It is easier to stay on one's porch and drink iced lemonade, etc., than to sit through a service at church. But, let us ask the question, are we rewarded for the easy things we do, for the soft, pleasurable indulgences of our impulses? or is it not rather the faithful discharge of duty and responsibility, in spite of tendencies which seek to prevent, which develops us, develops our reliability, our steadfastness, and helps to earn the approving, Thou has been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many?

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

A Timely Suggestion

It will be a pleasure for me to correspond with students who are planning to come East this year for studies in music. Many have come here in the past, some with hard-earned money, and not being acquainted with conditions have actually squandered their savings with individuals of no musical reputation or standing other than that of petty crooks, whom the law can not seem to touch. We would appreciate being in touch with our musical brethren or their friends who are coming here. Not only can we assure them of getting into the musical atmosphere, but under the gospel influence as well, which means much to a student away from home.

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

Teaching Young Children

[Some time ago we asked Sister Nellie Martin, of Perry, Iowa, to tell us the secret of her unusual success as a teacher of music with children, and to give us illustrations of her lessons. She very gladly complied with our request, and some of her little helpful hints have appeared in these columns. This month we present from her a sample lesson for a small child just beginning the study of music. It illustrates her method of interesting the child from the first, and also gives an idea of how she sandwiches in a little gospel teaching with her other instructions. Sister Martin prefaces her illustration as follows: "This lesson is for a Latter Day Saint child. With an outsider, I use the name Alexander instead of Aaron, the George in both cases is George III. I attribute my success as a teacher to the object I have in view of making them Latter Day Saints and weaving the threads of our beautiful doctrine so closely around them that they never can get away from them. The Lord promised me in my 'blessing,' that he would aid me in this work, and he surely has done it. In some cases I have had pupils who never knew I was a member of any church, and others who were filled with prejudice before they came; but in most instances the prejudice gave way to reason, and sincere devotion."—A. A.]

THE VERY FIRST LESSON

"What is your full name?"

"How old are you?"

"Do you know all the letters of the alphabet?"

"Good! Then you can soon learn seven of them on the piano. Now here is 'A.' His right name is 'Aaron', and that will be so easy to remember because he was brother to the prophet Moses, and next week, if you do all your canvas book tells you to do, I will tell you something just wonderful about Aaron and Moses. When you study well with me twenty minutes, I'll tell you about Moses, and the rest of the hour we will spend in learning what spaces and lines are, and their numbers.

"Now, Aaron and George are twins. They live with three black servants, see, (touching the three black keys on the piano.) Their folks are great workers, and they must hustle, too. You can remember which is A, because Aaron stays on the right side of George.

"There are three servants, aren't there—very black, but useful. One does the cooking, one feeds and cleans them up, and the third keeps the house in order.

"Let us spell these words on the piano, now that you have learned where these seven letters belong. Ab, bab, cab, cage, age, dead, add, ebb, etc. Here is a list of twenty words to be spelled out at your next lesson.

"Now, if you will follow out my instructions very carefully, at the end of ten weeks, I'll reward you, and as the Bible says, 'according to your works.' If you do all I say; you may have a water color picture this size, or a plate like this,—etc. All your notes must be copied at least five times—maybe it would be better seven times, because you remember one time the children of Israel marched around an enemy's wall seven times and down it came! It is best to have a certain number of times to practice your lessons.

"Keep track of your time this way: Now when you go home you may feel like practicing twenty minutes. After a while you may get in fifteen more, and before supper you may get in ten, and after supper, twenty more. So as to-day is Saturday, put it down like this—Saturday 20, 15, 10, 20, minutes and on; Monday 30, 10; Tuesday 20, 15, 35, 5, etc.

"I can not give you credit marks for work you do on Sunday, for the Lord has told us not to work on Sunday and expect to gain anything, and if we do not mind him, he might not help us. He punished some Jewish people one time for working on Sunday, and he never changes, so he will want us to observe the Sabbath, too.

"Now, in two weeks from to-day I'll tell you all about what he did to those Jewish people, and I'll tell you who they were and where they lived, etc. Of course you must get over your lesson the number of times your book says, or I could not take time to tell you of these wonderful things, because we would have to put in our time getting your lesson.

"It will be necessary for you to say your prayers both night and morning. You must have no set form about your prayers, but think about what you desire, and ask God's help in studying your music, and in all good efforts. I'll tell you what the Lord said to the brother of Jared because he didn't pray more.

"Now here is your canvas book, with the first lesson all marked.

(Sister Martin uses a canvas back board, journal, ledger or record book will do, in which to outline a pupil's work from week to week. She has a pretty little traced marked on the inner cover, with the pupil's name, and age, and the date of his enrollment as member of the Martin Music Class. Then an outline of the first lesson and its requirements as follows:)

"Date of Lesson. Paid.

"Practice Number 1 in Matthews ten times each day, singly.

"Spell this list of words on your piano, and see if you can find any others.

"Keep the slip telling you on what lines and spaces your notes are, on the piano or near it, so you can refer to it when you need it.

"Copy all the notes in your lesson five times: Do it this way: look at the line or space, be sure about it, and then write the name of the note, like this, C, D, E, F, A, B, D, E, etc.

"The spaces say some funny words, too. They say, 'Fanny, Annie, Can't Eat George.' The lines say, 'Every Good Boy Does Finely.'

"Do not forget that G and A are twins, named George and Aaron and live with three black servants most of the time. Their parents are great workers and are gone much of time.

"Keep time of your practice on the lesson here: Tuesday 20, 30, 10, 15; Wednesday 40, 10, 5, etc."

Notes of the Staff

"When gripping grief the heart doth wound,
And doleful dumps the mind oppress,
Then music, with her silver sound,
With speedy help, doth lend redress."

—Shakespeare.

Council Bluffs has quite a fine children's chorus, under the direction of Sister Leona Currie, with Sister Ruth Timm as pianist. They gave a successful Easter program, and are now at work upon another concert. We wish to especially commend this kind of work, for efforts are never wasted that are put forth for the young of our church. This work can be done in every branch where there are children and one or two willing spirits consecrated enough to put their hearts and efforts into the cause of music.

Sister Royal Brocaw, of Independence, has been appointed to take charge of the music at the Independence Stake reunion, to be held at Pertle Springs, Missouri, beginning Thursday, August 13. Preparations are already under way to consolidate the work of the various choirs in the stake, that there may be rousing and enthusiastic music at this reunion. A book of easy anthems has been selected; and already various choirs are at work upon these, and the rest will gladly fall in line. Here's wishing for Sister Brocaw and her corps of helpers, unqualified success in this the first endeavor of the kind in the Independence Stake.

Brother Hoxie writes that he is very near a decision as to the oratorio he wishes prepared for rendition at next General Conference. It is to be hoped and greatly urged, that immediately upon the announcement of this decision, every choir within whose ability the music selected may lie will order copies and get heartily and earnestly to work upon the oratorio. Don't wait for personal invitation or urging. The invitation is to all; and, as you all know, the earnest desire of those in charge of this general choir movement is to interest and include all the musicians in the church, why wait for any personal urging. We want you, we need you, and, which is as vitally true and important, you need us and the inspiration and encouragement you will receive when in line and touch with the general movement forward and upward! For your own sakes, for your own improvement and development musically, get the music selected for our general use throughout the church, master it and have it ready, that at any and all times you may be able to respond when it is called for. Use it in your conferences and reunions, and be in the ranks of these united singers!

"The meaning of song goes deeper,—who is there that, in logical words, can express the effect music has on us? A kind of inarticulate, unfathomable speech, which leads us to the edge of the infinite, and lets us, for moments, gaze into that?"—Carlyle.

News From Philadelphia

We did not look forward to June with its customary sultry days in which to do much hard work, but every Sunday was moderately cool and pleasant, which accounts for this encouraging report. Those who have had the desire to be of service are a goodly percentage of the winter regulars. Some are away for the summer, taking extended vacations, but we are hoping they will renew their work in the fall with a constancy good to behold.

While we have been happy in the choir work and its possibilities we were made to realize its work of helping many to make a decision to walk in the paths of righteousness. Three of our steady workers were among the twenty or more that have been baptized these last few weeks.

Plans are under way for a strenuous winter's work.

Our Correspondence

Mrs. A. Anderson; My Dear Sister: Sure you may be I was one to read your wail that went up with the appearing of the last issue of the Staff column, and must confine myself by the limits of propriety to the gentle task of taking doses moderate or excessive as the case may require. The nerve stimulating, revivifying process over, I may do my little part to support the (to a degree) neglected work you have at hand.

I had a very striking suggestion to write you for Staff publication about a month ago, and in fact as you may know I have often wanted to write. But this especial impression was at the time of testimony in a small branch, one brother repeating the lines of an early hymn of the church. I was much impressed with its wonderful and singular application, and my soul went forth in the beautiful idea of our hymns and songs, how singular and striking they should be, if we are to be Zion the pure in heart, if we shall gather, if we are not to be divided, all one body we. Then, my soul went out and my mind reveled in the thought that the most potential power under the influence of the Spirit of God to win men, to help them is song.

We must sing about them, all our music, all our songs must be teeming with the thought, the blessed hope, the fulfilling of the promises of God. It is blessed to sing of the things hid for ages and of the sweet bye and bye. But what we want to fill the souls of the children of God with, is the blessings, the wonder and power and glory he desires to bestow upon us here and now.

That had very much to do I feel with the rise and power of the old church. Permeating all through was the especial and singular story of the restored gospel, the powers, gifts, and blessings, its prophet and Zion. All over the land and in the islands, was it a mere lisp of the words? No, far more, it was the very essence of their life, breathed out in the only way there can be brought that sincere satisfaction which remains a joy for ever.

Oh, at some time when I feel again as I did then I might try to write about it. I trust you shall continue the good work and have the loyal support your labor is worthy of.

Most sincerely your brother,

T. J. ELLIOT.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

The Baby's Body

An infant was presented in the church to receive blessing at the hands of the elders. There was something very appealing about the little form as it lay in the repose of the hands that held it gently that he who prayed the divine Parent to bless the child asked that the little body might grow aright, while he also prayed for spiritual development to come to it.

It was reference to "the little body" that started a train of thought and investigation which has resulted in the following information gleaned from scientific sources worthy of our credence.

The Child's Record

If we read the current news, we must notice that attention is being given to human life in the periods of infancy and childhood in a manner not before known to us. The development of the body is being noted scientifically. A few years ago the baby was sometimes exhibited at a fair in a contest for the beauty prize; now the child so presented is subjected to an examination intended to ascertain how nearly he approaches the standard of perfection which pertains to his period of life. He is measured and weighed and submitted to scientific tests which show how well he is qualified to resist the enemies to life which surround us and which some pass safely while others succumb to them through inherent weakness.

The Mother's Notebook

Practically all specialists in children's diseases agree that "the weight of a child, if taken regularly, is the best thermometer of its health; it easily expresses in terms of figures what the nursing child can not express in words."

"In the more progressive countries, the  carnet maternel, or mother's notebook, has begun to come into fashion for the use of mothers belonging to the upper social classes (as, for instance, in England): it consists of a book of suitable design, in the form of an album, in which the most minute notes are to be registered regarding the lives of the children from the moment of their birth onward. Various authors, especially in France, now give models for the maternal registration of the child's physiological progress. . . . Nothing short of a great and far distant social progress could place all mothers (the working women and the illiterate) in a position to compile their  carnet maternel."

The Laws of Growth

"From the moment of the child's birth, throughout the first two days it suffers a loss in weight which, if normal, it regains by the end of the first week; so that after the seventh day the normal child weighs the same as at the moment of birth."

"Children nourished at the mother's breast double their weight at the fifth month and triple it at the twelfth. In other words, before the middle of its first year a healthy child, normally nourished, will have doubled its weight. On the contrary, artificial feeding retards this doubling of weight in children."

"There are certain maladies that cause a daily and notable loss in weight. They are the intestinal maladies. . . .When a child, suffering from acute febrile intestinal trouble (cholera infantum), loses a tenth of his weight in twenty-four hours, the illness is mortal."

In connection with the above, the authority from whom we are quoting says: "Undoubtedly a great moral and social progress would be accomplished through a wide dissemination of very simple and economical  carnets maternels; which should contain not only tables designed to facilitate the keeping of the required records, but also a statement of the laws of  infant hygiene; or at least, simple and clear explanations of the significance of such phenomena, in relation to the life and health of the child; and also as the causes which produce weakness in new-born children; or, in other words, advice regarding the fundamental laws of the hygiene of generation. All that would be needed, in such case, would be a progressive exposition by means of the  carnets, through lessons made as simple and as objective as possible, such as the weighing of small babies, to make the desired education of the mothers both possible and practical."

The Weighing Machine

"The use of the weighing machine, both at home and in school, can not be too strongly commended. In America the pedagogic custom has already been established of recording the weight of the pupils regularly once a month; but, instead of once a month, the weight ought to be taken  every day. The children might be taught to take their own weight by means of self-registering scales, and to compare it with that of the preceding day, thus learning to keep watch of themselves: and this would constitute both a physical exercise and an exercise in  practical living."

The Rate of Growth

"The greatest increase in stature takes place during the first year. . . . In no other year of life will the stature acquire so notable an increase. It is very important for mothers to watch the growth of the child during the first year of its life. During the second year of life, the increase in stature is about one half that of the preceding year. After this the annual increase diminishes in intensity."

Just prior to the approach of puberty (about the age of thirteen in boys) there occurs "a period of calm in growth," after which the rate of increase becomes markedly rapid during the period of adolescence until the eighteenth year has been passed, when the rate of increase again diminishes.

Growth in the stature continues up to the twenty-fifth year, after which it remains stable until the involution of old age begins, when the stature begins to decrease.

Of Importance to Parents

It is of importance to parents to be informed concerning the laws and periods of growth, because, side by side with the growth of the body in stature and weight runs the mortality of the body.

A principle to be noted is that "an organism in rapid evolution is exposed to death;" or, in other words, children are more liable to sickness and death in the periods of most rapid growth. We have already seen that the periods of most rapid growth are the first years of infancy and, later, the period of early adolescence, from thirteen to eighteen. The liability of the young child to die, if not well cared for, is well established in the public mind, but it remains yet to impress the fact that, during the period of puberty, liability to sickness and death is increased above what it is immediately before or after that period. Simplified, this means that a child, in the period from ten to thirteen, and a youth above eighteen is not so susceptible to sickness as in the period between thirteen and eighteen.

"There are certain ages at which even the strong are weak." They are the periods in which those individuals are going through the changes of most rapid growth. The child who in those periods does not make progress in his studies should not be urged on to enforced efforts, but should be protected from permanent weakness or an arrest of development. "Nature seems to exhaust for a time the powers of the mind, and our boys and girls have periods of stupidity and dullness apparently unaccountable. Laziness and spells of languor frequently manifest themselves, due to fatigue naturally accompanying rapid growth and all the other changes. With the normal boy and girl these spells will soon pass and extreme activity will take their place."

The Generation to Come

"Careful forethought not to produce immature or feeble fruit will form part of the coming man's regard for his posterity."

"Whoever weakens a child and puts a strain upon the threads of its existence, starts a vibration that will be felt throughout posterity."

We may well consider some of the causes which result in weakness in children. It is claimed that statistics collected demonstrate that "the number of children who die is largest in marriages contracted at the age of sixteen or earlier and becomes lowest among the children born of marriages contracted between the years of twenty-nine and thirty-two." It is claimed that mothers under twenty years of age and under proper weight bear children of inferior weight who are less predisposed to normal growth, and that women who toil at wearisome work up to the final hour give birth to children inferior in weight to those born of mothers who have had the needed quiet and rest for some time before the expected birth.

Nutrition

Nutrition has a very noteworthy influence upon growth. The children of the 'underfed' are undersized, as, of consequence, are children who themselves are underfed in the periods when the body should grow rapidly.

"There was a time when a good appetite was regarded as a low, material instinct. . . . To-day science is shedding its light on the true conception of nutrition and is holding it to be the first necessity of life and consequently the first problem to be solved."

Children must be fed, and fed that which nourishes, if they are to enjoy proper physical development.

"Children should never, in any case, drink wine, alcoholic liquors, tea or coffee—in other words, stimulants, which are poisons to their childish organisms. . . . Children who drink alcohol do not grow in stature. . . . Alcohol produces in children an arrest of mental development."

"Children need sugar, because sugar has great formative and plastic power; all young animals have sweetish flesh because their muscles, in the course of development, are extremely rich in sugar. The method of giving sugar to children should be as simple as possible, as with freshly cooked fruits sprinkled with sugar or served with a little syrup. But the substantial nourishment for young children should consist of soup or broth served hot, since heat is as essential as sugar for organisms in the course of development. The English commend soups made of cereals and gluten, in which it is never necessary to use soup stock."

The Mother's Magazine for July contains suggestive menus for the feeding of young children. The same information is to be obtained in other publications and is accessible to most mothers who desire to give careful attention to the subject of the nutrition of their children.

The Sources of Our Information

The statements quoted in these writings are from recognized authorities on the subject. Largely we have gleaned from a chapter on the principles of general biology in a scientific work by Doctor Maria Montessori. We have also quoted from a very able writer, Emma Virginia Fish, graduate of Hartford school of religious pedagogy. The material we have offered is, therefore, worthy of consideration as coming from those qualified to teach us.

Prayer Union

FOURTH THURSDAY IN JULY

Pray for our Sunday schools and the Religio societies; for the Prayer Union, and for all the auxiliary departments in the church, that each may be blessed in its work for the general uplift.

Lesson, 2 Corinthians 9: 8-15. Memory verse, 2 Corinthians 9: 12.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

A letter comes to us from Port Huron, Michigan, requesting prayers for the daughter of Sister James Cory. The afflicted one is suffering from derangement of the mind which has compelled her friends to send her to a hospital for those so afflicted. The request says: "Pray that, if it is God's will her mind may soon be restored and that, through this terrible affliction, she may be brought to obey the gospel."

Letter Department

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, June 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: Many and varied are the false and malicious statements published against "the Mormons," so-called. I have just gleaned a new story from a leading Paris paper. It says:

"The Mormons are a strong religious sect founded by the Reverend Arthur Smith about thirty years ago. Mr. Smith was a cotemporary of Mrs. Mary Eddy, the Christian Science founder, but the two could not agree in their faiths and Mr. Smith went west in a caravan with thousands of followers, many of whom were killed by Indians in crossing the deserts of America. Mormons have many wives, like the followers of Islam, and they are to be found in all American cities with their large families."

I suppose we will have to correct our history to date.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

GLASGOW, MONTANA, June 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: I take this way of letting Brother Peter Anderson know that we are very anxiously waiting for him.

This spring is the first that the gospel has been preached here in this wicked city of about eighteen hundred. Brother R. Newby, of Fairview, Montana, delivered the first sermons here, the meetings lasting not quite a week, and held in a private house. The neighbors turned out well, and some seemed much interested, saying, "He surely preached Bible," "I never heard anything like it before," "You folks certainly have the true church," etc.

My brother, E. R. Davis, of Viceroy, Saskatchewan, was here last week and preached two sermons, which were very acceptable.

There are only a few Saints here so far, but the work is surely going to be built up here. We need and must have at least two or three weeks preaching by, I would like to say a couple of elders, but this district is so large and there are so few laborers that we surely would be satisfied with one elder.

Brother Anderson, we want you for several reasons. We know you are an old missionary. There are many Scandinavians here. We have told different families about your coming, as Brother Newby informed us you would be here this summer, and they said, "When he comes, just bring him over."

We have already been promised by a nonmember the use of a grove not far from town where we might hold meetings. So all we lack is a preacher, and one of the ministry will be welcome any time.

Sister Sandidge and three children came here this spring from Saskatchewan. She certainly is an instrument in the hands of God. If we all did our duty as she does in warning our neighbors I am sure there would be many more in the church. She must have been sent here. She is just the one we need for this place.

Before closing I want to ask the Saints to pray for my mother who is almost helpless from sickness and sorrows that have been placed upon her (and who could have borne it all more patiently), that if it is God's will she may be comforted in her last days. The prayers of the Saints have surely been heard in the past, for she has been blessed in different ways.

We hope to hear from or see one or more of the missionaries soon. Should any of the ministers come who are strangers here, call phone number sixty W, or inquire for R. H. Davis' residence. It will be easily found on the south side of the track.

With love and best wishes to all, I am ever

Your sister in Christ,

LUTIE B. DAVIS.

HUGOTON, KANSAS, June 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: This writing finds me visiting with my relatives in Southwestern Kansas. Wife and I came here from Independence the 17th inst. To be explicit, we left Independence the 16th and arrived at Dodge City that evening. We remained over night at Dodge City, being the guests of Sister Nancy Thorpe. We had a pleasant time with her, her son and his wife and their little boy. The son is also a member of the church. They are genuine Latter Day Saints. They take all the church papers, and are always glad to welcome the missionaries. Their address is 1208 Santa Fe Trail. I give it so any of the missionaries who pass through may be able to call. I was in Dodge City twice before I knew anything about them or their address. I learned of them through a letter Sister Thorpe wrote to the Ensign.

We arrived here on the afternoon of the 17th. My sister, Mrs. E. E. Kramer, lives in town, and is in charge of the telephone exchange. We remained over night because of a public school commencement in which my sister's son, Elvin, had a part. The next day my brother, J. D. Barmore, took us out to his place, fifteen miles distant, where we are at present domiciled.

Just now is a good time for our missionaries here, for the ministers of the other churches have quit preaching in the country districts, because last year's drought has made it impossible for the people to pay the salaries they require. This is a new country, and the complete or all but failure of last year's crops has put it back. Some of the citizens have just proven up on government claims, while the rest have not yet completed their time.

While in Independence I was in the Sanitarium nineteen days, where I underwent an operation for hernia. I stood it well, but have not yet recovered sufficiently to resume my ministerial labors. I am here recuperating. Physically I feel well. I am well enough to read and write, but not yet able to travel and preach. I do not know when my body will be strong and firm enough for my usual exertions.

Of late years I have led a life of great physical activity, for which I am now disqualified. I have felt this restraint very much and still feel it, although of course my activity is greater than when I was confined to the Sanitarium. I have, of course, submitted to surgical treatment with the view of increasing my efficiency. As it was, I was laboring under a handicap which would have continued through life. As it is, I expect a complete cure. Some of the Saints who read in the Ensign of my operation have written expressing sympathy and anxiety. To these and others it is only necessary to state that my general health has remained good, and that I have not at any time been in a serious or dangerous condition.

Doctor E. D. Twyman was my surgeon. Doctor W. E. Messenger assisted. The operation was perfectly performed. I regard my presence in the Sanitarium as a variation in my life, which had its lessons, as well as other experiences. I considered it an opportunity in which I might succeed or fail in manifesting the faith and resignation of a Saint. It was the first time in my ministry of twenty-one years that I had been laid aside. Brother F. C. Keck was with me. At a communion service held in the Sanitarium chapel we were spoken to in the gift of tongues and promised future activity and usefulness. There is a prayer service held there every Sunday at 2.30 p. m. There is also singing and prayer daily at 8 a. m. In my judgment the spiritual character of the institution provided for in the revelation is fully maintained.

I had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the Sanitarium as an institution of the church which otherwise I could not have had. I understand its work and workers better than before. To begin with: The business and mechanical management are all they can be. Brethren Haas and Reese fit into their positions perfectly. Brother Campbell, who works on the grounds, I have known for twenty years. I have always regarded him as a conscientious man and a model Latter Day Saint. He is the only one there with whom I had had a previous acquaintance. In addition to my own surgeons I met, of course, Doctor L. E. Harrington, the physician in charge, also Doctor Mather, Doctor Green, Doctor Braun and Doctor Keown. I met others, too, but their names I do not now recall. All of these men have my highest esteem, both from a professional and personal standpoint. As to the nursing staff, there could not be found a better class of girls if the six continents were searched. Doctors Twyman and Braun, Miss Howell, the matron, Miss Miller, the instructor, and Miss Tudor, one of the nurses, are not members of our church, but they are as good as those who are. Many of the patients are also nonmembers, but they all had a good word for the Sanitarium.

Why could not our branches and auxiliary societies do more for the Sanitarium? I am sure they could and would if they were conscious of its needs. Beds and table linen and such articles as towels and napkins are always in demand, for they wear out rapidly. Good, clean rags in large quantities can also be used in some way. These are some of the little things. A hint to the wise is sufficient.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

STELLARTON, NOVA SCOTIA, June 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: In this place the people do not believe the doctrine of Christ. My wife and I are here where we are not permitted to hear the true gospel preached, much as we would like to hear it.

I love the old-time gospel, the faith once delivered to the Saints. I ask the Saints to pray God to send some one to minister to us in the good way. We are both strong believers in the restored gospel. We have been baptized, but did not receive the blessing enjoyed by the Saints, the minister who officiated not having been called. I enjoy reading the HERALD and other church literature.

I trust that the Lord will send some one here.

Your brother in faith,
SIMON S. BIGNEY.

STELLARTON, NOVA SCOTIA.

Editors Herald: I have received great enlightenment in reading the HERALD and church books. We could not get along without the HERALD. I am not a Saint, but would like to be one. Pray that a minister may be sent our way.

We know of no Latter Day Saints living near here. I heard two of your ministers preach two nights in 1911 and secured papers of them. These men were Daniel Macgregor and John Sheehy. I have since been praying and waiting for some one to come. Both my husband and myself know that this is the true church. We sent for the Book of Mormon and other books. As we long to be one of you, pray for us that we may be more enlightened.

Yours in the one faith,
N. BIGNEY.

JONESPORT, MAINE, June 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: A month ago, after committing loved ones to the care of the One we serve, my departure from home was taken for my work along the Atlantic Coast. En route East I called at Washington.

We now have at the capital a considerable number of wide-awake, devoted Saints, who are making praiseworthy efforts to establish our work in that city. About fifteen were present on one occasion at the home of Brother George Briggs in attendance at a preaching service by Elder H. O. Smith and myself. While in the city we made our home with Brother Briggs, whom we found with his wife (nee Grace Kelley) taking a lively interest in all that related to the welfare of the church. Brother Briggs is in the educational department of the governmental service. We were pleased to see in the little gathering of the Saints, Brethren Guy Mintun and Rupert Wight, of former acquaintance, who also are employed in the service of the Government. The Saints of Washington constitute a splendid representative class of people. We hope to see in this noted and interesting city a regular, permanent meeting place for the church.

At present I am in Jonesport, Maine, a coast town, long noted for its sardine and lobster industries. No better place exists anywhere for the prosecution of church work than is afforded in this region of country. Those not of the church seem ready to learn of the church so far as the church is able to make known its message; those holding membership are loyal to the church in all of its departments.

The lateness of the seasons here is very noticeable—lilacs are now in bloom and apple trees in blossom.

The church is moving on towards Zion's redemption—it is Christ's and he can be depended on to direct its course to a happy end.

Without equality both of a law to administer and its administration, there must be inequality develop; such a perfect law has been given to the church. Its observance has led and will lead to a spirit of brotherhood and cooperation that will establish Zion. Personal contact with the church membership is necessary to know and then supply the needs of the church. Believing that, I am desirous of magnifying my calling by coming in contact with the church, though such action calls for my presence away from home.

The same may be said with reference to the needs of the world. God's work can not be successfully carried on in any other way than by coming in contact with the people. This is evidenced by the course pursued by John the Baptist, also the early seventies and apostles. Where is there room for any feeling except that which prompts one to move among all classes? Is the Christ spirit possessed if we desire to move only among the cultured, or those of means, or position? Verily, no! This applies to the membership of the church as well as to the ministry. The Christ way leads to mingling with all classes, that they may derive from what we may possess of learning, wisdom, divine knowledge, and culture.

Anything that partakes of class distinction in the church or out of it, by one person or a group of persons, by anyone in the ministry or out of it, must come to naught; it does not truly have and should not have the support of the people. Everyone, so long as he desires to do right, no matter what are his gifts, is needed in the body of Christ, and should be made to know he has an important station to fill in the church.

Recognition is due first to those who have worked hard and given of their time and means to carry on the Lord's work, though their outward adorning may not be so noticeable by reason of the sacrifice made, rather than to be given to mere leaders along social lines, who appeal only to a certain class. Otherwise sacrifice will come to mean to many a sign of weakness, only resorted to by those whose tastes are not developed along artistic and social lines. That which even remotely discourages sacrifice by giving recognition to class distinction neutralizes, or destroys the effect of what many are giving their lives to build up, the great latter-day work restored to earth by command of God through angelic ministrations. Rather is it the true way to let the burden of the missionaries' wives be lightened, their sacrifices not forgotten, Zion's children encouraged in their humble efforts to bring forth Zion, the poor remembered, a demonstration made all along the line individually and collectively of the power of God in his church.

The reunion of the Massachusetts District, which because of its past years of inspiring good times and successful work has become favorably known throughout the Eastern Mission, will meet at Onset, Massachusetts, beginning July 25 and hold over three Sundays. Leading men of the church are expected to be present. As usual a good time is anticipated.

With faith in Zion's cause, I am,
PAUL M. HANSON.

LOGAN, NORTH DAKOTA, June 30, 1914.

Editors Herald: The North Dakota reunion met this year in the beautiful grove of Brother and Sister H. L. Tiltens, near Logan, North Dakota, June 19 to 29. For speakers we had J. W. Wight, William Sparling, James C. Page, J. E. Wildermuth, Thomas Leitch, of the missionary force, and J. S. Wagener, Warren McElwain, R. V. Rasmussen of the local brethren. The attendance was larger than last year, when we were at Fargo in joint reunion with the Minnesota District. The baptisms exceeded those of any previous reunion in the State, fifteen having entered into covenant with Christ. The Spirit of the Master pervaded our gathering throughout, so that peace and love was sensibly felt by all.

Brother Wight administered in his office very acceptably, and was kept busy, besides being called upon about every other day for instruction and council. He gave thirty-four blessings.

The music and singing was exceptionally good. Many outsiders were heard to commend it very highly. We noted improvement along every line of our work. Three brethren were ordained to the office of elder, Warren McElwain, Thomas Leitch and J. W. Darling.

The Saints decided to hold the next reunion at the same place and the committee set the date for July 2 to 12, 1915. In all, much good was accomplished. The Saints were revived and strengthened in the faith, and a goodly number of outsiders were instructed with reference to the narrow way pointed out by Christ. Some heavy rains the last of the reunion brought just a little discomfort, but all seemed in good spirits and glad they were there. Calls for the missionary come from every quarter, he is bewildered to know how to meet the demands, and just where to go first. The Spirit of the Lord through the gifts of the gospel spoke comforting words to the Saints on several occasions. Brethren William Sparling, J. W. Darling, and Thomas Leitch were chosen to preside, with J. C. Page, secretary and press agent. The auxiliaries held their conventions and institute as also the church its conference.

Extracts from Letters

In a letter to Brother John Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, Brother U. W. Greene wrote from Jerusalem: "Sectarian prejudice is a great hindrance to our work here. Nearly all men are employed by the churches in some way, and they threaten to discharge any who attend our services; in some instances they have done so. People are afraid to attend on that account. The people at Roum, Lebanon, are asking for preaching and school work, and I hope to assist them and arrange for future work there. We longed for association with Saints during the late Conference, but spent an evening in Gethsemane, the exact date of the night the Lord agonized there, the dates coming the same for the first time in several hundred years. Then we followed the events of passion week from day to day, and felt that there was no great loss without some small gain. Many of the Saints would gladly miss a Conference for our experience. Would you?"

Brother Lester Whiting, writing with reference to the Minnesota reunion at Clitherall, says: "The Saints certainly had a ten days' feast. Brethren L. E. Hills, B. S. Lambkin, J. W. Wight, J. A. Gunsolley, and the local ministry all joined forces in dispensing the gospel message. The old saying 'In union there is strength' certainly proved itself true in this case. I am sure good was done to those outside the fold as well as to those within. The prayer meetings were of a very spiritual order, the gifts being much in evidence, to the joy and satisfaction of the Saints, as well as wonder and amazement of the outside world. May we each begin to-day to make preparation for the next year's reunion, by placing ourselves in that spiritual condition before our heavenly Father that will cause us to be worthy of the great blessings he has in store for the faithful. May the Lord help us all."

Charley Fry, Saint Joseph, Missouri: "Moved to the above address last Friday, and am doing what I can to look after the interests of the work here. Will have plenty to do. The Saints of the several branches and missions here united in a patriotic picnic-celebration at Hyde Park on the Fourth. The place is a beautiful, secluded spot, where only Saints assembled with a few friends, numbering in all about five hundred. A program was rendered of instrumental and vocal music, an address by the writer, and the reading of the Declaration of Independence by Brother John Bear. Picnic dinner was served and the afternoon spent in games and contests. The event was a grand success and gave credit to the brethren of the branches whose diligence and labor made it so."

E. B. Hull, Brooklyn, New York: "We had a very successful Sunday school-Religio institute here on June 28. District Sunday school Superintendent O. T. Christy and District Religio President Edmond Gleazer, both of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, were in attendance. Some fine papers were read by local talent. These institutes are calculated to inspire and encourage the local workers, and should be had in every district."

Arizona

About one year ago we left San Antonio, Texas, for our field, Arizona. Still fresh in our mind is the following remark of an outsider at the former place, "The Latter Day Saints surpass any church in the city at rounding their children up for church. They almost live there." We remember that the credit belongs largely to the tireless and arduous Sunday school and Religio leaders.

The little branch at Bisbee, Arizona, is not without its young members prominent in music, Religio, and Sunday school departments. Older heads preside over the branch with commendable zeal, and also help in the auxiliaries. Saints passing through Bisbee will be at home when calling at the little church opposite the Warren Laundry, on Tombstone Canyon.

Last winter we spent a month at Phoenix, holding forth first in residences and lastly on the city hall grounds. At the former the attendance hardly exceeded the three or four families who composed the regular Sunday school and prayer meeting. At the latter place the attendance was encouraging, but much disturbed by "Industrial Workers of the World," who talked out during services and ridiculed the Bible. After dismissal a few of the same order, however, showed respect for the preaching and tried to quiet their fellow members.

Last month we met a lady in Douglas who by reading the Book of Mormon was convinced that it was true and that polygamy was wrong. The Book of Mormon was furnished her by the Brighamites. She wished for the first time to hear representatives of the Reorganization, thinking that they were the right church, having heard that they opposed the plural marriage doctrine. With the assistance of Elder S. D. Condit we held a three weeks open air meeting near her residence. She and other members of the family have joined our new Sunday school and talk of being baptized soon.

A few of the Brighamite officials ventured out to about three services, contending once or twice that the Bible justified polygamy, and inviting the crowd to come and hear them refute our position at their own church. Brother Condit replied with prudence, and invited them to discuss the question with us so the people could hear both sides fairly examined. They declined to accept this proposition.

Your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM H. MANNERING.

Buffalo, New York

Elders A. E. Stone and A. M. Chase have been with us since our district conference, also Sister Chase and daughter Alice since school closed at Cornell.

We have a nice Sunday school and Religio here, with good interest in both. For July and August our attendance is not so large as at other times on account of so many being away to reunions or on vacations. At our Wednesday evening prayer service, James C. Blair was ordained to the office of deacon.

Although the work in this city is progressing slowly, we have some earnest workers and hope that in the future they will see the fruits of their labors.

Ever praying for the advancement of this glorious gospel,
AGNES B. BATCHELOR.

The Presidency

GENERAL CONFERENCE, 1915

It will be remembered that the last General Conference when adjournment was being considered fixed the date for the convening of the 1915 conference at April 6, 1915, but the place for the holding of the conference was left to the First Presidency to determine.

In consultation with the proper officials, arrangements have been made with the Burlington Railway which promises satisfactory handling of the delegates in and out of Lamoni. Therefore, the Presidency hereby gives notice that the conference of 1915 will be held at Lamoni, Iowa, on the dates fixed by action of the conference.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Southern Indiana District: In looking over the past year in our district we find much to encourage us. We had a large missionary force and much good was done. Some new names were recorded on our books and a goodly amount of tithes and offerings were received. Some of the Saints did well—we are doing well when we strive to honor the Master's law. Some we are sorry to say, have not yet risen to that condition in their spiritual growth and development where they see the necessity of complying with the financial law; they fail to realize that the same God who gave the law of repentance and baptism for the remission of sins also gave the law of tithings, free-will offerings and consecrations; that they are both perfect laws in their respective spheres, or are parts of a perfect system of laws, designed to make the comers thereunto perfect.

We can not reach perfection by complying with a part of the law; but as we grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth—the law of God—we understand the different parts of his law, and by complying with each, as we get an understanding of it, to that extent we become perfect, and exemplify the fact that we are striving to heed the injunction of the Master: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your father in heaven is perfect."

During the past conference year we ran behind quite an amount in meeting the expenses of the missionary force of the district, which caused much inconvenience to the missionaries families, and we believe hindered the work to some extent. We trust that our heavenly Father will bless us this conference year, and that the Saints will place greater faith in his almighty power, and strive to come up higher, honor his law, keep his commandments, which, if we do, we will find at the end of the year that instead of a deficit there will be a balance in our favor.

May God help us to come up higher, to each day strive to be more perfect, is the prayer of

Your fellow servant,

CHARLES H. FISH, Bishop's Agent.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, 645 West Twenty-ninth Street.

Book Reviews

BRET HARTE.—Stories and Poems, Compiled by Charles Meeker Kozley. Pp. 429. Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. $6. America has no writing son to whom she yields more sincere admiration than to Bret Harte. Mr. Kozley has, for years, been studying the files of California newspapers, and here presents a vast amount of hitherto uncollected writings by Harte, immature and unrevised, but revealing the same genius which was shown later in more finished form. Most of the stories and poems were contributions to The Golden Era and The Californian during the years 1860-65. They are alive with that rare sense of humor so peculiar to Bret Harte, that appreciation of motive underlying the lives of the pioneers of the West, as well as a keen sympathy with all that is genuine and true in character. Many specimens would doubtless have been lost had they not here been collected for preservation. They show steady and gradual development. The author then signed himself "Bret," "H.," "F. B. H.," or used some of his many noms-de-plume. The book is attractively bound, beautifully illustrated, and is a great addition to our Bret Harte bibliography.

THEY WHO KNOCK AT OUR GATES.—By Mary Antin, Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Street, Boston, Massachusetts. Price $1. This is an interesting and valuable study of the immigrant question, the more remarkable because it is written by one who is a child of immigrants herself, and has made her way up from the slums. In her passionate appeal for the higher ideals of American citizenship she shames many who trace their genealogy back to the Mayflower. In her introduction she says that the three main questions to be asked with reference to immigration are, first, Have we any right to regulate immigration? second, What is the nature of our present immigration? third, Is immigration good for us? Assuming that a great fundamental principle of American life is stated in the Declaration of Independence, she concludes that the first question must be answered in the negative. If all men are born free and equal and have an inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, she concludes that the poor of Europe have an inalienable right to better their fortunes, preserve their lives, and seek their happiness in the land of liberty and opportunity. In answering the second question she concludes that our present immigration is better than it has been represented, that we draw the best classes even from Southern Europe, that those who come do so in pursuit of an ideal and are men and women of initiative and courage or they would not undertake such an adventure. She points out the fact that they respond readily to our institutions and that children of immigrants annually take the highest places in the graduating classes of our schools. The third question also is answered affirmatively. The following is quoted from the closing chapter of this book: "Not the good of the flesh, but that of the spirit is the good we seek. If it is good for the soul of this Nation that we should walk in the difficult path our fathers trod, harkening only to the inner voice, never pausing to hear the counsels of cold prudence, then assuredly it is good for us to lift up the burdens of welcoming and caring for our brothers from other lands, thus putting into fuller use the instrument of democracy the fathers invented, —our Republic, founded to promote liberty and justice among men. . . . Immigration on a large scale into every country as thinly populated as ours must go on, will go on, as long as there are other countries with denser populations and scantier resources for sustaining them. Right through history, the needy peoples have gone in and taken possession of the fat lands of their neighbors. Formerly these invasions were effected by force; nowadays they are largely effected by treaties, laws, international understandings. But always the tide flows from the lands of want to the lands of plenty. Nature is behind this movement; man has no power to check it permanently. We in America may, if we choose, shut ourselves up in the midst of our plenty and gorge till we are suffocated, but that will only postpone the day of a fair division of our country's riches. We shall grow inert from fullness, drunk with the wine of prosperity, and presently some culminating folly, such as every degenerate nation sooner or later commits, will leave us at the mercy of the first comers, and our spoils will be divided among the watchers outside our gates."

THE CHANGING ORDER.—By George W. Wickersham. G. P. Putnam's Sons, 2, 4, and 6 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City. Price $1.25. Mr. Wickersham was Attorney General of the United States during one of the most stirring periods of our recent history. The subjects taken up in his book are: The progress of law, the State and the Nation, college men and public questions, business and the law, recent interpretation of the Sherman Act, regulation of interstate commerce, results of the trust dissolution suits, new states and their constitutions, etc. From his preface we quote the following: "These essays are by-products of the writer's work as head of the United States Department of Justice during the four years from March 5, 1909, to March 5, 1913. That period was instinct with great problems. New conceptions of the relation of government to industrial organization were asserting themselves; new theories of government finding expression. The old order was changing. The epochal litigation between the Government and great industrial combinations culminated in a series of decisions rendered in cases argued during that period in the Federal Supreme Court. By these decisions, the supremacy of law and government over monopoly was established. During the same period, the laws regulating common carriers in interstate commerce were radically amended, and these laws, and great questions arising out of them, also were brought to the Supreme Court for construction and exposition. The admission of the territories of New Mexico and Arizona into the Union gave rise to the discussion at the National Capitol of profound modifications in constitutional government as it had been theretofore understood and practiced. These changes were being embodied in new institutions of some of the western States. Their inclusion in the constitutions of the new States, presented to the Congress for approval, compelled a consideration of the meaning of the words "republican form of government," as used in the Constitution of the United States.

this summer will do you more good than a barrel of medicine. Get out into the open, close to nature and have the time of your life. Rest, relax and recreate. Ride over sun-flooded trails in the hills; row on silvery lakes; fish in shady brooks; tramp down winding paths among the trees; loaf in soft valleys of green; stroll in the moonlight; eat of the fat of the land and sleep like a babe. Such a vacation pays tremendous health dividends. You will come back feeling like a different person.

In the Black Hills of South Dakota, in the Big Horn Moun- tains of Wyoming, in the Buffalo Bill country, along the Cody Road into Yellowstone Park, there are countless places where you can spend just such a vacation and at a very moderate cost. The Hot Springs (S. D.) teem with life-giving and disease-curing qualities, while down at Thermopolis, in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, is a hot spring, the waters of which are as an anti-toxin to hundreds of ills that beset the human race.

THE INSIDE OF THE CUP

(Sermon by Elder Elbert A. Smith, delivered Sunday evening, November 9, 1913, as the closing sermon of the series of revival meetings held in Lamoni in conjunction with Elders Frederick A. Smith and John W. Wight. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. [Or, as the Inspired Version has it, "Unspotted from the vices of the world."]—James 1:22-27.

I am tempted to-night to take for my text these words, "What are you going to do about it?" applying them to that heaven-born impulse that has come into your hearts to do better and live better because of these meetings.

I was admonished by a good sister to give you a practical discourse to-night, and I can think of nothing more practical to start on than to suggest to you this thought: it would be extremely foolish and extravagant for us to spend two weeks of our time here every evening talking or listening, as the case may be, and not determine to get the greatest possible amount of good out of that which has been presented. And so I ask you to consider that which you have heard and which you have felt, and then answer this question, What are you going to do about it?

LOOKING INTO THE GOSPEL MIRROR

We are told in the Scripture lesson that we have read that the individual who is a hearer of the word and not a doer of it is like the man who looks in the glass and sees his natural face and then goes away and forgets what manner of man he is. The great gospel mirror that is held out before us from time to time reveals to us what manner of men we are. But too often we go out from the presence of God and immediately forget the defects that have been revealed, and make no effort to correct them.

Possibly there have been those in attendance at these meetings who have noticed, and it has been borne in upon their minds, that the gospel that we present is strictly in harmony with the word of God. I refer now to individuals who do not belong to the church. And they have felt the impulse that they would like to serve God. Now, will they go away and forget that which has been revealed to them?

And again, there may be those members of the church who, coming into these meetings and looking into the great gospel mirror, have discovered things in their characters that ought to be corrected. They have seen those things in their lives that ought to be removed. Now, will those individuals go away and forget that which has been revealed by this little glance into the gospel mirror?

THAT "MORE OPPORTUNE TIME"

I wish to remind you of the experience of Felix when Paul reasoned before him and presented the gospel of Jesus Christ. Felix, trembling and self-condemned, realizing the truth of that which Paul had presented, said to him, "Go thy way, for this time; when I have a more convenient season I will call for thee." There never came a more opportune time in the life of Felix, and in the great day of judgment that will stand to his condemnation. There can be no more opportune time to do the will of God than when that will is borne in upon our hearts. Any individual who shrinks from truth is a moral coward.

I presume you have all read or heard that celebrated poem by Senator Ingalls, called Opportunity, but I am going to read it again to-night because there is a thought in it I want you to grasp.

OPPORTUNITY

Master of human destinies am I:
Fame, Love, and Fortune on my footsteps wait:
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate
Deserts and seas remote, and passing by Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late,
I knock unbidden, once at every gate.

If sleeping, wake; if feasting, rise before
I turn away; it is the hour of Fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save Death; but those who doubt or hesitate
Condemned to Failure, Penury, and Woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore;
I answer not, and I return no more.

We do not endorse all of the philosophy of that poem. We think possibly that opportunity does come again to some doors; but never, perhaps, with the same privileges, and possibly not until we have waited until our hearts are sore and we have repented for the lost chance that was given to us. But the thought was that when opportunity knocks at our door it is the "hour of fate." For Felix it was the hour of fate; but he unwittingly let it pass by.

"ALMOST PERSUADED"

And then we remember Agrippa a little later, before whom Paul stood and reasoned in that sublime discourse of his. When he had finished, Agrippa, moved out of his kingly reserve and stirred to the very depths of his heart, called out, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." And Paul answered, "I would to God, that not only thou but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds."

And so to-night we can say if there are any here who are almost persuaded, we would to God that they were not only almost but altogether persuaded to take up the service of God in the strictest sense of the word. And to them it is, as it was to Agrippa, the "hour of fate." And so it was to Nicodemus when he came in the nighttime and approached the Master, and the Master said to him, "You must be born again." Nicodemus, coming in the night, went away in the night, and that is just about all we know about Nicodemus.

The opportune time is when the impulse of the Holy Spirit whispers in our heart and tells us, Now is God's time. The question is not, When is my time? but when is God's time?

RELIGION AND GOODNESS

We want to impress on your minds this evening the true character of religion. I was talking with an individual a little more than a year ago, a member of the church, too, by the way, and he said, "It isn't hard for me to be good, but it is awfully hard for me to be religious." I looked at him with a degree of curiosity. I said, "What do you mean by being religious?" He said, "Offering long prayers in public and cheating your neighbor in private." I replied, "You must have a peculiar conception of religion. That is not religion, that is hypocrisy, and no man can be religious who is not at the same time good."

THE INSIDE OF THE CUP

And so that brings me to the subject, that of the Inside of the Cup. You remember on a certain occasion the Master was dining with some of the Pharisees, and they marveled that he sat down to eat without washing his hands as was their strict custom. But the Master, great teacher that he was, selected an illustration from their own table, and said to them:

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess. Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also. Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchers, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.

I do not read this to-night with any thought that these denunciations of the Master, leveled at the Pharisees, have any application at all to this congregation. Nor have I any particular individuals to whom I think they have application. If there are such, however, in this congregation, they should consider well where they stand.

Passing by the denunciation entirely, we want to grasp the principle presented, that while it is necessary to cleanse the outside of the cup it is even more necessary to cleanse the inside.

While it is necessary to have a perfect form of doctrine and observe all the letter of the law and the ceremonies and ordinances, it is even more important to have personal righteousness.

While it is necessary to be well-dressed and clean, it is infinitely more necessary to have a clean heart and a pure character before God.

CORRUPT SOCIAL CIRCLES

This principle has a great many applications. We can apply it to society, for instance. Some years ago there was a young married lady, a member of the church, who went out into a social gathering among those who were not members of the church, with possibly one or two exceptions. And she came home from that little circle of women folks and wept, feeling degraded and humiliated because the greater part of the time was taken up with telling indecent stories and scandals and rumors of a salacious nature about individuals living in the neighborhood. She had not been used to that in church circles.

These women were well-dressed, well-powdered, and they were no strangers to the bath-tub,—but "inside of the cup," inside of the heart, inside of that social circle, was that corruption that led them to dwell on those things of obnoxious nature.

Possibly there are many social circles where this lesson ought to go home with a great deal of force.

THE MUNICIPAL CUP

Then we might apply it to cities. Foreigners coming across the Atlantic Ocean to our shores, behold first the great Statue of Liberty, holding aloft the torch that is supposed to enlighten the world. They see also those great sky scrapers of New York City, one of the greatest cities of the world, presenting such an exterior of power and magnificence, and are told of its dense population and of its commercial greatness. But under the surface of that great city is hidden all manner of social corruption, of political graft, and vice and crime and degradation of every nature. Oh, yes, the exterior is very pleasing; but what about the inside of the cup? What about the inside of the city?

And we can take that lesson home to our hearts in this little community. It is well for us to have nice homes, well-trimmed lawns, and level streets, all those things are legitimate and proper; but it is infinitely more important that we shall have a city made up of honorable and honest men and virtuous and pure women. What about the inside of the city? And are there any things in this little community that ought to be purged out? If there are, we trust that we will give a little more attention to the cleansing of the inside of the cup, not forgetting either to keep the outside in a proper condition.

THE INNER AND THE OUTER LINCOLN

We might apply this individually for the benefit of us all. It is not always the exterior of the individual that counts. When Abraham Lincoln went to the White House the polite social circles of Washington snickered behind his back, he was so uncouth and so awkward and so poorly dressed. They saw simply the outside Lincoln. But before four years had gone by they began to see the inner man, this whole nation began to see the inner Lincoln, and no one ever laughed at the inner Lincoln. And those who got the nearest glimpse of him saw what a difference there was between the exterior and the interior.

There is a little story illustrating his exterior homeliness of feature, to the effect that one time he was riding through the woods and met an individual. When that individual saw him, he pulled out his revolver and said, "Stop. I swore one time that if I ever met a man homelier than I am I would shoot him."

Lincoln stopped, took a good look at the individual, and said in his slow, humorous way, "All right, shoot away. If I am homelier than you are I don't care to live."

But there was another little story about a poor old mother whose son out on the battle field had slept at night while on guard duty, and was sentenced to die. His mother came to the White House, pleading for her son. The secretaries would not let her in. But Lincoln heard her talking at the door and invited her into his room and listened to her story. And he found that the boy was only eighteen years old. Then he said, "This great nation shall never with my consent stand an eighteen year old boy up against a wall and shoot him." And he found also that this boy had been taking the place of another comrade and had been up the night previously, and consequently had gone to sleep. So he seized his pen and wrote out a pardon. And the poor old mother fell to her knees, stroking those ungainly hands of "Father Abraham" and said, "Mr. Lincoln, they told me you were a homely man, but your face is the most beautiful face that I have ever seen."

His character was so lovely it even sanctified his homely countenance, and to-day we would not change a single line of that countenance, as we have it portrayed on canvas and in marble if we could do so.

And we think about that greater man, Jesus of Nazareth. In the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah the prophecy is made, "When we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." So when they saw him hanging on the cross they saw no beauty in him. His haggard and worn exterior was all they saw.

But we, beholding the true beauty of his spirit, are led to sing, "He's the lily of the valley, the bright and morning star; He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul."

"EXCEPT YOUR RIGHTEOUSNESS EXCEED"

Jesus on one occasion was talking to his disciples and said, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." The Pharisees were very strict to observe the letter of the law. They kept all the little customs, all the little ceremonies that were in the law and the many traditions that the elders had handed down to them. But within their hearts they were corrupt, they were greedy, they were unmerciful, they were dishonest, they were so unutterably vile that Jesus said they would devour widows' houses. That is, they would cheat a poor widow out of her house and defraud orphans, which is the exact opposite of what James says is pure religion and undefiled: "To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

And so that lesson should come home to us as religious individuals, that though the doctrine may be absolutely defensible, (and we have tried to prove that to you for the past two weeks) though our

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

PASSING OF JUSTICE LURTON.—Associate Justice Lurton of the United States Supreme Court died suddenly in a hotel at Atlantic City, New Jersey, July 12, from heart failure superinduced by cardiac asthma.

REVOLUTION IN HAITI.—To impress upon the revolutionists of San Domingo and Haiti the determination of the United States Government to terminate their activities by force unless they heed the warnings already given, the United States Navy Department has been ordered to assemble marines at Guantanamo, Cuba, a day's sail from the north coast of these revolution-riven countries.

"STORSTAD" BLAMED.—The commission investigating the collision of the Storstad and Empress of Ireland have fastened the blame on the third officer of the Storstad, for keeping the navigation of the vessel in his own hands without calling the captain, Thomas Anderson, when he saw the fog coming on, and for changing the course of the Storstad in the fog and after each vessel had sighted the other.

ALCOHOL AND INSANITY.—Declaring alcoholic drinks to be responsible for a large part of the world's insanity, feeble-mindedness, epilepsy, and "other forms of mental, moral, and physical degeneracy," the national convention of alienists and neurologists at Chicago, on the fourteenth, by unanimous vote passed resolutions recommending that state legislatures prevent traffic in alcoholics; that physicians promulgate public education as to alcohol's deleterious effects. Report says that alcohol did not appear to have one friend in this convention of physicians and scientists.

REFUSE CONFIRMATION OF JONES.—On the grounds that he is a director of the Harvester Trust, "judiciously declared" to be "an unlawful conspiracy," and now under prosecution by the United States, and a director of the Zinc Trust, having a practical monopoly in oxide of zinc, the Committee on Banking and Currency in a majority report to the Senate on the fifteenth, refused to confirm the nomination by President Wilson of Thomas D. Jones of Chicago for member of the Federal Reserve Board, to control the new banking system.

CHARGE NEW HAVEN.—In what is said to be the most severe indictment ever made by that commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission on the thirteenth sent to the Senate a report on the financial operations of the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad Company, charging criminal negligence in waste and mismanagement resulting in a loss to stockholders of sixty to ninety million dollars. These lapses constituting "one of the most glaring instances of maladministration in the history of American railroading," include alleged deception in the management of accounts, the burning of papers and accounts to thwart the investigation of the interstate Commerce Commission, the secret use of money in bribing political managers, newspapers and public officers, and dummy companies to conceal illegal transactions.

MEXICAN WAR.—On the 15th General Huerta resigned, and Francisco S. Carbajal, foreign minister, succeeded him. All members of the Huerta cabinet also resigned, leaving Carbajal free to surround himself with advisers of his own choice. Huerta, accompanied by General Blanquet, joined their families at Puerto, Mexico, on the 17th, from which port it was anticipated they would take passage on a foreign gunboat for a foreign port. The Constitutionalists, according to their previous plans, will not recognize Carbajal, appointed by Huerta as foreign minister, and under the constitution succeeding him in the presidency as provisional president. Carbajal, however, is understood to be ready to transfer the government to the Constitutionalists on guarantee of the protection of the lives and property of all elements in Mexico, and a grant of amnesty to all Federalists. The United States Government urges Carranza to agree to these terms. Final occupancy of Mexico City without further bloodshed is hoped for. Conference looking to this peaceful entry of the Constitutionalists into the city is expected. Under the protocol signed at Niagara Falls, the United States can only recognize a government set up by agreement between Constitutionalists and Federalists. And until such government is established the Army will remain in Vera Cruz. San Luis Potosi, according to reports, has surrendered to the Constitutionalists.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

A LIBERAL OFFER.—We are in receipt of pamphlets from Brother J. H. Tyrrell of 197 King Street West, Chatham, Ontario, setting forth briefly the faith and character of the Saints, and offering one thousand dollars to anyone who can show that the Reorganized Church is in any way connected with the Utah Church. These pamphlets are by Brother Tyrrell inclosed with other literature and sent into new fields preparatory to the work of the missionary. He informs us that he has three new openings ready for missionary work.

PRESIDENT IN SCHOOL.—Speaking of the work of President Frederick M. Smith, Zion's Ensign for July 16 says:

• He left on Tuesday to be gone one year, going to Worcester, Massachusetts, where he will attend Clark University for the entire year, his family also going there with him. The extra expense entailed by his attending college and their moving there will be borne by a good brother in the church. We will not attempt to say the exact course of study, but it will be something in social science and economics, and a degree will be conferred on him when through. These studies are taken up to better fit him for the duties and responsibilities connected with the place he occupies in the church.

church organization may be strictly in harmony with the law, and we may observe all the customs and ceremonies of the law, it yet remains for us by demonstrating that our righteousness exceeds that of Pharisees to prove that we have right to enter into the kingdom of God and stay there. That is the lesson we want to impress upon your minds to-night. And we want to examine some of the things that come along the line of practical, common-sense religion.

THE MIND CURE

One of these we will find in the fourth chapter of the Philippian Letter:

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

We have heard about the faith cure, about the water cure, about the fast cure, and the mind cure. Here is a mind cure that is worthy of our consideration. By thinking clean and wholesome thoughts we obtain a clean and healthy life, and we can not have it any other way.

You have heard the old quotation often, "We sow a thought and we reap an act, we sow an act and we reap a habit, we sow a habit and we reap a character, we sow a character and we reap a destiny."

THE "SUDDEN FALL"

Individuals fall sometimes, and we say they have fallen suddenly. Some man whom we have trusted, that we thought was absolutely honest, suddenly absconds and takes with him money that belongs to somebody else, and we say, That man fell suddenly. We think some great temptation came to him in a moment and overthrew him, but the chances are that he has been undermining his own character for weeks and perhaps for years. He has been thinking how to get rich at the expense of somebody else. He has sown a thought and he has reaped an act. It is the natural tendency of thought to take shape in action.

Some man whom we have always trusted disappears with some other man's wife and we say, Why, he fell suddenly, he was suddenly tempted. But the chances are that he has been undermining his character for a long time. Perhaps he was like that individual who said he entertained a warm, southwind feeling for all women. He sowed to the wind and reaped the whirlwind. He sowed an infamous thought and reaped an infamous act.

We go away from the community perhaps and are gone for twenty years. We come back and see those who were young when we left and note the change that has been wrought in them in twenty years. Here is one that has grown up to an honorable, honest, and respected citizen. And we realize that he has sown an act and has reaped a habit, he has sown a habit and has reaped a character. While the individual who has been thinking wrong thoughts and doing wrong deeds and forming wrong habits has finally reaped the fruit of that which he has sown and has a bad character. Finally those two individuals must stand before God and reap a destiny in harmony with the characters they have formed, and the beginning of it all was in the thought that they entertained, the root of their action.

And we believe there are several places where religion to be true and of value should have its manifestation, and the first place is in the home. We believe that individuals should live their religion in their homes, and if their religion is not any good at home it is not very much good anywhere else. Some men growl at their food and snarl at their children, and snap at their wives until we almost think that they ought to pay a tax and wear a brass collar. When you see the children cease their chatter and sneak out the back door when father comes in at the front door, you may mark it right down in the book of remembrance that father is not a Christian. His name may be on the church books, but he is infinitely less a Christian than Ingersoll was, and we call him an infidel. Children were not afraid of Ingersoll. A man's religion ought to determine his conduct towards his wife and children.

I do not know but what we could go farther than that and say it should determine his treatment of dumb animals as well.

ONE "DOUBTING THOMAS"

I think sometimes that the dumb animals that come under the care of professed Christians could tell a story if only they were not dumb. Brother Griffiths tells a story of one time when he was over in Wales. As nearly as I can recall it runs like this: In company with another elder he took dinner at a home where the good wife had a pet cat. And the cat sat at the table and ate out of a plate. Here sat Brother Griffiths, here sat the elder, and here sat the cat. Presently the good wife went into the kitchen for something and the elder gave the cat a blow that sent him half way across the room. He hid under the stove. When the good lady came back she knew nothing about the trouble and finding the cat under the stove, said, "Thomas, come on. Do not be afraid. These be men of God; they would not hurt thee." But Thomas knew better. Thomas knew more about those men of God than his mistress did.

And I do not know but there may be many a poor horse that could tell a story of neglect and abuse that he has received at the hands of some professed Christian, and many a poor cow that has been kicked in the ribs by number ten Christian brogans.

Christianity and religion ought to determine our conduct towards all living creatures, whether they be human or animals.

IN THE SHOP AND STORE

I suggest also that it should be manifest in our places of activity, in the shop, in the store, in the workroom; everywhere that we spend our time during the week our religion should be just as strong as it is in the church on Sunday. If we have dealings with individuals, we should follow the divine injunction to give them honest measure and observe the golden rule, Whatsoever you would men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them. A man who has those in his charge as employees should treat them with a spirit of Christianity. An individual who is nice and flattering to those over him and mean and oppressive to those under him is not a Christian. But the individual who has the Spirit of Christ will treat all men in harmony with the golden rule. To put it plainly, one can not be a Latter Day Saint unless he is a gentleman also, and extends to others the courtesy and kind treatment that is their just due.

IN OUR DEVOTIONS

I believe our religion should be manifest in our devotion. The instruction in the word of God, is "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is."—Hebrews 10: 23. Now, we should not neglect to assemble in the house of God at the preaching services and the prayer services as well.

I hope these meetings will be the means of increasing our attendance. And that when they close, instead of there coming a slump, a falling away and relaxation, there will be an increased attendance immediately. Prayer meeting comes next Wednesday night. There will be preaching next Sunday morning and next Sunday evening, and the attendance should be larger at these services immediately than it has been prior to these services, for the instruction is, Neglect not the assembling of yourselves together.

Neither should we neglect or forsake the devotions that belong to God in our homes. How many are there who from these meetings on will pray in their homes at least once every day? Now, when we get into trouble, when we get sick or our loved ones get sick, we begin to pray. But is it not better that we should have our homes places of prayer before trouble comes? And then when trouble comes we will be in a spiritual condition so that we can stand it, and can merit and receive the blessings of God.

OUR CONVERSATION

I believe our religion should determine our conversation; that our conversation should not be profane or obscene or slanderous, but that it should be, as we read in one place, "from above," and should be characteristic of the servants of Christ.

We should remember that the words that we speak do not always die in empty air, but they live in the hearts of those around us. Twenty years from now we may find rankling in the heart of some individual an unkind word we have said. Or we may find in their character and in their memory some splendid instruction and encouragement we have given them. Longfellow, along this line, has a splendid little poem entitled,

THE ARROW AND THE SONG

I shot an arrow into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For so swiftly it flew, the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

I breathed a song into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong,
That it can follow the flight of song?

Long, long afterward, in an oak
I found the arrow, still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end
I found again in the heart of a friend.

Is it not a great deal better to find a noble sentiment in the heart of a friend that we have planted there than to find some little mean insinuation or harsh, unkind criticism that we perhaps without thinking have planted there and the barb that was on it rankled and held throughout all those years?

BLOCKS IN THE WAY

I do not believe we have any right to interfere with the progress of others along the straight and narrow path. About two years ago I took a little trip in company with Brother Charles Crumley up into the mountains. We went with a one-horse buggy. And as we ascended the load became too heavy for the horse to draw so we had to get out and climb. Every little while we had to stop and let the horse rest, and then we would put a big stone under a rear wheel to keep the buggy from slipping back. We reached the top, enjoyed the view, and started down again. And on our way down we met the road supervisor. We did not know who he was, but he knew who we were. He said, "Are you the people who went up the mountain this morning?" We replied, "Yes." He said, "I saw your trail. Did you leave those rocks in the road that you blocked your wheels with?" We had to admit that we did. "Well," he said, "It is contrary to the law in this country. The law is that you should throw those rocks out of the road." We had to acknowledge that it was a splendid law and that hereafter we would observe it.

It is a good law in spiritual matters. It is all right for us to struggle up the mountain side, but it is all wrong for us to leave stumbling blocks in the road of those who are coming after us. Whether these stumbling blocks may be unkind words or evil deeds or corrupt business methods, if it is anything we have left to hinder another it is wrong. Instead of hindering we should be helping.

SUGGESTION

You know there is a great deal in suggestion. Psychologists dwell a great deal on suggestion. That is why we have been suggesting to you every night that you should come out the next night. There is a great deal in that.

When the little child comes to its mother with a bruised head, the mother kisses the head and the child says, "Feel better now," and runs away. The kiss did not do a thing to the body, but the suggestion did a great deal to the spirit. And so we can help others or hinder them by suggestions.

To illustrate: Suppose I am traveling over those mountain roads we have mentioned and meet an individual toiling upward. He is carrying his burden and making slow progress, but is getting along all right. Suppose I begin to discourage him. I say, "You look just about played out. You should never have left the valley. You are not strong enough for this altitude, you will never reach the summit. It is a long way up there, and a hard struggle; you will never make it." What happens? He looks up, and it seems further and further away. Pretty soon he takes up his load and goes back down,—down and out. What was it that did that? It was suggestion.

But if I meet him and say, "Now, brother, you are doing pretty well. Take it slowly and within your strength and there is no reason why you should not reach the summit, and when you get there there is a splendid view." He goes on encouraged.

The same thing is true of church work. If we say to the individuals around us, "You are not accomplishing very much; it is not worth while; and anyway there is nothing in it; you will never make it;" and discourage them at every turn, the chances are they will quit and go back. But if we say, "Brother, you are doing pretty well; if you keep on, by the help of God, by and by you will succeed," the individual goes on cheered and encouraged.

The same thing is true of autosuggestion—what an individual thinks about himself. If we think all the time, I haven't any talents, I can't do anything, I can't sing or make an effort to speak in prayer meeting, I am going backward anyway, we will never make any progress. We want to think courageous thoughts, affirmative thoughts, victorious thoughts, that we are going on and this whole church is going on because God is in it and God's influences are around it, and then we will go on and we will help others to go on.

A LIVING EXAMPLE

My mind goes back to a brother who works hard six days in the week; but is always at the Wednesday night prayer meeting; it is a bad storm that keeps him away. On Sunday he is out preaching or helping some Sunday school; always cheerful, always optimistic, always helping someone along. And that brother is a cripple.

That brother goes through life with a broken leg that the doctors experimented on and he is suffering from their experiment and never will be healed. Some of us would be looking for a nice, soft place on the retired list if we were in that condition. But when I used to see him limping up the walk whistling a cheerful tune, I always felt encouraged.

And my mind goes past him to that greater Friend. I see that man of Galilee taking his serene way among the children of men, giving off strength all the time, so that even those who touched but the hem of his garment were healed, and I heard him say, "I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly." I heard him say, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden." I heard him say, "My peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." And then I realized his ministry he has placed on us. It is our business to help others, to strengthen them, to encourage them, to lift them up, to be optimistic, to be cheerful, to give off strength and encouragement. To push the load along, not to be pessimistic and despondent and all the time pulling someone down.

THE POWER OF UNITY

In conclusion, this thought: We appreciate the support that you have given us in these meetings, by your attendance. We realize that if there has been any good accomplished God must receive by far the greater meed of credit and glory. It is God that gives the increase, though one may plant and another cultivate. We long to see the time when the Saints will be united. You know there is a force, a power that is locked up in unity. When soldiers march and keep step, when they come to a bridge they must break ranks, because there is such a force in that rythmical marching in unison that the vibration will shake the bridge down. They must break ranks and walk across the bridge. There is that power in unity.

Now the Master speaks of the time when his army will be very great and very terrible, not because there are so many of them, but because they keep step, because they are united, because they are one. If the preachers in these revival services have been blessed by the Spirit one reason is that we have been entirely united. We have worked together with the most pleasing harmony. There has not been a note of jealousy or friction. Each one wanted the other to receive the same liberty he craved for himself. And we believe there has been the same unity among the people who have listened to that which we have presented. We have not felt to preach any sermons of denunciation. Some people have complained in the past because there have been sermons that have been of a "scolding" nature. I believe there are times when it is necessary to preach a sermon of denunciation. When that time comes we may as well take our medicine. But with us the spirit has been to preach affirmatively, to try to educate and help along until men find that more excellent way so that they will not desire anything else.

We pray that God may bless and direct, and that the fruits that come from these meetings may all be of a pleasing and acceptable nature.

THE ATONEMENT--PART 2

BY ELDER F. A. RUSSELL

Did God demand the crucifixion of Jesus or the shedding of his blood as a part thereof?

THE BLOOD-ATONEMENT THEORY

As I understand, the adherents of this theory declare that since sin came upon all, justice demanded penalty for that sin; and since there was nothing that man could do to free himself from the consequences of sin, all would have been punished eternally for their sin since justice demanded the same treatment for each one, had it not been that Christ's blood was shed. This shedding of his blood, then, satisfied justice and opened the way for our return unto God.

I ask, if the blood of Christ atoned for my sins in the sense that he bore the penalty, why teach me to do something in order to receive remission of my sins? Justice, you say, is satisfied since the penalty is wrought on my substitute who paid the debt in my stead. If penalty is imposed, why pardon? If a man serves a term in prison for a misdemeanor and is released at the expiration of the term, after the penalty has been meted out, where is there any opportunity for pardon then? Does not pardon imply the lifting or the release from penalty?

I find no ground for believing that God pardons my sins, simply because far greater sinners committed the heinous crime of slaying his Son. Who can imagine that God continued firmly and unrelentingly angry against the whole human family until the instant the nails were driven into the hands and feet of Jesus, and then as soon as he saw the blood trickling forth said, "Now I am willing to receive my erring children, I am satisfied! That is the penalty that each one deserved!" Nothing in that to satisfy my soul.

Again, the thought that the few hours of suffering of Christ would be equivalent to the sufferings of those affected by that sort of an atonement strikes me as highly improbable to say the least. Some one hurries along hoping to drive this "terrible skepticism or infidelity, from my mind, by assuring me that in Moses' time the victim (bullock or lamb) stood in the place of the offender and died in his stead. On the altar it was the type of Christ symbolizing what his death realized.

The idea that the sufferings of Christ pacified the anger of God is clearly opposed to the teachings of the Word. "God so loved the world," etc. Why, then, say that he was so angry as to demand the death of his Son? Nor do I find in Jewish history any intimation that the sacrificial victim bore the penalty of the offenders' sin. There is no mention made of the sufferings of the victim, nor that they were of the slightest value. The evident effect of sacrifice, in the mind of the worshiper, is, by offering it as a gift (for that reason the best was always provided) hoping thus to please Deity and thus enjoy communion with him, and through this union gain deliverance from real or threatened evil and possession of coveted good. It was intended to gain or hold power. In the Jewish practices sin was not actually transferred to the victim. Then why say our sins or the penalty thereof are transferred to Christ? He was the Great Example. "I am the way, the truth and the life," might be expanded thus: I am teaching you the way. My words are truth. Obey them and you will possess life more abundantly.

In 1 Corinthians 5: 7, Paul refers to Christ as "our passover," and some conclude that the paschal lamb was a type of Christ and that God required the sacrifice of both. In the institution of the passover no hint is made to the effect that a lamb was to be slain and sacrificed to typify a coming Christ. It was only to commemorate a past event.

Paul had been a very strict Pharisee in his time, and with them sacrifices occupied the prominent place in their worship; so it is not at all unnatural that in his epistles Paul should lay great stress upon the death and sufferings of Christ as the last great sacrifice. Though one of the principal writers of the New Testament, he was not a convert to Christianity for a considerable time after ascension of Jesus, but based his teachings largely upon spiritual manifestations which are at least as much subject to examination as any which occur to-day. (This is a field we can not examine to-day; just take a glimpse and study more at your leisure.) Let no one say that amounts to a repudiation, unless you say that the examination of any communication to-day implies repudiation. Paul is one of my special witnesses, so naturally I have no desire to discredit his testimony.

The mode by which it is alleged that divine justice is satisfied seems to me to carry with it a refutation of the theory. A flagrant crime is committed—the community shocked, offended. Will those feelings be allayed by punishing the noblest character of the community? You may be the victim of a fearful crime. What could be more absurd than to say that your feeling will be assuaged by inflicting punishment upon the person of one you love the most? Such is the logical conclusion of the theory that God demanded the crucifixion and blood of his Son as a part of the plan to reclaim his erring creatures—make them to be again at one with him.

It has been well asked, "Is the alleged immorality of letting off the sinner amended by the additional crime of penalty-crushing the sinless?" What a travesty upon justice to say that even she could demand such a thing! What can you answer when I ask you if Christ was not as much offended as his Father (if either was) when men sinned? Then why inflict upon himself another and additional wrong, hoping thereby to satisfy the first offense? Does this not almost reach the climax of absurdity? I think so. But is not this the blood-atonement theory?

If the sufferings of Christ answer the demands of divine justice (God) for the sins of all of Adam's posterity, then assuredly all the people are free, restored to God from whom they were estranged. Oh, no, you say, Jesus paid the debt, now we owe him. I have preached that, but is it true? I thought it was. In the groove, you see! What doctrine is more remote from the teachings of Jesus? His whole purpose and effort was to establish a reconciliation between God and man! Absolutely no intimation that when such reconciliation was effected he, Christ, still held certain demands against us. Methinks if true relationship exists between God and me, Christ will not interpose demands! It is a severe jolt to some traditions, I know, but when Jesus told the people of his day that they were making the commandments of God of none effect, their traditions also received a jolt. Notwithstanding our sympathy for these people, we have little sympathy for the traditions. They had to go.

Again, this theory represents God as being moved or compelled by some eternal force, which force effectually prevented him from granting pardon to any if he should so wish, thus preventing the exercise of mercy until every demand of such power should be satisfied. It dethrones God, and the majesty of the All in All is lost, for he is no longer All in All. Mercy is a divine attribute. It is a favor to those who deserve not the favor; but since stern justice made demand and secured for sin the full measure of suffering in the agonies of the crucifixion, what has become of mercy? If it is an attribute of the Father, where is the evidence of it being exercised in this sort of an atonement? John Milton Williams says: "It is even doubtful, if this theory be true, whether the redemption of Christ has saved any suffering to the universe."

Further, Jesus is represented as a ransom in the sense that the Devil having possession of the souls of men, God's great family of children, he, Satan, would not release them unless God would let him have his Son to kill. This, of course, transfers the satisfaction primarily demanded from God to Satan. It is now the Devil to be satisfied; before it was God. Says the Devil, "Your children have sinned, and I shall hold them and not allow you to pardon them until you grant my demands. Give me the choicest one of all your children, and to him I will administer torture equal to all that which otherwise I would have put upon all the people." God now at the mercy of the Devil! He who spoke the word and banished from his presence Satan and all his cohorts, must now yield to his requirements. Reader, declare me what you will, 'tis not in my heart to accept such a theory. Where it came from, God knows. Where it belongs, I think I know.

Webster defines ransom thus: Price paid for procuring the pardon of sin and the redemption of the sinner. Not only did Jesus pay the "price" with his own life, but many others did the same thing, just as he had told them they would. Remember, the whole argument centers around the question, "Who set the price?" If God did, then it may be said to be a part of the plan of atonement. If the Devil did, then it is no part of the atonement. In no single instance can it be shown that any one of those who paid such a price did so voluntarily—that is, without the exercise of force by the enemy. The spirit prompting Christ was one of voluntary life service, fearless of the consequences from the ranks of opposition, even if he should meet death in its most horrible form, as he did. I recall but three passages referring to Christ as a ransom. 1 Timothy 2: 6, "A ransom for all." Matthew 20: 28 and Mark 10: 45 each have it a ransom "for many." In the last two references I believe we have the comments of the writer on Jesus' teachings. Those men had a habit of so closely associating their own comments with the words of Christ that it is often difficult to determine the authorship. "By the obedience of one shall many be made righteous."—Romans 5: 19. Has there not been a tendency to credit the obedience of Christ over to ourselves, and thus clear the record so far as our guilt before God is concerned and, as before intimated, leave us in debt to Christ? I think so. But note the predicament in which that places me: So far as God is concerned as regards guilt, on pretty much the same footing as the angels. They never sinned; I did but am pardoned. But so far as Christ is concerned I am a guilty wretch! Sin all upon me yet. First, God was offended, Christ my friend; now Christ is offended, and God my friend. What has been accomplished, after all, to help me out? Is not my salvation as far away as it was in the beginning? First, I could not return to God because the Devil would not permit me so to do. And now though reconciled to God for which express purpose Christ came into the world, I find to my astonishment that I can not return to God because Christ will not permit! I thought you said my debt had been paid, and, lo, I discover it now in the hands of the "innocent third party." Salvation no nearer, damnation just as near as at any time, for I am now told that I will land in hell if I do not satisfy the demands of Jesus. Well, well, what a tangled web.

I prefer to believe that when I settle accounts with God or with Christ the other is satisfied. Is it wrong thus to believe? The Scripture nowhere intimates that each has separate demands. Even though I should be under infinite obligations to Christ, could I not justly claim exemption from consequences of sin by virtue of his sufferings? And, further, would not divine justice now intercede in my behalf and rightly demand my salvation with the same persistence with which said justice previously demanded my damnation? Not necessarily because of anything I had done, but because of what Christ had done in my stead. When you get that solved tell me which you stand for, a limited atonement or a universal salvation. If the cross of Christ expiated the sins of every man and woman then why not universal salvation? If a limited atonement, is he the Savior and redeemer of the whole world? If sin was expiated by Christ upon the cross then it is inconceivable that anything further should be required of me in order to obtain salvation.

WHY JESUS WAS KILLED

"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up." (John 3:14.) If the latter part of that verse refers to the manner of death to come upon the Son of Man, it but foretells the same, and the author of those words simply takes the "serpent" as an illustration, because of likeness between a "pole" and the "cross." One trouble is that while prophecy says certain things will come to pass, when such prophecy is either quoted or referred to by a later writer so often the word will is changed to shall or must, thus fixing the responsibility for the act upon the author of the prophecy—certainly a grave error when sinful acts are set forth. That is all I can see to this verse. Jesus doubtless knew he would be lifted up so the word must is used. However, in connection with verses fifteen and sixteen I prefer to believe that the "lifting up" has reference more to the exalted position the Son of Man was to occupy that all might look to him and hear the words of eternal life. From the way things are mixed up in verse thirteen it is quite evident that we need the testimony of the Spirit as well as the written Word.

If the statements of men now living and honored as men of strict integrity could settle the question, in one brief paragraph I could tell you why he was killed. I shall quote one statement anyway. It is found on page 2, paragraph 3 of a tract entitled "Our defense," by Elder J. R. Lambert:

Those who received the message of the gospel, honestly and intelligently, were impressed and led by the Spirit of truth; those who opposed it and persecuted the disciples of Jesus—even unto death—were led and impressed by the spirit of error, under the influence and inspiration of this false spirit Jesus, the Christ, was maligned, persecuted and killed.

So I believe; and it seems to me if this be admitted by the advocates of blood atonement that such theory is most effectually exploded, for it clearly states that Jesus was killed by those acting under the inspiration of a false spirit! Some may not accept the conclusions of this writer, so I offer scriptural support of the same thought.

Chief priests, scribes and elders conspire to take and kill Jesus. (Matthew 26:1-3.) Spies or detectives were sent among the disciples to "take hold of his words" so they might deliver him to the power and authority of the governor. (Luke 20:19, 20.) Chief priests sought how they might take Jesus by craft (kidnap?) and put him to death. (Mark 14:2.) An offended disciple covenants to tell the place where Jesus was. (Verses 31-33.) He was betrayed, delivered into the hands of an enemy by treachery. (John 18:2.) Because of the priests' attitude in trying continually to kill him, Jesus "walked no more openly among the Jews." (John 11:53-57.) He goes over to Ephraim and so completely eludes his persecutors, that a command is published saying that if any man knew where he was he should show them that they might take him. (All this to fulfill divine decree? That foul stream is flooding the pasture even as I feared.) Chief men were angry and sought to lay hold on him but feared the people. (Mark 12:12.) (I suppose [?] the angry ones were trying to execute the will of God, but were being prevented by the people!) Delivered to Pilate because of envy. (Mark 15:12.) See also Matthew 27:19. James 3:16 tells us, "where envy and strife is there is confusion and every evil work." In Second Nephi 2:110, 111 we read: "None of these iniquities come from the Lord." (Who will face that and still declare that those wicked men were preparing to execute the decree of the divine?)

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death; and shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify. And the third day he shall rise again.—Matthew 20: 17.

All this, you say, must have been a part of an infinite plan because Jesus said it would be, and because it did occur. As well say that everything that occurs is the way God would have it. (Before we leave this field, I will help you force that filthy stream from the land, if you are willing.)

In Luke 18: 31-33, Jesus intimates clearly that he felt the pressure of the accumulating forces of evil, and that indeed the things written by the prophets concerning him would soon be fulfilled. He should be mocked, spit upon, scourged and put to death! (Can you feel that such treatment is divine in character?) The world hates Jesus. (John 7:7.) The stirrings which followed his teachings were a constant menace to the prevailing religious and political order of the day, and they worked in every conceivable manner to dispose of him. He was driven from one city with a command to teach his doctrine no more among the people, only to appear in another. His keen ability to fathom the motives of men and to understand the results of their actions abundantly qualified him to be, under God, the great Teacher of men. Well did Peter say, "Thou hast the words of eternal life." They took up stones to stone him but he escaped out of their midst. (John 10: 31-39.)

Turning now to John 13:2 we learn that "the Devil having put it into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him." Let us look over this field a bit. We have, as one of the first incidents leading to the crucifixion, a former disciple (Mark 14: 31 says he had turned away) prompted by the Devil, not God, to betray Jesus. I have often wondered why some people talk nearly as much about the Devil as about Jesus. But why not? What a good, kind Devil he must be to come to the aid of Jehovah and find a man for him who will do that miserable piece of business. None but a devil could prompt one man to betray another; but since God had made (?) the crucifixion a part of the atonement, somebody must secure the victim, so the Devil got the job; and if history be true, the work was done as none but a devil could direct it! Little chance our blessed Lord would have for his life when God had (?) decreed, and the Devil was carrying out the decree against him! And all in order that I might be redeemed! I refuse to believe it, for the simple reason that I am unable to believe that God uses Satan to carry out his plans. They have not been on such good terms as to work together for some time.

Please remember, now, that the Devil appears in the first act of this tragedy (is it that?) as the moving power. If God is in any way a party to this transaction it remains for blood-atonement advocates to reveal his hiding place. Could a god who would order such a thing as that be any better than a devil who would execute the order? If I accept the popular theory I am required to believe that the Devil actually executed the design of God in stirring up the people to crucify his Son. I must accord to Satan the honor of putting on the "capstone," without which all the work of Jesus as mediator would have been futile. Believe it if you wish, if you can.

THOUGHTS ON THE ATONEMENT---NO. II

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT

The atonement which Christ made for his people, and for the people of the whole world, is what is meant by the caption. We take it for granted that all Latter Day Saints are prepared to believe that Christ did make a suitable and adequate atonement, which, so far as the Adamic sin is concerned, did at once reconcile all the inhabitants of the world to God. That is, whatever was lost in Eden because of transgression was restored in Christ, so that all men could have free and full latitude to exercise their agency, just as our first parents had in the beautiful garden, before they transgressed and fell.

In this way (that is, through the atonement) Jesus sought and saved that which was lost. As he himself said: "For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost." (Matthew 18: 11.)

Through the atonement of Christ is brought to pass the resurrection of the dead, followed by a just judgment, when sinners will answer for their own individual sins, and not for Adam's transgression; and little children who have died before reaching the age of accountability, with all who render a proper obedience to the gospel plan, and remain faithful to the end, will receive the full benefits of the atonement made. All others, however, will receive according to their works, whether they be good or evil. Such, we believe, are the teachings of "holy writ," as found recorded in the three sacred and standard books of the church.

WHAT SHALL WE TEACH?

As authorized ministers of the church, it is our privilege, and duty, to teach and defend the doctrine taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. We are sent out to represent the church, not to invalidate their only standards of evidence on conduct and doctrine.

It is true, however, that we should make proper allowance for an honest difference of interpretation, especially on unimportant and speculative topics. Is the doctrine of the atonement of Christ unimportant and speculative? Our view is that it is a part of the gospel, is very fundamental, occupying an important position at the very bottom of the divine plan.

It will, therefore, be the leading aim and effort of the writer to make his positions and statements conform to the word of God, as contained in our sacred records.

WHAT DOES THE EPITOME SAY?

We call attention to some statements found in the "Epitome of Faith and Doctrine of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," which has been indorsed by the church in general assembly:

"We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly."

What does this declaration mean? It certainly means that we accept the Bible for just what it purports to be, nothing more, nothing less. If it does not mean this, then it is of no value to the church, collectively or individually, and the time and money spent in preparing, discussing, and adopting, and last, but not least, freely distributing this document among the people of the church and the world is wasted, and worse than wasted. Why do we say worse than wasted? Because, in that case, we would be guilty of conveying to the people false and deceptive impressions with the sanction of the church behind them!

I quote again: "We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel."

The three references which are given clearly indicate that Christ's suffering and death were, at least, an important part of the atonement, hence part of "the gospel of our salvation." The first one is 1 Corinthians 15: 3: "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." (We shall emphasize some words and phrases found in quotations, and some statements made, for the sole purpose of calling particular attention to them.)

In order to understand the full force of this quotation it is necessary to read the two verses which immediately preceded it. They read as follows:

Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain.

Then follows the quotation referred to in the epitome.

Thus we show that Paul preached, as an important part of the divine plan, the death of Christ on the cross (the only death he died), just as he preached his resurrection as another important part of the same plan. Is it not true that the gospel consists of facts and principles which we are required to believe, and of promises which we may receive, if we will obey the conditions upon which they are offered to us? Christ's death and resurrection are gospel facts.

DEFINITIONS AND STATEMENTS

Atonement. This word occurs only once in the New Testament, and though it is of frequent occurrence in the Old Testament, it is not there used in a theological sense. The same Greek word, however, occurs several times in the New Testament, being ordinarily translated by "reconciliation." The etymological signification of the English word is indicated by its composition. To atone is to make at one. The doctrine of the atonement assumes, therefore, that God and man are somehow at variance, and that reconciliation or atonement is necessary. This idea not only underlies the gospel, but is the fundamental idea of all religions, heathen as well as Christian.—Dictionary of Religious Knowledge, by Lyman Abbott and T. J. Conant.

Webster's short definition is as follows: "Atonement, 1. Reconciliation. 2. Satisfaction by giving an equivalent for an injury; expiation."

The one and only place where atonement is found in the New Testament is Romans 5: 11. Young, in his Analytical Concordance, defines the Greek word translated atonement in this passage to mean, "Reconciliation, through change."

Right here we quote Paul:

For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again.—2 Corinthians 5: 14, 15.

In complete agreement with this is Doctrine and Covenants 28: 11:

Wherefore, it came to pass, that the Devil tempted Adam and he partook of the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment, wherein he became subject to the will of the Devil, because he yielded to temptation; wherefore, I the Lord God caused that he should be cast out from the garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression; wherein he became spiritually dead; which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed. (Read paragraphs 9, 10.)

It may be easily seen that there is no conflict between the passages quoted and the definitions given. Nor is there any conflict between Paul's statements and those found in the "revelation given in the presence of six elders, in Fayette, New York, September, 1830." Should we quote the Book of Mormon in this connection, we would find the same striking harmony on the fall of man and the consequent need of divine atonement. All this will be made still more plain when we submit the more complete.

TESTIMONY OF THE BOOKS

Believing as we do that the three books, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, are reliable, when taken as a whole, singly, or altogether, we are opposed to any view which makes it necessary to violate the rules which govern safe interpretation, or, still worse, which invalidates the testimony of the three sacred and standard books of the church. Such a view renders void, and to a serious extent impeaches the best witnesses that have ever spoken or written, in ancient or modern times. Therefore we ask the indulgence of the reader while we present a list of quotations from the books.

ANTIQUITY OF THE ATONEMENT

Bible Evidence.—And he gave unto them commandments that they should worship the Lord their God; and should offer the firstlings of their flocks for an offering unto the Lord. And Adam was obedient unto the commandments of the Lord. And after many days an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying, Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him, I know not, save the Lord commanded me. And then the angel spake, saying, This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth.—Genesis 4: 5-7, Inspired Translation.

Similitude means resemblance; likeness, act of comparing. Full of grace and truth are significant words. That is, the offering of Jesus Christ, "once for all," that all might be saved, is full of the favor of God, and the truth of God.

All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. (Isaiah 53:8-12.)

Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bore the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors. (Isaiah 53: 12.)

The wonderful prophecy in this chapter was given more than seven hundred years before Christ (the subject of the prophecy) was born. All Bible believers, so far as we know, agree that this whole chapter furnishes us with a history of Christ's life, death and burial, together with his sufferings and sacrificial offering of himself, in prophecy. We call attention to the following expressions:

And the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

He was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken.

And he was numbered with the transgressors [being crucified between two thieves]; and he bore the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.

As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee.—Zechariah 9: 11, 12.

Notice, these "prisoners of hope" were delivered from the pit by the blood of the covenant.

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison.—1 Peter 3: 18, 19.

Christ's suffering is herein described as "being put to death in the flesh,"—not because he was overpowered by a murderous mob, contrary to his desire and consent, but rather, "that he might bring us to God."

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—John 1: 29.

With this statement of John the Baptist, we present one found in Revelation 13: 8: "Whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

From this we draw the just inference, we think, that because Christ had made the necessary offering, in prospect, and the Father had accepted it, the sacrifice applied to every candidate for salvation, before it was made in fact, as well as afterwards. This view establishes the impartiality and justice of God. (Read Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5.)

Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain.—Acts 2: 23.

For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.—Acts 4: 27, 28.

Only one conclusion can be reached from these texts, unless we can impeach the testimony of Peter, as expressed in his preaching and prayer; and that one conclusion is that God, who sees the end from the beginning, and knew just what conditions would exist when his Son came to the earth, predetermined that the best possible thing that could be done was to deliver up his anointed one to die on Calvary's cross. We will leave this important consideration right here for the present.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved.—John 3: 16, 17.

Thus we see that God did actually make provision for the salvation of all people, even from the beginning, through his Son, Jesus Christ.

Book of Mormon. Authorized Edition.—And he cometh into the world that he may save all men, if they will hearken unto his voice; for behold, he suffereth the pains of all men; yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women and children, who belong to the family of Adam. And he suffereth this, that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him at the great and judgment day.—2 Nephi 6: 45-47.

For behold, and also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died, not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned. . . . And yet they hardened their hearts, and understood not that the law of Moses availeth nothing, except it were through the atonement of his blood. . . . For behold as in Adam, or by nature they fall, even so the blood of Christ atoneth for their sins. . . . But men drink damnation to their own souls, except they humble themselves and become as little children, and believe that salvation was, and is, and is to come, in through the atoning blood of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent.—Mosiah 1: 107, 113, 115.

How can we believe that the shedding of Christ's blood was no part of the atonement, without first impeaching the witnesses, whom we have every reason to believe were not only good men, but highly intellectual and intelligent, and, best of all, chosen by God and inspired of God?

And also, the atonement which has been prepared from the foundation of the world, that thereby salvation might come to him that should put his trust in the Lord, and should be diligent in keeping his commandments, and continue in the faith even unto the end of his life; I mean the life of the mortal body.—Mosiah 2: 10.

O remember, remember, my sons, the words which King Benjamin spake unto his people; yea, remember that there is no other way or means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, who shall come; yea, remember that he cometh to redeem the world.—Helaman 2: 71.

King Benjamin was the man who spoke the words which I have just quoted from the Book of Mosiah. Notice how strongly these words are emphasized and indorsed by Helaman.

I close on this point, with a quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 17: 5.

Wherefore the almighty God gave his only begotten Son, as it is written in those Scriptures which have been given of him: he suffered temptations but gave no heed unto them; he was crucified, died, and rose again the third day; and ascended into heaven to sit down on the right hand of the Father, to reign with almighty power according to the will of the Father, that as many as would believe and be baptized, in his holy name, and endure in faith to the end, should be saved: not only those who believed after he came in the meridian of time in the flesh, but all those from the beginning, even as many as were before he came, who believed in the words of the holy prophets, who spake as they were inspired by the gift of the Holy Ghost, who truly testified of him in all things, should have eternal life, as well as those who should come after, who should believe in the gifts and callings of God by the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of the Father, and the Son, which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end. Amen.

It will be seen that the foregoing scriptures, taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, not only prove the antiquity of the gospel, including the atonement, but they also prove, when taken as a whole, and sometimes singly, that Christ's death on the cross was, at least, an important part of the atonement, and of the divine plan for saving the people. Let the records speak for themselves, for herein lies our safety.

INDEPENDENCE SUMMER SCHOOL

The second annual summer school at the Stone Church opened yesterday with an enrollment of three hundred and fifteen pupils. It is in charge of George E. Harrington as general manager, and of Miss Emma Criley as head instructor. Each has a large corps of assistants.

Much attention will be paid to manual training. Elder Harrington has special charge of this department, which is so attractive to the boys. The dining hall is being used as a workshop.

The girls are learning to do fancy basket work, to weave hammocks, and many other kinds of work that are out of the ordinary. Miss Criley looks after them and their work. The basement of the church is used for this purpose.

The school was held for the first time last year and proved so popular and successful that it was determined to repeat it this year. It will continue about six weeks. Sessions are held daily beginning at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and closing about one o'clock.

There is a Bible School in connection with the other work, but it is nonsectarian; and the attendance is not limited to members of the Stone Church. It was said this morning that others would be heartily welcomed. No charge is made for tuition.—The Jackson Examiner, July 3, 1914.

THE CHAUTAUQUA IS FORTY YEARS OLD

The present summer marks the fortieth anniversary of that most distinctively American institution, the Chautauqua. In this connection it is of interest that the past twelve months have witnessed the greatest development of the Chautauqua movement in all its history.

There are eight hundred more Chautauquas in the United States this summer than there were in 1913, increasing the grand total to about two thousand nine hundred and thirty. More than two thousand two hundred of this number are held in tents. In fact, the most important and far-reaching innovation that has come to this movement was the introduction, about seven years ago, of the traveling-tent or "circuit" Chautauqua, which someone has styled "the last word in popular education."

This new factor had its inception in the West, first invading Minnesota, Missouri, and Iowa, then spreading into Nebraska, Kansas, and Colorado. In the Middle West the traveling-tent Chautauqua made its debut in Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Michigan, and later in the South in Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Oklahoma, and Texas. This season in New York, the State in which the Chautauqua idea originated, there will be at least twenty-five circuit Chautauquas.

This year the Chautauqua season began a month earlier than usual. Having opened in cities on the southern seaboard in late April, it will close simultaneously in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and parts of the West in September. This close will be just in time for the annual social and business gathering of the international organization of lecturers, musicians, and all others interested in our American forum as represented in the lyceum and Chautauqua. The gathering will be held at the birthplace of the Chautauqua movement.—From "The Chautauqua of to-day," by W. Frank McClure, in the American Review of Reviews for July.

AMUSEMENT AND THE CHURCH

Words of soberness and truth, timely and stirring words, are those of Dean Shailer Mathews in the editorial quoted in the Record-Herald of yesterday. Professor Mathews recognizes that in certain communities churches may properly undertake to furnish or cooperate with other public-spirited agencies in furnishing rational entertainment and recreation. The church must deal with facts, and the craving for amusement is a fact it is dangerous to ignore. Where elevating and wholesome entertainment is lacking many of the people, and especially the younger and more energetic people, will be driven to patronize low, debasing forms of amusement.

But even in the church there is such a thing as definite division of labor. A church may organize socials, concerts and lectures on scientific and popular topics. It may establish reading rooms, encourage athletic teams, give outdoor festivals. But these activities can and should be distinct and separate from the true and essential functions of the church. Nothing vulgar, theatrical, frivolous, sensational should ever be tolerated in a structure dedicated to worship and religion. Earnestness, eloquence, reverence, dignity, charity have not lost their potency in the pulpit. The modern world may seem to be "mad after amusement," but in reality it is as hungry and thirsty for philosophy, for spiritual light and leading, as any age ever was. No thinker with a message, no high-minded, scholarly, gifted preacher, teacher or philosopher finds the world deaf and indifferent. Any church that stoops to attract men will soon lose the little that it has to give. It had better try a higher standard than a lower one; it had better find the right man and charge him with the duty of upward instead of downward education.—Chicago Record-Herald, May 8, 1914.

AUGUST READING.—BODILY GROWTH

"It is our duty to learn to read the truth in the book of nature."

Proper physical development is of fundamental importance to humanity, for the sake of the individual, for society, and for the race. It is therefore necessary to learn to read in the book of nature the truth concerning the growth of the body.

In this case, to read the book of nature means to observe the development of children. But, as the botanist, in his study of plants, is guided by the laws and classifications of plant life-laid down by those who have studied before him, so, in our study of the human body, we need the aid of those who can turn the light of science upon the pages of nature as we read.

We must observe the children, but if asked, "Understand thou what thou readest?" how often we must answer, "How can I, except some man should guide me?"

Until recent years the data were not obtainable with which to compare the development of a child. Even in 1911, Dr. Hall wrote in Educational Problems that the child from two and a half to six years is relatively unknown to science. He says, "A dark cloud of ignorance hangs over the kindergarden age," and adds that even the growth rate needs illumination. Of other periods more has been known, and later writers give additional light.

THREE PERIODS OF ADULT LIFE

Of the preparatory portion of life three divisions have been made. The period of infancy extends from birth to the sixth or the seventh year. Childhood covers the succeeding years to the twelfth or the thirteenth. Adolescence includes the years from twelve to twenty-five.

SPECIAL PERIODS OF GROWTH

One authority states that the total weight of the body increases nineteen fold from birth to complete development. But this increase in weight is not acquired regularly. On the other hand the body "passes through crises of development, during which the forces of the organism are all devoted to its rapid transformation; such periods represent epochs at which the organism is more predisposed to maladies, more subject to mortality and less capable of performing work." The two periods of most rapid growth occur just after birth and during puberty (the time when the sex function is established—from twelve to fourteen years).

The years from seven to nine are sometimes called a fatigue period. "At this time the brain has nearly attained its full weight and the nervous system now prepares itself for finer adjustments. This period is characterized by the child's easy yielding to mental and physical fatigue and exhaustion. . . . One of the surest symptoms is the appearance of general laziness which should not be punished as it often is. The child should rather be rested and the demands upon his physical and mental activity temporarily diminished.

"The time of rest granted to the child during this and the next critical period must not be counted as a loss; on the contrary, timely rest will secure greater strength during the periods following, while irrational stimulation at these stages will produce a lasting weakness.

"The period fraught with gravest dangers and characterized by most remarkable developments is that of pubescence and adolescence."—M. P. E. Grossman, Ph. D., in the July Mothers' Magazine.

Of this period of adolescence, Dr. Hall says: "The annual rate of growth in height, weight and strength is increased and often doubled and even more. Bones and muscles lead all other tissues as if they vied with each other; and there is frequent flabbiness or tension as one or the other leads. Nature arms youth for conflict with all the resources at her command—speed, power of shoulders, biceps, back, leg, jaw—strengthens and enlarges skull, thorax, hips, makes man more aggressive and prepares woman's frame for maternity."

In her book, The Boy and Girl Adolescent Period, Miss Emma Virginia Fish says: "Girls shoot up rapidly from twelve to fourteen, and boys usually from fourteen to sixteen, although we have all seen many boys of thirteen as tall as those of sixteen. Too early or too extreme growth may cause languor or heart weakness, and in such cases the boy or girl should be watched and not allowed too active exercise for a year or two.

"If the muscles grow faster than the skeleton the youth becomes clumsy and awkward, lacking control of his movements. If the bones increase in size rapidly, growing pains result from the unwonted stretching of the muscles.

"With this external growth come development and change in the internal organs. . . . The changes in the sex organs of both boys and girls are the most important and lead to health or disease, both mental and physical, according to proper or improper development and care.

"With all these physical changes to use up the vitality of the embryo man and woman, is it any wonder that the mental forces are at times inactive and indolent? The brain reaches its complete size at thirteen or fourteen and the efforts of nature in other directions seem to exhaust for a while the powers of the mind and our boys and girls have periods of dullness and stupidity apparently unaccountable. Laziness and spells of languor frequently manifest themselves, due to the fatigue naturally accompanying rapid growth and all the other changes. With the normal boy and girl these spells will soon pass and extreme activity take their place."

GROWTH IN STATURE

From Pedagogical Anthropology by Maria Montessori, M. D., the following information is gleaned:

The greatest increase in stature takes place during the first year. In no other year of life will the stature acquire so notable an increase. The maximum increase takes place during the first four months, especially in the first month. From this point the rate diminishes up to the fourth month, after which the monthly increase remains steadily at one half that of the fourth month. This is the average for normal growth.

During the second year of life the increase in stature is about one half that of the preceding year. After this the annual increase diminishes in intensity and proceeds, not regularly, but with rhythmic fluctuations, up to twelve years. The smallest gain is made between the years nine and twelve. At this point the period of approaching puberty begins (thirteen years for boys,) after which the rate of increase becomes more rapid, being highest during the years of thirteen to fifteen. When the period of puberty is ended, (at about eighteen years) the rate of growth becomes much lower, the gain being very slight in the two following years.

Nevertheless the stature continues to increase up to the twenty-fifth year. From twenty-five to thirty-five the stature remains stable. This is the adult age, the full attainment of maturity. After fifty (for women, and sixty for men) the stature begins to decrease, insensibly at first but later more rapidly. This is owing to the shrinkage of the soft parts between the bones.

YEARS OF GREATEST DANGER

By comparison, the death rate is shown to be highest in the years when the increase in stature is greatest. The largest number of deaths occurs during the first year of life and in general during early childhood. This number is steadily lowered to the ages from ten to thirteen, after which it rises again. In this period of calm in growth which would seem to be a repose preceding the evolution of puberty, the death rate is the lowest, only to rise again rapidly during the period of puberty, while the rise becomes less rapid after the eighteenth year.

From this we learn that "there are certain ages at which even the strong are weak and their weakness is of such nature that it exposes the individual to death."

GROWTH IN WEIGHT

The newborn child loses in weight during the first two days. But by the end of the first week a normal child should have regained its original weight, so that after the seventh day the normal child weighs the same as at the moment of birth. On the contrary children who are weak for any cause whatever regain their original weight only by the end of the second week. Thus the vitality of the child and its chances for the future may be read in the gain in weight of its first one or two weeks.

Children nourished at their mother's breast double their weight at the fifth month and triple it at the twelfth. On the contrary, artificial feeding retards this doubling of weight in children, so that it is attained only by the end of the first year; and the weight is not tripled until some time in the course of the second year.

The child's development in weight shows the two periods of rapid growth; at birth and during puberty; while at various periods in childhood, between the ages of three and nine, there are alterations of greater and lesser growth analogous to those already noted in relation to stature.

Practically all physicians agree that the weight of a child if taken regularly is the best thermometer of its health. The fact is that if a child is ill or languid, etc., his stature remains unchanged; it may grow more slowly, or be arrested in growth; but it can never diminish. The weight on the contrary can be lost and regained in a short time, in response to the most varied conditions of fatigue, of malnutrition of illness, of mental anxiety.

Experiment has shown that while children are passing through the period of incubation of an infectious disease and before they show any symptoms likely to cause a suspicion of the latent illness, they sustain a daily loss in weight from the fourth or fifth day after exposure to contagion until the appearance of decisive symptoms.

While struggling with the cause of disease of which there as yet no outward sign, the child continues his usual activities with the customary loss of energy and by so doing lessens his own powers of resistance against the disease. "To prescribe rest, if nothing more, would in many cases mean the saving of a life and at the same time would protect the child's companion from infection."

In the light of such information how wise it would seem to form the habit of weighing children frequently. In some schools the weight is recorded regularly once a month; "but instead of once a month the weight ought to be taken every-day." Commencing at birth a record should be kept as a guide to the child's development. Charts prepared for this purpose are now procurable.

Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR THE FIFTH THURSDAY IN JULY

Prayer for our country and our rulers; that the preaching of the gospel may make greater progress, winning its way over all false systems and creeds, to the enlightenment of Joseph's land.

Lesson, Jeremiah 23: 1-10. Memory verse, Jeremiah 23: 20.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

We have the following pathetic letter from a mother who asks prayers for the recovery of her beloved son:

BATTLEFORD, July 7, 1914.

Dear Saints: I earnestly ask that you will pray for the recovery of my dear son who has something wrong with his brain and is in the asylum. If I had been where he was I would never have sent him there until he had been administered to by elders. I want to get him out, but do not know whether they will let me have him or not. He seems just absent-minded. He can not talk on one thing any length of time, but he is perfectly harmless. Oh, do send your earnest prayers for him, that his proper mind may be restored and that he may join the church with full devotion of heart.

Your sister,

INEZ B. FRANCIS.

There comes also the following request from an afflicted brother who greatly needs our sympathy and support in his supplications for divine help:

"F. H. Lawn, of San Jose, California, earnestly solicits the devoted prayers of the Saints, that, if God wills, he may be healed of paralysis which has troubled him for nearly two years. It was caused by a fall years ago, by which his back was nearly broken. His eyes are very weak and bad also. He can scarcely walk or talk and can hardly see to read. He expects to be administered to especially the first Sunday in August. Please pray for him."

We are in receipt also of a letter from a sister who presents the name of an isolated sister, Mrs. Linda Clark, of Pringey, Oklahoma, who is suffering from an affliction which may necessitate an operation. She is a good wife and the mother of four children. Her family greatly need her. Prayers are earnestly asked for her.

It is sincerely hoped these requests may awaken response in our hearts and that many who read, even of those whose names are not recorded with the Prayer Union, may unite in asking the Lord to give the blessings of healing where his wisdom sees it to be wise. It would be sad, should blessings fail to come, because we fail in asking.

Jackson County

In the revelations to the church, Jackson County is made a very important place, and whatever glory, honor, and fame may come to other places it will not rob it of its preeminence as a locality in the building up of Zion. Within its borders will be located a city called the "New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety,"—the place for the city of Zion,—a consecrated spot. "Wherefore this is the land of promise." Independence is the center place and the place for the temple. It is one of the places where the Saints were commanded to purchase land (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12; 57: 1; 98: 9), and the Lord has not changed concerning these matters (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6).

Because of the facts as stated above, it ought to be of interest to the Saints to know something about the present condition of Jackson County, and what are the opportunities for people who may locate within its borders. The writer has lived within its borders for five years, and during that time has learned some things by observation, and others by diligent search where it is possible to find them; and although it is but a small part of what can be obtained, the few facts will be of value to those who may contemplate moving into that region of country. I am not in any way connected with any real estate firms, either directly or indirectly, by which I could receive any remuneration; my only motive is to be of service to the Saints.

Jackson County possesses rich and valuable agricultural lands at prices from one hundred to three hundred dollars or more per acre, depending on its proclivity to the important markets, and the improvements that may be thereon.

On five acres of land within a reasonable distance from Kansas City, or Independence, an honest, industrious man, one who possesses a knowledge of how to raise vegetables, small fruit, and poultry, can have a large income, a better home, and more of the real comforts of life than the common laborer who receives from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars a day. The same kind of a man on ten acres will, with the same care and diligence, have more of the comforts of life and home than the average mechanic who receives a daily wage of from three to four dollars a day. And if one has the ability and means to farm larger tracts, up to hundreds of acres, his income will be correspondingly larger.

Jackson County has a population of more than 300,000, Kansas City, Missouri, had in 1910 a population of 248,000; the preceding decade it had increased 85,000; the same ratio of increase from 1910 to the present year would make the present number 280,000. Kansas City, Kansas, is separated from Kansas City, Missouri, only by the state line (a person can stand with a foot in each city and at the same time be in two different states); it has a population of about 100,000.

Independence has a population of more than 10,000 and is connected by street railway with Kansas City; the distance between business centers of the two cities is about ten miles, and the running time for street cars is about fifty minutes. The distance between the corporate limits of the two cities is about two and one half miles, which is largely occupied by suburban residences.

Kansas City is a great industrial community. It has great mills, factories, and shops; it is the commercial metropolis of the Southwest; with its mammoth packing houses, it is second in importance in the world in the live stock trade; it is a great railroad center, twenty trunk lines entering it, handling its monstrous passenger traffic through the second largest passenger station in the United States. As a result of recent legislation changing our entire banking system it is to have one of the ten reserve banks to be located in the United States.

Independence and all the county share in the wealth that comes to the community because of the great importance of Kansas City in the commercial world. Jackson County contains great stone quarries and large cement mills which are very valuable to the building trades. The county has nearly three hundred miles of macadamized roads, and is adding to them each year at an outlay of one half million dollars. The Standard Oil Refining Company has great refineries at Sugar Creek, two and one half miles from Independence, which gives employment to several hundred men. Kansas City has two large public markets, where the farmer, truck gardener, and fruit grower can dispose of his products to the very best advantage to himself and the consumer.

Both Kansas City and Independence can feel an honest pride in their public schools. In the former city the building of schools is a continuous proposition; the constant increase of the population will not permit them for one year to cease building operations. In the latter city two new eight-room buildings are just completed, which shows the continuous growth of the city in which we have a special interest.

The extensive coal fields near our county are a valuable asset to those engaged in manufacturing, and a help to the home consumer in obtaining fuel at reasonable prices. The great lumber region of the Southwest near to us is a boon to the home builder, making it possible to obtain a home at less cost than it is possible in the country farther north. The climate is temperate, the winters are not severe, springtime comes early and the autumns linger well on to Christmas time. This makes it very desirable for the agriculturalist and those engaged in outdoor labor. In other parts of the country there are several towns ranging from several hundred to more than one thousand in population, all being connected with Kansas City by railroads and wagon roads.

In a religious way the opportunities are excellent for our people, and conditions for future growth are very favorable. In Kansas City, Missouri, there are four branches; Kansas City, Kansas, has six. In Independence there are three branches and two missions, all of which have church buildings; the difference between the branch and mission is that the former has an organization with the usual set of officers, the latter has no organization, and is in charge of some one appointed by the Stake Presidency. The mission has all the usual meetings, including Sunday-school and Religio, and is the preliminary work for a branch. There are two branches between Kansas City and Independence, Mount Washington and Englewood, and one at Lee's Summit, fourteen miles from Independence, and missions at East Independence and Courtney. The church membership in the county is quite near four thousand.

In the light of the above facts, from every view point, Jackson County is the most important place to which our people can gather. It offers opportunities to all classes of labor—the farmer, gardener, fruit grower, poultry man, mechanic, common laborer, stenographer, salesman, saleswoman, business man, lawyer, doctor, surgeon, dentist and educator. There is not a place in our country where the opportunities are better for the honest and industrious man or woman to obtain the comforts of life. One who will succeed in other parts of our country can do the same in Jackson County; and one who is a failure elsewhere, if it is because he lacks honesty, industry, and business ability, will likely continue on in the same old way in Jackson County.

When we consider the great natural resources of the county, and what is tributary to it, and that it is midway between two oceans, and far north from the Gulf of Mexico, so that when troublesome times come with foreign nations, we may "flee to Zion for safety," we see a loving expression of our heavenly Father's watch-care over his children.

Wickedness is found now, as common as elsewhere, but in the gathering of the righteous of our own people, in cooperation with the other good people in the community, many of the evils that we now suffer from will be removed. It is cowardly to run in the face of danger, and then come back after the victory has been won by the valiant soldiers for the right.

Our heavenly Father knew that Zion must have a small beginning, it must grow out from the center, and extend as far and wide as there are righteous people to occupy; and he selected a part of the country that was rich in natural resources. Many of our people are making mistakes that bring to them financial and spiritual loss, because they locate in communities where the opportunities for earning a living are not good, and they must soon move elsewhere, which is often to Jackson County, which, had they done in their first move, would sometimes have saved the price of a good home. The Lord does not want us to move to Zion because we can not earn a living elsewhere, but for the reason that he has a marvelous work to accomplish in the latter days, a work that the prophets from the time of Enoch to that of Christ have prophesied of; and we are to be coworkers with him to bring it about. If we have some selfish motive in view, just to go there and have a pleasant time while some one else does the work, we better stay away.

I will venture an opinion in the application of the law concerning the gathering and what the attitude of the elders should be in giving instruction to the Saints, and should the reader have a doubt in his mind as to the interpretation given, write to the Presiding Bishop of the church, and if the writer is in error he will be just as willing to correct the mistake as he is to write this paper. It is unseemly to have a controversy in the church papers, or in private, when it is so easy to appeal to the person whom the law makes the counselor in such matters.

1.—The party interested, when it becomes necessary to change his location, should first make effort to locate in Jackson County, for Zion must build from the center out.

2.—There is not another place in Zion and the regions round about that offers so many opportunities for all classes of labor, business, and professional work by which it is possible for men to earn a living and help spread the gospel. This will not in any way conflict with the law that refers to gathering to the regions round about, but the first effort should be in that region of country, and should conditions not be favorable then go in some of the near-by counties. This is not because some of the surrounding country does not offer good opportunities, but because we must concentrate our energies and not waste them by too much scattering.

It is no more necessary under present conditions for all to move to the central community than for everyone holding the priesthood to go out in the field as missionaries. The deciding of the matter is one of the very important things in our life, and which will affect the Lord's work in building up Zion. The law points out the way, for according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3.)

This does not mean that you must sell your farm or home or business where you live and put the money all in a sack, and lay it and your personal effects and children at the feet of the Bishop. The interpretation put on the law by the Bishopric and approved by the church is that you should file an inventory with the Bishop which would inform him as to your wealth, your indebtedness, your occupation, the number of children, and with it any information that would help him understand your condition and that of your children, their needs and plans for the future in regard to their occupations, the conditions where you live, whether in a branch or in an isolated condition.

This is not wanted because the Bishop wants to rob you, or dictate to you in your private affairs, be an autocrat, and domineer over you like some despot. He wants to be your friend, to help you so that you can do the best possible for yourself and children, and at the same time help build up Zion. This applies the same to the Stake Bishopric, whom the law contemplates should be workers together for welfare of the Saints, to be friends and helpers. One of the great needs in the world and in the church is the assistance of kind-hearted and sympathetic friends, persons who are not actuated by selfish motives to make money out of you for their personal gain.

The law says (Doc. and Cov. 128: 4) the Saints should consult the elders and bishops before moving. It is a very important question as to how far an elder can go in instructing the Saints in these matters. He surely can not take the place of the Bishopric, any more than he could one of the Twelve in appointing a missionary, for that is a part of their special work. The only thing he can consistently do is to help the Saints in giving them an understanding of the law, and in that way help the Bishopric, just as he can help one of the Twelve in his work by teaching the Saints and the priesthood their rights and privileges under the law, and pointing them to the one who has a right to administer it.

For one to attempt to persuade Saints to go to some particular locality because he lives there, or because there is cheap land there, and then move away himself the first chance he gets, is reprehensible, and lays the party open to the imputation that he has a selfish motive in view and is sharing in the commissions with some real estate firm. The Bishopric of the church, assisted by the Stake Bishopric, has this important branch of the Lord's work under their care, and what the elders and others should do is to help them, and not usurp their office. So long as the Saints will seek to carry on their business through real estate firms, and elders whom the church or the Lord has not appointed to do that special work, they will have financial loss and other troubles to annoy them. It is not very long since two parties informed me of their losses, one of eight hundred dollars and another of one thousand dollars, and also stated that they had disregarded the advice of the Bishop in locating. After their losses they proceeded to do what they were advised to do in the first place.

The high price of land in Jackson County is not a barrier to our people locating in that county. It is no higher than in other parts of the country where the population is as great. If the Gentiles can pay the prices, are Latter Day Saints less capable, less industrious, are they weaklings that they must have a miracle to take the place of industry and economy? Under the Lord's cooperative plan, by saving the rent, every honest, industrious, worthy person can obtain a home, whether in city, town, or country.

In Independence the Order of Enoch has one of the most beautiful locations in the city, with a temporary church located on it where all the regular services are held. The prices of the lots are from one hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and seventy-five dollars each, and can be paid at the rate of ten dollars per month. You can not buy them and speculate on them and make money out of your brother's labor; they are for homes. It is the intention of the order to do the same in regard to farm lands when it has money with which to buy. No higher or holier duty rests upon the Saints than to aid in the work of helping our worthy poor to obtain homes. The Lord reproved the Saints for failure in this line in 1834, and they suffered the chastening hand of God through mob violence for their failure. (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.)

The only thing that stands in the way of every honest, worthy, Latter Day Saint having a home is our own unrighteousness, a failure to honor God's law. It is a conservative estimate to say that one quarter of a million dollars in the last ten years has been spent by our people foolishly, sometimes by the advice of foolish elders, in gold, silver, zinc, and coal mines, and in other foolish ways that had not much business stability to them—speculation, to get something for nothing—and it is still going on. No greater blessing, in a temporal way, could come to our people than for some of our people who have the means, and are good farmers, to buy farms in Jackson County, and for others to help with their money, so that through the church and the order of Enoch honest, industrious, capable, and worthy ones could be helped to obtain the same. Then we could have a storehouse in Independence, and very much tithing could be paid in the products of the farm. With only the number of missionaries' families that now reside in Independence, and receiving one third of their allowance in produce, we would save the church more than three thousand dollars per year in cash; and the saving in the cost of hiring would also go into other homes and institutions like the Sanitarium, and the Old Folks' Home, which would have a large portion of their needs supplied from the same source.

Jesus said: The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light. This is just as true today as when uttered by the Master. The Gentiles are not complaining about the prices of land in Jackson County; they are buying it. They know that it is as valuable as gold—an investment without any risk. The people whom the Lord told that it was wise to purchase the land sometimes prefer to invest in mine speculation, and other doubtful enterprises, and in so doing confirm the old saying that a foolish person and his money are easily parted. The Lord said that the Saints should send their treasures up to Zion, and blessings would be theirs in this life and in the life to come. (Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13.)

As a concluding paragraph, the reader's attention is called to Doctrine and Covenants 72: 5, where instructions are given concerning persons going to Zion. The elders should be careful to teach this important feature of the law. It provides for a certificate from a local bishop, or from three elders to the Bishop in Zion. What for? The Bishop wants to know what kind of a man he is dealing with. He can not know everyone personally. Has the party been faithful to his duties outside of Zion? Is he a tithe payer? Does he render financial help to the missionary? Does he help in financial matters in the branch? If he has been faithful in these matters, the Bishop will know that he is dealing with an industrious man, and not with an idler who wants to live from the fruit of others' toil, or one so blinded by selfishness and covetousness that he can not see the beauty in the sweet gospel story.

Editors Herald: I fancy that I am about the only wandering star in the mission field this year. Perhaps it is a good thing, for it seems that the days of wandering stars and men becoming a law unto themselves in this church are fast coming to a close. It is a wise policy for every man to abide in his calling, do his own work and remain in his own field of labor, and thus prevent collisions and serious losses, such as have occurred in years gone by.

Like Caleb and Joshua, I am privileged for a short time to spy out the goodly land, see what the people are doing and what hopes there are of establishing and obtaining a future inheritance.

This is my observation everywhere I have gone, that the Lord has everything in readiness on his part, for the land is the richest and most productive of any in the world, producing of every description in abundance for man and beast, minerals, metals, oils, and everything that our wants may call for; but on our part we seem to be backward in putting these advantages to the proper use in order that we may lay up treasures in heaven.

Many years ago the admonition of our leaders was, Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, but, Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and establish his righteousness, which is being sadly neglected by many in this mad rush for riches and pleasures. Zion can not be established except by the principles of righteousness, and the garments worn must be clean and white, which is the right doing of Saints.

Ye fathers and mothers of the stock of Abraham, and members of the new covenant, who have longed and prayed for the redemption of Zion, how think ye the redemption will be brought about when some of your own sons and daughters to whom we are looking for assistance in carrying this great latter-day work to completion are playing baseball on Sunday and enjoying themselves in worldly amusements, while the messengers of life and peace are dispensing the bread of life to empty seats? *

We have faith in the saying, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart therefrom." Where this has been neglected by the parents, the Sunday school and the Religio teachers should take the matter up and strongly impress the wayward minds that the narrow and not the broad way is the path to pursue.

I have a pleasant remembrance of the few evenings spent at Bennington Heights, Kansas City, Saint Joseph, Deloit, Dow City. I am now at Magnolia, I go from here to Des Moines. I am keeping well and have averaged a sermon every night since I left Independence, which is out of the ordinary for me.

I am, still in the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

INGRAM, TEXAS, June 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: This writing leaves us at the above-named place, where we have had only three members until recently Sister Ida Cade and her daughter Maude were the only members when I first came here last year. After preaching a series of sermons another was added to their number, Sister Ellen Norton, who is an elderly lady and an old resident of the town.

Since this occurred the nonprogressive Christian people have been talking debate. Finally the challenge came, and we signed propositions to meet them on the usual church questions, each affirming his church to be in harmony with the New Testament. They chose Elder John S. Durst, an ex-judge and lawyer, to represent them in the discussion. The debate began June 14 and closed June 21, five two-hour sessions being devoted to each proposition. Brother D. S. Palmer moderated nicely for me during the discussion. We succeeded in carrying the audience with us when we turned our guns on Campbellism. They often expressed their feelings in applause. We had the closing speech, and when we closed, the people cheered wildly.

We have baptized two noble men since the discussion, both heads of families, one of them a prominent Baptist and superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school. We expect others ere long.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I remain,
Your brother in the one faith,

PAPEETI, TAHITI, May 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: Through your letter department we wish to let our friends know of our journey and safe arrival here. Our Railroad journey from Kansas City to San Francisco was very pleasant, somewhat more pleasant than the water voyage. Many verses have been written about the pleasures of a cruise on the waters; but there is some difference between a poet and a sea-sick man.

Wife and I left Independence May 18, arriving at Denver the next day. On passing through the welcome arch at the union depot, the familiar sight of the Denver streets, where I spent about seven years, met our eyes. We soon found some of the Saints, and were made comfortable at the home of Brother Williams.

Announcement was out for me to preach the coming Thursday. By waiting to fill this engagement we would have barely time to reach the coast in time to catch the vessel. We stayed, however, and made the port on schedule time.

We boarded the Denver and Rio Grande for Ogden. The beauties of the mountain chasms, giant cliffs, and lofty peaks beggar description by me. The Royal Gorge, Castle Gate and other wonders of the land stimulate grave thoughts of the greatness of the Creator. One point of interest between Ogden and San Francisco is the thirty-five-mile bridge across Great Salt Lake.

The next morning as we awoke we were coasting down the Pacific slope of far-famed California. We stayed a couple of days in the city. We boarded the Moana at noon, sailed out of the Golden Gate, passed the Panama Pacific Exposition buildings, and for thirteen days saw nothing but water, water, water!

We landed at the harbor of Papeete June 8. Were met at the pier by Brother May. Went to the mission house. The next day began our class in language. Our first impression of the natives is that they are an honest-hearted people, as far advanced in gospel education as should be expected, in fact, in some things ahead of ourselves. The Hebrona and Torona branches each gave us a reception. The one giving us a quilt and eight dollars, the other giving ten dollars. We hope to be able to repay them.

Brother Savage and I expect to make a trip to the other islands soon. We like the food, climate etc. I will write next time about our experiences, the natives, islands, etc.

In gospel bonds,

A. H. CHRISTENSEN.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

Since June 28 the following named have discoursed at church services: Brethren T. C. Kelley, T. J. Sheldon, A. H. Parsons and President F. M. Smith, who on last Sunday morning before a large audience gave a condensed and interesting summary of work done in the all-important office to which as a young man of twenty-eight he was called, in April, 1902.

He desired to speak a few words concerning his twelve years' service in the church. He said, The counsel to "study to show thyself approved unto God" has constantly been ringing in my ears since laboring in the ministry. I was years ago editor of the Lamoni Chronicle, and systematic study went by the board. As the field of the church was enlarged I seemed to have responsibilities cast upon me I could not carry for lack of spiritual experience.

Our brother did not claim to be a tactician, and he concluded to gather for himself from the knowledge collected by the scientists of the ages. He had solicited in prayer and he felt in his soul that God was directing his steps. He had led a strenuous life at institutions of learning, and had done research work in many libraries.

In an impressive manner he referred to "the prodigious memory" of his venerable father. "The records of the office," he declared, "were stored away in his memory."

All this was listened to with profound attention. His frankness of speech in reference to his pursuits of the past and his consecrated purposes in the direction of the future has indeed struck a harmonious chord in the hearts of the Saints, and during his year's absence from them he will no doubt have their confidence and prayers for his welfare and the success of his continued labors in the church.

Before closing he gave a short talk on local option, the subject that is so deeply stirring us here. He was enthusiastic on "the enforcement of the law." He plead with earnestness for every man in the church to "vote for the dry" and to line up solidly for the abolishment of the liquor traffic.

With these words he concluded, and asked the prayers of the Saints and the blessing of God.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Utah District: On September 1 we have due on the Salt Lake church building the sum of $2,000, and are desirous of raising as much of this sum as possible among our own people in the district. Each one of us who can help should, and I earnestly urge one and all to make extra effort towards this fund.

The general church funds have a great many pressing demands upon them just now in carrying on the work of preaching the gospel in practically all parts of the world, and I am sorry to say that Utah does not appear to have done her fair share towards the financial needs of the district and the church at large. The Saints should determine to make the Utah District self-sustaining; to this end I have been laboring in the past six months, but regret to say that we have been compelled to call on the Presiding Bishopric several times for help. I have felt humiliated each time. The responsibility is ours; it is our business to see to it that our financial needs are supplied. Some of our people have done very well, while others do very little, and some I am ashamed to say, do nothing at all. Let us each and all try to help. Those who have done well, try to make a little more sacrifice; those who have done little, do more; and those who have done nothing at all, let them awake, remembering that we are all to work together if we are to succeed. And who wants to fail. An immediate response is imperative.

Brother Bronson united with the Reorganization at Preparation, Iowa, July, 1865. Was ordained an elder at Little Sioux, Iowa, by Ebenezer Page and Hugh Lytle; married Miss Lugenia Hickox, May 31, 1866. To them were born nine children. He leaves wife, 1 brother, 5 sons, 3 daughters, 28 grandchildren, 9 great-grandchildren, many other relatives and a host of friends to mourn their loss. He labored as local elder and teacher in the branches where he lived in Monona and Harrison counties, Iowa. He moved to Decatur, Nebraska, in 1898, where he finished his life's work, continuing faithful to the end. He was conscious of the approaching end, and made full arrangements for his funeral, naming the one whom he desired should preach the sermon. He passed away with the full assurance of a glorious resurrection at the coming of our Lord. Services in Saints' church, Decatur, Edgar Butts in charge, sermon by Joseph Lane. Interment in Decatur Cemetery.

INDEPENDENCE GOES DRY

No one would have said, All is peace in Zion, had he been with the junior editor on the occasion of a recent visit to Independence. One of the most strenuous elections ever held in Jackson County took place there July 21 on the liquor question. Victory was with the "drys" by a majority of one hundred and five. The State Anti-Saloon League assisted in the campaign, the local forces being led by Doctor Twyman.

The editor left for Lamoni shortly before noon of the day of the election, and at that time the street in front of the offices occupied by the First Presidency and Presiding Bishop was filled with crowds of people, buzzing like a hive of angry bees, as the polling place of the second ward, the worst in the city, was just across the street.

Reverend Pendleton, pastor of the Christian Church and who took an active part in the campaign, was slugged by saloon sympathizers. He was carried into a room adjoining our offices, his assailant was arrested, and some sort of a trial was held, but we did not learn the verdict. Watching the exciting scene, we could picture old times in Independence. If it is possible for the Christian minister to be slugged on a main street of Independence on election day and in broad daylight, July 21, 1914, we can see how it was possible for Bishop Partridge to be tarred and feathered there July 20, 1833, and for similar outrages to occur. Now, however, on this question, the churches are with us, whereas then they were against us. Eighty years ago we faced the bums and toughs and thugs and corrupt officials alone, but not so now.

The "drys" were well organized. The streets were patrolled by several hundred men Sunday and Monday nights to prevent the herding in of negroes from Kansas City and other points to be voted "wet" on election day. Hundreds of men and women were on the streets all day election day, and every stranger or suspicious character was exposed to a battery of questions and cameras.

In the work of this campaign our people took their share, to say the least. Reverend Pendleton, the Christian minister before-mentioned, a courageous and energetic gentleman, met with us in the Stone Church Sunday afternoon and assisted in organizing our men for service. Roberts, Neal, Shook, et al take note. If not so intent upon making an easy living lecturing against us they might, like Mr. Pendleton, join forces with us against real evils, and help to do something worth while, if, indeed they have it in them at all to do such work.

In reporting the election the Kansas City Journal for July 22 says:

Realizing that the first and fourth wards which are largely populated by Latter Day Saints, and are admittedly strong "dry" wards, did not need their attention, and that the third ward was supposed to be about evenly divided between "wets" and "drys," the women concentrated their efforts on the second ward, in which two hundred and fifty negroes reside, and which was expected to roll up a large "wet" majority.

We are glad to note that on this great moral issue it is recognized that the Saints take a firm and uncompromising stand for the right, just as in 1833 they took a stand against African slavery, the greatest moral issue of those times. Their stand may and undoubtedly will make them enemies, as it did then; but they can not afford to do otherwise. A brother writes, "One need not travel far to hear the saloon men damn the 'Mormons.'"

Jesus came into this world with a declaration of war,—war against all evil, but peace toward all men. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil." All who enlist under his banner must take part in his warfare. The penalty of opposing evil is the hatred of evildoers. But that fact in no way deterred Jesus from doing his full duty.

Our people in Independence feel the weight of citizenship, not only in the kingdom of heaven, but also in the community in all civic matters. May they continue to be recognized as an active and aggressive force for good and for the moral redemption of the city. And in that work may they continue to receive the cooperation of all good people of whatsoever church affiliation, not even excluding those who are of no denomination, but are of the honorable men and women of the earth.

UTAH ELDERS CIRCULATE FALSEHOOD

2 CRAMMOUTH ROAD, PITSMOOR, SHEFFIELD, ENGLAND,

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH,
Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: I write to inform you that the Utah Mormon elders here are stating that when you visited Salt Lake City and visited Joseph Fielding Smith, he showed you your father's family Bible, at the front of which were written the names of Sister Emma Smith and three other women, all entered as his wives, with the dates of his marriage with them, etc.

This statement was made by one of their elders, Joseph E. Wood, in the house of Brother G. H. Arber, 6 Crammorth Road, Pitmoor, Sheffield, in the presence of another of their elders, Elder Hammond, the above Brother and Sister Arber, their daughter Elsie, also a member of our church, Elder John Austin, the president of our Sheffield Branch, and the undersigned. The most important part of the statement was that you recognized and acknowledged the handwriting of the names, etc., in the Bible, as that of your father.

We of course believe the statement to be untrue, but we think you ought to know in order to defend yourself, and the name of your father. The statement may have been made before in other places by them, so far as we know, but it is the first time we have heard it made here, and we have had a few discussions with them from time to time.

In order that members of the church in other parts, as well as ourselves, may be able to meet them successfully on this statement, may I suggest that you publish a refutation, or whatever you may know of this matter, in the SAINTS' HERALD.

Hoping you are enjoying as good health as may reasonably be expected at your time of life, and enjoying all spiritual blessings from the Lord God of Israel, I subscribe myself,

Your brother in the true faith,

J. H. SYKES.

There is absolutely no truth whatever in the charge mentioned in the foregoing in reference to the alleged conversation and interview between President Joseph F. Smith of the Utah Mormon church and myself.

After the expulsion of the church from Illinois in 1846 I met my cousin three times. The first time was in the spring or summer of 1860, when he went through Nauvoo on his way to a foreign mission. He stayed all night at the Mansion House, Nauvoo, then kept by my mother. I saw him but a few minutes, and no conversation took place between us in reference to the condition of things then existing. I did not again see him until the fall of 1876 when I was in Salt Lake City on my way from California. By invitation I went to his home for supper. On this occasion he introduced me to three women, introducing each by saying, "Cousin Joseph, this is my wife."

At this time there was no conversation between us in regard to polygamy, or his father or my father having been polygamists, and he showed me no Bible or any scrap of paper on which my father's signature appeared. He was present at one of my meetings in the Liberal Institute, but I did not speak to him.

No other meeting ever occurred between us until about November 4, 1913. At that date he called on me at my house in Independence. It was merely a perfunctory visit, he calling, as he stated, to pay his respects, together with his companions. Two or three people were with him, one of whom he introduced as his wife. She in conversation with my wife said she was "one of the wives" of Joseph F. Smith. Several persons were present at this interview, and not a word was said in regard to polygamy, plural marriage, or anything of the kind. The interview scarcely lasted twenty minutes.

The charge made by Elder Woods is without foundation, and is false. Should this story reach the ears of the eldership anywhere, please secure a copy of this article of refutation and use it where it will expose the falsehood.

I can not give credence to the belief that President Joseph F. Smith would himself have made any statement from which the one made by Elder Woods could have been originated.

JOSEPH SMITH.

GENERAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION
NOTICE

Brother W. N. Robinson having placed his resignation as superintendent of the General Sunday School Association in the hands of the First Presidency, the executive committee of the association in connection with Elbert A. Smith of the First Presidency and John W. Rushton of the Quorum of Twelve met at Independence, Missouri, July 20, and selected G. R. Wells to occupy as superintendent until the next General Convention. D. J. Krahl is to act as assistant, with the office of second assistant vacant.

The following was unanimously voted by the executive committee:

Resolved, That we deeply regret that Brother W. N. Robinson has found it necessary to resign from the office of superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, but at the same time we feel that he is fully justified in the course he has taken, under the circumstances that have arisen in his affairs.

CURRENT EVENTS*SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

MCREYNOLDS TO SUPREME BENCH.—The press announces that it is the intention of President Wilson to appoint Attorney General James Clark McReynolds to succeed the late Associate Justice Lurton as a member of the Supreme Court.

WITHDRAWS NOMINATION.—In consideration of the strength of the opposition in the Senate which is said to have been strong enough to prevent indorsement, President Wilson has withdrawn the nomination of Thomas D. Jones for member of the Federal Reserve Board.

TO PROSECUTE NEW HAVEN.—On the 20th President Wilson directed Attorney General McReynolds to institute suit under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law to dissolve the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad Company. The President directed also that the "criminal aspect of the case" be laid before a federal grand jury. This order follows the failure of the New Haven officials to keep a previous agreement to dissolve peacefully.

REPARATION DEMANDED.—Seeking to fasten blame for the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife on the Servian Government and people, Austria on the 23d issued an ultimatum demanding of Servia satisfactory reparation within forty-eight hours. The answer of Servia was unsatisfactory, and diplomatic relations were immediately severed, the Austrian minister withdrawing from the Servian capital to Austrian territory. The Austrian foreign office on the 26th handed the Servian minister his passports, which is considered all but if not quite the equivalent of a declaration of war. Mobilization of Austrian and Servian forces is reported, with demonstrations by Germany, ally of Austria, and Russia, ally of Servia. Feeling is running high in all these countries. Wise statesmanship will be necessary to avert war.

IRISH HOME RULE.—In the hope of averting further complications and possible civil war, King George last week called a conference of leaders in the Irish Home Rule conflict. Addressing the first meeting the king said in part:

My intervention at this moment may be regarded as a new departure, but the exceptional circumstances under which you are brought together justify my action. For months we have watched with deep misgivings the course of events in Ireland. The trend has been surely and steadily toward an appeal to force, and now the cry of civil war is on the lips of the most responsible and sober-minded of my people. . . . In view of the magnitude of the interests at stake, I pray God in his infinite wisdom may guide you and your deliberations so that they may result in the joy of peace and an honorable settlement.

This conference failed to bring about a compromise. The amending bill recently returned by the Lords to the Commons was expected to come up in the Commons the 29th. Uncertainty continues, and developments are awaited with interest.

HINDOOS AND CANADIANS IN CONFLICT.—In the harbor of Vancouver for three months past has lain at anchor the Komagata Maru, a Japanese vessel, with three hundred and fifty Hindoos on board, and who had been prevented from landing on the grounds that, though British subjects, as Orientals they are undesirable persons. The Canadian courts sustained the immigration official in this ruling. The Hindoos were several times prevented from landing by guard boats. The Japanese steamer was finally ordered from the harbor, and when on July 18 the captain complained to the authorities that the Hindoos prevented him from getting up steam, one hundred and sixty policemen and immigration officers approached the vessel in a tug to render assistance. The resistance of the Hindoos, however, was so stubborn that the Canadians were unable to board the vessel. The Hindoos have been as determined under their rights as English subjects to land as the Canadian authorities have been that they shall not land. The situation is unusual and of interest as involving an international as well as a national issue.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Huerta together with General Blanquet and their families boarded the German cruiser Dresden on the evening of the 20th, bound for Kingston, Jamaica, which point they reached on the 24th. It is announced that the Washington administration is in receipt of assurances from Carbajal, Carranza, Villa and Zapata indicating that all are anxious for harmony and peace in Mexico, and insuring the cooperation of each to that end. Carranza intimates that satisfactory arrangements can be made in the matter of amnesty and guarantee demanded by the Carbajal government, and insisted upon by the United States. Carranza is at this writing at Tampico in conference with Reginaldo Cepeda, official representative of Carbajal. The Constitutionalist troops are moving southward. Secretary Bryan is said to have announced that the United States Government will refuse to recognize as legal any action of the Huerta government subsequent to October 10, 1913. This is understood to apply to all concessions by the Huerta government, and all loans to the same after said date.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

ERROR IN FORM.—Owing to an error a number of HERALDS of the issue of July 22 were mailed with pages of the inside form misplaced. By removing the stiches these pages may be properly arranged and the stiches replaced. Anyone having difficulty may secure a copy instead of the one in hand by addressing the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

BIG JOB.—Something of the magnitude of the work of building the Panama Canal is suggested in the amount of dirt which has slid into the Culebra cut since the canal was dug. Two hundred fifty acres of land has slipped into this cut, aggregating 30,000,000 cubic yards, enough dirt to build a wall 7 feet thick and 7 feet high from New York to San Francisco, or enough to fill 1,500,000 big cars, making a train 12,000 miles long.

NEW AUSTRALIAN BRANCH.—In reporting an address of Brother G. T. Griffiths before the April conference of the Victoria, Australia, District, Brother A. W. Graig, in the Gospel Standard for May 1, says:

He concluded with a brief report of his own work among the Saints at Phillip Island, where he organized a branch of twenty-one members, with a number of bright young men in office. There is every indication of a good work being performed on the island, and we will watch with interest the growth of this new branch, wishing them Godspeed in their endeavor to forward the latter-day work, and pray that their young officers may be encouraged to do whatsoever their hands find to do for the honor and glory of God.

MESSAGE OF PURITY.—In the Hinton (Oklahoma) News we find reference to the work of Elder J. E. Vanderwood in that vicinity. Among other things the News says:

He is an earnest, interesting talker, and his appeal is made in such a way as to be an inspiration to the better side of life. He holds aloft the Christ life and character as being paramount, and he appeals to the intellectual and spiritual, as well as moral side of life. His work is intended to be a constructive one, and he holds that the world is far more in need of a religion that will fit them to live, than they are of a religion to fit them to die. Pure thoughts, a pure heart, a clean mind and virtuous habits seem to be the real essence of his message.

DES MOINES CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY.—The junior editor, Brother Elbert A. Smith, was present with the Des Moines Saints Sunday, July 12, at which time they celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the branch. An interesting program was carried out, beginning with the prayer service at 8.30 in the morning and continuing until the close of the evening preaching services. Further report of the affair is furnished by the local correspondent. Apostle C. A. Butterworth was also present and took part in the celebration. He had conducted a week's service at the church preceding the Sunday anniversary. The Des Moines Saints are to be congratulated on their growth, and on the present condition of the work in that locality. Whereas they started fifty years ago with six members, we understand that they have now something over three hundred.

IMPROVING OPPORTUNITY.—The Chariton (Iowa) Herald-Patriot and The Chariton Leader for July 16 contained matter furnished by J. F. Mintun and R. S. Salyards respectively, who are conducting tent meetings at that place. These contributions include an epitome of the faith of the church, a suggestion of the apostasy, the need and fact of the restoration, the position of the church in matters of home and government. The brethren report a good attendance and increasing interest. Brother Mintun also has in the Tingley (Iowa) Vindicator for July 9 an article under the caption, "The Latter Day Saints; who are they," which clearly sets out the convictions of the church on marriage, together with a brief history of the church with reference to the Utah apostasy. Elder Mintun closed a tent meeting at Tingley just before going to Chariton. The use of the papers is to the advantage of the work, and the elders everywhere are improving opportunity as afforded.

PROHIBITION PROHIBITS.—Those who oppose prohibition contend that it does not prohibit, that is, that alcoholics are sold in spite of state law. Kansas is cited by William Allen White in an article in the Saturday Evening Post as a state where prohibition prohibits, which fact is set forth in the statistics he furnishes:

There is not a great difference in population between Cook County, Illinois, and the State of Kansas; yet there are more Chicago insane in the Cook County asylum than the insane, the criminals, the boys' and girls' reformatory, the feeble-minded, and the prisoners in Kansas jails and penitentiaries. . . . Kansas has fewer murders, fewer homicides, and fewer accidental deaths than any other State, and this is one of the lowest rates in the world—4.5 for each 100,000 annually. The vital statistics for the various States show that Kansas has fewer deaths from kidney diseases than any other State, and the relation of whisky to kidney trouble is so well known that this fact alone proves a lower per capita consumption of liquor. Remember, there are 105 counties in Kansas; 48 of these counties did not send a prisoner to the penitentiary last year, and 87 counties did not send an insane patient to the asylum. In 14 counties no jury has been called in ten years to try a criminal case; 53 counties have empty jails, 38 counties have empty poorhouses, and the second lowest death rate in America is the Kansas death rate of 7½ per 1,000.

The money saved to the State in the absence of liquor selling amounts approximately to $20 per capita per annum. That this money is put to good use is evidenced by the fact that the average holding of taxable property in Kansas is $1,666.92, declared by the Wall Street Journal to be the largest in America. The Director of the Census Bureau is authority for the statement that Kansas has decreased its debt faster than any other State in the Union. Advocates of the saloon argue that the license money is necessary for the care of the poor, the inefficient, the feeble-minded, the insane, etc. These figures from Kansas answer this contention by demonstrating that where there is no alcohol there is comparatively no such burden on the State.

"Yes, do you send me a book . . . not a bargain book bought from a haberdasher, but a beautiful book, a book to caress—peculiar, distinctive, individual: a book that hath first caught your eye and then pleased your fancy; written by an author with a tender whim, all right out of his heart. We will read it together in the gloaming, and when the gathering dusk doth blur the page, we'll sit with hearts too full for speech and think it over."—Dorothy Wordsworth to Coleridge.

THE ATONEMENT---PART 3

BY ELDER F. A. RUSSELL

Did God demand the crucifixion of Jesus or the shedding of his blood as a part thereof?

BOOK OF MORMON ON THE CRUCIFIXION

In 1 Nephi 3: 86-95 Nephi says after the Lamb of God had been slain (slain means always an act of violence upon the creature, by accident or design, but always in opposition to the wish of the one wrought upon) the people then gathered to fight against the apostles; he then foretells the destruction of those who do such things. Query: Was it an act of God to oppose the Lamb of God, and yet such a terrible thing to oppose the apostles? Even as the angel had foretold (2 Nephi 5: 24-26), the people to whom Jesus came hardened their hearts and stiffened their necks against him and scourged him and crucified him. Was it a fortunate thing that they did so? "Behold, they will reject him, because of their iniquities . . . they will crucify him." (2 Nephi 11: 21, 22.) (Will the reader observe that the word will is used in this prophecy?)

Somebody in noticing that later could very easily say, "Well, he will have to be crucified, so that that prophecy will not fail!" Such actions as those referred to by Nephi, Jesus sought constantly to correct. Was Jesus himself thus trying to prevent himself from completing the "divine plan"?

It seems that Jesus appeared in a very wicked portion of the world. (2 Nephi 7: 4-10.) In verse 7 we read, "No other nation . . . would crucify their God." Some think the reason that he came to the Jews was that he might be slain so he could become the Redeemer in fact. I pass this by simply saying that the sickest need the physician's services the most. Take a sharp look at verse 9; because of priestcrafts and iniquities, etc., they crucified him! Not to save anyone!

Jesus is referred to as the God of Israel. "They set him at naught and hearken not to the voice of his counsels," because of their iniquities. Then he suffers them to scourge him, and smite, and spit upon him. Finally he yields, surrenders himself, as a man, into the hands of wicked men and is crucified; and tradition whispers again, So you could be saved, redeemed! Smite the tradition and any interpretation which nourishes it!

In Doctrine and Covenants 45: 9 it is written that some day the Jews will behold the wounds in his hands and in his feet and "then shall they weep because of their iniquities; then shall they lament because they persecuted their king." Persecuted?

Why persecution? Maybe they were just helping him to atone for their sin. If the blood-atonement theory is true, then there is something that man can do to redeem himself, i. e., slay the Son of Man.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

We stand committed to the Inspired Version above any other book, I think, for all additional scriptural instruction must harmonize therewith. In comparing with the King James version we note alterations in the former. If these alterations are corrections we can certainly profit from reading Matthew 9: 19, "If ye had kept the law, ye would have received me." Believe that? Think it is true? "I am he who gave the law." Notice. The requirement of the law, according to Jesus, was that they should receive him. If received, then no crucifixion; and again the blood-atonement theory is weighed up and found sadly "short." This statement of Jesus is a hard one against the "in order to fulfill the law" people. But you may say, "I know some place where the teaching is different." Perhaps so. What is gained by simply pitting one passage against another? Walk in the way where God is most clearly discerned.

If the blood which was shed at the time of the offering of sacrifices by Moses, et al, relied for its virtue upon the necessity of shedding of Christ's blood, then the sacrificial blood had no virtue whatever. Nothing is plainer to my mind. If your interpretations of the various writings have led you to conclude thus, you will either have to give up the interpretations or lay up the Scriptures. This correction in the Inspired Version is for the purpose of giving light. Receive it.

LINK IS STILL MISSING

No one yet, so far as I know, has been able to locate the link to couple the crucifixion of Christ and his blood with the sacrifices of Moses' time. Some persistent and faithful workers have sought long and labored hard to find it. Links have been found and widely advertised, but when tried have not stood the strain. Others, growing weary of their search, have sought to forge one. No use. The above quoted words of Jesus declare positively that such link does not exist, neither can one be made. It is better to revise some of our sermons (our hymnal, too, might well be cleansed from a few of those old sectarian hymns which we have borrowed from other churches) than to continue to preach some things which Jesus could not approve. You will feel better when you get out of the "groove."

But did Jesus really wish the people to receive him? Did God? Another correction offers ready reply. Read and remember John 6: 44, "This is the will of him who hath sent me, that ye receive the Son." That statement with the promise following it will for ever stand as the protest of heaven against any theory which declares that either the Father or the Son wished, willed, proposed, planned or designed the crucifixion, which of course was contingent upon a rejection. I fail to see how anyone can believe that God sent his Son to be received by all people, yet at the same time be either unwilling or unable to save any portion of the "all" if they did receive him, unless some should disregard his counsel and reject it, and spill the blood of the One sent. Why should I believe that, after all, the salvation of the human family really depends not upon the acceptance of the word of truth, but upon the refusal to accept? But perhaps you are hard to convince. Your religious pedigree may reveal the fact that you were nursed either by Rome or some of her close relatives, and early life traditions and impressions may stay pretty close, whether true or false. Here is another.

Luke 16: 20 furnishes an instance where, through inspiration, the truth has been supplied. I wonder how many people in this church knew that this statement was in any of the three books. After reading this, one might almost think that Jesus had had some experience in something like our general conferences, where very often the "big argument" of some "high light" (with apologies to the brethren) is most effectually punctured by a method so often observed, viz, "Mr. Chairman, may I ask the speaker a question?" The Pharisees, believing themselves to be the divine custodians of the law, had plainly told Jesus that since they had the law and the prophets they had no use for him. Jesus' question: "Why teach ye the law, and deny that which is written; and condemn him whom the Father hath sent to fulfill the law, that you might all be redeemed?" Then the following paragraph, "O, fools! . . . you pervert the right way," etc, as a result of which "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence."

In this and the two preceding quotations we have the distinct advantage of direct revelation. This last citation most effectually refutes the theory under examination, yet our supply is by no means exhausted. Jesus reproved them for condemning him. Rejection and condemnation are the first steps toward the terrible agony, and both are utterly against the counsel of heaven's representative,—Christ—who said, Why condemn me? The Father hath sent me to fulfill the law! That you might all be redeemed! By your action you pervert the right way and actually do violence to the work of God! To be sure, these references are destructive to the blood-atonement theory, but they are decidedly constructive in that they offer something so much better.

Follow us carefully and you will soon be wondering how you ever did talk so much about the blood and the cross in the way you did. If you had kept the law you would have received me! This is the will of him . . . that ye receive the Son. Why condemn me? Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? (John 7: 19.) Jesus kept the law and saw no reason why he need be slain. The Pharisees kept not the law and determined to kill him. Who was right? The law must have had its fulfillment in the living Jesus, for he was come to fulfill the law, and it is folly to say he could not do it without being slain. Repeatedly he reproved the people for not heeding his counsel! Thus whatever there was in the law typical of Christ and his work, it will not do for us to say that the bitter treatment accorded was in any sense a necessity in order to establish the practices under the law.

But the last few words of Luke 16: 20 bring us directly to the point and ought to settle the question, if anything will. Here Jesus in effect says: Do not condemn, the Father hath sent me to fulfill the law, that you might all be redeemed. Positively there is redemption for all offered by God and Christ without any blood shedding! Note the word might. There opportunity is indicated, and the will of God is discovered in the opportunity he provides. That can not be safely denied. So I say to those who have many times tried to reconcile some theories with their own feelings and utterly failing, have, for a time hushed the voice of their own conscience. Remember these words of the Lord Jesus, rejoice therein and, as he said in Luke 9: 44, "Let these sayings sink down into your hearts." Honor and glorify God and your Redeemer by fearlessly proclaiming your belief in their power to redeem the world without the assistance of wicked men and devils. Interpret the Scriptures on this point in the light of these citations (and others forthcoming) and your soul will magnify God in the release from its fetters. In John 8: 37 which he asks in John 7: 19. Hear him! "Ye seek to kill me because my word hath no place in you." Isn't that plain and to the point? Nothing at all ambiguous, as in so many places where the blood of Jesus and the cross of Christ are spoken of. Can two people disagree here? Thus, in a single sentence stripped of all poetry or metaphor, Jesus tells us just why his life was being sought. In the face of this statement, what excuse have we for making the frightful error of saying that he was slain in order that he might become the savior of the world. If he was a crucified Christ, he most assuredly was Christ, was the Redeemer before the shedding of his blood; and the cross in no sense made him to be either Savior or Redeemer. Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley were martyred presidents; but their martyrdom, instead of being the seal of their office and the thing which really gave them the position of president, was the thing which deprived the Nation of its chief executive and prevented their further service to their country. By the crucifixion, the world was deprived of a Savior rather than given one.

JESUS ANSWERS THE QUESTION

Jesus' ministry, as a man, was closed; a most inglorious affair from the side of those planning and executing the murderous deed, but endured in perhaps the most glorious surrender that the world has ever seen, and for the most potent of all reasons, i. e., God was altogether on the side of the victim who was dealt such a crushing blow. No better proof need be sought than the fact that the carefully sealed and guarded tomb was unable to hold that body in which there had been manifest such an abundant life! For the Father, allowing sufficient time to elapse, that his persecutors might not be able to say, "Oh, he was not really dead anyway," raised him from the dead! So far as we know, no one stood at the door of the sepulcher and cried: "Jesus, come forth!" Jesus had glorified the Father in loving obedience unto the end, and now the Father glorifies the Son, and gives assurance to all by raising him from the dead! Thus in that great miracle of all past time the Father presented his Son again to the world for a brief period.

My servant John, and many of the prophets whom I have sent have been mistreated and killed. And unto my beloved Son you have done even as you listed. He knew quite well the danger he faced in the performance of his work, as he indicated in the parable of the servants written by my servant Mark in the twelfth chapter. He endured the cross and despised the shame of it, not to satisfy me, but wholly because wicked people plotted against him and murdered him. But here he is! You killed him, but no longer is he dead! He was faithful to me while working for you, and had the assurance long before you took his life that I would raise him from the dead. He was, and is yet, my Son,—your Savior and your Redeemer! Thus I believe the Father to have spoken, not directly, but through various ones who have known his mind and will.

A RULE THAT WORKS BOTH WAYS

Some do not, but this one does. Refresh your mind on John 8: 37. "Ye seek to kill me." Why? Because my word hath no place in you. Is the following true? Give my word place in you, and ye will not seek to kill me! Would any presume to deny that? Thus the word which Jesus taught, and which was from the beginning, is a stinging rebuke to the blood-atonement proposal. Who has made his word of less effect by traditions? Is it not admitted that wherever and whenever a person was converted from the ranks of wicked men, Jesus himself inviting and urging it, if such an one remained true, that conversion for ever destroyed the possibility of his crucifixion, so far as that convert was concerned? He would neither do it nor aid another any more than any convert to-day. You may say to-day that you believe in blood-atonement, but can you imagine yourself among the disciples of Jesus back there, and when the storm of opposition was the fiercest against your chosen Lord, taking him off to one side and saying to him, "Well, Jesus, I would like real well to help you withstand this terrible onslaught of the enemy, but then I am restrained from doing so because I understand that you came into the world that you might be lifted up, crucified, and have your blood spilled. Just remember that you are the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, and it would be foolish for us to try to prevent the culmination of your Father's plans.

I believe the most radical would shrink from meeting his Master face to face with this theory. I am of the opinion that not even an angel from heaven could have persuaded an early convert that it was his duty to slay his Master. Suppose an angel should have called at the tent of one of those converts and said, I come from heaven with a message for you. Organize a band of men, take your Master under cover of darkness, have enough of a trial to save your own necks, and take him out and murder him in the most brutal manner possible. This may seem bad to you, and I discover you shuddering as you hear me. But listen! That is not a bad act, because it was decreed from the beginning by the Father. It is the great thing in the atonement. You will never be resurrected, saved, or redeemed, the law and the prophets will fail, and the whole divine plan be nullified unless you or somebody else does it!

I think I hear his answer, Move on! You may be an angel from heaven, but if so your only reason for coming here is because you couldn't remain there. Others have done likewise. I fear you have prepared this message on your way down. You have deposited it at the wrong place. Lay it on the altar in the temple at Jerusalem. Jesus told those priests that they had murdered others, and now they are about angry enough to treat him likewise. Pass on!

Why would he answer so? "The entrance of thy words giveth light."—Psalm 119: 30.

The words had entered and his answer revealed the light.

FATHER DEVIL, NOT FATHER GOD;

is responsible for the wounds in the person of Jesus. Read it: Ye seek to kill me. . . . Ye do the deeds of your father. Ye are of your father the Devil. (John 8: 40-44.) In seeking to kill Jesus those Pharisees were doing the deeds of the Devil. Let us no longer charge God with the strange act of expelling Satan from his presence, and at the same time declare that he had included in the plan of atonement as a necessary part thereof an act which none but the Devil or his first lieutenant would be mean enough to perform.

SCRIPTURE IS SOMETIMES MISAPPLIED,

and John 11: 51, 52 has surely suffered thus at the hands of some of our sermon makers. I have heard it preached (and I picked it up and peddled it to others, because I was in the groove and took for granted) that that meant Jesus had to die to redeem that nation and all others who were scattered abroad. How foolish, you may say, but for fifteen years I continued "parroting" out the interpretations for no other reason than because others preached the same. Have I any companions in my present misery? For misery it is, as I now discover the truth.

Caiaphas, the high priest, was no friend of Jesus, so far as we are able to judge from the record of the events in which he was a party. The "inspiration" for his "prophecy" was based upon his conclusion as a member of the council,—a sort of a grand jury—(John 11: 47) that the only thing for them to do was to kill Jesus. His teaching was of such a character that it was feared that the Romans would come and take away "both our place and nation." If I am not mistaken the priests were a sort of a "go-between" between the Romans and the Jews, and their position was such as to make it a "fat job." So naturally they were looking out for themselves particularly. Just an example of the priestcraft which the Book of Mormon writers said was the cause of Jesus' death. When men become imbued with that spirit they do not scruple to remove any hindrance to their purpose, even to the slaughtering of innocents. Get rid of Jesus, and their nation would have peace, for his teachings had ever stirred the people to desire freedom, both spiritual and physical. Farther, it is evident that he intended to assemble the scattered ones, (O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem: How often would I have gathered you, etc.) So by the death of this "impostor," they would also save those who were "scattered abroad" from his influence. The decision of this high priest seemed eminently satisfactory for, "From that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death." (John 11: 53.) If any who heard any of my former utterances on this Scripture chance to read these lines, please accept this correction.

John 19: 11 is quoted, and then it is argued as if Pilate actually got his "power" to crucify, or order the crucifixion of Jesus from the Almighty because we read it was "given thee from above." This can be true only in the sense that power to do anything is dependent upon life, which is given of God. To me, this passage simply records the reply of Christ to the boast of Pilate when he said: "I have power to crucify thee and power to release thee!" Jesus reminded him that he was but an underruler, having received all the power (Political) he had from one higher up; and were it not for the fact that he was an appointed ruler he would have no power at all, for the people would never have chosen him.

Notice, please, that while Pilate was guilty of sin in pronouncing sentence upon Jesus, those who had delivered him to Pilate were guilty of "greater sin",—yet man would remain for ever barred from the presence of the Almighty but for this "greater sin"! No, brother, I can not accept that mixture, though some may have conscientiously labeled it "Christianity." Unfortunately for your case, the formula is also on the label and the ingredients are no antidote for sin. Rather, it seems to exalt sin to the very pinnacle of honor. I have heard of instances where reputable physicans, thinking they were using that which would prevent smallpox, have actually spread the disease by making the mistake of using smallpox virus in vaccinating. Some of these blood-atonement "points" do not look good to me.

"The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, is included in a statement of Revelation 13: 8. All I see in that is that it was known from the beginning of the world that he would be slain. It does not teach that it had to be so, and when argued that way the whole argument has to be "made."

JESUS TAKEN BY FORCE

If anyone doubt that Jesus was forcibly taken by his enemies and deprived of voluntary action, please read again the accounts given of the crucifixion and the events leading thereto. "Wicked hands" did the dastardly deed. (Acts 2: 23.) Had denied him. (Acts 3: 14.) Ignorance, on the part of both the rulers and the people, of what God really required, had caused them to kill the Prince of life, though in so doing they had fulfilled prophecy. (Acts 3: 17.) Peter calls upon them to repent and be converted that their sins may be blotted out. (Acts 3: 19.) Shall the act of sinners unlock the door to my redemption, when Jesus came especially for that great purpose? Read: Acts 3: 26: Jesus sent to bless the people by turning them from their iniquities. There was no mincing of words by Peter when he told certain ones they had betrayed and murdered the Just One, and I accept his statement in his first epistle 1: 18, 19 in the light of this utterance. For passing to verse 22 of this same epistle I discover he has left off poetry and metaphor and come to plain prose when he says, "Ye have purified your souls through the truth." Since purification is what we want, or need, there is the means. Certain prophecies concerning Jesus had been fulfilled by those who dwell at Jerusalem because they knew him not, and understood not certain prophecies which have been made. Acts 13:27. The two lines of prophecy very clearly referred to.

PAUL, OUR WITNESS

While it seems to me, from some writings credited to Paul, notably Hebrews, that the importance attached by that sect of which for so many years he was a member to the offering of bloody sacrifices, so frequently dimmed the luster of the glory of Christ's work, yet he has said some things which are directly to the point.

In 1 Thessalonians 2:15, 16, speaking of those who were the principal actors, he said:

Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets and have persecuted us; and they please not God and are contrary to all men . . . wrath is coming upon them to the uttermost.

So it "pleased not God" for Jesus to be killed! Who, then, did it please? Who, but God had to be pleased in working out the atonement? Do not overlook the statement that "wrath" (condemnation) to the uttermost was to be their portion. No immunity there, brother! If God could not or would not save the people without the bloody sacrifice of his son, then these men were, in fact, doing his will; and for doing his will they are to get "wrath to the uttermost"; while we say we will have salvation to the uttermost for doing his will! We tell the people such tales, note their expression, and then wonder why there are so many skeptics and agnostics. A serious question. In that great day, when all these mooted questions will be settled, may they not arise against us and say, we ate at your table the food you provided.

If the princes had known the wisdom of God they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory. 1 Corinthians 2:7, 8. How very plain. The wisdom of God, if they had been willing to receive it, positively would have prevented the terrible scene in which the Redeemer was the innocent victim. For the sake of him who has already suffered so much at the hands of evil men, as also at the hands of his friends, both of whom have misunderstood, I send forth this plea; and therein I ask for a revision of interpretation in both sermon and song, and that if ever we have represented that the wisdom of God, which is greater than man's wisdom, could require or condone that inhuman scene on Calvary, while the opportunity remains, let us do all in our power to correct the error. God's wisdom says, Needless to kill. The skeptic says the same. The Christian (?) says, Kill, but with our wisdom we can not understand why. Is the latter view an honor to God, Christ or the Christian?

THOUGHTS ON THE ATONEMENT--PART 3

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT

The atonement of Christ, as we view it, embraces, in its full scope, his entire life work, from his cradle in the manger to his expiration on the cross, when he spoke those touching but joyous words of hope: "It is finished;" and when he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost.

