things against which you must caution him, will you be able to put your arms around him and cause him to know that your words of counsel issue from a heart that is virtuous and pure, or will there be that betraying diffidence that will make him feel your lack of sincerity?

As we stand in the pulpit to declare the counsel of God, we must of necessity hold high the standard of morality, condemning evil in all of its various phases. Our proclamation against the evils of which we are not guilty may be strong and loud; but as we by innuendo or intimation touch upon these delicate matters, shall we lack in forcefulness because the curse of this fiendish thing has fastened itself upon us?

As we go to God in earnest supplication for great spiritual blessings, for the healing of our sick, for the visible manifestations of the spiritual gifts in our midst, we must ask in faith, else the blessings will not come. Can we come feeling worthy, can we feel the assurance of faith welling up within our bosom if our spiritual vitality is at a low ebb because we have been carnally minded? One has said that we can not serve two masters. When we are catering to the sensual we are surely not serving the Savior, and must of necessity be serving the powers of darkness.

I have felt for a long time that the spiritual condition of the people will not be above the spiritual condition of the leaders, the priesthood. If this hypothesis is correct we can sense the importance of this quorum of elders making a study of the forces that destroy spiritual life, and of so controlling them that we shall be energized by virtue and holiness, thus bringing to us the Spirit of God and enabling us to do more efficient work for the Master.

"He that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things," says Paul in 1 Corinthians 9:25. Let our counsel, therefore, be strong against the evils in question, as we have opportunity to present these thoughts to the brethren in conversation; and above all, let us individually endeavor to carry out this high standard. By so doing all of our efforts shall not be neutralized by an opposite and unseen force.

GOSPEL OPPORTUNITIES.

Opportunity knocks at everyone's door. But do not expect success at the beginning. Opportunity usually presents an occasion for hard work and application. Do not shut the door upon it to wait for a magic pass to achieve real success.

One of the first opportunities that presents itself is in the home life of each young Saint. Whoever is capable of thinking even along the simple lines must realize the brevity of this life and the importance of getting all the happiness possible out of it. Unless happiness is obtained and given in the home circle, it is not to be found anywhere. Ill temper, anger, discord, hatred, and all their attendant evils are crying sins, and must bring their bitter punishment, for as we sow, so also must we reap. Unless we are making happy homes for ourselves and others here to-day, in this world, we will not be given the happy conditions beyond. Do everything you can to bring about peace and pleasure and happiness in your home. If you fail because of the unkindness of some other member of the household, your efforts are nevertheless being materialized in the invisible realms, and the home that you desire is being formed for you.

We must also be loyal to our profession as Saints. We can not join hands with the world; for it has a thousand devices to test us. We sometimes weakly shrink from improving a splendid opportunity to speak a word for Jesus and his kingdom as restored to the earth. We are prone to make concessions to the world. Here is the test of character: when out in the world to stand proudly by the right where the right is unpopular; not adopting the customs of the world, but standing resolutely by our high ideals. The whole world must then in time accept our standard. If we study hard and pray earnestly, God will not leave us to be overthrown. Can we afford, then, to miss the golden opportunities about us?

When we remember the persecution of the Saints in the early days, how comparatively little we sacrifice. We should be praying for and talking to our friends who are in darkness, for surely it is a blessed privilege to be in the light.

This is, indeed, a gospel of pure gold. It is worthy of the loyalty of every Latter Day Saint. Its ring is true. It has stood the test of time and persecution. Let us as Saints improve every opportunity that comes within our reach, for surely we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, the power of God unto salvation.

CATHOLIC BIBLICAL REVISION.

The same impatience that characterizes the Protestant mind respecting the English versions of the Scriptures has not filled his Catholic brother. The Douay version has stood side by side with the King James, and few "revised" versions have undertaken to supplant it. Without assuming so much as that even now, yet it is interesting to Protestant as well as Catholic minds to see Catholic priests putting forth a new English translation of the Scriptures made direct from the original languages of the Bible. Doubtless the Catholic press will give the newcomer due notice, but the first that falls under our eye is in The Continent (Chicago).

The present standard English Catholic Bible, so Mr. Henry J. Weber reminds Protestant readers, was published at Douai as long ago as 1610. But this translation, we are told, was "based on the Vulgate solely" and reproduces "its faults and shortcomings." According to Mr. Weber, "more than two hundred years passed before another version was attempted, because, according to the canon law, the Douay version must be used when the epistles and gospels are read in the Catholic Church."

It is recalled that the first translation from the original languages made under Catholic auspices was the work of the historian, John Lingard, and was published in 1836. In 1893, it would seem, "Leo XIII encouraged the study of the original texts and thereby initiated the revival of biblical studies in the Catholic Church," and "this viewpoint of the Holy See probably led an American Dominican, Reverend F. A. Spencer, to issue in 1898 another translation of the four gospels from the Greek direct, with reference to the Vulgate."

Now comes the latest version, with the church's approbation, bearing the "nihil obstat" of the Roman censor, the "imprimatur" of Cardinal Farley, and undertaken "with the approval of the cardinal archbishop (of Westminster) and the English hierarchy." The editors, we learn from The Continent, are both Jesuits: Reverend C. Lattey and Reverend Joseph Keating. Their work wins almost unqualified approbation from the Protestant writer we are quoting, who says:

The first part translated and published comprises the epistles to the Thessalonians. The text of Wescott and Hort has been made in general the basis of the translation. We note with pleasure that in the critical notes appended such Protestant scholars as Frame ("Introduction"), Deissmann ("Saint Paul"), Moulton ("Grammar of New Testament"), Dalman ("Words of Jesus"), are mentioned in a perfectly fair spirit. The editors frankly declare: "The great advances made in textual criticism, the light thrown upon New Testament Greek by the Egyptian papyri, and the existence of many needless obscurities and faults in the current version (the Douay), all demand a more accurate translation, if the exhortations of the Holy See to a more frequent and fruitful perusal of the sacred writings are to meet with general acceptance." . . . Fathers Keating and Lattey announce their new version as, "The Westminster Version," and have dedicated it to the archbishop of Westminster. . . .

The letters to the Thessalonians offer no opportunity for the discussion of the peculiar tenets of the Protestant versus the Catholic Church on repentance as opposed to penance, faith, and good works, justification, etc. But these epistles reveal Paul's eschatology. On 1 Thessalonians 4:17 the Catholic editors remark: "Saint Paul plainly means that the just who are alive at the last day shall pass into glory without dying. Doubtless the tribulation of those days will have freed them from any need of purgatory." They maintain that Saint Paul expected that he himself would see the final end. They directly repudiate the Douay translation of 1 Corinthians 15:51: "Behold I tell you a mystery. We shall all indeed rise again, but we shall not all be changed," and correctly render: "We shall not all die, but we shall all be changed."

Further differences from the Douay version are noted in certain instances of the use of "missionaries" instead of "apostles," "love" instead of "charity," "winning of salvation" instead of "purchasing of salvation."—Literary Digest, January 3, 1914.

FREE RELIGIOUS TEMPLE.

NEW YORK, January 13.—The multitudes of Greater New York now have a Daily Temple, the doors of which will never close, and in which religions of every denomination and sect may hold services and discussions. The little, unpretentious building in East Thirty-second Street was made possible by the enterprise and generosity of Miss Elizabeth Knopf, and will be open daily and nightly the year through. Catholics, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, United Brethren, Unitarians, Christian Scientists, Buddhists, Confucius' followers, Quakers, Seventh-Day Adventists, Latter Day Saints—any and every kind of believer—will meet in the Daily Temple. It is the plan of the promoters to make the unique chapel a sort of religious clearing house, where devotees of various sects and beliefs may meet and discuss their varying creeds and tenets.

FIRST SESSION TYPICAL.

An instance of the kind of thing for which the Daily Temple was built occurred the night of its formal opening, when W. T. Wei, a Chinese student in Columbia University, read from the writings of Confucius and discussed them. He was followed immediately by Miss Knopf's young woman secretary, who read several chapters from Isaiah. Weved Eyoub, a young Turk studying in Columbia University, then read from the Koran. He in turn was followed by the secretary, who read from the chapters of Saint Paul, offsetting the Mohammedan readings, as her chapters from Isaiah were opposed to the teachings of Confucius, read by the Chinese student. Miss Knopf then read from Robert G. Ingersoll's "A vision of the future."

MEETINGS WIDE OPEN.

For the present the nightly meetings will be for the discussion of announced subjects picked out by Miss Knopf; that is, one week will be devoted to the discussion of each subject, the same topic being taken up each night in the week. But after the initial discussion, the meeting will be open to all who desire to say anything. The voluntary speakers may discuss any phase of any religion that appeals to them. "The Daily Temple is my gift to all who want to use it," Miss Knopf said. "Never will there be a collection taken, and nobody of any creed or belief shall ever be turned away."—Saint Louis Times, January 14, 1914.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

The story of the adventure of a head of cabbage in New York is told by the New York Press. It casts some illumination upon the much-discussed high cost of living. The cabbage is raised by a farmer in Connecticut. A comparatively small farmer will send one thousand eight hundred to two thousand heads of cabbage to New York. For one head he receives a cent and a half. Then the head goes to the commission merchant. He lives on Riverside Drive, pays two thousand dollars a year for his apartment, and keeps an automobile. He spends seven thousand dollars a year to live. Next the cabbage is sent to the wholesaler. He lives on West End Avenue. He pays one thousand eight hundred dollars for his apartment, and keeps an automobile. His living expenses are six thousand dollars a year. He sends the cabbage to the jobber, who lives in an apartment which costs one thousand five hundred dollars a year—on Broadway, keeps an automobile, and spends five thousand dollars a year. From him the cabbage travels to the retailer, who lives in a seven hundred dollar apartment on a side street, has a corner store for which he pays one hundred and twenty-five dollars a month rent, keeps two delivery wagons at a cost of one hundred and forty dollars a month, and spends two thousand five hundred dollars a year on his living. Finally, the cabbage gets to the consumer. He lives in an apartment for which he pays forty dollars a month. He rides in the trolley car or the subway; he spends all he can make or a little more to live, and he pays thirteen cents for that head of cabbage.—Des Moines Capital, January 20, 1914.

INDIAN POPULATION INCREASING.

A report on the Indians of Canada shows that they are now increasing at the rate of two thousand a year, and that the Indian population at the close of 1913 was 106,490. It is suggested that a comparison would prove that there was no corresponding increase in this country, but apparently there is a considerable increase in the returns for the United States as a whole though there are curious variations in the figures for the States taken separately.

The total reported for the fiscal year ending with June, 1910, was 304,101 and for the fiscal year ending with June, 1913, was 330,603. The States in which the Indians now number more than 20,000 are Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico and South Dakota, and of these Arizona and New Mexico show substantial increase, while the Indian population of Oklahoma and South Dakota appears to be almost stationary. Oklahoma now contains 117,274 Indians, or more than one third the number in the country and more than the entire Indian population of Canada.

As regards the Indians of Canada, the Montreal Gazette testifies that they are industrious and contented and that they compare favorably with the Dominion's other residents. It is said that most of them have comfortable homes, that they are making good in working for a living, that with their increasing prosperity there is a diminishing death rate. Taking the two countries together it will be seen that the Indians can hardly be considered a vanishing race.—Chicago Record-Herald, January 18, 1914.

GOVERNOR BLEASE ON SMOKING.

In a recent address before the State Legislature, and recommending that a law be passed to prohibit smoking in dining halls and restaurants where women are present, Governor Blease of South Carolina is reported as having said:

Those of you who are as old as I am will recall the time in South Carolina when if a gentleman smoked a pipe or cigar while walking along on the street by the side of a lady he was not regarded as well reared, and such a thing as smoking while riding in a buggy with a young lady would not have been tolerated. But to-day we have not only seen these things, but we have gone a great deal further, and too far. I regret exceedingly to know that people in South Carolina (I will not say gentlemen, nor will I say true men) sit in our public dining rooms, restaurants and cafes and smoke cigars and foul little cigarettes, and whiff and puff and blow the smoke out through their nostrils, and this smoke is carried either by the natural breezes or the current of an electric fan into the eyes, mouths and nostrils of refined women.

It makes me ashamed for my State. If I were in one of those places with a lady and should see a man light a cigarette or cigar I would quietly ask him please not to smoke, as there were ladies in the room, or I would get up and leave with her. But everybody does not feel like doing this, and I have actually heard ladies complain bitterly to their escorts of the annoyance of this smoke.

NAPOLEON AND SCIENCE.

We think of Napoleon as the great Lord of War, the butcher of human lives, the builder of a great empire, built only to fall even before the death of its founder.

It is well to remember that his genius was great in also other, more lastingly fruitful fields. He was not only a great warrior, but also a great statesman—and as such he did not fail to realize the importance to the community of arts and sciences. Writing to the astronomer, Oriani, from Milan, which he had entered in triumph, Napoleon said:

The sciences which do honor to the human mind and the arts which embellish life and perpetuate great achievements for posterity, should be especially honored under free governments. . . . I invite the scholars to meet and to give me their opinions as to the means that should be taken, and the needs to be fulfilled, in order to bring new life and activity into the sciences and the fine arts. Those who wish to go to France will be received with distinction by the government. The French people set a higher value on the acquisition of a skilled mathematician, a celebrated painter, or a distinguished man of any profession, than upon the possession of the largest and richest city.—Scientific American, December 20, 1913.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

Protection for Our Girls.

It is a matter of public interest that the women of Kansas, under the federation of clubs, will demand that a train matron be installed on every passenger train that operates in the State. It is declared that this is the most important step to be taken by the women's organizations in the country.

The president of the Kansas Federation says that since mothers permit their girls to travel unchaperoned, as many do, some through carelessness and others through lack of funds, it becomes necessary for the club women of Kansas, who are fighting the evils of the white slave traffic, to unite with other States and push the question of "train matron" for every passenger train that runs into a large city.

She declared that the day it is known that every through passenger train carries a train matron to look after the welfare of girls who travel alone, that day will mark the death knell of the white slave traffic.

In order that she might be qualified to speak upon the importance of the movement for train matrons, this lady, Mrs. C. B. Walker, made a trip on a train the destination of which was Kansas City, her object being to get a first-hand view of the experiences of young girls traveling alone.

For her observations, she chose a seat in the day coach. At a certain station she saw a timid, shabbily-dressed girl of about fourteen enter the coach and take a seat well toward the front. Soon a man who had been sitting on the other side of the car arose, walked down the aisle and sat down beside the girl. The contrast in the ages and dress of the man and the girl, together with the actions and dissipated looks of the man, aroused the suspicions of the woman who was watching, and she moved forward, taking a vacant seat behind the couple.

In her narrative, Mrs. Walker says: "I was horrified to note with what subtleness and rapidity he became acquainted with the girl's condition, her life, her relatives, where she was going, her age (which she gave as sixteen), and how apparently, with very natural conversation, he was reaching out for her complete confidence.

"He told her he had a grand and beautiful home in Kansas City, and asked her if she would not rather be an 'old man's darling than a young man's slave.' Gradually he reached the fawning stage and started in to display some of his insincere and unholy affections."

Then Mrs. Walker intervened to save this young girl from the wiles of the man who sought to betray her. She leaned forward intently, crowding her presence so noticeably upon them that the man was annoyed and finally became suspicious. He whispered very low to the girl, "Do you know that woman back of us?"

The girl turned squarely around to see, and Mrs. Walker beheld the youth and innocence of "a splendid face," which, in spite of the well-worn red hood that framed it, looked attractive. In her heart the watcher cried, "Heaven help!"

In time the man became so troubled and disconcerted by the intrusive presence in the seat back of him that he ceased conversation and finally slunk away into the smoking car. A little later the girl got off at her proper station and was met by people there by appointment. But how many girls thus singled out by villainous men or women do not escape the snares set for their unsuspecting feet!

Mrs. Walker says that train matrons should be consecrated women of high character. She holds that they are needed to ask every girl her destination, if necessary, and to wire ahead for protection at the station, if the girl is bound for a large city. She says the matrons could answer many questions for all women passengers, and that their presence is as much needed in the sleeping cars as in the day coaches.

For consideration in connection with the above, we offer an item of information, submitted on December 10, 1913, by the police department of Kansas City in their report to the Board of Public Welfare of that city.

The information is that one hundred and forty-eight women and girls dropped out of sight in that city in the six months ending when the report was made. Nearly one third of the girls who disappear come from the small towns and rural districts of Missouri and Kansas. Eight missing girls were found recently in an infamous resort.

It ought to be evident that the girls of the country are in grave danger and in serious need of protection, especially when traveling alone.

The Scarlet Army.

The number of this army is very great, so great that we hesitate to state it as estimated by various students of social conditions. The reflection upon womanhood is so startling that we fain would refute, were it possible, what statistics show—the great and pitiable multitude of the fallen.

We say "the fallen," because that term will include both sexes. For the same reason, we say "the scarlet army"; for it is composed not only of fallen women, but also of fallen men. It is not only the army of scarlet women; it is also the army of scarlet men. The sins of impure men are as deeply scarlet as are the sins of impure women.

This great scarlet army, whose march is downward to destruction,—whence come its recruits, and how are they mustered into the ranks? Can anything be done to check the awful desolation of human lives being wrought out in the "underworld," in that terrifying vortex of vice which is the menace of the cities, and which now is reaching out with thievish hands into our country districts and small towns to take by guile the fair daughters and stalwart sons who should be the pride and strength of home, church, and state?

Perhaps there is no greater question to-day than this, in its various phases. No home in which there are children can ignore it with safety. No home is willing to give its children to this fiery Moloch, whose hot embrace destroys them, soul and body.

The Environment of the Poor.

Mr. J. G. Coddington, former warden of the Kansas State Prison, who has made a careful study of the underlying causes of crime and lawlessness, says: "Criminals are not born, but grow out of poor social conditions. American homes are not what they used to be. The American home is becoming the training school of lawlessness. In many instances this condition arises from the weakness of the parents who neglect to train the boy properly."

Another student of social conditions declares that "the United States will become a nation of degenerates in three generations unless something is done to curb the white slave traffic and the social evil, and that the cure for these wrong conditions lies in raising the environment of the working people."

Still another writer asserts that "a large part of the human race is born and reared under such conditions that crime, disease, pauperism, and misery are as inevitable as the backward swing of the pendulum." This writer mentions, in particular, the low working wage of many of the poor, especially of women and girls, and says: "By permitting any portion of the community to live on such a wage that the primal physical wants, food, shelter, and warmth, can not be met, we create for ourselves many heavy, physical burdens."

Insufficient income results in crowded dwelling-places where proper privacy can not be had, or necessary conveniences be enjoyed. Instances are cited where two or three families occupy the same apartments and take turns in sleeping in the beds. They do not live so because they prefer it, but from grim necessity.

Insufficient income breaks down the misgivings of paternal instinct, and sends the children out to work in the struggle for the barest needs of life. And when the young life, with the natural cravings for amusement and pleasure, feels a "fluttering up toward joy, lightness and laughter and a need of singing,"—when these natural cravings can not be satisfied at home, the young go where the semblance of joy is to be found, to the public places of amusement which so often are seriously questionable.

W. D. P. Bliss, editor of the Encyclopedia of Social Reform, writes: "No economic question in any country is more important than that of the people's housing. As the home is, the child is, and as the children are, the country will be. Environment forms, and the home is the child's environment in his most impressionable and formative years. No one can know life without realizing the power of the home."

This same writer, after describing general conditions as reported by the tenement-house commission of one of our large cities, says: "Think of the darkened lives that are lived in those darkened rooms. Especially think of children brought up where there is no privacy, no secrecy, often where modesty is impossible, where all the sanctities of life are carried on in common, where men and boys, women and girls, cook, eat, drink, wash, dress, undress, live, and sleep all in one room."

He describes conditions in factory towns, also, which are against the best interests of children, and asserts that some of our country towns, in their way, are almost as bad as the cities. He says: "Imagine children growing up in the wretched yards in factory towns and mining camps. Who wonders that when they get old enough they run away to some great city, running away from stupidity and ugliness?"

Many other prominent workers in social reform might be quoted who are lifting their voices to protest against those evils which result in poorly equipped and badly kept homes. One of the giant evils which works the havoc that is going on all the time is poverty, an insufficient income. How wise is that law which God has given, which is designed to banish poverty and to bring in that which the human heart instinctively craves, because it is sunshine to the soul, the joy of living!

"That home can not be said to be ideal where there is such a lack or uncertainty of income that life has to be lived in continual strain and worry for the necessities of life."

Josiah Strong, in his Studies of Social Christianity, writes: "Women must learn to distinguish between philanthropy and justice. Charities make people comfortable in mud houses, social justice seeks to help them out of the mud house. Poverty is one great cause of human anxiety, misery, and crime. In former days poverty was attributed wholly to defects in personal character. To-day destitution is seen to be largely a social disease arising from economic causes which baffle the thrifty, the industrious, and the ambitious. Society attempts to patch up the results of a false economic system by establishing free hospitals, day nurseries, and emergency relief committees. The prosperous hold charity balls and charity sales. . . . Women must grasp the terrible significance of an economic system which is largely a conspiracy against youth and mature age. For the system usurps the most productive period of life and then throws the worker aside. To the great work of industrial democracy women of the church must dedicate themselves, first by helping to arouse an intelligent public opinion, then by concerted action when the remedies involve legislation."

The slums, those congested portions of the cities where the poor are so badly housed, send out an influence that reaches even the rural districts. As disease-spreading swarms of flies may emanate from neglected premises to those which a thrifty woman keeps neat and in sanitary condition, so moral contagion may spread from the cities' centers of vice and contaminate those reared far from those tenements of darkness.

All men are brethren; one portion of society may not be neglected or oppressed without the effects being, in some degree, felt by all. Poverty is not the only contributing factor to the size of the great scarlet army; but it is, at least, one of the contributors. And the fear of this army and of its infamous traffic is upon all the land.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN MARCH.

Prayer for the church, its priesthood and membership, that all may earnestly engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal conditions of oneness and equality set forth in the revelations to the church. Pray that each member may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but to regard the reputation of a brother or sister as his own. Pray that greater power may be had in the healing of the sick.

Lesson, Mark 13: 34-37. Memory verse, Psalm 50: 2.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS.

A sister, without giving name, writes from some point in Washington requesting prayers that she may be restored to health and relieved from a severe mental strain.

ELDRIDGE, IOWA, January 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: While things in the Davenport Branch are not all that could be desired, yet we feel they might be worse.

Having been elected vice president of the district last June I felt a desire to try to be of some help to the work by visiting such branches and scattered Saints as time would permit. In company with companion, we had the privilege of attending the district conference the 4th and 5th of October at Fulton, which to my mind was a success in every particular. The Saints of the Fulton Branch certainly know how to make one feel welcome.

In the latter part of October and first of November I took my vacation from my secular work and visited some of the branches and Saints. At Cedar Rapids, presided over by Brother R. E. Motejl, I found a few live Saints, and when we say live we mean alive to the work, and not lukewarm. They can make one feel at home. My stay was only too short, for me anyway.

In company with Brother Motejl we made a trip to Viola, about twenty miles from Cedar Rapids, to see if we could find some Saints there whose names were on the Cedar Rapids or Marion branch records. We succeeded in finding some good Saints who seem to be just starving spiritually. They had not seen an elder for over two years, and it had been longer than that since they had heard one. We secured four subscriptions to Ensign and one to Stepping Stones. They are anxious for the elders to come there, and assure them a place to stay and a place to preach. Owing to conditions we could not stay longer at that time.

I went from Cedar Rapids to Oelwein, and there received a welcome also. Held one prayer meeting and one business meeting. As they were expecting Brother O. B. Thomas, I did not remain longer. They have plenty there for a good Religio if each one will take an interest, and this they promised me they would do. That part of the work had just been dropped. I hope they have again taken it up, as it is a great factor for good among both old and young, when there is an interest taken. They were without a branch officer when the writer reached there, with the exception of a clerk, and he did not hold the priesthood. They elected Elder Weston as their branch president. Brother Weston lives only about fifteen miles from there, and is well liked by them. While they are compelled to labor under adverse conditions, yet if they will move forward the Lord will bless them.

We were permitted later to visit the Anamosa Branch, where we found some alive to the work, and willing to do all they could, and others who were willing they should do it. Elder Turner was also there, having arrived the day before. We held services each evening from Thursday until Sunday, and Sunday school, sacrament and two preaching services Sunday. The work there, to the writer's mind, is in sore need of those to lead right out and push the work. They have the material, as I see it. I enjoyed my sojourn with them and was made to feel at home, and was urgently requested to return whenever possible.

Oh, how I do love to visit the scattered members, and try to encourage them, when I see they are just starving for a little nourishment. I am glad to say that wherever I have been the Saints speak well of the missionaries of this district, and from my viewpoint they deserve it. I think we are fortunate to be privileged to labor with them, although our acquaintance with them be limited. They surely do believe in leaving the care of the branches to the local force, as Brother L. G. Holloway is the only one that has visited the Davenport Branch this conference year. Whether they think we do not need them or whether they have more than they can do is for them to decide, but I would rather think the latter. Let each of the missionaries consider this a personal invitation to come to Davenport Branch.

Dear Saints of the district, as well as the entire household of faith, remember we are colaborers together with God, and as is recorded in Revelation 3:8, "I know thy works; behold I have set before thee an open door and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name."

The door of opportunity is open to us to help in this work, so let us assist in every way possible. One may say, What can I do? You can not do anything unless you try. No matter if you are or are not an officer you can assist. If you can not think of anything else you can do, you can surely pray.

Pray for me and mine, Saints, that we may do what the Lord would have us do, in love and humility, and that he may bless us with wisdom. Your servant and colaborer,

I. A. CHAMBERLAIN.

COURTRIGHT, ONTARIO, January 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: Noticing in the HERALD of January 14 a letter from Ward L. Christy speaking about the death of Brother T. F. Robbins, which occurred in a hospital in Winnipeg from hemorrhage, I hope by this means to learn more of this brother. A Brother F. L. Robbins, a member of the church, some time past lived somewhere in Saskatchewan or in some adjoining province. He has brothers and sisters living in this neighborhood, not of the Latter Day Saint faith, who have not heard from him for some time. They are anxious to learn if this Brother Robbins that died in Winnipeg was he or some other Robbins. There is a large family, some of whom are Andrew, Albert, Frank, and Ida. Brother Robbins was married and had several children when last heard from.

The Saints of this branch are still striving to do the will of him whom they set out to serve. Some have been in the battle for a long time, others are very young in the work. With an earnest desire for the success and triumph of the gospel work, I remain,

One in gospel bonds,

F. J. McDONALD.

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA, January, 1914.

Editors Herald: In our conversation with the worldly we find that they express religious views according to the latest of our modern writers. A friend years ago favored the views of Robert Ingersoll, later Christian Science, and now he is reading New Thought. We ask, Why this change? Our elders read and quote from any of these modern writers, yet that reading does not change or affect their convictions with reference to the principles of the gospel they are teaching. The worldly read books by these renowned writers, and study for an understanding of their duty to God and mankind, of what is expected of all in this probation. And are they satisfied? Are their minds and intelligences benefited for all time? These men write many truths, but not being inspired their way of reasoning satisfies only for a time. Then other writers express sentiments that create doubt concerning what the reader once believed. Thus they are ever changing, and after so much reading are under greater uncertainty than ever before as to what is the true intention of our existence, and the purpose of life.

Years ago I asked many middle-aged if they had ever received church teaching. Nearly everyone answered yes, and how very religious and strict was that teaching. And now they have no use for the churches. Was their teaching founded upon the faith and principles as taught by Christ? We have recorded a very fair description of the form and manner of worship by Moses and the prophets, but men believe that was fulfilled when Christ came. We have an account by the different writers of the church organized by Christ. But we have to-day many sects and forms of worship developed from human understanding of the writing of the New Testament.

What builder contemplates a building without considering and counting the cost? Such consideration should be given the church. On what and with what material is the foundation built? Will it stand, upon examination and test of criticism, all the force of mind and ability of the most learned and capable? Yes, our faith is the truth, and it is established upon a sure foundation, and when all these learned writers have tried to advance and discover new theories for our existence and purpose in this life, I feel to say as did David, Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. By their fruits ye shall know them.

As I read the account of the great deluge of water that flooded the basements of stores and was a foot deep at the intersection of one of the principal streets of San Francisco; when I read that in our own little city the water rushed in a swift stream several inches deep down our main thoroughfare, I feel thankful for the protecting care of God and that my property has not been damaged.

I have been very anxious to sell this property. The taxes are every year increasing to supply the salaries of many new and unnecessary officers of county and state. Since the automobile has become a pleasure-giving convenience for the well-to-do, the state highway is a heavy expense. The reckless manner of many of those who run the automobiles evidences their disregard for either the life or property of their fellow beings. Graft is everywhere evident. Money and influence are used to get gain. We see upon every hand the indifference of our children. Many respect not the wishes of parents and follow after the fancies of the world.

There are many unemployed in this part of the country. It will be a month or more before work begins. Pruning and cutting wood is about all a man can get to do. California has had three comparatively dry years. Though the rains began late this winter, yet the state has generally had quite a precipitation. A farmer counted eleven bath houses flowing out to the ocean from the summer resorts.

I want to know more of God and his ways. There was a purpose for our existence, and there is a benefit to be derived for a good and well regulated life here. Our conscience is free when we help our fellow beings who are less fortunate than ourselves, and we are blessed in so doing. If we sow seeds of kindness, charity and willingness to the best of our ability, that is all that can be expected of us.

Our church has many needs to supply. The bishops have their duties to look after, and how can they carry on their line of work unless we do our duty? Our Redeemer has said, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love;" even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. Our duty is before us. Let us make the necessary effort to help this the Lord's work.

Everyone holding office in the church has a special work suited to his office and calling. Some are zealous for the gathering of God's people. Others see the necessity of our young men being educated to meet the advanced criticism of an unbelieving world, to be able to take care of this the Lord's work properly. Our superannuated must be made comfortable. They have spent their best days in preaching and warning the world, gathering into the fold the honest in heart. The Children's Home comes in for its share. Why not give a helping hand to aid and assist in caring for these helpless ones, until suitable homes can be found for them? The sanitarium is a necessity. Here our sick may be taken and nursed. All are not qualified to attend the needs of the afflicted. So that institution is a help to the church. Some have a zeal to see the advancement of the church toward the gathering of the Saints. To this end lands conveniently located must be purchased to supply the needs of the Saints. We believe God is with us in this gospel work.

How often we call for the elders to administer to our sick; and how many times we are told by skilled physicians of the dangerous condition of our loved ones, yet God's power prevails and our sick are restored to health. Others may speak lightly of these manifestations of healing, but the promises of the gospel are precious to us.

I long to see a greater advancement toward the gathering of the Saints. To me the heavy expense of keeping up and maintaining a home here is out of the question. I must go elsewhere, and hopefully look forward to the protecting care of God for his people. I have not had the opportunity of participating in the advantages of either of the stakes of Zion, but I have all the church publications. I try to tell the Saints how necessary it is for us to pay our tithing, and thus support the plan the Lord has given for the sustaining of his cause.

We are striving to live so as to grow in grace and in the knowledge of this precious gospel. A SISTER.

LAMONT, Iowa, January 27, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have had the rheumatism two years and five months. It is said that before I was afflicted I went astray. Something told me that if I would repent and join the church I would be healed. The seventh of last September I was baptized.

Father and I were at Oelwein to church one Sunday, and I was there told that if I were faithful and put my shoulder to the wheel I would be healed. I am not well yet, but I am trusting in the Lord. I am much better than I was.

Your brother in the one faith,
HENRY WESTON.

GLADSTONE, ILLINOIS, January 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: I would be glad to hear from anyone belonging to the church and living in the vicinity of Bend, Oregon, or anyone who knows about the government land there open to homesteading. I have never taken my soldier's claim yet, and am entitled to three hundred and twenty acres. I would be glad to hear from a brother or sister who knows everything about the country there.

Yours in the hope of the final triumph of the truth,
JACOB L. RUST.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, January 27, 1914.

The series of meetings closed Sunday, January 18, preaching by Brother W. A. McDowell and Brother V. M. Goodrich. Interest continued good, but the heavy rains pretty nearly every day the last week prevented a large attendance, which seemed assured the first days of the meetings.

Arrangements are made for Sister Bessie Bemis to come over from San Bernardino to assist in stenography so Brother W. A. McDowell can give patriarchal blessings to those desiring them. All members in the district desiring their blessings should write or see Brother McDowell right away; so appointments can be made and all accommodated. It is desired that all who can do so see him before conference, so time at conference will not be rushed with this work. Plans are now to give blessings from the 13th to the 20th of February. Address Brother McDowell, 1621 Trinity Street, care F. A. Ball.

A new local was organized from the home class at Pomona last Sunday, with seventeen members, H. L. Benc, president. Services are held every Sunday, Sunday school at 10 a. m., at the home of Brother H. L. Benc, 1275 West Second Street, Religio at 6 p. m., and preaching 7.30 at the home of Brother Frank Benc, 1096 West Second Street, and prayer meeting each Wednesday at the home of Sister Leslie, 830 West Fifth Street.

Brother and Sister F. J. Lacey, Brother and Sister H. L. Benc, Sister Mattie A. Leslie, Sister May Benc and Sister Lillie Adamson have just cause to feel thankful at seeing the results of their faithful work growing and giving promise of a branch some day being organized in that city of churches. Sister Monaha is courageous and hopeful, although not able to be about all the time as she once was before the silver predominated in her hair.

Special prayer services have been held in the church at Los Angeles the last three Sunday afternoons, many of the Saints bringing their lunch baskets for dinner in the entertainment room. The work seems progressing along the good way. Much benefit has been had through administration to the sick Sunday afternoon, the 18th, the Lord spoke through Brother W. A. McDowell by the spirit of prophecy with the voice of admonition and warning, and also in much encouragement and promise that if the Saints would persevere in diligence and truth angels should visit them, visions and dreams should be given them for their guidance and direction and blessing.

R. T. COOPER.

1700 TRINITY STREET.

SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, January 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: San Diego is a border town. With its seaside attractions and bull fights below the line in Tia Juana, Mexico, the people seem to have but little time for religious worship. The writer has tried to effect new openings. I have spoken a few times in halls in different parts of the city. There is some interest manifest, yet the people in general appear indifferent to the things that build for eternity. In the near future I shall attempt to start meetings at La Mesa. We hope that God will bless our efforts here, and that good may be accomplished. We have no branch in San Diego, although we have a membership of about fifty.

Our Sunday school has had its annual election of officers. Brother Hollenbeck is our new superintendent; he is making some little changes which we believe will work out for the good of the school. A vote of thanks was tendered Brother Clark who has held the position for two years. Much is due him for his active and faithful service in bringing the school to its present condition. Our prayer meetings are well attended, the time is well occupied, and the testimonies full of spirit and determination.

I recently returned from Portland, Oregon, where I met with the Saints. Though the faces were new, yet the welcome is always the same wherever you go among God's people. I also had the pleasure of meeting with the branch at Oakland, California. Everywhere I went I found the Saints progressive, working for the things that pertain to eternal life.

I visited the Saints at Santa Ana, attending the Wednesday night prayer service and enjoying it as much as any meeting I ever attended. The Lord was with us; the Spirit was in evidence through the gifts, the promise being that great blessings were in store for them if faithful. The spirit of unity and harmony that prevailed was sensed by all, and the meeting was one long to be remembered.

As we look about us we realize there is much work yet to be done. We are laborers together. It is a great study to understand the power behind the man; to see the thread of divinity running through the miracles of Christ; to follow him from the cradle to the grave; to see in the crucifixion the price of the human soul. It calls for meditation, hours of prayer, and the perusal of the revealed word. Then to find God we must seek the truth and discard the error; we must shun profane babblings, for they have an injurious effect upon the moral and spiritual nature of man. Young people who believe themselves Christians forget that sin conceals itself in their hearts and decoys them into methods which show deceitfulness. Evil is present often in greeting strangers, when in relating amusing incidents we are tempted to appear what we are not.

This life is a school in which we must work out our salvation. God gives it as he might give a garden or a vineyard. But on man will depend whether it brings forth fruit or weeds. Our destiny will depend largely on our will. We should submit to no power but the will of God; for if it means anything to be a Christian, it means sixteen ounces to the pound, three feet to the yard, a just weight and a just measure. It means honesty in all dealings; purity in all conversation; a character as broad as the prairies; integrity, sympathy, humanity to man, and loyalty to God. In these there should be no compromise.

To find God there is a duty to perform; then God will weave the web of life into patterns of beauty, unless we spoil the weaving by committing sin. It may take years for his plans to unfold, but when the bud of his purpose shall blossom we shall see the beauty, and its fragrance will sweeten our lives. To wait and to trust him is often the last lesson we learn in life.

I have thought of it in this way: Each one of us is a distinct flower or tree in God's spiritual garden; and as we learn to know God so will be our fruitage. To know God is to receive the breath of God into our lives, and then to breathe out its influence and effects upon those around us. This should be the wish lying beneath all other desires. We should not go about the world looking for slights and trouble of that nature. If we do we shall be most miserable for we shall always find them, especially the imaginary ones.

Some men grow up at random, carrying into mature life jealousy, envy, strife, and a desire for vainglory. We read in the Scripture, Let nothing be done in strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem others better than himself. In this condition we find the trail that leads to God. As we cut loose from the cables of sin, led on by the beckoning hand of Christ, the path will grow plainer and brighter until through the light of the gospel we can see God.

I have traced him to the mountain glen, and viewed his paintings in the works of nature. I have followed him across the trackless prairies of waving grass upon which fed many different forms of life. I have heard his music in the cataract that turns the mills and factories. I have stood by his side on the sandy beach while he fanned me with gentle zephyrs from the ocean. I have found that the things called nature are his instruments for controlling the universe. And as I travel on I find that the study of God grows brighter and grander.

As the pages of life unfold new pictures come before us, and by and by when the things of this old world grow dim, a new light will break in upon us, and as we view the city across the river and see God there in all his glory we then can shout, Surely this is life eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

Your brother in Christ,

L. HEMENWAY.

THIRTY-THIRD AND M STREETS.

BIRDSEYE, INDIANA, January 27, 1914.

Editors Herald: Elder Barmore and I arrived at Louisville Sunday, December 21. We went to Highland Park and found Brother and Sister Merrifield, where we were kindly cared for while we sojourned there.

Alma preached Sunday morning and evening, also Monday night to good congregations. Elder Metcalf came Monday and assisted at the service. Tuesday night we gave the stereopticon lecture on Australia, which was much appreciated. We were pleased to meet with the Louisville Saints, and trust that they may be blessed in their efforts to keep the gospel before the people of that city.

We reluctantly said good-bye Wednesday morning and boarded the 7.28 train for Oakland City. The train was very much crowded on account of the holiday season. We arrived at our destination about 11.23. Our brother-in-law, Brother Hosea Burke, came about an hour later; then we had a nine-mile drive to Oatsville.

Next day being Christmas, we spent it quietly with our relatives. It seemed strange to me, seeing snow, after being used to having very hot weather at Christmas time.

We commenced meetings there Monday, December 29. The people came out in crowds to hear the preaching, sometimes being there as early as 6 p. m., in order to be in plenty of time to hear all of the singing. We were kept busy visiting among the outsiders. We went to the home of a Mrs. McAtee to spend the day. Other guests were present. After dinner she asked Alma to preach. He did so, and although only a few in number, we were blessed.

On December 27 we visited with Brother and Sister Sandage, of Littles. There we found Elder Halb, who had been sick for a time, but who was getting better. While at Oatsville we received a phone message to come to Birdseye to administer to Sister Lizzie Sigler, as she was nigh unto death.

We left Oakland City, January 1, about 3 p. m., and arrived at Brother W. Kendall's, near Birdseye, about 7.30 p. m. Alma went next morning and administered to the sister, and she commenced to improve and has been getting better ever since. She is now able to get up and dress.

This is the vicinity where Elder Moler and Reverend Denny held the debate last November. Hearing that the Campbellites had preached in the schoolhouse, Alma went and interviewed the teacher, but he refused to let us use it. He said he had refused the Campbellites too, but they had gone in anyway. He said that Reverend Stallings was the trustee, so Alma could see how he was placed. He objects to anyone using the school on account of the tobacco habit.

I can hardly wonder at it, either. It is a pity men can not refrain from using the filthy weed for just one hour to hear the word of God proclaimed. If people only knew how repulsive it is to those who are not used to it, surely they would desist.

Not willing to lose an opportunity, Alma preached at Brother W. Kendall's for four nights, and then we went to the home of Sister Bradshaw. Mr. Bradshaw is not a member of the church, but his home is always open for the elders. Brother Barmore spoke there three nights. We then secured the Wyant Schoolhouse, and he preached three times; the last night we gave an illustrated lecture on the life of Christ.

On account of having a severe cold I returned to Brother W. Kendall's. Alma went to Brother Jake Sigler's and preached for three nights. From there he went to the Troop Schoolhouse, preaching there three nights to large congregations.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

LILY BARMORE.

Extracts from Letters.

A. B. Phillips, Fall River, Massachusetts: "A book entitled The Call of the World, recently published by the Missionary Education Movement, and Laymen's Missionary Movement, advises the reading of Bruce Kinney's book on "Mormonism"; and as this has been placed in the hands of the Ministerial Association of Fall River, I shall call their attention to some of the errors in the latter book."

Alice Scott, Lawrenceville, Illinois: "I am tried on every side, but I stand firm for the faith once delivered to the Saints."

Solomon Tripp, La Junta, Colorado: "The work here is before the people, and I have several calls for the Book of Mormon and the Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archæology. I am also doing some tract work. I have a number of tracts on hand."

Thomas G. Whipple, Gales Ferry, Connecticut: "I have been a member of the church and kingdom of God, founded in these last days by his servant Joseph Smith, for over twenty years. I was warned twenty-two years ago and came out of my father's house. I have seen my kindred who rejected God's church led into terrible spiritual darkness. I say to the Saints and to all the world, Fear God, and search the scriptures, for they are true and holy. In them you will find the pattern of God's church. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is the only organization that will measure up to the standard as set forth in Christ's teachings. Brethren, we have the real thing, that which will stand trial when the time comes spoken of by Paul when he said, 'Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ.' Let every man beware how he builds, for his work will be tried though as by fire."

T. Comer Turpen, Frederick, Kansas: "This is to notify those concerned that Brother Erwin Trachsel of Goodland, Kansas, has been appointed superintendent of Sunday school Home Class Department for Northwestern Kansas, while I have taken charge of the Southern and Southwestern District. Let the isolated ones get in line and join the home class. I will be glad to fully explain the work to any in the district under my care."

R. D. Weaver, Chatham, Ontario: "The writer preached here last night, to a church full of interested people, on the sealed book of Isaiah 29. Fine liberty was given, for which God has all the praise. We will begin another series of meetings here in the near future. Am well and happy in the work."

Western Maine.

We have about finished our work for another conference year, and our longing eyes are looking toward a humble home in Kirtland with joyful anticipation. We have been separated from loved ones since last June. In about ten days we shall bid farewell to the picturesque scenes of the coast of Maine, not forgetful, however, of the many kind hearts that have rejoiced with our rejoicing and sorrowed with our sorrowing. But our sorrows have been few, as the very nature of the message we bear tends to drive them from us and carry us upon the wings of hope.

The year has been an active one; and many blessings from a loving Father have been showered upon us. We have had many reasons to thank him. We pray that he may richly bless those who have made our burdens lighter, and have pity on any who may have made them heavy, if there be any.

We have reason to feel a degree of satisfaction in seeing the district take a big step forward. One new branch has been added, by the baptism of fourteen noble souls, all heads of families, these being added to the six who resided at Sargentville. What a power for good a little Sunday school can be! As a result of a few meetings at the homes of Brother and Sister Arthur Robbins and Sister Brown this thriving little branch owes its existence. The Sunday school effectually paved the way. This branch is presided over by Edgar Robbins, Arthur Robbins, priest; Lincoln Closson, teacher; and Fred Gray, deacon. With such a faithful and humble corps of officers, backed by a united, hustling sisterhood, success can not be forestalled.

I am glad to report the revival of the old Surry Branch, with Brother Harlis Saunders at the head. At one time Surry was an attractive center for the gathering of the Saints. But, alas, Satan got busy and wrought havoc. Some active elders whom the church trusted with a holy mission fell before his sweep. Excellent opportunity still exists for a great ingathering if the necessary efforts can be put forth. I had no less than eight places offered for preaching around Surry. We hope to be returned and follow the many flattering opportunities offered in this district. I have never been troubled much in finding openings. My trouble has been in trying to fill them.

At Vinal Haven a good foundation exists for a branch organization. Some excellent people are to be baptized there when the weather loosens up a little. However, we would much rather have seen them face the storm now.

Soon the business of another General Conference will be upon us; and then that anxious last day session. Where will it be, north, south, east or west? Island of the sea, or where?

Hoping to see many of your readers soon, I remain

F. J. EBELING.

STONINGTON, MAINE, February 3, 1914.

North Dakota.

Our recent district conference held at Minot showed activity among the Saints of the district. The bishop's agent's receipts were more than double that of any previous year. The district numbers about three hundred and fifty members; the tithing paid per capita is over fifteen dollars. Dear Saints, did you pay yours? The ministry and officers of the district show a willingness to do their part; reports were read from nearly all.

We believe our influence in this district is steadily increasing among the people. There are openings for preaching everywhere; but, of course, only the few attend. The great majority are found at the places of amusement—dances and shows, etc.

The writer has been privileged to baptize nineteen this conference year, from as many different beliefs. This is a wonderful contrast between the vain efforts of man to unite the people in Christ and the means ordained of God the Father in the restoration of the gospel in its fullness.

I was glad to see the call sent out by the Twelve to the young men of the church. We need more in this State. I hope many will respond. Business conditions are now very sound through this part of the country. It appears that the churches are decaying. The ministry of other denominations are having a hard time to get the people out to hear them; in a number of instances they find it harder than do the Latter Day Saints.

I never grow tired of the HERALD. I think its pages are rich with spiritual food, especially the editorials of our junior associate editor. May the gospel continue to spread and its children arise and shine, clothed with the righteousness of God.

Your brother in Christ,

MINOT, NORTH DAKOTA.

JAMES C. PAGE.

Northeastern Kansas.

Church work in this district is moving along smoothly, everything considered. Here, as at almost every other place, there could be much more profitable conditions in every department of the Lord's work, but withal we are truly appreciative for what we have. I am fully persuaded in my own mind that we all would be much happier if we could sense more keenly the language voiced in the revelation found in Doctrine and Covenants 59:5: "And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments."

On last Saturday and Sunday, February 7 and 8, at Topeka, Kansas, was held our district conference, which was pronounced to have been the best ever held. Sunday was a day which the Topeka Saints had long anticipated, and on which their earnest efforts were rewarded in the dedication of their church. Bishop E. L. Kelley had promised to be present, and was on hand with his oldtime congeniality. Elder F. G. Hedrick was in charge. The sermon was preached by Brother Kelley, freighted with words of encouragement befitting the occasion. The dedicatory prayer was offered by the writer. Brother James Bailey, who was one of the pioneers, gave a short reminiscence of the work in Topeka. Others of the active ministry in attendance were: Brethren William Lewis, R. T. Walters, Frank Pierce, F. A. Cool, and a number of the local brethren. Brother E. T. Lucas is president of the Topeka Branch. He is a wideawake and active man, who with his associates can feel justly proud of the bright prospects ahead.

We would do injustice to fail to mention the work of the auxiliaries, Sunday school and Religio, so ably cared for by Sister S. E. McNichols and Elder F. A. Cool, district superintendent and president, respectively. In fact, all the sessions were sessions of peace and good will, the Spirit signifying approval of what had been done. The singing was a feature worthy of note, Sisters S. E. McNichols and Iola Kueffer in charge, with their helpers. Elder William Lewis preached the evening sermon, and, I understand, remained to hold further services. In all it was a happy time to each one present.

This writing finds me at Fanning, but it would almost look as though I was fated. This is the second time we have come here to hold a series of meetings. By invitation of the branch president, Brother Hedrick, I came the first time in July and held one service, when I was called to Netawaka, to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Chick; and this time we had just fairly begun by holding the first meeting when the first real winter weather made its appearance, shutting off all hope of doing anything in the way of preaching for the present.

However, we feel that our visit has not been all in vain, for besides having a very enjoyable time at the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Hedrick and family, I have also taken advantage of delving into some rare volumes of books that are not obtainable in many places. Brother Hedrick is to be credited with having one of the best private libraries I have run across for quite a while. Among the books that claimed our closest attention was the work of Bruce Kinney, Mormonism, the Islam of America, and Charles A. Shook's book, The True Origin of Mormon Polygamy. Either is but an apology, and a poor one at that, in trying to refute the position of any Latter Day Saint.

My labors since last May have been performed in Atchison, Netawaka, Fanning, Topeka, Scranton, Oketo, and Blue Rapids, which latter, my objective point, has taken up the major part of my time, having been placed in charge of the work in that city. Looking over our efforts we are pleased to be able to say that better conditions prevail for unity and solidity than when we took up the work. There is still considerable room for improvement, which we trust will come to those who are desirous of putting themselves in harmony with the Spirit of the Master. Nothing can result in good so speedily as the application of the golden rule.

Moreover, the Lord has said that none can assist in this work except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.

On January 18 Elder William Lewis came to Blue Rapids and commenced a series of meetings, which was a source of great strength and comfort to all who were permitted to attend. Our fondest hope is that we may all profit by the wise counsel he gave us. Since that time our meetings have been a great deal more spiritual.

May the Lord help us to become strong, to fight manfully the battle for right against wrong.

With love and best wishes to all the Israel of God.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOSEPH ARBER.

News from Branches

Sacramento, California.

We have just been enjoying a spiritual feast of fat things in the way of hearing the gospel preached in a simple, plain manner, attended with the Spirit, and the power of the truth. It seems that more has been accomplished in a few months of late than has been previously done in that number of years.

Brother S. M. Reiste, one of the missionaries, held two special series of meetings, one in Sacramento and one in a nearby village. The attendance at Sacramento was large, increasing as the weeks passed during his stay. Only at conference had we such an attendance as we had from meeting to meeting while he was preaching. Brother Reiste went at the work in earnest. Thirteen were baptized, twelve by himself, one by our branch president. Two have also been added by letter. Several more were made favorable, converted, perhaps, awaiting more personal labor and encouragement before obeying. The meetings were held against odds—much bad weather and other hindrances.

Brother Reiste is to go to San Francisco this evening on his way to Santa Rosa. He will go by boat. Brother and Sister Brown, young people of Sacramento, are to go with him. They, we understand, are to try their fortunes in a new country, South Africa. May they have a safe journey is our prayer. Brother Reiste regrets very much that he must go, and we regret equally to see him go. His personal work in the homes, going time and time again, brought good results.

When we see these armor bearers going forward with the message of peace and righteousness, it inspires our hearts to greater efforts. Yet we would not have you think Satan has quit his work in these parts, trying to "pick off the leaders with his poisoned arrows," etc., as our Brother C. E. Crumley when here used to say. But if we keep busy for the Master and are humble these arrows are far less liable to strike us. Work, noble, righteous work, seems to be the place of safety. God blesses us in very deed when we work with an eye single to his glory.

We have been having some repairs made on our humble little meetinghouse, corner of Twenty-fourth and K Streets. We have installed electric lights, Brother Reiste having wired the church for us, free of cost. After a while we may order further repairs and make our meetinghouse more presentable and enlarge it. If we have additions to our numbers as we have had the last three months, it will not be long until the building will have to be enlarged.

Spiritual powers moving among us lately for the good of the cause in our branch were to the physical eye in the persons of Brethren J. D. Stead, H. J. Davison, J. M. Terry, and F. M. Sheehy. Each in turn was well received.

Election of branch officers resulted in the same three elders being left in charge, namely, and in order of election, Brethren George Daley, C. E. Ball and T. J. Lawn, with Brother F. Lamprey deacon and Brother C. J. Milgate clerk. Elder C. W. Earl is able to get about some again. This is encouraging to us as well as to him. Brother Earl has preached many excellent sermons in Sacramento, and was president of our branch for a time. The Sunday school under our faithful Sister C. W. Blair is doing well, as is also the Religio under the care of the writer. We are looking forward to the district conference and conventions to convene in the new church in San Jose, February 27 and 28 and March 1.

In gospel bonds and love of the work,

W. H. DAWSON.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, February 3, 1914.

Culbertson, Montana.

Having lived in this vicinity for over three years and having seen the beginning and advance of what bids fair to be one of the live branches of this State, I thought a word or two from its president might not be amiss.

We began our existence by Brother and Sister J. M. Higgins moving here from Independence, Missouri, in February, 1910; they were formerly of Rich Hill, Missouri. My wife and I came in September of the same year. Then came Brother and Sister C. B. Freeman, and we organized a Sunday school, Religio and branch in rapid succession. Now we have a membership of forty-three, with more to be added soon by letters; and we feel that if we live faithfully more will soon be added by baptism. I had the pleasure of baptizing four recently.

We feel proud of the young Saints of this branch. They set a good example for the older ones. We are now planning on building a church this spring, as our congregation is a little too large for our little Montana houses. If we had houses to compare with the size of our farms it would be different.

My time since coming to Montana has been well occupied, as all will know who have tried to earn a living for six children on a frontier homestead. With a steam plow, a farm, and a blacksmith shop I have been tied so that I could not do as much spiritual work as I desired to do; but now we have proved up on our claim and little by little we can see the way clearing for more service to the Lord.

We have enjoyed some spiritual feasts of late, and I am happy to say that we feel as the poet, Go on in faith, ye Saints, go on; fear not, etc. We, of course, with the rest of the Saints, see some clouds arise, and float across our horizon, but we feel to trust the Lord. We know that it takes all these little breezes to make us strong.

May the Spirit lead and direct the Saints in all their changing scenes, and may we all soon be united in one happy reunion, is my prayer.

Yours in Christ,

S. M. ANDES.

CULBERTSON, MONTANA, February 4, 1914.

New Philadelphia, Ohio.

We held a series of meetings here which lasted three weeks. We opened in the Bijou Theater on Sunday, January 4. The services were conducted by Elder Richard Baldwin, of Sharon, Pennsylvania. We held Sunday school and social services in the forenoon in our own chapel on the south side, then at 2.30 and at 7.30 Brother Baldwin preached in the theater. Each evening throughout the week he preached in the Union chapel, situated on Tuscarawas Avenue, about midway between New Philadelphia and Canal Dover, the old car line, then back to the Bijou Theater on Sunday afternoon and evening again, and so on until we closed our meetings on Sunday, January 25.

We advertised our meetings in the daily paper, and by placing large display cards in the store windows with Brother Baldwin's picture and announcements of the meetings. Brethren Charles Cramer, John Robson, William Goudy, John Carlisle, Dennis Benbow, and the writer passed handbills from house to house, which resulted in helping swell the crowds.

The writer has had considerable experience in advertising from house to house, on business matters. When they see bill passers coming the people generally shut the door, or if you happen to step off of the walks they order you out of the yard, and if you walk across the porch they send the dog after you for tracking up the floor. If you happened to leave the gate open when you were around before they would call you some nice pet name and say you were lazy for taking a job that a boy could do, or they might ask why you did not follow an occupation that had some work connected with it, or one of many similar questions.

This was not so this time. At the first few houses the writer visited the doors were opened before we were near the houses, and children came out to the sidewalk to get the bills. At one place a lady actually thanked us for the bills! Out of two hundred and twenty-five houses visited there were not over twelve places where the doors did not open either before we reached them, or before we were out of hearing. This is practically the experience of all the rest of the brethren. It was indeed remarkable how eager the people seemed to get those bills. We never experienced anything like it before.

Our prayer as we went from house to house that the people might not only receive the bills, but that they might also read them and come out to hear the truth, was certainly heard, as the Union Chapel was well filled each evening with attentive and interested listeners, as was also the Bijou Theater.

Brother Baldwin was ably assisted in the pulpit by Brethren James Carlisle, John Robson, Dennis Benbow, John Carlisle, Albert Klar, and Charles Cramer, who also had charge of the music and was assisted at the organ by Sisters Georgie Robson, Ruby Angus, and Hazel Thomas. The Saints all turned out nobly and assisted all they could to make the meetings a success. Brother Eddie Stienbaugh put his automobile into service by taking those back and forth who were not able to walk to the services. He also took care of those who were baptized, as well as Brother Baldwin, taking them to the river and back again, which was highly appreciated.

At the close of the last service held in the Union Chapel a suitable program was rendered by the Saints, consisting of solos, duets, quartets, and recitations, which was highly appreciated by all. Our meetings were a grand success, and it seemed a shame to close them while such intense interest prevailed. Four were baptized in the ice cold waters of the Tuscorawas River, and there are others who are near the kingdom.

In gospel bonds,

T. H. DARST.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Utah District; Greeting: It becomes my duty, as the bishop's agent, to direct your attention to the urgent and immediate needs of our missionary families. We have but $18.70 on hand at the present time, and the immediate and urgent necessities require $58. We have other necessities as well, but we are going to let them pass for the time being. The wives and children of our missionaries can not live without food and clothing. They are just like all other wives and children, with this exception, that they are willing to get along with less than some others. Unless we supply their needs there is no way they can be supplied. The responsibility is upon us. Let us each and all respond heartily with what we can spare. As Paul told the Corinthians, so I tell you:

I am not laying a command upon you, but I am inviting you to test the genuineness of your own affection. For, where there is willing readiness, a man's gift is valued by its comparison with what he has, and not with what he has not. Our object is not to give relief to others and bring distress on you, but to secure what you can spare to supply their need.

I appeal to your patriotism to the cause to see to it that the need is provided for at once in order that the missionaries' families shall not actually suffer. The $58 needed for two families is a mere pittance if it went to one family. Let all of us respond with what we can spare by a little sacrifice of something. My faith is that I shall not ask in vain.

I commend to your earnest reading the second Epistle of Saint Paul to the Corinthians, chapters 8 and 9. It is a splendid scripture, and worthy of your study.

Respectfully,

C. A. SMURTHWAITE.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, 751 First Avenue, Feb. 10, 1914.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Salt Lake City; Greeting: As your fellow servant I address a few lines to you that we might be the better able to understand each other, and thus be able to unite our efforts in the bonds of love, for the mutual uplift of humanity. Our profession is superior to that of any other people or church. Our gospel is the gospel of Christ, and therefore it is the gospel of peace, in all that term implies.

We are here for a purpose. The gospel has come to us and we are partakers of its benefits, only I fear we are all living beneath our privileges and possibilities. As a servant of the divine Master I would exhort you to all diligence, and suggest that you aspire to the more abundant life that lies just before us, within our reach and readily acquired if we will but set into operation the necessary causes for the producing of the desired effect.

We have been placed in trust with the gospel. What does that trust mean to us? Are we conscious of the fact that we are either a savior of life unto life, or of death unto death? That is, we are able to save our fellow men from the sins and follies of life, or we may be the cause of their doing wrong.

The great question is, How am I using the privileges of life granted me? Am I living the life of the Divine? If not I am falling short of the standard set me in Christ Jesus our Lord. The Master has said, "I will build my church." What is his church built of? Men and women, of course—you and me, if we be in deed and in truth his disciples—if we have become partakers of his divine nature.

What did he build his church for? Have you ever considered this question real seriously? Without question he built it for a purpose; therefore you and I should have a purpose in being in the church. What do we mean by church? you may ask. We simply mean a body of men and women doing business for Christ, in the name of Christ. What is the business of Christ? To save mankind, most certainly. It is therefore our duty, our imperative duty to save mankind also. Are we properly functioning along this line?

The Master went about doing good. Is there not abundant room in the world for us to do good to others? Let us therefore exhibit our discipleship by imitating the Master, by reflecting his character in our daily walk and conversation. It is life not argument, that counts. Let us so acquire the love of God that we may be able to go into the world among our fellow beings and appeal to their better nature, the good within them, remote or small as it may be, and lead them by reason of their better senses from their indulgence and participation in evil, to a nobler, truer, and better condition of life, supplanting selfhood with altruistic love, bringing to them joy for sorrow, peace for strife, the oil of gladness for the spirit of heaviness, and hope where despair now reigns.

We can not give to another that which we do not possess ourselves, therefore let us unitedly make an effort to come up higher, that thereby we may be able to extend a helping hand to those less fortunate than ourselves, and infuse new life, new hope, new desires and aspirations within them, enabling them to see that the spirit of Christ is in his church, and that by his divine love and grace they, too, may enjoy with us a fullness of life, the supreme joy, the complete peace that is found only in the service of Christ. "Consider the lilies, how they grow." The lily gathers sweetness, fragrance, and beauty from its entire environment; shall we not do likewise? Let us find the Divine Center, and dwell therein, thereby being able to go about as did the Master, doing good, that our claim of sainthood may be augmented by actual deeds of life; that our atmosphere may affect those we mingle with; that without our telling it they may know we have been taught of Christ. By this means may we make the name of Christ and his church honorable among mankind.

Respectfully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

THE NEED OF DIVINE POWER.

[Synopsis of sermon by J. F. Garver, delivered February 8, 1914, at the opening of the church recently purchased by the Saints of the Des Moines (Iowa) Branch.]

Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshiped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen.—Matthew 28: 16-20.

Thus wrote Matthew with reference to the commission given the apostles and the church of Christ. In contemplation of this work Jesus in the prayer as recorded by John presents the apostles and the church to God in the following language:

Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth. As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.—John 17: 17-21.

In John 15: 5 we find the Savior saying, "Without me ye can do nothing."

In the coming of Jesus Christ into the world as the Savior of men we have for all time a divine demonstration of the fact that without Christ in this world men are without hope. It was necessary that one should come in order that a way might be opened up by means of which mankind might be lifted out of the conditions incident to the fall, and come again in favor with and into the presence of God.

That God might have an institution through which his work among men could be performed, Jesus organized the church. This was the purpose of the church—that it might become the point of contact between God and the world, and make for him an abiding place upon the earth; an institution through which and by means of which the gospel message as declared by Christ might be carried forward on its saving mission.

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

Let us meditate for a moment upon the great mission of this church. Jesus gave to it the commandment: Go teach: go tell men of the chant of the angelic host; of the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem; of the pure life of Jesus; of his ministry among men; of his death, resurrection, and ascension; go teach men the principles of the gospel as enunciated by him; carry to a lost world the hope of redemption and final triumph with God.

The church was to teach all nations. The mission, therefore, was continuous; it was intended on the part of God that the church should continue, and that it should teach the things of God not only to the nations then extant but to all other nations that might follow after, "even unto the end of the world."

In thus commissioning the church, Christ makes to it a wonderful promise in the language, "Lo, I am with you always." Upon the condition that the church was faithful in the mission intrusted to it, Christ made the solemn promise that the powers of heaven, the powers of the Holy Ghost would accompany the administration of the church "even unto the end of the world."

NEED OF DIVINE POWER.

Now in the same sense that the world was without hope only as that hope was possible in Christ, so the church without Christ, without that for which Christ stood, was without power. When we catch the full significance of the language of our text, "without me ye can do nothing," we become conscious of the fact that this church as organized by Christ was without power, without potency, and wholly unqualified to perform the work intrusted to its care only as it received the power of the presence of God in his cooperation with the church in the work of redemption.

Is it any wonder, therefore, in consideration of this great mission and the need of divine power, that Christ should have instructed the apostles to return to the city of Jerusalem and abide the time of the coming down of this power? According to Luke 24: 49 Jesus said to them: "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high."

We have noted that without Christ the world was without hope; that is, man of himself possessed no power by which he might extricate himself from the conditions into which he had fallen as a consequence of sin. Christ as one of the Godhead came to earth as God manifest in the flesh and performed for man, in the bringing about of a plan, that which he was not able to do for himself. Now, in the carrying out of that divine plan man of himself could do nothing. It was necessary that God continue to be present with the church in the presence of the Holy Spirit, for "without me ye can do nothing." This Spirit, this power, this presence of God had been promised, and the church was commanded not to undertake its mission until God came to further direct and qualify by the ministrations of the Holy Ghost.

The need and the potency of this divine power and presence is suggested in the activities of the Apostle Peter. We remember that when without the Spirit he shrank from the question of the innocent maid, denied his Christ and cursed and swore; that when clothed with the divine power of God's Holy Spirit he stood before the multitude upon the day of Pentecost and in the boldness of that occasion not only preached Christ, the risen Lord, but burned in upon the consciousness of that vast multitude the fact that with wicked hands they had crucified him who came to be their Savior, and who died for their transgressions. We will not need to be reminded that no one was converted at the time of the denial; the record tells us that three thousand souls were added to the church on the day of Pentecost.

The church moved out under this power and presence, and for a season performed under its grace a great work.

THE POWER WITHDRAWN.

Time came when the power of the Spirit was withdrawn from the church. Raising the question briefly as to the reasons for this withdrawal, we may be permitted to ask, Was the commission upon which the church was sent fulfilled? Had the church completed its mission? Had it taught all nations, even down to the end of the world? In the performance of its work, the church was intended to overcome the conditions of poverty and filth and disease and sin which had cursed the world in connection with the fall of our foreparents and the sins of men after them. Had the church overcome these conditions?

We hold that until the mission upon which the church had been sent was fully completed, there was the same need of the presence with the church of this divine power. If in the beginning this church could not perform its work without God, it could not perform it without him at any time later. If the personal presence and ministry of Christ during a period of three years could not qualify men and the church to perform the work of the church only as they received the power and ministration of the Holy Spirit in connection therewith, the record of that wonderful work and that divine outpouring in the absence of the power of the Spirit certainly could not qualify men and the church to perform the work.

If, therefore, the light went out from this church, it must have gone out because the church failed to comply with the conditions laid down in the commission. Upon the condition that the church continued to teach men to observe the things and only the things commanded of Christ, he promised to be with them "even unto the end of the world." If, therefore, God in the person of the Holy Ghost withdrew from the church, that withdrawal was made necessary from the fact that the church had failed on its part to carry out the terms of the commission.

CHURCH INEFFICIENCY.

The fact of the inefficiency of the church is attested by every Protestant minister in the city of Des Moines, by every Protestant minister in the great State of Iowa, and in every State of the Nation, and every nation under the sun. The very fact that Protestantism sought to reform the church evidences the fact that in the opinion of Protestantism the church had gone astray. And, furthermore, the activities of the Protestant churches in recent years set forth the fact that they recognize that not only did the first church fail upon its part, but that they in their turn have not been meeting the issue.

In the attitude of the church toward poverty and sin, and in the attitude of the poor toward the church we have illustrations of this inefficiency.

The churches upon every hand have been encouraging settlement work and maintaining missions in the congested districts of the cities, occupied by the poor. In these activities they are conscious of the fact that the church is not reaching the poor.

Imagine, if you can, a poor man in his rags being welcomed to a front pew as a guest of honor in any one of the popular churches of any one of our leading American cities! As at present managed, there is absolutely no place for the poor in the church.

We have it upon record that a leading clergyman in the city of New York, pastor of the church attended by Mr. Rockefeller and other millionaires, resigned his pastorate because said church declined to build a five hundred thousand dollar edifice in which the poor might be welcomed.