Yes, Christ's teaching, as the messenger of the covenant, and the prime minister for God to all the nations of the world, his blameless example, together with the deeds of his life, which were all wrought in God, entered into this wondrous doctrine of the atonement. Therefore, as we see it, the death of Christ is an important part of the atonement, hence part of the plan of salvation.

IT IS GOSPEL TRUTH

Bible Testimony.—Many of the texts already adduced prove our present contention to be true, but there are many more, some of which we herewith present:

For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled we shall be saved by his life. And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.—Romans 5:6-11.

This is very plain and comprehensive. It covers the entire ground relating to the effects of the atonement on the world and the church. That is having been reconciled to God so far as the Adamic sin is concerned, we now obey the gospel plan, and in a grander and fuller sense we are "saved by his life." But notice these statements:

Christ died for the ungodly.

Christ died for us.

We were reconciled to God by the death of his Son.

What will we do with these statements, and many more of the same import, if, as some believe, the death of Christ, on the cross, was not and is not any part of the divine plan?

But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.—Hebrews 2:9.

For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offereth himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God.—Hebrews 9:13, 14.

But what did Christ say, the one, who, above all others, was prepared to correctly and fully represent God? Here are some of his words:

I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. . . . As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the sheep. . . . Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.—John 10: 11, 15, 17, 18.

Paul bases his statement, that Christ "offered himself without spot to God," on the fact that he was God's great high priest. (See Hebrews 9: 11; 5: 5, 6.)

The reader will please notice that Christ was both the priest and the offering made for sin, once for all. He voluntarily laid down his life for the sheep. No man, without his consent, could take it from him. God and Christ are responsible for submitting to the murderous demands of the Jewish priests and people, in accordance with a prearranged plan at the beginning; but they are not responsible for the wicked act of putting the Savior to death on the cross. Does the reader wonder how this could be?

We are commanded not to kill. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6, 7) The shedding of man's blood is most emphatically and repeatedly denounced and forbidden in all three of the books. We preach a gospel of good will to men and peace on earth. We have been instructed to raise a standard of peace to the nations of the world. Doctrine and Covenants 95: 6; 102: 11.) God is against war and bloodshed. And God deals with conditions as he finds them, and as he foresees they will be. He is responsible for the manner in which he deals with them, but not for the conditions when they are the legitimate result of the abuse of agency and violation of his laws.

Notwithstanding the plain instruction against war and the shedding of blood, we have the following in Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10:

And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.

Under the conditions which had obtained, God approved of the fight made by our revolutionary fathers; but he did not justify, in any sense, the conditions which made it necessary for them to fight for their liberty. He is still, as he has been from the beginning, opposed to war and the shedding of blood.

Now, if we take the position that Christ's death on the cross was entirely unnecessary, so far as God and Christ and salvation are concerned, we thereby reflect seriously, upon the character of God. It is tantamount to saying that the infinite God was either unwilling, or unable to save his Son from the terrible ordeal. But according to the words of Jesus, spoken to his disciples at the time of his arrest, he was abundantly able. These are the words:

Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be.—Matthew 26: 53, 54.

For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.—Matthew 26: 28. (See also Mark 14: 23, 24.)

The Greek word from which we get "remission," in this text, is aphesis. Young defines the word to mean "a sending away." The same word is found in the following passages:

The baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1: 4.

Preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Luke 3: 3.

Be baptized. . . for the remission of sins.—Acts 2: 8.

Whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.—Acts 10: 43.

Without shedding of blood is no remission.—Hebrews 9: 22.

Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.—Hebrews 10: 18.

The word for, in the text referred to, comes from the Greek word eis, and Young defines it to mean, "with a view to." The same word is found in Acts 2: 38, and all the other passages which declare baptism to be for the remission of sins.

Right here permit us to appeal to the intelligence of our readers, upon a plain and important fact, as follows: The primary and important purpose of Christ's death on the cross, was not because of the wickedness of the people, but, rather, that their sins might be removed and full salvation secured. "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." (Matthew 1: 21.) "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." (John 10: 10.)

All three of the books teach that Jesus shed his blood for the remission of sins; hence when we read that he died for his people, or for the sins of the people, it can not mean anything less than the remission of sins.

It is true that the word for has a variety of meanings, but when defined "because of this," the Greek word is dioti; when defined "because," the Greek word is dio; when defined "because of, on account of," the Greek word is heneka. But, as already shown, when we read of Jesus' blood being shed for the remission of sins, and of water baptism for the remission of sins, the Greek word is eis, and is defined to mean "with a view to," not "because of." This well-established fact, alone, establishes the correctness of our position.

Notice too, that the language of the text was spoken by Jesus in connection with the administration of the wine in the sacramental service. In Book of Mormon times, and in our own day, since the restoration of the gospel, the prayer which was offered, and is now offered, reads like this:

O God, the eternal Father, we ask thee in the name of thy Son Jesus Christ, to bless and sanctify this wine to the souls of all who drink of it, that they may do it in remembrance of the blood of thy Son WHICH WAS SHED FOR THEM, etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 23. (See Book of Mormon, Moroni 5: 3.)

For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom [its own wisdom] knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom: but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.—1 Corinthians 1: 21-23.

“But we preach Christ crucified,” says Paul. This was the gospel preached by Paul and his coworkers. This was the gospel which saves “both Jews and Greeks.” This is the gospel which Paul affirms to be “the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth.” (Romans 1: 16.) Did Paul understand the gospel. Did he and his brethren know how to preach Christ to the Jews and Greeks?

In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace.—Ephesians 1: 7. (See Colossians 1: 14.)

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus [that is, in this or that manner] it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remissions of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.—Luke 24: 45-47.

It did not behoove Christ to suffer and die as he did, simply because it was written in the word of prophecy, but because God had ordained that thus it should be, and by the Holy Ghost it was revealed to the prophets.

But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John 1: 7.

Two very important things are essential to our complete salvation. First, that we should be cleansed from all sin; and, second, that we should walk in the light of God. The first God accomplishes through Christ, in his own way; the second devolves upon us in order that the blood of Christ may cleanse us from all sin.

Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.—1 John 4: 10.

To propitiate is “to appease and render favorable.”

And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.—Revelation 5: 9.

Book of Mormon Evidence.—Wherefore, if God, being able to speak, and the world was; and to speak, and man was created, O then, why not able to command the earth, or the workmanship of his hands upon the face of it, according to his will and pleasure. Wherefore, brethren, seek not to counsel the Lord, but to take counsel from his hand. For behold, ye yourselves know, that he counseleth in wisdom, and in justice, and in great mercy, over all his works; wherefore, beloved brethren, be reconciled unto him, through the atonement of Christ, his only begotten Son. That ye may obtain a resurrection, according to the power of the resurrection which is in Christ, and be presented as the first fruits of Christ, unto God, having faith, and obtained a good hope of glory in him, before he manifested himself in the flesh.—Jacob 3: 13-17.

This text clearly teaches the necessity and leading purpose of the atonement.

For it behooveth the great Creator that suffereth himself to become subject unto man in the flesh, and die for all men, that all men might become subject unto him. For as death hath passed upon all men, to fulfill the merciful plan of the great Creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection, and the resurrection must needs come unto man by reason of the fall; and the fall came by reason of transgression; and because man became fallen, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement; save it should be an infinite atonement, this corruption could not put on incorruption. Wherefore, the first judgment which came upon man, must needs have remained to an endless duration. And if so, this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother earth, to rise no more. O wisdom of God! his mercy and grace! For behold, if the flesh should rise no more, our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the Devil, to rise no more. And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto him.—2 Nephi 6: 10-21.

Oh how great the holiness of our God! For he knoweth all things, and there is not anything save he knows it. And he cometh into the world that he may save all men, if they will hearken unto his voice; for behold, he suffereth the pains of all men: yea, the pains of every living creature; both men, women and children, who belong to the family of Adam. And he suffereth this, that the resurrection might pass upon all men, that all might stand before him at the great and judgment day.—2 Nephi 6: 44-47.

Just as it was becoming for Christ to be baptized by John in Jordan to fulfill all righteousness (Matthew 3: 46), so it behooved him to become subject to man in the flesh. He was not compelled to submit to the indignities that were heaped upon him, nor to pass through the terrible ordeal; but it was the best possible exhibition of divine love, wisdom and power, for the salvation of man, that was within the scope of the ability of the infinite God.

The noble purposes for which Christ suffered and died, as set forth in these texts, in connection with his teaching, works of righteousness, and superior and matchless example, are very confirming to the teachings of the New Testament, and should challenge our admiration.

And since man had fallen, he could not merit anything of himself; but the sufferings and death of Christ atoneth for their sins, through faith and repentance, etc: and he that breaketh the bands of death, that the grave shall have no victory, and that the sting of death should be swallowed up in the hopes of glory; and Aaron did expound all these things unto the king.—Alma 13: 46, 47.

If so, who shall come upon you; but if not so, then cast about your eyes and begin to believe in the Son of God, that he will come to redeem his people, and that he shall suffer and die to atone for their sins; that he shall rise again from the dead, which shall bring to pass the resurrection, that all men shall stand before him, to be judged, at the last and judgment day, according to their works.—Alma 16: 196, 197.

We now call attention to the preaching of Amulek, who followed Alma on the subject of the atonement, and, like Paul, both of them preached "Christ crucified."

My brother has called upon the words of Zenos, that redemption cometh through the Son of God, and also upon the words of Zenock: and also he has appealed unto Moses, to prove that these things are true. And now behold, I will testify unto you myself, that these things are true. Behold, I say unto you, that I do know that Christ shall come among the children of men, to take upon him the transgressions of his people, and that he shall atone for the sins of the world; for the Lord God has spoken it; for it is expedient that an atonement should be made; for according to the great plan of the eternal God, there must be an atonement made, or else all mankind must unavoidably perish; yea, all are hardened; yea, all are fallen, and are lost, and must perish except it be through the atonement which it is expedient should be made; for it is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice; yea, not a sacrifice of man, neither of beast, neither of any manner of fowl; for it shall not be a human sacrifice: but it must be an infinite and eternal sacrifice.—Alma 16: 205-210.

And then shall there be, or it is expedient there should be, a stop to the shedding of blood; then shall the law of Moses be fulfilled, yea, it shall be fulfilled; every jot and tittle, and none shall have passed away. And behold, this is the whole meaning of the law; every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice; and that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God; yea, infinite and eternal; and thus [in this manner] he shall bring salvation to all those who shall believe on his name.—Alma 16: 214, 215.

It will be seen, we trust, how completely Alma and Amulek, and all other Book of Mormon witnesses, for that matter, agree with Paul, Peter and John, and Christ himself, on the law of Moses and sacrificial offering of the Son of God, as the antitype of the inferior and imperfect law.

"And I, Nephi, saw that he was lifted up upon the cross, and slain for the sins of the world."—1 Nephi 3: 87.

This statement of Nephi perfectly agrees with the following statement of Jesus:

And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.—John 3: 14, 15. (See also John 8: 28; 12: 32.)

And behold, again, another sign I give unto you; yea, a sign of his death; for behold, he surely must die, that salvation may come; yea, it behooveth him, and becometh expedient that he dieth, to bring to pass the resurrection of the dead, that thereby men may be brought into the presence of the Lord; yea, behold this death bringeth to pass the resurrection, and redeemeth all mankind from the first death; that spiritual death for all mankind, by the fall of Adam, being cut off from the presence of the Lord, or considered as dead, both as to things temporal and to things spiritual. But behold, the resurrection of Christ redeemeth mankind, yea, even all mankind, and bringeth them back into the presence of the Lord! yea, and it bringeth to pass the conditions of repentance, that whosoever repenteth, the same is not hewn down and cast into the fire.—Helaman 5: 68-72.

The reader will please notice that in this passage, as in some others already quoted, the principles of the gospel are made operative and efficacious through the atonement of Christ. Our position is that it gives efficacy and virtue to the whole gospel plan. In order to do this, all men have to be reconciled to God, so far as the Adamic sin is concerned.

And it came to pass that he stretched forth his hand, and spake unto the people, saying, Behold I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world: and behold I am the light and the life of the world, and I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning. And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words, the whole multitude fell to the earth, for they remembered that it had been prophesied among them that Christ should shew himself unto them after his ascension into heaven. And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto them, saying, Arise and come forth unto me, that ye may thrust your hands into my side, and also that ye may feel the prints of the nails in my hands, and in my feet, that ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world.—Nephi 5: 11-14.

These are the words of Christ, spoken to the Nephites. They are in striking harmony with what has been spoken by the prophets, apostles, and leading ministers of Christ and God, whose words are found both in the Bible and Book of Mormon. If, therefore, these leading ministers of the Eastern and Western continents were in error in their teachings on the subject of the atonement, so was Jesus himself. Can we afford to invalidate the testimony of Jesus Christ?

Waiting

Waiting for pardon? Nay, 'tis he must wait—

Wait for thy sin to lose its evil charms;

Wait with a love patient, compassionate,

Till hunger drives thee to thy Father's arms.

Waiting for power? Hast tarried with thy Lord,

Unlocked each door and given him the key?

Thou shalt receive. This is his blessed word—

"Open the door, and I will dwell with thee."

LABORERS TOGETHER WITH THE LORD

The assumption is that all are laborers. If not, why not? There is certainly plenty to do—every kind and class of necessary work. And it may be truly said that if there are any who are not helpers, it is neither the fault of our heavenly Father, nor the church, for due provision is made for all and for the good of all, and each made responsible only according to his ability to do.

Whatever may be the policy of men in the world, it must be admitted that in the Lord's work opportunity is extended to all: To some five talents, to some two talents, and to some one, but to everyone according to his special ability; and all are instructed to be diligent, honest, true and Christlike in labor, each preferring his brother to himself. This was the order followed when Jesus was personally instructing in the cities and regions of Galilee; hence we notice in the assemblies for good, the ministers, apostles and elders, also the members "who ministered unto him of their substance," every one a recognized helper.

No, not every one, said the objector, for some who followed after did not do so to help. True; but these are marshaled in a different body. They had followed with improper motives. Jesus says to them, It is not for the doctrine that you follow me but for the loaves and fishes. These certainly should represent no class of the Saints. They were neither preachers nor helpers as tithepayers.

The apostle in the Corinthian letter sets forth the measure of true saints: "We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." (2 Corinthians 6: 1.) This is in perfect agreement with the instruction to the church in our own time:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

A little more than two months of the 1914 conference year have now passed, and it is expected that every minister, whether general officer or missionary, is long ago at his post of duty. But we must not forget that the same strict rule which requires these missionaries in their places in the firing line applies to each bishop and agent and every other officer and member in the body. Truly, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them."

The work of the year outlined in the business of the conference may well be said to extend to nearly every part of the world. As rapidly as possible the missionary work is being extended to "every kindred, tongue and people." To accomplish this under the guidance of our heavenly Father requires faith, sacrifice and the fervent discharge of duty on the part of each and all. The burden is upon all; the expense is incurred by the body which undertakes the work. Not simply by the missionary who moves forward in all the world to teach; not by the Bishopric which reaches out to help all and supply every just demand; but the church under divine help and direction; each member responsible for his part or lot in the work; each to use the strength and wisdom possessed to carry on the work, and each to be divinely rewarded by and according to his faithfulness as a true laborer in the work of the gospel of Christ.

The present conference year the mission work has been duly provided for in America, and extended in the countries of Europe, Asia, Australia and the islands of the sea. The missionary must be provided for as he moved forth to occupy in the special field assigned; and the support required for the successful worker, under the conditions in many places to-day, is much as it was when Paul labored in Thessalonica and was supplied by the faithful saints at Philippi.

This slight suggestion of work outlined in home and foreign mission fields it is hoped will be sufficient to awaken the earnest and thoughtful Saints everywhere to present demands for diligent and faithful duty wherever they may be in the body, for the families alone of this gospel army is required about nine thousand dollars per month in addition to the proper expense of the minister.

But there are many essential features of the work, other than the home and foreign mission field, which must be sustained and strengthened if we are to win final success in bearing a proclamation of the gospel to all the world.

a. The church must look after and care for the destitute, aged and helpless, and assist as becometh Saints the industrious and worthy poor and needy.

b. The sick and afflicted must be cared for and supplied with proper comfort and surroundings as the law specially provides, thereby requiring in case of need the extension of special help to laymen and ministers.

c. Due provision and care is to be furnished homeless and needy children, and orphans furnished with proper home and opportunities in life, if we are to do to others as we would that they do to us; and this rule of action is announced and commended in the work and preaching of Jesus himself.

d. Proper educational work on the part of young men and young women is essential in establishing and maintaining the church of Christ, and all should help this special work of assisting the needy in the attainment of such true wisdom and knowledge as will qualify them in the discharge of life's grave duties.

e. It is essential in carrying on our work that we "live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God"; hence, we can not succeed if we fail to move along the lines of the law which bring about equality and oneness among the people. It is therefore necessary to continue and more fully carry out the provisions for furnishing employment and assisting the industrious and upright in obtaining homes by the church in its work, and also through benevolent, helpful societies incorporated for this purpose.

f. Laboring for the redemption of Zion is one of the highest and most worthy thoughts to be entertained, as we move forward in our warfare and work. It should not be for self, but seeking the good of our neighbor instead of self. And if the work is performed in this spirit there will abound profound rejoicing in our labors instead of selfish feeling and criticism of others, as they move in their work. Each then should be equally interested in the purchase of sufficient lands as commanded, and feel as ready to extend a helping hand to the body in its work as himself. If we can build in this spirit it will be evidence that we have overcome the spirit of distrust and selfishness which in 1833 defeated for a time the hope of the Saints. This, too, was right, for if we can not build with an eye single to the glory of God, and with a spirit ever ready to help our brother and neighbor, the Lord could not accept the work if accomplished, and it would be in vain.

g. In the building in this country it was absolutely necessary to provide for ample ground and accommodations for a headquarters and work. The Lord in his wisdom specially directed this, and yet fallible man occasionally complains. The laborer with the Lord, however, will extend his hand as a helper. In other countries, especially Palestine, there is urgent necessity not only for mission help but also for suitable headquarters in Jerusalem. To postpone this latter will be a serious mistake as was the postponement of purchases in Zion for twenty years. Twenty thousand dollars for this work now would help the work wonderfully in Jerusalem.

Twenty members could answer this call at once and with the helping hand, fully and for ever relieve the situation, thus blessing themselves and the Lord's work. May we not get a ready response from this number for the timely establishment of so important a work?

The claim is made that we are not now strong enough for such an important step. This is an error of selfishness and fear, having nothing in common with true faith. The instruction of the Lord is:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Malachi 3: 10.

Poverty and failure accompany those who do not put forth the helping hand, not the faithful who do.

This is the incentive to true success so often noted in the instruction of Jesus, and without faith it is impossible to please him. It is for the good and growth of every department of the work, wherever the same may be located, that we write. The burden of the heart of the faithful should be the helpful prayer and the helping hand for the Lord's work. So may we all labor.

E. L. KELLEY.

CHURCH ON "FULL TIME"

Viewing church property as property—with its value appraised in the ordinary commercial sense—we should get in these United States in buildings and land something "well up into the billions." So points out Mr. George Creel, the young newspaper man and ex-police commissioner of Denver, who has been noted as a particularly "live wire" in every community where he has lived. Placing himself on the standing ground of his church property appraisement already noted, he asks in Everybody's (May), "What would be thought of a private property worth this amount that steadfastly refused to operate at more than one seventh of its capacity?" He thinks that perhaps "full time" might be a better answer to "the problem of dwindling congregations than 'growing godliness.'" This latter phrase, he declares, represents the "ecclesiastical explanation." His own optimism breaks out in the assertion that "not only is the world incurably religious, as has been said so many times, but there was never a period in the history of America, at least, when Christ himself meant more to the great mass of people." "He is very close to the popular heart," says Mr. Creel, "and the love and brotherhood that he preached underlie the great movement against injustice that is the spectacular feature of our modern life." Mr. Creel turns for proof of the contention of basic godliness in man, to some of the "curious and significant facts" that appear in "the slightest investigation into the causes of crime":

It is seen that the major portion of juvenile delinquencies, and adult offenses as well, flow from suppressions or perversions of the play instinct. The so-called "criminal type" has been relegated to the realm of bugbear, and "wickedness" is realized to be human nature become stagnant through lack of proper outlet.

Every vice-commission report insists that the most efficient recruiting agency for the ranks of prostitution is the lack of a safe and wholesome satisfaction for the innocent, natural desire for pleasure that is dominant in all adolescent girls. Seventy per cent of the juvenile lawlessness that fills the reformatories is directly traceable to the evils incident to street life and street play.

The saloon is admittedly the breeding place of all manner of crimes and degeneracies, as well as a controlling factor in the development of corruption in municipal politics, yet it stands as the one attractive expression of the average man's necessity to mingle with his fellows socially.

Leisure time, now that the specialization of industry has robbed the worker of all sentiment of identity with his product, comes close to being the very life of the great American majority, and it is this huge importance that the church, no less than the state, treats stupidly or indifferently.

The idle hours of a people are turned over to the dance hall, cheap café, moving-picture show, park, theater, saloon, and wine room, and the only attempt to check the evils that proceed from this wholesale commercialization of amusement is in the nature of repressive or prohibitory laws.

On every hand there is utter inability to grasp the simple fact that "cutting out" inevitably leaves a wound, and that the proper surgery for unwholesomeness is to crowd it out. People are not as vile as some would have us believe. Given choice between the good and the bad, they will choose the good invariably; that is, unless mawkishness has made it stupid and repellent.

The state, by utilization of its public-school buildings as social centers, is commencing to fight commercialized amusement on its own ground for the possession of the people's leisure time. The church which still sits silent, is in even better shape for such a grapple.

The "full-time" project may seem to some to be installed, Mr. Creel observes, in the soup kitchens, gymnasiums, men's meetings, gilds, and boys' clubs that the church has instituted. These things do not answer to the need because they show the church wanting to do things for the people instead of letting the people do things for themselves. As we read:

People are tired of being spoon-fed. They are sick unto death of paternalism, philanthropy, and organized welfare, and are turning a hostile eye upon everything that drips down from above.

Nothing is more illustrative of this feeling than an incident connected with New York's experiment in the wider use of the public-school buildings. Each lecture in a very splendid course costs the board of education twelve cents for every auditor, while the lectures and debates in a school building where the neighborhood arranges its own programs draw four times as many auditors and cost the board of education nothing.

It is this independence, this right of control, the sense of participation, that the people demand. Wherever cities are permitting real social centers, the experiment is succeeding; and wherever mere recreation centers are attempted, prepared and supervised by some board, it fails. . . .

Isn't it better to bring the family group into the neighborhood group, and then house this neighborhood group wholesomely, than to send the boys to the streets, the girls to the dance halls, the fathers to the saloons, and the mothers to loneliness?

Will anyone dare say that Christ can be shamed by the presence of his brothers, or that God is offended by the use of his house as a means of bringing greater happiness to his children?—The Literary Digest, May 23, 1914.

When you stand at a sorrowful bit of the road,
And a hand you loved has loosed its clasp;
When the streams are dry that in sweetness flowed,
And flowers drop from your listless grasp—
E'en now take heart, for further on

There are hope and joy and dawn of day.
You shall find again what you thought was gone—
'Tis the merry heart goes all the way.—Anonymous.

Mistakes of Parents

This subject is not so pleasing as some others, and the whole human family prefers to see and hear good rather than errors and mistakes.

But how will we overcome these common errors, if they are not brought out and admitted, and the remedy given to plant good instead?

My constant association with children, both in public school and in Sunday school, has brought me to a realization of some of these errors made by parents, for they were so reflected in the life of the child that it was quite noticeable.

We know a tree by the fruit it bears.

A great mistake I have noticed in parents is to speak of the failures and lack of qualifications in presiding officers and teachers of our Sunday school. This has the effect to make the child lose confidence and to become disinterested and, perhaps, to become a troublesome member of the school.

You should remember as parents that the Lord has said the strong must strengthen the weak. This can be applied in your case as well as in that of the ministry. If you will pardon me, I will give an illustration of the above case just mentioned that came under my observation at one time.

A little, sensitive child went home from Sabbath school one Sunday crying. On being interviewed by her mother with regard to her trouble, she said the teacher was partial and did not treat her as she did the rest. She said some of the others in the class did the same.

What do you think the mother said? What would you have said? The mother's counsel was, "Never mind, dear; go back once more and, if the offense is repeated, remember there are other Sunday schools." The result, of course, was that the child soon enrolled in a different school.

A very common error I notice is that parents send their children to Sunday school while they remain at home. Do you do this, my gentle hearer? It is much better for children to follow than to take the lead themselves. If you will observe carefully, you will notice that these children, when they reach manhood and womanhood, or even before, cease going to the Sunday school.

How many parents grow old in this work and find their children are out of the kingdom of God, or unconcerned in regard to their soul's welfare? Will any of the responsibility rest on the shoulders of the parents?

Dear mothers and fathers, when the outlook is not good, try the uplook.

The eternal query in every heart, "Where is my portion, and what is there in life for me?" is not answered to everyone alike. Where the heart is set on worldly pleasures, the answer comes, "Indulge in her illusions and drink deep of her riches." But unto him who desires the freedom of truth, the virtue of justice, and the knowledge of right, comes but one answer, "Sacrifice, for therein is life worth living."

Often the child is not taught this lesson of sacrifice in his early life. He should remember his pennies for Sunday school. If he desires, as children often do, to spend these and is encouraged to give that he may help in the Lord's work, he begins to realize that he can help by doing his part.

When the time for the Christmas Offering comes, how often the child tells the teacher he can not give anything, or, if he does make an offering, gives that which was given him for the occasion by his parents. The better way is to encourage the child to save his own offering from what he might otherwise spend on sweetmeats and candies, which, if used in unwise excess, are harmful to him physically. If his offering represents sacrifice, the greater satisfaction will be experience in giving it.

Whose fault is it, my dear hearers, if the faults pointed out are noticed daily in the children?

Errors commonly seen are lack of respect for authority, faultfinding, misuse of money, ignorance of duty to God, church and home. These faults, if permitted to grow unchecked into habits, often result in the making of young people who are stumblingblocks in the church and a trial to parents.

"Bring up a child in the way he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it." M. C. HOLSWORTH.

The above was sent to the Column with a letter which explained that it was written by a young sister, who, since then, has ceased her busy labors here and gone to the reward awaiting her in the better world. We give place to it, hoping that many others of the young people may rise to work as faithfully in the great cause as this young sister did in her time of service. There is need for many consecrated and efficient laborers.

The Reflection

The article above calls attention to the fact that the errors of parents are often noticeably reflected in children.

There is a story to the effect that a certain man who treated his aged father with great disrespect, among other things giving him a wooden bowl from which to eat, one day found his young son busily engaged whittling something from a block of wood. Upon inquiring what he was doing, the boy answered that he was making a bowl for him to eat from when he was old like the grandfather.

Fortunately, many parents cast reflections of a different character upon the sensitive minds and hearts of their young children.

A mother found it necessary to leave her two little sons all day with friends while she went out of town on an early train to return late at night. A little daughter was going with her.

The children were up unusually early, and the boys went to the place where they were to spend the day. A few moments later, one hearing voices on the lawn, looked out from a window in time to see the little sister bend graciously down as the small brother, putting both hands to her face, lifted his own to receive her kiss. The other brother, still smaller, received a similar parting caress, and then the little lady (for she was little and truly very much a lady) went quickly across the lawn, while her little brothers waved their hands calling after her, "Good-bye for all day! Good-bye for all day!"

Those who kept the little boys observed that not a single impatient word or tone was heard from them through all the long, sultry day. Away from home, under unusual conditions, it would not have been surprising had there been some fretting, some loneliness for the absent ones; but the pleasant spirit of the morning continued through the whole day. Too young to dissemble, their conduct was the reflection of the spirit that prevailed in their home.

The Mother's Voice

"Long before the baby understands the meaning of spoken words, he understands the tone in which they are uttered; he can distinguish between anger and love, displeasure and approval in his mother's voice.

"Always let the tones in which you are speaking, either to the baby, or to some one else in his presence, be gentle and well modulated. A softly spoken sentence acts as a gentle touch upon a nervous and irritable baby, calming and soothing him.

"The mother's voice is all in all to the baby. Do not cheat him, but let your voice speak softly to him so that your love is manifest, for through your love the baby will first come to a realization of the love of God."—The Golden Now.

"Praise More, Blame Less"

In that excellent little paper from which we have just quoted, Bessie L. Putnam writes:

"We have all seen the mere baby, pained by some harsh words or look, sob as though his little heart would break. Possibly some one has only laughed at him for being such a 'baby' as to cry over so small a matter 'when he was not hurt,' but it is hard for the adult to appreciate how sensitive the little heart is, how easily it is hurt. . . .

"A child's heart is as easily crushed as is his body. It is equally tender and as highly susceptible to the harsh word or look as to a blow. But it is quickly calloused when subjected to sharp reproofs. When you see a little one more than usually alert to satisfy the wishes of its parents, you may set it down that this child has been more praised than blamed. He expects to please and he wants to please."

Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN AUGUST

Pray for the church, its priesthood and members, that all may be earnestly engaged in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness revealed in the word of God to the church. Pray that each member of the church may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but to regard the reputation of a brother or sister as his own.

Lesson, 1 Corinthians 3: 1-17. Memory verse, 1 Corinthians 3: 17.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Sister Elizabeth Fisher of Rockford, Illinois, one month since asked a friend to send in a request for prayers. The letter has just reached the desk of the editor of the Home Column, having been sent by a very roundabout way through misunderstanding.

Requests for prayers to be published in this column should be sent to Mrs. Christiana Salyards, Lamoni, Iowa. So also should letters or articles intended for publication in the Mothers' Column. Any questions concerning the Prayer Union should be sent to Mrs. M. E. Kearney, 926 South Main Street, Clinton, Missouri.

Sister Fisher, whose request we now publish, was baptized last fall, the only member of her family who is of the church, though all are quite willing to have services in their home. She was suffering much at the time her request was sent, in the letter that went through so many hands before it reached us. She should be remembered in the prayers of the Saints.

The Poor Man's Son

What doth the poor man's son inherit?

Stout muscles and a sinewy heart,

A hardy frame, a hardier spirit;

King of two hands, he does his part

In every useful toil and art:

A heritage, it seems to me,

A king might wish to hold in fee.

—James Russell Lowell.

Instruments blending together yield the divinest music,
Out of a myriad flowers sweetest of honey is drawn.

Letter Department

SKIATOOK, OKLAHOMA, June 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have just read the last HERALD, and am thankful for the many good things it contains.

The epistle of the Joint Council is timely, and gives forth no uncertain sound. It shows that the men who compose those councils are up with the times, and clearly understand the conditions that now prevail, and are prepared to properly arrange to meet the demands of these conditions. The instructions for local and missionary forces to cooperate and cease the bickering that has prevailed in some places sounds the note of Zion's progress. The wise advice in regard to debates, with the network of protection weaved around them, will have good results.

Debates should be conducted for the sole purpose of teaching the principles of the gospel to those who attend, and not to show how erroneous the doctrine of the opponents can be made to appear, or how foolish we can make our opponents seem before the audience. When we permit a debate to be degraded to a mere contention—a strife for personal mastery—we may obtain the applause of some who delight in such a contest, but the work of the Lord always suffers, and it is clearly seen later.

The counsel against the attacking of other church or religious ideas or work can not be too strongly emphasized. We as a church have suffered a great deal by this unwise policy. When a sarcastic statement or argument is made by an elder, look over the audience and notice the ones that are especially pleased, and you will be surprised to see how few of our staunch, reliable members and the reliable men in the community are enjoying it. Such preaching always suits the rabble, and sometimes the better class tolerate it, but it always lowers the standard of the gospel, which demands that we do to others as we would have others do to us.

I had an amusing experience with one of our local elders once that illustrates this principle. He was very strong in his demands that the missionaries should "skin the sectarians," and was not pleased with one who would not do so. All who differed from him needed instructions in the most scathing manner. One day I preached something that the dear brother did not believe, and he acted much like one who is ready for the insane asylum. I wondered how long it would be safe for a missionary to preach in a community if every man that differed from him on religious subjects would act as he did. We should remember that others are entitled to some consideration as well as ourselves.

I remember when I was a young man years ago hearing President Joseph Smith urge the elders to preach affirmative sermons. I doubt very much if any man is qualified to go out as a missionary if he can not make an affirmative presentation of the gospel.

The kindly worded, but firmly presented opposition to the presentation of speculative theories is highly commendable. One of the clearest evidences of the unfitness of an elder for the active ministry is his presentation of speculative theories. Of course he always understands them clearly in his own mind, and he thinks if you will just give him time he can make it all clear, but this is where he proclaims in unmistakable terms that he should be at home.

We should carefully consider the instructions under the caption of "Loyalty." The short article by "A member," under the heading "As a member sees it," could be read with profit in connection with this also. Who can estimate the danger that the missionaries have done by talking about Graceland, as referred to by this member, and by criticising the financial policy of the Bishop in general. Perhaps fault-finding is the word that should be used instead of criticising.

I left home for my field of labor May 16, and have held meetings in Sperry, Javine Schoolhouse, Terlton, and in a schoolhouse near Terlton, and Skiatook. I am well pleased with the appearance of my mission, and find some splendid Saints. The prospects for missionary work are good and we hope to see the work that has been so well introduced by others prosper.

My daughter Ferol came to me when her school closed May 20, and has been a great help in the meetings, by taking charge of the music. I am pleased to have her with me, as she has been away teaching school for nearly a year among nonmembers. The meetings and her association with the Saints have done her much good.

The missionary is deprived of the association of his children so much that at times it becomes his duty to make a special effort for them, as well as for other people. It is just as much benefit to the church for a missionary to devote the time that is really necessary to save his own family as it is to save some other family, and it is not always wise for some member to start the cry that he is laying around home too much when he is working in the interest of his family. The whole missionary force is under the direction and watch-care of officers, appointed by the Lord for this purpose, and they are the ones to object to the missionary being at home if it is just to object.

I am well pleased with the plan to appoint men for three years instead of one. I believe it is a wise move which will bring good results.

I have enjoyed fine liberty in preaching, and feel much encouraged in the work.

Yours for Zion's triumph,

W. E. PEAK.

News from Missions

Scandinavian Mission

It is some time since your readers had any news from this field, wherefor I now send a few lines. If one had special and very encouraging news one would feel more like writing, but even if we can but report little progress I deem it but proper that the Saints should be informed that we are alive and striving to do what we can in the interest of the cause.

In the Scandinavian countries the work seems to move but slowly. The greater portion of the people seem careless with reference to religion, their minds being engrossed with cares and pleasures of a worldly character, and the few seeking for the light are slow to believe our message, as if afraid that we had something terrible and dangerous held in reserve to be forced upon them if we should succeed in getting them into the fold. This condition is largely due to the vigorous propaganda that for more than sixty years have been carried on in these countries by the Utah Mormons, whose labors have miserably failed so far as making the name of Latter Day Saint honorable is concerned.

The brethren in the field are not discouraged, however, but seem determined to labor on, trusting that results shall be more encouraging in the future. Brother O. W. Okerlind has been laboring in Stockholm and at other points in Sweden, and has met with some success. He had hoped to have returned home this summer, but as the last General Conference failed to appoint anyone to succeed him, he has been undecided what to do, being loath to leave and thus permit the labors of the past to be wasted. Brother Okerlind has been faithfully engaged, and the mission would not be benefited by a change; but when a man has been absent from loved ones for two years who can blame him for wishing to return? We might justly blame him if he did not care to do so.

Brother John H. Hanson has labored at Gottenborg and at other places in Sweden, but has part of the time been hindered by ill health and also by lack of means wherewith to hire halls and for other needful expenses. He has notwithstanding succeeded in interesting some in our message, and he feels hopeful. He was at last account preaching in the country holding outdoor meetings at which he had good attendance.

Brother C. A. Swenson has labored at Helsingborg, Malmö, and at other points in Sweden, and has succeeded in getting a few interested in the work, who, it is hoped, may in the near future take the step whereby they shall become members of the fold. We have arranged for a two-day meeting at Helsingborg the 18th and 19th of this month, which we trust, under the blessings of God, may prove a help to the cause in that part of the field.

Brother Peter Muceus has been laboring in various parts of Norway, and has been energetically engaged; he also feels hopeful with reference to the work, in that land. He wrote lately from Arendal where he was engaged, as also adjacent thereto, holding open-air meetings, thus getting the truth before the people.

Brother P. T. Anderson arrived in the mission June 23, and it was a pleasure to greet him. He entered upon the work with cheerfulness and zeal, and I was pleased to have his assistance at a few meetings in this city. He is now visiting his relatives in Jutland, from where he writes encouragingly as to the prospects for the work.

My time has mainly been spent in the city of Copenhagen, Denmark, where the outlook is not as good as we could wish, though I think I can see some improvements. One discouraging feature is that some who did espouse the faith allowed themselves to be influenced by the Evil One, and instead of letting light of the gospel reflect through their lives, permitted themselves to become stumblingblocks to their fellows. We hope, however, to continue in the conflict and trust under the directing influence of the Spirit of truth to overcome these obstacles.

Our most encouraging news comes from Germany, where Brother Alexander Kippe, with the assistance of several local brethren, some of whom were recently ordained, is meeting with considerable success. The young branches at Hanover and Brunswick are thriving under the charge of Brethren Gustav Huvendick and Gustav Gerwein respectively. They are holding regular meetings and also Sunday schools, and nearly every letter from there brings the news of increase by baptism. I have also very good reports from Mangschutz, Klein Raschen, Einbeck and Hamborg, indicating that the Saints are alive in the work, and that opportunities are good for the preaching of the gospel. I have not as yet had the opportunity of visiting all the places named, but hope to do so in the near future. I was disappointed that the late General Conference did not find it practicable to send at least one laborer from America to that part of the field, as I believe it would have been in the interest of the work to have done so.

Sister Hanson expects to return home next month, having engaged passage on the steamship President Grant, of the Hamborg American line, to sail on the 20th. I have planned to accompany her as far as Hamborg, after which I intend to spend some time in Germany in order to become better informed as to the situation, and to render such assistance as I can.

We were recently favored with a visit by Brother William Moore, sailing as chief shipwright on an English war vessel, one of a fleet of four paying the Danish Government a friendly visit. Brother Moore first heard the gospel in Australia, where he, eighteen months ago, was baptized by Brother F. G. Pitt. Brother Moore's interest and love for the truth was manifest by hunting us up at the very first opportunity, and, instead of wasting his time upon the frivolous things so abundantly offered in cities like this, he improved all opportunity to be with those who shared his precious faith.

He was with us at our Sunday meeting, which happened that day to be especially well attended, and he cheerfully responded to my request to relate his experience as to how he became a Latter Day Saint. He bore an excellent testimony, which I translated sentence by sentence as he delivered it for the benefit of all present, as only a few of us here understand the English language. An excellent spirit prevailed, and both Saints and friends felt edified. It will likely be of interest to Brother Pitt to learn that his son in the gospel has been bearing his testimony in Denmark, and likewise to all acquainted with Brother Moore.

We hope to be remembered by God's people, and trust this mission may have your support. We need your prayers that we may have the assistance of the Lord, for without that we can do nothing. Our little mission paper, Sandhedens Banner, needs your support, both financially and otherwise. Let us esteem it a privilege to be laborers together with each other and with the Lord.

Brother P. Muceus, Porsgrund, Norway, is the bishop's agent for Norway and Denmark, and will thankfully receive aid for that part of the mission; also money for the Banner, either for subscription or donation, should be sent to him. Sister Hannah Lawrence Warmlands, Bjerneborg, Sweden, is the agent for that country, and will gladly receipt for donations for the work in that land. Likewise any who may desire to assist in the work in any part of the mission, either in Scandinavia or Germany, may forward to my address, and I will see that the same shall be used in the interest of the work and in the part of the mission desired. Do not hesitate because you can only do a little, but aid the mission to the extent of your ability and your love for the cause, and without delay.

Yours for the onward move of the cause,

H. N. HANSEN.

Ohio

I reached my appointed field the latter part of May, our first point of interest being Toledo, Ohio. Here we were met by Elder Hetrick and Brother Atkinson, the former, formerly of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. I was pleased to find this brother earnest in the work, and presiding over a live branch, every member seemingly full of zeal and alive to the interest of the great cause.

The branch is small, and meets in a hall, but they are making themselves felt for good, and are increasing in numbers. One baptismal service the Sunday I was there, and others were investigating. I was pleased to meet a number of new members, and to hear them tell how the Lord had assisted them in overcoming tobacco and other evil habits. We were kindly entertained at the home of Brother and Sister Atkinson, and were kept busy giving blessings and preaching at night. Success is sure to attend the efforts of this little body of Saints, if they continue humble and faithful.

We next visited Cleveland, and were kindly cared for at Brother and Sister Webbe's pleasant home. Here I was pleasantly surprised in meeting friends of the past, among whom Brother Haynes, of Aurora, Illinois, Sister Sloan and her son Frank, formerly of Chicago, Brother Gibbs and his two daughters, whom I first met in Wales, and several others whom we were delighted to meet, and to know they still had firm hold upon the rod of iron.

The Cleveland Branch have a good church, nicely located. The work seems to be moving along rather quietly. The weather was so warm that it was deemed best not to hold special meetings at the present time. We labored here two weeks, however, and held one outdoor service in the park, with good interest, and visited the Saints, in company with Brother Gibbs, in an effort to encourage them and administer to those in need.

Being so near Kirtland, we decided to visit that beautiful historic spot for a day or two, but upon arrival, finding more work to do than we had expected, our visit was prolonged for two weeks instead of two days, and we enjoyed our visit very much, indeed. We were kindly entertained at the home of Sister Lake, for the first week, and the second week at the pleasant home of Elder and Sister Curry, who is president of the branch at that place. The branch has had its troubles in the past, from which it has not altogether recovered; but conditions were improving, and we were pleased to witness the good Spirit manifest among the officers and members. We held several services in the Temple with increasing interest, and I was blessed greatly in the preaching of the word. When I left, it was with the promise that I would return in the near future to give a series of sermons.

I was greatly surprised to learn of the great number of tourists from all over the world who visit the Temple. The fame of this old structure is becoming world-wide. I think the church at large has little idea of the thousands who are attracted there each year, I doubt if even the authorities realize how wonderfully attractive this Temple is becoming, and the great opportunity thus afforded to spread the gospel among a class of people so difficult to reach in any other way.

It occurred to us that the church could well afford to appoint at least three of its best representative men in charge of the Temple work during the tourist season, and the Herald Publishing House should have a representative present with a full line of church literature for sale, instead of only one elder and a boy, who are engaged to conduct and explain the gospel to thousands who visit the Temple each season, with little chance for the stranger to see even a church tract; for, if they were at hand, with the crowds waiting to be shown through the Temple, there is no time to sell books and hardly time to hand out a tract. Elder Thomas does well, but he needs help to do all that might be done under the circumstances. He referred to one gentleman who begged for a Book of Mormon, and, none being on hand, Brother Thomas had to sell him his old one.

It is wonderful, too, how even strangers feel the influence of the Holy Spirit when they enter the Temple. We felt it immediately upon entering. Brother Thomas informed us that quite frequently strangers speak about the peculiar influence which they feel, and try to account for it by natural causes. Some enjoy it to that extent that they return several times and linger within the walls of the building in order to enjoy the holy, peaceful influence which seems to pervade the old edifice.

We were pleased to learn that Brother C. Edward Miller's camera, one he prized very highly, which was stolen just before he left, had lately been returned to Kirtland by parcel post. When the camera reaches Brother Ed, his faith in prayer will doubtless be increased.

At Akron, our next stopping place, we made our home with Brother and Sister McCoy, live members, and whose kindness we shall long remember. The Saints have a fine church here, and a branch sufficiently large to exert an influence for good over the city, if all their powers are utilized. We held a series of meetings with good and increasing interest, though but few strangers attended. We left with the promise to return and renew the effort in the near future.

At Canton, the home city of the late President William McKinley, we are kindly cared for at the home of Brother and Sister Sautters. The branch numbers some thirty members, and holds regular meetings in a small room in an office building. They are looking for a better meeting place, where they will be able to let their light shine, and attract honest souls who are searching for the truth. We are doing what we can to encourage and instruct the membership, and meeting with some degree of success. We expect to leave for New Philadelphia the latter part of this week to take part in the reunion there.

We trust that our absence from the Northern Wisconsin Reunion did not cause disappointment. It was through no fault of ours, as we were guided in the matter by those in authority, and regretted we had been advertized, as we are generally successful in keeping our appointments. We fully appreciated the very kind invitation from there, just the same.

It is just possible there are members living in the city of Canton who are ignorant of the Saints' place of meeting. If so, and this letter catches their eye, kindly drop a card or call on Brother H. A. Sautters, 1809 East Tusc. We are feeling well, and enjoy our work.

Our home address is Joliet, Illinois, 545 West Marion Street.

In gospel bonds,

BROTHER AND SISTER F. G. PITT.

CANTON, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

Fremont, Iowa

If it is permissible to write news not overflowing with wonderful things that the missionary has accomplished, I will tell of the work of the writer and his chum, or "butty," as we called our companion at the coal mines when the writer was a "wee collier lad" many years ago.

In company with Brother H. N. Price we set up the district tent in Emerson in a quiet, yet very public place, and through the public press and printed bills let the people know we were there with a message of "peace and good will toward men." We held nineteen meetings, the largest attendance being twenty-nine and the smallest six, with an average of about sixteen. In the town and the country near by there were nine Saints. The small attendance could hardly be blamed on them or the preachers either, for the people did not come to hear and learn what kind of a message we had to deliver. The fair name of the Saints was in our favor, and the mayor of the city and his wife set a good example by being present at the meetings.

The words of Paul are having fulfillment before us daily, "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," and that men would turn from the truth to fable. It is a historic truth that the message of the gospel never was successful in reaching the hearts of mankind only when it was accompanied by the enlightening power of the Holy Spirit. The individual can not be convinced as he would be in the solution of a problem in mathematics; it must be a melting power that will soften the hearts of stone, made so by sin and folly.

This district is the most unfortunate for not having local help, of any that I have ever been in. In some places only one branch service a week is held, and in some no preaching only when a missionary comes; at other times only Sunday school. This is not because the Saints lack zeal or interest in the gospel. They are just as faithful and earnest as in other places. The principal reason is that there is not a sufficient number to help. In some places branches are burdened with a surplus of those who hold the priesthood. Not so in this district. Some of the faithful ones have grown too old to labor, and there are none taking their places.

The Lord has graciously blessed me in the preaching of the word, and I see no reason to be discouraged so far as the ultimate success of the work is concerned. The world is passing through a period of readjustment; some things are for the better; some may be for the worse. The church is passing through a change; it may be a new birth to righteousness. We must be able to adjust ourselves to the new that is good and discard the evil, the gulf between the good and the evil doer will grow wider as the day of our Savior draws nigh. The church can only succeed in its work by attaining to a higher standard of righteousness than is found in the world. If we fail in reaching it we must fail in our work. With a hopeful heart, I remain

Your brother in the gospel of Christ,

GLENWOOD, IOWA, July 14, 1914. EDWARD RANNIE.

News from Branches

Des Moines, Iowa

We of the Des Moines Branch are still in the fight, with the full determination by God's help to win the battle; and after a spiritual feast of nine evenings we feel much better prepared for the struggle.

Beginning Sunday evening, July 5, and closing Monday evening, July 13, we celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the branch in Des Moines, which was organized July 10, 1864, with a membership of six, only one of whom is now living, Sister Elizabeth Sheeler of Altoona, Iowa, and who was privileged to be with us upon this eventful day, bearing her testimony as strongly and loyally as ever before.

We now have a membership of four hundred and twenty-four. At a business meeting some weeks ago it was voted to celebrate our fiftieth anniversary, and a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. The committee set about its task with earnestness and determination, secured the speakers for the occasion and arranged a definite program for each evening of the week, and special services over Sunday, each service being interspersed with special vocal and instrumental music. We are pleased to say that the program as arranged and printed was carried out to the very letter, not one single person failing to respond, and that willingly, gladly, and successfully.

We were more than pleased to have with us as the speaker during the week Apostle C. A. Butterworth; and words fail us in our endeavor to express our thankfulness and deep appreciation for the words of cheer, encouragement, and edification to which we were privileged to listen for seven successive evenings. Then on Sunday, the 12th, we had the further pleasure of having with us Brother Elbert A. Smith, of the First Presidency. As we realized that he was one of three men who have oversight of the great latter-day work throughout the world, we indeed felt fortunate in having Brother Smith with us for this special day and the following evening, and for the grand truths he so ably presented to us in his three sermons.

Good, warm meals were served both noon and evening in the dining room in the basement of the church, under the splendid direction of Brother John Rudkin in the kitchen and Sister Orpha Emslie in the dining room. All were made to realize more fully than ever before the wisdom of securing our new location, which so adequately provides for both our spiritual and temporal needs. The attendance was exceptionally good at each and every service, and on Sunday was quite large, notwithstanding the extreme heat of the day. Had the day been more favorable we feel that even our present accommodations would have been severely tested.

We still further rejoice in the fact that, God willing, Brother Butterworth will be with us again all next week, and we eagerly look forward to being more fully fed with the bread of life.

When we consider our present numbers, and the work that has been accomplished with the small beginning of six charter members of fifty years ago, what may we reasonably expect in the years to come with our present number? We pray that each may feel his share of the great responsibility of carrying forward this glorious work as we launch out upon our fifty-first year, and be as willing to sacrifice and toil for the ultimate redemption of Zion as were the six of fifty years ago. If so, the work should go forward by leaps and bounds, accompanied by manifold blessings to the laborers, and adding glory and honor to God, the giver of every good and perfect gift.

J. R. EPPERSON.

"He liveth long who liveth well;
All else is being flung away.
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day."

The Religio officers elected for the ensuing six months are: President, Paul N. Craig; vice president, Carl T. Self; secretary, Edward Larson; treasurer, A. E. Stoff; chorister, Sister Paul N. Craig; organist, Josephine Marmoy; member of library board, H. A. Scott; home class superintendent, David Lewis.

Children's Day exercises were held June 30, taking the place of both preaching services. The little beginners, primaries and juniors were the principal entertainers in the morning, and did justice to their instructors. The Sunday school orchestra also rendered some selections, and is one of the drawing features of the school. In the evening the choir rendered a number of excellent anthems. A trio by Mrs. Paul N. Craig, and Misses Lorena Leeka and Anna Hicks was much appreciated, as also a solo by Miss Cora Schwartz. Elder Rudolph Etzenhouser favored us with an instructive talk at three of the services.

The Sunday school picnic held Saturday afternoon at Hanscom Park was a success in every way, although the weather was extremely warm, as also the following Sunday, July 12 which may account for some of the absentees at services. However, some are away, which decreases the attendance.

The tent meetings held in the city park at Florence, Nebraska, are quite interesting, and so far the attendance has been fair. Elders W. E. Shakespeare, Paul N. Craig, O. R. Miller and E. F. Robertson have occupied the pulpit. We often wish that our meetings could have some of the runover crowds of Billy Sunday, and they could appreciate when they were receiving spiritual food.

"Yet do thy work, it shall succeed,
In thine or another's day,
And if denied the victor's meed
Thou shalt not lack the toiler's pay."

Saint Louis, Missouri

Notwithstanding the extreme heat, our regular services have been held, and the attendance can not be complained of, considering conditions. The preaching services have been edifying and encouraging, evidencing preparation by both preacher and choir.

We have been favored by having Brother Ward L. Christy, one of our district missionaries, with us on several occasions recently, and have felt very much strengthened by his advice. Brother Christy is reported as having been doing good tent work in Lansdowne. Let us remember God's servants in their efforts to do his will.

Brother Elliott performed the rite of baptism recently, burying a young sister in the watery grave. Our annual Sunday school picnic the Fourth of July was reported as a success.

At our regular sacrament service the first of the month fasting and prayer was held for our young Brother Shaw, who is seriously afflicted. Let us continue to remember him, that God's blessing will be with him.

Your sister in Christ,

2739 Greer Avenue.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Alberta District; Greeting: It having been the pleasure of midsummer conference to elect me as district president, and realizing in a measure the pressing needs of this part of the vineyard I address you.

I trust that each district officer will seek to specialize in his position. Let the auxiliary officers cooperate with district presidency for mutual benefit and harmonious accord. It would be well if branch officers would diligently study their several callings, also rules of government as set forth by law.

For uniformity of business I would advise branches to institute regular quarterly business meetings, about the middle of the following months: March, June, September, December, and elect officers annually at last meeting of year.

Promptness and regularity of reporting is incumbent upon branch presidents and clerks.

Regular priesthood meetings will be held each conference. The subjects for consideration will be duly given and all the priesthood, whether present or absent, are requested to prepare themselves by study.

To the Saints, scattered and isolated, remember I am at your service. Communicate with me and let me know your condition, opportunities for preaching, etc., and my help or advice will be cheerfully given. I hope Saints located in southern Alberta will keep quietly cognizant of Brighamite activity, and advise me of our special needs.

Now, Saints of Alberta, be careful of your spiritual welfare. The temptation in this land to acquire large acreage is often conducive to lowering of moral and spiritual standard; speculative enterprises which savor of gambling should be avoided, as they have a tendency to retard spiritual development. This province of magnificent distances is giving forth of its resources for you, the people of God, and the end is not yet; and with it there comes through obedience a blessing, and through disregard a curse. Remember to whom are due the first fruits! Remember the Lord's Day! Finally, "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

WM. OSLER, President.

Isolated Saints of Western Nebraska and Black Hills: Will you help to spread the "tidings of salvation"? You, yours, and neighbors need spiritual help. God said, Let him that is warned warn his neighbor. The times are portentous of the "last days." Social, industrial and political unrest, with religious unrest, indifference and confusion make necessary God's message of light and truth. Will you help to spread it abroad? Write us of the possibilities where you live and aid by your help.

In bonds,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

Quorum Notice

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA PRIESTS

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

SWITZERLAND IN AMERICA--

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK

Glacier National Park is in Northwestern Montana. It is the most talked about region in the country to-day. It seems to be the one place most desired by Summer Tourists who delight in the outdoor life.

It's a curious thing how one can be induced to visit Switzerland, beautiful as it is, before exploring the wonders of Glacier National Park.

Within the Park, comfortable quarters are to be had at Glacier Park Hotel and the various chalet camps; and the Glaciers, the lofty mountains, the crystal lakes filled with gamey trout; the atmosphere of bigness ruling everywhere, are wonders never to be forgotten.

Those in charge of Glacier Park have seen to it that the cost of visiting and living there is not excessive, and I would like to give you some of our illustrated booklets which tell you all about it, and about the cost of going there and seeing all there is to see.

If you will call or send me your address, I will gladly send you copies free of charge, and answer any questions about the Park that you may wish to ask.

THE WOMAN'S WAY

Where there's a will there's a way—the women's way.

On the 21st of July an election was held in Independence, Missouri, to decide the question whether intoxicating liquors should be sold in the city. The results show that out of some twenty-four hundred votes the "drys" had a majority of one hundred and five. The accompanying extract is from The Kansas City Times of the 22d of July, and will give our readers a pretty fair idea of how the campaign was carried on.

There was a direct coalition of the most pronounced antagonists to the liquor traffic and a very complete organization followed under the leadership of Mr. Jones, of the State Anti-Saloon League, and Doctor Elmer Twyman of Independence. The campaign began some weeks ago and the church workers were assiduous in their efforts to prevent the use of unfair means in the election on the part of the "wets." In this work a number of hundred women cooperated, and they were indeed very active. Each ward had its corps of workers and watchers, aided materially by the Boy Scouts organization. The latter served as errand boys and circulators of literature. All these parties seemed to work together for one object.

The women of Independence are deserving the thanks of the Saints for the unprecedented effort they made and its very evident success; but we prefer that the story of the election should be told by the Times, as it is more graphic than we could tell it, and presents the features of the organization and its operation very fairly.

There have been three murders in Independence since the senior editor became a resident there, and all three of these crimes were directly or indirectly due to intoxicating liquor secured at saloons. There are eight or nine saloons in the city at present. This election will put these saloons out of business the 1st of January next, unless the wet element shall be successful in a contest of the election, which it seems likely they will make. It appears that one of the precinct judges failed to put his initials on some three hundred and fifty ballots, before they were deposited, and inasmuch as the law states that the judge must put his initials on each ballot an effort will be made to have these votes thrown out. We shall await the result with anxiety, as we have had strong hopes that the better element will prevail.

The Saints have shown a commendable spirit of quiet forbearance of undue elation since the election, and we hope that should the final decision confirm the result our neighbors who voted "wet" will be honest in their submission to the law under a majority of one hundred and five ballots as they would naturally expect us to be under any majority voting otherwise, though but five instead of one hundred and five.

Rumor has it that one active politician in favor of the wets was shadowed all day by a certain woman, and so successful was she that at five o'clock in the afternoon he confessed that the wets were defeated, and that there was one woman to whom he took off his hat. Another is reported to have had a sum of several hundred dollars in his pockets to buy votes, and who was so closely watched that when the polls closed he had been unable to use any of it and had the original amount intact.

It is not for us to charge upon any portion of the community unfairness in dealing with such questions, but if one of the leading papers of Kansas City, the writers of which being conversant with the methods of the past, can treat the matter with that kind of view, we can understand how the honest and fair means of those who are in favor of the town going dry could easily have been defeated by fraudulent methods.

It is said that in one ward some fifty negroes did not come to the polls at all—why is not said. That is left for the imagination.

The women of Independence wrote a new chapter in the textbook of practical politics yesterday.

Combining the "watchful waiting" and "steady pressure of moral force" introduced in the national administration, with something of the heckling tactics of the British suffragette, they dismayed and confounded the saloon workers and beat them at their own game. By late afternoon the "wets" were able to appreciate the disgust of the first fly that ever wandered on a sheet of tanglefoot paper.

Probably there never was an election like it in any community. The women, with the efficient aid of the Boy Scouts, introduced a strange new style of play, which upset all preconceived ideas of practical politicians. The "wets" had some old established views on the proper way of handling an election, and they started out after votes in the way the liquor interests have played the game since the day John Barleycorn turned politician. They had money, they had beer and whisky, they had the Democratic machine, the friendship of the mayor and police, and, last, they had a profound contempt for petticoat opposition.

But the women knew the saloon men's moves in advance. The saloon men did not have that advantage. Not fewer than five hundred earnest, grim-faced women of every age enlisted for the war. They left their homes and came down town for the day. They did sentry duty in the alleys, they watched every man who entered a polling booth, and asked him to sign an affidavit as he left, if he had voted the dry ticket. The affidavits were sworn before a notary public and there was no opportunity for the "wets" to count them out after the polls closed. They guarded the front and rear of suspected "pay stations," and finally they dogged the every step of the "wet" field officers.

One negro saloon porter was early under suspicion, and from 8 o'clock in the morning until the polls closed he was shadowed by three determined women. When he dodged, they dodged. When he seated himself on a curb and waited, they waited. Their unceasing vigil plainly discomfited him. If he talked in whispers to a "wet" worker the women listened.

Another negro politician also attracted a posse of women watchers. His attempt to elude his "shadows" at the northeast corner of the public square about 4 o'clock started an exciting scene. The crowds that swarmed the streets all day were at a high tension and any untoward incident started them moving.

When a few boys joined the chase not fewer than a thousand jostling men followed. The police who attempted to interfere were brushed aside and for two blocks the negro was pushed and shoved along by a threatening looking mob of both "wets" and "drys." Finally a "wet" motor truck pushed through the crowd, rescued the man and drove rapidly off.

The attempts of "Jimmie" Hare, a bartender, to escape from the women who dogged his heels furnished amusement all afternoon. Hare took frequent refuge in a motor car only to be followed by the women in another motor car. Finally, in desperation, he unlocked Eugene Purcell's saloon, entered with another "wet" worker, turned the lock and for once in the day was able to say what he wanted to say without hostile ears hearing.

Only the general good temper of the crowd prevented serious trouble.

By 8 o'clock the result was known and the "wets" were heard from publicly no more. The "drys" held a jollification at their headquarters and let loose a few paeans of joy on the streets, but there was no celebration such as would have followed a different result.

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

IMPRISONMENT ABOLISHED.—Secretary Daniels has ordered the abolishment of imprisonment for desertion from the United States Navy in time of peace. Under the new regulations blue jackets who are deserters are to be summarily dismissed, while men who become dissatisfied may secure an honorable discharge, through the refunding of certain enlistment allowances.

CHURCH PEACE WORKERS.—At Constance on the Swiss-German border on August 2, will convene the first conference of church peace workers in the history of the world. This conference is the outgrowth of suggestions by English and German peace workers made at the late Mohonk Arbitration Conference in 1911 suggesting that exchange visits of clergymen between Great Britain and Germany had materially contributed to the preserving and the creating of good will between these nations. A commission on peace arbitration in the Federal Council of Churches was created, the aim of which is to put this phase of the peace movement on a well organized basis that will unite the churches of the world into an aggressive influence for universal peace.

PASSING OF CHEROKEES.—The Cherokee Nation has been dissolved, its forty thousand members to be assimilated as citizens of the State of Oklahoma. This marks the end of what by some has been considered the "most advanced native race seen in America since the Spaniards wiped out the empires of the Incas and Aztecs." This tribe of Indians in 1827 adopted a constitution which provided for an elective chief, senate, house of representatives and a judicial system, at which time it took the name Cherokee Nation. About two thousand descendants of this tribe are at present in North Carolina who constitute the only organized remnant of the organization which once held sway over a large part of the southern section of the country.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Huerta was expected to sail on Sunday last from Kingston, Jamaica, for Europe. Report from Washington says that General Carranza and Provisional President Carbajal have agreed on a base for the arrangement of peace terms. With reference to amnesty and guarantees, Carranza is expected to promise immunity to all except those directly responsible for the overthrow of Madero. Since practically all these have fled from Mexico, Carbajal will not oppose this exception. Carbajal urges that he be permitted to appoint some Constitutionalist to be designated by the Constitutionalists as Minister of Foreign Affairs, who on his (Carbajal's) retirement would automatically become provisional president. An agreement by delegates at Vera Cruz under which the Zapata forces are to cooperate with Constitutionalists in restoring peace throughout Mexico awaits the signature of Carranza and Zapata. All interested are hopeful of an early termination of hostilities, and the peaceful entrance into Mexico City of the Constitutionalists.

IRISH HOME RULE.—In an attempt to recover guns landed by Irish Nationalists in violation of order, the King's Own Scottish Borderers, firing into a mob offering interference in the streets of Dublin on July 26, killed four and wounded sixty. A corporal and a private were wounded by pistol shots from the mob. This bloodshed brought about in all quarters such a state of excitement that the next morning Premier Asquith announced the indefinite postponement of the Home Rule Bill. Commissioner Harrell who ordered out the troops has been suspended and an official inquiry into the affair is expected. In consideration of threatened European war and "in the hope that by the postponement of this discussion the patriotism of all parties will contribute to what lies in our power if not to avert to at least circumscribe the calamity which threatens the whole world" the prime minister on July 30 announced in the House of Commons that with the consent of all parties the second reading of the amending bill would be dropped for the present. To this proposal and arrangement the various factions heartily and patriotically responded.

EUROPEAN WAR THREATENED.—At the writing of this paragraph only two factors promise hope of averting a general, European war: (1) Russia and Austria are again engaged in direct negotiations after a break; (2) Great Britain and France are using every effort toward peace. Austria and Servia are at war, with the Servians thus far apparently successfully blocking the Austrian advance, with heavy losses to each. Reports say: Russia has ordered a general mobilization of her army; Germany has declared a state of siege; France has taken action as if on the eve of war; England's army and navy are virtually on a war basis; Belgium, Holland and Switzerland, as highways for the belligerents, are mobilizing, as are Norway, Sweden and Denmark on general principles. Italy is reported quiet, but likely any day to order mobilization. Following the lead of Europe, American stock exchanges have been closed, and all the world awaits results. This trouble arose at the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, when Servia's answer to the demand of Austria that steps be taken to punish those indirectly connected with the assassination, and that pan-Servian propaganda on Austrian territory be stopped proved unsatisfactory.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

INTRODUCING ELDER TERRY.—We note in the Post-Intelligencer for July 18, mention of Elder J. M. Terry and his work at Seattle, Washington. A cut of Elder Terry accompanies this article. The latter-day faith is clearly set forth, as is the matter of true succession. Attention is called to the activities of the church as represented by its publishing houses, college, sanitarium, children's home, and Saints' homes. Reference is made to the former work of Elder Terry, as he is introduced as the new pastor of our church in Seattle.

EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL.—William Allen White in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post pictures the effects of alcohol on the user in the following graphic style:

The effects of alcohol on a person produce a loosening of the restraints which hold him to conventions. A few drinks make a man talk more, sing more, dance more, swagger more, laugh more, swear more, spend more, flirt more and generally deport himself on a moral plane rather lower than the average. He is a little crazy, a little lazy, a little weak-minded, a little vicious, a little prodigal, a little thriftless, a little devilish under the influence of liquor. And if he is adequately stewed as to his nerve cells and brain areas most of the time, there are wide areas of his mind that act abnormally more or less of the time. So he loses his judgment, his money, his good name, his talents, his general poise and balance.

AUGUST "CURRENT OPINION."—The Current Opinion for August is an unusually good number. The department of A Review of the World, contains many interesting features; considerable space is given to a discussion of "The idealism of President Wilson and its effects upon our foreign policy." Under The Persons in the Foreground department we find mention of Henry Ford, Francisco Villa, S. S. McClure, Rene Viviani, prime minister of France. The Music and Drama department is full of interest. Under the Science and Discovery department are discussed among other things, "Is the mechanism of the Panama Canal locks too gigantic to be workable?" "Must the wave theory of light be abandoned?" "Multiple personality is a normal condition of human existence," and "Has the arrival of the new submarine made the big battleship obsolete?" In the Religion and Social Ethics department is found an interesting discussion of "The modern boy's approach to religion," "An appeal for the conservation of America's spiritual resources," "Place and means of realizing the universal brotherhood of man," "An attack upon the Carnegie foundation as a foe to religion," and "The God of a man who works." These features together with the departments of Literature and Art, Finance and Business, and the space given to current poetry make of this number one of exceptional interest.

THOUGHTS ON THE ATONEMENT--PART 4

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT

The Doctrine and Covenants Speaks.—So far as records are concerned, the Doctrine and Covenants contains an important part of the restored gospel. Containing as it does the revelations given directly to the church, it is in one sense a commentary on the Bible and Book of Mormon.

These revelations are not subject to the charge that is sometimes made against the apostles Paul, Peter, and John, that is, that they were unduly influenced by the much-blood theory of the Mosaic economy; for we are assured in the "Lord's Preface" that he has spoken to us after the manner of our own language. The statement reads as follows:

Behold, I am God, and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding; and inasmuch as they erred it might be made known; and inasmuch as they sought wisdom they might be instructed; and inasmuch as they sinned they might be chastened, that they might repent, (etc.).—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5.

Therefore, it is important to know what this book says on the doctrine of the atonement:

For, behold, I, God have suffered these things for all that they might not suffer if they would repent; but if they would not repent, they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit, and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink; nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2.

The writer believes that Christ died both the spiritual and what we call the natural deaths in the garden and on the cross, and, therefore, he most certainly believes in vicarious atonement.

"For the cup of mine indignation is full; for, behold, my blood shall not cleanse them if they hear me not."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 4.

But what will be the effect on the wicked if they hear him?

For, behold, I will bless all those who labor in my vineyard, with a mighty blessing, and they shall believe on his words, which are given him through me, by the Comforter, which manifesteth that Jesus was crucified by sinful men for the sins of the world; yea, for the remission of sins unto the contrite heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 3.

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful.—Doctrine and Covenants 46: 5.

Notice this point:

The Comforter, which manifesteth that Jesus was crucified . . . for the sins of the world.

To some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world.

How completely these passages harmonize with the teaching of Christ and Paul, as recorded in the New Testament. Speaking of the office work of the Spirit, Jesus said, "He shall testify of me." (John 15: 26.) Again, "He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." (John 16: 14.) By this Spirit, thank God, we may, if we will, sooner or later, discern all things which have been given to us of God. (See 1 Corinthians 12: 3, 2: 11-13.)

By the way, we have a bit of history in which the Son of God figured conspicuously. This is the way it reads:

From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day. Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee. But he turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offense unto me; for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.—Matthew 16: 21-23.

Important lesson indeed! It should teach us to be guarded and careful.

For, behold, I say unto you, that it mattereth not what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, when you partake of the sacrament, if it so be that ye do it with an eye single to my glory, remembering unto the Father my body which was laid down for you, and my blood which was shed for the remission of your sins, (etc.).—Doctrine and Covenants 26: 1.

Thus we have what purports to be the word of Jesus Christ given to the church through Joseph the Seer, which declares that Jesus Christ shed his blood for the remission of our sins, and laid down his body for us. Could anything be in more striking and complete harmony with the teachings of Jesus, as set forth in the Bible and Book of Mormon?

In Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4, commencing to read about the middle of the paragraph, we have the following:

And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him.

In paragraph 5 we have a description of the character and obedience of those who shall be found worthy to come forth in the first resurrection, and receive celestial reward. We quote in part:

And again we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, and this according to the commandments which he has given, that by keeping the commandments, they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power. . . . These are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judge of all; these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood.

This quotation plainly says, in paragraph 5, that those persons who were found worthy to receive celestial reward "are just men made perfect through Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood;" and taking this language in connection with the first part of the paragraph, we learn, first, that the shedding of Christ's blood was (and of course is) at least a part of "this perfect atonement." And, second, that this atonement which was wrought out through the shedding of Christ's blood is a part of "the testimony of the gospel of Christ."

Paragraph 4 tells us that God saves all except the sons of perdition, and that we are saved, cleansed and sanctified, through Christ, who came into the world "to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world," etc. And this statement is directly prefaced with these plain and strong words: "And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us," etc.

Thus we have an exceedingly strong case. The Doctrine and Covenants confirms and emphasizes what is set forth in the Bible and Book of Mormon; while the Book of Mormon, containing "the fullness of the gospel," enlarges, confirms, emphasizes, and also harmonizes with that which is presented to us in the Bible.

THE WITNESSES

We call attention to the character and authority of some of our leading witnesses. First, Jesus Christ. Do we need to say anything in his favor? He was sent from God to teach the truth in its fullness, and it was prophetically declared, more than fourteen hundred years before his birth, that he would faithfully and fully discharge the duties of his calling. All his other works, too, including his death on the cross, were performed in harmony with the Father's will. Our view is that he neither did anything himself, nor submitted to anything being done to him which was in opposition to the Father's will. (See Deuteronomy 18: 18, 19; John 12: 48-50; Hebrews 10: 7; John 8: 29; 10: 37, 38.)

As one of the many proofs which show how completely Jesus moved in harmony with the Father's will, we quote the following: "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour."—John 12: 27.

Second, Paul, Peter, and John. Peter and John were with Jesus from the beginning. Jesus had delivered unto them the message he received from his Father, and chosen them to be two of his leading witnesses. "And ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts 1: 8. Can we trust these men as far as Jesus did? If not, why not?

Paul (called Saul before his conversion) was chosen by Jesus himself as one of his leading ministers. He was highly intellectual, well educated, and withal, gave abundant proof of the enjoyment of a goodly degree of inspiration. Here is the estimate Jesus placed upon him, as found in his reply to Ananias:

But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel.—Acts 9: 15.

Paul also received his message (the gospel) directly from the Lord. He says:

But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Galatians 1: 11, 12.

Third, as to Book of Mormon witnesses who testify on the subject of the atonement in this article, they were among the leading and trusted ministers of their time.

Nephi, the son of Lehi, wrote his testimony about six hundred years before Christ was born. Some years later Jacob, the brother of Nephi, testified in no uncertain terms. King Benjamin left his plain and emphatic testimony on the atonement of Christ, just before his death, and about 124 B. C. Alma and Amulek left their testimonies with the people, and on record, less than one hundred years before Christ. Their testimony is strong, spiritual, and quite explicit. Just a few years before Christ's birth, Samuel, the Lamanite, delivered his wonderful warning and prophecy to the Nephites. He was an excellent man, enjoyed an extraordinary degree of inspiration, and, withal, gave abundant evidence in the character of his work that he was a true minister for God. (See Helaman 5: 68-72, as given in this article.)

Fourth, and most important of all, we have the testimony of Christ to the Nephites, which agrees with his testimony to the Jews. (See Nephi 5: 11-14.) We herewith repeat a few of his words:

I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world. . . . And I have drunk out of the bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in ALL THINGS, FROM THE BEGINNING . . . that ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world.

Fifth. We have now come to the last witnesses, Joseph Smith the Seer, and Sidney Rigdon. The gospel was restored through Joseph Smith, and Sidney Rigdon was a leading minister of the church. In Doctrine and Covenants 76:4, 5, as already shown, Joseph and Sidney tell us that they "saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just," and are crowned with celestial glory. Near the close of paragraph 5, we are told that Jesus "wrought out this perfect atonement" for them, "through the shedding of his own blood."

Besides this, we have presented to the reader five additional passages in consecutive form, and a few others in a different connection, all of which have been selected from the accepted revelations of Jesus Christ to his church in these last days. These revelations were given between June, 1829, and February 16, 1832.

IN CONCLUSION

Now, in conclusion, permit us to say that our attention has been called to two excellent editorial articles found in the SAINTS' HERALD for June 17 and June 24, 1893. The first caption is, "The church or self—Which?" The second is, "The cross. The death of Jesus upon it a necessity." Also a good, readable article from the pen of Elder M. H. Bond, published in Zion's Ensign for February 5, 1914, under the caption of "The crucifixion of Christ and the atonement." I have not written for the purpose of improving on these articles, even if I were able to do so, but, rather, to cast in my mite with the view of helping to meet present demands in my own peculiar way. I hope the Saints who are interested will look up these articles and read them.

What shall we do with the three standard books? Are they reliable? What shall we do with the witnesses? Have they testified truly and correctly? If not, where are we? What shall we do then with "Jesus which is called Christ"? Shall we preach "Christ crucified"? or shall we leave the crucifixion out?

ADDENDA

We call attention to the following objections which are urged against the correctness of our position:

1. It is claimed that our interpretation is at fault; that as Christ's blood was evidently used in a figurative sense by New Testament writers, we are not at liberty to give these statements a literal construction.

Our reply is that we feel confident that we have not been misled on any material point, nor have we overlooked the figurative language sometimes employed.

Synecdoche is using the name of a part for that of the whole, the name of the whole for that of a part, or a definite number for an indefinite.—Quackenbos.

We think it is safe to assume that when Christ's blood is mentioned reference is had to his death on the cross, that is, "the name of a part for that of the whole"; but this does not affect our position in the least. Christ used a different figure, however, when administering the bread and wine to his disciples. He said of the bread, "This is my body"; of the wine, "For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Here Jesus uses the figure called metaphor which is defined to mean, "The resemblance of two objects by applying the name, attribute, or act of one directly to the other; as 'He shall be a tree planted by the rivers of water.'"—Quackenbos.

The bread was not his body, but chosen to represent it; the wine was not his blood, but chosen to represent it, which in turn represents his death. The logical subject in the case of the wine is, "This is my blood of the new testament"; and the logical predicate is, "Which was shed . . . for the remission of sins." There is no figure in this predicate, and it is just what Paul teaches us in Hebrews 9:22; 10:18; Romans 3:25; Peter also, in Acts 10:43. The Book of Mormon, as already shown, is very explicit, and in complete harmony with these words of the Master, and so also is the Doctrine and Covenants.

But let us look at this objection from another viewpoint. Jesus said:

"I lay down my life for the sheep." This, too, is figurative, but what does it mean? Stripped of its figurative terms, it can not mean less than this: "I voluntarily die for the salvation of my people."

"I lay down my life, that I might take it again. . . . I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." Take out the figurative, and these wondrous statements of the Christ of God will read about as follows:

"I die, that I might live again. [Thus bring to pass the resurrection of the dead.] I have the power to die, and I have power to live again. This commandment [to die and live again] have I received of my Father."

In the light of this scripture, who can say that the Father did not design that his Son should die on the cross for the salvation of his people?

Again Paul says, "Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." No figurative language in this. It is, however, a fundamental part of the gospel which Paul declared unto the Corinthian saints, in his epistle, and which he had before time preached to them. (See 1 Corinthians 15:1-4.)

Notice these statements, all of which appear in this article:

In due time Christ died for the ungodly.

While we were yet sinners Christ died for us.

Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God.

Notice these expressions in the Book of Mormon:

Behold I am Jesus Christ, of whom the prophets testified should come into the world.

And I have drunk out of that bitter cup which the Father hath given me, and have glorified the Father in taking upon me the sins of the world, in the which I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning.

That ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world.

These are Christ's words, spoken to the people of Nephi on this continent, soon after his crucifixion. No figures here (except the words, "I have drunk out of that bitter cup") but plain, literal words are used.

Now in addition to the words of Jesus spoken to his disciples on the Eastern Continent, and to the Nephite saints on the Western Continent, we call attention once more, to the wondrous message of the restored gospel to the young Seer of the latter days in 1830 and 1832:

And they shall believe on his words, which are given him through me, by the Comforter, which manifesteth that Jesus was crucified by sinful men for the sins of the world; yea, for the remission of sins into the contrite heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 3.

And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him, (etc.)—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

The reader will not fail to see that the harmony is wondrous and complete. Thank God for this blaze of light flashed upon us from the throne of the Infinite One, whose ways are perfect and unchangeable!

We have now shown by what appears to us to be indubitable evidence, that in our contention that Christ's death on the cross is an important part of the atonement made by him we are not dependent on any figurative statements, but that from such statements we have nothing to fear. They are in harmony with the literal statements, and can not be properly interpreted in any other way. We call the readers' attention to a parallel case which is too plain to be misunderstood.

In Acts 22: 16 we read that Ananias instructed Saul to "arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins," etc. This is strongly figurative, but in the light of other teaching which is not figurative, we are compelled to believe that "wash away thy sins" can not mean less than "the remission of sins." (See Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3; Acts 2: 38.)

2. It is claimed that it would have been just as well if Christ had died a natural death. Some have even gone so far as to claim that it was unfortunate that Christ should die on the cross.

Why unfortunate? Did it bring any loss, suffering, immoral or bad effect upon the people? No, nothing but gain. Did it bring any loss to Christ himself? No, so far as effects are concerned, it was all gain, glorious and sure, both for Christ and his people. Jesus said to his disciples, after upbraiding them for their foolishness and unbelief, "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" (Luke 24: 26.)

We have two leading objections to the position referred to above, either one of which is sufficient to overthrow it.

First, if the natural death would have answered all purposes just as well, or possibly better than death on the cross, that is the death which he would have died. God the Father and Christ the Son had full control of this matter, from the beginning to the end. To affirm that the natural death would have done just as well (as we have already observed) is tantamount to saying that God lacked the ability, or disposition to deliver his Son from the terrible ordeal, or to provide another way.

But the truth is, it was the will of the Father that Christ should die on the cross. Jesus said:

The Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him. For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.

To the Nephite saints he said, "I have suffered the will of the Father in all things, from the beginning."

To Joseph the Seer, he said, "Nevertheless, glory be to the Father, and I partook and finished my preparations unto the children of men."

Peter says when speaking of the crucifixion of Christ, that he was "delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God."

Second, to admit that natural death would have done just as well is to invalidate the testimony of the three sacred and only standard books of the church, namely, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. There is no scripture in any of the books, that we are aware of, to support the claim, but there is an abundance to sustain an opposite one, a large portion of which is used in this article, which, we believe, fully and properly sustains our contention. It should, therefore, be borne in mind that when a proposition is proven by affirmative evidence, no amount of negative evidence that can be produced, is sufficient to overthrow it; and, further, that there is no proposition which is susceptible of demonstration by affirmative proof but what a negative argument may be brought against it. Happily, in this case, the evidence is too strong, clear, and abundant to be overthrown by any assumed position of an opposing character.

The evidences just used, together with many others used in this article, show conclusively, we believe, that to admit the correctness of the position which we are opposing is to virtually invalidate the testimony of the books.

If anything can be proved from the Bible, we feel sure that the vicarious atonement of Christ, which includes his death on the cross, can be so proved. And further, that this is an important and fundamental part of the plan of redemption—the glad tidings of salvation.

(To be concluded.)

THE ATONEMENT---PART 4

BY ELDER F. A. RUSSELL

Did God demand the crucifixion of Jesus or the shedding of his blood as a part thereof?

A PROFFERED SOLUTION

Some think Acts 4:25-30 is an impregnable defense of the crucifixion-atonement proposition. From the first recollection I have of noticing that Scripture I have felt that there was something wrong with the wording. I solemnly protested the thought that both Jesus and those men were acting according to the divine will and counsel. Briefly, I offer this solution of the seemingly contradictory statement, and ask careful consideration of same. Most of verses 25 and 26 are quotations from Psalms 2:1. Read verse 27, stopping at the comma after the word anointed, then read verse 28, after which return and read remainder of verse 27. This makes all perfectly clear. Verse 28 is but a dependent clause separated from the principal clause by the last three lines of verse 27. Thus you read that Jesus, not Herod and Pilate, had been anointed to do what God had determined, etc. All can, and do, believe that, and have good reason. Such poor arrangement of clauses is not at all uncommon in the Word. In Acts 3:16 the same thing is observed. A better reading there would be, And this man whom ye see and know, hath been made strong through faith in his name. In each case, the rearrangement of clauses serves to bring the truth out more clearly. Just remember, it is only your tradition that is affected by this correction, and not the truth as revealed in Christ.

“OBEDIENT UNTO DEATH, even the death of the cross.” (Philippians 2:8.) The traditional interpretation here is that the Father had commanded him to die on the cross and in so doing he was obedient unto death. What strained efforts are made by good, honest men to commit a loving God to some theory borne to them on the waves of tradition. Verse 7 briefly mentions what might be called the descent of Jesus from God to man. As man, he humbled himself, and remained so unto death, even the death of the cross! Such manner of death would certainly have forced a denial of any previously proclaimed doctrine, if anything could.

But one thing which gives us so much confidence in the Christian's cause, is the glorious fact that he demonstrated that men can be true under the most distressing conditions. And with no thought of detracting from the honor rightly belonging to the Son, in this particular feature of the Christian expectation, if history deals fairly with us, men have succeeded in becoming like their Master. Stephen was sustained the same as Christ, and why should he not be? (Acts 7:52.) Each was charged with blasphemy! Each prayed for the enemy! And, as stated by Paul in Hebrews 3:2, that we are made partakers of the heavenly calling, etc., so I believe that Stephen was a partaker with Christ of the power of God, whereby he, too, was able to be obedient unto death, even being stoned to death. In the one case the Jews executed their own law, while in the other the victim was turned over to the Gentiles. (Matthew 20:17.)

If the crucifixion is to be accorded a place in the plan of atonement, how happens that it is impossible to renew ourselves again unto repentance if we crucify him afresh? Does an act which at the first is advertised as a decree of God so far deteriorate that at its second performance it becomes practically an order to hell?

JUDAS

No man mentioned in the Scriptures is more widely known than Judas. Scarce do we mention Jesus without thinking Judas. Read a bit in his biography. It will not take long to read all we have. As already noted he had become offended at the words of Christ, turned away from him, and had treated with the chief priests and elders, covenanting to reveal the whereabouts of his former Master for a few pieces of silver. It is not my present intention to seek to determine the motive prompting this barter; for whatever the motive, Satan was the inspiration thereof. Judas guided them that took Jesus. (Acts 1:16.) He and the Devil seemed to have formed a partnership. (God not one of the firm, either.)

This coalition was disastrous to Judas. Judas, by transgression fell. (Acts 1:25.) What did he transgress? If the crucifixion of his Lord was a necessary prerequisite to my salvation, Judas has one staunch friend left yet; and I shall protest against anyone slandering him by picturing him as such a terrible character. If the theory of the atonement as explained (?) by some is true, then Judas, the Devil, and that lot of misguided temple autocrats are the ones to receive my everlasting gratitude, for without their crime Jesus must have returned to the Father by natural death or translation, and said, Well Father, a miserable failure I am. I told the people I was their Redeemer, and as your Son shunned not to declare all your counsel. But no one would kill me and you had forbidden suicide, so the world is without a redeemer! In such event hell certainly would have to "enlarge her borders." But if Jesus had succeeded in converting all the people to his message, and surely, surely that is what he endeavored to do, would he have returned to the Father by crucifixion? Everybody answers, No. Judas "repented himself,"—of what? "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood."—Matthew 27: 4. A sin? Of course, for the Devil suggested it. Give Judas credit for repenting when he saw the consequences of his act, and likewise repent of your endorsement of the terrible affair, wherein you have made it a part of the atonement. By self-destruction he paid the extreme penalty of remorse.

NO GOOD THING LEADETH TO EVIL

For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know good from evil; and the way to judge is as plain, that ye may know with a perfect knowledge, as the daylight is from the dark night. For behold, the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they know good from evil; wherefore I shew unto you the way to judge: for everything which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge, it is of God; but whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the Devil.—Moroni 7: 13-15.

The crucifixion, an act of sin, can not have been any part of a divine arrangement. The "stone" (Matthew 21: 51) was rejected and crucified by those wicked ones, because they were the "children of hell." (Matthew 23: 12.) Did God search those regions to find some one to make our redemption sure? (Oh, how that foul stream has covered the land!) Matthew 23: 34, 35, show these to be partakers of the same wickedness which slew the prophets. Jesus was betrayed into the hands of sinners. (Matthew 26: 42.) Comment is unnecessary. Jesus foretells events connected with his death. (Mark 10: 32-34.) He might have remained away from Jerusalem, but he was a Jew, and went up to be in attendance at the feasts. The time of the passover was near at hand, and for a long time he had desired to eat the same with his disciples. His name had been carried to the dispersed ones, and as they came to the feast one of their first inquiries was whether Jesus would be there. They wanted to see this "carpenter's son" who had proclaimed himself to be the one chosen of God to "proclaim liberty to the captive." He came.

On one occasion, while visiting the temple, his soul was stirred as he beheld the conduct of those in charge. Evidences of the sin into which those religious leaders had fallen, carrying many victims with them, were everywhere to be seen. Here were some offering for sale the doves to be offered as sacrifices. Yonder were some of the chief priests or elders selling lambs and wine for the passover. While still others were emphasizing the fact that the oxen they had to sell were "ceremonially clean." Devout Jews were bringing their animals to be consecrated by the priests, but when examined by the temple officers they were generally "found" deficient and were condemned. The only thing left was for the person to secure one from the priest at such price as to leave the "money-changers" a handsome profit. The sight was more than Jesus could bear: picking up some cords he proceeded to cleanse the temple in a way not commonly known. Their money boxes were emptied, the brokers with their stock were driven out.

Now, thought the Pharisees, this is too much! The people will see by this time that he presumes entirely too much, and has desecrated the temple. We will take him while the city is in an uproar, and after the feast of the passover we will make away with him. They laid their plans accordingly, and history tells us they succeeded only too well in consummating them. Jesus went to Jerusalem in answer to the call of conscience and duty, utterly fearless of any personal consequences, not simply to invite his crucifixion.

A CRUCIFIXION DESCRIBED

The following is an extract from Smith's Bible Dictionary. Read it slowly, carefully. If, after reading it, you are able to believe that God, from the foundation of the world, laid such a scene as a part of the plan of redemption, clip it out, frame it, hang it where your children may read it, and where others coming in may read it, and above it your creed—"God required it!" Here it is:

It was unanimously considered the most horrible form of death. . . . The one to be crucified was stripped naked of all his clothes, and then followed the most awful moments of all. He was laid down upon the implement of torture. His arms were stretched along the crossbeams, and at the center of the open palms the point of a huge iron nail was placed, which, by the blow of a mallet, was driven home into the wood. Then through either foot separately, or possibly through both together, as they were placed one over the other, another huge nail tore its way through the quivering flesh. . . . Then the "accursed tree" with its living human burden was slowly heaved up and the end fixed firmly in a hole in the ground. The feet were but a little ways above the earth. The victim was in full reach of every hand that might choose to strike. A death by crucifixion seems to include all that pain and death can have of the horrible and ghastly,—dizziness, cramp, thirst, starvation, sleeplessness, traumatic fever, tetanus, publicity of shame, long continuance of torment, horror of anticipation, mortification of untended wounds, all intensified just up to the point at which they can be endured at all, but all stopping just short of the point which would give to the sufferer the relief of unconsciousness. . . . The lacerated veins and crushed tendons throbbed with incessant anguish; the wounds inflamed by exposure gradually gangrened; the arteries, especially of the head and stomach, became swollen and oppressed with surcharged blood; and, while each variety of misery went on gradually increasing, there was added to them the intolerable pang of burning and raging thirst.—Pages 129, 130.

If it would not make infidels out of people to ask them to believe that God ever framed such a scene as that into the plan of atonement, pray tell me what would? If I must believe it to be a Christian I am not one; are you? My only comment on that terrible picture is a question: Could all the devils from the lowest hell possibly conceive of a more fiendish punishment? And yet tradition insists that God demanded it—an infinite and eternal sacrifice. But we are reminded of when we are told that “without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin.” The writer (Hebrews 9: 22) is speaking only of the Mosaic law; but the preacher argues differently sometimes, and reminds us that the precious blood which flowed from his riven side brings us pardon. (After his sermon, we will sing, There is a fountain filled with blood, drawn from Immanuel’s veins!)

Not satisfied with their diabolical act in nailing him to the cross, what next? See those soldiers who have been on guard lest his disciples would prevent the atonement after all—who, with others, have heaped insult upon insult throughout the day! The evening is approaching, and they understand the custom of the Jews, and prepare to remove the victims from the cross. Approaching the two malefactors who are yet alive, they break their legs before taking them down; such being the requirement of the law. Coming to Jesus, what do they discover? Hear it! “He was dead already!” (John 19: 33.) No necessity for breaking his legs. Verse 36 says they refrained from breaking the legs of Jesus in order to fulfill the Scripture. That may have been the writer’s reason but I am inclined to think that the reason they did not do so was because he was dead. Some people have a convenient way of trying to make every event “fulfill Scripture.”

But is it all over? The spirit has left the body! Jesus is dead! The whole creation groans in sorrow as it is wrapped in gloom. Can they do more? Is he yet my redeemer? See that inhuman monster called a Roman soldier stoop for his spear! Its point is laid against the still, warm flesh of that nude form! The heavenly host is watching; and as the beast of hell withdraws the weapon from his side, angels and archangels, cherubims and seraphims break forth in grand hallelujahs as never before in the eternal world,—at the sight of blood!

Come, ye ministers of reconciliation, tell me, is that Christianity? Could anything which ever was a part of any pagan religion be more unreasonable, irrational, or even absurd? If there is one thing above another most reprehensible, shameful, and savage, it is the mutilation of the dead! If the crimson flood which flowed from his side and formed a pool at the foot of the cross was shed for a divine purpose, to remove some obstacle to your salvation and mine, it flowed from a body which already had been pronounced dead!

Do you expect me to believe that the plunging of that spear into the side of that dead Savior, and he was certainly as dead as any mortal ever will be, else he did not taste death as we will, was the machinery moved by the wonder working power of the atonement? Every fiber of my being repels the thought! Do you expect me to believe that the countenance of the great Jehovah shone most brightly as he beheld the sufferings of his Son? When he heard the cry of distress, of excruciating pain and possible delirium?

I can not accept the crucifixion as even a part of the atonement, from God’s side, any more than I can believe that the assassination of Lincoln was a part of the obligation imposed by those who committed to his trust the care of a nation for a term. Just as his death was planned by those who opposed the freedom and liberty of others, even so was the death of Jesus planned by those who were not only his enemies, but who opposed the rule of life he taught.

The wicked as well as the good have their agency, and why should it be expected or required that God should interfere in behalf of his Son any more than in behalf of Stephen, et al? Simply because he does not prevent the acts of wickedness, shall we conclude that he is pleased therewith? He could have lifted the fog and saved scores from the watery grave of the Empress. He might have changed the course of the Titanic. Because men did as they chose with those vessels, shall we say that God wanted all those people to die thus? Think you if the slayers of Jesus had sought the counsel of God that he would not have told them to refrain therefrom? God may counsel and instruct by his Spirit, but can he make my decision without converting me into an automaton?

A PROCLAMATION OF LIBERTY

was made particularly affecting the blacks. Should they celebrate the fiercest battle of the Civil War? War followed the proclamation, but it need not have done so. Freedom was obtained in spite of the Rebellion, and not because of it. The proclamation had been made, would have been carried out without, and was carried out in spite of the war. Jesus was crucified because he had made a proclamation of liberty to the world, which assuredly would have been carried out without, and is being carried out to-day in spite of the temporary success of the enemy on Calvary. All who accepted the terms of the mediator were in fact reconciled to God; and the manner of death coming upon Jesus—whether translated, by old age, stoned to death, drowned on a trip across Galilee, or crucified—could not affect their salvation, any more than the manner of death of an attending physician could affect the action of a prescribed remedy. Truth is eternal, regardless of any accident to the vessel.

THE VITALIZING POWER

accompanied the words of Christ, both before and after his death, and radiates from the cross only to the extent that God was in Christ. "To as many as received him, to them gave he power," is the word we read. He said to the dead, "Arise!" and to the leper, "Be clean"; and beside this manifested the spirit of the atonement in turning the people from their iniquities. Those murderers did nothing to vitalize his life, and but for their actions the Christian religion would be without a cross and crown of thorns and a pool of blood! Would it be any less glorious—any less a cleansing and saving agent?

It will not do to say that the crucifixion gave to the world the most glorious revelation of divinity, for that argues that divinity can be known only by comparison with that which is not divine. Knowledge of the divine is not obtained thus. Can you not distinguish a peach without you see a basket crab apples near? Can you not discern the divine without having a devil to dim the glory? 'Tis said of Jesus that he grew in wisdom and favor with God and man. Had he not been killed, would he not have continued to grow thus? And what might the world have seen?

ATONEMENT DEFINED

By the atonement, I understand, we behold the willingness of an infinite One to lay off the glory of the eternal world, descend to the plane of man, take upon him the nature of man, and deliver unto the world the words of eternal life, vitalizing those words by his own individuality and the power that he gave to as many as received him; embodying in his own life a perfect manifestation of the principles whereby life and immortality were brought to light through the gospel, the means whereby we are brought to an at-one-ment with him. In himself he gave to the world an example under the law of the Spirit, a glorious revelation of divinity. All this that man might be taught, both by precept and example, how to return to God.

I have no objection to the thought that the behavior of Jesus under all his sufferings draws us to him. It does so. In Jesus I behold one, who, knowing of the possible sufferings in store, faced the danger, wholly for the sake of those who would receive him, that he might bring them to a oneness with the Father and himself. And having endured and withstood the temptations he finally returned to the Father by way of the cross—a shame imposed upon him by those who knew him not—the greatest exhibition on his part of love for and service unto others that the world knows anything about. Therein is the great love of God and Christ manifested.

THE BLOOD-ATONEMENT THEORY,

in any and all of its forms, is rejected for the following reasons: God is represented as becoming so angry because of his children's disobedience that naught but blood will permit their return to him. He is compromised in wickedness, in that he must enter into a covenant with death and into agreement with hell if Satan is used as his agent to consummate his decree. It denies to Jehovah the privilege of exercising mercy, forbidding and crushing out every demand of the same, since justice received full satisfaction in the death of Jesus, thus yielding nothing. (Read Mormon 3:27-33 on this point.) It makes impossible any act of forgiveness by God without the commission of one of the greatest of crimes. It represents God as unable or unwilling to save without giving the blood of his Son to slake the murderous thirst of vile men, prompted by the Devil, thus giving the latter practical control of the Infinite. It speaks loudly of a crucified Christ, while in reality, without the crucifixion of Jesus, he would not, because he could not have been the Christ. It invalidates the magnificent teachings of Christ, making them to be of none effect unless stained by his blood. It denies to a certain portion of the human family even the privileges of obedience to Christ; for acceptance of his words by all would have prevented his crucifixion, thus reversing the divine order by saying, Acceptance of Christ by all would mean salvation to none,—the very thing Jesus taught them to do becoming the means of damnation. Finally, it is anti-Christ, for it was conceived of Satan, given birth by a people whose virtue had been destroyed by greed; it opposeth utterly the entire code of life and morals laid down by Christ, and in exalting Satan above God, it dethrones divinity and confers upon the Devil the power of decision as to whether man shall or shall not be saved. Thus the Devil is given Jehovah's throne, showing himself not that he is God, but greater, since God has been practically forced to abdicate and yield to satanic demands, allowing him the final word. For desiring glory he was cast down! Hasn't he finally obtained it?

IN ITS STEAD THE FOLLOWING IS OFFERED:

God desired the complete success of his Son, and sent him to save whomsoever would believe on him. Jesus wanted all people to receive him. "I pray that the world may believe," etc. The slayers of Jesus denied the truth. Their works were not of God. "Receive the Son." (John 6:44.) "Why is it that ye receive not the preaching of him whom God hath sent?" (Matthew 3:34.) To do it is to give blood atonement no place. The blessings of God are conditioned only upon acceptance and faithful obedience to his commands. The receiving, not the rejection, of Christ was embodied in the law; otherwise Christ must have put therein something to insure his own sufferings—a self-inflicted injury to please himself. In Matthew 9:19 and Luke 16:20 is his positive denial of any such thing. The Doctrine and Covenants decree of God is that everyone that receiveth the Son shall be saved.

They need not harden their hearts against him. . . . I have spoken plainly that ye can not misunderstand (Guess that writer didn't know what sort of people would read his record!) . . . The right way is to believe in Christ and deny him not (for denying him would mean a denial of the law). —2 Nephi 2:51-55.

We should not say the law could not be fulfilled unless somebody denied Christ. Do not nullify the "right way" by teaching otherwise. (2 Nephi 12:78; 15:3-12 should be read carefully.) The word of God teacheth always to do good. Read Alma 17:80. If we follow the words of Christ they will carry us beyond this vale of sorrow into a far better land of promise. Words vitalized with power!

Nephi 5:30, 31 disposes of the idea that God included the crucifixion in the plan. Verse 33 calls upon men, everywhere, to repent and believe in Christ (that would include the Pharisees); and in the same verse Jesus commits the Father and the Spirit to his doctrine. The Jews stumbled and rejected the stone upon which they might have builded and have safe foundation. (Jacob 3:26.) If they and all others had accepted the "stone" they would have been safe—saved.

RESULTS IF PEOPLE REJECT CHRIST

"Those . . . shall be scourged by all people, because they crucify the God of Israel, and turn their hearts aside." (1 Nephi 5:251.) But when they turn to him he will receive them. The judgments of God come upon those who reject the Messiah. (2 Nephi 1:23, 24; 5:25, 26.) Those who cast out the prophets and saints and stone and slay them shall perish. (2 Nephi 11:62-66.) Those who yield to the Devil shall go down to hell. (2 Nephi 11:76.) Looks like Judas and those conspirators would have to settle accounts for their misdeed, though some may be inclined to be easy on those men on account of the prayer of Jesus and because they do not think it just the proper thing to send a man to hell for doing the "will of God." Persuade all men not to rebel against God. (Jacob 1:7, 8.) Woe to those who fight against God. (2 Nephi 11:24.) "God was in Christ." Salvation is to those who will hearken, damnation to others. (2 Nephi 6:44-49, Mosiah 8:72, 73; 11:134-140; 2 Nephi 15:17.) Many other places tell of disaster coming to those who reject.

We have hastily gone over the ground. Field after field remains unexamined. Over where the sheep were feeding we found the foul stream overflowing the pasture, just as we anticipated. And in this dark stream of filth we found the choice lamb of the flock, having been either driven therein or caught and thrown in by men who hoped thereby to bring about the destruction of the entire flock. (The men typify the Pharisees.) It was struggling hard, though it had been there for a long time. Some of the sheep, grazing near by, seemed apparently unconscious of the plight of this lamb. Others seemed to be terrified, and were running hither and thither. We drew the bleating creature to the shore, and released it from the filth, secured water from an ever living spring, cleansed it, and lo, its wool was of exceeding whiteness—not a sign of the foul matter remaining to mar its beauty.

A PERSONAL WORD

Among those who have advocated the blood-atonement theory in all its varied and radical or modified forms are those who are my very best friends, and for whose integrity and purpose I hold naught but the highest personal regard; and I assure you it is no pleasant task to undertake the criticism of anything so dear to them as religious convictions are to the average man. To say there are no statements to be found in the books which have been interpreted to support their position would be unfair. And the interpretation may seem perfectly justifiable.

Many more references might have been used; for every day as I read the church publications and hear sermons preached, I discover great numbers of stones which have been and are being shaped to be placed in the building which I have endeavored to construct.

The question discussed is one of long standing. In the teachings of the Protestant world as to the peculiar efficacy of the blood of Christ, as believed by them, the infidel and agnostic have found large reason for criticizing the Christian religion as thus described. Our own ministers have severely criticized in their work the very things which have been borrowed and made a part of our own sermons. I confess that I believe the blood-atonement advocates in other churches are far more consistent than those who attempt to support it in our own church.

The religion of Jesus is dearer to me to-day than at any time in my past life, I think. His character and his work stand out with a prominence and a beauty indescribable. My hope of eternal life is brightened as I now see clearer the great plan of God.

One brother with whom I had some conversation on this subject, seemingly thinking the views expressed were quite the opposite to what they should be, asked if I did not claim that I had received a revelation, giving these interpretations. I have never claimed any such thing—only the enjoyment of the light of the Spirit to which everyone who seeketh truth is entitled. If what I have presented is true, it needs no favorable handicap to establish it—God will confirm the truth. If it is not true, a “Thus saith the Lord” will not make it so, and it ought to be rejected. As a final effort to make myself understood let me quote the words of one whose name I am unable now to recall:

Was the satisfaction rendered by Christ the death to which he voluntarily submitted, or was it the lifelong obedience which found in that death its last and most signal expression? To many minds, the thought embodied in the second alternative has brought welcome, intellectual relief; for the hard saying that God could be satisfied only by the death of his Son it substitutes the reasonable and even natural idea that the filial obedience manifested in the whole life of Jesus—in his inner life—in his ministry of teaching and beneficence—as well as in his faithfulness unto death—constituted the offering with which God was well pleased, and which brought humanity into new and proper relationship with God.

Having thus declared myself, if any think that such teachings compromise the church, I have but this to say: Let the church declare herself, officially, publish the things to be taught as constituting the atonement, and I pledge myself to conform thereto, else retire from the ministry. Till then I shall hope for and expect the privilege of preaching the word as I am able to comprehend it. I speak truly when I say I do not fear any criticism that may be offered; for if my position is true, criticism will not in anywise injure it; if not true, it deserves to be criticized and none of us should believe it.

May the day soon come when the church as the bride, will speak for the bridegroom that word which will remove from his fair name, the ignominy and shame, the word of terrible reproach, which has been kept there for centuries. Let the bride purify her love, then will the bridegroom stand forth, and by his matchless power will he help her to the place she was designed to occupy.

PREPARATION AND DIGNITY IN THE PRIESTHOOD

[Read before the Quorum of Priests, Saint Louis District, in conference at Lansdowne, Illinois, June 13 and 14, by George Reeves.]

In addressing you this afternoon upon the subject of preparation and dignity in the priesthood, we shall assume that all the brethren are deeply interested in advancement commensurate with the high calling wherein we stand. I assure you of my appreciation of this courtesy and opportunity, though it is with misgivings upon my own part that I shall be permitted to satisfy you or myself.

Let us first advise that we turn to Doctrine and Covenants 85, beginning with the 19th paragraph. This will give us a glimpse of the perfect understanding and purity of mind and heart to which every individual upon whom this honor is placed should come. I am therefore convinced that these quorums are established in all wisdom, because of the immeasurable profit all can share by coming together in this capacity. Our coming together is to a particular purpose, the unification of thought and mind to the accomplishment of God's work among the children men. Among us are those comparatively new in the priesthood; in fact, most of us are strangers to the purpose of the quorum. But as we gather, it is the purpose of growth and edification, a better understanding among ourselves of what we have in hand to do and how to do it; a shading of our imperfect ideas and opinions to the idealism of Christ, that the very center of our souls may be vitalized by God's Holy Spirit.

We are persuaded that preparation and dignity are twin companions in our endeavor. We shall discuss them separately.

PREPARATION

The brethren will remember that the calling to the priesthood is high, noble, and elevating, and that the lesser priesthood is one of real active and cooperative bodies of the church and kingdom. The patient and acceptable discharge of the duties therein is profitable to the priesthood and the church, and pleasing before God. We need only call attention to the exalted purpose of the priesthood to be reminded of the necessity of preparation.

To emphasize, we call attention to Doctrine and Covenants 17:10. There will be found the duties to which we are called. Now, friends, I am willing to leave it to our good judgment that these duties, privileges, and prerogatives are of the highest character bestowed upon men, and that to be beneficial must be administered in all meekness of spirit and preparation. We can not expect to win our way as workers in this quorum into the hearts and minds of the people on the outside and retain the confidence and receive the prayers and hopes of those within, except through a most careful preparation and meditation upon the duties in hand.

There is a theory which we sometimes hear, that it shall be given in the hour what shall be said. To some this may have suggested more than was here intended. We perfectly agree that it will be given of the Spirit what we shall say, but what we shall have to say for the Spirit to move and work upon will be out of the treasure of our own preparation and ingatherings. The Savior quoted much of ancient Scripture, and so did the apostles. Remember that wisdom seeketh more wisdom, light cleaveth unto light, and truth embraceth truth. Everything, everywhere, upon all occasions, seems to urge preparation. Surely it is the desire of all of us to better acquit ourselves.

In Doctrine and Covenants 83:14 we are admonished, "Treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted to every man." The thought is that out of the storehouse where we have treasured up the words of life we shall be permitted to speak. We must emphasize that a better priesthood makes for a better eldership, a better branch, a better district, and a better body. Therefore, let us seek diligently, stirring up within our own beings an enthusiasm for acquiring knowledge. This is preparation.

It is said that knowledge is power, but we will add that knowledge of truth and good things, aided by the Spirit of God, is power invincible. To the extent that a man possesses these rare qualities, to that extent is the quality of his service measured. Brethren, I think we should feel a thrill of real anxiety and determination to spend our time in soberness, seeking from all good books the pearls of thought, and deep feelings left by the pen of good men.

DIGNITY

This word, as defined by Webster, suggests quality suited to inspire reverence, impressiveness. Really, I was not at first impressed that this word was so rich in profound meaning and beauty. Dignity I would say is that rare quality which should abound in the lives of men; that it is a kingdom beyond the limitations of indifference and carelessness.

It would appear that in the course of things, the higher and more exalted the calling the more the demand upon dignity. It is so in law, medicine, and statesmanship. If we see it in these professions, why do we not recognize it in the very highest honor that God can bestow upon man?

If we can ascertain in simple terms what dignity consists of, we may be able the more easily to acquire it. Are not its component parts careful personal appearance for one thing, and a careful study of correct manners for another?

Proper personal appearance is something easily within the reach of all, and it is a subject really worthy of much careful thought. Godliness engendereth cleanliness. The scriptures are abundantly edifying along this line. Our bearing on all occasions reflects our mannerisms. After we have carefully read from Doctrine and Covenants 85, beginning at the 19th paragraph, we will see that this is the light of wisdom diffused upon the subject that we may the better see the way. We would say, therefore, that dignity is the emancipation from idle thought, vacuous speech, inordinate desire, ill temper, and a distorted pride, as well as a lack of a proper pride.

A well balanced pride is a great virtue, but too frequently runs to excess and moves from the sphere of propriety, grace, and elegance into the region of extravagant modes and fashions. These are to be avoided with much carefulness, and are as harmful as a deficiency of pride.

I take it that all have been so converted that the use of tobaccos and liquors are foreign to our experiences. These, of course, are not the symbols of dignity; neither is obscene language. Anger and ill temper are deadly enemies of dignity. They dethrone the reason and militate against the majesty, grace, and power of dignity.

I would say that dignity is a rare and choice quality, the fruit of long and patient culture, coming out of the vagaries of fleshly indulgence and offenses into the region of confidence, patience, self-mastery, superinduced by the Spirit of the living God upon our own minds, wherein we are merged more and more into the dignity of the Prince of Life.

Brethren, let us always remember the quality of our high calling, and by preparation and dignity approach the expectation. In thus doing we shall grow in the essentials to an efficient priesthood, and be the better able to represent and defend the claims of our Lord Jesus Christ, the King of kings and Lord of lords.

I trust that the formation of the quorum may rebound to a perceptible good, and invite all to the higher ground we should covet to occupy. Let us try to make this quorum in the Saint Louis District a live body with efficiency through preparation and dignity as our watchword.

Carefully purify your conscience from daily faults; suffer no sin to dwell in your heart; small as it may seem, it obscures the light of grace, weighs down the soul, and hinders that constant communion with Jesus Christ which it should be your pleasure to cultivate.—Fenelon.

Mothers' Home Column

The Sensitive Wife

Here is an experience which purports to be from real life, reprinted from the columns of one of our leading daily papers, the story of one woman's mistakes as told by herself:

"I have always been supersensitive. Most women are more easily wounded than men, but I am more easily wounded than most women. That is why my husband left me. I got on my husband's nerves till at last he could not endure the strain any longer.

"He said that I 'nagged' him. I was not conscious of nagging him. Indeed, I always had a scorn for nagging women. It hurt abominably that he should say such a thing to me, but perhaps he was right. Perhaps one can nag without constantly talking, can aggravate without speech. He said that tears were always in my eyes and that tears irritate more than words, because they do not even offer the chance for an argument. He said he would sooner I had sworn at him now and then than that I should weep so often. I called him cruel, hard-hearted, and unnatural for saying such things but, after all, he may have been right.

"In my case, I was too sensitive. I imagined slights where no slights were intended. I read intentional neglect into acts that were only thoughtless. A lot of women do these things and suffer, as I did, when there is no need to suffer. And sometimes they are deserted, as I was deserted, and blame the man, as I blamed the man, when they themselves are the most to blame. They are too self-centered to see themselves in their true colors.

"I was to blame, but I never blamed myself until after he was gone. I was so occupied with finding faults in him and in other people that I didn't notice the faults in myself. . . .

"To record a millionth part of my mistakes would be impossible. Most of them were so foolish that they would look impossible on paper. I upset myself over anything, everything, and nothing. I looked at life, as Jack expressed it, through a microscope, magnifying little things into big things, finding flaws that were not obvious to others.

"Now that Jack is away, I am compelled to look at him through the microscope. As a result, I can see that the horrid things about him which used to seem so monstrous are infinitesimally tiny."

Whether the above be a bona fide confession of a mistaken course, as it purports to be, or a skillfully written article of warning to wives disposed to "nag" is immaterial. The suggestion is worthy of consideration, not only by wives, but by all members of the family; for there are nagging husbands as well as nagging wives, and, among children, there are those who are disposed to manifest the same unhappy disposition to magnify the small faults of others and to be censorious and exacting.

The fault is a very serious one in its effects upon the peace of the home.

Happier, More Comfortable, and Better Managed Homes

In the article above, a man is represented as leaving a home in which he was not happy, where he was not comfortable. Women also have been known to leave such homes.

People do not voluntarily desert homes that are places of pleasure and comfort. The statement is reasonable, that "happier, more comfortable, and better-managed homes would eventually make for a substantial decrease in the divorce rate."

To produce such improvement in the home is the object of the Wadleigh High School of New York City in establishing as a special course in its curriculum the study of "wife-craft." This is said to be the only public school course of its kind in the United States if not in the world.

A man stands at the head of this department of instruction, Doctor Stuart H. Rowe. Upon this we offer the following comment: "Although this may seem unusual, there is an essentially practical side to it. To be fitted as a model wife is a consummation worth almost any effort to attain; but to be man-taught model wife is something even beyond that. What higher recommendation could a girl offer to her intended husband than that?" The girl thus trained knows from the standpoint of a man what man needs from the companionships and help of woman.

Women, in their marriage, should never forget that they should be helpers of their husbands, not mere dependents or ornaments. They should realize the necessity of so preparing themselves that they may be qualified to be helpful.

The Science of Wifecraft

At the opening of this course in the Wadleigh School, "more than one hundred and fifty girls attending that school promptly applied for the chance to become model wives, and took up the studies in this newest branch of feminine education with every evidence of serious intent. . . . Upon graduation, the 'model wife' girl will receive the degree of M. H., a brand new degree created especially for her, which signifies 'Matron of Homecraft.'"

The conditions which led to the establishment of the department of "homecraft" are these: "Girls, upon leaving high school are in the position of one who has had a taste of almost everything and has eaten nothing—an unsatisfactory state for the intellect as well as for the body. The girls whose education is stopped after graduation from high school and sometimes after only two or three terms, and who evidently are fated to assume, sooner or later, the world-old task of womanhood, namely to become wives and mothers, are, as a rule, in no way prepared for it and have no means of learning their business, unless their own mothers happen to be excellent housekeepers and have the wisdom to impart their knowledge to the younger generation."

"I asked myself," said Doctor Rowe, "what our school system was doing to fit the girl for her natural position in life, that of wife. The answer was terribly clear and simple—practically nothing. It was then that I made up my mind to start a course in wife-making that would be just as specific in its aims, just as technical, just as thorough as a course in mechanical engineering or agriculture."

What the Course Is

"Doctor Rowe reasoned that a girl, to stand the stress of rearing a family, and maintaining a home on the highest standards, must have physical health. Therefore, the first requisite in the course is physical training. To that he added hygiene, and to that, sanitation—all three bearing close relation to bodily health.

"He felt that the next thing a man, the average man, expected of his wife was intelligence in the commonplace things. He knew that one of the greatest drawbacks to success and social aspiration was a faulty command of the English language. It was a broad course, and it aimed to give command of correct and cultured speaking, combined with knowledge of good books and literature.

"It is a very broad and general course, this English that we give," Doctor Rowe resumed. "It is intended to give the pupil a broad conception of literature and books, without wasting too much time on the details that might be required in college. You see, the great majority of high-school pupils never go to college. They graduate and marry.

"Following the English, cooking is added as a third requisite to the course. Every wife must know how to cook. Often she waits until she is married, and then her husband's digestion must suffer to give her an education in the subject. It was determined to save the digestion of masculine humanity as much as possible. The girls who graduate with an M. H. degree will be first-class cooks.

"With the domestic science is linked household economy, instead of political economy. It occurred to Doctor Rowe that it is more practical for a wife of a twenty-dollar-a-week husband to know. To these were added household chemistry and domestic art.

"Although the average housekeeper is too careless to apply it, there is much in household chemistry. A knowledge of the chemistry of food gives the wife a chance to economize by the substitution and blending of dishes to gain the best results at a minimum cost.

"The problem of mathematics is also faced in the course. Hundreds of girls fail in school because they can not master geometry and algebra. Nearly as many have foundered on these as on Latin or Greek. Doctor Rowe decided to throw mathematics of the higher sort into discard. He could not see their value to the average wife.

For this he substituted household arithmetic—a system of bookkeeping to show family disbursements, etc. Then the finishing touches were added—remodeling clothes to fit youngsters, needlework, mending of socks and patching of trousers and dresses, household and design and decoration, for many a husband appreciates taste in his home.

"Nor does the course stop there. Millinery is added, and to that social efficiency; then music and art and—the course is complete."

Doctor Rowe declared, "The girl who attains the degree of Matron of Homecraft should be qualified to cook three meals a day for her husband; run the house smoothly; take care of the family income, making it go as far as possible; care for the baby; teach the older children; have a sound appreciation of art and literary values; possess poise; be domestic and self-reliant and be able to talk intelligently on all topics. A wife with these qualifications would have little difficulty in finding or keeping a husband."

The Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN AUGUST

Parents' Day.—Prayer for the families of each other; for the conversion of kindred. Pray that we may all have a greater growth in spirituality, and a greater sense of parental responsibility; that the homes of Saints may be model Christian homes.

Pray for all the sick and afflicted.

Lesson, 1 Peter 3: 1-9. Memory verse, 1 Peter 3: 12.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Callie Chute of Pritchard, Alabama, earnestly desires the prayers of the Union and of the Saints in general, that if it is God's will she may be healed of cancer. It is now nearly five months since she was in the infirmary in Mobile where the doctors told her they could do nothing for her. She has a family of five children, aged from twelve to two years. She wishes to live to raise them and instruct them in the ways of righteousness and truth. How earnestly a mother under such circumstances desires the prayers of those of the faith can be estimated only by the gravity of the situation. May this sister who appeals for our prayers, be sustained by us before the throne of Him who is able to do great things in our behalf, and whose love for us equals his power.

Neal's Gold Brick Bursts Asunder

The Book of Mormon plates, according to Neal's figures, are admitted to have been six by six by eight inches in size. Each leaf was about as thick as a sheet of tin. He now figures the weight of that book of plates as being exactly equal to a solid gold brick! Is he dishonest, or is this just plain Campbellite stupidity? Think of comparing a solid gold brick to a book of leaves of gold which had been handled time after time, becoming more or less bent, and, of course, making it utterly impossible to press them together to the volume of a solid piece of gold! And then those sheets of gold were engraved on both sides with very fine characters, the engravers time after time stating they only had a limited amount of space to work with, and they used a shorthand system; so of course the plates were crowded to the edges with engraving. And Neal says these bent, dented, finely dug out plates weighed as much as a solid gold brick! He certainly is trying to work a brick game on his gullible devotees. Well, he has the "brass" all right and is freely using it, all for the love of Jesus!

I should say a conservative estimate of the weight of those plates would be thirty or forty pounds. Yet Neal says two hundred and forty pounds, troy, and does not use the one hundred ninety-seven and seven tenths pounds avoirdupois when he makes his final comparison.

Then he says: "Think of a man flying in the midheaven, with wings, carrying a two hundred and forty pound gold brick." Yes, that certainly would be a curiosity, that would beat Elijah being taken up by horses and a chariot into heaven! Neal can believe that all right. And he evidently believes the silly, childish myth that angels are half human and half bird, with great wings! Where is there a scrap of history which says a man with wings took up that two hundred and forty pound gold brick? But if an angel with wings were a reality, would it be a herculean task for one to carry one hundred and ninety-seven pounds of metal, when a common eagle has been known to carry away a large child? Philip was caught up after having baptized the eunuch; but according to Neal's conception he was possibly a jockey in training, as the Lord couldn't have done the job, if he had been a hundred or two pounds heavier than he was!

And the value of that gold brick staggers Neal. He boasts the price up to $60,000! I always did think the Book of Mormon was a valuable book, and evidently Neal does also! But Neal evidently does not know that in the very land where these gold plates were made they lined the walls of the Temple of the Sun with gold, beaten into sheets! And some of these very sheets are in the museum at Cuzco! So where the Book of Mormon plates were made they had plenty of gold and knew how to beat it into leaves. Try again, Neal. No matter what silly stuff you get off, you have a fine aggregation of full-fledged dupes who are guaranteed to be ready to gulp down whatever dish you give them.

Then Neal thinks Joseph Smith must have been a powerful man to carry one hundred and ninety-seven pounds, but he swallows the Samson story of carrying away the city's gates, and pulling down a "skyscraper." Yes, evidently Joseph Smith could carry thirty or forty pounds, as he was a large man.

Neal is a wonder at blundering.

Neal and his brotherhood strain at a gnat, but swallow A. Campbell!

Editors Herald: I left Iowa two years ago and went to Mapleton, Kansas. I later traded my property at Mapleton for a flat in Kansas City, and moved to Independence, Missouri. We were promised work at Independence, but after staying there two months and securing no work decided to move back to Iowa.

Independence is the best place in the world to live. The meetings are all good and the gifts are made manifest. The branches in Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas, are all very spiritual. Those who are able and have prepared the way before them may go to the central places. If Saints have no other resources than day labor they should be advised to stay where they are, especially if they are making a living. The Lord said he would redeem Zion in his own due time, and we are certain he will do so. I expect to return to Independence in three or four years if the Lord wills. There is no other place on earth so sacred to me. I did not do much preaching while there, but I heard the best sermons I ever heard in my life and gained much knowledge in that way.

I attended the Methodist Sunday school to-day. The lesson was the parable of the householder. I was granted the privilege of expressing my views, and I certainly improved the opportunity, presenting the idea of the dispensations. I will not have another opportunity in that school.

I expect to start meetings on the streets or in the park, when I will have all the time I want to intelligently present the truth to the people. There is lots of religion here of the kind. We have been looking for J. S. Roth, and when he comes will do all we can to place the angel's message before the people.

I have not been well since I came here. As a rule I have had good health for the last five or six years. My companion is still at Independence, but will come here when I secure a good place to live. I dislike to take her away from there.

My boys are both here. Their lives are an honor to the work. Frank has been called to the priesthood and is an able defender of the truth. Brother Edward Rowley and family live here also. Brother Rowley is superintendent of two mines here. Mr. Ady, whose wife is a member of the church and a faithful worker, is superintendent of another.

I expect to start meetings in these camps right away. As I work every day I will only be able to preach on Sunday, but I will do all I can. If there are any Saints at Anderson, and they will send me word by Superintendent Ady when they want meetings, I will come to them. I am boarding with Mr. Ady until I get a place of my own.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor at our house, as it is our only preacher. We have been isolated for nearly four years, but the gospel spark is growing brighter and it may be good for us to be here.

I am trying to spread this gospel message all I can, both privately and publicly. I would like very much to get in communication with the elders, and especially the secretary of the Central Texas District so I can make my report.

I would like to correspond with some of the Saints who live in or near the vicinity of Eureka Springs, Arkansas. I want to move as close to the stakes as I can, and think I can make a living there as easy as I can here.

If Brother Aylor comes through this part of Texas I wish him to let me know. I will meet him if I can.

I desire to spend a part of my time so long as I am able in spreading the gospel message. While there are no Saints here except my wife and I, I am not lonely. The promise of our elder Brother to be with us is sure and steadfast. I feel my weakness, and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may be worthy of God's blessings.

In the one faith,

Editors Herald: This will no doubt be the last "jot" until the grandest reunion ever held in the Spring River District has become history.

We are introducing several innovations which will contribute largely to the comforts of campers. Tents from $2 to $2.50 as last year. Meals 20 cents, or $3.50 per week for adults. S. G. Carrow in charge of tents, cots, etc. A. C. Silvers, secretary and treasurer, will carry the moneybag. Lou Carrow, police of the campus. Walter Christensen, charge of cooking and boarding tents. Sister Grace English with a corps of assistants will be the chaperone of the young girls, also in charge of the baby tent, which will be located in a quiet part of the camp where every facility will be employed in directing the play of the babies.

We shall try to combine rest and recreation with service. Tired mothers may be relieved of drudgery and care by their children being properly cared for that they may enjoy a real treat for ten days at the expense of the reunion. Swings for boys and girls will be provided, a superintendent over each. An automobile parade to the Falls daily for bathing and rest 'neath the dense foliage of forest's monarchs will be a gladsome feature. The main service will be in the evening, a big preacher and a big crowd, when old Sol has hid his burning face and the winds from the Ozark hills are cooling and refreshing.

Sister Mollie Davis will be in charge of the auxiliaries. Sister E. S. McNichols will wield the baton, with Nellie Brocaw manipulating the keys, Myra Brackenbury and Mamie Hilliard in the solo role, together with all the musical talent in the district fully marshaled and arranged, that the beautiful park may resound with song and story to the praise of his glory in whose service we are working and praying.

T. W. CHATBURN, President.

LAMONT, IOWA, July 7, 1914.

Editors Herald: The HERALD brings much good news to me. I was the presiding officer of the Strawberry Point Branch. There were so many removals that those remaining thought best to have the branch disorganized, which was done. We live about fifteen miles from Oelwein Branch. I have been going there off and on for two or three years. When Brother John McQueen died, leaving the branch without a president, Brother J. A. Chamberlain came to Oelwein and conferred with the Saints with reference to the matter of a president for the branch. I was selected, and since then I have been going there the first and third Sundays of each month.

They have a good Sunday school at 10 o'clock each Sunday. We have prayer and sacrament meeting at 11 o'clock. We also have Religio. The children take interest in the Sunday school and are not behind in the prayer and sacrament meetings. They can speak or pray or sing as well as any. The Lord blesses us by his Holy Spirit so that we feel it a joy to come together.

If any elders come this way we wish them to stop off with us. They will be welcome.

The crops look well here now after copious rain. Why should we not thank God for all these good things?

Pray for us as a branch of the church.

In the one faith,

W. B. WESTON.

Extracts from Letters

A. C. Richardson, Desloge, Missouri: "The noted evangelists, Steven Burke and Reverend Hobbs, are holding camp meetings at Flat River, Missouri. The largest attendance thus far was near five thousand. Up to Sunday night, July 5, they had something over six hundred and fifty subjects for church membership. These converts just come and give their heart to God, shake hands with the preachers and go on their way to glory in a saved condition, according to the teachings. Yet it must be admitted that these men are doing some good."

In a private letter Elder T. U. Thomas writes from Scranton, Pennsylvania, as follows: "The work in this place is blooming like the rose, and will compare in activity, I believe, with any other branch that I know of. We have been very busy brushing aside obstacles that were heaped in our way; and I can assure you it has kept us very busy to try to climb up to the public platform to be recognized and respected like others. But we have succeeded surprisingly, and now we are on the platform here and are recognized like others and preferred before some. This place, so far as the work is concerned, was formerly a parched place; but now it is a fruitful field full of life and good works and steadily growing in numbers, which is very encouraging. Our services are being sought after by people of all denominations. We have not sought publicity for our work through the church papers, but I am fully convinced that there is not a more active branch in the church at present, and still we are endeavoring to push further along."

Thomas J. Simpson, Montrose, Iowa: "We are enjoying a series of meetings. Brethren D. T. Williams, jr., and Charles E. Harpe are holding forth. Four were baptized yesterday in the big Father of Waters. We are using the nice school park. We are anxiously waiting until August 14, so we can meet in the old historic city, Nauvoo, Illinois, in reunion capacity, where we hope to meet Saints of Kewanee, Eastern Iowa, and Nauvoo Districts. We are firm in the faith, and are living in hopes of a glorious resurrection."

Under date of July 5, Elder Rees Jenkins writes from Jerusalem saying: "The work here is moving very slowly, but I think good is being done. As we have written before, conditions here are peculiar to this place and can not be treated in the way we meet them in other missions. We have at present here a Jew that claims to be a Messiah. He believes in the Messiahship of Jesus, but thinks he has done the work he was sent to do and that another must come to restore Israel. We are trying to enlighten him on the question. We meet twice a week to discuss the question. His wife is a Christian, and is anxious that her husband should be brought to see the light better than he does. Perhaps we are bestowing upon him labor in vain, but we hope not. Brother Greene has gone to the Lebanons to see what the prospects are there. We do not know when we may expect him to return."

Elizabeth A. Ellis, Irvington, Wisconsin: "I enjoy reading the HERALD and Ensign. Both are a comfort to me. I never grow tired of reading that which is good for soul and body. May God's blessing accompany these church publications as well as the ministry who are out teaching this grand and glorious gospel. I am in poor health. Please pray for me, and that God may bless all the true in heart."

Sparks from England

We are pleased to report that the work of the Master is making progress; it may be slow, but I am happy in the thought that it is sure. The spirit of the work in this mission is onward. Since my report to the General Conference we have experienced some good times (spiritual times). Twenty-one have been baptized into the kingdom, so we are keeping pace with the times in point of increase. We have some good openings; we have some good men too, I am pleased to say, whose chief desire is to push the work. The interest, generally speaking, is good.

Our local conferences have been attended with fair results. The Western Wales district conference was very successful, though, by reason of being held at the extreme end of the district, there were not so many present as usual. But the spirit of the gathering was very cheering, and I look forward to Gilfach Goch to do something worthy of our cause in the future. Press on, brethren, honor the organization that has been effected, and you will accomplish good work.

Here is a spark for you upon the subject of work. The best way to work is to make a start—begin to do something; when you get started don't stop, but keep on doing something, if it is only a few little things, such as giving out a few tracts, or an invitation to the meeting, or a little testimony by the wayside; you will be surprised how much it will encourage you, to give a kind word to your missionary, or your presiding elder. Just start trying to give something to somebody. And I do not mind if you let me know the result you get; these little thoughts have cheered the writer in the dark hour of experience.

The word says, "To him that overcometh." We struggle against popular opinion, and the opposition is still strong and stubborn; yet many admit that we are right. They say, If the Bible records the religion of Jesus Christ, then in point of doctrine you are right. What an admission! And yet how indifferent they are to its power.

However, it is our business to testify of the continuity of the power of the gospel of the Son of God, that it is unchangeable in its teachings and principles. This will ever be so while there shall remain a single soul in need of salvation, because its purpose and design is to restore the soul, that is body, mind, and spirit. What a wonderful message! May God help us to deliver the message. Brethren of the ministry, please study the epistle of the Joint Council. It is the secret of success to every minister who will receive and apply it. Brethren of the council, please accept my personal acknowledgement and thanks. I pray that it may bring success to Zion's cause.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

Little Sioux, Iowa

My field of labor is again Little Sioux District, Iowa, with Sioux City objective. On the same day of my return home from the General Conference, a phone message came for me to go to Elk Point, South Dakota, to administer to Sister May Wilson, who had been ill with typhoid fever for over two months. I found her very low. She seemed to realize she would not get well, but desired to do so if it were the Lord's will. Her only fear of death was that she would choke, as her lungs were in very bad condition. She could be heard to breathe almost anywhere in the house. On Sunday morning of the third, thinking death very near, she asked me to pray that when she should pass away she might go in peace without a struggle. I accordingly administered to her, and immediately she breathed perfectly natural, and did so until Monday near midnight, when she fell peacefully asleep without a struggle.

On Tuesday afternoon I preached the funeral sermon to a large crowd of her friends who had gathered at the home previous to the shipping of the body to Pisgah, Iowa, the home of her parents. The next day by request of the husband, Mr. Wilson, I accompanied them, and in the afternoon in the Saints' church at Pisgah I preached the sermon again to a large crowd of relatives and friends. We then laid the body away in the beautiful cemetery, its earthly resting place, conscious that the spirit had gone to the God who gave it.

I was then conveyed to the home of Brother Clifford Silsby, where I took supper and spent a few moments with the family. Then Brother Silsby took me on by automobile to Little Sioux in time to hear Brother A. M. Chase preach at eight o'clock. By request of Brother D. A. Hutchings, I stopped over and preached for them next evening.

I then returned to the city, taking up my work, doing what I could. On Decoration Day about seventy of our members and friends wended their way, some by team, others by street car, part way, then up the Big Sioux by boat, to Stone Park, where all met for a Sunday school picnic. The day was spent in baseball, pitching horseshoes and other amusements, not forgetting the ice cream and bountiful feast prepared and spread by the sisters, which was enough and to spare. All seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly. It is common for young people to enjoy themselves, but on this occasion we were delighted to see some of our older brethren, such as Brethren R. W. Butterworth, F. J. Seeley and A. Calhoun enter the ball game with the enthusiasm of boys in their teens.

On June 3 I took train in company with Brother C. J. Smith and Dale Alldredge, for Mondamin, where we stopped over night, being joined by Sister Ruth Parker the next morning. We hired an automobile to take us to the beautiful little town of Magnolia, where district convention met the same evening of the 5th. Owing to rain, busy time and other causes, we know not what, the convention and conference was not very largely attended until Sunday when a large crowd came and we spent an enjoyable day. The preaching Saturday evening was by Brother Sedden of Persia. At eleven a. m. we had the pleasure of hearing our aged, tried and true missionary, Brother Charles Derry, who assured us of his hope in the final triumph of our cause. Not knowing Brother Derry's age I said to him after his discourse that I thought if he continued to improve until he was eighty-five he would make a very good preacher. To this he replied, Well, if I do I will have to go backward three years, for I am eighty-eight now. May the Lord bless this good old patriarch, and may his last days be his best days. I have always believed in the old saying, Old men for council, young men for war; but some one there must not believe in that, as I was called upon to preach at 2.30 and 8 p. m. which I did, and felt well in the efforts.

On Monday Brother William Coffman kindly took us in his car to Mondamin, where by invitation of their young and energetic president, Brother Everett Gamet I preached Tuesday and Wednesday evenings in their church. I was cared for while there at the homes of Brethren Stuart and J. W. Mann. Thursday Brother Gamet came in after me taking me to his home about two miles out, where we took dinner, then drove on to River Sioux, where I was billed by previous arrangement to hold a series of meetings, beginning that evening.

I continued meetings there over two Sundays. We did not have large crowds, which they said was owing to the busy season, though we felt well in talking to the mixed congregations and mingling with members and nonmembers, Protestant and Catholic.

I was royally cared for each night while there at the home of our aged Brother and Sister James Beechum, who did all in their power to make it pleasant for me. The good Lord will reward them for their kindness. Through the day I visited and took my meals with the Saints and some friends to our people, who treated me very kindly.

While there I met Brother R. O. Scott of Omaha, son of Brother George Scott, deceased, who I found to be a very congenial brother. I was sorry when a heavy rain fell on Sunday night, which prevented me from taking a pleasant trip through the country twenty miles to Castana with R. O., which we regretted very much, as I was to go there to the funeral of a Sister Day, whose remains were shipped from Spokane, Washington, for burial near the old home. I had received a phone message to preach the funeral sermon, but later a telegram from Spokane came requesting Brother Joseph Lane, who was an old acquaintance to preach the sermon, which he did to a very large crowd of old settlers and friends of the deceased sister. Arriving at Castana, I was met at the depot and taken to the home of the banker, where I took dinner and was treated very kindly.

Brother Edward Struble met me at the funeral and took me to his home, where I received a royal welcome from all the family, consisting of himself and wife, six girls and four boys. It would be hard to find a more congenial family than this one.

We gave out meeting in the schoolhouse near by, but owing to the busy time we did not have large crowds, but a fair interest. Our crowds increased quite a bit Sunday, as I spoke at 2.30 in the afternoon, after which we went to the Maple River, where I baptized four noble young people, one a young man of Scottish birth, who, though alone here, and a single man, is making good in a financial way, and who also bids fair to make good in a spiritual way. Two were young ladies, daughters of Brother Struble, and a son twelve years old. Brother Carl Ballantyne of Moorhead assisted me in the meetings, and at the water on Sunday, also in confirmation in the evening, after which I preached on the laying on of hands to a good crowd. I expect to return there as soon as the busy season is over for a long series of meetings. I believe it will be a fruitful field.

I took my leave from this place on Monday, feeling well repaid for the week spent there. I returned to the city after an absence of about a month, to begin my tent meetings. The tent being at Bronson, some twelve miles distance, I secured a wagon and team from Brother Seeley to go after it, my wife accompanying me. Though it was a very warm day, we enjoyed the trip very much, looking over the rolling prairie with its thousands of acres of growing corn about waist high, also many acres of wheat and oats in the shock, and other fields ready for the binder. This all presents a spectacle well worth viewing. Reaching Bronson, we took dinner at the home of Brother and Sister James Horr, then loaded the tent; but after just a little persuasion, we stayed to help eat some young fry Sister Horr said she killed especially for us. Then about six o'clock, we hitched the little black team up to our load, and were soon making our way over the beautiful, quiet, country road, to the hustle and bustle of the noisy city.

The next day, July 9, we pitched the tent, and advertised to start meetings on Sunday evening, which we did. We are preaching each evening to small crowds, with some interest manifest by a few. Brother Charles J. Smith is assisting me each evening. Quite a number of our young people are helping in singing and playing the organ. Others come to help, making a showing for our work. We are determined to do what we can to get the work before the people of the city during the tent season. And we can only pray and trust God for the increase.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ALMA BOOKER.

North Dakota Nuggets

North Dakota may be the coldest State in the Union, but these days the weather is plenty warm enough and more so. But there is one pleasant feature we usually have, which is nights cool enough to give refreshing sleep.

This is the harvest time of the year for souls, as well as the beginning of the harvest of the fields of beautiful golden grain. Between the finishing of the seeding time, and the harvest, is usually a little time when people are not so rushed with their work; the weather is fine and pleasant, so they come out well to meetings in most places. And, too, it is the only pleasant time to be baptized. Yet I have taken people into the icy waters for baptism here when the mercury stood at thirty-eight below zero.

There were fifteen good people baptized at our state reunion which closed June 28. It was held near Logan, North Dakota, in the beautiful picnic grounds located on the banks of the Mouse River, and owned by Brother Tilton, who at one time resided in Lamoni.

Eleven were baptized in the pouring rain, yes, and in the river too, for they would not be satisfied because of just being wet, but wanted to be born of water, though they may have been just as wet before as after their immersion in the river.

The general reunion for the North Dakota District will be held next summer in the same place as this year, the date being set for July 2 to 11. We hope the Saints of North Dakota, the neighboring states, and near parts of Canada, will begin now to plan to attend, for surely the Logan reunion is a place to gain strength and courage.

Let me tell you how the Lord used as "instruments in his hands," a brother and his wife, who were working for a man who has a large farm. They interested him in the true gospel, so that he allowed the writer to come and stay at his place and hold meetings in the near-by schoolhouse. Then a few months later Brother William Sparling held meetings in the same place. Three of that family and the young lady who was the teacher at the schoolhouse came to the Logan reunion and proved to be some of those of whom the Master said, My sheep know my voice; and so the four were baptized. Their names are Brother and Sister Frank Anderson and wife and their son Lester, and Miss Effie Dahl.

This Brother Lester Anderson is very lame as the result of having had infantile paralysis. He is nearly a young man, and I hope it may be in harmony with the will of the Lord to heal him of his infirmities. Dear Saints, will you please offer a prayer to that end as you read these lines?

Brother Thomas Leitch, who was given the added responsibility of the office of elder at our late district conference, is at Kempton, where there seemed to be some very near the kingdom. Brother J. C. Page is at Straubville, I understand, where he expects to do some baptizing.

When the harvest time drives out of the country districts, then we plan some tent work for some of the towns and cities until the busy season is over and the cold evenings make us store the tents.

Can anybody tell us why our minister in charge, Brother J. A. Gillen, has not been up here to look after us? We think we need it, at least the encouragement of his presence and council, a little while.

JEROME E. WILDERMUTH.

Western Oklahoma

Just closed a ten nights' meeting at the Pleasant Hill Schoolhouse, about five miles east and south of here, Brother Hubert Case being with us the last few evenings. On yesterday he baptized four. Others are very much interested there.

At present we are holding tent meetings in Hinton; we began Saturday night, and while our attendance was all we could ask for the first evening, we are glad to say it was greatly increased last evening. Many favorable comments were heard after the service.

Our aim is to give the people an insight into the real vital spirit of Christ's gospel. Without question there are many who are looking for light here, and by dealing fairly and kindly with the people, considering carefully their feelings, and gently leading them to the fountain of living water, they will be able to drink therefrom, and become greatly refreshed. The apostle says of Christ that he was kind to the unthankful and the evil. It therefore becomes us also to be kind in all our dealings with our fellow men, that we may win them for Christ through kindness.

We received very favorable mention in both the News and Record last week, and by it many will see the nature of the work we represent. I am more strongly convinced every day that our work is a constructive one, and that our results will be far more apparent if we keep in the foreground the affirmative message.

To our many friends, we would say that we haven't time to write personal letters to all, so trust they will all read the HERALD, and through it get a glimpse of the work we are trying to do, of the service we are trying to render.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

The little common things of life—
A kindly word, a little trust,
A friendly smile amidst the strife
That crushes souls into the dust;
A flower for some tired eyes,
Or music for a weary heart—
"Just little things"—not any size—
But, ah, the sweetness they impart!
—Edith McKay.

News from Branches

Philadelphia

During the week of July 19 to 26 we have been especially blessed with the presence of general church officers. On the 19th, Brother Heman C. Smith favored us with two discourses. Brother Paul M. Hanson was with us a few days, studying our summer school methods. On the 26th, President F. M. Smith preached twice at the Howard Street church and once at the chapel. The way in which Brother Smith took the Saints into his confidence has revived the hopes of some and increased the hopes of many others.

It goes without saying that the presence of the general church chorister, Albert N. Hoxie, in Philadelphia, guarantees good music so long as there are singers to respond to his leading.

During the last month Children's Day exercises were held at both the chapel and the Howard Street church. We had the pleasure during this time of adding twenty-one to the church by baptism. Fifteen of these were from Howard Street, and six from the chapel. There are others to follow soon.

If the young people of the Philadelphia Branch make use of the splendid opportunities offered them, it will not be long until there will be a magnificent corps of workers here. Brother Walter W. Smith is doing his utmost, evidently, to make these young men and women a power for good in this city. We hope his efforts will be duly appreciated.

Summer schools are being conducted at both the church and the chapel. We think we are having better schools and better returns than ever before. In the past we have not been able always to find men and women who could give their time without some pay, but this year we are running the schools with volunteer help only; the number of volunteers we have simply goes to show that the people of God are willing to make necessary sacrifices.

J. A. KOEHLER.

Independence, Missouri

For several weeks the local option work has been going on, and it has been the dominant theme at our meetings of late. On last Sunday morning Brother D. J. Krahl spoke on the subject of personal responsibility and the work of the Sunday school; and in reference to the late victory he said, Down deep in my heart there has been rejoicing, because from my viewpoint I believe a step forward has been taken toward the redemption of Zion.

Brother Joseph, on being called upon, responded by commending the work of the Sunday school, and speaking of the liquor traffic he said, Over sixty years ago I took the same view of the great evil pressing upon society, and would counsel all not to swerve from the line of righteousness, nor be overjoyous over the victory, but ever be in unison with the right.

At the Sunday school there were eight hundred and fifty-two present, although the weather was very warm, and the usual number of Saints visited the various departments and enjoyed the music.

A work done among the children here at the present time, of which we may well afford to be highly appreciative, is the Summer Vacation School, consisting of a kindergarten, under the tactful management of Sister Ruby Williamson, and the many classes of industrial and educational training in charge of several efficient teachers. President George Harrington and Sister Emma Criley are at the head and in the musical department are assisted by Sisters Laura Kelley and Ruth MacMullin. The Bible stories are ably conducted by Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser. The "habit talks" are also very profitable. Pupils will on next Thursday evening give an exhibit, and funds will be solicited for the carrying on of the work. The instructors to whom great credit is due for their untiring efforts will hold a reception also. There has been an attendance daily of over three hundred.

In reverting to the great victory won in this city recently, we will say we as Saints and citizens have been glad to hear the noble sentiments expressed by the ministry and the leading men, and among them E. F. Jones, from abroad, on the side of right. We have been gratified in reading the stirring appeals through the Independence Issue and other papers, and witnessing the strenuous efforts of the faithful protectors of our homes, the fathers and mothers with their petition of two thousand strong, who are devoted to the cause of purity and honor. And, above all, in this trying ordeal and in the face of so important an issue, we have been led to see the hand of a divine providence, and attribute our city's success to his grace and mercy.

"Who can faint while such a river
Ever flows their thirst to assuage?
Grace, which like the Lord, the giver
Never fails from age to age."

In the faith of the gospel,

Detroit, Michigan

Times are quite dull here, but the Master has been kind to the Saints; I have not heard of any who are out of work.

Our work seems to be picking up here; the elders are holding street meetings every Sunday afternoon. Elder Mottashed of London, Ontario, was here for a few days. We have a nice Sunday school, conducted by Brother V. D. Schaar. The young people are coming to the front, and have a nice orchestra started.

God has seen fit to call some of our young men into service. Brethren Frank Bailey (son of the patriarch) and James Gault were called to the office of priest; Brethren Robert Coats and Thomas Forbes to the office of deacon; and Brother Frank Shippy (son of Elder George M. Shippy) to the office of teacher. Elder John A. Grant was elected president of the branch.

The sisters have organized a local Woman's Auxiliary, and have great hope for its advancement.

"Let us not be weary comrades, let us faint not by the way."

Flint, Michigan

It is with a heart full of gratitude to God for the many blessings he bestows upon his people in these the last days that I write a few words concerning the work in Flint.

Our meetings are spiritual, and God in his infinite love and mercy deems it wise to speak to his people in this place from time to time, admonishing the Saints to come to service with more singleness of heart, in the spirit of true worship.

Our Religio meetings on Friday evenings are well attended, and we have good lessons; good talent is discovered in the programs. Outsiders attend these meetings with interest.

This morning we have with us the president of the Seventh Quorum of Teachers, with his counselors, who are to meet with the teachers in counsel and prepare them for the work before them.

The Saints of Flint desire the prayers of all, and our prayers are always for the advancement of this great and glorious work.

Book Reviews

THE UNKNOWN GOD AND OTHER ORTHODOX ESSAYS.—By Jacob Piatt Dunn, secretary of the Indiana Historical Association, Sentinel Printing Company, Indianapolis, Indiana. Price $1. This is a book of very interesting essays on religious topics. The first essay, from which the book derives its title, The Unknown God, is devoted to a digest of Paul's sermon on Mars Hill. Other subjects taken up are, "The virgin birth," "First heresies," "The debt of English literature to the Bible," and "The passing of Darwinism." Any and all of these essays will well repay careful study, but perhaps the one most interesting will be that entitled, "The passing of Darwinism."

HISTORY OF CANADIAN WEALTH.—By Gustavus Myers, published by Charles H. Kerr and Company, Chicago. In this work the development of wealth in Canada is traced from the first beginnings of the fur trade up until the present era. Attention also is given to the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few. The following extract is from the preface: "The rapid concentration of wealth in Canada is no mere fancy. Already, it is estimated, less than fifty men control $4,000,000,000, or more than one third of Canada's material wealth as expressed in railways, banks, factories, mines, land and other properties and resources. To say that this small group of individuals control so vast a wealth and the agencies of its production does not imply that they own it all. Between ownership and control there is a difference, yet the reverse of that commonly supposed. By means of their control of financial markets and distributive systems, a small number of men may effectively control sources of wealth which still may remain under individual ownership, as witness the case of the farms, of which control farmers throughout Canada are bitterly complaining. Also it is not necessary for magnates to own all of the stock of railroads, banks, factories and mines; much of that ownership may be distributed among small shareholders, yet by their predominantly large holdings of stock, and through their power of directorship, those magnates can and do control those diversified, and often financially interconnected sources of wealth."

THE HISTORICAL CHRIST.—By Frederick C. Conybeare, M. A., F. B. A., University College Oxford. Open Court Publishing Company, 122 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago. This work contains a reply to and an investigation of the views of J. M. Robertson, Doctor A. Drews, and Professor W. B. Smith. In his preface the author says: "This little volume was written in the spring of the year 1913, and is intended as a plea for moderation and good sense in dealing with the writings of early Christianity; just as my earlier volumes entitled Myth, Magic, and Morals, and A History of New Testament Criticism were pleas for the free use, in regard to the origins of that religion, of those methods of historical research to which we have learned to subject all records of the past. It provides a middle way between traditionalism on the one hand and absurdity on the other, and as doing so will certainly be resented by the partisans of each form of excess."

THE NIGHT SIDE OF EUROPE.—By Karl K. Kitchen. David Gibson Company, Cleveland, price $1. Karl K. Kitchen is the well-known writer for the New York World. In this work he pictures night life as seen in London, Lisbon, Cairo, Damascus, Constantinople, Rome, Athens, Moscow, Saint Petersburg, Paris and Berlin.

FALSE MODESTY THAT PROTECTS VICE BY IGNORANCE.—By E. B. Lowry, M. D., Chicago, Forbes and Company, 50 cents. This little book of one hundred and ten pages treats of sexual hygiene, which is one of the most vital questions of this day. Said Doctor Eliot of Harvard, "The policy of silence in matters pertaining to sex has failed disastrously." Doctor Lowry has made a valuable contribution in a frank and dignified discussion of this subject, and this little book should be in the hands of parents, teachers and ministers. To our shame sexual hygiene has been too long hidden under a false modesty. This generation is working up to the necessity of sex education, which, when it receives its proper place in homes and schools, will, says Havelock Ellis, "transform our moral outlook and inspire our religion and philosophy."

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

"WAKE UP THE MIGHTY MEN!"

Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong.—Joel 3:9, 10.

We are living in the midst of stupendous world events. This is an age of prophecy. The signs of the times exactly accord with the prophetic declarations concerning the latter days.

Jesus said, "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. . . . For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in diverse places."

To-day every newspaper on sale in all Christendom is filled with rumors of wars. To-day there is hardly a civilized nation in the Old World that is not gathering together her forces of war, either for aggression or defense, or to be ready for possible dangers. While in the New World Mexico is almost prostrated from a long and bloody struggle, and Canada is now gathering her troops for the European conflict.

Famine and pestilence follow swiftly in the footsteps of war. This is the lesson of all history. War takes the toilers from the field and the bread from the mouths of women and children; and it breeds dread diseases that decimate the survivors. Jesus associated the three,—a grim trinity: war, pestilence, famine.

All Europe is an armed camp. With awful swiftness the storm of battle has struck. Coming so suddenly following the long and zealous promulgation of peace by the peace societies and advocates, the world is dazed and horrified. Thus one of the greatest of modern newspapers says:

All that Europe is preparing to fight for is "not worth the bones of one Pomeranian grenadier." It shrinks to nothingness when compared with the loss already inflicted upon civilization by the disturbance of commerce through the obstruction of its flow in accustomed channels.

What a frightful price Germany would pay for anything she may gain, the price of destroying much that she has gained in forty years of wonderful industrial development, a period of expansion in which her commerce has outgrown her capital. Yet now she is to destroy hundreds of millions of capital. Will the fruits of a war of vengeance on the hated Servians, even if Servian territory be acquired, compensate Austria for the hatreds she herself will incur as the power primarily responsible for the destructive conflict? Can the trophies of victory, even though she carry forward her policy of control in the Balkans, make up for Russia's loss, a half-developed country whose chief need is that she set aside her age-long foreign policy and devote herself to internal development? What can England and France gain that will reimburse them for the incalculable material and moral loss of a resort to war?

The moral loss is greatest of all, for the friends of peace have counted upon the highly civilized nations like England, France, with the United States, to discountenance war, to make great wars impossible. It will be a frightful backsliding. . . .

Their diplomacy, their skill in negotiation, the resources of their chancelleries, their regard for their neighbors and for the comfort and happiness and prosperity of their people, all the agencies of peace which they have at command have ill-served them. It is mediæval, it is barbarous, it is horrible, that men should turn out at the behest of sovereigns and war councils to be shot to death for purposes wholly unrelated to their own welfare.

Paul admonished the Saints:

For yourself know that the day of the Lord shall come as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction shall come upon them.

Thus dramatically have been silenced the modern prophets who told us that there could never be another great war. Men need not to have been surprised or dazed or profoundly astonished had they not lost faith in the prophecies. The word of God has been ignored. It was truly written:

Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

In an editorial appearing in the HERALD more than two years ago (July 31, 1912) we had this to say:

Jesus said that just prior to his coming we should hear of "wars and rumors of wars." Men tell us to-day that war is past. They say there will never be another great conflict between armed nations. It is not so long, however, since such great conflicts were raging, and indeed wars of lesser magnitude are now in progress. The activities of peace commissions and conferences, though praiseworthy, give no great promise of success. The best indication of approaching combat between individuals is observed when both begin to reach for weapons with which to fight. They may profess friendship, but look out when they reach toward the pistol pocket.

The nations of the world are arming themselves. Their hands are hovering near the hip pocket. This in itself is sufficient to answer the assertion that there can be no more war.

Mr. Lloyd-George, chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain, is quoted by Robert Donald, editor of the London Daily Chronicle, in The Outlook for June 22, 1912, as saying that civilized nations now spend annually 500,000,000 pounds, or $2,500,000,000 for weapons of war. Great Britain alone spends 70,000,000 pounds, or $350,000,000 yearly; equal to $40 for every household in the kingdom. He adds that if this drain were cut off one dollar per week extra could be paid to every laborer in the kingdom without reducing existing profits of business.

If one wishes to get the exact significance of the statement, "They shall beat their plowshares into swords and their pruning hooks into spears," let him figure out the number of bushels of corn or wheat or grapes that are required every year to pay this enormous war levy, for by this process are plowshares converted into battleships, which is the modern equivalent of the old simile.

The United States has but recently launched the battleship Texas, the largest battleship afloat, carrying larger guns than have ever been mounted on any battleship for regular service. She will soon be followed by a sister ship, the New York.

These weapons are being manufactured. They will be used. Jesus made no mistake. There can be no permanent "peace on earth" without accompanying "good will toward men." The angels linked the two together in their song at the birth of the Savior. Man can not separate them.

Even though the present conflict should be halted presently, or at once, permanent peace could not come until the nations learn the lesson of good will and come to accept the twin principles of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Though we may feel a sorrow and mental depression too deep for tears in contemplation of the awful sorrows and sufferings apparently coming upon so many, the innocent as well as the wicked, we realize that it is the inevitable result of wrong policies, and a world-wide method of life, thought, and action not in accord with the will of God.

The lust for blood and battle seems to have been poured out upon the world. A spirit of war madness is in the air. The thin veneer of civilization falls away. The assumed cloak of altruism, humanitarianism, gentleness, Christianity, falls away and reveals the barbarian. Great Christian nations attack each other, each crying, "In the name of God." And as one writer points out, on earth, in air, on the sea, and under the sea men are prepared to slay one another.

The wires of the world hum with the message:

Wake up the mighty men, let the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears.

The pulses of the world thrill to the sound of martial music and the rapid tramp of battalions of armed men. But under the shrill insistence of the fife, the roll of the drum, and the blare of the trumpet is heard the low sobbing of women and little children, shaming the consciences of men.

The press dispatches from Paris say:

The wildest enthusiasm was manifested on the boulevards when the news of the ordering of the mobilization became known. Bodies of men formed in regular companies in ranks ten deep paraded the streets wearing the tri-color and other national emblems and cheering and singing the "Marseillaise" and the "Internationale," and throwing their hats into the air.

But the next paragraph significantly adds:

"On the sidewalks were many weeping women and children."

Dispatches from Saint Petersburg say:

Enrollment of the reservists of the Russian army started at one hundred centers in the Russian capital at six o'clock this morning and was accompanied by stirring scenes.

And the next paragraph completes the picture:

"Crowds of women and children accompanied their husbands and fathers to the stations."

Zion is fortunately situated at this time. God has willed it so. Yet though Jesus has commanded us to lift up our heads when we see these things coming to pass, we are to do so because we then know that the hour of redemption draweth nigh. We are not to rejoice at the calamities coming upon others, or to think of selfish profit to be derived from their extremities; instead we are touched with a profound sorrow and would help them if we could.

Nor are we free from impending danger in our own land of Zion. The words of the Lord may still be applicable:

Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own land.—Doctrine and Covenants 38:6.

Let all the Saints take home to their hearts a profound lesson and seriously ponder their lives. Pride, extravagance, folly, doubt must be put out of their lives in these sober days. A more complete consecration is demanded of all.

Let the Saints also remember our foreign missions and missionaries, and our brethren and sisters in war-torn lands, that God may protect and care for them. And for ourselves also let us all remember the Master's instruction:

Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

PRESIDENT'S WIFE DEPARTED.—On the 6th at 5 p. m., Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of President Wilson, passed away after an illness of some months with kidney trouble and nervous diseases. The news comes as a shock to the Nation, as her illness was not generally known until a very few days prior to her departure.

TO REGULATE BUSINESS.—The Senate on August 5, by a vote of fifty-three to sixteen, passed an interstate trade commission bill declaring unlawful all unfair competition and authorizing a commission of five to supervise "big business." This bill is more radical and far-reaching than one passed by the House, and goes to a conference of both houses.

THREATENED STRIKE AVERTED.—A threatened strike of railway engineers involving half the United States was averted last week when the railway managers yielded to the advice of President Wilson and agreed to arbitrate the differences between themselves and the engineers. The President indicated that unless an agreement were reached the whole power of the Government would be put forth to avert what he considered would be "in view of world-wide conditions, a calamity of incalculable magnitude." The country is to be congratulated over this outcome of what threatened to be a general tie-up of railway traffic.

CAN CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS PRACTICE?—The appellate division of the supreme court of the State of New York recently handed down a decision involving the right of Christian Science healers to practice. Five judges sat in the case. Four held that the defendant had under the laws of the State no right to practice for compensation as a Christian Science healer; one that he would have had a right to practice without compensation; one that he had a right to heal by Christian Science methods because such healing was not the practice of medicine. An appeal has been taken to the court of appeals.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Reports of the peace parley between representatives of Provisional President Carbajal and General Carranza are conflicting. One day the papers announce that Carranza has granted amnesty to all Federalists, has guaranteed the safety of property and life, and is about to peacefully enter Mexico City; the next it is stated that Carranza has refused amnesty and guarantees, has demanded the unconditional surrender of the Federalists, and that his forces are marching against Mexico City. Reports indicate that there may yet be an open rupture between Carranza and Villa; and again these leaders are said to be in agreement. The entire Mexican situation, at this writing, is uncertain.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Events in Europe have followed each other in close succession the past week. Hostilities have continued between Austria and Servia with the Servians successfully holding their positions and inflicting heavy losses on the Austrians. The siege of Belgrade, the Servian capital, by the Austrians, has been continuous since July 29. On the failure of Russia to cease mobilization, Germany on the 1st declared war against Russia. France the same day ordered the mobilization of her forces. The following day skirmishes occurred between the French and Germans and the Russians and Germans along the border. Preliminary fighting continued daily thereafter with varying success. England mobilized her army and navy, assuring France she would protect the French coast against the German navy, the French fleet being in the Mediterranean. Disregarding the neutrality of Belgium, the Germans announced to that country their intention to cross it with their forces into France, intimating that resistance would bring heavy loss. England issued an ultimatum to Germany insisting upon the neutrality of Belgium. On the advance of the German forces against the Belgian fortifications at Liege and Namur on the 4th, England on that date declared war against Germany. The bombardment of Liege continues unabated, Germany having captured two of the Belgian ring forts. The Germans are reported to have lost twenty-five thousand men. On the 7th Germany asked for a brief armistice, presumably to bury her dead. At last report the Belgians had not yet replied. France and England are said to be hurrying troops into Belgium to reinforce the Belgian strongholds. Naval engagements are reported between French and German vessels off the Algerian coasts, with two German vessels sunk, and between English and German vessels in the vicinity of the Canary Islands, with one German vessel sunk. The English and German fleets are supposed to be engaged in the North Sea, with the German fleet weakened by having a number of vessels at points widely separated in different parts of the world. Portugal on the 8th declared her intention to support England. Turning a deaf ear to Germany's appeals, Italy asserts her neutrality, with the sentiment of her people, despite the alliance with Germany, strongly in favor of the cause of France and England. Japan, an ally of England, declares herself prepared to protect the interests of England in the Far East. Representing the United States Government as one of the signatory powers of the Hague convention, President Wilson on the 5th offered to the belligerents the good offices of the United States, "now or at any other time that might be more suitable," in the interests of peace. It is not expected that a peace parley will at this time be possible.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

DEATH OF MRS. WOODROW WILSON.—All hearts are deeply touched by the death of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President of the United States. It seems particularly trying that this ordeal should come upon President Wilson in the midst of the many perplexities and the heavy burdens that are his in the present administration. Regardless of party affiliation, the sympathy of the country is extended to him in the hour of his bereavement. All Saints, whatever their politics may be, should unite in supporting him with their confidence, sympathy and prayers. And this they can afford to do, recognizing in him a thoroughly honest and conscientious executive of unusual ability. Few Presidents have entered the White House at such critical times in the history of the nation and the world at large. And certainly he needs extraordinary human sagacity and a degree of divine wisdom and inspiration to guide him in these strained and perilous times.

CLOSE DISCUSSION ON ATONEMENT.—In this number we bring to a close the discussion on the atonement that has been carried on by Elders Lambert and Russell. Contrary to our usual rule, we have permitted and in fact advised these writers to close the discussion by negative argument, each being privileged to review the four preceding numbers prepared by the other. While our general rule is to insist upon affirmative discussion and independence in writing on subjects, in this case we have felt that the merits of the question might thus be brought out to better advantage and that the discussion could thus be closed in one number by the simultaneous appearance of articles in rebuttal from each writer in a way that would be absolutely fair, impartial, and satisfactory to both writers. The question is now left to the judgment of our readers after a careful study of the arguments and texts presented on either side.

BRITISH ISLES ELDERS ACTIVE.—We are in receipt of a report from the Seventh Quorum of Elders stating that special meetings of the quorum were held with the East Manchester Branch, July 18 and 19. Interesting papers were read and profitable discussions were participated in. Brethren holding the office of high priest were in attendance on invitation, and one meeting included the membership of the East Manchester Branch. An indication of the promptness and activity of this quorum is furnished in the fact that in answer to twenty-eight cards sent to members, Elder J. E. Meredith, president of the quorum, received replies from twenty-six. Quorum organization is intended among other advantages to make for the individual development and efficiency of quorum members. Our British Isles brethren are not behind others in sensing the importance of quorum work, and the need of activity on the part of the priesthood.

WHICH, IF NOT BOTH?—Miss C. F. Swartz of the National Reform Association, so called, is reported in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle for June 23, as having said before the general meeting of the Brooklyn Presbyterian Presbytery:

The Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints is really worse than the original body, and although it claims to forbid polygamy, it is practiced by the members.

This Miss Swartz is the same who was reported as stating at Anthon, Iowa, a few months ago that Elder Eli Hayer, of Lamoni, Iowa, and known throughout the church as a law-abiding man living in conformity to the laws of God and the land, which prescribe one wife for one husband, was living in Lamoni in polygamous relations with two women. Our Brother E. B. Hull has in the Eagle, for July 5, a reply in which he ably defends the church and sets forth its teachings. He calls attention to the democracy of the body, and to the absence of commercialism therein; he emphasizes the command as given through Joseph Smith, "He that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land," in all of which the Reorganized Church stands out in contradistinction to the church of Utah. He cites that our church was the first to send missionaries to Utah, and that ours was also first in memorials to Congress urging measures to correct the abuses of Utah. In the light of history and in the light of facts readily obtainable, there is no excuse for such methods as pursued by Miss Swartz. When pursued they evidence the lack of principle on the part of the lecturer, the lack of a better argument, or both.

THOUGHTS ON THE ATONEMENT---PART 5

BY ELDER J. R. LAMBERT

REVIEW AND REJOINDER

The promised articles on the atonement of Christ are now before us, the first appearing in the HERALD for July 15, 1914.

Our only apology for attempting this review is this: The editors in charge thought it would be a good way to close the present discussion, and we acceded to their suggestion. But so far as this side of the discussion is concerned, we plainly stated our willingness to let it take its chances without any reply; and now, after reading Elder Russell's articles, we are still willing to trust the whole matter to the intelligence and fairness of the reader, without any further effort whatever.

THE TWO ARTICLES

Our article was written during the sessions of the General Conference, and Elder Russell's some weeks later. We had no knowledge at the time of writing that Elder Russell or anyone else would write up the other side to be published with our article, though we heartily commend the editorial arrangement. We find, however, that nearly all the material objections to our position on the atonement have been successfully met by our article. For this reason we advise the reader to carefully note what each writer says in behalf of his own cause.

SELF-REPRESENTATION

We still claim the right to represent our own faith, and freely accord to everyone else the same right. And it may as well be understood, now, that there is much presented by the other side of the discussion which we have never avowed and will never defend. Some of it we may refer to incidentally, the balance we will simply ignore.

To illustrate: It is made to appear that our views on the atonement necessitate the belief that Christ suffered and died that he might reconcile his Father to the people! This is not our belief. If the good brother would quote what the Scriptures say on this point, without his progressive (?) and safe (?) interpretations, he would have just what we believe. Christ suffered and died to reconcile the people to God, not God to the people. Do you see the difference? It is nowhere stated in our proof texts that Christ died for God, but it is repeatedly stated that he died for the people. Why not confine the argument to the true issues? This disposes of much that has been said with which we need not bother ourselves any more.

PLANS COMPARED

We have presented our scripture texts under different subheadings, not only to show that our views on the atonement are correct, but that we get these views from the very texts relating to the matter in issue. There is a marked difference between getting our doctrine from the books and then strengthening our position by using texts of the same class and which have the same application, and the practice of first assuming our belief and then using texts which have no direct application to the matter at issue in order to sustain the position assumed, or rather to disprove the opposite belief. The first plan reveals the harmonious character of the testimony contained in the books, while the second makes the books contradictory and unreliable.

Our position, as presented by us, can not be shown to be in conflict with any text found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, relating to the subject at issue. Therefore, if the books are right, we are; if they are wrong, where are we?

THE THREE BOOKS

In our "Number One," we call attention to the fact that the church is committed to the testimony of the three books; that these books constitute our only standard of evidence. Our plan has been to make an affirmative effort to sustain our position without saying any hard things about those who hold to an opposite belief, and we have only referred to the other view incidentally.

THE OTHER SIDE

The leading effort of the other side has been a negative one. This is precisely the kind of effort which is made by infidel writers to overthrow the whole Christian system. We would have been pleased had the brother devoted more space and effort in defining his own positions, and supporting them by scripture evidence, had he seen his way clear to do so; but it is granted that he has a perfect right to choose his own methods. His effort, as the reader will see, has been an attack on what we are supposed to believe, before he sees a word of our article! Was this wise? Is it just to the other side, and to the reader?

Our plan has been to honor the testimony of the witnesses as contained in the books; but our critic has tried to sustain and justify his strictures by what is written, until he meets with that which he can not use against our views, but which strongly supports them, when he at once makes a vigorous effort to discount the witnesses. We have had neither desire nor necessity for employing this method.

OUR AFFIRMATIVE POSITION

Our article was written affirmatively and independently. We shall rely upon the correctness of our position, for, as already stated, we feel quite secure on this ground. When any proposition or doctrinal claim is proven to be true, there is no kind or amount of negative evidence can overthrow it. On the other hand, there is no proposition or doctrinal claim, susceptible of demonstration by affirmative evidence, but what a negative argument may be formed against it. Our position is an affirmative one, but on the other side we have a negative one.

In affirming that death on the cross was an important part of the atonement made by Christ, our evidence was full of such expressions as these: "In due time Christ died for the ungodly." "For even Christ is . . . sacrificed for us." (Marginal translation, "Is slain.") "This is my body, which is broken for you." "How that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." "If one died for all, then were all dead." "But unto him which died for them, and rose again." "Who gave himself for our sins." "Even as Christ also . . . gave himself for it." (The church.) "Who died for us." "Who gave himself a ransom for all." "Who gave himself for us." "That he by the grace [favor] of God should taste death for every man." "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." "Because he laid down his life for us."

In all the above texts the word for, preceding a statement of the purpose for which Christ died, comes from the Greek "huper," which literally means "in behalf of." That is, Christ died in behalf of his people and all others.

"Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people." "Ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, . . . but with the precious blood of Christ." "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse." "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace."

In the above texts, redeem comes from the Greek "lutroo," which means "to loose by a price." Redeemed, as used by Peter, comes from the same word. Redeemed, as used by Paul comes from the Greek exagorazo, which means "to acquire out of the forum." Redemption comes from "opolutrosis," defined to mean "a loosing away."

John said of Jesus, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," and Christ is referred to in Revelation 13: 8, as "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Put these two statements together and we unmistakably have Jesus Christ ordained of God as the Savior of all men from the foundation of the world. (That is, the slain Christ.)

WHAT DOES THE BOOK OF MORMON SAY?

We refer the reader to our quotations from this book. We can only present a few brief extracts here.

For behold, and also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died, not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned.

And yet they hardened their hearts, and understood not that the law of Moses availeth nothing, except it were through the atonement of his blood.

But men drink damnation to their own souls, except they humble themselves, and become as little children, and believe that salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atoning blood of Christ, the Lord omnipotent.—Mosiah 1: 107, 113, 115.

This will suffice. The Doctrine and Covenants is equally plain and definite in its statements, but they are found in our article. Now, so far as these statements are concerned (and they are but a tithe of what is contained in the books), they plainly and unequivocally announce the doctrine of vicarious atonement.

"INTERPRETATIONS QUESTIONED"

This is Elder Russell's subheading, and under it we will try to continue the good work of questioning some interpretations. This is an important point. If Elder Russell's interpretations are correct, we must concede that he is right, or put up the claim that the sacred and standard books of the church are unreliable, and, therefore, worthless. If, on the other hand, our interpretations are correct, the books are vindicated, and the strictures of our brother are a failure.

We have marshaled our evidence under different subheadings, after which it has been our rule to either pass on without a word of comment, or call special attention to what is stated in the text, not what is meant, frequently reproducing some of the more important statements which have a direct bearing on the matter at issue. Thus we have permitted the scriptures to interpret themselves. No effort has been made to change the wording or distort the meaning. No effort to invalidate any of the standard books, or discredit any of the witnesses. We simply ask the reader to carefully note the two modes of interpretation, and then decide for himself which is the better and safer one. However, the true character of one's work must be determined by an investigation of the character of the work done.

First, we are told that the simple fact of a matter being foretold by the prophets is no evidence of divine approval. No, we have never so claimed or believed. But the character of the predictions of Christ's suffering and death, together with the statements of Jesus himself both before and after his death, do furnish indubitable evidence of divine approval. More than this, when we consider the character of God (his infinite love and power), and the history of Christ's suffering and death, we are compelled to believe that both Christ and the Father approved of the death of Jesus on the cross, in the hands of wicked men.

We herewith propound the following questions:

1. Did the Father, at any time, manifest his disapproval of Christ's death on the cross? If so, where is the evidence? If not, why not?

2. Why did not Christ pray to his Father to send him the twelve legions of angels, that he might be delivered from his enemies? (See Matthew 26: 52-54.)

3. Or, knowing the loyalty and purity of his Son, why did he sit idly by and permit the murderous mob to nail him to the cross?

4. Why was it that when Jesus fully submitted to his Father's will, in the garden (Matthew 26: 42-44), it resulted in his death on the cross?

5. Why did Jesus say to his disciples, at the time he upbraided them for their unbelief, "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things," etc? (Luke 24: 26). This is the emphatic way of saying that he ought to have suffered them.

6. Why did Jesus say to his disciples, "that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me"? (Luke 24: 44.) Was it simply and only to save the credit of the prophets? or was it not because the design of the infinite God was back of it all, and the salvation of man was dependent upon the fulfillment of these predictions? The word "must" was used by Jesus in the above scripture, the same word which the angels used (significantly, too) when addressing the disciples at the time of his resurrection. These are the words: "Remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying, The Son of man must be delivered up into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again." (Luke 24: 6, 7.) Must, not will, is the word used. That is, Christ must be delivered up into the hands of sinful men; he must be crucified; he must rise from the dead.

Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.—John 10: 17, 18.

This proves, first, that Jesus was to die for the salvation of his people. Second, he was to die that he might rise from the dead. If it was necessary for him to rise from the dead, then it was necessary for him to die.

Jesus and his Father were perfectly agreed upon this important matter. "I and my Father are one." (Verse 30.)

Third, Jesus had been instructed, or commanded, by his Father, and, of course, acted in complete harmony with the commandments given.

The word for, found in verses 11 and 15 of this chapter comes from the Greek word hyper. The literal meaning of the word is in behalf of. That is, he gave his life in behalf of the sheep.

All this proves, by statement and implication, that Christ's death on the cross is an important part of the atonement, and that his sufferings in the garden and on the cross, also his resurrection, were approved by the Father.

As already stated, there is no evidence of disapproval either upon the part of God or Christ. Matthew 16: 22 is cited as an evidence of prediction without divine approval of the thing predicted. (In King James' version it is verse 21.) But the context does show divine approval, clear and strong.

Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee. But he turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offense unto me, for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men. (Verses 22, 23, King James' Translation.)

According to this reading, what were "the things that be of God"? Answer: Christ's suffering, death, and resurrection. What were the things that be of men? Answer: That he should not suffer, die, and be resurrected.

Matthew 26: 36-39, is cited, and in answer to the question, "Is it not plain that it was God's will for his Son to suffer?" we have the following: "If it was God's will, Jesus stood in opposition thereto and asked for release from the ordeal, and his submission was not a willing sacrifice."

Is this a correct interpretation? Let us see. Jesus made three prayers while in the garden. The first consists of one sentence, the first part of which is the brother's evidence. The second part reads, "nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." Nevertheless means not the less; notwithstanding. The second and third prayers are alike, and in them is no petition for release.

Now the question is this: Shall we pass final decision on the attitude of Christ to the crucifixion on the strength of the first and conditional request, or shall we determine his attitude by the concluding part of the first prayer, in connection with the second and third? No, no, it will not do. His final conclusion, "Thy will be done," is the only proper basis from which we can form a just decision. Therefore, the logical conclusion is that it was the Father's will that Jesus should suffer in the garden and on the cross.

But it should be remembered that the good brother has already admitted that Jesus died to show to all men that it is possible to remain loyal to God and the truth under the most trying conditions. No matter if he did die only as a martyr, because of the truth he taught, his Father was equally responsible for his death by that murderous mob.

Matthew 26:24 is quoted, and the following statements made in connection therewith:

"With the interpretation that the blood is a part of the atonement, let me remind you that there is then a part of the atonement that does not reach all people," etc.

Have we not all learned, long ago, that all scripture is not found in the same place? Because Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," does it therefore follow that repentance is no part of the divine plan, and that the laying on of hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost is not necessary? Peter said to those who cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (evidently to be saved) "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Does it therefore follow that faith and the laying on of hands are not necessary? Jesus was talking to his disciples about the sacrament of the Lord's supper, an ordinance which belongs exclusively to believers, and it was only necessary that he should tell them, at that time, of the effects of his atoning blood [death] on them.

But if the blood of Christ was shed for all true believers, that is, "for the remission of their sins," how does it come that it is no part of the gospel plan—no part of the atonement? "That which proves too much, proves nothing," and this text certainly proves too much for our brother's contention. The interpretation is too narrow.

The brother says: "God was on the side of Christ in that ordeal and sent an angel to strengthen him. (Luke 22:43.) Dare we say that God wrought on both sides?"

No, dear brother, we will not say he did, for "his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round." But we have yet to learn that God made the least effort to prevent the death of Jesus on the cross; and if he made no such effort, it reflects on him just to that extent that you now think it reflects on us; that is, from your viewpoint. If God had sent the angel to deliver him, he would have been a good, strong witness for you; but as he was only sent to strengthen him (that is, to qualify him to pass through the ordeal) he is our witness, not yours, and we thank you and God for producing him.

Elder Russell says, "1 Nephi 3:87 says the Son was 'slain for the sins of the world.'" He then tells us how he understands it. (See HERALD for July 15, page 668.) Revelation 6:9; 20:4 do not furnish us with a parallel case. In one case they died for the word of God and the testimony they bore; in the other there is a grand purpose which goes above and beyond these. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die." (John 12:32, 33.) In this case he is "slain for the sins of the world."

The interpretation placed upon this text puts Nephi in conflict with Lehi, his father, and Jacob, his brother, hence, for the reasons expressed, we reject the interpretation. (See 2 Nephi 1:71-79; 6:46, 47.)

In conclusion on this point, we again request the reader to compare these interpretations with ours, and determine for himself which mode is the better and safer one.

DISCOUNTING THE WITNESSES

Occasionally our brother finds a text which is too much, even for his improved (?) system of interpretation. But something must be done, so he goes to work to discredit the witness, or revise the text, and thereby gives us an improved (?) reading, etc. Here is a sample: "Nephi 12:26, 27 is declared by some to be an 'unanswerable' in favor of blood atonement." He then goes to work to show that Nephi's report of what Christ said on this point is probably wrong, or so inaccurate as to be wholly unreliable. A number of statements from the Book of Mormon writers are adduced to show that there are faults or mistakes in the records they kept.

All this is true. All men are fallible, and their work more or less imperfect; but does this prove that Nephi, or any other Book of Mormon writer, made a false statement on an important topic like the atonement? Far from it. These Book of Mormon writers never confessed that there was any statement in their records which is not true, but they invariably testified to the truth of them. The first Nephi said, "And I know that the record which I make is true." (1 Nephi 1:2.) "And now it came to pass that according to our record, and we know, our record to be true, for behold, it was a just man who did keep the record," etc. (Book of Nephi 4:1.) In Mormon 4:21, 22, we read: "And if there be faults, they are the faults of a man. But behold, we know of no fault," etc.

In the closing portion of this book of Nephi, chapter 10, we read that Jesus commanded them to bring forth their record, and glancing at it, after Nephi had brought it forth, he commanded them to write a portion of Samuel's prophecy, which had been omitted. In the next chapter, we read that Jesus rehearsed some of the prophecies of Malachi and commanded them to be written. This same Nephi was chosen as the leading one of his apostles. All this goes to show that Jesus was particular that the record should be right. It also shows that Nephi was fully trusted as a writer and an apostle.

Now, is it reasonable to suppose that in a little while after this, when Jesus was talking of what his father sent him into the world to do, that he would go away without the knowledge that a correct record was made of what he taught? We think not.

But this is not all. The objectionable text referred to harmonizes with every other text found in the three books, touching the same point. Why did not Elder Russell, if he wished to make a strong case of it, show that this text is in conflict with the testimony of the other witness, so fully furnished by us? Why? But he does not even quote it. Reader, please look it up and read, for right here is a good time and place for some of that "broader study and deeper thought."

Now we come to Paul. His testimony is, to say the least, discounted on the sufferings and death of Christ. For what reason? Why, he had been a strict Pharisee, and would naturally attach great importance to the great and last sacrifice, etc. Did he get the importance of this "last great sacrifice," its character and purposes, from the Pharisees? The Pharisees believed in the immortality of the soul; the consciousness of man after death; a future paradise in the intermediate state; the resurrection of the body, etc. Did Paul get all these from the Pharisees? Let him speak for himself. (Read Galatians 1: 11, 12; 1 Corinthians 15: 1-4.)

Yes, Paul was a Pharisee, but Jesus said of him, "for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel." (Acts 9: 15.) Do you think Christ would send him out on such a mission as this when he did not know how to preach the atonement?

A REVISED TEXT

In "Part Three" we read as follows: "We stand committed to the Inspired Version above any other book, I think, for all additional scriptural instruction must harmonize therewith."

In the beginning of "Part Four," we have Elder Russell's severe revision of Acts 4: 25-30, at the close of which he says: "Just remember, that it is only your tradition that is affected by this correction and not the truth as revealed in Christ." (Is that all, my brother?)

It is only necessary to say that the Inspired Version reads just the same as the King James on this text. Both versions are against him. What he will now do with his revised text we do not know, but before continuing the work of revision he will evidently consult his standard of standards.

We are repeatedly told that if the people would have obeyed the teachings of Christ there would have been no need for his death on the cross, and nobody to kill him. The whole scheme of redemption through the shedding of blood would have been a failure.

Is not this a bit of catch logic? Let us see. If our foreparents had not sinned and fallen in the garden, there would have been no need of the gospel or the Christ. It required the agency of the Devil and the transgression of Adam and Eve to help God out with his wonderful plan. Had it not been for these, the whole scheme would have been a failure! See?

The trouble is, that on this point and all through the article, to an extent, the brother holds us responsible for the foreordination of God, without any reference to man's agency, or God's foreknowledge of the conditions that would obtain. In this way he strives to make it appear that our position is inconsistent, and very reflective on the character of God.

It is a mistake to presume that because there are some things connected with the atonement of Christ we can not now explain, that we are, therefore, on dangerous ground, and walking in blindness. This position overlooks the fact that light and knowledge are always connected with true faith. The apostle says, speaking for himself and the body of true believers, "For we walk by faith, not by sight." (2 Corinthians 5: 7.)

When Adam offered sacrifices of the firstlings of his flocks he did not know till the angel told him why, or for what purpose he did so. Abraham left his father's house and sought the promised inheritance, "not knowing whither he went." But did these men move in darkness? Far from it. They walked by faith. And what is faith? "The assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." (Paul in the Inspired Version.)

Paul also says, "Now we see through a glass darkly." "I know in part." (See 1 Corinthians 13: 9-12.)

In Elder Russell's "Part Two," he presents a quotation from Our Defense. The purpose of this is easily seen, but it is legitimate, and we have no complaint to make. However, his purpose will never be realized. We believed when we wrote Our Defense, as we believe now, that there is no "gospel of salvation" without the atonement, as we hold it, for Christ died for the remission of sins. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." (Matthew 1: 21.) The whole gospel plan would have been inoperative had not Christ died for the remission of sins. We are in harmony with the declaration of our faith which says: "We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel."

In "Part Three," after talking about the necessity for revisions of sermons and the Hymnal, he gives us the benefit of his last statement about "the groove." Here it is: "You will feel better when you get out of the groove." Are you sure, Brother Frank? What if, after we have managed to get out of "the groove," we should fall into the ditch?

If we have failed to notice any material point or points in the brother's article, which are not covered in ours, it is for the only reason that we have no more space. As it is, we will, perhaps, have to shorten our article.

We close with one or two quotations from Albert L. Gridley's book, entitled, The First Chapter of Genesis as the Rock Foundation for Science and Religion.

The Greek word translated atonement, (Katallange) is from "Katalasso" "to exchange." The term means "substitution." The atonement of Christ is the substitution of his sufferings for the punishment of sinners. And yet in spite of the fact that the atonement is written in nature, on the soul of man, taught all through the Bible the most plainly of any Bible truth, in spite of the symbolism of the original Hebrew word and the meaning of the Greek original, there is no fact so persistently, so illogically, so inconsistently denied as the fact of the atonement in its proper meaning. The objections are illogical for they are answered by the logic of events; the fact is that Christ did die, that God gave him to die. Christ came into the world to die, and unless he accomplished something by his death, and an end to some degree commensurate with the sacrifice, his death would have been a mere empty show, a mere playing to the galleries, as futile as wicked.

It is sometimes said that this scriptural view of the atonement represents God as unmerciful. But so far as this view has any weight, it is an objection against the fact that Christ died at all. Whether merciful or unmerciful, Christ did die upon the cross. This is the admitted fact, and it surely would have been no more unmerciful for God to send him into the world to die for a great purpose than to die for nothing. The fact is Christ died. God "gave his only begotten Son," Christ gave himself. . . .

In general the answer to all objections is an appeal to facts. Is it urged that God is too good to allow the innocent to suffer for the guilty? The one fact most appallingly apparent everywhere and always is that the innocent do suffer for the guilty, much more than the guilty themselves, and often instead of the guilty. Is it urged in particular that God is too good to send his only begotten Son into the world to die for men? But he did die. The argument for such goodness is an argument against the one great central fact of the universe. Admitting this, would it have been more cruel for God to have suffered him to die to accomplish a great purpose than for a mere empty show? And unless he did accomplish something more than a show, the show itself, except as a monument of folly, was absolutely empty, meaningless.—Pages 116, 117, 118, commencing near the middle of the page.

We believe that God gave his Son for all that his priceless life and death would be worth to us. This view is the only one that will harmonize with the standard books of the church. Notice this connection: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3:14, 15.

These verses bring us to the statement that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—Verse 16. This unmistakably includes his death as a part of the gift.

THE ATONEMENT---PART 5

BY ELDER F. A. RUSSELL

REVIEW AND REJOINDER

After the publication of the first two installments of "Thoughts on the Atonement" the remainder of the article was submitted to me by the editors, together with the privilege of space in the HERALD for a brief review; and I understand that my article was submitted to Brother Lambert with the same privilege extended. Though possessing widely different views in certain directions, I have been deeply interested in the thoughts expressed by our brother. His many years of devotion to the work, his past and present responsibilities, all present him to the reader as a man of the strictest integrity. I do not hesitate to say that in the affairs of the church I have long considered him to be a wise counselor, and I question whether one might be found in the entire church any better fitted than he to present the doctrine of blood-atonement.

In the preparation of this review I shall assume that the present reader has carefully considered both his article and my own. There was not one single quotation from the books, cited by him, with which I was not perfectly familiar; and every argument advanced in my article was set forth with a full knowledge of their existence as well as the import of their meaning.

In the first part of my article I stated that I believed that in the church we have a mixture of theories as to the "blood-atonement" proposition; but I confess I did not expect to find quite so much of a mixture in one article. I may be able to turn on at least a flicker, if not a "full blaze of light" whereby we will be able to notice what seem to me to be inconsistencies.

In part one the author very clearly sets out the fact that the church has indorsed three books as containing evidence which should govern in all matters of dispute pertaining to the Christian religion. This is readily acknowledged; and in preaching that which is found in said books, Doctrine and Covenants 42:5 says, "These shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit." That such "direction" is highly necessary and important for the safety, as well as the moral and spiritual development of the body, collectively and individually," must be apparent to all those who have carefully read the recent articles on the atonement.

I am specially pleased to note the strong indorsement given the Inspired Version for the corrections therein very materially assist in our study of the things pertaining to God and his work.

ADAMIC SIN THEORY

In the first paragraph of part two the author assumes that there was a mysterious something, which he styles the "Adamic sin." And that this mysterious something was dispelled by a still greater mysterious something else, followed later by the assurance that "sinners will answer for their own individual sins and not for Adam's transgressions." He stands not alone in this assumption; but though multitudes should proclaim it they could not make it right if it is wrong. I believe it to be erroneous, and ask, Was not each and every sin of Adam just as much "Adamic sin" as any?

All the "Adamic sin" of which the books speak is his disobedience,—his failure to walk in harmony with the commands of God. It is illogical, unreasonable, and even unscriptural to assume that for this "Adamic sin" forgiveness could be secured in any other way than by repentance and obedience just the same as pardon may be obtained for any other sin.

In proof I cite Genesis 6: 53, Inspired Translation: "If thou wilt [if you are willing], turn unto me and hearken to my voice, and believe, and repent of all thy transgressions [then what would be left to style 'Adamic sin'?], and be baptized . . . and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost." Adam, in reply to his question as to the necessity of repentance and baptism was told what had been accomplished thereby, i. e., "I have forgiven thee thy transgressions in the Garden of Eden."

Thus, by angels, under the direction of God and Christ, there was given to Adam the gospel that he might repent and return unto God. Who will tell us of any transgressions of Adam, other than those in the Garden of Eden, for which repentance and baptism availeth unto the remission thereof? The atonement—the conditions of reconciliation—with results thereof, reached Adam just as the same reaches all others. Why assume, and then argue that the one great thing which gave to Adam the privilege of repentance was because Jesus should be born in the flesh about four thousand years later, and should be betrayed and crucified and his dead body mutilated so that the blood could leave his body? If you want to believe in blood atonement keep the X-Ray away from the "Adamic sin" theory.

Another erroneous assumption, as I believe, is found in part two, paragraph three, where it is intimated that some will not "receive according to their works." The books say: "We must all appear," etc. (Romans 2: 6; 2 Corinthians 5: 10.)

INTERPRETING THE SCRIPTURES

"As authorized ministers of the church it is our privilege and duty to teach and defend the doctrine taught in," etc. How true! But will not the reading of these articles emphasize the fact that men, equally anxious to know the truth, differ widely as to the doctrine taught in these books? Of course, so far as records are concerned, those books are our only standard of evidence. But I care not how many conferences or assemblies may "resolve" that this and that book is "standard," every new, (and some old) convert, sooner or later, is sure to require the personal testimony to which every child of God is entitled, and which is, after all, the final court of appeal to which every question of vital import is submitted. The appearance of these two articles on the atonement is possible because of a different understanding of that which has been written.

It can scarcely be argued successfully that all who have their writings included in the three books were plenary inspired. Assuredly, just as men write and speak to-day, i. e., according to their concept of the thing spoken of, so have men written and spoken in the past, enjoying a greater or less degree of inspiration of the Spirit. Without charging any with willful deception it is apparent that some statements scattered through the books are not in harmony with each other, and all the efforts of the preacher to fit them together fails. For instance, compare Isaiah 53: 10 with 1 Thessalonians 2: 15. If Isaiah is speaking of Jesus he says: "it pleased the Lord to bruise him"; while Paul, speaking of the killing of Jesus, says, "They pleased not God." My brother would interpret Paul's word by Isaiah's, which would in effect invalidate Paul's word, while I would do the reverse. I can not accept both. Therefore, to be true to myself, I approve that which harmonizes with my concept of God. Happily in this I am not against God, either.

Since my concept of God is based upon the revelation of divinity through Jesus Christ, I can not indorse a statement which makes God one who directs the slaughter of defenseless women and children. But I can understand how some may have supposed that he thus directed. The skeptic and agnostic have for a long time insisted that certain portions of the Bible disagreed with certain other portions, and men have tried in vain to reconcile such places. I have known of instances where men have labored hard to interpret certain passages so as to make harmony, not knowing that the Inspired Version corrected the thing in question and made all their effort useless. We do not lack book instruction as much as we do Spirit instruction.

Brother Lambert has presented an array of quotations from the books which he understands to support his position; but I believe the careful reader will at once discover that some of his references entirely support my view, as they read, while, with possible exceptions, all may be construed to teach that for which I have argued without making it "necessary to violate the rules which govern safe interpretation." I have previously set forth a large number of references from the books, also, and as you read them did they seem to support blood atonement? Further, can you make them do it by following the "rules of safe interpretation"? If so, please write me, giving your explanation.

PREDETERMINATION EXAMINED

On page six hundred and ninety-three, after quoting Acts 4: 27, 28, the brother says, "God . . . knew just what conditions would exist when his Son came to earth, predetermined that the best possible thing that could be done was to deliver up his anointed one to die on Calvary's cross." Thus you have before you the comments of each on Acts 4: 27, 28. Which conclusion is more godlike?

But while he urges that this "predetermination" was because of, or to meet conditions, yet in part three he tells us that the "primary and important purpose of Christ's death on the cross was not because of the wickedness of the people (to meet conditions) but, rather, that their sins might be removed and full salvation secured." But note, a little further along he says, "It did not behoove Christ to suffer and die as he did simply because it was written in the word of prophecy, but because God had ordained that thus it should be," etc. Still, he says, "He was not compelled to submit to the indignities that were heaped upon him nor to pass through the terrible ordeal." And back again in the first part of part three we find another ingredient for this "mixture," viz: "No man, without his consent, could take it (his life) from him." In order to represent this church am I expected to "defend" all that as the doctrine of the books? I confess incompetence and await the official visit of some good brother to help me to "see."

I'll set my little "candle" near this argument and see how it looks: God and Christ are declared to be responsible for submitting to the murderous demands . . . in accordance with a prearranged plan at the beginning. My comment is: If there was a prearrangement whereby Jesus was "ordained to die on the cross" then when the time came for these arrangements to be carried out, Jesus most assuredly did have to submit to these indignities and could not escape it.

In fact, a very common argument of blood-atonement advocates is that he could not escape. The very fact that God was willing to send twelve legions of angels to his assistance relieves the Father from the charge of having been a party to any such prearrangement. And the further fact that Jesus sought to escape the terrible agony clears him from the charge, as well. Who made that prearrangement, brother? I DO read about one arrangement that was made for Jesus to die on the cross, and that was made by those murderous Pharisees, inspired by Satan, NOT that sinners might be saved and given full salvation, but to rid their nation of one whom they considered to be an impostor.

"To meet the conditions existing on the earth Jesus was predetermined to die on the cross," we are told. This can mean nothing less than that the demands of wicked men must be satisfied, even to sending them one to slaughter. Then how can it be true that "the primary purpose for which Christ died on the cross was not because of the wickedness of the people, but, rather, that their sins might be removed and full salvation secured," since this can mean nothing else than that God, who holds the power of pardon and the way of salvation (he never gave to him and the Devil never stole that power!), would be satisfied and all hindrance to forgiveness and full salvation, so far as he was concerned, would be for ever removed when he should see the life-blood of his Son lying in a pool at the foot of the cross?

Strange, indeed, if the "rules of safe interpretation" will permit us to make (?) the books teach that the possibility of remission of sins, resurrection, and even the enjoyment of the glories of eternal life to be, in any sense, dependent upon an act of such terrible wickedness,—God being determined, else forced by murderers, to withhold forgiveness and salvation until he had turned over to them his Well Beloved.

I wonder, are any safe rules of interpretation violated? Any words of Jesus which you can think of invalidated? Verily, tradition lays some heavy burdens which neither we nor our fathers are able to bear. Prominent among those burdens is the task of trying to reconcile the blood-atonement theories with doctrine taught in the books, and with the testimony of the Spirit.

In part three we read: "Now, if we take the position that Christ's death on the cross was entirely unnecessary, so far as God and Christ and salvation are concerned, we thereby reflect seriously upon the character of God. It is tantamount to saying that the infinite God was either unwilling or unable to save his Son from the terrible ordeal." Cheerfully do I accept the challenge, for I certainly "take the position." I need but make use of the very quotation cited, Matthew 26: 51, 52, Inspired Translation, to show the fallacy of his statement.

If Matthew correctly reports the words of Jesus, God was willing to send twelve legions of angels to his assistance. I submit this question to every advocate of blood atonement: Was God willing to save the life of one of his children, even Jesus, when, according to the argument of our brother, such interference would have prevented any and all of his other children from obtaining forgiveness of sin, no matter what their pleadings, and send them to an everlasting doom? Was God willing to save this Son and by so doing be willing to damn all the others? And then we wonder why there are so many unbelievers!

But you may ask, Why, then, did not God save his Son if it was not necessary for him to die thus? I will not attempt a positive answer to that question; but I can not get away from the thought that the extent to which God can consistently interfere with men's agency must be taken into consideration in the effort to reach conclusion relative thereto. God was willing and able to save Stephen from his slayers, James from the sword of Herod, multitudes of martyrs for the cause of Christ in early centuries, innocent and defenseless children from acts of savage men, Joseph and Hyrum from the fury of the mob, martyred presidents from assassins' bullets.

But why enumerate further? Shall I say since he did not save from death such as I have mentioned that therefore it was necessary for them to die thus because "prearranged or ordained" by Him? Which theory does "reflect" upon the character of God.

Sometime ago a man, two women and three children lay peacefully sleeping in their homes here in Colorado Springs. A villain entered one home, and with an ax crushed the skulls of husband, wife and child; and going to the other home he repeated his inhuman deed upon a mother and her two children! Six lay dead! Do we reflect on the character of God because he did not paralyze the arm of that monster as he was about to strike the blow, or waken the victims to their own defense? I find it just as easy, and just as much in my heart to make God responsible for these, and all other cruel deaths, as for the death of his Son. In each instance, the crime committed was as far from God as lowest hell is from highest heaven. God could not place his approval upon either, much less prearrange or ordain by early decree.

CONCERNING CHRIST'S BLOOD

All the various passages referring to "atoning blood," "cleansed by his blood," etc., as quoted by our brother are figurative, and are based upon the fact that his blood was shed in his effort to bring the people to an at-one-ment with God, and so, metaphorically, is referred to as "atoning blood." Some, by the spirit of prophecy, had learned that his blood would be shed and that knowledge was woven into their sayings. And since they knew it would be shed, and that salvation would come only through him, they have said that salvation would come only through his "atoning blood." The trouble is not so much with their statements as with some interpretations. Whenever the reasons why he would be slain were set out the same may be generally, not always, summed up by saying that it was because the people rejected him. This thing I DO know: No rejection, no crucifixion!

In some instances the attempt of some writers to speak of the reasons for Christ's death has been so constructed as to make a pool of blood to be the key-stone which holds the plan of salvation together. But standing out clear and bold above all are the plain straightforward declarations that Jesus, the Christ, was murdered,—a martyr to the cause of truth unto which he was valiant as long as life was in his body, and that such treatment was the result of a repudiation of the message and claims of Jesus as the Redeemer,—possibly ONLY from the ranks of those who denied that he was the Christ and utterly refused to do what the Father had commanded them to do. A thing can not be in complete opposition to the command of God and at the same time be the thing which he has ordained for the saving of an entire world.

Over and over again had Jesus sought to find a place in the hearts of the people for his message. Brother reader, JESUS DID WANT THEM TO RECEIVE HIS MESSAGE, and from his precious lips there went out the wonderful words, which, as declared in 2 Nephi 6: 45, would "save all men IF they will hearken unto his voice." Get this fact fixed in your mind if it is not already there: THERE WAS NO BLOOD-STAINED CROSS IN THE OFFER OF SALVATION! since all might be saved IF they would hearken to his voice (and right there is God's OFFER of salvation!) and thus eliminate the possibility of "blood atonement"—for true disciples would not kill him.

I will ask: Would ANY be saved if ALL hearkened NOT to his voice? Only one answer possible there, and that for ever disposes of the blood-atonement theory. But you say, Some must hearken to his voice, and some must hearken not to him—oppose and murder him—else there would be no atoning blood. Read 2 Nephi 11: 97-105. In my judgment it would have pleased God much better could his Son have been permitted to return to him without those terrible wounds. Why quote various "blood" passages and leave the impression as some do that they really believe it was the literal blood itself that held the power of salvation?

THE CRUCIFIED CHRIST

Attention is directed to the character and authority of "our leading witnesses." Well said, for they are indeed "our" witnesses, and the reader is left to judge, through study and prayer, which, if either, has offered argument consistent with the accepted attributes and characteristics of God. It is true that the death of Jesus on the cross was in harmony with the Father's will only in the sense that the conduct of Jesus (not those wicked men), under that trying ordeal, was as God would have it.

"Our view is that he neither did anything himself, nor submitted to anything being done to him which was in opposition to the Father's will." To the first part of that "view" I have no particular objection, but I reject the latter part of the statement because I believe it to be not founded on fact. Matthew 26: 68, "They did spit in his face and buffet him," they stripped him and scourged him, they mocked him with the crown of thorns and again spit upon him! To the farthest spot of the universe let my protest be carried against any view which suggests that such actions were not in opposition to God's will! In the name of reason and candor I ask, Must blood-atonement advocates entertain such views in order to cast a heavenly halo about the cross? It seems so. Instead, I see the halo about the victim hanging upon the cross while the arch-enemy of the souls of men supports the cross! The judgment of God upon the murderers and their instrument of torture. Make your choice.

Again, Jesus submitted to the results of the treachery of Judas, which the book says was inspired of the Devil. My view is that such act (of Judas) was in opposition to the Father's will. What think you?

"Shall we preach Christ crucified, or leave the crucifixion out?" The former, though it brings feeling of most bitter sadness, which it would not do if the salvation of the world depended upon it, every time I mention it. But will you be startled if I tell you I think I can preach Christ, and speak of his crucifixion only as the distressing event which ended his earthly career? I love to think of and speak of HIS PART, his magnificent display of God-manliness under that ordeal, and I would not dishonor him by declaring that he really didn't suffer much on the cross, that God took all the suffering away. It is a "fact" that Jesus was crucified, though not a gospel fact.

Let me repeat that he was the Christ BEFORE his death, else he could not have been Christ crucified. Lincoln—president martyred, but president before and without martyrdom. Everything necessary to make him president had been attended to and the work undertaken else he could not have been a martyred president. So with Jesus. He was the Christ before his crucifixion.

Christ and the Devil are "preached," but we love the one and despise the other. It may seem almost sacrilegious to some, but if the Devil really helped me to obtain salvation why should I not love him at least a little? I do not believe that ANYTHING WHICH HE DID helped to bring about my redemption, but that I may receive forgiveness of sin and full enjoyment of life eternal in spite of anything he did! If that is heresy set it aside and give the Devil at least a decent, respectful recognition for doing you such a good turn. He and his yarn got into the case where he was neither wanted nor needed. He suggested the cross as his very worst form of torture, and so successfully hid himself in the shadow thereof that noble men and women, failing to observe that fiendish form supporting it, have actually asked us to take it in as a part of the "prearranged plan." Nice (?) Devil, to help us get remission of sin and full salvation! But he gets no thanks from this source, if you please.

"I voluntarily die for the salvation of my people." Jesus had been commanded by his persecutors to cease preaching his doctrine, but he continued to preach for the salvation of the people. Finally a mob of officers, et al, took and bound him, and their decree was, Death or denial! Then and there he volunteered to die rather than deny the truth which he had previously proclaimed. Thus I also accept the idea that he died "with a view to" the remission of sins of those who would hear him.

THE GREEK

On page 714 much stress is laid upon the translation of the Greek word eis. I have no objection to the definition offered, only that there is more to it, than "with a view to." For example: (King James Translation) Mark 13: 14: "Let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains." Acts 4: 3, "Put them in hold unto next day." John 4: 38, "Ye have entered into their labors." In these quotations eis is translated to, unto and into. Mark 1: 4, "For the remission of sins." The word eis is translated by various authors as for, into and unto. Reader, do you think "this well established fact alone establishes the correctness of our position"? The Greek text is differently translated by different scholars, and with the Inspired Translation as a standard of evidence it is a question as to our being altogether consistent in appealing to the Greek. But since this has been done we will follow the plan a bit.

"I lay down my life for the sheep." The Emphatic Diaglot, a Greek translation by Wilson, renders this passage thus: "I lay down my life in behalf of the sheep." 1 Corinthians 15: 3, "Christ died for our sins," is quoted. Concerning that I wish to say that the same word here translated for is the same Greek word translated for in 1 John 3: 16, "He laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Greek proves a little too much here, doesn't it?

We are asked to notice Romans 6:5-11. All right. "Christ died for the ungodly," "Christ died for us." Also Romans 3:25. Greek says he died "in behalf of." I am perfectly satisfied with such declaration. While laboring in their behalf they killed him, but NOT to make his words effective.

CHRIST SUFFERED AS OTHERS HAVE SUFFERED

Alma 14:115, after describing their terrible persecutions, says, "We have suffered all this that perhaps we might be the means of saving some soul." Abinadi was "obedient unto death," even by fire, rather than deny the commandments of God. Did God "ordain" such a death for him? Precisely as the parable of the vineyard. Mark 12,—the "servants" and the "heir" were treated in like manner.

Instead of not depending upon figurative expressions to support his theory, it seems to my mind that everyone offered as to "blood" and "atoning blood" and "taking upon him the sins of the world," etc., is certainly figurative and can not be otherwise. Neither will it do, from a Latter Day Saint viewpoint, to say that he took upon him the responsibility for my sins, for that would leave me entirely free, with no responsibility attaching.

We are told that the "manner of Christ's death had no immoral nor bad effect upon the people." Then there is no immoral nor bad effect following mob violence and murder! Did the Civil War bring any loss to the people of this Nation? Certainly. But our Nation exists to-day in spite of that loss, not because of it. Do you mean to infer that the condition of the Jews to-day is not overwhelming evidence of loss to them? And if to them, loss to all those they touched. Had that nation received Christ instead of demanding his crucifixion would it not have very likely meant to millions blessing, honor, and glory of life eternal, instead of suffering, dishonor, and woe to them, their children and to their children's children? Loss, indeed!

In the closing portion of part four we again encounter an argument to the effect that if Christ's death was not as God and Christ would have had it he would have been delivered. In addition to what I have already said I ask, Is God one who has a favorite son whom he is bound to defend and succor more than any other faithful and true child? Why should we say that God lacked either the ability or disposition to save his Son simply because he did not do it, any more than to say the same because he did not save or deliver John the Baptist, Stephen, Abinadi, and hosts of others?

"But the truth is, it was the will of the Father that Christ should die on the cross." Then follows the quotation, "For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will but the will of him who sent me." Who did the crucifying? If Jesus did, then this quotation applies; otherwise it does not.

IN CONCLUSION

Words utterly fail me as I attempt to formulate my solemn declaration against that popular calumny against the Almighty; and though it may beat against deaf ears to-day and to-morrow, yet when I am permitted to stand in his presence, I know I will find One who did hear and approve my feeble protest! I may not be able to close the "wounds" which have been made in the past, nor prevent many which will likely yet be made; but I can see to it that one person who professes to honor the Father and the Son shall not be guilty of laying upon him the responsibility for an act which has been so clearly described in these articles. There are those whose love for God and Christ will not permit them to believe that either or both "prearranged or ordained" the enactment of the tragedy which caused the crown of Calvary's hill to be stained with the innocent blood of Jesus. With such I am happy to be numbered to-day.

"Did God demand the crucifixion of Jesus or the shedding of his blood as a part of the atonement?" In my first article I answered, "NO." You have before you now some of my chief reasons for such answer. Have I appealed to the books? In any of my offered interpretations have I asked you to dethrone reason, defy judgment, or deny the message of Jesus, the Christ? Rather, have I not emphasized the importance of his message? Have you read from this pen anything asking you to repudiate the work of atonement? Is it not plain to your mind that I have sought to exalt Jesus, honor and praise him for the wonderful, aye, glorious example he came and set before us? for the manifestation of divinity in him while in deep humiliation of being spit upon, while bending to be scourged, while being stripped and mocked, and finally while crushed to earth, as bleeding and suffering he spake forth those words which have ever challenged the admiration of all, even his enemies, "Father, forgive them!"

These were not only void, empty, and meaningless, but misleading, hypocritical, and faith-destroying if those men for whom he prayed needed no forgiveness,—the Father having prearranged and ordained that thus he should die!

I might have gone to my grave without anyone knowing my belief on this important subject. But my admiration for the cause of truth has so greatly increased because of my present concept of things that I hastened to avail myself of the opportunity to "tell it to the church" when I received request for an article on the subject, signed by one of the editors of the HERALD.

I conclude this writing with naught but the very kindest feelings towards those who may at present oppose, feeling a great degree of confidence in the thought that as each will study and pray that truth will be made more and more manifest. May God grant that from these articles may result a clearer vision of things eternal. What is your verdict?

SEPTEMBER READING.—CONDITIONS THAT AFFECT BODILY GROWTH

A GOOD START ESSENTIAL

Hundreds of years ago Socrates wrote, "In every enterprise, the beginning is the main thing, especially in dealing with the young, tender nature, for at that time, it is most plastic and into it the stamp which it is desired to impress sinks deepest." His wisdom is confirmed by scientists of our time.

They bring us a message of hope concerning the effect of good influences brought to bear in this formative time, but they also give us warning of the serious consequences of wrong conditions in early life, whether physical or in regard to the building of character. And, indeed, they show us that conditions affecting physical development have much to do with the formation of character.

In The Training of the Human Plant, Luther Burbank writes: "All animal life is sensitive to environment, but of all living things the child is the most sensitive. . . . It is the most susceptible thing in the world to influence, and if that force be applied rightly and constantly when the child is in its most receptive condition, the effect will be pronounced, immediate and permanent."

Magazine says, "Practically all of a child's future health, happiness and usefulness as a citizen are determined during the first fifteen years of its life . . . and if the management during the period of growth is faulty, a deficient child is the result." As we have learned, these years cover the periods of most rapid growth.

An eminent scientist tells us that growth under unfavorable conditions results in a permanent lessening of the child's development; and "that nutrition has a noteworthy influence upon growth, and therefore upon the definite limits of stature is exhaustively proved by statistics."

NUTRITION

"To-day science has shed its light upon the true conception of nutrition and holds it to be the first necessity of life. . . . Material life consists in the exchange and renewal of matter. The living molecules are constantly breaking up, only to form again by means of new matter. This breaking up and renewal constitutes the material of life; the cessation of renewal of matter is death. . . . Living matter is directly related to the nutritive substances which renew the elements necessary for continual renovation.

"Every living being has need of sufficient nutrition. . . . Without this the stature will be undersized in a body defrauded of the degree of beauty it might have had, and the muscular forces, in common with those of the brain, will remain at a level of development below that which nature had intended. Consequently, to deprive children of their requisite nutriment is stealing from life. It is a crime against the race."—Pedagogical Anthropology, by Maria Montessori, M. D.

"There are more undernourished children in the United States as the result of ignorance than there are because of poverty. A great proportion of them, pale, poor-blooded, small, weak, soft-boned, can lay their misfortune to improper and careless feeding. . . . Underfeeding often happens just before, during and for some time following the period of weaning. The underfeeding is not so much a matter of the quantity of the food as it is of the quality. . . . Late weaning or the too prolonged use of milk as the exclusive food causes anæmia. Rickets (soft bones) usually develops between the first and second years, and also is largely due to this underfeeding."—Walter Peet, M. D.

See "Foods that do not feed children," in the Mother's Magazine for April.

Again we read: "The basic cause of most of the troubles we find among school children is malnutrition. This is not due to poverty. It is the fault of mothers, who are careless or ignorant of food values.

"It is easier to drop a piece of pie, a few doughnuts, and a chunk of meat into the lunch basket than to prepare properly cooked and assorted food, which will be easily digested. Therefore, children suffer physically and mentally. Schools are not doing the work which they could do with pupils properly fed. American school children are being cheated of their educational rights, and handicapped seriously in the race of life.

"Do you know that the most reliable estimates find that forty per cent of high school children suffer from flat-foot? Do you know that in the lower schools from twenty-five to forty per cent of the pupils are handicapped by malnutrition?"

"Do you realize what these figures mean to twenty millions of American children? Does your conscience not reproach you when you understand that flat-foot, curvature of the spine, defective sight, deafness, poor teeth, many diseases of throat, mouth and nose and other physical shortcomings are due to wrong diet of children, lack of hygiene in the home, failure to teach personal hygiene at an early age, ignorance of sex matters and wrong ideas and methods of living? . . .

"The effect of improper food, badly cooked food, hasty eating, lack of cleanliness and other drawbacks due to parental ignorance and indifference is disastrous. The injury worked to the child's future by these causes, and the necessity of giving it a right start in the home" are things that must be forced upon the public mind.

"What careless observers class as 'backwardness,' 'dislike for study,' 'disobedience,' 'willfulness,' etc., is, nine times out of ten, some physical drawback, which makes the child slow to perceive, unable to fix its attention, incapable of grasping the intention of a command, and helpless to distinguish right from wrong."—William Lee Howard, M. D., in April Mother's Magazine.

CHILD DEFORMITIES

Investigation shows that deformities of more or less serious nature are much more frequent than many of us have supposed; and we are told that many deformities result from preventable causes. We have here sufficient reason why mothers should seek understanding concerning them.

"Twenty-seven out of every one hundred school children suffer from spinal curvature." This statement stands at the head of an article in the June Mother's Magazine by Paul Clark, who writes of the causes, prevention and treatment of child deformities. From it we quote: "Those deformities which affect the spine, the bones of the shoulders and the bones which support the body at the hips are so frequently produced by a child's wrong posture of standing or sitting, that it is especially desirable to know how to prevent them. . . . The habit of standing on one foot throws the abdomen forward, rounds the shoulders and causes unnecessary fatigue. Sitting on one foot twists the spine out of shape. Both these habits, if persisted in, will cause permanent deformity. . . .

"Where the body is weak its own weight is likely to cause deformity. Round shoulders, flat feet and spinal curvature are largely due to weakness, aggravated by improper posture in sitting or standing, the necessities of special occupations, and failure to observe the laws of hygiene. . . .

"Some deformities are due to the position of a child in the mother's womb; some are caused by accident at time of birth; injuries from blows or from falling are responsible for many. When we come to disease as a cause of deformity, syphilis, inherited from tainted parentage, is exceedingly prolific. Tuberculosis claims many victims by eating away bone and tissue. Rickets leaves its marks upon a goodly number of children. Scurvy, inflammation of joints, gonorrhoeal affections of tendons and fibers, and nervous troubles, such as palsy, also produce many cripples. . . .

"Rickets is due to faulty feeding, too prolonged nursing, tea, coffee, alcohol, bad milk . . . or some other cause of nutritional disturbance. . . .

"Child tuberculosis is very frequently to be clearly traced to alcoholic parentage. . . .

"Every baby should be examined at birth. It should also be examined carefully at least once every year to determine whether it is still free from deformity or any of the affections that cause deformity. When a child has a habit of crying out at night, have it examined for signs of spinal or joint disease. Be alert to notice any disturbance of baby's form or functions, any unusual weakness, stiffness, spasm, wasting, swelling, tenderness, color, expression, posture or movement. . . .

"The spine of a newly born baby is almost a straight line. It does not assume curves until it begins to walk, and the curves do not become fixed until about the seventh year. . . . The bones and tissues of the growing boy and girl are softer than those of adults. In some cases, the burden of carrying the weight of the body causes the spine to become convex and we have what is commonly known as round shoulders." . . . Nourishing food, good light, fresh air night and day, and plenty of outdoor exercise are prescribed to prevent or to correct this condition.

"The effect of enforced, constant piano practice on young children is most depressing, while vocal training and breathing exercises are beneficial.

"Holding too long to a fixed posture is one of the fruitful causes of spinal curvature, because it fatigues and overstrains the child's muscles, and by continuously permitting contraction of ligaments finally fixes them in the contracted position.

"The muscular system of the spinal area is wonderful. It is so arranged that even a slight change of position shifts the strain from one set to another and permits rest. But you must not forget that the child, up to beginning school, has been constantly in motion, and without restraint of posture. In school it is kept sitting for anywhere from three to six hours, which is alone sufficient to fatigue the soft muscles. If to this unaccustomed strain is added improper position, or ill fitted desks or seats, deformity is almost certain. It is the duty of every mother to make sure her child is not thus tortured and deformed." This is of great importance "because spinal curvature reduces physical strength, lessens the power of the growing child to resist disease, and is a serious handicap in many ways."

The vertebral column presents two curvatures which together give it the form of an S. These curvatures are acquired along with the erect position, the spinal column of the newborn child being straight. In the course of growth a certain determined form of normal curve, and no other, ought to establish itself. But for the very reason that it is plastic and destined to assume a curve, the vertebral column may very easily be forced into exaggerating or departing from this normal curve.

"In the erect position the soft tissues that form part of the total stature are under constant pressure; but being elastic, they resume their previous proportions after prolonged rest in a horizontal position. Consequently at night . . . we are shorter than in the morning after a long sleep; the act of stretching the limbs in the morning completes the work of restoring the cartilages to their proper limits of elasticity.

"It is not only the erect position that tends to reduce the stature, but the sitting posture as well. . . . If, for example, children are obliged, during the period of growth, to remain long at a time in a sitting posture, the limbs may freely lengthen, while the bust is impeded in its free growth. . . . This is why children are more inclined than adults to throw themselves upon the ground, to lie down, to cut capers, in other words, to restore the elasticity of their joints and overcome the compression of bones and cartilages.

"But if special causes should recur so often as not to permit the cartilages to return completely to their original condition, in such a case permanent variations of stature might result. . . . For example, a porter who habitually carries heavy weights on his head may definitely lower his stature; and in the case of a young boy, the interference with the growth of the long bones through compression exerted from above downward, may produce an actual arrest of development of the limbs and spinal column, presenting all the symptoms of rickets. . . . As a general rule, all cramped positions that are a necessary condition of labor, if they surpass the limits of resistance and elasticity of the human frame, and especially if they operate during periods of life when the skeleton is in process of formation, result in deformities, and when the skeleton is deformed the internal organs, and hence the general functional powers of the whole organism, suffer even greater alteration. . . .

"The deformed vertebral column is the extreme sign of a great accumulation of evils; the internal organs are correspondingly affected with disorders fatal to the entire organism."

Some of the reasons for the great evils resulting from child labor are here made apparent as also the danger to children from confinement to certain positions in school, which, from a scientific standpoint, Doctor Montessori so strongly opposes.

Requests for Prayers

OLTON, TEXAS, July 27, 1914.

To The Prayer Union: I request the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my daughter Stella, fourteen years old. She has enlarged tonsils and adenoids. She is under the treatment of Brother Luff. With God's help I hope she may be relieved. A specialist has said she must be operated on, but I look for help from a higher source.

Toronto Reunion Great Success

The Toronto Saints held their annual reunion in their grove, which is greatly improved, at Lowbanks, on Lake Erie, July 4 to 20. The attendance was larger than last year. Perfect order prevailed. Bishop R. C. Evans presided and was assisted by six counselors, besides brethren and sisters who were in charge of different departments.

The camp was favored with a visit from our mission president, J. F. Curtis, of Independence, Missouri. He remained a week, preaching and assisting with services, and through his affability and wise counsel won the esteem and friendship of the Canadian Saints.

The speakers were R. C. Evans, J. A. Curtis, J. A. Wilson, J. T. Whitehead, E. Rowlett, F. Gray, D. Pycok, J. McKenzie and L. Pew.

At a Sunday afternoon meeting it was estimated that eight hundred were present, listening to Bishop Evans, among them being F. R. Talor, member for County Haldimand in House of Commons, the mayor and several prominent business men of Dunneville, also of Welland. The same Sunday over nine hundred meals were served in the dining hall. During the reunion several thousand sermons were distributed. Seventeen were baptized.

The following address was read to Bishop Evans, and a resolution prevailed that copies of it and the song be sent to church and local papers for publication.

LOWBANKS, July 10, 1914.

To Our Beloved Bishop and Reunion President, Greeting: We the campers of 1914 reunion, are taking this opportunity of reassuring you of our high esteem for you, and our great appreciation of all you have done for us, and for the work we all love so dearly, throughout our fair Dominion.

We realize that it has been largely through your unstinted and unceasing labors that the great latter-day work has been spread abroad in the land of the maple leaf, and has attained the heights of success all the world is recognizing to-day.

The majority of us here first heard the gospel message—given with no uncertain sound—in the golden tones of the church's orator, and since we have obeyed the gospel commands we have often been encouraged and strengthened through your counsel and sympathy. Se we desire while here at this reunion to show our loyalty to you and the church and Canada.

The poet has said, "To God, thy country and thy friend be true," and we have chosen these pennants to proclaim we are, and ever wish to be true to our church, our Canada, and our R. C. The letters "C. C. and R. C." stand for that, and the colors signify truth and purity.

We are proud to wave these pennants in your honor and to place them on our tents, and when we go home they will be to us souvenirs of most blessed and happy experiences of the reunion which you have labored and sacrificed for, to make it so enjoyable and beneficial to your children in the gospel, also such a great success and means of spreading the work in this part of our country.

Our bishop, our brother, and our friend, we trust that you will ever remember that the love and true friendship of the campers have called forth this expression of appreciation, and that you will kindly look upon the manner in which it has been given, for words are feeble things to convey the heart throbbings and highest and purest thoughts which are entertained by all for you.

May the giver of all good prolong your life until you have accomplished all that he has so efficiently fitted and qualified you for, and leave you with the true Canadians who love and take great pride in you.

Signed on behalf of the campers,

FLORALICE MILLER.

C. H. DUDLEY.

While Mrs. Miller read the address several of the campers held up the blue and white pennants, then Mrs. W. S. Faulds sang the verses composed by Mrs. Washington for the occasion, to the tune of "The Maple Leaf For Ever." The bishop said he was completely surprised and was deeply touched by the expression of love and appreciation, and said in part, "First of all, my allegiance is to the church, next to Canada, for I am a Latter Day Saint, a Canadian, and I will ever be your R. C."

A TRIBUTE TO BISHOP R. C. EVANS

(Tune: The Maple Leaf For Ever)

The gospel message is restored unto us in latter days,
We hail its glory and rejoice and sing aloud its praise,
Through storm and shine the chosen few
Have braved the world's displeasure;
We'll rally round our standard true,
God's chosen Saints for ever.

CHORUS:

The church restored in latter days
Our country's fame increasing;
Our bishop dear, beloved by all
God's chosen Saints for ever.

The gospel message has been spread over our Canadian home;
We love our country's fame and strength and glory in its name.

Our fair Dominion God will shield,
His angels guard his mission;
We'll rally round our standard true.
God's chosen Saints for ever.

A true Canadian, God has called
 To proclaim his gospel here,
 His fame has spread throughout the world,
 His name has comfort given;
 His cheer and counsel and advice
 Has raised the weak and fallen;
 We'll rally round our leader brave,
 God's chosen son for ever.

FLORALICE MILLER.

Northeastern Nebraska

When one is filled with enthusiasm because of some great blessing he may have received, or some glowing success he may have met with in his work, it is not a hard matter to find plenty to write about; but when neither are experienced, to any great degree, it is not so easy an undertaking.

So while we are not able to give any glowing account of the work being done in this part of the Lord's vineyard, we do feel that the work is on the uplift throughout the district; and that some little good is being accomplished. We are not discouraged with trying, but hope to press on in doing what we can to forward the great work of the Master wherever and whenever the opportunity presents itself.

The writer, in connection with Elder Paul N. Craig, the city missionary, and with the help of others of the missionary and local force, have been trying to conduct tent services here in the city for some time past. As a result of our trying, we were successful in getting a fine location in a small, well shaded park in Florence, (a town of which Omaha is a suburb, Florence being the older) known to the "Mormons" in the late forties and early fifties as Winter Quarters.

We were located in the shade of a gigantic cottonwood tree that the people of Florence call "Brigham Young tree," claiming that it was planted by Brigham Young; that it was a small post driven into the ground by him, to which he used to tie his horses; that the post grew and now stands a mighty cottonwood tree admired by all who see it. It is visited every year by many of the "Mormon" people, and they have their worship under it. It was visited a short time ago by about thirty of their missionaries going en route to their fields on the Eastern Continent. The tree stands directly in front of an old-fashioned brick house, which, it is also said, was Brigham Young's old home at Winter Quarters.

Inspiration, was it, to be located on such "holy" and "sacred" ground, made so by the footprints of this "Mighty Man of God"? Well, whatever the "inspiration," we were unable to get the people to catch it, for after trying for two weeks we concluded to pitch our fortunes in another locality.

We had a fair attendance the first week, but at the end of the second week, we found ourselves within about thirty feet of a big dance platform, being put there for the benefit of those who are "lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God." We did not find the people there as prejudiced against the work as we find in some other places, but apparently satisfied with that which they enjoyed; and so we feel that they shall receive as a reward, "that which they are willing to enjoy, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received."

We were assisted in the preaching by Brethren O. R. Miller, E. F. Robertson and Richard Bullard of the missionary force, and some of the local brethren of the city.

We hear of activities from other parts of the district which causes us to feel glad in our hearts, the Spirit bearing witness that some are to be called into active service in the Lord's vineyard, and also a call, coming as a result of labor done in the vicinity of Decatur last winter, for some of our people to come and preach there every Sunday, and also some more meetings later on.

We can not speak of many additions to the church in this part of the field, but are glad to say that we believe the prospect is good for some, if the Saints would but prepare themselves to receive them, and care for them as they should be cared for.

Brother Alvin Knisley is in the upper part of the district somewhere, I do not know where, at present. We hear good reports coming from that direction, and hope he is having good success.

Our heart's desire is that this great work shall go on and on, until it has accomplished all that God has said it shall accomplish, and that the beauty of godliness may be plainly seen in the lives of all of God's children. When we behold the great indifference people have to-day for that which we call religion, our longing desire is to show to the world that there is something in that which we have. Saints, it is within our reach to do this, for the Master has said "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, that ye love one another." Are we doing this? Are we willing to sacrifice for the work as God has asked us to do? Is the Lord's work the uppermost thought in our minds? Do we find ourselves asking ourselves the question before entering in upon something that we think we would like to do, or trying to obtain something that we think we would like to have, "Will it be to the best interest of the Lord's work? Or, in other words, are we seeking first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness? If we are, the promise is that all these things shall be added unto us. What more could we ask? And how far-reaching the results?"

If there are those in this district who would like to have some preaching done in their locality, we are willing to help the work along by cooperating with the missionaries of the district, we would be very glad to hear from you at any time and will try to make it a point to supply the demand. If you love the work as you should, you should be trying to help others to where they can have the same enjoyment. We say we have faith, so let us show our faith by our works, and we will see this great work moving on at such rapid strides that it will surprise us all.

May the Lord's blessings be and abide with all of his children is my earnest prayer.

For the success of the work,

W. E. SHAKESPEARE.

Rocky Mountain Mission

A few lines from me might not be amiss nor void of interest to some of your readers. I reached my field as soon after the work of the Conference as home conditions would allow. My first stop was Denver, but I could only stay long enough to meet with the Saints in their morning services on Sunday, June 14. The Idaho reunion was then in progress, and I had to hasten on in order to fulfill my promise to attend. I reached Hagerman on the following Tuesday, in company with Brother Layland. Brethren G. W. Winegar and J. T. Davis were there and had been in attendance from the start.

The reunion was good, and the attendance large for that place. Several were baptized, and the prospects were so promising that Brethren Davis and Winegar concluded to continue the services over another week, which efforts most likely will result in more additions to the church in due time.

The social services were quite spiritual, uplifting and encouraging to all the Saints. The Saints resolved to hold another reunion there next year, which, I think was a wise move, and I would like to suggest to the Saints of the Idaho District to begin now to make preparations for next year's gathering. A ten days' association with Saints in good, spiritual devotion, enjoying their fellowship and listening to soul-inspiring sermons of devoted ministers of the gospel will amply repay you for the sacrifice of what little time and means are required in order that you may attend, and through you will give new impetus to the work in your respective localities.

On Monday, the 22d, I went to Weiser and met with the Saints of that place the following evening. On the 25th I reached Spokane. This was my first trip to the State of Washington. The conference of the Spokane District was held the 27th and 28th. There was not a very large representation from the other parts of the district, but the city has quite a number of Saints, and they made a good showing in all their services, Religio, Sunday school and branch. The conference was good. The social meeting on Sunday afternoon was certainly a time long to be remembered. The ministers to this field in the past are held in high esteem by the Saints, a fact that gives me much pleasure. Brethren Bronson and Grey had just reached the field and are as pleased with their new field as the Saints are with them, and there is no lack of opportunities for doing good.

July 2 to 6 I spent in the Nez Perce country, Idaho, near Lenore, where I spoke for the people a few times and organized a branch, to be known as the Gifford Branch. Brother C. E. Aldrich was elected president, and Sister Sophronia Fels, Culdesac, Idaho, clerk.

July 9 to 13 was spent with Saints in the Columbia River country. We had a few meetings and organized, or rather reorganized the Columbia River Branch, under the name of Leahy, their nearest post office, Brother Townsend being elected president, and Sister J. M. Puckett, Leahy, clerk. There are only a few Saints left in this part of the country, but they seem earnest and determined to press onward in the work.

After my return, I again spent a few days with the Spokane Saints, making my home most of the time with Brother and Sister M. Fordham. I then went to Sagle, Idaho, where the Saints have erected a new church, which was now ready for dedication. I spoke for them on Saturday evening, the 18th, and three times the following day. The dedicatory sermon and prayer were in the afternoon. There was a fairly good attendance at all the services. The new church is certainly a credit to the few Saints who live here, and a substantial evidence of their devotion to the cause. Brother F. D. Omans is the worthy and much appreciated president of the Sagle Branch.

Here also lives Brother George Clark and family, with whom I made my home while in Sagle. Brother Clark is a son of Brother and Sister Joseph Clark, whom I first met in Salt Lake City nearly thirty years ago. He and his family seem to have inherited their desire to make the elders welcome and feel at home. Brother T. C. Kelley and others of the ministry are kindly remembered by the Sagle Saints for their good work here in the past.

Leaving Sagle, I started for Culbertson, Montana, to hold a conference with the Saints and organize the Eastern Montana District. I reached Culbertson the 22d, and the next day Brother and Sister S. M. Andes came to town and brought me out to their place, a distance of about twenty miles. The conference met with the Culbertson Branch on the 25th. Considering the scattered condition of the people, we would naturally expect that the invitation to a 9 a. m.

prayer meeting would find but few respondents; not so in this case, however, for a goodly number came, even from the Fairview Branch, twenty-five miles away. The hour was well occupied with fervent prayers for the guidance of the Lord in our conference, and with spirited testimonies. After the prayer service we had a round table which was very enjoyable and instructive to all. The afternoon was occupied in business.

Besides organizing the district we also organized district associations of the Religio and Sunday school. The district comprises seven counties, viz, Sheridan, Valley, Richland, Dawson (a late division of Dawson County), Fallon, Custer and Rosebud. Scattered Saints in these counties please take notice. For the benefit of these and others who may be specially interested I will give the addresses of some of the officers chosen. President of district, W. R. Hillman, route 1, Fairview; secretary of district, Chester Constance, Vida; superintendent of Sunday school association, Eli Bronson, Andes (Andes is a new post office, named after Brother Andes, who is the post master); secretary, Mark Hutchinson, Andes; home department superintendent, Cora Bronson, Andes; Religio president, Lester Bronson; secretary, Chester Constance, Vida; home department superintendent, Sister S. M. Andes, Andes; superintendent good literature bureau, Carl Freeman, Andes. B. D. Stratton, Route 1, Fairview, was the choice of the conference for Bishop's agent, and was recommended to the bishop for appointment. The general missionaries to the district are Robert Newby and A. R. Ritter, both of Fairview, Route 1.

The sacrament and social service on Sunday afternoon was excellent, one of those spiritual feasts that make the Saints realize that this is indeed the work of God, and fill us with a desire and determination to press onward to the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus. During this service Brother Carl Freeman was ordained an elder, and a vote was had to ordain Brother Chester Constance to the same office upon approval of his home branch. The spirit of prophecy pointed out others to be ordained in due time if faithful. Taken altogether, this was one of the most pleasing, interesting and profitable conferences the writer has ever attended. If we but remember to keep humble and faithful, the prospects for the future growth and development of the new district are certainly promising and bright. Most likely a few more branches will be organized soon. A number of Saints are scattered over the district, and calls for preaching are many.

As a consequence the district offers a fine field for the home class work of the auxiliaries, a work that should not be neglected. Will those interested please take notice and correspond with the officers of this department. What I have said of the Eastern Montana District in this regard is true also of the Spokane District. I can not give the names of those in charge of that work there, but I venture to say that the district superintendent, Sister Margaret Fordham, 236 South Fiske Street, Spokane, will supply needed information.

I will remain with this branch over Sunday, then go on to Billings and other points. If agreeable to the Saints of the Mesa Branch, Western Colorado, will meet with them the last Saturday and Sunday in August to organize that district. But due notice will be given in the church papers.

I am glad to say that I am improved in health since my return to the Rocky Mountain field. Altogether my labors and experiences so far this conference year have been very pleasant and profitable to me, and I hope to all with whom I have been associated.

In bonds,

PETER ANDERSON.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA, July 29, 1914.

Arkansas

When I last wrote to the HERALD I was at Winthrop. From thence I went to Grannis, where I met Brother J. W. Duboise. We went out six miles from said place where Brother Ed Clinton has a sawmill. We preached four days and baptized two ladies, then came back to Grannis, where after having fought mosquitoes and flies four days, we found rest at the beautiful home of Brother Ed. Clinton.

We held a two-day meeting at Grannis. On Sunday evening we went to a little mountain stream and Brother Duboise baptized six men and women. The Saints at Grannis prepared dinner on the grounds. In the evening we enjoyed a spiritual feast in a prayer meeting.

From Grannis we went to Mena, where we preached a week in the courthouse to a small but interested crowd. From thence we went to Bigfork, where we met with Brother J. M. Taylor and wife in their good home. They are faithful Saints, doing all they can to get the gospel before their neighbors. We held a two weeks' meeting at this place; had good crowd and fine interest.

From here we went to that wonderful place called Hot Springs, where people come from all over the United States to bathe in the hot water that comes out of the earth, trying to get back their youth and health again. For eight days we taught them the beautiful gospel, and told them they would get back their youth in the first resurrection. We baptized one lady. We met Brother Amerson and wife, who royally cared for us at their nice home, while we were in the city. We also met Brother Grubbs and wife and Sister Chatburn. They are trying to live the gospel.

From this place we went out on the Washatan River, where Brother Sander's boys had prepared a fine arbor. We preached two weeks to a fine crowd and had good interest. Several preachers attended our meetings. Some of them set up a howl and said Old Joe Smith and Sidney Rigdon stole the manuscript from which the Book of Mormon was written. I told them that bait was so old and stale that minnows would not bite at it.

Grandfather Sanderson and wife live at this place. They are indeed fine people. All their children belong to the church. They are doing all they can to build up the gospel in their vicinity. If this place is looked after I think some time in the near future a branch may be organized. Brother and Sister Sanders did all they could to make us comfortable.

Brother Duboise and I separated here, he going north and I west. I came here to Bigfork, preached four sermons and baptized a fine lady, and leave several others near the kingdom. I am off to other points.

We have met some fine people since we came to this State. Our prayers are that many of them will accept the gospel and be gathered to Zion to meet the Lord when he comes to reign a thousand bright years with his Saints. May the Lord help us to build up Zion so we may soon be ready for the Master to come and reign with us. I am in the gospel work until the Master says enough. E. A. ERWIN.

Southern Missouri

After an absence of seven years in other fields, I am returned to this my old field. And I assure you I feel at home again among a poor though as hospitable a people as ever breathed the pure air of this or any other country.

It certainly is a pleasure to get away from the large, congested cities and the more populated districts, where show and sham largely take the place of the real things both in social and religious societies, where fine clothes, pretty hats, painted cheeks, and blackened eyebrows are the standard of true womanhood, and pressed clothes and toothpick shoes and a nice appearance alone constitute a gentleman; and where poverty is looked upon as a crime, and the poor are often neglected and slighted, and where real religion is at a discount.

Those of you who wish to go where religion is more genuine, and the air is more pure, and the thousands of springs send forth clear, cold, water; where honesty and real goodness is the standard and not the outward appearance alone; where the people are more on an equality; where the climate is the best; where cattle, sheep and hogs run on the range and get fat; where it is not necessary to follow the latest styles in dress and headgear; where it is not considered a disgrace to go to church in a farm wagon; where you will find more people attending church and walking more miles than some of our city Saints will walk blocks, and who attend more often; where the elder and wife are ever welcome; where the Saints never complain except when you don't stay long enough; where the kind-hearted Latter Day Saints will give up their beds and sleep on pallets, as many Saints did on my recent trip down in and around Ava, where we have a noble band of Saints as also at Tigris, where the district conference was held. Come to the Ozarks.

The Saints at Tigris did finely in caring for the large crowd, and their only regret was that we could not stay longer.

There has been quite a difference in the progress of this country in twenty-five years. Many of our Saints are doing well; some coming here have paid too much for the land, and some have bought too much land, thereby going in debt; the last three years there has been drought so they become discouraged. I have always warned the Saints about two things: first, do not buy unless you see the land; second, do not buy more land than you need, going in debt. Better buy a small place and invest the balance of cash in sheep, hogs, and milch cows.

This is fast becoming a dairy country; butter fat has a ready market, delivered once a week. The outside range in most places is real good. I do not see why Saints with families living on monthly wages in many of our crowded cities could not get homes, live more happily and healthily and do more good for God and humanity than where they are—where their talents though small might be increased. This is a fine place for a young elder or priest who wants to go to work in the vineyard.

On this trip I had the pleasure of meeting and staying at the home of many I baptized years ago, and I hope to visit all as soon as I can. The reason I have not been out more, the Saints here bought a new tent and chairs and are anxious to get the good of it while tent season lasts. After that I shall be only too glad to hear from any who want meetings. Write me, Springfield, Missouri, Route 10.

July 29, 1914.

Kentucky and Tennessee

Our reunion is over, and adds another page to the history of the Kentucky and Tennessee District. Farewells were said and handclasps were the order in departing, as expressions were made indicating that many were loath to leave the place we had enjoyed as a family for ten days. Certainly the association of the Saints of God is pleasant to behold.

Word was passed along that we had one of the grandest reunions ever held in this district, notwithstanding the drought which caused unfavorable conditions throughout the district. More were in attendance than anticipated, and all departed saying they were glad to have been together, and trusting providence to order their course so as to bring them back to the next reunion, at the same place.

Foundry Hill is a majestic location for this occasion. There is an abundance of pure water, adequate room for stock, and a beautiful grove which affords ample shade under the foliage of forest's monarchs. About the only disagreeableness we encountered was the dust, which caused us some unpleasantness at the last.

Many were not able to attend on account of the drought where there was a lack of water for stock, and where they had to draw water or drive stock to the streams. Again, some were forced to come and go in order to care for stock, which prevented them from enjoying the reunion as they might have done under better conditions. However, we feel we have been amply repaid for the efforts we have made to make this reunion a success. We feel to rejoice and not murmur, trusting all things are for our good.

Brother J. R. McClain was selected to preside over the reunion, and we feel that wisdom was granted unto us in the choice. Brother J. A. Roberts has been overtaken with afflictions which necessitated his retiring to his home at Independence. We regretted that he was not able to be with us, as he was so much needed. He took his departure on Tuesday after he arrived on Sunday, the 19th.

Peace and tranquility prevailed throughout the reunion, and good order was noted. Many not of our faith were present who had not hitherto attended and were heard to say, Certainly, these are the children of God.

Brother J. R. McClain goes to Fulton, Kentucky. The writer is at present at Bethel Chapel, near Cottage Grove. On Sunday, the 26th, invitations were extended those who wished to embrace the angel's message and be numbered with the fold. Two presented themselves as candidates, after which we wended our way to the creek where we walked by the side of still waters. Brother William McClain was called on to officiate. Others are near the kingdom, and we hope they will soon fall in line.

God be with us till we meet again.

Los Angeles, California

The Santa Ana Saints have had just cause for pride in their new church which nears completion, located in a desirable portion of the city, convenient to the main electric line, adjacent to the populous and business center, and centrally located for the members as well. It is a beautiful building of modern architecture and pleasing design, giving one a spontaneous desire to enter. We have not heard for sure, but believe the opening services is to be right after reunion, probably August 16.

Tent meetings at Pomona closed about two weeks ago. Similar services have since been held at Cucamonga.

The meeting of the elders' quorum was held at San Bernardino, Sunday, July 12, and a good time was enjoyed by those present, the only regret being that more were not in attendance. Incidentally, while there, Brethren Cooper and Adam rendered three musical numbers at the morning service of the First Methodist Church, through the invitation of the organist, Miss Phillips, who is a personal friend of our Bessie Bemis. We hope to have the pleasure of reciprocity by the presence of Miss Phillips and her mother at our reunion. Such relations with our church neighbors are certainly desirable and to be cultivated, and tend towards a better understanding of church fellowship. The brethren speak very highly of their reception by the pastor, Reverend Scott, and the choir directress, Mrs. Mable Jerome. In the absence of our stand-bys, Nettie Paulson, now at Graceland, Olive Lytle, who has gone East, Miss Phillips will be a great addition to our musical forces at reunion.

The Los Angeles Parliamentary Club were the guests of the Garden Grove Branch last Monday evening. A goodly number were present and the time was well occupied till after half past nine. There are several promising parliamentarians there, whom we hope will keep up their study and become full-fledged, able to hold up the standard in the district. Those attending from Los Angeles were Sister Ethel Pierce, Brethren V. M. Goodrich, William Schade and R. T. Cooper.

Brother McDowell has returned from a tour through San Bernardino, Pomona and Cucamonga. R. T. COOPER.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Spokane District, Greeting: We are in need of money to supply the elders' families. The burden of the missionaries is sufficient without having to worry about family support. We ask you to send in the Lord's portion so the needy can be supplied.

This is a day of sacrifice, and our covenant is not complete without it. Never mind the hard times, the Lord can multiply and turn many things to our good, even according to our faith and works. Let us remember, the tenth is the Lord's; and he has waited a long time on some of us for a more convenient season. Begin now while we need your best efforts to tide over until fall.

The Lord has recently said the time will come when his servants of the bishopric, local and general, will not need to beg the members to fulfill their duty, but that they will be busy caring for that which shall be willingly and readily brought into the treasury of his house. Saints, let us hasten this time by doing our part before it is too late to get our reward.

Independence Reunion Postponed

To the Saints and Friends of the Independence Stake: The committee appointed to provide for holding of a reunion which already was advertised to convene at Pertle Springs, Missouri, August 13 to 23, met again August 5 and after due and serious consideration decided that in view of several serious matters it was our wisest course to cancel those arrangements and declare the reunion postponed for this year at least.

The reasons for this action may be briefly stated as follows:

Very few, comparatively, had expressed any intention of attending, too few by many to warrant the assumption of a heavy expense.

At the present time there is a general stringency financially, which our church is feeling acutely, in common with the community at large, and to run the risk of increasing church debts even locally is not desirable.

Again, the recent developments in Europe in which all the large powers with a tragic suddenness have become involved in war make it imperative that every unnecessary expense be eliminated and the strictest economy and prudence be exercised by all.

While we are deeply sorry that this course had to be taken, we feel sure that all concerned will approve our action as the only safe course to adopt.

JOHN W. RUSHTON, For the Committee.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 6, 1914.

Wipper, Sandwich, Illinois.

Died

SALISBURY.—Sister Mary Josephine Salisbury, whose maiden name was Brewer, was born at Webster, Hancock County, Illinois, January 13, 1856. She was married to Brother Frederick Salisbury by John H. Lake, December 24, 1874. To them were born 8 children; 1 son and 1 daughter died in infancy, and were waiting to meet their mother in paradise. Flora Ellen is married to Brother Bert Vandine, and resides at Burnside, Illinois; Julia Edith yet resides at the home; Merrill Mack and John Frederick live at McCall, Illinois; Amon Carlos is at present traveling; Alfred Hale resides at the family home near Fountain Green, Illinois. Sister Salisbury accepted the gospel and was baptized July 10, 1875, by Solomon J. Salisbury, and was confirmed by him same date near Fountain Green, Illinois, and became a member of the Pilot Grove Branch. Her life was one of faith and devotion to him whose cause she espoused. Her last affliction began about four years ago, with a paralytic stroke and increased in severity until death ensued, July 29, 1914. Funeral services were held in the Methodist Episcopal church at Fountain Green, Illinois, at 11 a. m. August 1, James McKiernan in charge, assisted by S. J. Salisbury. The interment was in the cemetery at Webster, Illinois.

SIMMONS.—Leon Mayhew Simmons, son of Brother S. H. and Sister Ruby M. Simmons, of near old Far West, Missouri, was born May 17, 1913, died July 31, 1914, after an illness of six days. He received the best care possible; a competent physician was in charge of the case and the elders were called many times, but the Lord saw fit to call him home. Funeral from the home August 2, prayer by N. V. Sheldon, sermon by J. T. Ford. Interment at family cemetery, west of Cameron, Missouri.

THE PEBBLE THAT DROPPED IN THE WATER

Scripture reading: Luke 21: 7-38; 1 Thessalonians 5: 1-8.

The subject that I have selected for the morning's discourse is, "The pebble that was dropped in the water." I might use as a text a verse from an old familiar hymn that we have been singing in the church for forty years or more, one that is sung by us, perhaps as often as any hymn.

For the pebble has dropped in the water,
And the waves circle round with the shock—
Shall we anchor our barks in the center,
Or drift out and be wrecked on the rock?

This song, like all poems, is figurative. The verse that I have just quoted contains two figures. The first of these is that of the pebble that was dropped in the water. Referring, of course, we understand, to the beginning of that which we term the "great latter-day work," when God began to move to bring about the work of these last days.

That work, we understand, included the restoration of the ancient gospel with all its doctrines; the restoration of the ancient gifts, the blessings, the miracles, the prophecies, the tongues,—all that they had in the old Jerusalem church. It included the restoration of the church with apostles and prophets, with evangelists and pastors and teachers, sevens and bishops,—all of the officers they had in the old Jerusalem church that later were lost in the dark ages of apostasy. I say that it included all of these, but I believe that it included a great deal more that is not always seen on the surface.

This work began without any great outward demonstration. The world did not notice especially when God first revealed himself in the beginning of the century that closed just a few years ago. And so the poet has used the simile, the figure of speech, "For the pebble has dropped in the water."

BEHOLD THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN IS LIKE A PEBBLE DROPPED IN THE WATER

When a pebble is dropped in the water it does not attract any particular attention. And so Jesus himself said concerning the kingdom of heaven that it comes not with observation (or, as the marginal rendering has it, that the kingdom of heaven comes not with outward demonstration or show). And he expands this thought when he says the kingdom of heaven is "like to a grain of mustard seed," one of the least of the seeds, not considered of any great significance, but one that will grow and become as a great tree. And again he says the kingdom of heaven is like the leaven that a woman hid in three measures of meal. Nobody gives any attention to the leaven; it is hidden; but it will work and leaven the entire lump. And again he said the kingdom of heaven is like corn that is planted in the ground, and grows, and men know not how; they do not pay any attention to it. But by and by we see the full corn in the ear, and then comes the harvest.

And so the modern parable along the same line is, The kingdom of heaven is like unto a pebble that is dropped in the water. No one notices it, but by and by the waves circle out with a shock far and wide.

And so when this latter-day work, as we term it, began with the revelation that God gave in the spring of 1820 to the Seer of Palmyra, it attracted very little attention; but the waves have been widening, they have been circling out ever since, and you and I, so far distant from the scene of that restoration, and nearly a hundred years down the stream of time, feel the effects of its waves. Your lives and mine are profoundly affected by the waves that circled out with the shock. It is possible that there is not a single individual here to-day—very few at least—who have not been affected in some way by the waves that have come down from that pebble that was dropped in the water. We do not know where we would be, we do not know what we would be if it were not for this great latter-day work.

Perhaps as an individual I realize that more keenly than some others do. Two years ago at the General Conference, when we were singing the opening hymn, and I stood on the rostrum and looked out over that assembly of the ministry and the delegates from all over the world, I turned to my associate, Brother Frederick M. Smith, and said, What a singular fate it is that from among all the millions of earth's creatures has selected us and ordained that we should stand here at the head of this strange and peculiar people. As I look back over their remarkable history I am still further filled with astonishment when I remember the strange advent of this work; how in the midst of a generation that said there should be no more prophets, and that God would never speak again, there came the voice from on high and prophets again were sent forth to head another great dispensation.

And when I reflect on the history of the church in New York, in Ohio, in Missouri, in Illinois, persecuted and driven, slaughtered and murdered, and think of the great apostasy that developed in Utah, and the work of the Reorganization, I am filled with astonishment at this marvelous work and a wonder. Among all religious movements from the dawn of time it stands forth singular, unique, unlike anything else the world has ever dreamed of, excepting the work begun by Jesus Christ, of which it is a continuation.

And so this morning I conclude that the waves have circled out from the shock of this pebble that was dropped in the water have influenced: First, the lives of individuals; second, the great religious world; and third, the political world, the nations of the earth far and wide.

When I say that this latter-day work has caused many great changes I do not wish to be understood to mean that all that is involved in this latter-day work is the organized body known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Although our missionaries have traveled far and wide, I do not wish to indicate that they are responsible for all these changes. The outward organization of the church is in one sense a surface indication, but simultaneously with its inception God set in motion other forces that work under the surface; they are the waves under the surface that we do not see. We are told that the Spirit of God is working everywhere; that Jesus is the light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world.

At the same time there were set in motion the forces of evil to combat the great latter-day work. And they are working too. While God is bringing about events that shall transpire in the closing scenes of the age, the forces of evil are arrayed against him and they are responsible for some of the things that we see. We see this typified in the first vision that was given to Joseph Smith. He went out to pray, and immediately he was seized by the power of darkness, but soon the powers of God intervened and overcame the powers of darkness. That is typical of all the work that has followed and that will continue until Christ himself shall come: The powers of darkness arrayed against the powers of light; the final triumph being with the powers of light.

CHANGES IN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT

We will now take up briefly for consideration the changes that have been wrought in the religious world. I will run over some of the great changes that have transpired in religious thought and belief since the year 1820, when God first spoke to his people in these last days.

Not long ago a representative of one of the leading churches wrote to me this challenge. [You will remember that God told Joseph Smith in 1820 that the creeds of the day were wrong and we have noted that many have been changed.] And this preacher who wrote to me said: "I challenge you to point out a single fundamental change that has been made in the creed of a single great church since 1820."

And I selected his own church for the experiment. From a leading theological school of his church I obtained a representative book, and, turning to the creed that was in force in that church in 1820, I found the doctrine of predestination. It was said that certain men and angels were foreordained from before the foundation of the earth to everlasting damnation, and other men and angels were foreordained to everlasting bliss. And not because God knew that some would be good and some bad, but simply for his glory and eternal satisfaction. Then turning the pages on down through their book I came to the creeds adopted forty or fifty years later, and I found they had dropped that doctrine; they had absolutely abandoned it.

I wrote to their leading men, including the secretary of their church, the editor of their leading paper, their greatest pastor, and these men all wrote to me saying, "Our people to-day do not believe those doctrines." So I thought that I had met the challenge and had sustained the point that I had made.

Then we take up another great thought, that of divine healing. Seventy or eighty years ago when our people began to tell the world that God would heal the sick in these days the world said the day of miracles was past. But what a wonderful change has come over them since then. Whole denominations have been founded on that single thought since 1820. You are all acquainted with the great Christian Science movement that has come up, sweeping all over the world, and based largely on the doctrine of healing. And it is only about seven years ago that the Episcopal Church, one of the most conservative, aristocratic, and wealthy of modern denominations, started what is known as the Emmanuel Movement; and the basic principle of this Emmanuel Movement is that God will not only heal sin sickness but will also heal physical sickness. That thought was taken up by many other churches. So we see what a change has occurred along that line.

Then we take up the doctrine of speaking in tongues. When our people began to speak in tongues, some of them in 1830, or earlier, people said that those old blessings were not to be enjoyed. But since that day there have grown up various denominations that believe in speaking in tongues. Not, however, as we believe, strictly in harmony with the doctrine as it is taught in the word of God.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

Then notice the great doctrine of the second coming of Christ. Even as John the Baptist was sent out to tell the people that Christ was coming in his first advent, so this church was sent out to make straight the way of the Lord and prepare a people for the second advent of our Lord and Savior. But when we first began to teach and preach that doctrine there were very few, indeed, who believed it or gave it any particular attention. They said, The second coming of Christ is a spiritual matter. He will come in spirit, but he will never come again in person. And some of them sneered at the thought that these were the last days, that the time of the second coming was near at hand. They were like Peter said they would be, when he wrote:

Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation.

But there has come a change in the sentiment of the people in regard to the second coming of Christ. It was only recently that they held what is called a great International Prophetic Conference in the city of Chicago, on the 24th day of last February, when there were gathered together more than three thousand people from the great denominations of the age. Three thousand people, more than six hundred of them delegates representing the great orthodox churches. And the theme of that prophetic conference was the second coming of Christ. They formulated a creed or statement of faith; and the ninth article of that statement of faith reads: "We believe in the second visible, imminent coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ to establish his world-wide kingdom on the earth."

Notice, not a spiritual coming, but first, a literal, personal coming, just as he went away; and second, an imminent coming, that is, near at hand, even at the door. "We believe in the visible, imminent coming of our Lord and Savior." What a wonderful change since first Latter Day Saints preached that doctrine. Surely the waves have circled out with

CURRENT EVENTS

EUROPEAN WAR.—Fighting at Liege and in the vicinity thereof has continued during the week, except for a brief intermission when the Germans withdrew, supposedly to await reinforcements. The French have joined the Belgians in the work of defense, the allied forces seemingly holding their ground, and in some instances regaining ground previously lost. The Germans occupy the city of Liege. The attack upon the forts at Liege continues, with the Belgians bravely defending the same. Germany is thought to be making ready for a general advance against the French and Belgian forces along a line of attack in northeastern Belgium. Report that France has taken and is holding from Germany territory in Alsace, one time French, is denied by German reports, which state that this disputed territory has been retaken from the French forces. On the 10th France broke off diplomatic relations with Austria on the grounds that Austrian troops were aiding Germany, and on the 13th both France and England formally declared war on Austria. The Austrian forces have been repulsed from Servia, their advance being weakened by engagements elsewhere as an ally of Germany. The border warfare between Russia and Germany, France and Germany, Russia and Austria continues. Montenegro has joined Servia, and their combined forces have invaded Bosnia, a few years ago annexed by Austria. Holland, Denmark, Norway and Sweden, neutral, are all mobilized. Italy is mobilizing forces on her Swiss-Austrian border, as she explains, in the interests of her neutrality. Japan is said to be about to declare war on Germany, and to join Great Britain, France and Russia to reduce the German fortress of Kiao-Chou, China, and to take the islands of the Pacific held by Germany.

NEW HAVEN DISSOLUTION.—An agreement has been reached between the Government and the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, providing for the peaceful dissolution of the New Haven. This agreement is substantially a renewal of the original agreement between the Attorney General and the company, and is in accordance with the vote of the stockholders at New Haven, April 21.

HARVESTER COMPANY ORDERED DISSOLVED.—The International Harvester Company on the 12th was declared to be a monopoly in restraint of interstate and foreign trade, and by a majority decision of the United States district court at Saint Paul was ordered dissolved. An appeal will likely be taken.

MARKET MANIPULATION INQUIRY.—An investigation of the rise in price of foodstuffs throughout the United States since the declaration of war in Europe was on the 13th ordered by President Wilson, who directed Attorney General McReynolds to immediately make a sweeping inquiry with a view to prosecuting those responsible for illegal market manipulations. The President charged that the advance in prices was unwarranted. If no law is found to punish the guilty, President Wilson requests the Attorney General to advise him with reference to what should be suggested to Congress for passage as law.

RED CROSS APPEAL.—President Wilson as the head of the American Red Cross on the 13th appealed to the American people to contribute money for the relief of sick and wounded soldiers in Europe. Contributions may be sent to the American Red Cross at Washington, or to local treasurers of the society in other cities. The Germans of Chicago alone expect to raise one million dollars for the relief of their own countrymen.

PANAMA CANAL OPENED.—Accompanied by the boom of cannon and the clash of arms in England, the United States on the 15th opened the Panama Canal to the commerce of the world. Thus in the completion of this gigantic piece of engineering is realized the ambition of centuries, and by the Nation that above all others stands for world peace. That the canal should be opened during such a time of stress, emphasizes the peaceful occupations of the United States.

CAPE COD CANAL.—The Cape Cod Canal, connecting Buzzards Bay with Cape Cod Bay and opened July 30, is eight miles long, twenty-five feet deep and from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five feet wide. It was built at a cost of twelve million dollars, and shortens the ocean route from New York to Boston by seventy miles.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—With Carranza insisting upon the unconditional surrender of Mexico City and his army marching upon the capital, the Federalists on the 11th began the evacuation of the city, leaving it in charge of the municipal police, who by agreement were to be regarded as neutral. This withdrawal followed conferences with Carranza in which he continued to deny amnesty and guarantees. On the next day Provisional President Carbajal departed for Vera Cruz, leaving Edurado Iturbide, governor of the federal district, to surrender to General Obregon. Carranza refuses to deal with the Federalists in any instance other than an unconditional surrender for the reason that anything short of this would be tantamount to a recognition of Huerta. It is understood that the Federalist forces are to remain intact until the disposition of Carranza in the matter of amnesty and guarantees is made known after he reaches Mexico City, to combat the new government if guarantees are not forthcoming. The attitude of Villa seems uncertain and will no doubt be to a large degree determined by that of Carranza once he is established in the capital.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

TIME WELL SPENT.—Elder J. W. A. Bailey recently conducted a successful series of meetings at Scranton, Kansas, concerning which the Scranton Gazette has to say:

We have had the pleasure of listening to Elder Bailey, and we wish to say that he is a powerful reasoner, and we think our time well spent in listening to his discourse. We believe all who wish to learn the truth can profit by attending these lectures.

BISHOP'S REPORT.—In consideration of inquiries with reference to the published report of the Presiding Bishopric, it is thought advisable to state that the copy of this report was placed with the Herald Publishing House on May 19. Owing to the work of publishing the General Conference Minutes and to other pressing work, the publishing of the report of the Bishop has been delayed. Work on this report is well along, and the same should and will appear within a few weeks.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME.—The followers of Alexander Campbell sometimes in debate with our brethren and when hard pressed repudiate Elder Campbell and his work. The following by O. Austen Sommer, in the Apostolic Review for May 26, indicates the opinion in which Mr. Campbell is held among the "antis" when talking between themselves:

The plea of this religious movement, of which most of our readers are a part, has been to restore to the world the church of Christ as it was in the first century. That much good work has been accomplished in that direction is evident to all. Alexander Campbell and the men who labored with him after investigating the Scriptures for many years, and after many discussions, presented to the world the church as the Review upholds it. It took them many years to get rid of the traditions of Rome, but they finally accomplished that task.

TOUT PASSE

The sea is singing on the beach,
Where it has sung a million years;
Softer than even yours its speech,
Its waves are saltier than your tears.

After your voice at last is dumb,
And after even I forget!

the shock. They have had a profound influence on the teachings of the people.

MORE CONVERTS THAN WE HAVE BAPTIZED

Some one may say, Do you believe that all these changes have been brought about by the preaching of the Latter Day Saints? I answer, To a large extent, but not by any means entirely so. For more than eighty years Latter Day Saint preachers have been going into various parts of the world, into all parts of the United States, into Canada, into Mexico, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Australia, France, England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland, and the islands of the sea. And like the apostles of old who went everywhere preaching the kingdom of heaven, they have carried their distinctive doctrines with them. They have met some of the leading men of the age in debate. They have preached, they have written, they have exhorted everywhere.

Brother Turpen made a significant statement Friday night. He said, "We have converted a great many more people than we ever baptized." These did not have the moral courage to come in and join us, but they were converted to some one or more of these doctrines, and then they went out and preached them on their own responsibility.

This has had a world-wide influence, but perhaps a greater influence has been the Spirit of God that has been working everywhere. I want to impress that thought on your minds. The waves that circle out with the shock are not all on the surface, but the grace of God and the Holy Spirit have been working everywhere in the hearts of men. We see it in religious teaching, we see it in reforms and in economics and in politics. We can see the changes that have been wrought by the Spirit of enlightenment that went out in this day contemporaneously with the restoration of the gospel. And so we believe not only that there has been a wonderful change wrought in the religious world, but there has been a great change wrought in the political world. And the changes are going on with startling rapidity.

One of the changes that has been wrought is in the gathering of the Jews. You remember that in the 11th chapter of Isaiah, God said that he would set his hand again the second time to gather the children of Israel from the four quarters of the earth where they had been scattered. And in Zechariah the second chapter the statement was made that Jerusalem should be inhabited as a city without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein. When the angel came to visit Joseph Smith in September, 1823, he called his attention to these ancient prophecies, and he told him that the time was near at hand when they should be fulfilled. Those were to be some of the signs of the latter days,—among others that Jerusalem should be inhabited as a city without walls because of the multitude of Jews that should gather back again.

SELLING THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM

I want you to read an extract from the Encyclopedia Britannica, the latest edition:

Prior to 1858, when the modern building period commenced, Jerusalem lay wholly within its sixteenth century walls, and even as late as 1875 there were few private residences beyond their limits.

Why, we began to tell the people in 1823, and we continue preaching it, and the Jews would gather back and that presently Jerusalem would be inhabited as a city without walls. But this Encyclopedia tells us that it was not so until as late as 1875. But it goes on to say:

"At present Jerusalem without the walls covers a larger area than that within them."

And from the dictionary of the Bible, Scribner and Sons, published 1906, we read this:

In recent years there has been a steady influx of Jewish inhabitants, so that a population of about twenty thousand souls in 1872 has risen to fifty thousand at the present time. New quarters have sprung up outside the walls, on the west, north and south, and a railroad from Jaffa has just recently been completed.

The old prophecy is fulfilled, and the Jews are coming back. They have spread outside the walls, and the city is inhabited as a city without walls. And a most striking evidence was that statement in the Literary Digest only a few weeks ago, that the city authorities in Jerusalem were advertising the ancient walls for sale for building material. They have no further use for them,—it is as a city inhabited without walls.

WARS AND RUMORS OF WARS

Then along the same line some of the statements that were made in the scripture reading indicate the signs of the last days. Jesus said, "You shall hear of wars and rumors of wars." There is not a paper to-day that is not filled with rumors of wars. There is hardly a country in the Old World that is not either engaged in war or preparing for imminent danger.

"You shall hear of wars and rumors of wars." Why, it is only a little while ago that the peace societies and the peace missionaries were telling us that there could never be another great war. But the scripture reading says, "When they say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." Two weeks ago all was peace. In England, Germany, France, and Russia they were going about their daily vocations, harvesting, reaping and manufacturing. And the philosophers were telling us that all was peace and safety. And now sudden destruction is coming upon them—all is tumult, all is war.<sup>1</sup>

This is strikingly in harmony with the prophecy that is contained in Joel, third chapter:

Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. . . . Let the heathen be awakened. . . . Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down; . . . multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision.

WAKE UP THE MIGHTY MEN OF WAR

What a stirring prophecy! "Wake up the mighty men of war." How literally it is being fulfilled! Only yesterday we read that the Czar of all the Russias has called for nine million soldiers. Wake up the mighty men of Russia, the Cossacks and the Poles, and let them come down into the valley of decision.

And the German Kaiser has called for every able-bodied German to come out and bear arms. Wake up the mighty men of Germany, the fighting Prussians; and call the men of "arrogant Austria," and the fiery Huns; let them come down into the valley of decision.

And the President of France calls for all able-bodied Frenchmen to come out and fight. Wake up the mighty men of France, the race of men who marched under Napoleon over the Alps.

And the King of Great Britain is calling in the reserves and the territorials. Gather the mighty men of Great Britain from Canada, from Australia, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, from India and Egypt. Send her dreadnaughts through the seas; prepare for war.

Wake up the mighty men,—the slavs and the Teutons and the Franks and the Anglo Saxons, in these last days.

Call them down from the frozen plains of Russia, and from the valley of the "beautiful Blue Danube" and the Rhine, out from the sunny grape fields of France, and the wheat fields of Canada, down from the highlands of Scotland and up from the bogs of Ireland, and let them enter the valley of decision.

Wake up the mighty men. And "wake up the heathen,"—"heathen" Japan, as we call her, ready to fight with her "Christian" neighbors in this great war.

"At the time when so many friends of peace thought we were making real progress toward the abolition of war this sudden outbreak of the greatest war in history is most discouraging. The future looks dark, but we must not despair. God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform. We must hope that some good may come from this dreadful scourge."

We believe that these are the signs of the times that indicate the age in which we live. These things have not altogether been brought about by the restoration of the gospel, but they have come to pass through the forces that God has set in motion and the forces that the Devil has set in motion. Whether God or the Devil is back of these wars, they are signs of the times.

The Czar, the King, the Kaiser, the President, all grasp the sword and say, "In the name of God." But whether it is God or Devil, certainly these are signs of the times as Jesus said they would be.

"Let the weak say, I am strong,"—little Serbia, —and Belgium standing back the forces of mighty Germany for at least a while. Let them also come down into the valley of decision.

SHALL WE ANCHOR OUR BARKS IN THE CENTER?

But now, friends, there is another figure to the verse used as our text. And the second figure is: "Shall we anchor our barks in the center, or drift out and be wrecked on the rock?"

That simply means, in prosaic language, Shall we anchor our barks in safe places? "We have an anchor that keeps the soul," the anchor that the Apostle Paul mentions, sure and steadfast, that reaches within the veil. Shall we as Saints seek places of safety, or will we drift with the world and with the world be destroyed?

Jesus taught us to pray, in this twenty-first chapter of Luke, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." And Paul tells us we are not "ordained to wrath"; we should not be the "children of darkness" but children "of the light."

The way of safety is the way of obedience. Our safety depends on our personal righteousness. "The righteous shall be gathered out from among all nations, shall come to Zion singing, with songs of everlasting joy." The only way to anchor our bark in the center is to be obedient, to arouse ourselves and not drift with the world and with the world be wrecked on the rocks.

These are sober days. It is no time for us to be mixed with the follies and vices of the world. We have no time for senseless extravagance. We have no time to waste in the follies that are so prevalent around us. But we must arouse ourselves and give a more consecrated and more thorough obedience to all the commandments that God has given us. I shall not dwell longer on that thought this morning, for I believe that it must sink home to the heart of every individual here.

I am going to read just a little extract from one of the leading papers of the day regarding the situation that has existed in the world.

We have been flying high and complaining because we could not fly higher. A majority of the people have been discontented in the midst of plenty. Men have been climbing over the seats to get to the front regardless of the spectators who were trampled upon. The struggle has been to wear silks and satins, on the supposition that happy hearts could not beat under cheaper goods. We have thirsted for hot and cold water in every room, with gas and electric lights from cellar to garret, including the porch. We have sighed for not only butter on both sides of the bread, but sugar. We have sought amusements at a tremendous expense. We have planted a new discontent on every achievement. We have been trying to crowd the primary, the college, and the high school all in one, with a sheepskin and a cigarette at the end of it. No philosopher, no friend of mankind had a voice loud enough to reach the public ear for the purpose of calling a halt.

We have not been satisfied with a bicycle and an automobile, we have been thirsting for the aeroplane.

And so it goes on, an exegesis of the spirit of the modern age. But you and I as Latter Day Saints must call a halt. We must arouse ourselves spiritually; we must economize in temporal matters; we must place our all on the altar of God.

For even as the mighty men of war have been called into the valley of decision, so have we been called into the valley of decision. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." May God be with and bless us that we may make the proper choice.

PREPARATION

(Synopsis of a discourse delivered by President Frederick M. Smith at the Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, July 12, 1914, at 11 o'clock. Written by Elder G. E. Harrington.)

The speaker said he was going to do the unusual thing, he was going to talk about himself, he was going to have a chat with the folks. He had held the responsibilities of his present office for twelve years; he had discovered that he had been misunderstood. He said the people had a right to criticize a public man, and this criticism made it necessary for the public man to explain and defend himself. He wanted to take them into his confidence, and tell them of his ambitions and motives, or, in other words, make confession to them. He said:

In the year 1902 I was called to the office I now hold. When that call came I was twenty-eight years of age. I was not qualified to perform the duties that were placed upon me, and I was reluctant to accept. I saw nothing but hard work ahead. The work was a work for a man of experience, an older man's burden. The line of duty I was engaged in before that time was of a different character to that which would have qualified me for the work I was called to do.

EARLY AMBITIONS

My life's work that I had mapped out for myself was steam and electrical engineering. My desires were trenchant for the sciences. I was the cause of starting considerable mischief in the school at times, and the school-teacher, having made a study of my case, came to the conclusion that I was getting my lessons too easily, and to prevent me from making further trouble he decided to increase my studies. He told me this, and added to my studies natural philosophy. Well, he accomplished very little by giving me that study, for I took to it like a duck to water, leaving myself plenty of time for a continuation of my mischief.

However I would not have you understand that I did no hard studying during that time. At the age of fifteen years many a night till two o'clock in the morning I was poring over my school work; nor would I have you believe that I was always engaged in sober reading, for I plead guilty of reading such literature as Diamond Dick.

I can not say why I wanted to tell this, except to indicate to you the bent of my mind and efforts put forth.

WORKING UNDER DIFFICULTIES

At the time of my call I was not proved, and I gave a great deal of thought to the course I should pursue to improve myself so as to be in condition to do effective service. I remember that upon one occasion when called upon to preach I took for my text, "Study to show thyself approved," leaving out the two words following, for which I was severely criticized in a letter sent me by a brother, who could see no justification for leaving out those two important words unto God.

My thought was to emphasize the word approved, presuming it would be taken for granted—the reason for doing so would be apparent. But I am not going to take any chances of criticism upon that this morning, so I will read the text with these two words added, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Since that time I have put in a lot of hard work; however, my efforts may have been misdirected, for which I do not feel responsible, since I was acting with the best judgment I possessed.

At that time I was on the editorial staff of the SAINTS' HERALD, and about the same time secretary of the Board of Education, and permitted myself to be associated with various committees, preventing me from any systematic course of study I now see I should have made. By being on these various boards and committees I was literally swamped with details, and systematic study was going by the board. In viewing the situation as it was I became desperate, because of the lack of mental and spiritual development, and I wondered when the time would come that I would be able to successfully care for the various interests in church work. I can assure you this responsibility has not rested on my shoulders easily. It became apparent to me that if I was to be of service to the church I must study the social science or sociology, and to do this I must be liberated from the many responsibilities then held by me; consequently you may have observed that I have taken up considerable of the time of General Conference in releasing me from committees and boards.

One of the hardest places I had to fill was chairman of the Sanitarium board. In some of these board meetings at times there was considerable friction of personal character, and doubtless I have lost friends because of it; I have been accused of being tactless and too frank in expressing my views, and not being a diplomat; I have paid the penalty that follows. And now I have decided to refuse to accept any further responsibility of that kind except it can be shown to be the will of God.

There is considerable difference in the consideration of the social sciences and those of the physical, such as mathematics, physics, astronomy, etc. I find in the occult sciences the laws are not so invariable.

I know some say, "Why don't you pray, Brother Fred?" What would you think of a man getting on his knees in prayer and praying for fruit to eat when all around him were numbers of fruit trees loaded with fruit? I knew what I wanted, and could see where to get it, and for that reason it appeared to me unnecessary to ask for something already within my reach. It was my duty to go the limit of my powers in an effort to get what I needed, and failing, then, and only then, would I ask for what I needed.

SYSTEMATIC STUDY

Because I appreciated the handicap of having no systematic course of study, I engaged myself to the Seminar of the University of Kansas at Lawrence. That demanded my time from four o'clock in the morning till twelve o'clock at night one day each week. I studied sociology under Professor Blackmar, one of the finest sociologists in the United States.

Besides my regular studies, I found it necessary to do some special research work. One thing I refer to is the Indian Mescal religion, an idea of which I got from Elder Cook, our Indian brother. This religion has to do with a small cactus found in Mexico and other parts, called the Anhalonium, only one of which I ever saw alive. There is what is called the Mescal button, which grows upon this cactus, the physiological effect of which when taken into the system is to produce color vision.

This class of religionists begin their services in the evening with prayers, and have ceremonies that are continued throughout the night. At periods throughout the services they eat these buttons, with the result that many pleasurable visionary experiences are enjoyed.

They claim to be able to heal the sick, which I have no doubt is accomplished, which doubtless occurs through the faith in the processes they go through with, rather than through the means themselves. We agree with them—the prayer of faith will heal the sick.

This one subject has caused me to do a lot of research work, in several cities; in many libraries I have read from twenty to thirty books to find out what I could in reference to this religion.

A brother who had heard of this religion came into our office some time ago and told us something of what he had heard concerning it; stating he thought our brethren of the ministry should familiarize themselves with the same, whereupon I requested Brother Newton, my secretary, to produce some of the matter I had upon the subject. And when he was presented with what we had he was surprised, realizing that some of the ministry had information relative to the subject.

One peculiarity about this religion is that there are two tribes having the same ideas about it, though not known to have any connection with each other.

SYSTEMATIZING THE OFFICE

Another thing we have been doing is making changes in our office. When I went into the Presidency's office the information there available for use could all be placed in the President's vest pocket, the rest was in the splendid memory of our venerable President; and when it became necessary for me to get any information I needed to have it was necessary to hunt up father and have him tell me what I wanted to know. Incidentally, I will say I have been misjudged for my lack in this respect. People naturally expected me to be possessed with the same kind of a memory with which my father was gifted, which you who are intimately acquainted with him know of. But I do not possess it, and because of this fact I decided to start in for an office record, and to keep it in such a way that no matter what should happen to me anyone might get what information they needed.

Another thing is the reorganization of our priesthood quorums. I remember being at one of our eastern reunions, and in taking observations I noticed the priesthood were practically doing nothing. Immediately I made a note of the same, wrote out and presented the idea of priesthood reorganization to the other members of the Presidency, and was sat down on because of its apparent impracticability. But the more I thought upon the matter, the more I thought it could and ought to be accomplished. It cost me a great many efforts, but I finally succeeded in getting the matter favorably acted upon by General Conference, and now we have better opportunities for priesthood studies, and I doubt if any would wish to go back to the time before these re-organizations were effected.

Regular monthly quorum meetings are being held, whereas before they occurred once or twice a year. I venture the assertion there is more priesthood activity in the two stakes now than there was in the entire church before this change was made.

We have also worked out a system of reporting from the ministerial forces in the various fields and districts by which we are brought in touch with the work of the church in general. These reports are expected quarterly, although it is thought by some that they should only be given once every six months; my secretary is of that opinion. However we have quite a variety of reports, some good, some bad,—withal our statistics are in better shape. We found by the old method of giving notices for reports through the HERALD that very little attention was paid to them by the brethren.

We have developed maps that show the location of the branches of the church in all the world, and places where the membership reside outside of branches, and we invite any of you who may be interested to come to the office and see what we have done in this direction.

All this has required work and not play, as some have thought has been done.

CONTINUING PREPARATION

Some time ago I was fortunate in receiving an offer of a fellowship in a prominent place of learning in the East, something that was a surprise to me, and very desirable. But I could not see my way clear to accept the offer because it would involve an expense that I could not conscientiously ask the church to meet in addition to the regular allowance granted me. The information that I could get from accepting the offer was so valuable that it was difficult for me to give up the idea of getting it. So I wrote to one of our young and successful pastors in the East and told him of the offer made me, and he in turn took into his confidence one of our wealthy brethren, and told him of my situation, who told him I would be acting foolishly to turn such a proposition down, and added that he would take care of the expense needed to permit me to take the course open to me. Hence I have decided to go, and will leave you in a few days to be away several months with my family, and enter into this field of research that will involve the study of the social science, or sociology, also social pathology, the development of economics, its history, etc.

Now, I want you to understand me; I am not taking this course because I have a personal liking for it, I am doing so because I feel it is necessary for the purpose of enabling me to perform the work of my office more effectively. I would a thousand times rather study electrical engineering; but in doing this I understand I am helping out the purposes of the church.

LOCAL OPTION

Now a few words in regard to local option. I feel from a study of society, of the causes of poverty and crime, from the present existing state of society, that there should be no compromise on this question. There are no two roads on this proposition that we can travel. We can not consistently avoid voting against the liquor interest at any time. There has been sophistry used by some as a justification for voting "wet." They have said, "We will not vote dry because we can not keep it dry."

The way to enforce law if your town officials will not enforce it is to appeal to the governor of the State to send down state officials to enforce it. Some time ago in one of our cities where local option prevailed and the town went dry, the city prosecutor refused to enforce the law because he had many friends who were in favor of the nonenforcement of law, and twelve hundred men signed a petition to the governor requesting him to send the state officials there to execute it. The governor sent word to the city prosecutor that he must proceed to enforce the law or otherwise he would send some one there that would. The prosecutor saw that it would mean political suicide for him to disregard the demands of the governor, so he went to work and prosecuted his friends as violators of the law, and the law was enforced.

There is no argument to be offered for the existence of the saloon, and if I have any influence with you I want every Latter Day Saint to go to the polls and vote for a dry town in a most emphatic manner. We should be lined up constantly against the saloon.

Some say they are going to steal the vote of the fourth ward if they can not get any other way, and it is for us to see that they don't.

So far as the argument that is used that if we go dry we will lose financially is concerned, let me tell you for every one dollar we get from the saloon we pay from two to four dollars to care for the consequences.

In conclusion, I wish to state there has been no time in my life when I have entered my work in the church with less reservation than I do at the present time.

PARABLE OF THE ELDERLY MAIDENS

Once upon a time there lived in a village in York State a number of ancient maidens. These ladies were fond of telling about a young man who had left the village eighteen years before, to whom they said they were engaged to be married. Here and there one of the maidens was found who thought that he would marry her and her alone; but others were more liberal and thought he would marry them all.

All of them were fond of talking about him and his wonderful character. All professed to love him, and all said that he loved them. Yet, strange to relate, none of them had received from him so much as a scratch of the pen, or heard so much as a whispered sentence for eighteen long years. And they all stoutly declared that they did not expect to hear anything from this young man.

Now, in this village lived a boy who very much admired the character of this young man, so he started out and searched for him until he found him. Then he said: "Will you tell me which one of these ancient maiden ladies you intend to marry? I love you very much. I am but a fatherless lad, and when you are married I would like to be adopted into your family."

The man replied, "I will tell you frankly, I intend to marry none of them. But when my bride, now in obscurity, is known you will find that I am in communication with her. Wait for her appearing."

So the boy went back to the village and told what the man had said to him. Immediately these ancient maiden ladies began to abuse him. The tumult of their conversation became very loud and annoying, but the lad stuck to his story.

Presently the lady to whom the young man was to be married appeared in the village, and when it was known that she was receiving frequent letters from the young man all these ancient maiden ladies turned their wrath upon her also.

Now this is the interpretation: The ancient maiden ladies represent the various denominations. The boy was Joseph Smith. These denominations all said that Jesus had promised to claim them as his bride. Yet strangely enough none of them had heard a word from him for eighteen hundred years. More singular, they all said that they never expected to hear from him.

Joseph Smith went out in the woods in prayer and sought Jesus, because he wanted to know which one Jesus intended to marry, so that he could be adopted into that family. Jesus said that he intended to marry none of them, and added that presently his church would be revealed, and that when it was so revealed he would be in communication with it by dream and vision and revelation and miracle.

When Joseph Smith told of this vision, instantly

he became an object of jealous hatred, and when the church did appear, and it was known that Jesus was sending her divine messages, she, too, became an object of persecution by all sects and denominations. That abuse has never entirely ceased; from time to time it is fanned again into a flame.

Joseph Smith did not suffer because he was a bad man, for such a charge was an afterthought; but because he had crossed the will of the popular denominations and had dared to challenge their claims.

BLACK MAGIC AS AN UNSUSPECTED SOURCE OF THE INCREASE IN INSANITY

An unprecedented increase in the occult tendencies of the age has resulted from the words spoken by Sir Oliver Lodge in his address to the scientists of Great Britain that revealed his own belief in "manifestations." Something very like a "craze" for "Psychism" is spreading through all ranks of society, the result being an accentuation of the increase in morbidity, in neurasthenia and in downright insanity. Such is the gist of a warning uttered by Doctor J. Godfrey Raupert, who has investigated psychical subjects in Europe and America. The tendency to occultism has been encouraged, he says, by men of science, by exalted personages at various courts and by disinterested inquirers. The "fad" has spread to the humbler ranks of society. The end of these studies and experiments is in many cases, Doctor Raupert says, the sanitarium or the asylum. "Yet, in spite of the frightful danger, there is no attempt to check the propaganda." It is given a standing with the layman by the eminence of those who encourage it, thus inducing men and women to "adopt a passivity of mind which opens the mystical doors of the soul." This authority is even disposed to accept the theory put forth by R. H. Benson, who thinks there are spirits of evil, or emanations from an immaterialized realm, which must be held responsible for the facts accumulated by experiment under the auspices of the London Society for Psychical Research.

From his own investigations and from the evidence supplied by those who can hardly be disbelieved, Doctor Raupert, as quoted in a bulletin of the London Society, is convinced that spirit agencies are at work in these manifestations. To quote from a report of one of his lectures in the London Chronicle:

During many private seances, at which I invariably adopted a critical point of view, I exacted tests that admitted of no fraud on the part of those present. It was always necessary, for instance, to guard against words and actions arising out of the subconsciousness of the medium or his companions.

Thus, in automatic writing, when some one present finds the arm violently agitated and beginning to write under the apparent dictation of spirits, it is always conceivable that the sentences which he scrawls on the paper come from the subliminal self and are not due to independent spirit actions.

On one occasion, therefore, I put the paper in the center of the table beyond the reach of all hands, which were plainly visible. In the middle of the paper I placed the point only of a lead pencil. Presently the paper became luminous and began to move about in a zigzag fashion. Then, suddenly, it was wafted up into the air and we could hear faint scratchings on it. When it came down again I seized it and saw that it was covered with little pencil smudges which conveyed nothing to my mind. But upon examining these "smudges" under a magnifying glass it was seen that each little dot of lead was a word written so minutely that no human hand could have done it. They formed into sentences—ethical platitudes without importance—such as those which are often given in automatic writing. . . .

It has been proved beyond the possibility of doubt, according to Doctor Raupert, that poor people, duped into the belief that they have been brought into touch with deceased friends, have really been having intercourse with "evil powers impersonating the spirits of the dead." Upon which a psychical expert, vouched for by the London paper, thus comments in the columns of that daily. . . .

While not denying the extraordinary phenomena of spiritualism, Mr. Raupert denounces the practice of them as belonging essentially to the black art. Throughout the whole of his experience he obtained proofs that the character of these spirits is immoral and of blighting influence upon their victims. Although for a time they dictate high moral principles, especially to those who indulge in automatic writing, these invariably degenerate into sinister, blasphemous, or obscene suggestions. Hints are thrown out that morality is a matter of conventionality, that certain instincts are implanted in us in order to be gratified. Mr. Raupert asserts that he has known many women ruined utterly in body and soul by these debasing immoralities, urged upon them when their will power had been destroyed by opening the doors of their minds to evil suggestion.—Current Opinion, April, 1914.

A YOUNG LADY OF NINETY-FOUR

It was a piece of silk embroidery that had come from Vermont, strawberries looking good enough to eat, the work pronounced excellent by skilled judges, but the maker and sender was modest in her estimate of what she had done for art. She wrote apologetically that it was not very satisfactory, that she would improve as she grew older. She was only ninety-four.

There are many of us at thirty-four who have much to learn from this bright and promising young lady. With an immense experience of the world extending over a decade of maturity we are prepared to say that life is not worth living. Our lingo is that of cynics. We grab at all the proverbial philosophy that is on the bad side and repeat it solemnly with a sad wagging of the head as if it were the one new thing under the sun and a quite recent discovery of our own.

But the girl of ninety-four evidently has a contempt for that school of thought. Her letters are vivacious. They reveal a lively sense of humor, and there is wit in them that might make a pessimist cheer up a little by mistake. Best of all, she is still looking forward, not backward. Her future is not the past. She may glance over half a dozen generations through the last century, but she is embroidering for the children of to-day, devoting herself to art for art's sake and the children's sake, and resolving to improve through all the many beckoning and smiling years that are left her.

Those billious ones of thirty-four have penetrated on and on into the darkest recesses of the mansion of life, but she is just on the threshold, and it is very pleasant to have her welcoming us there, and to go out in the sunshine of the garden with her as she gathers her strawberries.—Chicago Record-Herald, May 18, 1914.

A DECADE OF AMERICAN MEDICAL ADVANCE

The last ten years will always figure largely in the history of American medicine, because it was in that period that the country assumed a foremost position as a headquarters for medical research. In 1902, there was not a single institution of the kind in the United States. England had its Lister Institute, Germany its Institute for Infectious Diseases, France its Pasteur Institute, Russia the Royal Military Institute at Saint Petersburg; it was not until the founding of the Rockefeller Institute, however, that America had anything comparable with them. Ten years ago not a dollar was spent in Chicago on independent studies of this kind; now Chicago has four flourishing research laboratories. Probably the Rockefeller Institute in New York can show the largest harvest. It has given the world Doctor Simon Flexner's cure for cerebro-spinal meningitis, Doctor Alexis Carrel's surgery of the arteries, his demonstration of the possibility of transplanting organs from one body to another, and his method of growing cells indefinitely outside the body. These latter experiments have entirely changed modern conceptions of life and death—have even lent some authority to the idea, with which so many imaginations have busied themselves, that the worn-out senile human frame itself may sometime be restored to youth.

Doctor Samuel J. Meltzer's method of intra-tracheal insufflation, already referred to in the use of anesthetics, is also valuable in surgery, in that, for the first time, it lays open to the surgeon the entire chest cavity—lungs, heart, œsophagus. Doctor Hideyo Noguchi has worked out a new skin reaction, far simpler than the Wasserman, for the diagnosis of syphilis. The same investigator has also discovered something which Pasteur sought for in vain—the organism that causes hydrophobia. Only the other day Doctor Flexner announced the discovery of that organism which scores of scientists, here and in Europe, have been seeking for the last six years—the one that causes poliomyelitis, or infantile paralysis.—Burton J. Hendrick, in Harper's Magazine for June.

FIRST BOYS' COURT

The Juvenile Court was a great step forward in the administration of justice and reclamation of youthful delinquents. The Court of Domestic Relations was another forward step. It is not too much to say that these two municipal courts have helped to spread the fame of Chicago the world over, especially since foreign investigators have found them highly efficient, and not merely sound in theory.

Now we have the first Boys' Court as another distinct branch of our Municipal Court. This institution manifestly meets a growing and urgent need. Boys who are too old to come within the beneficent scope of the Juvenile Court act are yet too young to be thrown among old or hardened offenders. The new court, with the aid of "big brother" volunteers from various civic and social organizations, will endeavor to prevent the wrecking of young lives, to direct boys into the path of honest industry and good citizenship. To warning and good advice, actual help in finding suitable employment is to be added.

CRUX OF IMMIGRATION QUESTION

It is generally admitted that the proportion of illiteracy among the immigrants of to-day is growing less with each succeeding decade. Moreover, such illiteracy as exists is only an ephemeral disadvantage which disappears almost completely in the second generation. Illiterate immigrants are the more anxious, because of the handicap of ignorance from which they themselves have suffered, to make sure that their children take advantage of our schools, so that as Mr. Claxton, the Commissioner of Education, has recently reported, the least illiteracy in the country to-day is to be found among the children of immigrants. The proportion of illiteracy on the basis of a careful statistical inquiry, is three times as great among the children of native-born parents as among the native-born children of foreign parents.

The phases of the immigration problem which most urgently require consideration on the part of Congress and of the legislatures of some of our States have to do not with exclusion and restriction, but rather with the distribution and assimilation of our immigrants. . . .

There should, I believe, be created, in connection with the Department of Labor, something in the nature of a Federal employment bureau, with branch offices in all of the States, to collect and disseminate information regarding opportunities and the demand and supply of labor throughout the country. Such a bureau should cooperate with the State and municipal bureaus of employment wherever such exist, and with the agricultural departments of the several States, and should act as a central clearinghouse for all of these agencies. The time has now come when our Government must assume the responsibility of systematically finding employment and of promoting the proper distribution of labor. And the State governments must cooperate with the Federal Government—in this undertaking. State bureaus of employment with labor exchanges in every community must be established, or where they now exist in rudimentary and ineffective form they must be developed.—A. Piatt Andrew, in June number of The North American Review.

HOW DRINK DISRUPTS FAMILIES

Brooklyn, like Chicago, has a Domestic Relations court which deals entirely with family troubles. A year ago the probation officers in this court were instructed to examine each case intrusted to them and record the reasons disclosed to them for marital disaster. The result of their inquiry is given in the following table which is included in the annual report of the court to the Board of Aldermen:

Cause	Number	Percentage
Drink .....	390	45.8
Other women .....	117	13.7
Laziness .....	79	9.2
Jealousy .....	76	8.9
Incompatibility .....	75	8.8
Gambling .....	33	3.8
Out of work .....	30	3.5
Lazy and untidy wives .....	20	2.3
Mother-in-law interference .....	12	1.4
Other men (accusations of husbands) .....	10	1.2
Cruel treatment .....	8	.9

From this table it is easy to conclude that more than one half the trouble which disrupts families is due to drink, for it is evident that in the other causes mentioned drink contributes to a greater or less extent. Is it not strange that society will continue to tolerate an institution which is such an enemy to the home, especially as this institution has nothing in other respects to commend it?—The American Issue (Iowa Edition) May, 1914.

The Staff

BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON

The Vacation and Afterward

Truly we feel that we have indeed been having a delightful playtime. Colorado advertises herself as the "National Playground" and keeps the charms of her many attractions well before the public; and from our experience this year we can testify that the "heart of the Rockies" is truly a satisfactory place to escape the heat of summer and the confusion of crowds. Nature, in the beauty of many moods, lies open invitingly, and her charms are (where we were) free for the seeking.

We have always felt disappointed upon the occasions of former visits to more famous parts, because of the impression we received of nature having been captured, fenced in, and then placed on exhibition at so much per, with the emphasis on the much! Everything is commercialized, and one feels that nature has suffered in the process. One doubts the genuineness of what one sees. Hence we found it a real delight to get away from the beaten track and be able to knock at nature's door and find her at home informally. Many a pleasant call did we make upon her, and, gracious dame that she is, she seemed to put forth every possible effort to please and entertain us.

So the Staff readers will be lenient if the "music" of the present issue tinkles somewhat of rushing streams, whispers of cooling zephyrs, rumbles of approaching storms, or breathes of the soft fragrance of mountain flowers. Now you'll be disappointed, for we are sure we can never be able to satisfy the expectations we have raised! Nevertheless, we feel that something new has entered into our soul—a touch, close and joyous, with nature, and through nature with nature's God—and we only hope that the freshness and beauty of this something may remain with us, and that we may be able to impart a portion of it to others.

We were privileged to attend communion services with the Denver Saints, and much enjoyed some talks we had later with some of the musical people. We gather that the choir work there is rather at a standstill just now—the choir evidently passing through one of its transitory periods. We hope this is only a lull in activities which will prove to be very brief and only serve to give greater impetus to their work when it is resumed with enthusiasm.

Happily for us, our visits to Council Bluffs and Omaha coincided with regular choir work at the former place and special choir "doin's" at the latter. Both these branches are fortunate in the possession of fine choirs, many real live wires being in both of them. We heard their work spoken of very highly by nonmembers who had attended services there and who had been impressed with the splendid music rendered. Brother Paul Craig has been going over from Omaha to help the Council Bluffs choir, and their own leader, Brother Spanwick, cooperates with him in every effort made for advancement.

The next evening we were the fortunate guests of the Omaha choir at a picnic held in beautiful Miller Park. A happier, more united band never sat down to a more satisfying lunch, which was disposed of promptly, along with the springing of many a joke and quip, after which the entire crowd proceeded to the lovely home of Sister Lorena Leeka near by. Here a short practice of anthems for Sunday's work was followed by a carefully selected program given by the greatest musicians of the world—a la Victrola.

These numbers were preceded by short explanations or descriptions given by Brother Paul or Sister Leeka, which served to enhance their charm, as well as to emphasize their educational value. It is a splendid thing for choir members to get together in this way, and hear things of worth which make for culture and improvement both as regards their work as musicians and as men and women in this great world of achievement.

Brother Craig has the earnest and faithful support of Brother R. A. Scott, who relieves him at times of the honor and burden of wielding the baton, and who is ever on watch for new ideas with which to encourage and stimulate the members of their choir.

The choirs of the two cities will unite in a fall concert, preparations for which are well under way, and in which the interest is very keen and eager. All success to them!

We found the Lamoni Stake reunion in full swing when we arrived there, and the music was playing no small part in its affairs. Under the capable leadership of Sister Skinner the choir at that place is fully alive and in the front rank, as is evidenced by the good report from its Staff correspondent to be found in this issue.

No doubt the fact that next General Conference is to be held in Lamoni, as recently announced, together with Brother Hoxie's selection of a cantata to be given then as well as a new collection of anthems to be learned, combines to inspire the Lamoni singers to even greater efforts, that the initial success of the choir movement as evidenced at that place in 1913 will be surpassed if possible in 1915.

We have obtained the promises of three well-known and capable workers to send to the Staff for each issue articles along certain chosen lines, and it is with pleasure that we tell this good news to our readers. The first of a series of "helps" on expression as applied to our church anthems will appear in the September issue. These "helps" will take the form of a careful analysis of the words of the anthem, looking toward their rendition "with the Spirit."

Another series is outlined in response to the request contained in Brother O. R. Miller's letter. He and other missionaries who like him are constantly seeking uplifts and the means of driving their messages straight home into the hearts of the people they are trying to reach understand the great value music has for this purpose, and we hereby send an invitation to every reader: If you have anything, even one fact or thought, which will, if presented, enhance the beauty or enforce the message of any song or hymn in use among us, please let us have it!

And now at the approach of the cooler weather and the renewing of activities, if any of us has put his choir interest and enthusiasm into cold storage during the heat of summer, let him take it out, look it over, bolster up any weaknesses or imperfections discovered, buckle it on and wear it constantly from now on, and then when Brother Hoxie foists upon us our new bunch of music we can take it up with such zest as will insure our own great enjoyment and the unbounded success of this united choir movement.

Character Notes

ARE WE JUSTIFIED IN USING THEM?

The writer has never been in favor of any system of notation other than the "round notes," for the reason that indicating the name of a note by shape, marks or figures, while enabling the learner to read them a little more readily, will cause him to neglect the consideration of pitch, which is so essential to be understood in order to become good readers. Learning to sing by position, as we are compelled to do in using the round notes, brings us at once in touch with the principle of pitch. In our work of teaching singing classes we have always used the round notes, and never fail to discourage the beginner in taking up any other system.

However, in our work in the South we discovered that the character or shaped notes are used almost exclusively; and after having once learned that system it is very hard to learn to read the round notes. Another argument in favor of learning the round notes first and then any other system whatever can be used without any trouble.

But what shall we do with this great number of people who can use the shaped notes only? They tell us they would like to use our books, but they can not, as we do not publish them in shaped notes. While we are sorry that this condition exists, and sorry that such a pernicious system as the "shaped note" was ever invented, yet we have thought it would be helpful to our work in the South and other places if we could have a shaped note edition of the Hymnal or Praises or both.

Accordingly, we took this matter up with the Herald Publishing House some time ago, who after some correspondence agreed to try and see if a sufficient number would be ordered to justify getting out this edition. At last report they were not receiving much encouragement.

Some have suggested the use of the "figured note." This has its advantage, but we observe that the shaped note (sometimes called square notes because "la" is square), is the kind most extensively used next to the round note.

Inasmuch as our publishing house is willing to issue such an edition providing enough are ordered to justify the expense, all those interested ought to avail themselves of this opportunity. Personally, I would be glad to see the "round note" used exclusively; but it is hard for many to learn them after having taken up a system by which they read and sing without going into the real fundamental principles of music.

Musical Notes

The musical department of Harvard University arranged to give organ recitals during examination period, it being thought that the strain of constant application would be thus relieved and the student enabled to study with increased vigor as a result of the division.

The schools of Imperial County, California, are to be provided with talking machines, according to the announcement of the superintendent, Mr. L. E. Cooley. Music is rapidly advancing in prominence among various schools throughout the United States as an important factor in the student's education.

More than two hundred conventions have selected San Francisco for their gathering place in 1915. A great many of these are musical societies. At the exposition extensive exhibits will be made of musical instruments, one of the chief objects of which will be a demonstration of the improvements recently made in various instruments.

In New York City four hundred and fifteen concerts were given during the past season, of which one hundred and two were orchestral concerts, sixty song recitals, and more than forty piano recitals.

Government statistics show that the United States buys more musical instruments from Germany than from all other countries combined, and sells about one third of its production to England.

Incentive to musical composition is being encouraged lately by offers of prizes from various sources. The Mendelssohn Club, of Cleveland, offers one hundred dollars for a musical setting to the poem, "Prelude of a new day," by Richard Watson Gilder. The competition closes October 15, particulars of which may be obtained from Mr. Ralph Everett Sapp, musical director, 701 The Arcade, Cleveland, Ohio.

A pernicious habit that some vocal teachers have is that of trying to develop a big tone prematurely. The desire to make rapid progress and to "show off" the voice of the pupil results in a sacrifice of pure tone quality, the proper growth of the vocal tone being actually retarded by any system of forcing. Voice building is essentially a matter of much care and time, and too great an eagerness for demonstration should, especially in the earlier stages, be discouraged. Fictitious tone ought also to be avoided. Somewhat suggestive of this thought is the advice of Mr. Plunket Greene, the distinguished English singer. In a recent letter printed in The London Daily Telegraph he suggests that, "There is no physical reason, except in the extreme high registers of the voice, why any word in song should sound different from the same word in speech. No sung word, however beautiful the voice, and however beautiful the tone, can in itself be beautiful if it is different from the spoken word." This advice will certainly appeal to those who have experienced great difficulty in trying to understand the words of songs as rendered by some vocalists.

The New York State Music Teacher's Convention recently adopted a standard of requirements for its members. The Missouri Music Teacher's Association has also for several years been considering the advisability of adopting a standard and a system of examination for music teachers, and has taken up the matter by appointment of committees at its recent convention at Saint Louis. A standard of attainment for teachers of violin and piano has already been adopted.

Hans Englemann, whose compositions are well known throughout the United States, numbering nearly one thousand five hundred in all, died on May 5 at Philadelphia where he has resided since 1892, coming to this country from Berlin, at which place he was born in 1872. His music is particularly noted for its richness of melody and naturalness of progression.

This is the quiet season of the year for musical activities. In another month or so the vacation period will give place to the work of another season, and teachers in various departments will resume their duties under what now appears to give prospects of the most unsettled state of civilization in human history, of so great extent.

At Onset, Massachusetts, the district reunion has a choir under the leadership of Sister Enanora Whiting, and has done some work that has greatly helped toward an enjoyable occasion for all. Solos, duets and quartets have been nicely rendered at different times at the services, and after the evening meetings several musical selections have been sung by the campers gathered together beneath the trees, a custom started several years ago, and which is very much enjoyed. At the morning institute sessions a class in music is engaged in solving the principles of musical construction, which it is hoped may help to increase interest in the subject among the Saints.

A splendid program was provided for a music festival week at Chautauqua, New York, July 27 to August 1. It included a chorus of six hundred voices, an orchestra, band, and eight soloists. A sacred song service was rendered on Sunday.

A Word from Lamoni

Circumstances have caused us pain since you heard from us last. Our chorister, Mrs. May Skinner, has been ill and unable to be with us much this summer. This is an instance where when one member suffers all the body suffers with it. We have had efficient members who have filled the vacancy, so we have kept up the work in good shape considering the hot weather.

At our last business session we secured one of the finest in the land, Brother Harold Burgess, as our leader. He is a man of musical talent, a cheerful disposition, and one who possesses the gift of go.

Both he and Sister Skinner (whose ability as a chorister has not been surpassed here) are working very hard on the music for the reunion here for August 7 to 16. With these two at the helm we can look for something good at that time. There will be chorus work, solos, octette, quartette, stringed instruments and the city band.

Music hath charms, and Lamoni choir's motto is, "With my song will I praise him." We are prayerful and trying to do our best, so we feel that the Lord will bless such efforts.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's work in all of its departments, we hope to perform our part well.

CORRESPONDENT.

Our Correspondence

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, July 28, 1914.

Dear Sister Anderson: I am writing to you hoping that you can and will furnish me with a brief history surrounding the composition of some of our old hymns.

You know there is usually some remarkable incident or occurrence that leads up to or inspires the composer. I notice the choristers sometimes relate the story in connection before the hymn is sung.

If any of our compositions have an interesting story in connection I should be pleased to know of it but what I refer to here especially are the old hymns, such as "Nearer my God to thee," "Jesus I my cross have taken," "Safe in the arms of Jesus," "Pass me not, O, Gentle Savior," and others.

Now, of course, if you had to write these stories separately it would mean much of your time and some work. I am wondering if I can't get a book on the matter? Or if you can give me the history in connection with two or three it will help?

I feel more and more every day the power of illustrations in sermons. I have used some in connection with hymns or a verse of a hymn and found it a wonderful help to move an audience to action.

If you can help me as much as is reasonable or tell me where I can get printed matter on the subject I shall be thankful.

Hopefully,

O. R. MILLER.

My Creed

I would be pure, for there are those who trust me;
 I would be true, for there are those who care;
 I would be strong, for there is much to suffer;
 I would be brave, for there is much to dare;
 I would be friend of all—the foe—the friendless;
 I would be giving and forget the gift;
 I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
 I would look up—and laugh—and love—and lift.

Mothers' Home Column

Ten Health Hints

"Everybody is talking health these days. Twenty years ago nobody talked health but the medical profession. The subject was tabooed everywhere except in the presence of doctors. Then health departments got into the field. They quit publishing statistics and used the space to educate the public.

"The International Harvester Company prints ten 'how to keep well' rules in six languages in a small book of rules which it issues to each employee.

"Nearly every large employer now has a book of rules in which some suggestions for right living similar to these are to be found. Perhaps before long, every employer, regardless of the number of his employees, will follow suit. Maybe in time, planters and farmers will do the same."

The following are the ten rules referred to:

1. Eat plain, wholesome food and eat slowly. The more your teeth work the less your stomach works.
2. Drink at least six glasses of pure water each day. If you are in doubt about the water being good, boil it.
3. Get enough sleep. The average adult should have not less than eight hours of sleep in a well ventilated room. Don't sleep in clothing that has been worn during the day.
4. Clean your teeth twice a day with a stiff brush. If your teeth are decayed, go to the dentist. Money spent in this way is well invested.
5. Frequent baths with soap and warm water keep the skin clean and the body healthy.
6. Always have one or more windows open day and night, summer and winter. Dirty air kills more people than dirty water, dirty milk, and dirty food.
7. If you are tired, it is rest that you need. Avoid whisky and other intoxicating drinks; they weaken both mind and body.
8. Don't spit on floors, sidewalks, or in the cars. Use the cuspidor.
9. Do not use the public drinking cup. Disease is spread in this way, as you never know what disease others had who have used the cup. The bubbling fountain is always safe.
10. Don't neglect coughs or colds. If you do not recover as quickly as you should, see a doctor or go to a dispensary for advice or treatment."

The Government's Care of Babies

The Government of the United States is beginning to take a hand in caring for the babies of the country. There is reason that it should do so.

It is claimed that between 300,000 and 500,000 babies under one year of age die annually from preventable diseases. In New Zealand, where great attention is paid to child welfare, the infant mortality has been cut down just about one half. It is considerably lower than the rate in the United States now.

A new baby book was issued August 1, by the United States Government. It deals with the care of babies from the time of their birth to the age of two years. It was written under the supervision of Miss Julia Lathrop, chief of the Government Children's Bureau. This bureau is devoting itself largely to the problem of decreasing infant mortality in this country.

Miss Lathrop believes much can be accomplished by educating mothers how to care for their children. The first bulletin was distributed widely to doctors, nurses, and settlement workers. Through these persons many prospective mothers got into touch with the Children's Bureau and obtained copies of that publication and also other suggestions.

The new baby book will be distributed to all who received the first bulletin and also will be sent to many new applicants. Congressmen and senators are already preparing to get special editions struck off at the Government printing office for distribution to physicians in their districts.

Let Us Have Clean Hands

In the olden times when men served the great Jehovah in the temple at Jerusalem, they were required to cleanse their hands before going in to minister at his table.

"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," is the command that comes to-day to men of the ministry.

They also who minister to the physical needs of their fellow creatures should serve with clean hands. This is the edict of science.

Doctor C. F. Langworthy, Government food expert, in a convention where home economics were discussed recently declared: "House pets, flies, and dust breed disease faster than the health authorities can stamp it out, but the human hand is the most dangerous enemy to family and community health that we have. Women should not prepare food while their hands are dirty, and the family cat should be banished from the kitchen."

Perhaps many people have never thought of the danger of disease being brought into the house by the cat that prowls about in unseen places. She comes and goes so quietly that she attracts little attention. A moment's reflection will recognize the fact that there is a danger in this direction. The cat may easily bring into the house the germs of disease from places which she has explored, and the child who plays with her or the person who fondles her may be infected. If we keep a cat, let us keep her in her proper place. She will be very comfortable and happy at the barn, if we leave her there.

And then the mother's hands which minister so faithfully and in such loving caresses to her children. Have we thought before how vitally necessary that they should be kept uncontaminated when she prepares the food of the family? It is a man of information who calls our attention to these things. We should heed the suggestion to keep our hands clean as we work. A woman at work about the kitchen has need to wash the hands frequently.

Do You Think of the Missionary?

The writer of this is a missionary and he knows a few of the trials, difficulties and disappointments of the man engaged in that class of service, and it has occurred to him that it might be of special value to him and his fellow laborers if the Saints were told a few things to think about along the line of duty.

1. The missionary is to go out in the mission field without "purse or scrip," or, to put it down in more modern English, he is to go into the world depending on the good will of the people whom he travels among to supply his needs.

2. Jesus says those who feed, clothe and give money to the missionary are his disciples; if they do not they are not his disciples. He says that is the way we can tell who his disciples are. (See Doctrine and Covenants 83: 15, 16.)

3. There are a great many of the Saints who have an abundance and to spare of this world's wealth who do not give the missionary anything; they turn him away with a "God bless you in your work, and come again." We quite recently talked with a missionary who had received two dollars and fifty cents in six months, and that in a district where Saints had good homes and rode to church in automobiles. Of course the only place for him to go for help was to his patient, sacrificing wife to share her meager allowance, or else to the bishop's agent.

4. Dear reader, do you make a distinction between men? Does the prominent official, the popular man, or the good looking man make a stronger appeal to your sympathy, to your kindness and good will than the quiet, plain and unassuming man? If they do, remember that James says that "ye can not have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, and yet have respect to persons." (James 2: 1, Inspired Translation.)

5. Sometimes a missionary is invited to a branch; it may be for one Sunday only, or for several days or a week, and when he leaves he remembers the language of David in Psalm 142: 4, "No man cared for my soul," or pocketbook either.

6. Some conferences and reunions are devoid of system or orderly method of helping the missionary. He may arrive at such places and have but little money and sometimes none at all, and go away to his field trusting to good luck and providence to help him out.

7. Sometimes the missionary is invited to a community to hold meetings, and the Saints forget all about his needs; they do not know if he has enough money to pay his fare to the next stopping place or not. The writer and others of the missionaries have sat in stations all night, or walked the streets half the night waiting for a train, without money to pay for a night's lodging.

8. Saints should not neglect these important duties. God has made it a part of your work to help care for the missionaries. If the missionary is neglectful of his duty, or unwise and improper in his conduct the church can remove him, while at the same time it can do nothing to the Saints if they neglect their duty toward the missionary.

9. Wake up, dear Saints. Don't spend ninety cents at the moving picture show and give ten cents to the missionary. Don't load your table with the good things of this earth and help make a dyspeptic out of the missionary. Give him less to eat and a little more money; you will not have any less, and the missionary will have better health and can preach better. He needs money for his expenses more than he needs your pie and cake.

ROSALIE, NEBRASKA.

Editors Herald: Last March found me in Western Kansas telling the old story to curious and eager ears with power and much assurance. I had rather hoped for a return to that field, and received authoritative consent for a temporary return there in response to the almost frantic requests; but I determined to speed directly to my new field, to which appointment I became resigned as to every other appointment I have ever had. Whether it is to my credit, I have never had a field but what I liked, and I have a reason to believe that some appointments were resultant of divine impulse.

The last day of March robbed us of our mother. To her, very little sickness had been known, notwithstanding many exposures and hardships in days long ago. But like a stalk of wheat, she had become ripe, matured. She saw her golden seventies and witnessed the fulfillment of her patriarchal promise that she should "live to a good old age." She put out to sea without any moaning of the bar. But a few short hours after she was stricken, all was over. She had told her story and endured to the end.

After a more extended stay at home than usual after General Conference, the writer set out to this field in his little Ford roadster, reaching the scene of the district conference in time to deliver the tail-end sermon of the conference, in Decatur. My Ford is proving a success. The motor cycle experiment in 1911 was a failure and would be if repeated. It was cheap travel, but it made you look cheap.

Every sermon save two since entering the district has been delivered on the street in two or three different towns, and the most of them from the welcome back of my snorting iron pony. This way I am able to have a crowd to preach to all summer, because one can go where they are and where they can get them. How much better it is than to sequester yourself in a hot hole and then denounce the people and try to imagine they will be damned because they will not follow you there.

About one cent and a quarter to one cent and a half will cover gasoline and lubrication expenses of a Ford torpedo, and I have figured that about three cents per mile will cover in addition the tire expense. But a missionary must have a little mechanical skill and be able to do his own tinkering, else he better content himself with the old way. It is a great means of getting around among the scattered Saints, to call on them for their benefit and to search for opening places.

Some may wonder how I paid for an automobile. Did it easy: Just wrote out a check and handed the man and he gave me the car. Of course I suppose you might be able to get one if you gave him the currency and enough of it, or yet a draft, or an express or post office order, but I used a check. See? So now you know how to get them; but don't all try at once. And above all things let the Bishop alone and don't go to him on the subject. If he has to buy the car it is cheaper for him to send you on the train. Whether I stole the car or the money that bought it, the Bishop did not furnish it.

One of my tires has been playing out and the other day I found another nearly new and I went on my way rejoicing. I advertised for the owner in vain—he did not come.

Last Sunday I motored to Decatur, where I took part with the brethren in their monthly sacrament service. I was rewarded by hearing the Master's voice again to myself as well as to the branch in general, calling one brother to the office of a priest.

Some have our message under consideration with apparent seriousness as a result of the street discourses. Last evening a number of men bought literature of me, and at the meeting preceding, the city marshal paid for a copy of the Book of Mormon.

My determination to-day is to be home hereafter as little as conditions demand, as little as I can, and give my little talent and limited knowledge and time as exclusively to duty abroad as circumstances will yield to.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

NORTH PLATTE, NEBRASKA, July 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have never regretted my adoption into the church. It has been a source of great comfort to me in times of trial and disappointments. It was very hard for me to become a Latter Day Saint, and I did a great deal of thinking and studying, but I feel very thankful now that God has led me to accept.

I am the only one of my folks who belong to the despised "Mormons," and of course they were very much opposed to it. I do not think they are so prejudiced now as they were then, as our people held tent meetings at North Platte last summer and they attended several evenings. They said they thought it seemed very sensible and just, but they did not think it made any difference what church you belonged to.

I have just lost my dear mother. Only those who have had a like experience can realize how lonely and sad I feel. If it were not for the hope I have in this latter-day gospel I feel as though I could never bear it. But I know God is just, and that there will be a chance for her yet, as I am almost sure she would have obeyed the gospel had she understood it better, and if all my people had not been so opposed. I know she had some faith, as she wanted Brother Prettyman to administer to her one time when she was at my house and none of the rest of them were there.

Oh, what a comfort and blessing to know that God is not the cruel monster that some seem to take such a delight in portraying him to be. How glad I am that I know God is merciful, and that he will reward the good we do here as well as the bad.

We live in the midst of a Holiness settlement, and I assure you they have no use for Latter Day Saints. They insist on calling us "Mormons," and no matter how much we deny the charge they will still have it that we are a branch of the Mormon Church. They will not come out to hear the elders preach any more, as they say they think it is wrong even to listen to them.

I want to ask all of God's people to remember me in their prayers, that I may be always ready to do whatever the Lord requires of me. I know I fall short a great many times of living up to the standard of a true Latter Day Saint, but I have a great many trials to bear, and have had many disappointments of late. I can only pray that God will hasten the time when this world with its sorrows, sickness, and despair will be ended; and peace will reign over the earth, and God will wipe all ears from our eyes and there will be no more sorrow or sufferings.

Editors Herald: I am pleased to be able to write a few lines to express the pleasure derived from reading in the HERALD the excellent discussions of the subjects touched upon from time to time. The editorials are very encouraging and instructive. Any right-thinking Saint can not but perceive that divine intelligence is manifested in the masterful way in which delicate subjects are handled to give the best results to your many readers of various minds.

The HERALD has proven a source of great comfort to me, and I am sure that our Father is still fulfilling his promise. Surely the Lord God doeth nothing except he revealeth his secrets or will to his servants the prophets.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and the complete vindication of our cause in the eyes of the world, I remain

Editors Herald: Having found what I believe to be a good plan in distributing tracts for the church, I would like to ask some other's advice with regard to the same.

Now, I pick out something I think would be interesting to some near neighbor (this does not take time I need for something else), take the tracts to them and ask them to read the same and write down any good thoughts they may gain by said reading; also any questions they may wish to ask. Then when I call again I ask that they return tracts with whatever they may have written.

Will some one write me what they think of this plan, please?

UNITED STATES STEAMSHIP San Francisco, AT TUXPAN, MEXICO, July 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am not a member of the kingdom yet, though I have been waiting for an opportunity since April 1. I intend to obey as soon as we arrive at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, about August 1. We leave here between July 18 and 25, a two thousand, two hundred and seventy mile trip, taking nine days and nights.

We came South to spend the winter, but the Mexican situation kept us longer than we expected. Since being South among the West Indies and Mexico I have read the Book of Mormon through and half way again. I have the four volumes of church history, the Holy Scriptures, hymn books, tracts, and this morning received May and June Autumn Leaves and two copies of the SAINTS' HERALD. I am interested and believe, and am trying to live according to the gospel teachings.

I wish the gospel of the true church was in the Navy, and was preached. I pray that God will send his servants here to us. We are beasts in nature, and need to be rescued. There are good and bad. Some believe all religion is graft, some believe in a God, some do not. I have been among worldly people most all my life, with no parents to guide me since I was seven years old. I have asked for forgiveness of my sins and have repented. I am sorry for what I have done. I pray for my fellow men and shipmates that God may throw out his life line and save us, that we may be guided by his Spirit as we are guided by the compass at sea, and in storm, that those who are willing to hear and believe may be saved.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels is the most influential officer of the Navy. He seems to be doing everything to promote religion, education, soberness, comfort, and to develop steady, good men. I think the Y. M. C. A. tried to send men to the Navy to promote Bible study, but I have never heard of their success. Probably they did not want to go and stay at sea for months, or could not interest the men in the subject. They have a few chaplains in the Navy, only on large battleships which carry about one thousand men. They do not seem to attract the men. Probably the true gospel can come and bring forth interest and energy; and if it also brings forth efficiency, soberness and steadiness, it may be spread on all ships.

The Navy Regulation Book, which governs the Navy, says that divine services are to be held on Sunday if the weather permits, and that anyone making a disturbance during service is subject to general court martial. No particular religion is preached in the Navy, no baptizing of any kind is done. If men can be called to divine service, and then are compelled to be quiet, they shall have to listen.

We are going north, as I said, between July 18 and 25 to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, to arrive there August 1. We expect furloughs during the months of August and September, amounting to from fifteen to thirty days leave. I intend to go to Michigan for a visit for a short time.

On arrival at Portsmouth I hope to be baptized. If anyone can give me the nearest located address of the church or elder of Portsmouth, if there be one at Portsmouth, I would be very thankful. My address will be B. L. Maynard, United States Steamship San Francisco, Care Postmaster, New York City.

Your ever faithful servant,

CRANBROOK, BRITISH COLUMBIA, July 13, 1914.

Editors Herald: I left Millet, Alberta, about two weeks ago, stopping at Calgary for a few days, where I greatly enjoyed myself. I met Sister Burr, formerly of Winnipeg, whom I had not seen for a number of years. She is still pressing onward. Here also I met Brother Hannah and family, formerly of Edmonton. They are as strong and active in the work as ever. In fact the members although few in number and not rich by any means seem to be very energetic. They have secured for themselves a fine organ, pulpit, and chairs, have a fine place all to themselves, rented, on the ground floor where they can hold services at any time. They meet all expenses when due, and, moreover, surprise the elders when leaving by giving more than they expect. Of course they have their ups and downs; but still other branches might do well to take heed of their energy, as it shows what can be done with a little push. You are sure to hear from Calgary at a later date.

While there I listened to a debate between Elder O. Tallman of the Disciple Church and Elder Daniel Macgregor, one affirming that the Book of Mormon was a fraud, the other denying. It lasted two nights. The result was as only could be expected, Brother Dan answering all the slurs, etc., such as Beale, Clark Braden, and the rest all use, the first night. The second night he did not try to follow, as it was the same thing over again, but laid the foundation of the work, which he certainly can do, and did do, as we all know who have had the pleasure of listening to him. A very favorable impression was made on the outsiders who were there, and I think much good will come of it. There is some talk of a longer debate later in the summer on church propositions, that is, if O. Tallman will state what he really does believe, which seems hard to find at present.

Since coming here I have had the best health I have had for years. I have found no members here, although I put a notice in the papers. I would be very glad if any members in British Columbia would write, especially concerning the home department, as I wish to take up the lessons. I wish to get the addresses of some elders at Lansing, Michigan, or near there, as I have some friends who are not members as yet, who live at Potterville, on whom I wish they would call. I could make good use of any papers or tracts that might be sent me, as I will be going among a number of men who have little to read, and who would read most anything. Send them in different languages, as there are men of different nationalities here.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints, that I may always be found ready and willing to do as God would have me do. I close with love to all.

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. WINN.

LA JUNTA, COLORADO, July 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: Nearly eight months have passed away since I came to this place in quest of health. I find my health improved somewhat since coming here, as also that of my family.

I miss the association of the Saints of my home branch, Hiteman, Iowa, who have endeared themselves to me through years of association in gospel ties. It truly was hard to part with them. Neither shall I forget the farewell meeting held before my departure, and the tokens of appreciation presented to me in the form of flexible, bound books of the church, and other tokens of respect, and words of encouragement that were given. May God bless and reward all.

There are a few Saints here, but scattered on each side of the river. Brother Solomon Tripp and myself have tried and do hold regular services every Sunday evening at our homes, and Sunday school. We speak alternately every Sunday evening. We are trying to keep the camp fire blazing.

Brother Petre of the seventy was here with the district tent last month and held a three weeks' meeting. We had a small attendance. It was hard to get the people out to hear. He baptized one adult and five children of Saints, Brother Tripp and myself assisting. I find in Brother Petre a faithful and an energetic worker and a humble brother.

May God speed the day when there may be an awakening of the people and a willingness to hear the message of life, and if it be God's will, the day when a branch may be organized here. May God give his people grace to endure to the end faithful to their trust, is the prayer of

Editors Herald: It is with great gladness of heart I hail the coming of the SAINTS' HERALD. It is laden with precious truths which enable us, by its promptings, to live daily and hourly true and humble, thereby fitting us for the coming of our Lord.

I could relate many, many blessings which the God of Israel hath bestowed upon us. Truly, he hath poured out his blessings upon us without measure. And I see greater blessings yet to come if we can only come up to the mark.

Oh, dear Saints of latter days, let us rejoice together and sing praises to our God for all his wondrous works to the children of men. I trust that all our prayers and supplications to the throne of grace may be for the strengthening of each and every one of us.

Your sister in the bonds of the gospel,

MRS. C. H. STOREY.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, July 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: There is much we should be proud of here in the South. We have a thriving branch, Sunday school, and Religio; yet they are not as good as they ought to be.

In July, 1905, a debate was held here between Brother Turpen and Doctor Love. During this debate I decided to join the church. While the debate was in full force Doctor Love said he was going to tear up the "Mormons" and their church would be for sale. At the time he made that statement the total membership of Pleasant Hill was one hundred and sixty-one; but since that time it has been progressing a little.

Since the debate between Brother Turpen and Doctor Love there have been four others held here or near here. Brother Kelley and Mr. Pain were first. I thought that it was as near nothing as I ever heard, for Brother Kelley had all the work to do on both sides. Next was Kelley and Roberts. This was a hot battle. We were brought face to face with the Evil One. Following came the Slover-Casey debate. It was a very warm fight, but Brother Slover won the victory, and the hostile spirits cooled down for a while. But finally they got stirred up again and Brother Slover went to battle again with one Cramer, and completely won the victory.

At the close of the first debate we held our first reunion. I was baptized, with thirty-four others during the reunion. Each year since then we have had a reunion, and at each one there have been some added to our number, until our membership is two hundred and ninety-six. That looks like tearing up the "Mormons" doesn't it? In place of having to sell our church we have added thirty-two feet more to it, and there is not room enough yet. So you see what kind of a predicament the doctor has put himself in.

I hope if Brother Turpen sees this he will write me.

Saints, I desire an interest in your prayers, that I may be able to fill the mission I was created for. Ever praying for the advancement of the cause of Christ, I still beg to remain

Your brother in Christ,

W. H. DRAKE.

ALPENA, MICHIGAN, July 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD since last fall. The Saints here are all well. Brother J. C. Goodman has been with us for the past two weeks and has held tent meetings here. He is a good teacher, the right man in the right place. We are having fine meetings. Here as elsewhere the Saints are waking up to a true sense of duty.

We expected to have had Elder Alvin Ellis with us for a while, and were sorry when we heard that he was appointed to work in Canada. But God's will be done.

I was baptized into the fold, but did not live as a Saint until last fall, after we had our two-day meeting. When I look back on my past life and see the many blessings I have missed by not trying to live as a Saint should, I feel it a duty to warn other young Saints of the ways of the world. I now enjoy meeting with the Saints more than any pleasure I found in worldly ways. Since I have taken up my cross to follow in the footsteps of the Master I have been blessed very much. I was called and ordained to the office of priest. I do not regret coming into this work. I rejoice more and more each day.

The fall conference is to be here October 9 to 11. We are looking for a large number of God's people. We cordially invite all Saints to come and enjoy the hospitality we know we can extend to them. I attended my first conference at The Soo, Michigan, last June, and determined never to lose another which I could attend.

I always remember the isolated Saints, the missionary, the sick and all others in my prayers, wishing them to remember me. May God be with all until we meet on the bright morning of the resurrection.

Your brother in bonds,

WILLARD PARKES.

MINDEN CITY, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: We have just returned from the two-day meeting held at Sandusky, Michigan, July 4 and 5. It was the first effort of that branch in sustaining a meeting of this kind, and can certainly be reported a success in every way.

The meetings were held in the courthouse. Meals were served in the district tent, pleasantly located on the courthouse square, as was also the refreshment tent. The attendance was large, especially on Sunday, the courthouse being well filled. A quiet, peaceful spirit prevailed throughout all sessions, and a measure of the same quiet influence was felt during intermissions.

It was pleasant to note during these hours the Saints gathered in little groups here and there conversing on gospel subjects mainly. This brought to mind the good counsel given at reunion by Brother R. Kapnick,—to watch ourselves that our conversaton be along profitable lines, rather than discussing the faults and failings of others so commonly indulged in. Truly the hearts of many were filled with thanksgiving for the privilege of celebrating Independence Day under such favorable conditions, and we rejoiced anew in the liberty enjoyed in this the "land of the free and the home of the brave."

The cheerfulness manifested by members of the Sandusky Branch in caring for the visitors, and their expressions of pleasure in being able to entertain the Saints at this gathering were very cordial. It was also gratifying to hear how they had been blessed on every hand in their efforts of obtaining needed help from the outside, such as the meeting house, extra tents, etc., all free of charge.

Seven were baptized during these meetings, and there were two children blessed and two ordinations to office of elder, viz, B. F. Phetteplace and W. H. Sheffer.

I am thankful that I was privileged to attend these meetings, for I gained much spiritual strength and encouragement—a more satisfying degree than at our late reunion at Port Huron, the meetings of which did not reach the spiritual height they did the past two years. However, we enjoyed the pleasant association of Saints, and felt grateful for all other benefits received there.

Hoping and praying that we may all strive to live closer to God and daily be making the necessary preparation of heart and mind to entitle us to the richest and best blessings in store for God's children, with love and best wishes to all Saints, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

EMMA VOLZ.

ESTACADA, OREGON.

Editors Herald: The Portland district conference is in session with a goodly number in attendance. Brethren Sheehy, Barmore, Shippy, and Cook are with us. It is very hot here at present. Oregon does not often see such warm weather.

We are expecting to have a good reunion the coming week. Saints are here from Portland, Hood River, Newburg, and surrounding localities in Oregon, and Vancouver and Centralia, Washington.

We enjoyed a pleasant entertainment last evening, given by our young people of the Religio and Sunday school. There was a large attendance from the outside. We are hopeful of building up the work in this locality.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

N. L. CHAPMAN.

Extracts from Letters

Andrew Howard, Richton, Mississippi: "I would be glad if an elder could be sent here. If any can come let him notify me and I will meet him at Richton."

John Jones, Knorrit Flat, Upper Manning, Australia: "I enjoy the editorials in the HERALD very much and consider them fine. Sometime if I have time I will send you a letter from our sunny land telling of the advancement of the great latter-day work here. I am president of the New South Wales District."

J. N. P. DeLacey, Quincy, Illinois, lock box 110: "I would like to locate some of the Saints here. Your lonesome brother."