Men, to ease their consciences, give great sums to charity: a large part of these donations goes through the hands of the church. The poor accept the charities of the church, but are not helped spiritually by the church.

The attitude of the church toward sin is in a measure illustrated by the utter disregard and absolute inefficiency of the church in the matter of sin deep-seated in the red light districts of our country. Men declare against this evil, but what are the Christian churches doing to overcome and to subdue the terrible wickedness of our times? We hear men speak of the iniquity of Sodom and the sin of Gomorrah, but I believe before God that our age has plunged itself into a sea of social sin and into a depth of scarlet wickedness unknown in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah. These conditions march onward and onward, unchecked, unarrested, and untouched by the church.

The average poor man does not recognize in the church a friend. I was reading a few days ago of a leading sociologist of our country who made the remark that the average laboring man hated the very sight of a church spire. The reason the poor man has no respect for the church is because the church does not mean anything to him. It preaches to him, if it reaches him at all, the need of personal righteousness, but it offers to him no hope of relief from the conditions of oppression under which he is required to labor. He reasons in his mind, How can I be a righteous man under such unrighteous conditions? How can I have respect for an institution which does nothing for me and which means nothing to me?

NEED OF EVANGELIZATION.

The church was intended to correct the evils of society: inequality and sin. Its inefficiency is measured by the extent of its failure so to do. Recognizing this failure, Christian churches everywhere are seeking to more fully organize and equip themselves in their efforts to more effectually combat the conditions of present-day society. In recent months a number of churches which have heretofore stood upon the premise that the local church organization was the only organization have seen the necessity of a greater centralization of power. They are coming to the idea of central organization, for a central directing authority. They are adopting the idea of delegate conventions and of a central body to govern and direct in the affairs of church work. Churchmen everywhere are suggesting the need of evangelization not only outside, but inside the church as well.

Now the kind of evangelization that is needed in the church is a return of the power of God. The human energies of men must be energized by the pure message of the restored gospel of Christ; they must be vitalized by the divine power of the Spirit of our God. The same divine truth enunciated by Christ in the language, "without me ye can do nothing," is a divine truth to-day, demonstrated beyond the shadow of a doubt in the fact that the church became an institution of inefficiency in the day when it lost this divine presence.

OUR PRESENT NEED.

Applying these lessons to our own people and institution we may draw therefrom the suggestion that our present need is the need of divine power. We have the organization of the church as restored in these last days; we have a divinely appointed ministry; we have in the revelations to the church the order of God with reference to the correction of social evil. But, my friends, I wish to impress you with the fact that all the organization God could order, all the eloquence of our ministry can prevail only as they shall be touched and vitalized by the power of God. The thing that we need to-day above all else in this church is the power of the Spirit of God. This power will be ours in the day when we shall have learned the significance of the prayer of Jesus, a portion of which we have read.

Understanding the great mission of the church and its need of power, Christ in presenting it to God prayed that it might put itself in that condition in which it would be possible for the power of God to be placed upon it. So he prays, Sanctify them through thy truth; make them holy, O Father; make them to be pure through obedience to thy truth; make them to be one in purpose. For their sakes I have sanctified myself; I have taught them by my life how they may make their lives holy, and how they may become one. And I pray not for these men only, but for all those who may believe on me through their word; I pray for the church in all time.

This, then, was the burden of the Master, that the church might become one: one in purity, one in consecration to the service of God, even as Christ was one with the Father in purity and in consecration to the mission on which he was sent. Christ was thus burdened and moved in spirit with reference to the unity that must characterize the church because he recognized that only by this unity, only by this oneness in God and Christ could the world be impressed with the fact that the church had been sent of God. We catch, therefore, to a degree, in this prayer, the necessity of unity and oneness upon our part, to the end that God may so work through us that the world may be caused to know that we are indeed sent of him under the commission placed upon his church.

I would to God this morning that we might be able to impress you with the fact that Christ not only brought the church thus in the arms of his love before the Father, but that when he uttered this prayer he prayed that together with the church you and I might be faithful upon our part, and bring ourselves to that unity in him that would make possible the expression of his divinity through us. This is the only way in which the church can become one. By our personal righteousness we become one in purity; by our personal consecration we become one in devotion; by our personal endeavors we become one in effort—not all thinking the same thing, but united in purity, in devotion, in effort, in the great cause of truth. Just to the extent that we become one in this manner are we to receive the power of God, which power will enable us to demonstrate to honest men that we are sent of God.

A CHURCH HOME.

Now may we apply the lessons of the hour to this occasion. You are to be congratulated for the efforts and sacrifices which have made this occasion possible. You should remember, however, that the end of your effort has not been reached. You have not been called to the work in the city of Des Moines to build a church. This church is necessary, but it is not the end toward which you have set out. It is but a means to that end. Its purpose is only to enhance your efficiency as people of God.

Men and women marry, not to build a house, but to build a home. A house is a convenience and a help in the building of a home, but it is not an absolute necessity. Homes have been built and successfully built outside of a house. The purpose of your organization in the city of Des Moines is to build a home, to help in the work of creating for God, together with you, an abiding place in this city.

As you live together with him in this home, in this house, so will your activities be largely determined. As you live in unity of purpose and of heart and of consecration in this building, so will you be united in your efforts in this city, and thus be demonstrating the fact that you are the people of God.

To illustrate: A few days ago I was passing with a friend a certain residence property in Lamoni. I remarked to this friend, "That house across the street is the house in which my wife and I were married. The north bedroom upstairs there is the room in which our first child was born. We lived with my wife's parents for nearly two years in that house." Now during this conversation there was running through my mind the things that had passed between my wife and I during the days of our delightful courtship, and during the first two years of our married life; that which had gone between myself and the family of her parents. And at that moment I was in the peculiar mental state brought about by these memories.

This illustrates what I have in mind, and suggests something of your present opportunity. As you live together in your devotions in this house so will be your memories with reference to your associations herein. As you pass by this house from time to time you will be affected by these memories. If you have lived here in contention and strife and bitterness of spirit, when you pass by this house these memories will revive within you the spirit of those disorders. If, on the other hand, you live here in peace and harmony and oneness of purpose, as you pass by these memories will be conducive to the development within your heart of those characteristics that will continue the work of unity among you.

But it is not so much of these mental states outside this house that I wish to speak as of the effect your memories will have upon you when inside this building. If you come here and fall upon each other in the spirit of contention and bitterness, when you return at the sacred hour of prayer, or to listen to the man of God, you will sit here in the bitterness of those memories. Under such conditions you can not hope to rise to the heights intended for the children of God. If you come here in the spirit of unity, in the spirit of deep devotion and of consecration, you will receive of the power of Israel's God; and as you return from time to time these fond memories will revive within you the spirit of those former occasions and will help you to further spiritual light and divine favor.

A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY.

If there have been any differences between you with reference to the securing of this property; if there have been any differences between you with reference to any matter heretofore, permit me to admonish you this morning to put those differences from you now and for all time. Never allow them to be brought into this building. As you come here from time to time, come under the spirit of this occasion and this hour, seeking the favor of God and the help of each other. Stand together as the people of God in this community, as the people through whom he desires to express his purposes, and concerning whom he wishes to witness that he has sent into this city.

If any former differences between you have left an ill feeling, before you return to this building for the afternoon social service get together and make those matters right. Come here and partake of the spirit of the occasion of this day and of the power of God, and pledge yourselves to stand together thus united henceforth and for ever.

I would that I might have the power to impress you with your golden opportunity. You hold in your hands the keys to spiritual power and the presence of God. Will you in unity of purpose, in oneness of effort unlock the door?

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

In conclusion I wish to speak an encouraging word to these young people. I do not refer with disparagement to the work of my brethren when I say that the hope of this church is in her young people. Men who have borne the heat of the day, whose hair is tinged with silver, whose steps are growing feeble must soon lay down the arms of our warfare. If our church is carried forward it must be carried forward by men now young. These men have a great advantage over their fathers in that they have the inspiration and benefit and prestige of the work their fathers have done. They have the organizations for good; they have the helps and suggestions, and the work as developed to this day. All this they receive from their fathers as a mighty heritage, as a monument to the devotion and consecration of the hearts and lives of noble men. Let them see to it that they stand true to this sacred trust, and in their turn carry forward to its consummation the work of God so nobly begun.

That this condition may be true in the city of Des Moines as in every other vicinity where our people are represented, is my fervent prayer.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

LEPERS CURED.—The press reports Doctor Ralph Hopkins, of New Orleans, as having reported to the directors of the Louisiana lepers colony that nine lepers have been discharged from the colony seemingly cured. A newly discovered vaccine from the bacteria of erysipelas was used in the cases mentioned. This remedy is to be given to recognized medical institutions.

NEW TREATIES.—The Senate on the 21st by more than a two thirds vote ratified general arbitration treaties between the United States and Great Britain, Japan, Italy, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Portugal, and Switzerland. These treaties go into force in the same general terms existing before they expired. The failure of attempts to exempt the Panama toll question and questions of immigration and public education related to the treaties with Great Britain and Japan is interpreted in some quarters as indicating the support the President will receive in the Senate on the matter of Panama tolls exemption.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—The press reports that there seems to be a growing sentiment among the Mexican Constitutionalist leaders to the effect that in case the Federal army is able to hold Torreon, northern Mexico should secede and become an independent republic. Generals Carranza and Villa are said to have stated that they will be satisfied with nothing less than the overthrow of Huerta, yet it is reported that in a failure to do so they have seriously considered a separate republic, embracing Sonora, Chihuahua, Coahuila, Nuevo Leon, and Tamaulipas, and probably Sinaloa. The Huerta forces have been driven from practically all this territory.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—Relations between Mexico and United States are further complicated by the execution of William S. Benton, a British subject and owner of a one-hundred-thousand-acre ranch in Chihuahua. According to the record of the court martial that condemned Benton to death he was charged with trying to murder General Villa in resisting the order of the general exiling him from Mexico. The body of Benton has been demanded by United States authorities and General Villa has expressed his intention to turn it over for examination to determine whether Benton was killed by a pistol shot, as his friends accuse (in the hands of Villa), or by a firing squad, as General Villa asserts.

BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.—The State of North Dakota has included the Bible in the regular curriculum of the public schools of the State. It is listed with other high school branches, and the State has issued an official "Syllabus for Bible study." Commenting on this action The Homiletic Review says that thus has the Bible been restored, in North Dakota, "to its proper place in the curriculum of the public schools." Discussing the matter further the Review says:

The great literature of which no intelligent person can afford to be ignorant is here placed alongside of the modern literature which it permeates. It is offered to the youth of the State as one of the elective studies to be seriously pursued by all who choose to take it, and to count like all the rest with equal credit to those who pass examination on it. That the examination is strict and thorough, copies of the papers presented this year give proof. The opportunity thus offered is well safeguarded from objections. The work done is to be done at home. Parents and church-teachers are there free to advise and direct, as they desire, to suitable books. The State prescribes none, and regards all versions of the Bible as equally sufficient for its purpose, that the students shall know the Bible history, the stories of its great characters, its noble style, its influential ideas and ideals that have modeled our civilization. Through the lack of such knowledge in many of his hearers the preacher's work is heavily handicapped by the need of imparting the knowledge which it is his mission to apply. To the Sunday school as well as to the pulpit North Dakota has given help of which use has been promptly made. Through its monthly journal, Live Wires, reprinting and widely circulating the official syllabus, with helpful notes and a list of reference books, the Sunday School Association at Fargo is doing a publicity work that has resulted in organizing classes throughout the State, and in arousing keen interest in many other States.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LONG TRACT READY.—The matter written by E. E. Long, entitled "The Failures of Campbellism," and running in the HERALD some months ago, is just off the press, in tract form, and will soon be ready for mailing. Those who have notified the Herald Publishing House of the number wanted should send the amount due, to insure delivery; any others desiring copies may now secure same. This matter makes a pamphlet of one hundred thirty-nine pages, regular tract form, at a cost of twenty cents, six for one dollar. As an index to the rise, development, and final division of the church organized under the Campbells, this pamphlet is invaluable. It consists largely of quotations from authoritative works, some of them rare, presenting the development of the movement as described by these men themselves.

THE ONE BAPTISM.—One John T. Poe in Firm Foundation for February 10, of non-progressive Christian persuasion, argues that there is only one baptism, and that therefore those who urge the baptism of the Spirit and at the same time baptize in water sin in so doing. He states that there have been only two instances of Holy Ghost baptism since the world began, one on Pentecost, the other at the home of Cornelius, these being the only occasions upon which men spoke in unknown tongues. He concludes his argument with the contention that since God commanded man to baptism, and since man can not administer the baptism of the Holy Ghost, therefore the "one baptism" mentioned by Paul is water baptism, the only baptism to be administered. This good brother seems not to have read Acts 19:6, "And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." Neither could he have read 1 Corinthians 14:18, "I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all"; nor 1 Corinthians 14:39, "Forbid not to speak with tongues." If tongues be the sure sign of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as is urged, then here (Acts 19:6) was a case of Holy Ghost baptism. Nor did Paul administer it; said baptism came after Paul had baptized the candidates in water and had laid his hands upon them. In this instance, as at the house of Cornelius and at Pentecost, it was not man but God who baptized with the Holy Ghost. It is safe to conclude that the one baptism referred to by Paul was administered in the days of his own ministry. It is safe to conclude further that it was administered on the occasion referred to in Acts 19. The one complete baptism, therefore, is the baptism of water and the Spirit. This is in harmony with the language of Christ, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) This is the "one baptism"—the servant of God administering the water, God himself administering the Spirit.

WHEN WILL PEACE COME TO THE EARTH? ---PART 1.

BY HENRY A. STEBBINS.

In the midst of the present turmoil among the nations of the earth, and the contradiction of ideas on the subject of war and of preparation for war, the above question is of value and interest to all people, especially to those who are Bible students; and more especially so to those who are engaged in the latter-day work, those who are both witnessing and anxiously expecting the fulfillment of the prophecies anciently given by inspired men, and by the Lord Jesus Christ himself concerning the ultimate reign of peace over all the earth.

Nearly every one of the so-called great nations has been trying for many years to excel all others in the costly work of building the most powerful battleships possible, and inventing the heaviest cannon that will carry the largest ball the greatest distance; also recently to perfect airships, from which to throw terrible bombs upon the gathered armies of their enemies and upon the decks of great warships, that they may be suddenly annihilated, whenever the mighty struggle that is said to be expected shall come to pass among and between the great powers of the earth in the effort for supremacy.

One writer states that British dreadnaughts have cannon that carry fourteen-inch balls ten miles, and to fire which costs the nation a thousand dollars each time; and that such extravagant work is driving Germany to strive to excel by making a gun that will carry a still larger ball to a greater distance. And thus the strain of continual competition in the manufacture of implements of death and destruction, and in finding other means to obtain the mastery, goes on at gigantic expense, which results in mountains of debt for each nation, and for their children's children to many generations. Yet among all civilized peoples there appears an increasing dread and fear of the expected horror, as well as a fear lest at any time some sudden act shall bring the crisis and cause an awful outbreak of war which no diplomatic skill or court of arbitration will be able to check.

A DESIRE FOR PEACE.

However, notwithstanding the almost universal preparation now being made in expectation not only of ordinary wars, but also of a not far away mighty struggle unto death for supremacy on sea and land, especially for the control of the principal oceans,— notwithstanding these facts, there has been growing for years a very great desire, and plainly spoken by kings and rulers of leading nations, that such evil and distress shall not come, nor be permitted to come; that such test of armament and of strength, such a fearful death struggle need not come upon the world; but rather that every nation will try to work for peace with all other nations, and that an agreement between them may be reached by which and through which all differences and difficulties, all misunderstandings and conflicts of opinion and idea will be settled either by mutual agreement and concession, or by arbitration through the representatives of the powers gathered for that purpose at the peace palace in Holland, even as several differences have been arbitrated since the first peace congress in 1898, at The Hague.

The late king of England, Edward the Seventh, published sometime before his death that he strongly desired that there be no more great wars, and that peace would finally become universal. His son, George the Fifth, the present king of England, has also stated plainly that he follows his father in these views, and that he intends to help establish mutual good will among the nations, and if possible an abiding peace between them.

Furthermore, Emperor William of Germany has voiced a similar hopefulness that there may come, at no distant day, a time when governments will have ceased to war with each other, a time of peace, when bloodshed and conquest by arms shall no more be permitted or endured by civilized nations, yet admitting that, while affairs are as they have continued to be, it is needful to be prepared for the worst, with strong armies and navies.

WASTED WEALTH.

Doubtless much of the desire expressed by these and other rulers, that there may come prolonged and perhaps permanent peace, is the result of their knowledge that the chief cause of their unparalleled national debts has been war and the preparations for war, so greatly feared and so fully expected by many. Each is trying to keep up with or to get ahead of the others in this preparedness for offensive and defensive warfare on land and on sea. And this has caused untold wealth to be poured out like water every year for the equipment of the armies and navies of the world, for dreadnaughts and submarines, for ammunition and for guns of every sort and size, as well as to pay and support millions of men, men who, under these conditions, can not be producers of food or of any wealth, but are compelled to be only consumers of other men's labors.

These rulers and all other men know that if the millions of money now being spent by every nation in preparation for the wars that they all dread and do not want, if this poured out treasure could be turned back to the laboring people of each land, it would release multitudes from want and suffering and from the dreadfulness of enforced labor caused by warlike things. They know that such means saved would soon make wealth and plenty for everybody, and even universal comfort, happiness, and joy for all followers of virtue, of justice, and of righteousness. The laborers and the common people among all nations would sing songs of gladness.

The Secretary of War, of the United States, the Honorable L. M. Garrison, in his annual report last month at Washington, (December, 1913,) wrote as follows:

While I believe that there is a world-wide and growing sentiment for the settlement without bloodshed of all disputes between nations, just as there is now provision of law for such settlement of difficulties between individuals, I recognize the fact that the time has not yet come when a nation can wisely disarm or slacken its efforts for preparedness in case of war.

A PROPOSED "HOLIDAY."

The Secretary of the Navy, Honorable Josephus Daniels, also had something to say in his annual report about more peaceful ways among the nations. He comments on the proposition by Lord Winston Churchill, the head of the British Navy, that a holiday or vacation be taken in the matter of building battleships by the nations, and says:

I venture to recommend that the war and navy officials and other representatives of all the nations be invited to hold a conference to discuss whether they can not agree upon a plan for lessening the cost of the preparation for war. . . . I trust that this country will take the initiative and that steps will be taken by a conference of all the powers to discuss reduction of the heavy cost of the army and navy.

He shows in his report that the largest equipped battleships now cost fourteen million dollars each, or more than double the cost of the largest ones built ten years ago. The ships built now are much larger, the guns are more powerful, and all the equipment more costly.

Soon after these reports of the secretaries of war and navy were read in our national Congress, the House of Representatives adopted a resolution saying that in its opinion the statement of Lord Churchill that Great Britain is "willing to and ready to cooperate with other governments" in this effort for a halt, is an offering of the means for an "immediate lessening of the enormous burdens" which are upon the people of the nations. The motion was adopted by the House by the remarkable vote of three hundred seventeen for and only eleven against, or nearly thirty to one for a step toward peace.

Commenting upon this new thought among nations and the almost unanimous action of our Congress, the editor of one of the leading papers says that the latter is "a notable demonstration, moral and political, in behalf of peace and progress." He claims that few could have believed even a short time before this action that it would be possible to adopt "a resolution so idealistic" as this one. He holds that the thought is gaining ground among the governments of the world, and he brings proof of the growing interest in this idea even among the great rulers. He remarks that whoever among them have real desire for the betterment of the world and the welfare of mankind must realize more and more that the rivalry in armaments and in warship building is a great obstacle to advancement in the well-being and happiness of the people of the earth.

Editor Albert Shaw, of The American Review of Reviews, considers that:

The world is moving away from military ideals, and that a period of peace, industry and world-wide friendship is dawning. It is to promote such ideals and to advance this new era that peace-loving nations like our own ought to maintain their full share of control over conditions at large.

A dispatch from Berlin, Germany, dated December 13, 1913, reads as follows:

The large majority by which the "naval holiday" resolution passed the American House of Representatives has attracted interest and favorable comment from peace lovers in Germany, and the attitude of the United States on the proposal that international naval construction be discontinued for one year is regarded as one of possible far-reaching influence. . . . American initiative at this juncture would have many advantages.

The Berlin telegram further states:

There is naturally little or no sympathy at the admiralty for the idea, but in government circles outside the admiralty such a proposal might not be altogether unwelcome. The treasury department, forced to devise schemes for new taxation, and the majority of the Reichstag, faced with the unpopular task of voting them, are against any increase in naval expenditure.

This dispatch adds that the German chancellor "is already pledged to consider any scheme for a limitation of naval armament," and that the prime minister of Bavaria says that his part of the nation can bear "no further taxation for military purposes for years to come," and that he considers "the whole nation to be in a similar situation."

A leading newspaper in the United States quotes Secretary Daniels' recommendation, already given in this article, and then rejoices in the fact that the grand idea of a reduction in armament, which has been advocated in the past by only a few so-called "peace cranks," has fought its way along and is now "advocated by the first war lord of the British Empire and is commended by the navy chief of America." Had the writer waited until the action of the House of Representatives he might have included that in his commendation and have rejoiced more fully. He adds:

No official in this country has at any time lined up a proposition of more importance to all the people of the earth.

It is not a vacation in war madness that we need. It is not an hour's relief in the long fever of folly, but medicine to remove the fever's cause. For the whole program of military preparedness is a piece of old-time craze from which modern people have been unable to rid themselves so far.

That writer regrets that the nations do not seem to be altogether ready to relieve the overburdened world of its "intolerable blood and money tax." Still he thinks that the time is nearing, and that "in the great movement to 'ground arms' the United States will be the natural leader." Had he known the facts of God's special providence over this Nation he could have said, "the divinely appointed leader"; for those who understand God's revealments know that he, by his own special power, ordained America at birth as the coming leader in the march toward universal liberty and universal peace, as well as the leader in many national reforms and corrections for the enlightenment and happiness of the whole world.

AN AWAKENING.

Another journal asks its readers if they "are alive to the wonderful awakening that is going on throughout the world," the "world peace movement" included. The editor says that the common people among the nations are finding out that war to them is only "trouble, disease and death." He says, "stop all wars waged for conquest and for money gain and war will be at an end."

Not any of the above quotations are from papers devoted especially to advocating peace; all are from the ordinary newspapers of the day; therefore these utterances are the more striking and notable.

THE COST OF WAR.

The cost of warlike preparations, even without any present great war, is so enormous that the common mind can not comprehend the immensity of the sums paid out by the various governments; yet in the mass this wealth originates in and is drawn from the toiling masses of the laboring populations of the earth, millions of whom sweat and groan in conditions of privation and poverty so dark and drear that slavery is little if any worse.

For instance, we read in published statements that it now costs Germany over six hundred million dollars annually for its war and navy preparation, and yet with no war. The expenses for its royal family and lords of every degree, and for its governmental jurisdiction and control are separate from the above. The cost to Great Britain for annual war and navy expenses has been about four hundred million, but is greater now. The expenditures of other powers have grown proportionately, until Europe's annual expenditure in recent years has been nearly two thousand million dollars. And it has cost the United States over two hundred million yearly during the last ten years.

We may think these figures, but the mind fails to grasp the immensity of the sum of two thousand million dollars, or, as it may be written, two billion dollars spent by Europe each year for wars. It now costs the United States one billion dollars annually to run its affairs, one fifth part of this, two hundred million, being for war and navy expenses. Besides this, the men in the armies and navies of the world are consumers only, not producers of any crop or of any good thing to their various countries. If the men in the armies and navies of Europe were laborers upon farms, or in the trades, or in commerce, it is believed that the combined product of their labors would be worth one thousand million dollars annually for those nations, instead of the outlay being two thousand million and no gain thereby, only great destruction in case of war,—destruction of life, of property, of agriculture, of trade, and of commerce.

IMPENDING RUIN.

A British writer says:

The danger most apparent in Europe is that the ever growing expenditure will eventually bring some of the nations near bankruptcy. The military powers will demand more men and more money, while the impoverished workers under a great handicap will be less fitted to meet the demands. Excessive expenditure on armaments will so tax Europe's resources that new countries that are safely removed from the turmoil of Europe may in time defeat our trade in the markets of the world. What the United States has done and is doing may be done also by Canada, Japan, and parts of South America. The best laborers will be tempted by higher wages to the new industrial nations, and gradually the military powers of Europe will sink to poverty and impotency, if we continue our present speed in war preparation expenditures.

And, apparently, these facts are going home to the hearts of many rulers among the nations, and they see that financial and national ruin are not far off unless a halt is made. Some of them appear to desire to stop in time to be safe. But when the blood gets hot, or tyranny becomes too oppressive, they will fight; also when some nation desires to rob a weaker one of territory which it covets there is war.

PEACE TREATIES.

However, one of the signs that the Lord's Spirit has been moving among the people and the kingdoms is that peace treaties have been begun and are increasing in frequency in modern times. Their benefit has been great, especially counting from the one held at Westphalia, Prussia, in 1648, at the close of the "thirty years war," down to the one by which Russia and Japan ceased their awful carnage and destruction.

Before the first peace conference held at The Hague, in Holland, in 1898, all the treaties of peace made between the nations followed most terrible wars, as did the treaty at Westphalia, Prussia, in 1648, the one at Utrecht, Holland, in 1713, those at Paris in 1814, and Vienna in 1815, and the one in 1904 between Russia and Japan. But now the idea is that before war takes place there may be settlements arranged between nations at the great "Peace Palace" in Holland, by and through the convening of a body of their representatives at that place, for the special duty of considering the points of difference and arranging peace, if possible to do so.

The Emperor Nicholas, of Russia, made the first suggestion to all the nations for such a congress in the interests of peace and harmony, when misunderstandings existed and conflicts might result. Though he is the "autocrat of all the Russias," yet his heart seems to be more tender than are the hearts of his grand dukes and princes. He has in the past issued edicts for the good of his subjects, but these dukes and princes have caused the good to be revoked and oppressive measures and abuses to be reestablished, or so it appears. Therefore that nation is suffering and will suffer until the Almighty shall rebuke her great ones in the coming battle between God and the chief nations of Europe, as will hereafter be considered.

THE OPPOSITE SIDE OF THE SHIELD.

Upon the subject of possible near war I noticed an article in the Literary Digest of January 3, 1914, entitled, "Can Russia and Austria make up." It states that the Balkan conflicts last year caused "bitterness and bickerings" between these two nations, and that at one time they were "on the brink of war." The article quotes from a leading Russian writer in the Saint Petersburg Novoye Vremya, who says:

Personally I should say that real peace between Austria and Russia (if it were possible!) would be a great advantage—especially to Austria. But speaking of the chances for such peace, we must see, first of all, what there is in Austria's pocket—a box of candy, or a box of dynamite. . . . It would be a frightful misfortune if we should, under the pretext of a problematical conciliation with Austria, weaken our military position and cease our extreme efforts to organize our self-defense. . . . There prevail in Russia the same false notions about Austria-Hungary as we had about Japan before the last war. . . . It is time to discard the antiquated conceptions of the Austro-Hungarian Army, for within the last three years it has grown into a formidable fighting force, thoroughly reorganized. . . . Thus it can be seen that the Austro-Hungarian forces will be in absolute readiness by 1917, that is, there remain yet three to four years. . . . The most likely object of the colossal expenditures and armaments is Russia, who hinders the Austrian Germans in their desire to gobble up the Balkan hash. Preparations are being made for a duel between the two heirs to Byzantium—at least on one side. The duel is being only postponed, for the pistols are not quite ready.

This shows the other side, or the opposite of peace and peace talk. It is in accordance with the preparations being made for war the world over, and also accords with the great fear of each other that really exists in nearly every nation, especially among the great powers. The above writer refers to 1917, and by that time it may be that all who live then will see great events.

Incidentally, and as of value in manifesting coming events and showing the existing weariness of war, it is well to quote present-day events having a bearing toward ultimate peace, when the flood of war shall pass. For instance, there has been in Germany an increasing restlessness and irritation against the military—always at hand, or near by, and sometimes aggressive and harsh. Both foreign and American papers speak of "Germany's overwhelming weight of militarism," and they state that "reports say that the iron hand of militarism has aroused a burst of fury throughout the annexed provinces of Alsace-Lorraine." Also in the German parliament there was recently a large majority vote (two hundred ninety-three to fifty-four) on a question which really showed lack of confidence in the government. It is attributed to the resentment felt about military conditions.

Since the above was written I see that the Reichstag has rescinded its censure of the German chancellor, but the governor general "and the entire civil government of Alsace-Lorraine" have resigned as the result of the difficulty. (This news January 28, 1914.)

THE "ZABERN INCIDENT."

What is called the "Zabern incident" occurred at Zabern, where a lieutenant had four soldiers arrest some children "for shouting naughty words" at the soldiers. The account said that "even the public prosecutor who protested against these arrests was himself arrested." This is not only called the "iron hand," but also one member of parliament called it "saber dictatorship." The London Times states that "German law forbids the military from interfering with the civil population, except at the request of the police or if the troops are attacked." It is further stated that the officer took "the law into his own hands," and that German civilians feel that such doings "can not be tolerated in these days in a civilized state." The London Standard declares that "a wave of indignation is passing over Germany against the upholding of military authority above the civil law."

WHEN WILL THE MADNESS CEASE?

I have mentioned these happenings because all these events manifest the "moving hand of God," or the Spirit of God working more and more for the freedom of mankind from the rulership of kings and armies. Because God will work until all nations are liberated from every despotic power. As he said by Isaiah and Micah, the day is coming (we believe it is near) when he will cause all nations to "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks." But the question is, How much war must take place before that notable and blessed day? How long before their madness of war will wear them out, and cause them to be willing to cease fighting?

OUR IDEALS.

And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious.—Isaiah 11: 10.

Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.—Matthew 6: 11, Inspired Translation.

I can think of nothing so vitally important, of so much potency for good or evil, as our ideals. Herein, at least in great measure, lies the power of whatever gospel we may have accepted, whether for good or evil.

The promise of God to "write my law in their hearts," etc., was only one way of saying that his people should be given the correct standard of life with an earnest desire for its attainment.

It is a truth that no man nor community can rise above his or their ideals; and I have sometimes been moved to say, "God pity those who have fully attained unto their ideals under our earthly regime," for then must those ideals have been faulty, like the ideals of the one who stood and prayed, felicitating himself and his deity upon the good things which he was doing in the name of religion, and the evil which he did not. (Luke 18.)

THE DISTINGUISHING FEATURE.

It seems to me that the great and distinguishing feature between the work which we call "the Restoration" and other church movements had among men, either in the name of restoration, or reformation, or the continuation (Catholicism), lies the challenge to work out a practical answer to the prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Paul has asked, "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to battle?" In the opening of this latter-day work there was no uncertainty in the sound of the challenge for such preparation.

Now behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be entrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

THE HOPE OF CHRISTIANITY.

All down the ages, men endowed with the Spirit have looked forward to the time when the "cause of Zion," or the "kingdom of God," should be established in such power and continuance that the nations should "learn of his ways," and "walk in his paths," unto the end that they should neither "lift up sword against nation" nor "learn war any more."

All this has been the hope of Christianity poured out in song and prayer during the centuries since the angel choir sang their message of "peace on earth, good will to men." But it remained for the men of this latter-day work to take the call to the service of Christ so seriously that they really undertook to "bring to pass the gathering," wherein should be the preparation for, and eventually the establishment of God's kingdom upon earth.

As it was in the days of the ministration of Jesus, so those who engaged in this work received the encouraging assurance, Fear not little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

Let us not confuse this promise or assurance with the ultimate fulfillment, for as it was in the days of Peter, when not those who only "escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (negative Christianity), but those who so escaping diligently added to their faith the things which made for fruit in the "knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1:1-11), thus becoming a positive force in the establishment of "his righteousness," so in this dispensation shall an abundant entrance be ministered into "the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

THE IDEAL OF SERVICE.

We hear a great deal to-day about the ideal of service, and the Christian world is at last waking up to the fact that only in service to man can the service of God be found; but none have more keenly sensed this call than we who look for Zion's establishment and redemption.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy property for their support," etc., yes, even all that we may possess above our immediate needs, unto the end that all may be supplied in their just needs and wants.

We have realized that unless we do this willingly God will not give us the abundance of the spiritual blessings that should obtain in his kingdom, for to us the "brotherhood of man" has ceased to be an idle phrase.

A modern writer has advised us to "hitch our wagon to a star," and in this way we seek to follow the "bright and morning star." This is Christ in us, the hope of glory.

When I look around upon the efforts to compel a measure of equality of burden bearing—suing the load to the ability to carry, and thus alleviating in a measure the social and economic ills of the day, and this through private charities, income and inheritance taxes, mothers' pensions or compensation laws, I can not help but rejoice in the fact that in this ideal "kingdom of God," which we are called to bring forth and prepare, all these things will be more than attained when we live up to our ideals. And sometimes I ask the question, Is this effort, or are these efforts of the world the visible working of the "little leaven" that was placed in the measure of meal with the publication of these ideals?

Christ has said, "I give unto you to be the light of the world." And surely the spectacle of a people devoting their lives to this work, willingly placing themselves in the attitude of brethren, where all are equal before God and man, where every mother may have an opportunity to care for her own children, and every child may have an equal opportunity for educational and vocational advantages (see Doctrine and Covenants, section 82) because of the love for the brethren (for no other cause can possibly bring about this willingness, and by this "we know that we have passed from death unto life,") must be a more effective lesson of the power of the gospel for salvation than all the written or spoken sermons that may ever be preached.

Paul has said that "it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing," and surely no more worthy cause could engage our endeavors, a cause that once fully established will bring the result that the father and mother need have no other anxiety for the future of their household than that they shall be so reared that they shall be good citizens of the "kingdom of God."

A KINGDOM NOT TO BE MOVED.

When this is done, and not until then, will we receive "a kingdom that can not be moved." Isaiah contemplating this work declares that:

When the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever. And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places.—Isaiah 32: 15-18.

May the Master assist us to be true to the ideals set before us, and not only pray "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," but give a practical example to the world of faith and works so uniting that men shall be constrained to acknowledge the truth of Paul's allegation that the gospel is in very deed "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."

I thank God for the ideals given to us in this latter-day work, the precursor of the latter-day glory.

Of General Interest

PROTEST DECADENCE.

[The following sermon delivered by Cardinal William H. O'Connell in the Cathedral of the Holy Cross, Boston, Massachusetts, January 18, is of interest as indicating the hold Catholicism has upon its devotees, and as a discussion of Protestant decadence and causes leading thereto.—EDITORS.]

This beautiful feast of the holy name of Jesus affords another opportunity to all our good Catholic men to prove to the world that the faith is as strong in their hearts and souls and minds as it was in their fathers' who died rather than betray it.

CATHOLIC CONSTANCY.

Every day in the year the Catholic is a Christian. Every Sunday in the year our churches are crowded to the doors, not once but many times, at several services, by earnest, fervent worshipers, and thousands upon thousands approach the altar to partake of the holy communion, which is at the same time the pledge of their love of God and the stimulus and support of their sincere faith.

But to-day we see a special demonstration of this spiritual activity in the wonderful outpouring of Christian manhood which gathers here and in every community throughout the whole diocese to prove to the world that the church still lives, that true faith never dies.

What a spectacle to behold! This vast cathedral thronged with the hosts of Christian men of every walk of life, of every nationality, of every avocation. This is the true democracy which the Christian faith alone can plant and nourish.

PROTESTANT DISINTEGRATION.

Look abroad and behold the contrast. The temples of other creeds are deserted and forsaken. Every day we see new proofs of a disintegration of sects and denominations once numerous and influential.

A mere handful sits in the chilly churches which once housed flourishing congregations. Millions are growing up without even an intelligent knowledge of God, of Christ, of religion, of spiritual life. The press, the stage, the street are flooded with living proofs of a spiritual decadence which can bring only social and national ruin.

MORAL DEGENERACY.

The play, the magazine, the ballroom, all give evidence of an ever-increasing disregard of even the rudiments of common decency of dress, of deportment, of conversation and of conduct.

Little by little the bars have been lowered, letting out the few influences which held society in restraint, and letting in a very flood of folly, or insatiate greed for amusement of any and every kind, until what even a few years ago would make a decent woman blush to see in others has become so common that even decent women now accept it as matter of fact for themselves and their daughters.

We need be neither prude nor Puritan to see and to realize that something is passing in the heart and the mind of the women of to-day which is leaving them hard and unwomanly, and that year by year this transformation goes on until, if it continues, there will be neither home nor family nor normal womanly nature left.

If this is the new woman, then God spare us from any further development of an abnormal creature! Certainly this is not the Catholic woman.

Thank God, the woman who is true to her faith is not easily influenced by these modern fads of a new paganism. She has her standards, and she stands by them unchanged.

CHURCH IMPOTENCY.

And what, in the last analysis, is the cause of all this moral degeneracy evident on all sides? Why, it is simply the natural result of the decay of even the external semblance of Christianity outside the church.

For fifty years we have witnessed a battle royal against all those principles which held together what was left of Christianity among those who had deserted the true faith.

The preacher was derided, his sermons plucked to pieces, the Bible was dissected and torn page by page until nothing but the cloth cover is now left. The rich controlled the pulpit, and the sermon did not attract the poor—and without the poor there never can be a church.

The minister was paid starvation wages to preach sermons which extolled the virtues of coal barons and steel kings and oil emperors. Even royal salaries can not produce sincerity in a preacher. And no man could go on for long leaving out of his sermon the only thing his soul longed to say—that Christ came to bring justice to the suffering, and that riches are oftentimes the result of injustice to some one. So the poor deserted these temples of a cold, respectable creed, where the pews were owned by stockholders and the pulpit controlled by wealth.

Without sincerity in the pulpit and poor in the pews there never has been, there never can be, any moral influence in any church. And so no wonder to-day they are empty. No wonder the few sincere men, doubtless in good faith, struggling to keep alive the little spark of Christianity left in their congregations, are disheartened.

AN APOSTATE LEADERSHIP.

But if the Bible is nothing but a bit of Oriental poetry, if faith is only superstition, if, as again and again we have been told by some of the intellectuals, miracles and magic are all the same, and God is an electric current, then what wonder that the churches are empty, and what wonder that men refuse to think any more of God, or of religion, or of moral law!

The leaders of this false and crude intellectualism have lost all that is best in life. They have killed the heart in men—because they themselves have no heart.

What do they know of real life—they who have never for a single day lived among the poor, the laborer, the struggling artisan—they whose whole existence has been spent among chemical formulas or in the prim sedateness of a university board meeting, where an error in grammar is a mortal sin and where a soft voice passes for conviction and principle!

Why, this is all sham. How can men who know nothing of hearts, nothing of feeling, nothing of the trials of poverty, of affliction, whose whole creed is a conceited notion of their own importance, and whose whole life is a sort of flawless cycle, know anything of real life, of real need, moral and spiritual, in fact, what can they know of real men?

If they would confine themselves to chemistry we should have some respect for their opinions. But when they invent a new religion each year—a thing which is as old as error and has nothing of religion in it—they simply make themselves ridiculous.

THE OLD RELIGION.

We men of the Holy Name need no go-to-church-Sunday—and we need and will have nothing of a new religion and their conceited inventions.

Let men find the old and only religion—the Christian faith which has answered to every need of every man in every age—let them find a sincere pulpit, a preacher who seeks to know the doctrine as Christ taught it; let him speak that out in love and tenderness to the poor, the wayward, the struggling; let him look over the heads of the merely respectable who have only selfishness for their creed; let him go to the homes of those who need to hear the consoling words of Christ and not the conceited invention of some professor of chemistry, and then the churches will be filled to overflowing as ours are, as this cathedral is to-day.

Let them all drop the fads and frills of a false social and moral standard of life and get down to the hearts of men and of things.

We are tired to death of theories which never solve anything and only breed confusion. The world is being talked to death, with a new sociology and a new religion and a new system of pedagogy at the end of every public dinner.

Amid all this riot of talk, who can really think? It is thought, not talk, that is most wanted and most needed. It is consideration of old and eternal truths, eternal and immutable, that will bring back to those even outside the true church respect for Christian principles and Christian ideals.

So, men of the Holy Name, stand where you are, fixed and firm, bound heart and hand to the cross of Christ. The so-called progress about you is only the whirling in a circle of minds which have lost the value of standards.

The holy name of Jesus, the cross of Christ, the voice of God sounding across the centuries ever the same, these are no changeful and variable signs—they are the stars of heaven, fixed and shining, to lead you through life to eternity with God.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

"Fashions and Health."

The following is taken from the editorial columns of a recent issue of the Chicago Tribune:

"Five out of every six women students of the University of California, it is announced by the women's department of physical education at that institution, were upon examination found to be afflicted with flat feet or broken arches. High heels are assigned as the cause. Last year, it is stated, there was 'an epidemic of deranged internal organs' caused by tight lacing.

"Curvature of the spine is common among the girl students of the institution. Crooked necks, crooked spines, round shoulders, and flat chests show a decided increase. The blame for this ruin of women's figures is thrown upon Dame Fashion, which, it is alleged, encourages the 'slouchy pose' as the acme of attraction in carriage.

"When a certain class of reformers decry the fashions of the day as detrimental to good morals they are not always able to prove their case. The charge, however, that extremes in fashion are undermining the health of women is in this instance based not upon sentiment but upon scientific measurements, taken by a specialist in physical training. It would seem as if this ought to encourage at least a modicum of common sense in fashions."

"The Arch of the Foot."

The Mother's Magazine for March contains an article by a manufacturer of shoes, who introduces his subject by calling attention to the fact that, because of his occupation, he may be credited with having considerable interest in the human foot.

After quoting from the paper of a noted physician which was read before the Chicago Medical Society the statement that the majority of girls enter life with weak spines, and, through neglect or ignorance, lead lives which do not add to their spinal strength, the shoe manufacturer comments, "Probably it has not occurred to mothers of girls who suffer from spinal weakness how much the arch of the foot and the character of the shoes they wear have to do with spinal irritation."

After describing the anatomy of the human foot, he says, "Any undue confinement of these bones will make trouble with every nerve of the body." He informs us that the spring in the arch of the foot is intended to remove from all the upper organs of the body, shocks from concussion. He points out the pernicious results that may follow excessive skipping of the rope on hard pavements, or careless jumping from elevations of considerable height down to hard surface. He says that, though immediate harm may not follow from the shock, the foundation can be thus laid for future serious spinal irritation. He asserts that a trained athlete will not jump on a hard surface, or, if he can possibly avoid it, run on one.

The shoe-man adds that though the baby girl's foot at birth is not quite so strong as that of a boy, it is quite possible for a young girl to develop the arch of her foot into as great strength as a boy's without losing lightness or gracefulness of movement on the feet. He suggests a simple exercise, quite well known to the children of the kindergarten, where the body is built up in harmony with the mind.

This is the exercise for a little girl of six: Stand erect on the bare feet every morning after leaving the bed and raise the body twenty times on the toes. The body must be erect, the shoulders easily squared, the hands and arms by the sides of the body, heels and foot-arch lifted fairly off the floor as the weight of the body is lifted on the toes.

It is claimed that "at six years of age, twenty movements of this kind, three hundred and sixty-five days of the year, will be sufficient to give the arch new sustaining powers." At ten years of age, the toe-raising movement may be increased to fifty uplifts each morning, and, at fifteen and sixteen, to one hundred or one hundred and fifty.

"The exercise has then become a helpful habit which will never be dispensed with during life. It is a feature of this exercise that, although a young woman may be on her feet all day in certain kinds of work or pleasure and awake the next morning somewhat languid, two or three minutes of the evenly regulated toe-raising will send the blood coursing through her veins."

As a closing paragraph we quote from the remarks of the shoe-man: "High heels, narrow toes, binding insteps, cramping overlaps, in shoes, no matter how attractive an appearance they give to the foot, are deadly enemies to a girl's nerves and her spine. Dizziness, cramps, trembling limbs, impeded circulation of the blood, indigestion, chills, have all been authoritatively traced to these causes, to say nothing of peevishness and bad temper. The arch of the foot needs an extreme of freedom, and unless it can have it, distortion, in more senses of the word than one, follows."

The War Against the Paris Fashions.

The latest issue of the Ladies' Home Journal contains the following editorial item of comment:

"These are not pleasant days for the once-dominant Paris dressmakers. With their American imports shrunken some three million dollars, with London and Madrid and Milan up in arms against the so-called 'Paris fashions,' now comes a body blow from the French people themselves. The women outside of Paris have decreed against the fashions of 'The City of Light.' Say those women: 'If Paris wants to be ridiculous let it be so without us, but let us register our resentment and our secession.' And in comment thereon a writer in a leading Paris journal, Le Petit Journal, says:

"That pleases us. It is proof that if the Parisiennes are ready to submit to all the ridiculous follies of fashion, there are, thank God, some women still in France who have some common sense and enough good taste left to resist!"

"It is well for the American women to know that the French women do not dress according to the Paris dress-makers."

The Diaphanous Gown.

"The present-day modes of feminine wearing apparel were recently attacked with considerable vigor by the W. C. T. U. of Cuyahoga County, assembled in convention at Cleveland, Ohio, and the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, Many women are given to immodesty, as expressed in wearing apparel, and

"Whereas, This body believes such a practice tends toward the demoralization of society, the destruction of homes and the extension of the white slave traffic; therefore,

"Be it resolved, That we condemn all transparent wearing apparel or any other kind which unduly exposes the form or figure of women, and take a stand for simplicity and modesty, which are expressions of character in dress."

"The Federated Women's Clubs and the Congress of Mothers, Cleveland, Ohio, expressed their sympathy with the movement, and steps are being taken to effect a change in styles by appealing to the designers themselves. If this method is unsuccessful, other means will be used. The W. C. T. U. hopes to make this campaign against transparent apparel and 'demoralizing' styles, country-wide."

GREENWOOD, WEST VIRGINIA, February 11, 1914.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column: While I sit thinking of responsibilities of parents, my soul seems to stir within me to think of the many, many temptations that confront our little ones, in the work and out of it. Oh! what are we doing to overwhelm the evil and fill it with love for the Master and his work?

I have four little ones, two girls and two boys, whose ages range from four to fourteen. The oldest is in the church. I often wish I could talk with the mothers; for I feel so weak within myself; nevertheless I realize that the Lord will direct our minds in wisdom's ways, if we will only trust him.

My prayers always are that I may have patience to direct my children and be a mother to all other children in giving good counsel. I feel that the time is fast hastening on, and that we must be ready with oil in our lamps, trimmed and burning. Oh, are we doing all we can for the Master, or are we going with the tide?

I sincerely desire to do some good, but I feel so limited in my ability. It is a comfort to know that the Lord knows my desire. There are so many different things to battle with. Are we fighting the fight of faith?

"O, for a faith that will not shrink
Though pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe!"

Dear Saints, I read, but it does not satisfy me. It only makes me more hungry. It is like holding food before me, just out of my reach. My soul hungers for more.

This is my first letter, and I hope it may do some good to some one. Pray for our little branch that we may all work in greater unity than ever before.

Your sister in the battle for good,
FLORENCE WILLIAMS.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN MARCH.

Parents' Day.—Prayer for our families and for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred outside of the church. Pray that we may all have greater growth in spirituality and a greater sense of parental responsibility, that the homes of the Saints may be model Christian homes.

Lesson in Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 44-49. Memory verse, Jacob 2: 49.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sister N. Napier, of Sacramento, California, has for years been afflicted with poor hearing, and a severe cold has caused it to be worse this winter. She writes, "I so earnestly desire my hearing that I hope every Saint who reads this will plead with our heavenly Father in my behalf."

Sister L. Twaddle requests prayers for her son, seventeen years old, who is seriously ill with pneumonia.

Letter Department

CLYDE, MISSOURI, January 30, 1914.

Editors Herald: Unknown in the flesh, but known by the ties of the gospel, I feel to extend my thanks to you for the good you have done me. Your editorials are grand. They are edifying and strengthening to me, and I hope to a good many others.

The gospel is like unto a well of water that never goes dry. You can continually draw from it and still there is plenty.

We can never learn too much of our Savior. The more we learn of him the more we desire to learn of him. The more we become like him, the more we realize that this life is only a preparation for the rest in the world to come. In the thirty-six years I have been in the church I have learned that by continually looking into the perfect law of liberty, there is liberty to be found and blessings to be obtained.

I thank God for the many noble men and women that he has raised up to help and bless their fellow men. Brother W. E. Peak has been here, and was holding meetings; but on account of sickness he found it necessary to go home. I hope he will soon be able to return. He is a man I think much of; a man, I believe, whom the church can trust. He leaves a person feeling better than he finds him. At least that is the way it seems to me.

Our little branch here at Bedison is getting along very nicely. We have not yet reached perfection. Oh how slowly we progress! I hope we will remember our God and our duties daily.

Pray that God's Spirit may always be with us, that the things of this world may not take all our attention, and we serve God only when we have time.

Your brother,

A. JENSEN.

COYOTE, MONTANA, January 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: I wish to thank the Saints for their kindness and earnest prayers offered in behalf of Sister Waterman. She has left us to mourn and wait till our change comes. We were hoping and praying that we might cross the border together; but the Lord ruled otherwise, and so we conclude that Sister Waterman was better prepared to go. We trust that the severe trial may help us to be more humble and pure, that we may be more worthy of the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

Sister Waterman suffered more or less through life. When but a girl she was left to support and minister alone to her afflicted mother, whom she buried at Hereford, England. During this period she was an earnest worker in the Methodist Sunday school and class room. As Patriarch Keeler said, her life had been one of consecration to God. In London, England, she worked at the millinery trade and cared for two children, while her husband was at Birmingham preaching the gospel from house to house. During this time she buried our first-born son. Her clothes trunk to-day contains the little straw hat that Willie wore. Mother love never dies.

Brother E. E. Keeler was here in 1911 and left us a blessing that has made life more tolerable and has increased our love for God and each other.

Last fall bishop's agent Reese called on us to see what we would do to remove the church debt. I was sad that we could not do anything, but Sister Waterman smiled and took from a hiding place two dollars she had been saving for an emergency fund. That was given Brother Reese. I think Sister Waterman is worthy a place beside the widow who cast her mite into the treasury at Jerusalem.

To those who think that Sister Waterman should have been removed from here ere this, let me say that the physician who attended her said that to have saved her life an operation should have been performed three years ago. This she would not submit to. Sister Waterman has been raised from death's door almost instantaneously in the past. Her departure now is manifestly God's will, or the prayers of the faithful would have prevailed. The Lord is almighty, and his will alone must prevail. Although my feelings are painful, I could not and would not wish her here to suffer more.

Our children, Archie and Nellie, came in time to help soothe her pain, and, though we sorrow, it is not without hope in the first resurrection. This promise was given to us both; it is one of our comforts, and leaves us with a stronger desire to endure unto the end.

May the Lord help us all, and finally wipe tears from all faces.

In hope,

WILLIAM WATERMAN.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church two years. My husband is a minister. He goes to Oelwein twice a month. I am blind. This is my own handwriting. I am doing my best to serve the Lord. I can do all kinds of house work.

MRS. WESTON.

MOSS POINT, MISSISSIPPI, February 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD for December 24, there appeared a request for prayers in behalf of Brother J. J. Miller. I want to say to the Saints that God has taken him home to his rest to await the resurrection.

He had December 19 set apart as a fast day in his behalf. He made this request three weeks before he passed away. The night he died, December 19, he requested that we spend the night in prayer and testimony meeting. On the back of a tablet he had we found the date of his death recorded, December 19, 1914, in his handwriting. When it was recorded we do not know.

I request the Saints to pray for my mother, as she is well stricken in years, and heartbroken over the loss of our earthly father and her companion.

May God bless the Saints everywhere and answer their prayers. Pray for me that I may be faithful in the service of the Master.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church over three years, but have fallen back considerably. I desire the special prayers of all HERALD readers that I may be able to overcome that which I am not able to bear.

I am negotiating for a home joining our church here at Pleasant Valley Branch.

I was baptized by Brother Charles Cooper, at Carbon Hill, Hocking County, Ohio, December 21, 1910. I am thirty-six years old and have a wife and three children. Pray for me that I may do my duty in the church and be of some service to God.

I shall continue to pray for this latter-day work so long as the Lord wills that I shall live.

CLITHERALL, MINNESOTA, February 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Union Branch is trying to help the work along up in this region of country. I think the branch in general is more interested in seeing things move along lines of usefulness than it has been for quite a while. Brother B. S. Lambkin has been with us. His teachings are the kind that are productive of good and will if followed result in placing the Saints on higher ground.

There have been some changes in the officers in our branch. Brother Lester Whiting is branch president instead of the writer; he has the respect and confidence of all.

We are looking forward to the time of our reunion, which will be held in June. We want to make it the best ever held in Minnesota. We hope all the Saints will be on hand, bringing the good Spirit with them. If we do this God will not fail to do his part, and thus success and great good will result.

I have been in this work something like nine years; I have never regretted the step. I am very thankful that God saw fit to call me from darkness and heresy to the marvelous light which came into my soul when I united with the church. I had the testimony that I pleased God. I had the evidence that I did right. I had the testimony that I was completely born of water and Spirit, in harmony with the law of God. I, like others, have been visited with the Holy Spirit until I have been able to bear testimony to what I have received, and that this work is indeed of God. God has spoken to me through the Holy Spirit to the effect that this is his church, the bride, the Lamb's wife, who is making herself ready.

I feel that it is little I can accomplish, compared to what others are qualified to do. I am thankful we have such able men in the church, who are prepared to give us meat in due season. It seems to me that there was never a time in the history of the church when the need was greater for good earnest workers to carry on the work, get the people in fit condition, and bring about the preparation necessary to make ready to meet Christ when he comes in flaming fire.

We need to put from us everything that stands in the way, and become fully reconciled to God and his work. Yes, this we must do, and never cease until he says it is enough. If we are not sanctified by the law of Christ we must inherit another kingdom; we must make the choice.

I love to feast upon the good things that come to us in the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. I do not see how anyone can get along and expect to keep in touch with the work without these white-winged messengers, freighted with gospel food.

My desire is that the peace of God that passeth understanding be and abide with us all till the end. If we walk in the light as he, Christ, is in the light, then the blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin.

LURETT WHITING.

ON BOARD THE TRAIN, February 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: We journey westward to the big State of Montana, once the home of the buffalo, now noted as the home of the homesteader. Our hearts beat with joy as we anticipate meeting loved ones again, father and mother, brothers and sisters, and those lately arriving into the family circle. But while all this makes us happy, we stop, look back, and our hearts cry out for others of our loved ones we leave behind.

We think, too, of the little band of Saints and friends that were waving us farewell as long as we could see. We think not only of their kind words that were accompanied by honest tears as we parted at the train, but we think further back, of the years we labored together in the kingdom of God, how they were always ready to give a helping hand to wife and baby while I was out in my mission work, and thoughtful they always were of the missionary's needs, proving themselves disciples indeed.

We think of the day we were organized into a branch, few in number, with only one officer, and of how we were told through prophecy that soon we would have a full set of officers and others added to the fold. We remember that in harmony with his promise the Lord called one to the office of elder; moved upon Brother Pinkerton, then a priest, to move to Belvidere, to assist in building up the work, and who has since been ordained an elder, proving himself a very efficient branch president; that Brother Daer was ordained teacher, and later an elder; that Brother Darmon was ordained a teacher, and last Sunday a priest, his worthy son Edwin being called to succeed him in his former office. Surely the Lord has blessed us all, and has been pleased with the Belvidere Branch. Then we think of the twenty and more true, noble souls that have obeyed the gospel, and are now strong in the work. Saints, it is good to love and be loved by such as these.

We shall long remember the last day (Sunday, February 2) we spent with them. It was a busy day, indeed, so necessarily a happy one. We drove some six or seven miles out into the country and baptized two promising young souls, were back into town in time for sacrament service, where the Lord was with us in power, speaking to us through the gift of prophecy, helping us to appreciate more and more the restored gospel. Brother Pinkerton and I ordained Brother William Darmon a priest and Edwin Darmon a deacon, confirmed the two baptized, administered to the sick and attended preaching that evening.

The following evening wife, baby and I started for our new home. While we shall live in a State far away from blessed Illinois, our zeal in the gospel, we think, will be none the less. Were there no life beyond the grave, the true happiness we have enjoyed in the gospel work on this side makes us feel that life would be empty without it, so we expect to go at it harder than ever, and hope to keep ourselves humble and clean, so the Lord can use us wherever he will.

May the dear Saints who have always been so thoughtful of us still remember us in their prayers.

Yours in bonds, J. A. BRONSON.

VANSCOY, SASKATCHEWAN, February 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: In February, 1910, while in Caribou, Maine, I had a dream. I seemed to be before three doors. Something told me that in one of the rooms behind those doors an important event would take place. Going to the first door, I extended my right hand and opened it. I then opened the second. When I came to the third I understood that whatever was to take place would take place there. I reached out my hand to the knob, saying, Lord have mercy on me. I turned the knob with difficulty. The door opened heavily. A handsome woman dressed in white approached me. She did not speak, nor did I. I ran swiftly up what seemed to be a stairway, narrow and straight and brilliantly lighted.

Now let the doors represent years, one, two, and three. After the third year, or during the third year I would meet the beautiful woman and enter upon the straight and narrow way leading upward into the light. In November, 1913, I went to work for Brother Clark, who had been baptized a few days before. At his request I went to church with him one night, and in that brief hour learned more than I had learned all my life at other churches. After attending four or five meetings I was baptized.

Referring to the dream, my baptism occurred within a day or two of three years from the time of my dream.

Dear Saints, my heart is in the work. Though very weak, I can thank my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ for his goodness and love toward me. He has guided me through the door and into the straight and narrow way, and I find myself among Saints and in a very nice branch, the Minnesota Branch, near Vanscoy, Saskatchewan.

I find when I search the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants that a great and marvelous work is about to be done, that we must be faithful, and reason one with another and do that which is right and pleasing in the sight of God; we must all be of one mind.

I thank God that he has guided me to this work of latter days. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may hold out faithfully, and receive a crown of righteousness and reign with God on earth a thousand years.

Hoping to be with you all hereafter, I am,
Yours for service,

THOMAS W. PRICE.

ITHACA, NEW YORK, February 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: Having been placed in charge of the Religio home department for New York District, we take this means of getting in touch with its scattered members.

We think every church member should have a knowledge of the good things contained in the Doctrine and Covenants, and that is where our Religio lessons are taken from at present.

The Quarterlies are so nicely arranged that anyone who can not meet with a session of Religio can very conveniently study the lesson at home, either in a neighborhood class, in family circle, or even by himself. The lessons are very interesting just now, dealing with the financial law of the church, something in which we all should be well informed.

If this meets the eye of any church member in this district who is not supplied with a Religio Quarterly and already at work on it, please send me a card stating that you wish to begin this study, and I will send you a Quarterly, membership card, and report envelope at once.

Don't put it off or you will miss the best lessons of the quarter. Our district is a little behind in this. Let us catch up. In this way everyone can be a full-fledged member of Religio.

Daughter and I are located at Ithaca, where she is taking her last college year in famous Cornell, and though so far from any of the Saints, we have not lost interest in the work. We have favored some of the churches and Sunday schools every Sunday with our presence, and never miss an opportunity to let the people know who we are, what we are, and why we are—when they give us time for the last. Those who have had like experience can imagine the interesting times we have had.

We have both been called on at different times to give talks to the Sunday schools. Once I gave them a short talk on our missionary work among the Indians, in which I related some of our experiences among the Tuscaroras while in tent work last summer, emphasizing the fact that our funds and energies are needed in our own land as well as among the heathen of foreign countries.

On one occasion, by request the daughter gave a talk on social conditions among the young people of Mormondom, which effort made her unexpectedly notorious. On the day previous the man who had made the request upon his own authority was harassed by continual censure and his phone kept incessantly singing with reproaches for thinking to permit a Mormon girl fresh from Utah to air her doctrines before the young people of the Sunday school. So on Sunday morning as he introduced her he apologetically added, "Of course, we trust that Miss Chase's good judgment will keep her from expounding her personal belief." Naturally, Miss Chase was quick to explain that her belief was not Mormonism, and as can be imagined after all this advertising she did not lack for an audience. People came in from other Sunday schools. Even yet among university students she hears herself referred to as the girl who gave the lecture on Mormonism.

We have succeeded in placing the Book of Mormon and Autumn Leaves in the city library, and while A. M. was home for Thanksgiving he carried up our church histories to be deposited for public use. We wish some one could make a donation of these books as a gift to the library. This college city with its six thousand students should have access to those books.

Trusting we may hear soon from those interested in Religio we remain,

Very sincerely your sister in the gospel,
445 NORTH TIOGA STREET. MRS. A. M. CHASE.

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, February 7, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are among the scattered Saints. We have for some time contemplated moving into a branch where the family can have church privileges. We would be grateful to hear from Saints living in Florida or other of the Southern States where there are branches of our church as to the climatic conditions, crops grown, prices of land; also from Saints living near Los Angeles, Fullerton, Pasadena, or in the San Joaquin Valley, California. We are a family of six, all members of the church. I am a competent carpenter. We live on a farm.

We are in the midst of people who seem to care nothing for the gospel of Christ. There are a few tongue-talking Holiness people here who have no use for any church organization. While their spirit has told them that the spirit that is with the Saints is the same that they possess, yet they have no use for the true gospel.

We have lived here about fourteen years, and are longing to move on a fruit farm in California or Florida with our stock, with the privilege of buying.

With love to all Saints, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,
THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

EROS, LOUISIANA, February 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: I was baptized July 25, 1909, by Brother Heman Fuller, at Eros, Louisiana. After pondering over the matter and praying for a year I became convinced that this was the true church of Christ. Since being in the church I have seen the sick healed almost instantly under the hands of the elders. Though I have wandered in many by and forbidden paths, yet I know that this is God's eternal truth. I have never wandered so far as to have lost all hope.

We were visited by Brother James Smith and Brother J. T. Riley in December. They preached many interesting sermons, which gave us all great encouragement. We feel that we should be entitled to the blessings God has promised to the children of men, but we look about us and see many things that we have left undone. We can truthfully say that God has been merciful toward us.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that I turn not back, but press on in this warfare of life little by little until I become useful in the service of God. I desire to raise my three little children to be useful in the hands of God. This place is like many others, it is trying for Latter Day Saints. There are churches of different denominations.

We have a little branch of about forty members. We have prayer meeting most every other Sunday at Brother W. H. Fuller's. Some of us are striving to keep the campfire burning, though sometimes it seems almost to go out. But we ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be successful workers, and be redeemed at the final consummation with the blessed of all ages.

Love is an abiding principle of righteousness. That we may love one another is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

J. L. GRyder.

NEW LISKEARD, ONTARIO, February 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are having very stormy weather in this north land just now, and expect it right on till spring. We are getting along finely in this branch, and expect with God's help to accomplish much in the future.

Elder Ribbel has baptized about ten about New Liskeard, and is now laboring in a place called Thornloe, about twelve miles north of here. We had Elder John Shields with us for a couple of weeks at Christmas, and were encouraged by his work among us. We also had Elder Pycock for a time last summer, under whose hands I received baptism along with Brother William Shields. This branch is in a fair way to go ahead, and if we as Saints are faithful and work we will be able to overcome any evil tendencies that are inclined to retard our progress.

There is a large field for work in this country. Although difficulties are numerous and poor roads a great hindrance, yet in the near future all the obstacles may be overcome. Elder Pycock and the others who have visited us gave us renewed courage to go on, and their able exposition of the truth as contained in God's word is a great blessing to us all. I think the truth is more acceptable to the people in this new country than in older settled parts of the province. The people in the north live nearer to nature and consequently are more easily attracted to and have a longing for nature's God.

New Liskeard is near the world famous mining camp of Cobalt, and all around us are evidences of the wonders of the Creator who formed all things by the work of his power.

That the good work may go on to perfection is my prayer,
Your brother,

W. B. BORTLEMAN.

OTTER LAKE, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: The work is progressing here. Oh, how I rejoice when I think of the plan of God and his love for humanity.

I was baptized by Elder Knisley, at Walkerville, Ontario. Shortly thereafter I was impressed to move to Otter Lake, Michigan, where some of my relatives lived. In doing this I gave up my occupation as a railway conductor, and could see nothing but hard work and small wages to support a wife and four children. My companion and children were disheartened when they thought of leaving the city, and especially when they saw me take up the spade and go into the ditch to make a living.

However, I was not long here until through the influence of the Master and my feeble efforts my brother, W. A. Jones, was brought to see the light of the beautiful gospel. Elder

William Davis was sent for, as there were no Saints in this place. The brother and his wife were baptized. So the work was started. Later some friends were added. Another brother and wife were baptized. Then Elder William Collins, of Flint, Michigan, came and baptized one of my daughters. Brother R. D. Weaver came later. He was at that time officiating as a priest. He did much good for the cause. He baptized four, including my aged father. Later Elder Hutchings, of Flint, was with us and did some good work, baptizing three. Another was baptized by Brother J. Jones.

Now, last, but not least, Brother G. Washburn, of Flint, came among us. The community was very much agitated. They took their Bibles from the shelves and compared them with the one Brother Washburn used. They were talking Bible in their homes, on the streets and roadsides, in shops and places where the Bible was not before thought of. Two were baptized and more seemed almost ready. Brother Washburn then had to return home. Others labored here whom I have not mentioned, but they are remembered.

The Lord works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. We have now twenty-six Saints in this place, but no branch as yet. We have a good Sunday school and Religion. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the children of God that my faith fail not. May the work advance everywhere.

Your brother in Christ,

F. L. JONES.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, February 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: We of the Springfield Branch at the beginning of the New Year have examined ourselves and made a silent vow that we will in the year to come strive to come up higher and keep the whole law; and we are getting results. Our attendance at all the services is better; our prayer meetings are more spiritual; our preaching is more spiritual, edifying, and uplifting; and for all this we have reason to rejoice. The future looks brighter and more hopeful in this branch than for a long time. Our young Saints are active and alive to the work; the old are shaking off the coals from their garments and are arising in the strength of their might. May the Lord be praised! The Saints in our branch to-day listened to one of the best talks by our sixteen-year-old presiding teacher on the work and purpose of the church that it has ever been my lot to hear. He also outlined the duty of the Saints in keeping the whole law. He suggested how the Saints might avoid the troublesome things to come as a consequence of the closing scenes of earth. It was soul inspiring. We would admonish all Saints to look into their lives and see where they could add to their faith.

I have been in the church sixteen years. I was one of Campbell's followers, and for many years thought I was right; but finally I began to look at the church I was in with a view to proving all things. In this endeavor I went up against a difficult proposition, and found that all I had was a man-made institution. When I began to look about I found others in the same condition.