E. B. Hull, Brooklyn, New York: "We had a very successful Sunday school-Religio Institute here on June 29. District Sunday school Superintendent O. T. Christy and District Religio President Edmond Gleazer, both of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, were in attendance. Some fine papers were read by local talent. These institutes are calculated to inspire and encourage the local workers, and should be had in every district."

Idaho

I want to send my kind regards to all the Saints and friends of the East among whom I have labored in the years that are past. May the Lord ever bless them, and give them a crown of glory that fadeth not away. I had labored in my home mission so long that I had about quit dreaming of a "change." So, when my name was called for "Central Idaho," I think that I would have "fainted" if there had been some one at hand with water to have brought me to again.

I was in a "disgruntled" state of mind for some little time after the conference, thinking that some one had "buted in," and had got the Twelve to "hand me a package." But after having time to look the matter squarely in the face, I decided that no matter what motive had prompted this unwelcome change, that if the Bishop supplied me with the funds I would go to the Golden Gate of California, if the Twelve said "go"; and if they thought best I would take the first boat out of harbor.

The work in this western mission is somewhat like it is in the East. A man has to have a little nerve and backbone if he opens up the work in new places. Sometimes I think that there are plenty of good missionaries in the church, if they had some one to go ahead, and find the openings, give out the appointments, get the crowds out, light the lamps, build the fires, sing the songs, pray the prayers and introduce the speaker.

Some of the Saints have dared to take some "jumbled up messes" of "hotheaded" supercilious enthusiasm as the word of the Lord to them, and have disposed of all they had, went to the "land of Zion," and hunted, and hunted and hunted, for Zion, "but found it not." Growing weary of quest, spending what little savings they had, they have been taken with that dreaded disease; "lost hope." Under such a spasm they have turned their backs upon the place, "Zion," and, as of old, they have again longed for the "flesh pots" of other countries. And these "clouds without water" have so long beset the true pathway of God's children to the promised land, that, like as it was in former times, one can see the wreckage of spiritual life, and financial means all along the pathway of latter-day Israel, until, in fact, many have "hung their harps on the willows" of the unbelieving world, and have been silent, oh, so long, that a song of Zion has not escaped their lips.

I was so glad when I read the epistle of the Presidency and Twelve that came out in the church papers that I was about to shout. But I finally concluded that it is good enough without any shouting. Oh, how I do wish that a copy of this epistle could be sent to every Latter Day Saint home in the world, and that enough of the Spirit of God might be given to invite them to a careful reading of it.

When, oh when, will we be ready to heed that sweet little song of long ago, wherein the silver-tongued singer said: Awake, awake; put on thy strength O Zion. . . . How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth, Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion.

Surely, then, Zion has not been brought "again" as yet, as her "watchmen" do not yet see "eye to eye." So in all we think or do about "going to Zion," let us remember the inspired advice: "For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight; for the Lord will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rearward." This does not sound like the "bazoos" of a lot of real estate gobblers, who have sapped the spirit of gathering out of the Saints by the cunning arts of financial greed.

We have been having some fine meetings here in the West. The Hagerman reunion was a grand treat to all who attended. Our Brother Peter Anderson was with us, and we tried to keep him before the Saints as much as he would stand for, as he does not stay long in any one place. Brother G. W. Winegar and I held meetings after the reunion closed, and had fine crowds all the time. Four dear souls were baptized into the kingdom near the close of the reunion by Brother Winegar, and others were almost persuaded.

After the Fourth, Brother Winegar and I came here and started meetings. We have had some good crowds out to hear the message. Brother Winegar has left for other parts, but I am still at the guns here, and will hold over this Sunday.

May the rising light of Zion's glory shine on, until it breaks the "veil" between us and the eternal.

I am in bonds,

JAMES T. DAVIS.

Saskatchewan

Since the convening of the last General Conference and the return of our missionary corps to their various fields of labor throughout the district the work has taken on a greater activity than ever before. During the first quarter of the conference year there have been more baptisms as a result of our missionary efforts than in any two years in the past. Our missionary force is unable to meet the demands made for preaching over so many parts of the district—in fact the people of the West seem to be hungering after the gospel as restored in these the latter days, thus the many inquiries, "Can you send us an elder?"

Our district conference convened near the city of Saskatoon, July 9 to 12. It was the largest conference the district has ever held, and from many angles one of the best. We believe if we know the pulse of the membership of the Saskatchewan District they are truly coming up higher and occupying higher ground, and unitedly are desirous of accomplishing their individual as well as their collective missions in the church.

Many of our people are looking Zionward, and are contemplating moving into the regions round about as the way may open before them, not forgetting to have all things prepared beforehand, and will no doubt journey there with songs of everlasting joy because of their thus doing, carrying with them much of a temporal nature that will be a blessing to Zion and her children.

We have with us for a short season Elder J. A. Gillen, missionary in charge, whom the Saints of the district have learned to love, honor, and respect, not alone for his administrations as a servant of the Lord, but because of his humble, unassuming deportment in his every-day life. We have also had Elder F. A. Smith, Presiding Patriarch, who is loved by all who know him. From the reports coming in from where he labored while here, his visit and mission to us has not been in vain, and we believe it will be in eternity that we shall fully appreciate the good that he has accomplished.

Since the close of the General Conference the writer has spent most of his time in the southern part of the district. Have baptized twenty-one splendid Saints into the church; a number of others are to follow in the course of a few weeks. Never in all our experience in the church have we felt the power of God manifest in our efforts as we have during the past four or five months in our association with some of the young, inexperienced elders. We have indeed witnessed the power and inspiration of God demonstrated to a marked degree. Our young missionaries of the district are doing a noble work, and they, too, are meeting with marked success in their efforts.

Western Canada has become nerved to fever point over the outbreak of hostilities among the European powers, and many are heard to say, "Where shall it end, and what will the end be thereof?" Nevertheless, these conditions have not affected our attendance at the various appointments where we are permitted to labor. We believe that the Saints ought to stand unitedly in holy places under these trying conditions.

Trusting that we shall be able to continue faithful, discharging the obligations resting upon us faithfully and well, we remain,

Very sincerely,

THOS. J. JORDAN.

VICEROY, SASKATCHEWAN, August 11, 1914.

Detroit, Michigan

The work here is moving on, and we feel encouraged. The prayer meetings are well attended, and the sweet Spirit of the Master has been with us both to admonish and encourage. We had the pleasure of seeing three young men enter into the waters of baptism this week and feel that a great work is waiting for our young people here. We are sorry to say that our brother Vincent Schaar met with a serious accident this week. He was struck by an automobile and is now in Grace Hospital, but we hope to see him at his accustomed place ere long. The street meetings are being quite well attended, and we hope to reach the honest in heart by this means. The Sunday school met on our lovely Belle Isle for our annual picnic. We were pleased to have as our guests for Saturday and Sunday quite a number of Saints from Flint, Port Huron, and Windsor, Ontario. May God bless his work.

Remember

Remember me when I am gone away,

Love, far away into the silent land;

When you no more can hold me by the hand.

Nor I half turn to go, yet turning stay.

Remember me when no more, day by day,

You tell me of your future that you've planned;

Only remember me; you understand

It will be late to counsel then or pray,

Yet if you should forget me for a while

And afterward remember, do not grieve;

For if the darkness and corruption leave

A vestige of the thoughts that I once had,

Better by far you should forget and smile

Than that you should remember and be sad.

Editorial

A LETTER AND REPLY

The following letter was written from Pima, Arizona, by a member of the Utah Mormon Church to a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints living in Iowa:

You ask why the Saints needed rebaptism after coming to Utah. After the drivings and persecutions, when the Saints got settled in Utah most of them had no records of their baptism, ordinations, etc., had lost them or forgotten them, so in order to straighten out records, etc., they rebaptized all Saints not having such records, or desiring to be. Many felt that they wished it, so they were given the privilege. There was no reorganization but just merely as I state this method was used to straighten up the church records. It is no longer done only in cases where the applicant has no record to present and is merely a matter of caution against wolves entering into the fold as some have tried to do and even done.

We are not privileged to practice polygamy and it is no longer preached, but we believe that unless a man and woman are sealed for time and eternity they will forfeit their rights to each other in the other world, and not have the privilege of progressing onward and peopling other worlds as our Father has done. Our faith is as taught by Joseph Smith, "As man is, God once was; as God is, man may become," and "man is not complete without the woman," etc. So if a Mormon woman marries an outsider her children will not belong to her unless she is sealed to some church member.

I can not clearly see why your President should object to the rebaptisms in the Latter Day Saint Church, for recently he desired admission to our church and came to our President asking upon what terms we would accept him and his followers into the church. Our President answered, "Just as any other supplicant, through the gates of baptism and ordination." On receiving this answer your President said never would he enter as a common member. So you see your leader knows where he stands and which is the true faith; were he not too proud to accept a humble position and work up as he proved worthy he would be in his rightful place to-day.

Dear sister, go to your own church records and see how your President on his ordination to that position told his followers he would never reveal any law to them not acceptable to them. Do you think the Lord gives only such laws as he thinks people will approve of? That seems to me a bold promise for a man claiming to be a prophet, seer, and revelator to make. Our prophets give us the word of the Lord direct as it comes from heaven, and if we don't accept it is to our own condemnation. They never ask in conference assembled if such principles are acceptable.

Why do the Reorganized Church not accept all of Joseph's revelations? For instance, the one on temple work and salvation for the dead? I understand your leaders claim that because Joseph's work was cut short and the temple never completed that the time is not ripe for the fulfillment of that prophecy. It seems to me that it takes their God a long time to get ready to do his work, as the end of the world is not far distant, and if Elijah's mission of turning the hearts of the fathers to their children, etc., is to be accomplished there will have to be steps taken before many more generations pass away. We have been doing temple work for sixty-four years and our leaders say we haven't made a beginning yet.

REBAPTISM AND REORDINATION

In the foregoing letter the statement is made in the first paragraph that after the Mormons had reached Utah they were rebaptized because they had lost the record of their former baptisms and ordinations, and that this was done in order to straighten out the church records. Brigham Young and the Twelve were the leaders in the work of rebaptizing and reordaining, they themselves being among the first to be rebaptized and reordained, as the following from Woodruff will show:

On this day [August 6, 1847] the Twelve were rebaptized . . . . We soon repaired to the water, and President Young went down into the water and baptized all his brethren of the Twelve present. He then confirmed us, and sealed upon us our apostleship, and all the keys, powers and blessings belonging to that office. Brother Heber C. Kimball baptized and confirmed President Brigham Young. . . . Sunday, August 8. The whole camp of Israel renewed their covenants before the Lord by baptism. There was two hundred and twenty-four baptized this morning, making two hundred and eighty-four rebaptized during the last three days.—Historical Record, vol. 9, p. 87.

The excuse given by the writer that this work of rebaptizing and reordaining was necessary in order to straighten up the record because the record of former baptisms and ordinations had been lost is not a valid one, and is presented as an afterthought. The exact dates of the original baptism and ordination of practically all of these leading men may be obtained from various Utah publications. The dates of the first baptism and ordination of practically every one of the men in the Presidency and Twelve, including Brigham Young, Woodruff, and all the others, may be found in such Utah publications as Church Chronology, L. D. S. Biographical Encyclopedia, and various other publications. The record had not been lost; the dates of original baptism and ordination of each individual are easily found, while on the other hand the date of rebaptism and reordination is seldom if ever mentioned, aside from the date of the general baptism as set forth in the quotation previously given. We have personally looked up the dates in the case of each individual member of the Twelve, and Brigham Young and his counselors, and found the precise dates given (with possibly one exception in which the month and year were given) and in no case did we find the date of rebaptism and reordination cited.

The author of the foregoing letter has not given the real reason for rebaptism and reordination. They were reordained because of a conscious loss of authority and rebaptized because of a consciousness of sin and apostasy. This fact is clearly enough set forth in a sermon by one of their own men, Elder Ezra T. Benson, delivered in the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, May 13, 1855:

If we quench the Spirit, and do not magnify the Lord by our works and by our faith, that which is in us soon goes out, and we die a natural death in the kingdom. Then, if we wish to obtain influence again we have to become humble, come forth and get rebaptized for the remission of sins, and have hands laid on for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and obey it strictly in all things, before we can get the zeal and flame of the gospel again to burn in our souls.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 3, p. 77.

Brigham Young himself also states the reason in a sermon delivered in the same building, October 23, 1853:

I will refer again to the brethren and sisters who have lately come over the plains. My counsel to them to-day is, as it has been on former occasions to all who have come into these valleys, Go and be baptized for the remission of sins, repenting of all your wanderings from the path of righteousness, believing firmly, in the name of Jesus Christ, that all your sins will be washed away. If any of you inquire what is the necessity of your being baptized as you have not committed any sins, I answer it is necessary to fulfill all righteousness.

I have heard some of you cursing and swearing, even some of the elders of Israel. I would be baptized seven times, were I in your place; I would not stop teasing some good elder to baptize me again and again, until I could think my sins forgiven. I would not live over another night until I was baptized enough to satisfy me that my sins were forgiven. Then go and be confirmed, as you were when you first embraced the religion of Jesus. That is my counsel.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, pp. 8, 9.

Orson Hyde had this to say in an editorial in the Millennial Star:

When members of our church have become cold and indifferent by the neglect of duty, and have fallen into a luke-warm state, but afterwards cherish a desire to be rebaptized, and covenant anew to keep the commandments of God, it is their right and privilege to confess their sins, humble themselves before God, and do their first work by being immersed in water, and thus their second baptism is no less for the remission or forgiveness of sins than their first; yet to break a solemn covenant by becoming cold, indifferent, or luke-warm, so as to render rebaptism often necessary, is certainly dangerous, for repeated neglect of duty, and the frequent breaking of your covenant, will render you unworthy the protection of God's Spirit, and you will find yourselves caught in the snare of the Devil in some unexpected moment.

Those who are rebaptized should be again confirmed, but not again ordained, unless they have been cut off from the church, for their priesthood is not taken away by the act of rebaptism.—Millennial Star, vol. 7, p. 136.

REORGANIZATION

In the same paragraph to which we have referred the writer of this letter says that there was no reorganization. This does not agree, however, with the statements made by leading officials in the Utah Church. For instance:

Parley P. Pratt claimed he received from some spiritual source the following instruction, only a very short time after the death of Joseph Smith:

Go and say unto my people in Nauvoo, that they shall continue to pursue their daily duties and take care of themselves, and make no movement in church government to reorganize or alter anything until the return of the remainder of the Quorum of the Twelve.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 371.

Some time thereafter, as early as December 23, 1847, at Winter Quarters, Brigham Young and his associates issued a general epistle in which they said:

We now, having it in contemplation soon to reorganize the church according to the original pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch, feel that it will be the privilege of the Twelve, ere long, to spread abroad among the nations.—Millennial Star, vol. 10, p. 86.

This work of reorganizing was carried forward in the various quorums, from the First Presidency down, so far as it could be carried among those who followed Brigham Young. Parley P. Pratt says:

February 12, [1848].—I met in council with the First Presidency and members of the Twelve, in which certain vacancies in our quorum were filled. We were then instructed to assist in reorganizing the different quorums here, and in establishing righteousness.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 407.

Nor was this work confined to the membership in Utah. Under date of August 28, 1851, Parley P. Pratt wrote from San Francisco to Brigham Young, concerning the church at that place:

We have rebaptized many of them, and have reorganized the church.—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 432.

Brigham Young, as we have seen, carried this work so far that he caused himself, his fellow-officers, and the entire membership in his following to be rebaptized, reconfirmed, and in many instances reordained, after they had reached the Salt Lake Valley.

In the second paragraph the writer says, "We are not privileged to practice polygamy and it is no longer preached." This statement hardly harmon-izes with facts. Leaders of the Utah Church practice polygamy daily. And polygamy is preached by their elders on occasion and defended in their church publications.

GROSSLY UNTRUE

The statement made in the third paragraph that President Joseph Smith of the Reorganization had approached the President of the Utah Church asking upon what terms he could be accepted into that church is absolutely without foundation, and so grossly untrue as to be ridiculous to those who are familiar with the history of the two churches and the positions occupied by the two men. Never at any time under any circumstances has anything occurred to give the slightest foundation for such a story. It is, as the old saying goes, manufactured out of whole cloth, and no particle of truth enters into either warp or woof at any point.

We have heard this rumor from other sources also, and thought best to secure a denial that could not be challenged by those circulating it. Accordingly, under date of July 29, we wrote to President Joseph F. Smith of the Utah Church concerning this matter and in due time received from him a very courteous letter from which we extract the following:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, August 4, 1914.

PRESIDENT ELBERT A. SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir and Kinsman: Your communication of July 29 reached me on the 31st. You say:

"Under date of October 14, 1913, a member of your church, one Mrs.—— or Mrs.——, the signature is not entirely legible—wrote from Pima, Arizona, to a member of the Reorganized Church, Mrs.——, of Baxter, Iowa, and in the course of her letter made this statement:

"I can clearly see why your President should object to the rebaptism in the Latter Day Saint Church, for recently he desired admission to our church and came to our President asking upon what terms we would accept him and his followers into the church. Our President answered, Just as any other supplicant, through the gates of baptism and ordination. On receiving this answer he, your President, said never would he enter as a common member. So you see your leader knows where he stands and which is the true faith. Were he not too proud to accept a humble position and work up as he proved worthy he would be in his rightful place to-day.' "

In answer to the foregoing it should be sufficient for me to say that I never before heard the statement you quote from Mrs.——'s letter, and so far as it may seem to involve me in a conversation with my cousin Joseph to this import, it is entirely without foundation in fact.

PRESIDENT SMITH'S PLEDGE

In the fourth paragraph of this letter the writer says: "Go to your own church records and see how your President on his ordination to that position told his followers that he would never reveal any law to them not acceptable to them."

President Joseph Smith did not make such a declaration on the occasion of his ordination. That which he did say was as follows: "I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals." (Church History, vol. 3, p. 256.) That was a perfectly legitimate and proper pledge to make, that he as president of the church would not teach in the name of the church any doctrine that should be rejected by the church, or that should be repugnant to the code of good morals. Had Brigham Young and his associates made and kept such a pledge the doctrine of polygamy, which was contrary to the code of good morals and repugnant to a majority of the people in the church, would not have been forced upon the church, later to be ostensibly repudiated and to an extent abandoned by them.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

POPE PASSES.—Pope Pius X died at Rome on the 20th. He had been in poor health, and it is thought that anxiety over the European war hastened the end. The conclave of cardinals meet at the Vatican nine days after the death of the pope to elect his successor.

PRICE INVESTIGATION.—Federal and State authorities have united at Chicago in the inquiry into the raise in the price of foodstuffs. It is announced that five packing firms of Chicago have been summoned to appear and answer to Federal inquiry. A Federal grand jury has been called at Brooklyn. At Baltimore the district attorney has asked for three special agents to assist in the investigation. At Philadelphia complaints are being made to the district attorney.

LIBERATION OF POLES.—The Czar of Russia is reported as having issued a proclamation promising the Poles home rule, religious freedom and recognition of their national language. These promises seem to contemplate a reunited Poland under the personal sovereignty of the Czar. It is understood that this proclamation is made to lead the Poles to look to the Czar as a deliverer, and thus insure the casting of their lot with Russia, rather than for them to aspire to liberation through German and Austrian triumph.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING.—Congress has passed a bill changing the law of ocean traffic. For many years foreign-built ships have not been admitted for registry under the United States flag. This bill just passed permits the purchase by American citizens of such ships anywhere, and their registry under the flag, and gives the President power to suspend the law regulating the officering and manning of the ships. This action has been thrust upon the President and Congress because of the peril to United States foreign trade, incident to the European war. With the leading trade-carrying nations at war, and correspondingly few merchantmen flying the United States flag, United States trade would be at a standstill since the merchantmen flying foreign flags would be at the mercy of the war vessels of any belligerent nation. On the 21st a bill passed the Senate to provide governmental war risk insurance for vessels of American register during the war, $5,000,000 being appropriated for this purpose. It is thought that the House will at once pass this bill. The administration is said to have urged a bill to provide governmental purchase of foreign merchant ships to aid the United States in her foreign trade, same to be sold at public auction at the close of the war. On the assurance from financiers that enough vessels will be purchased by American capital to handle the foreign trade this bill may not be pressed. With Europe devastated and blockaded by an almost universal war, a great commercial opportunity lies before the United States, to be improved only by supplying United States merchant marines to carry on trade throughout the world.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The forts at Liege still hold against the German bombardment. The Belgian seat of government has been removed from Brussels to Antwerp, Brussels having since been taken by the Germans. Antwerp is strongly fortified and preparations are being still further made to withstand to the last ditch the German attack. France has taken from Germany additional territory in the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. The opposing armies are drawn up in a continuous line from Belfort, near Basel, on the Swiss-German border, to the Netherlands-Belgian border, about two hundred and fifty miles in length, along which the combined forces of France, Belgium and England are preparing to contest the advance of the German army. The heaviest fighting is likely to occur on Belgian soil, across which the Germans hope to send their army into France, and upon which the allied forces are concentrated to check the German advance. A great and a terrible battle is expected hourly. Belgrade still withstands the siege of Austria. The Russian army is on the advance to the scene of conflict, but it will be some time before it can be brought into active participation. Germany seems to be preparing to maintain for the present a defensive attitude toward Russia. German war vessels outside the Baltic are said to have been forced to port. The German fleet in the Baltic has not yet accepted battle as proffered by the English fleet. On the 15th Japan issued an ultimatum to Germany demanding the withdrawal of German warships from the Orient and the evacuation of Kiao-Chau, allowing the Germans until the 23d to comply. Latest reports indicate that Germany will stand her ground. Turkey is mobilizing her forces with the statement that such is intended as a precautionary measure.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

JACKSON COUNTY DRY.—As we go to press word is received that Jackson County, Missouri, at an election held the 22d outside of Independence and Kansas City went dry by a majority of five hundred and seventy. This victory coming so soon after the triumph of the dries in Independence is a cause of rejoicing among the dries, and especially among the Saints. This makes one more forward step in preparation for the work of the redemption of Zion.

THE CHILDREN'S NEEDS.—We direct attention to a call from the treasurer of the Children's Home, Bishop Joseph Roberts, in the miscellany department of this issue of the HERALD. What touches the heart more than the needs of homeless children! The church through the Children's Home is doing all it can under present conditions to provide suitable homes among the Saints for children not otherwise provided for. Until homes are secured, these children are kept at the Children's Home. This institution and effort should have the ready support of Saints and friends everywhere.

CLUBBING THE PROPHETS.—Among those who reject the testimony of Joseph Smith as a prophet of God none are louder in the cry "false prophet" than are those identified with the faith as introduced by Alexander Campbell. These have in most every instance contended that Joseph Smith could not have been a prophet since he was reported from so many sources as having been an ungodly man. Now comes the Christian Evangelist, a leading champion of the organ-Sunday school faction of this institution, and in a recent issue says:

When was a prophet sent from God with a flaming message of righteousness and an urgent call to repentance that some one did not behead him? . . . No stones are found under the apple trees that bear no fruit. It is the fruitful tree, everywhere, always, that is thoroughly clubbed.

Exactly so. We concede that because this man Joseph Smith was "thoroughly clubbed" does not establish his mission as divine. We think the Evangelist and its like in the light of the statement just quoted should be as frank, and admit that because he was so "clubbed" is no evidence that he was a false prophet and his work a fraud. Consistency, however, is a jewel which has not been included in the collection of certain of our contemporaries. Hence we may expect such to continue in the use of the reported "ungodly" club.

"It is one thing to know," said a great teacher; "It is another to know that you know." Doctor David Starr Jordan has put the same thought to us: "The world steps aside to let any man pass who knows where he is going." One of the qualities that gave Nelson the command of the British fleet was his prompt and firm decision.—Lelia Munsell.

NO REVELATIONS IN UTAH

The statement contained in the fourth paragraph, "Our prophets give us the word of the Lord direct and it comes from heaven," is not in harmony with the facts in the case. When Joseph F. Smith appeared before the United States Senate committee in Washington in the Reed Smoot case, the following dialogues occurred:

Mr. Tayler.—Are you a prophet, seer, and revelator?

Mr. Smith.—I am so sustained and upheld by my people. . . .

Mr. Tayler.—You are possessed of the same powers that they [Joseph Smith the Martyr and his associates] were possessed of?

Mr. Smith.—Yes, I am supposed to be possessed of the same authority that they were.

Mr. Tayler.—You believe yourself to be, do you not?

Mr. Smith.—I think I do believe so.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pp. 80, 81.

Senator Dubois.—Have you received any revelation from God, which has been submitted by you and the apostles to the body of the church in their semiannual conference, which revelation has been sustained by that conference, through the upholding of their hands?

Mr. Smith.—Since when?

Senator Dubois.—Since you became President of the Church.

Mr. Smith.—No, sir; none whatever. . . .

Senator Dubois.—Have you received any individual revelations yourself, since you became President of the church under your own definition, even, of a revelation?

Mr. Smith.—I can not say that I have.

Senator Dubois.—Can you say that you have not?

Mr. Smith.—No; I can not say that I have not.

Senator Dubois.—Then you do not know whether you have received any such revelations as you have described, or whether you have not?

Mr. Smith.—Well, I can say this: That if I live as I should in my line of duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, just as any good Methodist or any other good church member might be. And so far as that is concerned, I say yes; I have had impressions of the Spirit upon my mind very frequently, but they are not in the sense revelations.

—Reed Smoot Case, vol. 1, pp. 483, 484.

REVELATIONS ACCEPTED

In the closing paragraph of this letter the writer says: "Why do the Reorganized Church not accept all of Joseph's revelations; for instance the one on temple work and salvation for the dead?"

In reply we will say that we know of no revelation given of God coming through Joseph Smith that is rejected by the Reorganized Church. The so-called revelation on polygamy we do not believe to have come through Joseph Smith and we know that it did not come from God. The revelations on baptism for the dead may be found in every copy of the Doctrine and Covenants published by the Reorganized Church and are fully accepted by us.

TEMPLE BUILDING

We can heartily indorse the sentiment contained in the last sentence of the letter in which the writer says that the leaders of the Utah Church have not yet "made a beginning" in temple work. They truly have not made a beginning in true temple service. Baptism for the dead and associated ceremonies must be performed in a temple built by commandment of God, such an one as is specifically stated in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 12, "My people are always commanded to build unto my holy name." We learn from this that the people of God are not commanded to build temples always or all the time, as the Utah people interpret this, but that they are always commanded when such a temple is to be built. No temple exists in Utah to-day that was built by commandment of God. The only existing temple so built is the temple in Kirtland, Ohio, which by divine providence has passed into the hands of the Reorganized Church. Those temples in Utah are not built by commandment of God, but solely and wholly at the whim or volition of the leaders of the church in that land.

When Brigham Young was about to build the great, famed, and boasted temple in Salt Lake City he made a significant statement, on February 14, 1853, which signally sustains the contention that we have made on this point. We quote:

Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is wicked and slothful servant who doeth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his master's will. I know a temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? If the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this Temple.

In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the Temple on paper, and then if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 391.

Thus in this self-sufficient, almost blasphemous spirit, the work began without any direction from on high, and from that day to this God has permitted it to go on without divine direction, a purely human affair, without real spiritual significance. The writer was correct in saying that they had not begun the real temple work.

That work will be begun by a people who are willing to say, Lord, show us when and where to build and how to carry on this great work; never by a man who says, No revelation is needed, but if the people and God insist on one I can make one up. In the meantime I have made my plans and defy men on earth and God in heaven to suggest any improvements.

SPIRITUAL INFLUENCES ATTENDING THE OFFICE OF PATRIARCH

(Written by Evangelist Hyrum O. Smith and read before the Quorum of High Priests.)

I presume that all will agree that to understand the spiritual influences attending the patriarch or evangelist one must take into consideration the nature of the work of this order. I believe that, as an order, we are agreed that the primary work of the evangelist is to "preach, teach, expound, exhort; to be a revivalist," as explained in the revelation setting forth the duties of this office. And it will be conceded that the spiritual influences that enable one to do this kind of work are not radically different from those influences that attend the preaching of the word, no matter in what department of the church one works.

I presume, however, that the especial thought that was in the mind of the one who chose this topic for discussion was the influences that accompany the giving of the patriarchal blessings, or what is termed in the revelation just quoted, "spiritual blessings" to the Saints.

I believe that there has obtained quite a general misunderstanding of the nature of this work, and of the blessings given. It will be well therefore, to contemplate this phase of the subject, and if it can be rightly understood it will not be difficult for us to comprehend the nature of the spiritual influences that should accompany the work.

Some have looked upon the order as a fortune-telling institution, and think that the chief work of the order is to tell the fortunes of those who are blessed; that the members of the order should be under the influence of the Spirit constantly; that everything said by them should partake of the nature of plenary inspiration. Because of this, some have hesitated about getting their blessings, for fear that God would lay bare their past lives. A little thought will dispel this illusion, for illusion it certainly is.

Personally, I believe that blessings are given for the purpose of benefiting the person blessed. Their benefit comes in two ways.

First, anyone who submits to any ordinance of the gospel receives benefit therefrom in the spiritual uplift that come naturally because of that submission, and should the blessing not be recorded, or written out, that spiritual uplift would still remain with the person blessed; and God will take cognizance of the one who has so far manifested faith in him as to ask for the administration of the ordinance, and will cause the forces of good to work for his benefit.

Second, benefit comes because of the advice and council given that is adapted to the needs of the individual, and the inspiration that should accompany the giving of the blessing consists in giving to the patriarch officiating the necessary discernment that will enable him to give timely advice and council to the one being blessed, or, in other words, to "rightly divide the word of truth" to that individual. This is not necessarily prophetic, that is, we interpret the word prophetic as meaning to foretell the future; of course it partakes of that nature, but should really come under the head of that gift that is known as the gift of discernment.

I can see but little difference between the inspiration necessary in giving advice to the individual, and that which is necessary in giving wholesale advice to the congregation to which one preaches. I presume that there are many here who can call to mind many instances where they have been peculiarly blessed in adapting the subject matter presented to the needs of a congregation. Sometimes, no doubt, you have been caused to wonder why you have been led to preach as you have, but you have afterwards discovered that there were those present who desired to hear about that especial thing. Many times, without doubt, you have gone into the pulpit with a certain subject outlined in your mind, but on arising before an audience you have suddenly changed your mind and preached about something else. In this you were rightly dividing the word of truth to that congregation. So it is with the patriarch. He is frequently very marvelously led to give advice and council, and wonders why, but afterwards learns that that was the very thing needed by the individual blessed.

There is this difference, however, between the advice and counsel given to a congregation and that given individually. One is likely to apply the advice and counsel given wholesale, to the other fellow, but if the hands of the patriarch are on your head, and he is talking directly to you, there is but one interpretation to put upon that which is said; it must have a personal application, and so long as the one to whom the blessing is given, retains faith in the inspiration prompting that which is said, and the fact that the man giving the advice and counsel was led by the Spirit to give it, it can not fail to have an influence for good upon the life and character.

We are not to conclude that the Spirit is given to make known the needs of the individual only, but there must come a certain degree of the Spirit to indicate the advice and counsel needed under the conditions prevailing, and the patriarch is not always left to his own judgment as to what will meet the needs of any particular case. In this the injunction in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5, "And if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach," is as applicable to the patriarch as to the public speaker, if not more so. No doubt, however, there are times when the patriarch, in the plenitude of his experience may and no doubt does give advice and counsel that he has learned is applicable to the conditions made known to him; but there are times when peculiar conditions need peculiar advice, and he should keep himself in that condition that the Lord may work through him for the good of the one who is blessed.

To illustrate what I mean I will relate one instance of the many that have come to me in the past year. A sister came to me and asked for her blessing, and told me that she also wanted to have a talk with me about her affairs upon which she felt that she needed advice. I arranged for giving her the blessing, but told her that we would have to arrange for the talk at some later time, as my time was so fully taken up for a few days that it would be impossible for me to attend to it for some time. I had never, to my knowledge, seen this sister before. I would not know her should I meet her now. I knew nothing of her past life or of her present condition or circumstances. I gave her her blessing. She never came to arrange for the talk. I wondered why, but afterwards learned that she had made the statement at the time her blessing was given that I had told her all she wanted to know. I even told her what her occupation was and pointed out to her the wonderful possibilities there were in her chosen vocation to do good to her fellow men, and gave her counsel and advice along the very lines that were troubling her.

It is obvious that advice given in this way would have double the effect that advice and counsel given with all the circumstances known to the adviser would have. The inspiration in this case is similar to the inspiration of a Daniel, who told the king what his dream was and then gave the interpretation. This sister could not get away from the fact that the Lord had inspired me to the extent that he had, without my knowing the circumstances, and had given me the remedy for her troubles. Knowing this, the advice and counsel given would have an hundredfold the weight with her that they would have had had she come to me and explained the circumstances and conditions surrounding her before the advice was given.

The inspiration that has come to me in my work as a patriarch has taught me that the blessings are a means of renewing our covenant with God, and that the one who has sufficient faith in God to believe that he does nothing in vain, and hence has made this provision in his work for a purpose, and that it is just as essential in the development of his people as any other ordinance of his gospel, is placed in a better position to resist the encroachments of evil than he could otherwise be.

I began my work as a patriarch with many misgivings, and with no one with whom I might counsel and advise; but determined to go forward in the performance of my duty in this as I had in all other positions I had occupied in the church, trusting in God to give to me the necessary inspiration to accomplish the work to which I verily believed he had called me. After I had given a number of blessings, I had the privilege of reading some blessings given by him who at one time was presiding patriarch of the church, and who has gone on to his reward, and those given by others, and was very much gratified to learn that the tenor of the blessings given by me and by him and the others who were older in the work than I was the same, and that the only essential difference was the verbiage, and in matter, the difference in conditions surrounding.

In studying the revelations concerning the work of the patriarch, I have had my conceptions of the work still further strengthened by reading the statement concerning the martyred patriarch, Hyrum Smith, which reads:

First, I have given unto you Hyrum Smith to be a patriarch unto you, to hold the sealing blessings of my church, even the Holy Spirit of promise, whereby ye are sealed up unto the day of redemption, that ye may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon you.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 38.

I believe that the true interpretation of this is that one is fortified against evil by the timely advice and counsel received in a patriarchal blessing, and is able to resist more effectually than he otherwise would be. Oftentimes a crisis in one's life is anticipated, and through the instruction given he is able to tide over that crisis. Herein lies the value of having the blessing written out and preserved so it may be read from time to time. Its value develops as time passes and circumstances bring out the conditions that it anticipates.

Some may have thought that the statement to Hyrum Smith quoted above gives the patriarch the right to seal one up unto eternal life without any conditions attached. I do not so understand it; but I do think, as stated above, that the one who receives advice and counsel under the influence of the Spirit that accompanies the office work of a patriarch, and gives heed to it, is sealed up unto the day of redemption, and that which is given will play a wondrous part in bringing to that one eternal life. But to ignore the law of God because the patriarch has told one that he is sealed up unto eternal life, or the day of redemption, is but to invite spiritual disaster.

I was led to make this statement to one of the brethren to whom I gave a blessing: "All God's promises are conditional, and he does not unconditionally guarantee to any of his children the blessing of eternal life, health, wisdom, or prosperity."

While this blessing was exceptional in the language used, yet I always try, at some time or other in my ministrations, to impress upon the minds of those to whom I give blessings that the fulfillment of the promises given in them will depend upon themselves.

It may be claimed that the patriarch may have the knowledge given him that one will obtain eternal life, or that one will live faithful to the end, and because of that faithfulness will obtain eternal life, and he is justified in promising one that desirable end; but the one so promised should not presume that his knowledge will justify him in doing wrong, and unless this is clearly understood, it may work disastrously to promise anything of the kind, even though the knowledge may be conveyed to the patriarch officiating. I am of the opinion that many things that are revealed to an officiating minister would better be withheld, and for this reason there should be an abundance of the Spirit of wisdom in the one who officiates in the office of patriarch, or any other office in this church, as well as that Spirit that enables one to have knowledge. Much trouble might be avoided if this Spirit of wisdom was more often manifested in the church.

It is a mistaken idea to conclude that the patriarch should keep himself nearer to God than any other official, and yet this thought is quite prevalent in the church. One who wrote to me after I had received ordination to this office and began my work said to me in substance, It must be wonderful to be speaking directly under the influence of God's Spirit every day. But if one is living up to his privileges, is not this true of every officer in this church? Why should the patriarch live more closely to God than other men who officiate in his name? Is there a greater value attached to the advice and counsel given to the individual than that given to the masses? Should one be more careless in speaking to the public than to the individual? Should he be less regardful of the truth and inspiration of the sermon than of the blessing? These are pertinent questions, and the sooner those who officiate in the name of the Lord fully realize that there is no more necessity for a man to keep himself in harmony with God in one position than another, the sooner will we come to a unity of the faith, and the sooner will our great calling be honored. The man who does not keep himself in full harmony with God in the work that he does is content to have his work considered mediocre, is not living up to his privileges, and the work will not prosper under his administration as it should.

I believe that the blessings that are given under this department of church work are for the direct benefit of the ones blessed, and it is possible that in the indiscriminate display made of the blessings that are given that harm is being done to the work of the order. I believe that this indiscriminate exhibiting of blessings should be discouraged rather than encouraged. Unless the one who reads my blessing is so thoroughly acquainted with me that he knows all the secret thoughts of my heart, the peculiarities of my disposition, my perplexities and my desires, he is not in a condition to see the divinity in the blessing as it appeals to me. He may in fact see nothing in it whatever, and expressing himself thus, he throws discredit upon the work of the patriarch. I have had men arise after receiving their blessings under my hands, and say to me: "Brother Smith, you have told me things to-day that no one but myself and God knew." You can readily see by this that one who does not know is not in a condition to appreciate what is said, and that which is full of inspiration to the one concerned is of little value to the one not concerned.

There is too much morbid curiosity over this particular work, and that curiosity is often fostered by those who receive their blessings. There is so much inspiration in them from their point of view that they forget that others may not be able to see them in the same light; that others can not see the application of the advice and counsel given, and their peculiar adaptation to the development of the character of the one blessed.

It would be well, then, for those who receive these blessings to consider them as sacred. This will not hinder them from showing them to those who may be their spiritual advisers, and to those who are able to interpret them aright.

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS

Having been requested by a few interested listeners to write for publication the subject of a sermon given in the church at Lamoni on Sunday evening, April 19, concerning the resurrection of Jesus our Savior, we undertake to make good our promise to do so as best we can from memory and a few notes. We do not expect to give it verbatim. Two kindly criticisms made directly after the services will call out further thoughts and evidence on two points.

Scripture lesson, 1 Corinthians 15: 12-23. Text, verse 20.

Our Savior's resurrection from the dead was foretold by himself as recorded in Matthew 20: 18, 19.

And the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

In John 2: 19 the same prophecy is recorded thus: "Destroy this temple [referring to his body] and in three days I will raise it up."

In Mark 8: 31 we read, "The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again."

THREE DAYS AND NIGHTS

It will be noticed that Jesus gave himself a little latitude of speech concerning the time during which he would be under the bands of death, which is definitely expressed in Matthew 12: 40: "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." With this statement Mark 8: 31 agrees.

The Christian world has been wont to follow the Catholic fake of Good Friday (as well as Easter Sunday) believing that Jesus was crucified on the day we call Friday, which is a mistake. Whoever insists that the crucifixion was on Friday, and that the ninth hour at which the Savior expired (Matthew 27: 46-50) is our three o'clock in the afternoon, would make Jesus mistaken in Matthew 12: 40.

Some have undertaken to explain this discrepancy by asserting that the few remaining hours of Friday, the night following, Saturday the full twenty-four hours, with the bit of Sunday morning prior to his rising and departing would be parts of three days, which would fulfill the prophecy. It would do nothing of the kind. Besides, there can be counted only two nights in such a reckoning. In Jonah 1: 17 it is distinctly stated that "Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights." In Matthew 12: 40 Jesus has positively declared that he would be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

Mark 15: 42, "And now when the even was come, because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath," and Luke 23: 54, "And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on," are the texts which have led to the conclusion that Friday was the day of the crucifixion. John 19: 31 states "that Sabbath was an high day." We shall see that it was not the weekly rest day at all.

In Exodus 12: 14-17 we learn that the first and seventh days of the passover week were made as sacred as the seventh day of the ten commandment code. That Jesus was not crucified on the day before the first of the passover Sabbaths is evident from the account given in Matthew 26: 17-20 of his eating the passover with his disciples, nor yet on the day before the seventh day of the passover, for it was yet in the future.

In Exodus 31: 12-17 we read a commandment for strict observance of "my Sabbaths," which evidently, being plural, refers to the first and seventh days of the passover week. "The Sabbath," singular, in the fourteenth verse refers to the weekly rest day of the code given on Sinai, the chief difference being that disobedience to the latter was to be punished by death, which did not follow a disregard of the former.

Again, John 19: 31, "That Sabbath was an high day." From this it is evident that there was yet another day called a Sabbath, coming between the first passover Sabbath and the weekly rest day, as also between the crucifixion and the resurrection. The crucifixion being on the preparation of the "high day," that is, on the day we call Thursday, Friday the high day (Sabbath) following, and the weekly rest day, our Saturday, coming next, the three days and three nights were accomplished before the dawning of the first day of the week on which the Savior rose, according to Matthew 28: 1, Mark 16: 1, Luke 24: 1, and John 20: 1. Hence the crucifixion was not on Friday. There is no other correct solution of the problem.

A brother writing in the HERALD some years ago fixed the crucifixion on Wednesday, but that made the time between it and the resurrection as much too long as the popular idea shortens it.

HOUR OF CRUCIFIXION

Now regarding the hour of the Savior's death. John 18: 3: Judas and his band went out to take Jesus with lanterns and torches, evidently before the dawning of the day. Verse 28: "And it was early," shows that Jesus had already been before Caiaphas, and was now before Pilate, in the judgment hall. This was done by the Roman soldiers, hence under Roman time, which begins the day at midnight, as we do.

Mark 15: 25: "It was the third hour and they crucified him." That was the same as our three o'clock in the morning. Verses 34-37: At the ninth hour he "gave up the ghost." He had given his life into their hands before the dawning of the day, at three o'clock was on the cross, at nine expired.

The high day and the weekly rest day both coming between the crucifixion and the resurrection, gives Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, with each following night, to fulfill the statement of Matthew 12: 40, Luke 23: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

TWO CRITICISMS

From the work put out by the church, What is Man, by Brother J. R. Lambert, we find the thought that there Christ received his divinely appointed mission to hades; and distance is little or no barrier to spirit transition. This was the first point criticised, at the close of the service. Ecclesiastes 12: 7 was quoted, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The thought offered was that he more likely appeared before the throne with the thief, and there received the appointment, thence to paradise with the thief, thence to hades.

I have no objection to the thought, and offer no argument against it. In John 20: 17, Jesus told

Mary, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God." He was here speaking of his bodily ascension, after his resurrection, having no reference to his appearance at the throne in spirit with the thief. This verse with the nineteenth and twentieth verses, and Luke 24: 39, "Handle me and see," shows that between the time he spoke to Mary and the meeting in Jerusalem the same day at evening he had made the ascension in body.

Yes! the Savior rose, bringing to pass the resurrection for all.

Another criticism was made on our way home from the service. A brother had entertained the thought that the Savior did his three days' and three nights' work in hades after his resurrection. We hope to be able to show that this also is a mistake.

In Ephesians 4: 8, 9, we learn that "when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive." "Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth." Notice, this was before he ascended in his resurrected body to the Father, and there was not time for him to put in three days and three nights at work in the prison between the time he said to Mary, "I have not yet ascended to my Father," and the evening of the same day when he told his disciples, "Handle me and see," showing that he had now been to the Father and returned. And the last quoted text says he had descended into the lower parts of the earth first. It must have been while his body lay in the tomb that his mission to hades was performed.

And the Lord said unto Enoch, Look, and he looked and beheld the Son of man lifted upon the cross, after the manner of men; and he heard a loud voice; and the heavens were veiled; and all the creations of God mourned; and the earth groaned; and the rocks were rent; and the saints arose and were crowned at the right hand of the Son of man, with crowns of glory; and as many of the spirits as were in prison came forth and stood on the right hand of God; and the remainder were reserved in chains of darkness until the judgment of the great day.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 11.

This puts the matter beyond controversy that Christ did his work in hades, in spirit, while his body laid in the tomb.

RUSSELL'S OPINION

Reverend C. F. Russell teaches that Christ did not have his flesh and bone body when he appeared suddenly in the midst of his disciples as they were assembled in the upper room in Jerusalem on the evening of his resurrection, the doors being shut for fear of the Jews (Luke 24), but that he had power to represent himself as having it, while he did not. When talking with one of Reverend Russell's followers some years ago in southern Ohio, she presented this thought, and asked, How did Christ get into that room unobserved, the doors being shut, if he had his flesh and bone body?

In reply we quoted from Luke 24: 13-36, concerning the two disciples with whom Jesus talked as they were returning from Emmaus the same day, whose "eyes were holden that they should not know him," and did not till he was made known to them in the breaking of bread, in their own home, at the evening meal. If he had this power, he had also power to hold both vision and hearing of the eleven in that room while he opened the door, walked in, and closed it behind him. That is the way he entered. Yet she would not give it up. We replied, If you are correct, Jesus was a deceiver, making his disciples think he had his body when he did not.

To the best of our recollection, time did not permit finishing the subject in the pulpit. We trust, however, that none of those present will demur should we add anything to what we said in the sermon. We therefore venture to refer to a sermon by Doctor Henry Ward Beecher, which we read some years before his death. After he had given the subject of the resurrection in its true light, using nearly all the passages that our elders use, at the conclusion he quoted Acts 1: 11: "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

BEECHER ON RESURRECTION

Reverend Beecher spoiled his entire sermon with the following words, But it is not supposable that Christ went to heaven with that body, but that it became airified and passed away. We may conjecture that one passage at least which led Reverend Beecher to so explain is 1 Corinthians 15: 50: "Flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God." This does not say that flesh and bone can not.

THE PURCHASE PRICE

1 Corinthians 6: 20, "Ye are bought with a price." That price was the blood of Jesus, paid to Satan as the price of our redemption, drunk by the earth at Calvary's hillside, and was not taken up again when he rose triumphant over death, hell, and the grave.

The subject as given and now written will not properly admit of a dissertation on the resurrection of all the race, so we desist. O. B. THOMAS.

Home religion is as important as personal religion, and is essential to it. The relationship between parents and children grows pure and dear when they all kneel together and ask the peace of God to rest on their home. Many of us remember the dear old days when at the family altar morning and evening prayers were offered together, and the Sunday evening hour, when we sang hymns, each choosing his favorite.—Doctor F. W. Tompkins.

ADJOURNS THE CHURCH

In reporting a religious function one of our correspondents undertook to describe the building in which it was held. He evidently dictated his account to a stenographer, who did not catch his words with precision. He meant to say, "The parish house adjoins the church." The report made him say, "The parish house adjourns the church."

The mistake set us thinking. Is there not a possibility that the parish house may adjourn the church? Has not modern Protestantism allowed current interest in social and recreative agencies to swerve attention from the central fact of church life—worship—to which in the nature of things ought to be regarded as of subordinate importance? All institutional work should be considered collateral rather than fundamental.

The highest glory of a church is its ability to spiritualize the characters of those who attend its ministry. As an approach to the interested population, every legitimate appliance of social character is to be commended. In that case it is a means to an end. Every opportunity by which the church can have proper contact with the general life of the community is to be thankfully used. It will provide an outlet for spiritual fervor. But, whether employed to enlist interest or to secure channels of expression for the religious life, every adjunct to the church must be kept in its proper place. It will not do to permit the parish house to "adjourn the church."—The Christian Advocate, May 28, 1914.

EYE-STRAIN FROM THE MOVIE HABIT

The injurious effect of moving pictures on the eyes used to be evident to the spectator; now the mechanism has been so greatly improved that it is hardly noticeable. It still exists, however, and, according to a writer in The Journal of the American Medical Association, a number of eye disorders are due to this form of entertainment. In Massachusetts, we are told, the law now requires a five-minute interval between reels to lessen the strain. Our quotations below are from an abstract in The Scientific American Supplement (New York, May 2), where we are told:

One of the factors in cinematograph exhibitions which favors the development of eye fatigue is poor definition of the original negatives. This is greatly accentuated when the positives which are used are enormously magnified. The smaller the image in the eye, the longer the impression lasts and the more the eyes are tired, so that seats nearer the screen are less desirable than those more remote. There is less eye fatigue when sitting not closer than forty feet from the screen.

That the movies are a prolific source of eyestrain must have been recognized by many oculists; yet, with a few exceptions, the attention of the public has not been directed to this important fact, while the victims themselves seldom suspect the cause of their trouble, although many of them suffer from an increase of symptoms even while witnessing the pictures. These symptoms usually consist of headache, vertigo, nausea, and fatigue of the eyes, followed later by vomiting, sleeplessness, and lack of energy.

Physicians and public-health officials have only recently realized the important part the picture theaters play in the welfare of the community from a health standpoint. Many theater buildings are remodeled storerooms with no facilities for ventilation. The air is breathed over and over and plenty of opportunity is afforded for contact between infected and noninfected, thereby facilitating the distribution of infectious diseases. In the United States there are over twenty-five thousand moving-picture theaters at which there is an average attendance of over fifteen million spectators.

This variety of eye fatigue may be largely removed by wearing proper glasses; by patronizing only those places which have good films, proper manipulation, and proper intervals of rest between the reels; by sitting at the right distance from the screen (no closer than forty feet), and by a not too frequent attendance.

It has been suggested that licenses be issued only to those proprietors of moving-picture theaters who are willing to abide by the following rules: First, to operate the machine by a motor instead of by hand, to have an adjustable take-up or speed regulator and an automatic fire shutter which renders more accurate the sequence of the individual images; secondly, to use the arc light with the direct current, which is brighter and steadier than that with the indirect current; thirdly, to have a proper screen, free from disagreeable and harmful glare. The so-called mirror screen, consisting of a mirror glass with a frosted surface, seems to be one of the most desirable. Fourthly, to use no reels which have been in use for over a month. Reels of an inferior quality or which have become scratched from much use give poor definition. Fifthly, to allow at least three minutes intermission between the reels.—The Literary Digest, May 30, 1914.

PEOPLE WITH THIRTEEN RIBS

The skeleton of a man who lived in Egypt six thousand years ago shows a thirteenth dorsal or rib-bearing vertebra, and recent examinations of skeletons of Eskimos from the northernmost shores of this continent reveal the same unusual structure. Not only that, but these Eskimos have also developed an extra pair of ribs connected with the extra joints—a most unusual thing indeed.

Everything in nature has some reason for being and some use, and so the question arises what it is that has produced an extra pair of ribs in the Eskimo. Dawson concludes that they have been developed by ages of paddling in the kyak or skin-covered canoe in which the Eskimo is as much at home as on land.

These fellows when hunting whales or other sea prey will perform wonderful feats in their kyaks. They venture into the roughest seas with them, and they think no more of going under water than a duck does. Often for sport they roll their canoe over and over sidewise and perform a sort of side somersault, diving under the water at each turn and never leaving the canoe, which, of course, is decked so as to keep out the water.

All these maneuvers develop extraordinary suppleness and strength of the waist, and it is reasonable to suppose that under the law of the survival of the fittest this abnormal waist development has had a permanent effect in lengthening the spine and causing an extra pair of ribs to appear. Darwin noted that the peculiar adaptability for seal hunting was transmitted from father to son among the Eskimos.

The Eskimo doesn't know that he is provided with an extra pair of ribs, and no man by taking thought can add to the number of his bones or other parts. He is, fortunately for himself, in the hands of higher powers, which he can not conceive of, and which are infinitely wiser and more farseeing than he is.—The Pathfinder.

DINNER IN THE STEERAGE

The emigrants flocked into the mess room from the four doors to twenty immense tables spread with knives and forks and toppling platters of bread. Nearly all the men came in in their hats—in black, glistening, ringlety sheepskin hats; in fur caps; in bowlers; in sombreros; in peak hats with high crowns; in Austrian cloth hats; in caps so green that the wearers could only be Irish.

Most of the young men were curious to see what girls there were on board and looked eagerly to the daintily clad Swedish women, blond and auburn-haired beauties in tight-fitting, speckless jerseys. The British girls came in in their poor cotton dresses, or old silk ones, things that had once looked grand for Sunday wear, but now bore miserable crippled hooks and eyes, threadbare seams, gaping fastenings—cheerful daughters of John Bull traipsing along in the shabbiest of floppy old boots. Then there were the dark and somewhat forward Jewesses, talking animatedly with little Jew men in queer-shaped trousers and skimpy coats; there were slatternly-looking Italian women with their children, intent on being at home in whatever circumstances. There was a party of shapely and attractive Austrian girls that arrested attention from the others, and a regular scramble to try and sit next to them.

No one ever saw a greater miscellaneity of peoples brought together by accident. I sat between a sheepskin-wrapped peasant wife from the depths of Russia and a neat Danish engineer. Opposite me were two cowboys going back to the far West; a dandified Spanish Jew sat next them on one hand, and two Norwegians in voluminous knitted jackets on the other. At the next table was a row of boisterous Flemings, with huge caps and gaudy scarfs. There were Americans, spruce and smart and polite; there were Italians, swarthy and dirty, having their black felt hats on their heads all through the meal and resting their elbows on the table as if they'd just come into a public house in their native land. There were gentle youths in shirts which women folk had embroidered in Little Russia; there were black-bearded Jewish patriarchs in their gaberdines.

Mugs half full of celery soup were thrown at us; not a chunk of bread on the table was less than an inch thick; the hash of gristly beef and warm potato was what would not have been tolerated in the poorest restaurant, but we set ourselves to eat it, knowing that trials in plenty awaited us and that the time might come when we would be starving. The Swedes and the British were finicky, the Russians and the Jews ate voraciously, as if they'd never seen anything so good in their lives.

The peasant woman next to me crossed herself before and after the meal; her Russian compatriots removed their hats, and some of them said grace in a whisper to themselves. But most ate even with their hats on and most with their hands dirty. You would not say we ate as if in the presence of God and with the memory of prayers and of heartbreak still in our minds, yet this meal was for the seeing eye of a religious ceremony, a very real first communion. The rough food so roughly dispensed was the bread and wine, making us all of one body and of one spirit in America.—Stephen Graham, in Harper's Magazine for July.

THE VALUE OF BIRDS

The value of birds to the farmer is plain enough, but we do not usually think of birds as having any direct relation to the public health. To prove that they do, however, it is only necessary to state that five hundred mosquitoes have been found in the stomach of a single night hawk; that in a killdeer's stomach hundreds of the larvæ of the salt-marsh mosquito have been found, and that many shore birds greedily devour mosquito larvæ. As mosquitoes are known to carry the germs of such serious diseases as typhoid, malaria, and dengue fever it is evident that by destroying such germs the birds are conferring a distinct benefit on man. It may be added that not infrequently ticks are eaten by birds, and that the tick which is responsible for the spread of Texas fever among cattle has been frequently found in the stomach of a bobwhite.

In considering the many kinds of birds in the United States from the practical side, they may not inaptly be called a police force of the air, the chief duty of which is to restrain within bounds the hordes of insects that if unchecked would devour every green thing. To accomplish this task successfully, the members of the force must be variously equipped.

As the bulk of insects spend more or less time on the ground, we find more birds are fitted for terrestrial service than for any other. Our largest bird family, the sparrows, is chiefly terrestrial. It is ably aided in its search for insects by the thrushes, wrens, certain of the warblers and many other birds.

So many insects burrow into trees that a highly specialized class of birds, the woodpeckers, have been developed to dig them out. The bills, tongues, feet and even tails have been cunningly adapted to this end. The bark of trees also forms a favorite shelter for numerous insects, and behold the wrens, nuthatches, warblers, creepers, with sharpest of eyes and slenderest of bills.

The air is full of flying insects, and to take care of these there are the swallows, swifts and night-hawks, whose wings and bodies are so shaped as to endow them with the speed and agility necessary to follow all the turns and windings of their nimble insect prey. The whippoorwills attend to the night flying insects when most birds are asleep, while the hawks by day and the owls by night supplement the work of other birds and have a special function of their own, the destruction of noxious rodents.—From a communication from Henry W. Henshaw, chief of the Biological Survey, to the National Geographic Society.

NEARLY 3,000 IMMIGRANTS DAILY

It has been argued on many occasions that in our day of rapid communication and cheap transportation most of our immigration problems solve themselves. Good times swell the human streams that flow toward America; recession and depression almost immediately check emigration and relieve the pressure in our labor market.

There is, no doubt, considerable truth in this theory. Yet the alleged automatic adjustment of supply and demand is by no means perfect, and at times it seems to break down. This fiscal year, now drawing to a close, shows very little automatic adjustment, and some suspect that perniciously active agents have encouraged and stimulated emigration all over Europe for the sake of profit to certain companies and utterly without regard to the welfare either of American labor or of the newcomers themselves.

Preliminary figures by the bureau of immigration indicate a record-breaking total of admissions this year in spite of the business depression. Aliens have been pouring in at the average rate of two thousand nine hundred per week day since July 1, 1913. The total for the twelvemonth will be approximately one million three hundred and fifty thousand.

It is true that certain adverse factors in the Old World have contributed to this very heavy volume —the continuation of trouble in the Balkans, new measures of oppression against the unhappy, down-trodden Jews of Russia, slack trade in continental Europe. Still, our own business conditions should naturally have operated to reduce immigration. The actual record testifies eloquently to undue and heedless "acceleration" for profit. Congressional reports have dealt with this matter rather severely, but no practical plan for preventing unfair and selfish stimulation of emigration abroad has yet been worked out.—The Chicago Record-Herald, June 13, 1914.

Mothers' Home Column

"Teach Your Boys Housework"

Notice that the heading of this article is quoted. It is the headline of a writing in the Mother's Magazine, and the writer is a man.

He says, "It is a splendid thing for the boys, as well as for the girls, to feel a share of the responsibility of caring for the home. There are many things the boys can do, which they will gladly do, if only the mother will teach them.

"Contrary to the opinions of many, it does not make weakenings of them to teach them housework. The mother of a family of boys will early bend under the weight of care unless she teaches some of them to help her in the home."

We recall that, at a recent gathering of the Saints, where picnic dinners were in order, one little group partook, among other things, of a tasty spice cake made by a little boy of eight years, with the directing help of his mother, of course.

We recall, also, that, on a certain occasion, we visited a sister who had long been confined to her bed by severe illness. The home was a model of neatness and order, all the varied duties being performed by the husband, who demonstrated the value of a man's being possessed of a knowledge of housework. The man who "kept house" so successfully during the protracted siege of sickness is one who ordinarily does man's work, a careful, capable workman. Economy, comfort, and peace were the result of his being able to take his wife's place and do her work in the period when she was disabled.

Still another instance rises before our mental view, that in which a son was able to maintain a comfortable, pleasant home for his parents in their feeble, old age.

The writer whom we have quoted above says, "To teach the boy housework, to imbue him with a knowledge of the details of housekeeping, instills into him a deeper love for home. He will have a better appreciation of the cares of the household—of his household—and will make a better father, a more considerate husband."

Many a man is impatient over trifling things in his home who would not be so if he understood better the details of his wife's work. Many a man fails to be considerate in his home, because he knows so little about the work of the home. The boy who learns from his mother the details of such things will know, when a man, something of what his wife has to do; he will know how to spare her, how to be considerate of her.

A tired little mother, upon returning from the pleasant but wearisome strain of a camp life at reunion, was met at the door of the farmhouse by her son who brought forth an easy chair, seated her in it, commanding her to do nothing but sit still and rest. A house in order and a son who knew how to do the simple things needful made it possible for her to comply. How much more humane than for that weary mother to be compelled to wait upon grown people who were unable or unwilling to relieve her in a time when she needed rest.

We quote in closing: "Begin early to teach the boy how to work in the house, and then, when necessity demands, he will be trained and ready to step in and bear a full share of the household burden on his willing shoulders. He will be a son, a manly, tender son, of whom the mother may always feel proud."

Wood Alcohol

An inquiry has come to our attention concerning the legality of the use of wood alcohol in hair tonics and face lotions in the barber shops of Illinois, and Doctor W. A. Evans in replying, answers that, while there is no law on the subject, legislation regulating the use of wood alcohol is needed.

The magazine, Good Housekeeping, of July, 1913, contained an article on the subject of wood alcohol under the heading, "An ever-present peril." An editor's note, accompanying the article, says: "Many prosperous homes, not merely those of the ignorant, are harboring this awful agent of blindness and death. Look sharp at your own home, reader!"

The article in question tells us that wood alcohol is poisonous, that nearly a thousand cases of death or blindness due to this subtle poison have been reported during the last twenty years. Not all the victims have swallowed the alcohol, but some have absorbed it through their skin and others have merely breathed its fumes.

Wood alcohol is used sometimes for heating purposes, as in the lamp of the chafing-dish. It is unsafe to burn it in any way in a room where the air is close. The bottle should never be uncorked if the windows are not wide open.

The poison has appeared under such names as Columbian spirits, Colonial spirits, Union spirits, Eagle spirits, methyl alcohol, aseton alcohol, green wood spirits, standard spirits, lion d'or. The article from which we quote asserts that wood alcohol has been advertised and sold under various aliases for "bathing and sponging the sick, rubbing for rheumatism, highballs, punch, hot-drops, witchhazel, bay rum, eau de cologne, Florida water, essence of all kinds, and home-made wines and cordials." Its use was followed by death and blindness.

"Unfortunately for mankind, the tissue of the optic nerve has a proclivity for wood alcohol." It is asserted that as small a quantity as a teaspoonful of the poison has been known to make a man blind. The article in question tells of a man who became totally and permanently blind after accepting a drink of whisky from a friend's flask, mixing the liquor with water. It tells of another case in which a tailor whose name is given became permanently blind after drinking two glasses of whisky adulterated with wood alcohol.

It tells further of four men who were set at work varnishing the inside of beer vats which were dark and airless with the exception of what air entered through two small holes in the top. The varnish contained wood alcohol. One man was but slightly affected by the alcohol; two died within a few days; the fourth went to bed sick and, when he recovered, could see only enough to get about the room and his sight did not improve.

Cases are cited which painters, pencil polishers, tailors who used wood alcohol in cleaning clothes, hat makers who used it in stiffening solutions, photographers who used it in cleaning plates, and various other workmen have been blinded by the use of this dangerous poison.

The danger to housewives is principally in the essences which are made up with wood alcohol. It is stated that as high as seventy-five per cent of the poison has been found in some of them. It is also found in some of the lotions used on the skin. Women should be very careful not to use wood alcohol for the chafing dish or in their extracts.

There is an alcohol known as "industrial alcohol" or "denatured alcohol" which may be used for the chafing-dish, for varnishes, etc. This is made from grain and lacks the dangerous qualities of wood alcohol.

As seen by the question asked of Doctor Evans, there is need of care in guarding against the harmful use of wood alcohol in the tonics, lotions, and cosmetics of the barber shop.

Prayer Union

SUBJECT FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN SEPTEMBER

Pray for the church, its priesthood and members, that all may be earnestly engaged in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness revealed in the word of God to the church. Pray that each member may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but to regard the reputation of a brother or sister as his own.

Lesson, 1 Corinthians 13. Memory verse, 1 Corinthians 13: 59.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER

Mrs. Sylvia Peterson, of Nutana, Saskatchewan, sends in a request for the prayers of the Saints. She is afflicted with a severe nervous trouble. She says, "Pray that God may remove this affliction as speedily as his wisdom will permit." Let this sister be remembered in our prayers.

Letter Department

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON, July 22, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been in this church about seven years. I can certainly testify to the truthfulness of the glorious gospel and its blessings. Dear Saints, the Lord healed me of erysipelas about five years ago with which I had been afflicted since twelve years of age. I had to be under the doctor's care every spring and fall. I know God can do many wonderful things if we trust him.

Dear Saints, my health is poor at present. I ask that you remember me in your faith and prayers that I might be healed. The Lord has told me inasmuch as I was faithful I would be restored. Oh, that I may increase my faith in him.

I have a request to make in behalf of my dear sister, who is not a member of the church, and does not know God's word in its fullness. She belongs to the Christian Church. She is thirty-one years old, and has been a cripple since she was thirteen, caused by playing blackman at school, resulting in tuberculosis of the bone of her leg.

She has suffered much pain and anguish. She got so she could go on crutches, and she taught school several years. She went through a severe operation seven years ago, which made the leg worse. She was again teaching school when she fell and had to go through with as hard a time as she did at first. So when she got better two years later she went to Oklahoma, where she had her leg amputated. The bone never healed. She was attending State normal in Springfield Missouri. She is advised that no man can do her any good. The disease has gone to her brain, and she is losing her mind. She suffers greatly with her hip. I beg and plead that all who read this will fast and pray on the first Sunday in September for her health to be restored, and that she may hear the gospel and accept it in its fullness. Her address is Miss Marietta Moore, Norwood, Missouri, Route 1.

Work could be done there at the Moore Schoolhouse eight miles north of Norwood. My parents live one and one half miles southeast of this schoolhouse. Davis Moore is my father's name. When there is preaching the schoolhouse is always filled. My father and others would care for an elder. I trust and pray some elder will be led to go to this place, call on my parents, and preach the gospel there.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. R. L. HAYS.

ROUM, JEZZEN, MOUNT LEBANON, SYRIA, July 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: Inclosed find an article that possibly you may use around Christmas if you deem it worthy of a place somewhere. I have in preparation several articles that may be of interest to your readers and will get them to you ere long.

I came here the first of the month, and am busy among the people. This is the point where they petitioned for a school. It is situated on the top of a mountain, between three and four thousand feet above the sea. Ancient Sidon is the point where we leave for this town. Think of it! Sidon is one of the oldest cities in the world, having been settled by Sidon, the grandson of Noah. Here came many of the famous kings and mighty generals of the past. These hills and valleys have resounded with the battle cries of contending armies, and the ground has been many times dyed crimson with the blood of its inhabitants. A few miles below Sidon is Serepta, where Judas healed the daughter of a Syro-Phoenician woman. And a few miles further on is Tyre, famous in history and prophecy.

The most beautiful sunsets in the world are here enjoyed. The clouds form in the valleys, and, as we are above them, the wonderful scenic effect is marvelous.

There are many children who come to me and beg for a chance to learn to read and write. A number of the young men go to the Presbyterian school in Sidon and also to the American school in Beirut. A good live man and wife, not afraid of hardship, and who are willing to work for the souls of men and women can make a success here. The people are poor, but very friendly. We go from house to house and tell them of the gospel. A number are interested. There are many bright boys and girls among them who will compare well with any country I have seen.

So far, there is little prejudice to contend with. The native Presbyterian minister and I are good friends. The Greek priest and I visit back and forth. It seems nice if it will only last. A doctor from Jezzen has invited us over to his home for meetings. He is an Abyssinian.

I have only poor old blind Brother Solomon to assist me, but he is doing fine, seems to have a splendid understanding of the work and is anxious for the people to learn the gospel story.

A few Mohammedans came nearly every night, and I give them a short lecture. They are friendly and learning. They say no one ever tried to teach them anything before.

I hope that every time a missionary is sent out his wife will be sent along. It is awful to be alone so much. We are doing our own work and getting along, but money could not hire me to do this way, and I hope that I will be the last one to undertake the work alone.

Hastily,
U. W. GREENE.

JERUSALEM, French Post, Box 91.

PINE BLUFF, WYOMING, July 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: I write for the benefit of the work and for new members of the kingdom, John Albin, Elliot, Otto and Sylvia Anderson. These are all young people, and because prejudice runs very high and hurtful in this country they truly need your prayers. Will some of the Saints please write to them? John C. Grainger, a letter from you will be in order.

There are several Catholics here, and a great many Swedish Baptists. Brother Oscar Okerlind, you are needed to do a big work here, if it suits the powers. The Grange Hall, a nice large building, is open to the missionaries any time they will stop at Pinebluff, Wyoming. Call by phone to Albin, Wyoming, or write beforehand to Albin, Wyoming. Brother John Albin Anderson is postmaster and merchant there.

G. C. CONNELLY.

PLEASANTON, IOWA, July 23, 1914.

Editors Herald: The two-day meeting held here July 18, 1914 was time well spent. The sermons were delivered from the band stand in the beautiful part in the center of the little town. Bishop Roberts spoke at eleven Sunday morning and made a good talk, discouraging idleness and encouraging industry and charity to the poor. Elder John F. Garver spoke at 8 p. m. and Sunday at the same hour. Sunday night the Christian Endeavor postponed their meeting at the Christian church and all came to the park, swelling the audience. Brother Garver delivered a stirring discourse that made the members glad they were Saints, and a good impression was upon the entire audience.

At 2.30 p. m. Sunday, Brother and Sister C. I. Carpenter did a good work in behalf of the Religio, and Bishop Roberts for the Sunday school. The Saints express themselves benefited by the efforts.

The writer went down in Missouri a few miles and orated on Decoration Day. The people showed their appreciation by a collection of four dollars, which I refused at first, but they said I had to take it.

Yours for the right,
J. M. BROWN.

WORTH, MISSOURI, July 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that I refer to the Holloway-Roberts Debate to be held at Worth, beginning September 2. I am handing the editor of the Worth paper for publication a copy of the propositions for discussion, together with an invitation to attend the same.

I pray God's blessing on the work and ask a special blessing for Brother Holloway, that God may stand by him and that good may result from the debate. Church propositions will be discussed. Brother Holloway also is to affirm the Book of Mormon as of divine origin and worthy of the respect and belief of all Christian people. Elder Roberts will then affirm that the Bible is the final and complete revelation of God's will to man.

Success to the HERALD. In bonds,
E. P. HAWLEY.

CROMWELL, IOWA, July 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: I was baptized into the church three years ago the 30th of last April, in Saint Joseph, Missouri. I am a member of the Third Branch. For one, I am proud to be in this blessed gospel. I am going back to Saint Joseph soon. Have done all I could in my weak way, and am ready at all times to defend the gospel.

My wife is going along with me in this gospel. We will be glad to get back to Saint Joseph, where we can go to our church and be with the Saints. Brother Pickering baptized wife and I. I was raised in Decatur County, Iowa.

Let us all strive to do all the good we can.

Your brother in Christ,
J. W. TRUITT.

KALISPELL, MONTANA, July 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: I would like to ask through the HERALD if there are any Latter Day Saints living in or near Kalispell, Montana. If so I would like to have them write to P. W. Premo, Kalispell, Montana, Route 1, Care of F. H. Plumb. Would also like to hear from the district president so I will know where and when to report.

I am at present holding meetings in a schoolhouse near Rose Crossing every alternate Sunday with good crowds and good liberty. The Methodists have a previous appointment for the other Sundays. Your brother in the gospel,

P. W. PREMO.

WALLACE, ALABAMA, July 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am isolated from the church and have been for several years. The elders do not visit this place. A few Saints live in this community. The people are anxious to hear our elders preach. A good work could be done here. We would like to have an elder visit us.

I feel all but lost sometimes. I was raised in the church and could go to the services at any time. I have two children old enough to be baptized. I feel they will drift into something else unless our people can hold services here.

Your sister,
HATTIE HAMMAC.

WEIR, KANSAS, July 21, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am often reminded of how God aids his children in their weak ways. I was baptized by brother Evan Davis in 1900. I wanted to live a true Latter Day Saint, but it seemed that everything was laid in my path to hinder.

My husband does not belong to the church. I was at one time tried so that I said to myself I would never go to church again. I continued murmuring until one night I had a dream. I dreamed of seeing the Lord coming in a cloud to the earth to gather his people. I thought I was with a little flock of people, about twenty-five or thirty in number. I thought he reached out his hand and gathered all the people except myself and took them with him. Ever since I have been trying to do all I can, for my desire is to live true and faithful to the end. I have many weaknesses to overcome.

Your sister in Christ,
ELIZABETH DANIELS.

SIoux FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA, July 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: Brother J. W. Smith arrived in Sioux Falls, June 18, and after surveying the grounds began to preach at Mr. and Mrs. Abner Hetrick's continuing for some nights.

A week ago to-day we secured conveyance and with Brother and Sister Smith and daughter drove out about three miles to West Sioux Falls to a beautiful place in the Sioux River, and Brother Smith led seven precious souls into the watery grave. After the confirmation meeting others gave their names for baptism, so Monday morning we again repaired to the water. There are now about twenty-one Saints in Sioux Falls besides the family of Brother Smith. We assisted what we could with the meetings and services.

On Wednesday Brother Smith went to Mount Vernon, twelve miles west of Mitchell, and twenty miles from here.

If it can be arranged he will bring the tent from Huron and hold a series of meetings when Brother Gillen or Brother Grimes reaches here. We hope such may be done. We have talked of putting up a small frame building about eighteen by twenty-six in which to hold our services, as it is impossible to secure a place otherwise. We wish to organize a Sunday school as soon as we can secure a place to hold meetings.

Asking the prayers of the Saints for our success, we are as ever,
Your brother in the faith,

C. F. PRATT.

HINTON, OKLAHOMA, July 28, 1914.

Editors Herald: Will close a ten-night tent meeting in this town to-morrow evening. While there have been no applications for baptism, we have at least created an interest. The attendance has been excellent, and many favorable comments have been heard, especially on the lecture delivered by the writer, "Why Latter Day Saints are not 'Mormons.'" Our actual experience in the Utah mission has enabled us to make clear in the mind of our hearers the facts.

We have made friends here. Those who were once prejudiced against us are now very friendly. One old gentleman who for years has opposed our work told one of our brethren after hearing the above lecture, "He has changed my mind in the matter."

We are still hopeful,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

H. M. S. Argyll, care G. P. O.,

LONDON, ENGLAND, July 20, 1914.

Editors Herald: For twelve months I had prayed for an opportunity to meet some of the Saints in common assembly, as I had been privileged to do in Australia, when I learned that we were to be located in a port more accessible to London, just at the time of the convening of their conference. Although under ordinary circumstances I could not have gone even then, at the last morning our routine was so altered as to give me the long-sought opportunity.

Accordingly, the Saturday before this I found myself in London and on my way to Enfield, one of the suburbs, where there is a branch in charge of Brother John Judd. We found the mission house, and upon opening the door were instantly welcomed by Brother Judd, calling me by name, whom I had not seen or heard of before. But being in uniform, and he having presumably been informed of my probable visit by Brother Greenwood, he recognized me.

I found to my delight that the spirit of brotherly love was no less exemplified here in London than in Sydney, Australia. I was quite at home, as if I had known these dear people for years. I had a curiosity to see the president of the mission and the bishop, whom I understood would be present. I knew what a bishop of the Church of England was like, but a bishop of the Reorganized Church I had never seen. In the midst of these musings in they walked, actually carrying their own luggage—no carriages, no motor cars, and no servants. They were just ordinary men with the same cheery manner manifested by other Saints.

My mind went back to the time when fishermen were chosen as presidents and bishops, and the thought occurred to me that here at any rate was a practical and living example of our Lord's church.

The business meeting of the conference was the first meeting of the kind I had ever attended. I felt more at home next day in the various services. To see and hear Bishop May preach without notes and apparently without effort was far different from my former experiences, as the power of the Spirit was all new to me. I was amply repaid for coming to London. My soul was greatly cheered.

Three candidates were baptized by Brother May immediately after the morning session. These candidates were women, one of whom I gathered was suffering with heart trouble. But she, nevertheless, trusted herself to the power of God, suffering no ill effects from the baptism.

The sacrament was arranged in the afternoon for my special benefit. Twelve months or more had elapsed since I had been permitted to partake of the Lord's supper. The fellowship meeting was a spiritual feast. There was no mistaking the power present. To me it seemed to be more accentuated by the exhortation of Brother Greenwood. I could not help feeling that small though our numbers were, (about forty,) yet the work so thoroughly established in this cosmopolitan city had come to stay. Unlike among other bodies, there seemed to be present that calm, settled conviction in the minds of the people which spells final triumph over every obstacle. To all intents and purposes we were as one family.

Luncheon and tea were served in the mission hall. Here was displayed the same spirit, happiness and freedom from conventionality that I had found in Australia. This condition seemed to me to be due to freedom from error and priestcraft, as the result of the glorious gospel preached with power, authority, and conviction. My experience with other bodies is that there is almost invariably a discordant note somewhere; but here, as in Australia, there was nothing but harmony, peaceful joy and satisfaction in what was said and done, under the approval and blessing of the Master.

The evening session on Sunday proved a sort of climax to the conference. A few extra Saints attended this meeting. Brother Greenwood seemed to be fairly wound up, and even the most skeptical would have been bound to realize the power of the Spirit as he delivered truth after truth, making fresh points and driving them home hard and fast. It was over all too soon for me. I wondered what some of our chapel-going people would have thought if they could have heard such a sermon, free from prejudice and open to conviction. An elderly lady gave frequent manifestations of her approval in a most pronounced manner, and I am sure all felt as she did. I gained the impression that Brother Greenwood is a very hard-working man in the cause of righteousness. He is the right man in the right place. One longs to see more of such champions of Christ's church in our midst.

I returned to London with Bishop May and Elder Greenwood and stayed with them that night, leaving the next morning to rejoin my ship. Brother May kept us up until a late hour, interested listeners, too, talking with reference to the things of the kingdom. I felt that the church could not supply a better man to fulfill such an important and difficult mission in London.

Brother Judd with his family of five boys is the soul of contentment and humility in spite of trials and adversities. I feel sure his labor in Enfield will be abundantly blessed.

So strongly did I feel the influence of this conference and the personal charm of our bishop that I took advantage of the first opportunity to run up to London again a few days ago and visit Brother May in his new quarters at Upper Clapton. It was only a flying visit, but well worth the effort.

For the benefit of the Saints in America who perhaps may be anxious to know how things are coming on over here, let me say that as a keen observer I note that while there is no great advance in the work yet they are coming into the light which we pray will soon spread its rays all over this land. I am conscious of the fact that there are centuries of tradition, or custom and history and priestcraft to be surmounted, barriers formidable enough to daunt the bravest. But I believe that in God's own time these will be taken down, and the floodgates of truth and liberty be opened.

The Saints of England are alive to the needs of our country and the importance of their calling, and I feel that they all realize that Saints in America always remember their brethren in England as these brethren remember before the throne of grace the American Saints.

Yours in gospel bonds,

WILLIAM MOORE.

Editors Herald: I do not feel that I could do without the HERALD. I can not read it, as my eyes are poor, but I have it read to me. It is all the comfort I have. I ask the prayers of the Saints. I am almost blind. I am an invalid. I suffer a great deal. I wish some of the elders could come here. I never meet any of the church people. It would be a comfort to me to be with some of them. Brother Johns used to come here, but his age I suppose has stopped his coming.

Wishing you godspeed, I remain,

Yours in Christ,

ANNIE ROBERTS.

HEPLER, KANSAS, July 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: Brother A. T. Gray and myself just closed a three week's meeting at this place, using the district tent. This is a new place. When we first put up the tent the people treated us with all but contempt. A few came out. The crowds increased until the tent was packed night after night. We baptized five on Sunday, all noble people. The Methodist minister lectured against us one Sunday evening. This made us more friends and brought us larger crowds. So the good work goes on.

Your brother,

Editors Herald: This letter leaves us all well and enjoying the sweet blessing of life. I am striving to make heaven my home. We have prayer meeting every Thursday night. I was baptized May 10, 1912. We have preaching nearly every third Sunday. I would like for some of the elders to call; they would be welcome. I am only ten years old.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that my mother may receive her sight. She is the mother of ten children.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I remain,

Editors Herald: The time is at hand when every Saint must be up and doing. It is not enough to be a member of this church, simply obeying the first principles of the gospel; we are admonished to lay aside every weight which besets us and run with patience the race set before us. The weights we as Saints must lay by are our pet sins which retard our progress.

We all have our failings, some in one direction, some in another. Each one knows or should know his own shortcomings, and should seek God that he may be able to run the race of perfection. May our lamps be trimmed and burning at the coming of the Bridegroom, for he surely will come in an hour when we think not. It would seem that his coming is nigh, with envoys crying peace, peace, and many nations preparing for war, and that the time of great trouble spoken of in the scriptures is upon us.

It is a comfort to know that God will extend his mercy to those who are faithful to his cause, and will set up his kingdom. We have been commanded to watch and pray without ceasing. So let us cast aside every weight and press forward to the great goal, the triumph of the Saints.

SADIE BURCH.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, August 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have had the pleasure and comfort of perusing the pages of the HERALD for over forty years. There is joy and peace in the Holy Ghost to read the well-written articles and to have one's faith strengthened by reading the many testimonies of the faithful ones. I often feel we neglect our church papers for the daily newspapers, especially our young people. Surely we are face to face with evidence of the fulfillment of prophecy regarding the perilous times of the latter days, and as holy men and women write as the Spirit of God suggests it is like prophecy, yes, it is food for the soul.

I feel sorry for the younger people of the church. Having raised a family in a large city, I know they have many more temptations than I had when I was young. Still I know the well-directed effort of the Sunday school and Religio workers is a great power for good.

I wish to write of a very happy day I spent at the home of Mr. H. B. Jordan and his estimable wife and our sister in the gospel, Sister Nancy A. Jordan. This was April 27, his seventy-eighth birthday, and her seventieth birthday. Their children planned to make it a very happy day for them, and surely there are no sweeter memories for old and careworn hearts than the loving deeds of children. I heard dear Brother Erisman say a few hours before his death that he had lived seventeen years with his son and daughter-in-law and grandchildren, and that they had not given him a cross word in all that time. What a grand thing to say!

I know this gospel is true. Oh, how many happy hours I have spent in different branches where I have lived! It would be a pleasure to meet each one with whom I have met in the church. May God bless the dear Saints in all the world, is my desire.

Your brother,

Editors Herald: If there is anyone living in the northern or northwestern states who know anybody by the name of Beebe I would be glad if they would send me name and address. My father, Isaac M. Beebe, was born in Iowa. He was a minister of the gospel of the Latter Day Saints. He was sent here on a mission, where he married my mother and settled down for life.

At his death he leaves wife, two sons and two daughters. I am the youngest son. I know the given name of only one of his brothers, that is Calvin Beebe. I presume most all of the older ones are dead, but there must be a younger generation. I would like to learn something of them.

I would be much pleased if a minister could be sent to this neighborhood and a branch organized. The field here is indeed ripe, but there is no one to reap. Satan is leading the people to and fro. Some few are seeking for wisdom, but Satan has led them so far in darkness it would be a struggle to lead them back to the light. I help them all I can. If we had a church established here I think it would do much good.

When Sister Cook was sick another little sunshine girl and I took her a bunch of flowers. It did my heart good to think I could take a sick sister these flowers. We take very much interest in the sunshine work. We have about fifty here in the sunshine band. Our president is Sister Ward. I like her very much. I am glad the older ones take an interest in the children. I was baptized at our conference the twelfth of last October. I am sure God will help us to make the sunshine band more interesting for the children.

Editors Herald: We of the Oakdale Branch are alive in the great work and trying to do our part to reflect the light to our neighbors. We have seventy-four members. We are four and a half miles from the Kingston Branch. They have a good church in the county seat. Their members many of them are growing old and they need help.

We would like for the Saints who contemplate changing location to consider this country. It is a fine farming country, with some good bargains near Kingston and Far West. Far West has a nice church and a membership of about fifty. The Saints are beginning to gather into the regions round about. Three families from Kansas, Illinois and Nodaway, Missouri, located in our branch last spring, who are delighted with the country.

I preached last Sunday night at Far West. We had a good audience of outsiders who are attentive hearers. The bitter feeling manifested here in the thirties is a thing of the past. We are trying to be wise, live our religion, and reflect the light of the gospel. Our desire is that we may make that spiritual growth and development that our loving Father designed we should through the gospel, even to become one in love.

DALBY SPRINGS, TEXAS, August 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: I arrived at this part of the Lone Star State yesterday from Avery, Texas, where our ten-day reunion ended on the second instant. The attendance was better than we had expected. Large crowds met with us at the night meetings, notwithstanding the fact that one of the wings of the Baptist Church started a series of day and night meetings in their place of meeting and from house to house for the purpose, no doubt, of counseling and hindering their membership from attending our services, lest they might taste of the good milk of the word, and fall from grace regardless of their once having been in grace. These hindrances almost compel us to believe that they dare not trust their members out from under their ministerial wings. This prompts the questioning of their threadbare theory, "Once saved never unsaved."

However, dry pastures or short, dry grass for food caused many of their noble souls to cross the fence. These came nightly to hear us. And well might they, when such towering minds as John Harp and J. M. Smith in thunder tones broke the bread of life to them. Another drawing card was the good singing by the choir, while Sister Harp made the organ talk with no uncertain sound. People were heard to remark that it was the best singing and music they had ever heard. Elder B. F. Pollard with just a few helpers had done all in his power to make the reunion a success. Our meetings were spiritual and orderly from first to last, with no disturbance on the grounds.

We have met with a noble band of Saints in this State as well as at Wilburton, Fanshaw, Haileyville, and Manning, Oklahoma. Some of them have kindly remembered our financial needs. We have no complaint to make.

I shall remain here a few days, thence westward, and all being well will be at Haileyville, Oklahoma, in time to attend the reunion and district conference to begin there August 21.

DENVER, COLORADO.

Editors Herald: I am still interested in the good work. While my life has not been as pleasant as it might have been, I am thankful to my heavenly Father for his loving kindness to me.

Denver is a very busy place. One needs to be very careful and prayerful here that he may be kept in the narrow way. There are some noble Saints in the Denver Branch who are doing all they can to help in God's work. Some are sleeping, I am sorry to say, but we trust that all may become collaborators together with God.

Brother W. H. Kelley has been with us for the past week. He has preached three times and given us good advice, which will be of great good to us if heeded. May God bless the dear brother who has spent his whole life in this work. May the Saints remember him in their prayers that he may be blessed while he lives, for surely he has done a great work in his day.

We ask the Saints to remember the work in Denver. Let us pray for one another for the day is fading fast. And let us all who can respond to the calls made through the HERALD for help. Let us not withhold that with which the Lord has blessed us. Let us strive to please God and then he will hear our prayers. The Master said the Lord had not left him alone because he always did those things that pleased the Father.

May God help us all to do his work and may the blessings of heaven attend every branch and those in charge, is the prayer of

Your brother,
G. T. WALLING.

FORT TOWSON, OKLAHOMA, August 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: Brother J. M. Smith has visited us here. We had some grand preaching. Three baptized; others are near the kingdom. Elder Smith is an able defender of the faith. He has gone to Avery, Texas, to attend the reunion.

We hope that he or some one else can come here before the interest dies out.

A man came to us recently to investigate our claims. I am sure he and his wife are not very far from the kingdom.

The gospel story is grand. It is a treat to have had the opportunity of hearing it again. I have been wondering why the people do not come to hear. Many who come say it is the best they have heard. Still they are unwilling to take upon them the name of the Lord. This gospel comes not in word only but in power and in much assurance.

It fills my soul with unspeakable joy to read the spiritual letters and the good articles in the HERALD. There is much cheer and strength therein.

I am still in the conflict, and never felt more determined in my life to see the end of a consecrated life. Pray for me that I may prove faithful. Your sister in the faith,

MRS. M. M. AARONS.

DAVIDSON, OKLAHOMA, August 4, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Bootman-Nunery debate is now history. It came about in this way: Brother S. W. Simmons had done considerable preaching and had baptized some of the Baptist members. The Baptists challenged him to discuss church propositions. Brother Hubert Case, having the work in charge, asked me if I would be the debater. The Baptist people had selected J. N. Penick of Martin, Tennessee, to represent them, but just before time for the discussion he notified them he could not come, so they selected A. Nunery, editor of the Baptist Worker, Granite, Oklahoma.

The debate began July 21, holding over ten sessions, five to each proposition. Mr. Nunery came with no indorsements, and his brethren would not indorse him as a gentleman, only as a debater. He claimed he had had one hundred debates. I do not call him a debater, only a mud-dauber.

All his evidence was from Utah. He only had one book against our work, that was written by Doctor Folk, who had spent some time in Utah obtaining evidence from those polygamous wives of Brigham Young. That was his stock in trade. He is not a well-informed man, and failed to answer any of the scriptural arguments. He was ignorant of the teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon. When he could not find section 132 of the Utah Book of Covenants in our book, he was lost. I laid the four volumes of church history, the Inspired Translation, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants on his table and told him to use them against me, but he would not touch them. He took the turkey buzzard trail all the time on our propositions.

When our proposition was closed he was convinced that he had made a failure. He rolled up his sleeves and told me I could have any kind of a game I wanted, that he was open for any engagement. I told him to be quiet and we would have a nice, quiet debate, and that maybe I would baptize him when we got through.

In his first speech on his proposition he used the very same scripture and took the same position as did Elder Chism of the nonprogressive Christians when I met him last December. In seeking to establish his church, he took the position that there had been no apostasy. I had eight Baptist histories, all but one admitting that there had been an apostasy. With the statements of their reformers, Jesus Christ, apostles, and prophets, I was able to produce evidence to the satisfaction of my opponent and the large body of people present that there had been an apostasy. He dropped that issue when I placed a chart on the wall explaining Nebuchadnezzar's dream, carrying the subject through to Revelation, chapters 12, 13, and 17.

Mr. Nunery defended once in grace, always in grace, and total depravity, stating that children were born with a lie in their mouths. When we used the scriptures against this doctrine, he denied that they taught such doctrine. I read from their catechism where they teach that infants are damned and never can be saved, that is, those who are not elect infants.

He accused me of believing in a God that had body and parts, and said that was a Mormon God. From the scriptures I proved that God has a body. I then read from the Baptist creed what they taught of God; that is, that God has neither body, parts, nor passions. I used no books against them only their own except two, The History of Religious Denominations, and the Bible.

There was a very large attendance all through the discussion, people driving as far as twenty miles and camping on the grounds: When we closed, my opponent would not speak to me. His moderator left his seat when I was talking several times and returned when time was called. We are well satisfied with the results. We baptized fourteen of the best people in the community. As Mary said to the angel, My soul doth magnify the Lord for his loving kindness and his condescension in recognizing such a weak mortal as I. The Saints rejoice greatly and many friends have been made to the cause.

Brother Simmons has done a good work in these parts, and is known all over the country as Uncle Sam. He first planted the gospel seed here. Like Paul we can say, We have planted and Apollos watereth, but God giveth the increase. To him be all the glory, who has given us victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Hopefully in the conflict,

W. P. BOOTMAN.

Southern Wisconsin

The past week we have been holding meetings in the Methodist Episcopal church in Union Center, a village on the north-western line between Madison and Elroy. The attendance has been good, the interest seemed to be on the increase. Last evening the church was full, when we had the best attendance of the series. The choir and organist of the Methodist church assisted us in the services, which was a great help. The regular pastor here was taken ill some time ago and went away for treatment. A new pastor will be appointed by their conference which convenes soon.

Brother A. E. Gratz and myself are being kindly cared for by Brother Noah Johnson and wife, whose righteous lives and influence for good were the means of our obtaining the church for services. Brother Johnson is known as a man of God, here, and has not failed to let his light shine.

Before coming here we held open-air services on the lawn of Brother A. J. Fisher, at Loyd, with fine attendance and interest for two weeks. While there we baptized Brother Fisher's daughter, Joy. These people are rejoicing in the fact that all of their children who have arrived to the years of accountability are now in the fold. Mr. Harvey Medley, a promising young school-teacher, son-in-law of Brother and Sister Fisher, who has been teaching some time in North Dakota and is visiting at Loyd, was convinced of the truth of the gospel, and bore testimony to it in our prayer meeting at the confirmation services.

In July we held services in a schoolhouse near Blanchardville, called the Yellowstone District, with fine attendance and interest. We were asked to come again in September when the farmers were through with their busy season. We also visited Sister Janus at Mineral Point, where we were allowed to preach in the Methodist church near there one evening.

We would like to attend part of either the Plano or Madison reunion.

When we think of the calls for labor in the harvest field, we are loath to leave the work. However, will try to attend one of these reunions part of the time, and visit loved ones at home.

There is a prospect for splendid crops of every kind in Wisconsin, for which all seem thankful. When we hear of wars and rumors of wars abroad, we hope our blessed land may still be kept free from such dissolution.

Still hoping for the good to triumph, I am

Yours in gospel bonds,

LESTER O. WILDERMUTH.

UNION CENTER, WISCONSIN, August 13, 1914.

Oklahoma

Brother W. E. Peak and the writer are holding a very interesting tent meeting in this place, attendance and attention good.

We just closed the Eagle City reunion last Sunday night, which was one of the best ever held in Oklahoma. The noble little band of Saints in that place were commended of the Lord for their sacrifice in making the meetings a success. The meetings were well attended, and the spirit of unity prevailed.

All the new missionaries seem very much pleased with their new field. Brother Baker had to leave the field on account of sickness, which we very much regret. Brother Bootman also is to leave September 1.

Busy and hopeful in the Master's cause,

HUBERT CASE.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

There has been an increase of attendance at the Sunday school during the month of August. On the 2d there were present 828, on the 9th 834, on the 16th 971, with 81 teachers, 70 visitors and 30 officers, juniors 120, normal 25. At the recent business meeting, Sister Abbie Horton was chosen historian, Mrs. Charles Keown, superintendent home department. There are eight classes in the normal department under the leadership of Sister W. H. Deam, who will have charge of the graduation exercises of the first class on Sunday, the 23d.

The Religio recently has had an attendance of about one hundred and fifty. The home class work seems to be in good condition, new classes being formed from time to time, which present the most encouraging features of the society,—order, interest, and unity.

The Woman's Auxiliary maintains its good standing in keeping up its regular meetings and discussions. At its last session through the earnest efforts of Sister A. L. Yingling, chairman of the parent-teacher association here, a very important project was put forth for the active encouragement of the sisters in a work bringing greater help to young mothers and their little ones.

The Sunday morning prayer meeting has an adult attendance of about seventy. The afternoon prayer meetings have brought out a goodly number of both old and young, who have for obvious reasons been requested to meet together, the parents with the children, especially at sacrament services.

The gifts of healing, faith and angelic ministrations have been in our midst, although we regret that several have been sick and afflicted. Prayers have been offered for these.

As Saints we have been greatly blessed of late by the earnest efforts of Elders Curtis, Garrett, Parsons, and Sheldon, and by the excellent editorials and articles in the HERALD and Ensign. Our hearts have been stirred to their best aspirations. Many on the outside of the fold have also been wrought upon and lifted to higher standards of life.

The Saints are not alone in seeing the fulfillment of scripture at this crisis. Senator Brown of Nebraska made an earnest speech at the Chautauqua held here lately and mentioned among the appalling incidents of the times the grave situation of the chief of the Nation in the sad demise of his wife, and the sudden unfolding of the war cloud in Europe. "The kings," said he, "can start the war, but the people do the fighting. Something is wrong. Why is there not power enough in the Christian world to perpetuate peace? We Americans are not much above those countries. Selfishness is at the base of all the trouble." Conservation of human life and the situation in Europe were the chief themes of the speakers here.

The local option movement is still alive, and in fact the wets are contesting the city vote. And now the battle for the county vote is on for the 22d.

"So, betwixt peace and war man's life is cast, Yet hath he dreamed of perfect peace at last."

Remember us, dear Saints, at the center place. Our sick and afflicted need your prayers.

In the faith of the new covenant,
ABBIE A. HORTON.

Saints' Children's Home

To the Saints and Friends of Our Children's Home: We regret very much that it becomes necessary to so frequently call attention to the financial needs of the home. We are behind for the month of July and have nothing in the treasury to meet the running expenses for August. We have tried to emphasize the idea of the friends of the home contributing regularly each month, so far as it is practicable for them to do, and for the convenience of those contributing regularly we have had prepared monthly contribution cards which will be sent to any address in any quality.

Brother A. M. Fyrando, bishop's agent for the Little Sioux District, is using the monthly contribution card system in a systematic way. He distributes the cards and collects the amount from the various branches in the district, then notifies our office of the number and amounts subscribed on these cards. Other districts or branches will be furnished these cards upon request, as also any individual who wishes to subscribe as a regular contributor to the Children's Home. Contributions in other ways will be appreciated.

While we dislike to burden the friends of the home, yet one brother writes that he is desirous of knowing the conditions from time to time. There are many interesting and worthy things which would be of interest and profit to write in connection with the mission of the home, and we trust that ere long those in charge of the institution will publish a department in some one or more of our church periodicals. There is call for publicity along these lines.

In conclusion, dear Saints and friends, do not neglect to support your home for the children in its needs each month.

JOSEPH ROBERTS, Treasurer.

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a.

31, 1914. Had she lived till August 9 she would have reached the ripe old age of 91 years. She was a widow for many years, her husband, Jacob Adamson, having died in 1880. She was born in White County, Illinois, in 1823. Moved with her parents to Missouri, where she was married. She was the mother of 11 children, 7 of whom are living, viz: Emma J. Roseberry and W. H., Pope Valley, E. F. and J. M., Lower Lake, California, Mrs. M. E. Thomas, Visalia, California, C. W., Watsonville, California, Rena Tomlinson, San Francisco. She and husband united with the church in Iowa, where they moved soon after their marriage. Later they went to Utah but soon became dissatisfied with the practices of the church. They came to California in 1857, settling near Petaluma. It was here they met the elders of the Reorganization, and after becoming thoroughly convinced that they represented the original church renewed their membership and were baptized into the Reorganization. Sister Adamson was an invalid for many years, the result of an accident, but never wavered in her faith. She lived the life of a good, consistent Christian and has borne faithful testimony to the truth of the latter-day work. Funeral services conducted at the home of her daughter, Emma J. Roseberry, by Elder Parkin, of San Francisco. The services were very impressive and well received. Her remains were interred in the Pope Valley Cemetery, her four sons acting as pall bearers. A beautiful floral tribute with the word "mother" was placed on the grave by her children, who mourn the loss of a loving and devoted mother.

TEAL.—Brother Nathan Teal died at his home in the town of Miller, La Salle County, Illinois, Thursday morning, August 13, 1914, aged 66 years, 6 months, 19 days. He was a great sufferer until the end came, when he fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle. The funeral services were held in the Saints' chapel, Mission, Illinois, August 16, in the presence of a large concourse of neighbors and friends, the address being delivered by F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois, from Romans 14: 7, 8. Deceased was born January 25, 1848, in Dutchess County, New York, his parents removing to La Salle County, Illinois, while Nathan was a child. He was united in marriage to Miss Sabina Godwin, of the town of Miller, La Salle County, Illinois, April 7, 1885. To this union was born one daughter, Mrs. Myrtle Clason, of Miller, Illinois. He leaves to mourn his absence his faithful wife and daughter, one brother, Morgan Teal, of Miller, Illinois, three sisters, Mrs. Thomas Hougas and Mrs. Elias Hayer, of Miller, Illinois; and Mrs. John Hougas, of Lamoni, Iowa. Brother Teal united with the church in the spring of 1897, and was subsequently ordained to the office of priest, and he was presiding priest of the branch at the time he died. He was a spiritual-minded man, and loved to talk upon the subject of the religion of Jesus Christ above all things else. His was an abiding faith in God, and he was ready to respond when the summons came for him to join the ransomed throng on the other side of life.

The September Century

There is great variety in the September Century, great variety and great bounty. There are no less than nine short stories, the scenes of which are laid in places as far apart as ancient Paris and modern Mexico. Hilaire Belloc starts a series of six flashlight scenes from the French Revolution, upon which he is an authority. Arnold Bennett and Albert Paine continue their travel series, "From the log of the Velsa" and "The car that went abroad." William Winter gives the history of the various representations of Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," and Professor Edward Alsworth Ross writes on "The Hebrews of Eastern Europe in America." Arthur Christopher Benson and Robert Haven Schaufler furnish essays upon new artists, literature, and life in general. Judith Cladel gives us more of Rodin's Notebook, with pictures from his sculpture, and James Oppenheim strikes a new note in American poetry with his "Songs for the new age." The authors represented with short stories are Maria Christina Mena, Eden Phillpotts, G. L. Teeple, Margaret Dodge, Ian Hay, Donn Byrne, George Bronson-Howard, George Weston, and Sarah Comstock. There are also such poets as Louis Untermeyer, Grace Hazard Conkling, Arthur

Davison Ficke, and Margaret Cobb,—the last-named being a California mountain woman, discovered by Jack London.

Book Reviews

EDUCATING THE CHILD AT HOME.—It is the old-fashioned way in education—with a difference—which Ella Frances Lynch forcefully recommends and clearly explains in her recently published book, Educating the Child at Home, one that will be read with joy by those who distrust present methods in elementary education and complain of the general barrenness of results; for no writer has more effectively summarized the severe criticisms of our educational system than have been expressed by competent men of all sorts—business men and educators, ministers, physicians, and many others. The book is far from being primarily a criticism. For, in the first place, the author is tolerant of necessary evils, and in the second place she is practical and constructive, setting forth duties and showing how the much-needed work may be done. Whatever the difficulties with which the common schools have to contend, there is no insuperable obstacle, she thinks, in the way of simplifying the course of study, disencumbering it of pretentious nonessentials; nor can there be any necessity of herding children together in large groups for long hours to do what could be done as well, and much better, during briefer periods and in smaller groups, without the need of more teachers. But the school, the author tells us in no uncertain terms, is for young children an exceedingly poor substitute for the home. Let mothers lay aside, she urges, the notion that buildings and apparatus make education effective, and let them cease to shirk their real responsibilities by turning over their children to the care of an underpaid, overworked teacher, who has to teach what, and how, the authorities prescribe. Let the mothers teach their own children in the good old way, with a difference—the difference suggested by common sense and educational experience. Just how this may be done the author shows in detail with respect to the elementary studies, reading, spelling (the modern stumblingblock), writing, and arithmetic, on which last she has written a particularly worth-while chapter.

Spend Your Holiday on a Western Ranch

Out in the ranch country of the West, around Sheridan, Wyoming, or in the Cody Country, where Buffalo Bill founded the town of Cody, or in the Black Hills of South Dakota, the practice has grown for the good ranch people there to provide for Summer boarders and I don't know any more interesting and pleasurable way of spending one's vacation with the wife and children, than to go out on one of those ranches and ride and fish for trout (great fishing out there), and eat good, plain, substantial food, and sleep—my! how one does sleep after days spent exercising in that wonderful mountain air. This "Ranch Vacation" is a novel idea, but very easy to accomplish, for I can tell you all about what you can do and how to do it and what it will cost and what you can get and all about it. Just write and let me suggest a plan for you to follow.

THE EUROPEAN WAR

The whole world is appalled at the terrible spectacle of the present European war. Sudden, and at this time unlooked for, this general conflict and carnage is a shock to all. It rudely upsets peace plans and postpones, if it does not definitely set aside, the day of universal arbitration and international brotherhood. Yet, for this purpose have the nations of Europe been arming. That war, for which preparation has gone on in feverish competition, should have come even at an unexpected moment should not be a thing of great surprise. This war is none the less appalling, however, on account of its sudden appearance. If anything, by its very abruptness is its terribleness made more evident.

The idea of the advocate of arms has been that the preventive of war lies only in armaments so strong that nations would fear to attack each other. Instead of averting war in the present instance, their very preparedness rushed the nations of Europe at the throats of each other at once, and with the grip of death. This same preparedness is likely to prolong a war that would go down in history as the bloodiest and most devastating known to the present civilization.

Every war has causes, immediate and remote. The immediate causes of the present European war are at once evident. The remote are not so apparent. As has been the case in most great conflicts, causes deep-seated have subtly contributed to this war. Leading among these are political, commercial and racial causes.

The failure of Serbia to make satisfactory answer to the ultimatum of Austria, following the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, the Duchess of Hohenberg, precipitated the war. This incident, however, was only the spark which set off an explosion certain to come in time, and for which Europe was well primed.

The Serbs are Slavic, and closely related by blood to the Russians. Less than half the Serbs live under the Servian flag. The rest are Austro-Hungarian subjects, and constitute near half the Austro-

Hungarian population. For centuries the Slavs, including Russia, and the Teutons, including Germany and the ruling powers of Austria and Hungary, the last two named united under a common crown but with separate governments, have struggled for control in eastern and southeastern Europe. Russia has encouraged the Pan-Slavic ideal, which includes Slavic expansion to the Adriatic and the Mediterranean, while Austria and Hungary, backed by Germany, have used their influence to keep down Slavic union, and to extend Teuton control to the Mediterranean.

Germany and Russia are not alone in their ambitions in the Balkan Peninsula. England has interests affected by the control of this strategical territory. The Balkan states, Slavic, with Serbia, perhaps, as the pivot, are directly in line and form a gateway between the Occident and the Orient. A great power occupying this peninsula would be in a position of extraordinary influence, if not in absolute control of the commerce of the Mediterranean, the Suez Canal, and future railway routes through Persia to India and China. Slavic control, therefore, would be to the disadvantage politically and commercially of Teuton, and vice versa, while England would suffer at the hands of either, and especially at the hands of Germany, her commercial rival. Control by England would thwart the ambitions of both Germany and Russia. Any developments in the Balkan states would, then, be vital to each of these powers.

It is little wonder, therefore, that all Europe followed the late Balkan wars with more or less ambition and jealousy. Serbia's contention for an outlet to the Adriatic was denied at the close of the first of these wars, when Austria compelled her to withdraw from Durrazzo, and when Albania was established as a separate state. Serbia developed unexpected strength in the second Balkan war, out of which she came for the second time flushed with triumph, and inflamed with national pride. The Greater Serbia ideal became a passion; and the triumph of Pan-Serbism meant the breaking up of the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary, and of course the end of German hope in the Balkans.

This Servian ambition for the expansion of Serbian influence and power created among the Serbs, especially in Bosnia and Herzegovin, a few years ago annexed by Austria, and Serbian in population, pro-Austrian demonstration, which Austria claims was encouraged by Servian officials, and which culminated in the assassination of Francis Ferdinand and wife. Austria in her ultimatum to Servia sought to strike a body blow to put down this Pan-Serbian, Pan-Slavic agitation. Servia conceding everything else declined to arrange an official investigation "in which Austrian representatives would be allowed to participate." Holding Servia's reply to be "filled with the spirit of dishonesty," Austria immediately declared war.

Russia, actuated by the common ties of blood, and perhaps by her dream of southern expansion and an outlet to the Mediterranean, mobilized for the defense of her Serbian cousin. Germany, having years before and in her own interests created the triple alliance, including Germany, Austria and Italy, as the ally of Austria, declared war on Russia. France, as a party to the triple entente, formed to checkmate Germany and the triple alliance, and including England, France and Russia, immediately following the declaration of war on Russia became engaged with Germany on her eastern border. Protection of the French coast against German attack, German disregard of the neutrality of Belgium, and threatened menace to her own naval supremacy drew England into the conflict against Germany. Japan as an ally of England undertook the expulsion of Germany from China. Belgium was involved in the maintenance of her neutrality. Montenegro, Slavic, joined Servia. Hence the leading nations of Europe together with several of lesser power and with Japan of the Far East became involved in what will in all probability be the greatest war of modern times.

As already indicated, the interests at stake in this war are considered by the powerful nations most interested vital to their existence as such. With the Balkans under the control of the Teuton the Russian feels that he would be cut off from those of his own blood, and from his logical expansion to the Mediterranean. Austro-German control would, he thinks, postpone if it did not settle the question of Teuton or Slavic supremacy. Slavic victory to the Teuton means not only Slavic control of the Balkans, but also the overthrow of Austria-Hungary, and dire danger to Germany. Control of the Balkan Peninsula by either would hamper the interests of England in the far East, while German victory in Belgium would put Germany in control of the North Sea, and bring to an end England's supremacy on the Seven Seas. English control in the Balkans would thwart the ambitions of both Teuton and Slav in the direction of the most coveted prize in Europe.

To these political and commercial interests are added religious fervor and racial and national hatreds and prejudices long established and ever enduring. Teuton and Slavic hatred is measured only by the contact of these peoples. Anglo-Saxon and German differences are fanned to a white heat by the war talk of recent years. The Germans resent what they consider social ostracism and the contempt of their neighbors. France smarts under her defeat in the Franco-Prussian war, and desires the reacquisition of Alsace-Lorraine. With the Greek orthodox church of Russia goes the ambition to control Constantinople and the Slavs to the Adriatic. The Roman Church and kindred persuasions are as determined that the control of the Balkan Peninsula and Constantinople shall come under western influence.

Thus do the ambitions of Europe call upon her prejudices and passions to carry to the bitter end age-old struggles for power and supremacy. And thus are laid in Europe the kindlings of a consuming fire, which, under full sway, may be extinguished only by exhaustion. J. F. GARVER.

THREE KEYS TO POWER

(Address by Elbert A. Smith before the General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society at Independence, Missouri, Thursday evening, April 2. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

Our subject to-night is, "Three keys to power." Power means dominion. God wants man to have dominion. He created man and gave him "dominion over the fish of the sea, over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing." Power means efficiency; and God wants all men to be efficient. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

I am sure that the average normal man (and I use the term man in the generic sense, to include woman), desires power in his particular line of activity. Whether it shall be as a preacher or storekeeper or farmer or housekeeper or politician. He desires power and efficiency in his particular line of activity. It may be that there are some so constituted that they do not care for power, and do not care to exercise themselves to become efficient. If there is such a young man present I will tell you what he is. Notice, and see if you can make the application.

Not long ago I saw three little boys playing ball in the street. There was the pitcher getting ready, winding his arm up to fan the batter. And there was the batter all ready to strike the ball. And the catcher was pounding his hand into the mit. They were all occupying honorable positions, and they intended to be efficient. But there was still another. I came near forgetting him. I saw a fourth little boy, an insignificant, undersized little fellow who stood behind the catcher at some distance and ran after the balls that nobody else wanted to chase. Do you know what they called him?

I was a little curious to find out what position he filled. And so I said to those boys, What do you call that fellow? This is the pitcher, and here the batter and yonder the catcher, but what is that fellow? And they looked after him and said, "That? Why, he's pigtail."

That is what you will be all your life if you do not care to have power and efficiency in your particular line of work.

PURPOSE AND POWER COORDINATED MEAN SUCCESS

Every success depends on a proper coordination of power and purpose. These two, united along right lines, make the most valuable asset that an individual can have, the most valuable asset that the church can have. Bishop Kelley will report certain material assets that the church has; but the most valuable assets this church has are not houses and lands, but men and women with purpose and with power along right lines.

Here is an attribute of Deity. God tells us in Isaiah, "I have purposed it, I will also do it." In Deity are resident purpose to will and power to execute. But as we become Godlike and in proportion as we become Godlike we though human can say, I have purposed it, I will also do it.

THE INNER MAN

Purpose and power are attributes of the inner man, that inner man that the Apostle Paul mentions when he says, "To be strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man."

They are not necessarily qualities of the outer man. I wish I could impress upon your minds the dignity of that eternal individuality that we have termed the inner man.

If I were to take you over to Kansas City or yonder to San Francisco or New York City and point to the innumerable telephone and telegraph wires that center in any one of these great cities, and should tell you that a single individual receives every message that comes in over all those wires and sends out every message that goes out, and in addition to that is the chief executive, and occupies in the judicial department and in the legislative department in that city, you would say that it is impossible.

But Professor Halleck tells us in his work on psychology that there are more vibrant nerves centering in the brain of man than there are wires leading into any city in the world. And one individual, the inner man, dwells there in the brain and receives every message that comes in over the sensory nerves and sends out every message that goes out over the motory nerves; and in addition he sits like a king on his throne, under the arched dome of the cranium God has built, and reasons and judges and legislates and enacts. And then to think that individuals possessing such high honor that even God himself should send a messenger to that court saying, "Come, and let us reason together," to think that a man thus exalted will abdicate that throne at the behest of drink or drugs or passion or prejudice! No wonder the Apostle Paul said, Let us be men, let us acquit ourselves like men.

A GOOD MOTTO FOR LATTER DAY SAINTS

I have said these attributes are not necessarily attributes of the outer man. No doubt the inner man is influenced by physical conditions, but we have all seen cases where a strong will has carried a frail and even a crippled body a long way on the road towards success.

We read in the Bible about that great giant that was slain by David, six cubits and a span high,—a great big man. No, he was a little man in a great big body. Then we read in history about that little man, General Grant. No, he was a big man in a small body. We are told in his history that he was of Scotch descent, and the motto of his clan over in Aberdeenshire was, "Stand fast, stand firm, stand sure." Grant himself tells us that one of his superstitions was when he started to go anywhere or to do anything never to stop and never to turn back until he had accomplished his mission. When Grant graduated from West Point he was the twenty-first man in a class of twenty-nine. There were twenty young men above him who gave more promise than he; but he was the one who never stopped and never turned back.

That is a good motto for Latter Day Saints. We have started right, let us never stop and never turn back. That was the motto the Apostle Paul another great warrior adopted. He was greater than Grant, because he served a greater cause. He says, Forgetting past things, I press forward.

Now what are these three keys to power we have in mind? Power is an inherent quality. It must be developed. It must be unlocked. It exists in every human soul to a greater or lesser degree. All men have power. Most of them have powers that they are not conscious of. How shall we unlock and develop these powers? We are told that men have power in and of themselves to bring to pass much righteousness.

CURRENT EVENTS*SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

WOMAN SUFFRAGE REJECTED.—The Swedish first chamber, on July 23, rejected a woman suffrage bill which had previously been passed by the second chamber.

LUDLOW VERDICT.—On July 25, findings of the court martial in the trial of men connected with what is known as the Ludlow massacre, and occurring during the late labor war in Colorado, was made public. The defendants were acquitted.

PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATIONS.—President Wilson has submitted to the Senate the nomination of Attorney General James McReynolds for member of the United States Supreme Court, and that of Thomas Watt Gregory, of Texas, for attorney general.

"TIN CAN TRUST."—The United States Government is at Chicago conducting an inquiry into the management of the American Can Company, popularly known as the "Tin Can Trust," and extensively interested in the manufacture of tin cans. The Government charges constraint of trade. Dissolution is asked.

IN MEXICO.—Following the resignation of Provisional President Carbajal and the withdrawal of the Federalists from Mexico City, General Obregon of the Constitutionals marched into the city. General Carranza entered the capitol on July 20 as provisional president, and with the understanding that the Federalists would disarm. The occupation of Mexico City by the Constitutionals has been marked by the absence of excesses or executions. The troops were required to put down an uprising in Mexico City against the circulation of bank notes and currency issued by the new government. Villa insists on the Torreon agreement: A conference of military chiefs to designate a provisional president, who, under the constitution, could not succeed himself, and who would call an election. Villa is said to be in control of several northern states, and to be recruiting men and gathering munitions in preparation for any break between himself and Carranza. It is reported that Carranza has sent General Obregon to Sonora to adjust local troubles and to confer with Villa.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Reports from the scene of war are conflicting and at first appearance more or less unreliable. Messages are censored, and in many instances prejudicial. It is evident, however, that the allied forces have slowly, though stubbornly, retired from before the severe attack of the Germans in Belgium and France. Some ground is said to have been regained. France seems to have suffered reverses in Alsace. Heavy losses have been sustained on both sides. The allies are rushing reinforcements to the front. Russia has reached her western border with a large advance army, and seems to be advancing unchecked into Prussia and Austria-Hungary. Some reports indicate that German soldiers have been withdrawn from Belgium to block this Russian advance. Namur is said to be occupied by the Germans, though some of the nine forts may yet be held by the Belgians. Servia continues invariably victorious against Austria. An English vessel has sunk the German warship Kaiser Wilhelm Der Grosse off the west coast of Africa. Five to eleven German warships are reported sunk by the British fleet in the North Sea. On July 23 Japan declared war on Germany. Diplomatic relations have been broken off between Japan and Austria. Japan promises to restore Kiao-Chau to China, and to preserve the territorial integrity of China, and will likely, for the present, at least, confine her activities to the China seas. It is feared that Turkey may enter the war as an ally of Germany, in which instance Italy, Greece and Bulgaria would be expected to oppose her on the side of the allies.

EXPONENT DISCONTINUED.—By reference to the miscellany department of this issue of the HERALD it will be noted in the announcement of Elder G. R. Wells, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, that the Exponent is to be discontinued with the October issue, and for reasons as stated. It is to be regretted that this action seems necessary.

A HEAVY HAND.—Vengeance swift and certain follows war. Already Europe feels the heavy hand of retribution. The wheels of industry stand idle; crops fall to the earth unharvested. German newspapers are reported from London to be calling for governmental alleviation of the distress of the unemployed from "the flood of misery which is slowly and surely inundating the empire."

CONTRAST AT NAUVOO.—The Nauvoo Rustler, August 25, makes reference to the Reorganized Church reunion, held at Nauvoo August 14 to 23, saying among other things:

The visitors had an enjoyable visit to old Nauvoo, and want to come again. They tell us that they were royally entertained. Our people found them pleasant and affable, and easy to please. . . . A vote of thanks was extended to the city of Nauvoo for the use of the park, the excellent lights and other splendid accommodations. The visitors were highly pleased with their visit to Nauvoo.

In this return of the Saints to Nauvoo we note a striking contrast to conditions of earlier days. Once mercilessly and without reason driven by a crazed mob from the city of Nauvoo, we are now royally entertained, granted liberal use of the accommodations of the city, and are found to be pleasant, affable, and easy to please. Without emphasizing the unpleasantness of the past, we congratulate all parties on the congeniality of the present.

THE IRON KEY OF WORK

First of all I will mention the iron key of work. That may be an unpopular principle to suggest. People say that work is a curse, that it was the primal curse; but man never made a greater mistake. From the beginning, God intended men to work. The Bible tells us that he created a garden and set man in it to tend the garden and to dress it before the curse was pronounced upon him. The curse was excessive toil. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." Excessive, uncongenial toil is the curse that has come upon man.

Proper labor is a blessing. Emerson has said, "Every man's task is his life preserver." It is a curse when we can not get work. It is a curse when we are unable to work. But the greatest curse of all is when we do not want to work.

There is no road to success excepting by the road of labor. No man can be happy and healthy who is not interested in some profitable form of labor, either mental or physical. There is no short course, there is no royal road to success. There is only the one way of honest work.

I remember when I was a boy how we heard about one boy who scattered his pennies along on the railroad track, and when the engine came along the wheels flattened the pennies all out and he passed them off for twenty-five cent pieces. And so we scattered our pennies along the rails; but we never made it work.

We say that was childish. But no more childish than the human race was for many centuries. They were seeking some mysterious process by which they could transmute the baser metals into gold. They never made it work; but by and by they found that by true hard labor, with the aid of sunshine and rain, they could transmute black soil into ten-dollar gold pieces by way of the harvest field.

THE SILVER KEY OF STUDY

The second key I wish to mention is the silver key of study. We are commanded that we should study all good books. That we should become acquainted with laws, governments, with nations and kingdoms, with things that have been and are, and with things that are to be. Our people should study not only the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, but they should also keep in touch with the writings, ancient and modern, of men on vital lines of thought. I believe that Latter Day Saint students should watch the lists of new books that are published by the leading publishing houses of the world. Thus they may occasionally pick up a book that will stimulate their thought and that will lead them out along broader fields of thought and investigation.

But in this study we should always be guided by the Holy Spirit, because we are told in the Book of Covenants that we should seek knowledge not only by study but also by faith. These two principles are united,—study and faith.

In the past centuries, here stood the schoolhouse on the hill and yonder stood the church on the hill. People went to the schoolhouse six days in the week seeking knowledge; and they went to the church one day to serve God.

We want to bring the two together and carry the spirit of prayer into the school and the spirit of investigation into the church. Seek learning by study and also by prayer.

THE GOLDEN KEY OF FAITH

Hence the third and last key I mention is the golden key of faith. It may be that some of the young people think they are a little too big to spend their time in prayer. But let me tell you, the great men of the past have been men of prayer,—men like Abraham Lincoln, who in the hour of the Nation's peril went to God in prayer and received divine direction. It is not the little men who pray; it is the great men who come in touch with God. There is a power in the principle of faith that stirs men and stirs the world.

Sometime ago I read the history of old John Brown, written by his son. And he said that when his father went down to Harper's Ferry on that wild adventure he did not expect to be immediately successful. But he purposed to strike a blow that would attract the attention of this Nation to existing conditions; and he had faith that once their attention was attracted they would change those conditions. And so he went and died, and in just a little while armed men were marching by two's and by scores and by hundreds and by thousands, and they were singing, "John Brown's body lies a moldering in the grave, but his soul goes marching on."

It is the souls of men of faith that go marching on. The lives of such men move the world.

I know that we come in contact with people frequently who have concluded that it is unscientific to have faith and to pray. During the past twenty years or more that conception took a strong hold in educational circles—that science in some way had discredited religion. But I am here to-night to tell you that the greatest scientists hold to the thought that science is in harmony with religion and not opposed to it.

SCIENCE POSITIVELY AFFIRMS CREATIVE POWER

I have here a selection from a speech made by Lord Kelvin, one of the greatest of modern scientists. This speech was made before the Christian Association of University College, London, in 1902, and you will find it reported in the book called, Christian Apologetics,<sup>1</sup> on pages 25 and 26.

Lord Kelvin says: "Science positively affirms creative power." Now when you take up your Bible and read as the first great postulate that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, remember that one of the greatest scientists says that "science positively affirms creative power." On that point science and religion are one.

He continues, "It is not in dead matter that we live and move and have our being, but in the creating and directing power which science compels us to accept as an article of belief. . . . If you think strong enough you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion. You will find science not antagonistic but helpful to religion."

Remember what Lord Kelvin said, "If you think strong enough you will be forced to believe in God, which is the foundation of all religion." It is those people who have turned one or two pages who conclude that science and religion are in conflict, but if you study long enough you will see a divine harmony.

The next quotation is from Sir Oliver Lodge, president of the British Association for the advancement of Science, in his presidential address at the convention of 1913. The lecture is called "Continuity," and was reviewed in the HERALD by Elder John W. Rushton some time ago.<sup>2</sup> Sir Oliver Lodge says, "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity, and in the reality of things."

So we have the utterance of these two men and of many others,<sup>3</sup> who confirm us in the thought that science and religion are in harmony, and that faith and prayer are not in conflict with any known principle of science.

So we present for your consideration these principles, any one of them sufficient to furnish the basis for an entire sermon. These three keys, work, study, and faith, will open the door so that we can exercise the power that God has given us. But we can not succeed if we use only one, or if we use only two of them. It is folly for us to study and pray unless we are willing to work. The three must be used together. No combination that omits one of them will succeed.

So in conclusion we will say, "That which God has joined together, let no man put asunder."

BEARING FRUIT

(Sermon by Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, June 21, 1914. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

As an introduction to what may be said, we quote the language of Jesus, found in the fifteenth chapter of John: "Herein is my father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." This instruction was given to the children of our heavenly Father who lived at that time and who had accepted the faith taught by Jesus. It was expected that their lives would abound in such fruits, which others might see, that these also might be led to glorify the name of God.

And when we read the language, "that ye bring forth much fruit," let not any of us think that it simply means fruit of the temporal things we may gather in this life and thus bring and present before the people. To bring forth fruit in our lives, meet for the Master's kingdom, is to live in accordance with a higher and better law than simply gathering what we can in this world in a temporal way.

The thought is further illustrated by Jesus in the instruction: "Take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." There is a higher and better way of building than simply building with what we may receive in a selfish way; building for the present only, and without a thought of duty or right; such must pass away in due time, and there will be no good results to follow the one who has thus builded when he seeks a reward on the other side. For Jesus also taught that if we should gain the whole world and not make preparation for our own souls, it would be nothing.

What is the preparation so necessary to be made in this life? It is the development and manifestation of the fruits of a just and holy character. We have an example of a worthy disciple of Christ described by the apostle in this language: "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification." This at once reflects a life of good works manifesting the importance of the way of truth. The apostle commended those of the church in his time who had thus lived—lived not for themselves but for the good and welfare of their neighbors. In other words, the law of life which enables men to take on or develop the highest and best character that is possible to attain is such that if we live according to its principles we grow out of these selfish feelings, unholy thoughts, covetous desires, and instead of using all the time to help ourselves, we are desirous of helping our brother or our neighbor and so act.

It is from this standpoint that we are urged here in the gospel to live for each other, not for ourselves. When the language of Jesus is received, "In this is my Father glorified, that you bring forth much fruit," it is that we shall develop godly lives by walking in accordance with his law of divine light; that we may not only be able to gather some of the things that belong to this world—and our heavenly Father is quite willing that his children shall gather what is needful for them of these,—but he blesses them with these temporal things and has promised that if they live according to all his commandments he will bless them still more abundantly in the things of this life. I am not preaching against the gathering of things of this life, if they are gathered in a proper way. But to gather on lines in violation of the law of life, it is better that it be cast ten thousand miles from us. All of us should harbor the feeling that we want nothing that is contrary to the will of our heavenly Father.

To put in more practical effect these principles, we have, with the brethren, been working for a few days desirous of presenting in the business life a part of the work of the gospel of our blessed Lord, and such a part as shall offer a better opportunity to labor as a true helper in the gospel method, by which we may apply the time, spare time that we may have, and thus help our neighbors and friends, no difference whether they are well-to-do in the things of this life or whether they have nothing of this world's goods for fulfilling this law. Our hearts will be such that we will covet no one's goods; we will simply ask for that which is our own and move upon such just lines as these. Unless we can rise to such position or standard we can not be commended by our heavenly Father, either in this world or in the world to come. Doubtless this is the reason such principles were taught in the time of the apostles. We quote a few this morning to refresh your memories.

The Apostle James directing the higher way in which an individual should live says: "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." Let us not forget that our lives should so reflect the divine law that not one among us would ever be found speaking against his brother or sister, his neighbor, or friend. And if the most pious-looking among us shall violate these just rules of a true life and not bridle his tongue, thus manifesting his life by his works, and observe not the law which says, You shall not speak against your neighbor, you shall not backbite, you shall not selfishly undermine others, that man's religion is vain. So do not accept such as an example in place of holding forth Christ, the example for the pure and the good.

The Apostle Peter writing upon the same principle of life uses this language:

Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing; knowing that you are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile.

These are two leading apostles who were instructing Christ's children, after that he had ascended into heaven, how they should live in order that they might reflect him in their lives. For he had taught them before, Let your light so shine that others seeing your good works shall learn to glorify your Father in heaven. And if we let our light shine by stirring up strife in the neighborhood, by speaking against our neighbors and friends, or failing to perform a good act to a brother or sister or neighbor or friend who is in need or distress or sickness, always waiting for somebody else to do it, we will fail to so live as to glorify our Father who is in heaven. In other words, we should so live in this world that others beholding our good works glorify God because of our having kept the law of life. And these works are seen through the development of the character manifest in us.

Jesus said, For a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things that he possesseth. Not that an individual should not possess sufficient for himself and family; that he should not gather of this world's goods; (for our heavenly Father gives him permission to gather) but that he should not place his heart upon this to such an extent that if he can not have somebody else's inheritance he is not satisfied; like the member who said to Jesus, Master, speak to my brother that he divide the inheritance with me. And Jesus said to him, Man who made me a judge or a divider over you? And he said unto them, Take heed and beware of covetousness; for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

Think over the wealthy men of the world to-day, those who are really rich in the things of this world, so to speak, and see whether or not you would like to exchange places with them. Jesus' language was correct; it was to lead men to higher and better thoughts than simply looking upon what we can gather and what we may cling to here.

And when we have in mind the thought of gathering in this life, it ought to be with the additional thought that we may honor our heavenly Father with the things that we gather, and thus bring forth more fruit to him, not only in the life that we develop by carrying out these divine principles for ourselves, but by the proper application of these the things which he has been good enough to enrich us with, that others may also be blessed through the just application of the revenues coming into our hands. Nobody is injured by such a life as that; it is the highest and noblest known to the human family.

We talk with reference to the attainment of a condition of equality in this world; that requires as a prerequisite, characters of absolute integrity, honesty, and holiness of purpose. There has never been an instance in this world where equality has been brought about among the people to their great betterment and good unless that equality was based upon the principles of the divine life taught by Jesus and his servants as set forth in the New Testament. First a man's life must be molded and regulated. And when you have lifted up the individual by leading him into holy and divine ways, then you can bring about equality, but not before. You can bring about equality because covetousness and hypocrisy and the selfish desires affecting humanity are greatly eliminated, and persons thus born anew will come together and dwell on a plane of equality, because the law of life is being lived instead of the law of sin and death.

In our work, then, what we lack is to move out in such a way as to first fashion ourselves, our thoughts, our desires, our hopes so that they shall be like unto the thoughts, the desires and life of Jesus when he was here. Talking to his disciples, he stated with reference to his work, For this reason I sanctify myself through the truth, that you may be sanctified through the truth. For this reason I sanctify myself. And had not Jesus himself lived in accordance with this high and holy law and all its principles, he could never have been the divine Savior to us that he is. And we would not have had that life through him that the apostles speaks of in the Colossian letter, and many other places to which your attention might be directed.

In speaking of the life of this Savior, it is stated by Peter, that he did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth, and yet we expect by and by to live with him, to reign with him. We expect, of course, to receive benefits from the atonement that he made in relieving us from the sins that we commit day by day. I do not know that I ought to say day by day, because I do not believe we should commit sins every day. But oftentimes we do those things that we should not, through ignorance, through carelessness, and sometimes through willfulness. We ought to live in this world so this may occur very seldom, and that when it is done it is a mistake, and not deliberate on our part. But when it is done through a mistake or ignorance or through a false conception of duty, then we have an advocate with the Father, and God will forgive us of our sins. For this reason Jesus came into the world, to help the world. For wherein we could always rise to the high state of perfection that our heavenly Father requires of his children, we needed divine help, and Jesus declares, I am come that ye might have life and have it more abundantly; and for this reason, I sanctify myself, that you may be sanctified through the truth.

In our life's work we ought to try to so live that not only our own community will see our good works, but through diligent labor our light will extend around and reach others. No doubt you are doing that to a certain extent. The Saints are so working in the Independence Stake. Many evidences come to us, almost every week, in the Independence office from men and women not members of the society who have known of the work of our people, which bespeaks for us commendation, especially in our following the law of life relating to what is known as temporal duties in church work.

Only last week the society known as The Providence Society in Kansas City called up with reference to an individual who has his name on the church books, but I am sorry to say that is all. They called attention to his neglect of his family, and of his being to trifling to work, with the statement, they knew we did not stand for that manner of life, nor do we. Other religionists know that that is not our rule. So this society phoned and asked me if we would object if they presented this party with a good opportunity to work, and if he did not perform the same they would bring him before the court and have him put where he had to work. "Certainly," we answered, "we shall commend your help." They know that our rules do not permit idleness, and that the law is: "The idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer."

A member of the Christian Church, a teacher in the Sabbath school, and a worker said, "I wish, Brother Kelley, that we were as far along in the development of our people touching temporalities and the distribution of help as your people are." Reference is only had to it to show you this, that we should let our light shine that others seeing our good works may learn to glorify our Father who is in heaven. Let your light so shine. If we do not all engage in this kind of work, we are then the body of Christ simply in name, and we are misrepresentatives unless we are bringing forth some of these goodly fruits in our lives and our work.

The time is to come, spoken of by the apostle, that everyone of us shall be judged according to our works whether they be good or whether they be evil. And if we are to be judged according to the deeds done in the body, as another apostle states, what shall our deeds be? Should they not all the time be found in harmony with the law of life, the divine law? But if we shall have moved in accordance with the "law of sin and death," our final home is defiled and lowered by our own acts.

No wonder we have the statement made by the apostle in the Corinthian letter that there is a glory that is representative of the glory of the sun. Men and women fashion themselves for this glory; but they can not fashion themselves for it by living in accordance with the law of sin and death. They may fashion themselves in accordance with this glory and receive of it when living in accordance with the principles of the law of life. And if they do not so live, then they have lived in accordance with a lesser law, one that is far beneath; and so they will be fitted for the terrestrial or telestial. Can we afford to fail; even though we should gain the whole world by so doing?

Reference is made to this to show you that we are chief architects of our own fortunes so far as the world to come is concerned. Our heavenly Father has left us without excuse in that he has placed before us the law of life, and if we will not live according to that, we can not be good citizens in the kingdom of God. Our Government has placed before us the possibility of the highest citizenship among the nations of the world. But if we refuse to live in accordance with the laws of our nation, we can not be called good citizens here, and we are liable to be arrested and placed in positions that we will be circumscribed in our lives instead of having freedom and choice, honor and reward.

Now it is hoped that in the criticism with reference to what we should do in this world, all will wake up and ask the question, What can I do, or what have I left undone?

HERETOFORE AND HEREAFTER

Man's life is a course of activities between the obscure past, and, to the natural man, the unknown future. Of himself he has no power to solve the mysteries of the heretofore or of the hereafter. He revels in the present, which is the midst of eternity, and often in serious mood looks backward to catch some hint of that which forward lies. But the mist of the distance is too dense, and he can see only by the borrowed light of revelation, by the aid of which he may take his bearings most any point of his journey.

THE CREATION

Turning to the record of the things disclosed when that light was focused on the dim and early past, we learn that "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form [that is, physical form or body], and void." (Genesis 1: 1, 2.)

There is a noticeable difference between creating a thing, and forming it. God created the earth before he formed it physically, and "every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew." (Genesis 2: 5.) And man, male and female did God create (Genesis 1: 27) . . . before he formed man's body from the dust of the ground (Genesis 2: 7); he finished his work of creation on the sixth day (Genesis 2: 1), and rested the seventh, (Genesis 2: 2), and still there was not yet a man to till the soil. (Genesis 2: 5.)

But now, after all these creations, beasts, trees, etc., and man, both male and female, and after his rest on the seventh day, God formed man from the dust of the ground. (Genesis 2: 7.) Then and not before was man able to till the ground, and immediately set at it. (Genesis 2: 15.)

Then God set the man, Adam, whom he had formed, in the garden of Eden, and caused to pass before him all the creatures of earth, that he might give names to them, but in the whole multitude there was not found an helpmeet for Adam (Genesis 2: 19, 20), though the female of man had been created before, as seen in Genesis 1: 27.

At the inception or initiation of man's existence there were two sittings. First his spiritual creation, and second his physical formation. Between these two sittings God rested on the seventh day. The Inspired Translation of the record makes it very plain where it says:

For I, the Lord God, created all things of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth; for I, the Lord God, had not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth. And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men, and not yet a man to till the ground, for in heaven created I them, and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air.—Genesis 2: 5, 6.

MAN'S PREEXISTENCE

We begin to understand that there is, and always was more of man than just his physical body of flesh and bones; and that before his flesh was formed, man, both male and female, existed in a conscious state, and were capable of hearing advice and instruction. We find God blessing them in this spiritual state, telling them to be fruitful, etc., what things they should and should not eat (Genesis 1: 27-29), and all this while man was yet in the image of God and Christ, before he partook of flesh and blood.

Afterwards man partook of flesh and blood—he must exist before he can partake—and it is written:

Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he, [Christ] also himself likewise took part of the same.—Hebrews 2: 14.

We read in Genesis 1: 26, 27 that man was created in the image of God, and by certain implication, in the image of Christ:

Who, being in the form of God . . . took upon him [another form] the form of a servant, and was made in [a different likeness] the likeness of men.—Philippians 2: 6, 7.

Christ added to the image of God in which men were created, the different likeness of men in physical form. This is that humiliation wherein his judgment was taken away. (Acts 8: 33.)

In this last reference is found sufficient answer to the materialist as to why, if the spirit may have all its qualities of intellect and consciousness independent of the body, its capacities, knowledge, etc., depends so on body development, and must run through all the imperfections and weaknesses of infancy and young before becoming a man.

It will hardly be denied that Christ, by whom the heavens and the earth, things visible and invisible were created (Colossians 1: 16), who did all this work before he had any body of flesh, was capable without it. Yet, he became a child, and his judgment was taken away. He nursed at the breast of his mother, it may be supposed, and prattled and played at her knee. He was an infant, as helpless as any infant, and "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." (Luke 2: 52.) If we put a man into a small room or body his activities are limited to the dimensions wherein he is confined.

Further evidence of existence before the formation of our bodies is found in Jeremiah 1: 5, where the word of the Lord to him was: "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee, and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations."

Again: "There was a man [who, being with God, was] sent from God, whose name was John."—John 1: 6, 7.)

MAN'S CONSCIOUSNESS HEREAFTER

Having seen that the spirit of man dwelt with God before it dwelt in the flesh, that it had a conscious existence, was capable of receiving God's commands and directions, of being ordained to special offices, etc., we next come to inquire whether our spirits continue a conscious existence when our bodies fail in death.

"Then [at death] shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12: 7.

What is the nature of this spirit that returns to God? Is it dead? Has it any realization of joy or anguish? What qualities do spirits have?

We read in Genesis 41: 8: "His spirit was troubled." The record is here speaking of Pharaoh. His flesh was not hurt, or he would have poulticed, or bled, or bandaged for relief. His ailment was in a different capacity. He had dreamed a dream in which he had seen seven fat kine and seven lean; and not his eyes, nor face, nor body, but his spirit was troubled.

Can the spirit that returns to God be troubled? If there were nothing of a man but the flesh which we can see, and if, therefore, man could not be hurt but through the agency of his flesh, a dream could never trouble him. We find another, one Nebuchadnezzar, whose spirit was so troubled over a dream that he threatened to cut his advisers in pieces unless they would tell his dream and relieve the torture of his spirit. (Daniel 2: 1-6.)

If the spirit, conscious before the existence of the body, can have, while yet in the body, trouble and suffering which is independent of and comes in no way through or by the agency of the body, may it not likely have consciousness, pain or joy after leaving the body? Surely, for Paul had "a desire to depart, and be with Christ, which is far better," but said, "Nevertheless [ignoring his preference] to abide in the flesh is more needful for you."—Philippians 1: 23, 24.

He also said he was confident, "and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord." (2 Corinthians 5: 8.)

It would seem conclusive to Bible believers that we shall exist in a conscious, living state out of the body, when we read the words of Jesus saying:

Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill [living thing implied] the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.—Matthew 10: 28.

Here the Master plainly suggests that we be not too particular about this body, if men even kill it. It will die, anyway, some day soon, of its own weakness. He warns us to be more particular about that other entity, the soul, which he says men can not kill.

If mortals have something called soul that men can not kill, and that will, therefore, live on, after the body is destroyed, it will certainly be and remain conscious after the body falls and realize that life which men can not destroy.

Our Elder Brother died on the cross, and his body rested in Joseph's tomb. Did he fail to exist for those three days? Was his spirit unconscious? Was that intellect, which operated before the existence of the body asleep, effaced?

Nay verily! He, too, had a spirit which men could not kill, They killed his body, but his spirit escaped their hands, and in the spirit, "he went and preached [not to men in the flesh, but] unto the spirits in prison; which some time were disobedient . . . in the days of Noah." (1 Peter 3: 18-20.)

What did he preach to those spirits that had disobeyed in Noah's day, thousands of years before? The next chapter tells us:

For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are [or were at time of the statement] dead, that they (who were out of the flesh) might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God [not in the flesh but] in the spirit.—1 Peter 4: 6.

If Christ, out of the body, preached by the Spirit to other spirits whose bodies were dead, they were surely conscious of his preaching, and surely were provided a way to obey the gospel he preached unto them, that by their obedience they might be released from the prison where they were held. For this cause was Christ given:

To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.—Isaiah 42: 7.

Numberless, almost, are the scriptural evidences that uphold the theory of spiritual life and consciousness after death. We have only touched a very few, and have said nothing new. But we have sought to fix more firmly in our minds the things already known to all Saints, that our knowledge might be ready for any sudden need.

We wish to conclude with a reference from the Book of Mormon:

There is a space between death and the resurrection. . . . A state of the soul in happiness or in misery, until the time which is appointed of God that the dead shall come forth.—Alma 19: 7.

CAMPBELLITE CONTRADICTION

(Quotations in this article from the Christian System, are taken from the fifth edition, published by Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, printed from new plates, 1901.)

All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient.—1 Corinthians 6: 12. [All these things are not lawful unto me, and all things are not expedient.—I. T.]

Our Campbellite friends seek to justify their "law of expediency" by the above-quoted text.

The matter under consideration by Paul was the eating of flesh offered to idols. The law of the land did not preclude him from eating flesh offered to idols, but the law of God did. For that reason it was expedient to obey God, which he did. Nowhere in the examination of this text did he presume to become a lawmaker unto himself; but rather, when he wanted to be taught the things of Jesus Christ, he learned them, and by what means? He says, "I neither received it [the gospel] of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." (Galatians 1: 12.) Hence, where is the justification of making laws and regulations for God's church without his revelation and sanction?

"Law itself is, at best, but an expedient."—Christian System, p. 72.

The law of God, or the gospel law is the expedient unto eternal life; not only expedient—the best means, but the only means. Therefore any expediency adopted by man, whether by one man or a body of men, can only be a man-added precept to God's perfect revelation. All of God's revelations are perfect, and only the understanding of man lacketh. If man's understanding lacks, where shall he go for wisdom? "Let him ask of God, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not." (James 1.) What does that mean? Only this, that God will reveal himself to whomsoever will go in faith asking. Where then is there room for Mr. Campbell's "law of [man-made] expediency?" Why not let God invent his own expedients, especially of things that pertain to religion?

The fact that Mr. Campbell finds room for a law of expediency is evidence on the face of it of the weakness of the basic position he takes, when he says:

The Bible, or the Old and New Testaments in Hebrew and Greek, contains a full and complete revelation of God and his will adapted to man as he now is.—Christian System, p. 3, par. 3.

Or another which is equally as fallible:

Whose [Christ's] party we are, provided we hold fast all the apostolic traditions, and build upon the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing else but the Bible.—Christian System, p. 84.

In the face of the first of the foregoing quotations, if so be that Mr. Campbell was right therein, where is the necessity of a law of expediency? And in the face of the second quotation, if so be he was right, where is there room for a law of expediency. But Mr. Campbell's own testimony, speaking of this same Bible, says:

Many things, indeed, that are of vital importance to the well being and prosperity of the kingdom of Christ are left to the law of expediency.—Christian System, p. 73.

By which he meant these necessary things were not contained in the Bible. If these things are of "vital importance," then the Bible can only be a part of the perfect revelation of God; especially in so far as these things of "vital importance" are not revealed therein; for vital means necessary to life; the seat of life; highly important; essential.

Now these things, Mr. Campbell proposes, shall be left to the invention of fallible man. But what says the word?

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm.—Jeremiah 17: 5.

Woe to the rebellious children, saith the Lord, that taketh counsel, but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may add sin to sin.—Isaiah 30: 1.

Here was a people adopting a law of expediency. Man invented expediency, the kind the Campbellites have, because they have "no revelations from the skies" neither do they want any. So consequently their expedients are invented by the wisdom of man, which wisdom is foolishness in the sight of God.

Now if God insisted that the Jews, referred to in Isaiah 30: 1, should not adopt a "law of expediency," made of man, to save themselves from earthly destruction, then how much less would he allow his people in the Christian dispensation to adopt man-made measures of expediency pertaining to eternal life?

What conclusion do we come to? This: That of things pertaining to the religion of Jesus Christ, on which there is no revelation given, he desires us to ask for wisdom and he will reveal thereof to us. This is ahead of Campbell's law of expediency, because it is the Bible way, and hence the "more excellent way."

Of General Interest

ELECTING A POPE

The conclave of cardinals which will elect the new pope will meet in the Vatican nine days after the death of Pope Pius X. The conclave gets its name from the fact that the cardinals are locked up in "conclave" in a room in the Vatican, shut off from all communication with the outside world.

The election of the pope's successor will be facilitated by certain important changes in the manner of holding elections which he himself introduced. The vetoes of Austria, Germany, Italy, Spain and France have been abolished.

CHANGES OLD METHOD

For many centuries up to 1909 the rule permitted any cardinal to change his vote, if, after the ballots had been counted, it was found that no candidate had received the required two-thirds vote. Many popes have been elected in this way. Pope Pius X abolished this ancient method. In order not to occasion undue delay, however, he changed the rule with reference to balloting. Formerly the cardinals were permitted to cast only two ballots a day, one in the morning after mass and the other in the evening. Now the rule provides for the casting of four ballots a day, two in the morning, and two in the evening.

Prior to the summoning of the conclave, by messages from Rome, the ceremony of declaring Pope Pius officially dead will take place. The camerlingo of the Vatican will enter the room where the dead pontiff lies. In his hand the camerlingo will have a little silver hammer. With this he will tap the forehead of the dead man thrice, calling at each stroke, "Giuseppe Sarto"—not the official title, but the name of the deceased. When Giuseppe Sarto, rigid in death, does not answer, the "Ring of the Fisherman," the signet ring, will be drawn from his hand and he will then be officially declared dead.

BELL SUMMONS CARDINALS

On the day of the conclave all are summoned from their cells by a bell thrice rung and repair to the assembly chamber. From this moment until the result of the voting is announced they have no communication save with the Vatican officials. Their clothing and even their food is searched lest they should contain correspondence from friends outside. If by the greatest exercise of leniency a visitor is admitted, he must speak to the immured cardinal through a grating of iron and in a tone loud enough to be heard by the watchers. After a night of this seclusion the conclave is formally assembled early next afternoon and all repair to the Sistine Chapel, where a desk has been provided for each cardinal. In the middle of the hall are six tables and behind them an altar.

Immediately in front of the altar is a table on which are two chalices for holding the ballots. Before proceeding further a search is made in the chapel to assure the conclave of the fact that none but those entitled to vote are present. Three inspectors of the election are then chosen by ballot. Should any cardinal be so ill that he is unable to leave his dormitory a committee is appointed to visit him and take his vote, which is brought to the conclave sealed and deposited in one of the chalices.

CHOICE WRITTEN ON TICKET

Each cardinal writes on a little table in the corner of the chapel the name of the candidate he would elect in the center of the voting ticket. This is of oblong form, prepared according to the directions of the bull of Gregory XV.

In the center are the printed words, "Eligo in Summum Pontificem Rm. Dmmeum. D. Card." (I Elect Sovereign Pontiff My Lord Cardinal)—after which the voter inscribes the name of the candidate he would elect.

At the foot of the altar the voter lifts his hand and exhibits the ticket between his thumb and finger. He then kneels and prays for a moment, after which he takes oath that he is about to elect him who, according to God, he thinks ought to be elected. He then puts the ticket on the paten and slips it thence into the chalice, which he covers again. Then he makes another reverence before the altar and returns to his place.

When all have voted in this manner the six tellers examine the papers and proclaim the result. If no cardinal has obtained the required number of votes—two-thirds of the number of cardinals present—the vote is declared void, and the voting papers are returned in a brazier with damp straw, the dense chimney visible from outside and proclaims to the outer world that no election has taken place.

First to cast his ballot is the dean of the college, who writes the name of his candidate on a slip of paper eight inches in length and four in width. This he folds, and, sealing it at both ends, folds it once more in the middle, and then drops it in the one of the two chalices that is nearest his desk. All follow in the order of their rank as members of the college.

BALLOTS BURNED

Formerly the burning of the ballots closed the session of the day, and the conclave adjourned until evening. At the evening session an opportunity is given to those cardinals representing foreign powers to state whether serious objections may exist to any of the candidates, and which, in the event of that candidate's election as pope, might operate to the disadvantage of the Vatican abroad. These objections are duly considered. Twice in the present century have the foreign cardinals successfully opposed the election of leading candidates.

Compromise candidates have several times been taken by general agreement whenever the race between two strong cardinals became so close as to deadlock the college.

Proceeding with the election by ballot, voting is continued on the lines indicated until a choice is reached, and this is made known to the people by the absence of the smoke, for although the ballots, as in the unsuccessful instances, are also burned, the smoke is not permitted to escape. When the result is reached it is announced by the ringing of a bell; all the senior cardinals advance to the place occupied by the newly chosen pontiff and inquire if he accepts the election.

On receiving his affirmative answer, he is at once saluted by the entire college.

An interval then occurs during which the canopies are removed from the stalls of the cardinals, except that of the newly elected pope, and his holiness retires to robe himself in the pontifical vestments.

ANNOUNCES OWN NAME

On his return the "ring of the fisherman" is placed on his finger by the cardinal camerlingo and the new vicar of Christ gives his first solemn benediction to the members of the sacred college from the steps of the altar. Then, taking his seat on the sedia gestatoria, the pope receives the homage of their eminences and communicates the name which it is his pleasure to assume as pontiff.

The people then flock to Saint Peter's to see the pope and receive his blessing, and it is a stirring scene which presents itself.

Until Nicholas II, in 1057, restricted the quality of the electors to the sacred college, popes were elected by both the clergy and the people. More than a century later, in 1170, Alexander III issued a decree making a two-thirds vote of the cardinals necessary for the election of a pope.

There are three orders of cardinals—bishops, priests and deacons. According to a bull of Pope Sixtus V, the whole number, or plesum, or the college of cardinals does not exceed seventy.—Chicago Herald, August 20, 1914.

WAR AND THE MASSES

Russia has had a series of prosperous years which writers on world politics are celebrating as if the sole object of production were war. There has been a remarkable growth in the ordinary revenues of the country, but revenue, of course, implies taxation, and a large part of what is taken out of production by taxation is going to the military account. From 1907 to 1913 the military and naval expenditures increased by nearly $170,000,000. Moreover, it is said that the annual expenditures henceforward should exceed one hundred million pounds, which is but little less than $500,000,000.

In one world politics article we are told of a growing estrangement between Russia and Germany and there is a long dissertation on the relative strength of the two countries. Why they should fight each other is not made clear, but there is a painful effort to explain. The writer elaborates on the following: "The Russians could make an excellent use of the eastern provinces of Germany and of the harbors of Koenigsberg and Dantzic. Germany, on the other hand, would not desire to acquire part of Russian Poland, for she has already more Poles than she wants. On the other hand, she could, no doubt, make excellent use of the Baltic provinces of Russia." But what is meant by "the Russians" in the first case and by "Germany" in the second?

Another authority on world politics questions the gain to be derived from seizing occupied lands and the people who own them. He does not see how the citizens of the conquering nation are benefited by the extension of their country's boundaries. They do not take the lands and the conquered people do not become their slaves. But it seems that there is a diplomacy which stands behind the exporter of capital and "the struggle for a balance of power has its motive and its impetus largely in this singular modern relationship between the state and finance."

War, then, is an agency for the promotion of the export of capital. The industrial classes pay taxes in hundreds of millions in order that financial speculations may be made by the promoters and gambling syndicates, with the backing of big armies and navies. This may not be far from the truth, but there is no apparent reason why it should arouse the taxpayers to a frenzy of enthusiasm. The hard-working people of one industrial nation have more in common with their brethren of another industrial nation than they have with the promoters and the syndicates and the diplomatists. They could not displace their brethren if they would by a shifting of boundaries. And their incidental gains by capitalistic ventures among inferior races in thinly populated countries are negligible by comparison with their war burdens.

Where do the masses come in on this war game? How is it to their interest that the nations should always be arrayed against one another as if they were angry dogs spoiling for a fight?—The Chicago Record-Herald, June 7, 1914.

THE NEW AMERICANS

When we compare the America of to-day with the America of half a century ago, certain differences stand out sharply. America to-day is far richer. It is also more stratified. Our social gamut has been widened. There are more vivid contrasts, more startling differences, in education and in the general chances of life. We are less rural and more urban, losing the virtues and the vices, the excellences and the stupidities, of country life, and gaining those of the city. We are massing in our cities armies of the poor to take the place of country ne'er-do-wells and village hangers-on. We are more sophisticated. We are more lax and less narrow. We have lost our earlier frugal simplicity, and have become extravagant and competitively lavish. We have, in short, created a new type of American, who lives in the city, reads newspapers and even books, bathes frequently, travels occasionally; a man, fluent intellectually and physically restless, ready but not profound, intent upon success, not without idealism, but somewhat disillusioned, pleasure-loving, hard-working, humorous. At the same time there grows a sense of a social maladjustment, a sense of a failure of America to live up to expectations, and an intensifying desire to right a not clearly perceived wrong. There develops a vigorous, if somewhat vague and untrained, moral impulse, an impulse based on social rather than individual ethics, unesthetic, democratic, headlong.

Although this development might have come about in part, at least, without immigration, the process has been enormously accelerated by the arrival on our shores of millions of Europeans. These men came to make a living, and they made not only their own but other men's fortunes. They hastened the dissolution of old conditions; they undermined old standards by introducing new; their very traditions facilitated the growth of that traditionless quality of the American mind which hastened our material transformation.—Walter E. Weyl, in Harper's Magazine for September.

Mothers' Home Column

The Public School

Now is a peculiarly appropriate time in which to quote the following: "Let the soldier be abroad if he will; he can do nothing in this age. There is another personage abroad,—a person less imposing,—in the eyes of some, perhaps, insignificant. The schoolmaster is abroad; and I trust to him, armed with his primer, against the soldier in full military array."

A lecturer on the public platform once called our attention to the fact that, owing to the difference in time, the school bell is ringing a large part of the time during the school year in this land of ours.

The clocks on the Pacific coast point to nine o'clock three hours after the timepieces on the Atlantic indicate that hour. The nine o'clock bells call the children to school in the eastern section of our States; one hour later the children of the central section hear a similar call; an hour after the children of the mountain section hear and respond; and when the children of the East are going to luncheon at noon, the children of the western slope are going to school in the morning.

The children of California have been in school an hour, when the bells in the East begin again to ring for the afternoon session of school, and we have a repetition of what we have already described, the continuous ringing of the school bell, as section after section of the land takes up the call, the summons of the children to school.

The soldier is abroad in the Old World, and very much in evidence in these days. He is raining death even from the skies, killing, maiming, destroying. The school-teacher also is abroad. His mission should be to build up, to preserve life, to create noble ideals, to lay the foundation of a better future in which war shall cease; for, according to Ruskin, education is the leading of human minds to what is right and best; it is the training which makes men the happiest themselves, and of the most service to others.

"The Mother of the Street"

We have in verse the following description of a gathering of children in what was deemed a school, though small regard was paid to either rule or study:

"That, where a deaf, poor, patient widow sits,
And awes some thirty infants as she knits;
Infants of humble, busy wives, who pay
Some trifling price for freedom through the day.
At this good matron's hut the children meet,
Who thus becomes the mother of the street."

The picture drawn is of the past. Women of the present do not sit and knit while watching children who have come to school. It may be, however, that some children still are sent to school to relieve the mothers of their care, and it is to be hoped that teachers are growing into the realization that, by choice of vocation, they become "mothers" of the children who come to them, especially in the early years. The best teachers of little children are those who have most deeply implanted in them the mother instincts.

Added to this, of course, should be proper preparation for teaching. It is not true that anyone can teach a little child. The teacher of a little child has demands made upon her which call for scientific preparation. She needs to know many things to make her proficient in teaching.

Care should be exercised in the selection of teachers for children.

Our Rural Schools

From a recent article by a prominent educator we gather that there are ten million rural school children in the United States, and that less than one fourth of them finished the grades and enter high school. While the rural school is credited with doing much good, it is recognized that its efficiency is lowered by the following causes: small schools, short terms, poorly trained teachers, frequent changes in teachers, lack of proper buildings and adequate supplies, lack of proper supervision by school boards and county superintendents.

When we consider the unattractiveness of many of the rural schools, it is small wonder that many a country child goes "creeping like a snail unwillingly to school." The wonder is that he is willing to go at all.

On this subject we quote the words of a state superintendent of schools: "Every working superintendent knows a dozen schools or more where the growing children of the neighborhood are steeped in slovenliness, filth and immorality during a large part of their waking hours."

The superintendent from whom we have quoted goes on to state in forcible language the conditions that prevail in many rural schools where little children are sent to spend a large part of their daytime. We simply refer to those conditions in a general way. They need not be painted to anyone who is at all familiar with the average country school. One word will tell it in a general way, and that word is neglected.

Parents should not permit the place to be neglected to which they send their children to spend the greater part of their waking time. They should be punctilious in seeing that their schools are closely supervised. The buildings should be kept in good condition, and competent teachers should be retained.

The Teacher

The chances of the small rural school's getting a good teacher are small. A large percentage of those who teach in rural schools go in as inexperienced teachers. When they have acquired experience through their service in the country schools, they go into town or city schools.

One of the poets says, "'Tis pleasing to be schooled . . . when both the teacher and the taught are young." His reason is:

"They smile so when one's right; and when one's wrong
They smile still more."

It is usually pleasant to be smiled upon, but the same writer of rhyme gives us another thought in describing a young teacher, thus:

"She taught the child to read, and taught so well,
That she herself, by teaching, learned to spell."

In this connection, we may say that the State of Kansas has taken steps to make better teachers by providing that, after 1917, no one in the State may apply for a certificate to teach who is not a graduate of a four-year accredited high school or its equivalent.

Some Suggested Remedies

It is not to be expected that the rural schools will be able to retain the services of the best ability until they are made more attractive, sanitary, and comfortable. We quote from a recognized authority: "Modern rural school buildings that, in their convenience and appointments, are no less attractive than the best home, must become the rule."

This is not saying that the furnishings of a school should be those of a parlor, but it is saying that the school should have the proper equipment and the best conditions for the culture and development of the best product this country has, its boys and girls, its children.

We quote again from the same authority: "The problem of supervision must be attacked by selecting only well-trained, competent county superintendents. This can be accomplished only by completely divorcing the office from politics and making it the best paid educational position in the county."

The consolidated school is advocated as another step in the improvement of rural school conditions. Instead of several schools with only five or six children in each, the consolidated school would concentrate the use of money and the ability of a teaching force which would do better work for the children gathered into the centralized school.

Men of educational circles are looking forward to a time when children living in the country shall have access to rural high schools, not city high schools set down in the country, but rural high schools with courses of study suited to the environment of rural children.

We have neither time nor space to do more than suggest to those parents who are located in the country that they give a fair share of attention to the school affairs of their respective districts, and that they do all in their power to help on the good work of housing the children in better school buildings and providing them with the most competent teachers available.

The education of children, the environments of their youth may not be neglected with impunity. They demand a fair share of attention.

The Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN SEPTEMBER

Parent's Day.—Prayer for our families and for the families of each other; for all the youth of the church; for the conversion of kindred.

Pray that we all may have a greater growth in spirituality, and a greater sense of parental responsibility, and that the homes of the Saints may be Christian homes. Pray for all the sick and afflicted.

Lesson, Psalm 119: 9-16.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are requested for one who has started in the work of the gospel and has fallen by the wayside. The request is made by one deeply interested in the recovery of the one who has thus grown cold in the love of the truth. The Prayer Union is asked to beseech the Lord to remove the opposing influences that have wrought the change, that he who has gone backward may be reclaimed, and may again take up the work in which he once labored with vigor.

A Proper Moral Standard

All know that nature has but one standard for both male and female, equal purity for both. The God of the Bible from whom we get our marriage laws has only the one standard for both men and women. That is equal purity for both.

Now where do we get one standard for men and another for women? Not in God's law, nor the law of nature. We must look for its source elsewhere. If we had the same moral standard for women as we now have for men, and women would use this license as men do, there would be no profit in keeping women in white slavery. And if men were required to keep the same standard as women now are required to keep, there would be no profit in the traffic of women. There would also be a smaller demand for strong drink, for these two evils almost always go together. Thus would another source of profit be destroyed.

If we wish to destroy white slavery and the saloon, along with the divorce evil and other evils, we must first destroy the double moral standard. We must require of men the same standard that we require of women. Under the present order men sink into degradation far lower than brutes; man is the only animal that willfully violates nature's laws. Man must be taught to abide God's law and keep the high standard now required of women.

Which would we choose, the degradation of women, or the elevation of man? It must be one or the other soon, for women can not be kept much longer in bondage under man-made law. They will either take their place by man's side on the downward road, or ascend with him to a higher moral plane than has ever been attained by either.

God grant it may be the latter, is the prayer of this humble writer.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, August 10, 1914.

The Southern California District conference and reunion was held on the grounds, Convention Park, at Hermosa Beach, July 31 to August 9 inclusive, and although there were some hindering conditions, the attendance was good, very nearly if not quite up to last year.

The Saints are learning to look forward to these reunions. The division of time, leaving the afternoons open for recreation and social intercourse, makes everyone feel duty bound to be present at the services. This year a new line of interest was inaugurated by Evangelist W. A. McDowell, who gathered about him in the big tent all those who were able and desirous of taking more time on gospel themes, and held round table meetings in the afternoons thus giving those who so desired, more time on discussion, considering things spiritual. We think the move a good one, and while not infringing upon the privileges of those otherwise inclined, and still preserving the reunion as an outing as well as a spiritual educator for the young, supplies all that could be desired by those more mature, whose entire interest is in communion of that character.

The business of the conference was transacted in one morning session, which speaks well for the advancement along lines of handling the business affairs, and parliamentary procedure by the assembly. Election of district officers resulted in the selection of the same corps of officials: Nathaniel Carmichael, president; Frank W. Burton, vice president; R. T. Cooper, secretary. A new office was created, district treasurer, for the purpose of providing the means for expediting the movements of the district presidency. Brother William Schade was elected.

At last General Conference General Chorister Brother A. N. Hoxie nominated R. T. Cooper as district chorister. This nomination was unanimously ratified, and results of preparations on this department were manifest in the music of the reunion. The Los Angeles Branch loaned the use of their piano, as usual. A chapel organ had also been secured. All the musicians of the district had been invited to bring their instruments. A goodly proportioned choir was on hand, and while we have suffered the absence of several of our leading musicians, including Miss Nettie Paulson, now at Graceland, we were reinforced by the presence of Miss Ethel Phillips, organist of the First Methodist Church of San Bernardino, who rendered invaluable assistance through the entire reunion.

The preaching was of a high order. A delegation of about fifty were in attendance from the Long Beach mission, coming in auto trucks.

Religio convention was held Wednesday, August 5, and Sunday school convention Friday, August 7. Papers were read, and addresses made touching the work of the respective orders. A program of exceptional merit was rendered under the auspices of the two societies Friday evening, consisting of music and readings.

The attendance of friends and nonmembers of the church exceeded that of any previous reunion, and more members from a distance were present than usual.

The Santa Ana sisters covered themselves with glory in the cafeteria. The committee is to be congratulated in having accepted their offer to do the cooking, and incidentally the sisters are putting $175 into their new church in Santa Ana. The endeavors of the committee heretofore have been to have all such work done by professional cooks, leaving our people free to attend the spiritual services, even if the cooking were not quite up to the "home" standard. The Santa Ana brothers stood by their better halves in good style.

The waters of the Pacific were troubled; rather, it seems, if there were intelligence there to sense an invasion the waters were pleased with the induction of seven new candidates who were enfolded beneath the waves.

Patriarch W. A. McDowell gave blessings to about sixteen. Some were heard to say that they had had no idea what a blessing it was to receive their patriarchal blessing; that they were now so much more determined to press on and be diligent in the work. Sister Bessie Bemis has been studiously preparing herself, and has become quite proficient in stenography, so that she is able to take the blessings to a great degree of satisfaction, thus we can all work together along the lines of our respective individual abilities.

MYRTLE POINT, OREGON, August 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: At our last report we were at Hugoton, Kansas. We left there July 11 at 8.30 a. m., arriving at Dodge City at 2.40, where we waited some hours for our train at the home of Sister Thorpe. She is an old Saint and lives with her son and wife, her son being also a member of the church. Mrs. Thorpe made us welcome and provided for our immediate wants, for which we were thankful. We talked of the church work in general until it was time for us to take our departure.

We left on time and arrived at Pueblo at 5.20 next morning, leaving again at 12.10 for Ogden, Utah. The scenery along this route is beyond description. The beautiful mountains towering high on one side and the river running for miles on the other makes it lovely to behold. The homes of settlers dotted here and there caused one to wonder how they could exist in such places.

We arrived at Ogden at 1.30, leaving at 3.20 for Portland, Oregon. We reached the latter place next day at 7.30 p. m., weary in body. Brother and Sister Appleman were at the station to meet us. We were taken to their hospitable home where we were made welcome. The next evening we met the most of the Saints at prayer meeting.

The next day we were busy preparing for the reunion at Estacada, about thirty-five miles from Portland. We reached this place in time to take part in the first meeting. We enjoyed the program provided by the district Religio and Sunday school associations. The tent was crowded to its utmost capacity. Brother Sheehy joined us next morning.

Prayer meeting was held at 9.30 each day, preaching services at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m., Brethren Sheehy, Cook, Barmore, Cox, and R. E. Chapman occupying. At the evening services the tent was always full. Quite a number of Saints attended the early Sunday morning prayer service and we had a good meeting. The Religio convention held its session Friday afternoon, the Sunday school Sunday afternoon. Reunion was organized Monday morning.

Having received word that Elder Crumley of Myrtle Point was expecting a debate with Professor Kellems, a Christian minister of Eugene, and that he desired Brother Barmore as moderator, we left the reunion Thursday for Portland with feelings of regret that we were not able to stay until the close. Though the attendance was small, the spirit of the reunion was good.

We left Portland at 8.30, arriving at Roseburg at 6 p. m., where we went to the home of Brother and Sister Laird and stayed over night. We left here at 7 a. m. next day by auto for Myrtle Point, arriving there at 2 p. m., and going to the home of Sister Conover, where we met Elder Crumley. After a little rest we repaired to the home of Brother and Sister Britton, where we were to be entertained during our sojourn at this place.

We expected the debate to begin July 27, but owing to some delay Kellems did not arrive until August 1. We are now on the last night of the second proposition. Elder Crumley is an able defender of our work.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
LILY BARMORE.

SCRANTON, KANSAS, August 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: Elder J. W. A. Bailey was recently with us for over two weeks, preaching in the open air on the main street of the city each evening except one. That night we had a band concert and turned our crowd over to hear the music of the evening, which was first class and elevating. Brother Bailey made good impressions upon those interested, using charts in illustrating the truth. He is one of the willing workers. He puts us in remembrance of the efforts put forth in the days of our dear Brother E. C. Brand many years ago.

Five members have been added to our branch by baptism; three were adults. So we are feeling somewhat encouraged. Brother Bailey promised to return soon, as there are others interested and who seem almost persuaded to obey.

Elder William Lewis was with us prior to the coming of Brother Bailey for a few days, giving us much needed counsel. This counsel was good; more would be better. So come again soon Brother Lewis.

May God bless all the willing workers in his vineyard, is my prayer.
JAMES BAILLIE.

GLADSTONE, ILLINOIS, August 9, 1914.

Editors Herald: Jesus said that Elias must truly first come to restore all things. In the time of John the Baptist all things were not restored, as promised by the Lord through the prophets since the world began, referred to by Peter,

Acts 3:20. Neither were all things restored in the days of Joseph the Martyr. We understand, however, that all things shall be restored as Peter promised. We look for a new heaven and a new earth.

Who should be able to abide the day of Christ's coming? In that day the inheritances are to be restored, and all things are to be gathered before the Lord upon his throne. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be at that day, which will overtake some. And as Peter said, the righteous scarcely shall be saved. If this be true what will be the fate of the wicked and ungodly?

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, August 14, 1914.
Mr. and Mrs. Heman C. Smith,
Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Father and Mother: You will be interested to know that we arrived here safely yesterday morning, one day later than usual. You may have felt some anxiety for us, owing to war conditions, but with the protection of the Lord and the precautions of our shipmaster we were safe from any harm.

We were about thirty hours late in leaving Vancouver on account of the war scare, and when we did leave it was with all the dead lights in, so that so far as the exterior of the ship was concerned all was in total darkness. We stole out of the harbor under cover of night, kept about two hundred miles off the regular course all the way, and came around the opposite side of the island to land. On arriving here we found that a German cruiser had only left these waters a day or two before our arrival, and it was thought that she was looking for the ship we were on, and of course we might have been captured.

Inez was rather poorly the first two days we were out, but afterward she was quite well, so that we had a reasonably pleasant voyage.

We found Brother and Sister Jones quite comfortably located, and of course we are comfortable also. . . . We have not been here long enough to get any idea of prevailing conditions, but we are still of the same opinion as before we came, that it will be rather difficult. With much love,

Your dutiful son,
J. W. DAVIS.

SHELL BROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, August 9, 1914.

Editors Herald: I enjoy the interesting letters and articles in the HERALD. I have many times felt encouraged in reading the church papers.

We feel encouraged at the present time as we are blessed in having Elder Davis with us. We feel sorry to see him leave, but we must not be selfish, for we know others are thirsting for the gospel that they, too, might receive strength. We are thankful for the privileges that we enjoy from time to time in having God's servants among us.

Sunday, August 2, was a busy and a spiritual day with us. At 10 a. m. Brother Davis led six precious souls into the waters of baptism, the confirmation following. We had a prayer and testimony meeting at 11 a. m., Sunday school at 2.30, Religio at 3.30, and preaching at 8 p. m. All felt encouraged and realized how good it was to be a Saint in latter days.

Elder Davis leaves shortly for other fields. It is the wish of all that he return in the near future. Some here are interested, whom we hope to see obey soon.

We are always anxious to see letters from Ontario, that being our former home. We noted with interest Brother Elliott's letter from Owen Sound, also Brother Galbraith's. Both seemed like letters from home. We would be pleased to have Saints move here to help on with the good work. We are contemplating building a new church. At present we meet at a private house, which we find rather small. Our people turn out and bring their friends with them.

We read with interest Brother Rannie's letter concerning the land and privileges of Jackson County. We hope to be looking Zionward, and not to be among those who will have to flee. I believe the hastening time is on, when each one should be making preparation, that all things may be done in order.

Your sister in the conflict,

MRS. OSWALD SHRANK.

British Isles

For the first time in the history of the Reorganization, the British Isles mission conference has been held in the city of Gloucester. It is the county town of one of our western agricultural shires, and a river port standing on the banks of the River Severn. This stream is connected with the Bristol Channel by the Gloucester and Berkeley Canal. Ships of the largest tonnage can enter this cutting, and others of moderate size can come up to the city, where there are dry-docks for repairing and docking vessels and slips for constructing them. Gloucester has considerable trade with the Baltic and other foreign ports in corn, timber, wine, and spirits, while it exports iron, salt, malt, coal, culm, bricks, and pottery. There are British wine works, breweries, soaperies, steam, flour and sawmills, brass and iron foundries, brick yards, rope, sail, sack and brush making, ship, boat, and barge building, coach making, chemical works, agricultural implement works, railway fittings, establishments for preserving timber, also slate, marble, and millstone works.

Gloucester was called "Glevum" by the ancient inhabitants who were known as Silurians. They were a branch of the Iberians who lived on the western bank of the Severn. The Welsh called it "Caer Glow." The Romans made it a military station and fortified it. William I held a court at Gloucester and Richard II and Henry IV held their parliaments here. In 1483 Richard III entered the city after his coronation, and from thence issued the order for the murder of the two princes. In the Civil War Gloucester early declared for the Parliament, and although summoned to surrender, the citizens defended the place against Charles I. Down a narrow alley we were taken by Brother Meadows to view the place where the iron pills so strongly recommended by the Royalist party were rejected by the Parliamentary stomach, therefore they pounded the defensive walls in vain.

As you approach Gloucester the tower of its beautiful cathedral rises above every other building. It was founded by Henry VIII in 1541, on what was formerly a convent, and is the great ornament of the city. It is the special attraction to visitors. We think our readers would have thought so too had they seen a party of Saints in company with the "goode Biscoop" May of the British Isles, whose only claim to the title was the call of God, wandering round this stately and awe-inspiring edifice. Our brother from Independence wore neither gaiters nor shovel hat; had neither coach nor footman; neither had he a seat in the House of Lords among the spiritual peers. If we had informed the solemn guide who conducted us round the building that our brother was a bishop he would not have recognized him as such, neither would he have addressed him as "My Lord," for the things missing, in his opinion, are essential to the office, while the one thing essential, in our opinion, to our guide would be of no account.

There is but one other place of note in this city which I desire to mention, and that is the first Sabbath school established here for boys by Robert Raikes. It is but a small, unpretentious, two-story cottage. The chief attraction of this place which we would otherwise have passed by was this: A work was begun here which has been perpetuated in this and other Christian lands, and which will never die, and which is a monument to the memory of Robert Raikes more enduring than the marble tablet in Gloucester's stately cathedral. A generation has arisen to call this man blessed. He has planted the acorn, and we now have the oak. Dear readers, if we can not originate let us perpetuate good work and be steadfast.

Prior to the meeting of conference a cloud no bigger than a man's hand appeared in the East. An ultimatum was sent to Servia by Austria. A flutter passed through the courts of Europe. War was next declared. Stocks began to fall. Brokers were ruined, and in some cases husbands and wives committed suicide as a result thereof. These were precursors of the coming storm foretold by the latter-day Prophet in December, 1842. As we journeyed to conference in company with our wife and Patriarch James Baty, we were reading that the war cloud had burst in Eastern Europe, for Russia was mobilizing her enormous army, (merely as a precautionary measure she stated,) but actually to attack Austria when she was ready. Events marched rapidly forward now, and while the servants of the Prince of peace were endeavoring with hopeful efforts to organize and do business in the name of Jehovah under the presidency of Brother W. H. Greenwood at 17 Stroud Road, Gloucester, on August 1, the prince of this world was by "precautionary measures," mobilizing the legions of the great powers of Europe for one of the bloodiest conflicts ever known.

"O war, what art thou?

At once, the proof and scourge of fallen man's estate,
After the greatest victories what remains of all thy glories?

For the vanquished chains,

For the proud victors, what?

Alas, to rule o'er desolated nations."

On Sunday, August 2, in showers of heavy rain, we went to our morning meetings, passing auxiliary forces going to their summer camps with military bands. This was a day of heavenly peace within. These are not merely words of sentiment, but convey to our readers real facts. There were quorum meetings of priests and high priests, presided over by Bishop May, and the elders' quorum presided over by Brother J. E. Meredith. At 9.45 a. m. there was a Saints' meeting presided over by Elders J. W. Taylor and W. R. Armstrong, Brother H. Smith of Birmingham the speaker, and at 10.30 the usual morning service was held, Brother W. H. Greenwood presiding; the speaker was Patriarch James Baty, who with his hand on the three standard books of the church swore by him that liveth and was dead, and is alive for evermore that what he declared was true and able to save. In the afternoon there was a typical fellowship meeting, under the presidency of that old veteran from the north of Britain, Roderick May. The evening meeting was in charge of President Greenwood; the speakers were Thomas Jones and Bishop May, which was much appreciated. During the day indoor services there were solos and duets rendered by Sister Edwards of Birmingham and Brethren Arrowsmith and Thomas Jones, which not only entertained us but made us feel better for the inspiring messages which they conveyed to us. An outdoor service followed in charge of Elder Thomas Jones, and Brethren E. Maloney and J. A. Judd were the speakers.

As the message of God was being delivered, "specials" were being cried by the newsboys, for Germany had declared war on France. The mobilization of Britain's forces rapidly began. Troops were gathering and arming in all directions. Newspaper and telegraph offices were besieged. The fleet at full strength was ordered off with sealed dispatches, the neutrality of Belgium was now threatened, and after a midnight cabinet meeting, war was declared by Britain on Germany. The call to arms took some of the brethren, sons, fathers, and brothers, to the fleet and the colors.

We met in the Glevum Hall again on August 3, Brother W. H. Greenwood presiding. Our meetings on this day will never be forgotten. There was unrest, din, and strife without, while peace reigned within. The morning session was mainly occupied with five-minute speeches given by our young brethren James Holmes, J. H. Sykes, A. T. Trapp, A. Jones, J. A. Judd, Edward Maloney, and A. J. Trapp. These speeches were all full of spiritual force and power. They reached our hearts and raised our hopes for future success in the British Mission. We had longed for this day. Like Israel of old we have cried: "How long, oh Lord; how long?" and through the mist and the din and strife, "The fightings without and fears within," we can at last see "The dawning of that brighter day majestic rises on the world," and we lift up our hearts and are glad. At the close of our morning session we felt that our young men had put on "The whole armor of God," and were going forth from this conference equipped for their work as ambassadors for Christ.

In the afternoon, business of a formal character was completed. The general church appointees were sustained with heart and hand, after which we adjourned for the evening meal.

In the evening we again met for fellowship. The mission president occupied the chair, and without doubt we can say this meeting was the climax of our conference sessions. It was a spiritual feast. Brother Meadows began by praying "in the Spirit," after which the spiritual gifts were manifest through the Saints, such as prophecy, tongues, interpretation, etc. It was a pentecostal meeting. Hearts were humbled, sins were repented of, vows were made, and confidences renewed. The Adversary knew of our meeting, sought to overthrow and get possession of some, but was foiled. There were noble hearts in this little band of Saints. May they endure until the "battle is fought and the victory won."

On Tuesday, after looking over this historic city, the parting hand was given to Bishop May, J. W. Taylor, James Baty, J. E. Meredith, and E. Maloney. In the evening we met in fellowship, Brother A. J. Trapp presiding. We were again permitted to mingle our voice with this blessed people, and earnestly ask that we might all be kept steadfast until the end of the race, and that the local branch might grow under its present spiritual head.

On Wednesday Sister Armstrong and myself left the home of our dear Brother and Sister Meadows, whose kindness we can not easily forget, and journeying to the station met with those two faithful souls, Sisters Wormald and Schofield, of Bradford and Elder Alfred Jones. We journeyed north to Great Malvern, where Sisters Gibbs and Flanagan with Mr. Gibbs and two dear children live. Our sisters are the daughters of the late Brother and Sister Tyler of Smethwick, Birmingham. Here we found our mission president, W. H. Greenwood and his invalid uncle, Patriarch Joseph Greenwood of Stafford, also Brother Edward King of East Manchester, a zealous worker in our Sabbath school cause.

These Sainly sisters Gibbs and Flanagan have with God's help been trying to bring back health to the weakened frame of our Brother Joseph Greenwood. Verily, it has been a mission of love, for which they will surely be rewarded. The testimony of these sisters is that our heavenly Father reveals his will to them daily, for they know no other will but his. All they have is to be used for the good of God's people, the poor, the missionary, and the afflicted are their especial care. They are the only Saints in this earthly paradise, and their chief aim is to make the truth known. Their two dear children are being trained up in the faith, and have their own little Sabbath school in the home. While Mr. Gibbs is not a member of our church, yet we have experienced kindness at his hands while staying in his home.

We sadly parted with these consecrated people. Tears were in the eyes as our train steamed out, leaving them with Elder Alfred Jones on the station platform. Many, many, great events are likely to happen ere we meet the dear Saints of Gloucester and Great Malvern again. May heavenly peace abide with them.

Your brother in Christ,

W. R. ARMSTRONG.

Australia

Six weeks ago, Brother Walter J. Haworth and the writer took our departure from Sydney for this city, on board the steamer Tasman, of the Royal Dutch Line, bound for Java. As we sailed through Sydney heads, we encountered a tempestuous sea and we surely experienced a lively time for thirty-six hours. It was difficult to tell in what direction the ship was going, the antics were so uncertain, but the captain, with the aid of the great Captain above, was able to keep her above the surface of the deep. The waves rolled high; they were very vicious and did considerable damage to the ship. Most of the passengers suffered greatly, especially in the region of the stomach. However, Brother H. and I escaped seasickness. We were highly favored in that we paid second-class rates and enjoyed first-class accommodations all the way, through the kindness of the purser. It was a great blessing to us, as the second-class passengers were exposed more to the storm than we were. Our heavenly Father brought us safely through to Brisbane, though we were many hours late in arriving.

That readers of the HERALD may have some idea of what we encountered we will give a short account of what happened. It was said by the meteorologists that we ran into a cyclone. The waves rolled up forty-five feet above the water line, washing the man away from the steering wheel, breaking one of a sailor's legs, carried away three gangways, breaking through most of the windows on the starboard side of the dining saloon, tons of water rushing in and destroying tables, chairs, glassware, plates, dishes, mirrors, doors, and even twisting the electric fans on the ceiling out of shape. The water ran into the kitchen and put the fires out so that we could not have meals the first day, ran into the corridors and cabins and caused great inconvenience to many of the passengers.

It made us all think seriously of the calamities that had befallen the Titanic and Empress of Ireland. The sights you behold in a storm at sea are not soon forgotten. It is awe-inspiring to see the mountainous, whitecapped waves, rushing viciously towards the ship. It does not look as though human beings could last long in their mighty grasp. Our captain proved to be a worthy seaman, as he turned the bow of the ship so that we ran with the waves. It was thirty-six hours before we were able to proceed upon our journey, and we were seventy-four hours making a trip usually made in thirty-eight. We landed with thankful hearts to the Lord for his protecting care over us, and glad to plant our feet on terra firma once more.

We were met at the wharf by Brethren Herman, Wallace Peisker, B. H. Longfield and E. Nixon, and escorted to the homes of Brethren Peisker and Nixon, respectively, where we have been kindly cared for, which kindness we will not soon forget.

On our arrival we found the condition of the branch not so favorable as it might have been, misunderstandings existing, which caused unpleasantness. However, by the grace of God we were able to adjust the difficulties satisfactorily to all the parties concerned, and peace and unity now prevail. We found a band of very fine Saints in this city. They have a very comfortable church building, a lively Sunday school and Religio. Brother Barkus, who has been president of the branch ever since its organization, is one of our fine spirited men, and a musician of some note. He is blessed with a true Latter Day Saint companion. His family consists of one son and three daughters. This brother is a real spiritual father and a natural patriarch.

Since our arrival, the branch organization has been reconstructed. Brother Edwin Nixon, formerly of England, is now its president. He is one of our wise, careful men, and displays executive qualifications. He is ably assisted by Brother C. E. Berglin, in the office of priest, Brother Schultz as teacher and Brother W. N. Hutchison as deacon, the latter recently ordained. The present prospects are very bright for this great city. Brethren E. A. Peisker and J. J. Wilson are active men, and are engaged in distributing tracts and preaching on the streets.

From here we went to Wondai, two hundred miles north, by train. During our sojourn there we baptized eight, and organized a branch there of over thirty members. There are others who appear very much interested, and who should become identified with the church in the near future. The following are the branch officers: Brother William Ballard, presiding elder; Brother Donald McKay, teacher; Brother Robert McKay, Deacon; Sister Miss Amy McKay, Mondure Central, Wondai, secretary.

Leaving Brother Haworth to continue the good work there, I proceeded to Kingaroy, where I spent one week. During my stay there I organized the eleven Saints at that place into a branch. Brother C. A. Loving, who has been in the church many years, having moved there from Nambucca, New South Wales, is the presiding elder; Brother Veldt, a young man, was ordained to the office of priest and occupies in that position; Brother Angus McKay, a young man cradled in the church, was ordained and elected to the office of deacon. Harmony and peace predominate, and we are confident that with faithful labor in that part of the vineyard many will be led into the light; there are some now near the kingdom.

There is not a better country round than the districts where these two new branches are, for the spreading of the gospel. It is a new country, quite thickly settled, in which the people have not had time to settle down to their creeds. This is our opportunity, and we mean to embrace it. We have two young men, both capable preachers, who will be going into that country the first of the month, and who will spend all of their time and talents in winning souls to Christ, viz, Elders Herman Peisker and Bryan H. Longfield, both spiritual, intelligent and energetic workers. We feel proud of them, and our hearts are full of praise to God for raising up such bright young men to carry on his work among the people. I predict for them a great future if they continue faithful and humble before the Lord.

I have placed Brother Haworth as assistant minister in charge of New South Wales and Queensland, and am pleased to inform the Saints that our brother's health is improving right along, in answer to the many prayers that have been offered in his behalf. I have found him to be a congenial companion to travel with, and well informed in the doctrines, laws and usages of the church, able to defend the church under any conditions, and one who can be trusted with responsibility. He makes friends for himself and the cause wherever he goes, so we feel confident that the work will be looked after under his supervision. He also is interested in the young, and will encourage and help them to the best of his ability to become workers for the Lord.

Last Saturday and Sunday, the 25th and 26th, were red-letter days in this end of the mission, as we held a conference here in Brisbane, the first ever held in the state. On Saturday, I organized the district of Southern Queensland. The boundaries are: On the south, the border of New South Wales; on the north, the Tropic of Capricorn; and east and west, to the state boundaries.

There was a good representation of the Saints of the three branches in this state, and the local church building was well filled at each meeting. The Spirit of the Lord prevailed throughout; the business was transacted with unanimity; the preaching was attended with considerable liberty; and the social meeting was one which left little to be desired. The Lord surely put the impress of his Spirit upon our organization. It was a day of great rejoicing for the Saints, many of whom had never attended a conference of the church before. Elder Herman Peisker was elected district president, with his father and Elder William Ballard as counselors, which makes a strong presidency, all three being capable men and having the confidence and respect of the people. Brother C. E. Berglin, of Fourth Avenue, Coorparoo, was elected secretary, and Elder J. W. Barkus, of Leamington Park, Coorparoo, bishop's agent. He will visit the Saints in the interests of finances. The president, as you will see, will be devoting his entire time to building up the district, and this is as it should be.

Presidents of districts should be free to wait upon their ministry, and thus keep in touch with the various branches and offices under their charge. They should marshal all officers who are not branch officers, pushing them out into new places; thus extending the work. Some presidents are presidents in name only. They imagine that their principal work is to preside over the district conference, losing sight of the fact that their real duties are along the lines indicated above. It is a mystery to me that men will persist in wanting to preside over districts when they are fully aware that conditions prevent them from doing the work necessary to keep the district alive. Such men would appear to be more ambitious to gratify their own desire for place, power and honor than to assume the real duties and responsibilities attaching to such an important office. All this also applies to many presidents of branches.

The Balmain and Leichhardt branches, in Sydney, New South Wales, are progressing nicely under the presidency of Elders Corbett and Stewart respectively. They have established a choir in the latter branch under the leadership of Elder Joseph Parkes, which is quite an improvement, and tends to make the preaching meetings more attractive. Brethren Corbett and Stewart were ordained to the office of high priest, June 7, in harmony with the direction of General Conference. Their ordinations were certified to by the presence of the Spirit.

On Monday night last, the local Saints, together with visiting brethren and sisters from other parts of the district, tendered me a farewell in the church building, at the same time taking the opportunity to wish Godspeed to the two young missionaries who are about to go into the country. A very nice program of a musical and literary nature was rendered.

At a suitable time a farewell address expressing appreciation of my labors in the district was made by Elder Nixon, president of the Brisbane Branch. It is always good to know that the brethren approve of one's labors when rendered with a view to the extension of the kingdom of God, and so this address was pleasing to me. It indicated that I had been able, in a measure, under God, to bring blessings to my brethren. Brother Nixon presented me with a sum of money gathered among the Saints to help in incidental expenses. I was called upon to respond, and expressed the pleasure I had experienced in laboring among these people, and the manner in which the Lord had placed the impress of his Spirit upon our work among them. I told also of the regret I experienced in leaving them, but just as I had left my dear ones to prosecute the Master's work, so must I leave from time to time those dear to me in the gospel bonds.

Presentations of money were also made to the young men about to go into the missionary field to help them on their way. They responded in fine, humble, yet manly speeches. I feel proud of them, and look forward to the accomplishment of much useful work under their ministry.

I feel it to be my duty to speak a few words in relation to Brother E. A. Peisker, wife and family, at whose home I have been made welcome. This brother and sister have a large family, consisting principally of boys, and I must say to their credit that I have never seen a better behaved family, nor greater reverence and respect shown on the part of the children towards their parents. I account for it by the fact that they hold family prayers regularly, and instill into their children the principles of obedience and reverence to God. As a result of such training, their son Herman, nineteen years of age, is an elder and president of the district, which shows that notwithstanding his youth the people have great confidence and respect for him. He is humble, and one of the best informed young men in church doctrines that I have met for some time; he is a fluent speaker. If he continues humble as he is now, he will be one of our mighty men in Israel. He has entered the missionary field, and will be associated with Brother Longfield, who is one of our coming men. These brethren are able to defend our church anywhere, and we are proud to be associated with men of their ability and integrity. They will be under the supervision of Brother Haworth, who will act the part of a father to them, so we expect them to make good in the ministry.

We have been kindly received at the homes of Brethren Barkus, Wilson, Nixon, Berglin, Middleton, and Sisters Waldman and Hutchinson, and we feel to express our thanks for their kind hospitality.

I regret separation from the congenial companionship of Brother Haworth, who will remain here for some time. He has rendered me material assistance during my sojourn in this land. His health is improving remarkably. I sail from here at 4 p. m. to-day, on the steamer Canberra for Sydney. Will only be there a few days, thence to Newcastle and vicinity, Bulahdelah, Tuncurry, Manning River, Laurieton, Nambucca and the northern end of the New South Wales District.

One year passed away since I bade loved ones farewell. It may not have seemed long to those who have been at home with their loved ones during that time, but it seems otherwise to those who have to pass through the ordeal of separation from those who are near and dear to them by the ties of nature. We know not when we shall meet again, as we are determined to remain in the mission until He who directed our coming shall direct our return, and that will not be until we have accomplished the work he sent us to do. We are striving to be patient, having confidence in God that he will watch over those whom we committed to his keeping ere we started on our distant mission, and that he will vouchsafe unto us the protection and blessings that we shall daily need.

We have been abundantly blessed of the Lord, and feel happy and joyful in his service. May God bless all of his covenant children, is the prayer of your brother and coworker in Christ Jesus.

Southern Nebraska

Our conference held at the Blue River Branch, Wilbur, Nebraska, July 25 and 26, was attended by a goodly number of Saints from various parts of the district. A very good spirit attended our gatherings.

The Religio and the Sunday school came in for their share of attention. The various sessions were instructive, and a high grade of intelligence was made manifest. The Saints were much interested in that which was done. Sister Blanche I. Andrews took the lead in the auxiliary work.

Brother Butterworth was with us and gave a number of blessings. Brother Salisbury paid us a visit and was present at some of our sessions, giving valuable assistance. Come again, Brother Salisbury. Our aged Brother Waldsmith was with us again, which revived memories of the past when we traveled together preaching the gospel. We used to walk for miles and carry our grips.

At the close of our conference we troubled the waters, baptizing five. One young man was lame, so we carried him into the water and immersed him. He said that he felt much better. Though he may be a cripple, yet his soul is just as precious as any other. He can attain to a glorious resurrection through the ministration of the gospel powers.

Our district in a spiritual sense is on a par with other districts so far as I know. We have much to be thankful for in the way of good crops. We see no reason why the Saints should not rejoice in the power of God, for he has abundantly blessed them this year.

In gospel bonds,

W. M. SELF.

Alabama

Wisdom seemed to direct in the choosing of the presiding officers of the Alabama reunion, F. M. Slover, J. A. Gunsolley, Hale W. Smith, and the district presidency, as was shown by the arrangements of the services and various sessions. The peaceful influence of God's Spirit was present from the time that the first service was held on the morning of July 31 until the final session on the night of August 9. The prayer meetings were spiritual and the preaching was of a high order.

A pleasing feature of the reunion was the auxiliary work conducted each afternoon by Brother J. A. Gunsolley. Practically every phase of church work found its place on the program. We also learned that something can be done with the children instead of having them sit in church with the grownups the entire day. It was clearly demonstrated that children's services can be held to good advantage, which not only tends to lessen the confusion during the preaching services, but also affords a means of teaching the little ones valuable lessons in words that can be understood. Special lectures were delivered to the men and boys, also to the women and girls along social purity lines, which we have reason to believe were conducive of good. A vote of thanks was extended to Brother Gunsolley for his services, which, coupled with his smiling countenance, added much to the interest of the meetings.

Another pleasant feature was the baptism of Brother and Sister Noles of New Decatur, Alabama. They have been investigating the work for some time and came many miles to unite with the people of God. They bore earnest testimony to the truthfulness of the work. Seven others were baptized, and five children were blessed.

All things seemed to work for the success of the reunion. The people in that part of the country have not suffered from drought as has been the case elsewhere. He that with grass the hills adorn and clothes the smiling fields with corn has abundantly blessed them for which they should be thankful. The reunion committee appointed for next year are J. R. Harper, W. H. Drake, H. H. Wiggins, Sister J. R. Harper, Sister Emma McPhearson. We expect this strong committee to "do things," and are already looking forward to next year with pleasant anticipations.

After the reunion closed Brother E. C. Shelley and I came here with the gospel tent and are at present breaking up new ground. The weather conditions have not been favorable so far, but we are hoping for better things. We do not find so much prejudice here as at some places, and as a rule the people seem inclined to hear our message.

We are well advertised. Some are coming as far as six or seven miles to the services and to talk with us and ask questions. We advertised under the title of the boy preacher, and the latest report out over the country is that a six-year-old boy is here preaching in a tent. We are indebted to some one for the advertisement.

Hopefully in the conflict,

REPTON, ALABAMA, August 19, 1914.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Central Nebraska: I take this method of reminding you that I am still bishop's agent for this district. There is an urgent need for means to supply the families of the missionaries sent into the field by the General Conference. Do not hesitate to send tithes and offerings because the amount may be small. Remember the "widow's mite." If you owe large amounts do not wait till you can pay all, send what you can now, and more later.

While you await a more convenient season some elder's family may suffer for that which the church has promised. Remember it is a "day of sacrifice," not for the elder and his family alone, but for all who have entered into a covenant with the Lord to serve him.

Address me at Inman, Nebraska. Send by post office money order or bank draft.

Exponent Suspends Publication

This is to inform all readers and Sunday School Association that the official organ of the association, the Exponent, will cease publication after the next issue, October, 1914. At a meeting of the executive board of the association held at Independence, Missouri, July 20, 1914, this decision was arrived at owing to the fact that the Exponent is not supported as it should be, and has been published at a loss for some time. Its circulation is so limited that it no longer serves as a satisfactory medium of communication with officers and teachers for the general officers.

We have already had many inquiries as to what will take the place of the Exponent, as about a thousand subscribers who were loyal to the Exponent evidently feel the need of such a journal. To this we must say that we do not know what, if any, action will be taken by the next General Convention, when this action will be officially reported to the body for approval or disapproval. It is a matter for the districts and schools to think about.

The association will have no official organ after the October issue. It will be impossible for proposed amendments to the constitution to get legally before the convention unless published in the official organ in next issue (see article 11, page 7). After that we shall be compelled to seek space in the HERALD and Ensign for communication and instruction to our workers, until the association can see its way clear to support an official organ or makes other provision.

There are about one thousand names on the mailing list. We request that our subscribers be willing to allow this list to stand as it is until after next General Convention.

GOMER R. WELLS, General Superintendent.

Kindly write me by first mail giving full name and present address, also occupation and branch in which you hold your membership. It will not be necessary to do this if you are a member of a branch located in Saskatchewan District. Trusting you will assist us in this connection, we remain,

Very sincerely,

BUILDING THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM

(Baccalaureate sermon by Elbert A. Smith, before the graduating class from Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, May 31, 1914. Reported by Elizabeth France.)

Scripture reading: Nehemiah 2: 17-20; 4: 1-9; 6: 2-5; 2: 15, 16.

Our text is found in Nehemiah 2: 20, "The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build." The subject might be termed, Building the walls of Jerusalem. It takes us back in history to the year 445 B. C. to the city of old Jerusalem, and it takes us forward in prophecy and hope an indefinite period to the New Jerusalem.

The language of our text is an admonition that Nehemiah gave to the people of Jerusalem. It was uttered about 445 years before Christ. Nebuchadnezzar had captured the city of Jerusalem. He had destroyed the temple, depopulated the city, left the walls in ruins, and the gates burned with fire. The period known as the Babylonian captivity had ensued. And finally the return of the Jews from Babylon had been in progress for a number of years. Nehemiah, sojourning in a foreign land and hearing the report of fugitive Jews that his beloved city of Jerusalem was in waste, with the walls torn down and the gates burned with fire, obtained permission of the king to go up to Jerusalem and rebuild the walls.

He had not been in the city more than three days before he went out by night and made his first personal survey of the situation. Then immediately he rallied the people around him and gave them this exhortation, that they should arise and build the walls of Jerusalem. He was a man of great individual power, initiative, and efficiency. Rallying the people around him they all went to work, and in the remarkably short period of fifty-two days they succeeded in rebuilding the walls of the ancient and holy city. This exploit is still considered a marvel of engineering efficiency, and justly so, too.

How did they succeed in doing this? We believe that there are several lessons to be drawn from this experience that will be of great benefit to those who are engaged in building, and we trust that the text that we have selected, "The God in heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build," is applicable to those who are graduating from Graceland College. Because we hope that they are to be builders in the highest sense of the word, we trust that those who go out from Graceland College from year to year will be constructive in their lives; that they will assist in building up the community, the State, the Nation, and possibly the New Jerusalem of which we have already spoken.

JERUSALEM TO-DAY WITHOUT WALLS OF STONE

It is true that these walls of which we have read in this Scripture lesson were material walls. And the walls that these people will build in this age of the world must be spiritual walls. So that the application can be only figurative. But still the lesson is none the less real. The cities, communities, and nations of to-day do not as a rule depend on walls of brick or stone for their strength. Even of the old city of Jerusalem more than two thousand years ago—nearly two thousand five hundred years ago—Zecariah made the prophecy found in his second chapter, "Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."

And so to-day we read in the New Encyclopedia Britannica that there are more people living outside the walls of Jerusalem than there are living inside those walls. And only a week or two ago the Literary Digest chronicled the startling fact that the city authorities of Jerusalem had advertised to sell the old wall for building material. It is no longer needed, and it is indeed a city without walls, inhabited thus in harmony with the prediction made so many centuries ago and cherished by us in connection with our peculiar work as one of the signs of the times in which we live.

Isaiah makes a statement of the real strength of the city that must be built up in the future:

In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; we have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in.

THE BEAUTIFUL CITY

Now the walls and the strength of the New Jerusalem will consist of salvation and righteousness, and these people if they expect to assist in the building of those walls must confine themselves to the precepts of the Master whom we expect will rule over that city. It has been the dream of the centuries that we would see such a city arise. One of our own poets, James Whitcomb Riley, has embodied that ideal in a splendid poem that is entitled, "The beautiful city."

The beautiful city! For ever
Its rapturous praises resound;
We fain would behold it—but never
A glimpse of its glory is found:
We slacken our lips at the tender
White breasts of our mothers to hear
Of its marvelous beauty and splendor;—
We see—but the gleam of a tear!

Yet never the story may tire us—
First graven in symbols of stone—
Rewritten on scrolls of papyrus,
And parchment, and scattered and blown
By the winds of the tongues of all nations,
Like a litter of leaves wildly whirled
Down the rack of a hundred translations,
From the earliest lisp of the world.

So we cherish this old ideal, and trust that these young people may at least assist in laying the foundation walls of the beautiful city that we call Zion. And in doing so they can glean some valuable lessons from the Scripture we have already read in your hearing.

"THE PEOPLE HAD A MIND TO WORK"

The next striking statement made in our scripture reading was, "The people had a mind to work." (Hebrews 4: 6.) I want you to notice that particularly. It is one of the most significant statements that we could possibly call your attention to. The reason the people were successful was because they were minded to work. I trust none go out from Graceland who are not of that disposition. In fact, most of us are compelled to work—it is a matter of necessity with us.

We read that in the old days when they had the aristocracy their code of etiquette was very finely worked out. Even at the table there were certain forms that must be observed when they offered food to an individual, according to his rank. For instance, in France, if the host were serving a prince he would say, "My prince, permit me to serve you some beef." But if the guest were a marquis, he would say, "Marquis, may I be allowed to help you to some beef?" If the guest were simply a count, he would say, "Count, have some beef." If a common citizen, the host looked him squarely in the eye and said, "Beef?" and that was all there was to it.

Fate looks most of us squarely in the eye and asks us a single question, and we are expected to answer promptly and to the point.

I remember some years ago when I was going to town, walking up the hill toward the railroad track, I met one of my little nephews, a boy perhaps six or seven years old. You would all know who it was if I should tell you his name. He stopped me and said, "Uncle Elbert, I want to ask you a question." I knew something important was coming, or at least something interesting.

"What is it?" I asked.

He said, "Uncle Elbert, you know them gum machines up town, you put a penny in and press a little rod and a piece of gum comes out?"

"Yes, I know about those."

"Well, what I want to ask you is this, if I put a penny in and push on that little rod and a piece of gum comes out, and if I keep on pushing, will the gum keep on coming out?"

Of course I told him that he not only had to keep on pushing, but had to keep on paying.

That's the way it is in this world. We have to keep on pushing, and we have to keep on paying. Some people think they can get through life without paying and without working, but let me tell you that every man pays his way through this world, at least nearly every man—I do not know of anyone that escapes it. You may say that the "hobo" that rides the brake beam and comes to your door and begs for a "hand-out" is not paying. But I tell you he is paying—he is paying the biggest price a man can pay for his living.

We can not go through this world without paying. We pay as we enter or rather our way is paid by vicarious mother-suffering. But we do not go far before we ourselves must begin to pay by sweat and blood and suffering our way through this old world. And he who gives the largest surplus of value for value received is the greatest of all. As the Savior said, The greatest servant is the greatest man.

And so we believe that this language is significant, "The people had a mind to work." And it must be so in building up the walls of the New Jerusalem; they will not rise fairy-like at the waving wand—they will come because of sacrifice. This is a day of sacrifice, a day of labor.

"EVERYONE OVER AGAINST HIS OWN HOUSE"

The next significant statement is that every man began working on the wall. "Everyone over against his house." (Nehemiah 3: 28.) They did not go to a distant part of the city, they did not look far afield for some great work to do, but they took their picks and shovels, or whatever instruments they used in those times, and went to work at their own door, doing the thing right at hand that needed to be done.

And so it must be now in the community, in the state and in the Nation. If we are going to build up the New Jerusalem we can not wait till the time comes to enter in, but must work now, every man at his own home and at the task that needs doing right at his hand. There are many people who are very keen for reform at a distance. There are men whose homes have been in turmoil for years who are very anxious for President Wilson to go down and settle the difficulties in Mexico. I do not know but what as a nation we had better settle some difficulties at home before we are too deeply concerned there.

Every man went to work near to his home and at the task right at hand. And we believe there is a lesson also in that for those who go out from Graceland seeking work in the world to-day, bringing honor and credit, we trust, to the institution known as Graceland College.

"I AM DOING A GREAT WORK, SO THAT I CAN NOT COME DOWN"

These people who were building the walls of Jerusalem met with difficulties, not only physically, but in the opposition of enemies. And when their enemies could not intimidate them or dissuade them by ridicule they sent a messenger to Nehemiah and said, Come down to our level on the plain and let us talk the matter over. But Nehemiah sent back word in this dignified, intelligent manner: he said, "I am doing a great work; so that I can not come down." (Nehemiah 6: 3.)

There is a good motto for these young people to take with them into the world. They are going out to do a great work; they can not come down to the level of the world. It is inevitable that they shall be challenged to come down. They will meet that which Nehemiah met at the hands of Tobiah and Sanballat. The people first ridiculed. "Why," they said, "a fox could tear down your stone walls." The world will ridicule the work these young people try to do. Next they tried to intimidate them, "You are rebelling against the king, you had better come down and defend yourselves." Then they tried to lay a trap for them to get them away from their work into some distant city of the plain. But the answer came back four times from Nehemiah, "I am doing a great work; so that I can not come down."

There is a splendid motto. As these young people go out into any vocation of life they carry with them high ideals; their religion, and inevitably their standard of morals and of ethics will be higher than the standards of many around them. They will meet with ridicule, they will meet with opposition, they will meet with the modern Sanballat and Tobiah who will try to entrap them and lead them away from their legitimate work, but let them always send back

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

ENGLISH PARLIAMENT.—Premier Asquith on July 31 announced that on September 9 the Government would proceed with the Irish Home Rule Bill and Welsh disestablishment.

INTERESTING CASE.—For inciting strikers to violence against mining property, Joe Kobylak has by an Ohio court been found guilty of treason. The appeal in this case will be followed with interest.

SAINT PETERSBURG TO PETROGRAD.—It is announced that the Czar, in contempt for the Germans, to eliminate the Teuton construction of Saint Petersburg, the capital of Russia, has ordered a change to the Russian construction, Petrograd, by which the city is to be hereafter known.

WAR AND THE JEWS.—An outcast in peace, the Russian Jew is made an asset in war. With a law prohibiting Jewish doctors and students from admission to the courses of the Russian Red Cross Society, under the conditions of the European war they are admitted to these courses.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.—Report from Washington states that under the emergencies of the European war President Wilson and the House merchant marine committee have submitted to the House a bill for a Governmental controlled organization to buy or build American merchantmen. Strong opposition to the measure is anticipated from American shipowners and other capitalists.

THE NEW POPE.—The conclave of cardinals on September 3 elected to succeed Pope Pius X, Cardinal Giacomo Chiesa, a native of Italy. His coronation as Benedict XV took place the 6th. The full official title of the new pope is Pope Benedictus XV, Bishop of Rome and successor to Saint Peter, Supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church, Patriarch of the West, Primate of Italy, Archbishop and Metropolitan of the Roman Province, Sovereign of the Temporal Dominion of the Holy Roman Church.

MEXICO AND UNITED STATES.—It is reported that Carranza has ordered the closing of the port of Vera Cruz. He also halted the running of trains from Mexico City to Vera Cruz. Notified by General Funston, in command at Vera Cruz, that no trains would be allowed to leave that place until the service from Mexico City was resumed, Carranza replied that the taking off of trains was due to the transporting of troops to the south of Mexico City, and that trains to Vera Cruz had already been put again in operation. The attempt to close the port of Vera Cruz is not considered necessarily hostile. It is understood that recognition by United States will be withheld until agreement is reached between Carranza and Villa, and until arrangements have been made for a constitutional election.

ANTI-TRUST LEGISLATION.—The Senate, on the 2d, by a vote of 46 to 16, passed the Clayton Anti-Trust Bill, supplementing the Sherman law. This bill provides fines and imprisonment for offending corporation officers; prohibits tying contracts, restricting independence of the purchaser; prevents holding companies lessening competition or creating monopoly; prohibits, two years after passage, interlocking directorates in competing corporations any one of which has a capital of $1,000,000, and of railroad directorates with corporations dealing in securities, railroad supplies, or contracts. The bill allows injunction in strife between capital and labor only when such is necessary to protect property. Labor, agricultural and horticultural organizations not conducted for profit are exempt from prosecution under this law. Previously passed by the House, and amended by the Senate, this bill goes to conference.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The advance of the German right wing was steadily continued to within a few miles of the outer fortifications of Paris. The retreat of the British and French troops has been orderly, and their lines remain unbroken. President Poincare and Cabinet have left the capital and established governmental headquarters at Bordeaux, in Southern France. The allies' center seems to have held against the German attack, while in Alsace and Lorraine the French have advanced. Belgium has ceased to offer effective resistance except in the vicinity of Antwerp. German aviators have dropped bombs in Paris and Antwerp with slight damage. Reports from Eastern Prussia are conflicting, some indicating Russian advance, others that the Russians have suffered reverses. German and Austrian forces are said to be successful in Russian Poland. Russian forces captured Lemberg, Galicia, the 3d, with heavy losses to the Austrians. The Austrian seaport Cattaro is thought to be under bombardment from British and French vessels and Montenegrin land forces. Servia has invaded Bosnia. The British have occupied Apia, the commercial metropolis of the Samoan Islands, and the capital of the German possessions in said group. The British warship Holmwood is reported sunk in South American waters by a German vessel. Japan is landing troops for the siege of Kaio-Chau. Turkey is mobilizing under the personal direction of German army officers. Italy stands ready, and is expected to join the allies. Prince William is said to have fled from Albania. England is preparing to bear the brunt of the war, and for a long-continued struggle.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

BROAD AND LIBERAL.—The Nauvoo Independent for August 26, in reporting the late reunion at Nauvoo, says of the work of the reunion:

No one could fail to obtain a clearer understanding of the Saints' aspirations, their doctrines and their history after hearing the addresses of this reunion—especially those of Sunday, which were mostly historical, and showed a breadth and liberality of sentiment that was commendable.

A CHEAP JOB.—"A Disciple" contributing to the Apostolic Review of September 1 complains because at the close of a debate between a certain Church of Christ minister, presumably Mr. A Disciple, and some other minister, a bishop from a near-by congregation, who had stopped with Mr. Disciple most of the time during the debate, handed him "the just and full sum of twenty-five cents." The bishop, no doubt, paid as per services rendered.

WARS AND RUMORS.—A passage often quoted by the elders, indicative of the second advent of Christ, and now in fulfillment, is the prophetic statement of the Savior, "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars." The United States Government has in proclamations of neutrality taken cognizance of ten wars in connection with the present European carnage, as follows: Between Austria-Hungary and Servia, Austria-Hungary and Russia, Austria-Hungary and Great Britain, Austria-Hungary and France, Austria-Hungary and Montenegro, Germany and Russia, Germany and France, Germany and Belgium, Germany and Great Britain, Germany and Japan. Portugal has declared her friendliness to England. Rumors and rumors fill the papers of all lands. Unconfirmed report says Turkey has entered the conflict on the side of Germany and Austria. Italy is hourly expected to take the field supporting the allies. Greece would oppose Turkey. Bulgaria and Roumania, it is rumored, would be certain to engage in the war following participation by Turkey and Greece. Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Norway, or Sweden, or all of them, neutral, and mobilized, would become involved in case of a violation of their neutrality, as did Belgium. Austria fears an uprising of the Serbs in the event of Russian victory. Canada, Australia, India, and the possessions of England and France in Africa are on the field, or hurrying to the field of battle. There is talk of a continuation of war in Mexico, with Villa and Carranza as champions. The United States maintains a force at Vera Cruz, and in control of that port, until a stable government is established in Mexico. Developments may yet engage the United States in Mexico, say rumors, and some even suggest the possibility of war between United States and some European power, or powers. We are truly in the time foretold by Christ, when "nation shall rise against nation," the time prophesied of by Joseph Smith, when "war will be poured out upon all nations."

this answer, "I am doing a great work, so that I can not come down."

Whether it shall be in the factory, as farmers, as preachers, in the college or in the garage, or as doctors or lawyers, or whatever they are doing to build up the community, they must take these high ideals with them. As in the case of a young lawyer who in this city studied law and was admitted to the bar and now is practicing in Missouri. When recently he took a case for a poor widow and won it, he said, "It was a part of my contract with God when I studied law that I would help the widow, the orphan, and the poor." Let all these young people and older ones, too, make a similar contract with God that whatever they do if he will bless and prosper them they will use their time, talent, and money in the service of humanity. Then they can build up the walls of the holy city.

"THE GOD OF HEAVEN, HE WILL PROSPER US"

The next great conception was that which is stated in the primary text that we read, "The God of heaven, he will prosper us." These people were not only willing to work, but they felt and knew that they were working with God, that God was with them. If we are to succeed in the church or outside the church we must go out with the same conception, believing and knowing that God is with us and that he will prosper us. We must so live and work that we can know that he is doing this for us. So that we can realize the statement that was made before the birth of Jesus, "You shall call his name Immanuel, which, being interpreted, is God with us." These people knew and felt in their hearts that God was with them, and that was the reason they succeeded.

We can not build up the New Jerusalem in any other way. We can not build up the ideal nation or state in any other way. Right here I want to forestall a little criticism if I can. Repeatedly in sermons and editorials we have stated that we can not redeem humanity, we can not build up the ideal state unless God works with us. And the criticism has come back, as it did only recently through the mails, Why do you reject and discredit legislation and political action? We have no thought of rejecting political action or legislation. We believe in what are known as ethical gains by legislation. But we want to present this thought, that all the gains we can make by legislation are limited, in harmony with the statement in the Doctrine and Covenants that every law has its meets and bounds. Every man by his franchise and through representatives of the people in the legislature should seek in every way by legislative action to alleviate the conditions of the poor, to better the conditions of labor, and to restrain crime, yet we realize that man can go only so far in setting up the ideal state through political action.

We believe that God has set his hand to the work of redeeming humanity. We must work with him, and not omit one of the most powerful factors in the history of man, that of the "religious appeal"? So we wish to be understood that we do not discredit legislative action. We believe in it; but not in it alone. The thing we strike at is false valuation placed on legislative action that leads men to dream that they can make gains that are impossible without God with them. And we do not refer here to any particular party or group of men.

We believe also in preaching the gospel of regeneration. We believe that the church goes as straight to the root of the trouble as it is possible to go.

Some years ago I cultivated a beautiful flower bed. And one morning I discovered a rank weed protruding up in the midst of that bed. I reached down and broke it off. I went out a few mornings later and there was another weed, and I broke it off, also. I found another on still a third morning; and then it occurred to me to look to the root of the matter, and I found that all those weeds were branches from a common root. And I reached down and plucked out the common root. And so the gospel of Jesus Christ out of the flower bed of humanity will pluck the root of evil from which spring all these rank branches that trouble humanity, which we term the problems of civilization.

I am glad that others agree with us in this thought. Doctor Richard Cabot of Boston, professor of medicine in Harvard University, one of the best-known physicians of the age, in a book recently published called, What Men Live By, says, Things are bad; but it is people, not mere things that make them so. Economic reforms, better hours and wages, will do good if they mirror and accompany an improvement in your character and mine; not otherwise. As fast as we grow more honest, more generous, and more ambitious, we shall make a better industrial system and a new form of government to clothe our larger powers.

We have, then, briefly to recapitulate particularly these four points: These men were successful in building the walls of old Jerusalem in fifty-two days, though harassed by their enemies, and confronted by many difficulties, because, first, they were minded to work.

Because second, they were willing to go at the work right at hand that needed their attention.

Third, they could not be intimidated or ridiculed so as to cause them to cease their labor, but answered back, We are doing a great work, we can not come down.

And, fourth, they knew that God was with them; they said, The God of heaven, he will prosper us, therefore let us arise and build.

Why, there is work enough being done in the world. Did you ever stop to picture the work that is done in the world in a single day? the immense exertion of humanity in a single day? All over the world they are laboring. Yonder to the east, in greater New York City, they are erecting their skyscrapers, shouldering the clouds aside, and digging their subways, until it looks as though a race greater than man had been at work; still further, across the waters, populous London roaring with commerce, also Edinburgh, Manchester, Birmingham, and the cities of Europe; to the west is busy. San Francisco, Spokane, Seattle, and overseas the toiling little brown people of the nation of the cherry blossom, and the toiling millions of China; south of us the black man sweats and sings in the cotton fields; while to the north white men toil in the great wheat fields of western Canada; and all around us is the great valley of the Mississippi, a generation ago a wilderness, where now the armies of industry cultivate a lovely garden plot bigger and richer than many a populous and wealthy empire of old. All over the world with the rising of the morning sun the song of industry begins—the sound of trowel on brick, of wheel on rail, of saw through wood, of hammer on anvil, of escaping steam, whirling belts, sounding whistles—the world's anthem of industry that goes on till the stars come out at night.

Think of the tremendous expenditure of human will power that drives this wonderful industry forward day by day, year by year, century by century. What is it for? Is it simply that we can live? Primarily, yes. But above and beyond that, that we can work out our destiny which was meant to be one not only of dominion but also of honor, and it should be that we can do the will of God. Not until this tremendous expenditure of will and muscle and brain is consecrated to the service of God can humanity go forward towards its redemption. A single individual who goes out with that ideal is helping toward that state as no other individual can.

"THROUGH THE AGES ONE INCREASING PURPOSE RUNS"

Do you think that all this goes forward without divine direction? Shall we accept the philosophy that is stated in the poem by William Watson, where he says:

In cave and bosky dene
Of old there crept and ran
The gibbering form obscene
That was and was not man.
The desert beasts went by
In fairer covering clad;
More speculative eye
The couchant lion had,

And goodlier speech the birds, than we when we began.

A soul so long deferred
In his blind brain he bore,
It might have slept unstirred
Ten million noontides more.
Yea, round him darkness might Till now her folds have drawn

O'er that enormous night
So casual came the dawn,
Such hues of hap and hazard Man's Emergence wore!

Another poet in his poem entitled "Discontent," says:

I am Discontent.
My presence in the brain of the anthropoid ape was the Beginning of human progress.

Can we think that back of all this was only the stirring of discontent in the brain of an ape, and that it has all come down through hap and hazard, casual and uncertain, until we have reached our present state? These poets may speak for themselves regarding their genealogy; we believe that God created man just a little lower than the angels, and crowned him with glory, and that his guiding and directing hand has been over all nations. In the language of Tennyson, "We doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs." That purpose will never be fulfilled until intelligently man moves forward into that higher stage, that state that some look forward to, which we term Zion, and which can only come when we realize that God indeed is with us.

And so, in conclusion, over and against this hap and hazard poem that brings man up from the ape, and that holds out no promise of the future, we will place one verse from a poem by Hermann Hagedorn, as found in a recently published work.

Kinsman,
Our release is not yet.
Nor shall it come amid shouts,
The exhortations of loud tongues,
Or the uprising of multitudes.
Our release cometh
When the heart of man
Shall be as a plowed field,
Awaiting in the cool dawn
The footsteps of the Sower.

As to Jesus of Nazareth, my opinion of whom you particularly desire, I think the system of morals, and his religion, as he left them to us, is the best the world ever saw, or is likely to see.—Benjamin Franklin.

I deem the present occasion sufficiently important and solemn to justify me in expressing to my fellow citizens a profound reverence for the Christian religion and a thorough conviction that sound morals, religious liberty, and a just sense of religious responsibility are essentially connected with all true and lasting happiness.—General Harrison's Inaugural Address.

THE FIG TREE IS LEAFING!

In the Lord's preface to the Doctrine and Covenants, one of the standard books of the church, it is stated that the Lord "knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth" called upon his servant, Joseph Smith, jr., and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim to the world the things relating to God's marvelous work and a wonder instituted in these latter days; its purpose, the effects of salvation and communion with God that would follow its acceptance; and the results that would follow a rejection of the Lord's work.

No greater claim could be made than was made by these men of the past century, who claimed that in the sending forth of the gospel to the ends of the earth, and the building up of the church, they were acting under authority delegated by the Lord. Where there is delegated authority the acts of the agent become the acts of the principle; and where God is the principle the acceptance or rejection of the work of the agent is a matter of no small concern.

This thought is strengthened by Christ's words to his ministry: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever you shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." (Matthew 18: 18.) On another occasion he said: "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me." (Luke 10: 16.) The Protestant world rejects almost in toto the idea of an authoritative administration of the church, but it is true, nevertheless; Jesus Christ does not change.

A LATTER-DAY WORK

The words of Christ, referring to events of the last days, indicate clearly that such a work as was claimed by Joseph Smith would be instituted on earth:

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24: 14.

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts.—Malachi 3: 1.

The above passages provide for an "angel," a "messenger," to reinstate the everlasting gospel on the earth in the latter days before the hour of God's "judgment." The work when introduced was to be a "sign" (Matthew 24: 3, 14) of the near approach of the Son of God, and of the "end of the world" (or destruction of the wicked).

THE CHURCH

In 1830 the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was reorganized by command of God, and has since indubitably shown itself the custodian and promulgator of all the principles that characterized the New Testament church. It has the organization, teaches the doctrine, practices the ordinances, and enjoys the blessings possessed by the New Testament Church; and, therefore, is that church.

Truly, such a momentous event as the establishment by divine command of the church of God should attract the world's attention! But the world moves on, indifferent, in a large measure, to that form of organization given by the Son of God, with apostles, prophets, evangelists, etc., and consequently rejects the word of the Lord through his appointed ministry; is largely satisfied with uninspired elders and deacons; is concerned with a fragmentary part only of the doctrine he preached; worships an absentee God, one who once revealed, but does not now reveal his will to men; is swayed by the precepts of men; and relegates to the past almost all the powerful operations of the Holy Spirit that in so remarkable a manner distinguished the church, and distinguishes it to-day, as a divine organization, separate and apart from all institutions of men.

OTHER SIGNS

Besides the setting up of the church, that may well be termed "the latter day glory," other signs given by the Lord that would signalize the near approach of his second coming were:

And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.—Matthew 24: 12.

But when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end is not by and by. Then said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven.—Luke 21: 9-11.

And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory.—Luke 21: 25-27.

One may ask, have not wars, earthquakes, famines, and distress followed in the march of the centuries? Yes, but preceding the coming of the Lord it appears that these destructive agencies would abound to such an extent as to appall the human heart, and would thus constitute to the children of God signs of the near coming of the Lord in glory; would eclipse former destructive agencies, as the church in coming forth as foretold would overshadow in its glory and power all other religious institutions.

Such a world-wide working of destructive forces as enumerated by Christ has never existed except in association with a rejection of God's work. Mark that thought! Priesthood (we are not defending priestcraft, but priesthood;) delegated authority—the right to act for God is no idle thing. This is evidenced by the catastrophe that followed the rejection of the message of God through Noah; the Egyptian empire suffered because of the character of its treatment of the message through Moses; the Jews were scattered among all nations because they refused to accept the messengers of God sent to them with terms of salvation—and what is the destiny of the Gentiles? Can they go heedlessly on their way, choosing their own terms of salvation, rejecting Christ the only Savior of the world, ignoring his church which he has established that men might know God—do all that, and not arouse God to action?

What mean the Gentiles in their rush for pleasure, forgetting God their Creator, and practicing many evil works? In what respect are the Gentiles superior to the Jews? Is not the work that the Jews rejected the work that the Gentiles now set at naught?

AN ARK OF SAFETY

Is God silent and without witness in this the world's momentous age? Or has he failed to provide an ark of safety in the midst of the impending and existing distress and disaster? No! and as in times of old he has direct supervision of his church so it may perform its God-given functions; and that the work outlined in prophecy might be accomplished that was to precede his coming when he comes to reign with his saints.

The Lord foreseeing what conditions would exist, said to his church in the year 1832:

And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and then shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunders, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people; and angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, sounding the trump of God, saying, Prepare ye, prepare ye, O inhabitants of the earth, for the judgment of our God is come: behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.—Doctrine and Covenants, 85: 25.

Blessed is he that shall be able to find amidst all the existing perplexities and confusion in the world, the ark of God, his church, which is his ark of safety in the latter days.

The generation of the Jews to whom Christ spoke did not pass away before every desolation spoken of by him had come to pass; desolation came, as was foretold, as a "thief in the night." Likewise, in the present generation, in which the light of the church is shining forth to the nations, the things foretold by Christ will come to pass; and "as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." In this generation the "times of the Gentiles" shall be fulfilled. (Luke 21: 24, 32, 35.)

Concerning the suddenness with which the world will be visited, the Lord said to his church in latter days (in 1837):

Verily, verily, I say unto you, Darkness covereth the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people, and all flesh has become corrupt before my face. Behold, vengeance cometh speedily upon the inhabitants of the earth—a day of wrath, a day of burning, a day of desolation, of weeping, of mourning, and of lamentation—and as a whirlwind it shall come upon all the face of the earth, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 9.

THE LEAFING FIG TREE

The Lord said:

And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.—Luke 21: 28.

Now learn a parable of the fig tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it [his coming] is near, even at the doors.—Matthew 24: 32, 33.

Behold the leafing fig tree! The church is in existence, restored by command of God, and is performing its work among the nations; Zion's light is burning brightly, the children of God are gathering to places appointed by the Lord, and are looking forward for the coming of the Lord in glory; the cry of war reverberates through the earth; there is commotion, distress, perplexity, famine, pestilence; men's hearts are failing them for fear of the things coming on the earth; there is heard the voice of thunder and the roaring of the tempest; the earthquakes, iniquity abounds, the sea heaves itself beyond its bounds—everywhere is commotion among men!

Wonderful is the age in which we live! Israel's day is near when God will remember in a marvelous manner the covenants made with the fathers; and all the pledges will be redeemed. Zion shall soon be redeemed; God's people shall be gathered together, and his power shall be over them. And the signs given by the Master will continue to appear.

Let the children of God everywhere in this God's day of salvation keep themselves "unspotted from the world," watch and pray always that they may be "accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21:36), and joyfully, while the day lasts, give their energies and means to the building up of Zion; for "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."

THE ORDER OF ENOCH

(Address by Bishop E. L. Kelley, Lamoni, Iowa, June 21, 1914, at mass meeting called to consider organization of the Lamoni Order or Enoch, reported by Elizabeth France.)

Doubtless it will be at once conceded by all who have thought upon the matter that the more general the arrangement of the work of cooperation becomes in the various communities, the better it will be for our cause and the people.

The past week a committee of five from a branch organization in one of our stakes was found to be much agitated over a question which had arisen touching the work of the sister's society in the branch. Some thought it right for the sister's society to move ahead and do what it could in looking after and gathering in of funds; others thought the whole thing should be reported to the Bishop and nobody else have anything to do with finances except through the lines of the Bishopric. So they called upon me to determine the matter.

The suggestion was offered that in the time of the apostles we had workers in different ways and in different organizations, and yet all were in harmony with the law of Christ. We not only had the administrators of the law for the tithe offering as we have it to-day, very distinctly taught, too, but we had also the rule of administration of surplus properties as we have it to-day taught and carried out. The doctrine was not only taught and developed with reference to each helping the other when there was necessity for it, but the idea of equality was also developed. The early saints were privileged to work under all of these lines. We not only had the men who were selected to work in temporal matters as set apart under the hands of the apostles as recorded in Acts 6, but we also had a helping order among the sisters, of which Dorcas was a great worker, and they did great good by their faithful works and alms deeds. And these saints who were thus working and helping along were more especially blessed of our heavenly Father than it would have been possible to have received from him had they not been so engaged.

In other words, members in the household of faith who have plenty to do and no time to waste are the ones who are commended in their lives by our heavenly Father. They can not be said to be unwise stewards who are not wasting their time, neither throwing away the Master's goods. And if the Dorcas workers were of so much benefit to the Christian cause in their time that our heavenly Father was kind enough on the death of one of their number to bring her back to life, it seems to me that we ought not to forget that our sister's can work, and should have a fair, open field and good opportunity in which to manifest their labors. Not only these but the brothers also should perform the work that it is possible for them to do. And there should be no jealousy, no spirit of rivalry, but all should be ready helpers of each other with the simple object in view to do right. Let us rejoice in the success of the sister's society; the success of the work of the bishops in the stakes, the districts and the branches; and the Bishop's agents in their respective fields, and also the success of the missionary in the home and foreign fields.

In other words, there should not be permitted to remain for a moment a feeling in the heart of anyone of jealousy because they are afraid somebody will out work them, but, on the contrary let all rejoice that our heavenly Father has associate workers who will carry on their part, that the world may be better prepared and fitted for the coming of the Messiah, and that we shall be better fitted in our lives to receive him at his coming.

Now, in the organization of our work there is fully outlined in the law, both in the Scriptures and in the revelations of our own time, the necessity for helping organizations; one of these is known as the Order of Enoch. There is also an organization of the United Order of Enoch in Independence, Missouri, where there is a large gathering of Saints. After examining closely, this is seen to be the recommendation in the revelation. It is not a United Order because there are two different orders or bodies united, but each order is there [in the law] called a United Order. The order is to occupy the best possible, with the means and ability of those who are interested in it. And the work is a united work.

Sometimes we may think that we can succeed by working apart and separating ourselves from others. That is the way to break up, not the way to bring success. If we are to work together with our heavenly Father we must be willing to work under the rules and regulations that he has established, and under which his work shall be accomplished.

Now the very fact that in the dispensation in which we live our Lord took the pains to give to the church the rules and regulations that were carried into effect and brought about equality in the time of Enoch ought to strengthen our faith and move us to a greater appreciation of our opportunities and lead us to say, Lord, I want to work in accordance with thy rules and recommendations. It is the only means that is known to the world in any age or dispensation whereby equality has ever been brought about and the people have been blessed and unified as brothers under its rule. These are the conditions where a special work relating to equality in temporal things has proven successful, and it was performed in connection with the gospel. Nothing else that we know of in the world has ever proven successful.

To-day there is a great cry in the world with reference to equality. You and I can see the futility of the cry so far as ever realizing what the people are clamoring for, so long as they work upon wrong lines or move in accordance with wrong principles; such methods never can attain the end the people desire.

So far as history has recorded no one has ever succeeded who disregarded the exaltation of the divine life as the foundation. So your speaker believes that we should encourage organization for carrying out this equality under the helps which are referred to in the revelations to the church.

Why need a helping society? Because it is impossible for a few men to carry on the work of God and to bring the people up to the proper standards and keep them in the way of life now, any more than in the generations of the past.

These helping societies have been necessary in the past. The "helps" and "governments" are referred to in the language of the apostle in connection with his enumeration of apostles, elders, priests, and teachers. We refer to them to refresh your minds touching the fact that in the past where the church has been fully organized and the work fully honored by the membership such helps have been in attendance. And if they are needed to-day the true policy is to organize and move forward.

We have no thought of upbraiding this community in any degree because they are not already engaged in that work. Some two years ago notice was sent from the Saints of this place that they would be glad to have organization effected in this stake. Arrangements were being made to enter upon the same when another notice was received to the effect it would be just as well to wait a time until all were better prepared for such organization. From this situation Presidents F. M. and E. A. Smith and the Bishopric with Brother J. E. Kelley of the Twelve, the presidency and bishopric of the stake, Bishop Carmichael, and other officers have been considering the question which we are glad to have considered by so many this afternoon.

Since that we have determined upon a line of work that is thought to be in harmony with the law, and it will be proper to read what has been considered in the way of organization for this stake. After the reading, possibly you will want to ask questions or speak to the same as has been already indicated.

WHAT THE POOR DO FOR THE POOR

It is quite some years now since I first met Mrs. Ben Wah, my aged Indian friend from the deep forests of Canada, who only when her beloved pipe grows cold hints to me that, though "it is no disgrace to be poor, it is sometimes very inconvenient." Stranded in her New York tenement, God knows how, she had something better than even that calm philosophy to teach me. It was on the stairs of the United Charities Building I met her, on Christmas Eve, toiling up under her burden of years and a large bundle done up bravely in blue cheesecloth or something. She left it at the Charity Society's office, where her friends were, and when they opened it there they found a lot of little garments, awkwardly but lovingly made, by her old hands, of remnants of blanket stuffs and such, for "those that were poorer than she." That was the message she had left, and it told the story of how she came patiently to bear her hard lot.

POORER THAN THEY

"Poorer than they!" Every charity worker has heard it a hundred times, and as often her faith in God and man has been made whole. With the wolf gnawing hungrily at the door, the poorest have ever something to spare. It is a familiar experience of the nurses from the settlement in Henry Street, when they hire the neighbors in a tenement to clean up a patient's room, to find them sharing the money with the sick one when their backs are turned. The poor can not save up money for a rainy day, because "their friends need it."

Sometimes I have been tempted to think that one must go below Fourteenth Street to the crowded tenements to learn what real friendship, real charity, means. They are for ever lending to one another clothing, houseroom,—money, if they have any. The bread for which the struggle is so hard and unceasing passes from hand to hand, from mouth to mouth, whenever it is needed. This widow's three little girls,—I am not imagining instances, but speak of the things I have known,—are heartbroken because they can not go to the outing they have been bidden to, having no shoes. Hats and dresses their mother has managed, but shoes must be bought at the store,—and where is the money to come from? Their sorrow trickles down through the tenement, and presently every pair of child's shoes in it is mustered, to see if it will do. Three neighbors supply the need, and the whole block beams as the little ones march off hand in hand, followed by joyous shouts of good-will. One of the pairs came from "up under the roof," where the two tenants last winter divided an ulster between them. The man who owned it worked in the day; his neighbor drove a horse-car at night, and had none. That was his claim to the ulster.

NEIGHBORS

In a Dover Street rookery, a poor woman lay sick. Some ladies who knew her had come to arrange for a night-nurse. The tenants overheard them. They waited upon them in committee at once, to tell them that there was no need of it "while six strong women slept under that roof." They would take turns, and the ladies could get the nurse for "such as had no neighbors." It was not said in resentment, but as a simple statement of fact. And the sick one was cared for.

One knows his neighbors in the tenements of the poor without formal introduction. "I found a good-hearted neighbor ready to sit up with my patient, though she had never known her," said the woman doctor, without whose gentle voice and presence the Bohemian district would be a dreary waste. Doctors complain, sometimes, that their bills are slow coming in. I do not believe hers ever go out. It would be but mocking the poverty of her patients. Yet she says: "It would never occur to me to supply food to them. I should expect the neighbor downstairs or upstairs to see to the necessary bowl of soup, along with the nursing she could give."

There is no virtue inherent in the tenement that makes the people who dwell there good. Quite the reverse. Rather, perhaps, the need of fighting the evil that is abroad brings out the primary virtues that are covered so with veneering in other walks of society. "The housekeeper made this white dress for me," says a little one proudly; "she likes me." If any little boy gets hungry, his playmate takes him to a mother who happens to be at home, and there is always a piece of bread for him; if it be the whole menu at that family meal, adding onions, there is always enough for the one who has not even that.

One of the grievous troubles of the census man in the tenements is to untangle the families, and not only in the Italian district, where uncles, cousins, and aunts all go in under the one head. Misfortune makes the poor "move up close" in a way that quite explains the missionary's finding four families, housekeeping in one room, engaged in a domestic broil because one of the four had taken in a boarder. There is a limit, of course. The sanitary policeman finds it on his midnight inspections; the tenant rarely, if there is another within reach who is houseless. Two, three, and even more families crowding into one small flat is among the commonest of experiences.

I wish I could remember all the details of the case of which Miss Wald, the head-worker at the nurses' settlement, told me in that hard winter of slack work and suffering among the poor it was typical enough to stand for a hundred. The man was an Irish engineer, with a family of four to care for, and his the only wages coming in; yet his flat sheltered (1) a widow with three children, helpless; (2) a mother with two, husband in hospital, and no good; and (3) the O'Connors from the rear tenement, with a raft of their own. They were day boarders. The man was out of work, and every day, when he went out looking for a job, the engineer's folks sent for the family to "come over and spend the day,"—incidentally, to get fed. At night when Mr. O'Connor came home empty-handed, they watched for him at the window, and got him in to tell of his search and his ill luck, the while they made him "sit up" with them to the family meal. For weeks it went on, and never a growl from the engineer. They were not friends; they were neighbors, and "poorer than he." He had wages.

IN BATAVIA STREET

The infinite delicacy with which help sorely needed is sometimes offered would put to shame many a lady whom inexperience may have prompted to think that "the avenue" had a monopoly of the finer feelings. In a certain Batavia Street tenement of the worst there was a family in direst need. The man was a drunkard. His wife had "seen better days." When the neighbors found out her plight, the most extraordinary season of plenty set in under that roof. At every meal hour some one called at the door of the H——'s, begging the favor of the acceptance of this or that article of food left over, "unexpectedly sent in," or what not. I fear the recording angel was kept very busy wiping out the white lies of that tenement with her tears during the five weeks the emergency lasted. When Mrs. H—— finally saw through the subterfuges, and protested that they were depriving themselves to help her, the answer she got was a half-shamefaced, "Oh, never mind! You can't stand it as we can, and anyway we don't want to see you come down." For "come down" read "ask public relief." They did not see it. The woman got upon her feet. She had known better days,—had friends then who, now that she lived in a tenement,—and such a tenement!—passed by on the other side. "Which of these, thinkest thou, proved neighbor unto her?" Or shall we hope that they had lost sight of her?

Speaking of Batavia Street brings to my mind the case of one slum tenement, with three rear houses upon the lot, that challenged the constant attention of the King's Daughters. There were eighty families in it, as near as I can count. A drunken husband, cutting his wife's throat, brought me first there, as a reporter, years ago. It seemed somehow just the scene for such a tragedy. In this slough was an English family, honest, decent people, whose presence there, when I came to know about them, redeemed the whole foul spot. The wife was like a dozen charitable societies rolled into one, and the tenement, besotted and foul, held her in reverence as a ministering angel. She was that truly. With her husband out at work, earning just enough at that time to enable them to scratch along, and two little children to look after, she was everlastingly doing something for some one who needed it in the house,—nursing the sick, sitting up nights with delirious men, planning and interfering to keep the boys out of mischief. I sometimes hear people say, "Oh! what can I do? There is so much." She did what came to hand, and her hands were always full. I believe she had more real influence over the lives of those poor tenants than an army of mere preachers would have had. That is what one person can do by giving himself, not his money. It is pleasant to add that better days came to these two, as they were bound to. The man is now the janitor of a downtown office building, but his wife has not lost her interest in her old friends. She is to-day one of the strongest props of the King's Daughters in their tenement house work.

THE CHARITY OF BROTHERHOOD

Once more let me hark back to the hard winter of 1894. It will not be the last time, for those were the days and nights that tried men's souls, and sometimes the find of pure gold in the crucible was as unexpected as it was gladdening. The family of Irish-Americans I have in mind were patients of the "woman doctor" at that time connected with the college settlement in Riverton Street. The man was out of work, as was nearly everybody, it seemed, in those days. In the family there was but one slight little girl to bring home money, and, goodness knows! her scanty wages did not go far. Her sister was a student in the normal college, with her feet on the cold pavement a good deal of the time for the want of money to buy shoes with.

So they struggled along, clinging together, and going most of the time but half-fed,—if they were so lucky as that. Yet not once during that hard time did it occur to them, or to any one of them, to send away two little boys they had taken in in the days when things went well with them. They might easily have put them off on an orphan asylum. More than once the thought nearly rose to the doctor's lips, but she bit them in time, and watched their fight with a heart swelling with pride. The boys were children of a neighbor in the tenement, a poor widow, who had died holding Mrs. B——'s hands, and begging her to look after her lads. And she brought them through that dreadful time into smooth water and fair weather. John is fourteen now, the doctor tells me, and the best dressed, best cared-for, little chap you would want to see.

Never let us forget it. Sweetest, best, and most helpful, is the charity that comes in the name of the brotherhood. All wealth of the world poured out in alms can not equal it. Those who deny themselves this deny themselves the purest joy in the world, and the source of the greatest strength in fighting its battles. There is none such as feeling that you are fighting back to back, brother with brother. I sometimes think that the rich, who for worry and planning to guard their wealth can find time only to draw checks, and not to clasp the hand that is reached out to theirs, are much more to be pitied than they will know this side of eternity.—Jacob A. Riis (deceased), in The Sunday School Times.

THE PROTECTION OF OUR MIGRATORY BIRDS

Our farmers suffer a loss of $800,000,000 annually from the ravages of the boll-weevil, the gypsy moth, the Colorado beetle, the rush fly, the codling moth, the white scale, and many other pernicious insects. Congress has from time to time authorized the expenditure of millions for the extermination of these pests, and yet Congress hesitates adequately to protect birds which are known to be the natural enemies of destructive insects.

Most insects like the green leaf louse, or aphid, so ruinous to the hop industry, and many other of our most valuable fruits and vegetables, reproduce their kind at the rate of ten sextillion to the pair in one season. The natural increase of one pair of gypsy moths would defoliate the United States in eight years. Locusts, army worms, and chinch bugs, unless checked in procreation, soon become countless hordes, devastating wide areas of the earth's surface. Doctor Lintner of the New Jersey Board of Agriculture reports that one hundred and seventy-six species of insects attack the apple tree. Approximately the same number attack peach, plum, and cherry trees. Doctor Packard finds four hundred species feeding upon the oak; and three hundred attacking the coniferæ. The number feeding upon cereals, grains, and garden crops is huge. Doctor Marlatt estimates that the loss to the wheat-growing States in 1904, occasioned by the Hessian fly, was about $50,000,000, and Doctor Shinar places the damage done to crops in the Mississippi Valley by the chinch bug in one year as high as $100,000,000. The Rocky Mountain locust, during the years of its greatest activity, caused a loss to the States of the Northwest of more than $150,000,000. Cut worms, Doctor Lintner assures us, mean an annual loss to farmers of $100,000,000. Clearly, it is not a gross exaggeration to place the damage to our crops and fruit trees at $800,000,000 annually.

Under most State laws, local game is adequately protected; for the average open season does not exceed six weeks, and often no shooting or fishing is allowed for several years. With migratory birds the open season often exceeds eight or nine months. This means eventual extermination under State regulations, and with the destruction of wild fowl and insectivorous birds the entire Nation suffers. Each woodpecker is worth $20 to this country, according to the Department of Agriculture.

Certain varieties of snipe are now extinct, and the remainder, but a straggling remnant, is still being shot ten months in the year. In 1857, an Ohio's Senate Committee's report stated: "The passenger pigeon needs no protection." Fifty-five years after this was written the bird which existed in countless millions became totally extinct.

At one season of the year practically all the ducks of the United States are crowded in the marshes and swamps of Louisiana and Florida; for there food is abundant. Hence, it is difficult to convince the people of the South that there is any scarcity of wild waterfowl. The official record of wild fowl killed in Louisiana during the season of 1910 is as follows: Wild ducks, sea and river, 3,176,000; coots 280,740; geese and brant, 202,210; snipe and plover, 606,635. At this rate our migratory birds will be extinct in a few decades.

The early idea predominated that any restriction imposed upon the right to make assaults upon nature's storehouse was a restriction and an abridgement of human liberty and, therefore, hostile to the principles of free government. More recently the American people have become thoroughly awakened to the imperative necessity of conserving our natural resources, and among these resources wild birds are not the least important.

The Weeks-Maclean law is intended to protect our migratory birds, but Congress has manifested no great desire to make it effective by appropriating a suitable sum for its enforcement. The sum of $100,000 which was asked will not provide even a single Federal warden for every State. It takes about $2,500 to cover the annual pay and traveling expenses of such an official. On the other hand, to prevent the adulteration of Paris green and other insecticides Congress appropriates $95,000; to establish an agricultural experiment station on the island of Guam, $15,000; to fight gypsy and browntail moths, $297,540; to fight cotton boll-weevil and for farmers' cooperative demonstrations, $628,240; improvement of tobacco, $28,000; investigation of plant diseases, including diseases of ginseng, etc., $37,000. The protection of migratory birds is no less important than the erection of a station at Guam, or the prevention of adulteration of insecticides.

The Canadian Government has prohibited the shooting of wild fowl in all its great Provinces, and it expects this Government to do likewise. Neither country is concerned about the state or provincial laws, regulating the shooting of local birds in the home district of their neighbor, but much interested in proper laws for the preservation of game in which each has an interest and a duty. Fully seventy-five per cent of the migratory game birds are raised in Canada; yet American game butchers, immediately beyond the Canadian border line and along the passage of migratory flight, claim the legal right of exterminating birds as they see fit.

Thanks to the activities of the American Game Protective Association, there is every prospect that a treaty will be enacted between the United States and Great Britain which will stop the reckless slaughter of migratory birds that has gone unchecked for generations on the North American Continent. When that treaty is ratified migratory birds will be protected during nearly the complete line of their flight.—Scientific American, May 30, 1914.

BABIES AND FOREIGN MOTHERS

Infant welfare is no longer a neglected problem. The movement for baby saving is truly national, and it is now generally realized that the way to save babies is to educate their mothers. Ignorance among the poor and alien—that is the greatest enemy to infant welfare.

Some figures drawn by Professor Chaddock of Columbia University from the census reports lend peculiar emphasis to these familiar statements. In New York City, in 1910, over two thirds of the babies born had foreign-born mothers. The total births to foreign mothers were 88,678, while the births to native mothers numbered 40,401, the percentages being 68.7 and 31.3.

In a classified list of the foreign mothers Italy, Russia, Poland, Austria and Hungary stand first as the heaviest contributors to the births in question.

These figures, Professor Chaddock well says in The Independent, raise the query, Into what conditions are the babies born? They will be brought under American influences, and the school will do its work. But what of home conditions, nursing, feeding, care during infancy? The foreign-born mother and her babies must be looked after. National welfare requires this, as well as humanity.—Chicago Herald, June 28, 1914.

OCTOBER READING.—CONDITIONS THAT AFFECT BODILY GROWTH

"Whoever weakens a child and puts a strain upon the threads of its existence starts a vibration that will be felt throughout posterity."

AGE OF PARENTS

"Man in his progress through the different levels of height, as indicated on the graphic chart of stature, does not pass through them without reproducing himself, save in exceptional cases; he commences the ascent alone, but in his descent he attains the majesty of a creator who leaves behind him the immortal works of his own creation. . . .

"Careful forethought not to produce immature or feeble fruit will form part of the coming man's regard for his posterity. A new moral era is maturing that is giving birth to a solidarity, not only between all living beings, but including also those future beings who are as yet unborn, but for whose existence the living man of to-day is preparing through the care of his own strength and his own virtue. To have intentionally begotten a son better than himself will be a proud victory for the man who has attained the higher sexual morality."—Pedagogical Anthropology.

"Every child has a right to be well born" has come to be a familiar saying; but we are not as yet so familiar with the causes which would assure to him the realization of this right. Scientific research reveals to us that the age of the parents at the time the child is born is an important factor.

In our study of the growth of the body we have learned that it does not attain maturity until the age of twenty-five or twenty-six for woman and some years later for man.

Man changes as he grows; the body itself not only undergoes an increase in volume, but also a profound evolution in the harmony of its parts and the composition of its tissues." So while the growth in stature or in weight may be almost imperceptible or at a standstill in the years immediately preceding the period of mature or adult life, the internal development and "fine adjustment of nerve and tissue" are not complete until this time.

It is reasonable to suppose that until the parent organism is complete it is not fully prepared for reproduction. But in this we are not left to supposition. Statistics demonstrate that too precocious marriages either occasion sterility or produce children that have a smaller probability of living.

"They prove furthermore, that the number of children who die is largest in marriages contracted at the age of sixteen and earlier, and becomes lowest among the children born of marriages contracted between the years of twenty-nine and thirty-two. They show, too, that the great majority of famous men were begotten of parents who were at the time between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-six years."

Doctor William Lee Howard tells us: "When the parents are too young—mother under twenty, father under twenty-seven the children are not infrequently delicate. Malformation and idiocy are also more frequent among the children of young parents than among those of the fully mature. . . . He says also: The child of young parents, no matter how healthy they are, is not as strong as it would be if born later, when it would inherit the maximum of their strength and the minimum of their weakness."

In an article on "The evils of early marriages," Doctor Howard says further: "It is undoubtedly true that many young men would be morally benefited by early marriages; but the children of such marriages are not what they should be, or what they would have been had they been born of parents of a proper reproductive age. . . . In advising early marriage . . . we injure the future race, as well as, in most cases, the wife herself.

"The young wife who at twenty-five years of age is the mother of two or three children is worn out just at the age nature intended our women to be at their best for strong motherhood. . . . In early marriages children are apt to come too frequently, and this is one cause for infant mortality. . . . The death rate among children born less than a year apart is nearly twice the rate when two years apart. . . .

Again, a girl of eighteen or twenty has not reached that period of growth where certain inherited tendencies will show. . . . Allow her to come to full growth without strain, worry, or the incidents of child bearing, and she may tide over the delicate bridge that at this age connects her future life with her past inheritance. . . . There are many of these conditions which have brought a woman to ill health and death where a postponement of the marriage until twenty-five or so would have enabled her to become firmly established in physiologic life. . . .

"Aside from this vital matter of the physiologic completeness before entering into marriage, there is the absolute necessity of moral, temperamental and habit establishment of man and woman—especially of man. . . . Physicians, sociologists, and other men whose lives have been devoted to solving social questions are now talking straight from the shoulder to the adolescents of both sexes, so that they will understand that marriage, to be a success to the present as well as to the future men and women, should only take place when both parties to the contract are mentally, morally, and physically developed."

PRENATAL CONDITIONS

"It is doubtful if half the mothers in the country begin to realize the importance of a proper prenatal diet. . . . More than forty-two per cent of the infants dying under one year in the registration districts covered by the Children's Bureau at Washington do not live to complete the first month of life, and out of this forty-two per cent seven tenths die as the result of conditions existing before they were born.

"We are beginning to realize that the infant suffering from malnutrition, as we have been calling it for years, is really suffering because its mother was not properly nourished during gestation, and while there is great need of prenatal restaurants among the poor in the great cities, it is also true that thousands of well to do mothers know little or nothing about the importance of prenatal diet, and as a result bring into the world children that are physically impoverished. . . .

"The fact has long been established that a child gains fully nine tenths of its weight and tissue after the fifth month of pregnancy, consequently there is not much need for the mother to really increase her diet up to the sixth month. Her great care up to this time should be in her selection of nourishing foods.

"And it is known that a child gains half its weight in the last eight weeks. For this reason the mother demands an increase in foods during this period. One of the best methods of supplying this need is by the addition of pure milk to the diet. . . .

"The food of an expectant mother need not differ to any great extent from what she has been accustomed to eat, if she has been in the habit of eating suitable and normal meals. . . .

"There is one important consideration that every mother should constantly remember, and that is the condition of the excretory organs: the skin, the kidneys and the bowels. Whatever else she does, she should keep these organs in the very best possible condition. To aid in this a light, laxative diet is usually necessary. The diet, however, must at the same time be sufficient to satisfy her hunger in every way, and it must be nutritious.

"A mother should always consult a physician about these things, but if living where it is not possible to do this frequently, there is no cause for worry provided she knows a little about the ideal diet.

"Such a diet consists of a larger proportion of liquids than usual, and a smaller proportion of meats; at the same time, the expectant mother should eat more fresh fruits and fresh vegetables. The average physician advises the expectant mother to eat meat but once a day, and to eat it rather sparingly then, but he gives her an unusually large choice of other foods. . . . Liquids help more to carry away the waste products through the skin, kidneys and bowels than anything else, aside from pure laxatives. It, is, therefore, important that liquids should form a large part of the diet of every pregnant woman. . . . At least two quarts of liquid should be taken every twenty-four hours. . . . From four to eight glasses of water a day should be taken. . . . Milk is especially valuable in such a diet. No other food is so valuable both to the expectant mother and the mother of the nursing baby. . . .

"The expectant mother must abstain totally and absolutely from alcohol in every form. If mothers could only know the manner in which alcohol may enter the foetal system practically undiluted and unchanged [to attack the tender cells, as shown by men of science] they would shun it as they would shun a deadly poison. If they are in the habit of using tea and coffee every day it is not always best that they should stop this use at once during pregnancy, but they can always drink less of both these beverages, and by far the better way is gradually but persistently to eliminate their tea and coffee until by the end of the fifth month, they are drinking very little or none at all.

"To get the very best benefits from proper prenatal nourishment, the mother should carefully couple exercise with her diet during pregnancy. She should have at least two hours of exercise in the open air and more whenever this is possible. Even when it is stormy she should breathe the outdoor air in some manner every day. . . . In connection with this, always have fresh air in the sleeping room. . . .

"Remember, the pores of the skin are all tiny excretory organs and the skin needs especial care, for through these millions of tiny pores much more waste material is thrown off than we realize. The moment the sweat glands are clogged the waste products are retained in the blood until they can be carried away by the lungs, bowels and kidneys, and all this overburdens the functions of these organs and adds to the poison wastes they must handle. . . .

"Exercise, fresh air, baths and care of the teeth are important aids to the nourishment of expectant mothers."—A. M. Hughes, M. D., in The Mother's Magazine, for May.

CARE OF THE MOTHER

"The respect and protection of woman and of maternity should be raised to the position of an inalienable social duty, and should become one of the principles of human morality."—Doctor Montessori.

"Thoughtful care of the child should not be deferred until the time of its birth. It should at least begin with the care of the mother from the time she knows that she may expect the little one. Much misery and ill health on the part of both the child and mother may often be prevented by an understanding of the conditions which prevail at this time and by giving better attention to a hygienic regimen for the mother. . . .

"When a child is born, it is about five million times as large as the germ from which it has sprung. . . . While right conditions are extremely important during the first years of life, they are supremely important during the prenatal period. During these months, muscles, bones and nerves, the foundation for all organs and tissues are formed. This is the time when the human being is created, and the rest of life concerns itself with the development and education of that which is now produced. It is, therefore, vital to the welfare of the future individual to have the best possible environment during this period of fundamental growth. . . . During the whole prenatal period of its existence, the mother supplies both food and environment for the growing organism. It is only through the mother that the child can be reached, that its nutrition and general welfare can be controlled."—Flora Rose, in Parents and their Problems.

Society, then, can not afford to neglect to provide favorable conditions for mothers. The mother can not afford to neglect herself, or to fail to inform herself in regard to her sacred responsibilities. There are many helps now available in the form of reliable printed matter. A pamphlet entitled Prenatal Care and one on The Care of the Baby are now printed at Washington, District of Columbia, by the United States Children's Bureau, and may be had upon request. The agricultural colleges of different States issue bulletins upon these subjects which are free to residents of the respective States. From a New York pamphlet by Cornell University the following extracts are taken.

EXERCISE AND FRESH AIR

"Exercise of the right kind is as necessary now as at any time. A false pride should never stand in the way of outdoor exercise. . . . If only more thought were given to this one question of muscular development in women the danger and sufferings of childbirth would be greatly reduced. Severe, overtaxing exercise, or very hard work should be avoided. The ordinary housework instead of being harmful is generally distinctly beneficial. Running a heavy washing machine, working long hours at a sewing machine, bending for hours over fine sewing, fancy work or embroidery, riding horseback, in fact, any long continued or straining effort should not be attempted by the average woman. In various estates the constant hard work with long hours in factories is now regarded as sufficiently detrimental to women during this period to require legislature to prevent it. It should receive equal attention in the home. Overworked, wornout mothers tend to produce weak, sickly children. . . .

"Fresh air is very important. . . . Well-ventilated living and sleeping rooms, plenty of sunshine and fresh air, outdoor exercise whenever possible should be the rule. Growth and development are stimulated by sunshine and fresh air; food is more readily digested and assimilated and the whole organism is in better tone.

DIET

"The diet should be carefully regulated. Food is needed as usual to supply all the needs of the mother. . . . Besides this, provision must be made for the demand upon the mother by the child. The baby is born with bones and muscles; blood vessels and nerves; with a supply of iron stored in its body sufficient to make good for the first year the deficiency of iron in milk. [During the last month of pregnancy iron is being stored up in excess to prepare for the small quantity of it to be supplied in breast milk later.—Doctor Hall.] If the food of the mother lacks greatly in any single thing, or if her health is such as to interfere with right assimilation of food, both mother and child may suffer. When the growth or development is stunted by malnutrition before birth, no subsequent care will completely overcome the bad results. If the defects in diet are slight, the development of the child may not be interfered with, but the mother may suffer. The rule is that nature cares more for the new generation and will protect the child at the expense of the mother.

"Proteid, so essential for the growth of the new organism should be mainly in the form of milk and eggs, or some well cooked vegetable protein as legumes or cereals.

Meat should be eaten in but limited amounts since it increases the work of the kidneys, and they should be spared as much as possible at this period. In removing meat from the diet one source of iron is withdrawn. Eggs will more than make good the amount withdrawn.

"Fat as it occurs in cream, butter, milk and eggs is better than fat in meats, in rich pastries or fried food, since the latter form is less easy to digest. Cereals, legumes, nuts, fruits and vegetables supply not only energy from the sugars and starches contained in them, but other needed substances, particularly mineral matter and bulky material. There should be an abundance of mineral matter, iron for red corpuscles, phosphorus to stimulate growth, lime for bones. This will be supplied by a diet rich in fruits and vegetables, milk and eggs.

"The following laxative diet is suggested: Whole wheat or graham bread; stewed prunes; properly cooked cabbage and onions; well cooked oatmeal; shredded wheat; plenty of fruit, fresh or cooked; abundance of vegetables; if in health, six or eight glasses of water a day.

A CHEERFUL SPIRIT

"Cheerfulness is always a means towards good health. Gloominess may be the result of digestive disturbances, but it may also cause them. Melancholia interferes with the mother's digestion and general assimilation of food. This may affect the composition of her blood, and thus disturb the nutrition of the child. The same result may occur during the nursing period, and many a grieved or angry mother has seen the ill effect of such emotion in a lessened or changed supply of milk."

It should be the effort of the mother and all around her to keep her in the life-giving atmosphere of cheerfulness.

Letter Department

WILBUR, NEBRASKA, August 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: It will be remembered that it was at this place that Clark Braden and Bishop E. L. Kelley met in their first discussion, and where Elder Braden for the first time met our people. He made the statement that he would then and there put to silence for ever all there was of "Mormonism." It is now many years since this statement was made, and we are still on the map, and we trust very much alive.

The district conference and convention were held here July 23 to 26. Each session was marked with a goodly degree of the Spirit, as were all the meetings, which was uplifting and encouraging to us. There were about twenty-five visitors and delegates from different parts of the district. W. S. Hidy of Mapleton, Kansas, and O. Salisbury of Des Moines, Iowa, were with us. Brother Salisbury is a live wire in Sunday school work, and gave some good instruction in the convention. Brother J. W. Waldsmith who has done so much for the work from its first introduction in Nebraska was present at the conference, full of gospel zeal despite his physical condition, brought on by the weight of years.

Five were baptized and the writer has baptized two since, making seven in all. Four of these are from the Sunday school, young ladies in their teens.

Brother Ward L. Christy and his devoted wife gave us a good lift in song and sermon when they were here in the spring. Come again, Brother and Sister Christy.

Yours for the uplift of the gospel standard.

SAMUEL BROLLIAR.

SHABBONA, MICHIGAN, August 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: We are still in the race and looking forward to the grand prize at the end thereof. We have just enjoyed a two-day meeting and drank in of the sweet Spirit that Jesus said would be our Comforter. Truly it is a comfort to enjoy that hallowed influence which was with us, assuring us that God was pleased with our meeting together.

Our district chorister, Sister Plato, was present, and the sweet spirit of song was manifested and enjoyed by all. We have reason to believe that the people of the Lord are advancing to higher planes in the gospel work.

Our district president was also present with words of counsel and advice set forth in gospel love and fellowship. David Dowker of Chicago, and O. J. Hawn of Bay City, Michigan, were in attendance. We enjoyed the privilege of hearing them proclaim the sacred truths of the gospel. The auxiliary meeting was profitable. We were truly encouraged to press onward in the divine journey of life, and parted with a resolution to do better.

Oh, that we may be faithful children, ever doing the will of our Master, that we may in the end say, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth is laid up for me a crown which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me in the last day, and to all those who love his appearing.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am

Your brother in bonds,

ORVAL Z. THOMPSON.

EROS, LOUISIANA, August, 12, 1914.

Editors Herald: Some years ago for the first time I heard the gospel preached. One year later I decided to be baptized, and determined to live a better life. It was then that the hard struggle began. I had to fight against evil, popular opinion, the opposition of parents, and other relatives and friends. All endeavored to show me where I was wrong. None were able to show me a better way whereby men could be saved.

I desire to fight on with the good cause. God being my helper, I expect to advance step by step until I reach the standard of righteousness pleasing to the Lord. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may not fall by the wayside, but press on in this grand and glorious work in which we are engaged until the victory is won.

May God bless each and every one with a stronger determination to press on to victory is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,

J. L. GRYDER.

LOCKPORT, NEW YORK, August 12, 1914.

Editors Herald: At the joint convention of the New York district auxiliaries, with Brethren A. E. Stone, George Landes, James Bannister, and Sister James Brugle, I was placed on a committee to arrange for a place for a two-day week end meeting to be held some time in August, and to be devoted mainly to institute work.

The result of our efforts was a meeting at Mang's Grove, near La Salle, this State, August 8 and 9. This location is between Niagara Falls and Buffalo, so the most of our young people and older ones, also, working at either place could spend their Saturday half holiday with us, which they did, quite a number bringing their blankets and camping Saturday night.

The weather was hot, but the bathing was good and the meetings as good as one could well expect considering the heat. Sunday was the hottest day of our season. All seemed to be in favor of a reunion for the coming year, declaring the time only too short.

Three from the Buffalo Branch were baptized, Brother Stone officiating with two, and Brother F. Harper with the other.

A rain followed the evening services so the heat was not so intense when we came to move the equipage. The ladies' aids of Buffalo and Niagara Falls conducted the refreshment stand, and Brother James Brugle of Niagara Falls with his auto saved us all drayage. Altogether it was quite a success, some attending from quite a distance on both sides of the international line.

A. M. CHASE.

UTE, IOWA, August 13, 1914.

Editors Herald: The world cries peace, peace. Our cry is that God may speed the day when his Son will reign in peace over all the earth. It surely will not be long until God moves among the nations of the earth that they may yield up the battle to the one great Leader, who alone is able to bring peace and order out of chaos.

To those who believe in God and have faith to rely on his promises there shines out a glorious light, discernible even through the darkest cloud. It is the dawning light of a new day. Oh, how my soul yearns for this great and glorious day of our Lord's appearing, when those who have washed their garments and made them white and clean may enter into his rest of a thousand years.

Only because of the Lord's love and mercy toward the erring has he prolonged his coming. Let us be prepared that we may abide the day. For at the end of this dark night the sun shall shine forth even in a fairer day than any of us have ever dreamed of. Let us watch and wait in patience and pray unceasingly that we may not be found sleeping at our posts. He shall come at an hour when we know not. His Saints may know of the nearness of his approach, and through obedience to the law and will of God they may receive that peace that passeth understanding.

In gospel bonds,

SADIE BURCH.

SANTA ANA, CALIFORNIA, August 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: Our good reunion closed last Sunday, August 10, and I came home to the same rented rooms that I occupied last year. I am glad to be keeping house again after visiting from place to place for four months and one half, though I enjoyed visiting and traveling as much as I could under the circumstances, that is, without the traveling companion of former years.

I am glad I went East, both to Independence and Holden. I met many kind friends in both places and made many new acquaintances whom it will be a joy to remember. It was at Holden that I finished revising my autobiography and sent it to the Herald Publishing House. From the time "Beatrice Witherspoon" was published in Autumn Leaves until the present year I have received requests from time to time to have it published in book form. According to the advice of the president of the Board of Publication at that time there was too much of it. He suggested revising and cutting it down to about five hundred pages. Not until the present year have I seen my way clear to do this work. It is now done with a desire to grant the wish of those who have urged me to publish the book.

Whether it is to be published or not will depend upon the response. Orders are still being sent in, but there is as yet a little over a tenth of the number there must be to secure the publication of the book. I am told that it will require one thousand names. That seems a good many, but yet it is only one among the seventy odd thousand members of the church. Do not trouble the Herald Publishing House with the orders until call is made from that office for the money. If published, the book will be sold from the Herald Publishing House office.

At present send orders to Mrs. Emma Burton, 620 West Fifth Street, Santa Ana, California. When sending orders by post card be sure to allow space for name and address to be written plainly.

On Sunday next our new church here in Santa Ana will be opened for services. We hope that it may be dedicated before long. The prayer meetings here continue to be well attended and spiritual.

May we all as Latter Day Saints double our diligence to be faithful in these troublesome times. Let us pray that God may spare this Nation from such slaughter as is taking place in nations abroad.

Hopefully,

EMMA B. BURTON.

DELOIT, IOWA, August 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: I embraced the Latter Day faith four years ago last May. It has indeed been a great blessing to me and in my home. I have been restored to health many times and have seen my loved ones healed through administration.

Though I had seen the power of God made manifest and had received many evidences of the truthfulness of this latter-day work, yet it seemed that I was not ready to give up worldly pleasures and obey the truth until God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to permit the taking away our baby girl, three years old. We called many times up on his holy name for her recovery, but all to no avail. It was God's will that she be taken from us. It seemed more than we were able to bear. A few weeks later I decided to try to do better.

Your brother in the gospel,

LLOYD WINANS.

'Neath the Southern Cross

It is some years since I wrote a letter to your columns. Not because I have not been interested in writing to the HERALD; I have spent much of my time until recently in working hard in the printing office belonging to the church in Australia, consequently I have had little time to spare for writing after carrying out my duty as editor of the Gospel Standard, our mission paper. This year I have been out of the office, endeavoring to do my work as a seventy. Have been interfered with somewhat through ill health.

At the beginning of the year my health was poor, but I went to Melbourne, in the adjoining state of Victoria, to do missionary work. I had only been there two weeks when, like a bolt from the blue, the saddest blow life's experiences have yet held for me came upon me, in the death of my brother. The shock was so great that in my state of health things were bad with me for several months. I am thankful to the dear Saints that during that trying time I was held up before the throne of heavenly grace throughout the whole mission, and even beyond its bounds. Many encouraging, sympathetic, brotherly and sisterly letters reached me, for everyone of which I was deeply thankful. What a bond of love and sympathy exists among the people of God! There is no brotherhood similar to it on earth.

During my illness the Saints fasted and prayed for me at different places and times, and each time I was blessed. Early in June the Sydney Saints met in reunion at Leichhardt in fasting and prayer for myself and other distressed Saints. On that day I was administered to and received for myself the intimation of the Spirit during the confirmation of the anointing that I would get well. Since then I have been steadily improving, and am thankful to say that at the time of writing I am feeling as well as I ever did. For this I am thankful to my heavenly Father. He told me at the last administration that he would direct his servant, the minister in charge, with regard to my future, so that if I followed his instructions I would soon be well. I have followed the directions of Brother Griffiths, and feel that he has indeed been led of the Lord in the matter.

On June 17, I accompanied him to this state. In this I know that there was heavenly wisdom. June was the beginning of our winter in Sydney, but they have no winter to speak of in this subtropical state, and the good, warm sunshine has done lots for my health. The cold weather was very trying to me in New South Wales. Still I am now in a condition where I feel able to resist the winters down there. To the Lord I am duly thankful.

Since coming to Brisbane we have had some fine experiences. The work has been established in this northern state for about twelve years, but the proper attention has not been paid to its development in the past. Four years ago I paid a visit to the country north of Brisbane and baptized some. I went to America shortly afterwards and until now have had no opportunity to visit this state. The Saints have felt neglected. I must say that I was also disappointed that no one else was sent by the powers that be to continue the work I had begun.

Brother Griffiths attended to the business which had brought him to Brisbane, viz, settled satisfactorily difficulties of several years standing, and then we paid a short visit to the Wondai and Kingaroy districts. Here we were blessed of the Lord as at Brisbane, and, after baptizing eight precious souls, an organization was effected at Wondai. I was left to continue the preaching while Brother Griffiths went on to Kingaroy. There he organized another branch. The prospects at both of these points are most encouraging. There are openings for preaching at several points around, and besides we have in view other points at which there are scattered Saints. These will not be neglected in the future.

Brother Griffiths organized a new district at a special conference held in Brisbane last Saturday and Sunday. This is a forward move in this state, and we look for progress as a result. Two young missionaries have been appointed to labor continuously in the district, so we look for good work to be done and for other branches to be built up as time goes on. I will labor here for about three more months before returning to New South Wales, but will return here at intervals, as occasion requires.

Brother Griffiths leaves to-day for Sydney. I shall miss him. He has been a father and friend to me while I have been with him, and I shall never forget his many kindnesses and the good lessons learned while associated with him. He is universally loved, for he takes such a kindly interest in all, especially the young. The young should not be neglected. They should be encouraged and their energies directed into proper channels, and I am pleased to note that our brother realizes that fact and does his best to help all. He is doing a splendid work in systematizing the work of the local and general ministry throughout the mission, and in setting in order and regulating the affairs of the mission generally. We sincerely trust that the good work he is doing will not be allowed to lapse with his going from the mission. If that happens his work will have been in vain. This is one of the most important missions the church has, and the utmost care should be taken by those in charge to keep its affairs in a healthy, regular state, and to so supervise the activities of the workers that the greatest possible amount of good shall result from their labors. May God bless our brother and continue his health and strength, so that he may be long able to keep up the good work he is doing as an organizer.

With best wishes for the success of the Master's cause, and kind regards to all the Saints with whom I am acquainted, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

WALTER J. HAWORTH.

ROZELLE, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA, 623.

Darling Street, home address.

Saskatchewan

I left Viceroy, July 9, to attend district conference near Saskatoon, where we had a good, profitable time, the Saints feeling encouraged by their associations together in the one great cause.

The day following the close of the conference, I started for Shellbrook to labor among strangers, but found on arrival that one is not a stranger long among the Saints. I found some very good, energetic people there, and appreciated the kindness shown me while in their midst. I spent about four weeks there, spoke fifteen times, presided over one sacrament meeting, blessed one child, administered to a number baptized and confirmed six, and organized one Religio local. The Saints and friends seemed to appreciate the opportunity of attending meetings. Although Shellbrook is one of the first stations south of the North Pole, I found the weather uncomfortably warm most of the time I was there.

From Shellbrook I went to Denholm, where I used to live. Here I spent a week visiting old acquaintances. I held one meeting with quite an interesting audience. While there I made the acquaintance of Mr. Nicholas Lake, a nephew of Uncle John Lake, of old missionary renown. He gave me a pressing invitation to come back during the winter and open up the work there. As the threshing season was about to open I returned home to look after my crop, arriving there August 18.

Quite a work has been done in this branch during the summer. About twenty-five have been baptized, with others still to follow in the near future.

Under the present conditions in the world, we are made to realize the great need of a closer walk with God. And when we remember the Lord has said he will hasten his work in its time, and that we are now in the midst of that hastening time, how necessary it is that the people of God should be up and doing, looking forward to and hastening unto the day of the coming of the Lord, which we are told we may know is nigh at hand when we see certain signs come to pass, and which are being fulfilled in our day and generation. The perilous times are upon us, but the Lord has said, My people will I preserve. Who are the Lord's people? The answer is certain: If ye love me, keep my commandments. He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me. He that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him.

Through the untiring efforts of T. J. Jordan, our district president, some new openings have been made in this part of the field. Other openings are expected in the near future.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

E. R. DAVIS.

VICEROY, SASKATCHEWAN, August 24, 1914.

Australia

In December last I left Melbourne in company with Brother C. A. Butterworth to attend the New South Wales district conference, which convened about the end of 1913 in the Leichardt church. One of the main features of that gathering was the work of Brother G. T. Griffiths, whom we then met for the first time. His instructions along lines of order and debate and order of the priesthood from charts were most beneficial, especially to the priesthood. We also met there for the initial time Brother C. Ed. Miller, and have since learned to esteem him highly for both his personal qualities and the work's sake. The latter is now temporarily in Adelaide, whilst Brother Griffiths is in Queensland, almost opposite ends of the Australian island continent, about fifteen hundred miles apart.

From the New South Wales conference the apostles sent me north to Newcastle District, where I labored until the first week in June and then returned to Melbourne to take up the work in Victoria District, with Geelong (Brother Butterworth's home) as my central point. While in sunny New South Wales I baptized three young persons, my first in that state.

delah, as did the Sunday school and Religio conventions. This was a successful and happy gathering, and the trip on coach and motor boat (especially the latter) overland to Salt Ash and through the head reaches of Port Stephens and the Myall River and lakes in the bright moonlight was ideal for scenery. About fifty Saints old and young undertook the journey, and a merrier band it would be hard to find. This was our first reunion. I trust it may not be my last.

The work of the Sunday school and the Religio in this land is onward, and I feel that great benefits have already come to the young of both sexes through these institutions. One can not wonder that the Lord saw fit to commend these helps. The work of the church in all its branches is moving steadily forward, and the future seems bright if faithful services are rendered by all.

One of the young people whom I baptized as before referred to is a German, and I was impressed that he would some day assist in the work in his own land. I noticed later that Brother Hansen reported good interest in Germany, and expressed a desire to establish the work in Hamburg, which is this boy's place of nativity. He intends returning and settling there at some future time. He is fairly well educated, having received in conjunction with his native tongue a four years' course in English. He can, therefore, study the English Bible. He came from home as a sailor, and deserted at Newcastle—quite a common occurrence at that port.

I am now at home, laboring around Melbourne and awaiting an opening to take my family to Geelong, as per apostolic request. In the meantime I journey there every fortnight to assist. Have had the pleasure of immersing three young people since my return to Victoria, all from sixteen to twenty-one years of age.

Brother Griffiths has ordained quite a large number of the young men in Victoria, and they are working hard to push their part of the work, showing especial activity in Religio and Sunday school.

My health is good, and I feel quite desirous of continuing in the good work until the Master says enough. With kind regards to all, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

J. H. N. JONES.

Scandinavia

We feel ourselves somewhat isolated, these troublous times, as neither church papers nor other American mail seem to reach us. A steamer is scheduled to sail direct from this port for New York to-morrow, and I am improving the opportunity to send these lines by it, trusting they may get through. The usual mail route via England has been suspended.

I shall not endeavor to inform you with reference to the great war struggle that so suddenly has spread over almost the whole of Europe, as you no doubt are well informed as we are here, and perhaps better. The news reaching us seems to be so conflicting that we hardly know what to accept, only that a terrible and far-reaching military combat has begun. I want the readers of the HERALD to be informed, however, that the elders in Scandinavia are all well, and, so far as conditions admit, are engaged in the work of their calling.

Neither of the Scandinavian countries is yet in the conflict, and it is hoped that they may be able to remain neutral. Yet the seriousness of the situation is recognized, and extensive preparations are made for defense. Here in Denmark all able-bodied men between the ages of twenty-one and thirty years are under arms; the fortifications are being strengthened, and temporary forts and breastworks are built in various places. It is yet hoped that these may not be needed. War has already cost the country millions. No one can tell what may come, or even what a day may bring forth. Only a few weeks ago all was quiet and peaceful, and nobody expected that by this time all of Europe would be in arms, with a deadly conflict going on.

The most serious condition confronting the people at present is the effect upon business and opportunities for a livelihood. Prices upon the common commodities of life have advanced to an astonishing degree. Breadstuff and other provisions advanced in a couple of days from twenty to one hundred per cent. For coal and coke the dealers ask three times the price of a week ago. The government has seized the main coal supply, so unless a change in the situation occurs before cold weather it will mean untold suffering for the masses, as none but the rich can purchase fuel at present prices. There being no coal mines in this country, we are dependent upon Great Britain for our fuel supply, and now that navigation is suspended we are confronted with a serious problem. The coal famine is causing factories to close and others have served notice on their employees that they will be compelled to close in the near future.

The war is the topic of conversation, on the streets or in the homes, or wherever a group of men are assembled. The situation is discussed with seriousness and with anxious forebodings. Masses gather at the newspaper headquarters and other places where bulletins are posted, to get the latest news. Truly, this is the day foretold by the Master, when he said, Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity. . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things coming upon the earth.

I have not been able to hear from Germany since the war broke out, as we have had no mail connection, and I am not informed if any, or how many of our brethren are in the army in that land. One young brother is in the Danish army; and I learn by letter from Brother Okerlind that some who intended to be baptized were called away into the military service in Sweden before the administration was attended to.

We learn that the United States is taking steps to help its citizens to return, but whether the elders would be justified in leaving or not is a question that we have not as yet been able to decide. It is very difficult to reach the people just now, as only the war engages their attention. Perhaps after a while they may come to their sober senses and be in a state of mind to give the message of truth a more calm consideration.

Sister Hansen was to have returned home over Hamburg on a German boat, but this, of course, had to be abandoned; but she got off on a Danish steamer that left here on the 6th, so by this time must be well on the way towards the homeland. I learn that the boat passed safely through the Kattegat and the North Sea, and I am in hopes she may have a safe journey home.

Brother Anderson and I are at present together, and are awaiting developments. We are not alarmed for our personal safety, but expenses are very high, and but little to be done at present. We want no one to feel anxious for us. We trust in an overruling providence, and hope in some way to be directed for the best.

I am much disappointed that I did not get to visit Germany again while the door was open; my contemplated trip into that part of the field had to be indefinitely postponed.

Hopefully and in the faith,

H. N. HANSEN.

News from Branches

Windsor, Ontario

It may be of interest to some to know that the Saints of Windsor, Ontario, are striving to promote the interests of the glorious gospel. We have a nice, comfortable church, brick veneered, on the corner of Perry Avenue, and Assumption Street. We take a Belt Line car which runs between Windsor and Walkerville.

We have about eighty members, with a good Sunday school and a newly organized Religio. The sisters are active in auxiliary work. Brother R. D. Weaver and wife were here for a couple of weeks, followed by Brother Scott. We appreciate their efforts, and feel that they did us good. We will be glad to extend a welcome to any of the missionaries.

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, August 22, 1914. LESLIE BROWN.

Saint Thomas, Ontario

We are not dead in this city, nor are we sleeping. On the contrary, we are very much alive. I really think that at present time we might be called a model branch. How long Satan will permit us to stay in this condition remains to be seen. It will be just so long as we refuse to cooperate with him.

We are ably presided over by Brother J. L. Burger. He is a good leader, and a good speaker, with progressive ideas. He has also a good staff of officers to assist him, so you see we are good all around.

We were favored some time ago by a visit from Brother S. W. L. Scott. He delivered some very instructive sermons, which we all enjoyed. We were pleased to have him with us, and will be glad when he comes again.

Last Sunday, August 23, we had the pleasure of entertaining a number of the London Saints, among whom we saw the kindly, familiar face of Brother John Shields. The London elders did the preaching. We are invited to return the visit and have our elders preach for them some Sunday in the near future, and we intend to accept the invitation.

War excitement is running high here, and we have already felt some of its sorrows. Last Saturday morning, eighty-five of our boys went away to sacrifice their lives to try to settle a quarrel that some of the monarchs of Europe have engendered. Just because two people lost their lives by the hands of an assassin, there has to be millions of other lives sacrificed to avenge the deed. Their lives were no sweeter to them than ours is to us, and I do not consider it our duty to send our dear ones to help them out of their difficulty.

Probably out of the ruins of their nations will arise a better system of government, but their rulers will not be called kings and emperors.

The time of our district conference will soon be here. The second Saturday and Sunday in October is the date set for it. We hope to have a good attendance and a season of spiritual enjoyment. It will have to be good, indeed, to be better than some of our regular branch prayer and testimony meetings.

"Onward and upward" is our motto, and we are striving to live up to it. Perilous times are here, and we realize that we must be pure in heart to know how to stand in holy places to insure our safety.

Why Do You Toil?

Is your only recompense the pay
Received while working day by day?
If so, whate'er may be the sum
That's paid you when the day is done,
You're bound as was the toiling slave,
E'en though some shekels you may save.
You'll never know the joy of living
Until of self in work you're giving.

Can you not feel as sets the sun
Your toil that day has helped some one?
It matters not what you have made,
Ere long aside that must be laid;
The day to you is one of loss,
Its place must take with those of dross;
You'll never honors great achieve
Until yourself and task you weave.

Can you your craft approach and smile
Because you know that all the while
Not only self, but others, too,
Are greatly blessed by what you do?
You need not be a statesman great,
Nor one who guards a nation's gate;
But in the humblest marts of trade
Of untold worth may be your aid.

Can you with both your heart and soul
Attempt the task, strive for the goal,
Well knowing that the sal'ry paid
To you is but a plan to aid
You on to greater, nobler, deeds,
Come nearer serving others' needs?
If not, your toiling is in vain,
E'en though you think quite great your gain.

If money is to you the end
For which your time on earth you spend,
Though great your wealth, you're poor e'en still,
And never can man's mission fill.
But if you take that you may give,
Throughout the ages you will live
As one who served his fellow-men;
Who freely shared his all with them.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

AUSTIN M. DOBSON.

His Wealth and Mine

My rich and childless neighbor's yacht, they say,
Looks like a ship of some transocean line.
A tall girl travels schoolward every day—
The girl is mine!

My neighbor owns a limousine that goes
Two score or more of miles per hour—that's fine!
Here comes a brown-eyed child with freckled nose—
The child is mine!

This side the rose-hedge at my neighbor's bound
There stands a wicker cart of common line,
In which a baby sleeps all snug and sound—
The babe is mine!—Strickland W. Gillilan.

The Joy of Giving

God has crammed both thy palms with living seed;
Let not a miser's clutch keep both hands tight,
But scatter on the desert's barren need,
That fragrant blossoms may reward God's sight.

God has dipped deep thy cup into his spring,
Which drippeth over, it is so well filled;
Lend it to some parched life, and let it bring Laughter and song to voices drought has stilled.

God gave to thee his only well-loved Christ,
Whose steps have smoothed the road that leads thee home;

Tell those whose road is rough, whose way is missed,
That he has called all weary ones to come.

So shall thy giving set for thee God's smile,
And thine own soul drink deep draughts of his love;
Earth's shadows shall grow bright, as heaven the while,
A web of glory, round thy life is wove.

—The British Congregationalist.

The Family

The family is like a book—
The children are the leaves,
The parents are the cover that Protective beauty gives.

At first the pages of the book
Are blank and purely fair,
But time soon writeth memories
And paints the pictures there.

Love is the little golden clasp
That bindeth up the trust;
Oh, break it not, lest all the leaves
Shall scatter and be lost.—Unidentified.

A Boy's Mother

My mother, she's so good to me,
Ef I was as good as I could be,
I couldn't be as good—no, sir!
Can't any boy be as good as her!

She loves me when I'm glad or mad;
She loves me when I'm good or bad;
And what's the funniest thing, she says
She loves me when she punishes.

I don't like her to punish me;
That don't hurt; but it hurts to see
Her cryin'—nen I cry; an' nen
We both cry—an' be good again.

She loves me when she cuts an' sews
My little cloak and Sunday clo'es;
An' when my pa comes home to tea,
She loves him most as much as me.

She laughs an' tells him all I said,
An' grabs me up an' pats my head;
An' I hug her, an' hug my pa,
An' love him purt' nigh much as ma.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

The Love of God

Love found me in the clear notes of a bird,
Soft, liquid, as they pierced the morning air,
And straight my lips repeated one dear word—
And lo, my trembling heart was bathed in prayer.

Love held me in the spell of sunset rays
All lingering gold upon the trees' young green,
In glinting glory of old woodland ways,
In murmurs music of clear brooks between.

Love charms me in the fragrance of a flower,
Its fragile form all wonder to my eyes;
Far fields of greenness whisper of Love's power;
From all outdoors fulfilling anthems rise.

Through all the shades of ways that are dividing,
Where I must choose God's ways or take my own—
I look, and lo, his love is beckoning, guiding,
And never, never can I go alone.

—Amy E. Campbell.

NEUTRALITY ENJOINED

President Wilson has very wisely counseled the citizens of the Republic to remain neutral in effect in their personal conversation concerning the war in Europe. This is good counsel, indeed, for the composite character of the citizenship of the Republic warrants the conclusion that it would be easy for quick-tempered and high-spirited men to lose their temper in the discussion of the nationalities engaged in the war and to express preference for the success of one and the defeat of another, and thus raise intensely bitter race controversy right in our own midst.

The readers of the HERALD and members of the church do well to heed this counsel of the President, and avoid anything calculated to foster or create dissension leading to violence among the dwellers of the Republic who owe allegiance to the governments now engaged in the conflict. When one stops to think that out of a possible one hundred million population nine million are aliens, not having birth under republican institutions and not having become naturalized, it is easy to see how careful every member of the Republic should be to avoid precipitating conflict here. When it is reflected further that within the confines of the Republic there are citizens whose parents were from almost every nation, kingdom, and principality or power; the possible love of country clinging to many of them would but create faint defense in favor of the Republic should war be precipitated upon us by unwise acts.

Whatever may be our personal, private opinion as to the origin or supposed necessity for this war, however much we think this or that nation responsible, a consideration of the counsel of President Wilson will help us all to see that quietness of speech and action is not only the wisest but the best and noblest condition in which to wait the final arbitration of time.

Besides that there will be thrown into the religious arena the speculation of different classes of believers in the second coming of Christ, who will claim this war presages the end of the world. Some will array the chronological character of many of the prophecies and trace the history of the world as they believe in connection with those prophecies and make this the great war of Gog and Magog, etc.

While we believe in the second coming of Christ we have been told distinctly by revelation that we were to take the Scriptures, and as given in the King James Version and buttressed by the Inspired Translation and the revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants,—these scriptures clearly state as found in the 24th of Matthew and the 13th of Mark, that the day and the hour of his coming is not known to any man; nay, not even does the Son know the day and hour which the Father has set in his own time or way. This connected with the prophecy also found in the 24th of Matthew that the gospel should be preached to all the world for a witness unto all nations, closely sustained by the statement in the Doctrine and Covenants that the gospel was to be preached to every tongue and people under the whole heavens, this all joined together shows clearly, from our knowledge of the history of the world, that they have not yet been clearly and distinctly fulfilled in their completeness.

Then let us as believers in the second coming take the statement of the Savior in its full meaning that there is no need that the day should overtake us as a thief in the night—"be ye also ready." If we are ready in our mind, prepared in our philosophy, belief, and lives, for the second coming of our Lord, why need we to worry whether it shall be the end of the world in 1914 or at any other date, and acting upon that belief grow careless and indifferent in our conduct, as many have done who have set a time for his coming, and forgot to discharge the duties lying before them.

Let us discharge our obligation to our fellow man in temporal things so far as possible for us to do; live honorably, soberly, economically, helping our neighbor or those who need help, when we can, forgiving those who trespass against us, and live up to all the light that we have received, steadfast in the faith, patiently awaiting for his coming. If we shall love his coming why should we fear the going out in the world of millions of men who are moved by the spirit of war to kill each other, and take it for granted that in the thunder of the cannon and the rattle of musketry, the wild and insane charge of cohorts, the end of the world is approaching and all will go out in the smoke and thunder of human conflict and the turning loose of the wild powers of earthquake, storm, darkness, tornado, and flood, and every destructive element by which all things shall be swept off its face, as if we had fear that we would not be cared for and our souls saved from the awful fates of those reserved for darkness, condemnation, and death?

Joseph Smith predicted war upon the nations, resulting in the death and misery of many souls. We may perish from this existence, but if our hope has been placed securely we shall rise from the conflict in the spiritual realm where there will be no war, but where peace reigns universal over all the earth.

Let us remember also that the command has been given requiring certain work upon this continent, and it would seem to be the better part of faith in us to be patient, boasting not of faith or of mighty deeds, and to prayerfully get together in quietude and wait and see the salvation of the Lord.

We certainly commend the chief magistrate of the Nation for the wisdom of his counsel to the citizens of the Republic.

JOSEPH SMITH.

A TIMELY WARNING TO THE SAINTS

In this issue President Joseph Smith calls attention to the proclamation of neutrality issued by President Wilson. The warning is timely. In a moving appeal to his countrymen President Wilson says:

The United States must be neutral in fact as well as in name during these days that are to try men's souls. We must be impartial in thought as well as in action, must put a curb upon our sentiments as well as upon every transaction that might be construed as a preference of one party to the struggle before another. My thought is of America. I am speaking, I feel sure, the earnest wish and purpose of every thoughtful American that this great country of ours, which is, of course, the first in our thoughts and in our hearts, should show herself in this time of peculiar trial a nation fit beyond others to exhibit the fine poise of undisturbed judgment, the dignity of self-control, the efficiency of dispassionate action, a nation that neither sits in judgment upon others nor is disturbed in her own counsels and which keeps herself fit and free to do what is honest and disinterested and truly serviceable for the peace of the world.

LET THERE BE PEACE WITHIN THE CHURCH

We have in the United States representatives of all the warring nations. While all may not be represented in the church membership, the leading nations are represented. We have many German Saints, as well as many of English descent. The church has been greatly enriched by the sturdy, dependable, whole-hearted qualities of her German converts. And it goes without saying that noble men and women of English descent have been foremost in building up the work from the beginning.

Naturally men sympathize with the peoples of their ancestral land. German sympathies go out to the Fatherland, regarded by Germans as the friend of science, enlightenment, and industrial progress. As naturally, Anglo-Saxon sympathy goes to Great Britain, the nation that has safeguarded human rights and liberties wherever the sun shines.

But the times call for circumspection in speech and conduct, in the expression of sympathy as we have dwelling within the church, side by side, in many places, Germans and Anglo-Saxons. They should not permit overseas wars to disturb their Saintly communion. As citizens of the Republic, bound by the law of God to obey the law of the land, they should be neutral. As citizens of the kingdom of God, they should be tolerant of each other. Teuton and Anglo-Saxon are related by blood if their ancestry be traced back a little way; in the church they are brothers in a holier communion. Let them observe care and Christian consideration; and if they can not be temperate in speech it would be better to keep silence.

NOT TAKEN BY SURPRISE

The developments now going on in the world have not taken the Saints by surprise. A correspondent complains that in editorial and sermon we have conveyed the idea that the situation was unlooked for. Our reference was to the world at large. It was as Paul said, "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them."

The Saints have insisted for many years that the prophecies would surely come to pass. Two years ago in these columns we stated that such a conflict as is now raging was inevitable. (See HERALD, July 31, 1912.) It is not a matter of surprise to us, unless it be that its sudden fury was greater even than we expected.

JESUS PROPHET AS WELL AS SAVIOR

Jesus was a great prophet as well as a Messiah. He declared that as a sign of the end and of his second coming there should be "wars and rumors of wars." No other subject so engages the attention of the world to-day.

He said that nation should rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom. In dramatic fulfillment of that prediction, nation has risen against nation and kingdom against kingdom, until within the one great war there are raging ten or more separate wars between individual nations and kingdoms.

He said that there should be "distress of nations, with perplexity." How truly that is being fulfilled. Nations are perplexed and distressed. Social and industrial paralysis exists in many great nations, with threatened if not actually existing privation and want. Prospective starvation and cold, with awful suffering during the coming winter, menaces thousands.

Thousands of widows and little orphaned children weep to-day in Berlin, in Saint Petersburg, in London, in Paris, in Brussels, in Vienna. Millions may yet weep in a vain effort to wash out with tears of pity and sorrow the awful bloody stains left on history's pages by these twentieth century wars.

HE HAD THE ONE GREAT PLAN

Our faith in the gospel is increased, not diminished by that which is taking place. Jesus was a great prophet; and he had also the true remedy for world distress. Others now recognize that fact. A careful observer and noted writer says:

Beneath a fair exterior of power and glory a canker has long eaten into Europe's very heart—the canker of jealousy and internecine hatred, which threatens to put all in jeopardy and which menaces its warring children with a sudden fall to the dead level of a common ruin. Europe has long been sick—perhaps sick unto death. The forty years' peace has been no peace, only a feverish truce wherein national rivalries and racial hatreds have intensified and deepened until the day of reckoning was bound to come. That mad piling up of fleet upon fleet and army upon army against which so much rhetoric has been expended these later years has been but the most striking symptom of a disease curable only by a fundamental change in the European state of mind, a malady which no machinery of arbitration could reach—only the conversion of the European soul.

A NEW MIND NEEDED BY THE NATIONS

"The conversion of the European soul!" Men awake at last to the fact that Jesus stated a great basic, eternal truth when he said, "Ye must be born again."

The Germanic Society of Chicago has published a pamphlet written by Professor Ferdinand Schevill, of the University of Chicago, on "Germany and the peace of Europe." From it we quote:

Above all speculations, one thing is certain: Governments may pass, dynasties may vanish, but the peoples of Europe will remain substantially as they are within their historic boundaries. But these battered and impoverished peoples will be preserved for no other purpose than new wars and new disasters if they do not fit themselves with a new mind. And that means that the individual—for everything depends on him—must learn the lesson of peace and love for which in Europe he is as yet not greatly receptive.

That is the substance of the gospel message, that men with the aid of God fit themselves with a new mind. There can be no permanent peace, either individual or national, until that is done. No more glorious work could be conceived of than to preach such a message. The gospel preacher is a world patriot.

DUTY WELL DONE THE BEST PREPARATION

It is true as stated in President Smith's editorial that no man knows the hour when Jesus will come again. The things that Jesus enumerated as signs merely indicate when the time draws near, and they show clearly that these are indeed the latter days; no new thought to Latter Day Saints. But there should not be any wild or feverish anxiety in preparation for the great event, concerning the exact date of which even the angels in heaven are not apprised.

We should go on quietly doing the work at hand that needs doing, honestly, in the fear of God, and in the service of humanity. He who does this is safe and need have no fear of being taken unaware by the return of his Master. Any garb that one may wear in the pursuit of duty in that spirit and manner will be good enough for an "ascension robe."

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

PRAYERS FOR PEACE.—President Wilson has set aside Sunday, October 4, as a day of prayer throughout the nation for peace in war-torn Europe.

WAR TAX.—President Wilson has submitted to Congress a message in which he recommends that a war tax be levied to make up a deficit of $100,000,000 in the United States treasury, incurred, it is explained, by decrease in import revenues incident to the European war.

NEW ALBANIAN KING.—The press reports a new government established in Albania. Mehmed Burhan Eddine Effendi, son of Abdul Hamid, former Sultan of Turkey, is to be proclaimed king. This is in violation of the London conference, following the war in the Balkans. It is said that Albania under this arrangement would remain independent of Turkey.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—The dispute between Carranza and Villa continues. Villa remains at Chihuahua City awaiting the call of the Constitutionals for the selection of a provisional president, and the carrying out of the agrarian reforms of the Constitutionals. Carranza is said to have ordered a general election, to occur October 1. President Wilson has announced that Carranza is not considered at Washington as provisional president. Further reports indicate that the Washington administration seems disposed to hold Carranza in some degree to the Constitutionalist covenant.

TURKISH ABRIGATION.—Considering the European war as her opportunity, Turkey has formally notified the nations concerned that she has abrogated the conventions, treaties and privileges under which foreigners in the Ottoman Empire have been exempt from local jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases. This order was of long standing, and provided for trial of foreigners before their own judges, diplomats and counsels. A. Rusten Bey, Turkish ambassador to the United States, declares:

The removal of every kind of privilege enjoyed by the powers in excess of what the general principles of international law allow is the meaning of this step.

LABOR TROUBLES.—Governor S. V. Stewart, of Montana, has ordered the mobilization of the entire state militia, following labor troubles at Butte. The arrest of strike leaders at Trinidad, Colorado, in connection with the recent labor war in that vicinity, has begun. A number of men have been taken to jail and warrants are said to be issued for many more. President Wilson suggests a tentative adjustment of the Colorado trouble in accordance with the plan of the Commission of Conciliation of the Federal Department of Labor, providing for a commission to consider claims and grievances, the withdrawal of Federal troops, and discontinuation of picketing and parading. As a basis of agreement, the President suggests a three-year truce; return to work of miners not convicted of the violation of law; prohibition of intimidation of men; publication of current scale of wages; appointment by employers of a grievance committee, a committee of three appointed by the President to settle difficulties not adjusted by company officials or grievance committee.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Reports from this war continue conflicting and meager, and under the most severe censorship. Fighting has continued along the entire line of the German and allied forces. The advance of the right wing of the Germans has been checked, and their army forced to retreat a distance of from thirty-five to fifty miles before the formidable attack on the allies. The center has been the scene of advances and reverses, with Verdun and Nancy as the basis of the allied forces. Conditions in Alsace, Lorraine, and the Vosges remain as at last report. Sharp fighting between British and Germans is said to have occurred in France. Belgium is reported aggressive, with fighting in the vicinity of Antwerp and Louvain. The Russian forces have advanced in Austria to the Carpathian Mountains and the Vistula River, with heavy losses to the Austrians. Russia claims success in Poland. In eastern Prussia the Russians are in retreat before the Germans; in the southeast they are reported victorious over the Germans. The bombardment of Belgrade continues, with Servian women in the line of defense. Servian and Montenegrin forces have invaded Bosnia, and Montenegro is victorious in Herzegovina. Japan continues to land men on Chinese soil, preparatory to the struggle with Germany, and is reported active against Kiao-Chau. Germany, under the advantage of her advances in France, is said to have indirectly and informally proffered peace through the Washington administration. The allies, including Japan, have entered into an agreement not to make peace separately, and only in agreement. Edward Grey, British Secretary of Foreign Affairs, speaking for the allies, states that peace is possible only with indemnity to Belgium and the adjustment of certain other grave issues.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

EXPENSIVE AFFAIR.—Professor Charles Richer, in Doctor David Starr Jordan's recent book, War and Wastes, estimates that the present European war will engage 21,200,000 men. The daily expense, according to this estimate, for pay for soldiers and workmen, rations, feed for horses, equipment, munitions, transportation, help to poor, destruction to towns, etc., and loss in imports will be $49,950,000. Nor does this estimate take into account the physical suffering, the privation, the innumerable and grief-stricken widows and fatherless children, the incalculable loss to international amity and universal brotherhood. An expensive affair, truly.

REPORTS FROM WAR.—We are in receipt of a letter from Bishop Roderick May, sent from London, England, under date of September 1. He reports war conditions existing in England, and closed his letter with this sentiment:

We feel quite safe in London, and have no thought of any evil coming to us. Our minds are at rest. We have confidence in God that even if the great conflict has come, if faithful, the promise made to Enoch of old will be shared to us, "My people will I preserve."

The same mail brings a letter from Brother U. W. Greene, dated Jerusalem, August 17, from which we extract the following:

Jerusalem is in a fever of war preparation. Nothing like it has ever been known in modern times. . . . Thousands of the Jews receive money from their people at home, in Russia, Greece, Italy, Germany, France, England and many other countries; it is pitiful to see these poor creatures crowd around the Post and banks pleading for a little money. Already there is great destitution and much suffering; very little can be done to help them, for nearly everyone is in destitute circumstances. Unless there is help from some source ere this is read many will die of starvation. People walk through the streets with sad countenances. At the least sign of trouble the stores are immediately closed and their owners keep under cover. Our milk man has taken his cows and sheep into the house to save them from the army. . . . Yesterday I learned that all the banks have suspended payment until after the war is over. We must depend upon receiving from America ere our little is entirely gone. And as nothing but gold or its equivalent, gold bills, can be used, it is a difficult problem and up to the church to reach us in some way. We are not alarmed, for the promises of the Lord are sure, and we will come through all right.

Point Promise

Suggested by a baptism at the Onset Reunion, at which Elder Holmes J. Davison administered the rite to two candidates.

It comes back to me,
That bit of the sea,
    And the point that led into the wave,
Like a beautiful gleam
In a shadowy dream,
    Where the waters their glad presence gave.

I see one there, stand
With uplifted hand
    And face toward the incoming tide;
And one with bent head,
Looking landward instead,
    Where are paths that his young feet have tried.

The sound of sweet song,
Now faint and now strong,
    Rings clear from the ones that await
With welcoming hand,
On the hillside and sand,
    These souls coming in at the gate.

And the peace and the grace
Like the smile from his face
    Rested there on that bit of the sea,
Where souls gave the Lord
The seal of their word
    For service, wherever it be.

Oh, mystical power,
That gives to such hour
    The halo of sanction divine;
Though humble the way,
He crowneth the day
    With radiance naught can outshine.

The sea and the throng,
The laugh, and the song,
    The voice of the man in the tide;
The peace and the calm
(Like the fragrance of balm)
    As I stood on the terraced hillside,

Seemed to whisper to me
Henceforth this shall be
    "Point Promise"—where waters are sweet
To souls who obey
And walk in the way
    He blest with the touch of his feet.

I may never stand
On that point of land
    Where I stood in half strangeness that day;
But it ever shall be
"Point Promise" to me,
    Kissed by prayer-blest waters for aye.

Waiting

On summer Saturday's long afternoon
I used to climb, barefoot, one thronelike knoll,
Soliloquizing: "Father's coming soon."
The gray pike billowed eastward like a scroll
And vanished in the apex of a hill
One world-long mile away; around me played
The shifting sunbeams—magically still,
Tiptoeing from each ever-lengthening shade.

I knew that when he crept into my ken
Above the hillbrink I should know the span—
White-stockinged bay, head-tossing gray; and then
The strong, familiar figure of the man.
I'd know them—know them! Leaping with their joy
My swift feet from my cairn would take me down—
A care-free, zephyr-hearted, eager boy,
To welcome home my father from the town.

Once on a time he went away again;
Perhaps the sun shone, but we could not see.
I have not climbed that little knoll since then,
For father is not coming home to me,
Somewhere he waits upon a sun-kissed hill
And softly says: "My boy is coming soon."
He'll know me from afar—I know he will!—
When, world-tired, I trudge home, some afternoon.

The Unnoted Heroes

There are heroes who have never Heard the fearful din of battle,
Heroes who, unknown for ever,
Labor where no sabers rattle;
There are heroes who are giving
Joy to others day by day,
Who are making life worth living
Just by earning honest pay.

There are heroes who are wearing
No bright medals for their merit;
Heroes who may not be sharing
Splendor that the proud inherit;
There are heroes who prefer the Tasks of righting wrongful things,
And thus make themselves more worthy
Than the pampered sons of kings.

There are heroes, uncomplaining,
Who are striving daily, yearly,
So the goals we would be gaining
May each morning shine more clearly;
There are heroes, unrewarded,
Who, by toiling late and long
In surroundings that are sordid,
Help the luckless to be strong.

There are heroes with wan faces,
Who uplift their fallen brothers;
Heroes who, in lowly places,
Labor for the love of others.
Why not pause sometimes to cheer them
For the courage they reveal?
Why not willingly reverse them
For their patience and their zeal?

THE FATHER'S WILL

[Sermon by Elder Joseph R. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa, June 28, 1914. Reported by Elizabeth France.]

I call your attention to two texts, one found in Matthew 7: 21: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." You notice I emphasize the words my Father.

There is another important word in this text, and in order that you may more easily take in the whole meaning of the text, I will read it again as quoted and emphasize a different word. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

The next text is found in Acts 9: 6. You remember the experience of Saul of Tarsus. He was wise enough to propound a very important question as soon as he learned that he had been fighting against God, opposing the Lord. And when to one of his questions the answer came, "I am Jesus whom thou persecuteth," Saul said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" A very important question.

FAITH LEADS TO WORKS

It is evident from the mental and physical constitution of man, that he was made to do something as well as to believe. Everyone ought to know this from the knowledge that is within the reach of all from observation and experience. And in harmony with this the Lord said, It is not everyone who speaks truth from his lips that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, "but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Now, true faith always leads to true works, works of righteousness—the works enjoined by the authority of the Almighty. False faith either leads to works of unrighteousness, or to no works at all. In either case it is disastrous, but in one case more than in the other. So we believe that every injunction or requirement of the divine law is in harmony with every principle of truth anywhere, and there can be no conflict, therefore, between true religion and science. When conflict occurs upon claims made, it is evident that there is something wrong with the religion or the science. And we believe, as a people, with a host of others, that the Bible contains a clear revelation of God's will to man. And while we believe more than they do along the line of revelation from God to man, the Bible with us is the leading textbook of authority. And we could not believe in the Book of Mormon, nor in the later revelations, were it not so. Just as soon as any person, claiming to be a Latter Day Saint, gives to the Bible a place of secondary importance, he ceases to be an intelligent and true Latter Day Saint, in belief.

REVELATIONS HARMONIOUS

I was in conversation with a man who has written a work against us, against the Book of Mormon,—author of The Golden Bible, one time, at Harlan, Iowa, and during that conversation I said to him, "Mr. Lamb, instead of belief in the Book of Mormon undermining and destroying our faith and confidence in the Bible, finally, as you put it, it strengthens our faith and confidence in that book; it can not do otherwise; and that is the final effect we see everywhere with true believers in the Book of Mormon."

We believe that the revelations of God are harmonious, hence we are under no obligation to accept anything purporting to be revelation from God unless it is in harmony with that which he has already given in the leading textbook. And as it claims to emanate from God, it must be in harmony with God.

We have a description here given of the character of God. The wondrous attributes that make up that character are presented to us by the great Teacher, and also by the apostles and prophets; but we give the great Teacher preference always. He was the best representative of God that ever lived on the earth. And he has told us what God's character is. That which comes in conflict with it, is not come from him. God is not against himself; he is not in conflict with himself. He is always in harmony with himself. And if we would always bear some of these leading and fundamental truths in our minds, we would not be deceived and led astray.

It seems to me that it is a wise and proper thing when we propound this important question, "What wilt thou have me to do," to consider that God is the proper one to answer the question. And if we have a clear revelation of his will concerning any matter, that ought to settle the question in our minds.

I do not want this congregation, largely composed of Latter Day Saints, to apply these statements altogether to those outside of the church; I am talking to you, as well as to others. You know Paul says, The gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Thinking about this, I have come to the conclusion that there are many degrees of belief, or faith—I make no difference—and while we may believe more truth in a religious sense than many others do, yet there are many of us that do not believe it all. There are many of us, I judge from actions, who do not believe all that they are well acquainted with. Why do I believe that? Because they do not act upon it. They do not obey it. They do not seem willing to obey, hence they believe in part.

There is only one right way, and that is to seek after truth, and accept it and obey it as fast as we become acquainted with it. I do not want you to understand that I am condemning everybody that does not believe just as I do with reference to this principle or that principle. That is not the idea. I mean many of us fail to act upon that which we will acknowledge to be truth, and clearly revealed. We excuse ourselves in some way. Some present their excuses, and others do not. But both ways are failures.

The God who created us knows what we need. He knows what we ought to do in order to secure the greatest degree of good. And it seems to me very reasonable in face of facts that we are intelligent beings and possess the power of agency, and that we do not know of any limit to our development, (at least I am not able to place a limit anywhere, either in time or eternity), that God should have revealed his will, indicated his will to man, that he might start right and continue right—not waste his time living in ignorance in this world, but living in harmony with the divine law?

CHARACTER BRINGS USEFULNESS AND REWARD

Another thing in this connection should be borne in mind, and that is that true character alone can prepare us for usefulness and the enjoyment of bliss in this world, or in the world to come. And this is one of those great governing principles that will be just as true in the world to come as it is now. It is character that will enable us to pass through the pearly gates into the golden city to enjoy the reward promised of God. No matter what we say here, no matter what we may do, in a formal way, if we fail to develop a true character, we will be unfit to enter in and enjoy the reward promised to the faithful. We have an abundance of scripture to support this position, and you can see the reasonableness of it at once.

Now we think that the gospel was revealed to man for the purpose of developing this true character. And you know it often occurs when we want to develop something that is good we have to throw away something in order to accomplish it,—get rid of something. So with man in his development, there must be a casting away of that which is evil, of that which is wrong, and development upon the foundation of that which is true and right and good.

Your speaker does not believe that man is wholly depraved, outside of Christ. If man were totally depraved God would have no foundation upon which to work in bringing about his salvation. But the gospel is revealed in order to eliminate the evil and develop the good. And Christ is "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." And if we can only learn to follow that light, we will come to God. We will come to Christ. We will come by the way God has ordained,—the gospel way. And thus we will prepare ourselves fully for usefulness and the enjoyment of that degree of bliss that we may be permitted to enjoy under present conditions, and for the full reward promised in the life which is to come.

Take for instance, the principle of repentance. It is a grand principle. I feel thankful to God that he permits us to repent. We are so weak and so erring that we sin sometimes when we do not want to sin. We go astray. The best thing we can do, just as soon as we discover it, is to set ourselves right. Do not be discouraged; try again. Look up to God, the source of strength and light, and try again in his strength. Repent of the wrong done, and determine in your own mind that as God shall give you strength, you will not repeat it. And through this principle of repentance you see we perfect our character.

Faith and repentance go right along together. To be sure, we are required to repent when we embrace the gospel, but repentance should not end there. I am afraid it does with some people. I am afraid it does to too great an extent with many of us. But whenever we sin we should repent; and repentance in its broad sense means this, to me, that if I have believed that which I find to be error, I must put it away and believe the truth. If I have believed that which is wrong in any sense, I must cast that belief to one side and believe that which is right. If I have done that which is wrong, I must cease to do it and do that which is right. This is repentance.

That reminds me of an old translation. You know the one in the King James Version of the Bible in Acts 2 reads that Peter said to that company of Jews who cried out, "Men and brethren what shall we do," "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," etc. But an old translation, made in the days of Queen Elizabeth, that I came across when traveling in central Indiana, says, "Amend your ways and be baptized." That is a very plain translation. I like it. Everybody can understand it; it does not need any explanation. "Amend your ways every one of you." Repentance means reformation of character. And thus we see that we must cast out all that is opposed to God, opposed to purity, opposed to that which is right and true, and then build up and develop that which is good and right, and that is the way to prepare for an inheritance in the kingdom of heaven. Hence the fruits of a Christian life should show themselves in the acts of every individual professing Christianity. They should be seen by the people.

POWER BEHIND LAW

Now if we refer this question to God, how are we to learn what we shall do? We believe that God has revealed himself to man. I know that there is a class of individuals, many brainy people among them too, who believe that there is no personal God. Hence there is no such thing as revelation from him. But this class of individuals should bear in mind that they are under the same obligation that we are, that it rests just as strong upon them as it does upon us, to account for all things that we see in this material world and in all other worlds, for that matter, to tell us the source of life and the source of all things that may be seen in the material world, and in other worlds.

Well, we have one of the leaders that has told us. Robert G. Ingersoll, the great agnostic, in one of his lectures said, Everything that we see in this world is not the result of the act of a personal God, but it is the result of the operation of eternal law. Now I judge that he meant from that operation of eternal law, laws that were always in existence. So we are left now to compare that absurdity—as they say of belief in an eternal God of intelligence and power, who, as we believe, created all things by word of his power—with the belief that they have come into existence by virtue of the operation of this eternal law. Which will you have? Which is the better one?

Now the same class of agnostics appeals to our experience. And they tell us that that which is contrary to their experience they are not prepared to accept. And hence they reject much that is in the Bible. What does experience teach us with reference to law? Does experience teach us that law ever enacted itself? Did you ever know of a law that enacted itself? Every human law, made for the government of human beings, has the intelligence of man behind it. And without that intelligence there would have been no such law. Did you ever know a law to execute itself? In other words, what can law accomplish without legislative and executive power? What can it do? It is a nullity; it can accomplish nothing. There must be an intelligent force and power behind law. Law simply tells the method by which things are accomplished, and we agree that God works by law in nature, and in spiritual affairs. He brings to pass the results of his wondrous work through the operation of what we may call natural and spiritual law. But what would there be if he were not behind it? He is the force, the intelligence, the power behind those laws. There is no power in law, there is no intelligence in law. It may indicate intelligence somewhere, but it is not in the law. It is in the power that originated the law, made the law, and executes the law.

These laws of nature are so far above the power of man that we have to ascribe them to some other source. Or else, as Mr. Ingersoll says, they are eternal laws. And if they are eternal laws, who put them in operation? Who made them? Who executes them? We have spring, summer, autumn, winter. We have all the various forces that exist in our material world, and we are told in other worlds, likewise, the same leading forces are in operation. They are executed every day, and yet there is no God.

This same man says in one of his writings or articles, "I would just like to ask the Christians one question, Who made God?" Some of them prefer to put another question, Who made the Devil?

Now, with reference to God, and the belief of Christians, I am quite willing to admit that we have our limitations. We ascribe all things to this intelligent being whom we call God. When we get there we can go no further. We can not go beyond that. But do they not have their limitations? His limitation according to his own word is law without a law maker, without an executive power. All things are the result of the operation of eternal law. Now which is the more reasonable, laying aside the Bible altogether? Which is the more reasonable of the two? How much there may be for us to learn about God when we have progressed much further, when we shall see as we are seen and know as we are known, we can not say. The Apostle Paul, who was a wise man and an inspired man, says, "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then [when that which is perfect is come,] face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." So there is a more perfect state coming; but so far as we are able to go, we are more in harmony with reason, and in complete harmony with the testimony of the Bible.

GOD'S WILL REVEALED

We believe, as Latter Day Saints, that in the Bible and Book of Mormon, and the later revelations, is contained a revelation of God's will to man. Now a great deal is said about the unreliability of the Bible in our day. Can you find any place where Jesus threw any discredit on the testimony of the Scriptures? I am willing to admit that, historically, there are some strange statements in the book; I am willing to admit that many things may be imperfectly expressed. But take it as a whole, it presents to us the grandest system of truth that the world ever knew, and we need not go wrong. But Jesus never threw any suspicion upon the Scriptures. He said "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."

Now I do not indulge in an extreme view. I do not believe in that view that was entertained by the Jews, that if there was a character, a Hebrew character, made a little wrong, it was one of the greatest blunders that they could make. Even the characters representing the Scriptures, the sacred writings, must be made in just a certain way. That was their belief. They thought it was wrong to deviate from that.

I do not believe, either, that in the Scriptures we have eternal life. I believe that the Scriptures indicate what we shall do in order that we may secure that life. Notice, Jesus did not say, In the Scriptures you have eternal life. He was speaking to the Jews who were in darkness and sin, and he said, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." He did say to them, "They are they which testify of me." And in the following verse he says, "And ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." We have life in Christ, and the Scriptures testify of him, so we may know how to come, and that we may learn to trust him who is entirely worthy,—the Christ of God, God's great prime minister, who did missionary work, personally, when here in our world of sin and darkness. And we have a record, brief as it may be, of what he said and what he did when he was in the world. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." A second statement that we should bear in mind.

Again you will remember that when Jesus was holding that wonderful debate with Satan, Satan suggested to him that in the time of his fasting, when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, "Command that these stones he made bread." But Jesus said, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

It is suggested to us that if God has revealed his word to man, we are required to live in obedience to that word. We Latter Day Saints think that God has restored the gospel in these last days. Some people think that is a terrible thing. If it is true, my friends, it is a very grand thing. If it is false, we have made a big mistake. That is putting it fairly, is it not?

EVIDENCES OF RESTORATION

But we have a right to expect that if the gospel has been restored in our time, in our age, as we hold, we can find evidences of that restoration to support the belief. And one of the evidences, making it as comprehensive as I can, is the harmony between the alleged gospel restored to us, and the gospel presented to us in the New Testament,—the complete harmony.

Upon this subject, the word of God by which we are to live, I wish to call your attention to a passage in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 95, paragraph 3, a revelation given in 1833: "And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall forsake all evil and cleave unto all good." That is pretty good advice is it not? They sometimes used to tell me when I was in the missionary field, "You Latter Day Saints are too narrow for us; we do not like your faith because it is too narrow." I said, "Is it? Well, if it is, we have failed to discover it, and we stand ready to be set right."

But to cleave unto all good, and forsake all evil, is not narrow. That covers the whole ground. That is the way to develop true character; that is the only way in which it can be done. And these statements are in complete harmony, you must admit, with the Bible.

But we read on. "That ye shall live by every word which proceedeth forth out of the mouth of God; for he will give unto the faithful, line upon line, precept upon precept; and I will try you, and prove you herewith." What is the result of his proving us, dear Saints? What is the result of that? How does he find us after he has tried us and proved us with this word? Have we furnished in our lives the evidence that we live by every word that proceedeth out of his mouth? or do we find our limits? Do we go thus far and say, "Thus far we will go and no farther"? We have a right to say that if a thing leads to evil and wrong, but when it leads to the greatest good of man, and bears upon its face evidences of divinity, we have no right to treat it in that way. When it is something that can not fail to accomplish more for you than you can possibly secure without it, and to accomplish good for your fellow beings, and to honor God, allowing the testimony of the Bible to be correct, why object? why halt? why stop before we get through?

Jesus said, "Live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." I stop to ask a question here. Did you ever think what that is that Jesus said, as recorded in the New Testament? That is what Jesus is teaching here in the restoration, Man shall live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. How can we do that? Can we do that without admitting the truth of present-day revelation? Now suppose I put it in a different way. Man shall live by every word that has proceeded out of the mouth of God. Could we obey that commandment? No, we could not for two leading reasons.

First, according to the testimony of the Bible itself, much of the word of God that has been written has been lost—is lost to us. We do not know where it is. We can not live by that of course. Another reason is that in addition to the unchangeable commandments and instruction found in the gospel of Christ, there are local revelations, local commandments which applied in their time to certain persons and to no others. We can not live by them. Noah was commanded to build an ark. We are not required to do that work. It was a local commandment and applied to Noah only. Moses was required to build a tabernacle in the wilderness. We are not required to do that. That was a local commandment and applied to Moses and the people in his day. And you know he gave instructions to his disciples before his departure, that when they should see Jerusalem compassed with armies they should flee into the mountains. We are not required to do that. We can not; it is impracticable.

And the Lord said to Saul, Arise and go into the city and there it shall be told thee what thou must do. When we receive light (no matter how it come to us) with reference to what we shall do to be saved, we are not required to go into the city of Damascus to hear some one tell us what we ought to do. We could not do it if we would; that is, a great many of us could not. So you see we can not live by every word that has proceeded out of the mouth of God. And of course we can not live by the word that has not yet been given. And the only sense in which we can accept the statement is to keep it in the present tense, Man shall live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

That is equivalent to saying that God may and will speak to his people, in any age and in any clime, when they place themselves in a proper condition before him, and when, in the judgment of God, it is necessary that his will should be communicated to them.

BINDING CHARACTER OF WORD

But on this very point I wish to call your attention to another statement here, for the point is an important one. That is, it is important that we should know that we are not to disregard the word of God. We are to live by it. God knew that we needed these things, and hence he revealed them. In section 83, paragraph 7, of the Doctrine and Covenants, we read:

And now I give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves, to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and everyone that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit, cometh unto God, even the Father; and the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you, which is confirmed upon you for your sakes, and not for your sakes only, but for the sake of the whole world: and the whole world lieth in sin, and groaneth under darkness and under the bondage of sin: and by this you may know they are under the bondage of sin, because they come not unto me; for whoso cometh not unto me is under the bondage of sin; and whoso receiveth not my voice is not acquainted with my voice, and is not of me; and by this you may know the righteous from the wicked, and that the whole world groaneth under sin and darkness even now.

This gives a further explanation and makes very plain the binding character of the word of God upon the people, and especially upon us as Latter Day Saints. The very nature of our covenant through obedience to the gospel requires that we should faithfully live by the message of truth which he has sent to us in his love and in his wisdom.

A GLORIOUS REVEALMENT

Thank God for the truth which was revealed so long ago! Thank God for its effects upon those who obey it. Thank God for the bright hope that it brings to us! that through Jesus Christ the Lord, we may accomplish much good in this world, and enjoy the greatest and best degree of bliss that it is possible for us to enjoy here, notwithstanding the conflicts and trials that we may have, and eternal life, with all that that means in the world that is to come.

Thank God for the truth which has saluted our ears in the last days! After it had been corrupted by man, after they had wandered in darkness, much good was accomplished through the reformation; but it needed the agency of the almighty God, in his own time and in his own way, to bring the fullness of truth to us as a people, and to give the world an opportunity to stand just where the true disciples stood in the days of Jesus and the apostles.

We read here, in one of these revelations, a commandment to the church, and it is a law to govern the church, where it says that the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of the gospel contained in the Bible and the Book of Mormon in which is the fullness of the gospel; and these shall be their teachings, as they are directed by the Holy Spirit. Thus we see that the Spirit is to act in harmony with the word.

Now let me say to all Latter Day Saints, who believe so strongly in the operation of the divine Spirit, and I am glad they do, if you are ever directed by what you think is the Spirit of God to do something that is in conflict with God, in conflict with his word, then you are mistaken. That that you took to be the Spirit of God is either the enthusiasm of man or a satanic spirit to lead you astray. God is always, as we said, in harmony with himself. Here is our safety; he is never in conflict with himself. He is the same God yesterday, to-day and for ever. And that is one leading reason why I am one of the firm believers in the restoration of the divine plan. It is so completely in harmony with God's character as given to us by Jesus Christ, and God's word as furnished through the Bible, that I can not reject the claim.

And then when we live in obedience to them we receive light, we receive knowledge, we receive what God has promised. "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." Not know it all at once, but he receives knowledge that he knows is superior to anything that he has ever received before. And in this knowledge he moves forward, onward, upward, and rejoices and does good, and not evil, if he is a true Saint. If he does a wrong, it is an error of the head and not of the heart, which he would be too glad to correct as soon as it is made known to him.

May God bless you and increase your faith, your trust and confidence in him, and in the scriptures, and in the work of the divine Spirit, that you may secure eternal life, is my earnest prayer.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF SERVICE

Human beings are constantly craving something that will bring satisfaction, peace, joy, and blessedness into their lives, and yet they fail to find the thing that can satisfy, the thing that is indeed blessed. This is due to an improper vision, a misconception of things, and to believing the mere outer, visible things to be the genuine and the real.

Naturally, mankind desires and longs for the things of worth, but finds nothing to satisfy the longing desire because the wrong course is pursued by them. The great reason, the fundamental reason, is that they are looking afar off for the things that are near at hand. They are looking for some outward manifestation, some external adjustment to correct and cure the inner evils and issues of life. This, however, can never be, since all growth is from within outward, and that which we behold in the outward manifestations, the externals of life, is only the crystalizing of an inner condition. Therefore, it becomes necessary for us to turn our vision inward, and look within, not only for the cause that has produced the malady of unrest in this world of ours, but for the remedy also.

If we would change the outer life, we must first arrest the inner; if we would correct and make better the external, we must first purify the source and fountain of life from within. Before the outward life can reach a condition of bliss, the inner man must be made blissful. Before we can overcome and correct the strife, confusion, unrest, selfishness, and dissipation of the world, we must first correct our inner desires and secret thoughts. We must cease condemning others, we must cease being intolerant, unkind, or revengeful, and cultivate the grace of selfless love, good will, meekness, gentleness, kindness, sympathy, and abounding generosity towards all. Our life must become a life of sincerity, of faithfulness, goodness, virtue, and all that tends to counteract the forces that cause evil and unrest around us.

If we would have universal peace, we must become peaceful; we must refrain from resisting evil with evil, and learn to overcome it with good; we must learn that the spirit of retaliation only engenders strife; that coercive words only create resistance; that harshness only begets enmity; and that if we would have malice, strife, hatred, and revenge cease, we must not only refrain from any semblance of these things, but we must live from within the life of peace and purity.

When we make the final analysis we will discover that the cause of all the evil and unrest of the world is nothing more nor less than the spirit of selfishness; and the sooner the world at large discovers that a self-centered person is not and can not be happy, the sooner it will discover that the solution of the entire social and economic unrest of our day, the remedy for all the apparent difficulties of life, is comprehended in the spirit of altruistic love and service.

So long as we expect to satisfy our cravings and longings by simply having and getting, so long will our hopes be blighted, and our efforts vain; but when we are awakened to the meaning of those excellent words of Jesus of Nazareth, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," will we begin to take comfort, and find peace and blessedness in the service we are permitted to render unto others.

We will then no longer ask, "What am I to receive," but we will meekly and reverently lay all that we have on the altar of service, and thereby attach to ourselves the joy, peace, satisfaction and blessedness that alone comes from divine love and Christlike service. He who has yielded up his selfish, perishable self, and like the Master of men has made himself of no reputation, is the one that is beginning to penetrate the heights of virtue and knowledge, and who is entering into the more abundant life, such a one as stands as a beacon light to a darkened world. His life is serene and peaceful. Having tasted of the good things of God, he serves his fellow beings in the spirit of divine love, and it gives him joy and consolation to do so. Having reached the divine eminence, he no longer condemns, but, sublimely patient, he reaches out to all a helping hand, a word of cheer, a smile of hope, and a character portraying the might of meekness, and the blessedness of service. And in the language of James Allen:

Sublimely patient; infinitely compassionate; deep, silent, and pure, his very presence is a benediction; and when he speaks men ponder his words in their hearts, and by them rise to higher levels of attainment. Such is he who has entered into the infinite, who by the power of utmost sacrifice has solved the sacred mystery of life.

And so it is that he who would purify the world must begin by purifying his own heart and life. And when the world learns to sacrifice the interests of self for the universal good, then will the golden age be at hand; then will the spirit of Cain be stamped out, and the Spirit of Christ be enthroned; and a narrow, carping, cramped, and self-centered life will be supplanted by a free, noble, sublime, and altruistic love that will bring its eternal rewards of peace, bliss, comfort, contentment, and superlative blessedness, here and now, with the divine assurance that this hallowed condition will abide for ever.