In consulting with two of our preachers on certain things found in the Bible, I was told that they were no longer needed; that the canon of Scripture was full; that which was perfect had come on the day of Pentecost, and was now operating through the written word in the hearts of those who believed. As I had not been blessed with the Spirit after baptism I began to think there was something wrong with me or with the promises found in the Scripture. So I asked why the signs did not follow the believer. I was told that those blessings were only for the apostles. Believing at that time that the educated ministry should know, I became skeptical because the Savior said he would send the Comforter, even the Spirit of truth, and that it would guide into all truth, and I was told that the promise was only to the apostles.

This answer was the "straw that broke the camel's back" and I began to read Holiness literature. They taught that the signs followed the believer. So far, so good. But other things they taught were inconsistent. I finally concluded that faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins were Bible doctrine. These they ignored. I believed that by good works we must develop into full-grown men and women in Christ. They taught that sanctification would remove the carnal nature and we would become immediately perfect. That looked to me like a young wasp, bigger when first born than at any time thereafter.

The teachings of others were just as inconsistent, so I made myself believe that all had gone astray, or that the Bible was false. I concluded not to pay the preachers any more for teaching something I did not believe, and made up my mind to do the best I could and leave the result with God. The church tried to show me that I had foolish ideas, but failed.

I found this a terrible condition to be in. Just think of going through this life without hope! I often thought, What will be my condition when death comes? It was not a pleasant scene to meditate, you may be sure.

About this time my health began to fail, with no hope of a change, for I was an inveterate tobacco and coffee user and meat eater. The church I was in had never taught against these things, for the good preachers used them and were often more interested in their salary than in the flock.

In this condition, without hope of a better day, the gospel found me. The very first sermon brought to me new life and hope. I went to hear through curiosity, least expecting to hear anything that would satisfy more than a morbid curiosity. I shall ever remember that time as one of the brightest spots in my life.

I had heard and read of the "Mormons" for years, and expected to hear and be fed on more chaff like I had received all my life. But, thanks to God, as the truth began to be unfolded by the aid of God's Holy Spirit, light sprang up and began to illuminate my darkened mind. It was food for my hungry soul. And when the full light of the latter-day gospel, even the angel's message, was turned on I said, If this is what the world calls "Mormonism" I want more of it. I received more of it and found it to be no idle tale, but the old Jerusalem gospel which had illuminated the minds of the ancient worthies from Adam to John the Revelator.

In reading the sealed book I received a testimony that was light and knowledge that I could not gainsay or reject, and had no desire to set aside. The result was that I was baptized by a servant of God in harmony with the divine injunction. After being confirmed, the light of the restored gospel began to shine out in all its effulgence and glory; and by the aid of the God of heaven I could lay aside tobacco and other useless and harmful appetites and habits, so that to-day at the age of sixty-five I am hale and healthy, and surely have a hope that reaches beyond the veil and a testimony that the world can not receive.

But with all this I see I am not perfect yet, for the reason that I have not kept the whole law, as God's people must do before Zion can be redeemed. Saints, we as a people are found wanting when we do not keep the law. Shall we retrograde or move up? By all means let us be true Saints, and rally to the standard with our tithing and surplus and godly living.

My experience in the gospel work is that the one who keeps the temporal law as well as the spiritual is the one who is most blessed spiritually. I firmly believe that if the church were faithfully keeping the whole law when we meet in our social meetings we would receive many demonstrations of the Spirit that we do not receive; that when the Saints called the elders they would receive the blessing, where they now often fail to receive. God perfected his great plan and purpose before he revealed it to mortal man; and if we want to realize the benefit of that plan we must accept the conditions.

If our faith prompts us to pay our tithing and give our surplus into the Bishop's hands, God is bound and will come to our rescue in time of need. The gospel is a business proposition; it is simple, reasonable, and just; it will lift us up above the environments that now surround us, and will help us to live by every word that God has given.

How can I say I love this great latter-day gospel and not give God his part of my earnings, that my brother who is struggling against odds might be relieved of his burden? If I have two houses and need only one, I should consecrate the other; if you have two farms and need only one, you should consecrate the other; if we have money that we do not need, we should consecrate it. Then if we are in need—the Lord's storehouse is open to us. If we do not do this we are not converted.

I have no fears of the final outcome of this great latter-day work. If I fall out it will move on. If I stay in and do my duty I can help it along. So can you. Let us rally to the standard and with our surplus as well as our prayers stand by those who are leading the army of the Lord up to where we can look over and see the glories of the promised land.

May God add his blessing and help us to come up higher where he can best use us in our different callings.

Still in the conflict,

J. W. QUINLEY.

DIXONVILLE, ALABAMA, February 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: A goodly number in this district are still in the faith, and trying in their weak way to do something for the Master. I long to see our people become more interested and more spiritual and prayerful, so we may receive more of the blessings promised to the faithful and the good.

There is nothing that affords me greater pleasure than to be where I can attend all the church services. I have been doing all I could in my weak way, with the poor opportunity I have had to serve the Lord. All I have to regret is that I could not do more. Sometimes we have things to meet that we do not understand. I have been working in the church for the last five or six years, missing only a few Sundays on account of sickness.

I became very ill, and was finally taken to the hospital. I was operated on twice and lay for five weeks in a critical condition, not knowing whether or not I would ever again meet with our good people. But by the prayers and faith of the Saints and the help of the Lord I recovered. I can now attend Sunday school again and teach my sweet little class. Oh, how grand it is to be where we can do something in the service of the Lord! I left home to go to the hospital the very week the reunion started at Alaflorea Branch. When thinking of the grand time the Saints were having at the reunion and how much I would have enjoyed being there, I could not refrain from tears.

Tongue could not express the severe trouble and sickness I have endured during the past six months. My patriarchal blessing spoke of sorrow coming to me and the family, and we surely have met it.

Oh, how grand it is to be situated so we can hear the gospel explained in its fullness by our able missionaries, such as Brother I. M. Smith, a man of God, and one who is doing all he can in the service of the Lord. He is now visiting the Alaflorea Branch. We regret that he must leave us. How grand it would be if the Saints could see eye to eye, pay their tithes and hasten the day when there would be no parting.

My health is not good. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints, that I may grow strong and become able to do more for the Master, and win for myself a crown of glory in the presence of the Lord. I remain, a weak sister,

PATSY ALLEN.

Northern Indiana.

I left Lamoni, Iowa, January 7, arriving at Wabash, Indiana, the ninth. I spoke three times in Mr. and Sister William Quinn's house to small crowds without much interest. I went to Angola, Indiana. Brother Petre came and took me to his home. We drove around through the cold and over bad roads to find a place in which to hold meetings, and finally succeeded in getting the consent of the school director to use an old schoolroom that had not been occupied for some time. There is also a Methodist church on the same corner. When we went to get the key of the schoolroom the people could not find it and said, Why don't you go into the church? there will be nothing said about it. One said he would take it on himself to let us in, so we went to work and swept it out. The roads were so bad we thought best to wait for a few days.

The Saints at Flint, Indiana, had engaged a hall, and were looking for Brother S. W. L. Scott to come and give a course of lectures on the Book of Mormon, but it seems that he had a good interest where he was and did not show up. They phoned for me to come and hold forth till he arrived. I did so, and held five meetings, with the best of attention, interest, and liberty. In fact, I do not remember that I ever spoke with greater power in my life. The last night the hall was full. We had not yet received word from Brother Scott, but Brother Petre phoned and said the people at Ottsego were inquiring when I was coming, and I thought best to go at once. I phoned to Brother Petre to announce the meeting.

With only one day's notice there were about fifty out. This was on February 1. The third night the Methodist preacher came. I introduced myself and asked him to open the meeting for me. He said, "No." I said, "You are out for the good of the people, and so am I," but he made no reply. I then offered him a song book; he would not take it, but said he wanted to speak to me after the meeting was closed. I said all right. I spoke on the organization of the church. My friend, the minister, seemed uneasy.

When I was about to announce the closing song, he arose and asked to speak. I granted him permission. He said he was the Methodist pastor, and a servant of God, and that he did not want any more Mormon meetings held in the house. I said, "Please say Latter Day Saints, sir; not Mormons." His reply was so low that I did not understand what it was. When he sat down one of the men sitting near him arose and asked him what right he had there, adding, "We keep up this church, and the best thing for you to do is to go back where you came from; now, take your medicine." The whole house applauded. When he realized the situation he said that he could not do much toward stopping the trouble, as he did not approve of harshness. I stated that if any of the people had anything to say, we would hear from them. Another man spoke up and said, "I guess we all feel the same about this matter." After some little cross-firing we closed the meeting. The preacher withdrew.

I suggested that we clean up the schoolroom and use it. The people replied, "We are going to have meeting right here.

You come back, and we will pay all damages. This church was built with the understanding that it should be a union church." We went on with our meetings, and the crowds continued to increase. On Tuesday, the 10th, the preacher returned with a few others, and undertook to lock the door; but a few of the men were there, and they pulled their coats and told the preacher if he attempted to lock the door they would strike him.

The minister and his friends went away; the men returned at night, but not the preacher. The house was about full. The men said they were a church committee, and came to talk the matter over with the men of the community. I could not hear what agreement they came to, but our men went to see a lawyer yesterday, and sent word to me to come and go on with the meetings. The lawyer told them to take a vote of the people, and if they wanted meeting to go on until the Methodist people took a legal course, and then they must give it up, as the Methodists had the deed. They took a vote last night, and it was unanimous for the meetings to continue. There were about seventy-five or eighty present.

The Methodist pastor at Flint was in a rage too. Nearly the whole town was almost ready to mob him, because of his saying such hard things about the Saints. A few weeks ago when Brother Petre and I went down there he told the people to lock up their women, for there were two Mormon elders in town. There are some there who want to be baptized, but their faith is a little weak, owing to this cold weather.

Yesterday, February 15, I closed our effort at Ottsego Center with fairly good interest, but with not quite so large a crowd as there would have been if it had not been so stormy. Yesterday I had three friendly talks with outsiders. As I left them they invited me to visit them when I returned. One man took my address and said that if they could buy the church and make a union church of it he would write me to return.

I am feeling somewhat discouraged over conditions at home, as wife has been very sick, and was poorly at last writing. These conditions, with the church treasury low, make me feel quite blue sometimes. But I am thankful for the Lord's blessings when preaching the word. I feel that the way is opening up for the work in this part of the district. I see no place to cease the conflict.

Ever praying for the progress of the work,

WILLIAM DOWKER.

Omaha, Nebraska.

Brother and Sister P. N. Craig are doing an excellent work with the young people in musical and social lines. The Washington-Lincoln program at the Religio Sunday evening, February 22, was quite interesting and instructive. "Lives of great men," etc.

The regular business meeting held Wednesday evening gave indication of fair to good spiritual condition, as shown by the reports of the priesthood.

In these strenuous times of lying up treasures, how many realize the debt we owe the faithful missionaries who labor for months in the mission fields against difficulties and privations we can never know in the business world and at home. What an impetus the church would receive if several hundred of our wage earners would deposit from ten to twenty-five dollars with the Bishop every month, instead of lending support to worldly institutions. ### Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Utah District, Greeting: It affords me pleasure to address this second letter to you, especially so by reason of the high standard by which we are to be measured and the pure and perfect life unto which we have been called. It is indeed gratifying to know that there are those of you who have the work of God at heart, and who aspire to the supreme service, the serene life, the unstained character of Christ.

Consider the privileges of our fellowship in Christ, and the precious promises made us if we will but remain steadfast to the end. We feel confident that everyone who has enlisted in the service of Christ desires to be of assistance to the church, and by reason of the light given them in the gospel desires to lead others to the realization of a life complete, spotless, and entire. Let us remember that religion is for this life; it is to fit mankind to live here and now; not to prepare them to die. Christ had no other purpose in view than that man should learn of him the grand secret of life when he said: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." A yoke is an instrument by which the burden is made lighter. Christ's yoke is the gospel; by reason of the gospel yoke the burdens of life that otherwise would be unbearable are made light, they become easy, in many instances a pleasure.

We are bidden to learn of Christ, i. e., he desires us to learn his secret of life. Here it is: Christ did not cumber himself with the cares of the world; he dwelt in the heaven of pure thought; he communed with God; he meditated upon the things that were pure and uplifting; his entire aim and object was to uplift and bless humanity; and his life became poised, serene, divine thereby. To learn of him is to learn to take life as he took it, to live as he lived, and to do the things he did.

With him, self was lost sight of in the service of others; he feared no loss, and therefore he did not grieve and worry over misfortune. He taught: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Therefore he did not ask, What am I going to get out of this deal; no, far from it—he gave us a lesson in service! If, therefore, I am a disciple of Christ I will not ask what am I to receive; but I will ask what can I give, how can I best serve my fellow men; and like the Master of men I will prostrate myself on the altar of service, and thereby find rest, peace, joy, and a transcendent life, poised, beautiful, and ennobling.

When we learn that joy is not found in selfhood but in service, we will be in a fair way of finding rest, divine rest. When we learn that life does not consist in having and getting, but in giving the very best we have, our all, we will begin to partake of the divine nature. When we have overcome and conquered self we are then able to teach others the way of divine peace. When we have learned to love, we shall have learned to live, for "love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore, love is the fulfilling of the law." Let us not therefore lean upon a broken reed, or trust in an imperfect standard, but rather let us grow into the likeness of Christ, that our lives may produce a fruitage of righteousness and peace.

One has said: "If you would be taught, seek to teach others." And so likewise we say, if you would achieve greatly, seek to encourage and uplift those around you. Remembering that in helping others we help ourselves also.

Would you ascend the heights of virtue? Become meek, become lowly, be humble, and thou shalt mightily prevail, because the God in whom ye trust shall lift you up, and thou shalt live complete in him.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

SALT LAKE CITY, 336 South Fourth East Street.

Quorum Notices.

FIRST SEVENTY.

Brethren: The time of our assembling is nearing, and the importance of our work makes it apparently necessary that we appoint our first session for 1914 on April 1, at 7.30 p. m. The first session will be occupied by preliminary work and prayer. We urge, as per quorum resolution, that as many as possible will be present from the first, that we may have our work prepared at an early date to present to conference.

The important questions referred to the Presidency, Twelve and Seventy; viz, The formulating of a rule to govern the Seventy in dealing with the ministerial standing of a seventy, and resluts of "releasing," "dropping," or "expelling" a seventy; and can one who has been severed from the church for the second offense of adultery reenter the church by baptism, should be thoroughly canvassed. Besides these questions there is the question, How to form a quorum decision, with others that now claim our attention and should be decided.

The following program has been arranged and each subject should have the prayerful consideration of every member of the quorum for our education and the bringing about of unity:

1. What part of the church work is missionary, and what part, if any, is not?
2. Missionary work and what it comprehends.
3. The duty of a seventy as a general officer of the church, and his association with what is called the local work.
4. Missionary work in cities.
5. Missionary work in towns and country places.
6. Missionary work in foreign lands.
7. Doing missionary work now and twenty-five or more years ago.
8. New conditions to be met with in the missionary work in the church and in the world.
9. What conditions justify absence from the field of labor appointed?
10. How far is the Seventy a judicial body?
11. Why should we not suggest our fields of labor?
12. Why should we suggest our fields of labor as missionaries?
13. A judicious expenditure of finances on the part of missionaries.
14. Shall we report marriage fees and special contributions at funeral services as part of our general receipts?
15. Our deportment towards the opposite sex while in our fields of labor.

Papers will be read upon the above subjects, after which they will be open for general consideration.

Respectfully,

JAMES MCKIERNAN, President.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary.

REVEREND NUTTING, CONGREGATIONALIST, THROWS DOWN THE GAUNTLET.

OUR REJOINDER.—PART I.

In the opening pages of a pamphlet entitled, "Why I could never be a Mormon," the Reverend John D. Nutting (Congregationalist) refers to the following statement made by Joseph Smith:

"My object in going to inquire of the Lord was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join. No sooner therefore did I get possession of myself, so as to be able to speak, than I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right, (for at this time it had never entered my heart that all were wrong,) and which I should join. I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight; that those professors were all corrupt; 'they draw near to me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me; they teach for doctrine the commandments of men, having a form of godliness, but they deny the power thereof.'" (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 9.)

MR. NUTTING'S CRITICISMS.

He comments on this statement as follows:

Anyone who knows the facts about the Christian churches of 1820 knows that not one single statement of the above is true; that hence, of course, God never spoke anything of the kind; and hence the whole story must be untrue, to say the least. And, third, by "all wrong" must be meant all radically wrong; but the churches were the most fundamentally right institutions of earth, guided by the infallible word and Spirit of God; by "creeds" must be meant their statements of belief, which contained all the great doctrines which Christ taught and so could not be wrong, much less an "abomination" to their Author; "those professors" can mean nothing else but all the church members, and to say that all the professing Christian people of the world in 1820 were the lying hypocrites which the passage goes on to describe is to tell about as wicked a falsehood as one could well imagine. To put all these lies into the mouth of God Almighty is not only lying but blasphemy. It is also to construct so transparent a hoax that if I were trying to concoct a fraud I would be intellectually ashamed to put forth such a foolish product. I can not see how any person of judgment can give any weight whatever to such a thing. Certainly I can not. My grandparents on both sides were church members in 1820; I know that they were not such hypocrites, but among the faithful, genuinely pious people of the earth, with millions more like them.

WHO WERE THE CORRUPT PROFESSORS?

The issue is fairly met. Was Joseph Smith guilty of a wicked and false slander upon the churches and creeds? Or were his charges substantially correct?

In the first place, Reverend Nutting exaggerates the charges made and gives them a wholesale application individually that was not intended. In the second place, when stripped of these exaggerations, the charges are supported by statements made by Mr. Nutting's colaborers in his own denomination, and by the creeds of his own denomination, as well as by the creeds of other denominations as they were in 1820 when Joseph Smith received his vision.

If the conditions complained of have been remedied in any particular denomination it is no slander upon living or dead to urge that they actually did then exist. If they then existed and have not been corrected they certainly should be corrected.

We can not agree with Reverend Nutting that the language quoted from Joseph Smith referring to "those professors" was intended to mean that all members of all denominations were corrupt.

The language, "those professors," undoubtedly referred to the professional clergy, speaking as it does particularly of those who were "teaching" doctrine. It might logically be held to refer strictly to those particular clergymen who had been conspicuous in holding the revival, at that time just closed, during which the attention of Joseph Smith was attracted to religion. Their doctrinal controversies and ungodly strife he had in mind when he went into the forest to pray for divine light that he might know which one of the contending parties was right. But we are not averse to having the meaning of this language extended to include anyone in any denomination who was then or is now guilty of "teaching for doctrine the commandments of men," and honoring God with their lips while their hearts are reserved for other service. Mr. Nutting need not rally to the defense of such unless he chooses to do so; unless, indeed, in the light of his Calvinistic Creed he is predestinated so to do.

In a later revelation the Lord said in reference to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

"The one true and living church upon the face of the whole earth, with which I the Lord am well pleased, speaking unto the church collectively and not individually."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.

The Lord did not indulge in wholesale condemnation of individual members of all churches. Neither did he commend all members of the church that he had caused to be organized in these last days. There were a few corrupt members in that church, and there were some, probably many, very devout and excellent people in other denominations. So Mr. Nutting may feel at ease regarding his respected grandfather and grandmother. No reflections are necessarily cast upon their pious memory by this statement.

This arraignment of a corrupt professional clergy is not more severe than that issuing from other sources. For instance, read the following scathing denunciation of that large section of the priesthood that for years defended slavery. We quote from the writings of the poet John G. Whittier:

"Just God!—and these are they
Who minister at thine altar, God of Right!
Men who their hands with prayer and blessing lay
On Israel's Ark of light!

"Paid hypocrites, who turn
Judgment aside, and rob the Holy Book
Of those high words of truth which search and burn
In warning and rebuke;

"Feed fat, ye locusts, feed!
And, in your tasseled pulpits, thank the Lord
That, from the toiling bondman's utter need,
Ye pile your own full board.

"How long, O Lord! how long
Shall such a priesthood barter truth away,
And in thy name, for robbery and wrong
At thy own altars pray?

"Is not thy hand stretched forth
Visibly in the heavens, to awe and smite?
Shall not the living God of all the earth,
And heaven above, do right?

"Woe to the priesthood! woe
To those whose hire is with the price of blood,— Perverting, darkening, changing, as they go,
'The searching truths of God!'"

Perhaps Whittier will not be regarded as an authority, since Congregationalists went to some pains at one time to go on record as believing that the leaven of the Quakers is even worse than the leaven of the Pharisees, against which Jesus warned his followers. This fling at the gentle Quakers is only matched by Mr. Nutting's statement in another part of his pamphlet to the effect that the teachings of "Josephites" may be worse than those of the polyamous "Brighamites."

CONGREGATIONALIST AGAINST CONGREGATIONALIST.

Now we come to the question raised by Mr. Nutting's statement, "The churches were the most fundamentally right institutions on earth, guided and directed by the infallible word and Spirit of God." Mr. Nutting reaffirms this in a private letter to us, dated August 20, 1913, in which he says: "But everyone who knows enough to be entitled to an opinion in the case knows that the churches then, as now, hold the great fundamentals of truth just as they are taught in the Bible."

Mr. Nutting is a minister of the Congregational Church. His glowing indorsement of the churches is offset by the following statements from Washington Gladden, D. D., LL. D., a justly celebrated Congregationalist, and well known as pastor emeritus of the church in Columbus, Ohio. We quote first from the Methodist Review, October, 1913, as follows:

The trouble with the church, then, as I said at the beginning, is radical and constitutional. It has got to get a new conception of what is fundamental in Christianity, a new idea of its mission in the world, a new message to humanity, a new appeal to the consciences of men.

To this we add the statement by Doctor Gladden before the Triennial Council of Congregational Churches in Kansas City, October, 1913. We quote from the Kansas City Journal, October 23, and have a personal letter from Doctor Gladden stating that the report is approximately correct.

It is imperative that the church awaken to a realization of its mission. It has never done so. Early in its history it lost sight of the true reason for its being, and is only now beginning to rediscover it. . . .

During the greater part of its history, the church has been inefficient; its individualistic teachings have been reflected sadly in the material pursuits of its members. It has thereby encouraged strife and antagonism among neighbors.

Mr. Nutting says that the churches are and have been fundamentally right, while Doctor Gladden, who is of nation wide prominence, and much more of an authority in Congregationalism than Mr. Nutting, says that the churches are radically and constitutionally wrong; that they need to get a new conception of what is fundamental in Christianity, a new message and mission; and that during the greater part of their history they "have been inefficient."

THE CHURCH POOR, BLIND, NAKED.

We quote next from the writings of one of the most able and prominent of living Congregationalists, Doctor Charles E. Jefferson, pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, of New York City, whose name and fame are mentioned further on in this article. Doctor Jefferson says:

A favorite name for "church" in the early Christian centuries was "Brotherhood." Alas, that it was ever lost!

When we close the New Testament and look around us, we find ourselves in a different world. There is a change in the atmosphere, which is chilling. . . .

The new commandment is the standard by which all churches must be measured, and in the light of this standard the church universal knows herself to be poor and blind and naked. Many city churches are made up of people who do not even know one another, and who do not want to know one another. Too many village churches are composed of people who know one another, and are sorry that they do. The very thing which the New Testament asserts to be the one thing needful, and without which the world can not be won for Christ, is the thing which is to-day least abundant.—The Building of the Church, pp. 49, 52.

Doctor Jefferson does not find the churches in such excellent condition as they have been presented by Mr. Nutting, fundamentally right, and directed by the infallible will and Spirit of God. Coming from the New Testament and the presence of the New Testament Church into modern Christianity, he finds himself in a "different world" and is "chilled" by the atmosphere that surrounds him. He thinks the churches poor and blind and naked, and deficient in the one great thing that was designed to make them acceptable to Christ. Possibly Joseph Smith was not so far wrong in his statements made nearly one hundred years ago. We can leave this question for Congregationalists to settle among themselves.

WERE THE CREEDS WRONG; A CHALLENGE.

We come now to the question of creeds. We do not assume that the creeds were all wrong on every point. They may have contained some very true statements of faith. But there was a fatal admixture of error, in some instances of the worst kind, that made them wrong, and in the nature of the case objectionable to God. Attempts to revise these creeds are a confession of previous error.

In the pamphlet from which we have just quoted, Mr. Nutting says that the creeds "could not be wrong, much less an abomination to their author." In this he very ingenuously assumes that God is the author of the creeds of the various denominations. Is God the author of confusion? In a personal letter to us under date of August 20, 1913, to which we have previously referred, he says: "I challenge you to produce one fundamental point upon which one important or generally accepted creed of a Christian church has been essentially changed."

We accept the challenge, and select Mr. Nutting's own denomination for the test. In our next number we shall show first wherein its creed was wrong and unbiblical in 1820; second, wherein it has been changed by the omission of some of the most objectionable features; and third, the fact that representative Congregationalists frankly admit such change.

THE MATTER OF SALARY.

Mr. Nutting resents the charge that some of the professional clergy were working for money and divining for hire, and in his personal letter to us says, "I am doing this work without discrimination and without salary. Because Joseph Smith stated the outrageous falsehood in the minds of his followers that all Christian work was done from motives of sect or salary, we want to give them an object lesson to the contrary."

Joseph Smith did not state that all Christian work was done with those motives in mind.

It is significant, however, that Mr. Nutting has found it necessary to go to some trouble to serve as an object lesson, and to call attention to himself in that respect. If his conduct in this matter were the rule of the clergy instead of the exception, no particular demonstration from him would have been necessary. His example in ignoring sect and salary is by no means imitated by leading men, even in his own denomination.

The following is significant, referring as it does to two of the greatest figures in present-day Congregationalism, one of them being given the honor of preaching the sermon at the late national council.

Doctor Jefferson was given the great honor of preaching the sermon, and he deserved it. Quite a number of years ago at a National Council I said to Doctor Smith Baker, "Who is that young man with whom you were talking just now?" "That is the coming man of New England Congregationalism," was his reply. A few years later the coming man arrived, and stays arrived with great persistency. Few men are wielding more influence outside of the denomination as well as inside of it, with their published volumes than Doctor Charles E. Jefferson. Broadway Tabernacle gives him a $10,000 salary to keep its pews full. . . . Doctor Hillis is another man who crossed the line fence to get into the rich green pastures of Congregationalism.—The Congregationalist and Christian World, November 6, 1913.

FAST DAY ANNOUNCED.

The First Presidency has deemed it wise to announce a general fast to be observed from the evening meal of Saturday, April 4, until the evening meal of Sunday, April 5. Prayer should be offered in this connection for the spiritual direction and benefit of the General Conference that is about to assemble, and for the general welfare of the church in all the world.

DEATH OF JOHN H. LAKE.

We learn by telegram from Elders R. C. Russell and F. J. Ebeling that Patriarch John H. Lake passed peacefully away at six o'clock Friday evening, March 6. Thus ends a long life of honorable and faithful service to the Master. Further particulars will follow at a later date.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

HUGE METEOR.—A number of houses are said to have been destroyed on February 26 at Jedkovitz, in Russian Poland, by the falling of a huge meteor. The meteor emitted strong sulphurous fumes.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—The commission of representatives from the United States and Great Britain en route to examine the body of William S. Benton, the English subject executed by General Villa, was halted at Juarez, Mexico, on March 1, when General Villa recalled his arrangement to allow an examination of the body. This action on the part of General Villa followed an order from General Carranza in which General Villa was instructed to keep out of international affairs. In a communication to authorities of the United States Government, General Carranza stated that Great Britain, not the United States, must deal with the Constitutionists concerning the death of a British subject. He also stated that all communications on international affairs should be addressed to himself instead of to General Villa, or any other of his subordinates. Great Britain, through Sir Edward Grey, holds the United States in no way responsible for the death of Benton, and states that that nation will not move by force, but will wait until it can obtain reparation in some other legitimate way. It is understood that General Carranza sought by his method in the Benton case to bring about on the part of Great Britain a recognition of himself and the Constitutionalist party in northern Mexico. It is urged in some quarters that the Benton affair should bring about on the part of the United States Government a more aggressive attitude. President Wilson continues to counsel patience, and seems to have the support of the conservative element of Congress, regardless of party.

PANAMA TOLLS.—Personally appearing before Congress, President Wilson on the 5th delivered a special message asking for the repeal of the United States toll provision of the Panama Canal Act. The President said in part:

No communication I have addressed to the Congress carried with it graver or more far-reaching implications to the interest of the country. . . . In my own judgment, very fully considered and maturely formed, that exemption constitutes a mistaken economic policy from every point of view, and is, moreover, in plain contravention of the treaty with Great Britain. . . . I ask this of you in support of the foreign policy of the administration. I shall not know how to deal with other matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequence if you do not grant it to me in ungrudging measure.

---

MEXICAN WAR.—The first gunboat battle in Mexican warfare was waged on the 4th at Tampolobambo, when there was a half hour of inefficient firing between the Constitutionalist warship Tampico and the Federal gunboats Morelos and Guerreor. The latter withdrew.

---

THREATENED BRAZILIAN REBELLION.—As a preventive against possible rebellion, the Brazilian government on the 5th proclaimed a state of siege in the cities of Rio de Janeiro, Nitheroy, and Petropolis, to remain in force until the 31st. Managing editors of three of the leading newspapers of the country, three generals, two colonels, and several other army officers are under arrest. Certain radical differences are said to be the cause of the dissatisfaction. A strict censorship has been established on telegraphic communications.

And a brook
And a book
And the noise
Of a distant
City to make me

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

TELL IT IN ENGLAND.—In discussing the possible rebellion of Ulster upon the passage of the Irish Home Rule Bill, the Desert Evening News for February 17, says:

Over in England anti-"Mormons" are telling people that the Latter Day Saints are but waiting for a chance to defy the United States Government. But the Saints have never assumed the attitude the people of Ulster are occupying to-day. They have fought for their rights with constitutional means only and submitted peacefully when those invested with proper authority have decided against them. There is no other course open to loyal citizens.

This may do to tell in England, but it will not pass in the Echo Canyon and elsewhere in this country, where in the memory of men still living the people of Utah offered resistance, making necessary drastic action on the part of the United States Government and martial law in Deseret.

NEW EDITION OF OPEN LETTER.—The first edition of the Open Letter to the Clergy consisted of five thousand copies. This edition is entirely exhausted, and the work of printing and distributing another edition of five thousand copies has begun. Saints who have not responded to the appeal of the Bureau of Publicity should take the matter up at once and see that the local clergy are supplied with this letter. Brother Greene reports from Jerusalem that he is putting it in the hands of practically all of the English speaking residents there and is arranging to use it among the Hebrews.

AN ORDERLY DEBATE.—Reporting the Harp-Kennedy debate between our Brother John Harp and Elder Kennedy, a Free-will Baptist, the Avery (Texas) News for February 13 says:

Reverend Harp proved himself to be well posted on the Scriptures, and seldom if ever referred to notes. He conducted himself as a gentleman, never once using any language that could be construed as offensive, treating his opponent as a friend and brother. . . . Taken all in all, Avery has nothing to regret from having had this debate, as doubtless considerable light was shed on the subjects under consideration, without the ill will that is sometimes the result of a discussion. Both parties to the discussion have every reason to congratulate themselves on the manner in which it was conducted. They met as friends and parted as friends and brothers.

CHURCH GAINS FOR 1913.—The report of the Church Recorder, C. I. Carpenter, to the coming General Conference will show three thousand six hundred and seventy baptisms for the year 1913. This is the largest number of baptisms ever recorded as the work of any one year, the highest number recorded previously being three thousand three hundred and eighty-three, reported at the last General Conference. Our net gain also is the largest that we have ever had, being three thousand four hundred and ninety-one, bringing the present membership of the church up to seventy-one thousand seven hundred and two. This steady growth is encouraging. During the year there were three hundred and eighty-four ordinations, and the report will show four thousand eight hundred and ninety-five men holding various orders of the priesthood. Sixty-five per cent of the baptisms during the year were by missionaries, thirty-five per cent by the local ministry. Thirty-six per cent of those baptized were under fifteen years of age. Missouri has the largest numbers in all items excepting deaths, showing five hundred and ninety baptisms, a net gain of five hundred and ninety-three, total present membership eleven thousand three hundred and five, including nine hundred and thirty-five of the ministry. Canada is second in baptisms, showing four hundred and thirty-seven, and second in net gain, showing four hundred and twenty-two, with a total membership of five thousand nine hundred and forty-nine. Iowa stands third in baptisms, three hundred and seventy-one, with a net gain of two hundred and fifteen, and a total membership of ten thousand and forty-one. During the year twenty-five new branches have been added to the records. It is a matter of congratulation that our largest annual gains are in Missouri, the scene of so many persecutions and misunderstandings in years gone by.

A SEVERE CASTIGATION.—The following by Jesse F. Love and appearing in the Apostolic Review (formerly the Octographic Review) for February 3 is a bit severe as a castigation of the Church of Christ, better known as the "anti" faction of the Christian Church. Doctor Love and the Review, however, are in a position to speak advisedly with reference to the lack of discipline in this church, and be it far from us to question the conditions as represented:

In my travels among congregations of the Church of Christ, my observation is that their greatest present need is exercise of discipline upon ungodly and disobedient members. Some congregations where I was in 1913 never exercise discipline on a member, no matter what he does. He can get drunk, keep company with base women, curse and live ungodly generally, and nothing is done about it at all.

MEAT DIET AND APPENDICITIS.—The Surgeon General of the United States Navy, General C. F. Stokes, in his recently published report calls attention to the alarming prevalence of appendicitis in the navy. The disease is so general that he says it may well be considered an "occupational disease." He attributes it to the large proportion of meat in the diet of sailors while at sea, together with the lessened amount of green vegetables to be obtained. Evidently the Word of Wisdom is correct in admonishing against the excessive use of meat at any season of the year.

ABOUT THE SMITH HOME AND CUMORAH.

In the accompanying extracts from the work, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, the following facts appear: Solomon Mack makes use of the word town when he should have used township. Lucy Smith and others made the same misuse of the words town and township, thereby making the Smith family to live in the village of Manchester, which they never did, though they did live in the Township of Manchester, four miles from the village of Manchester, and two miles from the village of Palmyra. From this farm home on one occasion Joseph is sent to Manchester, and on his return, as he passes the Hill Cumorah, he has an angel visit.

THE SMITH HOME.

The Smith family lived first in the village of Palmyra, and removed two miles south on the one-hundred-acre tract purchased of the land agent. The home then and there built was a base of surveys:

Records of the survey of Highways 1793. Minutes of the survey of a public Highway beginning on the south line of township No. 12, second range of township in the town of Palmyra three rods and fourteen links southeast of Joseph Smith's dwelling house. Thence north 3 degrees, west 192 rods, thence north 2 degrees, east 24 rods, west 58 rods, thence north 7, east 26 rods, thence north 11, east 47 rods to line of lots owned by Zebulon Williams. . . .

13 day of June, 1820.

Commissioner of Highways.

I certify that the above is a true copy of the original minutes of which a copy was posted on the door of the town house on the 13 day of June 1820 by me

James White
Town Clerk

The foregoing was copied by R. Etzenhouser as it appears on page 221 of above Record of Highways.

The house later built, in the construction of which Alvin had a prominent part, which they occupied till unjustly ejected, and where Oliver Cowdery boarded with them, was the second on the same farm, they moving later into Hyrum's house near by. The house Alvin labored to provide for their old age was in Manchester Township, only a few rods from the farm home, the point mentioned in the record of surveys, and which was in the Township of Palmyra. Poor as the Smiths may have been, the record of surveys says they had a home.

The religious revival of 1820, when Joseph was in his fifteenth year, while covering a considerable section, had its main seat in Palmyra, where the Smiths attended church.

The Smiths lived first in Palmyra, then two miles south, but still in Palmyra Township on the one-hundred-acre tract, where a few rods away but in Manchester Township they built the second house. They were two miles from the village of Palmyra and four from the village of Manchester. They never lived in the village of Manchester.

THE HILL CUMORAH.

The name of the Hill Cumorah was known by Joseph before he had secured the plates, hence he learned it from the angel, for he so refers to it on the occasion of the angel's visit as he returns from the village of Manchester to the farm home from where they removed to Hyrum's, which perhaps was on the same one-hundred-acre tract and the last place occupied in the vicinity.

While translation was still in process, mention is again made of the Hill Cumorah, and by the angel, as it appears. In Journal of History, October, 1910, page 448, David Whitmer is reported:

When I was returning to Fayette, with Joseph and Oliver, all of us riding in the wagon, Oliver and I on an old-fashioned wooden spring seat and Joseph behind us—when traveling along in a clear, open place, a very pleasant, nice looking old man suddenly appeared by the side of our wagon and saluted us with, "Good morning, it is very warm," at the same time wiping his face or forehead with his hand. We returned the salutation, and, by a sign from Joseph, I invited him to ride if he was going our way. But he said very pleasantly, "No, I am going to Cumorah." This name was something new to me, I did not know what Cumorah meant. We all gazed at him and at each other, and as I looked around inquiringly of Joseph, the old man instantly disappeared, so that I did not see him again.

Oliver Cowdery having heard this statement very naturally used the information when addressing the Delaware Nation, not far from Independence, Missouri, as follows:

Aged chief and venerable council of the Delaware Nation. . . . This book, which contained these things, was hid in the earth by Moroni, in a hill called by him Cumorah, which hill is now in the State of New York, near the village of Palmyra, in Ontario County.—Journal of History, April, 1912, pp. 132, 133.

"Hid in the earth by Moroni in a hill called by him Cumorah."

Whitmer and Joseph and Cowdery heard it. That settles it. No wonder several hymns written later contained it. These late years some, objecting to the New York Cumorah, stood for a Mexico or Central America one, later conceded the New York one, and holding to another south. When shown up we'll look at it.

FACTS CERTIFIED.

The facts affirmed in the foregoing are certified in the following extracts, in which other valuable points also occur. The extracts are from Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, by Lucy Smith, mother of the Seer.

In the spring of 1759, the army marched to Crown Point, where I received my discharge.—Page 5.

Having received a large amount of money for my services in the army. . . . I contracted for the whole town of Granville, in the State of New York. On the execution of the deed, I paid all the money that was required in the stipulation, which stipulation also called for the building of a number of log houses. . . . I had the misfortune to cut my leg. . . . I hired a man to do the work, and paid him in advance; . . . he ran away with the money . . . and . . . I lost the land altogether.—Pages 5, 6.

In 1761, we moved to the town of Marlow, where we remained until we had four children. When we moved there, it was no other than a desolate and dreary wilderness. Only four families resided within forty miles.—Page 6, from Solomon Mack's own account.

In 1811 we moved from Royalton, Vermont, to the town of Lebanon, New Hampshire.—Page 55. [Note the use of the word town in above. R. E.]

A long siege of sickness ensues.

Shortly after sickness left our family, we moved to Norwich, in the State of Vermont. In this place we established ourselves on a farm belonging to one Esquire Moredock. The first year our crops failed. . . . The crops the second year were as the year before, a perfect failure. . . . The next year an untimely frost destroyed the crops and being the third year in succession in which the crops had failed it almost caused a famine. This was enough; my husband was now altogether decided upon going to New York.—Pages 66, 67.

Having thus arranged his business, Mr. Smith set out for Palmyra, in company with Mr. Howard. . . . We shortly received a communication from Mr. Smith, requesting us to make ourselves ready to take up a journey for Palmyra.—Page 68.

When I again met my husband at Palmyra, we were much reduced—not from indolence, but on account of many reverses of fortune. . . . Having done considerable at painting oil-cloth coverings for tables, stands, etc., I set up the business, and did extremely well. . . . My husband and his sons, Alvin and Hyrum, set themselves to work to pay for one hundred acres of land, which Mr. Smith contracted for with a land agent. In a year, we made nearly all of the first payment, erected a log house, and commenced clearing. I believe something like thirty acres of land were got ready for cultivation the first year.—Pages 71, 72.

The second payment drew nigh . . . and this payment being made we felt relieved. . . . It was now only two years since we entered Palmyra.—Page 73.

The following spring we commenced making preparations for building another house.—Page 75.

I shall here insert the seventh and last vision that my husband had, which vision was received in the year 1819. . . . Shortly after my husband received the foregoing vision there was a great revival in religion, which extended to all the denominations of Christians in the surrounding country where we resided.—Pages 76, 77.

When the numerous meetings were about breaking up, and the candidates and the various leading church members began to consult upon the subject of adopting the candidates . . . there was great contention among them. Joseph's mind became considerably troubled with regard to religion.—Page 77.

Here Lucy Smith records Joseph's statement:

I was at this time in my fifteenth year.—Page 77.

So in accordance with this my determination to ask of God, I retired to the woods to make the attempt. It was on the morning of a beautiful clear day, early in the spring of 1820.—Page 79.

I was an obscure boy only between fourteen and fifteen years of age.—Page 81.

From this time until the 21st of September, 1823, Joseph continued to labor with his father.—Page 83.

Convenient to the village of Manchester, Ontario County,

New York, stands a hill of considerable size, and the most elevated of any in the neighborhood.—Page 89.

We were still making arrangements to build us a comfortable house, the management and control of which devolved chiefly upon Alvin. And when November, 1824 arrived, the frame was raised, and all the materials necessary for its speedy completion were procured.—Page 95.

On the 15th day of November, 1824, Alvin was taken very sick; he died on the 20th. (Pages 97-99.)

The shock occasioned by Alvin's death in a short time passed off, and we resumed our usual avocations with considerable interest. The first move towards business was to complete the house before mentioned. This we did as speedily as possible, and when it was finished, Mr. Stoddard, the principal workman, offered for it the sum of fifteen hundred dollars.—Page 102.

The incident of Joseph working for Stool and boarding with Isaac Hale occurs:

Soon after his return we received intelligence of the arrival of a new agent for the Everson land, of which our farm was a portion. This reminded us of the last payment, which was still due, and which must be made before we could obtain a deed of the place. . . . My husband sent Hyrum to Canandaigua to inform the new agent of the fact, namely, that the money should be forthcoming as soon as the 25th of December, 1825. This, the agent said, would answer the purpose, and he agreed to retain the land until that time.—Pages 104, 105.

Mr. Smith and son Joseph start to Chenango County to secure the money to pay off the indebtedness, and Joseph to secure his life helpmeet.

A few days subsequent to my husband's departure, . . . as I stood musing, among other things, upon the prospect of a quiet and comfortable old age, my attention was suddenly arrested by a trio of strangers who were just entering. Upon their near approach, I found one of these gentlemen to be Mr. Stoddard, the principal carpenter in building the house in which we then lived.—Pages 106, 107.

Stoddard claimed to have bought the place and the incident closes thus:

My husband, and the Messrs. Durfee arrived in Canandaigua at half past nine o'clock in the evening. The agent sent immediately for Mr. Stoddard and his friends, and they came without delay; but in order to make difficulty they contended that it was after ten o'clock; however, not being able to sustain themselves upon this ground, they handed over the deed to Mr. Durfee, the high sheriff, who now became the possessor of the farm.—Pages 111, 112.

I stated before that at the time Mr. Smith started to see Knight and Stool, Joseph accompanied him. When he returned, Joseph also returned with him. . . . Not long subsequent to his return, my husband had occasion to send him to Manchester on business. As he set off early in the day, we expected him home at most by six o'clock in the evening, but when six o'clock came he did not arrive. . . . He did not get home till the night was far spent. . . . My husband . . . exclaimed, "Joseph, why are you so late?" . . . "Stop, father, stop," said Joseph, "it was the angel of the Lord": as I passed by the Hill Cumorah, where the plates are, the angel met me, and said that I had not been engaged enough in the work of the Lord; that the time had come for the record to be brought forth, and that I must be up and doing, and set myself about the things which God had commanded me to do. But, father, give yourself no uneasiness concerning the reprimand which I have received for I know the course that I am to pursue, so all will be well.—Pages 112, 113.

On the twentieth of September, Mr. Knight and his friend Stool came to see how we were managing matters with Stoddard and Company, and they tarried with us until the twenty-second. On the night of the twenty-first, I sat up very late, as my work rather pressed upon my hands. I did not retire until after twelve o'clock at night. About twelve o'clock, Joseph came to me and asked me if I had a chest with a lock and key. I knew in an instant what he wanted it for, and not having one, I was greatly alarmed, as I thought it might be a matter of considerable moment. But Joseph, discovering my anxiety, said, "Never mind, I can do very well for the present without it, be calm, all is right."—Page 114.

After bringing home the plates, Joseph commenced working with his father and brothers on the farm, in order to be as near as possible to the treasure which was confided to his care.—Page 123.

The first step that he was instructed to take in regard to this work, was to make a facsimile of some of the characters, which were called reformed Egyptian, and to send them to some of the most learned men of this generation and ask them for the translation thereof.—Page 126.

When Joseph had had sufficient time to accomplish the journey, and transcribe some of the Egyptian characters, it was agreed that Martin Harris should follow him, and that he, Martin, should take the characters to the East, and, on his way, he was to call on all the professed linguists in order to give them an opportunity to display their talents in giving a translation of the characters.—Page 132.

Soon after we returned from Harmony, a man by the name of Lyman Cowdery . . . applied to Hyrum . . . for the district school. A meeting was called and Mr. Cowdery was employed. But the following day this Mr. Cowdery brought his brother Oliver to the trustees. . . . All parties being satisfied, Oliver commenced his school, boarding for the time being at our house.—Page 151.

As the time for which we had agreed for the place was now drawing to a close, we began to make preparation to remove our family and effects to the house in which Hyrum resided. We now felt more keenly than ever the injustice of the measure which had placed a landlord over us on our own premises, and who was about to eject us from them. . . .

"Now, Oliver," said I, "see what a comfortable home we had here, what pains each child we have has taken to provide for us everything necessary to make old age comfortable, and long life desirable. Here, especially, I look upon the handiwork of my beloved Alvin, who even upon his deathbed and in his last moments charged his brothers to finish his work of preparing a place of earthly rest for us; and, if it were possible through the exertions of the children, our last days might be our best days. . . . However, in consequence of these things, Oliver, we can not make you comfortable any longer." . . . "Mother," exclaimed the young man, "let me stay." . . . In April, Samuel and Mr. Cowdery set out for Pennsylvania.—Pages 153, 154.

Of meeting Joseph, Oliver Cowdery wrote:

Near the time of the setting of the sun, Sabbath evening, April 5, 1829, my natural eyes for the first time beheld this brother. He then resided in Harmony, Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania.—Cowdery Letters, page 2.

In December of the same year, (1830,) Joseph appointed a meeting at our house. While he was preaching, Sidney Rigdon and Edward Partridge came in, and seated themselves in the congregation. When Joseph had finished his discourse, he gave all who had any remarks to make the privilege of speaking. Upon this Mr. Partridge arose and stated that he had been to Manchester with the view of obtaining further information respecting the doctrine which we preached, but not finding us he had made some inquiry of our neighbors concerning our characters, which they stated had been unimpeachable, until Joseph deceived us relative to the Book of Mormon. He also said that he had walked over our farm, and observed the good order and industry which it exhibited, and, having seen what we had sacrificed for the sake of our faith, and having heard that our veracity was not questioned upon any other point than that of our religion, he believed our testimony, and was ready to be baptized, "If," said he, "Brother Joseph will baptize me." . . . He was accordingly baptized the next day. Before he left, my husband returned home from prison, bringing along with him considerable clothing which he had earned at cooping in the jail yard.—Pages 205, 206.

In December, 1830, a meeting was held on the farm, which Edward Partridge and Sidney Rigdon attended, who had looked for them in Manchester. From all the foregoing it is clear they never lived in Manchester, but four miles to the north and within two miles of Palmyra. To this agree all statements of remaining old citizens, several of whom I interviewed in both Palmyra and Manchester and those between. As to Cumorah, while the plates were still there Joseph called it Cumorah, as subsequently, having learned it from the angel, and while yet translating the angel again so stated to David Whitmer, Oliver Cowdery, and Joseph. On September 6, 1842, Joseph wrote "Glad Tidings of Cumorah," (Doctrine and Covenants 110) meaning the New York hill. This ought to settle the Cumorah question. When one is found in Mexico or Central America it will be number two.

WHEN WILL PEACE COME TO THE EARTH? ---PART 2.

BY HENRY A. STEBBINS.

THE PROPHECIES.

I quote from the prophets who have written the most about great wars and the destruction of life in the latter days, before the millennium.

First, there can be no doubt that the prophecy in Ezekiel, chapters 38 and 39 will have a literal fulfillment before the millennium begins. This long prophecy is very plain that after the Jews, or many of them, are gathered back to Palestine, certain nations will come against them "to take a spoil." The Lord says it will be "in the latter years," and again, "It shall be in the latter days." He states that these will be descendants of Magog, Tubal, and Meshech, who were the second, fifth, and sixth sons of Japhet, the son of Noah, and of Togarmah, a son of Gomer, the oldest son of Japhet. The Greek translation of the Old Testament, the Septuagint, made in Egypt 285 B. C. by seventy Jewish priests, under the direction of Ptolemy Philadelphus, has the second and third verses reading, "Gog, the chief prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal."

According to Watson's theological history the Hebrew records gave account of a body of Japhet's descendants named the Rosh, and Greek writers said "the Rosh" were a people living in Russia, north and east of the Black Sea, also that the name of Russia was derived from Rosh, the people called Rosschi and later Russians. From Japhet's son Meshech came the Moschi, or Muscovites, and the Russians are known the world over as the Muscovite nation. From this origin also came the name of the ancient capital of Russia, Moscow. Watson says, "These Rossi and Moschi, who were neighbors in Asia, dispersed their colonies jointly over the vast empire of Russia, and they preserved their names as Russians and Muscovites."

The posterity of Gomer, the oldest son of Japhet, peopled Asia Minor first, but later went north and west to what are now Germany, Austria, Italy, and France, so say historians. A few went to Britain, and some settled in Wales, where the writers state that the "names of the people and the language sufficiently point out their origin as from Noah and Japhet." The Welsh Saints may find comfort in this, but likely their ancestors became so mixed with the Anglo-Saxon invasion later on that the Ephraimite blood from that source causes the genealogy of the Saints, in the blessings given, to be counted as of Ephraim.

JERUSALEM TO BE BESIEGED.

However, to return to Ezekiel's "word of the Lord" we find that Russia and her various helping bands of people are to be engaged in besieging Jerusalem in order to take "a spoil." To those nations and portions of Europe the Lord prophesies as follows:

In the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel. . . . Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm; thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee . . . to turn thy hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods.—Ezekiel 38: 8, 9, 12.

And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face. For in my jealousy and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel. . . . And I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God: every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord.—Ezekiel 38: 18, 19, 21-23.

By the above statements it seems that the different nations will not only suffer from God's special punishments, but that also in their disappointment and troubles there will arise contentions and jealousies among the different peoples until they will slaughter each other. This is evident from verse twenty-one. Altogether, it will result so disastrously that only one sixth of the soldiers (Ezekiel 39: 2) will live to return northward.

THE HEATHEN NATION.

The Lord says further:

And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them. So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward.—Ezekiel 39: 21, 22.

The term heathen in the Bible means any and all people who are not of the house of Israel. It does not mean simply the uncivilized and barbarous races, but includes the most polished and exalted nations of the Gentile world. And they will then learn about God and his work and purposes, that which they have never realized before, notwithstanding their supposed worship of him throughout centuries of time, wherein they have believed their service was in full accord with his will and with the gospel of his Son.

WAR MUST COME.

At least one war must come, and in something like a definite time, too. For events are moving to that end, very plainly so.

Russia's part in the impending conflict has been no secret for hundreds of years. The heads of that nation have desired to possess Turkey, and thus have access to the Mediterranean Sea, but she has been kept from it by the other powers. In 1853-54 she made a move, but England and France took a hand for Turkey, and the consequence was Russia's defeat in the Crimean War. But it has long been said that there is "a national belief" in Russia that they will eventually possess Constantinople; also a tradition for centuries back that in "the latter days" the Rosschi, or Russians, will capture that city. Probably it will come true when the armies from the north shall agree to go down against Jerusalem. Since 1854 diplomacy, fear, and Turkish bonds, so largely held by the nations, have together prevented Russia from moving south. But if the national debts increase to the extreme, as already shown in this article is probable, then the nations will combine and by agreement march to Palestine. Many thousand Jews are there now, and though there are poor conditions in Jerusalem, yet the Lord will make great changes for the better. We read of prosperity in the farming regions, which will increase.

One thing notable is that in 1913 the Balkan States took from Turkey nearly all her former territory, so that she has little left besides Constantinople. Therefore the old-time bars are nearly all gone, and if "Russia and Austria make up" something may be done soon.

Examining other texts, we note Joel 3: 9-12. This prophecy plainly refers to the same great battle that Ezekiel has recorded, the one at Jerusalem between God and the gathered armies of the nations. For the word says let them "come up." "Assemble yourselves, and come," and "Come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen around about." There is the same call as in Ezekiel to "come," and it is to be to Jerusalem, on the east side of which is the valley of Jehoshaphat. It is impossible to apply this prophecy to any other event mentioned in the prophets. Neither does it mean a universal war all over the earth. The Lord says he will be there; in Joel 3: 16 we read, "The Lord shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem"; verse fourteen calls the place the "valley of decision." Surely it will be a decisive place, and a decisive event. It will be at the time the Lord establishes Jerusalem to be holy for evermore.

Then Zechariah 14: 2, 4, 12-15 gives a plain description of the same great historical time, the same great event in Jewish and Israelitish history that has been foretold by Ezekiel and Joel. In Zechariah 14: 2 the Lord says, "I will gather all nations against Jerusalem," no doubt meaning the same as defined by Ezekiel, being those descendants of Japhet's sons who located in the "north quarter," even in what are now known as portions of eastern and central Europe; especially those peoples who have already robbed and slaughtered the Jews while they lived among them, before their gathering. Such will have no scruples against further killing of the chosen people, especially when they come to such need of money that there is no other place to go where they can find it so easily, (as they suppose), and not knowing at all that those they go against are really God's chosen people.

In verse twelve we read that this destruction shall come upon "all the people that have fought against Jerusalem." That defines it further, and makes plain that only those are included in the calamities. The United States and many other people, Great Britain among them, are not included among those who fight "against Jerusalem." Those who defend the Jewish people against their oppressors, those who seek the civil and religious liberty of the "ancient covenant people," they will not be among the broken and defeated hosts whom the Lord will smite in "the day of battle," and leave but "the sixth part" to turn their faces homeward. It is very plain in Ezekiel 38: 9 and 22, where the Lord speaks to Magog, Meshech, Rosh, Tubal, Gomer, and Togarmah, saying, "Thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee," and "upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him." History shows where those ancestors located and colonized in Europe, and their boundaries are quite plain even to-day.

In Zechariah 14: 3 it is also plain, "Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations," not against others, nor against all the world. When Jerusalem is in the worst condition possible, when her people are in the greatest need of divine help, then will the Lord Jesus appear as their deliverer, also as their Messiah, and their great King. In Zechariah 12: 9 we find the same idea as to the nations who suffer, "the nations that come against Jerusalem," not that others will suffer this great destruction.

CHRIST TO APPEAR.

After having by Zechariah declared his intention of destroying all the nations that will come against Jerusalem, the Lord speaks his purpose concerning the Jews, and what will result at that very time from the manifestation of Christ's power in their behalf, even their conversion and accepting of the Lord Jesus as their Savior. Through Zechariah God spoke as follows:

And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplication; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first born.—Zechariah 12: 10.

And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.—Zechariah 13: 6.

Evidently these two verses are descriptive of the same event, which takes place immediately after the defeat and scattering of those invading armies from Europe. These last quotations make plain that when Christ shall come suddenly to Jerusalem, in its time of extreme need, and when he shall thus deliver its inhabitants from their oppressors, then the eyes of their understanding will be opened; and for the first time in the long centuries they will learn that the despised Nazarene, whose side and hands and feet were pierced long ago, was then and is indeed now their sought for Messiah, and henceforth to be King over Israel and over Judah for ever and ever. (See Ezekiel 37: 22.)

Furthermore, there will come the fulfillment of another prophecy of Zechariah, as follows: "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness." (Zechariah 13: 1.)

Thus baptism will be instituted among the Jews by the Savior, and to them will be given the most complete gospel privileges, by the reopening of the door into the kingdom of God, that kingdom which their fathers rejected and into which they would not enter at Christ's first coming.

Also without doubt this last great tragedy at Jerusalem will be the time of fulfillment of the second psalm, a part of which reads as follows:

Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his Anointed. . . . He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure.—Psalm 2: 1, 2, 4, 5.

The word heathen is used here as by Ezekiel and Joel, as already spoken of. The "vain thing" that they will imagine is that they can overthrow Jerusalem easily and readily take the Jews and their wealth for a "spoil." So they "set themselves" in counsel "against the Lord and against his Anointed," not comprehending God's covenant of promise to Abraham, nor understanding that Jacob's posterity shall surely return to the land of their fathers and "dwell safely," and also become very powerful rulers in governing the world. Those Gentile kings, having no real knowledge of God's word by the prophets, decide to take Palestine for themselves. At this idea the Lord says he will "laugh," and he will have them "in derision," for their ignorance and their wicked designs of conquest and robbery.

In Psalm 2: 5 we read, "Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath." By Ezekiel (38: 19,) the Lord said, "In the fire of my wrath have I spoken"; and Joel 3: 16 states that the Lord shall "utter his voice from Jerusalem." Doubtless they all refer to the same great event, the one final overthrow of those nations.

In Psalm 2: 9 we read, "Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." And following this is a solemn warning to the kings to "beware," to "be instructed," lest they "perish." But they do not understand God's prophets nor his purposes for Israel. So the end will be their dashing in pieces at Jerusalem, and five sixths of them will be either slain or scattered. The Lord declared, "I will leave but the sixth part of thee," which probably means that only the sixth part will return to their nations in Europe.

And by the word of the Lord to Zechariah it appears that when the world is regulated and the nations are set in order under the governments of the Prince of Peace, then those same nations who came to war will fully bow to Christ's rulership, and thenceforth during the millennium will send their representatives to Jerusalem each year to manifest their allegiance and to worship God. For we read as follows:

And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.—Zechariah 14: 16.

If they or any one of them shall fail to do this, then they must suffer the consequences stated in the following verses:

And it shall be, that who so will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain. . . . This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.—Zechariah 14: 17, 19.

FOR RACE BETTERMENT.

[The press is furnished with the following with reference to the first national conference on race betterment.—ERRORS.]

Four hundred men and women of prominence, comprising the first representative group of scientific experts ever gathered in America for that purpose, met in Battle Creek January 8 to 12 to assemble evidence of race deterioration and to consider methods of checking the downward trend of mankind. The meeting was known as the First National Conference on Race Betterment. Through the cooperation of the press, the objects and aims of the conference have been very widely disseminated and a resultant influence for better race ideals is anticipated.

Already, the effect of the conference is apparent in Battle Creek, where popular interest in mental and physical efficiency was awakened by a series of public-school tests which showed an alarming percentage of defective children in all grades.

The conference had its inception in the efforts of four men, particularly interested in race betterment—Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, New York; Doctor J. H. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium; Sir Horace Plunkett, former minister of agriculture for Ireland; and Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale University.

At the invitation of a central committee chosen largely by these men, fifty men and women of national prominence in the fields of science and education consented to share in the program. Their addresses, together with open discussion of many of the points considered, constituted a very widespread study of all phases of evident race degeneracy, and the advocacy of many ideas of reform. Some of the suggested methods of improvement are frequent medical examination of the well; outdoor life; temperance in diet; biologic habits of living; open air schools and playgrounds; the encouragement of rural life; the segregation or sterilization of defectives; the encouragement of eugenic marriages by requiring medical certificates before granting license; and the establishing of a eugenics registry for the development of a race of human thoroughbreds.

Among those having a share in the program were: Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis, Jacob Riis, Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Booker T. Washington, Doctor Victor C. Vaughn, Doctor S. Adolphus Knopf, Doctor C. B. Davenport, Doctor J. N. Hurty, the Very Reverend (Dean) Walter Taylor Sumner, and many others of equal prominence.

Some of the interesting statements of the conference are summarized as follows:

It will be no easy task to improve the race to the point where there will be no dependent children, but the elimination of the dependent child will be one of the best indices of the superiority of our national stock.—Doctor Gertrude E. Hall, New York State Board of Charities.

I believe that a great deal can be done by publication of facts as to the physiological effects of alcohol, in the way of inducing educated and intelligent people to conserve their health by limiting the use of alcohol or giving it up altogether.—Henry Smith Williams, author.

Eugenics does not eliminate romance. We eugenists believe romance should be retained. Through the past it has proved a good thing.—Professor Roswell H. Johnson, University of Pittsburg.

In order that the race may survive it will apparently be necessary to make a eugenic selection of healthy mothers, and to provide that the cost of bearing and rearing children shall be equally shared by all.—Professor J. McKeen Cattell, editor Popular Science Monthly.

The boys are learning that they have a calling just as sacred as the call to motherhood, and that is the call to fatherhood.—The Very Reverend (Dean) Walter Taylor Sumner of Chicago.

The negro in the South, with all his weaknesses and handicaps, is not yet, in any large measure, in the ditch.—Booker T. Washington, principal of Tuskegee Institute.

We must cultivate pure blood instead of blue blood if we would develop a race of human thoroughbreds.—Doctor J. H. Kellogg, Superintendent Battle Creek Sanitarium.

PROFIT SHARING AND SOCIAL JUSTICE.

Neither in principle nor in practice is profit-sharing new. In England and elsewhere, not excepting this country, profit-sharing schemes are in successful operation. And more of them are bound to come, first because the self-interest of employers leads to the idea, and secondly because progressive views concerning industry and labor are steadily making headway.

What excited so much interest and surprise in the profit-sharing scheme announced by the Ford Motor Company of Detroit is its magnificence. It is the most liberal plan yet adopted. It gives millions annually to the wageworkers; the total this year is expected to reach ten million dollars. The company has been exceptionally prosperous, and last year it would have had the amount just named for distribution under the plan announced.

In addition to the profit-sharing plan, the company has established an eight-hour day and a five dollar minimum wage for men. Each salaried employee is to get, as heretofore, a bonus based on individual merit. Women employees of the company have had their salaries raised and hope to be taken into the profit-sharing plan sooner or later. The company employs some twenty-six thousand men and women, and expects to enlarge its force.

In explaining the company's action, the general manager and the chief owner, Mr. Ford, said some noteworthy things that have furnished texts for much comment. We quote the latter:

It is our belief that social justice begins at home. We want those who have helped us to produce this great institution and are helping to maintain it to share our prosperity. Believing, as we do, that a division of our earnings between capital and labor is unequal, we have sought a plan of relief suitable for our business. We do not feel sure that it is the best, but we have felt impelled to make a start and make it now. We do not agree with those employers who declare that the movement toward the bettering of society must be universal; we think that one concern can make a start and create an example for other employers, and that is our chief object.

As a matter of fact, there is no conflict between social justice and individual justice. Any firm or person is free to share his profits with employees, so long as he is able to pay normal returns on capital invested. The wage system, competition and the so-called laws of trade have nothing to do with it. There are no "laws of trade" which require an employer to "cut melons," to pay extra dividends, to keep all the profits.

Much can be done under the present system for social justice, and much is being done, without legislation and without compulsion. But it would be short-sighted to claim that legislation is wholly unnecessary, and that everything should be left to the good will of employers. There are many reforms which uniform laws alone can secure; child labor laws, accident compensation laws, woman's shorter workday laws are illustrations that readily occur. Sweating and greedy exploitation must be attacked by the state. The humane employer can not always compete with the hard and thoughtless one. Hence there is urgent need for programs of industrial and social justice. But, to repeat, within a large sphere opportunities are open and free to the enlightened and generous-minded capitalist. The widest adoption of profit-sharing, liberal pension schemes, insurance schemes, good factory conditions, safety devices, conciliation and arbitration boards to prevent strife—these reforms are entirely possible under existing conditions, although, it can not be doubted, they will greatly facilitate the transition to a better and higher industrial order—The Chautauquan, January 24, 1914.

Still seems it strange that thou shouldst live for ever?
Is it less strange that thou shouldst live at all?
This is a miracle; and that no more.—Young.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

Coming.

That is what it says, the bright green card handed in at the door by a small boy. It is the announcement of the coming of a theatrical company. We turn the card and read on the other side, "Coming soon."

As we sit looking at the card, we recall that last week there assembled in one of our large cities what was termed an "international prophetic conference," which was presided over by the president of Westminster College, Pennsylvania. At this conference was read "a confession of faith" which was prepared by a committee of five.

One of the sections of this confession of faith reads as follows: "We believe in the second, visible, and imminent coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, to establish his world-wide kingdom on the earth."

Coming; coming soon! Our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Coming to establish his world-wide kingdom! The once "far-off, divine event" is at hand. For nearly a century the church has been singing, "We know he is coming to gather his sheep, and plant them in Zion in love." For nearly a century, men called and ordained by the authority of heaven have been proclaiming to those who will hear that the reign of Christ is soon to begin upon the earth. As the event approaches, Christian men not numbered with us are rising with the same proclamation.

And they and we have to meet the allurements of such counter attractions as that advertised by the card handed in at the door.

A few days since a Baptist ministers' conference was held in the same city in which the international prophetic conference was held. It was maintained earnestly by one of the clergymen attendant upon this conference that the Christian church is "losing out" because of social functions. Said the minister: "Social functions are preventing the church from bringing out a better spiritual work in the church. Let the church get to work spiritually, drop the social functions, and better results will obtain. The church is losing out and will until the social is succeeded by the spiritual in the church."

Are we also "losing out"? Are we as spiritual as we should be? Are we taking hold of the church work as energetically as we should? Are our services as well attended as they should be? Is all the garden growing thriftily? Is the work moving on steadily?

These are questions we may well ask ourselves, if, indeed, it be true that Christ is coming and coming soon. We have been raised up as a people to lift this warning cry to the world, that the great day of his coming is at hand, and that it will come suddenly, "as a whirlwind," upon all the face of the earth.

The Wayward Girl.

A college president, a United States district judge, and a Catholic clergyman went before a body of women of the Welfare League of Chicago and "emphasized above all else the need of religious and moral training of the boys and girls of to-day and the vigilance of parents in demanding obedience."

The subject under discussion was the wayward girl, it being the particular effort of the Welfare League to reclaim women and girls who have gone wrong. The college president stated that a majority of the fallen women of the segregated districts have never received schooling beyond the fourth grade, and that those women choose the life of infamy as a result of under development of the intellect. He said, "The great fundamental truths of religion must be incorporated in the training, no matter what the education, if character is expected to stand the test of temptation."

The judge who addressed the meeting admitted that he did not know what to do with the adult woman gone wrong; but, outlining the policy of the juvenile court to begin with the child, he declared his opinion that "religious education and obedience to parents is absolutely essential."

The Catholic clergyman said, among other things, "Children must be taught in the beginning that there is a law to be obeyed and a God to be feared, or they will drift by the influences which make all drift, unless daily self-restraint is taught."

Our children should be educated in the law of God and in the acquisition of information concerning the things of the world in which we live. Obedience to parents and obedience to God are very closely allied. The child who is disobedient to the parents whom he has seen, how shall he be expected to be obedient to the heavenly Parent whom he has not seen? On of the evils of our present civilization seems to be that children, in their tender years, are left too much to the dictates of their own will. They are not sufficiently directed by their parents. It is not surprising that they go wrong.