It is true, therefore, that true blessedness is the legitimate fruitage of true service, that service that seeks nothing for itself, but is completely lost in the interest and welfare of others. And so the Master's words are again true, "He that loseth his life shall find it." For by rendering up and losing this little, dwarfed, and selfish life of ours, do we find the diviner, sublimer, purer, and superlatively greater life, the life that is one with God, and that, therefore, has transcended the limits of the flesh. Having crucified the old man with his deeds, we are able to live the new life of sincerity and truth and thereby not only be a joy to self but a benediction to all with whom we come in contact.

Is it, then, not worth our while to try to attain unto the supreme conquest, and enter the life of love, that the world may live by us, remembering that the Master of men himself has said, "I can of myself do nothing." The secret of his power rested in the fact that he abode in God. And so, likewise, we can of ourselves do nothing as we should; but if we direct our thoughts heavenward, and dwell intently in thought on the things that proceed forth from the Christ life, we will be bringing ourselves into divine nearness with him, and through his abounding grace will we learn and acquire the beauty and grandeur of the life of true blessedness that comes to all those who lose self in the service of all.

May the Giver of all good assist us to this end, that by reason of our service the world might be made better.

SIDELIGHTS ON THE WAR

FROM PARIS

"Paris is truly very sad, for the word came this morning that the French have lost again in Alsace," writes Mrs. Elsa Bristow Cornell from Paris on August 24. "Everything seems very strange. All places are closed, not like ours at home, but with iron shutters over all windows.

"There are five thousand men employed on the streets of Paris to keep them clean and now the work is all done by that many women, and there are four thousand more asking for employment. They have cut them down to twenty cents a day, given by the Government.

"There are three great searchlights over the city. The voltage is something incredible. A cannon has been placed in front of the Trocadero ready to fire on the airships, for we are very much threatened by the Germans.

"Forty Red Cross nurses were killed and a French physician in the ambulance with the wounded was shot. It is terrible, too terrible to write the things that are happening.

"The Young Women's Christian Association here has enrolled forty thousand as nurses.

"We only have bread baked in the rough loaves a yard long.

"How brave they all are. Never a murmur about the great financial losses. No banks, no money. There are two cars now run across the city by women.

"They have been sending trains out—box cars with boards across and one kerosene lamp. You get a number days before and wait until it is called at the station."

FROM LONDON

Miss Margaret McKee, supervisor of physical education in the public schools, returned yesterday from London, where she spent the summer with her mother.

English families these days are practicing the most rigid household economy, says Miss McKee. When there is butter on the table there is no jam. A six-course dinner formerly served in the homes of the aristocracy has now become a two course luncheon. There are few table luxuries.

"The people of London are realizing that the financial situation is very precarious because of the war," Miss McKee said. "They are living very economically, indeed, and buying only the necessities. The housewives realize that they must economize and accept the change in style of living. People who are used to a six-course dinner every evening are now served a two-course dinner. The change in style of living is very noticeable.

"For instance, because cheese is one of the imports very little cheese is served. If jam is upon the table there is no butter. If there is butter there is no jam. There are never two kinds of jam upon the table, although there is plenty of the one kind served.

"The stock exchange is closed and when it is opened I was told that not twenty-five per cent of the brokers will return. The stores have turned off many employees and the others are on half pay."

FROM BERLIN

A Chicago university student, writing from Berlin, observes that the German capital is in a pathetic state of despondency. Says the writer:

Over all Berlin is a dull, suspicious, morbid atmosphere which is infectious. The laughter one hears occasionally in the streets has a forced note which signifies its hollow mockery. The day we arrived in Berlin we breakfasted at a little hotel and at the next table was a boy not a day over eighteen dressed in the trim blue uniform of the training school for officers, eating with his mother. The meal was a pretty sad affair. Neither could talk much, for he was to go to the front that afternoon. You can't realize how barbaric war is until you are in the midst of it.

He speaks further of the faces of women "gray with anguish," telling in a hopeless, passionless way of the departure of sons and husbands whom they never expect to see again. He says that five thousand of Germany's women have given their wedding rings to the Government in return for iron bands. Thus, without any of the explicit horrors of battle, without the actual presence of dangers within the city, with an army that is sweeping like an avalanche over Europe, reaping undreamed-of victories, there is this sort of despair at home.—Selected.

PRESIDENT WILSON ENJOINS NEUTRALITY

My Fellow Countrymen: I suppose that every thoughtful man in America has asked himself during the last troubled weeks, what influence the European war may exert upon the United States; and I take the liberty of addressing a few words to you in order to point out that it is entirely within our own choice what its effects upon us will be, and to urge very earnestly upon you the sort of speech and conduct which will best safeguard the Nation against distress and disaster.

The effect of the war upon the United States will depend upon what American citizens say and do. Every man who really loves America will act and speak in the true spirit of neutrality, which is the spirit of impartiality and fairness and friendliness to all concerned.

The spirit of the Nation in this critical matter will be determined largely by what individuals and society and those gathered in public meetings do and say; what newspapers and magazines contain; upon what our ministers utter in their pulpits, and men proclaim as their opinions on the streets.

The people of the United States are drawn from many nations and chiefly from the nations now at war. It is natural and inevitable that there should be the utmost variety of sympathy with regard to the issues and circumstances of the conflict. Some will wish one nation, others another, to succeed in the momentous struggle.

It will be easy to excite passion and difficult to allay it. Those responsible for exciting it will assume a heavy responsibility; responsibility for no less a thing than that the people of the United States, whose love of their country, and whose loyalty to its government should unite them as Americans, all bound in honor and affection to think first of her and her interests, may be divided in camps of hostile opinions, hot against each other, involved in the war itself in impulse, and opinion, if not in action.

Such diversions amongst us would be fatal to our peace of mind and might seriously stand in the way of the proper performance of our duty as the one great Nation at peace, the one people holding itself ready to play a part of impartial mediation and speak the counsels of peace and accommodation, not as a partisan, but as a friend.

I venture, therefore, my fellow countrymen, to speak a solemn word of warning to you against that deepest, most subtle, most essential breach of neutrality which may spring out of partisanship, out of passionately taking sides.

The United States must be neutral in fact as well as in name during these days that are to try men's souls. We must be impartial in thought as well as in action, must put a curb upon our sentiments as well as upon every transaction that might be construed as a preference of one party to the struggle before another. My thought is of America. I am speaking, I feel sure, the earnest wish and purpose of every thoughtful American that this great country of ours, which is, of course, the first in our thoughts and in our hearts, should show herself in this time of peculiar trial a Nation fit beyond others to exhibit the fine poise of undisturbed judgment, the dignity of self-control, the efficiency of dispassionate action; a Nation that neither sits in judgment upon others nor is disturbed in her own counsels, and which keeps herself fit and free to do what is honest and disinterested and truly serviceable for the peace of the world.

Shall we not resolve to put upon ourselves the restraint which will bring to our people the happiness and the great lasting influence for peace we covet for them?

WOODROW WILSON.

CITIZENSHIP FOR RUSSIAN JEW?

[The following, from the New York Times for September 6, is illustrative of current reports concerning the attitude of the Russian Government toward the Jew incident to the present war in Europe. These reports should be considered in their true light, reputed to be issued from Russia, and during a time of great national disaster and need of every resource.—EDITOR.]

Petrograd, Russia, September 5, (dispatch to The London Daily Standard).—Jews in the future will be admitted as officers of the Russian army and navy. Announcement of this important change in the position of the Jews in the Russian Empire is made on official authority and is well received in all quarters.

Up to the present no Jew ever has been allowed to be a military or naval officer. The decision to admit them to the highest ranks of both services is officially announced to be due to the gallantry which the Jews serving as common soldiers have displayed in the battles already fought. The imperial decree has enabled the Russian commander in chief to confer officers' commissions upon several hundred Jews who gained exceptional distinction in the fight which preceded the capture of Lemberg.

I am authorized to say that the admission of Jews as officers in the army and navy will be followed in due course of time by the removal of the civil law restrictions on members of the Hebrew community. The pale will be swept away and the Jews will be admitted to the full rights of Russian citizenship. Those Russian newspapers which formerly were advocates of relentless anti-Semitism not only refrain from raising any objection to this startling innovation, but express their approval of it in the warmest terms. I find the same feeling prevails in those circles of Russian society in which it formerly was almost a breach of etiquette even to mention the name of a Jew. The war has swept away this particular remnant of medieval barbarism and has inaugurated a new era for the Jews of Russia.

"TANGO FOOT"

Housemaid's knee, miner's elbow and similar ailments have now a formidable rival in "tango foot." In a recent number of the Medical Record, Doctor Gustav F. Boehme, jr., states that he has recently been consulted by a number of dancers who complained of "pain in the front of the foot." In every instance, he found the same symptom-complex, and, on investigation, discovered the cause constant—the modern dance. Says the doctor:

"The latter-day dances, especially the tango and the maxixe, and to some extent the complicated figures of the hesitation waltz, call for great flexibility of the ankle, with much movement at this point throughout the various intricate steps. The more common movements are those of extension, flexion, and adduction of the foot. The resultant is a constant strain on the extensor muscles of the foot, viz, the tibialis anticus, the extensor longus digitorum, and the extensor proprius hallucis, which in turn produces a tenosynovitis in this muscle group. The commonest tendon involved is that of the tibialis anticus."—Scientific American, June 20, 1914.

The word gentleman is defined in this way: A man who is clean, both outside and inside; who neither looks up to the rich nor down to the poor; who can lose without squealing and win without bragging; who is considerate of women, children and old people; who is too brave to lie, too generous to cheat, and who takes his share of the world and let other people have theirs.—Anon.

A Word of Greeting

WHAT SHALL IT BE?

Again it is our privilege to send a word of greeting to the musical people of our church. Again we wonder what may be the tenor of the message most needed at this time. Is it a prodding of slow workers, who get into action too late to accomplish much before the year is over? Is it an encouragement for the timid or the hesitating, who have the desire to do something along these lines but who through fear of criticism, doubt of their own ability or uncertainty of the direction to take are caused to wait yet a while longer? Is it a burst of enthusiasm for the splendid work being done by the small army of the faithful that is required?

Ah, it may be any or all of these, which, put before you in the right way, may prove helpful to you, and result in the accomplishment of good in many places, from the new impetus given. But we confess we stand at the threshold of our opportunities this month, with a greater sense than ever of our own inadequateness for the work. Some way, we are passing, just now, through a period of reconstruction. Our old ideas and ideals are undergoing, in a measure, a transformation. We are viewing some new and attractive fields of opportunities for our musicians in various lines, and we are as yet undecided just where to throw the weight of our influence.

However, it certainly is timely to again urge our choir and orchestra leaders to rally their forces, getting something definite under way to work upon, that the good sent out through their ministrations this winter may be immeasurable in its wide-reaching effect. To the individual music workers, we may say, whether you are teachers or students, idealize or spiritualize your work; make it so sincere and so earnest, that it will be an acceptable offering to God, who loves truth and sincerity above all else.

To those who see the possibilities for good in the organizing of the children and the young people of the church into bands of singers, with the desire to obey the command "Cultivate the gifts of music and of song," we say, Do not hesitate longer! To him who has the vision of the work that might be done, will be given the grace and strength to materialize that vision if the desire and consecration be not lacking.

And to those who have an opportunity, or who can make an opportunity, to study the principles of harmony and composition, we say, Pursue it ardently! We need you! The church needs you! Our songs of Zion must be made by those whom God has filled with the light and understanding of this latter-day message! How gladly we shall hail the day when our wonderful gospel can be presented fully through the medium of one of the greatest, as it is the gentlest of the arts!

INTREPRETATION WITH THE SPIRIT

We must beg the indulgence of our readers for yet a little while. We expected to be able to present you this month with the initial article in a series on intpreting with the Spirit our church songs; but Sister Leeka and Brother Craig, who are to collaborate on this, wish for a little more time. They desire—but Sister Leeka will forgive me if I share with you her plans:

"We expect to do a little more definite work in that line with our choir here, keeping the larger work in mind as we gather material. We feel that the first of our work should be fundamental, that we may build wisely. I feel that the Spirit of our gospel should be put into more practical use in all our common interests. We detach it from our human, everyday experience too much, and we do not realize keenly enough that art is a medium through which we may express the spirit of the gospel. Choir work should mean as much to us, as a prayer meeting, in expressing our emotions of praise, and testimony of God's presence with us."

BROTHER HOXIE'S MESSAGE

We are hoping that Brother Hoxie will not overlook sending his message for this issue. He has things of interest to tell us of the musical happenings at the Onset Reunion, of their enthusiastic meetings there, of the class in harmony, conducted at the morning institute by Brother Arthur Phillips, etc.

Last, but not least interesting, shall we leave it to him to tell of our new church chorister, Albert N. Hoxie, third, who arrived August 31? Hearty congratulations are offered, we are sure, from every quarter, and in fancy, we can see the young man, "adown the path," wielding a baton, and justifying in a most commendable manner, his rich musical inheritance.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Service

Some efficiency expert has no doubt been the inventor of the unique phrase, "Service first." This simple slogan has been adopted by thousands of phone operators whose worth to their employee is gauged by the application of this principle, and especially when such service is rendered in the proper spirit.

In unfortunate Europe every able-bodied man is summoned to stand by his colors—families are torn asunder, farm and factory are deserted. Their nations demand their "service first."

The beginning of fall activities find us living in the greatest of all ages—the day of actual prophecy fulfillment. Where do we stand in the service of God? Is it "service first," or is urging required on the part of those in charge to get you to do things? Are you looking around for something to do—presenting your bodies as a living sacrifice wholly and acceptable unto the Lord.

The musical department of our work requires your assistance now, at once. To-day is the day we fill and trim our lamps, for to-morrow must we go to meet the bridegroom: Are you ready?

A. N. HOXIE.

Anthem Books

We are pleased to announce the publication of the first series of anthems for this year's work. Five numbers are included in this edition, all of which will be sung by the combined choirs at Lamoni in 1915. By special arrangement with the publisher the price of the book—twenty-five cents—will include the cost of mailing. It is hoped that all who are interested in the progress of the choir movement will subscribe at once, and make a special study of all anthems in the collection.

This work will be supplemented by an additional collection as soon as we can determine the extent of the demand. After a careful consideration of many oratorios and cantatas it has been decided to use Maunder's "Olivet to Calvary." The price of this work is fifty cents, which also includes mailing or expressage. We also have under consideration a graded course of anthem work for our smaller or newly organized choirs, and we would be pleased to hear from any who might be interested in a work of this character.

Kindly note that all orders for anthem books and oratorios must be sent direct to the general chorister, accompanied by check or United States postal money order. Do not send stamps or currency. The address is: Albert N. Hoxie, 179 Madison Avenue, New York City.

Outline of Lesson

FOR A PUPIL OF TEN YEARS, BEGINNING THE STUDY OF HARMONY AND COUNTERPOINT

(The following suggestions for a lesson in harmony for a child are chiefly valuable because they illustrate how a child's attention may become fixed and his thorough interest aroused by presenting the ideas to him in a story form. Sister Martin, of Perry, Iowa, has used this method in her many years of successful teaching. The idea carried out in the multitude of ways which will suggest themselves to the wide-awake teacher will prevent that too common disaster, viz, a child hating his music lessons, and consequently dropping the study.—A. A.)

OCTOBER 23

1. Play your Heller No. 1, Op. 46, fifty times. (All classical studies must be played fifty times during the week.)

Play No. 1, slowly and firmly, bringing up the fingers curved, and the thumb held somewhat under the hand when not in use. Take only two sentences at a time. Be sure to play slowly and then, as we review, you will get it faster.

This piece, when played real fast sounds like this. (Here, play it for the pupil.) It sounds like a heavy rushing river, doesn't it? Listen! Here is where the water leaps over the rocks! It is the falls! And just hear the waters tinkle, and then rush! You must use your pedal in the proper places, or you can not produce this effect—neither can you do it if your fingers are not properly trained.

2. We will now take up the triads founded on the notes in the scale of C. We will study only three of them—those written on 1, 4, and 5 of the scale. Yes, you have them correctly written. Play them squarely and solidly.

Now, I will ask you to write out an exercise from this set of three chords. In the order in which you found them on the scale, here they are: C-E-G, F-A-C, G-B-D. Please write the exercise in quarter notes.

Do you notice how much more music you can make out of these chords by composing on C-E-G first and then taking the 5th, or G-B-D chord next? Now, next week I will explain to you why that is. Yes, if you wish, you might put a minor strain, too.

You ask if it is permissible to go to the G triad from A minor. Why not? If Miss A minor married Mr. C Major, G is certainly one of their children, isn't he? Look! the chord is C-E-G! They have two boys, E and G.

Now listen! How beautifully they combine! Why yes, why not? Mrs. C, of course, is in harmony with the members of her own family!

(Exercises are written out under the supervision of the teacher.)

3. Introducing the chord of the 7th.

"Oh, my! Oh, my! What is the matter here? Why, Mrs. Martin, you said if I added a 7th to my chord, it would be well!"

"Yes, but I failed to explain to you that there had been a family row, did I? Well, B is a cousin of the family, but he dealt treacherously with Mr. A. His word is no good. He has a jealous disposition and all these traits breed trouble. However, he has a son, B flat, with whom the family of C have established pleasant relations. They visit B flat Seventh but not the old gentleman, Mr. Seventh. One is as much use as a 7th, you see, as the other, and much more pleasant. Yes, you can make your complete arpeggio, now—C-E-G-B flat. But oh, do be careful of your fingering and numbers, as all arpeggios built on a 7th are fingered alike.

"Now you can finish your little melody with a run. Try the run in triplets. This is the way to write it. Write the run on separate paper away from your quarter notes exercises. Next week we will add the alto in places."

"Why does it not sound well to go from the A minor chord to the 7th in this exercise?"

"Because Mr. and Mrs. C. Major do not wish to go without the boys, and E is like his Grandpa Minor. You know her mother's name was C, and her father's name was E. When they all get together they harmonize, and everybody feels satisfied. Listen how beautifully they sing when they are all together and feel right! (Teacher plays the whole strain.)

NELLIE MARTIN.

Well-Known Hymns

(The following extracts are taken from a pamphlet called An Evening of Song and Story with Fanny J. Crosby the Blind Poetess, kindly sent us by Brother H. O. Smith, to whom our thanks are hereby tendered.—A. A.)

When the winter had well-nigh spent its strength, and the light spring breezes were playing in the branches of the old elm tree, Fanny Crosby was born, on the 24th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1820, in a one-story cottage in southeast Putman County, New York. An elm and a cedar grew in front of this house, and a whitewashed fence separated it from the street. Her mother was a brave, gentle, industrious woman, coming from the oak-like nature of those who faced the fiercest foes of the early days of our Republic.

Six weeks had barely sped o'er the fair face of little Fanny, when due to sickness, her eyes were shut for this mortal life, from the faces of her friends, the flowers of the field, the blue of the seas, and the golden beauty of the stars.

Love began its work anew in the mother's heart when she saw her child in the cradle sightless. This hour was to her an opportunity to bestow greater care by filling Fanny's mind with mental pictures of the true, the beautiful and the good.

It was early noted that the girl had unusual gifts, and kind friends became deeply interested in her intellectual development. The Holy Bible, to a very large extent, formed her early mental training. She learned, and was able to repeat from memory the first five books of the Bible, most of the new Testament, many of the Psalms, the Proverbs of Solomon, the Book of Ruth, with the deep and tender love story of Solomon's Songs. The Scriptures were her daily food, and no book in all the realm of literature was as precious to her girlhood as the Sacred Word. She went to it at early morn and late at night, and fed her soul, beautified her mental vision, lightened her love, and gave herself that grip on God, man, freedom and immortality which was the support of her life down to old age. . . .

When she was forty-eight years of age, Mr. W. H. Doane, who has written so many beautiful songs that have appeared in the famous "Gospel Hymns" series, and has always been one of her best friends, came to her one day and said, "I have a tune, I'd like you to write words for." After he had played it over, she exclaimed, "That says 'Safe in the arms of Jesus.'" She went to her room for about thirty minutes and returned with those verses that have brought joy to so many. . . .

Mr. Doane also suggested to Fanny Crosby the hymn "Pass me not, O, gentle Savior." Among many interesting experiences associated with this famous hymn, the author relates this: "In a western state lived an old man who was in the habit of going fishing on Sunday afternoons. Near the pond was a schoolhouse where Sunday school was held. Frequently they sang, 'Pass me not, O Gentle Savior' during the afternoon service, and for some reason the old man was unable to forget the melody. One day he threw down his fishing-rod and went up to the schoolhouse. He was invited to come into the Sabbath school, but he said, 'No, I can not come to-day, for I am not dressed well enough'; but he promised he would come, if the children would sing, 'Pass me not, O, gentle Savior.'" Two years after, in the presence of Mr. Doane, the old man, who had been converted, related the story and said, "God bless William H. Doane and Fanny Crosby! . . ."

"Mr. Doane," Miss Crosby said, "one day sent me a suggested subject for a hymn, the words 'Rescue the perishing.' A few days later, as I was addressing a large company of workmen one hot evening in August the thought kept forcing itself into my mind that same mother's boy must be rescued that very night or perhaps not at all, so when it came my turn to speak, I requested that if there was any boy present who had been wandering away from his mother's teaching, he would come to the platform at the close of the service. A young man, about eighteen years of age, came forward and said 'Did you mean me? I promised to meet my mother in heaven, but in the way in which I am now living, that would be impossible.'

"We prayed for him, and he finally arose, with a new light in his eyes, and exclaimed triumphantly 'Now I feel that I can meet my mother in heaven, for I have found God!'

"And while I sat there, I remembered Mr. Doane's subject, and the line 'Rescue the perishing, care for the dying,' came into my head. When I arrived home I got out my little book, that I always hold before me when composing, and set my mind to work, and before I had retired, the hymn, 'Rescue the perishing,' as it now stands, was completed. The next day, some one wrote the words out for me, and they were forwarded to Mr. Doane, at Cincinnati, Ohio, who wrote the beautiful and touching music with which they have always been associated. . . ."

Dwight L. Moody often bore witness to the power of this hymn to reach the hearts of the wayward in his meetings. It was a favorite in the temperance work of Miss Frances E. Willard and Francis Murphy. Only eternity will show the ministry of such a verse as:

"Down in the human heart crushed by the tempter
Feelings lie buried that grace can restore;
Touched by a loving heart; wakened by kindness
Chords that were broken will vibrate once more."

Notes of the Staff

The Independence choir is actively at work upon some fine chorus numbers for rendition at its annual fall concert. Its numbers have been augmented lately by the addition of several young people who have voices of good promise, and who have felt the call of the music. We trust the musical awakening noticeable all over the church will prove to be evidence of a real spiritual awakening which shall find its outward expression in many commendable ways.

We acknowledge with thanks the receipt of a program rendered Friday evening, August 7, at Reunion Convention Park, Hermosa Beach, California. The arrangements were under the direction of district chorister, R. T. Cooper. The program, consisting of piano solos and duets, vocal solos and duets, quartets, solos by flute and violin, readings and addresses, were enjoyed by over two hundred people. We are glad to see this good work, Brother Cooper, and trust music may find a more and more prominent place in the meetings of our people, in accordance with God's instructions to "cultivate."

Musical Notes

It is rumored that there is a movement on foot in English circles to boycott German music during the coming season. This recalls the fact that France refused Wagner's productions for twenty years after the Franco-Prussian war, from patriotic motives. Victor Hugo once said of him: "He has insulted my country; I can not hear his music."

Oakland, California, is building a municipal auditorium at a cost of one million dollars, in which it is planned to give popular symphony concerts.

Considerable adverse criticism has been made concerning the merits of the poem that won the five hundred dollar prize offered by a southern California club some time ago. It is claimed that a part of the verses sound more like a real estate advertisement than like poetry. Other parts are termed not only unpoetic but inferior verse. A prize of two thousand is offered for a musical setting to the poem, whatever its merits.

Germaine Schnitzer, the noted French-Austrian pianist, urges the study of music in this country instead of abroad. She says: "I don't believe you Americans realize what a great country you have, what marvelous advantages are here, what fine teachers, what great orchestras, what opera, what audiences! The critics, too, are well informed and just. All these things impress a foreign artist greatly. . . . If you ask me in what cities of the world I would rather play, I would name them in this order: Boston, New York, Vienna, Berlin, Philadelphia, Chicago, and so on."

The Federal Government, through Commissioner of Education, Mr. Claxton, seeks to encourage a wider interest in music. The Bureau of Education will soon make known the results of study now being made of the various systems employed in different countries where music is a vital part of the school system. Something of general helpfulness is expected to result from the research.

Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN SEPTEMBER

Pray for our Sunday schools and the Religio societies; for the Prayer Union; and for all of the auxiliary departments in the church; that all these may be blessed in their work for the general uplift to the higher plane to which we aspire. Lesson, Romans 12: 9-21. Memory verse, verse 10.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

Prayers are asked for an afflicted sister of Meadow Grove, Nebraska. This sister has an aged father and mother with whom she has always resided, and who need the care and attention she desires to give to them. She should be remembered.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroyed can never be supplied.

—Goldsmith.

Letter Department

AVERY, TEXAS, August 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Eastern Oklahoma District held at this place has just closed. The meetings began on July 24, continuing ten days. We had some very able speakers with us, who conducted the services in a high and spiritual way. The principal speakers were Elders J. M. Smith, J. C. Chrestensen and John Harp.

For the first three or four days Brehren Harp and Smith did the preaching, Brother Chrestensen being bothered with hoarseness. After this Brother Chrestensen did the day preaching, Brethren Harp and Smith speaking at night, in turn. Some very able sermons were delivered by each. Much good has been done here. Though no new additions were made, the prospects are that two or three will be baptized some time in the near future.

The Saints at this place have been persecuted from the beginning, but we feel sure that the bitterness is growing less. We have had crowds in spite of the Baptists trying to overthrow us by starting a meeting at the same time, and setting their meetings all the way through just to conflict with ours.

Brother Harp's wife, Sister Ruth Harp, of San Antonio, Texas, conducted the song services. She was also organist. She is certainly strong and faithful in the work, and does all she can for the upbuilding of Zion, making friends wherever she goes. Brethren Smith and Chrestensen are new men in this district, but it seems they are no strangers to us. We are sure they will do good wherever they go.

After the close of the reunion Brethren Harp and Chrestensen went to Dalby Springs to hold a two or three days' meeting, where they are having good interest and large crowds. After that meeting Brother Harp will return to his field, Arkansas and Louisiana. Brother Smith went to Lamar County to hold a few meetings, where the gospel has never been planted.

We are glad to know there is a true and living God, who reigns and rules the world, and who will judge and reward every man according to his works. It makes our faith stronger to see the Scriptures being fulfilled now as never before. We read that perilous times will come. Nation will rise against nation, and that those who will not take up their swords against their neighbors will need to flee to Zion. We feel that these prophecies are being fulfilled now, and that the end is not yet, though surely not in the far distance.

We ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may be a faithful worker for the Lord, always keeping his commands as he would have us do. Your brother in bonds,

A. L. CRUCE.

KAPLAN, LOUISIANA, August 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: We appreciate very much the weekly visits of the HERALD with the good letters and other matter contained therein. I read with pleasure the autobiography of Brother Nephi Snively. If Brother Joseph Snively and other brethren would write their autobiographies we would consider each a feast of good things. Am glad the sisters are not backward, but are now and then writing, telling of their experiences and trying to help the good cause along. It does help others like myself, away from church privileges.

We had Brother J. T. Riley with us a week in February. We used the Moss Schoolhouse and had meetings every night but one. We had very good crowds for here, where the people are mostly French, and Catholic in faith. I enjoyed his preaching as did others. Nearly all went up and shook his hand and told him how much they enjoyed his sermons. One young lady afterwards told others that she had never heard such a good sermon. The professor of the Moss School when asked what church he belonged to said, "Well, when Brother Riley was here I was a Latter Day Saint for a week; now he is gone I must belong to the big church."

We would like Brother Riley to write, and would be glad to see him again, or any other of the elders.

Your sister,
MARGARET STRUTHERS KITE.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, August 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: To-day was the opening of the new church at Santa Ana. Services commenced with Sunday school in the morning followed by preaching at 11 o'clock. The morning hour was divided between Brother F. M. Sheehy, on "What we believe" and Brother W. A. McDowell on the difference between us and the Salt Lake Church. This service is said to have been very affecting, many moist eyes were in the audience. Luncheon was served in the basement, where about one hundred and fifty were fed as the guests of the Santa Ana Branch. At two-thirty, preaching by W. A. McDowell, from the text, This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then the end shall come. Preaching at night was by F. M. Sheehy.

Special music was furnished by Professor and Mrs. Andrist, of Santa Ana, from whom a number of the Saint's children are taking music lessons; also violin solo by Brother Walter Klein at the afternoon service. Sister Olive M. Clapp is chorister and Sister Mamie Burton organist.

This new church is said by Brother Sheehy to be the best church on the Pacific coast. It is located on a lot fifty by one hundred and twenty-five feet, on the southeast corner of Fifth and Flower streets, handy to the main car line and the bus center, and in the best portion of the city. The lot is worth $1,500, the entire property is rated at about $3,750, with only about $1,000 against it. The building is thirty-six by fifty-two feet with front and side entrances, a rest and cloak room, with a lavatory for the auditorium, which is furnished with nice, comfortable pews, platform for the choir and speaker. The woodwork is well finished in good workmanship, and the natural color of the woods. The acoustic properties are good, the room is well lighted, and there are ample library cases built in.

There is a concrete basement under the whole house, equipped with concrete baptismal font, toilets for men and women, kitchen and folding tables for refreshments, splendid blackboards for the Sunday school. All the windows are provided with screens.

The building committee was composed of Brethren H. S. Pankey, R. M. Dungan, F. W. Burton, J. W. Inman and Albert Starkey. The labor was largely donated. "Everybody helped," said Brother Dungan. The principal donors of labor were Brother Anderson, R. M. Dungan, Nils Paulson and Fred Best, while Brother Pankey, Sister Fuller, Brother and Sister Balchan and Brother Inman each furnished $15 of labor, and many others contributed various sums towards the enterprise, not only in Santa Ana but from the different branches in the district. The Santa Ana sisters under the name of The Economic Catering Club earned $175 cooking for the reunion. Especial credit is due the ladies' aid for consistent and persistent help.

The Santa Ana Saints are certainly to be congratulated and commended for the entire effort. It is earnestly hoped that the future may be all that is anticipated, in every way. The membership of the branch is eighty-four.

R. T. COOPER.

RAINBOW LAKE, BROWNS SPRING, MISSOURI,

August 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: We enjoy the church papers very much. We are strangers here, and so far as we know are the only Saints at this place. We would like to hear from others if there are any near here.

We have a beautiful place here of fifty acres, ten of which is a fine lake, fed by numerous springs. The lake is well-stocked with salmon and rainbow trout, perch and cat fish. We have several row boats and a large twenty-passenger motor boat. There is on the place a pavilion, twenty-five by seventy feet, seated, which would be an excellent place for meetings.

This would certainly be a fine place to work, as most of the people here with whom we have talked are anxious to hear the gospel. There are no churches here to speak of and the people are all more or less religiously inclined. We are anxious to hear the word of the Lord whenever possible.

We recently moved here from Olathe, Colorado, where we have two farms which we expect to sell soon. Unless we can sell there, we will have to sell here and go back. We are homesick for friends and the good meetings that we attended in Colorado. We are deprived of all this here. It seems as if we had been in the wilderness without a guiding hand, and have been lost as to what to do. We feel that we have gained one of the vantage points in this locality, but possibly without proper guidance. We have earnestly sought for light, and feel that God will supply such leadings as may be needful to lead us into the community and work in which he desires us to occupy.

We will gladly care for any of the elders who can come this way. We could furnish a rest for any who are tired or sick in body, as we have fine water, shade and fish.

We ask for the prayers of the Saints to strengthen us in our duties. Yours in gospel bonds,

D. B. WOODRUFF.

SEILING, OKLAHOMA, August 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Western Oklahoma District convened at Eagle City, Oklahoma, July 31 to August 9. An arbor was built for the purpose, one half mile west of the little town. The reunion was presided over by Brother Hubert Case, assisted by the undersigned. The speakers were Elders W. E. Peak, Joseph Arber, Hubert Case, Brother Bailey, from Tulsa, Oklahoma, H. F. Durfey, and the undersigned. The regular order of meetings were: Prayer meeting at 9 o'clock, preaching at 11, 2.30 and 8.30. Besides this some special meetings were arranged for.

The writer assisted by Brother Joseph Arber represented the Social Purity Board, and held a number of men's meetings on purity lines, either at eight o'clock in the morning or three in the afternoon, according to the conditions of the day's services. These meetings were very beneficial and proved to be very interesting. A number of Professor Shannon's purity books were sold by the writer. The Herald Publishing House publications were also on sale at the boarding tent by Brother L. D. Dike, the writer lending a little assistance along that line as opportunity afforded or conditions demanded.

The boarding tent was conducted in a very systematic, businesslike way. In the first place, the cooking and dining tents were all screened in with mosquito netting, so as to assure sanitation and render the place clean and free from flies.

The good Saints and friends of Eagle City donated provisions such as they had. Meal tickets consisting of twenty-one meals sold for $2.10. Fifteen cents per meal was charged for transient meals. The bill of fare was excellent, clean and wholesome. Meats were largely excluded; fresh eggs, butter, good bread, and all kinds of vegetables and a variety of fruits were in abundance. The result was apparent in the good health prevailing in the camp, and the marked degree of spirituality on the part of the worshippers.

Now for the financial aspect of the work: The writer was made the "Judas," and "carried the bag" and bore what was put therein, and at that nominal charge of ten cents a meal or fifteen cents for single meals there was taken in something like one hundred and thirty-four dollars. The expenditures for groceries, etc., somewhere in the neighborhood of eighty-two dollars, leaving a balance in the treasury of fifty-two dollars. So from the financial side it was a success. Let other reunion committees sit up and take notice.

Hopefully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, August 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: The joint reunion of the Kirtland, Pittsburg, Ohio, and the West Virginia districts terminated August 9. The meeting for organization was held on the evening of July 25, so the reunion was in session for fifteen days. The financial depression affected the attendance to some extent.

The order of the day was as follows: Rising, 5.30; morning prayer, 6.45; breakfast 7; summer school, 8; social service, 9.15; preaching, 10.45; dinner, 12; recreation all afternoon (Sundays excepted, and special meetings); street preaching, 6; evening service, 7.45; evening prayer, 9.45; retiring, 10. Thus were the days passed and enjoyed by all. And all too soon they vanished into the great, eternal past. The good received will be a stimulant to righteousness. Thus the good effects of the reunion should reach way down into the future.

We shall not attempt to give a detailed account of the richness and the fullness of the good things manifested during the reunion. We will mention only a few. Among the many speakers were E. L. Kelley, R. C. Russell, F. G. Pitt, R. Baldwin, James Pycok and James McConaughy. The preaching was sound and should have satisfied the most discriminating.

The summer school work was a feature of the reunion. Sister G. T. Griffiths was in charge. The fore part of these meetings were given to papers. Such subjects as preparation, leadership, and grading were well canvassed; the latter part was given to Book of Mormon normal work. Through the use of the blackboard many were instructed in Book of Mormon lore, and many passed the first examination, which was held on the 8th. On the whole we had good social services.

Tuscora Park, New Philadelphia, Ohio, is finely equipped for recreation, with a good baseball diamond, a beautiful swimming pool, swings, and all kinds of amusements for the aged and the young. There is also a dancing pavilion in the park. It is needless to say that this pavilion place was not patronized by the Saints.

Many complained that the many pleasure seekers that came to the park to dance and play baseball on Sundays created an environment that militated against the general spirituality of the reunion. Be that as it may, the 1914 reunion of the Kirtland, Pittsburg, Ohio and West Virginia districts will go into history as one long to be remembered.

The hard work incident to reunions was accomplished in a masterly way by Bishop J. A. Becker and helpers.

JAMES E. BISHOP.

STEBENVILLE, OHIO, 226 Edgar Avenue.

GOWEN, OKLAHOMA, August 17, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been afflicted for six or seven years with rheumatism. I am somewhat improved and can work some. I thank God that through the administration of the elders I have received benefit.

I am having a hard struggle. I am fifty years of age; my wife is fifty-one. We have only one boy at home, aged ten. My wife is greatly afflicted and at times is almost helpless. We have nothing in this world's goods, but thank God we have friends.

We are distressed at this writing, as our son, twenty-one years of age, is in the All Saints Hospital at South McAlistler, Oklahoma, with his left foot torn to pieces by a hoisting engine at the Cambry coal mine. The doctors think there is a chance of saving his foot. I ask the prayers of the Saints that if it is God's will our boy may be spared his life and limb. He was baptized five years ago. He is a noble-hearted boy, and has been told that if faithful he would be one to bear the angel's message.

I have many testimonies of this work; I know it is of God. My life is in the work. N. A. Goss.

WALLINGFORD, VERMONT, August 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: I would like to know if there are any Latter Day Saints in the State of Vermont. I am located at Wallingford at present. I don't belong to the church. I met some real fine people in Jackson, Michigan, who belong, and I like the work. I would like to meet the Saints here if there are any. I will try to look up any who will inform me of their location.

Hoping to hear from some one soon, I am,

Yours very truly,

JOHN R. COX.

BURKS FALLS, ONTARIO, August 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Saints are only few in number here, with no organization, nor none of the priesthood. We hold Sunday school every Sunday, and prayer meeting following.

We were anxious for an elder, and applied to Brother Ellis, who sent us Elder Ribbel, of New Liskeard, who was with us four weeks, lacking one day. Through his able preaching and earnest appeals to the Saints to live nearer to God, and to make greater sacrifices for the upbuilding of his kingdom, the Saints have been inspired with new zeal for the cause. We hope to enjoy the blessings God has in store for those who walk in the light.

Many outsiders were interested, and said they had never heard such preaching before, and that they had never had the Scriptures made so plain. Outsiders opened their house for Brother Ribble to preach in, and a general feeling of good has been brought about. He left us for his northern home, where he has other fields waiting for him. The best wishes of all the Saints and many outsiders accompanied him, all hoping the time may not be long before he may be permitted to return. No baptisms have taken place, but some are thinking strongly while others are willing where conditions are such that they may be able to obey.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. J. ROMPHB.

MOUNTAINVILLE, MAINE, August 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been busy since I arrived in Maine, May 24, 1914, the old battle field that I fought so hard in my first starting out in the ministry. In those days, I met with good success. I baptized many precious souls, organized five branches in eastern Maine, and assisted in raising up several others. Many dear ones have passed into the great beyond, whom I expect to see some better day. I also organized two branches in western Maine.

June 7, I was at Stonington and preached to the Saints. In harmony with direction, I passed the Western Maine conference, and on to Head Harbor Isle. I arrived there the 12th, and preached five sermons and baptized four precious souls, one of whom I met three days ago at Bar Harbor and who said to me, Brother Foss, I don't care to be where I was once. I feel happy in the church, and feel that I have obeyed the true gospel of Christ. Although I met with the spirit of opposition, yet I felt to thank God that I had the Lord on my side.

To me the gospel is lovely. It promises the Spirit of God here, and immortality and eternal life in the world to come. The good Lord is fulfilling the statement he uttered when here on earth. We see signs of his coming in the earth and in the heavens above.

Yours truly,
J. C. Foss.

HIBBING, MINNESOTA, August 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: I wish to thank all the dear Saints who have so kindly and liberally sent me so much and so many kinds of instructive and helpful reading matter. I have studied it, to try to get all the good from it I could. I have hungered for reading of our own true church. Not knowing how to send for it, nor yet knowing what to get that would teach me more about the church, I do truly and most heartily thank one and all for their kindness to a poor, isolated old woman, far from any of the beloved Saints.

I sincerely thank the two Sisters of Oklahoma, who sent me a years subscription to Zion's Ensign, also the one, or ones, (I know not who they are) who are sending me weekly, the SAINTS' HERALD. May our Father in heaven grant each of them a special blessing. I also do most truly thank the many sisters and brethren who kindly wrote me. I have written to some of them, and in time I will try to write to all whom I have not answered already. I thank one and all who have remembered me in their prayers for my better health. I feel better in body than I have for many months.

Brethren J. E. Wildermuth and B. S. Lambkin have written me that they will try to visit me sometime this year. I pray the Lord that they may come. Hibbing is eighty-four miles from Duluth, a city of about twelve thousand people, with two railroads, the Great Northern, and the Duluth, Missaba, and Northern. We have also an electric railway from Gilbert, via Virginia, with two other railroads running into Virginia. Automobiles run to Side Lake, a summer resort, about six miles from our place.

We have no post office nearer than Hibbing, nearly thirty miles from us. We get our mail once in two to four or five weeks. Anyone writing us should not expect an answer by the next mail. There are thousands on the range, that is the Iron Range, who belong to no church.

My Savior is still leading me in the narrow way. I am happy in his love. I still ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints. Again thanking one and all for their kindness, I am,

Your sister in the one true church,

MRS. J. J. DEAN.

Extracts from Letters

L. W. Fike, Union Center, Wisconsin: "I am at the front, battling for Zion's cause, having excellent liberty and a good congregation."

Andrew Howard, Richton, Mississippi, "We would like an elder here by the first of October. If one can come and will let me know when he will be here I will notify the people of the meetings, and will meet him at Richton. We hope to hear from some one."

Central Illinois

I wish to relate what the Lord is doing for the work in this part of the vineyard. I think we should be just as willing to write of our blessings as of our trials, in our efforts to establish this work in the hearts of the people.

We have been favorably impressed with the future developments for the work in this city. In company with Brethren R. L. Fulk and Fred Pritchett, of the missionary force, we set our tent in the northeast part of the town about August 1. We prepared a tract especially for this place, and have made quite a thorough canvass, in which we have realized some good results. Our crowds have not been large, but have been interested and attentive.

The local brethren and sisters have certainly been enthusiastic. They have attended the meetings regularly and assisted temporarily. In our weak efforts to tell the story, the Lord has been with us by the presence of the Spirit, which gives us courage to press on in the conflict.

Last Sunday four more precious souls, viz, Sisters Lillian Henry, Florence Beeby, Edna Martin and Brother Beeby, were inducted into the kingdom of God, as we buried them beneath the calm waters of the Sangamon River. This trip to the river was truly enjoyable. It is about six miles from the city, and the trip was made on the interurban. After luncheon came a boat ride. The day was profitably spent.

Brother Shoemaker, our district president, favored us with his presence in company with his estimable wife on one Lord's day, when we were privileged to hear him blow the gospel bugle. Brother Izatt visited with us yesterday. Our worthy fellow townsman, Brother Bolt, is on the program for a sermon to-night.

We shall leave for a "home visit" after an absence of about four months, but expect the waters to be again troubled here before these tent meetings are closed. My association with these brethren has been most pleasant.

Our meetings at Pana were very encouraging. Several precious souls were baptized at that place by Brother Fulk and myself. The Sunday school had prepared the candidates largely. We are all laborers together with God. Brethren Stonger and Mose are two of the pillars in the church at Pana; there are others also.

Brother Fulk and I have certainly enjoyed the Spirit of God, thus far in our association with the Saints in this district. On our return to Taylorville, while in the home of Brother Clyde Parrish, just before retiring for the night, the Lord came to us by his Spirit. The room was filled with the glowing power of God. Truly we can say, We have not followed cunningly devised fables, but were eye witnesses of his majesty. Man may deceive his fellow man. Skepticism and doubt may, to a certain extent, make inroads among the Saints; but an abiding, trusting faith in God will bring us through every trial "with palms of victories."

I have lost faith in the world and worldly institutions. The true fruit can only be developed on the true vine—where the Spirit of God is our teacher. The world is vanity. The only thing that will stand the test is that which is built upon faith, hope, and charity.

Yours truly,

A. M. BAKER.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, August 24, 1914.

Southeastern Mission

Our reunion for Eastern Oklahoma held at Haileyville closed Sunday night. Owing to the increase of interest we thought best to continue the meeting another week, and we left T. J. Sheppard there for that work, and to do some baptizing. The rain hindered us considerably during the week, but that was much needed, so we did not complain.

While we can not make as great a showing in numbers at our gatherings as can be done in other places, yet we are growing, and we may develop like the Joplin reunion some time. I had the privilege of attending the last three days of that meeting in the beautiful Park at Joplin, and I surely enjoyed it. I wanted to see how they did the work. My opinion is they are "on the job" in the Spring River District. I am glad to see them doing so well.

I just received a good report of the work in Western Oklahoma from Brother Case. Their reunion at Eagle City was a great success, when we consider that it has only been about a year and a half since the gospel was first preached at Eagle. Since then they have built a church, dedicated to the Lord on May 31. Two days later the writer and Brother Case organized a branch. They are still gathering new material, and some of the best people of the community.

Soon after the brethren started the work there and commenced to baptize some, a little preacher popped up who thought he must expose our church and save the people from this delusion. He dug up an old, unreliable history and flourished it around until the brethren called for the book and publicly exposed it and the preacher. Our cause went on with greater speed and the preacher and his book were no more in the way of the progress of truth and righteousness at that place.

We dedicated a nice church at Ripley, Oklahoma, June 14. The Adversary has tried to keep the gospel from progressing in this town for fifteen years, yet we have made a steady growth and now have a branch and a nice church. Just received word from Tulsa, Oklahoma, that they had finished a new church there, and desired to have it dedicated and a branch organized, which we expect to attend to in a couple of months. Good reports are coming from other parts of my field also. Nearly all the men are active and doing what they can.

I am on my way to Southern Texas. Will reach there in about two weeks. The demand for preaching all over the field is greater than we can fill. Was very glad, indeed, to read of the additional victory the temperance cause won in Jackson County, Missouri.

Sincerely yours,

W. M. AYLOR.

HOLDENVILLE, OKLAHOMA, September 2, 1914.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

Our annual fair opens to-day. Horse-racing, agricultural, horticultural and textile exhibits will be its main features. Our young Sister Martha Warnock has entered some art work, and the sisters' aid society has been steadily at work of late doing some fine quilting, which will no doubt claim the admiration of many at this popular gathering.

At a business meeting held last night, with one hundred present, besides the routine work, report of an elders' court was heard, and one hundred and fifty delegates were chosen to our stake conference, which will convene at Armstrong, September 12. The branch membership is two thousand, six hundred and sixty-three, with a gain of sixty-six for the last six months.

Last Sunday was a day full of stirring thoughts, among which were the ideas of possible emergencies growing out of present conditions both in the world and the church. Elders Mark H. Siegfried and L. E. Hills occupied on the 23d, giving excellent instruction. Elders G. E. Harrington and I. N. White held forth on the 30th, both speaking pointedly concerning the duties of the Saints. Our beloved and venerable President was also on the platform at the morning hour, and, if able, will be present with a message for the Saints next Sunday forenoon. Brother Siegfried will discourse in the evening on church history.

The Sunday school, as usual, was full of life and interesting features, one of which was the presentation by Superintendent Krahl of diplomas to a class of four, with their faithful teacher, Sister E. Etzenhouser, also Superintendent Altha Deam, to lend interest to the occasion. All are members of the normal department.

Remarks concerning an educational movement, with the reading of a document signed by Professor Woodstock and issued by the Graceland Extension Institute were presented at church service by Brother Harrington, of which we shall hear later on.

Our force of vocal and instrumental musicians, led by Sister A. Anderson and Brother C. B. Eaton, also by our faithful and able brother and organist, R. G. Smith, are a source of inspiration and a credit to the Saints here, and a banner of praise and glory to God.

May the cause of truth prosper, our afflicted ones, our isolated ones, and our brethren in foreign lands be sustained by the loving hand of our heavenly Father is our prayer.

September 1, 1914.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Omaha, Nebraska

"Let love through all my conduct shine
An image fair, though faint, of thine,
Thus let me his disciple prove,
Who came to manifest thy love."

The sacrament service September 6 was soul inspiring. Some were there who first went to the tent meetings through curiosity, and afterwards became interested. The spirit was manifested in a remarkable degree in prophecy through Bro. J. C. Howe, speaking in part to Elder James Huff, commending him for his faithful life and exhorting him to strengthen his brethren. We were admonished that five were wise and five were foolish, but those who obeyed his commandments would have a testimony. May we all strive to be worthy of the choicest blessings.

The tent meetings conducted by Elders O. R. Miller and P. N. Craig closed Sunday evening, September 6, the subject being the Book of Mormon. Much interest has been shown in the meetings, and the attendance of outsiders has been excellent. Sunday evening, August 30, there were over three hundred present, subject, "The prophetic calling of Joseph Smith." Elder Miller is a drawing card to both Saint and sinner.

The annual rally day of Sunday school, Religio and Branch will be held October 4, and we expect to increase our attendance very materially by that time. Let everyone strive to encourage the isolated ones, as when we can induce them to study and be prayerful they are safe, not from the attacks of the enemy, but from being overcome.

"Let my soul beneath her load,
Faint not through the o'erwearied flesh,
Let me hourly drink afresh
Love and peace from thee, my God."

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a.

SPIRITUALISM

Spiritualism is usually met with scornful credulity or with fatuous acceptance. Not often is it recognized for what it is,—a reality with evil forces back of it.

A book called The True Mystic has been published recently that comes nearer than most to placing a true estimate on spiritism. This book consists of three lectures by the Reverend Holden E. Sampson on the subject of mysticism, dealing with both ancient and modern phases of the subject, from a pro-Masonic standpoint.

A part of one chapter is devoted to spiritualism, from which we quote:

Another movement arose in the last century, which aided to arouse and stimulate interest in mysticism—spiritualism. It is notable concerning spiritualism that it has attracted scientific attention, and not a few scientists of world-wide repute have given testimony to the reality of psychic phenomena.

It is also an instructive fact that it has fallen to the lot of secular and scientific circles, outside of conventional religion, to begin the work of restoring the lost truth of the immanence of spiritual agencies and forces, beings and entities, investing the world with their presence, and functioning in the minds and bodies of mankind. Until this movement, the idea that "spirits" communicate intelligently with men, energize and actuate their motives, prompt their thoughts and volitions, and perform acts of their own volition in the bodies and minds of men, had almost ceased to exist in the world.

The Evidential Value of Spiritualism.—The objective results of spiritualism, in mediumship and psychic phenomena, have established the fact, beyond dispute, that spiritual powers and personalities, of immense functional and intellectual potencies, are in our immediate environment, unseen, and mostly unknown. The residuum of absolute testimony, when we have sifted the true from the untrue, the genuine from the fraudulent, the certain from the doubtful, furnished evidence for spiritualistic phenomena, so colossal, and so incontrovertible, that the cult of spiritualism may well be certified to be established as a factor of religion, which the great historical religious institutions, and the learned scientific societies, will have to reckon with in the near future.

The Church's Indifference to Spiritualistic Evidence.—The most remarkable thing is that the church takes no interest in the spiritualistic movement. No notice is taken of the significance of the researches made into supramundane influences around us, exposed to light by spiritualism and psychism. The ordinary thoughtful person, aware of these things, would suppose that the church would welcome so powerful a witness to biblical truth, considering that the tendency of modern thought and criticism is all in the line of negation of the supernatural. Strange to say, the church goes on its way unheeding, while half the world ignores Christianity, because it gives no rational explanation of its own beliefs, and fails to exhibit the least element of the supernatural.

Spiritualistic Indifference to the Doctrine and Fact of "Evil."—On the other hand, it is equally astonishing that spiritualism generally stops short at belief in "evil," in demoniacal possession, or in the existence of "wicked" and "unclean" spirits, of which the Bible is so full, and which are attested by the history of the world of past ages.

The Methods of "Spirit-control."—This must be borne in mind, that in the most advanced mediumship—"trance," mediumship, materialization, etc.—the medium is an unconscious agent, an inanimate tool, the slave, mentally, physically, and psychically, of the "spirit-controls," the "familiar spirits" who move them to action and speech. I have personally spent many years in study and investigation of all kinds of spiritualistic and psychic phenomena. I say, solemnly, that however valuable the testimony of phenomena is to the veracity of Holy Scripture, and the religious claim of supernaturalism, the cultivation of spiritualism and psychism is attended with perils and consequences too terrible to speak of. My message is that men and women, and alas! children, are placing themselves in the greatest danger of rushing blindly into the most subtle of all kinds of evil, by any kind of dealings with "spirits" from the astral plane. Is it possible even now to convince spiritualists that, in no single instance, is it right and normal to invoke an astral spirit, to invite an astral entity to occupy their unconscious bodies, to operate their yielded minds and wills? Will they not believe those who try to persuade them that no spirit from the astral plane ought to "return," and that many who purport to "return" are frauds of demoniacal causation?

Guilelessness of Spiritualists Their Chief Danger.—Spiritualistic practices are, as a general rule, conducted with so much ignorance, such guileless enthusiasm, such childlike confidence in their innocuousness, and such assurance of their divine and heavenly authorship, that it is almost hopeless to convince them that underneath are concealed the "evil ones," the implacable, malevolent spirit foes of mankind, the myriads of malefic beings, many of most supernatural and semideific potentiality, who prey unmercifully upon man and beast-vampires of the abyss.

Delusive Security in Goodness.—I am aware that good spiritualists say that a good soul repels bad spirits; that "like attracts like." But this is a delusion. The best motives, the loftiest and noblest characters, of men and mediums, are not the slightest security against "evil spirits." You would not dream of lying down to sleep on the "hole of an asp," or a nest of snakes, however good and noble-minded you are. Goodness never repelled a snake. And goodness has no power to repel a demon or a wicked spirit. As long as man is in his present constitution, no matter how high-principled and virtuous, or pure in mind, if he permits his body and mind to become unconscious, and the open threshold of his soul for the entrance of astral denizens, deluding himself in his waking hours that the spirits who control him in his state of "katelepsis," are good and holy spirits; if he once gives them access to his soul and mind, he is giving himself to forces (of which he knows no more than what they choose to tell him) of the subtlest, most diabolically crafty and deceitful malevolence.

Let all who are attracted to the cultivation of psychic functions, and are allured to "spirit-communion," through the spiritualistic method of "katelepsis" (falsely called "trance"), suspect the most ennobling, elevating, and heavenly-seeming communications, "trance-addresses," the most honeyed language, the sagest counsels, of these "controls." They are all, without exception, under these conditions, deceptions and frauds, perpetrated by beings who for ages have been "arch-deceivers," capable of disguising themselves as "angels of light," and as the actual personalities of the "departed."—Pages 138-144.

It is true as suggested here that after due allowance is made for fraud and fake manifestations there remains enough evidence to convince the thoughtful of the existence of "spirits" capable of self-manifestation. To that extent spiritualism does furnish evidence supporting the Bible,—in that it demonstrates the existence of the supernatural.

This writer also goes to the crux of the matter when he raises the question of the nature and character of the spirits back of these manifestations. He is probably correct in concluding that they are mostly if not all evil spirits, abroad in the land and only too glad to use mediums and other guileless or guileful dupes. These spirits cheerfully and successfully impersonate the spirits of departed friends, or even angels of light, as the case may be.

Those who voluntarily assume a passive condition and permit these spirits to take control of their faculties give away their free agency and are led on and on to destruction. For it is a matter of common observance that such are led almost inevitably into some form or other of moral perversion, and many of them to most degrading and loathsome practices and conditions, while others become mentally deranged.

Those who scoff at spiritualism as a system of pure fraud with no foundation for its claims do not understand its real nature and menace. Those who gladly accept it as real and good, whether to heal the smart of sorrow owing to loss of friends, or as an evidence of immortality, are correct as to its reality but they are deceived as to its nature. There is a way that seemeth right unto a man but the end thereof is death.

In that way, too, spiritualism is an evidence of the truthfulness of the Bible, for the Bible distinctly warns against its practices. It contains a strong edict against those who seek after and consult familiar spirits. And on this subject we are told: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God."

We can not understand why men should follow after spiritualism. Some answer that they wish comfort and seek communion with the spirits of departed loved ones,—mother, wife, sister,—or that they seek evidences of the immortality of man. But why seek these things at such doubtful sources? Granted that the medium consulted is not a humbug, the spirit that represents itself through that medium as the spirit of your departed wife, at best, might be the spirit of some individual whose word during this earth life you would not believe for a moment, at the worst it may be and probably is one of the evil spirits against which you are warned in holy writ.

Every comfort that spiritualism falsely holds forth may be obtained from the Spirit of Truth, the true "Comforter" mentioned by Jesus. Every true evidence that spiritualism professes to give of immortality and the reality of the supernatural may be found in the gospel and in the birth, life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. #### CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

FLEET MOBILIZATION.—On the 16th, Secretary of the Navy Daniels ordered the mobilization of the Atlantic fleet. This order is made for efficiency and in the interests of the neutrality of the United States, and will be carried into effect immediately after the withdrawal from Vera Cruz of the military expedition at that point.

PROTEST ABROGATION.—A number of the countries concerned, including the United States, have protested against the abrogation by Turkey of the conventions, treaties, and privileges mentioned in these columns last week. The United States reserves, for the present, a discussion of grounds upon which its protest is made, as it does the right to further protest.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.—President Wilson, on the 15th, ordered the evacuation of Vera Cruz. The forces under General Funston are expected to embark for Galveston as soon as transportation can be found for them. The "war fleet," with the exception of a few light draft vessels, is expected to soon after withdraw from Mexican waters. These orders of withdrawal are said to have followed an urgent appeal of General Carranza, supported by Generals Obregon and Villa, who hold that the presence of United States troops on Mexican soil constitutes a menace to friendly relations under the Constitutionalist regime. The main purpose of the occupation of Vera Cruz—to punish the affront to the flag at Tampico—having been achieved through the occupation itself and the withdrawal of Huerta, the forces are to be withdrawn. Instead of the election announced in these columns last week, a convention of military chiefs is expected to meet October 1, to appoint a provisional president to replace General Carranza, who now occupies as the chief Constitutionalist.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.—The German right wing continued its retreat to a point north of the juncture of the Oise and Aisne rivers, about seventy miles northeast of Paris. From this point, along the Aisne, to the north of Reims, Verdun and Nancy, extending to Metz, in Germany, on a battle front of one hundred and twenty to one hundred and fifty miles, the opposing armies are arrayed in deadly combat. Reports of successes are conflicting. Russia seems to have advanced in Austria against Austrians and Germans, with the Austrians defeated and gathering about Cracow, and the Russians approaching, or circumventing, Prezenyse, strongly fortified. In Prussia, Russia is supposed to be on the defensive. Fighting continues in South Africa between the English and Germans. Britain's Australian fleet is said to have occupied Hebertshoehe, the seat of German Government in Bismarck Archipelago, off the north coast of Australia. The Servians are reported advancing into Austria, and with the Montenegrins into Bosnia. Austria is strengthening fortifications along her Austro-Italian border. Despite energetic governmental measures to prevent the same, popular demonstrations have occurred in leading Italian cities in opposition to the neutral attitude of Italy, and in sympathy with the allies. The first encounter between Japanese and German land forces is reported to have occurred at Chio-Mo, ten miles outside the Kiao-Chau zone. Japanese aeroplanes have dropped bombs on the German barracks at Tisingtao. The Kaiser of Germany in a reported communication to the Department of State at Washington is said to have formally expressed the willingness of Germany to discuss terms of peace. It is not thought, however, that peace can be brought about at the present stage of the conflict.

ENGLISH PARLIAMENT.—The Irish Home Rule and the Welsh Disestablishment bills have become law. A bill has been passed suspending operation of both for one year. Premier Asquith in presenting the suspending bill in the Commons stated that a bill to amend the home rule bill would be introduced before home rule became operative. Parliament was on the 18th prorogued, to meet again October 27.

TRADE COMMISSION.—The Trade Commission Bill has been passed by Congress, and is before the President for his signature. This bill provides a commission of five, which absorbs, with enlarged powers, the functions of the Bureau of Corporations. The commission will assist the Department of Justice in solving economic problems connected with anti-trust laws; supervise compliance of corporations with decrees of dissolution; investigate alleged violations of law, and practices which may affect foreign trade. It may provide publicity for "facts which ought to be common property of American business men." It can summon witnesses and require testimony. Its orders are to be enforced by the Circuit Courts of Appeals, which may pass only on questions of law, the findings of the commission as to facts being conclusive.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FALSE TEACHERS.—The following from an article by E. R. Hayes in the Apostolic Review for July 28 will be interesting to those who have observed the criticisms of representatives of the Church of Christ, popularly known as the anti-Christian Church, with reference to the testimony of Joseph Smith, which states that God said that the creeds of that day were wrong:

There are many false teachers in the world to-day who come to us in sheep's clothing, appearing to be true teachers, interested in our souls, but inwardly they are ravening wolves, trying to lead our souls to destruction. They are selfish, greedy of gain and not willing to submit themselves to the teachings of Jesus Christ and his apostles. All sectarian teachers are false prophets or teachers.

BRITISH ISLES CONFERENCE.—The president and secretary of the British Isles Mission conference, which closed just before Great Britain declared war, conclude their report with the following interesting statement:

The spiritual utterances of brethren and sisters in this meeting were of such a character that time can not efface them. As far as the church is concerned, the future is full of promise and blessing, but this is upon conditions of increased diligence and faithfulness. This memorable conference was closed with singing and prayer, after which the Saints dispersed to their several homes amid din and excitement, for the great nations of Europe, including our own, were preparing for the inevitable strife which will be felt in every land. As we passed into the night we thought of the great changes that are likely to be wrought ere we meet in conference again, and we thought, too, of the hymn of the angels which heralded the Savior's birth, Peace on earth and good will to men, and it had a strange sound in our ears that night.

DISTRESS IN PALESTINE.—The following extract is from a private letter from Elder U. W. Greene, dated August 15:

As money orders can not be cashed, and there are thousands of Jews here who have received their little from people in Russia, Austria, Greece, Italy, France and Germany, yes, and England and America, there is already much distress in the land, and ere this reaches you there will be actual suffering and starvation. You have no idea of the situation, as there is nothing in America like the multitudes of poor who come here to die and are supported by children in their home countries. At present we are powerless to do anything for anyone but ourselves. We have agreed to come onto a war ration of bread and olives and water, till we can hear from the Bishop, if that is possible. Our school work is moving along fine, we have three classes now and about seventy regular attendants. Some of the older boys will be drafted and we will lose them during the war, if not for ever.

FROM THE SCENE OF WAR.—Elder H. N. Hansen, in charge of the Scandinavian Mission, writes from Aalborg, Denmark, under date of September 2, stating that conditions in that country have improved since the time of his former writing. He has word from Brother Kippe, of Germany, stating that he and family find themselves under trying circumstances. A large portion of the male membership among the German Saints are engaged in the war. All the brethren of Mangschutz, near the scene of hostilities, are engaged. Others at various points expect the call to arms. This war brings distress and anguish to the homes of the Saints of Europe as it does to the homes of all others. The sympathy of the Saints, with the sympathy of all America, goes out to the homes in Europe in their hour of heart-rending trial and sorrow.

NAUVOO REUNION.—The junior editor recently returned from attending the reunion held at Nauvoo, Illinois. This reunion represented the Eastern Iowa, Nauvoo, and Kewanee districts. It was as successful as could reasonably be expected under the circumstances. A good spirit prevailed during the entire session, and was manifested in various ways; the gift of prophecy was present at one of the prayer meetings to the edification and comfort of the Saints. A splendid impression seems to have been left upon the residents of the town who are not members of the church. One of the business men said to us, "I do not think that you people have an enemy in Nauvoo. I have talked with many, and they agree that it was a mistake in driving the Saints from the country. I have always entertained a high opinion of your people, and now I think a great deal more of them." The deportment of the Saints during the meeting was such as to commend them to the respect of the community. Great credit is also due to the Saints living in the vicinity of Nauvoo, at Rock Creek, Adrian, Ferris, Carthage, and other points. By a consistent and godly walk they have won the respect of the community and are a standing refutation to the slanderous stories sometimes circulated against our people. The next reunion of the three districts will probably be held in Moline.

Indian Summer

The whole world seems to be lost in dreams,
 Wrapped in slumber deep,
 And the soft breeze kisses the drowsy trees
 And sings the fields to sleep.

The gold-tinged leaf, like a tear of grief,
 Falls soft on the violet's grave,
 And the sear grass stands, with clasped hands,
 And watches the pulseless wave.

The silvery gleam of the limpid stream
 Is veiled by a smoky haze,
 And the pale clouds sleep in the sky's blue deep,
 Like the ghosts of departed days.

A quiet broods o'er the solitudes,
 Where the birds no longer sing,
 And over the hills soft music thrills,
 Like the stir of an angel's wing.

With beck and nod the goldenrod
 Bends over the daisy, pale,
 While unseen bands from angel lands
 Go rustling through the vale.

Oh, fair young Spring is a reckless thing,
 And Summer's a welcome guest,
 But the tearful haze of the autumn days,
 Suiteth my spirits best.

—Edgar Welton Cooley.

His First Night Away

The neighbor lad had teased, and so had he,
 Till mother sighed: "Well, if it has to be!"
 And father said: "Sure! Let him run along;
 It's so near by there's nothing can go wrong."
 So mother rolled his gown into a lump
 Smaller than one her throat held; put his comb
 In with it; and he left, with joy a-jump—
 First time he stayed all night away from home!

He choked a little when he said good-night
 To stranger-parents; and he saw a light
 Shining in his own house, two worlds away
 In the next block; then dreamed till dawning day
 That he was homeless. At their breakfast time
 He could not eat, but made his homesick flight
 Without adieus—to him no social crime—
 When first he stayed away from home all night.

And mother met him with her arms outspread,
 And in her loving bosom hid his head
 A long, long time while neither of them stirred
 Nor anybody said a single word.
 In her a pang old as maternity
 Forewarned her of long partings that must come;
 For him had ended all eternity—
 First time he'd stayed all night away from home!
 —Strickland W. Gillilan.

The Two Glasses

There sat two glasses, filled to the brim,
On a rich man's table, rim to rim;
One was ruddy and red as blood
And one was clear as the crystal flood.

Said the glass of wine to his paler brother,
"Let us tell tales of the past to each other.
I can tell of banquet and revel and mirth,
Where I was king, for I ruled in might;
And the proudest and grandest soul on earth
Fell under my touch, as though struck with blight.
From the heads of kings I have torn the crown;
From the heights of fame, I have hurled men down;
I have blasted many an honored name;
I have taken virtue and given shame;
I have tempted the youth with a slip or a taste,
That has made his future a barren waste.
Far greater than any king am I,
Or than any army under the sky.
I have made the arm of the driver fail,
And sent the train from its iron rail.
I have made good ships go down at sea,
And the shrieks of the lost were sweet to me.
Fame, strength, wealth, genius, before me fall,
And my might and power are over all!
Ho! Ho! pale brother," laughed the wine,
"Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?"

Said the glass of water, "I can not boast
Of a king dethroned, or a murdered host;
But I can tell of hearts that were sad,
By my crystal drops made light and glad;
Of thirsts I have quenched and brown I have laved;
Of hands I have cooled, and souls I have saved.
I have leaped through the valley and dashed down the mountain;
Slept in the sunshine and dripped from the fountain.
I have burst my cloud fetters, and dropped from the sky,
And everywhere gladdened the landscape and eye.
I have eased the hot forehead of fever and pain;
I have made the parched meadows grow fertile with grain.
I can tell of the powerful wheel o' the mill,
That ground out the flour, and turned at my will;
I can tell of the manhood debased by you
That I have uplifted and crowned anew.
I cheer, I help, I comfort and aid,
I gladden the heart of man and maid;
I set the chained wine captive free,
And all are better for knowing me."

These are the tales they told each other,
The glass of wine and his paler brother,
As they sat together, filled to the brim,
On the rich man's table, rim to rim.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Contentment

The wisest pilgrim is that one who goes
Along the highway, hour by hour content
To take the rain or shine the skies have sent;
Who counts his riches in each budded rose;
Each song the thrush through the vernal branches throws;
Each marvel of the sunrise; each dusk, blent
Of mystery and fragrant sacrament;
Each star that in the heavens burns and glows.

Who garners each delight, each fleeting jest;

Lets not his grief grow to a memory;
Seek not to make of joy a captive, lest
She weary him with dull satiety;
Begg all life's tests, nor cavils at the cost,
Since beauty lives, though all the loves are lost.

—Charlotte Becker.

THE CHRISTIAN HOPE

(Funeral sermon of Laura Mader Mills, by Elder John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, July 28, 1914. Reported by Estella Wight.)

The sum of the life of our sister is found in the closing words of the obituary, "a beautiful life and a saintlike character."

A person who passes away whose life has been wrought in the gospel of Jesus Christ is a person who was a blessing to the community, whether the place of residence was among church members or among unbelievers. We are all aware that there are those in the church who need encouragement by those who are strong and stalwart; that words of cheer and comfort can be depended upon to strengthen the weak and the erring and the depressed; and that among unbelievers the saintly life stands as a beacon light for the truth of the Redeemer's message for the salvation of sinful men.

So while we deeply mourn and grieve, and feel this loss, which none can feel so keenly as the husband and immediate family, such a life has been a blessing to the community, the church especially; for many of the Saints in their lives do more good than a good many sermons would, because of the practical evidence in their lives of the things that have brought us near to the Lord Jesus Christ. People see then that those who obey the gospel believe that the religion is a matter that should concern the activities of the lives of everyone of us, no matter what our occupation in life may be. Whatever may be our position among our fellow men, we are watched in our activities because we claim acquaintance with the divine Master through our obedience to his will by the Spirit of God.

It is a foregone conclusion to your speaker, that the mysteries that surround this condition of death are but temporary in their character; and whatever we have been permitted to know, however long our days may be lengthened out to know more of the mysteries of God revealed by his Spirit, it is impossible for any person to understand the mysteries of life and death, which can not here be fully understood; and where that which can be understood in part comes through the revelation of God's will and law. So we are confronted with the thought that when God made man he made him in his own image; gave him his individual personality; and that from thenceforward, all through the stages of life's experience, until after the judgment day that personality will continue and will be his as long as God Almighty exists, because he is made a part of that power. And so this life is but a short school of experience.

We wonder sometimes why persons in their youthful years of manhood and womanhood should be taken away, as this sister, who is about thirty-three years of age. We ask why she should not have the privilege to remain with her youthful husband at a time when the energies of the body and mind and spirit should be at their very best. If there is ever a time in life when the powers should be best and life should be most perfect and cheerful and bright, it is at that mature age. But we will not find fault with the decrees of the Almighty.

The individual personality of our sister will never be lost, no more than the loved ones were lost who were raised from their graves following the resurrection of Jesus Christ, of whom the apostle says, Many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many. (Matthew 27:52, 53.) And your speaker claims that they went to those whom they knew, to whom their presence would be cheering, to whom their appearance would give strength and comfort, demonstrating that the resurrection was a reality, and bringing to many visited remembrance of things that were good and pure. Whether that association continued for a part or all that night, they evidently brought blessings to those whom they visited.

We believe that in the experiences in this gospel there are opportunities for education concerning the mysteries of life and death that can be known only by revelation from God to man.

We are glad that this sister left behind her not only a reputation but a character of fidelity to gospel duty. And I remember a few days ago when she could speak in but a whisper she called me to her bedside and said to me: "Brother Smith, would it be wrong, do you think (she had been passing through nights of suffering and days of pain), to ask the Lord to release me and take me home?"

I said, "No, sister, if you desire it."

I was satisfied she was ready for the change, and I told her, "We will present your petition to the Lord and ask him to give you strength while he permits your spirit to remain here, and to permit your departure to be peaceable and quiet."

I understand that about two days after that she called her relatives together about her and with a full consciousness of the responsibilities of life, and that she was nearing the time of separation from them, talked with them of the hope and influence of the gospel.

It appeared to your speaker that unless the Lord intervened by a miracle known only to him her life could not have been continued in her body. I ask you fathers and mothers, I ask you husbands and wives, I ask you sisters and brothers, would it have been right to ask her to be left in suffering and pain and distress? I have seen people that have been kept in life by the power of God, in answer to prayer. I remember a sister in the church who was raised up from a bed of sickness, and who told a number of others afterwards, "When I am brought to that condition of sickness again, do not ask the Lord for my recovery; ask him to let me go." And the statement came years afterwards, "The Lord took her as one of his."

Is there any pleasure, is it cheering to look upon our loved ones enduring pain and agony and suffering day in and day out? It is a good thing that this sister had it in her mind, Oh Lord, whatever thy will is, permit it to be mine, (that is the sentiment, though not the words). This sister, we have no doubt, has gone to the paradise of God.

The church can ill afford to lose these examples of character; and if I could have my personal way I would ask that these men and women of noble character should be left here in the interests of the church of God, that they might stand as beacon lights to those that faint and falter by the wayside, and never be permitted to be taken from the church until the powers of body and mind waned in age. But we must not murmur at the decrees of our heavenly Father, who knows better than we know. Moving and associating with characters of this kind, whether they be youthful or aged, is a constant source of encouragement and strength. We can not tell how soon we may be called to account for ourselves. We must bend to the will of the Lord, and all will be well if we are ready.

It is a good thing when some one points out the mistakes and weaknesses of a member of the church that we can point across the street or on the other side of the building to men and women, to some brother or sister of whom we need not be ashamed, to those constant in faithfulness to duty and to the interests of the gospel of the Son of God, and where-soever their business or associations may be. I say that these are persons that the church can ill afford to lose, although others may follow and may fill their place, and the work will go on because God is still at the head.

Under all the vicissitudes of this life we will find much consolation in the words of the Apostle Paul in 2 Corinthians 5, to which I call your attention:

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

That was the comfort they needed; and we know that under the trials of this life and when sickness and distress and doubt and fear take possession of us we need something to encourage us. We have all experienced in one way or another something of what the Savior felt when he went up to the garden and with the burden and pain upon his mind and spirit, as the writer tells us, (Luke 22:44) shed as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. God came to him by angels. Has he done this to his believing children in this age? Does he to-day? Oh, the undying testimony and the experiences of our people who have loved God and died in the faith! Those experiences bring to us gladness and joy and comfort and peace.

For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord: (for we walk by faith, not by sight.)

I have never seen the paradise of God, but I have an inward consciousness that it exists. We must, many of us, live by faith. We can not all afford to be doubting Thomases and not believe unless we see by our eyesight. Walking by faith permits us to see and know what the mind of the Spirit is upon these things, and when the Spirit rests upon the children of the Lord it leaves a life remembrance, and leads them a step higher in the understanding of the power that belongs to the gospel life. And so by the remembrance of these manifestations of God's goodness to his children in our activities in his service, in our business, in our work in life we are better fitted for the battles and to try to overcome to-day that we may be better fitted for the battle of to-morrow.

We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him.

That points to character building. It would be a good thing if we could impress upon every Latter Day Saint that has been received into the church to make it a prime object and the principal effort of life to mold his individual character in harmony with the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, that he might receive that evidence from God of his acceptance with him. We would never fear then what will become of us here or what will become of us hereafter. God knows his children. He can find them just as well as he could find them in the past.

For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that everyone may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. (2 Corinthians 5:10.)

This is an evidence that our individual personality will be ours there. As has been declared in the writings of his word, God made man in his own image. Under the introduction of sin into the world he has never lost the care over his children. He proposes to bring us back to him so that we can look in his face, talk to him face to face, and understand better than we do now the greatness of his mercy.

Another word, Revelation 7:

What are these which are arrayed in white robes? And whence they came? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

That is what is intended from the gospel life here. I am not disturbed concerning the condition of the spirit of this our sister. She understands the mystery now better than you or I do, because she has gone to the other side. She realized the fullness of that hope when she asked that God be asked to release her, a Christian fortitude which was never acquired under the suddenness of pain and distress.

They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Do we realize the fullness of these precious promises which are ours to enjoy? It is a glorious thing for the family, for the parents whom God honored by bringing this life into the world, which became this character of noble womanhood. If there is anything worth imitating in this life it is the person who tries to live his religion according to the gospel of the Son of God. The Father is merciful, and though with our mistakes and transgressions he may be displeased, yet he still wants us to strive constantly, and he will give us credit many fold more than we might expect from a personal friend for the good we do.

My closing words are to this father and mother to have no fears concerning this lovely daughter. This husband who in his youthful years is deprived of her association, judging from my own experience, had a bright future before him. We found the gospel, we built our hopes upon it, we reared our altars, and sought for the better things that the gospel brings. This brother and sister in their home life as husband and wife have probably done this; but now those hopes are blasted, those prospects are destroyed. But the promise of the great Jehovah is that they that are faithful unto death shall wear the crown. And when the resurrection takes up this sister, if faithful you will be there, and you who have known her here will not need an introduction. You will know her, and then you will see the mercy of God in relieving her from her pain and distress that the spirit might go home.

Though the members of the church have lost an example, a pattern of true, faithful womanhood when she took her departure, whatever was lovely and noble and true and good in her life, these are the things that God would have us emulate. Paul puts it in this language:

Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. (Philippians 4:8.)

Why? Because the thinking of these things will lead us to wise decisions, righteous purposes, and those blessings of God that will make our lives acceptable to him. There will be thorns in the way, there will be temptations before us, but there will be a glorious triumph. One of the saddest scenes, living in the privileges afforded to us in the gospel, as we are, is to look in the face of those who have neglected this hope, who can not understand it, and who are without hope in this life or in the life to come. Such people deserve our sympathy, deserve our prayers. They need our encouragement.

May God bless and comfort you in your home circle, bless you in all your undertakings, and at last may your lives be as pure an example of noble living as has been that of our departed sister.

REFLECTING

But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.—2 Corinthians 3:18.

The glory that Moses received necessitated the wearing of a veil upon his face, because the children of Israel could not endure his glory. There was a veil obscuring the perfect vision.

These sons of Jacob are not the only ones who look through a veil of darkness. If we are able to read the foregoing text with any degree of understanding we see therein something that will enable us to get at the real, vital issues of life and discover the relationship, the correspondence that should exist between the human and the divine. We desire to notice the rendering of the Revised Version, which reads:

We all with unveiled face reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit.

Moses' face was veiled, and therefore the reflection of his glory was not had. How simple the thought, how easy to comprehend. We who are here acquainted with Christ should unveil the face of our mirror, ourself, that the glory of God in all its splendor and excellence might be reflected therefrom. What is the glory of the Lord? Without question it is his character! Let us now read in paraphrase: We all with unveiled face, reflecting as a mirror the character of the Lord, are changed into the same image. How are we changed? By the reflecting of the character of the Lord.

Notice the significance of the language, reflecting as a mirror. If the face of a mirror is covered it can reflect nothing; but when the face is open it reflects the object that is before it. The mirror reflects the thing it is focused on. Therefore, if we, as mirrors, are to reflect the character of the Lord, we must be focused on him and him only, for whatever our life is focused on, that we reflect.

A mirror reflects the image of the thing, the likeness of the thing that is before it, and the only thing we see, or are concerned in is the thing it reflects. One has ably and wisely said that the only time a mirror attracts attention to itself is when there are flaws in it. We add that the mirror which has flaws in it not only attracts attention to its imperfect condition, but those flaws prevent its reflecting a perfect image, a perfect likeness of the object that is before it.

The things we come in contact with in life we reflect in our characters. The thing we hold before our constant view is the thing we reflect in our characters. So it is that we reveal in our characters the thing that our lives have been focused on.

Now, to reflect the character of Christ we must adjust our mirror upward so as to have it catch the divine image, and by reason thereof reflect it. By doing this Paul says we are changed into the same image, from character to character we are changed, transformed, from a very imperfect character into one a little more perfect, and from that to a still better one, and on and on. By continuing to reflect the character of Christ, we will ere long be changed into the same image.

This is accomplished by association. People who admiringly live together grow into the likeness of each other; they speak, act, and look alike; one reflects the character of the other. Therefore, to reflect Christ we must live with him; we must day by day adjust and shift our mirror so as to constantly have it focused on the divine man, that by reason of that reflecting we may gradually grow into the same image and reflect so completely his character that all who behold will recognize the Christ within.

How may the perfect life, the perfect character be reached, and attained, do you ask? It must be grown. It is just as natural to mature a beautiful character as it is to mature a beautiful flower. It will be observed that a flower must be grown. A character also must be grown. When we plant the seed in the earth we merely set into operation the laws of nature which produce the result. Flowers are grown from seeds, so also is character.

There is another thought that we desire to draw attention to, and that is that weeds are also grown from seeds. The weed seeds produce weeds just as naturally as flower seeds produce flowers. Cause and effect is the order of things. No one would be so unwise as to plant weed seeds and expect to grow from them beautiful flowers; yet this is the very thing a great many people do in the growing of a character.

To plant good seeds is to grow a beautiful life, a perfect character; to plant bad seeds is to grow an evil life, a defective and imperfect character. It has long since been declared that whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. What is it that causes the plant to grow? It is nature. But you first planted the seed and thus enabled nature to take its course. The plant, then, is a growth by law. By the relating of proper things proper results are obtained. Cause, effect, there is, there can be, no other way. Plant the right kind of seeds in your mind, relate yourself properly to Christ, and, in the very nature of things, you will grow into his likeness.

"We are transformed into the same image, even as by the Lord, the Spirit." But before we can be thus transformed, we must set into operation the cause that will admit of that result; we must focus our mirror, and that is ourself, our very being, so as to receive and reflect the glory of the character of Christ, and by so doing be transformed into his likeness.

"We are changed." Notice the passivity of that language. Something outside ourselves does the work. Nature grows the flower, but we place the flower in nature's hand by planting the proper seed in proper soil. The Spirit of God transforms us. It is a purely natural process, but we place ourselves in the Spirit's hand by reflecting as a mirror the character of Christ. By the planting of the seeds of thought that are pure and divine we properly relate cause to effect, so that the change which we call growth is the effect of the cause we set into operation; and by this means we are transformed from a life that is limited, imperfect, and sinful, into one that is unlimited, perfect and pure. This can only be done by reflecting the character of Christ.

Let us, therefore, remove the veil from the face of our mirror, and then turn its face in an upward direction, that the perfect character may be reflected in it, and we thereby become changed, transformed from character to character, until we have reached that blessed standard of excellence, and have ripened into that beautiful likeness of him whom we have been reflecting.

BAPTISM

WITHOUT IT NONE CAN BE SAVED

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16: 16.

"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

Entering into the kingdom of God is necessary in order to obtain celestial glory, and Jesus says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter." And when he says, "Except a man," we understand that he means every man, without one single exception. We do not understand there is any other way to enter the kingdom. We also believe that it is only "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." We do not believe there is any other way to be saved.

Jesus says his Father told him what to say, and what to speak. (John 13: 49.) So these words are the words of our Father in heaven, and must be binding and without change.

A VISION

Some years after I had become firmly established in this doctrine, I read one of Joseph Smith's visions, which somewhat troubled me. I gave the matter considerable study and prayer before becoming reconciled to it. It reads as follows:

The heavens were opened upon us, and I beheld the celestial kingdom of God, and the glory thereof, whether in the body or out I can not tell. I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son. I saw the beautiful streets of that kingdom, which had the appearance of being paved with gold. I saw Fathers Adam and Abraham, and my father and mother, my brother Alvin, that has long since slept, and marveled how it was that he had obtained an inheritance in that kingdom, seeing that he had departed this life before the Lord had set his hand to gather Israel the second time, and had not been baptized for the remission of sins.

Thus came the voice of the Lord unto me saying: "All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be heirs of the celestial Kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts, shall be heirs of that kingdom, for I, the Lord, will judge all men according to their works, according to the desires of their hearts." (Italics mine.)—Church History, vol. 2, p. 16.

The part that bothered me was that his brother Alvin "had obtained an inheritance in the kingdom . . . and had not been baptized for the remission of sins." But had he obtained an inheritance? If he had, here was an exception to the law and command of God. In my research I found that this was a vision, revealing future events, and not a view of things then in existence. Joseph was permitted to see things then unfulfilled. Many of God's prophets saw our day, and what is now being accomplished, and many of them spoke of these events as already fulfilled, although it took thousands of years for them to develop.

This vision of Joseph's was given January 21, 1836, and at that time—1836—he saw his father and mother and brother Alvin in the celestial kingdom. Alvin had been dead a number of years, but his father did not die until September 14, 1840, over four years after Joseph saw him there in vision. He was not there when the vision was given; he was alive here on earth. Neither was Alvin there, for "he had not been baptized for the remission of sins."

Then Joseph says, the voice of the Lord came unto him saying, "All who have died without a knowledge of this gospel, who would have received it if they had been permitted to tarry, shall be [future tense] heirs of the celestial kingdom of God; also all that shall die henceforth without a knowledge of it, who would have received it with all their hearts shall be [in the future] heirs of that kingdom."

BAPTISM NECESSARY

So say I! The time will come when every honest soul who would keep God's commandments if he knew them will be saved in the celestial kingdom of God. But not until he has been baptized for the remission of sins, for it is only he that believeth the gospel and is baptized that shall be saved, for "except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God." And if he does not enter that kingdom of God, he never can enter the celestial kingdom.

Sometime, somewhere, they will hear the gospel preached, they will believe and repent and be baptized and be saved in God's own way, without an exception being made in God's law for their special benefit.

I am a strong believer in baptism.

FIGHTING TO MUSIC

The Czar's soldiers refuse to fight without music. Deprived of this inspiring force, they would be dull, cowardly, brutal, and inefficient, says Ivan Narodny, in Musical America. From musical they "absorb a magic power of endurance and forget the sufferings and mortality." Napoleon added the effect of Russian music to the rigors of a Russian winter as the cause of his defeat. Mr. Narodny quotes from the notebook of the Man of Destiny this entry: "The wierd and barbaric tunes of those beastly Cossack regiments simply infuriated the half-starved Muscovites to the maddest rage, and they wiped out the very cream of the army." The writer makes out the musical contingent of the Russian Army as double the size of America's armed force:

The army bands of Germany, Italy, and France are insignificant institutions as compared with the Russian bands, for in the former cases they are but showy luxuries of the parade, while in the latter music is considered a vital necessity. There is not a single regiment or battalion of the Russian regular army that does not possess its regimental band or orchestra.

An average Russian army band or orchestra has from forty to fifty musicians; the orchestra of certain guard regiments contains sixty. As there are over a thousand Russian regiments, exclusive of the navy and military schools, the army of Russian military musicians is about fifty thousand men. If one adds to this the twenty to forty musical pupils of a regiment orchestral school and the musical companies of battleships and various cadet schools, the number reaches one hundred thousand, which is twice the size of the United States standing army. Each musical company has a conductor and his assistant, both being graduates of one of the conservatories of music.

These one hundred thousand uniformed musicians are maintained for the sole purpose to provide every regiment with all the necessary musical entertainment; but they cost the treasury a big sum of money annually. The so-called musykalnaya kammanda—the musical company—of a regiment, is, in spite of its martial appearance a great educational and ennobling factor of the army.

Mr. Narodny gives a page out of his personal experience of the Russo-Japanese war:

I had occasion to hear the soldiers demanding the bands to play when, for strategic reasons, music was temporarily forbidden. I remember distinctly how, one evening before the great battle at Mukden, a group of soldiers urged the band of their regiment to play such pieces as Tschaiakowsky's Slav March, Schumann's "Träumerei," etc. It was rather pathetic to hear one of the soldiers saying:

"Whether I am to be shot or I have the luck to remain alive, I know not—but I must hear my favorite march this fatal night. It's a stimulation to action, a solace to the soul."

I was told the soldier was killed and he whistled, dying, the favorite march he had heard the evening before. There were occasions when the battle was raging, yet the musical company was still playing. I was told that in one regiment thirty-nine musicians had fallen, but the last—a flutist—continued still playing to the beats of the bandmaster until they were taken prisoners.

The Russian army surgeons have explained that had it not been for regimental music, the moral and physical conditions of the army would be forty per cent worse. Music has grown to become a vital factor of the army life and disposes a soldier's mind to a state where he is likely to forget deprivations and danger. It inspires him to display his most heroic faculties and thus makes of an uneducated muzhik a brave patriot and fatalist, to whom life is worth nothing. The power of stirring music is marvelous in such cases and it has a spiritually intoxicating power.

If German music can be made effective to inspire her enemies to fight against her, our own neutrality will not be questioned on the grounds of our small contribution mentioned by the Boston Transcript:

A London dispatch mentions among the striking incidents of the day the passage of a Highland regiment through the Strand to the strains of "Marching through Georgia." That stirring tune, which puts quickness into the most laggard feet, has long been a favorite in the British Army. It has been sung in India to cheer a weary march, and is called for both in the mess room and at the camp fire. "John Brown's body" is more especially the enlisted man's song, but both officers and men delight in the martial strains that commemorate Sherman's exploits. Indeed "Marching through Georgia" seems to have caught the fancy of soldiers everywhere. The Germans know it, and when the Japanese entered Port Arthur in 1895, their band played "Marching through Georgia." This American tune having obtained its cosmopolitan vogue a generation ago, its employment by belligerents is free from complications of neutrality.—Literary Digest, September 5, 1914.

SUPPORTING THE CHURCH

There is a sentence in the address which Bishop Anderson made before the international Sunday school convention which goes to the very heart of the question of strength and growth in religious work. The bishop said: "The whole work of the church can not be done by the ministry alone, and I think the crying need of the church to-day is a fuller sense on the part of the laity of their evangelical mission."

All the churches which feel this need have come into existence in response to a need. The laity may be lax about its churchgoing, but it is not ready to get along without the institution. To prove this it is not necessary to go into grave problems of faith and a consideration of creeds. The fact is that an obligation is created by persons who trouble themselves very little by such problems and considerations.

Every man who establishes a church connection for any reason, however trivial, puts himself under an obligation to contribute to the work and the treasury of the church in proportion to his means. Every man who seeks the services of a church at a wedding or a funeral testifies to his need of the institution, and he can not square his account with wedding and funeral fees. His obligation is a continuing one quite as obviously as if he were regular in attendance at church meetings for social or religious purposes. He has no right to demand that others shall give churches constant support in order that he may make a convenience of them two or three times in his life.

There is no way out of this problem for the individual conscience except to repudiate the church altogether. Accept it and take part whole-heartedly in its work or reject it once and for all. Otherwise the role adopted is that of a sneaking dependent upon the favor of others. The person who merely makes a convenience of the church actually lives on the support those others give it, is a mendicant and a very unworthy one. When he offers proof by his own acts that it is an organization that is necessary to him he proves at the same time that he should be doing just what the bishop calls on the laity to do. The only true part for him is that of the stanch and loyal supporter, one who is willing to do his full share toward lessening the cares and anxieties of an often overburdened ministry.—Chicago Herald, June 28, 1914.

WAR OPPORTUNITY OF THE JEWS

The novel proposal that the Jews of the United States shall combine "to frame a policy for the international welfare" of the race and to assure it "justice when the world peace is made" is put forth by The Jewish Advocate (Boston). This is the duty of American Jews, we read, because they are "the only large group of Jews who are in a neutral position at this time," and because the Jews in Europe, "compelled to slaughter each other in battles for ends from which they have nothing to gain," find it "no doubt difficult to concentrate attention upon the need for a constructive Jewish policy." The Advocate urges Jewish organizations in all parts of the country to meet in convention and take advantage by cooperation of this opportunity for "turning evil into good," which shall not recur for many generations. "Hence," this journal adds, "we urge our contemporaries to take up this issue, and we ask rabbis to replace their expected New Year's sermons with plans along this line." The necessity for action on the part of the Jews is argued from the fact that "whoever wins, the Jews are not likely to profit by the victory unless they take the initiative," and we read:

A Russian victory would merely send them out of the frying pan into the fire, while if the independence of Poland were reestablished, the Jewish position would be worse than it is to-day. For the Poles are admittedly anti-Semitic, and would, if anything, become more so after such a triumph. The annexation of the Russo-Polish province by Germany would take the Jews out of the fire, but—into the frying pan, for we owe modern scientific Jew-baiting to Germany. In the Levant we have seen that the Greek victory has been to the disadvantage of the Salonika Jews, while of the other Jews in the Balkans we can not claim that any group has gained a distinct advantage from their military patriotism.

Because of the war, The Advocate points out, "the majority of Jews in Europe can not even lift a finger" to prepare themselves against the time "when the powers come together to make peace and reparcel their possessions." The burden, therefore, falls upon the neutral American Jews, and we are advised that

From the American Jewish view the framing of such a policy is most desirable. During the war the Jews in this country are being plainly used, as far as they permit themselves, "to manufacture sympathy" for nations who in normal times award them with "the order of the boot." After the war the Jews of the United States will be asked to bear the burden that will weigh like lead on the shoulders of the Jews everywhere. A large percentage of the Jewish young men will have been killed, and with whatever power rests the victory, the result of changing the map of Europe will result, as far as funds permit, in mass Jewish emigration, for the Jews live in disputed territories, or along frontiers, therefore the changes will affect them intimately. Their communities will be broken, their strong men dead, their families impoverished. Hence the burden will be thrust upon the American Jew. He will be asked to give money, and he will be asked to set himself the task of stretching the immigration laws in order to receive tens of thousands of war victims. This in turn will lead to an upheaval in every American Jewish community, similar to that which was witnessed here in 1881-2, 1891-2, and 1906-7.

It is plain, consequently, The Advocate holds, that "the American Jew has a personal as well as a sentimental reason for seeing to it that . . . the Jews receive proper treatment from those who assemble around the peace table," and it adds:

In order to accomplish this, the first step is the uniting of the Jews in this country for that purpose. That is not the same thing as uniting them for all purposes, but for one understandable purpose. For that reason a conference of all Jewish forces should be convened. No one man, and no one body, can dictate such a policy, nothing permanent can be accomplished by political intrigue, however well meant. The Jewish policy should be every Jew's policy, and to make it so, every type of Jew must be represented in framing it, and in a representative way be responsible for it.—Literary Digest, September 5, 1914.

RELIGION OF THE MINIMUM WAGE

A minimum wage for low-paid wage earners is one recommendation of the Land Inquiry Committee in England, which has been studying the life of laborers and their inability "to pay an economic rent for sanitary dwellings." This recommendation, observes the editor of the London Daily Chronicle, will bring the problem into practical politics. But the demand for a minimum-wage law apparently has, in his opinion, a religious as well as a political basis, for he publishes articles written at some length by two of the most representative spokesmen of religious thought in England. And as the minimum wage is a live issue in many of our States, their discussion of its moral or religious side should prove of interest to American readers.

Doctor Peter Taylor Forsyth, Principal of Hackney College, notes in The Chronicle that any new moral idea takes a long time to penetrate the natural man, who "is to regard it as an impertinence." "He is still more apt," says this eminent Congregational theologian, "to regard it as an impertinence if religion take a hand in driving it home, and the church claim a voice, not to say a control. He tells the church to mind its own business, to confine itself to its own sphere of the other-worldly, and to keep its ethics out of its economics." But such advice as this, declares Doctor Forsyth.

It becomes less and less possible to accept, as economics and its wealth are seen to turn more and more on human weal, and even human worth, for their stability and value. Religion certainly had better let the technique of such matters alone; but it is only a sectional religion, gravitating to a sectarian, if it let alone their principle. It should not interfere in the battles, but it has a word in the campaign. The problem of religion is that of society. It is not to perpetuate, nor to devise, any particular theory of property, but to realize the free man. We must go on to demand, whether in church or state, just such changes and socialism as may be necessary for that end. (The movement of the workmen in relation to the employer has a counterpart in the claim of the laity to have more voice and interest in the policy and property of the church.) For the development of a free and moral personality we must have fixity, freedom, and property. And these the proletariat does not have under present conditions, while those who do have them are dependent on the proletariat for their possession.

Such, then, we read, are the foundations on which the demand for a living wage rests at last. According to Doctor Forsyth, "it is an assertion of the Christian principle of the supreme worth of the soul," and "the supreme worth of the soul, translated into social practise, means the first claim on industry of the moral personality." Further:

The concrete form the claim takes is that a living wage to the workers (including, of course, managing workers) is the first charge upon any industry; that the wage to the worker take precedence of the wage to capital; and that an industry which will not stand that is an industry artificially and immorally protected. In an advanced stage of moral civilization, it would be classed with the dangerous industries, not to say the deadly.

By this demand a great step is taken to the measuring of a man by what he is instead of by what he has. It does not follow that he who has more is more. And if the changes in society are moving on lines more and more ethical—as they are when we stand high enough to command a wide prospect—then personality must surely take the lead of ownership. . . .

The question is not whether a man can live on a pound a week, but whether present society has any right to require that he shall. . . . If the clergy of the great communions were to realize and teach that moral and social translation of their central belief in the soul which some of their leaders have well grasped, the change in economic conditions would be both swift and safe.

Experience shows that there is not an iron law of wages. It resolves itself in practice into a tussle between the weaker and the stronger, in which (as in all war) the weaker get the worst of it. But the standard of living plus the ideal of justice have now a growing influence in the matter. And religion has here a good deal to say if it say it in the proper way. A religion which is both social and moral should give a principle for such a crisis, and not merely lubricate the grinding faces. Such a principle the Christian religion does give when it makes the divine kingdom historic and terrene, and the soul of man worth the death of the Son of God. If we preached the public practice of that more we should get readier ears for the theology of it.

It should be added, in fairness, that if the worker is rewarded on the principles of the soul he must put his soul into his work. If he is recognized as a moral personality, he must act as such. And "ca' canny" tactics would then be relegated among the barbarisms and immoralities of war.

Practically the same standpoint is that of the Very Reverend Monsignor Robert Hugh Benson, of the Catholic Archdiocese of Westminster. He would remind his readers of the new idea of the state:

It is far from being ruinous to a home to act upon feeling as well as upon brute force; and the question is, Is it not possible to say that—again, whether we like it or not does not matter—the State is beginning to be guided, with respect to all her citizens and not only a section, by motives of feeling as well as those of rigorous severity and naked justice—that it is beginning to have an air of home even for its dingiest citizens?

And he asks those who argue against the principle of the minimum wage to reflect upon the fact, vouched for by board of trade official, that "for the incomes below 20s. two thirds of the total income is spent on food," leaving one third for every other conceivable need; and the inevitable corollary that where the income appears below what is called the "living wage," there is no margin at all. Reflect further upon any statistics you like, taken from any reputable source at all, not of those persons comparatively affluent on 30s. a week, but of those who—after having eliminated the loafer—live in our big towns and even in our country cottages on a wage only slightly less than the very lowest that any state has ever yet proposed to fix as "minimum."

It is not that we are flowing all day long with milk and honey now, that our fountains run an excellent dinner ale, that there is a stocked larder in every house, and that on this peace and plenty wild-eyed fanatics are descending with discordant cries of unwonted change. The truth is that we are in a state of unrest which among less stolid citizens would long ago have led to bloody revolution; and that this state, though no doubt fanned as well as voiced by agitators, arises almost entirely from a conviction among the employed that they do not receive enough money to live decently. If the new principle is unsound, can it possibly be more so than our present conditions? An open boat may be less secure than a liner; but it is certainly more secure than a sinking ship, however large and imposing.—Literary Digest, June 27, 1914.

When the illustrious man, Chief Justice Jay, was dying, he was asked if he had any farewell address to leave his children. He replied, "They have the Bible."

Crumley-Kellems Debate

Soon after my arrival in Oregon I attended the reunion at Estacada (near Portland), where I met Brother F. M. Sheehy. Because of the above debate and for other reasons, Brother Sheehy decided it was wiser for me to labor in the Southwestern Oregon District. Accordingly, wife and I left the reunion Thursday, July 23, before its close, and on Friday traveled by train from Portland to Roseburg. On Saturday we went by auto from the latter place to Myrtle Point, which was to be the scene of the debate.

Owing to circumstances, the discussion did not begin at the time intended. While we were waiting, a meeting was held at the Christian Church, on Thursday night, July 30. We were expecting the debate to start that evening, but Professor Kellems did not arrive in time. In lieu of the debate, addresses were given by Judge Sehlbrede, of Marshfield, Oregon, Reverend Coulter, of the Christian Church, Elder Crumley, and myself. The speeches were along the line of forbearance, toleration, investigation, etc., in relation to the forthcoming debate. This meeting did good, for it put the people in a better frame of mind in relation to each other and toward the disputants, and thus prepared them for the discussion.

Professor Kellems came to the scene of conflict by auto. While en route he had trouble with his machine, so did not arrive until Saturday, August 1. The debate began that night, and continued for fourteen nights, including Sunday nights. Six nights were devoted to the first proposition, four nights each to the second and third. The sessions began at 8 p. m., closed at 10, and consisted of alternate, half-hour speeches. The propositions discussed were as follows:

1. Is the Book of Mormon of divine origin, and worthy of the respect and belief of Christian people?
2. Is the church of which I, D. C. Kellems, am a member, known as the Church of Christ, in harmony in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice with the church of the New Testament?
3. Is the church of which I, C. E. Crumley, am a member, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in harmony in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice with the Church of the New Testament?

In affirming his first proposition, Elder Crumley stated briefly what the Book of Mormon purports to be, read the testimony of the eleven witnesses as to how it came to light, and then proceeded to substantiate its claims, first, from archæology, and, second, by Bible prophecy. His opponent did not attempt to meet his archæological and biblical evidences, but simply asserted that they were irrelevant to the subject. He then endeavored to establish an alibi or affirmative-negative position by claiming the Book of Mormon originated from the Spalding Romance, and by asserting that "Joe Smith was a dirty polygamist," etc., and that the early Latter Day Saints were "cattle thieves," and otherwise very bad people.

For the Spalding story he relied on Howe for evidence, which Elder Crumley offset by the facts of Sidney Rigdon's life making it impossible for him to cooperate with Joseph Smith in the production of the Book of Mormon; by the evidence of the manuscript itself and the testimony of its finders, and the confirmatory evidence of the late editions of the standard encyclopedias.

Regarding the character of Joseph Smith, Professor Kellems used Whitmer's "Address" and Cowdery's "Defense."

He appeared to rely more on the testimony of these men than anything else and tried to make more out of it. He claimed that if we accept these men as witnesses for the Book of Mormon we must receive their evidence on other points. In reply Elder Crumley maintained that these men were personal witnesses to the Book of Mormon and knew whereof they testified. Subsequently they were severed from the church, and ceased to be the comrades of Joseph Smith. They no longer knew anything about his teachings and practices. What they said was from hearsay, hence they were not competent witnesses. Whitmer said he once believed Joseph was not a polygamist, but from reports that came to him he afterward decided that he was, and besides, no man is so far infallible as to make his testimony on all subjects at all times in life equally reliable. If the testimony of all men should be always believed, then Professor Kellems is under obligation to accept what Whitmer and Cowdery say concerning the Book of Mormon as well as their testimony relating to the subsequent life of Joseph Smith. Even if we should accept this latter testimony, it does not invalidate what these men had before said as to the divine origin of the Book of Mormon.

Regarding the character of the early Latter Day Saints a history of Grundy County, Missouri, was submitted in evidence. It is significant that this history was that of "Grundy" and the chief witness, a Mr. "Slum." The evidence submitted related to the Haun's Mill Massacre, and was easily met by the evidence of Hubert Howe Bancroft.

On the second proposition the professor did not attempt to show his church in harmony with that of the New Testament, nor did he apply the language of the proposition to his denomination. He applied it to the local congregation at Eugene, of which he is a member. He attempted to describe the New Testament church (they all do that), and then asserted (they all do this, too) that his church is the Pentecostal church. Elder Crumley called attention to the fact that the New Testament church was not in question. It is recognized as the standard. The question is this: Is Professor Kellems's church in harmony with that glorious church?

Since the Professor refused to bring out his church, Elder Crumley was compelled to do it for him, and he did it to perfection. In addition to Elder Long's tract, The Failures of Campbellism, we had the Christian System, The Christian Baptist, The Life of A. Campbell, by Grafton, and the Memoirs of A. Campbell, by Richardson. Facts were brought out which the Christian people were ignorant. Professor Kellems admitted he had not read the Christian System. At this juncture Elder Crumley offered to go to the Eugene University and teach the history of the Christian Church.

Elder Crumley proved that A. Campbell not only claimed a restoration but a reconstruction, that is, a reorganization, of the New Testament church, and yet the professor had ridiculed the term "Reorganized" in our church title. He further proved that the erratic, irregular way in which Alexander Campbell and his father, Thomas Campbell, proceeded, stamps the Christian Church as a sect of human origin, the same as any other institution. He especially emphasized the fact that after eighteen years of gospel restoration, so called, they made the discovery, accidentally, that baptism is "for the remission of sins." In short, the so-called Church of Christ was found decidedly out of harmony with the New Testament church in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice. Alexander Campbell himself admitted that it was such an imperfect imitation of the original church that if the apostles and early Christians were on earth now they would weep at beholding it.

When it came to our church proposition Professor Kellems pursued the course he had followed in discussing the Book of Mormon. In fact, the item before referred to in which Bancroft was involved, came in on this proposition. Kellems made fun of the idea of all the sects and creeds being wrong, reading from Joseph Smith in Church History. Crumley read from Campbell's Christian System where the various churches are called "An adulterous brood." Kellems said: "It pinches me for my Baptist and Methodist brethren to be abused." Crumley said: "If it pinches him for other churches to be condemned he'll be black and blue all over if he reads Alexander Campbell's Christian System." Elder Crumley then showed that the "parties" who were "wrong" and the "professors" who were "all corrupt" has direct reference to those who were quarreling over religion in Joseph's Smith's neighborhood. In addition to this "all the creeds were wrong."

Some criticisms were also made on the Doctrine and Covenants, one being that it sanctions taking property without payment. Elder Crumley read all the statements in full, relating to the purchase of land, the shedding of blood and the payment of debts, showing clearly that God condemned appropriation without payment, the acquisition of lands by conquest, and the repudiation of debt. Another criticism was that our Doctrine and Covenants states on the title-page that what it contains was "carefully selected from the revelations of God." From this it was asserted that we had struck out the revelation on polygamy and some others, while the Utah Church has retained them all. As it happened, we had a copy of the old Doctrine and Covenants ending with the "Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith," and without polygamy and other matter that has been conjured up and added in Utah. It was published by the Utah Church in 1851. Elder Crumley threw this book down on the table exclaiming: "There! If you'll find the revelation on polygamy in that I'll eat it."

Both speakers were witty, and, judging by their attitude towards each other, both had kissed the "blarney stone." They are both under suspicion of being partly Irish. The professor indulged in more wit than did Elder Crumley, but the latter scored better when he did indulge. This feature ran all the way through the debate, and made is exceedingly entertaining. It certainly was far from being a dull discussion. Although such a lengthy controversy is taxing to the patience of the people, yet the attendance remained good throughout. The whole crowd responded, no matter which speaker was on the floor. In fact, this was an unusual debate. It began and ended with a better feeling than usual, and there exists now no ill feeling between the members of the two churches.

We had some difficulty in the selection of a chairman. The Christian Church, or rather, the professor's moderator, proposed Judge Sehlbrede, and I proposed a Mr. Phelan, a citizen of Myrtle Point. These two presided interchangeably. Reverend McDonald of Coquille acted as moderator for Mr. Kellems and I for Elder Crumley. I suggested that the chairman preside alternately, which was readily agreed to by Reverend McDonald. I considered this a better course than to engage in needless discussion about the merits of the two men. They both did well. The judge, however, left at the close of the first proposition. Mr. Phelan presided for the rest of the time. Considerable latitude was allowed the speakers; but little time was spent in discussing points of order.

Professor Kellems was, in the main, a fair man. He made the distinction between us and the Utah Church clear and strong, and reiterated it again and again during the debate. His biased statements on other points were due to being misled by the authorities (so called) on whom he relied.

Elder A. A. Baker, our branch president here, and Reverend Coulter, local pastor of the Christian Church, were also on or near the platform. These two began the negotiations which resulted in the debate. On the last night we all, including the chairman, stood in a line holding hands while the audience joined us in singing as the closing hymn "Blest be the tie that binds." Thus ended one of the most hotly contested debates ever held.

Sometimes discussions make people enemies for life. This one could not possibly have such an effect. It excited religious interest, and in that way will benefit the churches involved and all the other denominations of the town. Elder Crumley and I and the other principal parties to the debate have a standing invitation to visit the professor at his home in Eugene.

Professor Kellems is a man of more experience in controversy than Elder Crumley, but the latter won easily. From every quarter come reports favorable to our side. And, besides, our representative was so courteous that he toned down the professor's radicalism and made the debate more agreeable than it would otherwise have been. Since the debate we have a better standing in Myrtle Point than before, because we are better understood. Personally Elder Crumley had many friends before this controversy, but they are more numerous now. This is no small matter in view of the caliber of his opponent.

Mr. Kellems is a "Hoosier" by birth, and is related to the Kellems family of Southern Indiana. He began his career as a minister twenty-six years ago, and has baptized ten thousand people. He labored as an evangelist until sixteen years ago, when he became professor of oratory, homiletics and sacred history in the Christian University at Eugene, Oregon. Young men from everywhere are there training for the ministry, including some from Australia and New Zealand. He represents, of course, the Progressive Christian Church. When we heard of him and his exploits we regarded him as a Goliath and our man as a little David, but we are sure that in this case, as before, the Lord empowered the latter's sling. We are well satisfied with the result and so are others.

Professor Kellems is in debate a tactician but not a logician. He did not pursue a technical, scholarly course, but he could, I presume, if he had the time for the study of our work and experience in debating with us. His methods, as one can gather from this sketch, are largely old-fashioned. He promises to study up and meet us again. I hope he will.

This debate was something like that of Braden and Kelley. In the main, however, it included more historical and archaeological evidence. In a sense, I regret this, for it detracted from the Bible discussion. Braden's wit, too, was unlike that of Kellems'; it was "cut and dried." The latter's was spontaneous. This was undoubtedly the most interesting debate I ever attended.

A. C. BARMORE.

MYRTLE POINT, OREGON, August 29, 1914.

My First Impressions in Zion

My first view of the Temple Lot in the Land of Zion was through the window of the electric car which runs between Kansas City and Independence, Missouri. I was soon permitted to set feet upon the central place of Zion; and I find it is hard for me to try to describe the various feelings I enjoyed as I stood and gazed about.

I thought first of the number of years that I had earnestly longed and prayed to be permitted to go to the promised land; and to now realize that my prayer was answered and my desire fulfilled made me lift my heart in praise to God for this great blessing. And then I thought of the loving hearts, whose kind donations had made it possible for me to get here, and I prayed the Lord that he would abundantly bless and keep them; and I then and there resolved to devote myself more earnestly, devotedly, and zealously, helping, and educating his people in far away Saint Thomas, Ontario.

Then I thought of the wonderful scenes that had taken place on this land in the early history of the church, of the wondrous blessings they had enjoyed, of how the Holy Spirit of God has been poured out upon them, and I imagined I could almost see those angel hosts of heaven still hovering over this sacred place.

And then I thought of the terrible trials and sufferings, the wickedness, persecution, and great privations among God's people on this land in the year 1833, which was brought about by the carelessness and unfaithfulness of the Saints, and also by the wicked and cruel devices of men and devils, resulting in the awful, inhuman tortures inflicted upon the Saints. It should serve as a lesson to all his people that God will not always permit them to willfully disobey him, and also that his promises to protect his people are sure if they are faithful to observe his laws and keep them. Truly that was a terrible lesson.

I then thought of the promises God had made in regard to the land of Zion,—how his people were to gather here from the four quarters of the earth; how that none but the pure in heart would then remain here. The wonderful temple of the Lord would be built on the piece of land so consecrated. The angels of the Lord would direct and assist in its building and superstructure.

Then at the appointed time the trump shall sound and the dead in Christ shall arise first. We who are alive and remain faithful shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye and caught up in the air. The one altogether lovely shall come with myriads of angels. The wonderful coronation scene will take place in the clouds of heaven when Jesus is crowned King of kings and Lord of lords. Then he shall suddenly come to his temple (on this Temple Lot) and the great reign of peace be established; and, if faithful, we can participate in and enjoy all these glorious things, and associate with the King of peace and with all those mighty men of old and with our loved ones who have gone on before.

It seemed to me as I stood on this sacred spot and gazed all around that there was no trial too hard, no sacrifice too great, no burden too heavy, no cup too bitter, and no task too difficult for me to cheerfully undertake so that I, though unworthy, might be permitted to assemble with that blood-washed throng on Mount Zion.

JOHN L. BURGER.

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO.

(The following is from a letter from Brother U. W. Greene in charge of the Palestine Mission, to President Frederick M. Smith.—EDITORS.)

ROUM JEZZEM, MOUNT LEBANON, SYRIA, July 10, 1914.

Elder F. M. Smith,

Dear Brother: My report will not show great things accomplished in the Palestine Mission thus far. We have labored under difficulties that have tried our patiences and discouraged us much, but the assurance that the Lord never required a work of his servants but what he opened the way for its accomplishment has ever encouraged us to greater effort.

The lack of means with which to work has been largely met by the appropriations from the Religio and Sunday school associations. On receiving that, I arranged with Brother Eziz Nieam to build our school benches and some furniture for the house. He had nearly completed the school desks ere I left Jerusalem, so they must have opened their new room. This will greatly help in the school work. They will occupy the largest room on the place and Brother and Sister Jenkins will take a smaller one. This is the only room on the place that is adapted to school work. The house is peculiar in its construction. We have had to take Sister W. P. Brown from the American colony to our home, as they would not have her remain there and attend our meetings. This makes extra work for the sisters. She has a pension of twelve dollars per month, so can pay her way by our giving her the room. Living is as high here as in America, and many things much higher.

I hope to publish tracts in the Arabic and Hebrew ere the close of the year.

The religious prejudice in Jerusalem is terrific. As we send out tracts to everyone whose name we can obtain, the preachers become angry and work hard to keep people from coming to hear us. Their strong card is to threaten to discharge anyone from their employ who attends our services. As they have done this in one or two instances, others are careful. We visit and talk with many in their homes, however. The Jewish doctor continues very friendly, and is interested in our message; he is slow to grasp the ideas, and we have felt discouraged at times, then the light would dawn upon him and we would rejoice.

The work of gathering continues, and is increasing in volume; hundreds of Jewish families arrive weekly and scatter over the land. Many are going into Galilee where the land is better; many are going beyond Jordan into the region once occupied by Manasseh, Gad and Reuben. The past three years the rains have come earlier and continued later than in centuries. This is a promising sign. I hope that we can purchase our own property this year, and prepare for the future in Jerusalem.

I have arranged for Brother Jenkins to visit several of the towns around Jerusalem and preach to the people; the difficulty will be the want of an interpreter. The progress will be very slow here for a long time. Many will feel discouraged and think the work a failure, but I feel that it should be continued and properly cared for. In due time we shall reap if we faint not. Sister Koehler is fine with her school work, but has been poorly for several months. She is somewhat improved and I hope will be restored to perfect health.

Here in the Lebanon the situation is peculiar, and altogether different from the work in Jerusalem. This is a mountain region; we are between three and four thousand feet above the sea. It is a beautiful sight to watch the sun set in the clouds, while we are above them. People are friendly and kind, and praying that something will be done for them by way of schools and religious instruction. The Presbyterian preacher and the Greek priest are friendly and visit with me and we discuss religion. The Presbyterian is interested, but wants to have the matter submitted to his professors in Beirut.

Morning, afternoon, and evening, I visit from house to house and always talk the faith and pray with them. Have administered to several, in one instance at least with marked results. It will require time to educate them to our faith. Many of the young men are fine fellows, equal to our American boys and anxious for an education. What we need is to educate some of them and send them with the gospel to their own people.

Poor Brother Soloman Njeam is blind, but is doing all he can to help me: it is difficult to get him over these mountain trails, as the people never pick out the stones, but throw them into the roads from their land. They are nearly impassable for me, and worse for him. We are using the best material we have, however. An Abyssinian Doctor from Lezzen called last week and has invited us to his home to preach to the people of that town.

(The following is taken from a letter from Brother Rees Jenkins, laboring in the Palestine Mission, to Brother R. M. Elvin, of Lamoni, Iowa.—EDITORS.)

Elder R. M. Elvin,
Lamoni, Iowa;

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, July 31, 1914.

Dear Brother in the Lord: Your very welcome letter is at hand, and we were very glad to hear from you once more. We know that you are busy, and don't expect you to neglect your other work in order to be prompt in answering us: though we are always anxious to hear from you, and our hearts are made to rejoice when we do hear from you.

The work here is still at a very low ebb. Brother Greene sent out some literature and circular letters announcing our faith and also our services here. This effort aroused the enemy, who at present is well fortified behind those most formidable fortresses, ignorance and superstition. These are the strongholds of the Devil, and when one begins to strike at them, it is much like sending a ball against the wall, the harder you strike the greater the force with which it rebounds. However, by diligent effort, we may, like Titus of old, force our engine through the defense. The saying that light dispels darkness may be eminently correct, but "the darkness comprehended it not" is verily a true saying. There must be capacity to receive light. In order to light up a dark cell, one must break through the barriers that resist the penetration of the light. Here we have to do with the barriers just now.

I have already mentioned the difficulties in this country, so do not need to repeat them here, but before the work will meet with any permanent success here, these difficulties must be met and overcome. We can then make good use of the conditions here for the advancement of the work in this land. Mr. Djirius Yousef, the teacher in the German school here, does not attend the services any more. He says, however, that his heart is with us. But conditions are such that he is bound to hear his advisers. He is a man of vast influence, his station is a very high one; it is hard to turn away from all the prospect held out by the spiritual authorities of the German Government. If he comes into the work it will be after we have succeeded in making the name of Latter Day Saints honorable in this country. That may not be very hard to do once we have got started right. Some may think our work here is premature. Not at all; that is, so far as this country is concerned. But in so far as the church may not be able to support the mission under its present condition,—well, that is another question, or, to use a common expression, it is a horse of another color.

The work here demands something more than a casual and transient support. It must be a substantial and systematic support. Then if I'm not sadly mistaken, the results will be all this church can expect. It is not a good preacher only that we need here, though he is also almost indispensable; but he must also be able to teach children, for the majority of the people are very ignorant and must be met on their own plane. Then there are men of learning representing all kinds of oriental and occidental philosophy from the materialist with his "physico-chemical action" to the dreaming idealist and philosopher who claims there is no matter, and the other that claims that matter is the result of sin, and when sin is no more, matter will become extinct,—at least as matter,—and all will then be spirit. Some say that Jerusalem is the center of the world. Perhaps so, and that may account for the fact that it seems also to be a veritable vortex of philosophy, no, not real philosophy; but vain philosophy, science so called, monkey-ancestral theory, or evolution, so called, ignorance, gross ignorance and abject superstition, and much of it bearing the badge of Christianity. Be that as it may, it is a vortex all right. But what a travesty on religion! Babylon! Babylon! when the mene, mene, tekel upharsin will be written on thy walls, and thy mighty ones will tremble for fear, and their knees shall smite one against the other as a result, the very earth must groan under the shock!

We are enlarging our night school, and we shall have three classes now, so that part of our work is gradually moving on. We do not know, as yet, what salutary effect it may have on the Jews here. There is one young man here, however, that seems to have taken a great liking for us, and is spending much time with us. He is a son of a rabbi in the city, who came here from Greece. He is learning English quite rapidly, and attends the services regularly. He has no time for Judaism, and very little for religion at all, unless it is for Christianity. We may be able to do something with him when he learns enough English to understand the preaching. His brother Jews have persecuted him much on account of his attachment, and have even reported him to his father; but his father does not seem to object at all to his coming, so we can not tell what the final results will be.

We have another Jew here,—a Persian—(perhaps I have mentioned him before), who claims to be Messiah. He believes in the messiahship of Jesus, but he believes he has gone into the heavens to remain there, except as he may come in the person of the latter-day Messiah, by giving unto him his spirit to such a degree that he will accomplish the purposes of God, in the restoration of Israel. I meet him twice a week, and have been meeting him now for months to discuss the leading question bearing on the messiahship of Jesus and his divinity. He now acknowledges his divinity—something he did not admit before. He only looked upon him as a prophet like unto Moses,—a man, but a man that had given to the Jewish religion the very highest interpretation. Having lived and exemplified the very highest principles of Judaism, God made him Lord of all, in recognition of his faithfulness and devotion to his mission and in keeping the commandments of his God. But to-day, as I have just said, he acknowledges his divinity. He is a very able man; a profound reasoner, and master of the situation so far as the so-called Christian ministers are concerned. Many have tried to speak with him, but their interviews always ended with the third or fourth visit. We have been discussing now for nearly a year. At first we only met once in a great while, but for several months, now, the questions have become so interesting that we meet twice every week to discuss. He is gradually giving way, which gives us hope.

Brother Greene has gone to Lebanon. He is trying to get the work before the people there. He reports several administrations to the sick, with marked results. We hope his labor there will meet with abundant success. Brother Koehler will soon be going up there, too, to do some singing.

I understand that the peace conference is to be held at the Hague next year, and Europe seems to be making all preparation for Austria occupying Belgrade, Russia and Germany mobilizing. Poor Turkey is trembling for fear. She is friendless excepting Germany is cajoling her.

It is now likely that the Hebrew International University will be built upon the Mount of Olives. There is also a Jewish Sanhedrin to be established here, so it seems that the year of 1914 is to be an epoch-marking year. Perhaps the threatening European war will be one of the means that will make it possible for the Jews to return to Palestine.

This summer has been a wonder, it has been so very pleasantly cool. The weather is changing here. Perhaps I have mentioned this before, so lest I weary you too much, with my long epistle, I think I shall also "reel off" as you say, and say amen, too.

Please convey our best wishes to all the Saints in Lamoni, and especially to those who know us, if there are any there that do know us. I met Brother Elbert A. Smith once at the conference of 1908, and that is all I know I think in Lamoni besides yourself. By the way, I always enjoy reading his editorials, they are certainly fine. I can't help but laugh sometimes when he gets after the Shooks and the Snicks and the Snakes. I enjoy it.

Box 91, FRENCH POST.

LONDON, ENGLAND, September 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: I suppose some of the readers of the HERALD will be anxious to hear from this part of the mission field, especially at this particular time when it would appear that all things are in commotion.

The present tangle and situation of the European nations are the results of the iron hand of oppression, for which this war forces an atonement and plunges fifty million people into misery and ruin. It is one of time's revenges, which God foreknew would come, therefore the prediction, "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars."

Men's hearts are failing them for fear. Even this nation of Great Britain, realize that they are facing the most gigantic problem their history ever reached. The heads of this great Government are in no wise backward in so expressing themselves. The call to arms and the pressing appeals for men, is to all classes of people from nineteen to thirty-five and even forty-two if ever in service before, regardless of special physical conditions. Five hundred thousand men are wanted to be added to the army. Thousands upon thousands are filing up to the recruiting stations, which looks like they are preparing for a greater struggle.

A victory for Germany would mean the absorption of Holland, Belgium, and the northern part of France into a vast German Empire. It would mean the ultimate disappearance of the British merchant marine from the sea. It would mean also the disappearance of England from South Africa and the loss of India. And, as admitted by some of the great and wise editors of the principal papers of London, it might even result in the absorption of the British Isles into the German Empire. Therefore the united forces from Canada, Australia, India and even south Africa are called to the conflict, and on last Sunday, August 30, a great army of Russians landed in Aberdeen, Scotland, through by train to (Tilbury Docks) London, thence across the Channel to the conflict.

Each of the conflicting nations are confident and praying for the success of their respective arms. Emperor William of Germany said at Berlin, March 29, 1901, "We will be everywhere victorious, even if we are surrounded by enemies on all sides, and even if we have to fight superior numbers, for our most powerful ally is God, who since the time of the Great Elector and Great King, has always been on our side." The British are praying for the success of their nation, and are predicting a new map for Europe, with Germany no more, and the Emperor William sent out on a lonely "Saint Helena." (Contrast this with the statement made by the worthy late President Lincoln during the darkest days of the American Civil War, "I do not know . . . but I am very anxious to know whether we are on God's side.")

According to the custom of all nations, since the beginning of nations, when they were about to begin a conflict with their enemies, the heads of those nations went into their houses of prayer, both pagans and Christians, and implored the Lord God Almighty, creator of heaven and earth, to bless their nations with victory. But when we consider that victory of one nation is the oppression of the other how much has God to do with it? And with all nations is it not considered that "might is right"? But might is not right unless it is righteous might, which emanates only from God, and will yet rule in all nations.

Those who are watching the proceedings through the daily papers can see that notwithstanding the repulses and reverses that are reported that the German army is moving steadily forward, and as nearly as can be estimated they are within seventy-five miles of Paris. No one can help but realize what a great army Germany has in the field, when we consider they are harassed on both frontiers of their country, and that they had to fight the French, Belgians, and British on the west, and the mighty land forces of Russia on the east.

There is an apparent protest from different nations against some of the methods used by Germany in their warfare, and such protest is now being carried to the authorities of the United States. But when we consider the history of warfare of the past, we note that the nations who were equipped with the most modern weapons of destruction used them to the disadvantage of the nations using more out-of-date defenses. A brief visit to the armory in the Towers of London will convince anyone that there has been a wonderful evolution in the inventions of warfare, from the early-day club, to the latest torpedo, which is so constructed as to move about and direct its course like a live fish, to find its prey. Now comes the aerial invention. Hence the protest. What next?

This may or may not be the great war of the beginning of the end; but it shapes very much like what we imagined it would be. If it is the war of the end, the end is not yet, for we are told that there will be pestilence, earthquakes, famines, which would continue until there is a "full end of all nations" as they are at present constituted, for the more wicked part of the people will be cut off, and out of the change will come a new condition. Man will not war against his fellow man, nor nation against nation, for they will become so disgusted with the terrors of war that they will do as the Scripture has said, they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and pruning hooks, and learn the art of war no more."

For this are the thinking people praying. From The Christian Commonwealth we quote the following: "A prayer for the nations.—We pray, O Father of all, who lovest all men, for a new Germany, a new England, a new Europe, and a new world, wherein every race may be free, and government may be of the people, by all and for all, so that the nations, ordering their states wisely and worthily, may live in the example of thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, may all the praise of the world be given, all power, domination, and glory, for ever. Amen."

The heads of this Government are wisely considering the best interest of the people on the British Isles, and are endeavoring to keep the industrial machinery of the country in operation, and to guard the imports of food supplies from abroad, and also to keep the prices of foodstuffs down. But in spite of all their precautions, thousands of men and women are thrown out of employment and the prices are going up.

I could not but notice that in this extremity of conditions the principles that are outlined in the revelations given to the church to govern Zion are very largely the principles that they are seeking to carry out for the safety and protection of the people, especially the poor. The cry goes forth from the rich and poor, the high and the low, "We are all one, and if there are any differences high or low or politically, close up the ranks, that there may be no longer differences." This teaches us as a church that the laws of Zion will yet be the laws that will govern the nations, because we see that men are and will naturally seek these laws, if not otherwise, will seek them unknowingly, in their extremity.

We feel quite safe in London, and have no thought of any evil coming to us. Our minds are at rest. We have confidence in God that even if the great conflict has come, if faithful, the promise made to Enoch of old will be shared to us, "My people will I preserve."

RODERICK MAY.

(The following was addressed to the Seventh or British Isles Quorum of Elders by their president, Elder John E. Meredith.)

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, July 31, 1914.

Dear and Respected Brethren: It is with joy and pleasure that I meet you at this time, and have the honor of looking upon your kind and smiling faces.

First, I want to thank you, one and all, for the respect shown to my post cards asking for your opinions as to which day would be the best for holding a quorum meeting, to which nearly everyone has replied with kind words and wise advice. What more can we want, or ask for?

I have been trying for years to provide good and successful quorum meetings in your midst, but have failed to a great extent; yet have not given up hope or ceased trying. It is said, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." I think matters have changed, and that I have hit upon a plan that will, or is now meeting with success, and I truly thank you for the kind response.

I propose writing a few lines on Christian duties and graces, and hope the spirit of the gospel and our heavenly father's Spirit will lead and direct what may be represented.

First, are we Christians? If so, what are we doing to show it, and how should we act in life? Should we become offended at a few words offered by a brother or sister, and speak unkind words or backbite or say unkind words about them? No; the law given by our heavenly Father tells us to get things righted, going to the ones concerned and telling them of their faults. If they hear us we have gained favor and things are righted, but if not we are pointed clearly to the next step to be taken. Shall we be true Christians? I trust we are,—try to be. What is the purpose or need for Christianity? It should make people better, kinder, more ready to help others, and to do good, and to destroy selfishness, pride, and jealousy.

What is our duty as a body of Christians and as elders? We must remember God reveals nothing to the hasty. The calm water best reflects the stars. Now what does this convey to our minds? That we should not be hasty in forming our conclusions or judging others, but keep calm, reflect upon and consider things with a calm spirit; then we shall be better able to give a correct decision. One very important duty is to pray, not merely with the lips, but from the heart. (See Matthew 26:38. Luke 18:1. 1 Timothy 2:8.) God promises to hear (Deuteronomy 4:29. Psalm 50:14, 15. Matthew 6:7-14.) Conditions given by God. (Chronicles 7:14. Matthew 21:20. Nephi 8:7. Alma 16:29. Doctrine and Covenants 85:36.)

What is the duty of the elder? One duty is to teach men of the things put into their hands by the power of God's Spirit. That is, to be taught from on high. How can we be so taught? Why, by reading Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Bible, learning therefrom what is necessary for us to do, complying with the laws laid down, and having that implicit faith and confidence in our heavenly Father that will call down this blessing. We have been commanded to study all good books, and by so doing our minds are fed and stored with that material which it is necessary to deal out at the time required.

The elder's duty is to preach, teach, and expound the gospel of Christ so as to build up the church, and not to pull down other churches or condemn others, but give everyone credit for having good desires.

The duty of the presiding elder of the branch is to watch over the branch and see that the officers do their duty; he should visit the members to encourage them and to be as a father in love and respect; also to see that the priests and teachers carry out their duties. If this is done in the spirit of love and respect we shall have lively members and good healthy branches.

District elders (presidents) have a duty in looking after the branches in their respective districts, to see that they are kept in order, and that they have help if needed.

Mission elders are under the jurisdiction of the missionary in charge. Their work is outside the branch, to spread the gospel by giving out tracts, preaching when occasion may require, or opportunity occurs, and to fill appointments. One of the best means by which they spread the gospel is to get into personal contact with people and thus present the truth in a kind and loving way.

There has been a lot of friction and misunderstanding between the elders and priests. How can we adjust these matters? I think the elders can do a lot to put these matters right, and thereby do better and more efficient work in the future than in the past. First, by calling upon the priests from time to time to take charge of meetings; offering the opening prayer, etc., the latter is in their line of office. Then give them an opportunity of baptizing, after which the elders have an opportunity of fulfilling their part. Let us do all we can to show respect, then we will get respect and do a greater work.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN E. MEREDITH.

ARGYLE, MICHIGAN, August 24, 1914.

Editors Herald: This branch was organized July 5, 1907, with sixteen members, including officers. All went well for a time. Sunday school and Religio were conducted; preaching and prayer meeting had their part in holding the work together.

Some moved away and the writer was left as the only officer, with three families to meet with in trying to preach the gospel and teach the Saints their duty. The spirit of preaching was finally given to the writer. I was invited by some because of the interest manifested to go to the schoolhouse a mile and half distant. Good crowds attended and a splendid hearing was given, though no apparent results followed. While holding forth in the schoolhouse a short time we never slackened our diligence in branch work. We divided our time between Snover and Sandusky every other evening, still keeping up prayer meetings, Religio and Sunday school.

God blessed me in this work, and while at times it was discouraging, we were assured greater work was before us, and we knew we needed preparation, so we kept steadily on. While engaged in the first year of this work we were shown that if faithful we should occupy in a schoolhouse about three miles distant. We kept at work doing the best we could, and in due time some from the district where the schoolhouse spoken of was located came to our preaching service and invited me to come and preach for them. I accepted, and my real work began.

Things went smoothly for a short time, when persecution came in many ways. We kept steadily on at our work. Finally two, man and wife, asked for baptism. Being a teacher, I sent for Elder Grice, and we had a time of rejoicing, as we knew the work would grow. In September, 1912, I was called to the office of priest, and the following June did my first baptizing. I have baptized twenty-six to date, four one week ago, the 16th, and one yesterday, the 22d. I was ordained to the office of elder July 5, this year, and my work is increasing. The Lord is blessing me, and we hope to be able to occupy acceptably.

Now, dear Saints, and especially the local ministry, I want to say that during all this time I was living on a new farm and caring for my family of eight children. We lost one by death. I loved this work above all else, and I went at it. I worked and prayed, and where I saw I lacked I tried by study and in every way lawful to prepare myself. My object in writing this letter is to encourage and inspire others to thrust in their sickles and reap.

Our branch numbers forty-eight, Religio thirty-four, Sunday school fifty-five. We hold all our meetings in a private house, and not a big one at that.

In conclusion, I wish to say that to mention the work of my wife and others would require much space. The Lord knows and will reward all.

WILLIAM H. SHEFFER.

KELLEEN, TEXAS, August 20, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have lost track of my mother and my brothers and sisters. My mother lived at Wilburton, Oklahoma, the last I heard from her, about eight months ago. If any of the Saints know where she or any of my brothers or sisters are, will they please be so kind as to write at once. The last I heard of Brother Edker he was at Denison, Texas. Brother Arthur was at Wagoner, Oklahoma, and the girls were in Arkansas.

I am attending a big protracted meeting at this place, but do not enjoy it. The Saints know about what we hear at the sectarian meetings. I am alone in this part of the country. I am attacked on every side, but, God being my helper, I hope to come out victorious. I have not heard a gospel sermon for over two years, but I am still true to the faith. I am on the move and do not intend to settle until I find a branch of our church.

My first wife is dead. My present wife is not a member of the church. I have four little ones I am trying to bring up as the Lord would have me do. Dear Saints, I ask the prayers of all that my wife may obey and come into the fold of Christ, and that I may be blessed in trying to rear my family.

Hoping to hear from some one, I still remain,

Your brother in one faith,

Care S. D. Watts, Route 2.

SILVERWATER, MANITOULIN ISLAND, ONTARIO,

August 26, 1914.

Editors Herald: Having been appointed to this field, Manitoulin Island and North Shore, as it has been called in the past, after an absence of over two years, I arrived at Manitouwaning, June 20, finding Brother Smith trying hard to keep the camp fires burning, the church being closed because of lack of interest. However, the doors swing open once more, and I preached to quite an audience Sunday evening, the 21st, leaving next morning for Little Current, where I remained one week, then back to Manitouwaning to attend the annual picnic of our people there, over Sunday.

Some of the Saints from a distance attended the sacrament meeting, Sunday, July 5. Much of the Spirit was enjoyed. The Saints were encouraged, and it was manifested that Brother Authur Gordon of Sandfield and Brother M. K. Brown of Manitouwaning should be set apart to the office of priest. We held a few meetings the following week, but the interest did not warrant a prolonged effort.

Leaving there on the twelfth in company with Elder W. R. Smith, I went to Sandfield, remaining over Sunday, then going on to The Slash. Here I found some interest, and remained one month preaching occasionally at Sandfield. Sunday, August 14, Brother and Sister Gordon came down from Sandfield, and Brethren Smith and J. Lockier and Brother and Sister M. K. Brown came over from Manitouwaning. Brother Gordon, and Brother Brown were ordained to the office of priest, W. R. Smith and the writer officiating. We trust the brethren will be true to their calling, and bring honor to the cause. Brother Gordon has held the office of trustee and councilor for years, and is a young man of a very fine family, and if humble will be heard from.

On August 17, I drove up to Mindemaga, remaining over night, then on to Campbell Township, remaining over night with a Mr. Skeppen. He drove me two miles the next morning to catch the stage for Gore Bay. He refused to take anything for his trouble. I had met him some years ago, when I opened the work at Green Bay. In driving from his place to Gore Bay we passed through a beautiful tract of country of fine farm buildings, which bespoke a thrifty, industrious people.

Our work has never been introduced in those parts. And why not? Too much following of old lines, probably. We felt much like pitching in right then and there, to introduce our work; but I had felt strongly impressed for sometime that I should visit Silverwater, so I pushed on, arriving on the 20th.

There are only two families of Saints here, Brethren Nobles and Farthings. They had not been visited by a missionary for five years. It was well that I came. Brother Noble is a priest, and Brother Farthing a teacher. Had Brother Noble the privileges some of our young men have, he would develop very rapidly in the work, and would become a power for good. Brother Farthing is very highly respected, and a man of sterling qualities, such as must succeed in the end—a man of honor, a man of God.

In looking over this field, as I see it, it should have a missionary on the ground all the time to live here with his family; one not overanxious for baptisms, but for the good of the work, to be stationed at some central place where he could keep a conveyance of his own so that he could reach any part of the field when necessary. It might be well to organize a district. This would bring the Saints more in touch with the work, bringing the workers together, which would result in development, encouragement and strength.

Sincerely yours,

G. C. TOMLINSON.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN, August 27, 1914.

Editors Herald: In closing a very interesting meeting at Saint Thomas, Ontario, we were privileged to baptize Sister Beemer, in the font of the Saints' church. The font is located in the Sunday school room, immediately back of the pulpit. With folding doors thrown open, pulpit removed, the audience remains seated, with a splendid view of the administration. A fine spirit prevailed on this occasion, as also the Sunday previous when four young men were set apart to occupy in the priesthood—two priests, one teacher and one deacon. Promises of great work, with great blessings, were given to all of them. Elders Berger Raison and Scott officiated.

This gives Saint Thomas a strong complement of officers. Brother J. L. Berger presides with dignity, grace, and precision, while his assistants support him grandly. Good Saints are they of the Saint Thomas Branch. Strong and robust in faith, willing and anxious in spirit. The organization has no taint of priestcraft. "Servant of all," is the sentiment prevailing.

I came over the line, pursuant to agreement, to deliver an address for the tri-state encampment of sailors and soldiers, at Montgomery, Michigan. When the evening approached, I was totally unable to attend because of an attack of facial neuralgia. Even now, my face is so swollen, I can with difficulty talk. For downright contemptuousness, and sneaking acute pain, I believe the attack of neuralgia eclipses the present war, on a gigantic scale, in Europe. I think so. But while General Neuralgia was mobilizing forces preparatory to a strong attack, we issued the following as a matter of announcement:

"Preaching at Saints' chapel Sunday, August 23; subject: at both 10.30 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. will be a continuation of 'European war,' from a prophetic examination, Elder Scott the speaker.

"About 603 B. C. the reigning monarch of Babylon had a dream. A great metallic image stood before him. Head was of gold; breast and arms of silver; thighs of brass; legs of iron; feet and toes part iron and part clay. Daniel, a prophet of God, and in captivity with his Jewish brethren, was interpreter by inspiration.

"The king was informed, 'Thou art this head of gold.' Following the downfall of Babylon, arose the 'breast and arms' of silver, or the Persian Empire. Then comes the 'brass' section of the image, symbolizing the Macedonian Empire under Alexander the Great. Conquering the Greeks, Rome rises as the 'legs of iron'—imperial mistress of the nations, always victorious, attained universal dominion B. C. 45, maintaining it until 385 A. D., when she was divided into eastern and western divisions, indicated by the two legs. Her majesty was one, however, until A. D. 476, where, by the incursions of the northern barbarians, she was bursted into ten comparatively petty sovereignties, symbolized by the ten toes of the image, as follows: 1, the Huns; 2, Ostrogoths; 3, Visigoths; 4, Franks; 5, Vandals; 6, Suesves; 7, Burgundians; 8, Herules; 9, Saxons; 10, Lombards.

"The more modern names on Europe's map, are: Greece, Italy, France, Portugal, Spain, Lombardy, Burgundy, Austria, Germany, and Great Britain. Some of these prophetic 'toes' of the great image are now drenching Europe—the original territory of the empire as a unit—in blood. What does prophecy say of their future? Will a universal government follow? Is this but the twentieth century struggle for republicanism?

"You are cordially invited to service August 23 at Saints' chapel."—Coldwater Daily Reporter, August 21, 1914.

This was a "hit." Fine attendance, and an effort seems under way for this to be repeated in the city park on a Sunday afternoon. We had the exquisite privilege of hearing the effort spoken of as "great." One thing is great, that is the subject, involving the most gigantic war plans in the history of nations.

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand, and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime.

Hark the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray;
Hark! what soundeth? Is creation
Groaning for its Latter Day?"

Yes, Jesus terms our period of the world "the harvest," "the end of the world," that age when the hoarded-up resentments of six thousand years center for final disposition. That age, or period when we reap manifold more than we sow—the multiplicative feature—"harvest"—even the marshaling of nations—"assembling the kingdoms"—mobilizing—and the increase of militarism, the invention of instruments of death, all vindicating the records, the revelation of God. When I read of the fleet of airships, "dirigibles," I was reminded of Tennyson's prophecy, years ago, the poet laureate of England seemed inspired to offer the following:

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new:
That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do;
For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails;
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;
Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;
Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunderstorm;
Till the war drum throbbed no longer, and the battle flags were furled
In the Parliament of man, the federation of the world.
There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapt in universal law."

Will the science of destruction arrive at such a stage of advancement that the heavens will ring with shouts of slaughter, and the ghastly dew rain down from the firmament, while the death grapple will be with the airy navies in the central blue? What, and if this fulfills the prophetic words of "holy men," who spoke of a yet future conflict when God "will rain upon Gog" and his allied forces "great hailstones, fire and brimstone, from heaven?"—Ezekiel 38: 22. This conflict is "the time of Jacob's trouble," but the Lord interposes for his deliverance, more directly than in the inferno now on between the old horns of the Roman Empire.

Well, surely the scroll is unrolling. No wonder Jesus says, Watch. He that watches will not watch in vain. We are on a towering eminence. The eye can survey the broad expanse of world's history. Age preceding age, here and there a bright spot, like an oasis in the extending desert. May we be prepared for new conditions.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

Book Reviews

REMINISCENCES OF EARLY UTAH.—By Judge R. N. Baskin, published by the Shepard Book Company, Salt Lake City, Utah, price $2.15 prepaid. Judge Baskin, the author of this work, came to Utah in 1865, and was an actor in all of the stirring events in Utah Mormon history from that day. He was one of the organizers of the Liberal party in Utah, and was its candidate for Congress in 1876. He was twice elected mayor of Salt Lake City by the American Party, and judge of the supreme court of Utah for six years. He was attorney for Doctor Robinson, who was murdered in Utah in 1867. He prosecuted John D. Lee, who figured in the Mountain Meadow Massacre. Needless to say, this book is a strong arraignment of the Mormon Church.

HEALING AS A MONEY GETTER

We submit the following extract, taken from one of the popular journals of the day, and ask a careful and thoughtful reading of the same:

New York, July 10.—Commercialized use of Christian Science teaching was held by the appellate division of the supreme court to-day to be illegal.

The conviction in a lower court of Willis Vernon Cole, for practicing medicine without a license when he accepted fees for Christian Science treatment, was sustained. The higher court in the opinion answered in the negative its premise: "Is the commercialized use of prayer for the avowed purpose of treating all persons seeking cure for all kinds of bodily ills the practice of the religious tenets of a church?"

Cole, formerly a sculptor and a poet, testified at his trial that his practice brought him an annual income of six thousand dollars; that he never had studied medicine; and that he never solicited fees, but accepted those offered him.

Clifford P. Smith of the committee on publication of the Christian Science Church issued a statement later declaring that the practice of Christian Science differs from the practice of medicine and that it could not "be made the same by law."

It was announced that in all probability the case will be appealed upon a dissenting opinion rendered by Justice Dowling.—Kansas City Journal.

Our object in giving this to HERALD readers is to call their attention to the fact that there is an eminently wise reason for the statement made by one of the apostles of old, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

From our first acquaintance with the work of the church we have understood that the administration to the sick to which the eldership has been called, the laying on of hands and anointing with oil, was a service of faith upon the part of both the administrator and of him administered unto, and was to be a service without the consideration of money or price; and it is a comforting thought after fifty odd years of companionship service with the elders of the Reorganized Church that we look back over the field and fail to discover in our memory a single instance in which a call was made upon us and our assistants to administer in this divine healing ordinance when there came into mind the corrupting thought that it was a service of faith to be paid for by him that was sick or his friends in return for the healing that might follow. Indeed, so great has been the anxiety of the greater part of the ministers that there should be a divine influence at such administration that they have scrupulously striven to think that the sacrifice possibly made by them in leaving their labor or ministerial service to attend to such ordinance would add to the efficacy of their prayers.

We look back over the period in the fall of 1864 or 1865 in which there were some twenty-two to twenty-five different persons under the care of two of the eldership who made it a daily duty to visit first one portion and then the other on successive days in order that all might have the benefit of the faith that was in them. The memory that but two of all these failed to recover and that one of these was a failure of such a character that her husband was more to blame for the exposure that brought on death and made it a moral question which we could not avoid, gives pleasant recollections. And now that the question has been raised and comes into the courts as it does, it should admonish us that the care of the past by which we have sought to keep the administration within legitimate and pure bounds of faith should be studiously continued, and that it should be, as it has been, a gift of God without repentance.

It is one of the things which we have looked forward to in which we should be brought before the great bar of public opinion, and must either stand or fall upon our expression of belief and the holding of our faith. Take heed, therefore, lest any man take thy crown.

JOSEPH SMITH.

LAWFUL MARRIAGE

We call attention to the article by Elder C. J. Hunt in this issue of the HERALD, entitled, "Utah dignitaries commit themselves," and in which it is shown that representatives of the Utah Church hold that the words none else as found in their Doctrine and Covenants 132:54, and referring to Emma Smith, mean that Emma could have only one living husband. In this article Elder Hunt consistently proceeds to urge that the same interpretation must be put upon Doctrine and Covenants 42:7, where the words none else, to be in harmony with the Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 54, can be interpreted only to mean that one man can have only one living wife.

The Utah people have shown themselves to be adepts at attempting to side-step in emergencies of this kind, and we anticipate that this instance will be no exception. About the only way out for them, however, as it seems to us, is after the order concerning which we have heard in connection with the language "they twain shall be one flesh," an explanation of which has been attempted as follows: A man marries a woman, and thus they become one; he marries another, and, he and wife number one being one, they, one flesh, and wife number two become one, etc., ad infinitum. So our Utah friends might interpret section 42: 7 like this: Number one is my wife, I must cleave unto her; number two is my wife, I must cleave unto her, etc.; and thus must I cleave unto "none else" than she who is my wife.

The language in Doctrine and Covenants 49 should have settled for all time the question of marriage. Certain of the brethren were in this revelation directed to go and preach to the Shakers. These people were at the time teaching, among other things, that man should not marry. That the elders referred to might be fully qualified to preach to them "my gospel, which ye have received, even as ye have received it (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 1)," "like unto mine apostle of old, whose name was Peter" (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 2), the Lord said:

Marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

This language clearly sets forth not only that marriage is ordained of God, but also the divine purpose and order thereof: God ordained that man should marry; by law he appointed unto each man one living wife. By this method, marriage, and under this order, monogamy, was the earth to answer the end of its creation. It was by monogamous marriage to be "filled with the measure of man, according to" or in fulfillment of the purpose of "his creation before the world was made."

It is understood that man upon this earth is in a state of probation; that the purpose of his existence here is that he may have exaltation in the world to come. For this was he created in the flesh; and his creation is continuous only by marriage, which, to be lawful, must be monogamous.

Had the Utah contingency been content with the gospel as they "received it" in the days when it was preached like "mine apostle of old," like the inspired Peter preached it, the gospel of monogamous marriage, they would never have incorporated polygamy into their institution. They would have at once branded such a suggestion as out of harmony with the principles of law as enunciated in the revelations of God to the church. Since they have received polygamy, they would fain defend the same, even though in so doing they set aside the books as being of no more worth than "the ashes of a rye straw."

With those of the Reorganization, we rejoice that we hold fast to the books and the old Jerusalem gospel, including the lawful principle of monogamy.

SPECIAL COLLEGE DAY WORK, OCTOBER 4, 1914

The annual date set apart to take contributions in the interest of Graceland College is near and it is but right that everyone should be prompt in responding to the call made by the church in General Conference for contributions in the interest of education on this date.

The help is greatly needed, the work of properly educating the young to which it is devoted is an important and necessary one, and by heartily and prayerfully responding to the call upon this annual date—the first Sabbath in October—all will be specially blessed and the church greatly benefited in its useful and essential educational work.

To avoid interfering with other church work and also the unpleasant work of weekly or monthly reminding the Saints and friends of this in connection with other essential features requiring aid, the college work was limited to one day in the year and all should be prompt to see that the day set apart for the work is not overlooked, and that no other business shall be permitted to substitute the college work upon this day or interfere with the same.

By action of the General Conference of the church, April, 1914, it will be noticed that the financial work of the college was placed under the bishopric of the church. This will require the special attention and oversight in their respective fields of every bishop and bishop's agent in the church in the interest of the college upon this day, and these officers should confer with district and branch officers prior to the date of taking the collection, so far as possible, so that the business may be promptly looked after upon the day and reported at an early time, giving name of branch and district contributing, or name of person contributing when not in branch, so that the funds may be forwarded at once to the Presiding Bishop's office, to the help of the college. Districts near the college may file with the college treasurer, S. A. Burgess, Lamoni, Iowa, and he furnish duplicate statement to the Bishop's office.

It is with confidence in the readiness of the Saints and helping friends that we send forth this hurried call, knowing the work is of the Lord, and that all of his children should be ready helpers, and we commend to each the instruction of the apostle to Titus: "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men."

With greetings to the Master's helpers we are very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY,
E. A. BLAKESLEE,
Presiding Bishopric.

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

PROHIBITION IN VIRGINIA.—On September 22 the electors of Virginia by an estimated majority of twenty-five thousand voted to make that State prohibition. This order will go into effect November 1, 1916, after which date only wines and their by-products can be manufactured in the State, such to be shipped to outside points only where their sale is legally authorized.

COLORADO LABOR TROUBLE.—The Executive Board of the United Mine Workers of America, at Indianapolis, Indiana, on September 15 accepted President Wilson's proposition for a three year truce to temporarily adjust the labor trouble in the Colorado coal fields. The Colorado miners in a convention at Trinidad on the 16th approved the action of the executive board and voted 83 to 8 to accept the proposition of the President.

COLLEGE TAXATION.—The legislature of California, with only one dissenting vote and no opposing argument, has passed an amendment to the State constitution ending the practice within the State of taxing colleges. This bill provides exemption only for institutions of collegiate grade and not conducted for or with profit, limiting land holdings in each instance to one hundred acres, all of which must be used for educational purposes. The voters of the State will pass on this amendment in November. California is the only State of the Union in which property used by colleges for these purposes has not been exempted from taxation.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION.—On September 21 the Senate by a vote of 27 to 22 recommitted the river and harbor bill with instructions for a substitute appropriating twenty million dollars to be expended on existing projects in the discretion of the Secretary of War and the Board of Army Engineers. This bill was formerly passed by the House in the amount of ninety-three million dollars. On the 25th the House by a vote of 234 to 135 passed a war tax bill calculated to raise one hundred million dollars annually from taxation on beer, wines, tobacco, gasoline, bankers, brokers, theaters in cities of over fifteen thousand population, bowling alleys, billiard halls, telephone and telegraphic messages, certain classes of bonds and certificates, insurance policies, deeds, mortgages, custom house goods, parlor car seats, sleeping car berths, and passage tickets from United States to foreign ports.

MEXICAN SITUATION.—A break has occurred between Villa and Carranza. Telegraphic communication between the United States and the interior of Mexico are reported broken, and causes leading to this rupture are not clear. General Obregon, sent to confer with Villa, is reported under arrest by the latter, who represents that said arrest was ordered after Carranza had discontinued railroad service with the north of Mexico. Carranza claims that this service was discontinued after said arrest. The state of Sonora, sustained by Villa, is in revolt against Carranza. A battle occurred on September 25 between Sonora and Carranza forces, in which the former were successful. Carranza has ordered General Hill, in command in Sonora, to mobilize for further battle. He states, however, that he will not attack the opposing forces, but will stand in defense. Villa has disavowed Carranza as first chief of the Constitutionalists, and announces that he will not participate in the convention for the selection of a provisional president, nor recognize Carranza as provisional president, president, or vice president. He is quoted as stating further that the only basis on which hostilities can be discontinued is the surrender by Carranza of the supreme command of the Constitutionalists to Fernando Iglesias Calderon. Zapata is said to have joined forces with Villa. Carranza has announced that the convention for the selection of a provisional president will be held October 1, as arranged. General Funston has received orders not to remove the troops from Vera Cruz within ten days. In explanation of this order, Secretary of War Garrison stated that it was the result of delay in the adjustment of details incident to the transfer of funds at the custom house at Vera Cruz. Additional war vessels have been ordered to Mexican waters, presumably to relieve vessels already there. In some quarters it is thought that the United States forces at Vera Cruz and the fleet will not now leave until an adjustment is reached, if reached, between Villa and Carranza.

EUROPEAN WAR.—It should be remembered that reports of movements in the European War as given in these columns are reliable only to the extent that the news to which we have access are to be depended upon. Severe censorship continues in every country engaged, and such reports as are permitted seem more or less prejudicial. In reciting developments it is the purpose of the HERALD to give that which seems reasonably accurate, without reference to who may be said to be victorious, and without bias as far as the editorial management is concerned. If misrepresentations appear, it is because the seemingly more reliable news sources have so given the news. Heavy fighting along the lines of the allies in France has continued unabated, in some localities amounting almost to a siege. The opposing lines occupy entrenchments, behind which charges and counter charges are repulsed. The German west wing has retreated a few miles to Noyon, the center of the western conflict. The allies, according to some accounts, have also gained ground on the east. At the center, in the vicinity of Reims, severe fighting has occurred. This is a strategical point, once taken by the Germans, afterwards recaptured, and now occupied by the French. Secrecy shrouds the movements of both armies, though it is understood that the intent of the allies is to outflank the west wing of the Germans. German aeroplanes have dropped bombs into Paris and Warsaw with slight damage. Thirty-two thousand Canadian soldiers are en route to France. The Russians are reported to have taken Jaroselau and other points in the vicinity of Parzemyse, Galicia, and have occupied a part of the latter city, imperiling the garrison at that place. Little change is reported in eastern Prussia and western Russia. Servian and Montenegrin forces have occupied Serajevo, capital of Bosnia. The Servians have taken Montak, controlling the only railroad in southern Herzegovina. The Servian army has made advancement toward Budapest. Cattarro, on the Adriatic, is reported blockaded by French and British vessels and hemmed in by land forces. The Japanese have defeated the Germans on the outskirts of Tsing-Tao, seat of German Government in the Kiaochau district. The British cruisers Aboukir, Hogue, and Cressy were sunk on September 22 in the North Sea by a German submarine, or submarines. The British cruiser Pegasus was on the 20th put out of commission by the German cruiser Koenigsberg. Reports from Petrograd that a Russian cruiser sunk a German cruiser and two torpedo boats in the Baltic are denied in Berlin. In answer to protests from Germany against the landing of Japanese troops on Chinese soil, China disclaims responsibility for the violation of her neutrality on the grounds that she is not able to defend the same. Germany has made in connection with these protests statements indicating the possibility of bringing the Chinese Government to answer for suffering this violation of her neutrality. Beyond formal protest China has made no effort to exclude Japan from her territory.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

THE WAR CLOUD.—Elder W. R. Armstrong, secretary of the British Isles Mission, appends a personal note to the conference minutes sent from Manchester under date of August 9, from which we extract the following:

As we journeyed up to Gloucester, events crowded rapidly, and during the time we were transacting business, the cloud, which a few days before was no bigger than a man's hand, assumed vast proportions, with the ominous appearance of a coming storm. Our country is an armed camp. The chief business is fighting just now, and troops are constantly being enlisted in thousands to fill up the depleted ranks. Up to the present our casualties number about ten thousand three hundred, and the end is not yet. Army corps are being mobilized in the colonies to an enormous extent, and they are hastily equipping to help the mother country. A number of our own lads are serving with the army and navy.

FROM HONOLULU.—Under date of August 27, Elder James W. Davis wrote from Honolulu. We take the following extract from his letter:

I have already had my first experience in preaching through an interpreter, and I find it better than I imagined. We have preaching in English on Sunday evenings, and I am doing that at present with splendid liberty, and seemingly good interest. Inez has taken up Sunday school work, being in charge of the beginner department in the school here in the church, and also teaches in a Chinese Sunday school, and will in all probability take up similar work in a Japanese Sunday school. She has plans under way for the establishment of some sort of industrial school among the Chinese, and we together may start a class in English among the Japanese, as there is a demand for it, and we believe we can get in touch with them in that way. We like Brother Waller very much, and find that Brother and Sister Jones are very fine people and agreeable to work with. We also like the native people here very much. They are intelligent, hospitable, and of a pleasant, jolly disposition. We have had our first lessons in eating poi and fish; while we are not enthusiastic over the diet, we think we may come to like it. There are some strange fruits here, too, but we will have less difficulty with them than with the raw fish.

LIKELY PLACE.—The following reference to Independence, Missouri, known to the Saints as the "central place," and the present fight for temperance there is taken from The Kansas City Times for August 29:

The natural advantages of Independence were seen by Joseph Smith when, traveling westward in search of a home for his religious followers, he stood on the highest point in Jackson County and exclaimed, "This is the spot." . . . The one social ulcer in this delightful suburb is "whisky row" on the town square. It will be removed January 4. The scar will soon heal and then Independence will come into her own as the most desirable residence suburb within easy distance of Kansas City. There the business man of Kansas City who is raising a family will find a social atmosphere not surpassed anywhere; virile churches, one having a Sunday school of three hundred members; as good schools as those of Kansas City; pure air and water; picturesque drives in every direction; and best of all, the blight of the saloon wiped out and the place where it festered washed clean.

THE PURPOSES OF GOD IN CIVILIZATION

(Sermon delivered by Elder R. S. Salyards, at Lamoni, Iowa, July 5, 1914, reported by Elizabeth France.)

Scripture reading: Deuteronomy 28; Hebrews 4.

If I shall be able to say anything of a very connected character to you this morning it will not be because I have made a special preparation, that is, at the present time. I trust however that I may be able to present some things of general character that will be of interest to you.

I was thinking in connection with the national holiday which was observed yesterday of some of the things which indicate the hand of God in the raising up and development of this Nation; and in connection with that, not of this Nation alone, but of his work in all ages when he has sought to accomplish a purpose in behalf of the race of man.

We have read this morning the declaration of a great leader raised up of God, of Moses, a man who was a nation builder in so far as human instrumentality is concerned, as we speak of Washington, as we speak of Garibaldi, as we speak of other national heroes who we believe, under God, were used in the development of his purposes.

And by the way, we should remember that while we are disposed to give a great deal of credit to these men who have stood in the forefront, who have voiced policies and manifested wisdom that have been safe for the people to follow, who have been the central figures, around whom have clustered the forces of humanity which they have rallied and led forward to deliverance—while we have been accustomed to center in these men the powers which have centralized these great movements and led them forward, and been disposed to give them credit for these movements, if we look more carefully into the conditions that prevailed we will see that they were but instruments in the hands of God, that they were instrumentalities through whom he exercised a measure of his power; that they were men upon whom he placed a measure of his divine wisdom, not to make them great alone for any exalted station that they might have among the people, but that greatness should be manifest in them in leadership that should point the people forward to better things, and that under the exercise of divine providence they should be able to lead onward, to go forward and point the way as torchbearers of liberty, because God called them to speak the sacred word in the revelation of his divine purposes in regard to the immediate upbuilding of his spiritual kingdom among men, or whether their work was promotive of the general welfare, to that end.

AN ETERNAL PURPOSE

As he is the author of the physical world as well as the spiritual, God has due regard to man's needs in all phases of life, and has been greatly interested in his social, in his political, and in his economic salvation. God has worked with tireless energy to bring the people up to that condition of development and to develop among them those conditions that would contribute to the full enjoyment of all things necessary to make them free. We are justified in this thought by the call of Abraham in the past. We find the Lord speaking to this man, as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of Genesis, and revealing himself unto him in this language:

And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly. And Abram fell on his face and God talked with him, saying, As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations.

He told him he should be blessed. We know that this man Abraham was led away from the Gentile world. His fathers had gone down, degenerated into iniquity. They had fallen into a system of iniquity which was accompanied by superstitions and immorality and dark and degrading rites. And these people had institutionized that kind of a religious system, and they were debased and degraded in the erroneous social and economic system that grew up about them—a system of absolutism in government wherein one man ruled and had the power of life and death; under rulers who surrounded themselves with a court and assemblies of people like unto the Louises of France, that were a tax upon the people and a burden to them; the people were held down under a system of government like that, from which they were unable to extricate themselves.

Had that order been permitted to continue in the world there would have been no liberty, no guiding principles for good; there would have been no power among the people to break away from these despotic conditions. But we read of God that he had an eternal purpose in view in the creation of mankind, and that he moved out for the accomplishment of that which he designed to do. And while the work to us seemingly has been slow in its development, we may discern in it that it has been just as rapid as has been the response of the people. Conditions which surrounded them and the measure of appreciation which they manifested in responding to the call of God, enabled him to exercise forces of deliverance in their behalf. And the Lord away back in those early days did not forget his purposes, because we read of one Enoch who lived before the flood, that he worked righteousness among the people to that degree that while it took three hundred and sixty-five years to bring them up to that development, they finally reached a condition of practical perfection, and were translated, for God had taken them unto himself.

So we ought not to be discouraged with the thought that there shall be failure, but should remember that God who has decreed will accomplish, and that his purposes are yea and amen; and as he declared, through his servant Paul, because he could swear by none greater; he swore by himself; and he has declared in former-day revelation and in latter-day revelation that abomination shall not reign but that his purposes shall be accomplished.

ISRAEL A PECULIAR PEOPLE

Now this man Abraham with the eye of faith left his father's country and all that was dear unto him. I do not doubt that this man had many things to attach him to his former home; he had kindred there whom he left, and he was associated with them by many ties of affection. But he moved out in obeying the call of God unto him, and he went forth, as the Apostle Paul tells us, "not knowing whither he went." He took his aged father with him and went up to the land of Canaan which God decreed should be his land; and he was told that there God would establish his seed and make them a blessing to the entire world.

In due time after his death these people by the conditions that arose in the land were led down to Egypt, that luxurious land of plenty and bounty, that land of semitropical indulgence, of luxury, and of pride, and there they were exiled for many years. But the Lord did not forget them, in their slavery and ignorance; and finally he called upon Moses the leader and led these people out by the hand of power. He led them through the wilderness and he delivered them, and their history to-day is a history of the marvelous dealings of God with the nations of man, because he established these people in that land of Palestine, gave unto them oracles, made them a peculiar people, and made promises unto them by the hand of this man Moses which were in substance to this effect: That the true development, and the only development that would come to them by which they would realize happiness and permanency and blessing and goodness in all their lives would be the result of their keeping that covenant with God that would keep them in close relationship with him.

We find that when they did this, they were prospered; they were blessed, they were delivered, they were freed from the yoke of bondage, they had a pure religion for themselves and their children. But they were strictly commanded not to closely associate, not to become mixed up in marriages with the Gentile world, with its polygamy, idolatry, immorality, heathenism and darkness. But they constantly fell away and manifested the weakness of humanity to give away to the things which surround them. And so they brought distress upon themselves, brought suffering; there was entailed upon them the yoke of heathenism.

The heathen system led them into moral and spiritual captivity and into darkness, and they mourned because of their low condition. We learn that when they turned to God they were blessed, they were exalted, they were redeemed from evil, they were led by him, they were blessed in all the high places of Israel. And as declared by the Prophet Moses, their blessings were not confined to spiritual blessings alone, but they were blessed with temporal blessings. They were blessed with a posterity upon whom the blessing of God should rest, they were blessed with the fruit of the vine and the field, they were blessed with peace and with happiness, with joy, and were told that they would be a peculiar people unto God, for all the earth was his.

But as said before, these people did not seem to rise to the occasion and were not able to appreciate all God had done unto them. They murmured as they were led through the wilderness, but in all the time they were passing through trial and privation they were supplied with the necessities of life. While they were taken away from the luxuries of Egypt, from the false life of pleasure-seeking and idolatry, and from the corrupting influences of that state (you may read of it in such works as the works of George Ebers and other Egyptologists)—because these people had developed iniquity and wealth and corruption to a condition where we might call them fine arts as such among them, and while the Lord led the people out of all that, yet they complained because they did not have that which pandered to their sense of carnality, to their fleshly nature; they desired those things and murmured because they were not administered unto them. It is manifest that they were children in ideals, in self-control; and so are men yet children to a large extent.

But from the time they left the sea level until they reached the base of the mountain, in the sojourn in the wilderness and in their travels through all that dry country where they met with trying conditions that encountered them upon every hand, they were being brought under a discipline that was necessary for them: they were being taught the lesson of self-denial; they were being taught the lesson of industriousness; they were being taught the lesson of obedience; they were being taught the necessity of obedience to God and of dependence upon him. This was made manifest upon such occasions as when they needed food and God sent them quail and manna and fed them from on high; there seemed to be on his part every effort made to attach them to him, to lead them to believe in his great fatherhood and to trust in him as one who would stand by them and minister to them in all the time of their necessity.

Yet we read of one individual in the history of Israel who stole a wedge of gold, and some Babylonish garments were also stolen, though they were told not to contaminate themselves with the things of the world. It seems that God dealing with these people as children—for they were such—sent upon them open evil and direct punishment; and it was necessary to cast lots to find who had been instrumental in doing this evil work. And finally the guilty were found and punished because of transgression.

We see in this a lesson to ancient Israel and to modern Israel, that we must not be corrupted by seeking after those things that are corruptible to our nature. We must measure up to the mission that God has set before us; we must be his peculiar people and touch not the unclean things, but limit ourselves strictly to the lines of development that God has set before us, remembering what the Apostle Paul has said, that we are "complete in him," and that we should fear lest the promise being left us of entering into his rest—any of us should seem to come short of it.

Now these people on this journey from the lowland where they started up to the mountain of Sinai, that place in the wilderness where God communed with them, were stepping upward to higher ground in all these experiences. While they were traveling around and around, visiting the various places, passing through this discipline, as they passed from the lowland—speaking of the physical contour of the land—and ascending to the mountain region, they were also passing into a higher atmosphere or development of spirituality which God had set before them, until finally they came to the sacred mount and God gave unto them the law; and we see the promise of Moses was verified to this people thus far.

While they entered into the promised land they were not as faithful as they should have been; they continued to digress and to fall backward until finally, after repeated unfaithfulness and severe castigations it took the Babylonish captivity of seventy years to cleanse them from idolatry; after they had spent seventy years in bondage and returned to their own land, there was no more worship of the gods of the heathen. And so the work of God was complete with them, that far; they had attained a definite point. In due time they brought forth the Christ. Even though they were scattered by the Romans, even though they were brought into bondage, yet God did the work he designed to do through them to the extent that they would permit him to do it, and he made them his missionary nation among the world. He set them on high, and the influence of the Jew went out unto all nations, teaching the idea of the true God, and they were a leavening force among the world.

A few years ago I was in the city of Des Moines at the State Fair, and there met a venerable ex-presiding judge of the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa, a man of over eighty years of age, who delivered an address in which he set before us very clearly and conclusively that in the civil law of the land we have the ten commandments of Moses. He demonstrated very clearly that these were the groundwork of our civic constitution to-day. So we may see how God performed his work through those Israelitish people. Their religious and moral code is the basis of the best of the present civilization.

JOSEPH'S LAND AND ITS PEOPLE

Away back in the time of the Jaredites we find the Lord leading the people away from a land of bondage to this land of America. In this land of America we learn that great civilizations have flourished. We find two civilizations here in the study of archæology, as the Book of Mormon tells us there were. We learn, as Prescott tells us in his Conquest of Mexico, and other works, that they had developed among them a social and economic system which was admirable, away beyond what we have had in this country or Europe. They had religious influences; they evidently had the knowledge of the Christ. We find Hebrew traditions, also, of a great culture here, of Jesus Christ, of the flood, of the creation of man and the fall. And we read that some of the Catholic priests when they came here from Spain found in some of the ancient writings so much that seemed to them imitations of the gospel, that some of them, not knowing the facts, caused many of these books to be destroyed as the works of Satan, as they interpreted them to be—as Satanic imitations of Christianity. But Christianity was known here, and there was a system of development that was wonderful in righteousness, as the Book of Mormon tells us, beyond any other that had been upon the Eastern Continent, if we may accept the time of Enoch.

We read way back in the early times of Moses and of Jacob of a choice land given to Joseph; that the Lord would give unto him a land which stretched out in form as the shadow of wings, away beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, and that he would bless his posterity there in that choice land. We read in the Book of Mormon that this land was hidden from other nations. This Book of Mormon tells us other marvelous things; I will read a little from the writings of Nephi:

But behold, thus saith the Lord God: When the day cometh that they shall believe in me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance. [They were to be permanent upon this land.] And it shall come to pass that they shall be gathered in from their long dispersion from the isles of the sea, and from the four parts of the earth; and the nations of the Gentiles shall be great in the eyes of me, saith God, in carrying them forth to the lands of their inheritance. Yea, the kings of the Gentiles shall be nursing fathers unto them, and their queens shall become nursing mothers [they are doing that, carrying Israel back to Jerusalem; English statesmen and other statesmen, including the Emperor of Germany, are assisting in that work]; wherefore the promises of the Lord are great unto the Gentiles, for he hath spoken it, and who can dispute? But behold, this land, saith God, shall be a land of thine inheritance; and the Gentiles shall be blessed upon the land. And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion, shall perish, saith God; for he that raiseth up a king against me shall perish. For I the Lord, the King of heaven, will be their king; and I will be a light unto them for ever, that hear my words.

DISCOVERY AND OCCUPANCY OF AMERICA

Now there are very peculiar things in connection with the history of the discovery of America which indicate to us the hand of God in it. You know the condition of the people in the Dark Ages, when science was lost, when the arts had dwindled from the knowledge of man, when political institutions had decayed, when the dominant church, we are sorry to say, and we make no personal reference here—when the church, after she had obtained control of the state, did not equal heathen Rome in the maintaining of highways and the development of commerce and in the means of keeping up intercommunication between all parts of the Roman Empire. The people were plunged into ignorance and superstition and darkness.

In the thirteenth century there appeared simultaneously among the people of England, Germany, and France a moving force, a leaven that moved upon them with mighty power, and history informs us there was a revival period,—the Renaissance, when there was a revival of learning and of art, a seeking after education, including religion, science, philosophy, etc. They began to look into the policies of government and to strike for liberty—the English people and other peoples. You know your history along these lines. But in the European world the government was bound with the church, and the people had to move in certain grooves or they could not move at all. The governments not only ruled politically, but also prescribed the social status and the religious functions of life. Man was not free, he was fettered in mind and body.

There was a peculiar man who was possessed of the feeling—after the Turks had closed the highway between India and Europe by the capture of Constantinople—that he could discover a sea route to India. That man was Columbus; and in the face of wonderful discouragements this man never gave up that idea. Washington Irving in his Life of Columbus tells us that Columbus was ministered unto by a being of another world; that he was told that his name should be great and should resound throughout the ages, that there would be given unto him the keys of the great ocean, etc.

And so he went forth under this—as we believe—divine, compelling influence, and he was the discoverer of America, or of the land adjacent to it, and there was opened up by the discovery of America an outlet for the people in bondage in Europe. Catholic Spain settled South America, but the English people finally controlled North America, the Teutonic people with their ideas of liberty, and in due time a government was established which guaranteed unto the people opportunity.

A FREE GOVERNMENT AND LIBERTY

As Rome was a free government, as the people of Rome were enabled to enjoy, as Paul claimed, the right of serving God according to the liberty which Rome gave them, so America was opened up as the land of opportunity, and the development of the people here has been marvelous. The struggle of our fathers, the leadership of America to-day, is something that we can explain only by the manifestation of divine power. Walker, in his American Law states that considering the opposition to the Colonies, their success was miraculous.

I heard something in this connection the other day. Brother Elbert A. Smith stated that he had discovered an article somewhere, I do not know where, which related that years ago the Emperor of the Japanese people issued an edict against his people going out and leaving their native land and going into other lands; and he caused them to burn their large vessels. These people could have come and evidently would have come across the Pacific to America, as they want to come now, but were hindered and prevented from coming. As the Book of Mormon says, this land was held in reserve.

We might have had a Japanese, an Asiatic civilization here. We do not want that because they do not have the standard which is the standard God set upon this land. They will make their contribution to the civilization as every other nation will, and so far as their personality is concerned, they are as good as any other people. But the Teutonic people are of Ephraim, and as they have led in spiritual things, they should lead in these last days. The English and related people are told in their patriarchal blessings that they are of Ephraim, called to be the firstborn in the great restoration of "all things"—God anointing them with power to lead in the final consummation. We have evidence of this statement that God held back other people from America. But as he led Israel into Canaan, and has led other people to this continent at various times, he led Ephraim here and placed his power upon him.

I believe that this Nation has done a great missionary work. It has delivered Japan from its old traditional system, and it is opening up to all people the science of free government and liberty. It is a part of the divine plan which God has instituted for the development of his purposes among men. Free government in America has been an inspiration of hope which has beckoned other nations to become free.

GOD'S PURPOSE IN AMERICA

So we as a people have great reason to believe in God and to believe in his purposes. We have reason to stand for our national institutions. And it is a marvelous fact that in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we read declarations that are identical almost with the Declaration of Independence, where the Lord says he raised up this Government and ordained the institutions of this land that all men might be free; and that it is not right that one man should be in bondage to another. And so we believe that as Thomas Jefferson was the political seer, God qualified these men, Washington and Madison and Adams and others to move along in lines in which he moved upon them to act; and he prepared means to give unto the people of the Eastern World also an opportunity to be free to work their salvation and to perform the work which God has given unto them to do, by giving them America, which as Emerson says, is "opportunity."

The Lord has said that upon this land he would develop his purposes. The Lord raised up this land for the purpose not only of teaching the people political and civil liberty, given them opportunity from a temporal point of view, but raised it up that his purpose concerning the race of man in a spiritual way might be revealed to the nations of the earth; he has called forth and established the kingdom of God upon this land, and organized that spiritual institution by which his purposes are to be crowned with the revelation of that power by which the people might be brought into touch with him.

Everything in our national development, everything in our social development, everything in our economic development, is pointing back to this old standard that God set up in Israel; that in the administration of their temporalities, in the living of their social life, in all phases of life they should remember God; that they should align themselves in all their energies into harmony with his eternal purposes. We are not warranted in living for ourselves alone; we are not warranted in living for our children alone; that is the selfish standard of the world.

God has given unto us a law that will bind us together and enable us, everyone of us, by complying with that law, to get in touch with him in all the relationships of life. As the Apostle Peter says, He has given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness. The organization of the kingdom of God upon the earth, and the mistakes of Israel when they wandered from God, the mistakes of modern Israel when the rebellious were sent out of the land because of their disobedience, when our fathers failed to measure up to the fullness of the opportunity that was set before them—the lesson of it all is that we should remember what is stated here: Beware lest a promise being left unto us of entering into his rest, any of us should seem to come short of it.

We can not use temporalities right unless we use them according to the law of God; we can not develop a social system that will bind men and women together into conditions of permanent happiness; we can not have a family that will be happy and be what it ought to be, unless the influences of the divine Spirit are operating in that family, operating in that community, operating in that city, operating in everything.

And so to-day in the midst of the social disorder of the world, what do we find? Away back among the Egyptian people in their struggles, and the Babylonish people and the Greek people and the Roman people, and the people of later ages—the people of England and of Germany, among the people of every land—what do we find? We find what the Apostle Paul says, The whole creation groaneth together until now, waiting for the adoption of the sons of God,—waiting for something better, seeking for deliverance, finding outlets of development, struggling, agitating, fermenting. And when we look upward from the development of the nations that have forgotten God and have gone away in corrupting and misleading systems of religion, they all teach us, in their struggles of the past and their efforts of the present, the need of righteousness, the need of a social and economic and political system in which there shall be administered the spirit of justice, of brotherhood, of godliness. And that is what this work comes to reveal to-day.

LESSONS FOR LATTER-DAY ISRAEL

I remember a few years ago when a professor from the State University came here to lecture on literature I was asked to entertain him, and in talking with him about our religion, including the development of the modern period, I asked him if he did not think that all the wonderful developments of this modern age should be crowned with revelation from God, if we did not need it in the midst of the spiritual and moral and economic and social confusion of the time. It is the most logical thing in the world.

Without this great latter-day work there is no law pointing the way to a solution of these problems.

But God has graciously given unto us a hope as a people, has given unto us the law by which we shall come to this condition under which we shall rejoice in a greater outpouring of his divine Spirit. Now do you believe in that law? Will you rebel against that law as ancient Israel did? Will you refuse to comply with that law because somebody has not done just what you think he should have done? We must subscribe to that law, we must move out in harmony with the divine appointment, and then there will come blessing to us, there will come salvation, there will come centralization of all our powers working in harmony with the purposes of God.

You can not live your life by merely seeking satisfaction in social pleasure; you can not find happiness only in pleasure; no people can do it; no group of people can do it by simply being interested in themselves. The doctrine of "every man for himself and the Devil take the hindmost" will not do this. It is unworthy of humanity, leaving God out of the question. We can not leave him out; and this great latter-day work points out this fact, that the life of man is to be lived by association with God in all things, that the purposes of God shall be the motives that shall actuate him. And that we may rise to this condition requires interest, requires development, it means consecration, it means study, it means prayer, it means purity of purpose, it means energy.

Sometimes when I think of myself in regard to this matter I think, as I have frequently told my wife, other people may be prepared for the celestial glory when they die, but I do not expect to be; I feel it will take a long time to get me ready. And I therefore see the need of our people in this day thinking more about these things, being more interested in their church services, being more diligent in the study of the word, being more determined to apply themselves according to the measure of the part they are called upon to do in the development of God's purposes among them. And in order that we may do this there have been given unto us very specific commandments. I will call your attention to one or two of them.

The Lord told the church in an early day, in the days of the Martyr, "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself." We can only build up Zion as we build by celestial principles; we can only be celestial ourselves as we welcome the unfolding of the celestial life. We can only be transformed in character by walking in harmony with those divine principles by which Jesus Christ consecrated himself as the great servant of humanity and the manifestation of God in the faith. So we can understand why the Lord said to Abraham, "Walk thou before me, and be thou perfect."

Sometimes when I see empty seats here, sometimes when I realize that many are being carried away by mere pleasure-seeking, when I see what has been done to pander to mere vanity, a mere waste of time, I wonder where we as a people will land in this respect. And when I go out into the world and see how hard it is to get people interested in these things which pertain to their present and eternal welfare, how slow they are to hearken to the voice of truth, I wonder again. But yet, in trying to do this work, I realize the blessing of God, and realize as the Lord said to the people in an early day in the church:

Be still and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy.

I am glad to say this morning that when a young boy, in the bright light of day, the Lord showed me by the manifestation of his divine power that he would bring again Zion and establish it. If I know anything this morning I know that! And I know it because God burned it into my consciousness. And I believe in it; I am consecrated in my life, I trust, to helping to work out that eternal purpose. And I realize as this work increases, as the kingdom of God unfolds, as we see men come up into prominence—and I do not speak disrespectfully of them—but the best man we have, I care not how great may be his development, you will find after while that the work goes on without him, somebody else must take his place, and the work is so big that it grows and extends. It is larger than any personality or any group of men.

The Lord admonished the people in latter days, in the early revelations to the church: "O ye that embark in the service of God, see that you serve him with all your might, mind and strength, that ye may stand blameless before him at the last day." We must serve God with undivided attention. "Ye can not serve God and mammon," is the declaration of the Master. I do not think he meant that we should not make money, should not be prosperous; but, he did mean that in our service, in the development of any qualifications that are given unto us, they should be sanctified to his eternal purpose. Men and women must not be satisfied with mere affectation and artificiality, a mere surface, social life, and reject the great call of God to the needs of suffering humanity and their deliverance from evil. If we will permit the spirit of the gospel to operate within us it will make us great, truly noble in all we do; it will burn out the dross in us and enable us so to sanctify ourselves that God shall be pleased with us. It will make us great in heart, and away from littleness and vanity.

We may not be surprised that the Lord has said:

I give unto you a commandment that you shall not live after the manner of the world, but ye shall live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God; for he will give unto the faithful line upon line and precept upon precept.

That is the course of life that God has pointed out unto us. And what is a greater experience than to be associated with God? I believe the kingdom of God can be built up only by men and women, young people, everybody, devoting themselves to a cultivation of those spiritual qualities and to the exercise of those qualities in such a way that they shall be forceful for good in the world. Nobody ever accomplished a great work for humanity without devotion, without attention, without qualification, without advancement. You and I can not measure up to the greatness of this wonderful opportunity without the conception and the constant manifestation of these qualities.

Therefore I trust we shall go onward and upward. I trust we shall remember what the Lord has said, that on this day we shall do no other work, but shall offer unto the Lord our God in righteousness a special offering upon his holy day; that we shall assemble ourselves together with thanksgiving and praise and lift our voices unto the most high God confessing our sins before our brethren and before the Lord.

The spirit we want is a spirit of intelligent, humble, and persistent devotion in the work of God. I think some of us are getting spiritually lazy. I think we are taking life too easy. Sometimes I think we take the good things of this world and lounge back and waste our time, and we do not come up to that which God has set before us. We need to cultivate the other side; we need to make effort. I find if I want to pursue any persistent course of study and development, I must manifest persistence to do it. It often takes some time to really get my mind down, and bring my brain down to that condition where it may respond to the demand, especially in some of the hard mental effort required; but when I get in rapport with my study—I can master it—but I have to make a determined effort. The angel of the Lord not going to stand by me and force me to do it and turn the pages and make it easy for me. Anything that is acquired very easily is not well retained.

I trust we are all interested in the great work God has set before us. I see Latter Day Saints today, I am sorry to say, who will not comply with the divine law. I see their children wasting in many instances what they have labored hard to accumulate. The safety of ourselves and of our children lies in compliance with the divine law by which we will be taught to do our part of the work in the world, by which we will move forward by the providence of God in the accomplishment of that which he has intrusted to all.

Let us, therefore, be encouraged and go forward and we shall rejoice in that spiritual and that moral and that economic liberty by which we shall be free indeed in Christ our Lord.

UTAH DIGNITARIES COMMIT THEMSELVES

The old proverb: "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread," may be considered a truism by the faithful of the Utah Church when members of the Reorganization question the divinity of their (the Utah) Doctrine and Covenants; but we will risk the danger of "rushing in," believing as we do that Joseph Smith, the Martyr, never wrote or even heard of that so-called celestial marriage document, but that it was the product of that sinful mind and those lustful eyes of Brigham Young, who palmed it off on his followers as a revelation years after the death of the choice Seer of Palmyra.

Now, with a desire to help those misguided people of the "salt land," who were "overcome in the dark and cloudy day," to see their mistake in believing in polygamy, the following question was sent to several prominent Utah Church workers. (The question was suggested by Elder C. A. Butterworth when he was relating some of his thrilling and successful experiences with Brighamite missionaries in Australia.) We shall prove by the written testimony of leading Utah elders that the words "none else" in section 132, paragraph 54, positively forbids polyandry. (Webster defines polyandry to be "the possession by a woman of more husbands than one at the same time; plurality of husbands.") It is by their own reasoning and the same emphatic words "none else" found in section 42 that polygamy is forbidden, so please take notice, ye Utah Church missionaries, and read carefully the following statement and question submitted to several of your elders, and their answers thereto.

The statement is as follows: In the Utah Doctrine and Covenants, 132:54, we read: "And I command mine handmaid, Emma Smith, to abide and cleave unto my servant Joseph, and to none else." Question: Does this mean that she should not marry another man while her husband, Joseph Smith, was living?

"Yes," was the prompt reply given by Presidents E. E. Brundage, Atlanta, Georgia; W. P. Whitaker, Jacksonville, Florida; Joseph F. Stevens, Chattanooga, Tennessee; Bishop Adolph Merz, Mount Pleasant, Utah. And Andrew Jenson, assistant church historian, of Salt Lake City, under date of July 28, 1914, asserted in positive terms that section 132:54 teaches that Mrs. Smith and "all other women in the church were warned against entertaining the idea that a woman could marry or have intercourse with more than one man."

Now with the perfect agreement of Elders Jenson, Merz, Stevens, Whitaker, and Brundage, all prominent men, saying that the words none else in section 132 meant that no woman in their church should have more than one husband, we will quote from section 42, a revelation given February, 1831, and addressed to "ye elders of my church," where we read this command, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else."

Dear reader, those words none else in this sentence must for ever stand against Utahism; for in the front of their Doctrine and Covenants, edition of 1876, under the "Contents of the revelations," the paragraph in section 42 containing the above instruction, 18 to 29, are referred to as "Divine law given." . . . Now the Utah people have transgressed that heavenly law by teaching and practicing polygamy.

How can Brigham's followers teach that none else in section 132 means just what it says; but that the same words in section 42 may be construed to mean five, nineteen or more? They have now subjected themselves to their own compass and square, and are found to be inconsistent and irregular in their teaching and practice, and we sincerely hope they will soon repent,—

Leaving the poor, old stranded wreck,
And pull for the shore.

We believe the time will come when a large majority of the Utah Church will be brought to a full realization of their mistakes as a people, although it may not be until the Lord sends his angel to the chosen servant of the Reorganized Church with the balance of the Book of Mormon golden plates for translation and publication, or when the "lost tribes" of Israel shall be gathered in upon their land, recognizing the Reorganization as their church people; and the Lord's temple is built at Independence, Missouri, by his command and direction, which promises will all be fulfilled by and by. Even one of the above-named promised blessings fulfilled to this church will help to start many of the Utah people towards "the promised land" and the true gospel.

It will be realized.

C. J. HUNT.

What a tribute to the character of Washington is the recent Government survey of the old Fairfax land grants! The sixteen-year-old boy worked under conditions so primitive that mistakes would have been excusable, and in a wilderness so remote that in any case they would hardly have been detected for generations; yet the recent survey of the land, made with the finest modern instruments, has failed to disclose any appreciable error in his work. They say the cherry-tree anecdote is a myth. Let it go; we do not need it. Washington's whole life shows that he ran his lines by the compass of character.—Youth's Companion.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION

A CATHOLIC VIEW

The Protestant treatment of Catholic lands as fields for missionary endeavor on the same basis as heathen countries has always roused resentment among those who look to Rome for spiritual guidance. Part of the Protestant plea for funds for Bible distribution is the claim that "Rome keeps the Bible from its people," and that if the people are only given the chance to read the Scriptures the field will be prepared for the efforts of the missionary.

Catholic feeling on this matter finds expression in America, the leading Jesuit organ in this country, in an article by Walter Dwight, S. J., who notes the boast of the British and American Bible societies that in the past year they distributed over fourteen million copies of the word. Many of these were in such Catholic countries as France, Italy, Spain, and Portugal. The huge figures chiefly impress this Catholic writer with the folly of benefactors who fail to inquire what becomes of them all. He writes:

"The Word of God is now being read in more than four hundred different languages. Think of that! Owing largely to my generosity the gospel light is breaking on the darkened minds of millions of pagans and papists who would otherwise be lost!" These are, perhaps, the reflections that have comforted the last hours of many a liberal benefactor of the Bible societies. But these pious Protestants, of course, have little evidence that anything like what they are so fond of believing has actually taken place. On the contrary, there is no reason for concluding that in the Orient conditions have much changed since 1862, when Marshall, in his "Christian Missions," exposed without mercy the base uses to which the heathen puts millions of the Bibles that are sent to him from England and America. Marshall quotes a Protestant archdeacon, for instance, who writes:

"The causes of the eagerness, which has sometimes been evinced, to obtain the sacred volume can not be traced to a thirst for the word of life, but to the secular purposes, the unhallowed uses, to which the holy Word of God, left in their hands, has been turned, and which are absolutely shocking to any Christian feeling."

Wrapping up groceries, papering walls, lining slippers, are some of the uses Orientals found for Bibles. As for the four hundred and forty thousand copies of the Scriptures distributed in France, Italy, Spain, and Portugal during one year by the British and Foreign Bible Society, this lavish diffusion of the "pure gospel" in those benighted countries does not seem to have resulted, as yet, in their conversion, for an appreciable number of the Latins in southern Europe are still clinging to the "old superstitions."

Mr. Dwight utters his belief that "the foundation on which these Bible societies rest and the impelling motive also that makes Protestants support them so generously is, of course, the old fallacy that everybody is competent to interpret for himself the hardest book to understand that was ever written, and to find therein a guide of faith and a rule of life."

How unsound this principle is has been shown, to take but one instance, by revision committees representing the best scholarship of the world, who can not at all agree about the exact English equivalent of a Greek or Hebrew word on which the meaning of an important passage altogether depends. But the principle becomes a downright absurdity when there is question of handing a crudely translated copy of the Scriptures to the heathen with an exhortation to find for himself in the book the message of salvation. If even Saint Paul's Greek-speaking contemporaries found in his letters certain things hard to be understood," what can an oriental pagan, ignorant, perhaps, of his own written language, possibly make out of a Chinese New Testament?

While these societies are distributing abroad, to the confusion of the heathen, innumerable copies of the Bible, their religious brethren at home are busy tearing the book to pieces and robbing its pages of all authority. Large portions are rejected as spurious. Inspiration is denied to what remains. Young men are ordained ministers who do not believe in the virgin birth and corporal resurrection of our divine Lord. In the chairs of Protestant universities are seated the most ruthless destroyers of the Bible's sacred character. Inconsistency, however, was never a more striking note of Protestantism than it is to-day.—The Literary Digest, July 11, 1914.

"HEDRICKITE" LAWSUIT ENDED

The two factions of the "Hedrickite" Church, who have been for several days engaged in a legal battle in Judge Stone's court, may "get together" this afternoon. Overtures were made at eleven o'clock this morning looking to a settlement of the differences; and a recess was taken till half past one to give the attorneys and the litigants a better chance to talk matters over.

A practical agreement on a general plan was reached in open court this morning, though it was feared there might be disagreement on the details. As soon as the plaintiff's side of the case had all been presented, the defense, represented by Colonel Southern, said they had no disposition to discipline or dis-fellowship James A. Hedrick or any of his associates for believing or preaching a conception of the meaning of the prophecy concerning the "One mighty and strong" who was to build the temple, because it was different from their own conception.

Hedrick on the other hand agreed to extend the same immunity to the other side. Each faction was to continue to think and talk as their consciences directed, and were to accord the same privilege to everybody else in the church.

R. B. Garnett, one of Hedrick's attorneys, however, hinted that they might insist on the court making in its decree designating the Hedrick construction of the doctrine as the true and original faith of the church, as a safeguard against any attempts that might be made in the future to get the "Temple Lot" on the ground that the custodians had forfeited their claim to it by being untrue to the faith.

Whether this feature may prevent an agreement, and make necessary for Judge Stone to hear the case to the end will not be known till the afternoon session.—Jackson County Examiner, September 18, 1914.

The doctrine of James A. Hedrick, elder of the Hedrickite Mormon Church, of Independence, that the Lord would send a man to keep his house in order, instead of sending Christ, his Son, will continue to be the doctrine preached in the humble little church on the "holy ground."

Judge Stone, who has been hearing evidence in the circuit court for the last week, yesterday gave Hedrick a restraining order to keep the church which bears his name from ousting him as a trustee and a member. The members of the church, present in the court room, expressed themselves as satisfied with the decision, and said they regretted the matter had not been settled out of court by the church.

For many years Hedrick has been preaching that the Lord would send a steward to take charge of the temple lots. Many of the other members believed Christ would make a personal visitation, and of late the disagreement has been serious. Recently a movement was begun to force out Hedrick and he sought the aid of the courts.

Judge Stone ruled that hereafter Hedrick can preach his favorite doctrine in the church without being subjected to annoyance.—Kansas City Journal, September 18, 1914.

Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN OCTOBER

Parents' Day.—Prayer for our families, for the families of each other; for all the youth of the church; for the conversion of kindred; that we may all have a greater growth in spirituality; and that parents may have a greater sense of responsibility; that the homes of Saints may be Christian homes.

Lesson, Doctrine and Covenants 63:4.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

A sister asks prayers in behalf of her parents, who are not of the church, but who are so favorably disposed as to defend it against opponents. These good people do not see the necessity of belonging to any particular church, and their daughter is solicitous in desiring that they may be brought to see the mistake they are making. She asks also that prayers may be offered for the recovery of her father from a physical affliction from which he is suffering. May the request of this devoted daughter be responded to by us.

Prayers have been asked for Elder S. M. Duijzers, of Chicago, Illinois, who is suffering from a severe nervous breakdown and is at present unable to work. He has been active in the work to establish a mission among the Dutch people of his community, and hopes to translate tracts, etc., into the Dutch language.

HOLDEN, INDIANA, August 30, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Southern Indiana District reunion was held at Derby, Indiana, August 15 to 25. Owing to the drought that has continued over this district the river was very low, and the boat being delayed we did not reach Derby until August 16. As the elders were not there, the organization was not effected until Sunday.

Those in charge were Elders J. W. Metcalf, L. C. Moore and F. A. Rowe. Elder R. C. Russell was not present as announced, on account of pressing duties at home. The order of the meetings was prayer meeting at 9 a. m.; preaching at 10.45 a. m. and 8 p. m. The afternoons were devoted to auxiliary work. These meetings were both interesting and instructive.

Because of the general drought fewer numbers were present than last year, but we trust that the reunion has been a source of help to those who attended. The spirit manifested showed that the people had a desire to do the things that are pleasing in the sight of God.

Brother Metcalf left Tuesday to proclaim the gospel to the people of Indianapolis. Brother Moore will go to Wirt and Holton, Indiana, while Brother Rowe will continue in the lower counties.

Let us be up and doing, Saints, that we might assist the missionaries all we can. We must help in this glorious work if we expect it to progress. It is by our works we are known. Faith without works availeth little. Therefore, be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.

Faithfully,
EMMA JOLLEY.

CHATHAM, ONTARIO, August 31, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Chatham District held its fourth annual reunion July 4 to 13, at Erie Beach, a beautiful resort on Lake Erie, situated twelve miles south of Chatham. The weather during the entire reunion was delightful. Large numbers were in attendance from the western part of Ontario, and many from Michigan. This was the most successful reunion yet held, all the services being very spiritual. A good spirit prevailed throughout. Twelve were baptized.

Among the missionaries present were Elders J. F. Curtis, R. D. Weaver, Alvin R. Ellis, John Shields, James Davis and Arthur Leverton.

The same committee were appointed to arrange for next year, and London District was invited to unite.

Elder Weaver held successful meetings during July and August in Tecumseh Park, Chatham. He preached to hundreds of Chatham's citizens, with good interest. Elder R. C. Russell favored Chatham with two good sermons last Sunday. The work is progressing favorably here.

District conference will be held at Glen Rae, September 26 and 27, which we hope will be well attended.

STEWART LAMONT.

BENZONIA, MICHIGAN, August 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of this church since I was a little child. There is on earth to-day no other gospel so full of truth and light as this. I have obtained the knowledge God has promised to those who trust and obey him, so I know the gospel is true. It is my earnest desire to live faithful and obey all the commandments of the Father.

There is a small branch of Saints here, and they are all struggling to reach that standard of perfection to which Christ desires us to attain. Pray for us that we may never cease trying to reach the goal of salvation. My prayers are for God's people, and the upbuilding of this grand work.

Your sister,
EUNICE SCOFIELD.

LEBANON, OREGON, August 29, 1914.

Editors Herald: In perusing the interesting pages of the HERALD, my heart is made glad to note the progress of the many dear Saints engaged in the service of the Master. When I note abler hands of others, I realize my inability to add my portion, yet I am aware that the least of us are not exempt from duty. All have a part to perform in the army of the Lord. Hence may we who feel our weakness trust and pray that we faint not, and he who has promised that we shall not be turned away empty will give us faith to overcome every obstacle.

"If we can not on the ocean sail
Among the swiftest fleet,
We can be a true disciple
Sitting at the Savior's feet."

Thus may we be an example that others by our daily walk may be constrained to glorify our Father who is in heaven.

It seems that many of our people are destined to isolation, and seldom, if ever, hear a Latter Day Saint sermon. We presume that it must all be for some wise purpose of the Lord, who works in mysterious ways his wonders to perform. We may belong to the same and one faith, we may have different places and positions to fill, yet all in connection with the one main body.

I am pleased to learn that the red man of the forest is coming to a realization of his former condition. Oh, what joy it must bring to those who comprehend and have the privilege of hearing and rejoicing again in the gentle call and the Great Spirit, inviting them home to share in the unbroken promises of God! Obedience to the sacred ordinances make God's children one in his everlasting kingdom.

If any of the elders appointed to the Oregon mission can call this way they will receive a hearty welcome from the few Saints abiding here.

May we be susceptible to the teachings of the good Master, who holds in his hands the destiny of all.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. LINA M. HALE.

MONTROSE, IOWA, September 1, 1914.

Editors Herald: August 23 marked the close of the joint reunion of the Nauvoo, Eastern Iowa and Kewanee districts. The reunion was held in the beautiful old city of Nauvoo, where many pages of history have been made. It is impossible for those who have not had the opportunity of visiting this grand old city to realize what an ideal location it has. When one allows the mind to reflect over the past, remembers what the place once was, and then meditates upon what it might have been now had the people been faithful, a feeling of sadness accompanies the havoc on every hand.

Nauvoo and Kewanee districts were quite well represented. The attendance was larger than was expected. Had it not been for the long continued drought, which caused unfavorable conditions in many parts of the country, no doubt the attendance would have been much larger. The city park in which the camp was located was very beautiful at night when illuminated by electric lights so kindly provided free of cost by the citizens of Nauvoo.

The ten days were very pleasantly spent. Four and five services were held each day. We had a splendid representation of the ministry. At one time there were present E. A.

Smith, J. F. Curtis, C. A. Butterworth, J. W. Rushton, Heman C. Smith, and F. A. Smith, and a number of local elders from the three districts. Gomer R. Wells had charge of the auxiliary work. That the services were instructive and edifying, goes without saying.

When the time for separation came farewells and glad handclasps were the order; many seemed loath to leave the place where as one family we had lived for ten days. Truly, the association of the Saints of God is pleasant, indeed. All departed feeling glad to have had the privilege of being together.

The people of Nauvoo treated us very kindly, and we feel that much prejudice was broken down. Many not of our faith attended the services and a number seemed interested. We seemed to have left a good impression on the people, which, of course, is our aim at all times. At this place the responsibility seems to come to us with double force. As was suggested at the reunion, this is a place where the world comes for information concerning the "Mormons," and we should do all in our power that when such information is sought the people of Nauvoo will have nothing but the very best to offer concerning us.

Two souls went down into the great "Father of Waters," and were born into the kingdom, a precious young man and a noble woman. One afternoon Brother Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, piloted a crowd to the various points of interest and gave interesting lectures, which were very much appreciated.

Peace and happiness prevailed throughout the reunion, and an order was in evidence.

JOSEPH H. REED.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, September 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Northern California reunion met at Irvington, August 21, and effected organization by choosing F. M. Sheehy, C. A. Parkin and C. W. Hawkins to preside.

While there were not so many in attendance as on some previous occasions, there were enough camped on the grounds to make it interesting, and all parts of the district were represented. The spirit of brotherly love was manifest, and those present enjoyed each other's company, while all were spiritually refreshed by the various meetings.

The regular program was as follows: 6.15 a. m., young peoples' prayer meeting; 9 a. m., prayer meeting; preaching, 10.45 a. m., and 7.45 p. m. One afternoon was used with profit by the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service. The district Sunday school association held two profitable afternoon sessions. The district Religio occupied one forenoon to advantage. And on Friday evening, August 28, the Religio and Sunday school gave a joint musical and literary program, which was well attended.

More outsiders attended all meetings than they have on previous years, and two very fine ladies were baptized. Brother McDowell gave a number of patriarchal blessings, which were reported by Sister Nellie de Sallier and some others of our young people.

Saturday, August 29, the district conference held a morning and afternoon session. All business was transacted harmoniously. It was decided to hold a reunion next year, place to be determined by the reunion committee.

When the time came to separate, it was with a feeling of sadness that the Saints gave the parting handshakes and said good-bye.

Brother C. W. Deuel went to Tulare, where he will engage in tent work in that vicinity. Elders M. A. McConley and C. J. Cady have Chico for their objective point, and will try operating the tent in that section, while S. M. Reiste starts in again in the neighborhood of Eukiah.

We are living in hopes that throughout the world this may be a prosperous year for the church, and hope northern California, will do her part toward making it so.

In gospel bonds,

M. A. McCONLEY.

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

Editors Herald: The Pittsburg, Virginia, Ohio and Kirtland reunion was held in New Philadelphia, Ohio, July 20 to August 9, presided over by R. C. Russell, F. G. Pitt, J. A. Becker, and the assistant ministers in charge of the districts represented.

There were about two hundred camping in the park, representing Saints from eight states and Canada. The mayor of New Philadelphia gave the campers an address of welcome, which was replied to by Bishop Kelley.

The preaching was done by Brethren E. L. Kelley, R. C. Russell, F. G. Pitt, R. Baldwin, James Pycock, N. L. Booker, J. C. McConaughy, J. Hardin, J. E. Winegar, L. Burdick, Moser and some others whom we have forgotten.

A sermon was preached from the courthouse every evening, where several of the brethren and sisters assisted, with singing in charge of Brethren Becker and Martin.

Sister G. T. Griffiths ably conducted the summer school. As a result some took the first examinations in Religio normal work. There were also several papers and addresses.

Dining room in charge of Brother Becker gave satisfaction to all, and the spirit of love and equality was very apparent.

Seventeen of the general ministry and several of the local ministry contributed to make the reunion what it proved to be, a real success, all doing the work, and all sharing in the benefits.

The auxiliaries were represented by Sister Griffiths, Sister George, Brethren Topping, Jacques, and others.

We never saw the work distributed among so many who responded so well. Everyone present voted to hold a reunion next year, Brethren Becker and the minister in charge to arrange time and place.

JAMES PYCOCK.

NETAWAKA, KANSAS.

Editors Herald: I am here at the Netawaka Branch preaching every night. We have the church all fixed up again. It has been about three years since they have had any meetings in the church. Last Sunday I baptized three adults, and expect to baptize more next Sunday.

If some wideawake priest or elder would move here, I think the work would move on at this place. There is no one here to lead the Saints. When the missionary is gone they are left without help, Brother William Hopkins being too old to do any more work; he is eighty-four years of age.

We started the Sunday school here last Sunday. May the Lord bless his work everywhere.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. W. A. BAILEY.

PAMONA, CALIFORNIA, September 5, 1914.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the letters of the Saints in the HERALD. They help and strengthen me very much. It helps us to keep track of where our friends are located. I call the Saints my friends, and indeed I feel they are and should be friends.

Since coming to California to live, I can realize as I never did before the great value and worth of the companionship, or, at least, fellowship of the Saints. I have always loved and cherished the sweet, commingling fellowship of my dear brothers and sisters in the restored gospel. They all seem near and dear to me.

It was indeed a task and also a sacrifice for me to leave behind in the East so many who were dear to me and come out here where the Saints are few, comparatively. But there seemed to be some higher power than man in our moving. I could feel it strongly. I had prayed often over the matter before making the final decision, seeking what was best to do. I wanted to go where the Lord wanted me to go, and do what he wanted me to do. Since coming here I can see the great need at this place for good, faithful, earnest workers for the Master—those who are willing to conform their teachings to the teachings and life of our Lord and Master. He was given for our example in all things, and we who have put on Christ should be exemplifying his life in ours at all times and in all places.

The signs of the times indicate that our time in which to work is short. Oh, the awful condition of the wicked! It makes me shudder as I think of the condition the world is in at the present time. What if Christ should suddenly make his appearance! Think of the souls that would be unsaved! We as Saints should be up and doing—doing our best to work while it is day, making an extra hard fight for truth and righteousness, for the salvation of souls. If I could be the means of turning one sinner from his evil ways and help him to see the need of accepting the gospel and being saved in God's kingdom, I would be glad and rejoice with the angels in heaven. I am trying in every way I can to be of some help to those around me.

The Saints have much to contend against here. Prejudice is strong against us. If you say Latter Day Saints, you hear "Mormons." You have to explain and explain to show the difference, usually. Occasionally one meets those who are charitable. But the eyes of the world are upon us, and they watch our lives to see if they can find anything wrong with us. So it stands the Saints in hand to be careful how they conduct their lives at all times, that the world may have no occasion to accuse them of leading wrong lives, so that when the elders move about in their work they will have no reason to be ashamed of the Saints, and will not find them a hindrance to the work.

On the other hand, I think the elders should conduct themselves at all times so that their lives are not a hindrance to the work—as Paul says, Preach by example as well as by precept, that they may be more able to win souls to Christ. Are we not told to shun even the very appearance of evil? All Saints should be careful of their conduct, so as not to be classed with the people of Salt Lake. Some believe we are all the same, and are not willing to see any difference.

There are only a few Saints left in Pomona. Brother Lacey and family have moved away. We miss them greatly. The few who remain are trying hard to still hold the fort and keep the work going, hoping that in the near future others will move in. We trust that our Brother Lacey and family will soon be back with us, and that we may be able to do some good in this place. I think there are a few outsiders here who are interested. Should any traveling ministers or Saints be coming through Pomona, we would be pleased if they would call. We would do our best to care for them while here.

Brother W. A. Brooner was here the last August and preached for us twice, which was much appreciated by Saints and a number of outsiders. His sermons were good. Brother Brooner is a good, humble, and faithful servant, and is trying hard to exemplify the life of the Master in his every day walk. He makes many friends wherever he goes, not only among Saints but among outsiders as well. Brother W. A. McDowell was here before the reunion and preached one grand sermon, for which we were very thankful. We trust that some good may result from the efforts put forth here in this place for the spread of the work, and that the good seed that has been sown may take root and eventually bring forth fruits for the Master.

It seems that it is harder to keep in touch with the work when one is isolated from a branch, but I realize that God is just as near us at all times in California as in any other place, and will help us to live right if we trust and obey him as we should. We beg an interest in the prayers of all Saints in our behalf and for the work here in this place.

I feel that there are surely some here who will in time obey the gospel if we can but be patient, prayerful, humble and careful. My most sincere desire is to live as a Saint of God should, that I may be worthy some day to live in Zion with God's people.

May God's people see the great need of preparing themselves so as to be worthy to dwell in Zion is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. MAY BENC.

1096 West Second Street.

PORT HURON, MICHIGAN, September 8, 1914.

Editors Herald: With the closing of our fifth annual reunion in the city of Port Huron, there comes to mind the happy days of spiritual enjoyment spent in the service of our God and his Christ.

With the Saints of the Eastern Michigan District, reunions have been an annual feature for the past five years, with another one scheduled for next year. Those who have participated in them thus far have had a small foretaste of the "great reunion" that shall take place in the near future. But since that great reunion has not as yet materialized, we are content for the present with the annual ones. The very fact of this continuation from year to year ought to be evidence to even the casual observer of their benefit to the uplift of God's people, and the spreading of the glorious gospel to others.

The meeting of old acquaintances and the making of new ones, with that comfort and consolation of mind that we are all one great family of Israel's God, brings to us a slight feeling of the glorious time when we shall be permitted to behold and grasp the hand of those former and latter-day worthies and martyrs of the church of God. I think it is near time we all were getting more interested in reunion work. The singing of praises and the bearing of testimonies from day to day creates in the hearts and souls of those who attend a feeling of devotion and service that can not easily be quenched. These things can not help but draw and focus the mind of a Latter Day Saint on the things of God, and thus draw all closer to him.

On the evening of June 19, at eight o'clock, the bell on the tree announced the service hour. Organization was effected, after which brief talks were given by Brethren Allen, F. A. Smith, Curtis and Fetting. The next morning saw things in full swing, and they continued to swing all week.

Institute work every morning at 7.30; regular prayer meetings at 9 a. m.; preaching at 10.45 a. m. and at 2.30 p. m., generally followed with social purity meetings for young women and young men, married women and married men; preaching every evening at 8. These services in their respective order followed daily throughout the week.

In connection herewith Elder Curtis got busy down town on the street corner every evening, with the able assistance of the Flint orchestra, and singers from the camp, and did some singing in the preaching of the gospel, assisted by Elders F. A. Smith and Elvin Ellis. This kind of program helps to move things in reunion circles. We let the people of the city know who we were, where we came from, (and, by the way, Elder Curtis told them he was from Missouri, and they had to show him, which seemed to add a few smiles of the good-natured audience before him; and that we were there for the express purpose of doing them good).

Did the crowds gather? Had you seen them, you would have thought so. Did they stop and listen? They did. Did we invite them to the camp grounds? We did. They not only came the first night, but continued to come, some of them all week. We expect they will be waiting for the same opportunity next year, and we hope they will not be disappointed.

A social purity board for the district was organized, with Elder Arthur Allen, of Detroit, as president and Elder William Grice, of Crosswell, as vice president. We hope much good will be derived from this effort. Other features characterized our program, worthy of note, but too numerous to mention.

Our meetings were well attended, spiritual and uplifting in every sense of the term. We all went home well repaid.

If you are not having reunions in your district, just try one. Go at it as though you meant business, everybody work, then watch results. If you are not satisfied all the way round, don't blame Eastern Michigan, for we have proved them a success time and time again. Once you are enthused with this reunion work you will want them twice a year. "Come, let us reason together," get busy, advance God's work, and thereby advance yourself, and if you don't succeed the first time, try again, and keep on trying until you do—do not give up until you have won.

A good way to get in touch with reunion work is to visit an up-to-date reunion. If you do not get a chance this year, keep your eye on Eastern Michigan for our next reunion and pay us a visit. We'll use you like a brother. We are sure you will go away happier, stronger, and a booster for reunions.

Let us, then, labor on cheerfully in the Master's cause until the trump shall sound for that great reunion when Christ shall preside, and when the present shall terminate into the long-looked-to future, where we'll know as we are known and enjoy what we are laboring for now. May our efforts in this direction yield to the Lord's vineyard an hundred fold is my prayer.

PUBLICITY BOARD FOR EASTERN MICHIGAN DISTRICT.
H. L. MACPHERSON, President.

S. S. New Amsterdam, September 19, 1914.

Editors Herald: We write that our friends may know that we are safe and sound. As soon as we recuperate and have a visit with loved ones in New York City, we expect to return to Zion, our favorite spot.

That it has been a special privilege to be in Germany at such a time can be appreciated only by those who were on the ground. Since July 25 I have been following the situation in Europe very carefully and with great interest. We find that actual conditions in Germany have been misrepresented. I am not an enthusiast for the whole of Europe, because the gospel is absent largely from that country. But for Germany, I can say that everything was done for the welfare and comfort of Americans, who suffered no more inconveniences than did the Germans themselves. It has ever been my policy to concede right and justice where it is due.

We have placed ourselves in the hands of the Lord, and have felt the influences of the many prayers which we are sure have gone out for us and all others who are in the scenes of conflict.

We have had a very rough trip, but were able to answer to every call of the dinner bell. We had quite a scare, as we were within range of an iceberg, with the temperature changing rapidly.

Asking an interest in the prayers of the faithful, I am,
Fraternally,
HATTIE RIGGS.

SYKESTON, NORTH DAKOTA, September 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor each week, filled with food for the hungry soul.

We had the pleasure of attending the reunion at Logan last June, the best reunion I ever attended. The Saints in Dakota are mostly isolated from church privileges, but the majority of them are trying to live their religion. We have four noble missionaries, who are trying to do their duty—Sparling, Page, Wildermuth and Leitch, with J. E. Wagener giving much of his time to the work.

I have met some opposition in trying to tell the gospel story after making a new opening. Satan sent his agents along to tell the people we were "Mormons," of the lowest kind, and warning them not to listen to us. I advertised in the paper that I would tell why we were not "Mormons," and asked our opposers to be there and prove their contentions. They preferred to stay away. We had about forty-five out, and think some prejudice was removed. We have since loaned two Books of Mormon, and explained our faith to some who never heard before.

In gospel bonds,
M. RASMUSSEN.

Extracts from Letters

A brother laboring in Utah writes as follows with reference to conditions in that mission: "The dominant church here certainly is approaching a crisis, perhaps slowly, yet it is coming from different directions. For instance, the Progressive party has joined forces with the Democratic party and both are making some fight against Senator Reed Smoot, and also all down through the ticket. Their fight is against corruption, misuse of power, etc. The great difficulty seems to be just how to fight those conditions without making an open attack against the church and priesthood. This confessedly admits both to be guilty of the existing conditions. Now, they do not wish any outside party to take any liberties in this matter. What is done they want to do themselves. Then again, there are at work those silent forces of modern civilization slowly eating into the institution and obliterating or destroying every feature of Brighamism, as it was, and a new ideal is slowly arising among the Mormons. Many of the features of Brighamism as it was have disappeared gradually. They say to me, "Talk to us as you now find us. We do not care anything for the past record of this people." I have been directing my efforts accordingly. They are so thin-skinned and tender in their feelings one can not even refer to their leaders without offending them. I hope to succeed in my work. I visit the homes of the people and have some pleasant experiences."

Mrs. J. Darby, Los Angeles, California, writes: "I wish to voice my appreciation of the good articles we receive every week through the columns of all the church publications. We are grateful for the rays of light which we receive from time to time, and that our heavenly Father hath appointed every man to his place to carry on his work. May it still continue."

Marie J. T. Adamson, Lower Lake, California, "Our reunion held at Irvington, California, though passed into history, will not soon be forgotten by those fortunate enough to be able to attend. The consensus of opinion is that it was one of the most spiritual ever held on that consecrated ground. We regretted to find so many dear and familiar faces absent—some on account of illness—others had been called to “their reward.”

Palentine

The work in Jerusalem is moving at a very slow pace, but we are still working on, trusting that in the near future a move will be made in the progress of the work that will bring some consolation to the weary laborer. We are still hopeful of good results if the conditions here are properly met. The brethren in America can not judge conditions here from conditions prevailing in other fields. The conditions here are peculiar to this mission. We are, therefore, laboring under peculiar disadvantages which might be turned in our favor if we were in a condition to meet them. Our school is progressing very nicely so far. Our room is limited; still, we are doing fairly well.

Brother U. W. Greene is in the Lebanons. His reports from there seem at present to be more hopeful, several having requested baptism. Brother Koehler expected to go there, but we regret to say that since the war has begun his visit to the Lebanons will most likely be postponed. We hope, however, that matters will adjust themselves so the trip will be made later on.

There is a man here that believes he is one of the witnesses who is to prophesy here in Jerusalem. He believes that he is so anointed; and, of course, not knowing who the witnesses may be, we can not say anything one way or the other. God knows whom he has chosen, and he will reveal it in due time. It would be folly on our part to try to speculate as to who shall occupy in this or that position.

When certain individuals desired to occupy certain places of honor, and application was made to the Christ, they were told that the Father had reserved that right to himself. So, as far as we are concerned (and I include under the pronoun we all members of the church), it matters not to us whom God has chosen to do certain work. Those so chosen will be called to do it, whatever the result of that call may be.

However, as I said before, I do not speak disparagingly of the claims of our Hebrew friend, for it matters not to us if he is so chosen. May God help him to accomplish the arduous task assigned him. We are meeting quite regularly to discuss these*and other questions pertaining to the restoration of Israel and of the latter-day gospel.

The question of the divinity of Christ and the atonement have been canvassed. This proved a very interesting subject, as the Hebrews believe in Christ as the prophet (I mean those who accept him as God's messenger) that Moses said the Lord would raise up from among their brethren; yet, to them, he was simply Joseph's son. Space will not allow us to go into details; suffice it to say for the present that our friend accepts the divinity of the Christ as well as the necessity for the statement, as foreshadowed both in nature and in the law.

Prejudice against our work runs high. Brother Greene had some literature sent out sometime ago, presenting our faith and doctrines, and announcing our services. The effort aroused the antagonism of the different ministers and the people were especially warned against attending our services. Religion is carried on here on the “baksheesh” plan. If people attend the services, they are questioned by their friends as to how much they are making for attending such and such services. The highest bidder gets the audience. And since we are not placing our religion under the auctioneer's hammer it only serves just now to send fear like a needle point, into the hearts of the traffickers. But we hope to be able to do a little more than that soon.

We have heard that there is war in Europe. We believe it must be so, but we can get no news except what Constantinople sees fit to send us; and that is often news made up in Constantinople. During the Turko-Balkan War we could get no news excepting the “news” of how Turkey was putting the enemy to flight (?) and the thousands she was killing every day. We did not believe it. Finally the wires broke down, and we were without “news” for days. That silence was real news, for we knew Turkey was losing. The wires broke down in the “nick of time.”

At present we have not only heard of the war, but we have felt some of its terrible effects. Provisions of all kinds are gone up, and the prospects are that they will still go up. Then again, the banks are closed, and even last week they would only pay out ten per cent of the amount deposited. The post offices have rejected money orders sent from America to people here. “We will cash them when the banks will give us the money,” was the only consolation they could give.

Unless some arrangements are made by which money may be sent through the banks or post offices, I would advise that if any should feel like sending us relief under the present pressure it should be sent in the form of “greenbacks.”

Jerusalem at present is in great commotion. Conflicting orders are coming from Constantinople. The Government has seized on almost all the horses in the city and throughout the country, paying so much per head to their respective owners. Last week she called upon every man from twenty to forty-five years of age to be ready to march to Asia Minor. Moslem, Jew and Christian were called. There was great heaviness and sorrow. Hundreds of horses were brought by the “Fellaheen” from the country into the city, and thousands of the “Fellaheen” came in from all parts shouting and clapping, as only orientals can. The scene was a wierd one. Then came the order that they were not wanted. Then that all Moslems must go. Then that Jew and Christian could buy their liberty. And so the excitement and agitation goes on. And the poor people—both Arab and Turk—throw up their hands one day in sorrow and despair, and another day in thanksgiving to God for deliverance, exclaiming, Hamdillah (thank God). Many have escaped to Egypt on camels, so we are informed.

Last week when these conflicting telegrams were coming in, each succeeding telegram canceling the preceding one, quite a demonstration broke out against the Jews opposite the “Tower of David,” so called, and on the inside of the Jaffa Gate. There is quite a feeling against them at present. The Moslem sees himself carried away to war, and the country left open to the Jew to occupy. On Friday quite a number gave vent to their feelings. Many, if not most of the Jews in Jerusalem are Jews who have passed through scenes of oppression and tyranny as well as bloodshed in some cases. Naturally such demonstrations send terror into the heart of the Jew who has only just escaped such hostile scenes, a few days, or a few weeks or months previously.

As for ourselves, we are still strong in the faith that God will provide, though we may be called upon to pass through scenes dark and drear. A year ago when the threatening hands of assassins were hanging over us, Great Britain stepped in, and though only one man came to Jerusalem, it was enough. This time, however, it seems that Great Britain is involved in the war.

We sometimes wonder whether or not we are now in the time of the loosening of the four angels bound in the River Euphrates, which, according to some commentators, is Turkey. If this is so, the four angels may be those representing the Balkan States, as the angel that withstood the heavenly messenger sent to Daniel, and that for twenty-one days, represented Persia. If this is so, we may expect a terrible European war. But the end is not yet, though there are many that believe this to be the war of the end. It seems, however, that it does mark an epoch in the time of the fullness of the Gentile period; and we may expect some mighty changes during the next sixteen years.

Jerusalem has seen many, many vicissitudes. From the time we first meet with her in history, the scenes are checked ones. It seems that she is threatened with another change. Who'll say that Jerusalem has not been trodden down of the Gentiles?

Prophecies are beginning to have their fulfillment. The former rains returned in the fall of 1852 and the latter rains in the spring of 1853. This, however, does not mean that it did not rain in Jerusalem up till that time, for it did; but it came in winter—too late to be of much benefit except in filling cisterns. Moreover, the rains have been steadily increasing, and the early rains have been coming earlier and the latter rains later. This year has been quite a new thing in the later history of the country. The rains were very late, and the sky has been quite cloudy all summer. The summer has not been so scorchingly hot.

A beautiful lot on the Mount of Olives has been kindly given (or sold) by Sir E. Grayhill, of England, for the purpose of erecting the Jewish International University. The Sanhedrin is also to be established here. The Arabs are becoming furious on account of the Zionism movement. The city without the walls is now being rapidly built up by colonies of Jews so that the city outside the walls is already inhabited as towns without walls, as foreseen by Zechariah, or rather spoken by the angel.

This year promises the beginning of a new era in the history of the world and of Israel. From the time that Nebuchadnezzar became sole ruler of Babylon, this year marks two thousand, five hundred and twenty years. It may mark the beginning of the downfall of the Gentile power. It is also noteworthy that there is a great tendency among the Jews toward accepting the Christ as a prophet and teacher.

The signs of the times are rapidly developing. "Now, learn a parable of the fig tree; when her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh. So ye, in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors." (Mark 13: 28, 29.)

When he comes may we be found with the wedding garment on, which is the righteousness of the Saints. Let us remember that this garment will be of our own weave and make. If we fail to weave it, we can not wear it; and those found without it will be bound and cast into outer darkness. Let us also remember that this is spoken not of those outside the pales of the church, but of those within. It matters not what office we may hold, our position in that regard will only prove to our greater condemnation, if we should fail to use that office correctly and use it to good advantage in the weaving of our wedding garment. This is a serious question, and well might the Lord have warned us to let the solemnities of eternity rest upon our minds. Those to whom much has been given, from them also much is required. If we fail to bring the required amount, our loss will be irreparable.

To suffer injustice at the hands of those from whom we expect better things is bitter. But it is by tasting the bitter that we learn to appreciate the sweet—the sweet then becomes so much sweeter. Then, again, we know that our salvation is an individual work, and since that work must be the work of righteousness, we know that those who work injustice in the least degree are militating more against their own interests and the salvation of their souls than against those on whom the injustice is inflicted. It should be our individual business, therefore, to see to it that, whatever others may do, we shall do that which is right. It will not do to, Adam-like, shift the blame elsewhere. It will not help us any to say, "So and so sinned, and because he sinned I sinned also." Perhaps it may serve as an excuse, but it will not save us from being driven from the garden, so we can not partake of the fruit of the tree of life.

In conclusion let me say, We can not do good to another without sharing in the blessing; neither can we injure another without sharing in the curse which must ensue. We make laws subservient to us by obeying them. To conquer is to obey. To be conquered is to disobey, or to reverse the order of the statement, to disobey is to suffer defeat. This thought is very beautifully set forth in the work of Christ; he conquered death by becoming obedient to its demand. Man's obedience to the laws of nature makes those laws his servants. But let him break them and they hurt him to gehenna. What a blessing electricity is, when we obey its laws and thereby control it. But, alas! if one of those laws are broken, we may find ourselves exchanging worlds in a few seconds!

Everything teaches obedience, and yet man will not learn. Are we learning? If we are, we shall soon be in a position to demonstrate that the gospel we have received is indeed the power of God unto salvation. And in order to do that, our standard must of necessity be far above the standards raised by the religions that are in the world. If our standard of righteousness is higher, we must also live on a higher plane; and whatever advances certain societies may make, we will always be found in the lead: our light shining unto a benighted world and leading those who love light into that pure light revealed in the gospel of latter days. But if our life does not correspond with the righteousness revealed in the gospel, then we are found hypocrites, walking in darkness at midday. Let us continue to walk in the light, and be ready when the bridegroom comes.

Since writing the above some changes have taken place. Brother U. W. Greene reached here from the Lebanon on Tuesday evening, having learned of the war the previous Wednesday. He brought the news that it is possible we shall be asked by the Washington Government to get out of this country. The city is under martial law since Monday the 3d inst. Great commotion prevails. A Mohammedan uprising is feared, not in the city, but in the surrounding country and throughout Turkey.

Turkey is pressing more and more for soldiers and for money. She is crippling everything by reducing to penury those who have a little money. In fact, she is draining the country of all money, leaving it helpless. She is taking heads of families away, leaving the poor to the charity of the wind, for here it can hardly be said that there is a world—neither hard nor cold—to which one may turn.

We have heard that six United States battleships are on their way to the Mediterranean, to take all Americans out of Turkey. We hope, however, that things will not get so bad we shall be forced to leave.

Things look black. Mohammedans seem to think now to be an opportune time to get the Christians out of the country, that is, while Europe is otherwise engaged. How true this report is we know not. However, we have no fear for our ultimate safety.

With prayers and supplications for Zion's weal,

REES JENKINS.

Scandinavian Mission

Since writing you about three weeks ago, the situation here has changed to some extent, in that the panic-like feeling caused by the sudden outbreak of the war has abated, and the people, though amazed over the terrible calamity that has come upon the nations, take it with a degree of calmness and with the hope that the Scandinavian countries may not become directly involved.

It sometimes appears as if it would be wisdom to return home until operations cease and we shall find better opportunities than now. Yet we have no desire to desert our post or shrink from duty. The papers contain information to the effect that the United States is sending several vessels to bring Americans home, but whether the elders in this mission should avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded, and would be justified in so doing, is a question not as yet decided, but we trust to be directed for the right.

Some fear is entertained that Denmark may yet become involved in the war, but we hope not, as it is bad enough as it is. Nearly all kinds of business is affected and men and women are thrown out of employment, while prices on necessities are very high, though the fabulous prices that were reached on some things immediately on the outbreak of the war could not be maintained. These prices were an evidence of a desire for greed upon the part of some, regardless as to how it would affect their fellow men.

I found it impracticable to communicate with Brother Kippe in Germany through correspondence in the English language, as all mail is inspected by government officials, and anything not written in German stands no chance of being forwarded. So I sent him a few lines written in German, and instructed him likewise to write me in that language, with the result that I received a card from him a few days ago, from which I learn that he and family were finding conditions very trying. He had for some time received no mail from America, and his family allowance sent by Bishop Kelley had not reached them, hence they found themselves on the verge of starvation.

I also learn from his writing that quite a number of our membership in that country are in the war. At Mangschutz, Schlesien, all of the grown male members are in the war and only the sisters and children are at home; this place is not far from the borders where hostilities are going on. At Hausver three of the brethren were in the war, and at Brunswick two had gone and others were expected to follow. At this place the Saints had been compelled to give up the hall where they were holding their regular meetings, not being able to pay the rent because of the hard times. Brother Kippe was to be in Klein Rashen, Caulan, the Sunday following the date of writing, where he was to confirm two young men baptized sometime ago by Robert Smolny. As I understand Brother Kippe's writing, Brother Smolny and one of the young men were to leave the following Tuesday, also to enter the military service.

We hope the Saints will continue to remember both the ministry and the Saints in this mission during these trying times.

Lamoni Stake

The church work in Lamoni Stake is onward this conference year. Various activities indicate the faithfulness of the ministry and the devotion of the Saints. The Lord is blessing the missionaries, and is putting upon the people his Spirit to confirm the membership and lead investigators to accept the truth.

At Chariton, Iowa, during the past year, a number of Saints have gathered, the most of whom have been brought there by the opening of coal mines. In Lamoni Stake are found some of the best mines in Iowa, and among the best Saints of the stake are found many miners. Brethren who find it to their advantage have with their families moved to Chariton, so that we have now sixty or seventy members at this place. They are meeting in one of the rooms of the court house, and are being kindly treated by the people of the city. They hope to provide better quarters, and expect soon to have a branch.

The Bloomington Church, five miles northwest of Lamoni, and built last year, was on Sunday the 20th dedicated. The dedicatory prayer was by Elder John Smith, president of the stake. The sermon was by President Elbert A. Smith. The Lamoni Choir furnished the music for the occasion. An excellent spirit attended the services, and altogether a profitable and pleasant day was passed. Here we find a branch of energetic and enthusiastic Saints, organized about one year ago. They are aided by elders from Lamoni.

At Centerville, Iowa, Elder M. M. Turpen, appointed by the conference, was, under the direction of the minister in charge, asked to labor in the eastern part of the stake, with Centerville as objective. Elder Turpen, as is well known to the ministry of the church, is a good, conscientious, God-fearing man. It has been hoped that the presence of such a man at this point would unify the efforts of the Saints and help to more permanently establish our work in this prosperous city.

During the season the stake tent has been used to advantage at different points. At Tingley, Iowa, Brother Mintun conducted a meeting in June. He reported a fair attendance with interest. We have a few Saints here who are anxious for their neighbors to hear the truth. Brethren Mintun and R. S. Salyards followed this meeting with one in July, at Chariton, where they were very kindly received by many of the leading people of the city and were given valuable space in the papers. The attendance was encouraging, as was the interest. A few were baptized. These same brethren conducted a tent meeting at Lucas, Iowa, where they had a large attendance until continued rain interfered. As the weather cleared, however, the attendance improved and the meetings continue with excellent interest.

Two-day meetings under the auspices of the stake officials, including the Sunday school and Religio officers, have been held at various points during the summer, with considerable success. The services consist of preaching, institute work, and such other meetings as are appropriate for the upbuilding of the work within the stake. It is the intention to continue these meetings during the autumn.

At Worth, Missouri, recently, Elder L. G. Holloway met in public discussion Elder W. G. Roberts of the Church of Christ. We have only a few members here. During a revival meeting in the early spring, the Church of Christ people challenged our Brother Hawley for discussion, and a situation was created which required that we meet the issue. Elder E. E. Long moderated for Brother Holloway. The event resulted in victory for the truth. Our brethren were very much encouraged by the cordiality and cooperation of the leading people of the community. Public sentiment turned to them, and the debate closed with many friends made to the cause. Brother Columbus Scott undertook to conduct tent meetings following the debate. Continued rain interfered, as did a meeting started by the Methodist people.

The Lamoni stake reunion this year was a grand success, and by many was pronounced the best ever held within the stake. The attendance was large, the preaching excellent, and the spirit attending the services was of an intelligent and uplifting order. The prayer meetings were unusually edifying, and were accompanied by the gifts of the gospel in admonition, instruction, and encouragement. This reunion is a source of great strength to the Saints of the stake. A goodly number from a distance and some from outside districts have come to attend, and find the reunion profitable and to their upbuilding in spiritual things.

Any improvements in Lamoni are of interest not only to the Saints in the stake but to the church generally. Consequently we are pleased to state that Lamoni has just completed a sewer system which makes for the sanitation of the place and the material advantage and comfort of its people. An up-to-date schoolhouse has also just been completed and is now occupied. This building is one of the best, with all modern conveniences. A normal department has been added to the Lamoni High School, under State supervision. With a most excellent corps of teachers, the Lamoni schools furnish opportunities for an education to our children which are second to none in like communities.

Graceland College, at Lamoni, opened on the 11th with a very able address by Samuel A. Burgess, on evolution. The college enters upon the work of the year under encouraging circumstances, with a good attendance and able instructors.

Saint Louis, Missouri

Special efforts have been put forth the past month and more to advance the work in Saint Louis by holding tent services. Brother Christy is reported as having delivered the wonderful gospel story in a most convincing manner. Attendance and interest has been very good. Some outsiders expressed themselves as having enjoyed the services very much. We trust the seed sown has found good soil and will soon bring forth fruit. The local officers, singers and members, have all done well in assisting in this noble effort.

The district conference with district Religio and Sunday school conventions convened in Alton, Illinois, September 12 and 13. We understand that a spiritual time was enjoyed. Those of us who are not privileged to attend these services should always remember to sustain the work of those who are sacrificing so much, by earnestly praying that blessings will result from their efforts.

Independence, Missouri

At the opening of the Independence fair, September 2, Governor E. W. Major was present, and ten thousand were in attendance. Four hundred babies were entered the following day, and the contest was judged on eugenic lines, a Latter Day Saint little one taking the first prize. For most excellent art work, our sisters, Mrs. M. Warnock, and her daughter Martha, were awarded first prize.

The good work is going on and new missions hereabout are being opened. The Saints on Enoch Hill, one of our delightful suburbs, were, with the help of the brethren, to engage yesterday in finishing their comfortable frame church.

The Sanitarium patronesses continue to meet regularly in the interest of their special line of work, and many kind words of appreciation come from there.

Our Sunday school indulged in a little surprise at our last session by Brother Krahl ordering the reading of the complete roll call of officers and teachers. There was a total attendance of 882, officers 38, teachers 102, visitors 100. To the stake convention on the 12th, 144 delegates were elected. Brother Nace favored us with a fine violin solo.

Two excellent discourses were given Sunday, September 6, one in the evening on church history by Elder Mark H. Siegfried, in the course of which he called for a "show of hands" of those present in the audience who had seen the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon. Only the writer's appeared. She testified to its having been exhibited to delegates at a General Conference at Lamoni, several years ago, and to the fine penmanship of the scribe, displayed in that ancient and valuable work.

Our beloved president's discourse in the morning was pertinent to the occasion, when all hearts are being stirred to their depth, and will be until this cruel war is over. The Saints are in hope and faithful assurance, looking forward to the glorious consummation of Christ's coming. A large concourse met in the upper room to celebrate the Lord's supper, and we all rejoiced in the afternoon, when many precious testimonies were borne, among them those of Elders W. E. Peak and Henry Resch.

May Zion prosper and her victory be a glorious peace is our prayer.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

Listowel, Ontario

In the early spring we had with us Brother George Tomlinson, who had labored here some fifteen years ago, and who was one in the hands of God in building up this branch. The Saints were pleased to have him in their midst once more. During the summer Brother John Shields came and gave us some good gospel sermons, through which some were convinced of the goodness of this gospel. Whether they continue to believe or not, time alone will tell.

At the present time we have with us Brother Alvin Ellis. He is a good speaker, and we certainly are keeping him busy. He came Thursday, September 3, holding a meeting the same evening and again on Friday night, three meetings on Sunday, and evening meetings during the following week. The attendance was fair. On Sunday the 6th, he spoke to a goodly assembly at the one-thirty prayer and sacrament meeting, Saints having previously been invited to attend from Mitchell, Mackillop, Rostock, Brussels, Palmerston, Drew and Harrison. We had meeting at 3 p. m. and again at 7.30 with a good attendance of outsiders.

We are trying to keep the flag unfurled and the camp fire burning, that the honest in heart may find this way to the fold of Christ.

Ever praying that we may live worthy to be called children of the kingdom, I am as ever,

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. A. SMITH.

Scranton, Pennsylvania

During the past eight months we have had our number increased by twenty, due to the united efforts put forth by a united people.

I suppose all Saints are aware of the fine brass band which we, as a branch, have, and of the good it is doing in assisting along the noble cause. For the past three months on Saturday evenings, and at other times when called to do so, the band, under the leadership of William J. Lewis, has paraded the principal streets of the city, and then proceeded to some popular street intersection, when Elder T. U. Thomas would address the gathered throng, to the enjoyment of all.

On August 22, the band, by request, went to Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, where tent meetings are being held by Brethren A. D. Angus, of Philadelphia, and George Morris, of Scranton, Pennsylvania. Here we made a very good impression, and to all accounts much good was accomplished, aided by the able talks of Brother T. U. Thomas who accompanied us, and Brother P. M. Hanson who was in Bloomsburg at the time. The presence of God's Spirit has been with us at all times and has led and encouraged us.

The Sunday school is progressing rapidly, as is also the Religio. Brother R. J. Hawkins is superintendent of the Sunday school, and Brother John Jenkins president of the Religio. The district convention of these auxiliaries was held here on the 5th, 6th, and 7th of this month, concerning which we will write later.

Your brother,

E. V. WAGNER.

Book Reviews

THE PROBLEM OF ATONEMENT.—By W. Arter Wright, Ph. D., D. D., published by S. F. Harriman, Columbus, Ohio. The author discusses such subjects as "The limitations of atonement," "The vicarious principle," and "Substitution." He says:

"The first general position of the church was that the death of Jesus was a price paid to Satan for the release of men. This view held for a thousand years. It was set aside by the teaching of Anselm, that the death of Jesus was a price paid to justice,—the justice and nature of God. This death then become a substitutional death. Jesus died instead of men. The view was supplemented by the substitutional righteousness of the Christ—Christ's righteousness is accepted for the personal righteousness of men. This book is written to negative this idea of substitution in both these applications. It makes the issue very clear, that such substitution is both unchristian and immoral. Atonement is based in the social law by which Christ died for men, to establish man's confidence in the divine good will, to win man's own good will, and to bring him to a good life."

THE AMERICAN INDIAN ON THE NEW TRAIL.—By Thomas C. Moffett, published by the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada, New York City. An interesting and valuable book for those who wish to get in touch with the progress made by the churches as well as the Government in reclaiming and civilizing the Indian. The following is an extract from the preface: "Two ideas have prevailed as to the way of making good Indians. The first was to kill them, and so the familiar jest—a grim humor—expressed it that the only good Indian is a dead Indian. The other idea was to convert them. Redeeming the Red Man is a more hopeful and also a more interesting process than rifling him. And the story of the church's enterprise in giving the native American race the Christian gospel should be more fascinating and worthy of close study than the history of Indian warfare, romantic frontier struggles, and bloody massacres. This book treats the subject in a comprehensive survey, giving as many facts and exact data as the prescribed limits allow. It is not a historical review of the heroic annals of Indian missions in America, yet the reader may be made inquisitive to follow up the suggestions of the romance and charm of the pioneer days and later exploits of the sturdy men of God who sought the untutored savage and the red-brow'd forest ranger to win native tribes to a new faith. Present-day achievement and pressing need furnished our theme with a vision of fine possibilities and an honorable destiny for the Indians of the United States."

PAUL AND THE REVOLT AGAINST HIM.—By William Cleaver Wilkinson, published by the Griffith and Rowland Press, Boston, Massachusetts. In certain religious circles there has been growing up a revolt against Paul on the ground that some have given him precedence over Jesus, and the slogan has been adopted, "Back to Jesus." The author of this work combats this revolt and seeks to present Paul in his true light, giving him his proper place in church history. He sees in the greatness of Paul the greatest possibility of the superiority of Jesus. That Jesus could have bent such a man to his will and brought him to his way was the greatest miracle.

THE SOCIAL ASPECTS OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.—By William Herbert Perry Faunce, published by the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada, New York City. The author of this book is president of Brown University. He treats such subjects as "Social achievements of missionaries," "Enlarged function of the missionary," etc. We quote from the introduction: "In this book we are to study one phase of the contact between East and West. The most momentous fact of modern times is that the East and the West are coming physically nearer to each other every year, and yet intellectually and spiritually are still separated by a great abyss. The distance between any two points on the earth's surface—measured by the time required to travel that distance—is rapidly diminishing. We live on a shrinking globe, whose surface, measured in time, is not one half as great as it was fifty years ago. We can go from New York to Peking in much less time than our grandfathers needed to go by prairie schooner from New York to Chicago. Thirty years ago Around the World in Eighty Days was a fairy tale. Now the journey has been completed in less than thirty-six days. London and Bombay are to-day near neighbors. Vancouver and Yokohama are gazing into each other's eyes. San Francisco and Hong Kong are conversing by telegraph, and soon may be communicating by telephone and aerial ships. The Mediterranean through the Suez Canal flows into the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean; the Atlantic and Pacific have mingled their waters in the Panama Canal. All the oceans have become one ocean, and all the world is physically one world."

AMERICA.—Edited by A. D. Herbertson, M. A., Ph. D., and O. J. R. Howarth, M. A. This is one of a series of books entitled, The Oxford Survey of the British Empire. This volume deals particularly with Canada and has chapters devoted to her history, geology, climate, education, economics, population and culture, government and administration. Also there are several chapters on the British West Indies. A valuable book of reference. Published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, price $2.50.

MIND AND SPIRIT.—By Thomas Curby Davis, D. D., published by Sherman, French and Company, Boston, price $1. "This treatise maintains the superiority of the spiritual over the mental, arguing that of all the attributes given to man the religious instinct is the only one not shared in some degree, at least, by the lower animals. Such being the case, the spirit should be so developed as to dominate the mind, and it should be the aim of education so to develop it. Education, however thorough in its way, which ignores the spiritual nature, or even subordinates it, is to that extent a lamentable failure. Scholarship is not by this limited in its scope, but rather infinitely widened. Nor are the sciences refused recognition. On the contrary, they are highly valued, but not as an end in themselves. The first section of the book sets forth the reasonableness of a firm faith in the truth shown in Scripture. The second section argues for the acceptance of the Bible as it stands, and as a divine revelation. The third and largest part of the book is given over to a study of the true psychology of man as taught by the New Testament and of the errors made in philosophy and education because of reasoning based upon a false psychology. The latter portion teaches the necessity and value of the new birth required by Christ, and the wonderful development of which man is capable after that rebirth."

AMERICAN SYNDICALISM.—By John Graham Brooks, published by the MacMillan Company, New York City, price $1.25. The author takes up one of the most interesting and vital questions of the age. While trade unionism proposes to unite working men according to trade, each in a class by himself, syndicalism proposes to unite all workers everywhere in one great body. Its avowed object is to bring a general world-wide strike, and to take over finally the entire machinery of industry. Its chief exponent is the Industrial Workers of the World. Behind syndicalism there is said to be a revolutionary force destined to take the place of trade unionism, and result in revolution. What is the basis for such a claim? What in short, is syndicalism? These are the questions that Mr. Brooks answers. A good book for students of economics.

GOOD ADVICE REPRINTED

1.—PRAYER MEETING ETIQUETTE AND TESTIMONY MEETING COURTESIES

All meetings are to be conducted by the elders, as "they may be led by the Holy Ghost." (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 9.)

While we fully believe the rule as stated above, we should be much pleased to see a better degree of order and propriety observed in prayer and testimony meetings than is now and then manifested—evidently in the absence of the Spirit. It may not be permissible to prescribe a set of rules to be observed at each and every meeting for prayer and testimony, but we may make a few suggestions, which if heeded may help sometimes in having a "good meeting."

1. All who attend the meeting should be at the place of meeting on time.

2. The officer whose prerogative it is to preside should call the meeting to order promptly, either presiding himself, or inviting some brother to take charge. If no recognized branch officer is present, then the one highest in office should be called by vote, or himself take charge and call the meeting to order.

3. The officer presiding should be brief in his opening address, or omit it altogether. He should be wide-awake and cheerful, prayerful and watchful. He should set a good example of decorum, respecting the rights of all, and avoid scolding; especially should he not scold the absent over the shoulders of those present, thus spoiling the pleasure of those who have come to the house of prayer for needed help and cheer.

4. Everyone present should remember that "words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver," and avoid preaching a sermon when bearing testimony. No one should take occasion to air any pet theory, or to relate any trouble between himself and another. Strive to impart good as well as to receive good. Do not mar the good that a judicious silence may do by an improper or an untimely speech. There are times where "speech is silver, silence golden."

5. No one should resent what another may say in prayer meeting. It is not the time, nor the place for personal altercation, either on conduct or doctrine. The presiding officer is the one to rebuke an offender in doctrine; let him attend to that duty.

6. When one rises to speak or kneels to pray, he should not be interrupted till done, either by officer or member; except in case too much time is being occupied, or the person speaking is using improper language. If two or more rise to speak at once, the brother in charge should name or designate the one first rising, and after, the others, in their order, if time permits. If one begins to sing or pray, he should not be checked for another to speak. The same in regard to one speaking in tongues, etc. The decision, or call of the brother presiding should be taken as final, and no one should insist on his right to speak if another is recognized by the brother in charge.

7. When praying, avoid the repetition of the name of the Deity in any form. It is always understood that those who pray are praying to God the Father; and for a person to be constantly using the name of the Father is to weaken the spirit by which others enter into the prayer. We have heard the name and appellations of God repeated as many as one hundred and twenty-five times in a prayer ten minutes in length. Avoid too frequent repetition of the name of Jesus Christ in either of its forms. It is understood by all who hear a Saint pray that he is asking in the name of Jesus Christ, for they are charged so to ask; to constantly repeat the name is to injure the sentiment of respect in which all should listen to prayer.

8. The Spirit of God is not an accusing spirit, and for this reason if one finds himself indulging in accusations he should at once stop, and sit down to serious self-examination.

9. Avoid telling long stories, especially if all who are present have heard you before tell the same story. No matter how interesting it may be to you, it may be tiring to others.

10. Be hearty; speak quietly, pray fervently, sing cheerily and in time and tune with others who may be singing; in short, do what you can to be glad and cheerful and make others feel so, too.—President Joseph Smith in SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 33, p. 401, July 3, 1886.

(To be continued.)

THE QUESTION OF SEPARATE MEETINGS FOR COLORED PEOPLE

A certain brother writes in from the mission field, and from his letter we extract the following paragraphs:

The colored people here are taking a good interest in our work. Have been attending our services and have asked me to come and preach to their people, which I have gladly and willingly done. They are deeply interested but the Saints here are somewhat divided as to the attitude we should take toward them attending our meetings and freely associating with us, as the people they fear will stop attending our meetings because of the colored people being present.

Some take the position that we should not encourage them to attend our services nor to associate too freely with them for fear it may hurt the work. Others think it proper to encourage their attendance and association and preach the gospel to them whenever and wherever possible, being one in Adam and in Christ.

The question here raised is a perplexing one, involving, as it does, racial prejudices existing between white and black. His letter was submitted to certain of the brethren of the ministry who have had similar experiences, with the request that they express themselves on that subject. We herewith publish extracts from three letters received, although we do not give the names of the authors.

We publish them with the idea that they may be considered by those who have the question in mind and possibly may bring a degree of light where it is needed. At least, they will furnish food for thought. They are not presented as an authoritative solution of the problem, but are given for what they may be worth to those who are considering the question:

LETTER NUMBER ONE

Yours of the 13th was received safely, and duly noted.

The conditions which Brother — describes are so very different to anything that I have had to meet with I am afraid that I can not advise as freely and definitely as I would like to do. I can therefore only write tentatively, and with a large amount of diffidence.

I know that in many places there is a very strong sentiment against the association of the colored people on terms of equality with the white people. I have seen that evidenced in several places. The problem needs to be carefully considered as one which belongs to the general sociological problems.

Speaking, therefore, with reserve, I would suggest that Brother — should conduct the work among the colored people as a separate mission and try to organize his work so that the colored converts could be taken care of in a separate meeting and not impose the colored people upon the white congregation, if they are unwilling. It may be that some of the white local ministry could be employed in preaching and educating them and so the partition between the two could be gradually broken down.

While I can not favor the harsh ostracism which some would apparently exercise, yet I have seen that the extension of equal rights and liberties to the colored people with the white is a serious menace, because the colored people have not been cultured nor trained to use that liberty in the same way that others have. In this I believe there is a real flaw in Lincoln's otherwise magnanimous and splendid service to the colored population.

However, I would advise that the work to the colored people be conducted separately from the work to the whites under the circumstances and that two branches be organized. Of course this may seem to be a sordid surrender of our ideal of the family relationship with God on earth, but it is more apparent than real, for even among our white church members the congregations become more or less disintegrated and several influences are at work to break up the group into cliques, money, birth, profession, character, and tastes all exerting an internal force producing a similar result to that which in the case under consideration is brought about more directly by the external accident of color.

I regret that these ideas are rather confused. I feel that the problem is one that needs a great deal of careful consideration, and I do not wish to be too positive or definite in a matter of this grave character, but I feel safe in offering the suggestion contained in this letter.

LETTER NUMBER TWO

I am in receipt of your favor under date of August 14 relative to the communication from —. In reply I have to say that the question which is now troubling them is indeed perplexing and will no doubt continue as far as the membership is concerned until something more specific is offered, either by revelation or by action of the body.

There is no question as to the scope and saving power of the gospel, in that the obedience thereto will certainly bring about the results designed through that power, nor is there any doubt that God "made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth"; but he hath likewise "determined the times before appointed," also "the bounds of their habitation." To conclude that because the gospel is for all men and all men and nations are of one blood, therefore all men, regardless of color or conditions, shall worship without any reservation, would in my judgment be wrong.

Without entering exhaustively into the subject, I desire to submit that their color in itself seems to be a mark of distinction placed there by the Creator for a wise purpose, for I am persuaded that no one can look upon the black man and say unreservedly, "The spirit of the negro is permitted to enjoy tabernacles equal to that of the white man," because such conclusions would not be correct. Therefore, if God determines the time and the bounds of their habitation, he being almighty in power and omniscient in wisdom, did not make this discrimination without reason, though it may be beyond our power to determine just why this was done, there being insufficient revelations along this line. As I look upon the colored race, their color and place in the world influence me in the belief that our heavenly Father has sufficiently evidenced to us the inferiority of their spirit, consequently we should not assume more than God has indicated.

In the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord certified, at least to some extent, that which I have already observed, wherein he states, as all are aware, "Be not hasty in ordaining men of the Negro race to offices in my church, for verily [and I emphasize the word verily] I say unto you, All are not acceptable unto me as servants, nevertheless I will that all men be saved, but every man in his own order," showing conclusively that God has made a distinction, and hinting at the thought or idea of a special dispensation of some kind. Therefore if God recognizes to the extent of discrimination, should we be too hasty in concluding that no discrimination shall be made? From the written word we are safe in concluding that God desires their salvation in so far as they will comply with the requirements of the gospel. This applies to all mankind, but it seems to me this can be brought about just as well under the distinction, and to my way of thinking just as acceptable to them as a race; if not it should be, at the same time protecting the finer sensibilities obtaining with the white membership.

My experience with the black man has been more or less extensive, and I have found that his real contentment is manifest when he is required to live in a community of his own race and color. I am further of the opinion that should it ever become a law, or rather a custom to offer unto them worship equal with the whites that the membership of Saints in the South will dissent from this position. As I seek to analyze the situation, I see no real cause for anxiety. It may "put us about," as the Englishman would say, in preparing and providing for independent worship, but I think it our duty to so arrange rather than pursue the other course. At all events, I am of the opinion that as far as practicable and as rapidly as possible we should arrange so that these conditions shall obtain, that is, that their worship be independent of the whites.

LETTER NUMBER THREE

Your letter of the 13th instant received and noted. As you say, the Negro question is a perplexing one. From my experience it will have to be answered largely by the conditions existing where the question may arise. I am a little surprised that so much prejudice exists as far north as ——— against the association with negroes, for I found that in those Northern States the people were not so much opposed to the negro going to church with the white people as in ——— and farther south. While I was in ——— there were about eighteen negroes who belonged to the south-side branch, and on sacrament Sunday from eight to fifteen would attend. There was but little objection upon the part of the Saints, but considerable by the neighbors near the church.

The only objection I had was they would persist in mixing with the whites in the seating instead of sitting on one side by themselves, and because of this a number of the sisters refused to partake of the sacrament.

I advised and sought to establish a mission among them with a view to organizing a branch, but each white brother who was willing to take charge of the work would use his influence to induce them to go to the main branch on sacrament Sunday, so that after a little while the colored folks again persisted in attending with the whites. I do not know how they handle them there now.

We have three colored people here that belong to the ——— Branch, but have no difficulty with them: we put them in the gallery during preaching service, and in a corner to themselves during sacrament service, and use a separate glass to serve the wine. However, if we had a larger number we would have to make other arrangements because of the prejudice against colored persons associating with the whites in this State.

I find that if you explain to the negro about the feelings and prejudice that exist and ask him to forbear for awhile until they abate he is willing to do so. I also find that those who agitate an equality in association of whites and negroes on the basis that we are all the Lord's children and should be together do more harm than good and make the negro brother hard to deal with because he thinks some are against him.

I would advise that where elders work with and among the negroes it would be better for them to establish a negro mission and impress upon their minds the responsibility of supporting the mission (that is the negro members), with a further impression that they are working for a colored branch and they should stay right with the work to "make good." If elders are careful in the beginning of their work with the negroes and do not encourage them to meet with the white people only occasionally, they will have but little trouble. The main thing is to impress them they have a work to do with their own race and not with the white folks.

As I said in the beginning, though, each place will have to largely answer the question, for I can not see how you could lay down a rule to govern all places alike.

We realize that the question discussed in these letters is one on which people may very well differ, and plausible arguments might be presented on both sides. Local conditions must, to an extent, determine the course of local congregations.

The brethren who have written are not enemies of the Negro, but on the contrary are his friends. That which is best for the colored people and for the church is the question. Intelligent colored converts who read this will recognize that fact and will cooperate with the ministry in whatever move may be considered best for the work in a given locality.

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

ULSTER AND HOME RULE.—Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Irish Unionists, in outlining the Ulster program for the future, is reported as having said in an address before the Unionist Council, on September 28:

I propose, when the war is over, to summon a provisional government, and I propose that its first act should be to repeal the home rule bill so far as Ulster is concerned. I propose in the same way to enact a resolution that it is the duty of the volunteers to see that no act or attempt at an act under that bill should ever have effect in Ulster. Meanwhile, let us throw ourselves, as we are throwing ourselves, whole-heartedly into the patriotic action that the time demands in supporting the empire.

NATIONAL MERCHANT MARINE ABANDONED.—Report from Washington states that leaders in Congress, with the approval of President Wilson, have for the present abandoned the plan to create a national merchant marine. Opposition in both branches of Congress, especially in the Senate, threatened the defeat of the bill. It is said, furthermore, that Great Britain, France and Russia have objected to the purchase by the United States of German vessels, by which means the administration proposed to at once secure the desired end in American shipping, on the grounds that the purchase money would find its way eventually into the war coffers of Germany. These objections are thought to have entered into the considerations which have resulted in the abandonment of the plan as reported.

IN MEXICO.—The convention of Constitutionalist leaders was not held on the 1st as intended. Instead, a peace commission, composed of representatives of Villa and Carranza, went into session at Zacatecas. An armistice has been declared, pending the outcome of the peace parley, and a convention of Constitutionalist leaders to select a provisional president is reported agreed upon for the 10th. Prior to the convening of this commission, Carranza is said to have announced that he would not become a candidate for president if Villa would give a like pledge, and all other military leaders were eliminated. Report from Washington states that Villa has formerly announced that he will not become a candidate. The revolt of certain of Villa's generals it is thought may weaken his cause.

COLORADO LABOR TROUBLE.—The operators in the Colorado coal fields have replied with criticisms to the proposal of President Wilson for the three-year truce heretofore referred to in these columns, and accepted by the miners. One of the conditions of the truce, as suggested, provided that "all striking miners who have not been guilty of violation of law" be reemployed. The following are leading objections of the operators, voiced by Mr. Weldon, president of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, are based upon this proposition as follows: They state that there is not sufficient work for all these men; that, in fact, under present conditions work may not be supplied even for the men now employed. In the second place, it is urged that a mine is a hazardous place, and that the hazard of mining would be increased if men of violent temper were allowed to work with men peaceably inclined, restrained by nothing more than a truce in the midst of hostilities.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Heavy fighting continues all along the line of battle in France, with the allies seeming to gain a little ground on both wings, especially in the west. Reinforcements have joined both lines, including native forces from British India. Germany is fortifying Leige and has opened fire on Antwerp. News from Eastern Prussia and Russian Poland are uncertain, seeming to favor the Russians. Reports from Petrograd state that the Austrian right wing in Galicia has been driven across the Carpathians, while the left is retreating to Cracow. The Russians have invested Parzemysk. Former reports of the capture of Serajevo, Bosnia, seem to have been premature, since latest advices report the Montenegrins to be within artillery range of that place. Tsing-Tao is invested by the Japanese, with the German army falling back on its main lines of defense five miles west of the city. Japanese forces are said to have taken certain points in control of railroad lines in Chinese territory adjacent to German holdings. Report that the forts at Cattaro have sunk a French warship is denied. Official report from London is to the effect that twelve British merchantmen have been sunk by German vessels at various points, and eight by German mines in the North Sea, while twenty-four fishing craft have been sunk or captured thus far during the war. The same report states that eighty-eight German merchant ships have been captured by the British, with one hundred and two detained in British ports, while the allies have captured or detained one hundred and sixty-eight more. Dispatch from Constantinople reports the Dardanelles closed to navigation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

AN INDICTMENT.—War of itself may be wise or unwise, just or unjust, but that the issue of a world-wide war should rest in the hands of a few men, and that the hundreds of millions who will bear the burden and be affected in every relation of life by the outcome of such a war should passively leave the decision to these few men is an indictment of civilization itself.—New York World.

LEGITIMATE AID.—We are in receipt of handbills announcing Elder O. R. Miller as the speaker at a temperance meeting at Inman, Nebraska, September 20, under the auspices of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. The same mail brings The Inman Leader for September 17, in which we note a half-column announcement of meetings which began at Inman the night of the 20th, with Elder Miller as the speaker. The elders generally are coming to realize the power of publicity in mission work. When this advertising is done with dignity and discretion it is a credit to the cause and a legitimate aid in the spread of the truth.

A LACK OF LOVE.—Discussing certain writings of an Elder Jones, of the no-organ faction of the successors to Alexander Campbell, Daniel Somner, editor of the Octograph Review, and leading elder of said church, in the Review of September 1 says:

He writes as an ignoramus . . . he writes as if he is unscrupulous . . . he certainly shows himself unworthy of confidence . . . every sentence . . . is unsound and has a reptile of errors in it. . . . His friends will have to give him up as an indefensible man, or go down with him. That kind of a man is bound to go to his own place . . . such writing is scurrility, and does not come from a gentleman, nor a Christian of the New Testament order.

By a peculiar coincidence, "A Disciple" in the same issue of the Review, in commenting on Leviticus 19: 17, and 1 John 3: 15 says:

Do these scriptures apply to that class of Christians who may have hatred in their hearts toward Daniel Somner?

The application is obvious.

THE END OF THE WORLD

ALSO ZION AND THE MILLENNIUM

What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?—Matthew 24: 3.

Many Bible readers, even some of the Saints, have taken the above question to mean that the return of Christ and the end of the world are to occur at the same time, or within a brief space of each other. Also some have believed that when the Savior said, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come," that he meant that all the work of preaching to the nations shall be and must be done before he comes again, or be immediately finished at that time.

FEAR OF THE END

And although in the great world of traffic, of amusement, and of sin, there is very little thought of God or of his interference with the affairs of earth, yet in times of overwhelming catastrophe by earthquakes, fires, and volcanoes, many people have been terrified into frenzy by the certainty they felt that the end of all mortal things was at hand. When astronomers said that the earth would be enveloped in the tail of the comet on May 18, 1910, it was rumored and believed by many that the deadly gasses of that so-called tail would wipe out all life on the earth, and on that day it would become desolate. The daily papers in the great cities told of scared souls who abandoned their business, and some even threw away their money in the street, exclaiming that they had no more use for it, because the end of the world had come, or would come on that day. The destruction of Saint Pierre and thirty thousand lives by volcanic lava and gasses, and the overthrow of Messina and Valparaiso by terrible earthquakes caused similar ideas that "the end" of earth was at hand.

But these and other instances of fear and dread of the expected end of the world have been because of ignorance concerning the prophecies of Christ and of God's inspired messengers. Paul's declaration fits in here, where he said: "Because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day." (Acts 13: 27.)

LEADING EVENTS

To be sure, the Savior declared that the earth "shall pass away," and Isaiah wrote that the earth "shall be burned," and Peter that the corruptible things of earth "shall be burned up." And so they will be. But neither of these prophets set the time, nor said that such complete destruction should come at the beginning of the millennium. That idea has been imagined, and is without a good foundation.

In 2 Peter 3: 7-13 that apostle, in telling of some chief events to come, covers a thousand years in the seven verses. He calls that period "the day of the Lord," and he speaks of a thousand years as being only a day in God's sight. It is common to speak of a period of time as "a day," as in the account of the creation in Genesis. So, with the understanding that the millennium will be the period set apart for Christ's government over the earth, Peter could well speak of that thousand years as "the day of the Lord," even as it was designated by various prophets long before Peter's time. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Amos, Joel, Zephaniah, Zechariah, and Malachi all speak of that period as "a day," or "the day," or "that day." In Isaiah 2: 11, 17, he says that the "Lord alone shall be exalted in that day." Again, "the day of the Lord cometh." In Ezekiel 29: 21, it is written, "In that day will I cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud forth." These and other passages plainly show that the prophets meant that great "day of a thousand years," as we also sing of it.

Also in chapter three, verse ten, Peter evidently refers to the whole day, which is to begin "as a thief in the night." Then he says, "in the which," meaning sometime during that day, or period, there will be certain great events and calamities. Speaking again in the twelfth verse, of the "day of the Lord," he says, "wherein" (or during it) the fire shall come, and in verse thirteen he states that there will come "a new heaven and a new earth" to succeed the old. In Revelation 20: 4-7 John mentions the thousand years reign four times; and he states that at the end of it fire and destruction are to come, and then the new earth (chapter 21: 1, 2) is to appear in its glory and beauty.

Thus John and Peter agree in their description of the final destruction. As Peter in these few verses describes the chief events for a thousand years, or more, so Daniel 7: 7-10, that is, in four verses, covers three thousand years, and Isaiah 61: 1-4, includes at least two thousand years. For in Luke 4: 18 Christ did not repeat Isaiah's words that the "day of vengeance" was then at hand. It was not near then, and it has not yet come, but will, both at the beginning and the end of the millennium.

As to the end of the world, the Inspired Version is more definite than the King James. The first text quoted in this article reads in the Inspired Version as follows: "What is the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world? (or the destruction of the wicked, which is the end of the world)."—Matthew 24: 4.

Other sayings of Christ concerning the end of the world I quote from the Inspired Version as follows:

And thus cometh the end of the wicked according to the prophecy of Moses, saying, They shall be cut off from among the people. But the end of the earth is not yet, but bye and bye.—Matthew 24: 56.

And again this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked.—Mark 13: 36, Inspired Version.

This last saying reads exactly the same in Matthew 24: 32.

DESTRUCTION BY WAR

Thus it appears that there will be great destruction by wars among the wicked at and about the time of Christ's return, when he comes to avenge the wrongs of the oppressed and suffering of the earth; and also there will come the final overthrow and destruction of the wicked at the end of the millennium.

While writing this very page (July 28) news comes of the beginning of war between Austria and Serbia, and that the greater nations of Europe are preparing their armies for battle, with the prospect that Russia, France and England will side with Serbia, while Germany and perhaps Italy will take up with Austria. If all are brought in it will be the mightiest test of arms since one hundred years ago, when Napoleon Bonaparte had all Europe involved in war.

But the rapidity of all movements possible in our times, and the swift means of destruction that are had now by bombs, submarines, and airships, all these things make possible a short war, unless the time is near for that great alliance between the nations "of the north quarters" and the "north parts" (Ezekiel 38: 6 and 39: 2), which will prepare them for the descent upon Palestine, as prophesied by Ezekiel in those two chapters. No doubt the present war, whether it proves to be long or short, will lead toward the great event prophesied by Ezekiel, even as did the recent Turko-Balkan war. Certainly God's purpose can be plainly seen in the working out of the destined end, and in the certain fulfillment of the prophets, whether we come very near to comprehending the gradual steps and events leading up to that end or not.

Yet it is probable that this war will bring to the front a conqueror who shall by the might of armies obtain control over the others, and thus, before many years, become the acknowledged head of the "mighty army," and of "all thy bands and many people with thee," at the time when "the chief prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal" (as it reads in the Septuagint translation) shall go down through Turkey to take "a spoil" from "my people of Israel," as the Lord foretold by Ezekiel. Rosh was the son of Magog, the grandson of Noah, and the Rosche went up from Asia and settled the regions now known as Russia; and it seems probable that she will become the head of the "many people" who will seek to rob the Jews at Jerusalem. But it is immaterial who leads the "bands" of the "north quarters," if the "chief prince" over them shall accomplish his foreseen destiny.

In my article last March I was, perhaps, too optimistic. Years ago I expected that universal war would take place before Christ's coming, nothing less than the upheaval and overthrow of all nations, the United States included, even world-wide ruin. But, after studying more fully the prophecies about the changes that God will make for the better over the earth, and seeing his purpose concerning America more fully demonstrated, my views have become modified. Not that I do not expect great wars and great "distress of nations." I do expect all this, and that the nations will "prepare [for] war," that they will "come up" to battle, and that they will practically "beat their plowshares into swords" by the unparalleled use of the metals for war purposes that otherwise would be used for the arts of peace and the needs of husbandry. But how much of this will be immediately before Christ's return, is the question.

THE FINAL STRUGGLE

The fact that the millennial "day of the Lord" will be a thousand years long, and that the subduing of the nations (Isaiah 2: 4) will take time to accomplish, even by the Redeemer, is apparent. Then another fact is that some of the prophecies about war and destruction evidently refer to the final, the real final "destruction of the wicked," at the end of the thousand years, when Satan will be loosed from his prison and go out to again stir up the nations to war before his complete overthrow. This makes it possible that the most universal war and destruction spoken of will take place near the end of the millennium, even though there will be enough of both war and destruction at the beginning of that period. We read:

And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations, which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle.—Revelation 20: 7, 8.

In Matthew 24: 32 and Mark 13: 36 (Inspired Version) Christ says that the gospel shall be preached to all nations, and after that "shall the end come, or the destruction of the wicked," that is, their final great and overwhelming destruction shall take place after the opportunity is given to all people to receive the gospel, even to the end of the millennium. The "little season" (Revelation 20: 3) may extend quite a number of years, during which Satan will work up jealousy, anger, and finally extreme wrath among and between the nations. There may be great wars between them before they are molded to suit Satan's purpose, and before they are fully brought to the necessary compactness and unity, also to a sufficiently high pitch of courage to be willing to attack the great and heaven-defended city called Zion. But all the events spoken of by the prophets concerning the "day of the Lord" will take place sometime during the thousand years. As already said, Isaiah, Ezekiel, Joel, Zechariah, and Malachi make special mention of that great day, and of the notable things to be expected within its bounds.

DURING THE MILLENNIUM

It seems that Zion will be a cause of fear and dread among the nations, for a part and perhaps all of the time, and that some wars will be had even when Zion is in her full glory, but I doubt if anyone can say, with certainty whether the worst will be near the beginning, or later. But the situation and feeling that will exist among the nations is described as follows:

And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety. And there shall be gathered unto it out of every nation under heaven; and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another. And it shall be said among the wicked, Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible.—Doctrine and Covenants 45:13.

Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King. God is known in her palaces for a refuge. For, lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together. They saw it, and so they marveled; they were troubled, and hasted away. Fear took hold upon them.—Psalm 48:2-6.

For Zion shall come and God shall be in the midst of her. . . . The heathen shall be enraged, and their kingdoms shall be moved, and the Lord shall utter his voice, and the earth shall be melted. . . . Come, behold the works of the Lord, what desolation he shall make in the earth, in the latter days. He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth.—Psalm 46:5-9, Inspired Translation.

That saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchman shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye when the the Lord shall bring again Zion.—Isaiah 52:7, 8.

So shall he gather many nations; the kings shall shut their mouths at him; for that which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider.—Ibid. 52:15, Inspired Translation.

And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory of Zion shall be a defense. And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain.—Ibid. 4:4, 5, Inspired Translation.

Many more quotations could be cited, but these are chief in showing the attitude of the world toward Zion and Jerusalem during the millennium. Those places will be in their glory, as the foregoing texts show; and there will be much obedience, righteousness, and peace upon the earth, as declared in Psalm 72:7-14. Yet the foregoing extracts from Isaiah and the Psalms, and from the Doctrine and Covenants all betoken that among the nations will exist an undercurrent of unwillingness to be thus subject to Christ and his associates, and that some will only be controlled or restrained by fear from rising against him. And who can say that there will not be occasional rebellions and efforts to overthrow his power, and to establish again the government of the fathers? They will have to "shut their mouths" many times, though they may not be willing to do it. Zion must need "a defense" by "the glory" of the Lord, or it would not be had. The preaching of the gospel will continue through the millennium, until all people and nations shall have opportunity to receive it, if they will, and to be numbered with God's Saints and go to Zion to dwell.

One great difference in the millennium between those who become God's people and those who do not will be that the latter will die just as people die now, though doubtless sanitation and other knowledge of how to preserve health will prolong all lives to a much greater length than we find now. But the people of God will not die in that day; that is, their spirits will not pass away from their bodies, but they will be changed to immortality at the age of one hundred years, and thus they will not taste of death nor experience death as we do now. Isaiah says:

In those days there shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall not die, but shall live to be an hundred years old; but the sinner, living to be an hundred years old, shall be accursed.—Isaiah 65:20, Inspired Translation.

That is, no infant of few days will die, nor will there be any Saint who may not live to a fullness of years in mortality, and then be changed to immortality, but those outside, who, by contrast, and in fact, are sinners, will die as people die now. Those who observe all the laws will not die, and it will be a disgrace and as a curse upon disobedience for any to die in that day. Hence such are called "accursed" by the Prophet Isaiah, because they will not accept the means to live and enjoy what they might receive of good at the hands of their Creator and their Redeemer.

That all, both old and young, are not to be changed to immortality at Christ's coming, as some suppose from Paul in 1 Corinthians 15:51, 52, is evident from Isaiah 65:20-23 and from revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants. The latter reading as follows:

He that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye.—Doctrine and Covenants 63:13.

In that day an infant shall not die until he is old . . . and when he dies he shall not sleep, that is to say in the earth, but shall be changed.—Ibid. 98:5.

And they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them.—Ibid. 45:10.

Thus it is plain that children will be born to mortal men and women while they remain mortal, but evidently not to them after they are "changed," nor to those who are resurrected from the dead, as appears from Christ's words in Matthew 22:29. Some among us have said that they do not believe that mortals and immortals can live upon the earth at the same time, or that any children will be born after Christ establishes his kingdom on earth. However, that time will only bring a change of government, a change from the rulership of ambitious and cruel men to the just and merciful government of the Son of God, and from sin unto righteousness in the moral conditions of the world, while the physical conditions of the earth will continue much as they are now. But the beauty, fertility, and productiveness of all lands will be greatly increased, and fruits and grains will attain a high order of perfection, far beyond what we now see. This is evident from Isaiah 65:21-25, Joel 2:22-36, Amos 9:13, 14, Zechariah 8:12, and other scriptures. With pleasure I remember that the historians, Bancroft, Catlin, Haines, and others have stated that the old traditions among the American Indians, those truths that came down from their Hebrew progenitors, contained exactly the same ideas and teaching about the blessed and glorious age to come as the Bible prophets have foretold.

The great day of gospel work will also come then. The Lord said by Isaiah (25:7) that he will destroy "the veil that is spread over all nations," and by Jeremiah (16:19) that people will then be so convinced of the folly of the creeds and man-made religions that they will say, "Surely our fathers inherited lies, vanity, and things where there is no profit." This opening of the eyes will make possible the remarkable number of conversions unto God and his truth that are spoken of in Isaiah 36:6, 7, Zechariah 2:11, 8:22, and elsewhere.

One thing more I mention, and that is concerning the great ecclesiastical power which has for many centuries bound nations and their rulers, and has controlled and subjected millions of people to a cruel despotism and to a debasing false worship and sad deception. Even the foot of priestly man has been placed upon the necks of prostrate kings to symbolize complete submission of nations to priestly rule. This power has revived; and even in the land where God established the ensign of liberty it has advanced in its influence until the lovers of liberty and justice have been troubled as to the results. But John the Revelator foresaw that the coming King will conquer it; and therefore sometime in the day of his majesty and righteous reign this institution will come to its ignominious end, and will no longer have power over people or nations.

"THE SPIRIT AND THE BODY IS THE SOUL OF MAN"

It is the general opinion of the Christian world that the meaning of the words spirit and soul are identical, inasmuch that Webster makes no distinction, and the clergy in general use them as synonyms. But this wonderful ten-word lesson (Doctrine and Covenants 85:4) should give the Saints advanced ideas along this line, ideas that are necessary in order to clear away seeming contradictions, and help us to more successfully meet some of the errors of the day. It seems to the writer that a clear understanding of what God has here revealed will give meaning to some passages used as proof texts by our opponents, and help us to give answer, rather than to ignore them.

"The spirit and the body is the soul of man." We learn by this, first, that a spirit without a body, or a disembodied spirit, is not a soul; second, that the body without the spirit is not the soul; third, that the term spirit does not necessarily include the soul, while the word soul does include both the spirit and the body. Therefore it is manifestly improper to use the word souls with reference to our spirits before they enter or after they leave our bodies. If these words are the same, then when anyone writes about the Greek and Hebrew words from which spirit and soul were translated, and explains which words in one language are equivalent to corresponding words in the other language, it is sheer linguistic nonsense.

But the fact that all linguists agree as to these words, and their correspondence, proves that spirit and soul are not synonyms, while God tells us plainly what relation one bears to the other, namely, "The spirit and the body is the soul of man."

USED INTERCHANGEABLY

The fact that soul and spirit are occasionally used interchangeably in the Bible is used as argument to prove their identity. But this is not sufficient evidence, for the translators of the Bible did, and the clergy do still, use hades and gehenna interchangeably; the same is also true of the words soul and body, and flesh and body.

The word man often includes woman, the same as soul includes spirit, but no one would argue from this fact that there is no difference between women and men. Then, again, while soul does not mean spirit, nor does spirit mean soul, yet they are so closely related that in some connections either word would be proper. When we read that the soul returned to the widow's son in answer to Elijah's prayer, it was eminently proper, for it included the spirit; it actually occurred; the soul of the child did return in consequence of the reunion of "the spirit and the body" which "is the soul of man."

And when Jesus said, "But fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body," the use of the term soul here was probably more nearly proper than spirit would have been, for there are many definitions for destroy, only about half of which will apply to the spirit of man, while all may be applied to the soul. Our spirits may be subverted, overthrown, ruined, demolished, laid waste, or pulled down; but they may not be brought to an end, consumed, killed, or annihilated.

SOUL AND SPIRIT ARE APPLIED TO SAME PERSONAGE

Therefore it is affirmed that they are synonymous. I hardly believe this to be positive evidence. Let us see: "And Joseph made haste: for his bowels did yearn upon his brother; and he sought where to weep." (Genesis 43: 30.) "For her bowels yearned upon her son." (1 Kings 3: 26.) The definition of yearn is earnest desire. In 1 Samuel 23: 30 and Isaiah 26: 8 we read "desire of soul," and in Genesis 6: 5, Psalm 21: 2; 37: 4, and Romans 10: 1, we read of "heart's desire." Are these three words "bowels," "heart," and "soul" synonymous? They are used interchangeably. They are all accorded the function of earnest desire; they are all applied to the same thing or act. Evidently this is no proof of sameness.

Writers in all ages and on all subjects have been more or less careless or faulty in judgment in their choice of words. And in some instances the meaning of words has been radically changed. Translators are often put to their wits' end to find exact equivalents, and

NEW DISCOVERIES BRING NEW WORDS

Did you know that the people in Bible times had no brains? Well, if silence is any proof, such was the case, for the word brains may not be found in the Bible. All their thoughts, desires, and emotions were supposed to be the operation of their hearts, their souls, or their bowels. I believe it was Harvey who in the sixteenth century first discovered the circulation of the blood. After that it was learned that our hearts are just strong, involuntary, muscular pumps, which give motion to the blood. It was also discovered that people had gray matter in their heads, which they named brain, and there they found the true seat of intelligence. Several centuries have passed since these discoveries, but people are very slow to drop what they know to be an improper use of words.

IT TAKES TWO TO MAKE ONE

"The spirit and the body is the soul," etc. The iron and the carbon are the steel. The woman and the man are the family. The oxygen and the hydrogen are the water. These simple comparisons may help us to study more closely the results of this most wonderful combination of our text.

When a woman and a man become one in the true sense, a happy family is the result, and immunities and blessings follow that can be reached in no other way. But the woman is not the family, neither is the man; when from any cause separation occurs the family is broken asunder. So with the union of the spirit and the body. A happy soul with keen intellect—a glorious consciousness and unlimited possibilities should be the result; but the spirit is not that soul, neither is the body. When the separation which is called death occurs, the soul is disrupted, and the spirit, hampered with its limitations, goes to God who is the giver, to await the redemption of the soul through the resurrection of the body.

The physical, visible part of man may be analyzed; each subdivision is inorganic and inanimate; nothing can be discovered by the medical fraternity aided by microscopic and X ray instruments in the living body that may not also be found in the corpse. The invisible, silent spirit has been separated from the body, and the results of the union, which is the soul, are suspended.

SPIRIT A SUBCONCIOUS ENTITY

That the spirit while in the body is subordinate to the higher functions of the soul is attested by the following witnesses:

"The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets."—Paul.

"He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls."—Solomon.

"He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."—Solomon.

This proves that the union of the spirit with the body produces a superior power or faculty; for anything that is subject to control is subordinate to the controlling influence. The Scripture says that the glory of God is intelligence, and also that God created man (spirit and body) for his own glory. It is not presumable that God made any mistake when he made these mundane tenements for our spirits to occupy. It is quite reasonable that a whole man, a soul, should be superior to half a man, or a spirit. Our spirits detached from our bodies can not reach that excellent intelligence that they should reach by being in touch with Christ through bodily functions.

Physical observations and experiments show spirit consciousness to be much slower than the consciousness of the soul; but these tardy appearances can and should be accounted for along other lines.

THE TRUE SENSE OF THE SPIRIT

Many people have been favored like Lazarus of old with the experience of death and resuscitation; and as I study the testimonies along this line of such witnesses as Reverend Edward B. Emerson, Mrs. Charles Colins, Mrs. Harriet Smith Swanson, Reverend William Tennent, Mr. Jessie Everts, Elder John Burlington, Elder Peter Adamson, Mrs. Emma Burton, Mrs. Samuel Gurley, and others, I am fully convinced that intuition, instinct and discernment, which seem to be the true sense of the spirit, are as keenly developed and as active after the spirit leaves the body as before. This is saying but little for the most of us, for our subconsciousness is very limited.

WHAT BECOMES OF THE SOUL DURING THE SEPARATION CALLED DEATH?

The soul does not go to the grave with the body, for without the spirit the soul is not there; nor does the soul go with the spirit to either paradise or the prison house, for without the body the soul is not there. The soul may not be a distinct entity or intellect of itself, for "the spirit and the body is the soul of man." The soul is the result of a union of spirit and body. I think the souls whom John saw under the altar were individuals who were resurrected at the time Christ arose. I do not see what use spirits could make of "white robes." If they were just spirits whom he saw and not souls at all, then, of course, it had not been revealed to John that "the spirit and the body is the soul of man."

None of God's servants have enjoyed omniscience. There are many, many things that have not been revealed; and many things that have been revealed were unlawful for man to utter, or the vision was immediately closed so that no man could understand. But thank the Lord for what has been made known to his church! And one of those facts is that "the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection of the body is the redemption of the soul." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.)

Now let us study briefly the last clause of this quotation, for it is the climax or finishing touch of this great lesson, "The resurrection of body is the redemption of the soul."

Redemption: The act of redeeming, the ransom or deliverance of sinners from the bondage of sin and the penalties of God's violated law.—Webster.

The separation of the spirit from the body which is called death is "the penalty of God's violated law," and the resurrection of the body is "the ransom or deliverance of sinners from the bondage of sin," or, in the language of the text, "the resurrection of the body is the redemption of the soul."

Redeem: To buy back; to repurchase. To rescue, ransom, or liberate from captivity or bondage, recover, reclaim. Re: A prefix signifying backward again, anew, over again.—Webster.

This makes the matter clear: Two things must occur before anything can be redeemed or recovered to us or reclaimed by us: namely, we must have first possessed it, and, secondly, we must have lost possession of it. Nothing can be redeemed to us that we were never in possession of.

The soul, it seems, therefore, must be that keener consciousness, that higher intelligence that is lost in death and redeemed to us by the resurrection, for "the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection of the body is the redemption of the soul." This adds to the charms of the glorious achievements of the resurrection. It shows the sad condition of fallen angels, and the wicked who must bide their time. Lord, help us to prepare ourselves for a glorious resurrection. D. R. BALDWIN.

DIVINE AUTHORITY

(Written by Bishop R. May for use in British Isles Mission as a tract.)

Divine authority has been a source of much dispute in what are called Christian churches, because of the cherished thought that God has given each one of them the exclusive right to claim their church divine, and that their priesthood and ministry came to them by divine authority.

BRANCHES DIFFERING

But consider: there are six distinct branches of the ancient Christian church (all differing in faith, doctrine, and church organization, and repudiating one another) that claim direct line of succession from the apostolic church, viz: Armenian, Coptic, Jacobites, Nestorians, Abyssinians, and the Catholic Church (which latter is divided into three parts: Roman, Greek and Protestant churches). The Protestants are again subdivided into many hundred factions, and the first-named five are also each divided into numerous religious bodies.

There is no sane man who will stop to think for a moment, but will see that there must be something wrong when nation after nation, both Christian and pagan, has set up its own national church, each differing in its belief as to how and by what means a man should be saved. Those churches have been assisted by their parliaments or kings to draft rules of faith, and creeds; but notwithstanding these nationally established churches, there are millions of people in those nations who will not risk their souls' salvation on the doctrines of the national churches. For this reason there are many equally as good people who have set up their own churches, differing in their religion, known as nonconformists, differing also in doctrine and principles of salvation.

CREEDS AND PRIESTS UNAUTHORIZED

In order to allay any feeling of distrust because of these differences their ministers say, "We all believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, therefore we are one." But did they not all believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, before they divided? Did not those divisions come by reason of denominational differences, arising by reason of creed making, and teaching for their doctrines the commandments of man, which were imposed upon their adherence as a means of salvation? These, too, had to be altered from time to time to appease the people, showing conclusively that such creeds and doctrines were not authorized of him who changeth not, therefore could not affect the salvation of any man before or after those changes, and only tend to breed distrust among the thoughtful, causing further divisions among brethren and churches.

Many ministers in the present-day churches say, "We are a kingdom of priests, and all Christians have the authority to minister for Christ in the ordinances of the gospel, even to the lady nurse in the hospital." If they are the kingdom of priests referred to in the Scriptures, and all have the same authority, why do one class of ministers refuse to recognize the authority of their fellow Christian ministers? A nonconformist can not be admitted into a Church of England pulpit, nor are their official acts regarded as valid; and the Church of Rome will not permit the clergy of the Church of England to officiate for them, although both claim to believe in Christ and belong to this kingdom of priests. The infidel looks on and laughs all religions to scorn.

AUTHORITY AND REVELATION NECESSARY

My dear reader, the church of Christ on earth represents the kingdom of heaven. It would be as proper and reasonable to presume that a foreigner, or even a born citizen of England, who may be loyal and in full accord with the laws of this government, and, by reason thereof, could take upon himself a command in the army or navy, or perform any official act in the name of the government without proper appointment by the king, as it is for any man, although he may be ever so sincere a believer on the Lord Jesus Christ and fully converted to the gospel, to officiate in the ordinances of the gospel as an authorized servant of Jesus Christ, without first being called of God, as was Aaron, and ordained by the authority of Christ.

Even the king of England, although born in the line of kinghood, did not assume the right to act in such office until he was properly set apart; nor did even Christ himself assume the right of priesthood, although he was the Son of God, until properly called and set apart. Paul said of him:

So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my son, to-day I have begotten thee. As he saith in another place, Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec.—Hebrews 5: 5, 6.

Then if any man, no matter who he may be, assume authority in the name of Christ to which he was never called of God, nor ordained according to the Scriptures, his administration would be non-effectual in the salvation of man.

Divine authority is Christ's authority. He said, "I will build my church"; therefore if he has taken it in hand to build his church he will unmistakably authorize and commission his own ministry, and will recognize their official acts as he did in the first stages of Christianity. Paul said of the priesthood in the church, "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5: 4.)

"Oh," says one, "but that would require a revelation from God; we don't believe that revelations come now." If not, how is Christ going to build his church nowadays? Don't you know that the real fact of the matter, and the reason why we have so many churches to-day is that Christ is not the builder of those churches, and could not possibly be, if there are no more revelations from Christ to his church, to give them the necessary instructions and calls to the ministry? If the voice of revelation and prophecy has ceased, the Church of Christ has ceased to exist.

LIGHT AFTER DARKNESS

Following the long period of spiritual darkness, which was before predicted, "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in," (Romans 11: 25), the Prophet Zechariah (14: 7), said that "at evening time it shall be light." This is a positive statement, "It shall be light." We believe this light has come by the appearance of an angel with the everlasting gospel to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, in harmony with Revelation 14: 6. The church and kingdom is set up with divine power and authority from heaven, and with divine revelations, in which restoration is fully verified the words of Jesus: "I will build my church." To you comes the special invitation from him who spake as man never spake, "Ask, and it shall be given you, seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Therefore seek God and ye shall find him, knock and it shall be opened, seek and ye shall find knowledge.

We cordially invite investigation by correspondence or interview by appointment.

P. S. This little tract is sent out in the interest of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Please do not confuse this church with the Utah Mormons. We have not and never have had any affiliation with Utah Mormons, who also call themselves Latter Day Saints; nor did this church ever believe or practice polygamy, but ever opposed such doctrine, as we believe it never has been and never shall be a part of the gospel law. R. M.

SWITZERLAND ASKS FOR HELP

The little republic of Switzerland is making an appeal to the world for help, for she has been reduced to dire straits by the terrible European war that is being fought on her borders; and while the appeal is addressed particularly to her children who are enjoying peace and prosperity in other lands, she also seeks assistance of the many friends who have enjoyed her hospitality in other years.

As a result of the hostilities on her borders, Switzerland has been obliged to mobilize her entire army of three hundred thousand men, not for offense, but solely to defend her neutrality, at an expense of $230,000 a day, while her entire revenues amount to only $16,000,000 a year. This heavy expense has not only depleted her exchequer, but with all her able-bodied men in military service her industries are at a standstill and her harvests have had to be left to the feeble hands of the aged, the women and children. The result is that thousands of families are now without the bare necessities of life.

In making this appeal the fact is recalled that Switzerland is the mother country of the Red Cross, and, moreover, notwithstanding her own distress, she has offered to become the hospital for the warring nations and to do all in her power to alleviate the sufferings of those injured in battle; and these things should open the hearts of humanity to assist her not only to carry out her charitable purpose, but to relieve the distress of her people. Contributions should be sent to Swiss Relief Fund, 241 Fifth Avenue, New York, where subscription lists can also be obtained. The necessities and unmerited suffering of our little sister republic should appeal to the sympathies of all Americans.—Scientific American, September 19, 1914.

"THE COLLAPSE OF CIVILIZATION"

The irony of eight avowedly Christian nations plunging into such a war as now devastates Europe was emphasized in our issue of August 29, under query, "Has Christianity broken down?" Now Reverend Doctor Frederick Lynch, writing in the New York Christian Work and Evangelist (Undenominational), describes the conflict, from the scene of which he has just returned, as the temporary collapse of Christian civilization. As he sees it, "Christianity has been thrown to the dogs, and the nations have gone mad." As an immediate result of this insanity "we have the sight, in the twentieth century of Christ's church, of eight nations doing their best to annihilate one another, while at the same time the good people in every one of these nations, previous to the sudden spread of the war fever, bore no ill will to the good people of the other nations—indeed, had much good will." In a flash, with the apparent inconsequence of things happening in a dream, came the change. Says Doctor Lynch:

In a moment, almost without premonition, millions of men on the continent have become frenzied, and with wild eyes, with bestial thirst for blood, and with savage yells, are rushing to rip their brothers' bowels out. Women are rushing from besieged and burning cities with little babies in their arms, and little, cold, hungry, tired boys and girls, hardly old enough to walk, trying to keep up. Poverty stares millions in the face—not only during this war, but during long years to come. Thousands of women are to be widowed, millions of little children are to be left fatherless. Natural affections are already blotted out, and their place being taken by strange, cruel lusts and passions. The virtue of women will be a free commodity for all soldiers. Drunkenness has already spread throughout these lands in a mad orgy. All industry will be ruined. Thousands of farms and villages will be laid waste. Thousands of schools and churches will be blown up. Hatreds will be engendered which will keep Europe irritated fifty years after the peace of exhaustion shall come. The commerce of the world will be all upset. The general morality of Europe will be lowered to a point where the churches will have to begin all over again and work a hundred years to restore it. Already thousands of atheists have been made. Almost every other man we have met in Europe this last week has shook his head with sadness and said: "What's the good of Christianity if it can not stop this sort of thing?" It is as if the Devil and all his angels have taken complete possession of Europe.

Doctor Lynch does not evade this challenge to Christianity. We read:

What does it all mean? It means many things. First of all, it means that there is something the matter with our Christianity, or else that we are not presenting it truly. For it seems to have no power whatever over men or nations when any real provocative of men's passions comes. Most of these millions of men who are now drunk with lust of killing, and hoarsely shouting for their brother's blood, have been calling themselves Christians, and have most of them been taught in Christian schools and churches. And in a day it is all forgotten, and if one who remembers dares suggest, as a few did suggest in the various parliaments and in the press, that we remember our religion, he is hooted down.

Is it that the human heart is too desperately wicked for even Christianity to control it when the deep-set passions of all, revenge and lust of blood, are aroused? Is it that it can find only a few in each community—which is all it has yet done—whom it can fully regenerate? Or is it that we have been concerned too much with dealing with those sins which are more easily uprooted and controlled, and have neglected to uproot those awful, fiendish, demoniacal passions that burst forth at such a time as this? Or have we in our endeavor to inculcate righteousness in our personal dealing with our brother of our own land neglected altogether to eradicate the beast out of men which such a crisis as this reveals as only slumbering? For the thousands of men we saw howling in all the cities of Europe were not men any longer. They had become beasts. The beast could even be seen in their eyes. They howled for only three things: drink, women, and blood of their brothers.

Perhaps there has got to be a wholly new presentation of Christianity before these things can be stopped. Perhaps we have got really to teach what Christ himself taught, namely, that love of all Christians for each other, all men of good will for one another, must transcend race, nationality, and every other bond. We have never dared preach this, although it was continually on Christ's lips. He even went further, and said it must transcend family ties. It would be as impossible for one Christian to kill another, did we really believe in Christ and accept his gospel, as it would be for a man to kill his mother.

Another thing which we think every American of the fifty who got this first sight of war has come to feel is that our religion has broken down in its psychology, that our gospel has been addressed to a man who does not exist, that our sermons have been preached to an imaginary man. We have been preaching to men as highly respectable, on the whole good, some of them saintly, while as a matter of fact this has been only seeming. They have seemed this because great temptations have not roused them from their sleep. No one who came across Europe within the last month can ever hold this easy faith again. Men are beasts, cruel, lustful, revengeful, ravening, just as the gospel represents them. There are exceptions, but in most of us the beast lies just below the surface, and nothing but a regeneration which shall sweep through men's souls as a wind from heaven can make them clean.—Literary Digest, September 12, 1914.

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

"To-day, If Ye Will Hear His Voice"

We sat in the morning meeting on the Sabbath day and a clear, young voice sang in notes that rose and fell smoothly and richly,

"To-day, if ye will hear his voice,
Harden not your hearts."

And the spirit of the living God came into the room and touched the hearts of some who heard; for the message delivered to us on that morning was the old, old message given first in the world's morning, that all men are brethren and that they should love one another.

The speaker of the hour strove to show us that necessity exists for the establishment of the Order of Enoch, and it should be easy for Saints to perceive this in the face of the present situation confronting the world. Our brethren, scattered abroad in the world must soon be gathered out of Babylon. To remain in those warring nations means to run the great risk of being marshaled for war on opposite sides in quarrels which are none of their making.

And we who gather have need of close and accurate observance of all the commands which our heavenly Father, in his great kindness, has spoken to us. We have need to act upon those fundamental principles which will build us into a permanent and enduring organization, the principles of love, equality, brotherhood, unity. By these things we shall stand, if we build upon them.

To-day, if we will hear his voice and harden not our hearts, we shall work the works of Enoch's people of old, to whom the Lord gave the pattern for a permanent and everlasting establishment and order to the church to advance the cause which we have espoused, to the salvation of man and the glory of our Father who is in heaven.

Acting in harmony with that order which the Lord gave Enoch, the saints of that age were made equal in temporal things, all were lifted above that poverty which depresses and stifles our finest ability and feelings; unity, peace, and happiness followed as natural results.

Such were the results when Melchisedec's people, a thousand years later, followed the example of Enoch's city. Such will be the results when the Saints of latter days adopt the plan of our Father which will equalize us and bring us near to one another and to him.

"To-day, if ye will hear his voice,
Harden not your hearts."

How earnestly and busily we should be at work to-day, all of us, young, middle-aged, and old, according to our opportunities and ability! "For the day is soon at hand when the earth is ripe."

In the Time of Storm

A band of faithful, patient people were gathered one stormy morning a few weeks since in a tent on reunion grounds. Outside the heavy rains fell; inside there were prayer and testimony and the sense of the heavenly presence.

As one stood speaking of blessings bestowed in answer to faithful, humble prayer, there came upon him the power of the Highest and he spoke in an unknown tongue. The message expressed the Lord's disapproval of the conduct of the nations now at war; it mentioned the fierce storms that will come upon the earth; it admonished Saints to "stand in holy places." It spoke words of comfort to those who were mourning over the loss of loved ones whom they had laid away, holding out the bright hope of restoration.

We were most impressed by the admonition to be prepared for the time of storm that is coming upon the earth. We were reminded of the proclamation that went forth nearly a century ago: "Call upon the nations to repent, both old and young, both bond and free; saying, Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord: for if I, who am a man, do lift up my voice and call upon you to repent, and ye hate me, what will ye say when the day cometh when the thunders shall utter their voices from the ends of the earth, speaking to the ears of all that live, saying: Repent and prepare for the great day of the Lord; yea, and again, when the lightnings shall streak forth from the east unto the west, and shall utter forth their voices unto all that live, and make the ears of all tingle, that hear, saying these words: Repent ye, for the great day of the Lord is come."

Are we preparing ourselves to stand in the time of storm that will surely come? Are we standing in holy places? What does it mean?

Beware How You Hold Them

"All they who receive the oracles of God, let them beware how they hold them, lest they are accounted as a light thing, and are brought under condemnation thereby; and stumble and fall, when the storms descend, and the winds blow, and the rains descend, and beat upon their house."

This admonition to beware may have primary reference to those who are the instruments through whom the Lord's revelations come to men, but is there not in it also a warning to us who hear those words of divine revelation? Have not we, also, need to beware how we treat the word of the Lord when it comes to us? Shall we be able to stand when the storms descend, and the winds blow, and the rains descend, if we have not given heed to the words of counsel that come to us to prepare us for that time?

To Whom is the Call?

Many of the young are singing and dancing on their way as if religion were a thing that need concern only their parents, but the proclamation that is going by the command of God is to "both young and old, both bond and free."

The young have a place in the work as well as the old. All are needed. And, when the young come with their energy and the vim of enthusiastic spirits, they have need often to turn their eyes to the Christ of Galilee, who lived among men that we might learn from his example how saints should conduct themselves as they mingle in the affairs of men.

We must not forget the pattern, neither must we depart from it. We are called to be followers of Christ. To fail in this is to make our profession an empty thing without spiritual life in it.

The Mother's Place

What have the things we have written to do with the Mothers' Column? What has the mother to do with these things?

The mother has to do with all that affects her life and the life of her family. The mother may be, from the beginning of the lives of her children, an earnest, spiritual influence in the home. She may direct her children's thoughts, while still they are young in years, to the opportunities that will open up to them later to become participants in the great work of the latter days. Our children should expect, from their earliest years, to have part in the work. It is committed to us as a people. It is our heritage.

And our children should prepare themselves for usefulness in the church. The mother and the father are their helpers, their counselors, given to guide them in the ways that shall best develop their powers for efficient service when the Lord shall call them to serve.

To serve in the church of God, somewhere, in some little niche in the great whole—this should be the expectation in the hearts of all. For this should the young prepare; in this should the old find their joy. To serve in lowliness of heart, in meekness of spirit, with steadiness not to be shaken, with readiness at the call of duty and opportunity—for this should we strive, one and all to prepare. The Master will use the instrument that is prepared to do his work.

Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN OCTOBER

Prayer for our missions and missionaries in all places, especially remembering the Lamanites, that the prophecies concerning their redemption may be speedily fulfilled. Remember the mission at Jerusalem and pray earnestly for their success and for the health and safety of the laborers there.

Lesson, Doctrine and Covenants 83:10, 11, 12. Memory verse, paragraph 21.

It is timely to suggest especial prayers for our brethren in the mission at Jerusalem. At best, the missionaries there were in a difficult field, and now, when, with little warning, the Old World has been plunged into the turbulent conditions of war, the Saints abroad in the lands involved have need of especial consideration on the part of us who are in homes of peace, safety, and comfort.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS

Brother George W. Hall of Redondo Beach, California, requests prayers. He is sorely afflicted and should be sustained by the Saints.

Brother George W. Shotwell of Pernel, Michigan, who four years ago lost his eyesight in an explosion, requests those who are willing to do so to fast from the morning meal October 18, and to pray that he may again receive his sight. He expects to be administered to on this date. May he be remembered.

Brother J. J. Christensen, of Tingley, Iowa, requests the Prayer Union to pray for Mrs. Engle who is very ill. She is a believer of the gospel but has not yet been baptized.

FORT TERRY, NEW YORK, September 22, 1914.

To the Prayer Union: I am an isolated sister, suffering with almost constant pains in my right side. I entreat all praying to remember me, that God, in his mercy, may heal me entirely, and that he will spare my life to rear my little daughter and see her safe within the fold.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. VESTA ACKERMAN.

Prophecy in Fulfillment

The active energies of life have placed upon the earth cities of wealth and centers of industry. Man is building and occupying wherever he can wrest from earth and sea returns for thought and toil. In reading the history of today we become conscious of what man does, what he may do, and what he will do.

World-wide movements visualized long ago by the inspiration of the divine mind are in fulfillment, making real and actual predicted events. Especially on the Eastern Hemisphere are evidences multiplying that the promises of long ago are in fulfillment. These activities are paving the way for the realization of the promises made to the Jew concerning the land of his birth and the glory of his redemption.

Palestine's insignificance, even with all its former productiveness, measured by the larger world of to-day, has not the natural resources to develop the greatness declared for it in latter days. Much of the wealth gathered there will be the product of other lands. The characteristics of the Jew to develop in foreign lands will be brought into action when he becomes again a home builder. New incentive will be had to accumulate with a free hand the wealth pictured in the promises of God.

This wealth will gather the nations against Jerusalem to take spoils. Man's insistent need and his desire has always sought wealth in one way or another. From this greed and attempt at gratification Jerusalem shall not escape.

On this hemisphere the promises made will be fulfilled in the seed of Israel. Subsequent history clearly indicates this land as the land determined in the prophetic declaration in Deuteronomy, blessed above all lands. No land in the history of the race has offered the rewards of human endeavor that Joseph's land has done.

The interpretations of prophetic teachings undergo revisions from time to time. The human factor is accepted more and more into the purpose of the creator for man's regeneration. The perspective of our day is more than conscious that man exercising the agency given him and in obedience to the higher laws will of himself carry out the highest purpose of his being on the earth—not in his astral life, but in the wonderful heritage of Joseph and "the good will of him that dwelt in the bush."

The trend of thought relative to the knowledge of man's destiny is occupying on the practical side. The ancient teachings are giving place to the more practical lessons learned in the earth experience. Infinite wisdom has so ordered it. Man working out his redemption under the inspiration of the divine will must of necessity work change in his dwelling place. The secret of all this is his redemption. The place which gave man birth, the scenes which brought into exercise the use and faculties of his being will become a fitting abode for him, together with the Master who promised that as he went away he would return again.

It is obvious in the light of life's experience that the expectations raised in the promises of God have their fulfillment through the agency of man. Hence, we attempt to bridge and understand that which seems to separate the seen from the unseen, that which shall merge the present into the future. There is no value in lessons taught unless they teach us and fit us to occupy in the sphere made familiar by living in the life regenerated, that brings light and intelligence, giving assurance of things hoped for and evidences of fulfillment to follow.

O'Neal-Robertson Debate

I visited Thompson, Nebraska, last winter and preached one night in a schoolhouse, which resulted in a challenge from Mr. O'Neal, of the non-Progressive Christian Church, to discuss certain issues. We agreed upon eight propositions, the discussion beginning September 1. This debate was held in his church, before a congregation of his people, I being a stranger to them all. Mr. O'Neal asked these people to treat me as kindly as they did him, and I am pleased to say that I received very kind treatment from them all.

The first two nights he affirmed that the thirty-nine books of the Old Testament and the thirty-seven of the New contained all of God's revelations to man. He did not develop much strength on this proposition, however, and in his second speech practically admitted that my contention that God's works as revealed in nature are all revelations of God to man.

The next six nights I affirmed that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and its teachings in harmony with those of the Bible. The first three evenings on this proposition my opponent spent in an attack on the Doctrine and Covenants, reading and placing constructions on what he read in an effort to show that "Joe" was giving revelations by which he was to profit at the expense of his followers. Hence, he was not a true revelator, and the Book of Mormon is a fraud. The fourth night he tried to apply the texts I used in defense of the book in other ways, and to answer the archaeological evidences I had presented. The last two nights, evidently despairing of accomplishing anything in this way, he spent the time reading from the works of Howe and others the stories of the bad character of the whole Smith family. Inasmuch as we were debating before a congregation of his followers, I thought it best to follow him as much as possible; hence, I did not get to show as much evidence in favor of the Book of Mormon as I would have liked.

On the other propositions, which covered the perpetuation of the apostolic office, manifestations of Spirit, laying on of hands, name of church and its members, etc., he did not manifest any particular brilliancy. In fact, I found Mr. O'Neal one of the easiest men I have ever had to meet in the defense of this church. I was told by some that he did not make one single point in his discussion; there were others, doubtless, who thought he did well. I do not wish to boast, but while I was a stranger before the debate, I now have many friends and many invitations to come again, with the offer of a number of homes where I may stay. While there I made my home with Brother and Sister Preston, an elderly couple, who are the only Saints in that community. They have been separated from the church for many years, and expressed themselves as being much encouraged with the work.

In gospel bonds,

E. A. ROBERTSON.

SPRINGERVILLE, ARIZONA, September 3, 1914.

Editors Herald: From this beautiful southwestern region, we write to certify that we are still alive, and alert to duty, we hope, though having been absent from our usual place of labor among Oklahoma friends.

We made the cross-country trip, with the family, to our new field in Arizona by team, in order to save some three hundred dollars in railroad transportation, and, incidentally, to get something of a practical idea of what experiences the early Nephites must have had in making cross-country trips from the isthmus to and fro to the great lake region.

Concerning the latter, we were almost at a loss to comprehend how it could have been possible for any Nephite or any other kind of an ite not having a vehicle or even an ocean-to-ocean automobile highway to have made the trip and get through alive, until we encountered the modern Burro pack train, defying all roads through the mountains, each stolid little animal pleasantly carrying enough equipment to supply the camp needs of a dozen persons.

For thoroughgoing and absolute independence in travel, I would rather have a half dozen of those long-eared, good-natured, musical animals than to possess an automobile. Even a train is liable to wreck or be delayed by washouts, but the ancient mode is safe and sure, though, of course, not quite so rapid as some of the speed mania products. But by jogging peacefully along on a pack saddle one has a splendid opportunity to contemplate the vastness of space and the relative scope of eternity, etc.

So when the war of nations interferes and spreads until it becomes needful for us to centralize as a people in order to be at peace, none need be surprised if the writer comes in on a burro, like a patriarch coming into Jerusalem with an oblation of frankincense and myrrh.

We have had a great trip, and well worth the while. No sickness, bad accident or mentionable distress.

Springerville, Arizona, is situated in a beautiful valley where the little "silvery Colorado wends its way." Adjacent to the town is another village, called Eagerville, which is populated by Latter Day Saints of the western apostasy, a thrifty, kind-hearted people.

In camp we breakfast this morning upon what is almost veritable manna to us, some of it contributed by a colonel of the valley here, a descendant, I think, of W. W. Phelps, some from the liberality of a Brighamite family, and some purchased from a mercantile Gentile.

This Mr. Phelps has a Presbyterian wife, but being of Latter Day Saint parentage he can not easily absorb much of other doctrines, though he has been in spiritual wilderness for years, and listens to the gospel story retold like one awakening from a dream. Mr. Phelps was quick to assert his belief that the Josephites have the best religion in the world, although he has met none of our people for years, and is not posted as to the present scope and magnitude of the true Latter Day Saint work through the Josephite activities.

The passion of the gospel hunter rests upon me when in contact with Israel's wandering sons, and we earnestly hope to be serviceable to the Lord in spreading gospel light where shadows are blighting darkened lives.

Corresponding friends please notice that our address is Phoenix, Arizona.

Sincerely,
JAMES E. YATES.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, September 10, 1914.

Editors Herald: Brother O. R. Miller, who has been convalescing in Omaha for the past two or three months, having practically recovered from his lameness, was requested to hold a series of meetings before starting to his mission field. The district tent was brought into use and placed on the spacious lawn of Brother and Sister Lowe, at Twenty-second and Lake street, one of the large porches of their residence was used as the speaker's stand, and which also gave ample room for the choir. A great deal of credit is due Brother and Sister Lowe for their kindness and charity in connection with these meetings.

The main opening of the tent was brought up in close proximity to the porch, which permitted the use of all the room in the tent for seats, numbering about two hundred. The sides of the tent were raised and chairs were spread out over the lawn to the distance of twenty feet around the tent. The total seating capacity was about four hundred.

In order to give the proper publicity to these tent meetings, five hundred handbills were distributed throughout the neighborhood, and a house to house canvass was made and posters were placed in all store windows. I might say in reference to these handbills that they were a trifle different from the ordinary type. A description of them will do no harm and might help some one who is engaged in similar work, for they did bring good results, and good results are what we are all working for.

The heading of the bill was, "Lawn Services;" underneath this was the location, then followed "Sermons and Lectures," "Special Music." Then came a cut of the speaker's likeness; on one side of this cut was the date set to begin the services; the other side referred to Brother Paul N. Craig having the music in charge, etc; and the lower part of the bill was devoted to some of the subjects. "Jesus, human or divine, which?" "Causes of infidelity," "Rejection of Jesus to-day." "Mormonism exposed." And last but not least in importance "There will be no collection taken." There is no doubt that a good, snappy handbill will do more good than fifty that resemble some public auction sale bill. Good, catchy, legitimate, up-to-date methods should be used in promoting publicity of religious work as well as work in the commercial world.

There were one hundred and forty-two people the first evening, quite a large percentage of them being nonmembers; and while some of the evenings that followed were quite cool, yet the smallest attendance was one hundred and twelve. The meetings were begun August 17 and continued over three Sundays. The first Sunday the subject discussed was "The new birth." There were two hundred and fifty present, and Brother Miller enjoyed the best of liberty and had splendid attention. The second Sunday evening he spoke on the "Prophetic Mission of Joseph Smith," to the largest crowd of the series, numbering somewhere between three hundred and seventy-five and four hundred. The sermon was well received, notwithstanding the frequent reference to angel visitations, revelations, etc.

The closing Sunday evening the discussion was on the "Book of Mormon," and again the gospel story in all its purity was set forth with startling clearness, presented in the spicy, clear-cut, pleasing way that is characteristic of Brother Miller's sermons. The audience of three hundred and fifty seemed to drink in every word, and accorded the closest attention.

Brother Miller in commenting on the meetings stated, "I have never held a series of meetings before in my life when we had as regular an attendance of refined, thinking people, and never witnessed before as attentive and orderly audiences at open air services."

There is no doubt in my mind but that a great deal of good has been accomplished. The inconsistencies of old traditions and false reports in circulation regarding the church were ruthlessly exposed; barriers were broken down; and individuals who were disposed to sneer and scoff have had their eyes opened. I might say further that several of the Saints who have long been in the "arms of Morpheus" have had an awakening.

Two or three will be baptized as a result, and to my mind there will be others, as there were quite a number who started in the first evening and attended every service, and seemingly were intensely interested. The main thing I desire to draw attention to, and the real object of this letter, and which contributed very much to the success of the meetings, was the splendid cooperation given Brother Miller by the branch members. Quite a number of the Saints would come early and be seen seated in the tent; the choir under the able direction of Brother Craig would start some good, lively, gospel song, and neighbors and others passing by would be attracted in. Special anthems, solos and male choruses were rendered. The choir have received many compliments for the part they took in the meetings. All choir members made genuine sacrifices in order to be in their places promptly to render all the aid possible, and the result confirms my opinion that the development of a choir is a great resource to a branch.

All Saints should encourage and assist wherever possible the building up of choirs, and promote the department of music in the church, as it is beginning to develop, that those who have talent and ability, and a desire to cultivate along musical lines, may have a definite work to do for the Master in that capacity.

Cooperation is one of the secrets of success in this grand work. Without every one putting his shoulder to the gospel wheel in a united effort, little can be accomplished. Where there is unity of purpose for good, and a get-together spirit, there God will be, and when God is with us, what can prevail against us?

Yours sincerely,

R. W. SCOTT.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 11, 1914.

Editors Herald: I am at the Independence Sanitarium as a patient. On September 28, I will have been here one year. I am doing fine now, praise, honor and glory be to the Lord. If it were not for God I would not be here.

Oh, what a grand blessing and privilege it is to be among the Saints, especially when one is sick, so the elders can be called to administer! Oh, how thankful I am to God for his kind mercies shown unto a poor, unworthy soul such as I! I wish to live a life of which he will not be ashamed.

I am here for heart trouble. Dear Saints, I need the prayers of all. I assure you that I will always bear you in mind. I was so bad last winter that all except two of those who came to see me gave me up. I would have died had not the Lord intervened and spared my life. So I have much to be thankful for. I have great faith in the administration of the elders. I am on the road to recovery, thank God. I also thank the Saints for offering up their prayers in my behalf.

I desire my eyesight, so I can see to study all good books. I can not read my letter now. I wish to live and do much good unto others.

Oh, how thankful I am to God for bringing me here where I am among the Saints. I hope to profit by my afflictions. I was careless and indifferent to the church work. We ought all to become more prayerful, and not forget to do our duty towards God and man, and thus lay up treasures in heaven where nothing can break in and steal, or corrupt.

We who are here at Independence, are we doing what we should? I fear all are not. We must make this the Zion indeed, so that when the great rush comes for safety we may be ready for it. We must be earnest, and perform our work, or we may have to suffer with the rest of the world. It is one thing to preach and another thing to practice what we preach. We are in the midst of trying times. Let us examine ourselves and see if we are really and truly in the faith.

Dear Saints, we do not know when we will be called over yonder. Are we ready for the change? I am afraid not all are ready. I am trying to be found ready at any time. I wish to do much good yet before I go home from whence there is no returning.

Dear Saints, I need your prayers. I will always remember you.

Your brother in bonds,

JOSEPH B. LAMPERT.

News from Missions

Palestine

Last winter I received a petition from the leading citizens of Roum, Mount Lebanon, Syria, urging us to come there and establish a school and preach the gospel to them. Desiring to investigate the proposition, I left the city in June, and, accompanied by Dragoman Solomon Njeam, our blind brother, started upon our first missionary trip in the Holy Land.

The sail from Jaffa to Beirut was uneventful, save for an attack from my old enemy, mal de mer or seasickness. The scenery had no charm for me, even under the shadow of Carmel, where the Prophet Elijah had his wonderful experience with the four hundred prophets of Baal, when the Lord sent fire from heaven and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water in the trench. (1 Kings 18: 18-46.)

I often wonder why it was necessary for the Lord to say to Israel, "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him." Surely the display of divine power had but little effect upon them.

The city of Haifer, at the base of Carmel, is beautiful from the sea, in fact the prettiest along the coast. German influence preponderates here, and their industry and thrift is seen everywhere. The following morning we arrived in Beirut, where the American Presbyterians have their college, and where about two thousand young men are receiving an education that will fit them for lives of usefulness, and tend to elevate the conditions of the country.

Beirut harbor is called one of the prettiest in the world, but, like it was at Naples, I failed to see its beauty. I am sure those reporting it had never visited the coast of Maine. Casco Bay, Booth Bay, Rockland, Penobscot Bay, Castine, Bar Harbor, and Roque Bluff have any of these eastern points beaten. Nothing in Europe surpasses, for scenic beauty, the coast of New England. The breakwater at Beirut has been built so near the shore that there is scarcely room for more than six or eight steamships at once.

The Italians sank a Turkish cruiser in the harbor during the late war, and it is there to this day, telling its mute story of disaster.

We left Beirut at an early hour for Sidon, going by carriage. It is an eight-hour trip. There are beautiful pine forests surrounding Beirut, and extending up the mountains, reminding one of the prophecy: "Is it not a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?" (Isaiah 29: 17.) Palestine is still destitute of forests, as Turkey taxes the trees, and the people cut them down to escape taxation. After leaving the pines we entered the famous gardens of Beirut, and drove for miles through the mulberry, orange, lemon, apricot, date and banana trees. This was pleasing to the eye and profitable to the owner. Beirut is the center of the silkworm industry. Here and there we passed factories where the cocoons are cleaned and spun into thread. Here also are the largest olive groves in the country. The finest oil I ever tasted is pressed here.

About ten miles from the city we left the beautiful groves and entered a dreary waste by the sea, which appeared all the more desolate by contrast. The sands of the sea were blown into great heaps, that made inroads upon the tillable area. The mountain sides were bare of soil, giving a desolate appearance. There were traces of the old military road, over which had marched the armies of the ancient nations. Here marched the hosts of Nebuchadnezzar, as he conquered the world; the mighty army of Alexander the Great, which never knew defeat; the legions of Rome, with their great engines of destruction used in the sieges of Sidon, Tyre, and Jerusalem. Over this way came many of the crusaders as they sought to rescue the Holy City from the hand of the infidels. I felt that I was riding over historic if not holy ground. On the left were the famous mountains of Lebanon, on the right the blue waters of the Mediterranean. Altogether it was an enjoyable trip. Sidon is surrounded with gardens surpassing those of Beirut, for they have an abundance of water for irrigating purposes.

With an antiquity older than history, Sidon is among the oldest cities in the world. It is mentioned in the Bible in connection with Sodom and Gomorrah, and is supposed to have been settled by Sidon, the grandson of Noah. (Genesis 10: 15-19.) In the days of Joshua it was called "that great Sidon." (Joshua 19: 28.) Increasing in population, they passed down the coast and built Tyre, which is called the "daughter of Sidon." These cities sent their ships to all parts of the world. Their children passed over into Africa and founded Carthage, that so long rivaled Rome. The wealth of these cities was productive of luxury, power and pride. They gave themselves to the worst forms of idolatry, which incurred the displeasure of heaven. They joined with the enemies of Israel and demanded the wealth and sacred ornaments of the temple at Jerusalem. When the Jews were sold into captivity they loaded their vessels with this human cargo and sold them as slaves in distant lands. For their sins God denounced them, and they were brought low.

Speaking of Tyre the Lord said: "They shall make a spoil of thy riches, and make a prey of thy merchandise; and they shall break down thy walls, and destroy thy pleasant houses: and they shall lay thy stones and thy timber and thy dust in the midst of the water. And I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease; and the sound of thy harps shall no more be heard. And I will make thee like the top of a rock: thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon; thou shalt be built no more: for I the Lord have spoken it." (Ezekiel 26: 12-15.) This prophecy has been wonderfully fulfilled.

After repeated capture, the inhabitants removed to an island about three miles to the north, and one half mile from the shore. Here they continued till the days of Alexander the Great. He removed a large portion of the material of the former city and with it built a causeway from the shore to the island. Advancing by this new military road, he took the city by storm. Eight thousand were killed in the attack, two thousand were crucified, and thirty thousand were sold into slavery. To-day the city is a mournful proof of the fulfillment of prophecy. A few huts, a few fishing boats, are all that remain of the old city. The modern city is built on the island, and one can see the stones and columns under the sea to this day.

There are many interesting ruins in this country, some of which are being opened by the French and of late by the Americans. Not far from Tyre is the monument of Hyrum, king of Tyre, who assisted Solomon in the building of the temple. Between Tyre and Sidon is the little village of Sarepta, so called in the New Testament. Here Jesus healed the daughter of the Syro-Phœnician woman, who was possessed of a devil. This poor woman manifested great faith, after being rebuffed in a way that would have discouraged most of us. (Matthew 15: 21-28.) This was the only visit of Jesus into the region of Tyre and Sidon.

Sidon is noted to-day for its vineyards, its harbor, its citadel and its tombs. On the rocks in the harbor stands an old castle, weatherbeaten and much dilapidated, connected with the mainland with a bridge with nine arches. On a high hill to the south stands the citadel, crumbling into ruins. The cemetery of the ancient people is revealing some wonderful things. One of the catacombs some thirty feet deep has a broad avenue twenty-five feet wide, with niches on each side. In one of them was found three marble sarcophaguses, eight feet long, three wide and three high. The largest of these when opened was found to contain what appeared to be clear water, but the body was wonderfully preserved. The ignorant workmen, thinking the water was of no value, emptied it, and immediately the body, as it dried, began to crumble away. It evidently represented an embalming process, unknown to-day.

Hotel service in Sidon is very poor. I was compelled to stop there one night. In the morning the landlord wanted to charge me for all the beds in the room, as I had occupied the room alone. I replied that was not true, as each of the beds had so many occupants it was impossible for me to obtain sleep till after daylight. I was compelled to slaughter many of my roommates, and the five battles we had during the night resulted in several hundred deaths. I refused to pay for their lodging, and vowed my next bed in Sidon would be on the sand by the seashore.

The hack driver said it was a four-hour drive to Roum. We left at five p. m. and at nine were half way, so he said. We stopped an hour to feed the horses and rest, and then began the long climb up the mountain. About three we reached Roum, and aroused the "head man's" family, who made us welcome. Roum is a village of about twelve hundred people. It is built on the crest of a mountain about six thousand feet above the sea. The houses rest one against another without regard to streets, which are narrow and dirty. The sides of the mountain are terraced from the top to the bottom; and figs, grapes, peaches, apricots, apples and the famous mulberry trees add to the enchantment of the scene.

The Lebanon people are superior to the inhabitants of Palestine in many ways, and are thirsting after knowledge. Many of their children have had the advantage of attending the schools at Sidon and Beirut.

They were kind and hospitable, and anxious to learn of the gospel; so we taught them publicly and from house to house. I was enabled to reach from three to five families each day, and in the evening a number would come to my room, and there we told the angel's message. Several families asked for baptism, among them two Mohammedan families, who saw light and truth in the message presented.

It appears to be an excellent place for school work, by which way the people may be reached. They assure me that from one to two hundred young people can be reached through the school, who will pay their way; and, as they expect daily religious teaching in the schools here, many may be reached. The only question in my mind is, Can the church meet the demand? In a year or two many young men would be preaching the gospel to the people in their own language, with no more expense than is required to support a good missionary and his wife.

I was visited by a physician from Jezzen, who invited me to his home, and promised that some of the people would hear the message. This gentleman is an Abyssinian, and stands high in the Lebanons.

On several occasions people who were ill asked for administration, and the Lord wonderfully blessed the ordinance according to their faith. One instance was that of an intelligent lady from an adjoining village suffering from a stroke of paralysis. After explaining the ordinance to her, she expressed her faith in God and his promises. I did not call there for a few days, and found she had been walking about the house and had the use of her hand almost perfectly. We again sought the Lord in her behalf and feel assured that our prayers were answered. Several, sick with fevers, were restored immediately. Their simple, childlike faith brought the blessing.

Soon there came rumors of war in Europe, and that the banks were stopping payment. As I had been unable to hear from the bank, and money for our summer's work was deposited in Beirut, it became necessary for me to take the long, hot ride to that city. I found the reports true, and that they were paying only twenty per cent. As that was hardly enough to cover the expense back to Jerusalem, I saw the manager, and he strained a point and advanced a little more. Immediately returning to Roum, I arranged to start for Jerusalem the next day, making the third trip through the terrible heat that week. On reaching Beirut, we learned that England had notified the boat not to leave the harbor for fear of a German cruiser, and it looked like we must return by the overland route. Somewhat unexpectedly an Italian boat arrived during the night, and we could secure passage by paying double rates. There was nothing else to do, so we succeeded in reaching Jaffa and finally Jerusalem. Here I learned that the banks were paying but ten per cent, and that the mission fund was very low. I also learned that no bank draft, check, or money order was being honored from any country. Nothing but gold is received, or the American gold bills, yellow backs, that can be sent in a letter. They are received subject to discount.

Jerusalem is in a fever of war preparation. Nothing like it has ever been known in modern times. Every man from eighteen to forty-five is impressed into the service. As they are hard up for money they allow men to buy out for $200. Some are doing it, but the majority have not the money. All the six thousand horses and mules have been confiscated for military purposes. They force open the magazines (stores), and help themselves to what they want for the army. If there is resistance they take so much the more.

Thousands of the Jews receive money from their people at home, in Russia, Greece, Italy, Germany, France, England and many other countries. It is pitiful to see these poor creatures crowd around the post and banks pleading for a little money.

Already there is great destitution and much suffering. Very little can be done to help them, for nearly everyone is in destitute circumstances. Unless there is help from some source ere this is read, many will die of starvation. People walk through the streets with sad countenance. At the least sign of trouble the stores are immediately closed, and their owners keep under cover. Our milkman has taken his cows and sheep into the house to save them from the army. Every day finds many entering the city to be enrolled in the service. Thirty-eight thousand men are at Nablous, one hundred and twenty thousand at Damascus, and many here, with a thousand being enrolled daily.

What is this for? We do not know. We can not learn. All news is suppressed. In fact there is very little allowed to enter the country, and that so conflicting we know nothing of the truth. American mail has not been regular the past month, and our papers have had nothing about the war to date. We are hungry for news, but this Government believes in keeping the people in total ignorance. A few telegrams come to the consuls and they put them on a bill board. Some enterprising man copies them on his typewriter, and sells them for one metallik each.

Our school work continues with unabated interest, save that a few of the older ones are absent in the army, and others are trying to escape from it. We frequently hear shouting in the streets and on investigation find the men of the villages marching in with their crude musical instruments, with shouts for the Sultan, and death to his enemies. Turkey has the largest army in her history. How they will ever provide for them is a puzzle to us, as they have no commissary department, such as we are familiar with. The men are compelled to bring five days food with them. It is not surprising that they are robbing the stores for food and clothing.

Yesterday I learned that all the banks have suspended payment until after the war is over. We must depend upon receiving from America ere our little is entirely gone. And as nothing but gold or its equivalent, gold bills, can be used it is a difficult problem and up to the church to reach us in some way. We are not alarmed, for the promises of the Lord are sure, and we will come through all right. The situation is interesting and novel in the extreme.

I wish to thank the Saints in Maine, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, and other places on behalf of the mission for the papers and magazines sent us, that have made it possible for us to know what is happening in the world. Their names are too many to mention here, but we thank them one and all. We pray that their zeal may continue during another year, and that we may have cause for continued thanks.

The weather is hot here making it difficult to move around during the hours from ten to four, but the thirst for news causes us to brave the heat that we may read the war bulletins.

We pray that our home land may escape the calamities coming over the earth, for surely the word of prophecy declares that times of trouble such as have not been since the world was are upon us.

Pray for the peace of Jerusalem.