Of Interest to the Boys.

Our boys may be interested to know that the English expedition under Sir Ernest Shackleton will observe total abstinence from alcoholic stimulants. They will rely on nothing stronger than tea or cocoa.

The men chosen for this arduous journey are between twenty-five and forty-one, it being the opinion of the commander that men are at their best between those ages. He says a man does not reach his strength until he is twenty-five, and that, whatever may be the superiority of youth in the way of spring, nerve, and enthusiasm, these do not weigh against the staying power of an older man, or the balanced judgment of one who has experience behind him.

And it may be well for the boy of the family to consider the case of a man of fifty-three who is starting life all over after having made a failure of it in the years that have already gone.

This man was once a prosperous business man, an editor, a soldier, then a down-and-out wanderer after having lost position and wealth through alcoholism. "Fortune smiled upon me in my younger days," he said, "and life held out to me its brightest promise. I prospered and lost."

He lost through drink; his home was broken up; he wandered far and wide; he yielded to the pressure of need, and passed a worthless check. It was while serving his time in the Bridewell that friends recognized him and had him sent to an institute where he was treated for his alcoholism. These friends have rallied to him and he is about to start the uphill fight to regain the once commanding station he occupied in the social and political world.

The man is to be wished success in his effort, but how much better it would be never to have fallen so low. May the boy with a clean record be wise enough to keep it so.

And then there is another story from real life, and this is the way it runs: A certain young man, upon his father's death, found himself in possession of some thousands of dollars. He lost it in speculation. He worked in several positions; then he took to forging with the result that he was landed in prison. Because of good behavior he was released several months short of the time his sentence imposed upon him, but was afterwards brought into court again to meet another of the various offenses he had committed before his punishment.

Then there occurred a pathetic incident which touched the hearts of those who witnessed it. The prosecuting attorney recognized in the prisoner one who had been his schoolmate in the years when both were clean-handed boys. When he asked, "Did not you and I go to school together?" the accused man flushed and turned away. Then he suddenly buried his face in his hands and the tears coursed down his cheeks as he murmured, "I didn't want you to know me. I'm ashamed, and hoped you would forget."

It was then the judge looked away and the spectators were silent in the presence of the man's grief over his lost innocence. Perhaps we ought to add that friends are standing beside this young man also, and that the judge has given him his chance to retrieve his life and to end it an honest man.

But how much better to live a life that is always honest and honorable! How much better never to lose one's innocence!

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN MARCH.

Prayer for our missions and missionaries, especially remembering the Lamanites, that the preaching of the gospel may be with conviction that will lead them to obedience, and that thereafter their lives may be such as will demonstrate the purifying, uplifting power of the truth. Remember the mission at Jerusalem and those who have been sent there, that they may be protected, and be successful in winning converts to the truth, and that the Spirit may abide with them.

Lesson, Second Book of Nephi 9: 117-128. Memory verse, Book of Nephi 10: 3.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sister Margaret Richner, of Chardon, Ohio, requests prayers. She is severely afflicted with rheumatism, from the effects of which her limbs have been weakened until she is all but helpless. She is isolated, and can not call for the administration of the elders. May she be remembered, and blessed.

Sister H. L. Pratt writes from Palmyra, Nebraska, requesting prayers for herself and her sister, who is not a member of the church. Sister Pratt suffered from physical weakness for many years; her sister has tuberculosis. May they both be blessed.

Tardy Justice.

In the beginning of my missionary labors, twenty years ago, it was very difficult to find an encyclopedia, history, or dictionary which recognized the existence of the Reorganized Church, or made any distinction between it and the Mormon Church of Utah. Now, however, it is quite different. In those days I copied a few statements from books I met with in my travels, but afterward lost the copies, and not having had them published they passed entirely from my possession. Of late I have been doing some more copying, and have resolved to do better in the way of preserving what I have taken.

It has always seemed strange to me that notwithstanding our efforts to make our position clear so little matter concerning our history and doctrine has appeared in standard literature. It appears, however, that a brighter day has dawned. Now every book, or nearly so, that contains anything about us is more to the point than heretofore. This is doubtless due in part, at least, to the labors of our church historian.

Commencing at the beginning, or toward it rather, we present the following concerning the origin of polygamy: "It may here be stated that it can not be shown that Smith was a polygamist in our sense of the word. Years after his death, Brigham Young produced a paper which he said was a copy of a revelation made to Joseph at Nauvoo, commanding him to take as many wives as God should give him. But it was not until August 29, 1852, at a public meeting held in Salt Lake City, that the revelation was formally received."—Rand, McNally Encyclopedia and Gazetteer, p. 545.

This work purports to be "A condensation of the Encyclopedia Britannica, Chambers' Encyclopedia, etc., with the addition of much original matter treating of American subjects." The careful student will recognize the quotation given as a statement taken verbatim from the Chambers' Encyclopedia. Although it is not original with Rand, McNally, yet we give them credit for having reproduced a statement which is fairer than usual.

We take this from a dictionary: "Mormon 1. They (the Mormons) formerly practiced plural marriage, but that is stated to have been discontinued after the manifesto of President Woodruff in 1890. 2. A member of a sect called the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which has always rejected polygamy. It was organized in 1852, and is represented in about forty States of the United States."

We quote from Winston's Encyclopedia: "Polygamy, though originally condemned in the Book of Mormon, was introduced under a theory of 'spiritual wives.' The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, sometimes called non-polygamist Mormons, claim to be true to the doctrines proclaimed by Joseph Smith, insisting that Brigham Young's followers were led by him from the truth, and deny that Young's revelation in 1852 concerning polygamy was genuine."—Vol. 6, pp. 29, 30.

Last, but not least, we give the version of the People's Practical Encyclopedia. Under the heading "Mormons, or Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," this item is found: "In 1851 a division resulted from the publication of a revelation authorizing polygamy. According to this revelation two classes of marriages were recognized—one a spiritual and eternal, the other a temporal, for this life. Eternal marriages were held to exist as a relationship having no end, while temporal marriages were looked upon as joining the contracting parties until they are divorced by death. Those denying the authenticity of this revelation constitute the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, whose principal seat is at Lamoni, Iowa.—Vol. 2, p. 1433.

At the close of the last-named item we read, "See Latter Day Saints." Turning to page 1212, same volume, we find the following: "Latter Day Saints, or Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, a body of the Mormon Church, which stands in opposition to the Mormons that have their principal seat of activity at Salt Lake City. It dates from 1844 when a schism occurred in the church, immediately after the death of Joseph Smith, and its promoters claim succession from the original organization. Its chief institutions are at Lamoni, Iowa, where the principal officials reside, and several fine educational institutions are maintained. The tenets of faith are founded on the Bible and the Book of Mormon, both of which are held to be inspired; plurality in marriage is opposed, and strict discipline is enforced. There are one thousand four hundred and fifty ministers, six hundred and fifty churches, and a membership of fifty thousand five hundred and sixty."—Vol. 2, p. 1212.

Such expressions as "which he said" and "is stated to have been discontinued" show a tendency to mildly discredit the representations of the Utah Church. Most writers have erred by relying on the Brighamites for information. That reliance has caused practically all the errors which have appeared in common print. A change is coming on, however, and it is only a question of time till the whole history of Latter Day Saints as given by the people of the world will be rewritten.

We accept the foregoing items as justice, though tardy. Let any who may have been in error regarding our identity and doctrines stand corrected. A. C. BARMORE.

Harp-Kennedy Debate.

This debate was conducted by Brother John Harp and Elder James S. Kennedy of the Free Will creed, at Avery, Texas, February 4 and 6. Brother Harp affirmed baptism for the remission of sins, by which we may become heirs of the kingdom. He showed that baptism was for the remission of sins, using a number of scriptural passages in so doing. At his suggestion Elder Kennedy shook hands with him, agreeing that this point had been settled.

Elder Kennedy contended that the baptism referred to in John 3:5 was spirit baptism. He based most of his remarks on John 4:10-14. He introduced the thief on the cross. Elder Kennedy affirmed that this life ended all chance for salvation, and that the Bible does not teach baptism for the dead. He introduced nothing new. He urged that the death angel passed over and destroyed the eldest wherever the blood was not found; that Noah and his family were saved without baptism. Brother Harp showed that these people were saved from physical destruction, and not in the kingdom of God. He also showed that the thief on the cross went to the heart of the earth, and not into the presence of the Father.

Brother Harp used many passages of scripture to show the fallacy of the affirmation of Elder Kennedy. Elder Kennedy seemed to realize that he was defeated. He challenged Brother Harp to meet him again in warm weather, when they could build an arbor and discuss the same proposition with other matter added. Brother Harp accepted.

Brother Harp made many friends here among the world, and is loved by all the Saints. We are much encouraged. Through the constant efforts of Brother Pollard and Brother Calley the branch is getting in better condition and growing. We are expecting to build a house soon. A. L. CRUSE.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: We have a splendid meeting in progress here. A number of church books have been sold, and one HERALD subscription taken. Three adults were baptized yesterday. The house is well filled each night, and sometimes packed, with some standing.

Sister Frye, of Tulsa, will be happy to learn that her friend, Sister Black, of Sperry, is one of the honorable women who have heard the word gladly and obeyed it. Brother A. J. Hager is my assistant here. Brother Aylor was preaching here a short time ago, but could not remain, and directed that we proceed to this point. All goes well.

J. E. YATES.

CUPERTINO, CALIFORNIA.

Editors Herald: Since you last heard from me through the columns of the church papers, I have passed through what seemed to me an overwhelming sorrow, caused by the death of one who was more to me than my own life, and leaving the dear home I had thought would be mine to the end of my earthly career. I have also parted from my grandchildren who had nestled in my arms, and entwined love's tendrils around my heart from their earliest existence. This trial was scarcely less poignant to me than that felt at the death of their dear mother. But this change in my plans seemed to be the leadings of Providence, and I must not complain.

God has been exceedingly good to me all through my sore bereavement, and has given to me many kind friends. Though I find myself far away from former environments and friends, I still find dear ones here in my new home, who do everything possible for my pleasure and happiness.

This great sorrow through which I have passed, has been to me a severe test of my faith and trust in the Father's tender watchcare. During those first days of intense grief, when the heart was numbed, and the faith blinded by the great shock that I had sustained, I could not realize that there might be the hand of wisdom, love, or even justice ruling my affairs; much less could I see a silver lining to the dark cloud that lowered over me. But now, after much heart-searching prayer, it occurs to me that possibly God has other work for me to do, and by removing the earthly prop upon which I leaned so heavily I will be compelled to seek more fully help from him alone, and in this way be better fitted to do the work required of me.

This thought inspires and helps me in my devotions; it helps me also to bear with cheerful resignation the trials of life. If God could use me as an instrument through which the gospel light could shine to illuminate the way for some benighted soul, how happy I would be! But I realize, too, that this great privilege is only granted to those who have made a full surrender to God of all they have. When body, soul, and spirit are cleansed and quickened into newness of life and brought into close communion with the Father; and when we have brought all our tithes into his storehouse, then will God fulfill his promise and pour us out an abundant blessing.

There are so many blessings promised in the scriptures, if we will only strive to attain to that high standard that God requires of us, putting away from us everything that might retard the fruits of the Spirit, we would soon see an outpouring of the Holy Spirit marvelous to behold. Dear Saints, let us strive individually to attain to a higher life by putting away from our hearts all envy, malice, and all evil speaking, that peace and joy and all those virtues that adorn the Christian profession may flourish in our hearts, that we may be able to enter into a oneness with the Father and with his Son.

When our Lord was here in the flesh he prayed for his disciples that they might all be one, even as he and the Father were one. This consisted in oneness of purpose, oneness of mind and heart, in loyalty and obedience to the will of God. This obedience existed between the Father and his Son from the beginning, and was manifested to us when he became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. In trying to imitate our Lord we, his followers, should live very near to the cross, and should seek every means to rise to a higher, broader plane of spiritual advancement. We need to fix our minds and hearts on the perfections of Christ, which is our pattern.

One characteristic of our Lord was humility of spirit. A proud and haughty spirit is displeasing in his sight. Only through humility and prayer will help come to crushed, afflicted souls. Prayer quickens our faith and enriches our spiritual life, releasing, and resting both body and mind. To those who are often found in deep communion with the Father there comes a sweet sense of a presence all divine, hovering near, and penetrating to their innermost beings, kindling anew in the heart a Pentecostal flame of zeal and love and power that will surely burst forth and warm and cheer indifferent, listless souls, and thus bring them nearer to the light of God.

We find, too, that all who keep in daily and hourly touch with the Father through prayer have a freshness and spontaneity in their religious expressions, in prayer, testimony, and personal intercourse that will impress the hearer and thus add to the glory of God, for others "will take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus and have learned of him." Then, too, we should remember that it is our duty as well as privilege to draw inspiration from direct communion with God, our source of power and strength, who alone can supply our needs.

Dear, sorrowing friends, come with me; let us enter into the innermost recess of the sanctuary, where no eye but that of God can penetrate, and there let us go down upon our knees before him, and examine our own hearts. We will there see how far from duty and from God we have lived. We will also see how lenient a loving Father has been with us; how slow to anger, and merciful he is, for he wills not that any should perish, but that all would repent and live. Now let us tell everything to God. Although he knows all about it, he wants to hear confession from our lips as well as from our hearts. Now we can leave all our sorrows at the foot of the cross, and go on our way rejoicing.

In this lowly retreat is where we find that the misty clouds of unbelief and doubt will fall off, and scatter before the rays of the Sun of Righteousness, and that a gentle peace will descend upon us, a peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Then through faith's pure air we may soar above the storm clouds of life, and feel ourselves standing on Pisgah's lofty heights in the very presence of divinity. What earthly gain can impart to the crushed and fettered soul such healing balm as comes through fervent, humble prayer?

IANTHA B. STILLWAGON.

LEBANON, OREGON, February 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: As a few of God's isolated Saints, we are trying to walk in the light while we have the light with us, lest darkness overtake us and we know not where to go. This is a very hard place for Latter Day Saints. It seems as if the true gospel is poison to other churchgoers, they are so afraid of Latter Day Saints.

We know we have the gospel. We hope and pray that in the Lord's own due time some one will be sent to us. There are a few of us who meet on Sunday afternoons for prayer. The Lord blesses us in our weak efforts, in doing the best we can. The Spirit spoke to us through one of our brethren at one of our prayer meetings. We were thankful to know that God was pleased with us; we were encouraged to press on. We ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be strong.

Dear brothers and sisters, let us help all we can to pay the church debt. Even though you may be isolated, the Lord will remember you and bless you for all the good you do. Let us work.

Your sister in bonds,

Editors Herald: Brother E. W. Long, whom I baptized in Chatham, Ontario, about sixteen years ago, and who has been residing in western Canada the past ten years, gave me a trip with himself and wife to see our aged brother, Patriarch John H. Lake, who celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday on the 5th of December last.

As we drove through Kirtland on the forenoon of the 14th, Sister Liston called to us to hurry up, as Brother Lake was sinking fast. As we entered the room of his home, we found him seated in a comfortable rocking chair near the register.

As soon as he saw me he exclaimed, "John Shields." I took his hand; it was cold. I introduced Brother and Sister Long, whom he did not remember just them. Soon he talked a little with us, and when others of the Saints came in he revived still more. When we met with him in the afternoon he had slept some and felt refreshed. He asked for administration. Brother Long led in prayer, seeming to express the sentiment of every heart. We felt that our prayers would be answered as we earnestly sought our heavenly Father to so restore and strengthen our aged brother that he might be permitted to meet with us on Sunday at the services of worship.

Great was our rejoicing and thankful were our hearts to God, when we beheld Brother Lake in our midst at the eleven o'clock social service. We felt it was good to be there, not only to meet with our Brother Lake, but especially because our elder Brother, the Savior, was present by his Holy Spirit. As Brother Lake remarked, it was an educational meeting, the Spirit of the Lord aiding in testimony.

Brother Lake arose and with uplifted hand said, "Tell me I don't know this work is true; you might as well tell me I don't know I have a right hand. Yes, praise God, I know it is true."

Dear Saints, what strength and courage should come to us from such a testimony, borne by one who has spent over fifty years in the church, most of that time in the work of the ministry, and as a missionary.

At the Saints' Home at two o'clock Brother Curry, branch president, asked Brother Lake to take charge. He was blessed with the gift of tongues and interpretation. The writer also exercised under the Spirit in this meeting.

When Brother Curry asked Brother Lake at the close of the service if he thought he would be able to assist the writer at the evening service he said, "I feel strong enough to go to Jerusalem now." He did indeed assist, and as the Saints sang, "We shall greet them at home; we shall greet them," the thought of the glorious prospect thrilled us with an ardent desire to love the Lord more and serve him better, and that we, too, might finish our course, keeping the faith. As we gazed upon that one strong in faith yet weak in body, we thought of the words of Paul, "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

We can not say that our parting was sorrowful, for we realized that our loss would be the gain of our brother, and that He who was able to raise him up, temporally to meet with us is also able to add years yet to Brother Lake's life if it be His will.

Brother Lake told us at the morning prayer meeting he felt he was going home on Saturday morning, but was called back to see his friends and meet with the Saints once more. We praise God for thus permitting us to meet and rejoice under the sweet Spirit of the Master.

In gospel bonds,

JOHN SHIELDS.

VICKERY, TEXAS, February 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am eleven years old. My sister and I were with others baptized in July, 1912. I am glad I obeyed when I did. I have received blessings.

We have prayer meeting here every other Wednesday night. We hope to organize a branch soon. All of our family belong to this church but sister, and she is too little. I hope Zion will soon be redeemed.

Your sister in the one faith,

SALLIE STONDIFER.

NORFOLK, NEBRASKA, February 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: We hold Sunday school here every Sunday, and meetings whenever an elder comes to Norfolk. Brother J. H. Jackson, of Meadow Grove, comes the first of each month to hold sacrament meeting whenever his health will permit. Brother J. F. Grimes was here in the fall and held meetings over a week. Brother Levi Gamet is with us sometimes, as is also Brother Joseph Smith, now of Bonesteel.

We desire the Saints of Lamoni and elsewhere to pray for us. We have two sick sisters and one babe among us for whom we desire the especial prayers of the Saints. Hoping to remain faithful, I am as ever,

Your sister in bonds,
MRS. EFFIE L. GALLAND.

CALVIN, NORTH DAKOTA, February 12, 1914.

Editors Herald: I get much good from the letters in the HERALD, and though not able to contribute much, I desire to do what I can in return.

I wish to give my experience in connection with coming into the church. It was the family of Brother Crowl that first interested my father and I in the restored gospel. This family tried to live up to their religion. I thank God for such people.

I have many trials and temptations. One of these trials was in the matter of tithing. I was discouraged with reference to paying tithes and put it off for some time, but, thank God, I am doing what I can now. I was inclined at one time to criticize my brethren. I was shown that the manner in which I was doing this was wrong.

Our branch is so scattered we do not have meetings except Sunday school. I love this latter-day work and pray that it may prosper, and that the redemption of Zion may be hastened. I earnestly desire to be faithful and win a home in heaven.

Your brother,
FRANK WALKER.

PERRY, IOWA, February 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: I came to Perry, January 23, by arrangement of the minister in charge and local authorities, and began a series of meetings, which seem only to have commenced. Interest has constantly increased, and last night we had the largest audience we have yet been favored with.

From the first I have been getting a short article in the two daily papers of the city every day, and they are beginning to bear fruit. Last night a man who was out for the first time said: "I have been reading these articles in the paper, and I came this evening to hear. I am certainly glad I came. I am coming back." He spoke as though he meant every word he said. A lady said, "I have been in three churches, but I never heard the gospel explained like it is here. I am not in any church now. I have my letter in my trunk." She is an intelligent lady of good standing, one of the "honorable" women. Another lady said, "I have been attending church for thirty years, and I never heard the gospel before." Poor, hungry souls, starving for the bread of life, being fed on "husks," are overjoyed at finding the truth.

I am preaching every night with unusual liberty. It revives old-time memories to get back where I can preach every night to interested people. There is a noble little band of Saints here who have the respect of their neighbors, an invaluable asset to the kingdom of God. The preaching of the gospel may be ineffectual in removing prejudice from some minds, but a godly life will win its way against all opposition.

A lady asked me last night about tithing. When I had explained it, a man standing by remarked: "That's Christianity." Some have inquired about the "gathering" and "Zion." A clear, lucid explanation of what the Lord has revealed to us appeals to the honest inquirer every time. I think it is possible to be just a little too careful about presenting the message. The apostles of old prayed that "with all boldness" they might preach the word; and I am persuaded that our preaching will be more effective if we present the message more positively, and earnestly. Hungry souls are ever ready to respond to an earnest appeal. Let us be more aggressive.

The "Open Letter to the Clergy," and the "Plea for the Golden Rule" ought to be sent to every editor in the country. They form a deadly antidote for "anti-Mormon" rot. As a rule, I find editors an honorable, open-minded class of men, and the facts of history set before them in contrast with the unfair methods of the opposition, in an earnest appeal for fair play, will be no detriment to us.

The Disciple minister speaking on the subject, "Religious shams," yesterday morning gave his hearers to understand that he had some "plans" under way, but he did not make them known. We will keep one eye on him, and if he gets ugly we will give him a chance to try his metal.

Happy in the work, and hopeful of a glorious victory for the truth,
E. E. LONG.

UTE, IOWA, February 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: My last letter to the HERALD bore much fruit in different ways. Many dear Saints wrote me lovely letters, full of cheer and good fellowship. Others sent me rolls of tracts and sermons. One dear sister made me a present of one year's subscription to the HERALD, and some one, I know not who, sends me the Ensign one year. May God's richest blessings attend all.

My health has been very poor since Christmas. I suffer the most nerve-racking pain. I humbly ask the Saints to remember me in their prayers, that if it be God's will I may be healed; if it is not his will to heal me fully, that I may have grace to endure and prove faithful to the end.

God has wonderfully supplied our temporal needs, and I know he will continue to be mindful of us, so long as we are faithful and do our best at all times. Our hearts have been made to rejoice and to return thanks to God and his Saints who have been instruments in his hands in blessing us in our extreme need. My companion has had no work since before Christmas, yet we have not been left in want. Our babies are in the best of health, and it will not be long now until spring work opens, then all will be well for the present.

About two weeks ago we were severely tried. My health was poor and my suffering so intense that I could not rest day or night. Our provisions were low. It looked as if God had forsaken us, and I felt rebellious. My physical pain was excruciating and my mental suffering was severe. I felt that God had withdrawn his love and care. It was almost too much for my faith.

I told my companion that I knew the gospel was true and that God was all powerful, and no matter what befell me I would never deny the truth; but that unless God sent succor within twenty-four hours and relieved me of my suffering I would cease to try to live a Christian life. I was tried to the breaking point. Finally my sister, living about nine miles from us, brought succor. That same day my suffering was made less. While I wept because of my rebellion, my faith was strengthened, and we were made to know that God does love us, and is at all times mindful of us.

Yours for truth,
SADIE BURCH.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA, February 17, 1914.

Editors Herald: Seeing some very encouraging reports from different ones relative to publicity work, I thought probably a few words from this section would not be out of place. During the conference year I, with the help of others, have succeeded in getting into the columns of the Baldwin Times, of this place, the George County Times, of Lucedale, Mis-

Mississippi, and the Richton Dispatch of Richton, Mississippi. Space has been granted for advertising, historical sketches of the rise of the church, the differences between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church, and doctrinal features. This I think has been conducive of good.

I also tried the Mobile Register, which is a daily with a wide circulation, but I failed at this place, the managing editor informing me in no mistakable way that they had no space in their columns for the "Mormons." A second letter from me, however, brought back an apology for his discourtesy with a promise to use any news of our organization, but no doctrinal features. This will probably do good later.

I have been a contributor for the Baldwin Times for the past two years or more. To show the fairness of this editor and his friendliness to the cause we love, I inclose a synopsis of a sermon preached by our worthy Brother I. M. Smith at this place. It shows the character of the sermon from the viewpoint of an outsider, and those who are acquainted with Brother Smith will know that the discourse merited this praise. This was printed entirely without our solicitation. How thankful we should be to be engaged in a work such that even outsiders can not but feel the Spirit of the Master in our midst! Onward, ever onward, is the motto of,

Your brother in the cause,

A. E. WARR.

Editor Baldwin Times: On Friday night of last week I dropped into a church service, the denominational views of which being unknown to me. I must confess that my going to the service was to some extent caused by curiosity; but I certainly listened to a splendid sermon, in fact one of the best I ever heard. This sermon was preached by a visiting minister of the Latter Day Saints, and at their church here in Bay Minette. I wish to say that I am not a Latter Day Saint—or "Mormon," if you please,—neither do I ever intend to become one. But I do wish to be a Christian, and a Christian needs must recognize merit and the Spirit of the Master wherever it is seen, whether it be in friend or foe, pauper or plutocrat.

The preacher, Reverend Smith, of Independence, Missouri, chose for his theme the duty of church members toward each other. He lucidly explained several scriptural texts bearing on this subject, and referred to the very prevalent fault, with men both in and out of the church, of telling others about grievances against a neighbor instead of going to the neighbor in a humble spirit and trying to effect a reconciliation with him. He showed how this habit aggravated the trouble, sometimes leading to the most serious consequences.

One cause of this habit is the fact that men, unknown to themselves, like to nurse their animosities. "The heart is desperately wicked and deceitful above all things." Again, men fail to correct the habit because they lack the charity, the brotherly spirit, which is necessary in approaching a neighbor to talk about a grievance against him. They will frequently muster up courage to tell a neighbor about his faults, but as they do it with rancor in their hearts the matter is made worse rather than bettered. Oh, how much wiser would be the use of a little Christian charity!

The preacher deplored the too prevalent fault of church members excusing themselves by saying that because a neighbor was the aggressor it was his business to come to them—not theirs to go to him—to bring about pacification. This is not a Christian spirit. We were the aggressors, but Christ died for us while we were yet hostile and in our sins. Christians should pursue the same example of charity toward neighbors.

The speaker showed how, if we would please God, we must "leave our gifts before the altar," and first be reconciled to those we have offended if it be possible. God wants an amicable spirit to prevail among his children before they ask for his favors. They must not have grudges against each other.

In conclusion he feelingly referred to the sublime fact that if we would be great in heaven it is not necessary to have the power or the wisdom of some celebrity, as Moses or Paul, or of the great in our own day. But it is necessary that we become "as a little child," and accept and cherish the truth in simplicity and humility, sincerely and confidently.

The preacher spoke sadly of the faults of church members, and not his words only, but his air and his countenance showed his sincerity.

VISITOR.

Extracts from Letters.

J. C. Crabb, South Edmonton, Alberta: "Our worthy president baptized three yesterday. All is going well in the branch. We are having spring-like weather. Best of wishes to all."

Sister Clarence L. Wainwright, Chicago, Illinois: "On Wednesday evening, February 18, the usual well-attended prayer service was visited by the Spirit of God, and everyone felt to a certain extent the presence of the same. We were made to rejoice and felt greatly encouraged by the presence of our worthy president, Brother H. P. W. Kier, which we believe to be the result of our special prayer service held at his home on Monday, February 16. Our brother has been sorely afflicted, and after our united pleadings we feel that much mercy was shown him by our Father, who hears and answers prayers. Sunday morning for the first time since the first of the year we had the pleasure of having Brother Kier address us. Brother J. Daalder and Brother A. Boehm were baptized Sunday, the 22d, by Brother David E. Dowker."

R. D. Weaver, Chatham, Ontario: "The writer preached here last night to a church full of interested people, on the sealed book of Isaiah 29. Fine liberty was given, for which God has all the praise. We will begin another series of meetings here in the near future. Am well, and happy in the work."

Sarah A. Dalre: "To be a member of God's church if one is sincere is the greatest blessing that could come to anyone. To be found worthy to work for the Master is greater than to be President of the United States, providing one keeps himself in humble state of mind, so as to be led by the Spirit and to occupy where it leads him. May heaven's choicest blessings attend the faithful Saints. May God lead them with wisdom from the pleasure fancy paints to higher scenes of glory where dwell the faithful few. May we walk the narrow path."

R. T. Cooper, Los Angeles, California: "At the February sacrament service in Los Angeles the attendance was a record one, filling the house almost to standing room. A good spirit was present. The members from the different missions came to the church and a basket dinner was enjoyed in the entertainment room. Two more from Long Beach were baptized in the font after Sunday school, and confirmed at the sacrament service; several children blessed. The Spirit was manifested in a goodly degree of strength and power with the administration committee, and blessings were bestowed."

I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I can not drift
Beyond his love and care.

—Whittier.

News from Missions

Australia.

We just returned from the Newcastle District, in which are five branches. While there we were cared for at the home of Brother and Sister Lewis, a fine family of Saints. Brother Lewis is the Australian bishop. Brother J. H. N. Jones, one of our missionaries appointed to this field, was also entertained by Brother Lewis. We were pleased to form his acquaintance.

We have a number of able young men in this mission who are developing, and the time has about arrived when Australia can supply its own missionaries. This is a great country, and has wonderful possibilities before it. We believe there is a great work to be done here for the Lord; the Saints are ready to help push on the cause of Christ.

I have been using my parliamentary chart effectively. There is so much need for instruction along this line that I have felt there should be something put out which could be used by elders in the field, Sunday schools, Religios, branches, etc. I had cuts made in colors, and have for sale at my home, 185 West Eleventh Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, and will have at General Conference, a chart twenty by thirty-six inches, which is so simple a child can soon understand it. Price $1, postpaid. It is printed on paper cloth, and can be carried in a suitcase or bag.

We expect to leave soon for the Victoria District. While I have been in Sydney I have been a welcome guest of Brother and Sister Gresty. Brother Gresty is an accomplished musician, and a composer of some reputation. His family are very talented musically. Sister Gresty is one of our leading workers among the sisters. Ministers appreciate the kindness Brother Miller and myself have received from the Saints here, and the Lord will surely reward the kindness of such Saints. While Brother Miller is located in Sydney, he is being taken care of by Brother and Sister Seaburg, a young couple who seem to take a delight in caring for the missionaries.

I hope the Lord will bless the coming conference, and that the good Spirit will prevail. Brother Miller is doing splendidly over here, and is loved by the Saints.

With best wishes,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA, 623 Darling Street, February 6, 1914.

Kansas.

Another mission year is coming to a close. This mission, known as the unorganized part of southern Kansas, is a large and a splendid field. Very little gospel work has been done here compared with other parts of the State. I was never treated better in any mission than in this. The Saints see that the elder's way is paid and that he is cared for in every way.

I consider it an important field. Large wheat and stock interests are represented here, and in time a church membership here would furnish help to spread the gospel. First we must build up membership, and in order to do this we must send men in here to preach the gospel.

This section is a great producing country. Lots of wealth is found among the farmers. While last year was what is called a short crop year, the people have the money to buy the needed food. The winter has been very mild, and stock has been taken through so far on growing wheat. The outlook never was better for a coming crop.

The first part of my year's work was taken up in helping Brother J. F. Curtis in two debates, which prevented my doing any work in my field until in July. My first real effort was made in Wichita, in our gospel tent. The tent was first used in the north part of the city, afterwards in Hyde Park. A good work was done. Several came into the church, and many others were left believing, whom the branch authorities should be able to interest. Brother W. E. Peak assisted in the meetings in Wichita.

Brother Alvin Martin was sent in August to be associated with me in this mission. He is proving to be a fine young man. In time, if faithful, he will be a power for good. The Saints of Wichita did all that could be asked to meet the demands of running the tent in the city.

Our next tent meeting was at Winfield. Brother W. Vickery and his son George, also Brother Harding, of Arkansas City, did everything that could be done to get the truth before the people. We preached on the streets in the afternoon, and in the tent in the evening. We created quite an interest and made many friends. One was baptized. E. L. Barraclough came and assisted in this meeting; he was well liked by all. Cold weather compelled us to store our tent. We tried to get the courthouse to continue our meetings, but failed. We have membership enough there to organize a branch, the thing that should have been done if it could have been attended to. I received word from Brother W. Vickery of late saying they have a good Sunday school under the leadership of Sister Emma Vickery. It will prosper, I am sure.

In January Brother Martin and I commenced a meeting at Wilmore. Brother Earl Redfield and wife had procured the Christian church for the meeting and sent for us. We had a splendid attendance, but it was not long before it was talked around that the Christians were going to start a meeting. Some of the old "standpatters" drove to other towns to try to get a preacher to come and hold a meeting. They had no money to conduct a meeting, so I was told, but at last they said they had a preacher, and we had to stop our meeting. Our effort did good and made friends. I am safe in saying seventy-five per cent of the people were with us, and if our work can be presented there this coming year some will come into the church.

From here we were taken forty miles across the country in an automobile to our present place of writing. Brother Baskett procured the Christian church for two evenings. Our meetings in the church were well attended. Brethren Redfield and Baskett seated a store building and we preached the rest of our time in it. We had a splendid hearing. Some excellent people became interested and some should have been baptized, undoubtedly will be soon. I succeeded in getting a brief article in the town paper. We have some fine young men here that will, if faithful, be preaching the gospel.

From here we go to Iuka, Kansas, to hold a meeting. From there home to make ready for General Conference.

In bonds,

BUCKLIN, KANSAS, February, 1914. J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

Eastern Oklahoma.

Another year has passed and gone, with all of its joys and sorrows. Turning from the pains and joys, the failures and successes, the work done and the work undone, let us face the new year.

What a grand amount of uplift there is in the cry, Onward and upward, to splendid achievement! What a grand thrill of purpose and plan for determined onward marching the new year, 1914, holds for all who will do work for the Lord! Each and every one has his part of the world's work to perform. In that work lies his chance of becoming radiant, his chance of making the world better, stronger, greater, because he is a part of it.

I have tried to do all I could this past year, asking the Lord to give me wisdom that I might know what was best to do, to build up his work among the children of men and prepare myself for the coming of my Savior. I have had some fine meetings during the year. I have had the pleasure of conducting some noble men and women into the kingdom of God, and have seen them rejoice under the influence of the Holy Spirit. I am made glad to know that the Lord accepts my work.

I recently held a meeting at Leflose, in eastern Oklahoma. Hundreds of the best people in the town came out. The good Methodist people let us use their church. I was directed during the meeting to preach on the gathering of ancient Israel. A prominent Indian lawyer sat in front of me, tears rolling down his cheeks. I was made to see by the divine Spirit that the time would soon come when many of those people would seek the kingdom of God. So go on, Brother Case, with the grand work.

Leflose is the town where Brother J. D. Erwin and Elder Abe Carline held a debate several years ago. The people have not forgotten the grand victory for the truth. There are many noble people in the town, and we hope to gather them into the kingdom of God.

We just closed a good district conference at Wilburton. We had the pleasure of having Brother W. M. Aylor with us. We were built up spiritually by his noble counsel, especially by the counsel he gave us in the priesthood meetings. He is indeed a noble man of God. May the Lord bless him with great wisdom. By the strong efforts of Brethren Doctor H. L. Dalbey, A. L. Warton, and Samuel Skinner, and the liberal contributions of the Saints and friends we have been able to seat our church in Wilburton, for which we owe the brethren many thanks.

May God bless us all this year to do a good work for the Master, putting forth every effort we can to build up Zion and prepare ourselves for the coming of the Savior, and to greet the pure and good who have gone on before, and are waiting in the paradise of rest to clasp our hands. So may the Lord be with us in the coming conference.

Your brother in the gospel,
E. A. ERWIN.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri.

Bishop Bullard gave an excellent discourse on the morning of February 15. The evening sermon was by M. F. Gowell, and in the afternoon the Woman's Auxiliary held its monthly meeting. The Sunday school with its total attendance of eight hundred and eight presented a busy scene in every department. On the following Sunday, very cold weather prevailing, many were absent. The morning and evening services were conducted by Mr. J. A. Harsfeld and Elder Charles Fry respectively, the former a reformed Jew, who in a very instructive and concise manner, gave a talk in reference to the subjects taught in the Jewish religion.

Those discussed were God, precepts, Sabbatical laws, food, vows, agriculture, divinity, offering, cleanliness, damage and injury, purchase and sale, civil law, judges, and the superior and inferior courts of the Sanhedrin. In the Talmud no bribery was allowed, and only wise men became lawyers. Most frequent as punishment were stripes and fines, and crucifixion was never adopted by the Jews, only by the Romans.

On last Sunday, March 1, about seventy-five were present at early prayer meeting. Mr. J. Boleman, representing the prison reform movement, spoke for the fifth time here. In his extensive work he has been associated for about ten years in this State with such men as Mr. Bushnell, Willard P. Holmes, et al. Great changes have taken place the last year. We have a woman judge and a juvenile court, and their mission he praised highly. "No court like it," he said. He spoke also of the great advantages of the Sunday school for the boys, of the mistakes in prison management, vile company, bad ventilation, and a lack of cleanliness. Among the two thousand four hundred prisoners at Jefferson City, six hundred he said are under twenty-two years of age! But in presenting another picture he stated that in three months three hundred have been helped, and as many as fifteen in one day.

Preparations for conference are being forwarded, entertainment cards are out and a few elders have arrived home. The missionaries report favorably. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Brooklyn, New York.

Brooklyn Branch has steadily grown from the time of its organization, in 1870, although the enemy of souls has been busy casting stumblingblocks in the path of progress.

In 1903 the first church was built in the growing section of Brownsville. This was considered at that time a very desirable location, but soon the Jewish people fell in love with the place, with the result that over one hundred thousand Jews made this section their home. The Saints sold their church property to the Hebrews and sought a new location.

In 1907 they erected their second church on Park Place, corner of Schenectady Avenue. This section was new at this time, but gave every promise of becoming a very select residential part of Brooklyn. Many of the members erected homes for themselves near the church. What a difference a few years make! At the present time we find ourselves surrounded by Catholics, Jews, and Italians. Thus the work of proselyting has been greatly retarded. But notwithstanding all these discouraging features, the Saints have done good work; by "letting their light shine," they have discovered a few of the honest in heart who have come in our midst, although many of the members live at a great distance. The branch at the present time numbers two hundred and twenty-five. We have a Sunday school of about one hundred and fifty.

On February 21 to 23 the New York and Philadelphia district conference convened at the church. Paul M. Hanson, together with the district presidency, Ephraim Squire, W. W. Smith, and B. R. McGuire, were in charge. This conference was one of the best that has been held in this city. There were about one hundred visitors, including Elders Paul M. Hanson, H. O. Smith, W. A. Sinclair, M. D.; Ralph W. Farrell, A. D. Angus, W. W. Smith, J. August Koehler, William and Richard Howkins. Preaching was done by Paul M. Hanson, W. W. Smith, and H. O. Smith. All the officers of the district were reelected, namely: Ephraim Squire, president; W. W. Smith and B. R. McGuire, counselors; Herman N. Schwartz, secretary; John Zimmerman, sr., treasurer; Anna Zimmermann, member library board; J. August Koehler on the standing auditing committee.

The closing feature of the conference was Gaul's oratorio, "The Holy City," sung by a combined district choir of about seventy voices, led by the General Chorister, Albert N. Hoxie, jr., Mr. Earl Audet, organist, and Mrs. Albert Hoxie, pianist. This production was a great success, which gives unmistakable evidence of Brother Hoxie's ability in choir training. The cantata will be repeated in Philadelphia in about two weeks.

On January 27, a musicale was given at the church, under the auspices of the choir, Sister Ella Squire director, Brother Earl Audet organist. This concert netted the church over seventy dollars.

Special features have been inaugurated at the church the past year. One is a service for children, conducted by the pastor every Sunday evening at 6.30. The program includes songs, Bible and nature stories, good-habit talks, illustrated with mystical, magical, and mechanical devices, and illustrations on the blackboard. By this means the attention of the children is riveted on the subject. You appeal to them through the eye gate as well as the ear gate. Children comprehend Bible stories and illustrations better if objects are used or pictures are made on paper or blackboard. The children are also taught the books of the Bible, Bible divisions, verses, and chapters, etc. This system appeals to the young; they come from near and far to see the show, as some of the strangers express themselves. Soon we see results of the effort made. The little ones enter the Sunday school, and later the Religio and church.

The Religio is doing good work. Of course the work of this society is particularly adapted to the youth and older members of the church. The children's service might be termed the beginner department, preparing them for the work of the other auxiliaries and church.

The Sunday school is advancing, both numerically and in interest, under the superintendency of Brother Ephraim Squire. The mission Sunday school is in the hands of Sisters J. W. Hull, Bertha Potts, and Elsie Johnson; good work is being done at this place.

The priesthood have been reorganized, and are working along the lines suggested by the First Presidency. There have been about twenty-nine names added to the branch the past year, seventeen by baptism; of this number twelve were young Sunday school members, baptized on February 11. This is largely the result of good work done by the Sunday-school teachers. Many others are investigating, and will no doubt follow in the Master's steps in the near future.

RAILROAD RATES TO CONVENTIONS AND CONFERENCE.

The various passenger associations decline to grant reduced rates to our annual meetings since reduced fares have become almost general in the various States.

EASTERN MINISTERS.

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad will grant a reduced rate to ministers, single or round trip, New York to Kansas City; that road to Buffalo, thence via the Wabash Railroad to Kansas City. Annual clergy permit will be furnished to pastors over churches, and special clergy trip permits to missionaries; all applications therefor must be made to George A. Cullen, Passenger Traffic Agent, Number 90 West Street, Room 2011, New York City. Tickets must be obtained at Hoboken, New Jersey, station.

A number of other roads will grant clerical rates from New York to Chicago for $10.00, regular fare thence to Kansas City; particulars on application to such other roads.

DELEGATES.

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western also quotes a rate of $25.10 to parties of ten or more, New York to Kansas City, for those other than the ministry. See Passenger Traffic Agent, named above. Those interested may also consult Elder E. B. Hull, 1339 Prospect Place, Brooklyn, New York, for particulars or assistance.

All parties from eastern or middle west territory who wish to make arrangements and rates for special party or car service from Chicago, Saint Louis, or other points to Kansas City or Independence, should consult passenger authorities of roads over which they will travel. The Burlington Route is represented by A. J. Puhl, General Agent Passenger Department, 141 South Clark Street, Chicago; Mr. J. G. Deleplaine, City Passenger Agent, 728 Olive Street, Saint Louis.

PACIFIC COAST.

The Transcontinental Association will not grant special rates, but notifies us that those coming from California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia west of and including Mission Junction, the only western States from which fares and conditions are promulgated through Transcontinental headquarters, may avail themselves of the nine months tourist fares which are in effect daily from Pacific Coast States enumerated above, to Chicago, Kansas City, and other eastern terminals. These tourist fares approximate two cents per mile in each direction, or about one and one third fare for round trip.

Should it happen that delegates apply at a station on the Pacific Coast from which the nine months fare is not in effect, which may be the case at very small, unimportant stations, the agent will ascertain and advise concerning the nearest point to his station from which such fare does apply. He will also advise concerning all eastern terminals; Kansas City, however, is the point to which to buy. Please notice that these tourist rate tickets are sold only from the States named, and west of and including Mission Junction, British Columbia, also from what are known as Kootenay common points; namely, Nelson, Rossland, Sandon, Kaslo, and Grand Forks, British Columbia.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

On arrival in Chicago, please call on Mr. John Gilbert, Passenger Agent, Union Station, Corner Canal and Adams Street, and he will be prepared to give all information. Representative of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railway will accompany our party through to Independence.

In order to arrange for special sleeper we would be glad to have all those contemplating going with our party to at once please notify Brother J. A. Becker, Willoughby, Ohio, route 2, so that definite arrangements can be made for sleeping car accommodations. Sincerely, R. C. RUSSELL.

When love has bound the heart.
'Tis hard, so hard, to speak the words,
"We must for ever part."

In the peaceful grave's embrace,
But thy memory will be cherished
Till we see thy heavenly face.

REVEREND NUTTING, CONGREGATIONALIST, THROWS DOWN THE GAUNTLET.

OUR REJOINER.—PART II.

In our last number we were considering the statement made by Reverend Nutting to the effect that the creeds of 1820 could not be wrong, that God was their author; and his challenge to us to point out one fundamental change that had been made in even one creed generally accepted by a Christian denomination. Mr. Nutting's own denomination was selected for the test.

We have before us a book entitled, The Creeds and Platforms of Congregationalism, by Williston Walker, Ph. D., professor in Hartford Theological Seminary, a work which has been indorsed by the Andover Theological Seminary, in a personal letter to us in reply to our inquiry for an authoritative statement of Congregational doctrines.

We shall quote first from the document entitled, "A declaration of the faith and order owned and practiced in the Congregational Churches in England." This is known as the "Savoy Declaration of 1658." This creed was in force in America at the time Joseph Smith made his statement, as will be seen by the following:

Adopted by Massachusetts Synod at Boston in 1680 with a few immaterial modifications, and similarly accepted for Connecticut at Saybrook in 1708, its doctrinal confession long continued a recognized standard for the Congregational churches of America. They have never formally set it aside, and though in Congregational polity a general creed has binding authority only in so far as local churches accept it, this Savoy Confession, as slightly changed in 1680, was declared by the Council of 1865—an assembly representative of the whole body of the Congregational churches of the United States—to embody substantially the faith to which those churches are pledged.—Creeds and Platforms of Congregationalism, p. 353.

GOD INVISIBLE AND WITHOUT FORM.

We quote from chapter two, paragraph one of this creed, as set forth in the work to which we have referred:

There is but one only living and true God; who is infinite in Being and Perfection, a most pure Spirit, invisible, with- out body, parts, or passions, immutable, immense, eternal, incomprehensible, almighty, most wise, most holy, most free, most absolute, working all things according to the Counsel of his own immutable and righteous Will, for his own Glory.

THE WORST FORM OF PREDESTINATION.

The next quotation is that which refers to predestination, found in chapter 3, paragraphs three to seven, as follows:

By the Decree of God for the manifestation of his Glory, some Men and Angels are predestinated upon everlasting Life, and others fore-ordained to everlasting Death.

These Angels and Men thus predestinated, and fore-ordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed, and their number is so certain and definite, that it can not be either increased or diminished.

Those of mankind that are predestinated unto Life, God, before the foundation of the world was laid, according to his eternal and immutable purpose, and the secret counsel and good pleasure of his Will, hath chosen in Christ unto everlasting Glory, out of his Meer free Grace and Love, without any foresight of Faith or good Works, or perseverance in either of them or any other thing in the Creature, as Conditions or Causes moving him thereunto, and all to the praise of his glorious Grace.

As God hath appointed the Elect unto Glory, so hath he by the eternal and most free purpose of his Will fore-ordained all the means thereunto: Wherefore they who are elected, being fallen in Adam, are redeemed by Christ, are effectually called unto Faith in Christ by his Spirit working in due season, are justified, adopted, sanctified, and kept by his power through Faith, unto salvation. Neither are any other redeemed by Christ, or effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified and saved, but the Elect onely.

The rest of mankind God was pleased, according to the unsearchable Counsel of his own Will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy, as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his Creatures, to pass by and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious Justice.

Contrast this unscriptural statement of faith with the divine declaration:

For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior, who would have ALL MEN to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.—1 Timothy 2:3, 4.

It is charged by some of our opponents that Latter Day Saints have borrowed some of their ideas from Mohammedanism. But this statement of doctrine is to our mind quite in harmony with the old Mohammedan tradition (related by Clarke in his work, Ten Great Religions) that in the beginning the Creator took a lump of clay in his hands as representative of the human race. As he molded this clay he divided it into two parts. One part he cast into paradise, declaring, "These to heaven and I care not." The other part he threw into hell, saying, "These to hell and I care not."

Thus in this creed God is represented in the beginning as dividing the human race into two parts. One part by his own inexorable, unchangeable decree was foreordained to everlasting joy and happiness, and nothing that they could ever do would forfeit their divine election. The others by his good pleasure and for his glory, (think of it!) were arbitrarily foreordained to everlasting torment, and no works of righteousness that they might ever undertake could ever save them from that awful fate.

And mark you well it is expressly stated that this foreordination was not predicated on any foreknowledge in the mind of God that those so foreordained would do well or ill (see italicized portion of quotation).

This creed was in force at the time when Joseph Smith made his declaration, and if such doctrine did not brand that creed as wrong, and if it did not merit the term abominable, then we have no conception whatever of the character and justice and mercy and love of God. The mistake was not on the part of Joseph Smith in denouncing it, but on the part of Reverend Nutting who represented God as the author of such a creed.

It was this hard, Calvinistic theology that gave rise to a typical incident mentioned by Mary White Ovington:

A theological library connected with a Calvinistic church, when recently catalogued, disclosed two long shelves of books upon hell and two slim volumes upon heaven.—Half a Man, p. 123.

THE WORLD MADE FROM NOTHING.

Our next quotation is from chapter four as follows:

It pleased God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, for the manifestation of the glory of his eternal Power, Wisdom and Goodness, in the beginning, to create or make out of nothing the World, and all things therein, whether visible or invisible, in the space of six days, and all very good.

This is directly in conflict with the word of God which says that in the beginning the earth was without form and void. Matter existed, but in a chaotic state. The Scriptures do not support the thought that God formed the world out of nothing. Such an absurd statement of faith gave Ingersoll grounds for the fling which he took at the churches when he said, "Nothing, regarded in the light of raw material, is, to my mind, a decided and disastrous failure."

THE CREED OF 1883.

We turn now to that which is known as the "Commission Creed of 1883," found on pages 580 to 582, of the Creeds and Platforms of Congregationalism.

The leading statement of this creed is, "We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and of all things visible and invisible."

Not one word here about God as a being invisible, and without body, parts, or passions. And in fact that statement is in essence repudiated in the third paragraph where it is stated, "We believe that man was made in the image of God." Surely man was not created in the image of an invisible being who has neither body nor parts.

There is not one word in this later creed about the awful doctrine of predestination as it was set forth in the confession of faith from which we have previously quoted. There is instead in section four this statement, "We believe that God would have all men return to him."

If you would see what a radical change has been made in this creed, contrast that statement with the one in the creed in force in 1820:

The rest of mankind God was pleased, according to the unsearchable Counsel of his own Will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy, as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his Creatures, to pass by and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious Justice.

Note the contrast. In 1820, at the time when Joseph Smith said the Lord told him the creeds were wrong, Congregationalists still held that God had been pleased to pass by a large portion of humanity, withholding his mercy from them, arbitrarily, and ordaining them to wrath and dishonor.

But in 1883 they had concluded that God had done no such thing, and that he would be pleased to have all men return unto him.

THEY "SEE THINGS DIFFERENT" NOW.

In this connection we are reminded of the following poem:

An unelected infant sighed out its little breath,
And wandered thro' the darkness, along the shores of death;
Until the gates of heaven, a gleam with pearls it spied,
And ran to them and clung there and would not be denied.
Though still from earth came mutterings, you can not enter in,
Depart into Gehenna, you child of wrath and sin,
At length the door was opened, and a man with features mild
Stooped down and kissed the weeping and unelected child.
Immortal light thrilled softly down the avenues of bliss
As on the infant's forehead the Spirit placed a kiss.
"Who are you thus to hallow my unelected brow?"
"Dear child, my name is Calvin, but I see things different now."

There is not one word in this later creed to the effect that God made the world out of nothing in six working days. Such an idea to-day is regarded as absurd by both religion and science. It is safe to say that no representative Congregational church would give a majority vote to any creed containing such statements as those we have noted.

In his personal letter to us Mr. Nutting says, "Predestination is held now as strongly as then and without essential change." While there may be many who believe in predestination, based on foreknowledge, and contingent on the nature of a man's work, there are few indeed who believe in predestination as it is set forth in the Congregational creeds from which we have quoted, which in its very nature is a slander on Deity. If Mr. Nutting really holds to that doctrine without material change, he must be practically in a class by himself, and not in an enviable position.

DOCTOR BRIDGMAN AND OTHERS ADMIT CHANGE.

Under date of January 21, 1914, we wrote to Reverend H. A. Bridgman, D. D., editor of the Congregationalist and Christian World, calling his attention to the doctrine of predestination and the statement that God made the world out of nothing as contained in the Congregationalist creed as late as 1865, as shown in Doctor Walker's work. We have his letter of reply dated January 24, 1914, as follows:

Dear Mr. Smith: The views you quote from Doctor Walker are not generally accepted in our churches to-day.

Very truly yours,

H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Under the same date we wrote a similar letter to Doctor Charles R. Brown, of the Divinity School, Yale University, recently elected moderator by the National Council of Congregational Churches, and received the following reply:

Dear Sir: Replying to your letter of the 21st I would say that the opinions indicated in your letter are not accepted by Congregationalists to-day.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES R. BROWN.

We have a similar letter from Doctor Charles E. Jefferson, of Broadway Tabernacle, New York City.

Have we met the challenge? Volumes might be written in an attempt to harmonize the two creeds, and the facts would still remain as they are.

The aroused consciences of the people now perceive that the doctrines contained in those old creeds were wrong, as the Lord said. Some of the things that were then in the creeds they have abandoned, others should be abandoned. They may have abandoned them silently and shamefacedly, but none the less have they abandoned them.

Like the creed of 1883, the latest effort of the Congregational Church to formulate a statement of faith, as adopted by the national council at Kansas City, Missouri, during October of the past year, omitted these objectionable features of the old creed that was in force when Joseph Smith received his vision. This statement of faith may be found in the Congregationalist and Christian World, November 6, 1913.

Mr. Nutting may affirm that they have not expressly repudiated the old creed, but to all intents and purposes they have done so. And no play upon words or glozing over of the situation can cancel that fact. Probably the old creed could not carry a majority vote or even a respectable minority vote in any representative Congregational gathering. We are glad that it is so, and congratulate Congregationalists on the advancement made. But why denounce others who as early as 1820 were enabled to see what they see at this late day?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

GENERAL CONVENTION ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY.

The General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society will meet at 9 o'clock, Thursday, April 2, continuing over Friday. This will be the order instead of as announced in Autumn Leaves.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OPEN LETTER PUBLISHED.—In The Truth for January 23, published at Jerusalem, Palestine, appears "An Open Letter to the Clergy," which is being sent out by the Publicity Bureau to the ministers of the various churches. This publication in The Truth is due to the activities of our Brother U. W. Greene, who is pushing this feature, together with all of the church work in that far-away mission.

BLUE STEPPING STONES.—The Bishop's report in the matter of Christmas Offering will appear this year in the Stepping Stones and not in the Hope. In order that no one will be disappointed, the management has arranged to supply each subscriber to the Hope with a free copy of Stepping Stones containing this report.

WORTH THE EFFORT.—Elder W. A. Brooner has in the Tularosa (New Mexico) Tribune, for February 14, a comprehensive statement of our faith, in connection with which he sets forth clearly the differences between our church and the church of Utah. The space granted our brethren by the press is invaluable, and is well worth the effort to obtain and occupy.

CHURCH SECURES PUBLICITY.—The New York and Philadelphia Saints meeting in conference in the church at Brooklyn, February 21 to 23, were very successful in securing favorable notice of their work in the local papers. We are in receipt of clippings from The Chat of Brooklyn, New York, for February 14 and 28, each number containing a column and a half of very favorable comment on our church work, the services of the conference in general, and the musical features of the conference in particular. The Saints are to be congratulated on such favorable notice. We are also in receipt of The Bucklin Banner, of Kansas, February 12, containing two columns in defense of the work from the pen of Brother J.

Arthur Davis. We are glad to see the brethren take advantage of such opportunities, and to note the growing spirit of fairness and tolerance on the part of the press.

APPRECIATION MUTUAL.—In conducting services at Tingley, Iowa, Elder J. F. Mintun was granted a liberal amount of space in the Tingley Vindicator for expressing appreciation of the kindly consideration on the part of the people, and for the presentation of a brief epitome of the faith. In the same issue the editor of the Vindicator refers to the enjoyable association with Elder Mintun and wishes him abundant success in his work. Elder Mintun also has in the Creston Daily Plain Dealer for March 5 a statement of differences between the Reorganized and Utah churches.

A FRIEND.—We have a friend in a presiding elder of the Methodist Church in Missouri, who in acknowledging receipt of An Open Letter to the Clergy and the circular letter inclosed says:

Replying to your favor just received shall state that I cheerfully concur in all incorporated in pamphlet and circular letter as they pertain to the facts set forth. I have read carefully the Book of Mormon, and hold the highest respect for its teachers and teachings. Wishing you abundant success in your propaganda and praying great victory for the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints of which you are leaders, I am, yours in gospel bonds.

SOCIAL CENTER WORK.—We learn from the Kansas City papers that Elder J. A. Tanner is one of the speakers engaged in the social center work being carried on at that place. On the evening of February 27 he spoke in the Humboldt Schoolhouse on the subject of the home. He had previously spoken at one of the other schoolhouses; and was billed for a talk to the prisoners at the municipal farm on March 3. Brother Tanner reports excellent treatment and splendid interest at these meetings.

APOSTLES STAY HOME.—Reference was recently made in these columns to the work assigned the Seventy in the Utah Church, which holds them from the work of "especial witnesses" "in all the world," (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11) and busies them in "home service." The Utah apostles seem to be engaged at home, also, instead of abroad as "especial witnesses of the name of Christ, in all the world." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.) In "A Christmas salutation," appearing in the Deseret Evening News for December 20, and in other Utah publications, the First Presidency of the Utah Church in summarizing the work of the year just closing, and in referring to the work of the Utah apostles states:

During the past year there has been an increase of diligence on the part of the local and presiding officers that is very commendable. Presidents of stakes and their counselors, bishops and their counselors, visiting priests and teachers have worked together in systematic accord which has wrought splendid results. A larger percentage of the members have received the benefits of home teaching than has been usual for many years, and nonmembers have not been neglected in these house-to-house ministrations, the results showing in many baptisms of adult converts. Attendance at the ward sacramental meetings has been increased and a greater interest in the performance of church duties has been aroused. The apostles, accompanied by presiding seventies, have visited the different stakes of Zion and directed these movements. They have also filled vacancies occurring therein and in the wards and quorums of the priesthood, and have performed a splendid work.

PROPOSED DEBATE WITH UTAH ELDERS.—The HERALD Editors are in receipt of a letter from Apostle F. M. Sheehy in which he mentions a prospective discussion between elders of the Reorganized and Utah churches, to be held at San Bernardino, California. It seems that the Utah elders have submitted propositions. Brother Sheehy writes that Elder Robinson of the Utah Church and president of the California mission has a hand in the matter, and that he states that the Utah elders are now allowed to discuss with representatives of the Reorganized Church. Brother Sheehy adds, "If so, San Bernardino is the place to commence, as it was there that they in the case of B. H. Roberts and Brother Blair issued their order not to meet us in debate." Brother Sheehy has in mind the fact that in 1894 Elder B. H. Roberts of the Utah Church visited San Bernardino and delivered a series of lectures or sermons in which he made a severe and uncalled for attack upon the Reorganization. Brother D. L. Harris made a public reply, and Brethren Harris and Dana issued a public challenge, which was printed in the local papers. Elder Roberts at the time refused to meet our people and defend in debate the position he had taken; and in the Deseret News for June 2, 1894, the Presidency of the Utah Church, Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon, and Joseph F. Smith, appeared with a "card to the elders," in which they were instructed to refuse to meet our men and were admonished to let them "severely alone." They stated that they considered it entirely unnecessary for the vindication of the principles of their church to resort to any such methods, and remarked, "We leave this for the Lord to prove and sustain; we think it folly to submit the claims of our church or the priesthood to the arbitrament of man." The Lord having to date failed to prove and sustain their claims, they have evidently changed their minds and now propose to resort to public debate as a method of self-vindication. The Lord having failed to meet their requirements they propose to see what can be done about the matter.

WHEN WILL PEACE COME TO THE EARTH? ---PART 3.

BY HENRY A. STEBBINS.

THE LAST GREAT STRUGGLE.

Again, it appears that "when the thousand years are expired" and Satan is "loosed out of his prison," it will be the posterity of those same nations to whom he will especially go to "deceive" them also, like he did their fathers, and thus again cause armies to gather against the city of God, as prophesied in Revelation 20: 7-9. The wicked from all over the earth may come, but "Gog and Magog" will again be the leaders, as stated. Then shall fire come down and destroy them entirely and finally. Then the whole earth will be cleansed with the baptism of fire, and there will be "a new heaven and a new earth" for the eternal abode of those who shall prove worthy. The glory of the new earth and of its great city, fifteen hundred miles square, is very fully described in Revelation 21.

THE MILLENNIAL REIGN.

That during the millennium the nations will exist and be ruled over by Christ and by those who are qualified to be rulers with him is declared by the prophets. We quote from a few of them:

The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him.—Psalm 72: 10, 11.

All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee.—Psalm 86: 9.

And there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.—Revelation 11: 15.

The thousand years' dwelling on this earth by Christ and his people, and the conditions then to exist, are made plain in Psalm 2: 8; 72: 7, 8; Isaiah 9: 7; 11: 3-9; 35: 1, 2, 5-10; 65: 21, 22; Daniel 7: 13, 14, 27; Amos 9: 13, 14; Zechariah 9: 10; 14: 9; Matthew 25: 31; Luke 1: 32, 33; Revelation 5: 10; 20: 6; Genesis 7: 70-73, Inspired Translation.

Some have interpreted the statement in Isaiah 26: 21 to mean that bloodshed must be universal, or world-wide in extent: "The earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." But when we realize that Judah's prophets spoke chiefly of the Jews and of their history and experiences, we may well believe that one of the wars that Isaiah foresaw would come upon the land of his fathers was exactly that one of which we have been reading in Ezekiel, in Joel, and in Zechariah. Ezekiel 39: 12 states that the dead will be found and buried up to seven months after the final battle. No wonder

Isaiah exclaimed in prophecy about the unburied dead. He may have only seen in vision Jerusalem and Palestine at the time of the great siege which other prophets gave details of. No marvel, either, that Ezekiel said (38: 21) that pestilence would distress the armies after their battles and tumults prior to the end, because of the many dead.

The texts I have quoted from Psalms, Isaiah, Zechariah, and Joel have been interpreted by some as having a universal application, that all the earth will be drenched with blood, and the slain be everywhere, not a spot wherein is safety, nor peace among any people. I do not say that it is impossible for such a time to come, but I am quite sure that the prophets I have quoted do not sustain that idea. For many years I have greatly desired to understand this matter, and am anxious to be guided only by the Spirit of truth, and always so.

GOD MOVING AMONG THE GOOD.

And if it be true that "many people" are being prepared, as the prophets make plain that they will be, for conversion unto God and his government, and for the ways of peace and righteousness, then I do not see how there can also be such world-wide, awful, and desolating wars over all the earth. No doubt there will be some severe wars besides the great conflict at Jerusalem between God and the nations. The "wicked will slay the wicked," but it is not said that the good will slay anybody. "Evil men," all the really bad, may "wax worse and worse," but there are millions who love virtue, honesty, truth, and integrity as much as do the best Saints. And notwithstanding the iniquity, injustice, and war, yet there will be heard an increasing call for peace by multitudes among the better nations. During centuries God has been back of all the movements for liberty, righteousness, and peace, and he still works and will do so until Isaiah and Micah are fulfilled, until "nation shall not lift up sword against nation," neither "learn war any more."

And not only will nations accept Christ as their king, but then will be the time of gospel preaching "to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people," and a vast number will obey it and serve God in spiritual ways, and be his people in truth. In Isaiah 56: 6, 7 he speaks of the "sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord," that he will "make them joyful" in his "house of prayer." In Isaiah 25: 7 it is said that the Lord will destroy the "veil that is spread over all nations"; and Jeremiah 16: 19 declares that people in that day will exclaim, "Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit." Their articles of faith prove indeed to be of no value, having been made by man and not by God. No marvel that Isaiah and Micah prophesied that "many people," or people of

"many nations," will exclaim, "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." (Isaiah 2:2-4; Micah 4:1-4.) By the word mountains the prophets signified kingdoms. The people will mean, Let us go up to the kingdom of God, to the house of the Lord, for we desire to walk in his paths. Other prophecies read:

And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people.—Zechariah 2:11.

Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord.—Zechariah 8:22.

WORKS OF LOVE AND MERCY.

We can discern more and more that the Spirit of God is moving upon the hearts of generous and noble men and women, because we see them laboring to establish just what God wants, and exactly what he has declared shall yet exist over all the earth, even justice, equity, truth, righteous judgment, mercy, and peace. The processes of reform are going on to overthrow both in public and in private life the prevailing bribery, graft, corruption, robbery, and other wrongs. We see men and women sacrificing ease and luxury, also time and money, even life itself, to devote their energies to the lifting up of the fallen and degraded, to have laws enacted to save children from slavery in factories and fields where they have suffered from terrible wrongs. We see many working to save the young from the awfulness of white slavery and other ruin, to better the conditions of those cruelly treated in prisons, in asylums, in reformatories, in poor houses, to care for outcast mothers and babies, to recognize more than ever before that children have souls, even those from the slums, who need guidance also and protection from many dangers and evils, and their bodies freedom from disease and many ailments, so that they may grow up to be useful and worthy and not as thieves and vagabonds to curse the world.

Yes; God is causing people to think, to feel, and to do noble and unselfish things for mankind, to the betterment of the race. The tendency of all this loving devotion to the helpless and the distressed is to widen and strengthen the power of love, to promote a greater happiness, and to make toward world-wide peace whenever God's time for it comes. All this will result in the casting out of selfishness, vice, cruelty and bloodshed. Proof has been presented already that the world is weary of war, and that nations long to walk henceforth in the paths of peace, as the common people always do.

OUR OWN DUTY.

Concerning our own past as a people in the work of preparation for the millennium, and of renouncing war and proclaiming peace, as we are commanded to do, I am satisfied that many lessons have only been learned by suffering, and not very well even then. I remember a sermon that Brother Joseph Smith preached at the Park's Mills camp ground, near Council Bluffs, one evening forty years ago. He used these words, "And Jacob digged a well." For two hours he poured forth exhortations, reproof, earnest counsel, and fatherly advice for the Saints to manifest peace and good will, and to dig, to build, and to plant as if expecting to remain and to become strong in the land and in righteousness and in honor, and to believe that their children's children would succeed them in possession; not to fear war nor trouble with others, but in every good way to be the people of God. It was a grand effort, and I believe it produced good results in the staying powers of many Saints, but not all.

For I know that during many years there existed a great deal of needless fear as of immediate impending doom, and the soon overthrow of all stability and order in laws and governments. This fear caused many families to sacrifice property and every comfort in order to make hasty movements, under the idea that no delay could be made. This resulted in privations, sorrows, disappointments, and loss of faith, sometimes of life also. There was a needless terror when there should have been a steady going forward in the path of daily duty where they lived, until decisive changes were wrought or commandments were given that made plain other duty or privilege.

On the other hand, indifference as to coming events and carelessness in preparing for the future is unwise and may prove disastrous. Consequently each Saint needs to consider all phases of the subject, and to try to understand and be prepared to do things that are found to be in harmony with God's purposes concerning his people, and to occupy as he would have them do wherever they may dwell.

PEACE TO FOLLOW EDUCATION.

From what has been considered herein it is evident that complete peace will come to the earth after Christ the Lord has rebuked the nations and has taught them their duty to him and to humanity. Much instruction will be needed by the Gentile world; and the people of God will also enter upon a schooling in order to learn things they need to know which they either failed to learn before, or it was impossible to learn before the millennium.

A FAVORED NATION.

Concerning the growth of the peace idea,—it is certainly gaining ground all the time, and also it is certain that in this matter the United States stands at the head of the nations of the earth, both in influence and in activity. Near the beginning I quoted one writer who said that "in the great movement to 'ground arms' the United States will be the natural leader." How true that is, and will be. It has been said in Europe that "divine providence seemed to have a special care over children and over the United States." Saints who are citizens of this Nation may not only feel a proper pride in their citizenship, but they should also be comforted in knowing that God has said that he established this Nation by wise men whom he raised up for that very purpose.

I believe that the United States, under God, will continue to be the beacon light, the leader, in the great advances that will be made ere the nations can entirely comprehend the greatness of Christ. But all will yet see and rejoice in his work, that it is for the salvation and happiness of the whole human family, none to be left out. Barthold's statue of "Liberty enlightening the world," set up on Bedloe's Island in New York harbor is far more emblematic of the real truth than is recognized by the people of this Nation or any other. God is surely over all, and from him sprang the grand ideas enunciated by the founders of this Nation, those who "builded better than they knew." He inspired those workers for liberty, Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Franklin, Patrick Henry, and many others, and they recognized God, and his charge over the colonies and the Nation. In his first inaugural address, on April 30, 1789, Washington said as follows:

It would be peculiarly improper to omit in this first official act my fervent supplication to that Almighty Being who rules over the universe, who presides in the councils of nations, and whose providential aids can supply every human defect, that his benediction may consecrate to the liberties and happiness of the people of the United States. . . . No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men more than those of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been distinguished by some token of providential agency.

Do the Saints realize the grandeur of such lofty sentiments of reverence and honor toward God as felt and voiced by George Washington? No weak self-praise or honor to himself or fellow patriots, but all reverence and glory unto the Lord! I doubt if many have heard or understood how much God was recognized by the founders and preservers of our Nation.

In his speech at the Richmond Convention, on March 23, 1775, Patrick Henry said:

We shall not fight our battle alone. There is a just God who presides over the destinies of nations. . . . Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God!

Likewise Abraham Lincoln, in his first inaugural, mentioned the "Almighty Ruler of nations," and in his second he spoke of "a just God's assistance" and of "the providence of God," and said that "the Almighty has his own purposes" to bring about. Also on November 19, 1863, at Gettysburg, among other memorable words, he said that the people of the United States ought "to highly resolve" "that this Nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

What a contrast between these noble words of reverence and honor to God and the acts and utterances of personal glory by Alexander, Cæsar, Hannibal, and Napoleon.

THE REVELATION ON THE CIVIL WAR.

Before closing this article I mention the statement in the revelation on the Rebellion, that "war shall be poured out upon all nations," after that war, and say that so it has been. Since 1865 the nations have been engaged in war, The United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Russia, Greece, Turkey, all the little Balkan nations, China, Japan, Mexico, and either all or nearly of the five republics of Central America, and the ten republics of South America.

The word in section 45:13 concerning universal war is the most complete statement of any that I know of in any of the books called sacred. When it will have its fulfillment I am not prepared to say, and I leave it without comment. That wars will be, and yet that a great current of peace will continue to flow on until the whole earth "is filled with the glory of the Lord" I believe. And what else God shall manifest is with him to fulfill in his own time. I reverence him, honor him, and trust him as the greatest "Friend of man," who is "righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works." (Psalm 145:17.)

As I close this writing a telegram from Washington City on February 5, 1914, says that Secretary of State Bryan is going to Europe at the wish of President Wilson to "advance the cause of universal peace." Further, it is stated that the Government "desires to have a place in history through a forward step in the peaceful arrangement of international difficulties." This step is to be made:

First, through treaties with all nations designed to prevent military preparations for war pending a thorough investigation of the matter in controversy. Second, through treaties which will reduce the tremendous expenditures in armaments. Third, through the utilization and development of the peace machinery at The Hague. The first feature of the policy of peace has been carried out by a submission to all nations of the Bryan plan to prevent preparations for war during an international inquiry into a pending dispute. Not a single State has failed to give approval to the underlying principle of the plan.—Chicago Tribune, February 5, 1914.

But the same dispatch states that this Government finds that the proposal for a "national holiday" in warship construction is not accepted. It says that "Great Britain regards it as a hopeless endeavor, and Germany is not content to stop the development of its navy."

Whether next will come great bloodshed, or an arbitration of difficulties instead, remains to be seen by those who live then.

SOME FACTS ABOUT COLLEGES.

QUESTIONS THAT COME UP IN FIELD WORK.

It has been said that the chief enemy to the Bible is ignorance of it. Doubts and suspicions are communicated from outside to those who are not acquainted with its teachings. The same may be said of the Book of Mormon. It also applies to some of our church institutions, especially the educational department.

One of the most common queries put to us and asked in an argumentative accent is, Why can't they make Graceland College pay? It is inferred that it isn't managed right, or that there is not a demand among the Saints to guarantee sufficient patronage to make it pay. Some of our readers may have made up their minds upon this phase of college work. Will you please give us your close attention while we try to show the facts concerning college work? We know that you are honest and love the truth, else you would never have accepted this latter-day work; and that that same love for truth and right is still with you. You will not allow a good institution to suffer because of a misunderstanding on your part, after you know.

Turning to the History of the Church, volume 4, page 616, the opening of the year 1889, we read:

About this time a movement was made to build a college at Lamoni, Iowa. The first thought was to organize a joint stock company for this purpose, with a capital stock of about fifty thousand dollars or more. Later E. L. Kelley, at the instance of President Smith, Bishop George A. Blakeslee, and others, prepared articles of association which were published in the HERALD for January 12. The Board of Trade of Lamoni, Iowa, had recently taken some action in regard to the matter, and appointed a committee consisting of Joseph Smith, David Dancer, George A. Blakeslee, W. W. Blair, and D. F. Nicholson, to procure the publication of said articles of incorporation, and take steps to procure subscriptions for the erection of a college in Lamoni. The matter was widely advertised and subscription lists were circulated and letters sent by the committee to different parts of the country. But this did not meet with sufficient encouragement, and the plan to build the college by a joint stock company was abandoned. (Emphasis ours.)

A WISER PLAN.

A safer and better plan was then undertaken. Action was taken by General Conference, April 11, 1890. Committee proceeded to secure land and materials for the erection of a building. The corner stone of the present building was laid November 12, 1895, and the building was opened for school work in January, 1897. All this was ordered and accomplished under direction of the church, through General Conference action. The college was from the very first the common property of the whole church; the responsibility of maintaining it rests with the whole church. It is in this light we wish to write, with a prayer that more of the membership will sense their individual responsibility in this connection.

No doubt there was some disappointment in 1889 at the failure of the first effort to found a college upon a plan of a joint-stock company. But we do not hesitate to say, now, in the light of the knowledge we have concerning the financial success of colleges, that it was a good thing for the would-be stockholders that the project was abandoned. It would have been unwise for individuals to undertake such a good work, and we will endeavor to make this plain to the reader.

DEFICIT IN COLLEGE MAINTENANCE.

There were in the United States in 1912, five hundred eighty-one institutions known as colleges, universities, and technical schools. Every one of them is required to make annual report to the Bureau of Education, Washington, District of Columbia, setting out on blanks furnished for the purpose, in detail, the number and name of departments, number of instructors, number of students, total enrollment, receipts for the year, board of trustees with their terms of office, amount of property, scholarships, tuition, changes in charter, etc. Graceland is thus reported, and she is on the roll at Washington. From the statistics collated from these reports we gather the following interesting facts concerning the financial aspect of college work:

Number of instructors, 1912.....	28,900
Number of students, 1912.....	303,000
Average cost per student, 1912.....	$265.00
Average tuition recd. per student, 1912	60.00

The last two items furnish a deficit that calls for some explanation. Why do not these five hundred and eighty-one educational institutions pay? Who would care to invest money, from a business standpoint, in a joint-stock company to run a college when the Government's statistics show that it cost (1912) two hundred and sixty-five dollars (average) to put each student through, and the student paid on an average only sixty dollars?

There is only one way to classify that kind of work. It does not belong to the realm of profit-making business. Colleges should not be founded and financed from that standpoint. How, then, do all these institutions keep running with such a deficit accruing every year? Why are they not closed? Because there are too many people who believe in enlightenment, and who are willing to contribute of their means to make up the deficit. It is the noble philanthropist who has put many of these institutions beyond the point of anxious financial worry by permanent endowments.

Eleven per cent of the colleges are smaller than Graceland. We have some in the church who have purchased scholarships for poor but deserving young men and women to help in securing a higher education in Graceland, and there are others who are keeping up a yearly temporary endowment. Such are, to the limit of their capacity, as truly philanthropists as the millionaires who have endowed the great universities.

FINANCING EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Harvard College was organized in 1636, and has seen its struggles, like our own Graceland. It now has a permanent endowment of $26,250,000. Its yearly income is $2,550,000. All state universities receive state aid, and the United States Government gave as much as $5,875,000 to universities in 1912.

Why not raise the price of tuition and avoid all this? Certainly; the price of tuition could be raised to meet the deficit in educating those 303,000 students, but that would mean that only the wealthy could afford a higher education. Are we in favor of that plan?

Let us come to something still more familiar, and right at our doors. Do our public schools "pay"? Financially, no. But they do pay in more enlightenment and better citizens. The glory of Americans is their free public-school system, and we would even compel parents to school their children in order to banish illiteracy from our land. We would go farther, and make our universities free if we could. We do the next best thing, and that is to put the tuition as low as possible.

We spend over four hundred millions annually in order that rich and poor may share alike in obtaining a primary education. Do we growl and say we can't afford it? How is it that we bear the great expense with so little inconvenience? In considering this, we will discover the main point in the financial aspect of our college question.

In the matter of maintenance, our public schools have the civil power behind them. We support them through taxation which is distributed pro rata to every property holder. The burden does not fall upon a few, and the payment is compulsory. There are no lapses; hence the system is a success because there are so many bearing it, and no one feels it.

GRACELAND FINANCES.

If our Graceland were maintained by our members, upon this principle, it would not be a burden to anyone. Perhaps you do not believe this. Let us prove it to you.

Since its erection in 1895 to 1897, Graceland College has cost the church the sum of $150,000. You may think this is a crushing sum, and such it is to the individual; but apply the public plan of schools and relate that expense to our sixty-eight thousand members and it amounts to only $2.20 per member. The present debt distributed in that way amounts to about fifty cents per member, which, if paid, would bring the cost of our college to $2.70 per head, up to date. What would it cost to keep it going—to meet the yearly deficit? About ten cents per member. (Can we afford it?) Again, fifty cents per member per year would meet the deficit, enlarge the dormitories which are far too small, build a much-needed library and gymnasium, give us a good laboratory, make our college second to none in efficiency, and then perhaps, give some of our ministers' boys and girls a chance to have a higher education, which at present is denied to the most of them.

But do we want to maintain our college wholly upon the public-school plan? The power to levy a tax presupposes the power to collect it. This function belongs only to the state. The church (ours at least) does not want any such power. One volunteer is worth a dozen men forced into service in God's work. The work is supported by free-will contributions. The live member feels himself morally bound to support his church. Perhaps more would have felt that way toward the educational work of the church if the facts underlying the financial side of all college work had been understood. Reader, if that has been your reason for withholding support, we see no reason why we may not hear from you at once. We need you now, as never before.

THE CHURCH PLAN.

Let us now turn to the church plan, and see whether it would be adequate for the work in hand. We presume that everyone who has properly considered the law of tithing will admit that it is more just in its operation upon the church member than the taxation plan under the public-school system. There can be no question that if all members would feel themselves morally and spiritually obligated to comply with that plan, as God prospers them, there would be enough in the general treasury to maintain all church institutions. It is estimated that not more than ten per cent of the membership paid tithing in 1912, when the average amount received was $2.88 per capita. (Seventh-Day Adventists with about the same membership reached $21.27 per member.)

From this it is clear that a sufficient number have not yet sensed their responsibility; and as a result special calls must be made. Some who love the work are responding over and over again. It is necessary for all such noble ones to exercise patience until such time as a greater proportion of the membership are willing to share the responsibility.

It is passing strange that certain people who would not think of allowing some one else to pay their worldly taxes are calmly allowing other brethren in their church to bear their share of temporal responsibility in furnishing funds to build up the kingdom of God. There is this consolation. That those who do come to the rescue and assist even beyond their pro rata share, will have it laid up to their credit when the judgment reveals the works of all men. Our admiration is excited by the knowledge that many of these noble supporters do not feel that they have done too much. When they think of what Christ has done for them, they blush to mention what they have done. That is the kind of material God can use to consummate his great purposes in the earth.

A SPECIAL CALL.

The Presiding Bishop has been unable to furnish any help for Graceland this year from the general fund. Therefore a special call is out now proposing to cancel the college debt and stop heavy interest. Will you help?

About ten years ago a similar call was made and the debt was paid off except about $6,000. Since then interest, repairs, necessary permanent improvements, and the addition of the unavoidable annual deficit (shown above) have increased the indebtedness to over $30,000, which is about fifty cents per capita. Which will you do? Let some one else bear your part of this debt? Or will you contribute your part and then some, to make up for some other member who does nothing—except make a noise with his little hammer? None of the colleges “pay,” as we have shown, except a few business colleges.

And don't forget that in spite of financial trials Graceland is still solvent. The present worth of the College is nearly $80,000. The indebtedness is less than half of that. The net worth to-day is greater than the gross worth (debt and all) ten years ago, when an effort was made to cancel the debt.

A GRAND PROGRAM.

From a wide personal acquaintance with the brethren of the church, we are sure we are safe in saying that there is wealth enough in the hands of the sixty-eight thousand members to accomplish the work required in the program of God. We are not too poor to meet our obligations, and it would not be right (with this knowledge) for the Bishop or the trustees of our various institutions to shut up any one of them. To recede from any good work we have undertaken is unthinkable. Brethren, there is a grand and noble program in hand; let us speedily carry it out to success in every department.

We can do anything that God wants us to do. And as a rule we do what we want to do. When we decide to link up our will with his, there's going to be something doing. Nothing can frustrate his work when we get in a notion to cooperate with him. And who would be so foolish as to work against him? “He that is not for me is against me.”

Is there a demand for a church college? There certainly is. Applications have been coming in for several months for rooms in the dormitories for the school year of 1914-15, and every room will be engaged by June, judging from past years. By next September, others will be begging for places. Good room and board in town, with good, respectable families of the church will be available, but there are some who prefer the dormitories, where they can share the constant society and the excellent spirit of the student body. No, we do not have to go out and drum up students for Graceland College.

Again, the buildings are in a good state of repair, and the institution is in fair way to do better work than ever, if this incubus of debt could only be lifted. The books in the office are in perfect shape, so that any “leakage” or weakness in management can be detected at any time. Graceland has twenty boosters now to one ten years ago, and its work is gaining loyal friends every year. Why not give it a lift now when needed most?

God grant the day when the church will remove this handicap of financial care from Graceland, so that its trustees and professors can devote their entire energies to making our college not only a greater blessing to the young people of the church, but also a beacon light to the world—a standing rebuke to those who delight to say that our people are an “ignorant set” who prefer an unlettered ministry, who in turn believe they have but to open their mouths and the Lord will fill them.

WILL YOU HELP?

Of General Interest

RELIGIOUS ACTIVITY IN 1913.

Upwards of forty million Americans, native and foreign born, have allied themselves with some religious body, and to support their religions they give upward of four hundred million dollars a year, or an average of nearly ten dollars each. To be more exact, the number of people enrolled as members of some religious body, Christian or Jew, is about thirty-eight million two hundred thousand. This is considerably above one third of the population. The amount of money they give altogether is not taken by census enumerators. These gifts have been estimated at $360,000,000 to $375,000,000 a year. They are, however, increasing steadily, in some bodies even rapidly. Last year unusual sums were put into new buildings, so that the total will press the $400,000,000 mark within a year or two if it does not do so now.

ADVANCED METHODS.

Those who know say the most striking feature of the year now ended, among both Protestants and Catholics, is the advance in methods of work. As in the industrial world, churches are wholly remaking their ways of doing things. Old ways are going into scrap heaps, along with old industrial inventions, and new ways coming in that produce larger results from less effort. The Christian Associations are leading in these new ventures. Churches are quick, however, to pattern after the associations. While religious bodies, and large ones, like the Congregationalists and the Disciples of Christ, are remaking their machinery, that it may be more effective and better meet changing American conditions, the year now ended has seen tremendous strides in these and some other bodies in adapting official means to ends.

INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP.

Year in and year out Christian bodies in America, save a few of the small ones, increase their membership about two per cent each twelvemonth. Catholics, Disciples of Christ, Lutherans, and sometimes Episcopalians, do somewhat better. Catholics always do, indeed, so great is the influx from Europe and the natural increase. Disciples show a steady growth, rapidly forging ahead of some of the old bodies, Presbyterians North for example. Congregationalists, Methodists South, Unitarians and some others do not reach the two per cent figure. But the two per cent is twenty per cent each decade, and twenty per cent is somewhat larger than the growth in population. The larger bodies grow more steadily than the smaller ones. Baptists both North and South are steady in their growth, and maintained that steadiness last year.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

In Sunday schools there is the same steady increase in numbers of children enrolled. Catholics are multiplying their schools, and adopting pedagogical methods. They are also introducing the system of classes and teachers. Organized Sunday school work of the world, having its strongest centers in America, held a world convention during the year, and made big plans for growth. Educational methods are on better lines, and there is better organized machinery for starting new schools. America is carrying the Sunday school system into the very corners of the earth, including some of the distant parts of South American countries. Speaking of the latter countries, Protestants in the United States made many preparations during the year to extend Sunday school work along the west coast, the Panama Canal helping to reach that section.

MISSION WORK.

Mission contributions, all Protestant societies, reached last twelvemonth $63,000,000. No other country compares with America. England is second, but a very large part of England's gifts are relief, so vast are demands of the suffering poor. America's gifts go almost wholly to religious causes. The sum named should be increased by $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 if Catholic missions are included. This sum is exclusive of gifts to Catholic orders, of which no record is available. Protestant foreign mission gifts for the first time passed the $18,000,000 mark, the largest from any country, and a new report, soon to be made, will not increase it much, owing to dull times obtaining in the financial world during the last half of the year just ended. Protestant home missions are $45,000,000, with a steady gain in amount, and a better system for its distribution in large cities and in towns of the Far West.

EUGENICS.

Eugenics came to the fore in Christian affairs during the year as never before. It started in Chicago, and was taken up throughout the country. With it came a new interest in all social questions. The Federal Council of Churches pushed the one day's rest in seven and made plans to prevent commercialized vice in San Francisco as much as possible during the Panama Exposition. Several bodies reconstructed both local and general social service agencies. Pulpits everywhere inveighed against evil in the home, on the stage, in politics, in business. The church, all names, took such active hand in social questions as it never took before. Several bodies have put such work on the same organized basis as missions and religious education. Perhaps this social crusade, next to the better method plans, is the most marked feature of the year.

LUNCH CLUBS.

There came in cities, especially in the East, a great increase in the number of noonday lunch clubs conducted by church organizations. These are chiefly for women, but some for men are planned. These clubs have in them a protest against poor luncheons provided by the trade as the cost of living has advanced. They have a social and a religious side, in that they are centers for picking up new workers in churches, and they make profits. These latter are not private, but are used for missionary purposes of many kinds. With the clubs have also come new centers for the church to reach working men, to secure employment for men and women. It is safe to say that no year end in history ever saw Christian agencies touching people at more points than this one.

JEWES AND CATHOLICS.

Orthodox and reform Jews have been active during the year. The former perfected an agency for keeping congregations closer together, and for the first time in the history of Judaism in America salaried secretaries were sent out on national work. The latter made a Young Men's Hebrew Association on the same lines as the Christian Associations, and guaranteed an annual expense fund for five years.

Catholics lost by death a considerable number of cardinals who were of first rank in conduct of world work, but beyond that the Vatican had a quiet year. French Catholics went forward as never before, being released from obligations to the state. Here missionary leaders held in Boston the greatest gathering of Catholic prelates and laymen America has yet seen. Started by home interests it was missionary in the broadest sense, and the address of Cardinal O'Connell emphasized the advantage of cooperation, home and foreign work.

CHURCH UNITY.

Church unity ceased to have the Episcopal Church as its one leader, other bodies naming commissions that are equally prominent in forward plans. Almost all bodies, some small and unheard of by ordinary people, were in the unity plans by the end of the year, save only the Roman and Eastern Communions. These are large exceptions, it is true, but tremendous progress has been made toward the world conference to consider the matter. All bodies are being affected, and the end of the year sees committees at work devising concrete questions to come before the proposed conference.

BIBLE SOCIETY WORK.

The American Bible Society readjusted its work in Panama and in the Near East, dividing it up to some extent with the British and Foreign Bible Society of London, so as to make it possible to have at Panama a great Bible distributing point comparable to that at the terminus of the Suez Canal. It reported, in common with other missionary societies, less disturbance of work in Mexico than might be expected, and great opportunities in China. In Burma Baptists celebrated the centenary of their missions there. Episcopalians, meeting in General Convention to fill missionary district vacancies, among other tasks, made out so badly that three are already vacant.

TENDENCY TOWARD CENTRALIZATION.

Four large bodies did unusual things with their organizations. Congregationalists made all benevolent societies semiofficial, linking them with their National Council, and creating a national secretaryship. This secretary gives this body, for the first time, a national official head. It is a significant change from independence toward centralization; yet the independence of the single congregation being assured, the plan was adopted unanimously. It is in line with events in other bodies, and is held to mean a new Congregationalism.

Methodists held a national mass meeting of officials and many others, and adopted a policy for Methodism, or for that part of it that is in the North. This policy affects missions, education, extension, and every phase of Methodist effort. Government by mass meeting is new, but this experiment worked, or it is believed it will do so. United Brethren so admire the plan that they are to try it early next spring. For the larger body it is held that it means a new Methodism.

An Episcopal general convention adopted the province plan. That is, it divided the country into eight districts, and set up for the first time conventions between those of dioceses and the general one. To these provincial conventions were committed many duties, aiming to secure greater freedom of action and less cost.

Disciples of Christ met in national convention for the first time as a delegate body. Heretofore this large communion has been governed in its benevolence and other common work by mass meetings. There is some outcry against officialdom, but those in position to know say that the change means a new brotherhood in ambition and in ability to accomplish things.

During the year the outcry has been heard about people not going to church, and about the churches not doing their duty. Such outcries have been heard ever since there was organized Christianity. They have taken no new forms during the year. Some forms recorded in 1800 by a Boston minister are repeated at this time.—Eugene M. Camp, in The Chautauquan for January 31, 1914.

ISLAND POSSESSIONS OF UNITED STATES.

The National Geographic Society has just received a report which details the number and prosperity of the island possessions of Uncle Sam, which number two thousand and support a population of ten million—more than the entire population of the United States a century ago.

The most striking feature of the report is the development shown to have been made in Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Alaskan archipelago. When Porto Rico came into American possession, about fifteen years ago, it had but a single school building, while to-day there are one thousand two hundred such; in the first year of American occupation there were twenty-five thousand pupils enrolled, and now there are one hundred and seventy-five thousand. The foreign commerce of the island was then about twenty million dollars a year; now it is nearly one hundred million dollars.

In Hawaii the story is even more cheerful. This island came permanently under the American flag in 1900. The assessed value of property has increased one half; the value of the sugar crop has more than doubled. Deposits in savings banks have quadrupled and in other banks trebled. The report goes on to detail that the quantity of sugar produced per acre far exceeds that of any other spot on the globe.

The record of the Alaska islands shows that the payment of $7,500,000 to Russia for Alaska by Secretary Seward, which scandalized the country so long ago, has justified itself:

For many years the annual value of the sealskins alone approximated the cost of the entire area, while at present the value of the canned salmon sent us from Alaska in a single year is twice as much as the Territory cost.

The general view of all the tropic and arctic islands which have been acquired by the United States shows that their commerce exceeds three hundred million dollars, which is more than the entire foreign commerce of the whole country in any year before 1850. They send about one hundred million dollars of their products to the United States and take about the same amount; and about four hundred million dollars of American capital is invested in them.—Des Moines Capital, January 25, 1914.

Encouraging Features.

And now for the final word before the gathering of our forces in our festival time of the year! How very much these convenings do mean to us Latter Day Saints! The meeting of new friends, and the greeting of old ones! The forming of new and pleasant associations and the blessed experiences of the conference time together! No wonder the bond which knits us so closely, is so strong—it is welded anew each springtime!

Singers, are you in line? Are you completing your preparations to attend? Yes, we are sure you are! We can feel the thrill of anticipation which is pulsing through your hearts! "I can scarcely wait!" writes one, and he is but voice for the many.

So many good things have come to us this month we hardly know where to begin. We feel such a warmth of appreciation all about us, for this our beloved line of service. Many are coming to us, writing to us, or phoning to us, to tell of the wonderful uplift they have felt music to be. There are so many lovely experiences, so many comforting, cheering, and encouraging messages through the Spirit that we can but rejoice in the assurance given that God is pleased with the efforts we are putting forth—we, the singers and musicians of his church,—we whose object is his glorification, and the strengthening of his people!

We see signs all along the line of a keener interest, a deeper desire to qualify for this service. We are in receipt of many letters telling of the organization of choirs and asking advice. The very yearning to do will help to qualify, and these humble, consecrated beginners must feel that their efforts will bring forth gratifying results, if they persevere, and let not discord creep in among them.

Brother Hoxie is making his final announcements, and we are hoping for a revivifying gathering of our musical forces at his call. Be ready to respond promptly, enroll at once in our big choir, and be on hand at every rehearsal. "In union is strength," shall be our motto, and remember the slogan, "All in favor—hurry up!"

Some Chromatics.

Music is a conspicuous feature at our General Conference. The "in-conclusion-preacher" declares it an avenue of apostasy. He does not have time to "preach" to his own satisfaction. The music has taken his time. He has been imposed upon. (I here inject an apology of oil for troubled waters: I am a missionary; sometimes I am long-winded; my limited experience says: sometimes such is O. K.—more times it is not!)

Most people like to be entertained. They can endure more song than sermon. A boiling down of both might be in order. To be brief and appropriate is modern. We have to be both moderate and modern in some things. The "flying" times suggest that we "be to the point."

"Boil it down until it simmers,
Polish it until it glimmers;
When you've got a thing to say,
Say it—don't take half a day."

Some one has said, "He that is easy on his thinker often works his tongue mercilessly." Just a little garrulous, you know.

"The one character I admire deeply is a good quitter. I do not mean one who is quickly discouraged. I mean one who knows when to stop. To use an overworked phrase, I like a man or woman who has, like a railway, 'good terminal facilities.' And this in no matter what."—Doctor Frank Crane.

Another well-known writer gives us the following good advice: "Cut it short. Morgan, the financial wizard, never used two words where one would do. He reckoned his time worth one thousand dollars an hour—too precious to waste in idle words. Talk is cheap? Never! It is highly expensive. Useless words waste time; time is money, and money is never cheap. Cut it short—think clearly; talk plainly. Concentrate thought; concentrate words. Lincoln spoke about one thousand words at Gettysburg. That speech was a masterpiece. Edward Everett spoke about twenty thousand words from the same platform; his speech was never recorded. Everett spoke two hours; his address is forgotten. Lincoln spoke ten minutes; his address will never die. If you want to be effective, be brief. Think it out; boil it down; cut it short; say it plainly; stop talking."

A sermon can be preached, our God can be praised—in song! "Do not think it wasted time to submit yourself to any influence that will bring upon you any noble feeling."—Ruskin.

"Music cleanses the understanding, inspires it, and lifts it into a realm which it would not reach if it were left to itself."—Henry Ward Beecher.

"Almost all occupations are cheered and lightened by music."—Bryant.

"Music is sacred, a divine, a Godlike thing, and was given to man by Christ to lift our hearts up to God, and make us feel something of the glory and beauty of God, and of all which God has made."—Kingsley.

I haven't said much. I have made the other fellow talk. I shall be glad when anthems begin to bubble forth from our own compositions.

I am yours for the gospel in sermon and song!

O. R. MILLER.

[It is a pleasure, indeed, Brother Miller, to receive evidences that the missionary force of our church is so interested in the music part of our services. We hope to have other helpful letters—they all tend to encourage and uplift.—ED. STAFF.]

Chords from Graceland.

We at Graceland have great hopes as to the attainment of her ideals. She aims to prepare young men and women to meet the issues of life by affording them the opportunity to train both body and mind. But more than this appeal to the physical and intellectual is that made to the ethical and esthetical.

Relative to the development of the latter—the appreciation of the beautiful—the Studio Department, which now offers work in oratory, piano, voice, and violin, contributes a very material share. What the effect of this work will be in general it is perhaps too early to conjecture, but that there will be an effect will readily be acknowledged when it is remarked that in accordance with the custom of several years standing, during the coming spring a few earnest students in the courses above named will receive diplomas and teacher's certificates, which will enable them to more effectually carry the influence of the college into whatever community they may select as the scene of their efforts.

The prize-winning picture, while being painted, to the unobservant is a mere daub. So, it might be said, are the labors of the students, which lead to the consummation suggested in the preceding paragraph. Going up college hill, the practicing in both dormitory and college assails your ears: different pianos, in different keys; different grades of classics; different qualities of voices, all issue from the windows, while the heavy thump, thump, of desperate piano accompaniments to the wail of protesting violins add a touch of tone color, distinctly individual. In town, near the studios, much further amusing evidence is offered; the piano continually makes its presence known; "oratory" urges itself on the attention: birdlike trills and delicate arpeggios assure one that this way lies the road to success as a vocalist; while, nearby, the violin steadily strives to maintain its part in the demonstration.

Most of the boys are active in athletics, and, judging by the energy expended at the rehearsals, the football enthusiasts are going after their material as though it were an opposing eleven, tackling hard, and never fumbling, while the baseball men are maintaining a batting average of 300.

Rehearsals have also commenced on an operetta, The Nautical Knot. It is most inspiring to hear the bass section reach down, get a firm grip on a deep note, and hold on for dear life; while the tenors, wishing to be thought equally accomplished, climb up and up, until they find an agreeable foothold (no matter if it does happen to be a shade too low—they don't bother about a little thing like that), then, to show their powers of endurance, they stand on that note until it is crushed and broken, the sopranos and altos, meanwhile, cheering them on with discordant cries and strange noises. In the face of all this, the baton, though firmly grasped, gets a trifle wobbly at times.

Occasionally, on Saturday afternoons, studio recitals are given. These and the public recitals frequently held enable the students to gain much beneficial experience, and are quite enjoyable to the little folks, as well as to the older students, who take part. At the last studio recital it was especially laughable to see one of the "wee sma" ladies march to the piano with the air of a Joan of Arc. Her little feet dangled from the stool, while she played her piece with all the dash and finish of a real artist; then she returned to her seat with the satisfied expression of a conquering heroine.

In general, one is glad to note the zealous efforts of the students to advance their education pertaining to the artistic, and, while a great many things occur which are comical, and the various activities, unrelated to each other, sound discordant and sometimes ridiculous, yet one can not forget the spirit of earnestness underneath it all, and the really good work which is being done at Graceland.

[We hope these "Chords" will become a regular feature of our Staff overture, Sister Kelley. Graceland and her music is a great inspiration to our people, and we hope to see it flourish in every department. We acknowledge receipt of some very interesting programs, given by the students of Graceland's school of music and oratory.—ED. STAFF.]

Choral Passage from Saint Louis.

Our choir has been very much in evidence during the recent series of meetings held in the Saint Louis Branch. Beginning February 1, and every night, save Saturday, up to and including the 15th, an anthem was furnished, sometimes two; also solos, and special part work, to the great satisfaction of Brethren J. W. Rushton and Heman C. Smith, and the attentive audiences.

One special feature conducive to the splendid system and good results obtained was the prearranged schedule, providing for the entire series, even to the hymns to be sung, the anthem and special music in its proper place. It was the work of our very efficient chorister, Brother E. C. Bell. Only a few very minor changes in program were found necessary.

To furnish you some information as to what has transpired in the district work we will mention the work of organization under the direction of Brother E. C. Bell, whom Brother A. N. Hoxie appointed district chorister. Four different places in our district were visited, namely, Oak Hill and Cheltenham on the Missouri side of the river; Landsdowne and Belleville on the Illinois side. A very effectual work was witnessed. Choirs were organized in the important places. The very formidable prestige our district work will be given was foreshadowed in the goodly numbers who assembled and with great earnestness took up the responsibility which we trust shall not only make for good here but assist also in the great revelation of splendor which must come through our general institution.

This much can and should be said to our people and especially the young, that music, as any other accomplishment, profession or art, can only be mastered by careful preparation, diligent study and almost consecrated application. Whether it be the voice or instrument, there are underlying principles and rules governing and effects to be produced which no easy method nor none, however advertised, save the right method, can bring development and perfection as a whole. Therefore, let all students and those who desire to become proficient look askance at any so-called short cut method or system, no matter where advertised. There are unscrupulous and designing fellows who have entered this field, so do not be deceived by them.

I trust you will be able to do as you have mapped out in this musical department, and that you will continue in the very marked success you have had thus far. May the Conference sessions be better than ever, and the musical features and featuring be royal and superb—oh, I long to be there!

T. J. ELLIOTT.

Some Key Notes.

"When a man lives with God, his voice shall be as sweet as the murmur of the brook and the rustle of the corn."

"Singing is heart speaking to heart; inward life speaking to inward life."

"If a person holds the right ideal steadily before his mind while properly practicing, repetition will cause this ideal to take dominating possession of the tones, and thus shape them to itself and become incarnated in them."

"The true voice is the soul incarnated in tone."

"The impulse of the soul constructs the form of the tone which communicates its thought to the audience."

"The voice is educated through inducing right states of mind while using it."

"The basis of all this work is character building: systematic right thinking, recognition of personal power, development of will power, cultivation of sympathy."

Notes of the Staff.

Brother Hoxie rallied a choir of eighty voices at the Brooklyn conference, Sunday, February 22, and gave the "Holy City" cantata to an audience whose appreciation, if measured by the laudatory reports sent to the press (by non-members, we understand), reached a very pinnacle of enthusiasm.

A recent letter from Sister O. H. Riggs, who is in Berlin, where her daughter Marie is studying music with the pianist, Josef L'Hivonne, contains happy reports of progress. Mr. L'Hivonne has this to say of his pupil: "She is a most gifted girl. There is a something indefinable in her touch, and she masters whatever I give her. It is unusual to find so interesting a pupil." And Doctor Ertel, with whom she is studying counterpoint and orchestration, declares that Germany can no longer laugh at American musicians—that he has found a Beethoven in Miss Marie. These appreciative words are encouraging to her devoted mother, who adds, "Thus you can see the Lord is fulfilling his promises to her." She is very desirous that Marie shall consecrate her gifts and efforts to the church.

We are pleased to acknowledge the receipt of several newly published songs from the graceful pen of Sister Pauline H. B. Dykes, of Salt Lake City. One of these is a solo, an adaptation of the words, "Abide with me," to one of Mendelssohn's songs without words. The other two are anthems, arranged for four parts. It is gratifying to see the advancing line of composers among our own; and we are hoping for still greater light, and still greater advancement, as the days go by, and each one, awakening to the wonderful possibilities ahead for us, makes valiant attempt to hold his "visions beautiful" high that all may see, and receive of their spiritual uplift.

Sunday afternoon, March 8, the last rehearsal of the combined choirs of Independence and Kansas City was held, and it was indeed an enthusiastic meeting. One hundred and eight singers! And they went through the choruses of the "Holy City" with splendid precision, attack and fine shading. It was most encouraging and we feel that everything augurs well for a tremendous success in April.

Another reminder—bring your 1913 Conference anthem books as well as the new ones. We will have use for everything good, doubtless, in this our spring festival of song.

A variety of fine musical numbers has been arranged by those in charge of the General Sunday School Convention music. There will be big numbers by the local Sunday school orchestra, under Brother Eaton, and by the local choir, as well as trios, sextettes, quartettes and quintettes of voices and instruments, and a number of interesting children's numbers, to say nothing of some fine solos promised. Be sure and come for the convention.

Musical Notes.

According to statistics recently compiled, the United States leads all nations in the manufacture of pianos, both as to quantity and quality of the instruments. Its export trade in South America ranks only third, because the price competition has not been met. There is an unusual opportunity for the introduction of our pianos in Brazil just now, it is said, and steps are being taken to profit by it.

Postmaster General Burleson has recently issued a "fraud order," by which the Hayworth Music Company is deprived of the use of the mails. They have been somewhat conspicuous as advertisers for "song poems," by which it is claimed they have received in return only $13.03, in all. They showed pictures of what was supposed to be their large printing establishment, when in reality they had no printing plant of any kind, but hired such work done by others. It is pretty safe to assume that advertisers for song poems are not doing so because they really want poems but because they want the money of those who may be caught.

At a recent sale of musical manuscripts of celebrated composers which took place in Berlin a manuscript by Schubert sold for $350, and one by Bach for $200. Probably the manuscripts together with all musical rights would not have sold for anything like these amounts at the time they were written. Reputation is worth money.

The Gary, Indiana, library has recently established a circulating music roll department, and also gives lectures and recitals. It bids fair to become very popular, as much interest is being manifested in it already.

Independence Getting Ready.

Independence is getting ready for us. For months active minds have schemed and planned, worked and prayed, and with willing hearts have consecrated services, time, and energy all to one purpose, to the glory and honor of God. The choir movement has its place in the program of general events. From coast to coast many musicians full of deep desire and love for the work will turn their faces towards Zion, eagerly and joyfully. Their longings to have a part and place in the choirs of Zion and to mix with the enthusiastic army of workers are about to be realized. How many times have we pictured these wonderful scenes, and in our dreams have seen and heard the wonders of our possibilities. But let us stop here for serious contemplation. What will make this the happiest, most supreme event of our lives? Will it not be dependent upon individual effort, and absolute forgetfulness of self and worldly ambition? Would it not be a good idea for all resident choir members, and those journeying from afar, to endeavor these few remaining days to live very near to God, so that no spirit of fear, suspicion, malice, and faultfinding will have place in our lives or in our work? A half dozen, or even fewer discordant spirits are enough to turn an almost victorious army to the borders of defeat. Our plea then is to come prepared in heart and mind, with wholly responsive spirits.

GENERAL CHORISTER.

"Announcement"

The fewer announcements we make, the easier they will be for you to remember. First of all, it will be absolutely necessary to register with the General Chorister as soon as possible after your arrival.

Arrangements will be made for special rehearsals Saturday evening, April 4, and Sunday afternoon, April 5; the time and place we can not indicate until we can make the proper arrangements with the stake officials. We can not at this time announce what nights we will be permitted to produce "The Holy City," as the final arrangements have not been made. It will likely be in the second week of the conference. Ladies of the chorus, please do not forget to bring those white dresses!

Every choir member owning copies of either the 1913 or 1914 anthem books! Will you please bring them with you? We expect to use both issues.

Our Correspondence.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, February 6, 1914.

Editor Staff: We would just like to announce that Scranton is interested in the movement the church is making along musical lines. We have a fine choir, a male chorus, and a brass band and orchestra. The singing is being led by Brother George Morris, the band by Brother William J. Lewis. Brother Lewis's knowledge of instrumentation is extensive.

A few weeks ago Elder P. M. Hanson held a series of meetings in Scranton. The band went around the avenues advertising these meetings and did much good for the work. At the rehearsals we have a number of visitors glad to sit and enjoy the music. We are also trying to do something with the children's choir movement.

Brother T. U. Thomas, missionary for Scranton, is deserving of much credit for his energetic efforts along these and other lines. We feel that the Lord is recognizing our efforts.

May we be found worthy to assist in this great work, is our prayer.

APRIL READING.—MONTESSORI APPARATUS AND GAMES.

The effort of this reading will be to describe the apparatus of the Montessori system and the exercises in which it is used. These so-called "games" are not intended merely to provide amusement for the child but, by satisfying his instinct for play to accomplish a systematic training of his senses and mastery of his powers.

THE DRESSING FRAMES.

A little frame, twelve by twelve inches, has tacked on opposite sides two pieces of bright red flannel the edges of which, meeting in the middle, are furnished with large bone buttons and corresponding button holes. A similar frame, with cloth of lighter texture, is provided with smaller buttons and buttonholes. A third frame has its pieces of cloth joined with automatic fasteners. A fourth has hooks and eyes. A fifth has colored ribbons for bow tying. A sixth has eyelets for lacing. Two other frames are mounted with leather pieces. On one frame, these pieces are joined by lacing as a shoe is laced. On the other frame, the pieces are supplied with shoe buttons, to be fastened with a buttonhook.

The use of these frames prepares a child to fasten and unfasten his own garments, and to that extent renders him free from the necessity of being helped by others. One mother who made use of them in her home says, "It is surprising to see how long these entertain a child, even after he has mastered them. My own boy of three now dresses and undresses himself without difficulty and is always eager to hook mamma's dress or to button her shoes."

THE WOODEN CYLINDERS.

There are three series of these. The first series consists of ten cylinders, all of the same length (two and one half inches) but of diameters varying from one fourth of an inch to two inches. These little cylinders fit exactly into corresponding holes in a block of polished wood eighteen inches long by two and one half inches deep. Each cylinder has a little knob by which it may be fitted into the corresponding hole or lifted from it.

The ten cylinders of the second series are equal in diameter, but vary in height and fit in holes in a second block of wood. Those of the third series vary both in height and diameter and are set in a third block of wood. Each of these thirty cylinders has its place where it fits exactly. It is the task of the child to fit each in its place after all have been scattered on the floor or table. At first he is given but one series at a time. When he has become familiar with the three series separately, he may be given them all at once.

We are warned that the important thing is not that the cylinders shall be put back in the right holes "but that the child shall do it himself."

One of the discoveries made by Doctor Montessori is that the sense of touch is much more developed in little children than the sense of sight, and it is well to explain to a child that he can find the right place for a cylinder more quickly if he holds it by the little knob with the fingers of the left hand and passes the forefinger of the right hand around the base of it and then around the opening into which he thinks it ought to fit. This motion with the fingers of the right hand should always be from left to right. The reason for this will be apparent when we consider how the child learns to write.

The material is self-corrective. A tall cylinder will not fit into a short hole or a large cylinder into a small hole.

THE BLOCK TOWER.

In this exercise the child uses ten wooden cubes of graduated sizes, the largest measuring four inches each way and the smallest three fourths of an inch. These blocks are colored pink. The mother first builds up the tower before the child's eyes, placing the largest block first, then the next smaller one, and so on up to the tiny cube at the top. Then she takes it apart, and the average child will readily enter upon the rebuilding of it.

The difficult thing for the mother here is to let the child do his own building. The benefit he will get from this exercise will be from learning to see for himself which is the larger block, and, to develop this power, his mother must let him make his own selections. He should be permitted to discover and correct his own mistakes. The concept of the tower may be deepened in the child's mind by running his right forefinger over the surface of the blocks from top to bottom.

When he has learned to build the tower perfectly, he may practice carrying it across the room without letting it fall apart. This will develop the power of self-control.

THE BROAD STAIR.

This is a set of ten rectangular blocks painted brown. The blocks are all of the same length, eight inches, but they decrease in height and width. Placed one against the other on the table, these form a broad stairway, and in their use the child learns "a new variety of dimension."

THE LONG STAIR.

In this stair, there are ten rectangular rods of varying lengths, the longest one ten times the length of the shortest and painted in ten even divisions, red and blue alternately. All the rods are painted in similar color divisions, the first division of each one being red. In building the stairway, the rods are laid with the red ends one upon another. Suppose the longest rod to be ten inches in length. This is laid first upon the floor or table, and the next rod, nine inches long, is placed upon it. Next comes the one eight inches long, and so on until the top one, measuring one inch, is in place. This results in alternate steps of red and blue, the color of each step continuing to the base through the layers beneath it.

This stairway is used for number work in addition to the study of color and form.

THE SANDPAPER BOARDS.

As a rule, the next piece of apparatus to be taken up is the sandpaper board, though sometimes this is one of the very first to be used. One half of a very smooth board is covered with sandpaper. The mother takes the board on her lap or lays it on the child's low table and drawing the little finger tips lightly over the smooth half of the board, she says, "Smooth, smooth." Then she draws the finger tips over the sandpaper (always from left to right), saying, "Rough, rough." Very soon the child will do this for himself, and when he has learned the lesson thoroughly he may be blindfolded or look away while doing it, to see if he can make the distinction by the sense of touch alone.

He is next given another board, on which the sandpaper is arranged in alternate strips on the smooth surface. He trails his fingers lightly across the rough sandpaper strips with the smooth surfaces between, saying to himself, "Rough, smooth, rough, smooth." In this, the little child should be encouraged to take plenty of time in order to avoid mental fatigue. He should not be urged, for his interest will hold him to the task as long as he should continue.

TRAINING THE TACTILE SENSE.

This training has been commenced in the use of the sandpaper boards and is continued by learning to distinguish various fabrics through the sense of touch.

The child is allowed to handle different pieces of cloth and his attention is called to the difference in texture. Some are rough, some smooth; some are coarse, some fine. Care should be used in selection of the fabrics. They should be pure, that the child may not be confused. The linen or woolen cloth should not be part cotton.

It is well to begin with velvet or silk, as these are so different from other fabrics. The child is told their names, one or two at a time, the mother speaking slowly and distinctly. After he knows the various fabrics, there is a game he may play with his mother. The fabrics are divided into two piles. The child is blindfolded. The mother hands him a piece of velvet. He touches it and selects from his pile a piece like it. The game is continued with other fabrics.

The mother, moving about the house at her ordinary duties, may engage the child's attention and teach him many things in connection with the various fabrics used in the different parts of the house, the table linen, the curtains, the carpets and rugs, his own garments and those of the other members of the family. He may be told the names of various materials used in the building and furnishing of the house, and be taught to distinguish them by touch. The windowpane is of glass; the range is of iron; his own little mug from which he drinks is of china, and his spoon is of silver.

In another game for the development of the sense of touch, two children may play together, one being blindfolded and the other bringing to him for recognition various objects with which he is familiar. A child, alone but for the presence of his mother, may be occupied, not only pleasantly but also intelligently, by being placed blindfolded at a table upon which a number of small objects are placed at one side, to be recognized through the touch and passed over to the other side. The mother may at the same time pursue her own work while the child, instead of being lonely, restless, or fretful is happily engaged in this "seeing with his finger tips."

A quieting game for the twilight hour for older children is the hearth-side seed-game. Each child is given a cup containing mixed seeds, corn, peas, beans, wheat, or any others at hand. "The game is a competition to see who can the soonest, by the sense of touch only, sort them into separate piles, and it has an endless fascination for every child who tries it—if he is of the right age, for it is far too fatiguing for the very little ones."

THE SOUND BOXES.

For the development of the sense of hearing the Montessori system provides wooden sound boxes, filled with different substances, flaxseed, sand, gravel, stones, or the like. These give out sounds differing in quality and loudness. The use of these boxes is not to distinguish the contents, but to recognize the difference in sounds. "The child's attention can be thus fixed for the first time on a definite attempt to distinguish between loud and low noises as he shakes these little boxes close to his ear and tries to arrange them in order according to their degree of noise."

"Such games as 'blindman's buff,' 'still-pond-no-more-moving,' etc., played with a blindfold, are excellent exercises for the purpose of sharpening the hearing and training the child to receive accurate impressions through his ears." Other games may be devised, having the same object. The mother, if she have leisure, or another child, may hide and blow softly a little horn by means of which the child who is blindfolded may find the hidden one. Instead of using the horn, the child's name may be spoken a little above a whisper.

THE CONSTANT ACTIVITY OF CHILDHOOD.

"The craving for constant, unceasing activity in little children is intense. This is a normal and blessed instinct of theirs which does more than anything to develop them. And a mother should constantly bear it in mind. . . . She should set her grown-up wits incessantly at work to devise wise, harmless, and beneficial actions for the child, not merely to forbid him unwise and harmful ones. And here the Montessori apparatus is of incalculable value. It caters with scientific ingenuity to the need for action of the small child, and relieves the mother's inexperienced brain of a great part of the strain of inventing suitable exercises for children under six or seven.

"But the Montessori apparatus, valuable as it is, is not enough. The mother's mind must be alert and ingenious to supplement it as the child grows. For instance, blunt pointed scissors and plenty of paper to cut are as indispensable as the geometric insets. Constant exercises in the occupations of everyday life, such as washing and wiping toy dishes and setting a small table, sweeping the floor with a small broom, learning to dust, etc., are as necessary as the sandpaper letters. If the children are initiated into these exercises young enough, before their natural instinct for action and for helpful action has been atrophied by the customary idling in early childhood, the mother will find the utmost eagerness for such activities, and not at all the lazy, shirking attitude towards them so frequently seen in older children, who did not have proper training in their early life." (Mrs. Fisher in Montessori Manual.)

Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR FOURTH THURSDAY IN MARCH.

Prayer for our Sunday schools and Religio societies; for the Prayer Union, and for all auxiliary departments of the church, that each may be blessed in its work for the general uplift.

Lesson, Book of Alma 16: 142-149. Memory verse, Alma 16: 156.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

A sister who does not sign her name, probably through an oversight, writes from Blair, Nebraska. She asks the Saints everywhere, and especially those of the Prayer Union, to pray for her brother who is very sick with pneumonia and many miles from a branch of the church.

She desires also that the Saints will pray for her father, whose health is rapidly failing and has been for more than five years. Her desire is that, if it be God's will, he may be blessed with health and strength, that he may live and do his duty in the office of teacher to which he has been called, and that he may fully realize his duty and live so as to be prepared for the change that awaits him when the call comes to go from this world.

She makes a similar request for an uncle whose health is not good, that he may be enabled to discharge the duties of an elder, to which office he has been ordained. And for her husband she asks that prayers may be offered, that he may be all a Saint of God should be.

This sister expresses her faith that God hears and answers prayers. She feels conscious that, in the past, he has done so many times in her behalf. She feels that she is asking much of the Lord, but not more than he is willing to give, if it be according to his righteous will.

Letter Department

Pleasant Day With Brother J. H. Lake.

[Brother John H. Lake died on the evening of March 6, and before this letter could conveniently have been published.—EDITORS.]

By request, I desire to state to the many friends of Brother Lake throughout the church, that owing to his weakened condition he has been unable to answer the numerous and kind letters of sympathy, which he has received since the departure of his companion. They have indeed been a comfort to him.

I desire also, to relate the wonderful experiences through which our aged brother has passed in the last few days. We do feel like saying from our hearts, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Last Saturday, February 14, Brother Pace called at our home and informed us that if we desired to see our aged brother ere he passed over the river we had better go to him immediately; we hastened to his home. You can imagine our surprise as we were met at the door of Brother and Sister B. F. Hulmes, who informed us that he was entertaining some Canadian Saints (two of them having come over a thousand miles, Brother E. W. Long and wife from Nokomis, Saskatchewan, and Brother John Shields from London). Those who witnessed the meeting of these dear Saints and our aged patriarch (whom they had not seen for many years) say they can scarcely realize how the meeting in the great eternity can be any happier.

Truly Brother Lake is loved by all who know him, and especially by the Saints whom he has labored among in days gone by. He indeed is a valiant soldier in the army of the Lord, and we know a glorious reward is awaiting him. His life is truly an incentive to us as we see the patience and the hope he has.

Saturday morning when the Canadian Saints came to see him he was in a very weak condition. But the meeting of these dear Saints whom he had not seen for so long seemed to revive him. He visited with them part of the day. Little did we think that Brother Lake would ever meet in the chapel with us once again. Ere our Canadian brethren left him Saturday evening, they administered to him and asked the Lord if he would permit him to worship with us on the morrow, and we are glad to say that God did raise him up, and we were a happy lot of Saints to have him among us once again. He attended three services and Brother and Sister Hulmes, who are faithfully caring for him, say he stepped along as spry as was usual for him.

In the afternoon he attended a prayer meeting at the Saints' Home, and one of the most spiritual, he said, that he had ever attended. The gifts were made manifest through Brethren Shields and Lake, and the Saints were indeed blessed. Very comforting words were given through Brother Shields. Brother Lake arose and blessed our two Canadian brethren. This indeed caused them joy, for, as we learned afterward, they had prayed for this blessing. We were surprised at the evening preaching service to learn that Brother Lake was to assist Brother Shields. This was their desire, that they might again be permitted to "work" together as they had done in years gone by.

After the service in the evening, several of the Saints gathered at the home of our aged patriarch. When the time came to bid the Canadian Saints good-bye, Brother Lake requested us to sing a hymn and have prayer ere we parted. We regretted saying the farewells to our brethren and sister, whom we learned to love during their short stay with us. There were tears in many of the eyes of the Saints as they bade them good-bye. As the aged patriarchs, Brethren Lake and Shields, said farewell, we were indeed touched with their parting words, "Brother John, we will meet in the morning." In commemoration of the event, my husband composed the following verses:

THE TWO PATRIARCHS.

"Brother John, we will meet in the morning,"

Which the Spirit has promised is near,
When our Lord in his transcendent glory
To the nations of earth will appear.
Oh, my brother, we soon then will greet you,
Though to paradise you shall have gone,
For we've wrought with the Master in service,
And this age is the time of the dawn.

Brother John, we have spent our best efforts
In the battle of truth against wrong;
And whither our duty has called us
No path was too hard, nor journey too long.
But the wrong which has ruled through the years
And the justice which has not been done—
This wrong shall be paid, and right shall prevail
In the morning when Jesus will come.

We will meet all the friends of the Lord
Whom we've known as his children in life,
All the faithful though humble in calling
And the men who have stood in the strife.
Yet these are not all we will greet there,
For the great which the ages have known
All shall mingle together in triumph
In the morning when Christ claims his own.

Then the Lord will have need of disciples,
So great is the work he will do;
We shall sit at his feet and shall listen
To his teachings so profound and true;
For the Father eternal has sent him,
And all strife and contention must cease,
And he who shall bring the earth gladness,
In the morning we'll hail Prince of Peace.

EARL ROY CURRY.

We are indeed sure they will meet on that great morning of the first resurrection, where parting will be no more.

Brother Lake was feeling so well on this Sabbath day that he asked me to come and take a blessing down the following morning; but upon my arrival at his home, I was surprised to find him in a much worse condition than he had been before. He had fallen in the basement where he had gone to tend the furnace, and when Brother Hulmes found him he was in a very critical condition. He lay in a stupor all that day, so low that we looked for the end any time. This was indeed a contrast to the day previous, when he was blessed so abundantly and was also a blessing unto others. We can not help but feel the Lord raised him up Saturday when he was sinking so rapidly. The following day he suffered with a severe pain in his chest. Brother Eben Curry administered to him and the pain ceased immediately. Surely he is in the Lord's hands, as was given on last Sabbath—it was also said his days would not be many. He is waiting patiently, and looking forward to the time when he will be called "home." We will surely miss him, for he certainly has been a father to us.

Truly his life is an incentive, and my prayer is that each one of God's people may live such lives that in the end ours may be as our aged patriarch's.

ALMA O. GEORGE CURRY.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 17, 1914.

Editors Herald: Just a few words to let you know what the work of the Bureau of Publicity is accomplishing in this vicinity. While we have not covered the ground we intend to on account of lack of finances, still with the small effort put forth we hear of good results. Two clergymen since receiving the Open Letter have preached on "Mormonism," and have both made a liberal distinction between the Reorganization and the Utah Church.

This is indeed encouraging to us, for we have much prejudice to contend with. We endeavored to have our "ad" for "go to church Sunday" inserted in one of our large dailies that was featuring this special advertising, but the committee turned us down because we were neither Catholic, Protestant, nor Jew. They have kindly offered to return our money.

There is a large field to be covered in this great city, with its hundreds of churches and religious institutions, and which will require considerable expense; but this movement is such a good one that it is well worth sacrificing for, in order to complete the canvass. You will hear from us from time to time.

Yours for the onward march of truth,

HENRY P. W. KIER.

WICHITA, KANSAS, February 18, 1914.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD and the many testimonies. I love the Saints, and think there is no people like them.

Our blessed Savior said, My sheep hear my voice and a stranger will they not follow. His words are true. When we once move out into the light we can not be led to see any other way. Dear Saints, let us so live that we may meet our Savior in peace and dwell with him for ever.

I am trying to live as near right as I can, in my affliction. I have been sorely afflicted for over two years with inflammatory rheumatism. I can not get up out of my chair without help. I have to walk on crutches. Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers that God may heal me and restore me to health, if it be his will.

We have good meetings here in Wichita, but I have not been able to attend. My heart aches sometimes to go. Our minister's name is Brother Barraclough. He and wife come to see me and have prayer with me, which I certainly enjoy. My husband has good health, for which I am very thankful.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. H. A. HUFF.

CHESTOPA, KANSAS, February 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated Saints. It seems sad to be so far from those of like faith. Brother Silvers stopped with us a short time ago. I invited a few, and we had prayer meeting. It was grand. The Lord was present with us. If any of the elders go through this place I will be glad to have them stop. They will always find a welcome with us.

I ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my companion, that he might accept the gospel in its fullness. I want all to remember my son, also. He is on the downward path, and associating with wicked companions. I have been pleading with the Lord to have mercy. It seems sometimes my poor heart will break. How grand it is to have a Father to whom we may go in time of trouble.

I would be glad to see a branch started here. I feel the great need of it. This is a very wicked place.

If Sister Butler should read this I send my best regards to her. How often I think of her and all the Saints of the Fontanelle Branch.

I remain as ever, your sister in the faith,

MRS. MATRON.

COLUMBUS, KANSAS, February 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: At our district conference at Scammon last Saturday and Sunday there was good attendance, and the conference was very good. Two prophecies were given at the prayer meeting Sunday afternoon. One was baptized, the wife of Brother Ollie Pender, who is a brother of our late W. S. Pender. The Saints of the Scammon Branch had intended to dedicate their new chapel, but failed to get all in readiness, the cause being to the writer unknown.

Bishop Short was present with report, which made an extraordinary showing, I think; yet I believe we can and will do better. And why not? Is not this the greatest cause mankind can espouse? Does not our heavenly Father reward us two fold for all we do for him? Only in this service can we obtain those things truly needed, health, happiness, charity, meekness, humility, peace of mind,—any and all Christian graces that we, as Saints, should possess, plus all temporal blessings God has promised to bestow, including those in the Word of Wisdom.

How kind and loving and wise is the Father to thus warn and forewarn us of the dangers all about us in the forms suggested in this section of the Doctrine and Covenants. The writer can truly say that by diligent, prayerful, and faithful effort we have been successful in obtaining the blessings herein promised, the majority, if not quite all, and so desire to say a word that will aid and encourage others who may be in need of the blessings thus obtained. If we claim and assert that we are keeping the Word of Wisdom and complain that we do not receive or obtain the blessings promised, let us remember that we must walk in obedience to the commandments also. God has truly and graciously promised, and he will fulfill. So, dear Saints, do not become discouraged and doubtful; but remember the Lord has said, I am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not the things which I say, ye have no promise.

Our prayer is that we may all strive to live worthy of these blessings so willingly, graciously, and abundantly bestowed on all who live in obedience to his laws.

Your brother in Christ,

C. C. RANDALL.

Norway.

A few words from Norway touching the work may be of interest, especially to those whose ancestors came from this land. I see by the last HERALD reaching me that Brother Stebbins has given a part of my letter to him for publication, from which it will be seen that I am still alive, both in the flesh and in the Spirit.

A few days before New Year's Day I left my home at Porsgrund for this field, first calling on our members at Kragero, where I held two meetings and with them enjoyed the cheering and comforting influence of the good Spirit. Taking the boat from that place for the capital, I reached Christiania about 11 p. m. the same day. I slept on board that night, and in the afternoon on the following day, December 31, left the city for this place, having first visited the few Saints left there.

For several seasons we have held meetings in the capital, some years nearly the whole winter, hoping we might swell our numbers, and make the city a headquarters for the work in Norway, just as we have been trying to do in Copenhagen, Denmark. Hitherto our efforts have not met with success, and this in spite of the fact that almost any religious movement seems to succeed there. At times we have had good attendance, and the principles we have presented have been well spoken of, but after a few meetings those who manifested interest disappeared. Hence I have not felt like spending time and money there this winter; for in order to labor in the city a room must be rented and board paid, besides the renting of a hall and advertisement. At Eidsvold, where I am at present, all these expenses are saved, hence I have spent my time here in a way that to me seems more profitable.

I have no objection to city work; it has many advantages over traveling around from place to place, delivering a dozen or fifteen sermons in each place. First, one has to get up a good many subjects, and they must be presented in different ways in order not to tire the congregation. For to repeat the same subject several times in the same way, making the same arguments upon the same proof texts, and in the same order, grows very tiresome and monotonous. Besides having to be more varied in production, one has more opportunity of hearing good lectures, and at the libraries to collect good information, all of which is useful to a successful gospel worker.

In my work both in city and country I have often felt the lack of the systematic study and the training of the mind which the schools and colleges provide; for even if one later in life tries to use the opportunities that from time to time present themselves, he can not regain what by neglected education has been lost.

I reached this place on New Year's Eve; was met by our kind and congenial brother, Otto Anderson, and after fifteen minutes' walk made welcome at his pleasant home. The next day I commenced preaching, enjoying very good liberty, to which I received good attention, both from members and outsiders, and have continued until the present. It is only a small place, and our meeting room a large room in a private dwelling house, but the attendance has been good, and at nearly every meeting some new ones are seen. It is the best interest we have had here for years; and though I have preached here several hundred times and thirty-eight sermons already this year, the interest seems to increase rather than decrease. I only wish we had many such openings in this country.

Here we live among the Saints, of whom we have nearly twenty, hence our lodging and board are free, as is also hall rent, which at present is paid out of the treasury of the Ladies' Aid Society. We have more Saints here than in any other part of Scandinavia, or on the European Continent, I believe. They are all my children in the gospel, as are most of the Saints in Norway, hence I feel somewhat attached to this place.

Some years ago the Saints bought a lot and have now commenced blasting stone for the foundation upon which we hope to see a house erected before the summer is ended.

We wish, therefore, to extend to all Saints interested an earnest invitation to convert their interest into a living reality of material means, which we may exchange for building material. Any amount, small or great, will be accepted with sincere thanks, and will be receipted for. Please do not put it off, but send us at once a small amount to begin with, so the erection of the building may be continued till completion. Send money by postal order, or by check, payable at Centralbanken for Norge or Christiania Bank oz Kredithasse, and addressed to me at my home address, Porsgrund, Norge.

I hope the brethren who have labored in Scandinavia will encourage the Saints to donate of their means for the progress of the work in these countries, that those who are appointed to labor here may have some means to rent halls and to make use of the opportunities that from time to time present themselves.

Only a small portion of the population of these countries has heard our message, out of which perhaps between one and two hundred have responded to the call, and feel happy and grateful for the opportunity of hearing the latter-day gospel. No doubt many others are waiting to hear the glad tidings. May we whose duty it is to carry on this work use our means and talents in the best manner possible, so we at last may stand justified, with many souls to our credit.

Permit me to express my sincere appreciation and gratitude to all those who have donated of their means for our little mission paper, Sandhedens Banner, and to the western Iowa and eastern Nebraska reunions for their collection, about seventy-five dollars and to the Magnolia reunion for their collection, twenty-two dollars and fifty cents; also to the Moorhead, Iowa, Sunday school for their offering, eighteen dollars, all of which has been placed to their credit upon the Banner books, and has been of great help to me in meeting the expense of the paper. I trust that all will in the future extend to us their sympathy and interest.

The work is moving onward in this land, and much, I believe, might be done if we had more men and means.

Please remember us in your prayers, that we may be faithful to our trust, and be able to accomplish a work that may meet the approval of him whose servants we all are.

It will be thirteen years in April since my appointment to this mission. So it soon ought to be time for my release from here and removal to some other post. Yet I do not feel to leave the Saints without some one to care for them. Why can not some one or more of the young Scandinavians in America volunteer a few years of their time? When I came here I was young, but now my hair is gray, though I feel as young and strong as ever.

May these lines be accepted by all my personal friends as a New Year's greeting, with my best wishes for a bright and happy future.

In gospel bonds,

EIDSWOLD, February 13, 1914.

P. MUCEUS.

Book Reviews.

WHAT MEN LIVE BY.—This is an interesting book written by Richard C. Cabot, M. D., assistant professor of medicine of Harvard University. (Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Street, Boston, Massachusetts; $1.50 net, cloth binding.) Mr. Cabot starts out on the proposition that men live by four great principles, which he enumerates as work, play, love, and worship. These are dealt with in the body of his work. In his introduction he says:

"There is no originality in my suggestion that we should focus our efforts upon work, play, love, and worship. For though we talk a great deal about 'efficiency,' economics, hygiene, and other matter of secondary importance, at bottom we all know well enough what we need, and what all the paraphernalia of civilization, money, health, and education, are really meant for. If I were not persuaded that, in our right minds, we know the fundamental reasons for all this hurry and bustle, I should not venture to write a reminder. We know where we are traveling, but we need a time-table to remind us of details.

"The interplay of these four is the end of life, and the sole worthy end, in my creed. This is the fruit of the 'life and liberty' which are guaranteed under our Constitution. This is the goal to be secured through efficient and progressive governmental machinery. This is the end of all education and all moral training. This is the food of the soul in health or in disease; needed by the doctor, the social worker, the teacher, and the statesman, to feed their own souls as well as to prevent and to cure social ills. This is our justification for the enormous machinery and the costly ugliness of civilization. This is the essential of that 'more abundant life' which many modern prophets extol without defining."

COPARTNERSHIP AND PROFIT SHARING.—This is an interesting volume by Aneurin Williams, M. A., Chairman of Executive of the International Cooperation Alliance, and Honorable Secretary of the Labor Copartnership Association. (Henry Holt and Company, New York City; 50 cents, cloth.) It should be of interest and benefit to those who desire to make a study of the principles of copartnership and profit sharing. In his preface the author says:

"I have written this little book in the hope that it may give a useful general idea of a movement to which I have devoted a great part of my time for more than twenty years. It is, I believe, a movement destined to do in the industrial world, what the introduction of constitutional rights has done in government—I mean, to transform autocracy and monopoly into democracy, gradually, peacefully, and with profit in the long-run to all concerned. If copartnership has in it any such possibility it is assuredly important that it should be understood by both employers and employed, and by all those who concern themselves with progress. I have given instances from England, France, and United States: I might have given others of importance from Germany and Holland. So far as England is concerned it was by working men themselves, in their own organizations, that copartnership was first made a practical success."