England

Since my last notes many changes have taken place, chief of which is the great war, in which many thousands have already perished, and thousands are rendered homeless, fatherless, and childless. Only those who have experienced these rapid changes can realize how in a few days all things were thrown in confusion, trade, business, stock exchange, banks, railways, in fact everything seemed to be disorganized for the time being. The only topic of conversation was the war. In one month Great Britain raised five hundred thousand men, and now we learn that another five hundred thousand are to be raised as quickly as possible.

Our conference was held in the city of Gloucester. This was the first conference of the British Isles Mission, to be held in this city. The little band of Saints did nobly, and entertained the conference in such a way that everybody was pleased and satisfied with the ample provisions made for the outer man. This was the special work of the Gloucester Branch, and when the vote of thanks was tendered it was real, indeed.

May God bless and prosper the Stroud Road Branch. They may reasonably be proud of their first experience, in catering for the mission conference. I do not believe in flattery, but I do believe in giving a word of encouragement and cheer for a task nobly performed. I therefore wish to say that I am proud of the Gloucester Saints, and the way they have performed their task, and I herewith tender to them my hearty thanks for the same.

The spiritual exercises were of a very high order, indeed. I am sure that everyone present felt the divine influence throughout the conference. Our young men excelled themselves. I do not think they have in all their experience realized a greater degree of the Spirit in their ministry. The business sessions passed off very pleasantly, a good spirit being present all the time, but especially on Saturday evening when everyone seemed imbued, earnest, realizing that our work means work indeed.

The Sunday services were held in the Glevum Hall, Southgate. The elders' quorum meeting at 9 a. m. was our opening experience, and a good time was had. The conference service opened at 10.30, when the preacher, Elder James Baty, occupied. The sermon was a source of blessing and comfort to all, and our brother himself was truly blessed.

The afternoon is always the meeting of the Saints, when prayer, praise, and testimony, accompanied with the gifts of the Spirit. Tongues, prophecy and spiritual blessing rested upon the assembly, but the gifts were only exercised in part at that meeting.

As the shadows began to gather, we met for our preaching meeting, and we had a very nice gathering, Elder Thomas Jones, and Bishop R. May were the speakers. Both gave earnest, forceful addresses, which I believe did good, and conveyed the needed blessing to the people. The day closed with an open air service, Brethren Thomas Jones and E. J. Trapp being placed in charge. Elders Edward Maloney, of the Manchester District, and John Judd, of Enfield, London District, were the speakers, and two very fine addresses were given before a fair audience. The Saints were delighted and built up by the efforts of these young men. God bless them.

On Monday morning, Elder J. E. Meredith and his brethren of the elders' quorum met at the Glevum Hall, at nine o'clock a. m. to hear for the second time a paper on quorum work, by the writer. A profitable time was had, and at an after meeting the quorum voted that the paper be sent to the SAINTS' HERALD for publication.

Then came what was called by some members present the cream of the conference, which consisted of most spiritual addresses from some of the youngest ministers in the mission. Every faculty of the Saint seemed to be touched by one or the other of the brethren. You could not single them out; each one was just as powerful as it was possible to be just at that moment.

The general comment was "I never shall forget it; it was most delightful; I never thought that we had such promising men." Well, I just realized the Scripture which reads, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" Oh, I had a feast that morning! It seemed altogether too short; but time will not wait, now is the time. None like the present. Yes, to-day is ours, to-day is mine, to-day is yours. What are you doing with it?

Again in the shadow of the evening we met for our final meeting before we should bid adieu to each other, some will not meet again for a whole year.

There were but few who did not take part in this grand parting meeting, and indeed we had an outpouring of the Spirit. The gifts were exercised, and the Saints were comforted. The Spirit bore witness to the wars that were to take place, and also of the awful suffering that some would have to pass through. For nearly three hours that meeting lasted, and even then it was with great difficulty that it was brought to a close. Thus ended a most enjoyable conference, one long to be remembered in the history of this British Isles Mission.

Since our conference I have had the pleasure of baptizing three souls in my native town, Stafford. Though we were few in number there, we had some very nice meetings. The Spirit testified through the servant of the Lord that the work in that town will yet revive and shine forth. Many good men have been brought into the work in that town, and they have done a good work in many other parts of the world. I look forward to the time when we shall be able to sing, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning." In that day the interest will revive, and souls will be gathered in.

I desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of our sick brother, J. R. Greenwood, of Stafford, who has lost the use of his legs, in a great measure. Please remember him before the throne of grace.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

Australia

The state of Queensland has a semitropical climate, and produces sugar-cane and bananas galore, beside the usual farm products, such as corn, etc.

Queensland was organized into a district by Elders G. T. Griffiths, at a special conference, which convened in Brisbane, the state capital, July 25, 1914. The writer participated in this conference, which was one of the most enjoyable he has had the privilege of attending, the Holy Spirit being made manifest in power. The district comprises three branches: South Brisbane, Wondai and Kingaroy. The two latter have been recently organized by Brother Griffiths, and are a great distance from the former.

The writer has now spent over three years in the mission field under appointment from the missionary in charge, and has labored in the states or districts of New South Wales, Victoria and Queensland. The advent of Brethren Griffiths and Miller appears to have given an impetus to the work in this mission. The Saints have reached a much higher spiritual standard than formerly, and the Lord is calling more laborers into his harvest.

The field in Australia is very large. Being a comparatively new country, the population is scattered over a wide area, particularly in this district. This makes the work of the missionaries in these parts much different from that of those who are laboring in thickly populated countries. The writer is now laboring in connection with the recently organized branches at Wondai and Kingaroy, and in this locality it is the usual thing for preachers to ride forty miles from one preaching place to another. The places of preaching are either small union churches, which are used in turn by all Protestant denominations, or the homes or barns of the farmers.

At our meetings, the major portion of the attendants are men, those robust sons of the soil, who have wrestled first with the Australian "scrub" and overcome it, and then have turned acre upon acre of land into fruitful fields. This is a healthy life, and it also seems to make men large-hearted and more given to things spiritual than the men of the city. Although only in this particular locality for a few weeks, I have already been enabled to make two new openings for preaching.

We are endeavoring to organize the Religio work in this district, the writer having been elected district president and provisional superintendent of normal. We desire especially to encourage the normal work, for the reason that the Lord has admonished several of the young Saints to prepare for future labor in his harvest, and we know that the normal course will greatly assist in making capable teachers.

There are in Australia, already, several bright young men, who have entered the mission field at the divine call. Thus, now, after the mundane soil has been broken by those physically strong, they go forth in the strength of the Lord to sow spiritual seed in new ground, having first to clear away the "scrub" of prejudice and tradition. God has called these young men and we would say, "Give them a chance," for some are wont to despise youth. Only for young men this mission would be in a very poor plight now.

Our Brother Griffiths reminds the writer of the Apostle Paul, for as that apostle wrote to Timothy, "Let no man despise thy youth," so has Elder Griffiths said similar words to the young Saints and ministry of the Australasian Mission. The Lord has blessed him and us in this movement.

There is a great demand here now for the church publications and literature. We can not get the books from the publishing house quick enough. This is a sign that there is to be knowledge and capability amongst the Saints in Australia in the future.

This country, along with the whole of the British Empire, is now entering into a state of war, which is another of the signs of coming events, which usually cast their shadows before them, and which causes the Saints, more than ever, to long for the redemption of Zion.

The work is now progressing in this mission, and with the Lord's help, we will keep the flag flying. Brethren, pray for us.

The undersigned would like to correspond with any missionaries or elders for an interchange of views and working notes.

In gospel bonds,

BRYAN H. LONGFIELD.

Nauvoo

Our reunion at Nauvoo was a grand success in more ways than one. The attendance was rather small so far as the Saints were concerned, apart from the missionaries, their wives, and in some cases their children. The meetings were orderly, and peace reigned throughout the camp.

The good people of the city of Nauvoo turned out to the evening preaching meetings, and seemed to enjoy some of the sermons at least. Some were very liberal in caring for several of the brethren, taking them into their homes to sleep and eat, free of charge. Brethren Sade, Dykes and Bishop Lambert were "on the job," faithfully discharging their duties as general overseers. Food was supplied in abundance, and well cooked. There was little or no sickness, and a spirit of cheer and good will was in evidence everywhere.

The Sunday school and Religio work was ably conducted by Brother Gomer R. Wells and Sister Ethel Lacey. Sister Esther Ortleb made her cradle roll work very interesting and novel. We had no idea the extent to which this department can be used as an introductory measure to reach outsiders.

The reunion as a whole will leave a lasting impression for good. I shall not repeat the compliments that were passed with reference to our own people as a whole.

After the folding of the tents, on Monday, we started for Burnside, Illinois, where Brother Solomon Salisbury lives. We commenced a meeting here that night in the Christian church, and continuing nine days. On August 30, three young sisters were baptized. Brother Harpe baptized two and Brother John Larson one. There are quite a number of members in that vicinity, who need the help of some good shepherd. By agreement among the Saints, Brother John Larson is to be active and to have the oversight of the work there. There is no branch organization.

September 3 we came to Elvaston, Brother G. V. Wallace secured the Modern Woodmen hall for us to hold services in, at a cost of one dollar a night. Our efforts were reasonably successful in securing and holding an audience. At this place there are several members of the church, with no branch, nor no one to take the lead in caring for the work.

September 14 we went to Ferris, the home of Brother Don Salisbury, who is sorely afflicted with palsy. His mind is clear, but his continual suffering tells on him. It is here, too, where our congenial Brother Herbert Salisbury and family live, and some others of the Saints. It was not considered advisable that we hold meeting there just now, so we came away, calling at Adrian, where Mr. and Sister Stevenson are conducting a mercantile business, where Brother Clarence Conn runs an elevator, and where Sister Hinceck resides. Here, too, it was thought to be inopportune to hold services, so we went out to Rock Creek to Bishop George P. Lambert's for a little visit and consolation. The heavy rains having caused a bad washout furnished some excuse for our delay.

We came on to Burlington, visited two families of Saints, Ortlebs, and McComas, and stayed one night, then on to this place. We commenced services in the city park, where the seats, band stand and electric lights made our surroundings very pleasant; the croquet club kindly yielding to our services. The rains caused dampness and cooled the air so that we could not hold services any longer in the park.

We then appealed to the deacons and trustees of the Christian Church for the privilege to occupy their building when not used by their members, and the privilege was granted. We commenced services there last evening, with a fair-sized and attentive congregation. We mention the kindness of our Christian Church friends so that they may know we appreciate their liberality, and that it may serve as an incentive to their brethren in other parts to do likewise, and that our people may be mindful of their good services and reciprocate by doing as well. Elder A. J. Benton of the Iowa Children's Home spoke in our afternoon meeting last Sunday.

This is the place where Brother O. H. Bailey and Elder W. G. Roberts held their debate. The people remember the occasion well, and credit Brother Bailey as being the abler man.

Sister Anderson, living four miles south of town, a sister to our good Brother Lawrence Willey, died of cancer of the stomach at eight o'clock to-day. There are several Saints in this region of country, and a church building not occupied about four miles in the country from town.

We are domiciled at Brother Lawrence Willey's hotel. It should be said to the credit of the people of this place that they are among the most sociable and seemingly the most liberal of any people we have met. It would be unjust to Brother Lawrence Willey were we to neglect mentioning his caring for us most liberally, and, too, that one year ago he spent fifty dollars in rent for the opera house in which to hold preaching services. Yours in the conflict,

E. B. MORGAN, AND
C. E. HARPE.

News from Branches

Saint Thomas, Ontario

We have the banner Sunday school of the district. Brother Charles Raison is a very efficient superintendent, and looks well after the best interests of the school. Our Bible class can not be beaten by any other of its size. Its members are thinkers, and not at all afraid to speak their thoughts, all of which tends to make the lessons interesting. Brother J. L. Burger is the teacher. He encourages the class to do some of the talking and asking of questions, which makes every member feel a part of the class.

Our membership is increasing slowly. Two weeks ago one of the aldermen of our city, Mr. C. Hammond, who is also chairman of the board of health, went down into the watery grave and took upon himself the name of the Master. It is a courageous thing to do when a man or woman in a high position dares to brave the scorn of their associates and take a stand on the side of truth. The Lord will surely reward him.

Last evening another was added to our number, when a promising young man, Brother Walter Graves, was baptized. He is the only one in his family in the church, and will probably meet with much opposition, but he is no coward, and will stand the test.

And so the good work goes on. May many more come and rejoice with us, and there will be if we are faithful.

CHARLOTTE PEARSON.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District: As the spirit of war is felt everywhere, we are made to realize that the enemy of righteousness is at work, and that there are two powers in the world, the one to destroy and to kill, the other to build up and to give life. The question might be asked, With which power are we marching, and under which banner have we our names enrolled? When we think of the sacrifice which is now being made of life, home and property in the great battles being waged for the glory and the things of this world, that will perish by the use thereof, should not God's children be willing to make a greater sacrifice for the cause of Christ, the gospel?

Do our lives and actions correspond with our testimony when we say we love this latter-day work better than we do our own lives? If we consult our diaries and find in our expense account, tea, coffee, ice cream, sometimes tobacco, many things in the way of luxuries, and not one nickel for the spread of the gospel, do not our diaries show that we have loved our own appetites better than we have the gospel of Christ? If we supply ourselves with those things which we can well dispense with, and have not made an effort for that which is essential, and that which we claim to love so much, have we substantiated our testimony?

We wonder how many of the Saints will soon begin to lay up that they may upon the day that we observe as Christ's birthday exchange gifts with relatives and friends. Is it not true under such conditions we are observing the day that the Master was born more than we are the Master's teachings? I believe that if we as Saints will begin now to make the same effort we have in the past to lay up our mites, and when the call comes again for our Christmas offering place what we have in the treasury of the Lord, who is the greatest Friend man can have, the burden to a great extent will be lifted from those who have the financial work of the church in charge. Some object that the children would be disappointed if they did not receive their usual Christmas presents. Is it not true that when our children are old enough to be disappointed they are old enough to be taught the principle of sacrifice?

Here let me say that last year when I went over the district in the interest of the general church debt I found the children as anxious to help with their little mites as were the older ones. I well remember one little girl who came to me and said, "Brother Stroh, will you accept a little from me?" and when I replied that I certainly would, she said, "I have seventeen cents; I will give you fifteen and keep two for myself." Now the difference between this child and many older ones is that she gave fifteen and kept two, and we would have given two and kept fifteen. Again, if the children are too young to be taught the principle of sacrifice, they would not know when Christmas comes, if we did not tell them.

I wonder how many of the Saints suffered last year on account of giving toward the church debt. I think it is safe to say none. Then why not try it again? Commence now, and by Christmas let us see how many ten or five dollars we can place on the list of the Christmas Offering; and if we can not reach this amount let each one do what he can, which is all the Lord asks of us. Think of the little effort that would have to be made by each one of the Saints so that every obligation could be met. Shall we try it? I believe if we do, it will be as happy a Christmas as we have ever enjoyed.

I ask the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District to move forward along this line, and may every branch as well as each scattered Saint send in a good report and as large an offering as possible.

May God bless all for what they have done in the past, and encourage all in their efforts in the future, are the wishes and prayers of SAMUEL STROH, Bishop's Agent.

Died

FERGUSON.—James A. Ferguson was born at Morrisville, Indiana, in 1836; died in Stevens County, Kansas, September 20, 1914. In 1854 he united with the Christian Church. Married Sarah J. Thompson, May 27, 1857. To them were born 3 sons and 4 daughters, 3 of whom, Charles, Independence, Missouri, Mrs. S. E. Baggerly, Niagara, Kansas, Mrs. L. R. Bing, Rolla, Kansas, survive him. On May 13, 1870, with his wife, he was baptized into the Reorganized Church. Services conducted by F. W. Kendall, interment in Rolla County.

BALLOU.—Hannah E. McQuity was born March 19, 1853, in Hamilton County, Indiana; died at Lamoni, Iowa, September 25, 1914. She married Archibald Ballou in 1872. Eleven children were born to them, 8 of whom, with her husband, have gone on before. With her husband she was baptized by Robert M. Elvin, September 16, 1888. She leaves to mourn 2 sons, 1 daughter, 7 grandchildren, 4 sisters. Funeral the 26th, in charge of John Smith, sermon by Robert M. Elvin, interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

GIBSON.—Ralph Horace, son of Earnest and Sister May Gibson, was born January 29, 1913, at Lamoni, Iowa; died at Kellerton, Iowa, September 30, 1914. Burial at Rose Hill, Lamoni, Iowa, October 1, 1914, after an address and prayer at the grave by Robert M. Elvin. Rest sweet, innocent child, till the King of glory shall bring thee at the first resurrection.

NIES.—Lewellen Jackson Nies, daughter of J. H. and M. A. Jackson, was born in Decatur County, Iowa, January 26, 1866; died at her home, Meadow Grove, Nebraska, September 7, 1914. She married Abraham Buffington, December 6, 1883, who died April 5, 1887, one son, J. H., having been born to them, and who survives her. She married J. H. Nies, September 4, 1892. One son born to them died in infancy. Sister Nies was baptized and confirmed by Oscar Beebe, April 17, 1887. She passed away with a firm hope of a glorious resurrection. All that kind, loving hands could do to retain her was performed, but the Lord called her home. Her life was one of activity and usefulness. She preferred to serve others rather than herself, showing a Christ life of meekness and gentleness. She was very active in defense of the work she loved. In sickness she was one of the first in administering to the distressed. As a token of respect, the entire business community closed their respective places during the funeral. The church would not hold one third of those wishing to pay their respects. Services at the home, where F. S. Gatenby made a few fitting remarks, thence the assembly moved to the church, where J. F. Grimes preached the sermon, assisted by Brethren Ohering and Gatenby. Interment 7 miles northeast of Meadow Grove, in the family burying ground. Sister Nies leaves to mourn, father, mother, husband, son, brother and hosts of other relatives and friends.

Gone, when mostly needed within her family dear,
Gone, and left those mourning, who loved her dearly here;
We miss her, wherever she was wont to stay,
In her home now lonely, or where we met to pray;
When voices there commingle in praise to God above,
We miss the voice which led us in songs of peace and love.
Now though we weep in sorrow o'er spoils that death has won,
We'll prepare to meet her, when here our work is done.

BILLINGS.—Ransom Herold, oldest son of Philip R. and Bertha E. Billings, was born July 17, 1902, at Little Deer Isle, Maine; died September 26, 1914, by accidental drowning. Services at the district schoolhouse, by George H. Knowlton.

HENDRICKSON.—Alfred Hendrickson was born in Harrison County, Iowa, November 9, 1860; died of neuralgia of the heart at Felt City, Idaho, September 7, 1914. He married Mrs. Fannie Stewart, at Deer Lodge, Montana, in July, 1889. He was baptized and confirmed March 28, 1902, by S. D. Condit. Services conducted by J. H. Condit.

HENDRICKSON.—Milton L. Hendrickson was born in Harrison County, Iowa, April 2, 1870; died at Felt City, Idaho, September 14, 1914. He was baptized and confirmed by S. D. Condit, March 28, 1902. His mother, 79 years old, lived with him. Funeral conducted by J. H. Condit.

VREDENBURG.—Eva Lois Vredenburg, daughter of Brother and Sister J. C. Vredenburg, was born August 28, 1910; died of acute indigestion at her home near Alva, Oklahoma, August 16, 1914. She was blessed by S. S. Smith, Little Lois was an exceptionally bright child, and loved by all. Only a few days before she took sick she told her mother she was going away to be a little angel, and asked her not to cry for her.

Why Don't You Abandon That Rented Farm?

Why don't you get into the dairy business on your own hook? I can put you in touch with owners of rich prairie lands in western Nebraska and eastern Colorado which you can buy, on easy terms, at from $15 to $40 per acre, with financial aid, if you are a practical dairy farmer. You are sure to make money in modern dairy practice with fodder crops and the silo—the solution of the dairy business. Feed crops are heavy. You can dig a silo to start with, if necessary. These lands adjoin farms whose 1914 crop will bring more than the land cost a few years ago. Come out and see for yourself—you don't have to take my word for it—and advertising can not tell you. Write me about location. The Burlington employs me to help you.

GOOD ADVICE REPRINTED

II.—PULPIT APOLOGIES

Apologies made by an elder about to address the congregation before which he stands to speak are always regarded with more or less suspicion. It has happened that an elder has said at the outset of his effort, "I have nothing of myself to say; unless the Lord has something to say through me, I shall not speak to you;" and has then rambled on in such an incoherent and careless way that everyone could see that he had not received the Spirit to teach at the time.

An instance or two of this kind happening to the same man will greatly injure the efforts such a man might attempt. We advise the elders that they take thought on this, and when they are called upon to preach, make no apologies, put up a silent prayer for direction and help, and do the best they can. If they have no liberty, it is better to stop than to bore the people and ruin their own reputation.

When one has exhausted the thoughts given for utterance, it is best to stop and close the effort, no matter whether it be five minutes or an hour. Some otherwise splendid speakers are noted for not knowing when to stop. It is far better to leave much unsaid than to risk losing a good impression already made by protracting the speech until the listeners are worn out.

Two sermons of fifty minutes each are much better than one of ninety or one hundred and five. It is better to avoid the habit of saying "in conclusion," and then beginning a new topic. We once listened to an elder who said, "in conclusion," and occupied thirty minutes in a new direction that fell flat on tired ears.

Elders should try diligently to avoid the repetition of useless phrases, and pet expressions. No matter how fine such expressions may sound at the first hearing of them, they wear upon the ear, and if repeated often they jar on sensitive nerves to such a degree that a fear of their repetition incapacitates the hearer from rightly judging of what else is said. We remember once hearing an elder use the words,

"and the great God of heaven," twenty-five times in a sermon thirty-five minutes in length. We heard another use the terms "this age of the world," "that age of the world," fifty-eight times in an hour's discourse. Another used the sentence, "the children of men," fifty-three times in as many minutes. All such repetitions injure the effect of the elder's speech and injure his efficiency. Do not use the terms "admit the fact," "considering the fact;" unless you really understand what is stated as a fact and know it to be such, and are willing to stand by the admission if it be observed by an opponent. The words "and we find," "we see, then," "my dear friends," "my Christian friends," "my dear hearers," "bless you," "bless your souls," and all such expressions are burdens unnecessarily placed upon the thought the speaker is expressing, and, at best, are only "filling."

We are charged to help each other in becoming useful in our work; and these suggestions are not intended to hurt the feelings of any rising elder, but as needful instruction which will be beneficial to all, if heeded.

It is understood that the elder is to minister as the Spirit may direct; but it is not proper to understand that the Spirit supervises the utterances of words that convey no meaning in keeping with the harmony of the subject upon which the elder is speaking. A man may cultivate both the manner and matter of his delivery.—President Joseph Smith, in SAINTS' HERALD, July 3, 1886, vol. 33, p. 401.

A PLEASANT TRIP

We were privileged to be with the Saints in Omaha, Sunday, October 4, on the occasion of their annual branch rally day. The church had been tastefully decorated with autumn foliage, in the characteristic autumn shades of red, brown and yellow, arranged by the artistic hand of Brother Paul Craig.

As this was also College Day, we were invited to deliver a short address at eleven o'clock on the subject of "Graceland College," and improved the opportunity to speak upon the attitude of the church toward education in general, beginning with the days when the elders undertook the study of Hebrew and conducted a regular series of lectures in Kirtland. Graceland College is but a material and spiritual projection of one phase of the ideal then inculcated in the minds and hearts of the people, in harmony with the commandment that they should seek learning not only by study but also by faith. There are comparatively few educational institutions in the world where this ideal prevails. This one should not be allowed to fail or fall.

After the close of the address, the congregation marched around the church and deposited their contributions to Graceland College in a pumpkin that had been hollowed out for that purpose and placed among the decorations in front of the pulpit. We had exhorted them to fill up this hollow pumpkin so that the college might be able to fill up the heads that came there for education. (The readers are cautioned at this point, against making invidious comparisons.)

An amusing little incident occurred, illustrating the well-known fact that the preacher does not always make his meaning clear, especially to the youthful mind.

We commented on the fact that three Lamoni landmarks are visible for some distance,—the church, the city water tower, and Graceland College. We remarked that these might be supposed to stand for three of our ideals, the church standing for religion, the water tower for temperance, and the college for education.

In the evening one of the junior Religio classes became involved in a discussion of temperance. The teacher asked them if they knew what temperance was. One little hand went up, and the owner announced, "Temperance is a water tank. Brother Smith said so."

A very interesting program was rendered under the auspices of the Sunday school. In the afternoon a joint service of prayer was held by the Omaha and Council Bluffs Saints, at which time the sacrament was administered. The Lord was graciously pleased to manifest his Spirit to us at this time, and the meeting was one of refreshing and blessing to the people.

In the evening we were privileged to address the Religio, and later preached on the subject of the "Signs of the times."

Monday evening we were invited to address the priesthood meeting, the address being devoted to the subject, "Duties of branch officers." Many questions were asked and answered and the meeting seemed to be one of mutual profit,—profit to ourselves as well as to the members of the priesthood present, which included two of the brethren from Council Bluffs who had come over to spend the evening with us. The address was followed by a season of prayer and testimony, the members being so interested that they

Our stay in Omaha was one of the most pleasant that we have ever experienced in church work. We attribute the degree of the Spirit enjoyed there to the united condition of the people, there being at this time, fortunately, no dissensions or difficulties existing in the branch, either among the members or the priesthood. Unity and zeal inevitably bring spiritual power. We were pleased to note the fine body of young men who are actively at work in this branch under the direction of Brother M. A. Peterson, president of the branch, and associated with Brother Paul N. Craig, city missionary at that place.

On Monday afternoon we spent an hour or two at the carnival then in progress and watched Lincoln Beachy fly over the city. We had seen him fly something over two years ago, in California, and at that time wrote that the spectacle of human flight had already ceased to be absorbing and that it would be necessary for aviators to invent some new thrilling "stunts" to attract the attention of the people; and we discovered that this had been done when Beachy flew over the audience with his machine upside down, and turned several aerial somersaults, in imitation of the noted French aviator who first performed similar gymnastics.

Previous to our trip to Omaha we had spent one week in Independence. While there we were privileged to preach to the Saints of the Kansas City Central Church on Sunday evening. Also addressed a joint meeting of the priesthood in the Independence church, at which time also an address was delivered by Brother John W. Rushton.

While in Independence we were quite pleased to note two things: First, the large attendance of the priesthood at this meeting, and their apparent deep interest in the work in hand. Second, the good attendance of the Saints at the Wednesday night prayer service, characteristic of the meeting of the young people held in the upper auditorium, also of the older ones who met in the lower room.

While in Independence we made two trips to Kansas City with President Joseph Smith, visiting the studio of Mr. Dryer, being conveyed in the automobile of Brother William Crick. President Smith is sitting for Mr. Dryer, an artist of some note, who is modeling a bust in clay which will be reproduced in bronze. This bust is to be preserved in the church offices, and if faithfully executed, as we have reason to expect, it will be of great interest to the Saints of this and coming generations.

It may be of interest to the Saints in general, in this connection, to learn that President Joseph Smith is enjoying about the same degree of health that has been his during the past two years.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CLATON BILL.—The Claton antitrust bill, as amended in conference, passed the Senate on the 5th by a vote of 35 to 24, and the House on the 8th by a vote of 244 to 54.

EARTHQUAKE IN ASIA.—An earthquake of unusual severity and claiming two thousand five hundred victims is reported to have occurred in the Province of Konia, Asia Minor, on the 3d.

REFUSE PHILIPPINE NEUTRALITY.—The Senate on the 2d, by a vote of 58 to 13, defeated a proposed amendment to the Philippine Island government bill leading to the neutralization of the islands on the establishment therein of an independent government.

NATIONAL SHRINE.—Negotiations are said to be pending for the purchase by the United States Government of Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, near Charlottesville, Virginia, to be maintained as a national shrine, and as the Virginia home of the presidents.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT FOR ALBANIA.—Dispatch from Durazzo states that the senate has named Essad Pasha, former Albanian minister of war, and commander in chief of the Turkish troops at Scutari, president of the provisional government of Albania. Essad Pasha's ten thousand troopers occupy Durazzo.

CHICAGO INDICTMENTS.—Indictments have been returned at Chicago against William Lorimer, on the charge of misappropriation of funds in connection with the recent failure of the La Salle Street National Bank, forerunner of the defunct La Salle Street Trust and Savings Company. Joseph P. Gallagher is made a codefendant. Indictments are also returned against Charles B. Munday, Charles D. Fox and Thomas McDonald for alleged false entries.

HARVESTER DECREE MODIFIED.—The decree of the United States District Court, at Saint Paul, ordering the dissolution of the International Harvester Company is modified in the decision of Judges Sanborn, Hook and Smith so as not to appeal to foreign trade, and removing the compulsory order for three separate corporations and providing for such number of distinct ownerships as may be necessary to restore competition. The company is given ninety days in which to file with the court plans of dissolution.

UNITED STATES TREATIES.—Peace agreements have been signed between the United States and twenty-six other nations, providing reference of such disputes and do not yield to diplomacy to an international commission, no hostilities to be begun before the report of the commission is had, which must be completed within one year. The commission in each instance would consist of five, one from each country and chosen by the government thereof, one by each government from a third country, the fifth by common agreement between the two governments.

WAR TAX.—The Senate finance committee and the Democrats in the Senate in caucus have eliminated from the war tax bill the tax on life insurance, gasoline and automobile sales, and have placed the Spanish war tax on proprietary medicines, perfumery and cosmetics, an additional tax on chewing gum, and a graduated tax on cigars and cigarettes. The tax on beer has been increased, and whisky, beer and wines are made the chief revenue producers. The bill as amended would be expected to yield one hundred and eight million dollars annually.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Disregarding the truce between Villa and Carranza, the Carranza and Sonora forces, the latter supposed to be in sympathy with Villa, continue fighting at Naco, Sonora. Two United States soldiers and a civilian have been wounded by stray shots crossing the border. Villa and Carranza are securing supplies and munitions from United States territory. The convention of Constitutional generalists, despite previous reports to the contrary, went into conference at the Mexican capital on the 1st. From this conference, as from the peace conference between Villa and Carranza representatives, little is heard. It is thought that the former is waiting results of the peace parley. Official announcement that no time has been fixed for the transfer of the control of the port of Vera Cruz to Mexican authorities is taken to mean that the forces under General Funston will not be withdrawn until the break between Villa and Carranza is settled, if settled.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The struggle between the German and allied forces in France continues with varying success and no decisive victory, the west wing of the allies extending farther north, and bending eastward in an attempt to turn the German right wing. Little change is reported elsewhere. Both sides continue to bring up reinforcements. The Germans claim to have taken five of the outer forts at Antwerp, and to have cleared the way for the bombardment of those of the inner circle. The seat of Belgian Government is reported transferred to Ostend. The opposing Russian and Austro-German lines seem to extend from south of the Carpathians, along the frontiers of Russian Poland and Eastern Prussia, to the Baltic. Russia reports success in eastern Prussia and Russian Poland, and two of the forts at Przemyse reduced, while Germany and Austria report Russian advances in the former territory checked, and conditions in Galicia favorable. Servia and Montenegro report additional victories, Austria announcing her advances checked. Japanese and British forces continue their attack on Kiao-Chau.

Japan occupies Jaluit Island, of the Marshall group, in the mid-Pacific, and Yap, of the Caroline group, east of the Philippines, both German possessions. The French fleet is again bombarding Catarro. A British submarine has sunk a German torpedo boat destroyer in the North Sea. A German cruiser and two German gunboats have been sunk by Japanese vessels in Kiao-Chau harbor. Six Austrian torpedo boats and destroyers are reported sunk by mines in the Adriatic, and seven Scandinavian ships in the North Sea from the same cause. The Associated Press states that on September 22 the German cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisevan sunk the French gunboat Zelee in the port of Papeete, Tihiti, and partly destroyed the town. Replying to the protest of China, Japan announces that her taking of the German-owned railway in Kiao-Chau and to the west of that territory, is not by her considered a violation of Chinese neutrality, and that the holding of this road leading to the rear of Japan's forces is necessary for her safety. Japan continues to take possession of this railroad toward its western terminal. Austria, in reply to Italy's protest, deplors the sinking of Italian vessels by floating mines in the Adriatic, and promises indemnity to the families of the victims. Canada will raise immediately twenty thousand more men, with a first reinforcement of two thousand. This will bring the total Canadian forces up to fifty-five thousand. Viscount de Alto, Portugal's minister to the United States, is quoted as saying in Washington, on the 5th, that under a treaty of long standing his country stood ready to assist the allies whenever Great Britain gave the word. Since writing the foregoing, press reports bring the intelligence that Antwerp has fallen before the German arms. The terms of surrender, if any, are not stated.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

LIBERAL NOTICE.—In The Dustonian for September 17 we find a liberal, first-page notice of services being conducted at Dustin, Oklahoma, by Elder J. C. Chrestensen, including an epitome of the faith of the church. The meetings were conducted under an arbor.

A NEW DEPARTMENT.—In this issue of the HERALD we begin a new department, Educational, to be devoted especially to the educational work of the church, as suggested by the editor of the department in the first contribution. Elder S. A. Burgess will edit the department, which assures us of that which is worth while.

WHO, INDEED.—If the soldier must give up alcohol because it interferes with his efficiency, why should not the civilian promote his efficiency by giving it up? And if it is demonstrated that alcohol is an evil, and only an evil; if it is proven that it lessens the productive value of the citizen, who will say that the Nation should look upon this great evil with indifference merely because a few people want to grow rich out of a drink that is destructive?—W. J. Bryan.

NO MISREPRESENTATION INTENDED.—A brother in criticism of the editorial "The European war," appearing in a recent issue of the HERALD and over the signature of the assistant editor, objects to what to him appears to be an unjust and an untrue presentation of the motive and interests of Great Britain in entering the present war. This editorial was not intended to reflect in any degree upon the motives of Great Britain or any other nation; it was only an effort to come at all the facts leading to the war, and to consider, in the light of the history of the nations involved, the various interests at stake. We trust that this assurance will be a sufficient explanation to any who may have misunderstood our intentions in the editorial in question.

CHRISTIAN IN EVERY SENSE.—We note in the Post-Intelligencer for September 21 a partial report of a sermon by Elder J. M. Terry, preached in the church at Seattle, Washington, on the evening of the 20th. Attention is called to the teachings of the Book of Mormon with reference to the Christ, church organization, doctrine and teaching, in all of which the Book of Mormon is shown to be in harmony with the Bible. The teachings of the Book of Mormon on marriage are also set forth, and shown to authorize only monogamy. The Utah departure is explained, and the fact is cited that the Reorganization in accepting Jesus Christ and the God of revelation is "Christian in every sense."

WOMEN IN WAR.—Amid the charge of battalions, the clash of arms, the shout of victory; and even in the history of the passing events of war we hear very little, we think very little—we men—of those upon whom fall heaviest the burdens of war. Something of what these—the women—feel, is graphically set forth in the article "What war meant to me," by Aimee Georges, and by courtesy of the Woman's Home Companion reproduced in our Of General Interest Department in this issue of the HERALD. And let it be remembered that Mrs. Georges was one of the more fortunate—her Francois came back. Many, very, very many husbands never come back; or, returning, bring lives marred by wounds and broken by the ravages of disease. These burdens, added to the horror of it all, borne alone, or with companions maimed or stricken—these are the lot of many woman in war.

Education is the cheap defense of nations.—Burke.

LIFE COMMENSURATE WITH WEALTH

A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth.—Luke 12: 15.

In arguing this question we will use three terms in their economic sense, namely, life, property, and wealth.

The life of a thing is its normal function. Man's life has three aspects: physical, mental, and moral. When a man is functioning normally in these three fields he is living.

Property is control over an economic good. In this connection it should be remembered that an economic "good" may be an ethical "evil." Economic goods are anything for which men are willing to pay, whether it be whisky or bread, dime novels or Bibles, or what not.

Wealth is the enjoyment of goods and the satisfaction of wants. The term wants in economics is coming into use more and more in its ethical sense, which means just or legitimate wants.

We are fast approaching the time when man will be considered of greater importance than property. In the past, kings and rulers, employers and consumers have at least consented, either actively or passively, to the sacrificing of health and comfort for the sake of property. But our ideals are changing; and throughout the world the true goal of economic progress is that expressed by Professor Seagar:

The economist's ideal is thus a world in which the wants and the activities of production are so harmoniously adjusted to each other that the field of industry offers full scope for the exercise of those faculties and capacities from which they (i. e., all individuals) get the greatest benefit and happiness, at the same time that it rewards all with the goods which they most require.—Introduction to Economics, p. 603.

Yes, we are beginning to think that "a civilization which loses life in providing the means to live is not highly moral."

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth." The form of a man's possessions, and the uses to which they are put, determine his life. If my property were altogether in the form of silver and gold, and if I had no means of exchanging it for the necessities of life, and if my property measured the extent of my capacity to provide the primary needs of life, I would be the most poverty-stricken creature of the universe, even if I had at my feet all of the gold and silver in creation. And though I had at my command unmeasured quantities of food for body and mind which I misappropriated to the point of debauchery, I would still be miserably poor and wretched. Possessions are not the measure of a man's life. Life is action: normal action. Thought, invention, and activities which tend to elevate the race to a higher moral plane are vastly more important, and of inestimably higher value, than the amassing of goods. Property with many means simply license; and license with them is but the path to exploitation, oppression, and indulgence.

RULE APPLIED TO NATION

Life depends upon activity. Property should depend upon activity. (I mean activity of the right sort.) Wealth without property is a condition inconceivable. It would appear that where the aggregate property possessions are great, wealth would be great also. However, we have a condition where the wealth and life of the people as a whole are at low tide in spite of the immensity of our aggregate possessions, and in spite of the further fact that we have hardly begun to approach the limit of our productive possibilities. What is the matter? Simply this: we have been too much concerned about getting possessions, and too little occupied in making the wealth of the nation (i. e., the people as a whole) correspond in amount to the magnitude of our property. On the whole we are not enjoying our goods, and our wants are far from satisfied. A nation's life also consisteth not in the abundance of things which it possesseth.

The form of a nation's possessions, and the uses to which they are put, determine its life. Possessions in the form of monuments, whisky, or even land unprepared for any use, etc., do not constitute wealth. And though we may have acres of mineral, mined and smelted, and though our marble be made into schoolhouses, and the energy wasted in producing whisky redeemed and converted into food for body and mind, if distribution is not made so that the nation as a whole may enjoy its goods and have its wants satisfied, we are still poor.

A people whose wants are not satisfied and who do not enjoy their goods, certainly are not living as they should. Their economic processes may produce vastly beyond their needs, yet if distribution is made in such a way as to deprive the masses of the things that make life (that is a normal functioning) possible, they can not be said to truly live.

ETHICAL ASPECT OF ECONOMIC PROCESSES

(I try here to give a digest of a chapter from Ethics, by Dewey and Tufts.) Economic processes have three ethical aspects: happiness, character, and social justice.

Happiness. Since in order to live we must appropriate the means of life (which is consumption), and the means of life are available only through industry (which is production), it follows that production and consumption are factors in the fuller life. Property is a possible condition for a healthy, happy, and prosperous state of an individual or a community. But property will have evil effects if it is controlled and used by a few individuals. To contribute to the happiness of the community it must be democratically distributed, and used to minister to the higher wants as well as to the primary. For this reason we may well inquire of any industrial process or business method whether it is an economical and efficient method of production and distribution, and whether it tends naturally to stimulate production and consumption.

Character. The satisfaction of every want is not necessarily a moral good. The character of the man is reflected in the nature of his wants. The moral value of an economic process depends upon the relation of the product (goods) to the man: that is, if whisky, for example, which is the product of an economic process, is hurtful to man, the process, because of the character of its product, should be regarded as having no moral value.

Economists estimate values in terms of money. As ethicists we estimate values in terms of a certain quality of life. And though whisky may have an exchange value of fifty cents per quart, yet it has no moral value, because it is hurtful to the physical and mental powers; it prevents a man from functioning normally.

Also, "We may ask of any process or system whether it quickens intelligence or deadens it; whether it necessitates the degradation of work to drudgery; or whether it promotes freedom (real freedom) or hampers it." If the manufacture of cotton cloth involves child labor, which in turn involves disease, physical stunting, ignorance, and not infrequently premature death, it does not contribute to the happiness and well-being of the nation, but rather saps its vitality. And though we may have billions invested in interests of that class, and though ten million hands may be daily employed under these conditions, yet we could truthfully say that the life of the nation does not consist in the abundance of such industries that it may possess.

Social Justice. Society is not simply a mass of people. It is a group of units each of which is dependent upon the other. - Every life depends upon other lives for an expression. And inasmuch as there is this inevitable interdependence, it follows that any just and wholesome economic process will have for its end the benefiting of both parties to a transaction. The "big fish eat little fish" process is a destroyer of the life of the community, and should be abolished. The activities of society in order to promote its life must render to its constituents the kind of service needed. And hence again we may fairly ask, Does the process "tend to reward members on a moral and equitable basis? or upon a basis which is nonmoral if not immoral and unjust"?

It is not the amount and variety of industrial activities and enterprises that we are engaged in that determine the life of the nation; but it is how these activities serve to bring about conditions that conduce to the normal functioning of man.

SOCIAL CONTROL AS A MEANS TO THE FULLER LIFE

We have tried for a fuller life through private control of economic processes which affect society as a whole and have failed. The interests of the few have been served (in a sense) because a few have had control over the products of industry. We are beginning to realize that in order to serve the interests of the whole of society, society must preserve to itself an adequate control over its activities and properties, so that it may distribute according to the needs of each member.

Just now the growing idea seems to be that there is no other way to secure to each individual such a standard of living, and such a share in the properties of civilization, as will make possible a better life.

THE LORD'S PLAN FOR HIS PEOPLE

The world is too big to be subject to regulation from a common center. Even our own Nation is such a heterogeneous mass of creatures that we are unable to get concerted action on any plan looking to a fuller life. Selfishness and graft are so rife that that we have not been able even to pass legislation of the kind which if enforced would lead to better living, much less have we been able to enforce and make effective such legislation as has been passed. However, there seems to be some hope that the church will sometime become sufficiently united in its purposes and endeavors to fulfill the Lord's economic program, and thus bring about conditions within its own ranks that will give its members opportunities to live as men ought to live.

In the world, selfishness operates to produce inequality; and inequality operates to grind the life out of men. Those who are able to assist the less fortunate are not interested in them, and are not willing to devote a part of the properties of society over which they have control to such uses as will make a better standard of living possible for the masses. But in the church of God this is (or ought to be) "a day of sacrifice" (Doctrine and Covenants 64:5). The conversion that is going to take place under the influence of the Spirit of him who came to bring peace and good will to all men will in time cause the Saints to "deal honestly," and "be alike," and "receive alike" (Doctrine and Covenants 51:2). Then those whose superior advantages enable them to acquire more properties than are necessary for their support are going to be sufficiently interested in their brethren to make common cause with them in building up the interests of the church (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9; 70: 2). The church is not going to allow men who want to be occupied chiefly in consuming what others produce, be they poor or rich, to exploit the properties of the people (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12; 75: 5).

The church will be "independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world" (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 3), and that means, of course, that it will be independent above any of its membership. Any considerable number of people who are minded to cooperate and coordinate their interests, and try to be helpful to each other, need not long be at the mercy of unscrupulous and designing men. This independence will be due chiefly to three things:

First, The church will purchase land equal to its needs (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 11; 63: 8) that it may have the advantage over the world. Industrial independence *demand*s that control be had over the basis of industrial independence; this every economist knows to be the land. To sell the land is to lose control of the basis of our independence, as well as to lose our advantage, and thus to lose our independence; so the church is instructed to "retain" possession of the land (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 13); this we are to do as a people because it is as a people, "the church," that we are to be independent.

Second, The privileges of the land will be made known (58: 12) and workmen will be put on the land to labor for the Saints of God. Agriculture is the most important interest in the industrial world. Our existence, our life, depends upon it. We can get along very well without fancy lingerie, monuments, and a multitude of other unnecessary and useless things, but we can hardly live without the means of life; this we derive from our agricultural pursuits primarily. It is therefore wise, as well as essential, that this field of industry shall receive our early attention.

Third, Every man who will have the honor of conducting a stewardship will give account thereof (72: 1). This is but a necessary part of the program by which "the church" is to become "independent above all other creatures." Society can preserve its interests only by preserving control over the important activities of its members; and accordingly the church will direct (in a general way, and in particular if necessary) the activities of those who will be its honorable men in a business way (58: 7; 51: 1; 48: 2). This will enable the church to minister to each member according to his needs, and will bring about conditions under which men may actually live.

There is no scarcity of property in the church with which to begin the work of Zion's redemption. But the wealth of the church is not measured by the aggregate property holdings of its members; neither is its life measured by what might be a condition for a fuller life. Property to constitute wealth must be available to those who need it. It must be in a form suited to man's needs. It must be put to the kind of use that will expand a man's powers of body and mind. Property that is in the wrong form (jewelry, etc.), or that is being wrongly used (as a tool to gather in the sweat of other men's faces through business trickery or usurious practices), or that is in the wrong place (perhaps in some private coffer awaiting an opportunity to be used to some personal advantage), is not wealth, and will not assist in bringing about Zion's conditions. It contributes nothing to the life of the church.

Proper productive and distributive processes are what go to make up the life of society; and the church too. Parasitic plants do not contribute to the life of the church; they absorb, consume, and destroy.

In the church as well as elsewhere the satisfaction of every want is not necessarily a moral good. The very character that is often reflected in the want of men is the thing that destroys morality and spirituality; it destroys life. "Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." The church is a group of units, each of which is dependent in a large measure upon the other for its life. As a church we are so interdependent that when a part of the membership misuses its properties ("all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain," Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10) by applying them to personal ends instead of using them for the common good, the life of the whole church is affected. Our aggregate possessions may be great, but they are no index to the life of the church. Property to be a condition for life must become wealth; that means it must be put to proper uses.

When we have established the proper relations; have eliminated selfishness; and when we work together for the common good, "Zion will flourish upon the hilltops" and we will "eat the good of the land." We will actually live; for then our energies and properties will be put to good uses; we will be wealthy; and we shall live, for our wants will be satisfied, and we will enjoy our goods.

Department of Education

FOREWORD

A short time ago we entered the office of the associate editor of the HERALD with a few notes on Graceland College, whereupon he generously offered us the use of a department each month. A short conference soon brought us to an agreement, and this department is the result.

We do not propose to use this department exclusively or primarily on the part of Graceland College. We have a larger problem before us, and that is the value of education to the church; the position of the church with regard to education; the value of college work to the seventy or high priests; the means of education, including not only Graceland College, but also the Extension Institute and work done in the auxiliaries; in fact, any means of education is open to discussion, the purpose being to arrive at the truth as to the relative value and need of education, and of the means at present employed or which may be employed in the near future.

We, therefore, propose that the column shall be open for comments, for questions and for articles pro and con. There is only one type of discussion that is not desired, and that is an article which is concerned principally with personalities. Articles and free discussions are solicited, for we believe that we should be prepared to face the question squarely.

Of course, the amount that can be published is limited by the month, or by the year. Still, we are not fearful but that a place can be found for articles of real merit, having this chief end in view—the advancement of the work as a whole.

This month we have no special leading article. We have a few notes already prepared, and referred to above. We hope by next month to secure a representative article.

THE GRACELAND EXTENSION INSTITUTE

The managing board of the institute are feeling more than pleased over the character of the response from those requested to act as fellows. Only two refusals have been received, one from a man who has never belonged to the church and who is now farming, and so feels himself out of touch with educational matters; the other from a young man connected with one of our large universities, who feels that his time is already more than occupied. On the other hand, all others have not only accepted, but many of them have expressed their delight at the opportunity of making their education of some use and help to the church. Next month we hope to publish extracts from some of these letters.

The enrollment of students has been all that could have been expected and more, and is keeping the managing board busy arranging for fellows. In addition to this, the college is handling a few special students by correspondence. Classes have been organized in Lamoni in French and in Shorthand. These last are all handled directly by the college.

Anyone who is interested in the extension work may secure a leaflet and application blank from the registrar, Professor C. B. Woodstock, Lamoni, Iowa. An attempt is made to teach almost every subject which can be taught by correspondence, but the work must not be made too burdensome on the fellows. Questions may be asked, tests occasionally and examinations given if desired.

GRACELAND COLLEGE

Graceland College opened for the first semester on September 10 with a good enrollment. There is possibly a small falling off on account of existing economic conditions; but it is too early in the year to say definitely. It is true, however, that with the present faculty two or three times the number of students could be conveniently handled. Especially is this true in the academic department, and this without additional expense.

The faculty is strengthened by the return of Floyd M. McDowell, who has just completed a year's work at Clark University, culminating in his Master of Arts degree. Professor McDowell occupies as the head of the department of history and education. He has also been elected as dean of the college of liberal arts, as this department is separately organized, with its faculty.

The department of oratory has been fortunate in securing the services of Miss Aura Belle Fike, who is a graduate of the Columbia School of Expression. Miss Fike is very enthusiastic over her work, especially with the class in public speaking for young men.

Mr. Clyde T. Reed, A. B., has been secured for mathematics and science, and bids fair to uphold the strong traditions of that department.

Professor J. A. Gunsolley continues as principal of the commercial department. The preparatory department has also been separately organized, under R. V. Hopkins as principal, and is now a fully accredited high school of the State of Iowa.

On finances, the college last year was able to run within its income, and this without special help from the general church. There was additional help of the liberal collection on College Day from the Lamoni Branch. But the College Day collection on the whole was no larger, if as large as heretofore. There were also the special efforts of Elders J. W. Wight and Gomer Wells, which netted about one thousand eight hundred dollars. But there was a decrease in the endowments. What money was received from the general church was on account of endowments and offerings sent to the Presiding Bishop and by him advanced to the college.

Credit for the fact that the college debt is no larger this year than it was a year ago belongs to no one person, but is due to the united effort of all those interested and concerned. Our hope is to receive such support as will make it possible to reduce the debt, pay it off, and keep it paid.

The year starts out in many ways with most favorable aspects. Many who have been long associated with the college have remarked that they have never seen such unity of spirit and of purpose on the part of all to work for the common good, nor such a consideration for the interest and ideas of others as this year. This was shown in the addresses by members of the faculty at the opening; by the unity of purpose at the faculty meetings; and by the actual spiritual interest shown by the young people in the union prayer meeting.

Finally, there never was a better opening for a boy and a girl, who want to work for an education. We have work that must be done. If we can get student help we shall use it. If not, we must hire the workers outside. We have other means to help worthy young people this year, if two more can come now.

Of General Interest

WHAT WAR MEANT TO ME

I have read in the papers that on the day when the troops left Berlin two thousand marriages were performed. It was only a little item, quite hidden between the crowding columns of war news, but it brought back into my mind a flood of memories that for forty years I have been trying to forget. Forty-four years ago I saw the troops leave, not Berlin but Paris. There were many marriages performed on that day, too, and one of the soldiers who marched away was my husband, and one of the marriages was mine.

Before this story is printed I shall read of great ships sunk, and cities destroyed, and brave men mowed down like wheat. But of one thing I find little mention. I mean the women.

PRUSSIANS ENTER PARIS

I remember when the Prussians entered Paris at the close of the awful siege. They had claimed the right to march inside the gates and spend one night, and there was nothing to do but consent. Our fortifications were battered down; our young men were killed or captive; we were nothing left in the splendid city of Paris but old men and women and children. We had to let them come in, but they could not compel our entertainment. Everywhere shutters were up, and streets empty. Everywhere, also, the national colors were flown upside down, and crepe mingled with them. Over the doors of restaurants and theaters were banners of mourning, and on them inverted shields inscribed: "Closed on account of national bereavement." It was like a dead city. But from behind the shutters of our houses we saw the Prussians come. I was nineteen then. My father and mother were old. I remember standing with my parents to catch a glimpse of the marching columns, and how as they came striding up the street my father cursed them with quiet fervor under his breath. I hated them passionately. They were so well-fed, so healthy—and for more than a hundred days they had kept us starved!

Suddenly, as we watched, a woman leaped from a cellarway almost directly under our window, and stood on the curbstone waving her arms and shouting. Her hair was white; she must have been fifty years old, but she had an air of command.

"Arretez!" she shrieked at them. "Meurtriers, poltrons, arretez!" One or two of the soldiers nearest her turned to nudge each other and laugh, but the others marched on, unconscious of her cries. Her hand dropped quickly to her waist and then rose again. I started back in horror. She held a revolver. It spoke three times in quick succession, and three Prussians nearest her dropped bleeding on the pavement. Immediately a dozen men were upon her, reaching for the weapon, and one struck her heavily in the face. There was no need for it; she handed the revolver over quietly.

"Take the gun!" she cried. "It has done its work. You took my man, and my two sons. I take three of you. Ha!"—it was a frightful mockery of a laugh. "You can have the gun. Give it to the three on the pavement there. Perhaps it will bring them back."

They hurried her away to the guardhouse. She was mad, they said, and I never saw her after that. Hundreds went mad in those days. It is the thought of them that makes me say, The sorrows which women suffer in the war are too deep for words. It is for that reason that you read nothing of what the war means to women. We know what it means; we would tell if we could, for if the story could be told in all its awful power, if all women knew what some of us know, there would never be another war.

A WAR NOT WANTED

I was eighteen, I remember, when the war was declared. My father was in the wool business, and we lived just outside the city in a pleasant old house with a garden around it.

We did not want a war. Napoleon had given

France enough of war for a long time—too much. But the Prussians had been preparing for it many years, and when the declaration came there was nothing for us but to defend ourselves. Our emperor bore Napoleon's name. We trusted him. We had not discovered then how incapable he was; and he, in turn, trusted the men around him, who assured him that the army was perfectly equipped and supplied, and that the war would be only a matter of a few swift days. We all believed them, and him. "It will be just a little outing," young men said to each other, and the whole nation shared something of their youthful enthusiasm; all except those few old people whose memories ran back to the days when Napoleon had laid levy after levy upon France. They shook their heads, and muttered to themselves.

But the young men gathered to the colors, and for a few days before the army marched away Paris was as gay as a holiday.

"A Berlin! A Berlin!" people shouted, expecting that within a week or two the news would come back that our boys had fought their way through to the very capital of the Prussians, and entered it.

Francois and I had been engaged three months; we were to be married at Christmas time. He was called to his regiment, the Sixty-second, and for three days or more before the troops marched away he came every evening with news of the mobilizing, until the evening before the last day. That evening there was a note of seriousness in his voice that had not been there before. He spoke of rumors that had floated about the camp. The Prussians, it was said, were much stronger than had been supposed. He did not tell me many details; I guessed at them somehow. Some note in his voice, some little added tendresse in his manner, something, je ne sais quoi, told me. Suddenly I could stand the suspense no longer.

"Suppose," I burst out, "only suppose, Francois, that you should not come back." He was silent. I glanced up into his eyes, thoroughly frightened.

"Francois!" I almost shrieked. "Why don't you answer me, Francois?"

For reply he reached over and took my hand. "I have been thinking, Aimee," he said, "that perhaps—perhaps it would be just as well if we were to be married to-morrow."

I clutched his hand convulsively.

"One can not always be quite sure what may happen in a war, and—what do you think?" he asked, looking straight down at me.

It was a long time before I answered. In those minutes I seemed to pass from girlhood into womanhood. I swept through at one leap all the experiences that make up our woman's lot. I knew in that instant that whatever came to Francois, whether in life or pain or death, I must bear my portion of it.

I wanted in that instant more than ever before to be his wife.

"Let us go to my father and mother," I said simply. We did not need more words: we understood. Quietly we stepped out into the back veranda where my parents sat. There Francois told them of our talk. Yesterday he had seemed to me just a boy, but to-night he was a man. I could see a little gleam in my father's eye as he talked: he was proud of Francois.

"The children are right, dear," said my mother. "We will go with them to-morrow."

A HURRIED WEDDING

Francois came early in the morning with his mother, and we went all together, to the chapel where arrangements had been made. I tried to fix my attention to the ceremony but it kept drifting. Francois was going away to war; my mind kept repeating it to me over and over again.

"Till death you do part," the priest finished solemnly and waited for me to speak. I nodded weakly.

The regiment was to leave that afternoon. I walked down and stood on the sidewalk to see them march away. The streets were aflame with the national colors; crowds flocked up and down as though it were a festival. As the soldiers marched down there were cheers and shouts, but after a time a graver spirit descended on the crowds. I saw sights then which I would never look upon again.

All along the sidewalk women and bent old men stood weeping, waving wet handkerchiefs or lifting terror-stricken children high up to see their fathers pass. I saw it all as in a haze: my eyes were fixed upon the last company, and there in the front rank, his gun across his shoulder, Francois came.

I did not cry. That came afterward. I was resolved that he should not have his heart made more burdened with the memory of my tears. And so I stepped forth bravely, uncaring what was said or thought, and taking his hand I marched with him dry-eyed and firm-lipped until we came close to the city gates. He kissed me there. Then I turned and began the long, slow, dragging walk back home.

THE SIEGE OF PARIS

Others have written about the siege of Paris who know much more about it than I. At first we did not know there was to be a siege: we could not believe it. The reports that our Government issued were gladdening. Our army had met the enemy and conquered it, killing many. Our cavalry had cut off a company of the enemy's troops, and captured many cannon. Our army was marching toward Berlin. These reports came in quick succession. But then came other reports, not published, but whispered from mouth to mouth. It was not true that we had conquered. Our army had been driven back. Many were killed, many were wounded, many were captured. And at last came the news that Paris itself was to be besieged.

Even then we could not believe the danger serious. I remember my father coming home with four fine hams and cutting great slices for each of us.

My mother spoke: "Would it not be better to save the ham? There is talk of a siege."

He laughed loudly. "Oh, a siege," he said. "What of it? It can not last long."

But before many days he talked very differently. The Prussians closed in upon the city. The streets were filled with people fleeing, their possessions under their arms. From the highest spot near the walls we could see, through field glasses, the enemy throwing up their fortifications, and for the first time in my life I heard the road of cannon and felt the air shudder. Afterward we grew so very used to the sound that we forgot it, as one forgets the ticking of a clock.

For four months I never saw a piece of bread. A few potatoes we had, but long before the siege was over they had gone. All horses disappeared from the streets. The Government took them, and the elephants in the parks. We were issued a card on which was indicated how much horse or elephant meat would be allotted to us every four days.

I walked home alone one afternoon in the dusk: two old men, beyond the age of military service, walked in front of me, and as they came opposite our house one stopped and snatching something hastily from the ground, hid it in a bag. "It will mean food to-morrow," he said to his companion. Afterward I discovered what it was that they had snatched up so eagerly. It was our cat.

THE SIXTY-SECOND

Next door to us was a woman who had sent two boys to the battle: they were members of the Sixty-second also. She was older than I, as old as my mother, but from the day when the first bad news came to Paris until the siege was raised we were inseparable. We had sent our men to bleed, and our hearts bled with them.

From the very first I used to hear her at night walking up and down her room, walking, walking, walking, walking, with never a pause. Later, when the news grew bad, or, worst of all, when there was no news, I, too, walked.

I will not say that it is harder to wait than to shoot; I do not know. But it seemed to me in those terrible four months that every shell that was fired sent its own agony into my heart. The woman whose sons were gone, and I, followed the same routine. At six o'clock the firing called us. Hastily I would dress and snatch a mouthful of food, and always I found her waiting for me, impatient to be off.

We would run in the direction of the firing, sometimes a mile, sometimes two, and arriving breathless and distraught we would call to the sentries:

"What regiments fight here?"

Then they would tell us: and if, as often happened, the Sixty-second was not engaged, we would hurry across the city to another point where there was the noise of firing. So sometimes all day long we wandered from one far corner of the city to another, and came home at night tired out, but for the moment relieved. The Sixty-second had not fought that day.

Some days there was no fighting, and we sat all day to make bandages, tearing our best linen sheets and tablecloths. We gave them gladly. But generally our days were spent cowering underneath the walls. "The Sixty-second fights here," the sentry would call. And then would come the cruel, slaying wait.

Here is a wounded man brought through the gate! Run quick. "Oh, s'il vous plait, un moment, let me see his face!"

"Ce n'est pas Francois!"

"Ce n'est pas mon fils!"

"Grace a Dieu!"

All day long we would stand, darting out as each new stretcher was carried by, or following the hospital train to its destination, dreading to look as the ghastly passengers were carried out, yet dreading not to look.

FRANCOIS CAME BACK

There came at last a morning when there was no firing, when the news went around that the war was over. I remember how we wept: and also, by some trick of fancy, I remember the first man who walked through the gates from outside after the siege was raised. He carried a great loaf of white bread. A crowd followed him for blocks laughing and crying out to him, and smacking their lips.

Francois came back. He looked old. There were dark lines under his eyes; he seemed to stoop a little, as though under the weight of the gun had dragged him down. But the same smile was on his face, the same light in his eye. I threw my arms around his neck: it seemed as though my tears would never stop.

THE WOMEN BACK HOME

"A bloody battle," the newspapers say. "Twenty-five thousand killed and wounded and missing." But no paper tells of twenty-five thousand women who, back home, are killed and wounded, not by bullets but by the news. For twenty-five thousand of them there will be no more sunrise—I think of them all day long and sometimes at night—the thousands of mothers who will struggle heartsick through life with fatherless children, the thousands of sisters left unprotected, and the thousands of wives, some of them young wives, some of them married on the day the troops marched away, as I was.—By Aimee Georges, in Woman's Home Companion, October, 1914.

October Greetings

October is here, the month of changing leaves and fleeting whispers of approaching cold, when one begins to think of warmer clothing, wraps, and is uneasy until the coal bin is filled, and the cellar sees a goodly array of supplies, which the careful housewife, patterning after the bee, stores up 'gainst the time of snow and bleak winds.

It is also a time when, the soft languors of summer being over, one feels a renewal of ambitions and energies. The student turns to his books, the musician to his practice, the toiler to his labors, each to those things in which his life interests are centered, and plans much for the months ahead. We each determine that this year will see our greatest development, our fastest advancement, our greatest effort in the work of the world to better and uplift our common cause.

What are you planning? And what are you doing? Is it doing, or do you never get past the planning? Our general chorister once remarked, "I'd rather have one who will do than a dozen who will, but do not!" There's a good deal to that! With many of us, what we really do, and accomplish is pitifully meager compared to what we talk of doing. Yet, the desire to be of help and service is one which will develop with use; and be the beginnings ever so small, every effort put forth is a step upward.

We are happy to present our readers with Sister Leeka's first article in the series on expression. We bespeak for it a thoughtful reading, and we are sure you will enjoy the enthusiasm and real consecration with which she has approached her subject, as evidenced in this beautiful preliminary and foundational article.

It seems almost too good to be true that this issue also contains the first of a series which promise to rival the other in point of interest and educational value. We refer to the sketch of the life of Bach, from the thoughtful pen of our talented young brother, Arthur E. McKim, of Independence. He is deeply interested in the research he is making to obtain material for these "Masters of music" sketches, and we feel sure he will be able to convey a major portion of that interest to his readers.

The Art of Expression

MUSIC, THE UNIVERSAL ART

"This day before dawn I ascended a hill and look'd at the crowded heaven,

And I said to my spirit, when we become the enfolders of those Orbs, and the pleasure and knowledge of everything in Them, shall we be filled and satisfied then?

And my spirit said, No, we but level that lift to pass and continue beyond."

—Walt Whitman.

There is a great need of the study of the fine arts to-day. Art is an expression of some aspect of life. "Art interprets life by bringing its actual tendencies of good and evil to that more complete fulfillment toward which religion has always groped." Art comes out of the life of man, and we should study the specific function each of the ideal arts fulfills in relation to the human spirit. Even though one art appeals supremely, one needs to respond to them all to attain balanced culture and a full appreciation of the expression of the human spirit. It takes all the arts and all combinations of them to express adequately the life of man.

The prevailing misconceptions of the function of the arts are the notion that art is a luxury, an adornment of life, accessible only to those who have wealth and leisure, and that it is of no value until the practical things of life are fulfilled. "The cry of the artist in all epochs has been that his work is not taken as the serious aim of life." These misconceptions stand in the way of our right use of art to-day, and must be overcome to give art the place it should occupy in our culture. Art is serious business; beauty is the most useful thing we know; the ideal is no less real than the coarsest material end. "Art is for life's sake."

Music is the most universal of the arts, and is in some form or other cultivated and enjoyed by all. Yet how rarely do we find the true music lover. In the world, too often, we find society displaying itself and its clothes, in the presence of the great artists interpreting Wagnerian roles. In the church, we find a lack of intellectual appreciation. The intellectual response to music lies in the analytical study of its compositions. To work out the combination of motives in a Wagner opera, or analyze the complicated harmonies of a Beethoven symphony, is an intellectual process which gives delight.

Of all the fine arts, music is the most difficult to define for the intellect, because it is the most subtle. Do we not feel the power of music to sweep us out on the bosom of the sea of emotion? Yes, we are an emotional people; but we need development in intellectual emotion. The intellectual emotion is much more subtle and brings greater glory to the individual. Remember that "the glory of God is intelligence." Professor James says that "anger, fear, love, hate, joy, grief, shame, pride, and their varieties, may be called the coarser emotions. The subtler emotions are the moral, intellectual, and æsthetic feelings." We are scarcely out of the elementary period in these matters. The history of education begins where man takes himself into his own hand, so to speak, and seeks to guide his life toward an evermore definite, coherent heterogeneity, which is what is meant by his ideal end.

Our Staff leader has suggested that it is time our choirs do more definite work, so it is our aim, as coworkers, to stimulate along this line. As a people we are moved by impulse rather than by reason—as yet. This is because impulse is the earliest form of emotion. Thinking is a process of rare occurrence in consciousness. Every generation receives a heritage of judgments from the preceding generations. Facts that cost our ancestors immense pains to work out come to us as matters of course; yet their thinking was done as ours is, little by little. Professor James says: "An empirical or 'rule-of-thumb' thinker, can deduce nothing from data with whose behavior and associates in the concrete he is unfamiliar. But put a good reasoner amongst a concrete set of objects which he has neither seen nor heard of before, and with a little time, if he is a good reasoner, he will make such inferences from them as will quite atone for his ignorance. Reasoning helps us out of unprecedented situations—situations for which all our common associative wisdom, the 'education' which we share in common with the beasts, leaves us without resource."

N. L. Nelson has given some splendid thoughts which we desire to quote: "We are thoroughly convinced that the Lord has revealed truths unto us, the light of which, if turned upon the subjects that engage men's thoughts to-day, will result in revolutionizing the knowledge of the world. But I am convinced, from a variety of circumstances, not least of which is a sanctimonious self-sufficiency, we are scarcely beyond the word-period in the elaboration of these truths. I believe also that we shall conquer the world in the exact ratio that we realize in clear, specific thought and action, the revelations which the Lord has given us in this dispensation."

How often we quote the revelation instructing us to cultivate the gift of music! Should we not analyze it more? Let us analyze the line, "The song of the righteous is a prayer unto me." Song is the medium of utterance—the utterance flows from the righteous, the pure, the sincere soul, and it is a prayer, a desire. Ah! prayer is desire. Desire is the first step to the unlocking of the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Desire that is related to feeling, rather than desire that concerns itself in the possession of things, will give us the eternal riches of life. This desire leads to meditation. Meditation brings us into the condition where the soul is filled with an ecstasy of feeling; here the soul learns to vibrate with the Source of its being. This is the eternal state.

The object of training the voice and the body must always be to make a better channel for the manifestation of thought and feeling. Art is the highest mode the soul can secure to reveal itself. The emotion can only be awakened by a mental grasp of an idea or a situation. All faults of voice can be traced directly or indirectly to wrong action of the mind. In each line of song, the meaning of the words should be studied carefully. It is the basis of correct interpretation. The office of music in a vocal composition is to illuminate the sentiment of the words, to intensify the mood of the text. There is an expression of a higher, finer sort, which arises from realization of the emotional content of the words and music. What is not felt can not be expressed. It is the feeling for the emotional content of a composition which gives life, glow, fervor to choir singing. A vocal tone, free, vibrant, considered merely as a tone, possesses sensuous beauty that is most attractive to the ear, and gives pleasure. But this is not the fervent tone; it is merely good voice production. Let this tone however, be glorified by the singer's strong emotions; then it comes with mighty force upon the hearer, stirring the depths of the soul, and compelling instant and generous response.

Perhaps you have read Geraldine Farrar's article about singing in the Ladies Home Journal. Did you note this? "Give of your emotions, your feelings, your self, and your listeners will rise to greet your message. . . . It is better, in my opinion, to have a lazy voice, than an inactive mind. With an agile mind and a mediocre instrument, I can still give more of my soul than can a mere warbler, fortunate in her lung capacity and dazzling roulades. . . . If I have succeeded in persuading a few that a good voice is but one asset among the many more important qualities, I shall think I have done a good thing."

Masters of Music

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

A great man, and a good man, Johann Sebastian Bach was "the father and founder of German music." It has been said that "what Shakespeare is to literature, Rembrandt to portrait painting, and Michelangelo to sculpture, Johann Sebastian Bach is to organ music." The greatest organist of his time, and the peer of all rival composers, he was an artist whose life was his art, and whose manhood was the wellspring of his genius. He was a man who lived deep and pure, then gave of his life; the melodies that came from his hand came first from his heart.

Never was heredity so vindicated as in the Bachs. For two hundred and fifty years, the name stood synonymous in the German mind for music. The Bachs were the composers, the organists, the musicians of the nation. Already, in 1685, when Johann Sebastian was born, an uncle Hendrick, was lovingly called the "great Bach." Johann Sebastian had a heritage, the very life of which was music.

It is interesting to trace his musical ancestry: It goes back to his great-grandfather, Vert Bach, a miller by trade, a musician by preference. He was a poor miller, but a good violinist, and while his neighbors would not use his flour, they were glad to invite him and his music to their circle in time of festival or of sorrow.

Among the many sons of Vert Bach, Hans was the most worthless, but also the most musical. He was an odd genius, and in great demand throughout the neighborhood for his playing. He had a great viol, ten feet high, which he himself had made, and the wonder and fame of it brought great crowds to the church where he played, and he more than divided honors with the parson. He, too, had a large family, a veritable orchestra at hand. And the father took advantage of the situation. He made each an instrument, for the littlest as well as the biggest, and then composed the music for them to play. It was a queer orchestra, and there were most wonderful instruments. They varied from marvelous twenty-stringed viols to an odd affair with only one string, and there were drums for the little tots, according to their size. And when this family orchestra played it was said to be a wonder to hear.

This, then, was the grandfather of Johann Sebastian; and his father, Johann Ambrosius, was just a repetition of the same story. He was kind of heart, and gentle of speech, and his music, a sort of itinerant playing, was his life. He gave his children a musical heritage that had run true for three generations. Of money he had none.

Johann Sebastian, the earliest of the German masters, was born March 21, 1685, the year that gave birth to Handel. He was born without place or wealth, but with the fire of genius in his heart.

He was orphaned at an early age, and he fell to the charge of his brother. To his new home he took only his name, his father's old violin, in its green bag, given as a sweetheart gift, by the boy's own mother, and a soul for harmony. The little fellow's lot was hard, for his brother was not kind, but he learned many things of life. One hour a day he was permitted to practice on his violin, never longer, because the sound annoyed his brother's wife.

But Johann Sebastian learned fast. He read his notes like print, and every little accent was stamped in his memory. His brother was an organist and had a good library of music, but it was kept locked away. Johann could reach it only by picking the locks, and then on moonlight nights he copied piece after piece and hid them in his room.

When fourteen, he went to a neighboring town to sing in a boys' chorus, and there he first learned the organ. The chorister noted the boy's eager interest in the organ, and found opportunity for him to try it. That was the first turn in his life. From then on the organ was his delight. At eighteen he was so proficient that he received a call to play for a congregation in another town, and he went to his work with a glad heart.

One day he went to Hamburg to hear great Rienke play. He was bashful, and so crept into a back seat unnoticed; the music he heard that day wrought a most profound effect upon him. Rienke played, all unaware that a yet unfolded genius was in his presence, and the boy listened to the wonderful music, and his soul drank in the harmonies. It fired him with a great resolve, and, with tears in his eyes, he vowed to himself that he would be even a greater player,—and he was.

From this humble start, he went rapidly up. Church after church called for his services, and finally he went to the court of the duke himself. The organ was his passion and his life study.

In those days the men who played must also compose his music, and, to Bach, the gift was ready within him. He wrote easily and through his long life, his many compositions following each other in rapid succession. They were mostly for the organ, but included a wide range. They were rich and full and pure, and his fame spread rapidly around him. He came to be a man much in demand, and he traveled often, dedicating new organs, or as the honored guest of a great musical festival.

Through the distinction of it all, he was quiet and modest, and himself. He was not carried away by flattery, nor disturbed by bitter attack or criticism. He went his way, calm, with a great heart, and a high purpose. The melodies that were in his compositions flowed from his heart unsullied, and his heart was fortified by a home he loved.

It is as a man that Bach is noblest, and his home was the source of his power. He had married young, and had been blessed beyond measure. His wife loved him with an understanding sympathy, and he made her a partner in all his work. She was his scribe, his critic, and his companion. It is pleasant to read of his simple life: of how good he was to his wife—he would sweep, dry dishes, or care for the baby; and how he loved his children and would leave the composing of a great choral to go into the kitchen with them, and cut great slices of brown bread and spread them thick with honey; and how, at night, when all was still within doors, he would go out under the open sky and commune with his Maker.

His family well repaid him for his love; they were his pride and his inspiration. Of his twenty children, all were musicians, and two sons became noted composers. In 1749 he became blind, and on July 28 of that year he died. He had finished a long and great life.

The description of him is characteristic of his whole life. "He was stern, strong, self-contained, and so deeply religious that he was not only a good Christian, but a good deal of a pagan as well. A homely man was Bach, quiet, simple in taste, and blunt in speech." He was a rugged genius, though a kindly one, and he feared none save God. It is said that when the great honor of an invitation to the court of Frederick the Great came he delayed a whole year in going simply because he had some work of his own which he wished to finish.

He was a man to be loved, for he drew deep from life, and gave his message true. The first of the great German composers, it was fit that he should have set the standard so high. And it is to the honor of the Germans that all who have followed him in that enviable train of genius have kept faith with the trust.

Our Familiar Hymns

(The following article is sent us by Brother Frank A. Ball, of Los Angeles, in most kindly response to request recently published. It will appear in several sections, and is ascribed to Gussie Packard DuBois.—A. A.)

Something over a hundred years ago, in a preface to his hymn book, John Wesley made the statement that anyone was perfectly welcome to copy his hymns provided they would print them as they were. "But I desire," he said, "that they would not attempt to mend them, for really they are not able. None of them is able to mend either the sense or the verse. Therefore, I must beg of them one of these two things: either to let them stand just as they are, to take them for better or for worse; or to add the true reading in the margin, or at the bottom of the page, that we may no longer be accountable either for the nonsense or the doggerel of other men."

This precaution indicates the extent even then of the practice of hymn tinkering, but it is safe to say that it had little restraint upon this propensity. People, with seemingly good intentions, have freely rewritten hymns composed by members of other sects, to suit them to the creeds of the churches in which they were to be used, so that one acquainted only with the hymn book version is often led to suppose that the author shared in this particular belief, whereas he would have condemned it as absolutely heretical.

Doctor Watts has been one of the most fortunate of the hymn writers in his treatment at the hands of his editors. Of the one hundred and sixty hymns and psalms written by him, only about sixty have been changed to any extent, and most of these changes are unimportant. "And Satan binds our captive minds," he wrote in one hymn; but according to present version, his satanic majesty is not required to take so much trouble, he simply "holds" our captive minds. "All things but lost for Jesus' sake" is now "All things but loss for Jesus' sake."

The hymn-tinker, presuming to understand the classification of the angelic hosts better than did Watts, teaches us to sing "Bright seraphs learn Immanuel's name," instead of "Sweet cherubs," to whom the writer assigned the task of love. His line, "Up to the Lord our flesh shall fly at the great rising day," was altogether too material for this critical personage, who gives us this reading, "Up to the Lord we too shall fly." Many of Doctor Watts' hymns were altered by the Wesleys, who, though desiring to be let alone themselves, did not hesitate to lay their hands on other people's work; but the remarkable thing about their alterations is that they were usually real improvements.

I have little to write either of the alterations or the theology of hymns. The subject of hymnology interests people of all sects and no sect, and the history of Christdom is written in her hymns. "Creeds pass, rites change," but religious emotion endures. Deep sorrow and great joy have always found expression in hymns. "Lead, kindly light," "Abide with me," "O paradise," "Onward, Christian soldier," "Jesus, lover of my soul," "Jerusalem, the golden," are sung universally, and are so filled and surcharged with the intensity of life in the few great and simple phases seen by all that they carry far more than their original meaning to everyone who sings or listens. "Abide with me," is the prayer of the individual heart, and in the closing lines of "Lead kindly light," each bereaved heart sings and thinks only, "those angel faces that I have loved long since, and lost awhile." The most enduring hymns are personal.

Jigs and ditties whose mawkish and sentimental words have no excuse for existence and no possible hold upon any deep experience, unless it be the unworthy one of excitement and something new, never endure. In the complications of hymns that have helped, none of these supersentimental make-shifts are included: it is the strong hymn that has garnered up the world's prayer and praise and given them fit expression, and to which men cling. Where in modern hymnals will we find the strength of Luther's Marseillaise hymn of the Reformation, as it has been well called, Ein Feste Burg—"A mighty fortress is our God"? It takes a Luther to write such a hymn; not only that, but it takes a life-and-death struggle, and the immovable faith of a Christian, every inch a soldier, to compel its utterance. One may not sit down and turn off a hymn that will have the strength of warp and woof to hold great emotions; he who would write of home must suffer banishment, he who would write of liberty must be enslaved.

It is impossible to divorce hymns from the experience of soldiers. How many times has the Te Deum been sung to celebrate the victories of armies and navies! It commemorated the winning of the battle of Agincourt. It was likewise sung after Waterloo. England echoed and reechoed it after her delivery from the menace of the Spanish armada, as we did after sinking the fleet of Admiral Cervera at Santiago. It was chanted at Rome after Saint Bartholomew's massacre. Victories worthy and unworthy have uttered their praises through its strains. "Fear not, O little flock, the foe," was the battle song of Gustavus Adolphus's army, and they were accustomed to sing it together. Thousands of Swedish voices sounding forth such a song must have been an inspiration of victory in itself.

When Melancthon and his friends were sent into banishment after Luther's death, they were marvelously cheered as they entered Weimar on hearing a girl sing Luther's hymn in the street. "Sing on, dear daughter of mine," said Melancthon, "thou knowest not what comfort thou bringest to our hearts."

"A song of adoration to some superior being" is Johnson's definition of a hymn. "It is a song with praise of God," says Saint Augustine. "If thou praise God and sing not, thou utterest no hymn. If thou sing and praise not God, thou utterest no hymn." Most of our great hymns have been written under some stress of circumstance of grief, danger, or despair.

Few hymns have a more pathetically beautiful origin than the one of Reverend George Matheson's, usually sung to the tune of Saint Margaret. The author was engaged to a young lady whom he loved devotedly; shortly before the marriage was consummated, he was stricken with blindness. When it was known that his sight was permanently gone, his intended gave him up. Crushed by his grief, he wrote, "O, love that will not let me go, I rest my weary soul in thee." Especially beautiful is the second stanza,—"O, Light that followest all the way, I yield my flickering torch to thee."

Are We Justified?

Are we justified in singing, over and over again, the small number of songs that we know, leaving all the others unsung just because it is easier and everyone knows the familiar ones?

Is the pianist or the organist in the Sunday school who is expected to play a march for the rearranging and passing of the classes justified in always playing the same selection?

If so, then do you think the pastor or the preacher is justified in using a dozen or so texts, and always unwinding them as yarn from a ball?

Progress means effort; hard, well-directed effort, coupled with persistence and patience; yet we all want to progress.

Good congregations! Singing as well as the best choir music is one of the ideals of the live leader. Permit an "outsider" who is interested in the singing and other musical features of our work to suggest that when the same songs are used over and over while among them are dozens as yet unheard in the same book, an opportunity has been overlooked, a path opened as yet untrod.

We don't want the preacher to run along in a rut so deep that the Spirit of God can not penetrate it to help him and us; and perish the thought that our singers would unthinkingly do so!

We of the rank and file are looking to the leaders in our music, trained and untrained, to lead out in these things. We love the solos, the anthems, the oratorios, the cantatas and all the rest. We like them and appreciate the work done to produce them expressively; but, pray, do not overlook the diamonds in the dooryard, clothed in the unsung songs in our own books! Don't let us grow weary of the songs of Zion from singing them simply because we know them, whether they fit the occasion or not. In every community there are dozens, even scores of songs the notes of which are not heard, whose words have not thrilled and inspired, because they have not been heard. We suggest that this should not be.

Then there is this, though we dislike very much to mention it, but we must: When we witness the exhibition of from one to four and five of the singers grabbing their wraps and hats and dashing for the door as soon as the song service is over and before the speaker has begun, we sometimes get the idea that it is unseemly. It seems not to matter whether there are children at home or whether the weather is good or bad, especially good. When the same thing is repeated so much by the same persons we are liable to grow suspicious of their motives.

If the man or men in charge of the meeting should, upon introducing the speaker and performing the other duties incidental to such meetings, do likewise, we might wish he or they had not accepted the task; yet the one case seems about the same as the other. Are either necessary?

A FRIENDLY BROTHER.

Notes of the Staff

The Independence choir and the Sunday school orchestra at that place are alternating in furnishing a thirty-minute concert to precede each Sunday evening preaching service. This arrangement is proving interesting, and the concerts popular to the extent of attracting large crowds to the church, and, thus, remaining to listen to the preached word, the good seed is sown, and who can estimate the results?

We are pleased to tell the Staff readers that our gifted and energetic Sister Pauline B. Dykes, of Salt Lake City, has come to the front again with another fine anthem. It is bright and melodious, and carries out well the spirit of praise and adoration suggested by its title, "Hosanna." It is published by Theodore Presser, of Philadelphia, and will be a pleasing addition to the library of any of our choirs. Hasten the day when more of our musicians will make the commendable effort to write the songs of Zion, filled with the spirit of this latter-day work.

Musical Notes

The Massachusetts District choir, approximating thirty or more voices, has rendered its initial service at the conference which just convened in the city of Fall River. The anthem entitled, "Jerusalem the golden" was pleasingly sung, and considering the brief time in which to prepare for the event the indications are very bright for the future of the work of this choir.

The thirty-fourth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens with a concert on October 17. The annual auction sale of seats for rehearsal and concerts is set for several days prior to that date, at Symphony Hall, Boston. It is stated that no one who has signed a contract to play in the orchestra has been withdrawn on account of the war, up to the present time. The list of soloists includes four singers, four pianists, two violinists, and several others of international reputation.

Doctors of the medical staff at Bellevue Hospital, New York, have formed an orchestra and are giving concerts for the encouragement of the patients there, believing that the music will have a therapeutic effect upon them.

An expert offers the following advice to those who may need it: When your organ needs lubricating, use oil where the frictional parts are of metal; tallow, where metal comes in contact with wood; and black lead if wood comes in contact with wood.

The war in Europe is destined to exert quite an influence upon American musical conditions of the future, in all probability. The belligerent nations have in the past supplied us with artists, music, and musical instruments; while we, on the other hand, have supplied them with thousands of teachers and students. Many had planned on studying abroad who will of necessity change their plans and continue their studies here. It seems probable, therefore, that we shall have more American artists hereafter, and less foreign artists. We shall also find that some of our own are not far behind European artists in ability. A. B. P.

Our Correspondence

PIPESTONE, MINNESOTA, September 27, 1914.

Editor of the Staff: I have been a close reader of the Staff for some time, and I wish to express my appreciation of this department of the HERALD. I read in one issue some time ago that the interest in this department seemed to be lagging. It was suggested that it might be discontinued. But, thanks to our live editor, this department still lives.

I wish I could burn into the minds of our young musical people the necessity of reading the articles in this part of the HERALD. They act as a stimulus, and inspire one to larger undertakings. And it matters not in what field of endeavor we are directing our energies, we must have something to encourage us, to thrill us, to arouse us to such enthusiasm that we can not be content till we have accomplished something that yesterday was an impossibility.

I am greatly interested in choir work. Although I am at present away from my choir, I am in a position to visit the churches of different denominations in various parts of the country, and I miss no opportunity to get pointers here and there that will never come amiss.

I regret that there are so few Saints in the States in which I am traveling, as I enjoy most working among our own people.

Wishing the Staff the success it deserves, I am,

Yours for advancement,

J. B. JORDAN.

I have a song within my heart
That I shall never sing.
I know 'tis there, for I can feel
Its joyous fluttering.
Just how it goes I do not know;
And what it is about,
Though I have tried and tried again,
I can not quite make out.
But this I know: when days are dark,
And sullen is the air,
It does not vex my soul at all,
Because that song is there.

—John Kendrick Bangs.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS

"Nothing But Leaves"

I went into my garden for vegetables. I went where the vines were luxuriant and gave promise of abundant yield. But I looked in vain for that which I sought. I found only the promises, the blossoms, the half-formed pods, the abundant, glossy leaves.

For the season was far advanced. Summer had been parched and dry, and development had been retarded. Then there had come rains such as, earlier, would have brought productive gardens and fields. There ensued a luxuriant growth of leaves and a putting forth of blossoms when there was little time for maturity. And I found only leaves where I desired fruits to satisfy my needs.

And, as I pulled up and threw aside for the burning the useless vines that encumbered the ground, I thought of the morning, centuries ago, when the Master, on his way from Bethany to Jerusalem, went aside from the path to the fig tree which put forth its promising show of leaves but bore no fruit. I thought of the nation of which the barren tree was typical, and of the condemnation of the tree which was prophetic of the condemnation of the unfruitful people.

Then there came to my mind the familiar words:

"Nothing but leaves; the Spirit grieves O'er years of wasted life."

Why are the years of life wasted? Sometimes it is because, as with my garden, the early years have not what young life needs for development. Sometimes life is started wrong and never recovers here. Sometimes, late in life, there comes the realization of what its opportunities are.

But there is hope for us in the spiritual struggle. All is not ended when we reach the end of this earthly existence. Even that spiritual birth which comes late in life may go on in the eternal years of God and find fruition.

Yet, as all nature abhors a vacuum, as it abhors idleness and waste, so, in human life, there should not be wasted time, wasted opportunities, wasted talents. Looking unto God, seeking his guidance, following his counsel, there need not be.

The Mother Who Does Not Lead the Way

A girl has gone astray, gone far from the path of virtue, it is said, and this is the remark that was passed regretfully by one who was speaking of it: "The girl's mother works constantly for her family. She cooks, washes, and applies herself industriously for their comfort, but she never goes to church. She does not lead her children in the ways of spiritual life."

The parents who give care to their children's physical welfare are doing them a great good; but the parents who go farther and give attention to their children's spiritual culture fulfill another and very important function of parenthood.

To care for the physical life of their children, to care for their spiritual life, both are duties that devolve upon fathers and mothers.

The Primary Cause

A writer in the last issue of the Mothers' Magazine asserts in large headlines that the primary cause of juvenile wrongdoing is in the home. He quotes an eminent jurist as saying that "in all probability a most decided improvement would be effected if a few parents were sent to jail for permitting their offspring to grow up into hoodlums or worse."

The thought advanced in this quotation is that parents are largely responsible for the conduct of their children. Many are not sufficiently considerate of the training of their children in the period of infancy and childhood. They let slip the opportunity to mold the young life in its plastic years. In regret and tears they reap the harvest of sorrow.

And the young life goes to waste with all its splendid capability! It brings to its Creator, at the close of its course, nothing but leaves, no gathered sheaves, no ripened grains, no harvest fruits of worth.

The price paid for our incompetence is a fearful one, and they who pay it are our children.

What Can We Do?

One thing the women of the church can do is to take up the lines of study prepared with care by the Woman's Auxiliary in its various departments.

This work, rich in opportunities, is largely neglected throughout the church. In branch after branch, the only circle of woman's work is that of sewing and aid. Pleasant and helpful as this often is, it is not sufficient to reach all that women of the church should be doing in fitting themselves for the important duties that rest upon them. We doubt if there is a more important work than that of saving the souls of our own children and preventing their being numbered with the multitude of wasted lives which "bring no fruit to perfection."

"The Decay of Parental Authority"

In harmony with the thoughts offered above, we present those in the following reprint, one of the "best editorials of the day."

"A short time ago the London Times reproduced portions of a sermon preached by Canon Rawnsley at Saint Paul's Cathedral on the decay of home life and parental authority. So seriously did Canon Rawnsley regard this trend toward the decay of family life in England that he spoke of it as a great national peril. This same subject was dwelt upon forcefully in a magazine article last year by Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, only he brought the matter up in an incidental and satirical way in an effort to show how completely the relationship between parents and children had changed since he was a boy. In other words, this peril is by no means confined to England.

"Canon Rawnsley was particularly severe in his arraignment of the children of the rich, though he also holds that among Christian people in the homes of the poor this same lack of discipline has undermined the vitality of the race." A single paragraph will serve to give an insight into how deeply he feels:

"In the homes of the wealthy the same canker of lack of parental authority and want of discipline were felt. The parents were tolerated by the rising generation rather than held in reverence. A familiarity which tended to make a father's word of no avail was fostered from early days. The nexus between son and home as soon as the young man went out into the world was a purely cash nexus, and the girl grew up to feel that home duties were intolerable. At the first opportunity she would join her girl friend in a flat and arrange her life without any reference to her father or mother."

"The children of this generation have no conception of obedience and reverence for their parents such as was instilled into their forbears. Boys come to regard their fathers as old fogies, who were reared in a past epoch and whose opinion on modern usages is almost laughable and quite to be ignored. Girls look upon their mothers as antique both in dress and in manners. Indeed, one frequently sees the young American snob embarrassed by the appearance of his parents, when he is really not worthy to tie the laces on their shoes.

"It has been argued that this lack of authority in bringing up the children of to-day is due in large measure to the fact that the rearing of our youth is placed almost entirely in the hands of mothers and nurses and women teachers, with the result that children are coddled and pampered as delicate plants, and led to believe that they are the center of attention and importance.

"If a child cries it is because he is 'sensitive.' If he is willful it is because he is 'full of spirit.' Yet the day is coming when it will be realized that the same weakness that permits a child of three to give way to his impulses will show itself twenty years later in the child's giving way to some form of temptation. If control of the will is not taught at the age of four it will be wanting at the time when a boy gets his freedom in college. And it must be admitted that a certain type of 'society physician,' reinforced by much cheap magazine slush on the psychology of the child, has had a great deal to do with fostering this flabby attitude toward children.

"Canon Rawnsley has also touched upon another cause—the cash nexus between the son and the home. Children often have too much money to spend. This gives them a notion of independence and a supercilious air that is as certain to lead them into the hands of that vast portion of mankind that feeds upon idleness as the sun is to rise. Girls are allowed to dress upon a scale that involves an income large as that upon which their fathers and mothers felt themselves able to marry.

"Luxury breeds contempt for authority, no matter whether it be parental, or civil, or ecclesiastical."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Prayer Union

SUBJECTS FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN OCTOBER

Prayer for our Sunday schools and Religio societies; for the Prayer Union; and for all of the auxiliary departments of the church, that all these may be blessed in their work for the general uplift to that higher plane to which we aspire.

Lesson, Hebrews 6: 7-12.

Memory verse, Mark 13: 33.

REQUEST FOR PRAYERS

Mrs. Floyd Huff, Marshall, Minnesota, not a member of the church, but a woman of faith, asks the prayers of the Saints, that God will heal her of melancholia and nervous breakdown, that her life may be spared to raise her children, one of whom is an infant.

Letter Department

THURMAN, IOWA.

Editors Herald: The Thurman, Iowa, reunion convened August 21. Organization was effected by electing Elder J. A. Gillen, missionary in charge, Elder T. A. Hougas, president of the Fremont District, and Elder W. M. Self, president of the Southern Nebraska District presiding officers.

The following elders were present, who did the preaching: J. A. Gillen, E. L. Kelley, William Lewis, C. E. Butterworth, R. M. Elvin, C. Scott, W. M. Self, H. N. Pierce and E. Ran-nie. A. Carmichael and E. F. Hall made short calls in the interest of the Herald Publishing House, and each addressed the congregation on gospel topics.

The Sunday school work was in charge of T. A. Hougas, C. W. Forney and Ethel Skank. In addition to the regular Sunday school sessions the little ones had special meetings away from the large tent.

Each afternoon about four o'clock was had what was called the "rest hour." It consisted of solos, duets, readings, and short talks on topics of special interest. This was a short session, but very enjoyable.

About 6.45 each evening the young people, and those older in years, but young in activity, assembled on the campus to play "three deep." This was a very enjoyable game, both for players and onlookers, and usually lasted about thirty minutes.

Meals were served to those who did not care to do their own cooking. Sister E. D. Briggs of Nebraska City had charge of the cooking, which was done to the satisfaction of the patrons.

The Forney band played on the campus on each Sunday evening. This is a unique band from the fact that all bear the name Forney and are "kin" to each other.

There were forty tents on the ground. The largest congregation assembled in the tent and seats near by was five hundred and twenty-five. Forty-five automobiles were on the camp ground on Sunday afternoon, with more than eight hundred people.

The prayer meetings were profitable and enjoyable to many present. The camp was a beautiful place, on a gentle slope to the west, with trees giving sufficient shade. The brethren who prepared the camp did many days of faithful labor to make it such a desirable place. It was situated about two miles northeast of Thurman, on a farm belonging to Sister Rachel Leeka.

This was known as Plum Hollow in days gone by. Not a few were present who moved into the country fifty or more years ago. They had refused to follow a strange shepherd in the "dark and cloudy day." Children and grandchildren of these form the greater part of the Latter Day Saint community of the present day.

The reunion was profitable and enjoyable, and a pleasant relaxation from the busy cares of life. Adding many pleasant social features to the strictly religious part made it a red letter day in the lives of many. The reunion of 1914 will be among the pleasant days to remember when the march of time takes us into the future.

The writer and Elder H. N. Pierce held twenty-seven meetings in the district tent prior to the reunion, and about eight miles from the camp ground, and two and one half miles from Bartlett. The attendance was good, as also the interest. On Sunday evening the number was more than one hundred. The average during the week was about fifty. This was an excellent showing when we remember it was in the country, with the farmers very busy and some of them coming as far as six miles. EDWARD RANNIE.

DERBY, INDIANA, September 14, 1914.

Editors Herald: The Southern Indiana Saints will remember that said district meets in conference at Wirt, October 17 and 18. We trust that this event will be anticipated and that all the Saints will try to make the same a profitable occasion. It will mean a sacrifice, but let us remember that the Lord expects us to do our duty by such work as is entrusted to our care.

The reunion at Derby was beneficial to all who attended for that purpose. The Saints there have sustained two reunions in succession, certainly an evidence of work with faith.

They have a nice church nearly completed, regardless of the three years of drought and the trying conditions incident. May the Lord remember them and may their prayers prevail to bring all needed blessings, temporal and spiritual.

The Saints should not forget their prayers in public and in secret, and especially in their homes. We regret to find many homes where family prayer is not observed, and the rising generation is not taught to depend on the Lord for the things especially needed in these trying times. We feel that an oversight in this important matter is one of the sins of omission.

Will scattered Saints please inform me of their needs, and each man try to remember his neighbor. Let us remember the Bishop and the temporal needs of the work.

May the Lord help us all in our weakness that we may fulfill all things placed in our hands. F. E. ROWE.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, 315 North Thirty-second Street.

JOPLIN, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: The Spring River District closed one of the most successful reunions, August 16, at Cunningham Park, Joplin, Missouri, ever held in the district. The opening meeting was held at 10 a. m. the 7th, Brother Chatburn and missionary in charge, J. W. Rushton, were chosen to preside.

The Religio work was in charge of the district president, George Pearson. Sunday school work in charge of the district superintendent, Sister Mollie Davis. The work of both was interesting and instructive.

The following speakers occupied: J. W. Rushton, W. M. Aylor, William Lewis, I. N. White, F. C. Keck, Henry Sparling, Lee Quick, A. C. Silvers, Ellis Short and S. A. Burgess.

The sermons were fine and well attended, as were also the prayer meetings, which were held in the mornings. In fact, all attending the reunion seemed to enjoy themselves. There were thirteen baptized during the ten days.

There were some forty tents on the grounds, the largest number the district reunion has ever had.

This reunion was a decided success in every respect. A reunion for 1915 at the same place was decided upon, time being left to district president and missionary in charge. The committee for the next year is chairman, district president; treasurer, J. A. Graves; secretary, S. G. Carrow; O. O. Nunamaker and W. Workman. S. G. CARROW.

2502 Maiden Lane.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, September 16, 1914.

Editors Herald: Some of our members have been sick, but most have recovered. As a people we realize that God sometimes accomplishes his righteous purposes under affliction.

Our people here are coming up higher in the work of God's kingdom, and as a result we are enjoying in our prayer meetings some of the spiritual gifts, which assure us that this is Christ's gospel in fact, and that the signs that were to follow those that believe are in confirmation of Christ's words.

Hoping that the people of our church will soon see that the day is drawing nigh when that city in which shall live the pure in heart shall be prepared and our rest shall be complete, I am,
Your brother in Christ,

1719 Sixth Avenue North.

News from Missions

Oklahoma

Arriving in my field of labor on the second day of May, I have found it both agreeable and pleasant, and have, I am glad to say, put in one of the busiest summers of my ministerial life.

At our late General Conference, when the appointments were read, and I was assigned to the Central Oklahoma District, it came as a surprise, but yet agreeably so, for since coming here I have been highly pleased with the thought of being sent to what promises to be, in my judgment, one of the most prolific missions of the church. It has been my happy privilege to address the largest audiences that I have presented the word of life to since the years of 1902 and 1903, when on my first mission to the land of Scotland.

My initial effort was made in the Trail Creek Schoolhouse, near Kingfisher. Since then I have preached in the following places: Reeding, where we have baptized six; Enid, where I spent nearly three weeks speaking on the courthouse square, baptizing three, leaving others interested and some quite near the kingdom; our next stop was at the Golden Valley Schoolhouse, near Helena, where we preached but three sermons, as other appointments were urging us ahead. Our sojourn was made with Brother and Sister Brewster, who conveyed me as far as the town of Jett, where I was met by Brother Sawyer, he taking me on out into the sandhill country, some nine miles south of Bron, where appointment was made for me. Here I preached in the Locucas Grove Schoolhouse for nearly two weeks, with good interest. I was indeed made to feel at home with Brethren Sawyers, Paul, and Edwin LaBrue, whose kindness will long be remembered.

On August 4 Brother Hubert Case, our subminister in charge, called me over the long distance phone to come to Eagle City, where the Western District reunion was in session. Reaching that State, I was pleased to meet Brethren W. E. Peak, Hubert Case and J. E. Vanderwood of the active missionary force, besides a number of local ministry, and a large number of fine Saints, whose acquaintance we soon made. A most spiritual time was enjoyed. Unity and peace prevailed to a marked degree, insomuch that our heavenly Father spoke to the Saints in the gift of prophecy, giving words of encouragement to all to continue in well-doing.

The next large gathering was at Brother Sanders's grove, nine miles southwest of Calumet, where Brethren Simmons and Case had begun a two-week meeting. Here again came the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us." Leaving our meeting at Reeding, we made an early start, Brother Cameron Stuart driving me fourteen miles to Kingfisher to catch a fast train, bound for El Reno. From there I went to Calumet, where Brother Ed Dillon, of Oklahoma City, and myself were taken in Brother Sanders's car to the reunion grounds. We found prayer meeting already begun. It took little time to press us into service, and although Brother Case and myself had all the preaching to do, since Brother Simmons had gone to other parts of the field, we were greatly blessed, with the presence of the good Spirit in our efforts in presenting the word to such large crowds, ranging at times between three and four hundred people, some of whom came quite a distance. While only one was baptized at this meeting, many were brought nearer to the kingdom, and much prejudice was removed.

After getting through with our Calumet meeting I was requested to go to Dunlap, away off in the northwest corner of the State, to help in the reunion at that place. Arriving there on Monday, September 7, I met our aged and greatly esteemed old veteran, Brother J. H. Baker, who is looked up to as a father by many in these parts. I also met here Brother Frank Durfey, who is now district president, who, with others, as trying to help along the work. By some misunderstanding there was not the attendance there would have been; but, withal, to those whose privilege it was to attend, a splendid good time was enjoyed. Here as elsewhere, we met a number of fine young men who give promise of great things, if they only remain faithful. One of these, Brother Willie Trout, was ordained to the office of priest, by the writer and Brother Baker, having come very highly recommended. Here we met Brother George Swain and family, also Brother and Sister Kelley, where we were made to feel at home. We met many kind Saints, too numerous to mention.

Returning again to Reeding to complete the work began when we were called to Calumet, amongst other things, we were under the necessity of making a reply to the book, The True Origin of Mormon Polygamy, by Charles A. Shook, as the same had been freely circulated around, with a few to try to destroy the work that had been effected here. Brother Hubert Case joined me here for a few days, but is now gone to Oklahoma City, to attend to some church matters there. I have found in him a very pleasant and congenial fellow laborer.

On Sunday last we held a most spiritual prayer and sacramental service in the morning, when we ordained Brother J. Cameron Stuart to the office of priest. He is a fine, clean young man, and if he continues humble he will be quite useful to the work. Brother H. K. Rowland was also here and assisted in the work. At this place resides the village blacksmith in the person of Brother H. C. Taylor, who for years has tried to help along the cause.

Everywhere we have gone our necessities have been amply provided for by the Saints and friends, of which we have not a few; and our thanks are due them all. We feel sure they are recognized by him who will reward all for such faithful ministrations.

Amidst the distressing and perplexing conditions of the warring nations, may the cause of truth prosper, and our brethren in foreign lands be fully sustained by the hands of Him who watches over all, is our constant prayer.

Mail sent to my home address, Independence, Missouri, will reach me.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH ARBER.

Palestine

The Holy Land presents anything but a holy aspect to-day. The streets resound to the tread of the hosts marshaled and disciplined for war. The fellaheen villagers come in in crowds, shouting, and singing praises for the Sultan. The Government has notified the commanding officers that they have no money, and that they must live off the land. This they proceed to do, by helping themselves to wheat, flour, fruits, vegetables, medical supplies, horses, mules, clothing, and gold. Woe be to the man who resists them! They take double. Some petty officer and a few soldiers enter a store, make their demands, and proceed to carry them out. We saw one soldier take a hat off a man's head, and when he protested an officer ordered him to, "Vella, vella," move along.

There is great suffering among the poor in the city, and more in the country, where the soldiers are quartered. Unless there is aid sent in, I fear that hundreds will die of starvation. All business is at a standstill. The shopkeepers throw up their shutters at the least sound of alarm. Remove the soldiers, and every day would be like Sunday at home.

There is a drill camp about one mile west of us, and we see much of the soldiers. Thus far we have been unable to learn who Turkey is getting ready to fight. We presume it is Russia and Greece. That, of course, means England and France. It would almost seem that the nations were prepared for the great battle of Armageddon. Surely the Devil has made them mad and drunk with the spirit of slaughter and conquest.

There is no money available for business here. We must look to America for help in this respect. Last week, I wrote that American gold bills would pass here all right, but this week they are discounted thirty per cent. There is talk of the United States sending a warship here with money for the people, but in order to avail themselves of the privilege the money will have to be deposited in the United States Treasury, payable in Jerusalem through the Consul. The only way small amounts can reach us is for gold to be fastened in a piece of cardboard, placed in a letter and registered through the French Post.

The situation surrounding us is that of every man in the land, but that does not make it any pleasanter for us. We must receive means in some way. I hope to return some of our missionaries as soon as possible, and make provision for the others who are dependent upon us for bread.

May God protect our own land, and keep her free from the horrible conditions crowding upon the continents of Europe and Asia.

We are all well, and believe the Lord will care for us in some way.

In the conflict,

U. W. GREENE.

Arkansas

After visiting home and loved ones, I attended the reunion at Haileyville the last of August. Notwithstanding the wet weather, all seemed to enjoy themselves, and I think much good was done.

On the 9th of this month I met Brother J. W. Duboise at Siloam Springs, where he was conducting an interesting meeting. We closed there on the 13th, baptizing a noble man and his wife, and leaving several others near the kingdom.

We then visited Brother T. L. Miller, who lives in the land of the red apple. We preached a week to a small crowd, but had fine interest. Brother Miller and his wife love the gospel, and are doing all they can to get it before their neighbors.

On the 23d we came to this place. The gospel was never preached here, and we are having a struggle to get it before the people. Brother Davis and wife live here. They are fine young people.

Well, a great war is on. For fifteen years I have been anticipating the struggle now participated in by the nations of Europe, and by the Spirit of God we so declared it in this country. Some thought maybe I was a calamity howler, but the judgments are here, and the end is nearing. The pure in heart will be able to stand. This war is only the beginning of sorrows. The time is at hand when Babylon must fall, for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

So, Saints, let us put on the white robe of righteousness and keep it on, and be ready when the great day comes. It will be as the Apostle Paul said, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for those that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I remain,
Your brother in the gospel work,

E. A. ERWIN.

VAN BUREN, ARKANSAS, September 28, 1914.

Spring River

At the close of the Joplin reunion the writer and Brother Lee Quick took the district tent to Carthage, Missouri, where there has been little preaching done by the ministry of the Reorganized Church. We were cared for at the home of Brother J. E. U. Greene.

The crowds that came to hear the restored gospel were large and attentive, among them some of the Brighamites, who by their tendency to "butt in" helped us to establish the fact that there is a difference between the two churches. The good seed was sown and much prejudice removed.

During our stay there the writer experienced one of the saddest events of his life, being called home to the bedside of my little boy four years old, who was stricken on August 24 with peritonitis, and who died August 27. But I have the satisfaction of knowing I granted his last request, which was, "Papa, minister to me."

It is hard to give up the little ones, but we know, as Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." It is also hard to leave my dear companion and little daughter so lonely. Yet we have the promise that the good Father above will care for the dear ones we leave in order to spread this gospel.

We brought our tent to this place on the 12th instant, and although the weather has been very unfavorable we are having fine crowds and good interest. One has given her name for baptism, and others are very near the kingdom. We expect to remain here some two weeks yet. This is a new opening, only a few isolated Saints living here. We are domiciled at the home of Brother D. F. Minniar.

The work is onward in the Spring River District. We expect to close the tent work and attend the conference at Joplin, Missouri, October 10.

In gospel bonds,

News from Branches

Omaha, Nebraska

"Just for to-day, what more can heart demand
From one who will each longing understand?
Thy love withholds no treasure, so I pray
'Choose what may come, but give me strength to-day.'"

Prayer meeting was held at the home of Brother and Sister George Derry, 3613 Seward Street, last Tuesday evening, for the benefit of members of the family and others who find it very difficult to attend these meetings at the church. This Tuesday evening prayer meeting will be held at the home of Brother and Sister E. R. Ahlstrand, to cheer Grandma Ahlstrand, who has passed her eighty-fifth birthday.

Sunday, October 4, was a red-letter day with us. The church was beautifully decorated with autumn products, and the exercises at eleven o'clock were very interesting. After a talk by President E. A. Smith regarding Graceland College, all members of the Sunday school and congregation joined in a march and dropped their donation in a pumpkin in front of the altar. The little people also presented a very pretty picture on the platform, with their gifts of flowers and fruits, while they sang their song of harvest home.

The joint sacrament service in the afternoon with the Council Bluffs Branch was well attended and quite spiritual. President Smith spoke in the evening on "The signs of the times." May we all realize how important it is to be prepared at all times for the coming of our Lord.

"Teach me to live and find my life in thee,
Looking from earth and earthly things away,
Let me not falter, but untiringly press on,
And gain new strength and power each day."

Indianapolis, Indiana

On Monday, July 6, we opened a series of tent meetings here in an effort to get a hearing and bring the gospel more to the notice of the citizens of our fair city. Elders J. W. Metcalf, Fred A. Rowe and Jacob G. Halb, assisted by the local priesthood, have been engaged in the effort, which was well sustained in every way by the members of the branch. Meetings were held at three different points in the city. The gospel has been proclaimed with no uncertain sound; many have been warned; much prejudice has been removed; many friends made to the cause. Fourteen precious souls have been inducted into the kingdom of God upon earth, more than half of whom had never heard the gospel until the opening of this series of meetings; and, we expect, as a natural sequence, some have made themselves enemies to us.

We closed the meetings on Sunday, September 20, with a very enjoyable day—a busy day—a veritable feast, both temporally and spiritually. The Saints met together at 9.30 for Sunday school, bringing well-filled baskets, and remained together until the close of the evening service, and then seemed loath to part. It was a day long to be remembered as another occasion showing that God will bless his children when they strive to do his will, and live together in love and peace.

Our heart was made to rejoice when we looked into the dear faces of that gathering, and our mind went back to the time when the work was started here, six years ago, in the form of a little Sunday school and Religio home class of five members, three of whom were members of one family, and the other two a husband and wife. Our mind recounted the many changes and experiences of that little effort, following its fortunes and misfortunes up to the time when a branch was organized, December 17, 1911, with eleven members. We remembered the joy experienced upon that occasion, knowing that God had recognized the efforts and had helped to plant the work more firmly; and we also remembered the faithful, patient labors of Elder H. E. Moler, who labored here at this time under very trying and discouraging conditions. Then our mind followed on through the experiences since that time, recounting the labors of Elders J. R. McClain, F. G. Pitt and A. C. Barmore, on up to the present. And as we look over the faithful little band to-day, now numbering fifty-eight souls, we feel that the Lord has been exceedingly kind and gracious unto us, and our heart goes out to the kind Father in love, thankfulness and gratitude.

But, like the Apostle Paul, our eyes are still fixed ahead, looking forward, and as we do so, we realize that added numbers mean added strength, and we feel the greater weight of responsibility resting upon us as a branch. There is a vast field of opportunity open before us, and we ask an interest in the prayers of God's children that we may be humble, faithful, patient and diligent in our warfare, that we may be qualified to meet all emergencies, and as a branch, become a power for good in the hands of God in this great city.

Conference Minutes

MASSACHUSETTS.—Met October 3 and 4, at Fall River, presided over by President Frederick M. Smith, Calvin H. Rich, Horatio W. Howlett and Frederick W. Roberts, the last three being the district presidency. Reports from branches and ministry were mostly of an encouraging nature. There has been no material changes in numbers. Recommendations from the Brockton Branch for the ordination of Cyrus W. Wood to the office of elder, Wallace Booth, to that of teacher, and from the Providence Branch for the ordination of Arthur R. Richardson to the office of teacher, and A. Otis Toombs to the office of deacon, were approved and the five last-named ordained at the conference, Brother Wood not being present. Preaching by Holmes J. Davison, F. M. Smith and A. B. Phillips. A notable feature of the conference was the initial service, rendered by the district choir, comprising between thirty and forty voices. The anthem, "Jerusalem, the golden," was pleasantly rendered, and altogether the outlook is encouraging for the future of our choir movements in this district. The conference directed that an estimate be made of expenses for the district for one year, the amount to be raised by apportioning it among the branches pro rata, after allowing for what has been already furnished by branches, according to a plan specified in the resolution of the conference, the estimate to be furnished by the district presidency and treasurer. Adjourned to meet with Boston Branch, February 6 and 7. A. B. Phillips, press committee.

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—Met at Armstrong, Sept. 12 and 13, J. W. Rushton and stake presidency in charge. Courtesy of floor extended to visiting members. Reports read from presidency, bishopric, secretary, library board, First and Second quorums of Elders, First, Third and Seventh quorums of Priests; Second, Fourth and Knobnoster quorums of Teachers, Sixth Quorum of Deacons. Statistical reports from the twenty-one branches showed a net gain of 237. John Tucker was recommended by the Quindaro Branch for office of elder. E. E. Kenney was ordained as president of the Fourth Quorum of Teachers, and J. R. Lloyd as one of his counselors. Reunion committee reported deficit of $6.56, collection being taken to meet the same, committee being discharged. Recommendation of Charles J. Friend by Englewood Branch for the office of elder was referred to presidency and minister in charge. Conference confirmed the choice by Bishop Bullard of B. J. Scott to act as one of his counselors. Motion to change rules of representation of stake to mass convention was lost by yea and nay vote, 278 for, 630 against. Organization of Enoch's Hill Branch, Independence, was recommended by presidency. L. H. Haas resigned the office of stake secretary, and James Bunt was elected. Preaching by Frederick A. Smith, J. W. Rushton, B. J. Scott and G. E. Harrington. Sunday school was in charge of the local authorities. Special and general music was rendered during devotional sessions. B. J. Scott was ordained as counselor by J. W. Rushton, G. E. Harrington, W. H. Garrett. Adjourned to meet at Independence, March 13 and 14. James Bunt, secretary.

LITTLE SIOUX.—Met at Logan, October 3 and 4. District Presidents Sidney Pitt, S. B. Kibler and J. W. Lane presiding. Spiritual condition of branches in the main was reported good. Statistical reports showed 2,064 members, an increase of 19. Bishop's agent had received $854.67, and expended $645.00. Charles S. Kennedy offered a tract of land containing upwards of six acres adjoining Logan for $2,000 on favorable terms, with the expectation of establishing thereon permanent reunion grounds. A committee of three was appointed to solicit funds, with power to purchase when all funds were in hand, should they deem it advisable, with the understanding that the conference had no authority to bind the reunion to locate there. Motion to hold semiannual conferences was lost. C. J. Hunt, secretary of committee of Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska reunion asked to locate their reunion in our district, at Logan or Missouri Valley, in 1915, and also for our reunion, if abandoned, to meet with

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Portland District: As bishop's agent I issue this notice that you may know of our financial condition. Last month we were $40 short in furnishing the elders' families with allowance. To avoid embarrassment and disappointment to the sacrificing families of the elders, we need $100 per month in tithes and offerings.

This is not a personal matter. We are all workers with God. God forbids that the elders shall while away their time. The same may be said of every member of the church. The Lord requires us to live diligently in whatever capacity we are placed.

The law has been discussed from pulpit and press, so we presume all understand their duty. We trust each will respond promptly with what he can spare. We do not wish to be misunderstood in this matter. If we wait until our carnal natures are satisfied before we give anything to the Lord, many missionaries' families will be poorly provided for. I wish to state that one missionary's wife who is spending her time with her husband, returned to me as tithing five dollars of her allowance. Let us no longer say that when our debts are paid we will pay our tithing, but let us give the Lord his portion and trust him for the future.

Asking that you will heartily cooperate with us in our work, and respond promptly with your mite or abundance, I am,

Your brother,

L. STOVER.

TESTIMONY EXAMINED

A DEFENSE OF THE CALL OF JOSEPH SMITH

A notorious enemy of the Latter Day faith seeks to discredit the testimony of Joseph Smith because he was the "one and only witness" at the appearing of the Father and the Son at the time of his first vision. Our critic says:

Every Bible student knows that God not only requires two or three witnesses to establish an important truth, but that he actually forbids faith or action on the testimony of one witness.

Chapter and verse are not furnished for this statement, and for the simple reason that there is in the book no such requirement or prohibition. On the other hand, numerous instances occur where none other than one witness sets out that which has been revealed to govern the faith and action of the people of God, only as his testimony is corroborated by other witnesses to other occurrences.

A JUST TEST

It would be difficult for our critic to find another eyewitness to the call of Abraham; to the burning bush and the instruction Moses received in the mount; to the angel's visit to Mary, to her immaculate conception, and to the ordination of Christ as the anointed of God. Yet God's appointment in each instance and the divinity of Christ are established in the mind of every believer by corroborative testimony in connection with the witness of each.

In the light of his subsequent activities, and from the fact that, according to promise, he became the father of Israel, and the father of the faithful, we know that Abraham was called of God. In the light of the miraculous deliverance of this people and their establishment in the land of promise, and in the light of his teachings, we know that Moses was the God-appointed prophet and leader of Israel. In the light of the testimony of Joseph, the witness of John the Baptist, of the prophets and of the angels, and because of that which Christ did as the Savior of men, we know that Mary was visited of the angel, that she was overshadowed by the Holy Ghost, and that Christ was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

Now, if a just test is to be applied to the call of Joseph Smith, it must be the test our critic would apply in the instances just referred to. It is noticeable, however, that many opponents of the latter-day evangel in examining the call of Joseph Smith ignore the only safe and fair standard for the substantiating of fact by testimony. The established rules of honorable procedure before the court of religious opinion when applied in the case of Joseph Smith, as applied in cases substantiated to the satisfaction of all Christian religionists, admit of corroborative evidence, which, in connection with his own testimony, show him to be a prophet of God.

JOSEPH SMITH'S TESTIMONY

Joseph Smith testifies that in answer to prayer in which he sought information relative to which of the warring sects was right, that he might know which to join, the Father and the Son appeared to him and told him to join none of them, for the reason that in their teachings they were wrong. Now the question raised is: Did God and Christ at this time appear as is stated? The criticism is that it is not so established, for we have no other witness, or witnesses; hence Joseph Smith is not to be received as a prophet, because God "actually forbids faith or action on the testimony of one witness."

Now Joseph Smith bore further witness. In all solemnity, he testified that by the direction of an angel he found certain plates, and that under the light of God he translated the same, which translation is a record of God's dealings with his people on the American continents. He testifies that as directed of God he organized the church after the long and dark days of apostasy, which church was divinely commissioned to preach, by a restored priesthood, the primitive gospel in all the world as a witness of the near approach of the second advent of Christ, and in the work of preparation for that advent. Following the established rule, if this latter testimony be substantiated, the former is substantiated also, and Joseph Smith is to be received as a prophet of God.

CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE

We have reliable and abundant evidence that the plates were found. "God bearing witness to it," eight men testify that they saw the plates in the possession of Joseph Smith. Three other men, who, later, though disassociated from the church, reaffirmed their testimony, testify that they saw the plates in the hands of an angel, and that "the voice of the Lord" commanded them so to bear witness. In addition, we have archæological evidence and internal evidence galore to establish the divinity of the Book of Mormon.

The church was organized after the apostolic pattern, and other witnesses testify to the restoration of the priesthood. In the preaching of the gospel, the priesthood of the church have repeatedly and from the beginning called attention to the prophetic utterances about to be fulfilled, including the return of the Holy Land to its former fertility, the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and the gathering of the Jews to the land of Palestine. The returning fertility of the land, the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and the gathering of many Jews to their former home, strengthened by the great Zionism among this people in all the world, evidence the divinity of the church as organized, the authority of the priesthood as claimed, and the truth of the gospel message as preached.

Besides all this, we have a great cloud of witnesses who rise up and testify, to the glory of God, that in the latter-day movement they have found the organized and authoritative institution of heaven, ordained to consummate the work necessary unto the reception of the Bridegroom in the day of his coming, and that thereunder they find the inspiration and the witness of the Holy Ghost, in fulfillment of the promises that on condition of the keeping of the commandments the comforter was to "abide with you for ever."

THE GIST OF IT

And just here is the gist of the whole matter. The Saints not only believe in the possibility of revelation to-day, but they bear witness, in the fear of God, that their institution, in contradistinction to all other denominational orders, was founded upon, in harmony with, and under the direction of the revelations of God; and that when they continue in faithfulness to their trust God continues, according to their necessities, to reveal his purposes, and his will unto them.

Our critic holds that the day of revelation is past. This being true, according to his philosophy, Joseph Smith must have been a deceived man or a fraud. It is easier to assume the latter, and ignore the corroborative testimony herein suggested. This kind of sophistry, though less honorable than a fair and impartial consideration of all the facts, misleads many indiscriminating minds to the conclusion that it is not only just but effectual.

We may expect men to continue their efforts to set aside the witness of Joseph Smith, some by methods open and frank, others after the manner here under consideration. We may expect each class to have followers. Our confidence in the inherent fairness of men encourages us in the hope that the former class may grow larger, as the latter grows smaller.

The weakness of the contention of our critic is in the fact that if successful in his purpose he tears from under his own feet his hope of life eternal; for when he undertakes to set aside the testimony of Joseph Smith on the grounds that he is the only witness of his first spiritual experience he attacks testimony that has been in all ages and still is vital to the activities of the people of God, and without which he has no promise.

The strength of the position of the Saints of latter days is that their faith is established in accordance with the true criterion of the past. Tried by this criterion, the testimony of Joseph Smith stands, and our critic is left to bring up another line of attack.

J. F. GARVER.

GOOD ADVICE REPRINTED

III.—PULPIT OFFENSES

The manner in which a thing is said sometimes adds to and sometimes takes from its efficacy for good in gospel work as in other pursuits.

If the preacher is coarse and bitter in his treatment of those differing from him in belief, and speaks of such differences in a sneering or denunciatory manner, he will fail to reach his object—that of winning their attention and respect. For though the publicly stated or written declaration of the faith and doctrines held by a man or a people becomes by such published declaration the property of anyone who may choose to examine it for acceptance or rejection, there is nevertheless a personal claim upon it, held by the one offering it for consideration, which makes it dear to him; and courtesy, right feeling, and sound religious policy demand that those who essay to discuss it should treat it as fairly as themselves would ask for their own views.

It may be thought to be a mark of moral bravery for a man to emphasize his dissent to principle, doctrine, or dogma, by an arraignment of those holding to such in public; and in terms of harshness and ridicule, when those so arraigned are not present to represent themselves; but we do not think so. To our thinking he is the braver man, morally, who will give those thinking and teaching differently from himself, the credit for honesty of thought and purpose he thinks himself entitled to; and then will in quietness of spirit, and in temperate terms, and respectful manner examine and weigh the dogma, doctrine, or principle dissented from upon its own merits from comparison with other things held to be good.

No minister for Christ can afford to detract from the dignity of his calling or the value of the message he is called and chosen to bear to the world by cheapening himself in using the weapons always employed by ignorance and dogmatism, i. e., personal abuse, ridicule, sarcasm, or coarse invective. Whoever employs these loses, whether he seems to gain his present point or not.

There is nothing in pulpit oratory more annoying to the sensitive inquirer after the truth (who may have been raised in some one of the prevailing faiths) than to have those things which have become sacred to him by use and the sanction of age roughly assailed by men whom he thinks ignorant and unlearned. To him such assault is not Christianlike, and he who is guilty of it loses opportunity for good impressions when he thus commits assaults of that kind.

It may be claimed that it is truth, and the truth ought not to hurt anybody. But the fact remains that the person is hurt, and if it shall be closely inquired into, the hurt has not been caused by the truth, but by the rough, unthinking, and reckless manner in which the truth has been stated. There are honest-minded people everywhere, men who at heart love the truth, and who will gladly exchange their errors for truths. But tradition, the claims of prevailing opinions in regard to respectability, the notions men have imbibed regarding religion from the precepts of men, all combine to raise an almost adamant wall against the truth. It has always been so, is so now, and must ever remain so, until the Christ idea has been universally disseminated; and the "Lamb that was slain," the "Lion of the tribe of Judah," shall cause his Spirit to prevail. Until the Master gives command for his servants to "seal up the law, and bind up the testimony," it is clearly the duty of those servants to make every effort commendable to help spread the truth in the spirit which prompted the Savior's declaration, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

The gospel orator should seek to win the confidence of his hearers. He can do this by being affable, friendly, and sympathetic; he can not do it by being harsh, dogmatic, or dictatorial. A friend to mankind must show that he has the interests of man at heart, and, while believing that himself is in the right, he must feel, also, infinite pity for the erring; and build for them the new house of faith before he destroys the old with ruthless hand.

Brethren, be gentle in your pulpit manners, so far as differing conditions will make compatible with the Master's written law.—President Joseph Smith, in HERALD, volume 45, page 17, January 12, 1898.

CURRENT EVENTS SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

ROUMANIAN KING EXPIRES.—Charles I, aged king of Roumania, passed away on the 10th. He is succeeded by his nephew, Prince Ferdinand, who on the 11th took the oath of office.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.—The river and harbor bill, appropriating twenty million dollars, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War and Board of Army Engineers, has been passed by both houses and signed by the President.

BEQUEST TO SUFFRAGE.—The will of Mrs. Frank Leslie, admitted to probate in New York City, bequeaths her entire estate, estimated at one million dollars, for the furtherance of woman suffrage in the United States.

CANAL LANDSLIDE.—A landslide occurred on the east side of the Panama Canal in Culebra Cut, on the night of the 14th, which has temporarily suspended traffic. Colonel Goethals estimates that the canal can be opened again in about ten days.

TRIAL AT SERAJEVO.—At Serajevo, the scene of the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and wife, feeling runs high owing to the circumstances attending the trial of Gavrio Prinzip and twenty accomplices charged with high treason in connection with said assassination. A state of excitement bordering on terror is said to permeate the city.

COTTON LOAN FUND.—The Federal Reserve Board on the 10th announced its approval of a plan for a one hundred and fifty million dollar loan fund to care for the cotton crop. The fund would be raised through voluntary subscriptions in which banks might participate. This arrangement is calculated to relieve the situation incident to the European war, under which cotton can not be advantageously marketed.

WOULD DISCONTINUE SUNDAY FUNERALS.—A petition has been filed with the commissioners of Salt Lake City asking for an ordinance proscribing Sunday funerals. A leading Salt Lake City daily suggests that the commission would do well to ascertain prevailing public sentiment before passing an ordinance requested by a few actuated by self-interest, or who signed the petition without careful and deliberate thought.

LABOR TRIALS.—Indictments against fifty striking coal miners of Boulder, Colorado, have been dismissed for lack of evidence. This action is said to have been taken to avoid efforts to invalidate the indictments on the ground that the grand jury was prejudiced. In the appeal case of two miners of Butte, arrested by the militia and tried by court martial, the Supreme Court of Montana has ruled that a military court has no jurisdiction over civilian prisoners.

PHILIPPINE BILL.—The Philippine bill declaring it to be the purpose of the United States to recognize the independence of the Philippines "as soon as a stable government can be established there" passed the House on the 14th by a vote of 211 to 59. This bill would make both branches of the Philippine legislature elective by the Filipinos; would give qualified veto to the governor general, appointive, and absolute veto to the President of the United States; and would allow the United States Senate to annul any law passed by the Philippine assembly. It is announced that the bill will not be considered by the Senate at this session.

ALASKA COAL.—The Alaska coal land leasing bill has passed the House and awaits the signature of the President. This bill throws open to a system of leases under competitive bidding the extensive coal fields of Alaska. The Government retains a large portion of the districts, and reserves the right to mine coal for the benefit of the Army and Navy and for the operation of the Government railroads of Alaska. Leases may be made in blocks of forty acres or multiples thereof, not to exceed two thousand, five hundred and sixty acres, to run not more than fifty years. Present claimants may relinquish rights to patent under the old law, payments to be refunded. Royalties must be at least two cents per ton, with maximum restrictions, proceeds usable only to reimburse the Government for building the Alaska railroad.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Desultory fighting has continued at Naco, with additional casualties to civilians on the United States side of the border, and slight damage to property. United States troops fired upon by the Mexicans, returned the fire. One United States trooper is reported dead and two seriously wounded from gunshots. Mexicans crossing the international line were disarmed. General Hunt, of Arizona, on the 13th ordered the national guard to make ready to entrain for Naco. Following communications from the Washington authorities, the governor gave word that he would not at this time send state troops to the border. Progress is reported from Aguas Calientes, where representatives of Carranza, Villa and Zapata are in convention to select authorities for a provisional government. A request that Carranza release all political prisoners as Villa had done, was changed to an order and enthusiastically passed by this convention. Report that the resignation of Carranza had on the 14th been accepted by the convention was the next day denied from Mexico City. It is stated by dispatch from Washington that a further announcement of future United States policy in Mexico will be forthcoming on guarantees of full protection to aliens in Mexico, and promise not to reimpose custom duties collected during the United States occupancy of Vera Cruz.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.—The German investment of Antwerp is reported complete, with the Belgian army and British forces in a retreat unknown. The British marines in forts to the north of Antwerp retreated and are interned in Holland. With the Germans occupying Ghent, and pressing on toward Ostend, the temporary seat of Belgian Government was moved from Ostend to Havre, France, on the English Channel. Ostend is said to have been taken by the Germans. The allies report gains below Soissons. Both lines claim gains in the environs of Verdun. The left wing of the allies has been extended north and west to the North Sea, and has made advances at some points. Russia's announcement of lost ground regained in eastern Prussia and Russian Poland is denied by Germany, the latter claiming gains in Poland. Austria reports the Russians repulsed, wholly, or in part, from Przemysl, the latter announcing a withdrawal for strategical purposes, and that the siege continues. Reinforced by the Germans, the Austrians have assumed aggressive tactics. Austria claims victory over Servians and Montenegrins. Montenegro announces victory in Bosnia. Tokio reports two forts at Tsing-tao bombarded by the Japanese. The contest between the union of South Africa and German Southwest Africa is complicated by the rebellion of Colonel Maritz, commanding one of the four Union armies formed to release England from the task of dealing with the German colonies. Colonel Maritz commanded the northwest cape province, Dutch, and immediately south of the German possessions. He has joined the Germans. Premier Louis Botha has established martial law throughout the Union. The great majority of the Dutch of the Union are said to be loyal. The Russian Cruiser Pallada was on the 11th sunk in the Baltic by a German submarine. Report that two German submarines were sunk following this event is denied by the Germans. The British cruiser Hawke has been sunk in the North Sea by a German submarine. Germany found at Antwerp the following merchantmen: Four British, two Belgian, one French, one Danish, thirty-two German, two Austrian steamers, and two German sailing vessels. The German steamers had been rendered unserviceable. Australia will furnish additional troops. Portuguese forces sailed from Lisbon on the 10th to reinforce garrisons in Portuguese possession in South Africa, adjoining German possessions. Albania is reported active, or about to enter the war on the side of the allies.

QUORUM WORK

[The following by Elder W. H. Greenwood, in charge of the British Isles Mission, was read before the Seventh Quorum of Elders at the mission conference, Gloucester, August 1 to 3, 1914.—EDITORS.]

I first wish to suggest to your minds the definition of the term quorum. Its meaning should convey to each of its membership the idea first of all of their relationship to this quorum, whatever that may be. The term quorum, you will find means "number," or "legally sufficient to do business, even the business of the whole."

It is a "special commission" and in this sense I wish the subject to be understood this afternoon. A quorum of elders consists of ninety-six elders, or part thereof, but generally speaking it is "the part thereof."

Each district in the mission may furnish its quota to this quorum, its share or proportion of elders to make up the quorum, that is, in point of numbers, so that every elder should regard himself, and also be regarded as a particular quota in this quorum, a particular part thereof, whose duty it is to take a share of service proportionately, with every other part thereof, and thus support the body herein represented.

Every elder who realizes the advantage there is to be obtained by membership, and as he expects to receive such advantage, in turn should regard it as his duty to so encourage every member of the quorum by giving his quota of service. In this way you can assist each other, mightily.

If you can not write a paper, can you not give an interesting lecture upon some subject that will enlighten your brethren? If you can not do either, there is still something that you can do, and that is to attend the sessions of the quorum, and support those who may undertake to give you the needed instruction.

The first business of such a body of elders is to organize themselves, that means, form yourselves into a proper society; choose a capable man as president and others to assist him in presiding, elect a good scribe to keep the record, yes, a record, for you must not forget that you are making history all the time; then you will require a treasurer to collect the pence and fill the bag so that you may be able to meet all the necessary expenses. If he should require assistance to bear the burden, I trust that some good brother may be found to assist in carrying the elders' treasure. If you should find that you have more than these brethren can manage to carry, then you may begin to spend a little, by calling the attention of the elders to the advantages of the quorum by printed rule and address, thus pointing out its special benefits.

Your official organization should be capable of acting as a committee or as the executive of the quorum, by drawing out subjects of interest for the consideration of the general body, or, in other words, make out the program for each session. There must be design in the minds of the officers; it will not suffice to meet the demands to wait until you meet before you decide what action or course you will take.

I would suggest that you encourage original efforts from your own membership. These will do more lasting good than anything that you may borrow from other sources. I commend this idea to you for the simple reason that it will exercise the mental faculties of your members, and also develop and sustain true merit and character. This feature has been one of complaint among the elders at times, and may be one of the chief reasons why some do not attach themselves.

May I suggest that the title of your quorum itself would make a very good subject, and I think the nearer we can get to our own particular work the better progress we shall make. Suppose then that you take, "The elder; his office, calling, quorum." This study would bring us right home at once.

What think you of this line of study? It is not copyrighted; you may take possession of it at once:

1. What is the elders' quorum?
2. What is an elder?
3. What priesthood does an elder hold?
4. What is the duty of an elder?
5. What position does the elder hold or occupy in the church?
6. What is meant by the statement, The elders shall see that my law is kept?

There you have six questions that would keep you busy for quite a time, and they would go a long way in assisting the elder in qualifying for the more efficient discharge of his duty.

ABILITY

There are two kinds of ability, natural ability, and acquired ability. We very often make a great mistake in regard to what we term natural ability. It does not mean that an individual is a monument of efficiency because he may possess this gift; you must not think for a moment that he does not have to put forth an effort. No, no; that would be a great mistake.

We sometimes hear this statement in regard to the ability of some individuals, "It's as easy for him, as it is for a duck to take to water." Of course you quite understand that it is natural for the duck to take to the water; but you seem to forget that there must be an effort on the part of the duck to get there. Did you ever notice what happened when it got there? It simply floats, and is tossed about in every direction, until it has decided what course to take. Then what happens? Why, it begins to work (swim), and the effort has to be continued until the task is accomplished, otherwise it would remain stationary, or be carried wheresoever the currents led.

This lesson teaches us that although we may possess natural ability, unless we shall direct our minds and cultivate our thoughts, we shall be carried away from our purpose and remain stationary. We must do more than mark time.

ACQUIRED ABILITY

Acquired ability is the outcome of knowledge, information, and power, that may be obtained, in the first place, from reading, and book study. This knowledge we all acquire in common with each other; but the acquired ability that I call your attention to is that which we acquire by the means of the exercise of the mind, in observation, perception, and memory. Exercise will develop the brain, just as it will develop the muscle; the one is mental, while the other is physical; the one develops the intellect, while the other develops the body. If it is physical culture that you require, your teacher at once gives you your lessons and instruction; these you must faithfully practice until you have attained your desire or purpose, that is when you have obtained perfect control of your faculties, whether of body or of mind.

Every man may acquire ability of some kind; you have some kind of natural ability, and it is your business to find out the particular kind. Having found this natural or original ability, the great point is to maintain it, to be your own natural self. Do not try to act, or talk, or preach like some other man. Almost everybody can ape somebody else; don't do these things. Be your own, dear self in all conditions; no tongue can speak words like yours. Your personality is given of God; your individuality belongs to you alone. There may be plenty of actors; but you yourself are the real character; therefore exercise, train, study, and observe; let your brain have regular work, not too much overtime, and see that you pay trade union wages.

DISABILITY

Disability means the opposite of ability. It means that you lack physical, intellectual, or social fitness. Now we are not prepared to plead disability, are we? I trust not, for the work's sake, as also for our own; but let us just examine the situation, and find a remedy if necessary. Let me ask:

Do you feel physically unfit? If so, what is the remedy? I should suggest, See the doctor. I would recommend the Great Physician.

Do you feel intellectually unfit? What is the remedy? There is a remedy. Here it is: Get to work. Read and study; give your attention to the training of your mind. Learn to observe. Learn to think. It may be very easy to think as others think, but you must think for yourself, if you would have the credit for being intelligent. You can not give a reason for anything you may believe unless you think for yourself; other men's reasons are not yours.

Do you feel socially unfit? Here is your remedy: Cultivate good manners. Be a gentleman at all times. Avoid vulgar language and coarse conversation, and learn to use good grammar; and you will find that you will soon command the respect of all good men.

Those receipts will cure any case of disability. I heartily recommend them to you.

THE GREAT NEED OF THE AGE

We may get fine, intelligent men, who will grace our work, and shine as the stars of the firmament, as talkers, orators, and preachers, and such men would prove invaluable to the work, no doubt; the need of the age, however, is not preachers in particular, but we do need good, spiritually-minded men, who can supply the needs of the flock, and lead them to the pastures of love, sympathy, and good will. Experience is a great teacher. You can not deny the lesson that experience teaches. We may be taught, and our teachers may work incessantly; but it is I that must learn to apply the teaching. That alone will give me knowledge, and power, and ability. And when we have received this power it is our property, and we are duty bound to use it for the blessing of the church and the world.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF OFFICE

All elders are not leaders; nor are all qualified to preside; nor are all preachers. If every man would honestly examine himself and find out what his own particular ability is and try as opportunity afforded to fulfill that position, you would find that there would be other disposition in our elders than the mere seeking to fill position.

In conclusion, let me remind you that the positions to which an elder may be called are many and varied, and the qualifications of some of these might be very profitably considered by you as a quorum. I therefore submit the following subjects for your consideration:

1. What should be the qualifications of a district president?
2. What should be the qualifications of a branch president?
3. What should be the qualifications of a quorum president?

4. What should be the qualifications of a bishop's agent?

5. What should be the qualifications of a missionary?

6. What should be the qualifications of an elder?

Finally, brethren, I submit these thoughts to you as a line of study that the elders' quorum may very profitably entertain, and I believe that you would find subjects here that would supply instruction to the elders of every shade of opinion; and I further believe that the benefits of such a course would be very far reaching, and assist the elders to more efficiently discharge their several duties with more satisfaction, both to the church and also to themselves.

THE MISSION OF GRACELAND

There has seldom been anything written in support of Graceland College except by those having official connection with the school, and hence contributions have been thought by some to be prejudiced in its favor. This is our excuse for this article. Not being connected with the college in any way, we feel that we can write freely with no "ax to grind."

First of all, don't call it a poor boy's school. The richest boy in this world is the boy with a strong, healthy body, clean physically and clean morally. The world is calling for that class of boys to-day more than ever before.

WHAT IS ITS OBJECT?

This question can be answered by asking another. What is the object of the church? We answer, to redeem mankind—spiritually, physically and temporally. We preach about equality, but how can it be brought about? We sing about Zion and look forward to the time when it will be redeemed. In Zion we will have no poor, where now we have many lacking in this world's goods. How, then, can these happy conditions be brought about? Shall we divide up? How long would it be before inequality would again be apparent?

Is there an honest man with a strong body who is willing to accept something for which he has made no effort? We can't believe that men, especially young men, are asking alms, but we do believe that they are asking for an equal opportunity to qualify themselves to provide for themselves, and thus will our poor disappear because "the idler shall not eat the bread of the laborer" in Zion.

This, to our mind, is the object of Graceland College. To say to every boy and girl in the church, Come, and if you will work, and work hard, we will give you an opportunity as good as the one had by the boy with money to pay his way.

A PRACTICAL WORK

We realize that many think that such a stupendous undertaking can not be accomplished. Then let us pull down our Zion sign and take up something we can do. But we believe it can be done if we are willing.

We knew a family,—father, mother and four boys. They were very poor. The father sawed wood for his neighbors, and the mother took in washing to send the boys through high school. Finally the oldest one graduated from high school and took a course in dentistry. He graduated and took up practice. He educated the next younger brother in the same profession. They two educated the next one, and so on. To-day these boys are all doing far above the average, and none of the family is now poor. That which was done by this family can be done by the family of Christ,—the church,—if we are willing.

A benevolent order having five hundred thousand working men as members is starting a school on a large tract of land in Illinois where the children of the members can go and learn a trade,—qualify themselves to provide for themselves. All they ask is an opportunity. This school is sustained by an annual assessment of one dollar for each member. Our church members could just as easily afford a like amount, but with us it is a freewill offering, and so many neglect doing their part.

COMPENSATION

Another thing. We insist that the college faculty shall work for their "just wants and needs," and we personally know that in the past this has been the rule. We have in mind one brother who taught in Graceland for six hundred dollars per year when he was sought by other schools, and could have drawn five hundred dollars more salary. Yes, we could name several of the faculty of whom this would be true. Why do they make this sacrifice? To reduce the expenses of students who are abundantly able to pay? No, but to help educate the boys and girls of the church,—perhaps your boy, or my girl, or my brother's boy or girl, especially those of limited means. They are making this consecration to God's work to afford an equal opportunity to all.

What right have we to withhold our means and thus lose to the church the benefit of this sacrifice on their part? Where are the Saints who are meeting this sacrifice by making an annual offering of $500 to the college? Are we willing that it shall be said that these young men and women are more consecrated to the service of God and more willing to sacrifice for the children of the church than we are ourselves?

If the people of this church having means would come to the help of Graceland College, giving according to their means, our college work would progress rapidly. There are many of our young people who are well qualified to assist in the educational work of the church, and are willing, if the men of business will do their part and furnish the means. We pray that God may touch our hearts and awaken us to a sense of our duty.

CAN IT BE POSSIBLE?

Yes, we believe that it is possible. If those in the church having means would give according as God has blessed them, the expense of running the college could be easily met, and the college authorities could extend the privileges of the school to a great many boys and girls of limited means. With means in hand to pay the running expenses, plans could be devised to make the land belonging to the college afford labor to employ one hundred more than is now possible. These would not come from the well-to-do, but from the families of the poor. This plan of making the land produce the living for the students could be continued until we had no poor among us, because all had an equal opportunity to better their condition in life.

We have personally known of many cases of boys and girls of very limited means coming to Graceland College, and by their own efforts getting an education that qualified them for positions of responsibility and trust. One young brother came with twenty dollars capital to try to get a year's schooling. He was a worker. He remained several years, and has since graduated from one of the large universities and is doing well.

Another brother thought it impossible for him to attend. He said he was too old and had no money but had a horse. We advised him to sell the horse and we would find a place for him at Graceland. He spent several years here and will soon graduate from a state university. These are not isolated cases; there are many very similar.

CONCLUSION

Now to conclude: The object of the college is to assist in the redemption of Zion by placing before the young people of the church, not a few favored ones, but all worthy, an equal opportunity to qualify themselves so that they can not remain poor, as we will have no poor in Zion. Men and women of the church have responded to the call and are consecrating their lives as teachers, receiving their just wants and needs. Now what is lacking to make the college a success? Will this revelation answer it? "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." That means you, and it means me,—it means every member of the church.

Are the men of business making the same consecration to God's work that the ministry and the college faculty are? If not, perhaps this is the reason for our slow progress. Can we afford to come before the judgment bar of God and hear it said that our neglect to do our part was the reason that the purposes of God were so long delayed?

There are ten members of the faculty of Graceland College that are making a great sacrifice in salary to help the educational work of the church. Haven't we ten men or women of business affairs who will equal their sacrifice and make it effectual by making an annual offering of $500 or more? College Day has passed, but we are sure that if any have failed to do their part they can yet send it to Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa, and it will reach the right channel.

F. B. BLAIR.

THE DUTY OF THE PRIEST

(Paper written by Lyman W. Pike, and read before the Fourth Quorum of Priests.)

It is apparently an easy matter for some men to launch out into a new field and make converts. Some are so fortunate that they are able to report many baptisms each year. We are thankful that there are those of the great body who are so fortunate and each year return with such glad tidings. Their responsibility is a very great one, and they are serving under a divine commission; not everyone can do what they are doing. When we think of the many requirements of the active missionary, it causes us to marvel and say within ourselves, Is it possible that one individual will be able to qualify in all these details? We see many who are not qualifying, some in one thing, many in most of the important details.

God is using his servants in this world for a specific purpose. He has said that they should be fishers of men. When we go fishing we procure the very best bait for the fish we would like to catch. Some fish will be attracted by a bright, shining bait, others by an earthworm. So it is with people—they are attracted by different methods. And it is a good thing. There is a work for each one. Some men by nature and by education become shining lights, are polished in manners, in speech, have a power to attract men and to retain their respect as men and ministers for God. But others seem to be crude in their ways and have not had the advantages which have been possible to our polished brethren; but there is a work for such to do. Such an one has certain qualifications which are unknown to the usual run of the polished people. He will be able to reach and to baptize certain people who would be beyond the power of the other brother to reach. So we are all sent to fish, some for one kind, some for another; all are brought to shore, and, indeed, it is a puzzle, when we think of the many kinds of fish we have caught.

CONTROLLING THE CATCH

It is an easy matter to cast out the fishing net or seine and come to shore, having every fiber of the net straining to hold the mass of fish, which are flopping and struggling to get away. The work is when the fish are removed from the net and cared for at the shore. Some of the fish have sharp horns, and inflict severe wounds if care is not taken in handling the unruly ones. Others will devour the smaller fish. Some are very slippery, and like the eel will slip through the meshes in the net, or will find the way back into the water if there is any chance. The Savior said the kingdom of God is like a great net cast into the sea which gathereth of all manner of fishes. Do you not see the similarity?

This will not be realized so much by the traveling man as by the man who remains and is engaged in the local work. He it is who would be able to locate the one with the sharp horns, and the fish which devour the weaker members, and that slippery fellow. He will be the one to struggle to try to make a landing, and to restore order out of the moving mass. They are laboring together—the man in the boat and the man on the shore; they twain have one desire, that is, that the catch might be large and successful. So it is in our great work we are collaborators together and have one desire. Each laborer has a part to perform, and if each is negligent in the performance of his duty, the whole body will suffer.

Some might ask, why this comparison? Simply this, that you may see the relation and the importance of everyone doing his duty, fully realizing that there is a work for all and that all have been placed in the great body, the church, by the Master builder, as it pleased him. Furthermore, that the head can not say to the feet, We have no need of thee; but that all parts of the great body are necessary that the perfect work may be accomplished and the great body of Christ be educated to a practical knowledge of the law.

THE PASTORS

When I mention the local man I mean the man who is doing duty as a pastor. There are three divisions to this work, and all are important. First, at least considered so by some, but no more important than the others following, is preaching the word from the sacred desk; second, visiting and personal contact with the membership and those who do or might attend services or those that might be influenced by teaching; and, third, but not least, living the religion and the ethics which he is trying to promulgate. If the pastor is deficient in the first, by a real enthusiastic effort as a visitor and a fireside preacher he will be instrumental in doing a great work; but if he is deficient in the last, one who says, "Do as I do, not as I say," he will be sadly deficient all along the line. His teachings will not take root as they should and would if those teachings were backed by a life beyond reproach.

In large branches it is impossible for one man to do it all, so here we have assistant pastors. We have the presiding elder or priest, who is to direct the work by using such material as he has available. So the priest is enlisted to work as an assistant pastor. The requisites of the pastor should be found with the priest. This is an important calling, and one which should be emphasized with our people. Some one said, If you show me a branch where the priest is alive and doing his duty, I will show you a real live branch and membership. So far as I am aware, that is the case. You will agree with me that where the priest is sleeping on his rights, is slothful, and that part of the work which should be performed by him is undone, the membership will suffer. In your body, if one organ becomes disarranged, soon other parts of the body will suffer.

QUALIFICATIONS

Now when we try to make a further analysis of the duties and responsibilities of the priest we see that his task is full of important errands. He is to teach the membership their duty in the family life, and to show them the virtues of a prayerful life, that the family circle and altar are sacred institutions. This is part of his responsibilities, and we will consider them for the time being. You see there is to be personal contact, with their permission, and that his mission is in a sense the most sacred duty that falls to the lot of pastor to perform. How may this best be accomplished? Firstly, by a life that will be a demonstration that he is living the ethics of his religion and that they are bearing fruit. In order that the best results may be accomplished, he must be a prayerful man. There are many things which transpire behind the curtains and things of which you will not be informed upon and which will not be necessary for you to know. But if you live close to God, the Spirit of inspiration will be present with you, not a few times and you will be influenced by the Holy Spirit to speak to the people by way of exhortation or prophecy to their good and edification. Paul in advising the ministry said, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." (Acts 20:28.) We feel that this injunction applies to all who labor to feed the church of God.

In the early days of the organization, Frederick G. Williams and Joseph Smith, jr., were most severely spoken to by the Spirit because they were endeavoring to set the church in order when their own families were not in order. To-day the Spirit is the same, and the necessity for clean men is as great. None can labor in this great work unless they are clean in mind, in body, and in soul, to the satisfaction and approval of the Spirit, for God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord, certainly applies to the priest as much as to any officer, and sometimes I think has a direct application to him, as he is laboring in his office and serving at the communion.

THE PRIEST IN ACTION

When a priest enters the home by appointment he must rely upon the Spirit for direction. I am of the opinion that the best results will be had when all the members of the household have been called to their place by the head of the house. Then, with permission, have an earnest prayer, kneeling with the family, and invite them to follow. This will place all in a receptive and prayerful mood, and if the Spirit directs, and it should be present as it has been promised on such occasions, good will be the results to all. This will serve a double purpose: First, it will teach the families their religious duties; second, unite them more closely with the officers of the church who are set in place to serve them and do them good. If this work is performed, I am sure that the work of the teacher will be diminished greatly.

Of course there are those with the sharp horns, and those who devour others, also the one who would like to slip back into iniquity. You will meet them, and it is your duty to perform that which is required of you. When you meet with those individuals who should be noticed by the teacher, be sure that you do not undertake to handle the case yourself. Refer it to the proper officer, and you have rid your garments of the trouble. If the teacher is lax in the performance of his duties you may help him in a Christ-like and a brotherly way. Perhaps a gentle exhortation at the proper time, or an indirect question will arouse him to the performance of his duties. If he still refuses to do his duty, then you know the law, act in harmony with it. If you do, the flock will be rid of much grief and trouble.

THE SACRAMENT

Now we come to a specific responsibility of the priest, the administration of the sacrament. In what manner may it be performed? We must refer you to Paul's injunction, "Take heed unto yourselves and unto the flock." This certainly applies to the priest serving the communion. He is the first to partake of the emblems. He is posing as a teacher, a leader, an example. If he is not clean and yet is bearing the vessels of the Lord, surely God will not hold him guiltless. In the prayer which consecrates the bread, this language is found and will be uttered by the priest, if there be no elder presiding, "That they are willing to take upon them the name of thy Son, and always remember him and keep his commandments." (Doctrine and Covenants 17:22.) God has commanded that before we are in a condition to partake of these sacred emblems we must be at peace with the brethren, that we are to confess our faults one to another, that if we are to partake we must adjust our difficulty that we may partake in righteousness.

Can a priest who has a grievance with a brother administer the emblems if he will not and has not labored with the brother, and, on the other hand, avoids the brother? To this I reply, decidedly, no! While the priest might be innocent, and really has not offended the brother by any conscious act at the time, yet he is not in a condition to serve in this sacred place. Even if not guilty he should be prompt to have the matter adjusted. If he is guilty he should acknowledge the mistake and settle the affair in a way that would reflect a goodly light. If he serves and yet the brother is offended the brother might be led or influenced to feel that he is just as good as the priest, and perhaps he is, and be led to sin and partake of the emblems also.

If the priest labors unworthily under this responsibility there is very great danger to the body of believers. In the Book of Mormon we read that he is not to suffer anyone knowingly to partake of the flesh and blood unworthily. If he is partaking unworthily, is he in a condition to forbid a brother or a sister to partake who has been overtaken with a fault? I think not.

On a certain occasion a woman was charged with adultery. She was taken to the Master, and there it was stated that she had been caught in the very act. She was a transgressor. The Savior knew their evil. He told them that the one who was sinless should cast the first stone. They were all guilty,—perhaps of adultery. Their hands were stained with deeds wrought in unrighteousness. They were aware of it, and further knew that the Master knew their thoughts and their lives. They did not dare to cast a stone.

If one is guilty and an offender, he should remove the mote from his own eyes before anointing with eye salve the eyes of a brother. It is a high honor to be serving in this capacity, but we should not treat these responsibilities lightly, as some have, and who have fallen.

GREAT TEMPERANCE GATHERING

(Ernest H. Cherrington, general manager of the Anti-Saloon League press bureau, furnishes the following concerning the Anti-Saloon League meeting of next summer.—Editors.)

Unquestionably the greatest gathering of temperance forces in the world's history will be the biennial convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America to be held on the million-dollar pier at Atlantic City, New Jersey, July 6 to 10, 1915.

On the pier there are four large auditoriums and a number of smaller halls. Reservation of these buildings has been made, and it will be possible for the holding of four large gatherings concurrently, so that every person who attends may have an opportunity of hearing every speaker. The joint seating capacity of the big auditoriums is seventeen thousand. The smaller halls will be used for committee sessions and overflow sessions.

As was the case in the Columbus, Ohio, convention in 1913, representation at the Atlantic City meeting will be based on one delegate from each individual church congregation, each local young people's society, each Sunday school and each subordinate unit of a temperance society or lodge. It is expected thirty thousand delegates will attend.

In every particular this will be a greater meeting than the Columbus convention, which has been rated as surpassing anything previously held. Already some of the States are arranging to send large delegations. One State reports a delegation of one thousand assured.

On the program as partially arranged there will be scores of the most prominent platform men in America, senators, congressmen, judges, governors of States, manufacturers, business men, attorneys, scientists, labor leaders, editors in United States and Canada, and leading reform figures in other lands, who will tell the great convention of temperance progress the world over. There will be representatives from every State in the Union, to tell in detail of the development of Anti-Saloon League work.

It is confidently expected there will be at least fourteen States in the prohibition column by that time. A history of the fight in each of these States will be inspiring.

One of the most notable features will be the exhibit, for which a portion of the pier will be reserved. This will show literature, charts, books, designs and other forms of illustrations, with special efforts worked out along the line of the physiological effects of alcohol, this part of exhibit to be planned along the lines of antituberculosis and other disease-fighting propaganda.

One portion of the exhibit will be that which drew so much attention at the recent international Sunday school convention in Chicago, where were shown startling statistics, illustrated by tombstones as symbols, showing, from actual facts and figures, the terrible ravages of alcohol.

No phase of the alcoholic problem, and no feature of warfare against it will be neglected in the exhibit or in the carrying out of the program of the convention.

It is not too early for churches, Sunday schools, young people's societies and temperance organizations to announce the coming of the convention and to prepare to be represented in it. The convention comes in midsummer, when the vacation season is on, and it is to be held at a popular summer resort; these two circumstances are expected to help swell the attendance.

EMPLOYMENT FOR THE UNEMPLOYABLE

In the midst of all this talk of the unemployed it is easy to forget that a good many who are so designated are to all practical intents and purposes unemployable. These are the blind, the lame, and the paralytic, the legless and the armless. Labor agencies can do little for them, but some work must be found for them unless they are to become public charges. License Commissioner George Bell, of New York City, not the least enterprising of the original and aggressive band of spirits that Mayor Mitchel has gathered about him as his department heads, has put into operation a plan for reducing the number of so-called unemployable persons in New York which ought to interest the citizens of every city in the United States.

Commissioner Bell has announced that hereafter in considering applications for news stand licenses his department would give the preference to applicants who by physical deformity or affliction are unfit for ordinary labor. The blind and the halt will be considered ahead of the able-bodied when it comes to distributing news stand privileges.

"There are two courses open to the city in handling the news stand situation," said the commissioner recently. "Either we could give the licenses to the highest bidders, a course that would probably lead to a virtual monopoly of the stands by a few manipulators, or we could grant them to the persons who seemed to need them most.

"Already we have made up a long list of applicants who are incapacitated for arduous labor, and as fast as new locations are established or old locations are vacated we put in persons who are on this 'crippled' list. We intend to make the news stand support as many families as possible, and in some cases we have a blind man and a lame man in partnership in a rich stand. We do not try to drive out present holders of licenses who are able-bodied, but some of them have caught the spirit of our plan and are getting out voluntarily to make room for cripples, and take up occupations in which only able-bodied men and women can succeed."

In New York City there are more than twelve thousand news stands, and in time, if Commissioner Bell's system is carried on by his successors, these will support the families of more than twelve thousand so-called unemployable men and women. If all the cities of the country adopted this plan, the monetary saving would be immense.—The Outlook, August 1, 1914.

THE MASONIC STANDING OF JOSEPH SMITH

The author on the book just published on The Origin of Polygamy, [Shook—HERALD editors] writing a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ (nonpolygamous Mormonism) has this to say:

Yes, Joseph Smith (founder of the "Mormon" sect) was a Mason, but he was a blackballed Mason, and when he gave the Masonic sign of distress, the Masons in the mob paid not the slightest attention to it. How much confidence do you think a true Mason has in such a man? The mob that killed him, and the men, not in the mob, who opposed him at Nauvoo, were nearly all high Masons. Bennett, when he exposed him, received a large amount of his support from that fraternity.

These statements have been referred to me by an officer of the church. The absurdity of the same is apparent from its opening words. Will some one better informed than this editor define the status of "a blackballed Mason?" I have known of men blackballed, but had supposed that blackballing constituted an effectual bar to Masonry. There is no obscurity in the Masonic history of Joseph Smith. The founder of "Mormonism," with one of his chief lieutenants at Nauvoo (Sidney Rigdon) were "made Masons on sight" by the Grand Master of Illinois. This we learn beyond question, from a series of protesting resolutions passed by Bodley Lodge, of Quincy, Illinois. These were of the record of a meeting held July 16, 1842.

<sup>1</sup>EDITORIAL NOTE.—Under date of August 20, 1914, Mr. Morcombe, editor of the American Freemason and author of the above article wrote the editors of the SAINTS' HERALD as follows: "Some time ago I was informed that the SAINTS' HERALD intended to use matter from the American Freemason relating to the Masonic character of Joseph Smith. Since I published the article a correspondent in Montana has sent me extracts from the diary of Joseph Smith which seems to prove that I was wrong in one of my assurances, namely, that he was made a Mason on sight by the Grand Master of Illinois. As I remember now I derived this information from Reynold's History of Masonry in Illinois, though the extracts my good brother sends me would seem to put the matter beyond any further doubt as to his being made regularly and taking the degrees in the lodge as required by all."

The man Bennett, referred to above, is not the best witness to call in any such controversy. After the date of the troubles at Nauvoo it was proven that he had been previously expelled from Pickaway Lodge, Ohio, and was, at the time in question, under such sentence of expulsion. The whole story of Bennett's connection with "Mormonism" is one to arouse and maintain more than a suspicion of his worthiness and reliability. The evidence of his duplicity is not lacking, nor are the motives for his peculiar actions beyond our reach and estimate.

Some years ago, with every scrap of evidence before him, as historian of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, this present writer had the following as to Bennett:

Much disturbance was caused in May, 1842, by a bitter controversy between General John C. Bennett and Joseph Smith. The former, thwarted in his personal ambitions, repudiated all connection with the church, and asserted that he had joined with the "Saints" only that he might the more completely expose them and their leaders. From the palpable slanders of this man came most of the stories that were afterwards used to stir the worst passions of the mob. It was in reality the beginning of a schism, not perhaps in the church, but in the community, and to which the most serious of subsequent troubles may be traced. Bennett was forced to resign as mayor of Nauvoo, and that office was pressed upon, and unwisely accepted, by Joseph Smith. Bennett was later tried by the lodge at Nauvoo for un-Masonic conduct, and expulsion followed. An explanation of such intended action and the causes therefor, indiscreetly made, was the offending matter in communication made to Bodley Lodge, to which objection was taken. This body at Quincy seems to have espoused Bennett's cause, and chose to believe the self-acknowledged adventurer and deceiver.

I would suppose, from internal evidence, that the writer of the sentence first quoted is not a Mason, however he assumes to speak authoritatively of Masonic action. If indeed he is a member of the fraternity, he is singularly ignorant. His reference to the Masonic distress sign alleged to have been made at the time of the assassination of Joseph Smith and his brother in the jail at Carthage, where they had gone as voluntary prisoners, relying upon the pledged word of the governor of Illinois, is very much out of place. If the statement is true, the more shame to the Masons, if any there were, in that murdering mob.

We are told further by this author that those who opposed Joseph Smith, and supported Bennett, were "nearly all Masons." The record of the lodges at Quincy and Warsaw reveal an opposition to Joseph Smith, his followers and his cult, that can not be explained upon any Masonic grounds of disagreement. We are willing to attribute the hostility that culminated in murder to ignorance and religious prejudice, which even the tolerance inculcated by Freemasonry was not sufficient to curb or overcome. But mention of the "high Masons," as spoken of, only shows the ignorance of the man whose words are quoted. It is likely that officers of the lodges named were involved in the regrettable and despicable affair. But nowadays we have given the name of "high Masons" to those who have taken many degrees or belong to exotic rites, and it is safe to say that there were none such in the lodges mentioned nor in the mob that stormed the jail at Carthage.

The American Freemason is concerned in this manner only to keep history straight, and not to permit ancient prejudice to continue to warp present opinion. There is no consideration of Joseph Smith, as the founder of a sect. But there is some regard due the memory of Joseph Smith, who was a member of the Masonic fraternity, who was worthy, as we are informed, and whose death was compassed, in some measure, by those who should have been foremost in his defense, at least until the law had dealt with his alleged offenses.—American Freemason (Storm Lake, Iowa), August, 1914.

KING ALCOHOL

I am the mightiest king that ever lived. Other monarchs have yielded to me as a child to its sire, even have I laughed at all the gods of every land from Osiris to Jehovah.

With my breath have I wiped away whole nations from the face of the earth.

For me have men given up honor and women virtue; I destroy ambition, shame priests, debauch nuns, ruin statesmen, and still they love me.

Fathers give me their sons, mothers their daughters and maidens their lovers and ask me to stay.

With one touch have I ruined great industries.

I burn cities. Alone and unaided have I sunk navies and destroyed great armies.

I never sleep.

I turn gold into dross, health into misery, beauty into caricature and pride to shame. The more I hurt the more I am sought.

I am Satan's righthand man. I do his work carefully and without pay, yet he is ashamed of me.

I by turns raise a man to highest heaven and sink him into deepest hell.

My name is Rum. Did you ever hear of me?—