THE FORESTER'S DAUGHTER.—This story is by the well-known author, Hamlin Garland, formerly an Iowa man, author of Main Traveled Roads, Prairie Folks, etc. (Harper and Brothers, Publishers, New York City; cloth, $1.20 net.) The sub title is, "A Romance of the Bear-Tooth Range." It is the story of a western ranch girl, and an eastern student, recently graduated from Yale, who comes west to recover the health he lost through over study.

MODERN CITIES.—This is the title of a book by Horatio M. Pollock, Ph. D., and William S. Morgan, Ph. D., published by Funk and Wagnalls, 4460 East Twenty-third Street, New York City; $1.50 net, by mail $1.63. The authors of this volume were closely associated for several years in active work for municipal betterment in the city of Albany, New York. While thus engaged they came in touch with the principal movements for social progress in America. The work is the result of very careful and painstaking study into conditions of city government by two competent writers who have analyzed these in the light of modern requirements and the demands of truly patriotic citizenship.

A Prayer.

A blessing unto those I meet,
Lord, let me be.
From words impure or vain deceit,
Oh, keep me free!
Let every ministration given
To those who in the past have striven
To know the will of God, in heaven,
Be blessed of thee.

Help me to know the word to speak;
Help them believe.
Help me to comfort, cheer the weak;
Help them receive.
Into their lives wilt thou not pour,
Through me, rich blessings o'er and o'er,
That they may know for evermore,
What love can give.

In all I think or say or do,
Be but one fear;
Is Christ brought clearly into view,
Doth he appear?
Let not my faults their vision blind,
Nor keep one soul in heart and mind
From serving Thee! But help them find
Our Savior dear.

And let me feel while life shall last,—
Though sometimes pain
May come, when it shall all be past,
'Twas not in vain!
Sustain me, Lord, until the day
I hear from lips that truly say:
"You helped me see the better way."
Be this my gain!

—F. A. Russell.

Give Us Men.

Give us men!
Men—from every rank,
Fresh and free and frank;
Men of thought and reading,
Men of light and leading,
Men of loyal breeding,
The Nation's welfare speeding:
Men of faith and not of fiction,
Men of lofty aim in action;
Give us men! I say again—again—
Give us men!

Strong and stalwart ones;
Men whom hope inspires,
Men whom purest honor fires,
Men who trample self beneath them,
Men who make their country wreath them
As her noble sons,
Worthy of their sires;
Men who never shame their mothers,
Men who never fail their brothers,
True, however false are others:
Give us men—I say again,
Give us men!

Give us men!
Men who, when the tempest gathers,
Grasp the standard of their fathers
In the thickest fight:
Men who strike for home and altar
(Let the coward cringe and falter),
God defend the right!
True as truth though lorn and lonely,
Tender, as the brave are only;
Men who tread where saints have trod,
Men for country—home—and God:
Give us men! I say again—again—
Give us men!

—Bishop of Exeter.

Emmanuel; "God With Us."

Tell me, countless worlds and systems of the Empire of the Deep,
What the purpose of thy being? What commandment do ye keep?
Through the "foolishness of preaching," comes the answer
here to-night,
And the star that led the sages throws on us its silver light.
Comes the constellations' music to our Spirit-quicken'd ear;
While the life of all the ages floods the pulpit as we hear.

From nebulae to solids doth the mighty Architect
Have in thee a hidden purpose which is but a last effect
Of his mind in changing matter, whence evolves a perfect thing
That reflects his thought and passion; 'round which all the æons cling,
It is for the dimpled Infant in the star-marked manger laid,
That the elements, in travail, have their price in struggle paid.

There is more of life than splendor where the mollusk has its cell;
But in pain, a pearl is gendered in the bivalve's rugged shell.
Seeds have held potential beauty of the full-blown flowers of spring;
Loveliness is often hidden in the undeveloped thing.
Beauty is not all, but greatness like a swelling river flows
From the smallest springs of being, and a mighty ocean grows.

So, O Seed of seeds! 'tis Mary's that the ages sought to give;
And the Master Mind has chosen in the elements to live;
That his seed might be wide-scattered in the elements, its soil;
Till Earth rolls a sea of glory, past millenniums of toil.
Hail to Jesus, Son of Mary, fullness of the Godhead, thou;
'Fore thy throne celestial legions shall in loving homage bow,

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT

HOW MAY A PASTOR HOLD THE INTEREST OF HIS PEOPLE AND KEEP THEM IN GOOD SPIRITUAL CONDITION?

(Read before the High Priests' Quorum some years ago at a time when the writer was engaged in pastoral work.)

The two divisions of this topic are closely related: if one can not hold the interest of the people he can do little toward keeping them in spiritual condition; and on the other hand, if he can not do them good it is of no use for him to hold their interest.

The pastor will find three lines of activity in which to expend his force. First. Teaching from the pulpit. Second. Teaching in private. Third. Teaching by example. Shortcomings may possibly be overlooked in the first two lines, but he must not fail in the third.

FACING THE SAME AUDIENCE EVERY SUNDAY.

In preaching, the traveling minister changes audiences constantly and must perforce go over the same subjects repeatedly. The pastor has the same audience week after week, perhaps year after year, and if he would hold their interest he must cover a wide range of topics and ever essay to be original and a leader in thought. He may interpret current events, or use them to illustrate his subjects, but they should be secondary; the scriptures should furnish him his topics,—using the term scriptures to include all inspired writings. He should not try to be a historian, a politician, a school-teacher, a scientist, a lecturer, or a humorist. He may glean from the fields of all these, but his calling is different from and higher than any of them. He is a preacher, and his work is to preach the gospel. There can be no higher calling.

At times it may seem to the pastor that a blank wall confronts him. What will he talk about? But as he proceeds, in faith and with proper study, inexhaustible fields open up and at the end of two or five years he should feel that he has but just begun to preach to his people, and they should listen just as earnestly as at the beginning.

Everyone should discover how he can best do his work as a preacher, and then feel free to work in that way. The experience of some has been that they can do best to carefully go over the subject before entering the pulpit. And the Spirit may be present in great power during the work of preparation at home, and later while presenting the subject from the pulpit. The fact that the outline is well in mind, as suggested by thought and by the help of the Spirit, does not hamper God or eliminate him from the sermon in any sense; but, on the contrary, it leaves the mind of the preacher free to wait upon the guidance of the Spirit, which will help him to round out his thought and present it forcefully, in clear and pleasing language. The Spirit is a guide to the discovery of all truth, more especially during the quiet hours of meditation. During the active hour of preaching it "brings to mind things past" and draws from the well-stored mind such material as is needed. The man has his work; the Spirit has its work. He should study to show himself approved, and only in an emergency expect the Spirit to do his work without preparation on his part.

Of course no effort should be made to commit a set and formal series of flowery words and ornate phrases to memory to recite in the guise of a sermon, or one will lose his own interest in the subject; and the preacher who is not himself interested can not interest others. A study of good books and magazines will help in this work.

At first thought it would seem that one who speaks so often to the same audience should dilute his ideas and make them go farther, yet he is the last man who can afford to be diffuse. He should be concise and brief and let his talks be so clear and plain that the least able can understand. He can teach the most profound thinkers in that very way. The simple way of stating truth will reach all classes; while the abstruse way reaches only one class.

The pastor should be very careful not to weary his people with long sermons. Some subjects and some times may call for a long sermon; but as a rule the pastor should be watchful, and close before he loses the interest of his audience, and there should be no doubt in their minds when he is done as to what he was talking about.

THE PERSONAL APPEAL.

In regard to the second line of work,—private teaching,—there perhaps we find a still greater need for ability and judgment. That part of the topic has not fallen into good hands. The writer is not a fireside preacher. The pastor who is able in this line will find a rich field in the homes of his people. Yet I have learned that a pleasant call does a world of good, even when religion is not mentioned, even when the pastor lets the people do the talking; perhaps that is the best, at times, because he thus learns what interests them. As regards nonmembers,—often a word in private to them does more good than a public sermon. It is not best to unduly urge such people toward baptism, yet there comes a time when it is proper to urge,—a time when the man has been well taught in the way of life and then halts undecided,—hesitating to go on, liable to go back and be lost. By an earnest, honest appeal the pastor at this point may turn the scales, and the individual will thank him for it later.

He should not intrude, or offend, or tease, or threaten, but he should voice the old invitation, "Come unto me," and the Spirit will carry the message home. Within the past few months five out of eight people to whom I have made such an appeal in private have responded and been baptized, and one of the other three is now ready. They tell me now that they are sorry they ever put it off so long, but they could not decide until they were plainly told that the hour of their decision had come.

TEACHING BY EXAMPLE.

Now we come to the third and most important line of work,—that of teaching by example. It is absolutely necessary that the pastor should back up with his private life that which he publicly teaches. It is entirely useless for one to tell people to live in unity and be patient, long-suffering, charitable, unless he is ever ready to forgive and forget. It is useless to preach humility if one is proud, or virtue unless virtuous.

The pastor will find great pleasure and help in his intercourse with his people and should be a friend and brother to them all, but should not step over a certain line of intimacy either with man or woman. The congregation should be able to point to their pastor as a standing refutation to the charges sometimes made by the world. He should be a living argument in favor of the gospel that he preaches, and if he is not that his other arguments are in vain. In dress, in speech, in decorum, in morals, he should be a teacher and an example.

It is no light thing to be a pastor, because a pastor can not preach simply when he will, he preaches all the time, in varied ways, and will soon realize that he needs the Holy Spirit out of the pulpit quite as much as in it. He needs wisdom daily. He is located and must meet the results of his acts right where he is. If he makes a mistake, he can not move on and leave some other laborer to clear it up; he must meet the issue and make his record. His joy when the work goes well and his sorrow when it goes ill make the sunshine and shadow of his life, and he will find cheerfulness and a saving sense of humor a great help to him when the clouds predominate.

AN ANTIDOTE TO CYNICISM.

The pastor should take an active interest in that which interests his people, especially in church work. He should sympathize and work with his young people. Their enthusiasm and cheerfulness will help him and will counteract the despondency and cynicism he may find among some of his older members. The pastor should not be a leading officer in the Sunday school or Religio, if it can be avoided, but he should be in full sympathy with and a counselor of those who are in charge of such work. He will find these organizations a great help in his work. He should not be afraid to speak a word of appreciation to those who help in that way, or as organists, or singers, or deacons, or to those who bring flowers to decorate his pulpit. He should enlist every member, as well as the local ministry so far as he may, in some part of the work. Make them laborers together. Those who have work to do are interested. He should encourage each individual in any line of church work that may appeal to him or her.

It will be well for him to see that the church building is made as attractive as the means at hand will permit, so that it will be a pleasant and homelike place; not a dirty and forbidding place of gloom where people gather to be scolded, but a bright and cheery room where they gather to hear the gospel of love from one who loves them. And in conclusion let us say that if the pastor does not love his people he can never be a pastor to them; and if he is not thoroughly sincere and natural in his work they will find it out and he will fail to hold them and lead them. Elocution or other artificial trimmings alone will not wear long in pastoral work, but real character will wear for ever. ELBERT A. SMITH.

AN INTERESTING GROUP OF PHOTOGRAPHS.

Readers of the HERALD are herewith presented with an interesting group of photographs. The first of these represents the laying of seven memorial stones in the new church at Manchester, England. This building we understand is being erected by the branch in Northeast Manchester, and represents the results of twenty years' saving and striving, as the members are mostly working people. The ceremony occurred October 11, 1913. Nearly three hundred people were present. The ceremony was held under the direction of Elders W. H. Greenwood, mission president; N. J. Weate, president of the Manchester District; and R. May, bishop of the British Isles.

Home of Our Third Annual General Conference.

Bishop May is seen standing directly under the street lamp. Other members of the group are: Sister Schofield, and Brethren Dewsnup, Maddock, Taylor, Leggot, Weate, Greenwood, Mayne, Schofield, Ward, Brien, and Barrington.

If any feel that the church has not made progress and growth, let them consider the second picture in the series. The little building in the center of the picture was the scene of the third annual conference of the Reorganized Church. In this barn, twenty by thirty-six feet in size, and ten feet high, assembled the spring conference of 1862. For an account of this see page 302 of the third volume of Church History. The building stood on the farm of Brother Hans Hayer, at Mission, Illinois. Hans Hayer was the father of Brother Lorenzo Hayer, of Lamoni, Iowa. The building still stands as shown in the picture. Although it sheltered the entire conference in 1862 it would hardly accommodate the hats and wraps of the delegates and visitors who assemble at our General Conferences these days.

The third picture represents a scene in the Society Islands. Some seven or eight years ago a number of native Saints withdrew from the church, owing to division and misunderstanding resulting from certain spiritual manifestations. This division caused intense sorrow in the hearts of many on both sides of the controversy. The seceders kept themselves intact as a body of worshiping people and refused to give allegiance to any other denomination, although frequently solicited to do so. They retained their belief in and reverence for the church and the gospel, and at last, on the occasion of the recent visit of Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths to the islands, they saw their way clear to return to the fold. On October 14, 1913, the leaders and members of this movement, known as the pupu people, met with the Saints at the Tarona Branch in Papeete and were baptized by Brother Griffiths, to the number of thirty-eight souls. The picture represents the Saints coming out of the water of the Pacific after their baptism. The two tall, intelligent looking men in the lead were leaders of the movement, brothers,—capable, honest, and intelligent men, known, we understand, as Lui and Pori.

The fourth picture of this group represents a Sunday school class in Brother Waller's Sunday school at Honolulu. This picture was taken some years ago. The girl at the right in the back row, indicated by a cross marked on the sleeve of her left arm, is a Japanese girl; the others are native Hawaiians.

The fifth and last picture in our group is from a photograph of the kindly face of Patriarch John H. Lake, who passed to his reward at his home in Kirtland, Ohio, at 6.50 p. m., March 6. Brother Lake's spiritual life was nearly contemporaneous with the history of the Reorganized Church. He was baptized in 1860, and his ministerial work dated from that time, as he was immediately ordained to the office of deacon. He served for a number of years as a seventy, and was one of that remarkable group of men called to various offices by the revelation of 1873, at which time he was called and ordained to the office of apostle. In this office he labored faithfully and efficiently until 1902, at which time he was ordained an evangelist and patriarch. In this office, as a father to the church, he completed his life of active service. He traveled widely, endured much, made many sacrifices in the interest of the church, and crowned his devotion by giving his last remaining son, Charles H. Lake, who died last summer while on his mission to the South Sea Islands. The church may well honor one who has served so long and been such an example of piety, integrity, and virtue.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

EARTHQUAKE AND TIDAL WAVE.—Press reports from Russia tell of great loss of life due to a tidal wave from the Azov Sea. The wave came in during a hurricane which struck the province of Kuban and inundated the towns of Stanitzka and Achtyrskaja. It is said that over one thousand people lost their lives. At the same time report comes from Japan of another serious earthquake, this time in the Island of Hondo; many people were killed and much property was destroyed.

NOTED FRENCH EDITOR ASSASSINATED.—March 16 Gaston Calmette, editor of the Figaro, was shot and killed by Mme. Henriette Caillaux, wife of Joseph Caillaux, the French minister of finance and former French premier. The editor was killed in his office, the act being one of revenge because of certain charges that Calmette had made against the minister of finance in the course of a heated political campaign.

SUFFRAGETTES STILL ACTIVE.—The militant suffragettes of England continue their criminal activities. Recently six suffragettes attacked the residence of Reginald McKenna, home secretary, and smashed nearly all the windows. Suffragette "arson squads" burned several railway coaches and valuable residence property; and one woman entering the national art gallery, hatchet in hand, attacked and practically ruined a great painting known as the Rokeby Venus, belonging to the British Nation, and valued at hundreds of thousands of dollars.

PROBLEM OF THE UNEMPLOYED.—During the past winter the problem of the unemployed has assumed alarming proportions. Practically all of the great cities have been vexed by it, and charity both official and private has been inadequate to meet the situation, while social workers "have been oppressed and depressed by their sense of helplessness in the face of such a grave evil." In New York City organized groups of the unemployed, directed by members of the I. W. W. forced their way into churches, demanding shelter and food. In some of these edifices they were given shelter and food, but finally entering a Catholic church they were arrested and lodged in jail. It is charged that while they were thus making their bid for public attention they were at the same time refusing offers of work and were dissuading others from work who were employed. They refused to work for less than three dollars per day for eight hours' work. In California an army of the unemployed assembled under the leadership of "General" Kelley and gave the various counties a great deal of trouble. Their plan was to proceed overland to Washington and lay their grievances before the Administration. A wild and incredible story comes from the West purporting to have originated in a report made to the Department of War by Adjutant General Forbes, to the effect that it was the plan of this army of unemployed to proceed to Chicago, there effect a conjunction with similar armies from other quarters, march to Rock Island and seize the government arsenal, and thus armed and equipped capture railway trains and proceed to Washington five hundred thousand strong, capture the city and take possession of the Government, thus heading a general rebellion of labor against employers. Probably this strange story originated in the mind of some sensational newspaper reporter or in the dreams of some of the more fanatical of the unemployed. Still it may be but the dim first forming of a vision that shall later be realized when this problem becomes more acute. Violent class war seems inevitable. The methods taken by the unemployed may seem unreasonable and even insane, but that fact does not rob them of their menace. The causes for these outbreaks are deep-rooted in prevailing inequality and injustice. Revolt against such conditions usually assumes forms that are unreasonable and insane. Unless wise constructive methods are adopted and some solution found to this problem, we may look for greater troubles in the future.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

FAVORABLE REPLY TO OPEN LETTER.—The Bureau of Publicity is in receipt of the following letter from the pastor of the Presbyterian Church of one of our western cities. Needless to say its frank and candid spirit is greatly appreciated:

Dear Sirs: This morning I read your Open Letter to the Clergy and now believe with you that an effort should be made to make the people see the difference between two peoples or two churches which people may mistake for one. Many people know nothing of your branch of the church. All they know of "Mormonism" comes from Utah. I perhaps have had the advantage of some, for while I have met with "Mormonism" in Salt Lake and many other places, I have met some few representatives of your church. I met last summer while in Columbia, Missouri, Mr. Fry, of Independence, Missouri. I have met some others in western Iowa. It is easy to see how an injustice may be done an innocent people if it is made to appear that all Latter Day Saints believe and practice alike. I have thought it might help your cause if when in our church (Presbyterian) missionary societies our people are studying the different phases of mission work in our own land, as work among the Mexicans, work among the Indians, work among the mountain whites, and work among the Mormons of Utah, I could put some of your literature, similar to this Open Letter, into their hands for them to learn the difference between the two branches of the church. In our literature no mention is ever made of your Latter Day Saint Church. It is always the Utah branch. As that is the dominant church, and as they are known to hold and teach such "strange doctrines" and yet call themselves Latter Day Saints, people may easily apply the many errors to all who bear the same or similar name. If you wish to send me any of your literature that you think might be helpful I could put it into the hands of our people, and they could pass it on to the Baptists and Methodists. I will say I have always been favorably impressed with your people, the "Josephites," while I can not say as much for the "Brighamites."

PAUL NOT EPILEPTIC.—Some time ago a very kind-hearted gentleman in the East wrote a book designed to show that Joseph Smith was a victim of epilepsy, and hence not morally responsible for his alleged visions, which, according to the argument of the book, came to him during those epileptic seizures. This convenient way of accounting for divine manifestation is a two-edged sword and may cut wider and deeper than is intended. We note the following: "Straus suggests that Saint Paul's thorn in the flesh was undoubtedly epilepsy, and that the vision was a manifestation of this condition." (Christian Apologetics, page 122.) In rebuttal a book has been published which receives the following notice in New York Times Book Review, February 23, 1914:

Doctor Matthew Woods presents a curious study of one of the great heroes of the New Testament in his book entitled Was the Apostle Paul an Epileptic? The author gives it as his opinion—and his opinion is that of a specialist on epilepsy—that Paul was not an epileptic, and that no person qualified to diagnose his disorder could have mistaken it for epilepsy. "We hazard the diagnosis," remarks the author, "that the 'thorn in the flesh' was chronic appendicitis." Doctor Woods offers his work as an answer to those who have advanced the theory that Paul frequently was attacked with epileptic convulsions, and that he was in a fit of that sort at the time he was converted while on the road to Damascus. ## ORIGINAL ARTICLES

THE ART OF PREACHING.

Preaching is the most important duty of the minister, and its place in the church services always has rated as the highest and holiest. Unfortunately, in our day it is not infrequently the case that preaching is made secondary and but an item on the program of divine worship.

The greatest of all preachers in the Christian church, Saint Paul, insists that God saves the world through preaching, and to him everything else was secondary to the preaching of Christ as the crucified Redeemer of the world.

Preaching should be made conformable to the sermon. The other features of the service should be the matrix in which the sermon should be molded, and become the setting to the climax of the occasion. The preacher is the cynosure of every eye, and the one feature around which everything else shall be but the trimming and ornamentation, the use of which shall be to "set off," lead up to, or accentuate the most sacred event in the hour's devotion.

The reason is obvious upon the face valuation of preaching. The transcendent importance of this function is found in the fact that through the preached word the worshipers shall hear the voice of God and receive a revelation of his will. In the sermon, God speaks through the mind and heart, intellectually and emotionally; the personality of the preacher is made the medium through which God speaks to us in terms of our experience, necessitation in modern expression, of holiness, righteousness and justice.

The sermon is the point of contact between earth and heaven, the point where humanity is fused with divinity; where man loses his identity in God. Looking upon the face of the preacher, the congregation may see humanity in weakness, failures, and soul-felt poverty lifted up to God to be charged with the glory of the divine, and seeing this vision the people veil themselves in deep humility while the melody of molten speech breaks upon them as the unseen fingers of infinite love touch the trembling chords of life, bringing harmony out of discord and peace out of storm, as in the misty past the ancient prophet covered himself while the glory of God passed by in the rugged mountain and fury of the storm; or later the mystic seer fell as one dead while the vision of God on the island charged his soul with an overwhelming reverence; and even the astute and hardy warrior of the Christian church lost all sense of time and geography while in ever-ascending spheres the "vision splendid" was unfolded to his gaze.

As the sound of many waters breaks over the soul in the preached word, the sinner is cleansed from through preaching; and to him everything else was secondary to the preaching of Christ as the crucified Redeemer of the world.

THE SERMON.

Instead of the sermon being incidental and but a number on the program, if the Pauline ideal is recognized, the sermon should be the most conspicuous feature, and everything—hymns, prayer and ansin, the soul in affliction is lifted up upon the crest of hope, and the storm-tossed and tempest-driven find comfort and ease in the still waters of God's divine providence.

The mind confused in the tumults of conflicting interests and weary in the unceasing struggle against forces which make for the ruin of nobility of character is caught in the strong tide that makes for righteousness, and as the individual is borne irresistibly along he feels the soothing assurance of an approving conscience supported by the voice of God, and is recompensed for the long hours of toil and the many sacrifices made in order to maintain his integrity and honor, for now the path of the just is a shining light which shines more and more unto the perfect day.

The weary soul of the worshiper leaving domestic drudgery and multitudinous cares of life's ceaseless strain, and the eye-aching monotony of life's unrelieved gray, comes to be refreshed at the river of life which flows by the throne of God and surges in refreshing billows over heart and soul. For in the sermon each should feel that his case has special consideration and receive therefrom some particular blessing.

Age, blear-eyed, tottering in step, sees a light and grasps the strong right hand of God; the strength of manhood in the heyday of power feels itself nerved and new direction is given for higher and holier tasks; and youth is lifted up in the transport of an illumined idealism.

Such in a suggestive way should be the place, purpose, and function of the sermon, and such is the end the preacher should have in mind.

THE PREACHER'S PROBLEM.

How to accomplish this, how to actualize this ideal, should be the problem which is ever pressing on the preacher's mind, and at all times the burden of his thought. And whatever he may have by way of intellectualism, rhetoric, or eloquence, should be the willing servants, always subservient to the great end already described, and never at any time should the sermon be made the opportunity for exhibiting the preacher's knowledge, or his powers of oratory, and least of all, himself. It would be just as vulgar a demonstration of egotism and a desecration of his calling to allow his own personality to obscure his Lord and spoil the revelation of the spiritual vision, as it would for the artist to make himself and his name the most conspicuous feature of his work. Less and less of man and more and more of God is always the secret of genius and inspiration in artist and poet, as well as in preacher and prophet.

Think of the variety and differences in the congregation. Each one with some particular care, problem, heartache, burden, or void, waiting in the courts of the temple for the shadow of the passing Master to fall upon them, bringing help in the manner most needed, comfort, solution, sympathy, and grace, all desiring guidance under the wisdom and love of the infinite All-Father. How universally sympathetic the preacher must be. Every avenue must be open, so that from all points he may gather material; and then under the influence of divine inspiration he places all in the melting pot of experience and fuses all into the compact whole, the sermon being the many-colored fabric through all of which the crimson streak of life and the golden strand of immortality shall run. So every soul finds covering, shelter, and warmth.

The minister must possess the rare gift of a rich and consecrated imagination, besides a warm and living sympathy, so as to literally identify himself with the people among whom he labors and to whom he ministers. Failing in this he will fail in everything. In deep and prayerful meditation he must move through the garden of the soul, gathering up the rays of light, all the fragrances and the nectar charging his soul and heart, so that he may distill to others radiance, sweetness and nutrition. His ministry must be indeed that of burden bearing, and from under the pressure of his congregation's burden the best and purest must be expressed from his consciousness; just as in our Lord's experience the lasting perfume of his life is with us to-day because bearing the sin of the whole world from his broken body and bruised spirit the divine altruism exuded in aromatic sweetness.

The selfish man, the man anxious and careful of himself and moved by self-assertive consideration, can never scale the heavenly battlements and catch the splendor of the city of God. The pastor above all must not be cramped and warped by the limitations of self, but his soul must swell with generic love and the universal whole must demand the first and highest consideration. The spirit of atonement is the secret of the successful ministry, and in nothing is the real power of the minister discovered as in the sermon he preaches. The sermon is not to be evaluated by grammar, elocution, or passion, but rather by the number of individual souls finding special comfort, direction, and help.

THE SERMON IN THE MAKING.

The sermon in the making needs an infinite variety of influences to fashion it; and the sermon maker must be a seer, prophet, and priest, and finally a king. For the sermon must be an official pronouncement. It must be authoritative, not merely academical or polemical. It must be spoken with the authority of a ruler, conqueror, and redeemer, and not as a mere schoolman or pedagogue. The power of dominion can only be developed in the powers of penetration, discernment of principle, and the sacrifice of self for the sake of principle and common good. Power based upon such a foundation is irresistible and against it the barriers of hades can not prevail.

The preacher's sympathy must be the highway along which his imagination must travel, and he must learn the art of reading with unerring instinct human life, delicately dividing between the real and the superficial, so that he can bring reinforcements of grace to supplement or stimulate the real want of soul. Gathering up the real things, real needs, real cries of real people in real life, he must from under the real burdens of his congregation intercede with God on their behalf and in their stead. Carrying this weight into the holy of holies, to lay it all at the feet of one Mighty and Strong, he makes the toilsome and painful journey into the divine presence alone. Gethsemane resents any intrusion. But when he comes down from the mountain of transfiguration, laden with supplies of solace and succor, the sermon is the table of stone upon which the finger of God has written his response to his children's cry, it is the soul's Easter Sunday; the agony of Monday, Thursday, and the tragedy of Good Friday, the solitude of the grave, were the matrix in which the supreme revelation of the divine was molded, and so the sermon orientates with new light and life.

Surely this can not be too high or esoteric an interpretation of the place, meaning, and purpose of the sermon, and it therefore can not be unimportant that the ways and means of preparing and presenting it shall have reverent consideration.

How shall the sermon be prepared? Much depends upon the nature, temperament, and sensitiveness of the preacher, though not all. The artist is the vital quality, but much depends upon the pigment and canvas and material equipment. The musician is the master, but his instrument may blur and render discordant the melody of soul. God is always the power of the sermon; indeed is the sermon, but much depends upon the instrument.

MEN PECULIARLY GIFTED.

Some men are peculiarly gifted and can sense the needs of a congregation while in the service and can also receive the spiritual impression and take from God's own hand such supplies of grace as the collective body may require while on their feet. Psychologically they are the efferent and afferent nerve tracks of the body, possessing the power of prophecy and seership as abiding possessions. Upon their breasts hangs the Urim and Thummim, radiating light and truth. All the vibrations of light are gathered up and made luminous with radiance of truth while the psychic influences are at work in the service. The speaker's own soul touches the unseen chords of the waiting congregation and he moves subconsciously between earth and heaven, touching the soul of man and the soul of God synchronistically and articulating the cry and response in all the vibrant cadences of celestial harmony. Such men were the golden-tongued Isaiah, the beloved disciple John, and Saint Chrysostom.

Such men are comparatively rare, but have existed and do exist, and when heard their message arrests the soul and men admit the authority by which they speak. Such an one is so sensitive that the impulses from the congregation fall upon his consciousness as the Hertzian waves falling upon the sensitized magnet become articulate with meaning. So delicately attuned is he to the infinite that the strong tide of divine response breaks over him in the sound of many waters, and he voices the tongues of the Spirit in the language which his hearers understand. Again, we say such men are rare; they possess what the Book of Mormon catalogues as "the gift of preaching."

MAJORITY OF PREACHERS.

The majority of the preachers, however, have a different psychic constitution; they are not so responsive to external forces; their power of seeing, and hearing, and interpreting things human and divine is not so sensitive and is slower. At the first the vision is all out of focus and blurred,—and at times aberrated. The sounds which greet them are confused and they need to tediously analyze, allocate, and build up, until a definite message is outlined. Laboriously and painfully they have to interpret the needs of the flock and learn to understand the cries of the soul all but incapable of explaining itself, for with Tennyson so many of us bewail the fact—

What am I? An infant crying for the light
And with no language but a cry.

They need to wrestle day and night with God and take the word he gives alphabetically and spell it out to themselves first. In quiet meditation, the seclusion of study, in lonely walks, in the solitude of night, sometimes months apart they catch the glinting rays, or some wandering note comes faintly echoing through the halls of memory, but slowly and surely the whole is being built up.

Very frequently a man's whole ministry is serial, and his preaching is the reflex of his own spiritual evolution and each sermon shows a new step, a new turning in the road, a new elevation, scarcely any sermon being complete in itself, but a collation of living epistles, an unfinished book of the Acts of the Apostles. Like some great masterpieces in art, as painting, or sculpture, or poetry, all the sermons preached are but layers of pigment, chiselings and linings, or cantos and strophes, or the various movements in some majestic oratorio or opera. In some preachers all sermons contribute to the one supreme unfolding of the vision splendid.

VARIETY OF PREACHERS.

In the case of our Lord, he only had one sermon; the theme is beautifully outlined in the Sermon on the Mount and distilled in concentrated form in Matthew 20:20-22—the revelation of the love of God in love to man. Whatever Jesus says or does will always contain this great dominant theme.

Paul's was the commanding supremacy of Jesus in heaven, on earth, or in hades, before whom all things above, around, and beneath must bow in acknowledgment of inferiority and the overlordship of him whose name is the highest of all, making for salvation.

Martin Luther's great theme was justification by faith.

John Wesley's was the commanding and all-absorbing passion of divine grace.

John the divine spoke of love, Peter of principle, and James of conduct.

In all this it is encouraging to note that no one preacher can cover the entire field, or tell all the story, any more than could a Turner gather up all the brilliant hues of the birth or death of day; or a Beethoven catch all the strain of the soul's music. There is always room for originality and uniqueness in preaching, and every man can preach a sermon no other man can possibly preach.

So if the preacher lacks the fervid vision and the soul like the æolian harp, he may at least go down deep into the intricacies of the soul's struggle, interpret the unseen strivings, and bring into view the undiscovered quantities. His message may lack the impassioned oratory, the fluent tide of melted speech, but he may have power to find God in unexpected places, and gather the honey from the wild flowers which bedeck the rugged pathway of life. He may not use in the shuttle of his ministry the silks and satins of such genius as that described, but he may take the rough homespun and weave his heavenly garments out of life's commonplaces and even drudgeries, and perhaps have the sacred art of using life's discords and wailing minors as did Chopin and Parry, out of which comfort and uplift may be obtained.

By long, tedious, and painful processes, introspection brings to us unsuspected values in quiet and thoughtful speech, and though every word may be born of travail, it is nevertheless purified in the fires of tried experience. Such a preacher in the nature of things will require time for study and consideration and maturing. Probably he may secure a thought and retain it in his mind in the process of gestation until some occasion of spiritual demand shall give it birth. It may be with him that words are but clumsy instruments in which to garb his spiritual idealisms, and he selects his words as a chemist selects the elements for some valuable compound, with grave judgment and concern. Maybe his memory is not so willing to unlock the doors of treasury. So he must woo and wait or cajole or flagellate, and only after painful vigils is he permitted a view of some promised land.

It surely would be a matter easily understood that such thoughts once assuming definite shape would be committed to paper lest again they should elude him. Even though such ideas should be committed to paper, they are well worth our most careful consideration, for in this case the kingdom of heaven is entered through much tribulation. And it is also generally true that sermons produced in such a way are more likely to be matured and exhibit a correlation of part to part, and a balance that may be lacking in the outburst of extemporaneous eloquence.

TWO KINDS OF PREACHING.

Isaiah is fascinating and more readable than Ezekiel, and his dramatic vision of possible utopias and the spiritual communism leads us captive at his will; but Ezekiel reaches to the reality of religion in such accurate terms that even to-day it is comparatively easy to catch the adumbrations of the gospel of Jesus in the quiet and peaceful flow of his keen analysis. Isaiah deals with humanity in the mass and loses the unit in the nation. Individual values are lost in the passion for the national ideal. But Ezekiel, while not indifferent to the collective possibilities, is the prophet and preacher of individual values, and places this as the foundation upon which Isaiah's coming kingdom shall be established. Isaiah obtained his eloquence when the vision of God overwhelmed him and the angel touched his tongue with the live coal from the altar of sacrifice; but Ezekiel spelled out his message through blinding tears, and as he sat in abject misery beside the still form of his beautiful young wife whom the angel of death had taken from him as she lay by his side in the night. Isaiah can lead the armies of crusaders, but Ezekiel steps into your heart and speaks to your soul as a personal friend and adviser; or, as the Master, will join you on the road to Emmaus and discuss the things of the kingdom with you in the quiet tones of personal friendship.

But while we thus make discrimination, we can not spare either one; we love both and sit at their feet while they charge us with new passion and new courage and hope.

It is seen then, that both kinds of preachers are necessary: the man whose rare ability and sublimated consciousness can catch the sound of God's voice in his own soul and strike the harp of life into rapturous music, inspiring the multitudes with collective passion for national righteousness and a sense of our national destiny; the other, who quietly and at times tediously spells out to us the lessons of personal communion with God, cultivated in sorrow, distress, and anguish of soul.

Inspiration is found not only in the flow of extemporaneous address, but also in the slow and measured tread as the individual soul moves towards its eternal destiny through life's commonplaces and monotonies. In the one God speaks through the man, in the other man speaks through God; in one God bends down to man, in the other man lifts himself up to God.

We conclude that the end of preaching is to bring to the soul of the congregation some message of grace and help from God; and if the preacher is not gifted to proclaim his message extemporaneously and cast himself upon the current of psychic or inspirational power which comes from God and the occasion, then let him courageously, carefully think out his message, commit the strains of thought to paper, and weave them into a symmetrical whole; and then if he can not commit them to memory, arrange these either in the form of notes, or even in the form of an essay, and read the sermon with the same passion which was in his soul when preparing it.

The old prejudice against notes and written sermons is rapidly dying as we are developing a truer and holier concept of the place and value of the preached word in the devotional life of the people. And, with Saint Paul, we believe it is better to speak two words with understanding than ten thousand in an unknown tongue. JOHN W. RUSHTON.

TO WHAT EXTENT MAY NOTES BE USED IN PREACHING?

This question can be very briefly answered by simply saying, To any extent the speaker desires, so long as he is able to possess the Spirit of God and so hold the attention and interest of his audience.

A longer consideration shows that the problem is necessarily related to the art of public speaking in general. In this particular aspect it raises the question of preparation, which may extend for a short time before delivery or may cover an extensive education. Certainly one who does not prepare himself for a public address will not be troubled with notes. Usually we note that the man of education attempts to express himself with greater exactitude, and to insure this prepares more or less voluminous notes.

THREE GENERAL ELEMENTS.

In public speaking there are at least three general elements to be considered, i. e., the subject matter and thought; the language, or vocabulary; the art or manner of presentation. The first two elements enter also into the written treatise of whatever form; the last belongs only to oral address.

It is significant that many times the scholar or man of wide reputation for his general education or special preparation on some one topic will read a prepared paper in a very tiresome monotone. Some have considered this a necessary outcome of preparation and study; while the facts are, the cause of his poor delivery is not his great knowledge of the subject, but rather what he does not know and does not understand; namely, how to speak in public. Often a man who is interested in educational work will speak orally, without the use of notes, and directly to the people, but still in a tiresome manner. Some will say that this shows that education destroys the spiritual influence, since to their minds spiritual influence is synonymous with noise and excitation. The fact is, often, that the man has no natural gift in the art of public speaking, and but a limited education.

No man can know too much, can understand his subject too well, have too clear a concept of the value of words, nor have too much natural or acquired ability as an orator. The trouble is always with what he does not know, though it may be that he knows so little, or that he is in need of divine direction in the sacred desk. It is because of what he does not know that he fails.

SUBJECT MATTER AND THOUGHT.

Now, first in importance in any public address we would place the thought and subject matter. If a man has no particular message, no particular thought to present, his discourse will be of doubtful benefit. But some will point out that the Bible says:

When they shall deliver you up, take no thought how or what you shall speak.—Matthew 10: 19.

For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent . . . hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? . . . Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise.—1 Corinthians 1: 19-27.

But on the other hand we have, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Timothy 2: 15.) "Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good." (1 Thessalonians 5: 26.) "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36. And many other similar passages.

There is also the plain fact that men who are inspired do not remain ignorant men, but that the influence of the Divine tends always to greater understanding, to study and preparation in the broad, general sense of the term. But our subject does not permit of an elaborate consideration of the phase of general education other than this incidental reference.

VOCABULARY.

For similar reasons the matter of vocabulary will be deferred, although it is evident that the more a man knows, the wider his vocabulary, the finer will be the shades of meaning he may express; though in public speaking he may also be handicapped by the limitations of his hearers, since too many beautiful words will possibly prove obscure to those who are accustomed only to the common garden variety of words.

MANNER OF PRESENTATION.

Now when we come to the art of public speaking in general we are advised by those who profess to know (and observation confirms the advice), that a read article or discourse is tiresome, and even long readings will detract from the attention of the audience. It is better to talk to your hearers, looking them squarely in the face, as much as possible, and this is not possible if the eyes are needed to closely follow voluminous notes. However, many teachers of the art of oratory advise that brief headings or notes be made, which can be held on small cards in the palm of the hand, and so not detract from the personal appeal or the forcefulness of the discourse.

When the discourse is a sermon, we have the additional element for consideration,—man is not then standing to represent some mundane matter alone, to speak for himself, nor is he dealing with human affairs only; he is attempting to stand before the altar of his God, to speak in the name of the Father, and in his stead. It would seem to be self-evident that no preparation can be too great for this service, no study too profound, provided always that the man does not place his full reliance in the arm of flesh, but keeps his heart and mind open and pure for the reception and direction of the Spirit of God. And as we turn to examine the various citations of scripture, and sacred history as well, we note that while not many learned are called, still it was Moses, taught in all the learning of the Egyptians, taught for forty years of the priest of God in Midian, who ascended the mount to talk with the Father face to face, and who was called upon to lead the children of Israel out of bondage; that it was Joseph, also with extensive training, who became the Prime Minister of Egypt and cared for his people; that it was Daniel, learned in the learning of Babylon and Chaldea, taught by the wise men and taught of God, who was the prince of his people in that foreign land. Not to multiply instances, it was Paul, the pupil of Gamaliel, a Pharisee of the Pharisees, a Roman citizen, learned in all the Hebrew law and Greek culture of his day, who went down into Arabia to be taught of God, and then became the single influence, next after the Master, which left the greatest impress on the early Christian church. Such men have been used, but they are not men who have placed their trust in the arm of flesh or in their human learning, but meek men, humble, willing to be taught from on high.

NOTES.

"When standing before kings, take no thought," yet the command is made that we shall store our minds continually with truth wherever found, "for it shall be given you in the hour." Both are necessary for the highest and best service; and if this study and general preparation is to take place, one, three, ten years in advance, it can not be amiss that notes be made and the best thought preserved; especially as we may have as much of inspiration in study and preparation years in advance as at the very time. Notes may also take the form of clippings and be used for review prior to entering the sacred desk. There is nothing we know of in the law either forbidding or commanding such a use, so that we are not prepared to say even that notes may not be used, and clippings, at the time of delivery.

But the art of public speaking alone would suggest that it is unwise to read at great length from any writing, and in appearing in the sacred desk we can not afford to have a lack of flexibility or adaptability to the present needs, nor risk a preparation carried to the point where there can be no room for inspiration in the very hour to fit the especial need of the hearers.

The extent to which notes may be used will be an individual matter. He who relies solely on the occasion, who enters the sacred desk and opens his mouth with some curiosity to see what will come forth, will have no use for notes either in preparation or at the time of delivery, and may even serve a rambling talk, a sort of intellectual or spiritual conglomeration, without particular form or definite aim, and defying analysis. Others have such splendid gifts of oratory that very little can be made to sound like something wonderful, until the mind attempts to analyze the spiritual meal served, and then all too soon the limitations are discovered.

The writer may be a little prejudiced, for, though an ardent bookworm, he has yet to see the time when he can use notes freely at the sacred desk, and he has experienced occasions when he did not know till rising to speak what his subject would be. Personally, it comes almost with the force of a command to study, read, make notes, work all the time; yet in the hour the notes can be used very little. Rather have we realized a fulfillment of the promise, "He shall bring all things to your remembrance," and the results of past study have been brought to mind. We have always felt it to be too great a sacrament to rely on human learning alone.

So, very respectfully, we suggest that preparation should be made continuously, not only by study and prayer, but by personal cleanliness and watchfulness that in every possible way, when man attempts to stand at the sacred desk, so far as lies in his power, he is prepared to stand as the priest of God. All other parts of the service prepare for that consummation, that he may, in accordance with the promise, have that marked direction, that inspiration by the Holy Ghost, that "Whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture; shall be the will of the Lord; shall be the mind of the Lord; shall be the word of the Lord; shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation," (Doctrine and Covenants 68:1) that he may ever sacrifice himself for the sake of the people, and place his own soul, if need be, on the altar, sensing at once the need of the people and also the divine will; that in his person there may be consummated in what he shall say that seeming miracle, even if seen by none except himself, of the actual presence and direction of the Spirit of God. His study and thoughts may then be taken, fused into one and make a spiritual discourse, a heavenly feast for the hungry soul.

Notes may be used to any extent which does not interfere with or hinder that service, whether it be in preparation or at the sacred desk. Notes may be used far enough to insure continuity and unity of thought, but not so far as to interfere or prevent this divine overshadowing in the very hour.

POLITICAL REFORM VERSUS RELIGION.

Has politics a place in connection with religion? Why not? Is not politics a science of government; and does not religion pertain to individual government, collective government, spiritual and temporal government?

In the revealments of the mind and will of God to the human race upon spiritual matters he has not been silent as to their governmental needs in affairs pertaining to present world-political matters. And so we find in his word the injunction that wise men and good men should be selected and supported for places of public trust in the nation; we find further the warning that when the wicked rule, the people mourn.

We also find explicit and positive instructions in the Holy Scriptures as to the proper use of money—rate of interest allowable on a loan, etc. (See Nephi 5, Ezekiel 18, Luke 6:34, 35.) The matter of currency regulation, proper political laws governing the lending or borrowing of money, has to do with the very foundation of earthly governments. The Lord has spoken upon the subject, but as in other matters, the people have been slow to hear and heed, and they do therefore suffer.

Even while suffering from bad laws, congestion of wealth, and oppression, how many, many thousands of good, pious, spiritual-minded people have enjoyed in religion a blessing which so far surpasses anything that the world could give that there is no comparison to be made!

A VAIN HOPE.

But now arises a spirit in our time which assumes that religion and the churches are a failure, that Christianity is a hollow pretense, that faith in a heavenly felicity by and by is an idle hallucination and used only as a club in the hands of the masters to hold the poor under subjection.

Challenging the efficiency of all religious movements hitherto, this spirit proceeds to suggest a mechanical arrangement of political matters inde- pendent of obedience to spiritual laws which it is thought will do for the world what religion has failed to do.

Vain hope! If a mere political issue, though ever so altruistic in principle, be mistaken for the kingdom of God, how sore will be the disappointment of its devotees when the inferiority of the kingdoms of this world shall be contrasted with the towering superiority of the kingdom of God at the time when the question is to be answered, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

AGENCY OF MAN.

From the Literary Digest of September 6, we copy the following:

ELDER JAMES E. YATES.

Those who believe in the permanent mission of religion in the world, can not consistently labor for a merely mechanically ordered social system from which religion would have to withdraw. A faith in the permanence of religion and its beneficent activities by no means requires the permanence of social wrongs; but one may venture to say that it does require the permanence of the possibility of social wrongs—precisely in the order that religion may show its power to prevent that possibility from becoming a realized fact. In other words, it forbids society, whatever else society is, or is not, to be an automatically working machine.

God will never compel free men to do right. No environment on earth or in heaven will ever be adjusted in such a manner as to make it impossible to do wrong. The principle of force in this matter is only applied to prisoners; all others must act upon their free moral agency. The angels in heaven would be mere machines if wound up to do right so that it would be impossible to do otherwise.

Lucifer, once an angel of light, fell; and such a precedent establishes the fact that wrongdoing is not impossible anywhere.

So if we labor to establish an environment in society where men can not cause distress by committing social wrong, we follow a phantom; but if we labor to further a principle under which men will not do wrong, God is with us if we strive "lawfully" and our work, though perhaps small in its beginning, will be permanent.

THE HARVEST OF HATRED.

Some among those engaged in political reform movements emphasize the fact that the poor of the land are under a heavy burden of oppression; also that very evident truth that as creatures of intelligence it is the duty of every person in all that he does in political affairs to look to the best interest of society in general. It is also vividly pointed out that the oppressor and the minions of graft should be brought to account.

This is all true, but let the careful observer of modern tendencies note that while some reformers claim to speak in the name of religious principle in their plea for justice to all and special favors to none, their manner of attack upon social evil engenders and feeds a vicious spirit of hatred.

Anything that feeds a spirit of hatred, even though the hatred be directed against real evildoers, will, if pursued far enough, ripen into a bloodthirsty harvest which naught but war will satisfy. Such a spirit of reform may come in the garb of a plea for law and order, and an appeal to the ballot for the redress of social wrong. Its devotees may really believe that all its victories are to be won under the banner of peace, but if beneath the surface there is nurturing of hatred, the time will come when the plea for peaceful measures will prove to be a flimsy covering. The nations that have sown with venom to the wind, they shall reap the whirlwind.

Anything coming in the name of religious politics which militates against the full application of the divine injunction, Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you; and pray for them that despitefully use you, may embrace in some ways certain altruistic principles, but will sadly deceive those who reckon such political religion to be the kingdom of God.

Politics and religion, properly wedded, should never be divorced; but true religion can not be brought down to unite with forces which are directly opposed to the very best expression of its own self. Love and hatred will not fuse.

He who comes with a message of fire, and with a burning passion of indignation against flagrant wrong may succeed as does the torch of war, leaving with the ruined enemy the ashes of his own best hopes as well; but he who comes even to an enemy with a message of love conquers, yet keeps his own.

THE ONLY PANACEA.

While social evils blight the nation; while the hire of labor is kept back by fraud; while sons are born to poverty and slavish servitude; while the hand of the oppressor rests heavy on any land, and the curse of inequality of opportunity crushes the vital spark of national righteousness, it is not commendable that men should submit in silence, nor that they should hold their peace and make no protest. But if their protest partake of the same nature which lies at the very bottom of all these evils—wickedness—then all are in the mire together, and without hope until regenerated by the gospel of love, the only panacea for the temporal or spiritual woes of the human race, as time will ultimately prove.

A wicked man under the oppressor's weight is no better in the sight of God than a wicked man on top of the pile, though there may be a difference in the variety of their meanness. Is not the condition which drags wretched poverty right into the heart of abundance a curse? Is it not a curse when want stalks where industries hum and thrift is spread abroad? When we agree that such conditions are a curse let us also remember Proverbs 26:2, "The curse causeless shall not come."

If in seeking the root cause of all such conditions as the curse of oppression, surely a curse to any people, we find the following to be the edict of Almighty God pertaining to these things, we shall then have discovered the place to do effective and permanent work in the interest of civil righteousness:

If thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God to observe to do his commandments, . . . cursed shalt thou be in the city, and cursed shalt thou be in the field. . . . And thou shalt grope at noonday as the blind gropeth in darkness, and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways; and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore, and no man shall save thee. . . . Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people, and thine eyes shall look, and fail with longing for them all the day long; and there shall be no might in thine hand. . . . And thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed away.—Deuteronomy 28:15, 33.

So the real cause of oppression and kindred distresses lies deeper than mere defects in the adjustment of political law, deeper than all the abuses of public trust, and may be discovered in the fact that the people, though singing praises to the Lord, have not obeyed his commandments.

Advocates of religious political reform or of revolutionary measures who emphasize the need for the people to return unto God have a better balanced platform than those who defame the church, challenge the need of obedience to any spiritual law, worship, or service, and whose methods incite the people to wrath. If the poor fellow who is led whithersoever money interest may direct is at one end of an unreasonable extreme, the inflammatory agitator who encourages insolence against all forms of church service or worship is at the other. The highway of right lies between the extremes; and the well-poised and ultimately most successful life will keep on the highway.

Whether nobles rule, or tyrants reign, forsake not the Lord.

JAMES E. YATES.

A SYMPOSIUM ON THE DUTIES OF THE PASTOR --PART 2.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—To refresh our memories, we reprint the series of questions which drew forth these articles, part one of which appeared some months ago. Those contributing to this number are George Harrington and V. M. Goodrich.]

1. What is your conception of the work of a pastor, his relationship to the people under his charge, and his methods of administering to their needs?

2. What is the relationship of the branch president to the other branch officers? Should he allow each officer to run his own department quite independently? Or should he assign them their work and keep the reins rather closely in his own hands?

3. How can the branch president keep the officers under him in touch with each other and with himself so as to secure thorough cooperation?

4. Should he permit the various officers of the branch to settle such matters as appointing speakers, etc., by vote in the priesthood meeting? Or should he conduct these matters as he is led by the Holy Spirit in his ministry?

5. How should the work of the teacher be arranged? Should he visit freely among the members as he may feel disposed? Or should the president give him a list of names that need labor, and assign such cases to him in that way?

6. When one of the lesser officers has a measure or policy that he feels should be carried out, should he submit it to the branch president or to the priesthood meeting, or should he go ahead on his own initiative?

7. On what matters should the officer confer in the priesthood meetings?

AS ANSWERED BY G. E. HARRINGTON.

Question number 1. What is your conception of the work of a pastor, his relationship to the people under his charge, and his methods of administering to their needs?

My conception of the work of a pastor is that of discovering the necessities of the people, with a view of supplying their needs. He must know the purpose of his work; he must study it in all of its bearings, and seek divine assistance; and to the extent that he comprehends the needs of the people and has qualified himself so as to supply their needs, and does so, is he, as he should be, a shepherd of the flock. The consideration of the young, the middle-aged, the elderly, the poor, the infirm, the sick, the mourning ones, the perplexed and distressed among them must have attention. What concerns their physical, moral, social, educational, industrial, temporal, as well as their national, and what is specially designated, spirthe smaller branches the presiding ministry have to engage in vocations for a maintenance of their temporal needs, limiting their time for study and research, essential for the services required, and unless specially directed by inspiration they will have their mental treasury depleted, and become uninteresting to their congregations. Under such conditions the pastor will find it of advantage to his flock to arrange with the local ministry for such service; and in most (if not all) instances, time for study should be given those who shall occupy. But in places where pastors are devoting their entire time to pastoral work, it is doubtful if they should feel under obligations to attempt to educate the ministry through pulpit privileges. It appears that some other way should be provided till reasonable speaking ability has been attained; fireside talks, mission work, etc., would aid materially in this development.)

The pastor's knowledge of the work involved necessitates the consideration of what are available as means to the end mentioned. The great work of a pastor is the production of true character. He will warn, instruct, and protect the flock under his care. His relation to the people under his charge will require an intimate knowledge of their doings, which may be had through those who are to cooperate with him in his work, or by personal association or investigation. To be capable of treating them as is necessary, his efforts should be to adapt himself to their needs and demands, in such a way that they may be furnished with the essentials to make correction of their errors, to enable them to discipline and train themselves, so the development in character may go on with the least obstruction and greatest facility. Friendliness, cordiality, and socialibility should be exhibited toward them; encouragement given to feel a freedom with him that would enable them, without hesitancy, to suggest what, in their opinion, would be helpful to him in his administrations among them.

When in distress they should feel free to come to him with their difficulties; and in their sorrows he should be their confidant and comforter; in their joys he should rejoice with them, keeping in mind the paramount thought of soul culture. His method of administering to their needs would be to take the liberty afforded in the pulpit, the possible visits to their homes, the available services capable of being discharged by other officials associated with him, and in the last named instruct such as to the character of the work required in behalf of the people. To be effective, a life of consecration to the one great aim involved in the work undertaken should be had, holy in thought, and wholly devoted, ascertaining to the extent of his possibilities the true attitude to be maintained toward them, placing himself freely before the Lord for the reception of spiritual thought itual interests, should receive attention by him, as all are involved in his work for them. If unable personally to render all such service he should provide for it by arranging with those fully capable of delivering it.

(One of the peculiarities of our custom is such that pastors in branches are expected to promote the individual development of those called to the ministry by affording them opportunity to preach from their pulpits, which may be right, but it limits his own opportunity for a personal application of knowledge adaptable to the needs of his flock as he sees it. Should he feel constrained to feed the flock exclusively or make discriminations among those who are called to preach, he is charged with selfishness and partiality. We are aware, however, that in many of that would be suggestive and important in improving the method already in operation.

He should take time for study, visiting, and for consultation with other officers interested, and should make it possible and agreeable for higher officers to be heard in council, and give direction to his flock, seeking to counsel with them. He should be acquainted with auxiliary work, associate with it, encourage, incite to, and initiate additional activities along such lines, keeping in mind and directing all thought to the one end that auxiliary work is but a contributing service, aiming to assist in the work of soul culture, leading all to all available means for their development.

Question number 2. What is the relation of a branch president to the other branch officers? Should he allow each officer to run his own department quite independently? Or should he assign them their work and keep the reins rather closely in his own hands?

The relation of a branch president to other branch officers involves a feeling of confidence in them, a willingness to assist them, being easy of access, ready to listen and learn, holding an impartial attitude, thoughtful in consideration of their views, susceptible to change in attitude resulting from convincing proof of error in himself, reserving always the right of discrimination, discretion, and direction. He should feel the responsibility of supervision of all official service, allowing each officer as full freedom in his own department of work as is consistent with the work to be done. He should not regard them as authorized to work independently from himself, for he may conflict with his associates and bring confusion to the membership. His attitude toward them should be such that where doubt exists in their minds relative to the work they have in hand they will feel to make him their counselor, and respect his counsel if unable to show good reason why it might not be observed. Upon him rests a great measure of responsibility for the conduct and welfare of the membership, and to keep him in ignorance of the condition existing would result in a detriment to the body. Consequently a lively association between himself and other officers could be kept up with profit, to make him effective in the pulpit, in correcting, guiding, and instructing the Saints.

Associate officers dealing directly with the members in various lines of work that they are chosen to perform should place in his possession the information that will permit him, so far as it is possible, to understand the condition of his flock.

Question number 3. How can a branch president keep the officers under him in touch with each other and with himself so as to secure thorough cooperation?

By the adoption of regular priesthood meetings, by reporting to him, enabling him to put in operation the essential services necessary.

Question number 4. Should he permit the various officers of the branch to settle such matters as appointing speakers, etc., by vote in the priesthood meeting? Or should he conduct these matters as he is led by the Holy Spirit in his ministry?

The appointment of the speakers in the interest of the body should be left wholly with the presiding officer, for the reason that if all of the sources of information respecting the condition of the body are open to him, he will be best capable of determining those best qualified to speak on the subjects necessary. This should not be left to any action by priesthood meetings or otherwise. He should conduct such work as he is guided by wisdom and the Holy Spirit; however, he should be susceptible to suggestion, as in other matters, reserving the right of direction.

Question number 5. How should the work of the teacher be arranged? Should he visit freely among the members as he may feel disposed? Or should the president give him a list of names that need labor, and assign such cases to him in that way?

This depends upon the size of a branch; in large branches there should be territorial division of the membership, or the membership be so divided among the teachers that every member may be known to them officially. In the law it is determined that the teachers' duty is to see that the Saints meet together often. This may or may not necessitate a visit to the entire membership by the teachers of a branch.

The teacher may be required to visit frequently under some circumstances, depending upon the services required. In small branches such difficulties are comparatively small.

In one of the principal branches of the church, the arrangement is such that a presiding teacher has the direction largely of the other teachers who are willing to assist in the services required of their office, and to whom he gives a list of the membership to be cared for, and turns over to them cases among the membership on their list, for their services, or, at his own discretion, takes up the case himself and carries it through. Cases of minor importance are not reported directly to the president of the branch, and where the law is clear and the policy of treatment of the members is well understood among the teachers and the branch president, the service is had without consultation, minimizing extended knowledge of wrongdoing; still the president of the branch looks for a monthly statement representing the condition of the membership as found by the teachers in their movements among the members. Whatever cases come to the knowledge of the president of the branch are turned over to the presiding teacher to be disposed of in the manner before described.

Question number 6. When one of the lesser officers has a measure or policy that he feels should be carried out, should he submit it to the branch president? or to the priesthood meeting? or should he go ahead on his own initiative?

When one of the lesser officers has a measure or policy that he feels should be carried out, I think it should be submitted to the branch president, provided it is important. However, its importance can best be determined by consultation with the president, who may see in it value sufficient for its adoption, and he should view it as to its advantages and effects and not from the standpoint of its authorship. I regard it the presiding officer's privilege to determine as to the propriety, advantage, and expediency of such proposition, and not the privilege of those laboring under his direction, or by priesthood action; however, if the president should appear unreasonable regarding such proposals, the voice of the branch may be heard, and said policy may receive its approval and govern all officers; or if the branch president chooses to waive his right of direction and ask for priesthood determination, I presume such a course could be had, but the wisdom of such a course could be justly questioned.

Again, where there is no regulation, and the lesser officer feels constrained by the Spirit to move in a certain way, and the case is an urgent one, he should move without feeling obligated to confer with other officers. But he should be acquainted with the law sufficiently to know whether or not his action would violate any law or rule adopted and governing him; the test of the Spirit's authorship is the law. The Lord, foreseeing the tendency to govern the affairs of the branches or districts by spiritual manifestations, spoke to the church, cautioning the membership, and officers, too, by telling them that branches and districts are to be conducted according to the rules given in the law as directed in a former revelation:

They shall take the things which have been given unto them as my law unto the church to be my law to govern my church. And these affairs are not to be conducted by manifestations of the Spirit unless these directions and manifestations come through the regularly authorized officer of the branch or district.—Doctrine and Covenants 125:14.

There should ever be present the thought that the greater measure of responsibility is with the one holding the highest position. Where this is recognized and respected and the blessings of direction asked for him, the blessing of direction will be given and the body blessed. Without honor, without the sympathy of his flock, his services will have but little beneficial effect. In order to have harmony, intelligent direction is necessary, and necessarily lodged in but few.

Question number 7. On what matters should the officers confer in the priesthood meetings?

This all depends upon the kind of priesthood meetings held. Some priesthood meetings are held for educational purposes, when the subjects most desirable and necessary for instruction to the priesthood should be considered. Elected branch officers should confer and consider the needs of the body and agree upon methods best calculated to promote its welfare, and how to apply those methods. But it is the distinctive privilege of the presiding officer to proceed on his own initiative, with or without consultation, but always within the law. To yield his right of direction would produce confusion and dissatisfaction. A presiding officer should not feel it the right of the priesthood to direct him; the branch is his director, or other higher official bodies or officers.

ELDER V. M. GOODRICH,
Los Angeles, California.

FROM ELDER V. M. GOODRICH.

Number 1. What is your conception of the work of a pastor, his relationship to the people under his charge, and his methods of administering to their needs?

The word pastor is taken from the Latin pascere, which means to feed, synonymy, shepherd.

A shepherd's duty to the flock of sheep is to guard, protect, feed, and lead them. It has been said, "You can lead sheep with better success and less effort than you can drive them." We are told that the shepherds of the East do not drive the sheep, but teach them to follow. Christ referred to the sheep and the shepherd, in his teaching, saying, "And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice." (John 10: 4.)

As the duty of the shepherd then is to watch over, feed, lead, protect, and administer to all the physical needs of the sheep, so the work of the pastor is to watch over, feed, protect, lead, and administer to all the spiritual needs of the church, collectively and severally (of course in his sphere). It is well for the pastor in his work to learn a lesson from the shepherd, who does not drive the sheep, but familiarizes them with his voice; and by his kindly administrations to their necessity, they learn to love him, have confidence in and trust him, feeling their dependence upon him, and will follow, and look to him for safety, protection, and even companionship.

Men are not made to drive. God does not work with men arbitrarily. He gives man the right of choice, rules by love, shows respect and interest; will counsel and advise, but never drive. Men will follow, they need a leader, and will follow one,—the right kind being one that leads by love and wisdom. If you appeal to the good in man the good in him will respond; if you speak to the evil in him, the evil is aroused.

The pastor's work, then, should be to lead, never to drive; to see and appreciate the good in men; to cultivate and increase the good unto the elimination and submerging of the evil: for there is some good in every man, no matter how much debased he may be in our opinion; and there is some evil in the nature of man, no matter how high or exalted he may stand among men; otherwise Jesus would not have said, "There is none good," meaning, of course, in the absolute sense.

The pastor should be an example, not with ulterior motive, but unselfishly, with love, true love. This is the power and potency of his success to lead men, to win their confidence, gain their respect and appreciation, which will assist and induce them to emulate his example, and the great exemplar, Christ. He should live the gospel which he preaches, that his teaching may command respect and have weight: he should remember there is no other way to lead but by teaching, and that teaching in word can not be separated from example: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap."

Briefly stated, the work of the pastor is to preach the word, be an example to the flock, have the active oversight of all the departments of the work, to counsel, advise, plan, and assist all in their several duties when required and necessity demands.

His relationship would be similar to that of a father, a leader, an adviser, an elder brother, and in fact to be one with his flock in all their joys, and in all their troubles and trials.

Number 2. What is the relationship of the branch president to the other branch officers? Should he allow each officer to run his own department quite independently? Or should he assign them their work and keep the reins rather closely in his own hands?

I understand the function of the branch president to be that of the head, not only in the general sense (collectively), but also the head of the several departments as well: so it devolves upon him to fill the function of a head in all of its ramifications. For what would a body be worth without the head in the common sense of the term, in every living thing? As the head of all creatures living contains the brain, the organism in which it is said lies the origin of thought and seat of intelligence, so with the branch president, he should be better qualified, have a more intelligent understanding and knowledge of the work and its needs, and should be in resourcefulness and effectiveness more of a leader than anyone of the other officers; nevertheless, he should not be unmindful of or disregard his associate officers and their counsel and suggestions; for 'tis truly said, "In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom."

The proverb referred to being true, the branch president could not in wisdom allow each officer under him to run his department quite independently; neither should he arbitrarily assign each one his work and keep the reins too closely in his own hands; but rather he should confer and advise with them and have a mutual understanding and agreement as to their duties and work in their several departments.

Number 3. How can the branch president keep the officers under him in touch with each other and with himself so as to secure thorough cooperation?

This may be done by holding priesthood meetings at stated times, when each officer may make a report of the work done by him, and also offer suggestions, and recommend such things as he may think beneficial to the church, which may be discussed by the priesthood, thus enabling them to come to an understanding and unity of purpose.

Number 4. Should he permit the various officers of the branch to settle such matters as appointing speakers, etc., by vote in the priesthood meeting? Or should he conduct these matters as he is led by the Holy Spirit in his ministry?

"The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God." (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 9.) I believe it is fair to presume that the elders referred to are the ones chosen to preside, for we read:

Branches and districts are to be conducted according to the rules given in the law as directed in a former revelation: They shall take the things which have been given unto them as my law to the church to be my law to govern my church.

And these affairs are not to be conducted by manifestations of the Spirit unless these directions and manifestations come through the regularly authorized officers of branch or district. If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14.

What do we learn by the two paragraphs quoted? First, the elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost; and the second makes it plain, it seems to me, that the elders who are to so conduct are those who have been called of God and set to preside in branch or district. By law of God it is made the prerogative and duty of these officers so chosen to conduct all meetings, with the assurance and promise of the "riches of gifts and blessings of direction,"—the all-important thing. We also learn that if the affairs of branch or district are not conducted in the Lord's way, he will not direct, neither give the riches of gifts. He has system. We must honor it. He would have us know that we should not expect him to discard his ways for ours, or some other way.

Should the appointment of speakers, etc., be left to the vote of the officers composing it, or to any other than the branch president, the Holy Spirit would not be directing, or at least God has kindly notified us that we can not thus expect his directions; but if the chosen officers are permitted to take the things written to govern in the church, then has God bound himself to respect and direct, and richly bless his people. We think no mistake would be made if the branch president appoints the speakers, etc., as "led by the Holy Ghost"; but if left to a vote, there is much room for mistakes.

Number 5. How should the work of the teacher be arranged? Should he visit freely among the members as he may feel disposed? Or should the president give him a list of names that need labor, and assign such cases in that way?

Perhaps this question is answered in the main in number 2. As I understand it, the teacher is to labor under the direction of the branch president, that is by their mutual agreement.

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church; neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all members do their duty.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.

We could scarcely take this to mean that the teacher must have vigilance over the members in their scattered condition, or to have watch over them in their homes at all times. Then what must it mean? To be with them at all stated and regular meetings, there to have watch over them, etc. When there is any infraction of the law or rules of the church, requiring the attention of the teacher, such as failing to do duty, hardness of heart, backbiting, or absenting themselves from the church, he should report these things to the president, whereupon they two should agree as to the mode of procedure; should the teacher fail in his duty, another may be appointed, and then the president would have the right to assign the specific work for his consideration and execution. Under the law and rules of the church, I can not see how the teacher could act independently and upon his own initiative.

Number 7. On what matters should the officers confer in the priesthood meetings?

I understand the priesthood meeting to be in a way a sort of miniature "school of the prophets," or in other words a "makeshift" for this school.

I do not see why subjects other than matters directly concerning the branch, its officers, and the doctrine of the church with the rules governing may not be discussed with profit and benefit to the priesthood, when these subjects are along the educational line. I should think any subject of this character, if the majority of the members desire it, and there seems a demand, might be discussed. There is no danger to a man in learning and gaining knowledge. Knowledge is power, and a great blessing, and God wills and intends that we shall come to the fullness of knowledge that we may have the fullness of joy. Knowledge misused or wrongly applied is destructive, not otherwise. It is the greatest privilege which we have, bringing us the most joy, comfort, convenience, and benefit, and when misused results to us in the greatest disaster. In a comparative sense, we may say that there is nothing in the universe that we may not use with benefit when we have the fullness of knowledge to rightly apply.

If we should say, "Thus far no farther shalt thou go," where shall we draw the line? I confess freely my incompetency; I would rather think my subject permissible for the priesthood to discuss which may broaden the mind, increase knowledge, develop character, intellect, etc. If not, why not?

The Lord has told us in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36, and also Doctrine and Covenants 90:12, Teach one another, seek out of good books learning. He desires and directs that we shall have knowledge of history, languages, countries, kingdoms, laws of God and laws of man; and all for the salvation of Zion.

This direction and requirement seems to me to be very broad in scope; and we may ask, Where will the priesthood have the opportunity to gain this knowledge and teaching, if not done in the priesthood meetings? Or what are the privileges and provisions for the ministry in this line?

A blessed companion is a book,—a book that fitly chosen is a life-long friend.—Douglas Jerrold.

SERVICE.

"I am among you as he that serveth."—Jesus.

As a scriptural prelude to and a basis for this article, we quote John 13: 1-17:

Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end. And supper being ended (the Devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him,) Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God; he riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself. After that he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded. Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter saith unto him, Lord, dost thou wash my feet? Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter. Peter saith unto him. Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me. Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head. Jesus saith unto him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and ye are clean, but not all. For he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, Ye are not all clean. So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

To this we wish to add the following, from Luke 22: 24-30:

And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve. For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? Is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth. Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

THE PASSOVER.

The time of the foregoing incident was near the close of Jesus' ministry, just a few hours before his death, and this lends interest and impressiveness to the account, for Jesus knew "his hour was come." It was at the time of the feast of the passover. Jesus and his disciples had come near to Jerusalem.

They were at Bethany. Jesus had great desire to observe this festal day with his beloved disciples, for it would be his last opportunity to eat the passover with them; and he yet had much to teach them. So he sent Peter and John into Jerusalem to prepare the place and the feast. It was on the day of unleavened bread that he sent the two, for on that day must the passover be killed, according to the old law. According to some authorities, that was on Thursday. The two found the large upper room furnished, as Jesus had told them they would, and prepared the feast. Towards evening Jesus went there, going by the way of Mount Olivet. He found the meal ready.

It is to be presumed that the arrangement of the room in general and the order of the meal were in keeping with the customs of the day, so that a glance at a dining room of those times might help us to understand some of the details of the happenings during the meal. The tables were usually square, but not always. They were low, not higher than stools, for the reason that the diners reclined rather than sat during the meal. So on three sides of the table the participants were arranged on triclinia, the fourth side being left free for serving. As indicated by the name, each triclinium was occupied by three diners, each reclining, resting on the left elbow. The dish was common, each dipping into it for his own supply. Bread was used as a sop, on which to gather up some of the food. It was such a sop that Jesus handed Judas, as it was not unusual for one thus to help another near him.

The arrangement of the diners around the tables was usually by "honor" or rank, or station, it being the general rule to pay careful attention to this custom. The "chief seat of honor" is the central one of the central triclinium, and this is undoubtedly the one occupied by Jesus. We can conclude from the statement that John the beloved rested on Jesus' bosom that he occupied the seat to Jesus' right, while Judas, to whom Jesus handed the sop, was near by.

A STRIFE AMONG THEM.

The large room in which they were gathered, if it were the typical room of the better class of eastern house, was clean, with a polished floor and a rug or mat in the center. The customary footwear of those times was the sandal. On entering a house the footgear was put off at the door, where the incoming guest was met by a servant with a basin of water in which the dust and sand of the journey could be washed from the feet. In case of the advent of a distinguished guest, this courtesy might be rendered by the host. The room was then entered barefooted. So we can see the disciples entering the upper room prepared for them. It is unlikely that their feet were washed as they entered the room, though their sandals were undoubtedly put off at the door. It may be that here began the strife among them as to who should be accounted greatest among them. Who should gird himself as a servant and wash the feet of the incoming disciples? Not deciding, it was not done. And again at the table the question of who was the greatest, the question of precedence, would arise on taking seats. The right of Jesus to the chief seat of honor would be unquestioned; but as to the others—can we not hear them throughout the meal engaged in discussing the question, doubtless discussing their respective ages, length of service, order of ordination, and what not, until finally Jesus could stand the contention no longer without trying to impress a great lesson upon them.

So he, their Master, arose, threw off his garment, girded himself with a towel, as does the servant meeting the incoming guest, and himself attended to the act of courtesy and comfort which had been neglected on their coming into the room. The strife over the question of precedence could not but be distasteful to him. He had heard it before. Once before he had tried to impress upon them the necessity for a childlike humility. As they now were disputing the same old annoying question, we can see them grow angry, black, sullen. Old as the strife is, it is still new, for it often appears. We are not yet free from it, for too frequently in branch and district, business meeting and conference, the old, old question arises to vex, Who is the greatest, and therefore entitled to the greatest honor?

THE REBUKE.

In sorrow, therefore, over the lack of due humility among his disciples, and grieving because the true measure of greatness seemed to be lost to them, Jesus set about giving an example to them, which ever since has been cited as a demonstration of humility, and rebuked them by assuming the role of a servant in performing an act of courtesy due the incoming guest. Girded with the towel, basin in hand, he went from disciple to disciple and washed their feet.

What a rebuke! He, their acknowledged Lord and leader, the one for whom they had left everything to follow; he whose divine power they had so often seen manifest; he whom Peter, James, and John had beheld glorified on the Mount of Transfiguration associating with Moses and Elias,—he was washing their feet. How humiliated they were by the rebuke! The lesson was not lost. Impetuous Peter, perhaps not the first to feel the sting of the rebuke, but first to speak of it, exclaimed, "Thou shalt never wash my feet!" But the quiet rejoinder, "If I wash thee not, thou has no part with me," stirred to its depths his loving soul, and longing to be wholly his Lord's he would have Jesus wash not only his feet but his head and hands.

AN EXAMPLE.

But it was not to make them clean that he washed their feet; it was the example he had in mind: "Ye are not all clean," said Jesus as he thought of Judas who would betray him. He continued his task, and when he had finished, had put on his garment again, and had resumed his place at the table, he would know if the significance of his act had been seen by them. Know ye what I have done to you? I, your Lord, have washed your feet as an example that ye should wash one another's feet. That is to say, when courtesy demands an act such as washing of feet, no one of you should be above doing it. When there is need of work such as that to contribute to the comfort and ease of the brethren, all should be ready to give that service. It was a grand lesson, impressively rendered, yet with an unostentation and simplicity quite in keeping with the Master. "For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. . . . If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." And we might readily deduce the obverse, If ye know these things and do them not, then are ye not happy.

There are those who have taken this incident as more than an example and have looked upon it as a pattern, thus instituting the ceremony of footwashing. Whatever place footwashing might have as a ceremony introduced or instituted later by deduction or subsequent command, so far as this scripture we have quoted is concerned we do not think it would justify the institution of footwashing as a ceremony, for Jesus said he did that as an example. It was not a pattern. A finely built watch might in its workmanship be taken as an example by a steam engine builder, but could not be taken as a pattern any more than could a stone. A neat and tastily attired man might be an example of dress to his daughter, but even in this day of wild imitation of the male dress by designers of feminine attire he could not be taken as a pattern for her dress.

SERVICE THE MEASURE.

If, then, this was an example rather than a pattern, what was the lesson exemplified? It was service. No one should hesitate to do for others. The criterion of greatness is too frequently considered to be money accumulation. Wealth brings power, and this has mistakenly been believed to be the measure of greatness. It appears that in Jesus' time greatness was thus measured by power; but he gave as the criterion service.

And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.—Luke 22: 25.

All men love power. Money or wealth is desired not so much per se as for the power it brings. If wealth is accumulated for the power to do good, its accumulation is laudable, if the motive be not proscribed by the time the power is gained. But the mere possession of wealth is not a guarantee of greatness, nor yet the ability to accumulate wealth. Especially is this so according to Jesus' standard as indicated in the language: "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all." (Mark 9: 35.) And, "For he that is least among you all, the same shall be great." (Luke 9: 48.) According to this, greatness in the possession of wealth would be the ability to appropriate it to rightful, helpful, and serviceable uses. And this applies to all power to accomplish, whether of strength or possession. Service is the measure. It is the keynote of altruism, the basic principle of Christianity.

THE SIN OF JUDAS.

The cause of Judas' sin may be attributed to the opposite,—to selfishness, egoism. He was ambitious, and with a worldly vision saw preferment in an earthly kingdom to be set up by Jesus. He was impatient of delay, and longed for the time when Jesus would assert his right to the throne of David, when he and his fellow disciples would become men of power and great influence. Judas had seen the power of Jesus on various occasions, and he may have thought that the coming of the Roman soldiers and the prosecution would cause Jesus to display his wonderful powers, assert himself, and demand his political rights. The sin of Judas lay in his avarice, his selfishness. He would gain money by betraying Jesus, and power when Jesus should utilize his marvelous power to destroy his enemies and set up his kingdom. Poor Judas! Too late he saw his mistake; too late he realized, if at all, that Jesus' kingdom was spiritual! "Alas!" says Farrar, "sins grow and multiply with fatal diffusiveness, and blend insensibly with hosts of their evil kindred." One sin led Judas to another, till like an avalanche they fell upon his consciousness all at once, and their awfulness impelled him to self-destruction. Out of tune with the Master's great chord of altruism, he probably never realized the greatness and scope of the ideal of Jesus, a regenerated society wherein God's will would be supreme.

Jesus, then, by his gospel of altruism vivified by service, as exemplified in many, many cases in his busy ministry, brought the great new covenant, and elevated the criterion of devotion to God by the new commandment, Love one another.

This is termed a new commandment, not because mutual love had never been enjoined upon mankind before, but because it was a precept of peculiar excellency; for the word translated new in the Hebrew language denotes excellency and truth: he also called it a new commandment because they were to exercise it under new relations, according to a new measure, and from new motives.—Fleetwood's Life of Christ.

INHARMONIES.

But Judas is not alone in failing to have attuned himself to the keynote of altruism vibrating in the message and work of Jesus. Even yet there are those claiming to represent him and to preach his gospel who present it as a message of fear or an appeal to selfishness. "Hell fire" preaching in an effort to frighten people into the church is as much an appeal to selfishness as is the appeal to serve God as members of the church because of the reward we hope for as a result of our sacrifice. To give to the Lord because we hope for more in return is not as Jesus would have us do. "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men" did not appeal to the avarice of the Galilean fishermen, but it did appeal to the innate desire to serve, which God has implanted in the heart of every man.

And yet, to attempt to frighten people into acknowledging God and his Christ by conjuring up mental pictures of the torments of the "damned," writhing in eternal agony over the unquenchable fires of brimstone constantly kept burning by the activities of Satan and his cohorts, accompanied by a contrasting picture of the faithful sitting in eternal bliss relieving the ennui of idleness by thrumming a golden harp or piping an accompaniment to angelic choruses, is not more in error, in my opinion, than the attempt to use the horrible picture of hellish fire sizzling the spiritual entities of the nontithe-payer to frighten the church members into observing the temporal law. No less out of harmony with the underlying principle of Christ's mission and message is the idea of preaching tithing by holding out as the leading inducement the promise of reward and greater returns. If the Lord chooses to reward, that should be incidental; the duty should be discharged because it is a service and enables the church to widen its scope of helpful activities. I am not in sympathy with the idea of frightening people into paying tithing, nor yet with buying them to do that duty by holding out the promise of increased crops, healthier animals, or greater freedom from human ailments or calamities. It is enough to know that God asks us to pay tithing, that it is right, and that it is a service, a consecration, which we owe the church and our fellow men.

THE GREAT ZIONIC MOVEMENT.

And so with the great Zion movement towards which we are all looking and near which we are surely approaching; it, too, must be vibrant with the chord of service and sacrament. It is altruistic; and he who approaches it with the hope or idea of reward or increased returns will be out of tune and repelled. But he who comes with his talents and wealth on the altar of service comes in the way God has said he should. Then can we work for each other, rendering service to God and man, in a way which will so cement us as a worshiping body together in the bonds of fraternity that our united ranks as battling hosts will make our "armies" terrible to those who know not God or the beauties of his service.

AT THE DIVIDE; THE QUIET HOUR.

[Synopsis of a sermon by Judge A. B. Kirkendall in Kirtland Temple, August 20, 1911.]

I will relate an incident bearing upon the subject of starting right in life. It is associated with my first visit to this historic place. Twenty-four years ago last April I made my first visit to Kirtland. As we were coming over the Big Four Railroad the brakeman called out the name of the town of Crestline. A gentleman across the aisle remarked to another, "What gave this town the name of Crestline?" He replied that it was the watershed between the Ohio River and the Great Lakes, and that where the town now stood there formerly stood a barn, and that when it rained the water on the north side of the barn went into Lake Erie and on the south side into the Gulf of Mexico.

I thought no more of this incident until last fall, when I made another trip to Kirtland. When we passed the town of Crestline the wheels of memory turned and I thought of the incident of nearly a quarter of a century before. There was no one on the train that I knew, and unfortunately I had no book, so that I was compelled to draw myself within myself and in retrospection think of the past and by introspection of the present and apperception of the future.

TWO RAINDROPS.

In my mind's eye I traced two raindrops, born from the womb of the same cloud, one of which fell on the north side, and the other on the south side of the coping of the old barn. The one that fell on the north dropped from the eaves of the building and in company with its fellows formed a little rivulet and flowed into the stream and eventually found its way into Lake Erie. It was forced eastward by gravity, was dashed over the mighty cataract of Niagara, on through Lake Ontario, out into the Saint Lawrence, and was taken up in mist in the fog banks of Newfoundland; the cold winds carried it to the north and it was deposited on "Greenland's icy mountain." There for ages it has lain, and will so remain useless and inert, and of no profit to humanity, so far as science knows.

The other drop, falling on the south side of the old barn, in company with its fellows formed a little rivulet, flowed down through our beautiful State, "An empire within an empire," into the Ohio River, and thence to the Mississippi. Picking up its grain of sand it helped to build up the delta of the Mississippi, contributing its part to the formation of a small continent extending from the mouth of the Mississippi two hundred miles north, being one of the most fertile spots in our great country. After reaching the gulf it was taken by the gulf stream and carried through the Atlantic and helped to make the climate of "Merry England" as congenial and pleasant as Ohio, although as far north as Labrador. (Scientific men are now disputing this theory, yet it does not destroy the poetry of my imaginary soliloquy.)

It too was taken up in mist and was deposited upon the land, and taken up in chemical solution, which in turn by capillary attraction was transformed into fruit or golden grain. A child ate this fruit or grain, and the bright luster of the eye, the rose color of the cheek were but contributions of the drop of water. This child became a Kepler, capable of measuring and weighing the heavenly bodies; or a Newton, who discovered the great principle of gravity; or a Marconi, that gave us wireless telegraphy, an incalculable benefit to the race; or a Watts, or a Fulton, or an Edison to show us the possibility of steam and electricity, or one of the Wright brothers to teach us to navigate the air.

This may be fanciful, but it is illustrative that our starting point has materially to do with our destination.

THE HOUSE OF QUIETUDE.

Have you noticed what the hours of quietude have done for the race? The injunction of the Apostle Paul "to study to be quiet" is especially applicable in this day of rush and bustle. We do not have to study to find something to do. On Monday we plan for the week, we will do this to-day, that on Tuesday, thus on Wednesday, and so on for the week, but when Monday night comes we find that there is excess of work that we haven't performed. The same on Tuesday, and when Saturday night comes there is an accumulation of unfinished work. There is so much to attract our attention that we can not readily reach the quiet hours for meditation, retrospection and introspection that are so necessary to our perfect intellectual and spiritual development.

But for Bedford Jail we would not have had Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, that masterpiece of allegorical literature. Had not God dropped the curtain of blindness over Milton's eyes we would not have had Paradise Lost, that masterpiece of mythological literature, blending with a deeper insight into the theology of Latter Day Saintism, setting forth the doctrine of the fall of angels, the loss of paradise and its regaining, than any other writer before or since its time. It was in the still quiet voice and not in the fire or cyclone that exiled Elijah received his message from God. Was it not the quiet of the forty years' training as a shepherd in the land of Midian with its days and years of preparation that equipped Moses and made him the greatest prophet, leader, and lawgiver of the ages? Was it not the wilderness life that fitted John the Baptist to become the forerunner and precursor of the Master? Was it not the three years' missionary work of Paul in the Arabian desert where he received the evidence of the gospel "not of man nor of men but by the revelation of Jesus Christ," that fitted him to be the greatest missionary the world has ever known?

It is not in the hurly-burly of busy life that man receives inspiration from God, but when he places himself in a receptive condition by prayer and meditation in the quiet hours. It was in the forests of western New York, on the banks of the flowing Susquehanna, in the privacy of his room, that the angel message was delivered to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

THE LAST GREAT INDIAN COUNCIL.

In an interesting volume entitled The Vanishing Race,<sup>1</sup> Doctor Joseph Dixon describes what he terms the "last great Indian council." Doctor Dixon was head of the Rodman Wanamaker Expedition of Citizenship to the American Indian, 1908-9, and as such visited every existing tribe (one hundred and eighty-nine in number) and talked with all living chiefs of note. A year ago, on Washington's birthday, 1913, President Taft presided at the dedication of the heroic Indian Memorial which Rodman Wanamaker is rearing on Staten Island, New York Bay—a memorial to "the vanishing race." And thirty-two eminent Indian chiefs, raising the Stars and Stripes, signed beneath its folds a declaration of allegiance composed by themselves. They said, with touching pathos, "We have never before felt that we were a part of this country."—EDITOR'S NOTE.

These impressions form the background for the "Stories of the chiefs," as told in "The last great Indian council," organized by the expedition, with the assistance of the United States Government, in the valley of the Little Big Horn, Montana. Wrestling with the Indian superstition that to be photographed will result in the shortening of their lives, it was no small task to assemble these chiefs for the express purpose of making photographic and phonographic records, to be preserved in the Indian Memorial to be erected by the Nation in New York Harbor. But the chiefs came. They met in council for the last time (some of them have since died) and they delivered real orations, as may be seen from some of the reports here given. The speeches were made in the Indian tongue, of course, translated by interpreters and then transcribed by the leader of the expedition, Doctor Dixon.

Chief Plenty Coups, chief of all the Crow Nation, in summoning the other chiefs to the council said:

The ground on which we stand is sacred ground. It is the dust and blood of our ancestors. On these plains the Great White Father at Washington sent his soldiers, armed with long knives and rifles to slay the Indian. Many of them sleep on yonder hill where Pahaska—White Chief of the Long Hair—so bravely fought and fell. A few more passing suns will see us here no more, and our dust and bones will mingle with these same prairies.

I see as in a vision the dying spark of our council fires, the ashes cold and white. I see no more the curling smoke rising from our lodge poles. I hear no longer the songs of the women as they prepare the meal. The antelope have gone; the buffalo wallows are empty. Only the wail of the coyote is heard.

The white man's medicine is stronger than ours; his iron horse rushes over the buffalo trail. He talks to us through his "whispering spirit!" (The Indian's name for the telegraph and telephone.) We are like birds with a broken wing. My heart is cold within me. My eyes are growing dim—I am old.

Before our red brothers pass on to the happy hunting ground let us bury the tomahawk. Let us break our arrows. Let us wash off our war paint in the river. And I will instruct our medicine men to tell the women to prepare a great council lodge. I will send our hunters into the hills and pines for deer. I will send my runners to the lodges of the Blackfeet, where in that far north flowers border the snow on the hills. I will send them across the fiery desert to the lodges of the Apaches in the south. I will send them east to the lodges of the Sioux, warriors who have met us in many a hard battle. I will send them to the west, where among the mountains dwell the Cayuse and the Umatillas.

I will have the outriders build smoke signals on all the high hills, calling the chiefs of all the tribes together, that we may meet here as brothers and friends in one great last council, that we may eat our bread and meat together, and smoke the council pipe, and say farewell as brothers, never to meet again.

When the chiefs had assembled after the elapse of weeks he welcomed them thus:

I am glad at heart to stand here to-day on this Indian ground and give a hearty welcome to all the chiefs assembled from the various tribes from all over the United States.

It is a day of beauty, and bright sunshine; it is a glad day for me. I rejoice that on this happy day we can all meet here as friends, eat our bread and meat in communion, smoke the council pipe of peace.

I am rejoiced to give you all a great heart of welcome. And then we must say farewell. But we go away as friends, never to meet again. I am glad to have you here.

Chief Two Moons, leader of the Cheyennes in the Custer fight, said:

This is a glad day for me, and I am glad at heart that we can all meet as chiefs from the various tribes from all over the land. It is a great day for all of us, because there are no more wars between us, and we meet in peace to hold this last great council of the chiefs, and smoke the pipe of peace. I am glad at heart that this great picture is to be made of us, as we are assembled here, because our old chiefs are fast dying away, and our old Indian customs soon will pass out of sight, and the coming generations will not know anything about us, but this picture will cause us to live all through the years. And our children and their children will reap the benefit. I am glad we are here.

Red Cloud, chief of the Ogallalla Sioux Nation, said:

—Courtesy New York Times.
INDIAN CHIEFS, JOE WHITE EAGLE, AND CARRYING THE CLOUDS, GETTING THEIR FIRST VIEW OF NEW YORK FROM THE HIPPODROME ROOF.

I stand here to-day to shake hands with the chief of the Crow Nation, and all the chiefs of the tribes assembled from the various quarters of our country. I stand here on this great plain, with the broad sunlight pouring down upon it. I want you to look me in the face, and I hope the great heavenly Father, who will look down upon us, will give all the tribes his blessing, that we may go forth in peace, and live in peace all our days, and that he will look down upon our children and finally lift us far above this earth; and that our heavenly Father will look upon our children as his children that all the tribes may be his children, and as we shake hands to-day upon this broad plain, we may for ever live in peace. We have assembled here to-day as chiefs from all over the land; we eat the bread and meat together, we smoke the pipe of peace, and we shake the hand of peace. And now we go out as one chief, and I hope we shall be as brothers and friends for all our lives, and separate with kind hearts. I am glad to-day as I shake hands with my brothers and friends, although I shall never see them again. When the white man first came across the ocean the Indian took him by the hand and gave him welcome. This day makes me think of that time, and now I say farewell.

TOLD ON THE PREACHERS.

NO HURRY.—The minister of a certain parish in Scotland was walking one misty night through a street in a village when he fell into a deep hole. There was no ladder by which he could make his escape, and he began to shout for help. A laborer passing heard his cries, and looking down, asked who he was. The minister told him, whereupon the laborer remarked, "Weel, weel, ye needna kick up sic a noise. Ye'll no be needed afore Sawbath, an' this is only Wednesday night."—The Argonaut.

A SUBSTITUTE.—Bishop Potter was to preach at a certain parish in the West in the evening, and the congregation was not a little amused at the somewhat ambiguous announcement of their worthy pastor, who said:

"Remember our special service next Sunday afternoon. The Lord will be with us during the morning services and Bishop Potter in the evening."—Exchange.

A GOOD PREACHER.—The distinction between a good preacher and a bad preacher has not changed much since Archbishop Whately declared that a "good preacher preached because he had something to say, and a bad preacher because he had to say something."

EASILY EXPLAINED.—Whenever the Reverend Solon Jefferson called on Aunt Candace, it was her custom to set a plate of gingerbread before him and then ply him with what she called "'ligious 'spoundin's."

"Wha' fo' does de Lawd send epidemics onto de land?" she asked him, one day.

"When folks get so bad dey must be removed some of 'em, Sist' Candace, den de Lawd permits de coming ob an epidemic," said Mr. Jefferson, and took a large bite of gingerbread.

"Uh-h!" said Aunt Candace. "Ef dat's so, how come de good people gets removed along wid de bad ones?"

"De good ones are summonsed fo' witnesses," said the Reverend Solon, fortified in spirit and clarified in mind by the gingerbread, although slightly embarrassed in his utterance. "De Lawd gibbs every man a fair trial."—Selected.

COMPREHENSIVE.—An earnest young preacher in a remote country village concluded a long and comprehensive supplication by saying: "And now let us pray for those who are dwelling in the uninhabited portions of the earth."

AN EYE-OPENER.—"In choosing his men," said the pastor, "Gideon did not select those who laid aside their arms and threw themselves down to drink. He took those who watched with one eye and drank with the other."—Tit-Bits.

BROTHER MINGO MILLENYUM'S ORDINATION.

(As related by himself.)

When I was a little pickanin',
Down on Sweet Gum plantation,
I used to heah de preacher preach,
An' screech an' screech an' screech an' screech,
Expoundin' out salvation.

He'd open up dat Bible-book
Befo' de congregation,
An', sir, he'd read dem Scriptures out,
An' shout an' shout an' shout an' shout,
Widout no education.

He nuver knowed 'is A, B, C's,
Much less pronunciation;
But when he'd focus on a page,
An' rage an' rage an' rage an' rage,
Gord sont interpretation.

He'd show de Devil's forked tail
Out clair, in his noration;
He'd h'ist dat pitchfork up on high,
An' cry an' cry an' cry an' cry,
An' p'int insinuation,

An' I'd brace up an' clench de pew
An' try to hol' my station,
Whilst he'd light up de fumes o' hell,
An' yell an' yell an' yell an' yell,
'Tel we could smell damnation!

One day I swooned off in a tranch,
From brimstone suffocation;
An' red-hot sins wid forked tails
Riz up wid wails an' wails an' wails
And stopped my circulation!

I felt jes' lak a cushion o' pins
Big as de whole creation;
My tongue was swole too thick to speak,
But de pins dey'd stick, an' de sins dey'd shriek!
"Tel I los' all sinsaton.

I come th'ough on de tranch-room flo',
Wid de mou'ners on probation;
An' when I heerd 'em screech an' screech
'Bout "a babe an' sucklin' called to preach!"—
Dat was my ordination.

The April "Exponent."

In glancing over the many good things in the Exponent for April, 1914, we notice a fine article from the pen of Elder J. A. Tanner, pastor of Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri. It takes up in an able manner the normal work of the auxiliaries, and gives special consideration to the Bible normal in use by the teacher training department, which has been severely criticized by some of the elders. About two years ago, the conventions appointed a committee to get out our own Bible normal. Brother Tanner not only shows liberality and breadth of thought, but offers helpful suggestions to the writers of the normal book. And he gives them from the standpoint of a pastor who is interested in the training and education of the young. We advise you

Died.

EDWARDS.—James Lovejoy Edwards was born at Ledbury, Herefordshire, England, January 3, 1839; died at Onset, Massachusetts, January 18, 1914. He was baptized at Providence, Rhode Island, by Edward A. Toombs, September 18, 1887, and was a constant, faithful Saint, zealous and enthusiastic in his great love for the glorious gospel, as he has so beautifully immortalized in the "Angel's message," hymn 206, Zion's Praises. He greatly enjoyed the singing of hymns, the last one sung many times at his request, was Brother Joseph's "Tenderly, tenderly, lead thou me on." He was a volunteer of the Third Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, Company A, serving through the full time of the war. William Bradbury, of Providence, Rhode Island, who was his comrade in the army officiated at the funeral service. After reading much scripture bearing on the resurrection and the life beyond, he delivered an appropriate discourse. While making remarks concerning the veteran's loyalty to God and his country, he draped a flag on the casket and read the following poem:

"BURIAL OF A COMRADE.

"Once more the dear old flag is draped;
Once more the muffled drum,
Another comrade has passed away;
Oh God, thy will be done.

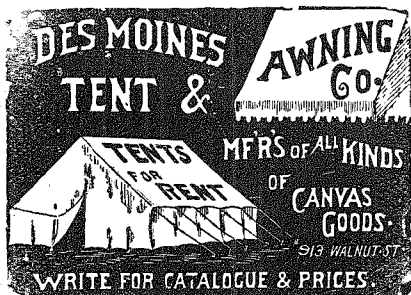

"It means one less of us old boys;
It means another flag;
It means another veteran's grave,
And a household, dark and sad,

"He has passed beyond the picket line
To that camp ground over there,
Where holy peace doth reign supreme
With the angels bright and fair.

"Sleep on; oh grand old boy of blue,
Your earthly trials o'er;
No bugle's blast, no drum's long roll
Will wake you evermore.

"Sleep on: in heavenly peace, sleep on,
Old comrade, loved by all;
You've passed the guard, you've won the crown,
You've answered that last call."

With the singing, ended a very impressive service. The hymn selections for the occasion were made by Brother Edwards a year ago, namely: "It is well with my soul," and "A smile and a welcome for me, dear Savior from thee," which were beautifully rendered by Mrs. Tatelow and Mrs. Eldridge, singers of the local Methodist Episcopal Church. He leaves wife, four sons, stepdaughter. Interment in Springdale Cemetery, East Providence.

FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY.

One of the prophecies coincident to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon was made in reference to the reputation of Joseph Smith, jr., as a man and as a prophetic leader. That prophecy was in effect that his name should "be held for good or evil among all men,"—with the one class for evil; with the other class for good. Whatever else may be said to the credit or discredit of the man uttering it, it must be conceded that this one prophecy has been and is being fulfilled every day.

If we credit the assumption of the general verdict of the public, there are thousands of people who believe and confidently assert that Joseph Smith, jr., was the putative author of the system of polygamous marriage and that he himself was involved in its practice.

There is another body of several thousands of people who believe that he was neither the author of Mormon polygamy nor did he practice the same. This latter class of believers may have among them a number, either small or large, who may have a latent fear amounting almost to disbelief in the affirmation of the majority as to the innocence of Joseph Smith, upon the hypothesis that where there has been so much smoke there must have been some fire.

We do not care at present to enter into an argument as to the soundness of this fear or distrust, but we may be pardoned if we assert certain facts, prominent among which must appear these: that whether the Prophet Joseph Smith was or was not guilty of being a polygamist there was nothing found in the recognized publications of the church at his death which bears even the semblance of that which authorized or sanctioned the introduction of such a practice into the tenets of the church organized by him and others in 1830. It is also certain that such an action upon his part could not divest the revelations which reiterated the New Testament statement of the gospel of the Son of God, in the Book of Mormon and other revelations, of their sacred character and binding obligation upon those to whom such revelations came.

It is further certain that in every State and Territory in which Joseph Smith and his coadjutors in presenting and advocating the so-called new religion carried their propaganda, converted and baptized believers into the faith and built up and organized branches of the church, there were local laws prohibiting the forming of such domestic relations under the form of marriage, and punishing such performances as misdemeanors or crimes against the law of the land. In every State in which the Prophet Joseph Smith lived were statutory enactments punishing departure from the monogamic system of marriage as a crime.

During the fourteen years of his ministry in connection with his associates, no prosecution in the courts was made against him for departure from the monogamic rule, nor was he ever tried before any court upon such a charge. At his death no woman was known to have been present by the side of his coffin to mourn him as a husband whose life had been taken by murderers, nor was any such woman known to exist with the single exception of his legal wife, Emma Hale, whom he married January 18, 1827. It is equally pertinent to the issue that no children were born to Joseph Smith, jr., except those born to him by his legal wife, Emma Hale Smith.

The Reorganized Church has assumed the right, and still continues to assume such right to examine every claim made in reference to whatever is vital in the so-called faith of the church, and insist that the burden of proof must lie upon those who affirm whatever is contrary to the legal spiritual existence of the church organized by him. His sons assumed to make that claim, believing that their father was misjudged and unjustly condemned against legitimate evidence worthy of the name of proof. We have presented this right of demand from the first, and after fifty-four years of personal public administration, one of those sons assumes the right to continue to make such demand and to state that while the prophecy referred to at the beginning of this article is being fulfilled, possibly among those professing friendship as well as those holding enmity against Joseph Smith as a religious reformer and as a man, whoever may make charges against his character must not object to the continued demands that the burden of proof must lie on those who make such allegations.

HOT DRINKS.

We have been asked the following questions:

1. Does the term "hot drinks" appearing in the Word of Wisdom, Doctrine and Covenants 86:1, refer to tea and coffee?

2. Does the term "hot drinks" as used there apply to other drinks, such as "wheat coffee," Postum, cocoa, and chocolate, not used or known at the time when the revelation was given?

There is no doubt in our mind that the term "hot drinks" was intended to include tea and coffee. True, the words tea and coffee do not appear, yet they are covered by the general term. In a similar way whisky and brandy are not specifically named, yet their use is discouraged under the clause which refers to "strong drink."

In a sermon in Nauvoo, May, 1842, Hyrum Smith, who at that time was presiding patriarch, formerly member of the First Presidency, said:

And again "hot drinks are not for the body, or belly"; there are many who wonder what this can mean; whether it refers to tea, and coffee, or not. I say that it does refer to tea, and coffee.—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 800.

Hyrum Smith was in an excellent position to know the understanding that the church had of the meaning of this revelation at the time when it was given. So far as we know, his interpretation was never challenged by the early church or by any quorum or prominent leader of the church. It was consistent with the action of the church in Missouri in discouraging the sale of tea and coffee in the community. The following is from the minutes of a General Assembly of the church, November 7, 1837:

The congregation, after a few remarks from Sidney Rigdon, unanimously voted not to support stores and shops selling spirituous liquors, tea, coffee, or tobacco.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 120.

President Joseph Smith, who was "to teach those revelations which you have received," is on record as follows:

Tea and coffee are not named in the Word, but they are included in the sentence, "Hot drinks are not for the body or belly."—Saints' Herald, vol. 49, p. 1170.

So far as we are aware, no quorum or leading church officer in the Reorganization has ever challenged this decision by President Smith. While he is not presented as an infallible authority, for we know of none such among the human membership of the church, he is by virtue of his office, calling, experience, and personal qualifications as good an authority as we know of on such a matter of interpretation.

OTHER DRINKS.

In regard to the second question, we do not care to attempt to lay down any dogmatic decision or ruling but will simply make some suggestions that may assist others in reaching a personal decision. In a recent sermon, one of the elders deprecated the tendency to demand many restrictive negative rulings and enactments designed to relieve the membership of the "wear and tear of original thought." We will leave a little room for original thought.

Tea and coffee were the beverages in common use at the table at the time when the revelation was given, and they were almost universally served hot. Evidently the term "hot drinks" was, to a degree, at least, merely a term of convenience used in referring to them, just as the term "strong drink" was a term of convenience used to designate alcoholic beverages of various kinds.

The Lord must have had some good reason for advising against their use. Was their high temperature the objectionable feature, or did they contain injurious elements? If we assume that the high temperature was the only objectionable feature, pinning our argument to the word "hot," as here used, that would leave us free under the terms of the revelation, as so construed, to use these beverages at a lower temperature. Yet iced tea and coffee contain the same objectionable qualities that science discovers in hot tea and coffee.

Besides being subject to adulteration by wicked and conspiring men, as indicated in the opening paragraph of the Word of Wisdom, (a danger that has been reduced by recent legislation) both tea and coffee contain very objectionable elements,—tannin in the case of tea, and caffeine in both tea and coffee.

Caffeine (formerly known as theine) is the alkaloid of tea, and is identical with that of coffee, guarana, mate and kola nut. It is closely allied to theobromine, the alkaloid of cocoa, and also to uric acid. In large quantities it is a poison, but in smaller quantities it acts as a stimulant. It exists in greater percentage in India and Ceylon teas than in those from Java, and is lowest in China and Japan teas. Tannin is a hardening and astringent substance, and in large quantities impairs digestion. Prolonged infusion increases the amount extracted.—Encyclopedia Britannica, Eleventh Edition, vol. 26, p. 479.

We are assured by eminent and reliable authorities that tea and coffee habitually used are injurious to digestion, heart action, and the nervous system. Hence the wisdom of the word of warning against them.

Drinks that have come into common use as table beverages since the Word of Wisdom was given must be weighed upon their merits. Those who regard the term "hot drinks" as largely a term of convenience, would not reject such drinks merely because of their temperature, but would inquire into their component elements.

It is evident that drinks made from home browned grains, such as "barley coffee" or "wheat coffee," to borrow common expressions, would not be subject to any suspicion of adulteration and would not contain deleterious drug qualities. It might be argued that the mere matter of temperature would not stand as an objection unless they were taken scalding hot so as to injure the tissues of the throat and stomach, and common sense would forbid such a practice in drinks as well as in foods. It is fair to state, however, that it is argued by some that all liquids taken hot have a tendency to relax and weaken the stomach, and that for this reason all such drinks should be avoided, and that this was the real intent of the revelation.

Patent drinks, such as Postum, might come under suspicion of adulteration unless put up by reliable concerns. The pure food and drug laws afford a welcome protection in such matters that was not had when the Word of Wisdom was given, nor for many years afterward. Manufacturers must now guarantee the genuineness of their food products. If these drinks are made of grains, with the addition of a small portion of molasses, as is guaranteed under the pure food act, in the case of Postum at least, they are in the same category with similar drinks made in the home. We have never known an analysis to disclose adulterants or injurious drug qualities in Postum and similar patent drinks, and anyone may at any time analyze them, and if such are found, prosecute the manufacturers.

Chocolate and cocoa are of a different nature. They might be regarded as questionable beverages, even when the question of temperature is waived, and are condemned by some authorities because of the fact that they contain an alkaloid much like caffeine, though in smaller quantities.

Cocoa as a beverage has a similar action to tea and coffee, inasmuch as the physiological properties of all three are due to the alkaloids and volatile oils they contain. Tea and coffee both contain the alkaloid, caffeine, whilst cocoa contains theobromine. In tea and coffee, however, we only drink an infusion of the leaves or seeds, whilst in cocoa the whole material is taken in a state of very fine suspension, and as the preceding analysis indicates, the cocoa bean, even with the fat extracted, is of high nutritive value.—Encyclopedia Britannica, Eleventh Edition, vol. 6, p. 630.

While the presence of theobromide in cocoa and chocolate is to their discredit, unlike tea and coffee they are to be credited with high nutritive value as an offset to the bad qualities mentioned. They are very nutritious, and according to one authority nine tenths of their entire bulk is absorbed in the digestive tract. Tea and coffee have no food value whatever; they are stimulants.

The ideas suggested in our consideration of question number two may be taken for what they are worth. We have not set down ready-made conclusions but have merely essayed to present some thoughts that may assist others to reach common sense conclusions for themselves.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CURRENT EVENTS.

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—No material change has developed in relations between Mexico and the United States. On March 23 an exchange of shots occurred between the Mexican Federalists and the United States border patrol. The Federalists persisted after repeated warnings in firing upon Constitutionalists who had crossed the Rio Grande and surrendered to United States forces. The United States troops were in danger and fired on order of Captain Winterbern. The Mexican forces withdrew, bearing dead and wounded. No United States soldiers were injured.

MEXICAN WAR.—The war in Mexico has for some time been quiet until the recent advance on Torreon. The press reports heavy advances upon the strongholds about the city with odds on the side of the Constitutionalists. On the 26th the Constitutionalist agency gave out the following: "Gomez Palacio and Lerdo are in our hands and Torreon is completely surrounded. We are expecting victory at any hour."

IRISH HOME RULE.—The Irish home rule situation recently threatened to become more serious than heretofore. As a result of what seems to have been a misunderstanding, a number of army officers resigned, some of whom have returned to Ireland after a conference at the war office. It is said that the king personally intervened in behalf of the army officers. Ulster persistently refuses to come under a Dublin parliament, and to all appearances is prepared to resist, if necessary, to the point of violence. The bill is expected to pass its second reading this week.

DEFEATS WOMAN SUFFRAGE.—On the 19th a joint resolution providing for a constitutional amendment enfranchising women received in the Senate a majority vote, thirty-five to thirty-four; thus, failing to receive the required two thirds vote, the measure was defeated. An amendment to provide, if effected, for the repeal of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution was defeated, forty-eight to nineteen. An amendment to provide that only white women be given the franchise was lost, forty-four to twenty-one.

ANARCHISTIC DEMONSTRATION IN NEW YORK.—A group of the unemployed under anarchistic leadership recently marched up Fifth Avenue in New York City one thousand strong under a black banner bearing in blood red letters the inscription, "Demolition." Women marching in the ranks spat upon other women who passed them in automobiles. Emma Goldman and others exhorted the restless spirits to "get what is coming of the good things of life, and make the rich loafers go to work." By a curious coincidence, immediately following the account of this affair in the press report, and appearing in the same column, is an account of a cablegram sent by the wealthy Mrs. Leiter from her private yacht, bound on a world tour, ordering from friends in Washington five dollars worth of lip salve, rice powder, and baby ribbon. The cablegram cost thirty-five dollars.

A PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.—The Sunday School Times for March 21 contains an account of what is termed a prophetic conference held by the popular orthodox denominations, Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists and others under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago. A similar conference was held twelve years ago, at which time it was decided that Bible prophecy indicated the near approach of the second advent of Christ, and that the return of the Jews to Jerusalem was actually in progress. This later conference was held for the purpose of discussing the signs of the times and scriptural predictions in connection with the second advent of Christ. The ninth article of the statement of faith adopted by the conference declares: "We believe in the second, visible and imminent coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to establish his world-wide kingdom on the earth." The conference also concluded that the promises of God concerning the Jews which have not yet been fulfilled are to be fulfilled here on this earth; that the millennium will be entered upon only after the Lord Jesus has personally ushered it in by his promised return to the earth; and that the second coming of Christ by no means marks the end of the world, but simply the beginning of another age. It is said that over seventeen hundred delegates were in attendance from the United States and Canada, representing twenty-nine States and five Provinces.

THE NEW CREED.—At the prophetic conference previously mentioned the following creed was adopted, as reported by Sunday School Times, March 21:

1. We believe that the Bible is the word and revelation of God, and therefore our only authority.
2. We believe in the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he is very God, "by whom and for whom all things were created."
3. We believe in his virgin birth, that he was conceived by the Holy Spirit, and is therefore God manifest in the flesh.
4. We believe in salvation by divine sacrifice, that the Son of God gave his life a ransom for many, and bore our sins in his own body on the tree.
5. We believe in his physical resurrection from the dead, and in his bodily presence at the right hand of God as our priest and advocate.
6. We believe in the universality and heinousness of sin, and in salvation by grace, not by works lest any man should boast; that sonship with God is attained only by regeneration by the Holy Spirit and faith in Jesus Christ.
7. We believe in the personality and deity of the Holy Spirit, who came down upon earth on the day of Pentecost to in-dwell believers and to be the administrator in the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, also being here to reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.

8. We believe in the great commission which our Lord has given to his church to evangelize the world, and that this evangelization is the great mission of the church.

9. We believe in the second, visible and imminent coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to establish his world-wide kingdom on the earth.

10. We believe in a heaven of eternal bliss for the righteous, and in the conscious and eternal punishment of the wicked.

Furthermore, we exhort the people of God in all denominations throughout this land to stand by these great truths, so much rejected in our days, and to contend earnestly for the faith which our God has, in his holy word, delivered unto the saints.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

UTAH ELDERS ASK ONE-SIDED DISCUSSION.—Some weeks ago we noted the fact that the Utah elders in San Bernardino, California, were asking for a discussion with our elders. However, it develops that in reply to propositions submitted by Elder Roy F. Slye, they propose that we shall affirm our church position and they will deny it; but they decline to affirm their own position and give us the privilege of negating it. In an article in the San Bernardino Sun, Elder George Wixom shows up the unfairness of such a course. He quotes Brother Slye in a letter to the Utah men as follows:

As the object of debate is the presentation of truth before the people, and as you have no proposition you wish to affirm, I do not see the necessity of your appearance in the last named proposition, as we are able to present the truth as understood by us without any aid from you.

As an outcome of the agitation Elder J. D. Stead is announced to deliver two lectures in the chapel at San Bernardino on the subject of Mormonism.

NEW EXPOSE OF "MORMONISM."—The editors are in receipt of a pamphlet entitled, "Found at last! Positive proof that 'Mormonism' is a fraud and the Book of Mormon a fable," by Reverend J. E. Mahaffey, of Batesburg, South Carolina. Two of the missionary force to whom we showed this pamphlet immediately took the address in their notebooks saying, "The more such stuff we can get the better it is for us." They had just read the following paragraph from page 5 of this work: "Just here a little sketch of the history and character of Joseph Smith may be in order. He was born at Sharon, Vermont. The date of his birth is not exactly known, but is supposed to be about the year 1798." Had the author carefully read even one good history of the church written by either side of the controversy, he might easily have found out the exact date of Joseph Smith's birth. His colossal ignorance and carelessness is dimly indicated by this one paragraph.

FACTS CONCERNING GRACELAND.

The figures used as a basis for the calculations following in this article are found in a bulletin issued by the Bureau of Education at Washington, District of Columbia, on "Universities, Colleges, and Technological Schools," being a "reprint from the Report of the Commissioner of Education for the year ended June 30, 1912."

The purpose of this article is to place before the people of the church a few facts concerning Graceland College in comparison with other institutions of like character in the United States, rather than to draw conclusions from the facts and figures here presented. Some of these figures speak so loudly for Graceland that certain conclusions are so obviously logical as to need no elucidation.

The first fact we present is this, Graceland College is more nearly a self-supporting school than the average college institution in the United States. In support of this statement we present the following comparison of receipts from student fees. In this comparison we have reckoned the receipts from student fees in percentages of total receipts.

Harvard University, average of tuition and other educational fees, about $180.

Colleges of Iowa, from $15 to $90.

Colleges of United States, from $5 to $250.

Graceland College, $30.

Of five hundred ninety-six college institutions in the United States, only forty-five, or a fraction over seven per cent, have a lower tuition fee than Graceland; and all but three of the forty-five receive either government aid or income from endowment funds, in many cases receiving from both sources. Graceland receives from neither.

Of the three colleges mentioned which receive no government aid nor income from endowment, two receive each forty-two per cent of total receipts from student fees, and the third twenty-four per cent, in comparison with Graceland's seventy-one per cent, the balance of total coming from private benefactions and other sources.

Now the question arises, How can it be that Graceland's student fees form so large a percentage of receipts while her tuition and other fees are so low? There are several reasons. First, Graceland receives so very little aid from other sources; second, the teaching force, many of them sacrificing for the good

I. RECEIPTS FROM STUDENT FEES.

University of California.....		7 per cent
Harvard University .....		22 per cent
Average for 25 Colleges of Iowa.....		20 per cent
Average for 596 Colleges of U. S.....		28 per cent
Graceland College .....		71 per cent

II. RECEIPTS FROM OTHER SOURCES.

University of California .....		93 per cent
Harvard University .....		78 per cent
Average for 25 Colleges of Iowa.....		80 per cent
Average for 596 Colleges of U. S.....		72 per cent
Graceland College .....		29 per cent

III. FIGURES UPON WHICH ABOVE TABLES ARE BASED.

Institutions	Student Fees	Other Sources	Total Receipts
University of California .....	$ 155,516	$ 2,121,886	$ 2,277,402
Harvard University .....	859,448	2,998,808	3,858,256
25 Colleges of Iowa .....	713,310	2,841,182	3,554,492
596 Colleges of United States .....	28,792,318	75,721,677	104,514,095
Graceland College .....	17,615	7,078	24,693

The second fact is that, in spite of Graceland's high percentage of receipts from student fees, very few colleges have a lower tuition fee than Graceland. Tuition fees are given as follows:

University of California, $20.

of college and church, receive much less than they could earn in other situations; third, necessity has compelled very economical management.

There is next the third fact that, if Graceland were to receive aid in the same ratio to student fees as other institutions do, Graceland should receive many times more aid from private benefactions than she does at present. The "receipts from other sources" [See table II] come chiefly from the three sources of government aid, endowments, and private benefactions. Graceland, being a church institution without endowment, receives aid from only the last mentioned source, private benefactions. From this source she received, during the year considered, $7,078. (See tables II and III.) Her student fees were $17,615. (See table III.)

This brings us to a mathematical proof of our third fact, that Graceland, receiving aid in the same ratio as other institutions, should receive much more than at present. Solve the following problems, the figures for which you will find in table III:

$$\begin{aligned} 155,516 & : 2,121,886 = 17,615 : X. \\ 859,448 & : 2,998,808 = 17,615 : X. \\ 713,310 & : 2,841,182 = 17,615 : X. \\ 28,792,318 & : 75,721,677 = 17,615 : X. \end{aligned}$$

The results we believe will show that receiving aid in the same ratio as:

University of California, Graceland should have received $240,264.

Harvard University, Graceland should have received $61,439.

The colleges of Iowa, Graceland should have received $70,162.

The average college of the United States, Graceland should have received $46,326.

These figures may be startling, but we have given our authority for the figures used as a basis; the rest is simply a matter of mathematical calculation.

Are the people of the church ready to wipe out the college debt this year by doing no more than is done for the average college of the United States every year?

What do you now think of Graceland's success in a financial way?

What do you now think of the opportunity Graceland offers to the young people of the church through her low tuition and other fees?

What do you now think the church should do for Graceland to put her on an equality with other colleges?

JUDGMENT.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.—Ecclesiastes 12: 13, 14.

In harmony with this statement made by "the preacher," we have one made by Christ himself wherein he says:

Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 28, 29.

Here we have statements by those who understood what they were saying. One tells us what God shall do with our works; the other what we shall receive for our works. How and where is all this to take place? In the first place, How is God going to bring every work into judgment? In Revelation 20: 12, 13, we read these words spoken by John while on the Isle of Patmos:

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

We see here that God is keeping books, or in other words, a record of our actions, our sayings. And if we cheat, steal from, or rob our brother or fellow man, no matter how small or how great the amount, whether done openly or in secret, it goes down on record against us. On the other hand, every good act that we do either openly or in secret, even to the giving of a cup of cold water, goes down in the books to our credit. This is how our works will be brought into judgment by or through the record kept of them.

As to where it is to take place, Paul tells us in 2 Corinthians 5: 10 that we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that everyone may receive the things done in the body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

We have found how and where the judgment is to take place. If we are prepared for it and have right on our side we need not fear this judgment. How are we to know when we are in the right? By fearing God and keeping his commandments. If we do this then we are doing our duty, even the whole duty of man.

I do not believe that this duty is comprised in complying with only the first principles of the gospel, but also in the keeping of every other commandment uttered by our Savior. He has said we should love our neighbors as ourselves; that we should love our enemies, doing good to those who hate us, thus showing to the world that we have the truth.

How are we going to do this? By our actions toward each other; by our daily walk and conversation with those with whom we come in contact from day to day, in the shops at work, or on the street, or at social gatherings. Whenever or wherever we have an opportunity to let our light shine we must do so and not hide it under a bushel or anything else. If we keep the commandments our actions of yesterday will not cause us to be afraid to speak to-day, should opportunity afford. If we live as God would have us live we will speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

By observing the commandments we will have a record of which we will not be ashamed when we appear before the judgment seat of Christ. And thus will we be able to meet with that innumerable host that have washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb, singing praises to God and the Lamb.

TENDENCIES TOWARD PAGANISM.

That the next decade will decide whether the civilization of America is to be pagan or Christian was the conclusion reached by Charles A. Ellwood, sociologist at Missouri University, in an address before the Men's Brotherhood of the First Presbyterian Church last night.

Throughout the fabric of present-day civilization Mr. Ellwood traced the taint of paganism. "The modern dance, modern dress, and other evidences of decadence among the wealthy are not in themselves deadly sins, but straws which show which way the wind blows," he said:

It is evidence not that all, but that a vast majority of the people of great wealth are regardless of any standard save that of their own convenience and enjoyment. As to the alienation of the laboring class from Christianity, it has been said by a labor leader that the American laboring man hates the very shadow of the spire of the church.

PREACHERS OF CLASS HATE.

The doctrine of class war which is preached is really the doctrine of class hate. They tell us it is the only thing which will lead us out of our trouble. I don't believe it. We never get anything from hate and war but hate and war. We are hardly certain when things may come to a bloody clash between capital and labor. I am not blaming the laboring classes for their attitude toward the church. The church has not existed for them. It has held aloof from them.

Now the educated classes. Are they pagan or Christian? In literature the most quoted poet of the day is Omar Khayyam, who is so bad that he is not even read in Mohammedan lands. His verse, however, expresses the spirit of our age. What is Walt Whitman but an absolute pagan in his doctrine of the glorification of the body and natural passions? Ibsen and Shaw and the whole modern decadent school regard the ideals of Christianity as the most worthless sort of rot.

CHRISTIANITY IN BUSINESS.

Two years ago a professor of philosophy in a neighboring state university wrote a book along these lines. Another professor has written a book in which he frankly upholds Greek ideals of religion rather than Christian. Of course, there is being wrought a change, but the people follow slowly. They are still following the nineteenth century philosophy. In religion and ethics I fear the nineteenth century sowed the wind and the twentieth will reap the whirlwind.

Turning to the Christian world, Mr. Ellwood brought forth a burst of applause when he began:

Under the guidance of a Christian President our business commerce is making a turn toward Christianity and the service of mankind. For fifty years we were bound by a capitalistic idea of no ideals but dividends and profits, no matter what the expense to humanity. I fear it will take the work of a hundred years to undo the work of that fifty.

The fault is not with the system. It all goes back to the lack of character in the individual, and that goes back to the lack of dominance of Christian ideals. We can no longer continue half pagan and half Christian. I say that as a scientific man. Society is at a parting of the ways. Either paganism will engulf Christianity or Christianity will stamp out paganism in the next decade.—Kansas City Times, January 23, 1914.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

"Two Kinds of Mother."

Two letters have recently come to the editor of this department. One incloses an article which tells first the story of a lonely child in an unheeding home, and afterwards that of a lonely, white-haired mother in that same home after the child had gone from it.

The second letter is from one of our missionaries in the field, and incloses a missive from his mother, written him on his birthday, a letter full of joy and gratitude because his life has been a response to the prayers and toil and care she expended upon him in his early years. This aged mother does not live alone, in a quiet house whose stillness reproaches her; she is surrounded by the innocent mirth, the activity of childhood and youth; her hands minister to the needs of her son's children; her heart is glad in the blessings that crown her days.

The First Letter.

PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS, March 6, 1914.

Dear Sister Salyards: In reading our HERALD, one of the first things I turn to is the Home Column; for I am the mother of five dear little children, and realize the need of education along the line of caring for them in the way that our heavenly Father requires, that we may meet his approval and feel that we are doing what he would have us do for those he has placed in our keeping.

I always find something of interest in the Column, and try to grasp that which will help me in my work. I have seen many helpful thoughts brought out for our reading from time to time, but have not felt that I could add anything that would be helpful to others. When I read the inclosed confession of a mother in a current publication, I thought it too good to let it pass without offering it to others for their reading, because we, as mothers, may sometime or somewhere neglect our dear children, not intentionally, of course, but because so much is expected of mothers in keeping the home as our friends expect us to keep it and as we like to have it. We must quickly decide which are the most essential or it will be too late, as the mother in the story relates.

30 BAY VIEW AVENUE.

SISTER ADDIE LELAND.

"A Mother's Confession."

Our space will not permit us to give in full the article offered by our sister; we will therefore give the gist of it.

The mother, making the purported confession, tells of a time when her little boy stood before her, the deep lines of perplexity furrowing his brow as he said, "Mother, please don't always tell me what not to do. Tell me what to do, and I will do it." She says this led her to discover that the child, as well as herself, had his problem in trying to understand what his mother wanted him to do.

On another occasion the mother had a bitter lesson and again her boy was the teacher. The lesson came to her in the lonely vigils of when she sat by his sick bed and heard the silence of the night broken by his delirious pleadings, "The kindling—the kindling! Please don't scold, mother; I'll make it for you right away. I forgot the kindling—forgot—forgot—the kindling—I forgot!" He was only six. He forgot at six!

God was good to the mother, and her boy lived. She says she was often annoyed by the trail of disorder he left wherever he went, by the mud on his shoes, and the scratches on the furniture. Now her rooms are always quiet, but they are not comforting rooms to her. She wishes she had laughed at the little joke he repeated to her one day when he told her his lesson at school had been about toys, noise, joys, and boys, and his teacher had said they all belonged together.

Once her boy had a little friend playing with him and invited him to stay for dinner, but she sent his invited guest home. Her boy had been full of the joy of hospitality and proud in the liberty he thought was his to invite a friend to dine with him. But she had not approved, and now she finds a great regret in the thought of what she lost that day.

The boy has been gone many years now. She never hears from him, but daily she watches when the postman comes, or when she is in the crowds of the street, or wherever she thinks she might perchance meet him. She sits by the window watching for him. She leaves the curtain up at night, that the light may stream out for him should he be coming home after dark.

This mother loved her child. As she sits alone now and thinks it all over she thinks the mistake she made was partly from the thought that because she loved him, because he was in her heart, that was all that really was necessary. She says, "I know now that unless you get into a boy's heart early the door of his heart closes, and you are left waiting on the outside."

Her little boy grew to be a big boy; he passed from childhood to manhood; the wrong influences of the world wove their meshes around him, and she was powerless to help him. All she knew was to disapprove. She attended dutifully to his material wants. She kept his clothes in order, cooked his food, made his bed, and waited for him to come home. For hours at night she lay awake waiting for the sound of his unsteady step and his uncertain hand at the door. Her son was going the drunkard's way and she did not know how to save him.

At last he went away, and she sits waiting. She feeds the hungry who come to her door, always scanning their faces for the lineaments of her boy. She says, "Had I understood the spirit of sympathy, had I understood childhood and unfolding youth, my boy need not have gone away. This is the message of my story. Many a mother mistakes her selfishness for love. No real love exists which does not feel the joy of self-sacrifice. This is the test. I failed in love."

The Missionary's Letter.

Dear Home Column: The missionary received the above-mentioned letter from his mother upon an occasion when he and his wife were away from home doing the Lord's work. He sends the letter to the Home Column, because of wholesome spirituality expressed in it, and also that the historical items may be recorded.

The mother of the missionary, grandmother of his children, had been left to care for the family of seven in the absence of their parents, and she wrote the following letter to her son upon the occasion of his fortieth birthday, not anticipating that it would be offered for publication.

G—————

March 12, 1914.

My Dear Son: Forty years ago to-night you first saw the light in a little upper room about a mile south of Johnsville, Montgomery County, Ohio, on Mr. Jesse Campbell's farm.

Mrs. Belle Campbell and a smart young German doctor were the only attendants besides your dear father, Amos T. ——. How supremely happy was I as with the fond love of a mother I bent my gaze on your luxuriant head of wavy hair.

I had prayed months before that you might be free from blemishes of body and mind. My prayers had been answered, and in two or three days, as you gazed about the room, listening to the ticking of the clock and being surprised and frightened when it would strike, the pretty German girl who worked for me would say, "God love it!"

We were happy parents, watching your development and enjoying your ever changing childish moods, when all too soon our little group (myself with you and the three little brothers who had come after you) were left without your father. Then deep sorrow surged over my soul and left its first imprint in your boyish heart. How I suffered mentally at that great grief, none but the One above unto whom I sought for comfort can know.

The years that ensued were filled with toil, privation, fear, hope, then assurance, and finally the blessed fruition of my fondest dreams when I saw you arrive at that age and condition when I no longer had fear that you would drift away from the church. How gratified I have been all these years as you have studied and advanced in knowledge and ability to impart the same to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of spiritual death!

To-night as I listen to the instrumental and vocal music in the home, the bubbling over of the innocent mirth of young womanhood, and the prattle of children, and see the eager gaze of your oldest son into the books of his school, I am again made to rejoice, and in hope look beyond to a reuniting of sundered happy ties.

Then, again, when I take a broader view of the providence of God, I see other ties formed through which I have learned so many grand gospel lessons, and through which relationship you got your dear companion who now stands at your side in your ministerial labors with her gift to sing the gospel story into the inner consciousness, thus preparing a people to be gathered into the great garner of God.

To-day I have read Brother John Rushton's masterpiece in Autumn Leaves, "Life; its responsibility and glory." I have read and reread it. I thank God for such a mind and such a brotherhood in this church. I have labored and prayed that my posterity also may be able to serve God acceptably, and in this my joy abounds.

How happy we would have been to have had you home on your birthday; but I trust you are laboring and building for eternity, and thus all is well. And I pray that the fruit of your labor may remain and grow to a fitness for the Master's use. May God bless you and your companion and those among whom you labor from time to time, until you shall see the Savior coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, with all his holy angels.

The two children who were ill are better, and will soon be back to school, but not until the cold snap is over. Did I tell you what little L—— said? He said, "Grandma, when I have done anything that is bad, I cry after I go to bed at night." I then take him on my lap and make him as happy as I can.

You must both of you cease to worry about the children, for all things will come out all right when we are doing our best, and we don't want to have to worry about your being worried. I went the rounds among the children who were ill about two o'clock at night and gave them sweet oil. There should be an elder residing here continually. You must send us a bottle of blessed oil.

I have such a good letter from Sister Sanders. How pleasant and helpful is communion with Saints! She is pleased for your wife's sake that she can leave the care of the family for a while and be with you in the great vineyard of the Lord.

All are retiring now, so I will bid you a fond good-night.

YOUR MOTHER.

Now, I, the missionary, submit the above, which, despite the fact that it is a personal letter, is, nevertheless, fraught with human interest, with this observation: What, indeed, should be the manner of life of sons and daughters who have such mothers, so solicitous for the very best welfare of their children?

May God help us all to be a blessing to the mothers who through loving service and holy ministrations have first blessed us.

A SON.

The Baby's Eyes.

Reference to the newborn baby in the mother's letter to her son gives us opportunity to introduce here an item which appeared in a daily paper of recent issue. It is to this effect: The State Board of Health of Wisconsin, on the eighteenth day of the present month, sent out three thousand packages of nitrate of silver to the physicians of the State. This is done under a law passed by the last legislature which specifies that the eyes of children at birth must be washed with nitrate of silver to prevent blindness. A recent investigation at the school for the blind at Janesville showed that at least twenty-five per cent of the children there would not be blind, had they been properly treated in infancy.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN APRIL.

Parents' Day.—Pray for our families and for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred. Pray that we may all have greater growth in spirituality; that the homes of the Saints may be model Christian homes. Prayers for the sick.

Lesson, Exodus 22: 22-24. Memory verse, James 1: 27. Memory verse for the sick, Zephaniah 3: 12.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sister Elsie Stewart, of Dunlap, Iowa, requests prayer for her little daughter Helen, who has tuberculosis; her little son Dean, who is afflicted, and for her husband, that he may be persuaded to come into the church.

Put your arms around me—
There, like that;
I want a little petting
At life's setting,
For 'tis harder to be brave
When feeble age comes creeping
And finds me weeping,
Dear ones gone.
Just a little petting
At life's setting;
For I'm old, alone and tired,
And my long life's work is done
—Elizabeth Porter Gould.

TRYON, NEBRASKA, February 20, 1914.

Editors Herald: After the discussion held by Zenor and Etzenhouser, Etzenhouser returned again to Tryon. If the general verdict was that the Mormons had done an unwise thing, we believe Zenor has done worse; he, like the silver-smith, thought his craft was in danger, and wanted to lock the house where the debate was held against Etzenhouser. By so doing his best members disagreed with him, and as a result Brother Etzenhouser got the house. The general verdict now by nonmembers of any church is decidedly to the discredit of Zenor.

It might do to close a house against a man in the East, but it will not do in the West. People do not even lock their dwelling houses here. We have come home several times late at night and found some one in bed after they have eaten their supper. This is a free country. We as well as many others have fed hundreds without price.

When the Tryon church was to be built those soliciting said the house would be open to all Christian denominations, so we all contributed toward the building. I am grateful that our sandhill people have the backbone to stick to their agreements. We have nothing to fear. The Lord is able to deliver the honest in heart out of darkness into the marvelous light of his dear Son.

Ever hopeful of the triumph of Zion, I remain,

WILLIAM F. GODFREY.

4 ENERGLYN CRESCENT, PENRYHOEL CAERPHILLY,

GLAMORGANSHIRE, WALES, February 20, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have felt cheered from time to time with good news from different parts of the world's harvest field. I rejoice at the success of the Scranton Branch, as I have many dear friends there.

I do not enjoy spreading my troubles abroad in the church papers, as it is common ground that there is trouble of some kind in every branch, district, or mission at some stage or other in its development. There is a skeleton in every closet. It is good news that cheers, and the experience of trial that causes us to grow, if we succeed as well as we ought in our personal endeavors.

What I wish to say is that there are conditions through which we pass in which we ought to use our judgment rather than hastily pass our observations and feelings concerning same into print. There are some personal trials told that inspire and help a struggling child of God on to victory; some are comforted because another has a similar trial or series of trials, hence a fellow feeling is kindled.

I am glad to say that I enjoyed two visits to the Gloucester Branch recently. By request I baptized three young men, not altogether the products of my labors, but the result of the united labors of God and his people. There is that condition of spiritual life at Gloucester which draws those who attend the services into the gospel net. The officers, the two Brethren Trapp, Brethren Mackay, Harris, and Miles, are united and are truly laboring together with God.

I may say that when we lived at Gloucester and at my last visit I felt by the Spirit that there are souls to be gathered in that region between Gloucester and Birmingham. There have been some wonderful prophecies delivered in that branch, to the effect that God was preparing a people there who would readily receive the message.

Two young men were coming out of an atheist meeting. One said, "We'll give up the whole thing (religion)." "No," the other said, "let's go on, on our own." But Brother Meadows met them the same night and bore testimony of the work, and the one was baptized; the other and his wife are on the road, already satisfied that we have the power of God with us.

Brethren and sisters, it is this drawing power of God that we need. There are so many changing scenes in the history of man. One period has taught cruelty, sword, Devil, and all the horrible pictures of hell and devils as a religious theme.

One extreme is very often accountable for the other. Now it is taught as the Book of Mormon said it would be: There is no devil. There is no hell, and such like. Atheism is declining; agnosticism, that affirms nothing, but the business of which is to deny and cast doubt upon almost every phase of religious life and teaching, is very much alive. It afflicts even those of the church at times. The battle is ever much the same; that sin of unbelief is always anxious to run alongside of our belief and faith.

I trust that things will so work that the good cause in Wales shall be placed upon a firm basis for growth from an organization point of view.

As ever your brother in the one faith,

THOMAS JONES.

Editors Herald: I wish to know if there are any Saints besides Mrs. Nancy and Mr. E. D. Thorp living in Dodge City, Kansas; if so, we would be glad to hear from them, as we wish to have the district tent brought to open up the work here if possible. Yours in gospel bonds, BAZINE, KANSAS, February 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: We have just had a stirring series of sermons here from Brother Alvin Knisley, which have affected the community above what it has experienced for years. An impression has been made which ought to result in good as the time goes on, sooner or later. It is evident that some eyes have been opened and some have pulled up orthodox stakes, whatever the actual outcome.

The Congregational people occupy by purchase the church which they bought from us some time ago when we sold in order to build in Alexander, a few miles east. By consent of their pastor, Brother Knisley held forth in their chapel—for a while! Yes, but “for a while,” for when they found that the strong discourses were influential of much agitation, they banded together and shut the brother out.

Fortunately, a fair-play man with an empty store building near, came to our rescue by offering his building, which was accepted. Furniture being supplied by others, including a stove by our only physician, who has generally been in attendance, the series was resumed. Attendance was increasing in the church to the last, and the seating capacity of our improvised hall was utilized at last meeting.

Some, unable to endure the thought of seeing their children swayed from their old parental moorings, have started a petition to run Brother Knisley out of town—so is the report. Very opportunely our brother says he never is able to do much good till he “gets the Devil raised and old Beelzebub gets his pitch hot.” So goes the battle.

Awaiting the redemption of Zion, I am,

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, February 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: Wife and I have just returned from a visit to Pacific Grove and Monterey. We were the guests of Elder H. L. Holt and wife while there. It is certainly a most beautiful place. The bay is grand to look upon, and is deep enough for any vessel.

The towns, Old Monterey, New Monterey, and Pacific Grove, are one, all located on the bay. The hills come very near to the water, and are covered with oak and pine trees, which make a beautiful background for the town. There are about fourteen Saints living there who are doing all they can to keep the campfire blazing. They have been greatly handicapped in not having a place to meet except in private houses, which was not very successful. Arrangements are being made to secure a lot with a small building on it, that can be fixed up for a meeting place. This place is centrally located, on the car line. The Macedonian cry has gone forth, Come over and help us. Should there be any of the Saints who could go there and locate I believe the Lord would bless them.

Brother Holt has been preaching in the First Baptist Church evenings for several months, while their minister is away. We had the pleasure of hearing him two evenings, and he preached the true latter-day gospel, and all seemed to enjoy it. Brother Holt had good liberty in telling the glad story. I believe there is a work to be done there. We expect to spend the summer there and help all we can by our presence, if in no other way. We truly hope and pray that others may heed the call and come over and help.

Yours for truth,

H. W. PATTERSON.

Editors Herald: Will members of the church who were reared in the Catholic Church please write me and tell me how they heard and when they obeyed the angel's message. Also please give me a record of membership in the Catholic Church. I have been challenged to prove that any Catholic ever left the Catholic Church and became a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I have two letters from two brethren who say they were reared in the Roman Catholic Church. The woman challenging says the brothers lie, and can not show that they ever were members of the Catholic Church.

Yours for the onward progress of the gospel,

SADIE BURCH.

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA, February 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: This is the last day of the conference year, and it has occurred to my mind that your many readers might enjoy reading about what one of the missionaries has done, and what he may think of present conditions, and of what the future portends.

Because of my physical condition, and by the consent and advice of those in authority, my labor has been almost exclusively confined to the branches, more so than at any time during my entire missionary life. In preaching the word, the Lord has graciously blessed me; his Spirit has enlightened my mind; and if at any time he has withheld it, there have been so many times that it has been so graciously bestowed that the disappointment has been soon forgotten.

I have baptized four, the fruit of branch, Sunday school, and home labor. If others have baptized where the writer has labored, let the credit and praise be to him who is always a present help to the missionary. Without his help we labor in vain.

In my visits in the homes of the Saints many opportunities have come to me to give instruction privately with regard to things of special interest to the Saints. It has been my good fortune to attend two district conferences and one reunion.

The spirit of indifference to things religious exists in the world. I discover no change over what I have found in Nebraska, South Dakota, and Iowa, where I have traveled for the past nine years. If there are other communities where the people flock "like doves to their windows," the missionaries are very fortunate, and they ought to stick to such places. The Saints, some of them, partake of the same spirit. A new preacher, a prominent official, or a conference or reunion will bring increased numbers; the steady, faithful, plodding ones that are always found at the post of duty are few compared with the whole number. The prayer meetings, the barometer of the spirituality of the branch, usually are found near zero.

No greater need presses upon the church to-day than the care of the branches. The need of competent and faithful officers, to feed and nourish the sheep and lambs of the fold. Losses are continuous. We lose many of the young by marriage outside the faith, though sometimes in the church; by isolation from branches, and by ambitions in business and home seeking. I do not mean that these deny faith in the angel message, or that they become dishonest and immoral; the loss is great to the church because of their absence from the local meetings, the lack of their help in Sunday school and Religio work, and a failure on their part to help the church financially; and besides all this the loss of many of their children.

There are some gains through missionary work, where opportunity opens up new places, but the losses are often more than the gains. All homes and communities are not open to welcome the missionary in his official capacity as an ambassador for Christ; as a citizen and friend he will find a welcome, but not otherwise.

If it were the Lord's plan to build up his work in that way he would have said, Scatter to the regions round about; but this not being so, he said, Gather to the regions round about. I know of one community where a church was built at a cost of one thousand dollars. In less than two years it was closed, so far as having regular service is concerned, because most of the people had moved away.

When I entered the church, thirty-six years ago, a great deal of missionary work was done by local ministers. The young men had their first experience in this way. It was quite common at the district conferences to appoint missionaries. Sometimes a young man would spend the winter months in missionary work. I do not know why things have changed, neither do I desire to attach blame to anyone. We have just as good and honorable young men now as then, and some are rendering a faithful service. Much work was done then by the local men in the community near to where they lived. Some of the branches now have a surplus of elders who have the talent and knowledge of the gospel to do successful local work.

The question is sometimes asked, and it may be a proper one, Does the meager supply of the missionaries' families and the uneven struggle to properly care for their children in educational and other matters deter some of our young men from entering the ministry? The law of God teaches equality. We have not yet reached an agreement in theory; in practice, we have not yet touched the border line. The missionaries' families in many instances are called upon to bear an unequal share of the burden in the spread of the gospel, not because it is necessary, but because some are selfish and we have not yet attained to that higher standard of spiritual excellence that God demands of us. One cent a week from twenty-five thousand members would care for twenty-five families, and give each five hundred dollars per year as an allowance.

Another question that is sometimes asked is, Where are the sons of some men who were once famous missionaries in the church? Write a list of the missionaries whose names were household words thirty years ago, and then write the names of some of their sons and see if you will not find many of them in the world of business, in which they have the confidence and good will of their fellow citizens.

The spirit of gathering is in the minds of the Saints. It must be a proper and lawful condition, for the Lord recognizes it, as found expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 128: 1. It would be just as easy to hold back the tides of the ocean with a hay fork as to crush out the desire for gathering. We can not stop it; we can guide, control and direct it into proper channels. To fail to do this means numerical, financial, and spiritual loss to the church. Whenever the question is brought to my attention I seek and follow the letter and spirit of the instructions as given in the law, as interpreted by the bishopric. I dare not do otherwise and be true to my calling as a representative of the church. My own wisdom can not be substituted for the law, however exacting that law may be. The conditions as portrayed in what follows will in some measure suggest why this desire to gather exists.

Several families that I have visited tell in substance this story: We are more than eight miles from our branch. Sometimes the weather is so bad that we can not attend the meetings. We have several children, getting to be young men and women. The community has many beer and whisky drinkers, Sabbath breakers, and pleasure-lovers. A wedding or a birth is celebrated with a bacchanalian carouse. If we exchange help, which can not be avoided in a farming community, the beer keg and whisky jug are ever present. If our daughters call on their young lady friends, they are subjected to the same temptation.

The saloon is being banished from many towns, only to be transferred to the country places, so far as the drinking goes, the liquor going directly to the country from the brewery and distillery, to be consumed in the homes and at public gatherings. Saints who love their children are anxious to get away from such conditions and go where communities of Saints are being built up, where all such wickedness can be finally banished.

In one village, where a branch has existed for forty years, a very few Saints are left. The young have gone to try the battle of life in the wide world. The little church stands idle—the bell tolls if a missionary comes in. Perhaps six or eight Saints will come, feeble with age; their eyes are dim, and they carry lanterns to find their way. Their love for the gospel has not waned. Their neighbors respect and honor them as good citizens, but nothing can induce them to attend the Saints' church. They may go sometimes, not because they love our religion, but to pay the last act of respect to good neighbors, laying them under the sod to await the resurrection morn. Those Saints say, We would like to spend our last days among the Saints, where we could hear the old, old gospel story, enjoy prayer meetings, and have our hearts made glad in joining in the sweet songs of Zion. Such Saints are not moved, as are some others, by the spirit of unrest that characterizes the world that moves to and fro on land and sea every moment of the day and night, seeking they know not what.

Perhaps the reader thinks that I am a pessimist. Not so. I am an optimist of the truest blue. I see more to encourage than to discourage. There is more sunshine than storm. There is a small army of true and faithful men and women. There is growing up in the church a loyal band of young men and women whose help we can count on. The Lord is at the helm, and he will guide the old gospel ship into the harbor, even should some fall overboard and be lost in the follies and vanities of the world. When we have advanced to that degree of spirituality and righteousness that God can and will bestow upon the church an endowment such as was received on the day of Pentecost and in the Kirtland Temple, our hearts will be made glad, and we will rejoice because of the many precious souls that have been won to service of Christ. It is coming; God's promises never fail, and if we are found faithfully in our places, at the post of duty, our hearts will be made glad and we will rejoice in God's service.

Yours hopefully,

EDWARD RANNIE.

Lamoni Stake.

We have made very satisfactory arrangements for services here in the I. O. O. F. Hall for Saturday night and Sunday. The dailies have all given us space for a notice. The Plain Dealer contains a brief explanation of our position as a church historically. In conversation with the editor, Bertha J. Bower, I was much impressed with her fairness and independence. The editors of the other dailies treated us with great respect.

From this place I leave the Lamoni Stake for my home, to prepare work for the Council of the Presidents of Seventy and the First Seventy, some correspondence relating to which now awaits my return home.

The year has not been so strenuous as the years immediately preceding, but the many friends made indicate that my humble labor has been acceptable. Much of the Spirit has been with me in all my labor, though results have not been all I had wished: I am satisfied with the approval of God in that I have done what I could in sowing the seed. Places where there was apparently no interest are evidencing a greater demand for the gospel ministry.

Since the holidays I have labored at Tingley, Evergreen Branch, and this place, and the results have been all that a seed sower could have wished by way of spiritual assistance, the kindness of all, and material help rendered. The points of labor at which there was shown the greatest interest were in the neighborhood of Brother C. C. Hawkins and at Tingley. Brother Hawkins is in the country west of Lucas, Iowa. There is a demand for tent work in several places, where we have been permitted to do but little for the reason that suitable places could not be obtained in which to preach, unless at too great an expense.

In nearly every place where I have labored the Saints have recognized that this was a year that the church was under special instruction to sacrifice in the interests of paying the church debt, and I have occupied every opportunity to urge God's children to sacrifice conveniences for the one thing necessary to be in obedience to the will of heaven, which is, "Owe no man anything but to love one another." With but very few exceptions there has been heed paid to this advice, and an effort made to pay individual debts, and to honor God further in paying the church debt, and spirituality like a healing balm has followed such efforts.

The one thing most noticeable as the cause of delinquency among the Saints has been a rebellious disposition shown to those who are designated in the church as "watchmen," and yet there is improvement along this line. Watchmen in several places have been discouraged to some extent by not having the support of those whose efforts were sacrificially given for their welfare. This was the case, however, with our Elder Brother, who endured the contradiction of sinners against themselves. The servant is no better than the Master. God help his servants to endure patiently this opposition, and yet obey the instructions of the Lord by seeing that the law is kept, for this is the only way to build up the church,—the only constructive method. To be swift in purging out iniquity as in Book of Mormon history sometimes is the only safety to the church.

The work of the Publicity Bureau is noticeable in several places. This work was not appreciated when presented to the last General Conference, but when presented this year will meet with hearty approval, I am persuaded.

I am more and more convinced of the meaning and importance of what the Lord commanded the early ministry of this church to do when he said, "Preach nothing but repentance to this generation"; and I can see the necessity of it in the church and out of the church. None are to be baptized except those who show that they have received the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins; and while this may not secure the quantity, yet it does secure the quality of those who may form a part of the church for which Christ gave himself, being "sanctified and cleansed by the washing of water by the word." (Ephesians 5: 25, 26.) Unless the pure love of God dwells in the heart so that we will show love to those we consider our enemies, providing they will let us, we are not the children of our Father in heaven; and if we salute only those who salute us we do no more than a sinner, no matter how demonstrative that salutation may be. This I have tried to impress upon all, and I am grateful that I have some fruitage from such labor, and have been given grace to keep myself in harmony therewith, and thus I hope to do till the victory is won.

I enjoyed being present at the stake conference and conventions just preceding, and rejoiced in seeing the good Spirit prevail in all the business done. The sermon of Sunday morning portends good for the work if its instructions are heeded by those who heard it.

May grace and peace be multiplied to God's people.

In Christ,

CRESTON, IOWA, March 5, 1914.

Fremont District.

The hand on the dial of time indicates the near approaching end of another General Conference year, and invites us to contemplate not only recent experiences and labor, but to seriously consider the labors of the soon coming conference season.

What are the issues to be met? What developments are at hand? How well are we prepared to perform that labor, meet the issues, and deal with those developments? Shall they be pleasant, profitable, and uplifting to the great cause we love; progressive for the kingdom, and its ministry and membership? Shall the results be divinely helpful, morally and spiritually, to all Saints? Are we all approaching more nearly the Christ ideal in daily life, and gospel duty? Do the glories of the kingdom of heaven, or the glittering bubbles of this age influence us the stronger in our daily life? Which? To these we must answer to the Ruler of the kingdom sooner or later.

Are we keeping pace with the onward march of events in the divine economy? Do these considerations appeal to us all personally and powerfully? We are all interlaced in and with the conditions here referred to? We can not separate ourselves from them. These two classes of conditions—righteousness, kingdom of heaven, and unrighteousness, the world and its evils—and the results, good or evil, extend into the ages to come. No escape! Tell us, Saints, what you think.

But I did not nor do I intend to tender an offering on homiletics here, that will come later by our "competents." I only intend to speak of the recent past as it relates to my personal doings and relations therewith.

After attending the conference at Thurman, (old Plum Hollow) October 17, 18, and 19, I was with Tabor Branch, about eight miles to the north, in Fremont County, Iowa, for a time. I was blessed with good liberty while endeavoring to sow the seed of the kingdom of God.

After my effort there, thinking a series of meetings would be profitable at Thurman, I went there, but found that old, familiar "everybody busy," husking corn. Notwithstanding the famine, the people were as busy and the work as much in the way of holding meetings as a Michigan harvest before self-binders came in fashion. But the Saints there, as elsewhere, are attentive to their weekly and midweekly services. Have not held that series of meetings there yet, but hope to some time.

A brief visit to Bartlett, preaching twice, and to Glenwood, the county seat of Mills County, with two sermons, and we, by the influence of circumstances, pulled up at Tabor again. We on our part tried to make our service to the Master the dominant factor while there. We were doubly blessed while there in November. The good Spirit was with us; the Saints seemed edified, others instructed, and on leaving we took with us a needed new suit of clothes provided by the liberality of the Saints of the district. This charity of the Saints found me locked in a velvet lined box regarding the matter until they were prepared to reveal the news to me. It was a complete surprise! Sister Mary Dunsdon-Watkins was the mover forward in that work. I trust our Father will bless the Saints and friends for all their kindnesses and for the sustaining of his servants and work.

Brother Moses Gaylord, president of the Tabor Branch, and Brother Samuel Clark, aiding in church and Sunday school work, are at hand to look to their charge. Brother George Kemp, now past eighty-one years of age, helps in the work as able. He is alive to the work. The work is quite well kept up at Thurman by Brethren Charles Roberts, J. E. Claiborn, J. C. Moore, Madison Leeka, C. W. Forney, and others. Brother Forney is also bishop's agent.

Brethren Nathan L. Mortimore, Frank Becksted, and James Claiborn, our hero of Civil War battles, look after the interests of the cause in Hamburg, and Elder G. Earl Pratt, J. F. Redfield, and Teacher Greenway, stand defensive of the good work at Shenandoah. Brother F. B. Knight, though growing older, is taking oversight of the Glenwood Branch. Brother George M. Steele, and Brother Walling may be able to aid him at no distant day. I look for better days for Glenwood, if it can be looked after soon by those in charge. Henderson Branch continues, with Brother T. A. Hougas, district president, standing sentinel there.

I understand the district has taken measures to supply the popular ministry with the tract, An Open Letter to the Clergy. In this the members of the district are doing a good work. I think, from what I can learn in the limited field I occupy, that the women's clubs have undertaken a heavier "job" than they are able to handle in attempting to remove from the world all they are pleased to call Mormons. The textbook they chose to use is being found to be not altogether reliable, and is not true to records it seeks to show to be false.

The conference held at Hamburg, March 7 and 8, was quite well attended. Branch and ministerial reports were of an encouraging character, and the Saints enjoyed the association. District President T. A. Hougas gave a very encouraging outlook to the work, and seems energetic and hopeful. Brother and Sister James Comstock, with their helpers, are trying to keep the campfire aglow at Riverton. Brother John Huston takes charge of the work in both branch and Sunday school at Bartlett. Brother W. E. Haden was transferred to the Pottawattamie District after the New Year, and we were left the lone missionary in the Fremont District.

Fremont District has had its trials by Saints removing to other parts, and by deaths, but true, faithful Saints will, by divine aid, win out. Let them not be discouraged.

I have been greatly blessed during the conference year in my humble efforts to sow the seed of the kingdom. Twice have I been encouraged by the Spirit through others to faithfully sow the seed of the kingdom and await results.

With faith in God and his cause unmoved, and with hope for its onward progress in the future, I subscribe myself,

Your brother and collaborer,

COLUMBUS SCOTT.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 16, 1914.

Southern Indiana.

Wife and I recently returned from a visit to the lower counties of the Southern Indiana District. Since I labored there several years ago a great change has come over the people. They are not as much interested in religion as they used to be. It is harder to get a large crowd in a variety of places than formerly. In relation to our faith, there is less toleration but more investigation. In a word, a sharper line is drawn between those who are favorable to the work and those who are opposed to it. A number have been baptized of recent years, and there is prospect of others. All of this arouses sectarian jealousy, which proves, of course, the cause is marching onward.

We have just come from Paris, Illinois, where we visited relatives and where I preached several sermons. My nephew, Jacob Williamson, secured the use of the First Baptist Church, where I delivered two sermons, and arranged to give two illustrated lectures. Some of the members complained, however, and the minister declared the lectures off. He, too, claims to have consulted the records, and to have learned some things unfavorable to our position.

I changed my meetings to private houses. We had some interesting services, and several gave their names for baptism. I also spoke twice in a large broom factory. In one of these addresses I made plain the distinction between us and the Brighamites. About three hundred hands work there, so I am convinced these speeches did much good. I will visit that place again before General Conference.

I am now engaged in a series of meetings here. We have been peculiarly successful in securing outside attendance. It is the best we ever had here, and the Saints are feeling encouraged. The series, consisting of twenty sermons, is now drawing to a close. I prolonged the effort at the request of the Saints. I have delivered two lantern lectures. These drew larger crowds than the other services, and helped greatly in keeping up attendance and interest.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

It must be so, Plato; thou reasonest well!
Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality?
Or whence this secret dread, this inward horror
Of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul
Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.
Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!—Cato.

Independence, Missouri.

These are busy days at the center place, with spring breezes, and the bright plumage of red birds, and the sweet songs of returning robins to cheer us onward. The dining hall has been set in order for the General Conference, a commodious room for the Sunday school during the conference has been provided, and much needed brick work connected with the main building has been done.

On Sunday morning, March 8, there were forty present at the early prayer meeting, and on the 15th there was over ninety. On the 15th at Sunday school there were nine hundred and forty-seven; the Sunday before there were one thousand and thirteen present, with a corps of forty officers, one hundred and five teachers, ninety visitors, and with eighty-three in the Beginner Department. A new and interesting feature of the Junior Department is a juvenile orchestra, consisting of over twelve members.

Besides inspiring and instructive preaching meetings, there have been held the interesting gatherings of good literature committee, united church choirs, Sunday school business session, elders' quorum, and those interested in church improvements.

The stake convention and conference convened on Friday and Saturday, the 13th and 14th, at Holden. Then there have been the meetings of the parents at the Columbian School with Sister Yingling president, and of the Sanitarium Patronesses, in charge of Sister E. L. Kelley. The Woman's Auxiliary held an interesting meeting March 15. Blessings and baptisms have been attended to, and expressions of joy and gratitude have been heard at the prayer meetings because of the general spiritual awakening; and March 15 these words came from a brother in the pulpit: "There is no joy, no satisfaction so great as when faithful service is rendered in this work."

Saint Louis, Missouri.

The first two weeks of February will not be forgotten soon, as we were indeed instructed, strengthened, and built up by the excellent expounding of the beautiful truths contained in the word of God by Brethren J. W. Rushton and Heman C. Smith. It might be pleasing to them to know that thoughts gleaned from their discourses are still topics of conversation. We would that we had the power of expressing all that we felt, and that their discourses could have been reported. Suffice it to say, we are rejoicing more in this great work, in the gift of a Savior who if obeyed will cause us to attain the perfect life and bring man back where he will have the dominion he was intended to have. We trust in the next fifty years we will make greater progress than in the past, though we are glad for the blessings we have received. Two baptisms were performed during the services.

The local branch officers, Sunday school and Religio are all working for the advancement of the cause. Owing to district conference convening in Saint Charles, Missouri, March 14 and 15, no church services except Sunday school will be held at the Saint Louis Branch on the 15th.

Your sister in Christ,

Central Chicago, Illinois.

On Wednesday evening at the regular prayer service the Spirit was present and was manifested in many of the prayers and testimonies. Much spiritual food is derived at such meetings. It will be necessary for the prayer meeting to be conducted in the large auditorium, as the usual place of meeting is much too small to accommodate the large number that attended, where only a couple of years ago six or seven chairs would suffice. Sunday, March 15, the meeting most enjoyed by the young people was the morning prayer service.

The Central Chicago Branch extends an invitation to any missionary passing through Chicago to or from conference to occupy in our pulpit. With the Spirit always enjoyed, we remain,

In gospel bonds,

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Utah District; Greeting: We address this epistle unto you because we desire to cooperate with you, and have you cooperate with us in the forward movement of the gospel of peace in this part of the world. Your hearty and undivided support is solicited, and we trust you will arise to the duty and responsibility placed upon you as Saints, when you entered the waters of baptism, and made a covenant with God to serve him according to the grace given unto you.

Christ is our truest friend, and as such we should confide in him; we should be willing to trust him in all things, and when dark clouds arise, or our pathway becomes uncertain, as a child goes to its mother for comfort, so we also should go to him, and in the earnestness of our souls entreat him for light divine, that thereby we might become like him a glory to God and a blessing to humanity. It is indeed a precious privilege we have extended to us in the gospel, to become coworkers with God; first in the correcting of our own lives; and then in teaching others the way of truth.

It was the Master of men who said: "The truth shall make you free." This can only be done by acquiring truth; growing into truth; making truth a part of our being so that in reality we are the very truth itself; in this way we shall find freedom, peace, joy, satisfaction, and wisdom. Freedom consists in our living the truth; for when we have overcome that which is evil and false, there is nothing to fear, for: "Perfect love casteth out all fear." And when fear is removed, peace abounds; and where peace reigns there also freedom abides. When we have therefore grown into a pure, sweet, gentle, and loving disposition and character, it can be truly said that we are free; but freedom can never come to us until we have completely overcome and conquered self and our selfish propensities.

The most enjoyable thing in life is to partake of the Christ nature, to be and do the things that are found in him; and to feel the peace and good will that abides ever with him. The truest happiness we can have is in making others happy. In loving others we become lovable.

Wherever you may be, then, isolated or with branch affiliation, your help is of equal importance. Remember it is life that counts, and if our lives reflect Christ, then will the cause we have espoused become honorable, and that life will silently preach sermons that will win for Christ all with whom we come in contact.

The cause of truth is not advanced by a mere strife of words; nay verily, it is often hindered by such; but when our lives manifest the essence and character of the Divine Man, then and then only can we claim a true victory for our church. We are confident that you all will love the truth, and therefore feel assured that you will blend your best efforts with ours in the uplift of those around us. May each one find and sense the truth of the Master's words: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." And thus realizing, let us give the very best we have for the good of the work and the success of the church, that all may have the pleasure and comfort of being helpers in the great cause of regenerating and perfecting the race.

Let us live then as becometh Saints. And since the gospel of Christ will not admit of intolerance and persecution, we should be of all mankind the most tolerant; our words should be the words of life, made effectual by reason of our saintly conduct and example. Let us, then, hold aloft the banner of righteousness and peace, and dwell continually with God in pure thought and noble purpose.

Very truly yours,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

SALT LAKE CITY, 336 South Fourth East Street.

Quorum Notices.

TEACHERS' QUORUMS.

We wish to thank the officers of the First, Seventh, Eighth, and Nineteenth teachers' quorums for the interest shown toward the Kirtland (Twelfth) Quorum in its efforts to develop cooperation and greater efficiency in officer and priesthood. We wish to state that we are ready to offer practical help along the lines of a correspondence course to any teacher willing to pay postage for same. We hope the executive officers of other teachers' quorums will get in touch with us, and if our work appeals to you that you will share up proportionately the expense we are under and avail yourselves of our facilities.

This quarter we send out a test blank, modeled after application forms to West Point, leading universities, and commercial institutions. This is a self help, "Man, know thyself!" paper, to be followed by a test "case," to ascertain how it would be handled.

We shall welcome suggestions and conform our plans to the best ideas from contemporary quorum officers who desire to work with us toward greater development. Address, E. A. Webbe, secretary Kirtland Quorum of Teachers, 944 East One Hundred and Forty-sixth Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

Notice to Kirtland Elders.

Branch presidents of the Kirtland District should remember that April 1 is the time to send quarterly report. All elders in the district not holding office in the branches please send your report direct to me. Richard Baldwin, president, 98 Oakland Avenue, Sharon, Pennsylvania.

To Correct False Report.

To the General Public and All Whom It May Concern: About March 12 there appeared in the several daily papers of the country the report of a Mormon elder shooting an officer of the city of Seattle, and that the said elder was the pastor of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints in Seattle, Washington. The facts are that the said R. F. Butterworth is not an officer in said church, but is an irresponsible character. Three years ago he served a term in the hospital for the insane at Steilacoom, Washington. I am personally acquainted with the man, and am sure that he is not responsible for his acts. In justice to us as a church we wish the above facts known.

THE RICH MAN, THE POOR MAN, AND JESUS.

(Sermon by Elder Elbert A. Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, November, 6, 1913. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

JESUS RECEIVES THE RICH YOUNG MAN.

I will read a part of the 10th chapter of Saint Mark.

And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God. Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and mother. And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth. Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions. And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God! It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who then can be saved? And Jesus looking upon them saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible.

JESUS RECEIVES BLIND BARTIMÆUS.

And they came to Jericho; and as he went out of Jericho with his disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimæus, the son of Timæus, sat by the highway-side begging. And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me. And many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou son of David, have mercy on me. And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee. And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus. And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord, that I might receive my sight. And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

If we need a text it will be found in Acts 10: 34, 35, where Peter says, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."

THREE POTENTIAL FIGURES.

If I were a sculptor and wanted to perpetuate in marble a group representing the three most potential figures of all time, I believe I would carve a group representing the rich man, the poor man, and between them Jesus of Nazareth with a message for both, and pleading for their reconciliation to each other and to God.

What is the attitude of Jesus toward labor and capital; towards rich and poor? We are living in a period of the world's history when we are just entering in upon a great class struggle. There is a feeling of unrest, a feeling of hatred and animosity that is growing up in the hearts of the classes, the rich and the poor against each other. And the indications are that the struggle will be very severe and costly and bloody in course of time.

Josiah Strong, of New York City, a well-known writer on the subject of sociology says, "There are things being said and done to-day that closely resemble things that were said and done just before the great and terrible French Revolution." You know that in those times the classes were divided against each other. While the poor nursed their grievances and became more bitter and violent, the rich continued their course of profligacy, extravagance, and general debauchery. Their motto was, "After us the deluge."

It is said that the queen of France, when she heard the people complaining, said to one of her courtiers, "What is the trouble?"

He replied, "The people complain because they have no bread."

And she said, "Then why don't they eat cake?"

Her ignorant heartlessness is only matched by the criminal stupidity of certain privileged ones in the United States to-day.

THE CREED OF VIOLENCE.

What are these indications that are so startling in their nature? There is growing up in the midst of labor a spirit of violence, and violence is openly practiced and advocated. Labor seeks for expression through various channels, in the Socialist party, for instance, in labor unions, and last of all in Syndicalism, as represented by the I. W. W., or International Workers of the World.

The socialists at their late national convention repudiated the principle of violence, of sabotage, or direct action. The responsible leaders of the labor union movement have also repudiated violence. But nevertheless it has obtained a certain hold in their ranks. It is not long since the McNamara brothers were convicted of the crime of dynamiting the Times Building of Los Angeles, California. And I believe that thirty-three other officials of the Union of Structural Iron Workers are now serving terms in Leavenworth penitentiary for committing similar atrocities in various places throughout the country. It is to the credit of organized labor, however, that they have repudiated those things, for which we should be thankful, because labor unions are at present an indispensable part of the working man's paraphernalia of self-defense under present conditions, and when conducted along right lines can be of great service to humanity.

But the third and most sinister movement that is now coming on the scene of action is the I. W. W., or syndicalism. While the trade unions propose to unite the various workers of the same trade, as firemen in one, and hotel waiters in another, and so on, syndicalism works for the union of all working men of all classes and trades in one great organization. Again, while unionism teaches that we should obey the law, make terms with employers, observe contracts, and by legislative means seek to better the conditions of labor, syndicalism makes no terms with employers, or if they are made, reserves the privilege of breaking contracts at any time, believes in sabotage, direct action, and is opposed to legislative remedies.

You perhaps wonder what direct action is. When you put a stick of dynamite under the building of an employer against whom you have a grievance you get direct action; and you know what sabotage is,—when an individual employed in a factory, when no one is watching, takes a little vial of acid and sprinkles it over a great shelf full of costly fabrics, or drops a bolt into a complicated machine and ruins it, that is sabotage. [This term we are told originated in Europe when on a certain occasion factory employees before going out on strike dashed their wooden sabots (shoes) into the intricate machinery of the factory, hence the origin of the term sabotage.] These people make no apology for violence. It is a part of their openly advocated creed. They recognize no right or wrong; all methods are legitimate that will bring to them the results desired.

VIOLENCE "UNMORAL."

In the Independent for October 30, 1913, there is a statement taken from Mr. Andre Tridon, author of The New Unionism, in which he says:

As a revolutionary organization the Industrial Workers of the World aims to use any and all tactics that will get the results sought with the least expenditure of time and energy. The question of "right" and "wrong" does not concern us.

And in the same issue is an article by Arturo M. Giovannitti, called "Syndicalism—the creed of force." In it he presents the same doctrine. He is one of those three, the other two being Joseph Ettor and William Haywood, who figured in the great Lawrence strike in Massachusetts a little while ago. They are the central figures in this new movement. Giovannitti argues that violence is neither moral nor immoral; it is unmoral. It is neither right nor wrong; it is simply either necessary or unnecessary. And when necessary to accomplish their ends they recognize no power that has a right to say they shall not resort to violence, including either murder or the destruction of property. He says:

Under this aspect the question of right and wrong does concern us, because we believe that everything which tends to preserve the existing economic system, based on inequality, is wrong, and whatever works to overthrow and supplant it with a new one based on economic and social equity, is right.

A little further on he says that we can trust the infallible instincts of the workers themselves to choose the line of action to pursue and the means to be used. He says:

The law of the least effort will unconsciously but firmly induce the workers to refrain from violence, but if impellent needs and the inflexible necessity of getting certain results make it indispensably conditional to the solution of a deadlock controversy, it will, of course, automatically assert itself, even without an expressed suggestion. In this case, being neither counseled nor premeditated, violence is neither right nor wrong—it is either necessary or unnecessary, effective or useless, as the resulting circumstances alone will determine. . . . The question, therefore, that syndicalism bravely confronts and lays down for discussion, is not one of right or justice, but one of force, taking the word in its broader meaning. . . . In conclusion, all the moral code of the syndicalist movement may be summed up in these words: "We are going to do what we need and intend to do, simply because we have the power to do it."

And finally he concludes his article by saying that in due time all people must be baptized in honest sweat in the name of the "last and everlasting god, creator of all life and beauty and happiness—Labor!"

So, while capitalism has exalted the dollar to the position of God, syndicalism exalts labor to the same position. Is there no God that can come between the two and effect a reconciliation and secure a sane readjustment?

You remember about a year ago the I. W. W. came in conflict with the authorities in San Diego, and the trouble became so severe that Governor Johnson sent a special commissioner down there to investigate. In his report, made June 10, 1912, this special commissioner, Mr. Harris Weinstock, said:

Scenes enacted in Spokane, Fresno, San Diego, and elsewhere . . . are likely to be reenacted on a larger and larger scale, until a crisis will be reached and civil war threatened.

That is not so far out of harmony with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, which tells us in section 45: "And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor must needs flee unto Zion for safety."

It seems to me that we are rapidly approaching that condition. It is a class struggle. We may not be so conscious of it here in this little community, but sooner or later we will feel the effects of it.

THE AX AT THE ROOT OF THE TREE.

Are there any cures presented for this condition? There seem to be many palliatives, but that is just about all they are. The ordinary giving of charity from the rich to the poor is simply a palliative. It does not strike at the root of the evil at all. And I think a great many people are somewhat like the little boy who lived next door to an orphan asylum. His mother remonstrated with him for eating so many apples. "Why," she said, "you have eaten nearly a barrel of apples and it isn't Christmas time yet."

"Yes," he said, "I have to eat them because the poor orphans are crying for the cores."

And so we have a great many millionaires who have gorged themselves on the golden apples of industry that they may throw a few wormy cores to the poor.

Jesus said, "And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire."

So we believe that in his gospel and in his doctrine we will find that which strikes at the very root of this great evil that is dividing the people and setting men against their brothers.

JESUS AND THE POOR IN THE MOSAIC LAW.

What is the attitude of Jesus toward the poor? We must go back, perhaps, to the law of Moses to begin to get an understanding of his position. But some one says, "Jesus did not have anything to do with the law of Moses. Jesus wasn't born yet."

But Jesus says in John 8:58, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am." Paul indicates that Jesus was with God in the beginning. He was the one who was with God when God said, "Let us make man in our own image." There was some one cooperating with God there in the making of man, and that individual was Jesus. And so we see him reflected in the law of Moses; and we discover all the way through that God was solicitous for the welfare of the poor. There are many little things that indicate this, but we can only touch upon a few.

One of these was the fact that when they gathered their harvest they were forbidden to gather it closely or to go over the ground the second time, so that the poor could go in and glean after them. And every seventh year the fields were left uncultivated, and whatever came up of itself the poor could go in and harvest. An individual hiring a poor man must pay him his wages before sundown. He could not keep him waiting for a week.

Finally, most important of all was the provision in regard to the holding of land. And it seems to me that there certainly was a divine inspiration that enabled Moses to give such a law at a time in the period of the world's history when they did not know anything about economic law.

"The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine." (Leviticus 25:23.) The Lord said the land was his. It was not in the strict sense held either privately or collectively. Individuals held property and land in their own names as their own heritage, but God himself was the great owner over all, and so reserved the right to direct them in the buying and selling of the land.

This was something like the conception that we have of conditions that will obtain in Zion under stewardships, when God will be recognized as the owner of the land, and individuals will be stewards over the property they hold in their own names. This rendering, "The land shall not be sold," is made a little clearer in the marginal rendering, or "to be quite cut off." It was a fact that they could sell the land, but every fifty years there came a year of jubilee, and when the trumpet sounded, if a man had sold or lost his land it came back to him, or rather he went back to it, and it was his again. It was sold, but not quite cut off. Those who bought and sold did not lose anything, because they bought and sold with the understanding that in so many years the land would go back to the people. This was a provision instituted to prevent the very evils that are existing in many of the great nations of the world to-day.

Take for instance Ireland, a land that has been depopulated and ruined for generations. Just recently, under the leadership of Lloyd George, the Irishman is given the privilege to buy back his land in little holdings, with government aid. And now we read that Ireland "has been made over."

In England they are combating a similar situation. I understand that the three important parties there are drafting policies, and one of these policies, advocated by the Liberalists includes a provision that two thirds of the great game preserves held by the lords, for their occasional sport, shall be given back to the people, so they may enter in and sow and reap.

The Lord instituted this provision in the law of Moses that he might guard against the evils of landlordism that are so acute in the world to-day. In the giving of that law human rights were held superior to property rights. One of the criticisms made against our law is that it is based to an extent on the old Roman law, drafted by the patricians, with whom property rights were held superior to human rights.

There are a great many, perhaps, who would delight to observe the text in Exodus, "Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause." That is the rendering in the King James version. A great many judges have taken that text to heart, apparently. "Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause." But in the Inspired Version, translated by that despised Joseph Smith, it is made clear where it says, "Neither shalt thou countenance a wicked man in his cause." I wonder if it is not true that after all there was some inspiration in that translation!

THE POOR HAVE THE GOSPEL PREACHED.

When we come down to the days of Jesus we find his attitude very clearly demonstrated. In the beginning of his ministry John sent to him his disciples, asking him who he was. He said to go and tell John, "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them."

They say it is a principle of scriptural interpretation that we get the meaning of the text according to the manner in which the emphasis is placed. And so we read it first in this way: "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." Christ did not look around and seek only the rich, those who were able to pay him a salary, who were able to come into the church well dressed; he went to the poor, whose need was most obvious.

The next thought is suggested when we let the emphasis fall like this, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them."

That was the thing Jesus taught the poor. He did not say, Come and get some dynamite and destroy your employers. He did not say, Rise up in revolution. He did not say, Go to the courts and legislatures. The first great message was the preaching of the gospel. That was the message of Jesus to the poor whom he loved so well.

Jesus said also in another place, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden." That is the invitation of Jesus to the laboring man. There is not a promise between the lids of the Bible that any laboring man shall ever get the blessing of God unless he comes to Jesus. There is no hope to the laboring man for the good times he looks for until he obeys that divine invitation, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden."

Jesus said in the sermon on the mount, "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." The Inspired Version makes it plainer where it says, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, who come unto me; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Those who do not come unto him have absolutely no promise that they are ever to enjoy the great good times coming, concerning which the reformers hold out promises before the people.

REGENERATION.

The message of Jesus contained in the language to Nicodemus and to rich and poor alike is sounded in this great commandment, "Ye must be born again." Regeneration! This is the ax that Jesus lays at the root of the evils of class distinction,—regeneration of the individual under gospel influences.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants 56,

Woe unto you rich men, that will not give your substance to the poor, for your riches will canker your souls; and this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation, and of judgment, and of indignation: The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved! Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, and whose hands are not stayed from laying hold upon other men's goods, whose eyes are full of greediness, who will not labor with their own hands!

Jesus denounced both classes when they were in a condition of iniquity, and his message to both rich and poor alike was, Come unto me. Be born again; put off the old man and put on the new man.

Whenever we get a nation composed of laboring men who are intelligent, temperate, honest, and virtuous, we will have a nation of men who will get their rights; and they will get them without resorting to murder and lying and robbery. But so long as we have a nation made up in large part of laboring men who are worldly and carnal, many of them sodden with intemperance, inflamed with lust, and filled with great violence, and opposed on the other side by a capitalist class, many of whom are equally intemperate and lustful, and greedy and violent, there is no propaganda under heaven that can bring a condition of peace and prosperity that will endure. This condition can never come about until the message of Jesus has its place in the hearts of men.

JESUS AND THE RICH.

What is the attitude of Jesus toward the rich? A great many people hate a rich man simply because he is rich. But Jesus did not hate the rich man. I am glad it is written in this chapter I have read that Jesus saw this rich young man and loved him. It is recorded plainly that he loved this rich man, irrespective of class.

What is it he denounces about some of the rich? It is ill-gotten gains. It is the cruel, unjust methods of oppression that take away from the poor to enlarge already swollen fortunes.

And so he said to the Pharisee, "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses. You bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on the shoulders of men, but you yourselves will not lift so much as a finger to relieve them." This is a liberal rendition of that which he said.

In the writings of James, who is a representative of Jesus, we find a terrible denunciation of those who keep back the wages of the hireling that they may heap up treasures for the last days.

But notice this. Jesus did not hate the rich. Jesus did not hate the poor. Jesus loved both rich and poor and said unto both, "Come unto me." And to both of them he said, "Ye must be born again." Repentance is just as necessary in the one case as it is in the other.

Now we take the case of this rich man. He perhaps represents the class of capitalists. He came to Jesus and Jesus had a program for him. The rich man had kept the negative law. "Thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not steal," were all negative. But Jesus had an affirmative gospel. "Thou shalt sell what thou hast and impart to the poor, and take up thy cross and follow me." I am glad Jesus did not turn this man away with denunciation. I am glad Jesus had a program for him. But we should understand this in harmony with the laws given elsewhere. Some people argue that Jesus wanted the man to sell everything he had and scatter it broadcast and come and follow him. If so, he made him an exception to the general rule.

I believe that this must be understood in harmony with the revelations of later times, which provide that a man shall sell that which he can spare in harmony with the law of God for the aid of the poor. We understand that that was the law they observed on Pentecost when those who had possessions sold and imparted to those who had not. I do not believe Jesus wants men to sell and give away all they have and become beggars; because that is not common sense, and Jesus in his gospel law always teaches common sense. When they thus became beggars some one else would have to sell all and give to them.

WOULD THAT LABOR MIGHT BE HEALED OF BLINDNESS.

I am glad that in the same chapter with the visit of the rich man we find the visit of the poor man. In the same chapter where we see the rich man coming in his purpled ease, we find blind Bartimæus, naked and destitute, coming to Jesus and being received with equal grace.

Would to God that the class that Bartimæus represents also might come to Jesus and have their blindness healed, that they might see that these measures of violence are anti-Christ, and that they never can accomplish the desired end.

We can perhaps say that Bartimæus represents the laboring class. He certainly belonged to the worthy poor, because Jesus blessed him. We may assume that before his blindness he had been a laborer, or if his blindness were congenital that he was of that spirit that he would have labored had it been possible. Jesus says that the man who will not work shall not eat the bread of the laborer. When we talk of the poor in this connection we are talking of those who are willing to work when they have the opportunity.

IS THERE ANY OTHER GOSPEL?

Now Jesus stood between these two men with his gospel. Is there any other plan that will bring about the solution of these conditions; that will reconcile these two classes? If anyone knows of any plan that eliminates or ignores Jesus and his gospel that they think will be successful they are privileged to go out and preach it. But we do not know of such a plan. We intend to continue to teach the principles of the system that Jesus advocated. It may be that not many will accept them; but that is not our business. It is our business to defend and proclaim the principles he instituted, even if there should be very few who accept them.

But some say, "The church moves too slowly. I have lost confidence in it." If humanity plus divinity can not accomplish this work, what can you expect without divinity? Nothing but absolute ruin and suffering to those who embark on other enterprises.

What are the steps of the law? In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we find it stated that there must be an assembling together of the people, following the great principle of regeneration—"you must be born again." Thus comes the gathering. We can only notice this briefly. "And it shall come to pass that the righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, and shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy." (Doctrine and Covenants 45:14.) Here we have the right class of people in the right environment.

What is the next step? "And it is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship."

GOOD ENOUGH FOR MOSES AND GOOD ENOUGH FOR US.

This goes back to the good old thought, "Good enough for Moses and good enough for us," that God is the owner. And it remains for us to be stewards, holding our property under the admonition to administer it in the sight of God as the great supreme director in all things. When you get men working on that basis you can accomplish something.

What is the next vital thought? That of consecration. The rich man giving into the storehouse of God, that his unfortunate brother may take as he has need in the hour of his extremity. A condition of equality may thus be brought about through the administration of the Lord's storehouse, and brethren may be brethren in very deed.

The Lord says the earth is full and there is abundance and to spare. When Lloyd George, chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain, spoke before the conference of churches in Cardiff, Wales, a year ago, he said, "You can not blame poverty or Providence, because the Lord has created an abundance for all."

HOW LONG?

People are saying, "How long, O Lord, how long?" We do not know. But remember this thought, that when they were building the city of Enoch, I believe the record tells us that they were three hundred and seventy-five years before they reached a condition of perfection. This church has not been organized one hundred years, and a great part of that time we have been driven and persecuted so that we could do nothing. But these are the ideals that were cherished by the people in Kirtland, Independence, and Nauvoo, and they are still held.

OUR DUTY.

What is our duty? No matter what the obstacles may be, no matter how slowly we may seem to move, it is our duty to go on and advocate these principles and put them in practice as rapidly as we can.

But some one says, We have people in Lamoni and Independence who are not living on a basis of equality. Why, of course we have, and the chances are that we will have them for a long time, because this must be a voluntary obedience. The income tax reaches a strong hand into the coffers of the rich and takes out in proportion to the amount of their income. But we can not do that. It must be voluntary. And perhaps absolute equality will never come until Jesus comes to administer his government in person. But it is our business to promote it as rapidly as we can. There is a great deal more that might be said along this line, but it must be left for another time.

WHERE EARTH CAME NEAREST HEAVEN.

There comes to me the thought of a little story that I once read. A legend about two brothers who lived together in the hills of Judea on farms that joined each other. One of these brothers was a married man and had a large family of children; the other was a single man. One night the married man said to his wife, My brother is a lonely man. I will go out and take some of the sheaves out of my field and carry them over and place them in his field, and in the morning his heart will rejoice when he sees his harvest. And the same night the single man said to his servant, My brother has many mouths to feed. I will go out to-night and carry some of the sheaves out of my field and place them in his field, and in the morning he will rejoice to see his abundant harvest. And so for two nights they did as they had said, under cover of the clouds that obscured the sky. But on the third night the moon shone out in brightness, and they came face to face. And it is said that on that spot the temple in Jerusalem was built, because the people said that here earth came nearest heaven.

Now when we get that spirit in Zion, then we may look for the temple to be built in the New Jerusalem, for then will earth come nearest heaven. May God speed that day.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

GAINS REPORTED FROM GERMANY.—Elder H. N. Hansen and Brother Kippe, writing from Copenhagen, report two new branches organized in Germany and forty-five baptisms. This is encouraging news to come from the German field, where the work has been hindered so long by the opposition of government officials and state religion.

REINDEER AND COST OF LIVING.—Robert Laird Borden, premier of Canada, after thorough investigation is of the opinion that in the North American reindeer we have a partial solution of the high cost of living so far as the American meat supply is concerned. He is convinced that the two million odd square miles of unused pasture land in the far north, which area since it is covered with snow most of the year will not sustain any other ruminant, will support hordes of reindeer approximately equal in numbers to the cattle in United States to-day, that the region north of the Reindeer mountains, of two million square miles, would support five million reindeer, and the Alaskan pastures an additional ten million. Five thousand thrifty reindeer, descendants of some fifteen or twenty animals imported from Siberia about twenty years ago by way of experiment, are already grazing on Alaskan wilderness pastures. The Laplander has modified the reindeer into a dairy animal, and reindeer milk, butter and cheese are market staples in northernmost Europe. It is said that the flesh of the reindeer is nourishing and palatable, and that under proper conditions of handling its quality could be improved.

The Alaskan reindeer herds are under government control, are let out on favorable terms to native herders, and already the profits have been three hundred per cent on the original investment. The responsibility of the care of these herds is said to have developed the natives from shiftless hunters and trappers into men of regular and thrifty habits.

MAN WITH A MESSAGE.—The Times, Canisteo, New York, for February 11, reports an interesting meeting conducted by Elder A. M. Chase at Greenwood. The Times says: "You will find him an interesting speaker, 'a man with a message.'"

READ WITH INTEREST.—The Publicity Bureau are in receipt of a letter from the pastor of a Christian church in Colorado, in which he says:

I have read with interest An Open Letter to the Clergy, by Elbert A. Smith. Now and again when you have something in which you think I will be interested, and by the reading of which I may be profited, I will be pleased to receive it.

WIRELESS TELEPHONY.—German and Austrian scientists are experimenting in wireless telephony with some success. The Nauem wireless station is used as a base of operations, and telephoning has been done from this point to the Technical Museum at Vienna, a distance of three hundred miles or more. Using special apparatus of new design it is possible to hear newspaper articles which were read at Nauem.

Religio Convention.

THURSDAY, APRIL 2.

9 A. M.

The eighteenth annual convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society met in the lower auditorium of the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, Thursday, April 2.

The first session was a prayer service of one half hour, J. W. Wight and J. A. Gunsolley in charge. Song number 9, Zion's Praises, was sung, prayer by J. A. Gunsolley. A spiritual meeting followed, there being five prayers and eighteen testimonies.

9.30 A. M.

Meeting was called to order by J. A. Gunsolley, who presided throughout the session. Number 144 was sung, prayer by A. C. Barmore.

Committee on credentials reported. The matter of delegates in excess and delegates from Ohio District was referred to the credentials committee for consideration and report.

Report of credentials committee, so far as known to be correct, was by motion approved.

The courtesies of the floor were by motion extended to all visitors.

By motion President J. A. Gunsolley and associates were chosen to preside over the convention, and were authorized to appoint the committees named in the program.

Credentials committee reported, recommending the dropping of delegates in excess, admission of delegates from North Columbus, South Columbus, and Williston locals of Ohio District, and of delegates from Southern Nebraska District. This report was approved, save for that portion referring to Southern Nebraska.

The chair announced the following committees:

Resolutions: J. W. Wight, J. A. Becker, B. J. Scott.

Notification: A. C. Barmore, A. W. Smith.

Press: J. F. Garver, Paul Craig, Charles Fry.

Appropriations: Edward Rannie, J. A. Tanner, S. A. Burgess, J. O. Dutton, M. C. Fisher.

Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt were appointed to have charge of the music of the convention.

Harvey Sandy, Good Literature Superintendent, reported literature distributed: Tracts, 87,895; Ensigns, 4,686; HERALDS, 5,022; Autumn Leaves, 41; books, 134; miscellaneous, 6,132, total 103,910. Subscriptions to church papers taken, 30.

This report recited in part:

The figures alone are gratifying, especially when it is taken into consideration that they show an increase of nearly one hundred and fifty per cent over last year's report. But the part that pleases us most is the manifest willingness and enthusiasm shown by the literature workers throughout the land. The people are beginning to see the wonderful possibilities of this department of the society, and are taking hold of it with faith and confidence. The word comes from all points: "I can not do enough for the gospel literature work." . . . Numbers have been brought into the church, some directly, and others indirectly as the result of the distribution of gospel literature; some are investigating, and the way has been made more tolerable for the missionary as well as the Saint, who might have been persecuted by those so inclined. It is reported to us that these results have come by reason of the light that has been disseminated through the avenues of this bureau.

An excellent paper on, "Should articles on problems of the day enter into the distribution of literature," written by Max Carmichael, and read by Ruby Jackson, was received with enthusiasm, and by motion was referred to the editor of Autumn Leaves for publication in such periodical or periodicals as deemed best.

Librarian S. A. Burgess reported special work done at various points. This report was, in part, as follows:

We have also, in connection with the Library Commission, looked after those interests of the work and prepared a suggestive list of books for publication. The present year has been a quiet one for the Commission, as we have felt that every possible interest should be conserved in assisting to correct existing financial conditions, and so have not felt justified in making large expenditures. The coming year there will probably be the publication of a leaflet. The expense for work on the list of books has been about twenty dollars.

Sister T. J. Sheldon discussed suggestions for the development of library work, urging the need of a practical study of all good books, especially with reference to information along the lines of comparative religions and economics.

Vice President T. J. Elliott reported:

From my observation, and the information I have received as touching the Religio work locally, and somewhat in a general sense, it has been a quiet year. . . . The time of the Religio as a novelty is long since past, and now it means real hard work to build up and sustain it. Special features and programs in many places have for the more part become commonplace, and upon the real dependable workers the burden of all effort has fallen. We must work to have the greater benefit derived from the study, the spirituality of our members increased and the genuine support of the church through our institution brought about.

Secretary Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, in addition to statistical report, reported unusually heavy work for the year, including field work at various places, and articles prepared for publication, by request.

Two verses of number 37 were sung.

President J. A. Gunsolley in a brief address presented the keynote for the coming year. He said, in substance:

The idea that actuated those who drew up the constitution and by-laws of this society was that the success by way of development for the young people of this church must come only through the principles of doing. This has been the motive principle actuating those who have had to do with the shaping of the policies of this institution ever since. It is said that we learn by doing. We ought also to do as a result of learning. The time has come for us to emphasize more the feature of doing. Our purpose in studying church and other literature should be that we may better qualify to do. This thought of doing suggests that this is preeminently a work of cooperation. Our greatest success, our best activity for the year before us can only come through close cooperation. Let us work not from the point of view of our own development so much as from the consideration that we may help in the development of others. As the keynote of the year the speaker presented, "Cooperative service for others."

Song number 232 was sung, dismissal prayer by T. J. Elliott.

1.30 P. M.

Conferences for those interested were conducted in the departments and by the parties indicated: Adults, J. A. Tanner; teen age, boys, M. A. Etzenhouser; teen age, girls, Mabel Knipschild; officers and committees, Sister E. S. McNichols.

3 P. M.

Called to order by J. A. Gunsolley, number 42 was sung, prayer by A. G. Miller.

Minutes read and approved.

Credentials committee submitted additional report. Report adopted, save that portion having reference to Pottawattamie District.

J. A. Gunsolley reported verbally for the executive committee that no meeting was found necessary after that held immediately following the last convention, at which time the order of said convention was carried out.

Lessons committee reported that material for biographical sketches of prominent men and women of the church for junior lessons was found difficult to obtain, and that a change had been authorized, whereby the biographies of men of Book of Mormon history were taken up.

Revising committee reported the utmost good feeling between said committee and the editor, and work done as imposed.

Sister J. A. Gardner, historian, reported history of the first two years of the Religio, and several years preliminary to its organization, completed and in the hands of President J. A. Gunsolley.

Editor of Arena, Elbert A. Smith, reported labors done, as assisted by Estella Wight.

Editor of Religio Quarterly, R. W. Farrell, reported, in part:

The production comes up out of much "tribulation" of mind, body, and spirit, for I have the care of a large branch on my hands, and also a summer school. If I did not think that some good was being accomplished I should give up the task; as it is, I feel that a larger interest in the latter-day revelations has been awakened—and the end is not yet. I do not think that disagreement on minor points is dangerous. I think that all Religians agree on the major points. The editor has held up only one phase of the lessons as being too large for us to unjustly criticize, that is the textual matter. When considering matters of vital importance to us, such as the temporal law, steps towards the higher life, etc., the editor has received divine assistance, and he gives this as a testimony which he trusts will not be lightly weighed.

S. A. Burgess, president of Graceland College, reported on the matter of appropriation of three hundred dollars that five students had been aided from this fund, and that only those actually needing it had been aided. This money had been a great help to those receiving same. It was confidently expected that a great part of it would be returned within two years. The continuation of the fund by the appropriation by this convention of a like amount was requested.

S. A. Burgess reported for the committee on normal textbook on the Bible. Sister Anna Salyards had resigned. Efforts to fill this vacancy had not met with success. Manuscripts had been prepared by S. A. Burgess and by J. W. Peterson. The need of such a work was appreciated, and it was thought that preparation therefore should be continued and completed.

E. H. Fisher reported for the Library Commission. The larger and most of the smaller branches are now well organized. Activity on the part of local boards is needed. Local boards need the careful supervision of district boards. The commission, through its secretary, E. H. Fisher, is prepared to furnish district boards material for active campaigns. A number of valuable books had been added to the general library during the year. Library work was considered to be in a more healthful and growing condition than ever before.

Charles B. Woodstock reported for the Social Purity Board little public activity on the part of the board, for the reason that careful study to reach a proper analysis of the problems before us had occupied the time. A limited number of publications in the field contemplated in the work of this board were being selected from among the many published by purity workers for recommendation to our people interested in this field. The board advised moving forward with caution.

A paper was read by Minnie E. Scott, entitled, "Conserving for the church."

A short address was delivered by R. C. Russell on, "What can the Religio contribute to the life of the church?"

Song number 126 was sung.

By motion the paper read by Sister Scott was ordered filed with the editor of Autumn Leaves for publication.

President J. A. Gunsolley reported special work at various points. This report contained the following:

The opportunity for work has never been greater, nor has the need of it ever been more apparent, and it is indeed a source of gratification to learn from the statistics that notwithstanding the hands of the executive have been so busily employed with other matters, there is, nevertheless, a gain all along the line. . . . This fact assures us that there is life within the Religio that manifests itself in moving forward and upward.

We are in the "hastening time," it has been said, and what element could contribute more to this speeding onward than to see our army of young men and young women, our boys and our girls, so trained, and so enthused with the idea that this is the work of God, that they all would become active laborers in the Lord's vineyard? No one can estimate the rate of progress this church would take on, were this the case.

To bring this about, two things are necessary, a greater, deeper spirituality, and more complete directing of the activities of the young people. Your presiding officer believed it was a mistake when we abandoned the monthly prayer meeting, and strongly advises that there be a return to the greater devotional spirit incident to the observance of specific time for devotional training. Some of our best locals are at the present time gaining rich experience from this feature of their activities. . . .

It is with no little satisfaction to know that social purity work has taken definite shape and has come to stay, after being urged in two consecutive communications to the conventions. Taking courage from this, I venture suggestions along this line. Every branch of the church has young people, more or less. All young people are alike, more or less. Nearly all branches have Sunday schools, and many of them have Religios. These branches, Sunday schools and Religios all have officers. . . . These officers should cooperate.

Why should not the church be made more of a social center, where the young may find such amusement, entertainment and training as will develop them along right lines? Why could there not be as a result of joint effort, by committees for the purpose, some manual work that would not only entertain but also train in useful things? Why could there not be as a result of such cooperation a committee to have supervision and charge of directing the amusement and entertainment of the community, securing a series of good lectures, concerts, and entertainments of various kinds?

The social feature could be worked out upon the part of the Religio through the social committee, but there is no committee whose particular duty it would be to provide for the industrial work. The joint council, however, could provide one.

These two things I believe to be our most urgent need at the present time. The sweetest things anyone ever experienced is the communion with God through his Holy Spirit. Our young people need to have this experience, and it will be realized in the prayer and devotional service as nowhere else. The study is all right, and the program idea is correct, but more is needed. As evidence that it is needed we have only to be reminded that in some branches clubs and leagues are being organized for the accomplishing of such things as I have mentioned. There is nothing undertaken by any of them that the Religio could not properly provide for, and should do so, so long as they are legitimate.

Home department superintendent, Eva Holdsworth, reported a special effort to interest isolated Saints, with about sixty enrolled. The home department is considered a missionary effort. Contributions amounting to $91.11 were reported. The total enrollment of the department is 2,137. There were 52 transferred to locals and 5 locals organized from the department.

Normal superintendent, Sister D. H. Blair, reported a very busy year for the department. Sister Altha Deam, associate, was compelled to resign early in the year on account of ill health. The enrollment for the year was not so large as formerly, though there was a larger percentage of graduates: In teacher training, first examination 287, second 121, third 70; in Book of Mormon normal, first 56, second 27, third 39. The number graduating were about equally divided between Religio and Sunday school workers.

A motion to instruct the lessons committee to instruct the Quarterly editor to allow for two elections each year by omission of lessons was lost.

A motion to revert to the former method of providing for a monthly prayer meeting as suggested in the report of the president was referred to the resolutions committee.

The following was referred to the resolutions committee:

Resolved, That the suggestions on social and industrial features in the report of the president be approved, and that the executive committee, in connection with the First Presidency of the church be authorized to prepare a definite plan for the maturing of such features, such plan to be presented to the next General Convention for consideration and action.

A communication from U. W. Greene asking for help for the Palestine Mission was referred to the committee on appropriations.

Number 73 was sung, dismissed by M. C. Fisher.

7.30 P. M.

President Gunsolley was in charge. Number 16 was sung. Prayer by W. A. Bushnell. Song number 232 was sung.

Minutes were read, corrected, and approved.

Mr. Christian Ott, mayor of the city of Independence, by invitation, in a brief address greeted the convention, extending to all a hearty welcome to the city. The speaker considered it an honor to welcome a body coming together for religious deliberations. He stated emphatically that during his administration as mayor the Saints had been the most law abiding people of all denominations. They had been ready at all times to assist in all matters of improvement. The city hall was offered for any purpose for which the Convention might use it. The mayor stated that he and the city council would be glad to serve the Convention in any way.

L. F. P. Curry discussed the duties and work of the pastor, under the subject, "Mr. Pastor, How are you rated?" He called attention to the system of rating among business men and proceeded to rate pastors according to their ability to interest especially the young, and to induce many to work. He would have the pastor engage the young in athletics, through auxiliary work and other services. As a man of action and system he would have him to be the head and leader of the community.

President Elbert A. Smith spoke on the subject, "Three keys to power." Among other things he said, Power means dominion. God wants man to have dominion. Power means efficiency. God wants all men to be efficient. The average normal man desires power in his particular field of activity. Every success depends upon a proper coordination of power and purpose—the most valuable assets man can have. Power and purpose are attributes of the inner man. Power is an inherent potentiality. The three keys to power are: First, the iron key, work. There is no road to success except by the road of labor. Second, the silver key, study. In this study we should be guided by the Holy Spirit. Third, the golden key, faith. Great men have been men of faith. The souls of men of faith go marching on. These three keys will open the door so we can exercise the powers God has given us. We can not succeed with only two. The three must be used together.

Brother F. G. Pitt sang "The Holy City."

The session was closed by singing number 32, with prayer by W. A. Bushnell.

FRIDAY, APRIL 3.

9 A. M.

President Gunsolley, in charge, announced number 110, after the singing of which A. W. Smith offered prayer.

Minutes read and approved.

Treasurer J. A. Gardner reported: balance, $2,756.36; receipts, $774.48; expenditures, $1,261.31, leaving a balance of $2,269.53, including a translation fund of $1,022.76.

The auditing committee reported having audited the accounts of the treasurer and found same to be correct.

Report of the treasurer and that of the auditors were by motion adopted.

The resolutions committee reported the following from the Little Sioux District, recommended that the convention consider same, and determine who should have the right to make such suggestions.

Moved that the General Convention be requested to furnish a few suggestions in the Junior Quarterly for teachers of primary classes.

The committee recommended that the convention consider the resolution and determine as to who should have the right to make such suggestion.

The resolution committee submitted the following with reference to the matter of amendments to the Constitution:

Your committee recommend the adoption of the amendments referring to the question of temperance.

As to the amendment referring to the use of tobacco, if action be had, we recommend the striking out of the words are addicted to the and the word of, so that it will read, "who use tobacco for other purposes," etc.

The amendments with reference to temperance were made as follows:

Article 3, section 1, paragraph 4, after the word librarian was inserted, "superintendent of temperance department."

Page 5, following paragraph defining duties of librarian, a paragraph was added:

Superintendent of Temperance Department.—The superintendent of this department shall be given general charge of the work of this department, and, with the consent of the executive officers, shall choose such assistants as may be necessary.

Article 3, section 1, page 10, after the word libra- rian was inserted, "superintendent of temperance department."

Page 12, after duties of librarian, this paragraph was inserted:

Superintendent of Temperance Department.—The superintendent of this department shall have general charge of the temperance work of the stake or district, and, with the consent of the executive officers, appoint such assistants as may be necessary; and he shall do what he can in collecting statistics and evidence on intemperance.

Article 5, section 1, page 20; after the word relief the word temperance was inserted.

Page 22; after the duties of the relief committee the following was inserted:

Temperance Committee.—It shall be the duty of this committee to be active in doing all it can to promote temperance principles and sentiments among the membership of the society, and the membership of the church.

Section 2, page 24, was amended by striking out the word temperance.

Section 3, page 24, was amended by striking out all after the words, duties of above committees, appearing in the same paragraph.

The notice to amend the Constitution with reference to tobacco asked that article 3, page 9, be amended by adding:

Granville S. Trowbridge addressed the convention on the subject, "Organization and activities as a means of character building." He said in effect: The kind of character we wish to build is character that will do right because it is right. Despite all efforts, the churches of the country are not reaching over ten per cent of the people of the country. This is because church work is not properly organized. We have our peculiar church and organization and our auxiliaries that as a church we may accomplish better results. Order is God's first law. So we must organize our efforts, that we may effectually get together to achieve our purposes. Our organization along these lines should bring about a division of work and responsibility. The young need in their activities and development, cultivation. Their activity under organization is needful to the unfolding of character.

Number 84 was sung, F. G. Pitt singing the verses, the audience joining in the chorus.

B. J. Scott in speaking on The Religio and the community, said, in part: A community is a communion of parts. This convention is made up of locals, locals of individuals. As individuals do their part, locals and convention are successful. We are looking for Zion to be redeemed. Are you, as individuals, helping to this end? In this connection we must reach not only our own, but also the community. The Religio owes this work to the community. By vote we will in time have opportunity to cleanse the communities to which, in the redemption of Zion, the Saints are to gather. Until such time, by our individual efforts we should do all we can personally and as Religions to make these gathering places clean and wholesome, and to number with us those of our neighbors who may be so persuaded.

The report of the committee on merging was read as follows:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 3, 1914.

To the General Religio Convention; Greeting: We your committee appointed to consider the question of affiliating the auxiliaries of the church desire to report that so far as practicable to do so the committee has had under advisement the matter committed to them, though much of the work has of necessity been done outside of committee room.

The members of the committee are agreed that the time is opportune for at least the initial steps to be taken looking to a closer affiliation of the work of the auxiliaries with the activities of the church. Therefore, we desire strongly to recommend that the question of amalgamation be looked upon with favor by your honorable body, though the committee is unprepared at present to attempt a report upon the details of the organization. Suffice it to say that in the opinion of the committee this movement will not in any way reduce the number of workers, but will increase the opportunities for individual efforts, though the duplication of machinery will thereby be eliminated, and this is the great point to be reached,—namely, the elimination of all unnecessary duplication of machinery, and increasing the force of workers so that activities not now reached by any of these societies will be entered in upon.

Let us indicate briefly what some of these unreached activities are: The welfare of our young people such as are provided by the Young Men's Christian Association and Young Women's Christian Association; physical culture; entertainments and social improvement in general; an expanded literary program; general educational facilities not provided by our public schools; musical development; manual and vocational training; night schools for the benefit of those not able to take advantage of the facilities of public schools; general course of intellectual development for young and old; amusements and entertainment together with athletic activities; improvement of conditions surrounding the young people of rural districts; vacational activities such as summer camps combined with institutes and special programs and summer conventions; in a word, general physical, moral and intellectual development of the young people particularly, many phases of which are at the present time entirely neglected by the church and its auxiliaries.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
JOHN W. RUSHTON,
R. S. SALYARDS,

Committee.
